Yes to the first question, no to the second. Everything you see is original, but some bits have fallen off. When they were new they were much less weathered, and were glazed with sheets of white limestone.

Some of the pyramids in Sudan, however, have been restored and partially rebuilt.

Why did Egypt never invade Greece?

HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/profile/Christos-Terzis-1" \t "_blank" Christos Terzis

History buff. HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/Why-did-Egypt-never-invade-Greece/answer/Christos-Terzis-1" \t "_blank" Updated Thu rsday

Let's firstly suppose that we are at a time when Egypt was a world power, 2500 BC-1500 BC. The relevant civilisation to first be encountered in Greece would be the Minoans, who were at the south. They had good relations and traded with Egypt. No need for conquest. The Minoans were also renowned shipbuilders and sailors while the Egyptians weren't. Egypt would have to weaken its mainland and send ships to Greece for the conquest. That would need hundreds if not thousands of ships. The land route was impossible since there were many nations that needed to be conquered on the way, like the Hittites, and they weren't to be trifled with. Weakening its army to go for adventures in far off lands was not a good idea. Libyans, Nubians, Hittites and others would jump at the chance to attack. The stranded army would be annihilated at sea by the superior Minoan navy or on land being outnumbered, with the ever present chance that the Hittites would support the Minoans in a common cause.

Now let's suppose we are in 1500–1300. The Minoans have been conquered by a very brutal enemy, the Myceneans. They were a fierce warlike people that would certainly put up a fight and would be very difficult to defeat. All the other aspects of the conflict from above still apply.
Let's suppose then that we are at a time when Greece was an entity. That would have Greece being comprised of Sparta, Athens and several other city states around 600 BC. By that time Egypt was not the superpower it was centuries earlier. It had been defeated by the Assyrians and now it had the Persians at its doorstep. No way it could organise an expedition to Greece. Even if it did, its army would be annihilated by the very experienced and trained Greeks in both land and sea.

And finally, let's go to 300 BC, the time of Alexander's general, Ptolemy, one of the four Diadochoi, who inherited Egypt as his fiefdom, and his descendants. They would face the very same problems with an added bonus that if they made the unwise move to attack mainland Greece, the Seleucid Empire with which they were at war from time to time, would take advantage of the situation to destroy them.

So it's quite clear that Egypt conquering Greece was an impossibility. However Egypt did own a part of Greece under the Ptolemies, Cyprus..and that's about it…

There is however one instance where Egyptians did "invade" Greece. During the Greek War of Independence from Ottoman occupation, Sultan Mahmud II asked the governor of Egypt, Muhammad Ali, who nominally was a subject to the Ottomans, but in actuality was more semiautonomous, to help quell the Greek rebellion in the Peloponnese. The governor sent his son Ibrahim with a force of ships and troops in 1824. Fear of Greek fire ships had them travel between Rhodes and Crete for months unable to land on the Peloponnese. They only managed to do so in 1825, after the Greek sailors mutinied for lack of pay. Initially Ibrahim was quite successful, however eventually his troops were held at bay and the final nail was given by the tripartite allied fleet at the battle of Navarino, where Ibrahim's fleet was destroyed. This does not qualify as an invasion, since the Egyptian governor and troops were officially Ottoman subjects and in no way independent to decide or act on their own. It was simply a transportation of (nominally) Ottoman troops from one part of the Empire to another, in order to quell a rebellion.

Old Egyptians used to build from baked mud in a lot of their buildings, does this include the pyramid of Khufu and the others?

As a general rule, mud bricks weren't used in the monumental architecture of the ancient Egyptians.

I say “general rule" — there are exceptions. A Middle Kingdom pyramid springs to mind, the Black Pyramid of Amenemhat III at Dashur, built with a core of mud brick beneath the now-missing limestone casing, and in the present day resembling something of a rubble heap.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://ci5.googleusercontent.com/proxy/CJBYg1qVaaRi27k6EqXCGNdgHWlDZ3eF5OP7AtxZCgOwLbLmqKxgf_kR9Cc3JJP5iWwS31OpzSEa52-Wm5SfBkSAP42YYf32WImIRBcozAbrc2dTZeurtXQ=s0-d-e1-ft#https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-0a4da0cd5dce47eee8f93df019892804" * MERGEFORMATINET

However, such structures were the exception, not the norm, and this was a matter of basic engineering principles as much as any other concern. The ancient Egyptians built their pyramids and temples to last. Mud brick, while easily accessible, affordable, and lightweight enough to be a convenient building material, was not strong enough to suit that purpose; under the heavy stresses involved, it would crumble. Hence, monumental architecture was generally built in stone, or carved into it.

In the case of the Great Pyramid of Khufu, the core of the structure was comprised primarily of local limestone, thought to have been quarried on the Giza Plateau itself, though the King's Chamber is of Aswan granite, and the outer casing — now missing — was high quality Tura limestone. The pyramids of Khafre and Menkaure follow a similar pattern, though interestingly the pyramid of Khafre used pink granite for the lower courses of casing stone.

Mud brick was used for more day-to-day construction: houses, palaces, store houses, granaries…basically, where we would build it in brick, so did they; if we would use masonry, decorative stone, and the like — they took to the quarries.

Egypt doesn't have a lot of trees. In fact they imported their wood from Lebanon. So they used limestone. The Giza Plateau is a gigantic block of limestone. For cheap structures they used sun dried mud bricks.

Mesopotamia also used mud bricks. They also used fired bricks as an outer casing for their structures with pitch/bitumen/asphalt as mortar. There are plenty of trees on the Zagros mountains.

Yes you can, and yes I have; and it was probably the most religious experience I ever had in my life. I would say it was better than sex; but then again, after being happily married for years, I find myself saying that about an alarmingly increasing number of things in my life.

Anyhow, I see most other answers here mainly mention the Great Pyramid at Giza - but the one I first got inside was in fact the Red Pyramid of Dashur; one of the pair built a generation before of, and indeed as a prototype for, the future Giza pyramid.

Being an older and more archaic piece of architecture means that the Red Pyramid's layout is simpler, its corridors smaller, and the descent to the burial chambers located at its very bottom considerably longer and more excruciating. In the Great Pyramid, you nowadays enter through a horizontal tunnel dug out by robbers millennia later (that would be no. 2 on the cross-section below); and from its end, it's only a short climb by a relatively comfortable ascending passage (6) before you get to the Grand Gallery (9) where you can stand completely upright. I don't know if it's still the case, but when I was in Egypt sooome… what, fifteen(?) years ago, they didn't allow visitors into the underground chamber (5) or the so-called "queen's chamber" (7) of the Great Pyramid. You could only go straight up to the burial chamber (10) and then back. And let me tell you, that felt as a comparative cakewalk to what I experienced in the Red Pyramid a day before.

Now, the passage by which one descends into the Red Pyramid is less than a meter (3 feet) tall, and it goes down for more than 60 meters, at the slope of almost 30°.

Yours truly, being more than twice the height of the said corridor, was descending through it quite literally lumping on my but over the provisional scaffolding put there for tourist sake, grasping onto those two rails till my knuckles turned white, and wondering all the while if one can catch claustrophobia as some sort of a contagious disease.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://ci5.googleusercontent.com/proxy/3OLYRgZXgbTJzw2W0cvPbeqVIYyOf6O50q-tuw-5jWVcKAAfXaE7zXyz-I9MLfst8GilgsjpTVxm_wZ9YQ3cWddrq65VG2dnjygLZ54pdisYXILUpCUTI1s=s0-d-e1-ft#https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-92021ff4ff50f038603d90a847f7f1dc" * MERGEFORMATINET

Then at last I came down to the vaulted burial chambers, which felt refreshingly large and cool. The air was sparse and had a stale smell to it - the kind of which you'd expect from a room that's been sealed for millennia - but I can honestly say I breathed a sigh of relief when I got down there. But the most intriguing thing, however, was that I heard singing: it was eerie and beautiful, and at first I thought they were playing some music for the tourists down there, on some unseen modern-day speakers, presumably installed into the pyramid together with scaffolding, rails, electrical lights and (entirely inadequate) ventilation.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://ci5.googleusercontent.com/proxy/0Jc62NCs0bMbyXHALYglKdUfBv8j49J9U1trp5AG0mMY-kfn6-VTKzZyFjqyrlMszFK9dRUVAfAk3cWHXT5dmfHEL40h6GzpY2ZSvwS9P44ww1aINpsOcEI=s0-d-e1-ft#https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-a89159401c715f068f037513c3e87654" * MERGEFORMATINET

But then I got into second of those three chambers, and figured out from where the singing was coming from: from two Asian girls who descended there some time before us, and then - for some to me inexplicable reason, but for which I shall be grateful to them till the day I die - started chanting some unknown songs in some to me incomprehensible language. I don't know if those girls were Korean, Japanese, Chinese or some other -ese, but their singing was godlike beautiful! And so I walked in the stony echoes of that serene music, as if I really descended into the watery gloom of the Egyptian underworld, all calm and blissful.

Treatise of the Hidden Chamber, the positions of the Ba-souls, the gods, the shadows, the Akh-spirits and what is [to be] done.

The beginning is the horn of the West, the gate of the western horizon, the end is thick darkness, the gate of the western horizon.

To know the Ba-souls of the Duat, to know what is [to be] done, to know their spiritualization for Re, to know the secret Ba-souls, to know what is in the hours and their gods, to know what he calls to them, to know the gates and the ways upon which the great god passes, to know the courses of the hours and their gods, to know the flourishing and the annihilated. HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/" \l "bErBg" \t "_blank" [1]
That's from "The Book of am-Duat", i.e., "The Book of what's-in-the-Netherworld", the New Kingdom treatise on Egyptian afterlife - compiled more than a thousand years after the Dashur pyramids have been built, yet strangely fitting to the memory I have about those beehive-vaulted stone chambers.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://ci4.googleusercontent.com/proxy/MoQIqcLa_2yn0ZT7PbvAyPi5zuOSLGS_O4JkTz9ad-Oyazspk3VGah2OKmZt1BxK2UbEgos9a5eP-N-WwC8ljlquJX2Qt5jyDR1cVwZz1237lmy-kDW90Sc=s0-d-e1-ft#https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-f5cc0c2bcf6e9894b2ff7a89346ca945" * MERGEFORMATINET

Eventually, as those lovely Asian ladies finished their singing, the time came for us all to go back up; and if the descent into the pyramid was bone-wrecking exercise, the ascent out of it was thrice worse. I had to go up a rather steep slope, so bent over that my knees were practically kicking me in the face. I could hardly breathe, feeling like I was kicking the air out of my lungs with each step I took up; yet I couldn't stop and rest, because the air in the corridor was so thin and sparse that I felt like I was drowning. For a moment, I really started to fear that I was going to suffocate. And then, finally…

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://ci6.googleusercontent.com/proxy/x_gCBTwJwY5BhHl6ur5hoAivsRWgJGTogoBhHxYIwl-oDDHmzm0XZsiZzE251uMxO8BwdGk6UrLFEmZcIjLuXX93gvUTsjtz9WHCXGNJkTRPuhMEcFw1qEg=s0-d-e1-ft#https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-101f40ad880ea2042814b2fb38f7901a" * MERGEFORMATINET

Coming out of the pyramid felt like bursting out of the water in which one was submerged for far too long. I'm not exaggerating when I say that it felt as an actual physical rebirth: I was gulping on the fresh desert air, basking in the warmth of the sun, and stretching under the light of the open sky, like a corpse risen out of a tomb by some ray of divine splendor. My parents, who were with me on that journey, sat on the nearest two stone blocks and went on bitching about how much their bodies hurt from this entire ordeal. I, on the other hand, was rewinding in my head everything I ever read and knew about ancient Egyptian mythology, about their beliefs of death and afterlife, about the nightly journeys of Re through the underworld, the burial and resurrection of Osiris, the Ankh and the breath of life… and it all began to make complete, intuitive and simple sense to me. Like… this was it! This is what was all about. Death and suffering, descent into the underworld, eternal rest under magical chants of priesthod, and the glorious rebirth in the face of sun-god. Those ancient Egyptian priests and builders - who must have had similar experiences coming in and out of those tombs - really knew their shit, and accordingly designed and built the pyramids as real (to paraphrase HYPERLINK "https://cf.ppt-online.org/files1/slide/x/xc0F752ZBDwOdmbITpnEgNLhv3tPaAsMo96U18/slide-1.jpg" \o "cf.ppt-online.org" \t "_blank" Le Corbusier) “machines for the afterlife.”

Anyhow, the next day we went to Giza, and the visit to Great Pyramid, like I said, was a walk in the park by comparison; though I think the complete experience of it was amputated by barring the entrance from the two of three burial chambers. And afterwards we went into the pyramid of Khafre (the middle one of Giza, with a stone cap upon it and sphinx in front of it); and it, like almost all the later pyramids, consisted of practically a straight corridor (almost tall enough for me to stand in it :), leading more-less directly to the burial chamber, with minimal ascent and descent. I remember my father remarking how you could really feel the evolution of pyramid architecture through those three generations of pharaohs; from the soul-wrenching rollercoaster Sneferu built in Dashur, to the straightforward highway to heaven made for his grandson Khafre.

P.S: None of the pictures in this answer are mine, mind you. I made considerable photo documentation on that journey to Egypt, some of it of really professional quality, dare I say - but alas, through these fifteen years, I lost or forgot where almost all of it was. So let that be a lesson to you youngsters with your smart-phones and tablets and instagrams and what have you not: keep your most important memories in your heart!

Why does Israel claim that falafel is an Israeli cuisine while the fact is falafel is Egyptian and already part of Egyptian culture and cuisine?

HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/Why-does-Israel-claim-that-falafel-is-an-Israeli-cuisine-while-the-fact-is-falafel-is-Egyptian-and-already-part-of-Egyptian-culture-and-cuisine/answer/Michael-Jacobs-74" \t "_blank" Answered March 15, 2018

Let's see, where to begin? Why does Italy claim that spaghetti is an Italian cuisine while the fact is, the wheat noodle is Chinese in origin and already part of Chinese culture and cuisine?

For that matter, why does Italy claim that tomato sauce is an Italian cuisine while the fact is the tomato is Mexican in origin and already part of Mexican culture and cuisine?

Why does Ireland claim that the potato is an Irish cuisine while the fact is the potato is Peruvian in origin and already part of Peruvian culture and cuisine?

Why does the United States claim that the hot dog is an American cuisine while the fact is Frankfurters are German (from the town of Frankfurt) and Vienna sausages (Wieners) are Austrian, and they are already part of German and Austrian culture and cuisine?

For that matter, why does the United States claim that apple pie is an American cuisine while the fact is, pastries made with apples are Central European in origin and already part of Central European culture and cuisine?

Why does England claim that tea is an English cuisine while the fact is tea is Asian and already part of Asian culture and cuisine?

Do you see where we're going with this?

No one culture "owns" food. Throughout history, cultures have borrowed cuisines from one another. And, though these borrowed items may be considered "foreign" and "exotic" for a while, many of them simply become absorbed into what the adopting culture considers its universal, national cuisine. That's why the US can legitimately claim that something is "as American as hot dogs and apple pie" even though both of those dishes are borrowed from other nations' cuisines.

So the real question is, Why do some people single out Israel to claim that falafel cannot be considered part of Israeli national cuisine just because of the fact that falafel is also Egyptian and already part of Egyptian culture and cuisine?

Applying double standards to Israel that are not applied anywhere else, demonizing Israel as having "stolen" some other nation's culture and cuisine, or de-legitimizing Israel as though its people had no right to forge a national identity for themselves even if it borrowed elements from other cultures, is, by the widely accepted modern definition, antisemitism. That is, Jew-hatred is the only plausible reason behind it. Please consider that.

They were a pretty open culture. They would probably be quite nosy about you until they worked out how you fit into their economic and spiritual worlds. There'd probably be a fair bit of ragging on about how wonderful they were and how they were destined to be close to the pharaoh in the Underworld, when the time came.

But, they were a pretty generous people, and it seems that there were several non-Egyptian cultures that were accepted in one place or another. In particular, theirs was not an evangelising religion, they felt no need to have people become a part of their religion or even their culture, but they were not at all keen on law-breakers.

Throughout it's history, Egypt had a lot of surplus, particularly in terms of food. I guess the thing is, if you ever get flung back in time to the Ancient World, make a bee line for Egypt. For God's sake, stay away from Rome. They were bastards.

There is no void under the Sphinx; it's a hill.

There's no way in to the recently-discovered void in the Great Pyramid. There's no entrance. It was only discovered by studying cosmic rays passing through the pyramid. The only way to get in would be to tear the pyramid apart, and they're not going to do that.

The Egyptian Ministry of State for Antiquities's job, above all, is to preserve Egypt's heritage. Ripping things up to look inside them is not consistent with that goal.

They didn't. Why? The most prevalent parasite in the Nile is the schistosome. It's a parasite that lives in freshwater snails. But they do search for large mammals to reproduce. They literally burrow through the skin and make their way to the liver. That's why since the ancient times, Egyptian men were known to “menstruate".

It causes a disease called schistosomiasis which bloat the abdomen. Humans defecate the eggs into a water channel that leads to the Nile. That's why you shouldn't schyte in bodies of water.

Bill and Melinda Gates financed the research and manufacture of waterless toilets. That way the cycle of infection is stopped. HYPERLINK "https://en.m.wikipedia.org/wiki/Schistosomiasis" \o "en.m.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank"

Schistosomiasis - Wikipedia

This article is about the disease. For the organism, see Schistosoma . Schistosomiasis , also known as snail fever , bilharzia , and Katayama fever , [1] [2] [9] is a disease caused by parasitic flatworms called schistosomes . [5] The urinary tract or the intestines may be infected. [5] Symptoms include abdominal pain , diarrhea , bloody stool , or blood in the urine . [5] Those who have been infected for a long time may experience liver damage , kidney failure , infertility , or bladder cancer . [5] In children, it may cause poor growth and learning difficulty . [5] Schistosomiasis Other names Bilharzia, snail fever, Katayama fever [1] [2] 11-year-old boy with abdominal fluid and portal hypertension due to schistosomiasis (Agusan del Sur, Philippines) Pronunciation Specialty Infectious disease Symptoms Abdominal pain , diarrhea , bloody stool , blood in the urine [5] Complications Liver damage , kidney failure , infertility , bladder cancer [5] Causes Schistosomes from freshwater snails [5] Diagnostic method Finding eggs of the parasite in urine or stool, antibodies in blood [5] Prevention Access to clean water [5] Medication Praziquantel [5] Frequency 252 million (2015) [6] Deaths 4,400–200,000 [7] [8] The disease is spread by contact with fresh water contaminated with the parasites. [5] These parasites are released from infected freshwater snails . [5] The disease is especially common among children in developing countries, as they are more likely to play in contaminated water. [5] Other high-risk groups include farmers, fishermen, and people using unclean water during daily living. [5] It belongs to the group of helminth infections . [10] Diagnosis is by finding eggs of the parasite in a person's urine or stool. [5] It can also be confirmed by finding antibodies against the disease in the blood. [5] Methods of preventing the disease include improving access to clean water and reducing the number of snails. [5] In areas where the disease is common, the medication praziquantel may be given once a year to the entire group. [5] This is done to decrease the number of people infected, and consequently, the spread of the disease. [5] Praziquantel is also the treatment recommended by the World Health Organization for those who are known to be infected. [5] Schistosomiasis affected about 236.6 million people worldwide in 2019. [11] An estimated 4,400 to 200,000 people die from it each year. [7] [8] The disease is most commonly found in Africa, Asia, and South America. [5] Around 700 million people, in more than 70 countries, live in areas where the disease is common. [7] [12] In tropical countries, schistosomiasis is second only to malaria among parasitic diseases with the greatest economic impact. [13] Schistosomiasis is listed as a neglected tropical disease . [14] Signs and symptoms Edit Skin blisters on the forearm, created by the entrance of Schistosoma parasites Many individuals do not experience symptoms. If symptoms do appear, they usually tak

Cleopatra did not want her treasure to fall into the hands of Octavian. After there were no possibilities of evading capture, she was prepared to send herself and her wealth up in flames. However, dire circumstances, worthy of a cliffhanger melodrama, intervened.

According to Cassius Dio (c. 155 – c. 235 AD), after the naval battle of Actium in 31 BC, Cleopatra fled back to Egypt, where she had those who had rejoiced in her defeat killed and then:

> proceeded to gather vast wealth from their estates and from various other sources both profane and sacred, sparing not even the most holy shrines. (Roman History, LI.5.5ff)

Cleopatra then had her son by Julius Caesar, Caesarion, sent up the Nile with a portion of the royal treasury. She was to meet him later but her ships were burnt at the orders of the Romans. Caesarion was to cross overland by way of Ethiopia and then sail to India. He was overtaken and killed, most likely by order of his cousin, Octavian (Roman History LI 15.5).

As the situation grew more dire, Cleopatra had her treasure amassed within the mausoleum which she had been building. She also had flammable materials brought in in order to destroy the riches in case of failure in negotiating with Octavian. According to Plutarch (46–after AD 119):

> now that she had a tomb and monument built surpassingly lofty and beautiful, which she had erected near the temple of Isis, 2 collected there the most valuable of the royal treasures, gold, silver, emeralds, pearls, ebony, ivory, and cinnamon; and besides all this she put there great quantities of torch-wood and tow, so that

Caesar was anxious about the reason, and fearing lest the woman might become desperate and burn up and destroy this wealth, kept sending on to her vague hopes of kindly treatment from him, at the same time that he advanced with his army against the city. The Parallel Lives.

The Life of Antony, 74.

Always hoping, Cleopatra kept on negotiating with Octavian. However, when the wounded Antony was carried into the mausoleum to die in her arms, the queen was distraught. Octavian, in the meantime, after having lamented Antony, sent his man Proculeius to speak with Cleopatra:

bidding him, if possible, above all things to get Cleopatra into his power alive; for he was fearful about the treasures in her funeral pyre, and he thought it would add greatly to the glory of his triumph if she were led in the procession.

Life of Antony, 78.

Cleopatra did not open the bolted doors to Proculeius, discussing with him the possibility of having her children rule after her. Nothing was decided, but Proculeius had surveyed the place and reported back to Octavian. Another negotiator was sent to speak with Cleopatra through the bolted doors. In the meantime, Proculeius used a ladder to sneak in through the window by which Antony had been taken into the mausoleum. As Proculeius came down to the doors by which Cleopatra was standing, the queen tried to stab herself with her dagger. Proculeius subdued her. Cleopatra was thereafter kept under the strictest vigilance and the opportunity to burn her treasure was lost. The rest is tragedy.

Egyptology is not a “science” at all. It is history, linguistics, and archaeology, based on over 200 years of research. This work is not “some findings.” It is many thousands of pages of translations from Egyptian writings, plus extensive archaeological excavations. Most of the things that we know about ancient Egypt are pretty solid, but there are grey areas and gaps.

Akhenaton and Nefertiti carved by modern Egyptians

Everyday Egyptians does not acknowledge the division of ‘ancient’ and ‘modern’ Egypt. There is a political, cultural and genetic continuity between ancient and modern Egyptians. Egyptians are aware that they founded the oldest continuing state on earth. The pride in their ancient past is unmistakably vivid in their life. Although, Egypt is one of the leaders of Pan-Arab ideology, Egyptians feel that they are culturally and genetically distinct from the people in Arabia.

As to the 'cultural distinction' — it is true that Egyptians have always held a position of 'exceptionalism' within the Arab region. Egypt has been the cultural and intellectual heart of the Arab World — the center of art; the center of music; the center of literature; the center of cinema; the center of poetry; etc., to the point where the Egyptian dialect of Arabic has become a lingua franca in the Arab World. What happens in Egypt affects the surrounding Arab countries more often than not and its position as 'leader of the Arabs' (especially during the Nasser era 1952-1970) is something other Arabs acknowledge.

Modern Egyptian woman vs ancient Egyptian art

This exceptionalism can be attributed to several different reasons — it is the oldest continuous national identity and thus has never had to deal with sectarianism and ethnic conflict like its neighbors; its geography (Egypt is the nexus of Africa and the Middle East and is thus right at the center of the Arab World); or it's geo-strategic position (Suez canal, Red Sea, etc.) which means it was often courted and occupied by foreign powers.

Whatever the reasons, it is true that there is a certain 'Egyptian exceptionalism' when it comes to culture, and Egyptians are very aware of it. It is part of the modern Egyptian identity. This position of intellectual leadership within the Arab World, coupled with the long and storied past of Ancient Egypt makes for a very formidable and domineering national consciousness in Egyptians. This consciousness was bridled at the height of Arab nationalism and unity in the '50-'60s but the cost of several exhaustive wars meant that Arab nationalism experienced a backlash in Egypt, and Egypt's relationship and position within the Arab World was put into question. In times of crisis and polarization, national identity is heightened and many Egyptians feel that they should 'break away' from the Arab sphere and celebrate their own, individual Egyptian identity, instead of being subsumed into the pan-Arab identity.

It is noteworthy to mention that Egyptians feel that Arabs are half-Egyptian because HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Hagar_in_Islam" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Hagar , Abraham's second wife, gave birth to Ishmael that Muhammad, Islam's last prophet, has directly descended from. Today in modern Egypt there is a group known as the Copts - which are Egypt's Christians belonging to the Coptic Orthodox Church - the Egyptian Church of Alexandria. Coptic is derived from the word in Greek meaning Egyptian - the Copts were out of communion from the rest of the Christian world prior to Islam and the Arabs arrival. The Copts are the only group in Egypt that continued to speak Egyptian not Arabic till around 500 years ago. They are considered the direct descendants of the pharaoh's or so they claim. Just like other groups they were also mixed - probably more so before the excommunication of the Church which would have outlawed Copts marrying other Christians from around the world. A large number of Copts lived in Upper Egypt (southern part of Egypt) historically and Alexandria… You won't find for example turkish blood from among the Egyptian Copts due to religious differences and Islamic law not permitting the marriage of the two… the Copts is your best bet in finding a purer Egyptian that is closer to ancient Egyptians…I would do a full sample on Copts… being Christian however, the Copts might have married into French or British or other Europeans with imperialistic ventures into Egypt…again, the Europeans would have to convert into Coptic Orthodoxy to make that happen… so it is difficult to say… Egypt has been invaded so many times from antiquity to modern times that much of its racial identity changed over time… however, the Copts still kept the ancient Egyptian language alive in the tongue form - mixed a little with Greek - and adopted the Greek form of writing - yet their liturgical language is the language of ancient Egypt… so they carry in some for or another the spirit of ancient Egypt. One cannot however forget that they have been “arabitized” and that is obvious in the culture of Egypt.

According to Encyclopedia Britannica, Ramses II lived more or less between 1300 BCE & 1200 BCE and Prophet Moses lived between 13th & 14th century BCE (Before the Common Era). The beginning of Judaism was officially in 1300 BCE.

This Ancient Egyptian pharaoh was also known as Ramesses the Great. He was the third pharaoh of the Nineteenth Dynasty of Egypt. He is often regarded as the greatest, most celebrated, and most powerful pharaoh of the New Kingdom, itself the most powerful period of Ancient Egypt. His successors and later Egyptians called him the "Great Ancestor".

A Great Prophet as Moses (Peace be upon him) hence was sent to the Greatest tyrant Pharaoh ever in the history of Egypt.

This fact was actually crowned by the discovery of the French Surgeon, Mauris Bucaille, who analyzed the mummy of Ramesses II, and found him to be dead by means drowning (he even found left-overs of sea salt on his body, and marvelled how his body was preserved regardless of the drowning). This is rather an ample indication that Ramses II, not only flourished during the time period of Prophet Moses, but he was also the well-known Pharaoh in the Jewish, Christian and Muslim scriptures who reluctantly fought against Prophet Moses and who died drowning in the red sea.

There's a story in Herodotus (4.42) that Pharoah HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Necho_II" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Necho II (a late ruler, around 600 BC) HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/Did-Ancient-Egyptians-circumnavigate-the-continent-of-Africa-How-difficult-is-it/answer/Steve-Theodore?ch=10&oid=115859035&share=9a7a0248&srid=zLvM&target_type=answer" \o "www.quora.com" \t "_blank" sent an expedition manned by Phoenician sailors to circumnavigate Africa . The squadron supposedly took three years to sail from the Red Sea to Carthage.

Their report would have been the first real unambiguous experience of the Atlantic in Egyptian history. Egyptian expansion to the west was very limited. Egypt's westernmost political outposts were Amunia ("Amun's town") on the coast near modern Mersah Matruh and the Oasis of Siwa. Both of these are within the borders of modern Egypt, and over 2500 miles / 4000 km from the Atlantic coast.

For most of Egyptian history, the combination powerful Libyan or Berber tribes and the sparsely habitable land kept Egypt from looking farther west. From the early Bronze Age, it was Phoenician sailors (followed later by Greeks) who dominated the long-distance trade of the Mediterranean. Even in the New Kingdom era, when Egypt was at its most expansionist, Egyptian references to places west of the Delta are few and far between compared to numerous references to places in the Levant, Arabia, and Nubia (all frequent theaters of war) along with sketchier references to Crete, the Aegean, and Mesopotamia.

Egyptian trade goods do show up as far west as Sicily and Malta, and it's commonly assumed that the Egyptian name Sherden, applied to mercenaries and pirates in the later Bronze Age, refers to Sardinians. We can see a limited circulation of Egyptian goods in the western Mediterranean — mostly, we think, via Cretan, Mycenean and later Phoenican or Greek merchants. This presumably included a few Egyptians; we've found a couple of Egyptian funeral monuments in Malta and Tunisia. So, it's entirely possible that some Egyptian individuals had heard of a great ocean to the west. However official Egypt — the folks who wrote down tribute lists and tried to catalogue the known world — seem not to have heard or cared much about anything to the west of the western desert. If you asked an Egyptian about the far west, he'd assume you were referring to the afterlife, which was conceived of as the land beyond the setting of the sun.

Although this question is directed to Egyptians, others couldn't help but answer it instead. And in doing so, giving substantially incorrect conclusions.

Now, allow me as an Egyptian to answer your question for you.

First of all, what do you mean by "feel African"? Do you mean geographically? Culturally? Racially? Politically?

In terms of geography then yes, Egyptians are Africans since Egypt lies in Africa.

Halaib Triangle is under Egyptian soveirenity btw. Donnu why it's not included in Egypt's territory.

In terms of culture then no. Why's that? One might ask. Are they not indigenous Africans?!

Well, as a result of Egypt's unique geographical position as both a transcontinental and Mediterranean country it's culture was significantly influenced by several civilisations and nations, which enriched it's already existent diverse society. Eventually culminating into modern Egyptian culture.

Egyptians define their culture as just Egyptian, Egyptian Arab or Egyptian Mediterranean. Depends on the individual you ask.

Politically speaking, Egypt was a founding member of the Organisation of African Unity (OAC) and it's successor African Union (AU).

Pan-Africanism isn't popular in Egypt though Egyptians sympathise and feel close to culturally similar African countries like Sudan and Algeria.

This doesn't mean that Egyptians aren't indigenous to Africa or that they're the descendants of Eurasian invaders.

Egyptians are Egyptians and no one has the right to call them colonizers or advocate for their expulsion FROM THEIR COUNTRY just because they are not black/dark skinned.

I hope this helps.

There is one good reason the Book of Exodus does not tell us the name of any pharaoh involved in the story of Moses—the story was not written down until centuries after Moses would have lived, by which time the Israelite scribes did not know anything about the pharaohs of that long-ago time. Another good reason the Book of Exodus does not tell us the name of the pharaoh during the birth of Moses is that the birth story is actually based on and copied from the much older story of King Sargon of Akkad.

There is no extra-biblical information on the biblical Moses, because most historians say the Exodus from Egypt never really happened, which means that the biblical Moses was a person of myth.

Vegetarian cuisine for sure.

Egypt is an agricultural country so main cuisine depends on vegetables. It has alot of similarity to Mediterranean and levantine cuisine too.

For breakfast and dinner: Eggs - Ful medames - Falafel - Pickles - Egyptian bread- Cheese are the main components

NO Egypt doesn't have a weak military.

Egypt's arsenal consists of lethal military equipment from different countries. Here is a glimpse of some of them.

The Papyrus of Ahmose or Mathematical Rhind is the oldest manuscript written in algebra and trigonometry. It dates back 1500 years before Christ, that is, about 3500 years ago.

The manuscript is important because it shows that Egyptians used first-order equations and solved them in several ways. They also know quadratic equations and solve them. They also know numerical and geometric sequences and know quadratic equations like the two:

X2 + y2 = 100,

Y = 3/4 x, where x = 8, y = 6,

This equation is the origin of the Pythagoras theorem, a2 = b 2 + c 2, and Egyptians used to call the unknown number (koom).

Pythagoras developed his mathematical theories after travelling to Egypt and learning from Egyptian priests, and this has been proven in the books of Greek historians and scholars such as Herodotus and Thales.

The Egyptians had algebra, trigonometry, and geometry about 2.000 years before the birth of Pythagoras... and about 3.000 years prior to al-Khwarizmi being born. ..

This quote from 1867 is by a founding father of Egyptology Champollion-Figeac

– "The first tribes that inhabited Egypt that is, the Nile Valley between the Syene cataracts and the sea, came from Abyssinia to Sennar. The ancient Egyptians belonged to a race quite similar to the Kennous or Barabras, present inhabitants of Nubia. In the Copts of Egypt, we do not find any of the characteristic features of the ancient Egyptian population. The Copts are the result of crossbreeding with all the nations that have successively dominated Egypt. It is wrong to seek in them the principal features of the old race." From Letters published by Champollion-Figeac (Founding Egyptologist

…..

"To sum up, Nubia is Egypt's African ancestor. What linked Ancient Egypt to the rest of the North African cultures is this strong tie with the Nubian pastoral nomadic lifestyle, the same pastoral background commonly shared by most of the ancient Saharan and modern sub-Saharan societies. Thus, not only did Nubia have a prominent role in the origin of Ancient Egypt, it was also a key area for the origin of the entire African pastoral tradition."

Physical anthropologists are increasingly concluding that racial definitions are the culturally defined product of selective perception and should be replaced in biological terms by the study of populations and clines. Consequently, any characterization of race of the ancient Egyptians depend on modern cultural definitions, not on scientific study. Thus, by modern American standards it is reasonable to characterize the Egyptians as 'blacks' [i.e in a social sense] while acknowledging the scientific evidence for the physical diversity of Africans." Source: Donald Redford (2001) The Oxford encyclopedia of ancient Egypt, Volume 3. Oxford University Press. p. 27-28

Archaeological evidence also strongly supports an African origin. A widespread northeastern African cultural assemblage, including distinctive multiple barbed harpoons and pottery decorated with dotted wavy line patterns, appears during the early Neolithic (also known as the Aqualithic, a reference to the mild climate of the Sahara at this time). Saharan and Sudanese rock art from this time resembles early Egyptian iconography.

Strong connections between Nubian (Sudanese) and Egyptian material culture continue in later Neolithic Badarian culture of Upper Egypt. Similarities include black-topped wares, vessels with characteristic ripple-burnished surfaces, a special tulip-shaped vessel with incised and white-filled decoration, palettes, and harpoons...

Other ancient Egyptian practices show strong similarities to modern African cultures including divine kingship, the use of headrests, body art, circumcision, and male coming-of-age rituals, all suggesting an African substratum or foundation for Egyptian civilization." -- Source: Donald Redford (2001) The Oxford encyclopedia of ancient Egypt, Volume 3. In 2006, the Cambridge University art and antiquities museum, Fitzwilliam , did a commendable thing when they, following a £1.5 million renewal project, launched their new Egypt galleries . The idea was to showcase ancient Egyptian religion, magic, writing, ritual and to redisplay the collections in a contemporary and dynamic way. But that was not all. In a rare condemnation of the historical revision of ancient Egypt, the Fitzwilliam Museum admitted that, not only does Egyptology have a European bias, but that the bias means that our understanding of the earliest human civilisation is gravely erroneous. As they put it , “People mainly look at Ancient Egypt through a European bias. This is because the majority of books on Egyptology are written by researchers of European, or North-American backgrounds.” Instead, the Fitzwilliam Museum decided to adopt an Africa-Centred approach to ancient Egypt. What does an Africa-centred approach to Egyptology mean? Well , first of all, it acknowledges that Ancient Egypt “is part of African culture” and that while the word ‘Egypt’ is what the Ancient Greeks named ancient Egypt, the original inhabitants called it ‘Kemet’, which literally means ‘the black land’. Therefore, by naming the museum gallery “Virtual Kemet”, the curators intended to remind people that Ancient Egypt is an “African civilization and that whilst the culture had contact with people from other civilizations, it was essentially African in its culture and well as its geographical placement.” The museum insists, “There are many links between ancient Egyptian and modern African culture, ranging from objects such as headrests to hairstyles such as the side lock, and this and other evidence support the idea that it was an African culture in addition to being geographically in Africa . For these reasons Egypt is seen by people of African descent as part of their cultural heritage and history. […] Egypt was an African country, and their artists depicted the Egyptians as Africans, with black skin and tightly curled hair. ” [Emphases mine] If there remains any doubt about the heritage of ancient Egyptians, the museum declares, “If we look at the skin colour and also facial features on representations of Egyptians, many are what we would consider today to be Black African.” However, even if “we leave colour aside for a moment, we can also find out a great deal from looking at the facial features shown on Egyptian statues. Here, there can be no doubt that we are dealing with people who were African. Faces were broad with high cheekbones and the jaws are typically strong. The noses are also broad and the lips are generally full and fleshy in appearance.” It ma

These burial masks were made by the same lost-wax technique of casting; both are of gold and were intended for similar purposes. Among the Dogon, evidence can be grouped in a more uniform configuration. Denise Paulme has drawn parallels between the facades of African family dwellings and those of ancient Memphian and Theban houses. The appearance and motifs of the 14 "tower masks" recall the immense obelisk in Axum, Ethiopia. 15 Besides these analogies, there are similar mythical representations as well. Certain Dogon sculptures represent a couple, with the man's left hand always placed on the left shoulder of the woman.

Some of these variously stylized couples closely resemble the Pharaonic sculptures at the Barnes Foundation in the United States. Not every one of these works, but one characteristic series of them, is quite close to Egyptian sculpture. Dogon myths sometimes recall certain traits of Egyptian mythology. Nommo, a spirit who plays an essential role in Dogon cosmogony, is sacrificed to heaven; his body is hacked into five parts which are thrown, respectively, to the four cardinal points and to the center of the quadrangle. Osiris comes immediately to mind. Nommo, sometimes represented as a figure with uplifted arms imploring rain, evokes ideas of fertility and birth, of purification of the primeval realm, and of the life-force. The Egyptian hieroglyph ka, with two uplifted arms, represents man and his double. According to Alexandre Moret, this character has a determinative function in the hieroglyphic system. When placed next to another sign it defines the latter's class and elevates it to the sacred; it also unites and symbolizes ideas of generation, food, and life-forces.

Another parallel drawn by Denise Paulme reveals similarity between the Ashanti and Baule technique of hammering gold sheet metal onto a core of wood and the ancient Egyptian technique. The similarity can be seen in certain sculptures (called akuaba) carried by pregnant Ashanti women and in the copper, bronze, or wooden Egyptian mirrors fashioned in the New Empire style. Finally, some Baule masks undoubtedly recall Pharaonic figures. Numerous other analogies may be suggested. In Ife, among the Ashanti, the theme of the double human figure, probably associated with the worship of twins, is similar to that of some small Etruscan bronzes HYPERLINK "file://D:\\AFRICA-ALL-IN-ONE (Latest file)\\AFRICA ALL-IN-ONE word file\\The Soul of Ancient Egypt - Graham Hancock Official WebsiteOverview of the book's main points: An examination of

Today the world refers to the long and narrow fertile strip running from the border of Sudan in the south to the shores of the Mediterranean in the north, as "Egypt." This name is universally accepted as being true and correct for this country. As for the people who inhabit it today, they are called not only "Egyptians" but also "Arabs."

It thus often comes as a surprise when one is told that these names are not original or even native to this country. The name "Egypt" was coined by Greeks colons in the 4th century CE, and it is a corruption from the name Koptos, itself a corruption of Gebtu, the name of an ancient area in the south of the country, probably as ancient as 3000 BCE." The name of the country that was most commonly used by the ancient Egyptians themselves was Kemet.

According to Egyptologists, this name means "The Black Land", and derives from the black alluvial soil which was deposited by the annual flooding of the river Nile." But others contest this explanation, and propose that the name Kemet stems from the inhabitants themselves or, to be more precise, the color of their skin. It is highly likely that the original inhabitants of Egypt were dark or black-skinned Africans; a fact that can be ascertained even today by the dark-skinned Nubian people who live in the southern part of the country.

That Kemet may indeed mean 'The Land of the Blacks' is also supported by discoveries made recently in the Egyptian Sahara on rock art left by prehistoric black-skinned populace, found in caves in the remote mountain regions of Gilf Kebir and Jebel Uwainat. The name, therefore, would then read "Land of the Black-skinned" or simple "Black Country".

These names tally with the notion that the earliest settlers of the Nile Valley were Negroid Africans who came from the Sahara around 5000 BCE. We are not suggesting, of course, that Egypt should now be called Kemet (although there are some who advocate that it should). What we do think, however, is that it important to highlight this original name so that modern Egyptians be reminded of their true ancestral origins and, more importantly, how perhaps its soul came to be. Relegated to the realm of archaeological heresy, despite a wealth of hard scientific evidence, the theory that an advanced civilization of black Africans settled in the Sahara long before Pharaonic Egypt existed has been dismissed and even condemned by conventional Egyptologists, archaeologists, and the Egyptian government. Uncovering compelling new evidence, Egyptologist Robert Bauval and astrophysicist Thomas Brophy present the anthropological, climatological, archaeological, geological, and genetic research supporting this hugely debated theory of the black African origin of Egyptian civilization. Building upon extensive studies from the past four decades and their own archaeoastronomical and hieroglyphic research, the authors show how the early black culture known as the Cattle People not only domesticated cattle but also had a sophisticated grasp of astronomy; created plentiful rock art at Gilf Kebir and Gebel Uwainat; had trade routes to the Mediterranean coast, central Africa, and the Sinai; held spiritual and occult ceremonies; and constructed a stone calendar circle and megaliths at the ceremonial site of Nabta Playa reminiscent of Stonehenge, yet much older. Revealing these “Star People” as the true founders of ancient Egyptian civilization, this book completely rewrites the history of world civilization, placing black Africa back in its rightful place at the center of mankind’s origins.

Courtesy of Google Translate…. Egypt is the source of many civilizations. The Greeks went there to draw their main sources of philosophy, mathematics, health, lifestyle, the Hebrews drew there their monotheism, their alphabet, the Africans preserved customs, rites, elements of language. .. Finally, among the Ethiopians, in the Coptic churches, there is a good chance that during the Coptic mass, which lasts 6 hours at least, we hear the sacred song of the pharaohs, the magic song of the vowels of which Plato spoke.

When the Pyramids at Giza were built, was that the economy of the Egyptian Empire? Was the building of the pyramids what all commerce basically revolved around?

The economy was primarily based around agriculture. The peasants would have been taxed in the form of food, as they had no coins at that point. The Pyramids were built by farmers during the off-season. They were paid in bread and beer, meaning that they grain they paid in taxes was returned to them in a cooked or brewed form.

The Pyramids definitely required a lot of men and expenditure, but not enough to represent the entire economy of Egypt. They took 20 years to build, so everything was a little at a time.

Why did the Ottoman ruler in Egypt lose control of the Suez Canal?

Stephen Tempest

qualified amateur historian HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/Why-did-the-Ottoman-ruler-in-Egypt-lose-control-of-the-Suez-Canal/answer/Stephen-Tempest" \t "_blank" August 16

No ‘Ottoman ruler’ of Egypt ever controlled the Suez Canal.

The man who could most likely be called the last Ottoman ruler of Egypt was Hurshid Pasha, who was appointed as governor (Wali) in 1804. However, in 1805 his troops abandoned him in favour of the populist military leader Muhammad Ali, an Albanian regimental commander who had revolted against Ottoman rule during the period of anarchy after Napoleon's French army was driven out of Egypt in 1801.

Hurshid was besieged in the Cairo Citadel, while an assembly of Egyptian clerics and scholars (the ulema) declared Muhammad Ali the ruler of Egypt. Hurshid Pasha was then allowed to return to the Ottoman Empire, where his failure in Egypt apparently did not affect his career: he went on to become Governor of Rumelia in 1808, commander of the Ottoman army fighting Serbia in 1909, Grand Vizier of the Ottoman Empire in 1812, and governor of the Morea in 1820. However, he was disgraced during the Greek Revolt, accused of misappropriating a huge fortune in wealth confiscated from the rebels, and was dismissed from office. He committed suicide in 1822, narrowly forstalling the arrival of emissaries from the Sultan with orders for his execution.

Hurshid Pasha thus died 47 years before the completion of the Suez Canal in 1869.

The last actual Ottoman governor of Egypt (as opposed to independent rulers who paid lip service to the idea of being Ottoman viceroys), deposed in 1805

Muhammad Ali, who took power in Egypt in 1805 with the support of his own troops and the Egyptian educated classes, did not at first openly break with the Ottoman Empire. He even received an official document (a firman) from the Ottoman government confirming his position — although Hurshid Pasha refused to accept the legitimacy of this, claiming his own appointment as governor took precedence (because it had been issued by the Sultan in person, in his own handwriting, unlike the document obtained by Muhammad Ali).

For all practical purposes, however, Muhammad Ali ruled Egypt as an independent state. He reformed the government, legal and taxation systems, nationalised land, put in place a state trade monopoly, and instituted compulsory labour programmes among the citizenry in order to bring all power into his hands. He attempted to modernise Egypt by bringing in Western advisors and contractors to build factories, infrastructure, schools, and hospitals. He also tried to give Egypt a colonial empire of its own, in the Sudan and Horn of Africa.

Muhammad Ali did not refer to himself as 'governor' of Egypt; he adopted the title Khedive (Khidēv in Persian, later borrowed into Turkish and Arabic), which means 'Lord', and was a title previously used by the Sultans of the Ottoman Empire themselves. The Ottoman authorities refused to accept Muhammad Ali's self-proclaimed use of this title, but did eventually recognise his grandson Ismail Pasha as Khedive of Egypt in a treaty signed in 1867.

This is how Muhammad Ali saw his own role, in relation to the Ottoman Empire:

> The Empire is heading by the day toward destruction. On its ruins I will build a vast kingdom, up to the Euphrates and the Tigris.

He followed through on his ambition: in October 1831 Egypt declared war on the Ottoman Empire. An Egyptian army marched north through Palestine and overran Syria, then invaded Anatolia itself and defeated the Ottoman army at the Battle of Konya. The Ottoman Empire seemed close to collapse; but seeking to avert this, Britain, France, and Russia intervened and forced a peace settlement. Egypt annexed Crete and the Hejaz, and as a compromise Muhammad Ali's son Ibrahim was made the Ottoman governor of Syria, though the territory remained officially part of the Ottoman Empire.

Fighting broke out again in 1839 as the Ottomans attempted to reconquer Syria. Once again the Western powers intervened, and Muhammad Ali was obliged to abandon his new conquests in return for international recognition of the status of his dynasty as the hereditary rulers of Egypt, as confirmed in the Convention of London of 1840.

In 1848 the 79-year old Muhammad Ali retired from power due to advanced age and ill-health. His son Ibrahim Pasha was to succeed him, but Ibrahim had tuberculosis and died from it nine months before his father. The next Khedive of Egypt was thus Muhammad Ali's grandson (and Ibrahim's nephew) Abbas.

Abbas had been condemned by his own grandfather as lazy, and he lived down to expectations, showing little interest in ruling Egypt other than reversing several of Muhammad Ali's reforms. He was murdered in 1854 by two of his palace slaves, supposedly in revenge for sadistic acts of cruelty towards them.

The next Khedive was Said Pasha, a younger son of Muhammad Ali. He had been sent to Paris by his father to obtain a Western education, and he resumed his father's policy of modernisation that had been abandoned by Abbas.

Most importantly for the purpose of this question, on 30 November 1854 Khedive Said of Egypt signed a contract with the French entrepreneur Ferdinand de Lesseps to authorise the construction of the Suez Canal.

This initial agreement provided for an international team of experts to survey possible routes for a canal and assess their feasibility. The International Commission for the piercing of the isthmus of Suez took two years to prepare their final report, which was published in December 1856.

The terms of the concession authorised Ferdinand de Lesseps to set up a company to construct and then operate the canal. The Egyptian government would provide the land needed for the route of the canal free of charge and tax-free (though ultimate ownership would remain with the Egyptian state), and waive all tariffs and taxes on the materials needed for construction. In return, the company would assume all the expenses and risk of the project, and guarantee to employ Egyptian workers as at least 80% of its construction workforce. (Controversially, at first these workers were provided by the Egyptian state as forced labourers.)

The agreement set forth that the canal would be neutral and open to ships of all nations without discrimination or favour. The company would be empowered to charge tolls and fees, and all profits made would be distributed as follows: 15% to the Egyptian government, 10% to Lesseps himself and the other charter members of the company, and the remaining 75% to be distributed as dividends to shareholders.

The concession was to run for 99 years from the date of completion of the canal, but could then be renewed for further periods of 99 years.

The Compagnie universelle du canal maritime de Suez was floated on the Paris stock exchange on 5 November 1858. 400,000 shares were offered at a price of F.500 each. After a month, around 280,000 shares had been sold, over 70% of them to French investors. Said Pasha himself bought 60,000 shares; virtually none were sold in Britain or the USA. At the end of November Said bought up all the unsold shares as well, for a total (including his original purchase) of 177,642 shares, or 44% of the total stock.

The company was formally incorporated on 15 December, and construction began at the site of what would become Port Said — named after the Khedive — on 25 April 1859. The canal took ten years to complete, with its week-long opening ceremony, attended by royalty from several nations, beginning on 15 November 1869.

Opening ceremony of the canal in 1869

By that time, however, Khedive Said Pasha had died. His successor was his nephew Ismail Pasha, who came to the throne in 1863.

Ismail, a grandson of Muhammad Ali through his son Ibrahim, was ambitious and, like his predecessor, had been educated in Paris. He invested a fortune in modernisation projects such as railways, telegraph lines, and bridges; he expanded commercial agriculture such as cotton and sugar; he funded a major expansion of the country's education system. He also built Africa's first opera house, with the help of Italian architects; Verdi's opera Aida, which is set in ancient Egypt, was specially commissioned for the Cairo Royal Opera House and had its world première there in 1871.

Ismail also attempted to expand Egypt's colonial empire down the Red Sea coast, acquiring Massawa (now in Eritrea) in 1865 and invading Ethiopia in 1875. The latter war, however, was an expensive failure.

Egypt fell heavily into debt, due to the wars and all of Ismail's expensive construction projects. However, the real crisis in Egyptian finances was caused, indirectly, by the American Civil War.

Prior to that conflict, the majority of the world's cotton supplies had been shipped from the southern states of the USA. When they seceded in 1860-61, however, that trade virtually ended, causing a crisis of supply in the European cotton industry. It is well-known that the British and others found alternative sources of cotton outside of America, and so the diplomatic leverage which the Confederacy had hoped to gain from its prewar near-monopoly failed to materialise, and there was no European intervention in the American Civil War. However, the effect on Egypt is perhaps less familiar.

Under Ismail, Egypt massively expanded its cotton farming industry during the 1860s, in order to take advantage of the market opportunity and the higher prices which cotton was now commanding. This in turn led to greatly expanded state revenues from taxation. Egypt's economy was booming.

Sadly, instead of using this windfall to pay down his existing debts, Ismail used it as collateral to borrow even more money. For the time being, private banks in France and Britain were happy to lend to the Egyptian government, believing it was much more secure than lending to a private borrower.

When Ismail came to the throne in 1863, Egypt's national debt was £3 million, on an annual state revenue of £8 million. By 1875 the national debt had ballooned to £90 million, a three thousand percent increase in just a dozen years.

The crisis came in the 1870s after Reconstruction in the USA was over, and the Deep South's plantations — now farmed by sharecroppers insead of slaves — were once again ready to export their cotton. Adding this revived US production to the cotton production in other countries, including Egypt, which had sprung up in the last decade led to a worldwide glut of cotton, and the market price crashed through the floor.

Since Egypt's ever-more shaky and unsustainable financial situation depended on the continued high price of its cotton exports, this was nothing short of disastrous.

Ismail was reduced to borrowing even more money to pay the interest on his current debts. When the banking houses realised what he was doing, they shut down his access to further credit. He was now desperate.

He did, however, have one valuable asset he could still sell: the shares in the Suez Canal Company his uncle Said had purchased in 1858.

The first scheme the Khedive came up with was rather complex: he sold back to the Suez Canal Company his right to receive dividends on the shares he owned, for a period of 25 years. The company paid him 30 million francs for this; then raised the money back by selling on the stock market special coupons (délégations) which would entitle the owner to payment of the dividends the Khedive would otherwise receive.

He was, however, still drowning in debt; so he began negotiating with various banks and financial institutions over the possibility of selling the actual shares. The British government became aware of these negotiations through rumours and intelligence reports, and their consul-general in Cairo was instructed to approach the Khedive to discover the truth. On 25 November 1875, rather to their surprise, Ismail approached them with a blunt offer. He had — so he claimed — been offered £4 million by an unnamed purchaser to buy the shares. He would prefer to sell them to the British government, but only if they were willing to meet that price. Whatever their decision, it would need to be made straight away.

This placed the government of Benjamin Disraeli in a dilemma. There was no time to consult Parliament or go through the proper channels to make a decision. Four million pounds was a huge amount of money in those days (equivalent to about £7 billion today in terms of percentage of GDP, or around £400 million in terms of direct purchasing power equivalence). It was not certain that the shares were actually worth that much, in commercial terms, especially since they would not receive dividends for the next 25 years. They would also not even give Britain a controlling interest in the canal — the shares would make the UK government the single largest shareholder in the company, but there were not enough of them being sold to grant a majority.

Nevertheless, Disraeli decided to press ahead and agree to Ismail's deal. He thought it would be useful to Britain to have a direct financial interest in the canal; but even more importantly, if he turned Ismail down the Khedive might instead sell the shares to a hostile foreign power. 70% of the trade passing through the canal was in British-flagged vessels, and it was essential that whoever owned the Suez Canal should be, at the very least, neutral towards the UK. There was a rumour circulating that the French government was also in the market for the shares, though they later denied it.

Disraeli therefore agreed to pay £4 million for the Khedive's 177,642 shares. It was then discovered, however, that Ismail had already sold about a thousand of them elsewhere, so the final deal was £3,976,582 for 176,602 shares.

Since there wasn't time for Parliament to authorise the disbursement of public funds in the usual way, Disraeli asked Lionel de Rothschild to lend him the money instead (plus a 2.5% commission to the Rothschilds for their assistance). This loan was supposedly agreed with a simple handshake. A couple of months later, Parliament's Supply Committee got round to agreeing to repay the Rothschilds for their loan. Disraeli, meanwhile, proudly yet laconicly informed Queen Victoria of the purchase of the Suez Canal shares: "You have it, madam".

That's mostly not true. Egypt saw a succession of different dynasties, interregnums during which there was no Egyptian state to speak of, and periods of division and foreign occupation, including three notable interdynastic periods of a century or more and centuries of existence as a province in somebody else's empire. The Roman state wasn't really more than a modest kingdom until some time into the Republic, changed its fundamental political organization twice during that span, and that thousand year measurement ignores the survival of the Byzantine empire. And there is no American empire. Through various mechanisms, including genocide, we've become a nation-state (yes, technically we have a handful of subject territories and people; no, they aren't significant enough to really make us an empire).

As for tearing itself apart, I'd recommend reading a lot more history. However bad this time is, I've personally lived through worse. During the decade I was born, there were race and anti-war riots, the assassination of a president, the assassination of his brother, and the assassination of a couple of notable civil rights leaders. And a century before that, we fought a straight-up civil war with armies in the field and all that kind of thing. Not that things can't get much worse than we are now, but we're not yet and are unlikely to get ourselves into an actual shooting war like we did in the middle of the 19th century. We are, I should think, far more likely to change in unpleasant ways than to end completely.

We don't know, and there's a good chance that she wasn't mummified at all, just hastily buried. She killed herself when it was clear that she was going to be captured by Octavian's army. The rest of the palace staff probably fled.

Octavian wanted to display her as a prisoner in his triumph in Rome. He had to make do with a statue of her instead.

Arsinoe IV was Cleopatra VII's half sister - same father, different mother.

Arsinoe's body has not been definitively found, so any claim as to her ancestry is fanciful at best.

The claims about Arsinoe are based on:

A tomb in Ephesus that bears no name, but possibly is of roughly the correct date (50 to 20 BC, when Arsinoe was murdered inv41 BC).

A female skeleton found in the tomb, whose skull is missing, but which again might just be of the right time period, but which is clearly of a much younger individual than Arsinoe (age 15 to 18 when Arsinoe was in her mid twenties).

A disputed analysis of the missing skull, based upon techniques now considered to be unreliable and based on racist ideas.

So, on the whole, no convincing evidence as yet.

Why haven't we created more pyramids?
HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/profile/Matt-Riggsby" \t "_blank"

Matt Riggsby MA Archaeology, Boston University HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/Why-havent-we-created-more-pyramids/answer/Matt-Riggsby" \t "_blank" April 7

We do. For some time, I lived in Oakland, and when the weather was clear, I could see the Transamerica pyramid in San Francisco from my balcony. And one time visiting Las Vegas I saw the Luxor hotel.
But we don't really build ancient-style pyramids, as the Egyptians, Maya, and other pre-industrial societies did. Why not? Because there's very little point. Why, to turn the question around, should we build more pyramids? What do they do for us? Sure, a really big pyramid looks impressive, but so does a skyscraper or a big sports stadium. And we can actually use those. We can put apartments and offices in skyscrapers, and we can go to sporting events, concerts, and other public events in stadia. Ancient-style pyramids, though, are basically just well-organized piles of rocks and dirt. They just sit there, giving us very little return for the work we'd put into them. If all you've got is late Neolithic or Bronze Age technology, pyramids are your best bet for making an impressive monument, but we've got much better options these days.

Well, according to traditional belief, it took us 40 years. We’re a slow bunch.

But according to Google Maps, the walk from Cairo to Jerusalem is around 6 to 7 days of pure walking.

Edit: Funny comments

Took forty years to find the only place without oil. (But took the wrong direction and found a land with milk and money instead)

No matter how much their wives pleaded with them the men wouldn’t ask directions!

Hesham Hassanein Student of Egyptian history and culture HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/Are-Egyptians-really-Arabs/answer/Hesham-Hassanein" 3y

No. We are not Arabs. Although Egyptians have been brainwashed by multiple governments into thinking this way, with Sadat's government going so far as renaming the country the Arab Republic of Egypt, this is simply not true.
There are many ways I can explain this. But I'll choose three. Genetics, history and culture.

Genetics. Multiple studies have been done on the genetic history of the modern Egyptians. And you know what they all concluded? Egyptians are not Arabs. Now you really should NOT take the word of a random stranger online when it comes to research, so I leave you with some links that can help you do some private research if you so choose.

HYPERLINK "http://www.egyptindependent.com/dna-analysis-proves-egyptians-are-not-arabs/" \o "www.egyptindependent.com" \t "_blank" DNA analysis proves that Egyptians are not Arabs - Egypt Independent

HYPERLINK "http://www.cairoscene.com/Buzz/National-Geographic-s-DNA-Analysis-Proves-Egyptians-Are-Only-17-Arab" \o "www.cairoscene.com" \t "_blank" National Geographic's DNA Analysis Concludes that Egyptians are Only 17% Arab History. The Arabs that came to Egypt were soldiers. There was never a mass migration of Arabs into Egypt. There was never a mass exodus of Egyptians out of Egypt. Such an event would have been noted down in Arab history, Egyptian history, or any country that suddenly had a massive influx of immigrants from Egypt. Not to mention that the size of the Arab people was simply nothing in comparison to the size of the Egyptian people. Even if every single person who was living in the Arabian peninsula moved to Egypt, they still would have been a minority. And we know that didn't happen. Egypt saw Arab soldiers move there. There was never a mass migration of Arabs into Egypt, there was never a mass exodus out of Egypt, there was never a mass holocaust of the Egyptian people.

Culture. Some people will point to the fact that Egyptians speak Arabic as evidence that Egyptians are Arabs. Unfortunately, that's not how genetics work. When I learned Spanish in college it did not change my genetic makeup and turn me into a Spaniard. I speak English as my native language - that doesn't make me an Englishman. Egypt was forced to Arabize by the Ummayad Caliphate. That doesn't make them Arabs, any more than how the Natives of Mexico were forced to learn Spanish. But don't go telling any Mayans that they're really Spaniards.

More on culture, Egyptian culture is more influenced by Turkish culture than it is by Arab culture. Have you ever studied Arab culture? Compare the Gulf to the Egyptians. The culture is so different. From music, to dress codes. The way people talk, the social norms. Egyptians are nothing like the Arabs. However our culture was heavily influenced by Islam, although it wasn't until I started learning about Turkey that I realized that our culture takes from the Turks, not the Arabs. And it makes sense. Egypt's ruling family, the Muhammad Ali dynasty, they were Ottomans. And they founded Egypt's modern state. The Ottomans/Turks made up, for a long time, Egypt's ruling class. Movies, music, culture. It was influenced by them. The Arab were soldiers.

In short, Egyptians are not Arabs. Egyptians have been programmed to repeat that line "we're Arabs" by successive governments vying for power and control. But it is a lie. It was based on the political aspirations of a military desperate to create a super power in the Middle East and North Africa - look up the United Arab Republic. It was a dream of a dictator. And the military used their dream of a superpower to brainwash a nation into forgetting who they are. But with the influx of information online today, the Egyptian people have started to reject this lie and are accepting themselves for who they are. Not Arabs, but Egyptians. Unique in their heritage. A people on our own. Not a part of any colonial Arab state. Calling myself an Arab would be like calling myself English or French. All three colonized Egypt. But we are not the descendants of any of them.

I hope that cleared that up

Culturally, linguistically and politically, yes. Genetically, no. That's for the majority of Egyptians.

Distribution of haplogroup J1C3D1(Arab Gene) across the Middle East

As you can see Arab genes aren't predominant in Egypt.

So if Egyptians aren't genetically Arabs then why are they referred to as such? Because genetics have nothing to do with identities.

But why did Egyptians start identifying as Arabs from the first place?

Prior to the 7th century Islamic conquest and the Arabization process that ensued, Egyptians were known as Copts and that was the name used by peninsular Arabs to refer to Egyptians. However, as Egyptians started embracing Islam, and the Arabic language, the terms Copt and Egyptian were dropped in favour of Muslim from Egypt.

You see, in Islam there isn't really a concept of nationality or a separate identity other than being a Muslim. So once an individual converts to Islam he is expected to let go of all earthly affiliations other than being a member of the Ummah. As such, Muslims rejected national identities in favour of a single and unified religious one.

That's how some medieval Muslims, including Egyptians, interpreted Islamic texts; such theories aren't accepted by modern Muslims.

Back to our topic.

Because of this interpretation of Islam, Egyptians didn't care about forming a distinct national identity and whether they're Arabs or not until the late 19th and early 20th centuries when the country started getting rid of foreign influences.

Independence was surging across the region. These newly independent countries were culturally and linguistically similar to each other and so they decided that it would be in everybody's interests that they all unite. Thus, Arabism was born.

The vast majority of Egyptians speak Arabic as a first language and are culturally close to other Arabic-speaking countries. As such, the political leadership chose to align Egypt with Arabism and decided to join this new bloc becoming a founding member of the Arab League.

From hereafter, Egyptians became known as Arabs.

Does this make Egyptians any less Arab than Saudis and Kuwaitis? Nope.

Egypt is an integral part of the Arab World. In fact, the headquarters of the Arab League is situated in Cairo.

So yes, Egyptians are Arabs.

Does this make Egyptians any less Egyptian or less African than Nigerians? Nope.

Nobody forced Egyptians to speak Arabic and there was no mass extermination or displacement of Egyptians from their homeland. As such, any claims that Egyptians were forcibly Arabized or that modern Egyptians aren't natives are misleading, unfounded and baseless.

In conclusion, Egyptians are indeed Arabs but they're mostly indigenous to Egypt as well.

Does the Sphinx actually have open spaces under and inside of it?

No for the most part it is made out of solid limestone, with externally added masonry with a few robber tunnels or incomplete modifications here and there. There are plentiful fringe theories and beliefs but several expeditions have found fissures beneath it but this normal for water saturated limestone.

“”Hawass affirmed the presence of three tunnels; the first exists above the back of the statue and was discovered in 1937 by the French engineer Bering who was searching for treasures inside the body of the statue.

While the second tunnel was found at the north side of the statue before it was drowned by French Egyptologist Gupino. It was believed that the tunnel was full of treasures and monuments.

The third tunnel exists behind “The Dream Portrait” and was found by the Italian adventurer Kavliain the early 19th century when he was digging under the chest of Sphinx. “”

The fantasy world believe these tunnels are beneath the Sphinx - and if they were there they’d be filled with water. Ideas about tunnels are often confused with the real discovery of the Osiris shaft.

The OS is located near to but is not connected to it in any way (presently known)

First of all, Maasai migration is less than 700 years old, but it originates from middle Nilotic areas; the language, like many of that region, has distinct influences from Afrasan languages because they traded and interacted for a very long period of time. But Maasai were never part of Nubia, and their language is not a close match to even Meroitic (which some claim to have eastern Nilotic affinities), much less the undeniably Afrasan languages north of the First Cataract. It also ignores the jettisoning of written language that would have to be involved—an unlikely development, given that it not only persisted but flourished (although we can't read it very well) when transferred to Meroë.

Almost the entire Afrocentrist exercise is one of honoring the same hegemony of ideas and values while just flipping the script. It offers no actual knowledge of the brilliance that does develop in societies south of the Sahara on its own accord; rather, it simply appropriates greatness that Europeans have decided is important (the "Africans/Black Phoenicians made it to America first" trope is exactly the same in this regard, right down to ignoring Native Americans) and projects a "black" identity and unitary Africanness into the distant past. Those things are, of course, unremitting bullshit that reinforces a stupid, stupid 19th-century idea of teleology and waves away the real achievements of African societies and states.

Last semester I had one of these Afrocentrists in my survey course, and while we weren't able to cure him entirely, we did get him to see a bit outside this very confining box. When I was talking about nonliterate societies and the way that client networks and caste systems functioned in West Africa, he took it to mean that historians and anthropologists were calling them stupid and medieval. It took a good 20 minutes to explain to him that literacy is not a prerequisite for sophisticated material and social culture. Even so, he brought up the Vai syllabary and all sorts of things that Afrocentrists claim to be ancient but which are clearly 19th-century, while ignoring pictographic scripts like Nsibidi, which really are a couple of thousand years old because they only appeared on pottery and had to be interpreted, so they didn't fit the "language achievement" model this person had bought into. It's hard to get some students off that rail.

Have a look at Chris Ehret's remarkable An African Classical Age. He talks about the thousand years or so, around 500BC-500CE or so, to get at the dynamism of the Great Lakes region. Rather than being just one polity, it was a crossing point of a wide range of cultural influences—sort of like the Western Mediterranean of that era—and the results are visible today in language, culture, and lifeways. Scholars argue with his particulars, but it's a very worthwhile book. The idea that one must have a unitary polity to have civilization is a little silly in its light. But large empires did form, or at least larger polities, across wide areas; their influence is a bit subtle because the low population density of much of the continent meant primacy of exit and shifting power relations often made lineage and household more important. (John Iliffe's Africans has a good, though dense, discussion of this.)

But the influence of the Sudanic empires—in succession from Mali and Songhay to the Jihad states of the 19th century—remains significant, even though their levels of control always waxed and waned. Wagadu ("Ghana"), Kanem-Bornu, Meroë, Aksum and Ethiopia, the Karanga state we know as Great Zimbabwe, the Toutswe polity (and Leopard's Kopje polities), and the like all had enormous effects on respective regional developments in settlement patterns, wealth distribution, language, and the creation of new states—and through their connections to North Africa and East Africa, their fortunes reached out to the wider world; the hajj of Malian mansa Musa I in 1324-25 is just one example. The same way that invaders from Europe and Asia (I think the Omanis on Zanzibar count) couldn't build giant conquest states in Africa before the late 1800s, African polities had little desire or need to expand their realms across the forbidding areas in between. Unfortunately, we know less than we should about the historical societies because the work hasn't been done, and the work hasn't been done because people assume there's nothing worth learning. When the work is done, however, we find out pretty mind-blowing things about democracy in West and Central Africa, the construction of short-range trade networks in the desert, and so forth. But the bias feeds itself.

Egyptologists believe that the Great Pyramid of Giza most likely originally had a capstone at the top, which was covered in gold or electrum. This capstone no longer exists. There are extensive surviving ancient Egyptian documents about how widespread robbery of the pyramids was in antiquity, so it is likely that the capstone was stolen by a thief many thousands of years ago. Capstones from other pyramids that are not gold-plated have survived, though, such as the one shown below from Pyramid of Amenemhat III at Dahshur.

In 1356, Sultan An-Nasir Nasir-ad-Din al-Hasan removed many of the outer stones from the Great Pyramid for construction projects in Cairo. In the early nineteenth century, Muhammad Ali Pasha ordered the removal of even more stones, which were used for the construction of the Alabaster Mosque in Cairo. As a result, the Great Pyramid is slightly shorter than it was in ancient times.

At some point in 1874 or 1875, a British astronomer named David Gill added a mast on top of the pyramid, most likely for some purposes related to measuring the pyramid's original height. The mast remains on top of the pyramid to this day.

Everything that was said here about rivers is all true, but then why didn't the Danube or Oxus produce great cradles of civilization?

The great combination that is unique for Mesopotamia and Egypt is rivers among deserts.

Many historians suggest that the sharp difference between the fertile lands of the river valleys and the dead deserts caused massive settling of nomads within the valleys to form permanent agricultural communities.

Still, it's worth noting that some independent civilisations have developed in other conditions as well - in the Andes, or in China for example. But yes, rivers among deserts have possibly been the most effective factor for humans to settle down in masses.

There is no country on the continent (very few in the world, really) American support cannot dismember.

Do not be surprised if you end up alone after your independence.

Notice that the statue lies within an excavated pit.

The Sphinx's head was carved from a natural outcrop of stone. But, to make the rest of the body, the sculptors had to dig into the bedrock. This makes the Sphinx sit lower than the surrounding surface.

Here it is from the side…

Here, you can see just how high the back of the Sphinx is compared to the outside of the excavated pit. It doesn't sit much higher. Untended, the pit would have filled in with sand, plus a bit more over time. This is why the Sphinx was covered over in antiquity.

Let's discuss those 3 wars

First Arab Israeli war:
The first war in 1948 the Arabs gravely underestimated the Israelis. Only Egypt and Jordan had sent noteworthy armed contingents while the rest of the coalition sufficed by sending symbolic units that didn't do much. Arabs at the time were newly independent nations with little experience in modern warfare.

Furthermore, Egypt's King Farouk had an ambition to revive the Caliphate and bring the Arab world under his sphere of influence as Egypt at the time was the richest Arab country. This was opposed by Jordan's King Abdullah who resented Farouk for two reasons

Farouk was originally an Albanian not Arab Abdullah was a descendant of the Prophet and viewed that the leadership other Arab world was rightfully his

The Jordan army known as the Arab Legion was organized better than the Egyptian army and was led by experienced British officers. Jordan annexed the west bank but refrained from attacking Jewish held lands and later engaged in secret meetings with the Jews. Abdullah was an expansionist and cared little about a Palestinian state and almost immediately after annexing the west bank he erased any kind of a distinct Palestinian culture.

Fighting in Upper Galilee

Since he had already established secret relations with the Jews Jordan refrained from engaging them outside the west bank, this led to the Jewish militants concentrating their abilities against fighting Egypt. The structural hierarchy of the Egyptian command was corrupt and Egyptians themselves were not fully committed to the war thinking that the Jews were little more than a bunch of militias; however, they turned out to be a formidable opponent.

There were a lot of war crimes committed by all sides during this war.

After losing the war, king Farouk was later overthrown in a military coup headed by disgruntled war veterans lead by future president Gamal Abdel Nasser.

So we gather that:

1. Poor coordination
2. Lack of organisation
3. Underestimating the enemy

All of those were the main reasons why Arabs lost.

Nasser was a socialist Arab nationalist and naturally resented Israel for occupying Arab land. He started helping other Arab countries to gain their independence like Algeria and Yemen, promoted unity between the Arabs and nationalised the Suez canal. An act that would compel UK, France and Israel to attack Egypt in 1956. Due to foreign pressure the invasion had to be halted and all three countries retreated in shame.

Around this time tensions were extremely high in the middle east. It was during the height of the Arab Cold War that Syria and Israel started amassing troops at their respective borders. There was a recent purge in Syria that followed a coup that brought radicals to power which weakened Syria considerably. Syria appealed to Egypt itself, which was stuck in a long war in Yemen.

Realising that Syria will be doomed if it fought Israel alone, Nasser started antagonising Israel to make it clear that an aggression against Syria is an aggression against Egypt and that he won't tolerate any attack that threatened the sovereignty of an Arab country. Both Egypt and Syria then bullied Jordan into a joint defense pact to face the war looming on the horizon.

Nasser was going to attack Israel but was told not to by the USA and was further promised Soviet support in case a war breaks out. This made Nasser slack a bit and chose to simply close the Tiran straits to Israeli ships.This turned out to be a fatal mistake as Nasser picked up a fight against Israel based on false hopes and the experienced soldiers and officers were still fighting in Yemen.

On June 5th 1967 Israel launched a series of preemptive airstrikes wiping out the entire Egyptian air force giving them complete air supremacy. The Jordanians were told that Egypt fended off the aggression which in turn led to more confusion among its leadership.

After 6 days Israel had captured the Sinai peninsula, Gaza strip, Golan heights and the west bank. With that in addition to the total defeat of Arab armies Nasser resigned in shame but returned again after mass protests demanded him to be reinstated.

Syria's president Hafez Al-Assad and Egypt's president Anwar Al-Sadat

The Arab society is a tribal one and believes that what is lost by war shall be regained by war. Feeling the urge to restore the Arab's honour back Egypt and Syria agreed to simultaneously launch a coordinated attack against Israel to regain lost territories.

Before the war in 1971 Sadat told his Minister of War Ahmed Ismail Ali the following:

> I want us to plan the offensive within our capabilities, nothing more. Cross the canal and hold even 10 cm of the Sinai. I am exaggerating, ofcourse, but that will help me greatly and alter completely the political situation internationally and within Arabic ranks.

Contrary to popular belief and common misconception spread here on Quora, Egypt had no intention whatsoever of destroying Israel. Assad didn't know of Sadat's plan and thought that they were waging a war to liberate Palestine, this would later cause severe problems in the course of the war.

On the 6th of October 1973 the Arabs launched their coordinated attack on Israel which took them with complete surprise. That day was the holiest day in the Jewish calendar and also coincided with the holy month of Ramadan where Muslims fast.

The operation, which was named Badr after the first battle in the Muslim history that was also faught in Ramadan, proved successful and both Egypt and Syria managed to cut through Israeli defence lines and penetrate deep into enemy held territory. With Egypt destroying several forts on the Bar Lev line and Syria completely overcoming the Purple Line.

President Assad visiting troops during the war

As planned Egypt didn't advance further beyond its captured territories and dug in. Syria on the other hand did not know this and continued its push against Israel reaching the Israeli heartland itself alarming the command.

However, knowing that Egypt won't advance any further the Israelis concentrated their might against Syria. After 3 days of aggressive offensive the Syrians were pushed back with heavy casualties and the Israelis were closing in on Damascus.

Pressured by the Soviets and the Arab world to continue the war, Sadat against the advice of his generals ordered the 3rd and 2nd armies to advance beyond the aerial coverage provided by the SAM batteries. This proved to be a fatal mistake as the offensive was countered with Israeli troops taking advantage of a gap between the advancing Egyptian armies and reaching the Suez Canal. Ariel Sharon's unit crossed into the African part of Egypt and rolled over to the highway leading to Cairo. Other Israeli units lost at the battles of Suez, Ismaila and the air battle of Mansoura and failed to capture any city west of the Suez. A ceasefire was imposed but later broken by the Israelis who proceeded to complete the encirclement of the Egyptian 3rd army, which was composed of 30 000 men.

Meanwhile in Syria after heavy fighting and immense casualties for both sides the Syrian front was stabilised, although Israeli artillery shelled the outskirts of Damascus. Egypt had organised 600 tanks for the defence of Cairo but was convinced by the Soviets to accept the UN mandated ceasefire which Sadat did on October 22. This in turn placed pressure on Assad who was planning for a massive counterattack against Israel, ultimately he cancelled the operation and accepted a ceasefire. The war ended on October 25.

Unlike the previous wars this time the Arabs were able to effectively fight Israel, managing to win initially although poor coordination AGAIN resulted in the war taking a different turn.

It amazes me how Ancient Egyptian society as a whole stayed almost unchanged for more than 3000 years, including the way the pharaoh was believed to be a demi-god to his people. Even the royal attire and royal attributes and symbolism stayed almost the same for 3000 years:

Tradition and conservatorism meant stability and prosperity.

I love how they associated themselves with the sun god Ra, as the son of Ra or even merging with Ra in eternity after death.

The most fascinating dynasty is the 18th dynasty. It produced some of the most interesting and unique pharaohs:two female pharaohs Hatshepsut and Nefertiti the Napoleon of antiquity Thutmoses III who expanded the Egyptian Empire to its maximum territory

Akhenaten, the heretic, who tried to impose an early form of monotheism over his people by worshiping only a sun god, Aten

Tutankhamun, because, you know. Nevertheless there is evidence that he may not have been a weakling after all just by the great amount of weapons found in his tomb like many bows and arrows, hunting boomerangs, a slingshot, chariots and even a used letter armor.

Hatshepsut is the first example of a queen regent and daughter of a pharaoh to proclaim herself pharaoh along the young Thutmoses III, without the pressure of a non-existent male heir. There was another royal daughter in the Middle Kingdom, Sobekneferu, who was proclaimed pharaoh as lacking any male heir. Nefertiti probably followed Hatshepsut's example and after the death of her husband, Akhenaten, made herself king under the name of Ankhkeperure Neferneferuaten.

Ps: I probably made a lot of typos. Please, point them to me.

The ancient Egyptians considered lettuce to be a symbol of what?

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://ci4.googleusercontent.com/proxy/ckDd8miEgLF522TtL9nV4F3pJ6TC6lAYjl72LGffma0RUCnKqSVK0GBBhE3ybrASvzsyAOktYzFvcNAQ4fZyDU4cmcY-Rqe2ho6UEX0PtSOUZCYQuporwonCvS0=s0-d-e1-ft#https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-cdc0850044f4036cc5441bbd3189c534-lq" * MERGEFORMATINET

Here's a pharoah (at right) offering two heads of lettuce (Egyptian style lettuce, like romaine, is tall rather than round) to the fertility god HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Min_(god)" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Min — who is, in a complex roundabout way, also Horus — who responds quite visibly. From the temple of Abu Simbel. Photo: HYPERLINK "https://www.voyagevirtuel.co.uk/egypt/photo/abou-simbel-n6.php" \o "www.voyagevirtuel.co.uk" \t "_blank" C. Rozay

More importantly, that suggestion got included in the set of stories involving Horus, Set, Isis and Osiris. The whole thing gets complex.

Lettuce plays a key role in the interesting face-off between the rival gods Horus and Set. Set tries to claim dominion over Horus by having intercrural sex with him while he sleeps. Horus wakes up and catches his rival's semen in his hands — but Isis is scandalized and cuts off Horus's hands as a result. This degradation threatens Horus's claim on the throne of Egypt. Isis, however, tricks Set into eating some of Horus's semen hidden in a milky-lettuce leaf. This is even more emasculating — not only does the revelation of this trick scuppered Set's claims to power, Set actually becomes pregnant and gives "birth" to a solar disk through his forehead.

This is, I should add, merely a greatest-hits reel of the Horus-Set-Isis-Osiris saga; like I said, it's complex. You can find the whole thing HYPERLINK "https://chesterbeatty.ie/assets/uploads/2018/11/The-Library-of-A.-Chestera-Beatty-Description-of-a-Hieratic-Papyrus-with-a-Mythological-Story-Love-Songs-and-Other-Miscellaneous-Texts.pdf" \o "chesterbeatty.ie" \t "_blank" here (though this translation is a bit elderly). If you're a structural anthropologist there's all sorts of deep material here regarding sexuality, fertility, intergenerational inheritance and political power. For the rest of us, it's time for a knowing look and a subdued "uh-huh".

Some more details here:

The whole "sexy-lettuce" thing is also found in Mesopotamia, where you get love-poems like HYPERLINK "https://resgerendae.wordpress.com/2013/02/14/the-lettuce-of-my-heart/" \o "resgerendae.wordpress.com" \t "_blank" this bit from Sumeria (it's racier in cuneiform but you can get the gist).

He's sprouted! He's burgeoned! He's lettuce planted by the water,

My well-stocked garden of the… plain, my darling of his mother's womb,

My barley-stalk luxuriant in its furrow – he's lettuce planted by the water,

My apple tree which bears fruit up to its top – he's lettuce planted by the water.

The honey-man, the honey-man does sweet things to me!

My lord, the honey-man of the gods, my darling of his mother's womb,

Whose hand is honey, whose foot is honey, was doing sweet things to me!

His limbs are honey-sweet, and he was doing sweet things to me!

He was doing sweet things to my insides, all the way up to my navel!

My darling of his mother's womb,

My […] of the fair thighs, he's lettuce planted by the water.

“Nobody” is pretty stupid, then.

The pyramids have great big sarcophagi in them.

They’re in the middle of a massive funerary complex.

We have written material that says what they’re for.

There’s nothing else that they’re any good for. They don’t generate energy. They don’t send out signals. They don’t sharpen razor blades.

I realize it’s more fun to speculate about outlandish nonsense than it is to believe the prosaic truth, but it’s unscientific and does nobody any favors.

Without the desertification of the Sahara, Egypt would never have existed. Desertification pushed people to regroup along the Nile and create a country. However, in Khufu's time there was still a large strip of savannah along the river valley. We can also see scenes of hunting gazelles or lions in Egyptian tombs. So the pyramids were not built in the desert but in a dry savannah.

Helicopter hieroglyphs refer to an Egyptian hieroglyph carving from the Temple of Seti I at Abydos. The "helicopter" image, they say, is the result of carved stone being reused over time.

The initial carving was made during the reign of HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Seti_I" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Seti I and translates to "He who repulses the nine [enemies of Egypt]". This carving was later filled in with plaster and re-carved during the reign of HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Ramesses_II" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Ramesses II with the title "He who protects Egypt and overthrows the foreign countries". Over time, the plaster has eroded away, leaving both inscriptions partially visible and creating a HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Palimpsest" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" palimpsest -like effect of overlapping hieroglyphs.

Something inside me tells me it is something else. Take a look, what do you think? There also appears to be a fast boat (submarine) and a flying spaceship too.

Sinai peninsula lacks for suitable targets

You could destroy a bush here and there, maybe even a historic dwelling of long-forgotten people if you were really lucky, but the Sinai peninsula is home to only 600,000 people, in an area the size of West Virginia or Latvia. Most of those live in areas Hamas couldn't possibly strike.

That's the first reason. The second reason is that Hamas wants to destroy Israel and run Jews (technically, non-Palestinians, but by their charter that would mean all Jews have the right to reside by now) out of what they consider "their" land. They don't have a conflict with Egypt, nor do they want one. They just ignore the fact Egypt loves them as much as Israel does and attack Israel.

Plus if Egypt struck back, they wouldn't be able to win internation

Part of it was about Egyptian pride. Prior to the attack that started the Yom Kippur War, the Egyptians dismissed and deported their Russian military advisors who knew their plans and were dead set against them.

The Israelis were aware that something was up, and although they wanted to stage a pre-emptive attack the same way they did in 1967, the American government was dead set against it.

But that's not how Anwar Sadat and many of the people in his government saw it. Despite being several times larger and more populous than Israel, the world pretty much saw Egypt as a joke. Everyone, including Israel, doubted that the Egyptian armed forces could defend themselves. Other powers in the area, like the Libyans and the Saudis, were being seen as the true forces of the Arab world. The Egyptians were pretty much seen as being on the sidelines.

And then, as Mr. Gall pointed out, there was the Suez. It's blockade by the Israelis was helping to ruin the Egyptian economy and there was no end in sight. The Israelis laughed off attempts to negotiate, and they were busy building Israeli settlements in Gaza and the Sinai. The Egyptians were genuinely afraid of losing their historical territory.

There was a major problem though. The Israelis were just too good. As much as the Egyptians planned, they couldn't figure out a way to beat the Israelis, or even force them back to the 1967 borders. The Syrians were on board with an attack, and that would help keep the Israelis busy, but the problem was that the Israeli defences on the Suez - sand barricades with tanks and planes to back them up, appeared to be impenetrable.

But the Egyptians weren't stupid. If they could beat the Israelis on the front line, things might go their way. The Israelis had pretty much concentrated their defences in the Sinai, and if those were beat, they could go a long way. The thing was, could the Egyptians turn the Israeli strengths into a weakness? They started plans to defeat the sand berms, defeat the planes, and defeat the tanks.

Things had changed a lot in the six years since the Six-Day War, and the Egyptians started looking at new technology. They knew their air force was weak compared to the Israelis, and their tanks weren't a match either. However, there were a lot of Egyptian infantry on the front lines. If they could be put to use they might be able to establish a beach head on the other side of Suez.

The Egyptians then formed a battle plan to make use of their infantry. Over the weeks, they faked moving men back out of the front line area during the day, only to return them at night.

On Yom Kippur in 1973 (a coincidence, they didn't coordinate the attack to be on a high holy day) they unleased Phase I. The Israeli troops behind the sand berms on the Suez were greeted with the sight that morning of boats carrying water cannon. Sometimes high tech isn't the best plan. The Egyptians had tried high explosives, but they barely made a dent in the berms. The water cannon washed them away like they weren't there.

The Israeli front line troops radioed that their positions were in danger. The Israelis, expecting an attack, unleashed their mighty air force. That's when the Egyptians went to Phase II. As the Israelis flew in to take on the Egyptians pouring over the canal, they learned to their horror that the Egyptians had lined the west bank with Soviet Surface-to-Air Missile batteries. Any plane that came anywhere close to the canal was shot out of the sky. Without an air force of their own, the Egyptians had managed to blunt Israeli air superiority at the point of attack.

Undeterred, the Israelis sent in their tanks. That's when the Egyptians unleashed Phase III - Soviet wire guided missiles. Small enough to be carried on a person's back, the missiles, once launched, could be steered by hand towards a target. One Egyptian missile - one Israeli tank. The Egyptians had far more WGMs than the Israelis had tanks. The Egyptian infantry advanced slowly but surely into the Sinai. Meanwhile, Egyptian tanks, protected by the SAM batteries, crossed the Suez and waited as more troops poured in.

Meanwhile, up at the Golan Heights, the Syrians were using their own new technology. An Israeli tank commander was surveying the scene with night vision goggles when he noticed his own tank was glowing. Luckily, he figured it out right away - the Syrians were using infrared targeting to guide their own tank shells. The Israelis retreated quickly before the Syrians could make full use of the measure.

Eventually though, the Israelis got their act together in the Golan and started putting pressure on the Syrians. The Egyptians had stayed put, but finally agreed to try to advance into the Sinai to draw Israeli forces away. It didn't work - once out of the range of the Egyptian SAM batteries, the Israeli air force made mincemeat of the advancing Egyptian tanks. The Israelis in the Sinai finally realized their tanks and planes weren't of much use advancing on Suez, but their infantry could be. They let the infantry advance unsupported by tanks or planes and found the Egyptian forces were ill prepared for direct infantry to infantry fighting because they were mostly armed with anti-tank weapons. The Israelis finally started crossing the canal, and the Egyptians called for a cease fire back at the starting point, something Israel reluctantly agreed to.

So, Israel won, but so did Sadat. He had proved he wasn't irrelevant. He also proved to the Israelis that they had come within about two days of being overrun. After that, it was a lot easier to talk to them.

Third Army really unsaveable and encircled during the Yom Kippur war? Only facts based opinions.
As an Egyptian, I studied this war more than most people.

First of all, the name of the 3rd army is misleading, as the forces in question are the vanguard of the 3rd army (50 thousand soldiers and not the entire army)

Until Oct 22, 1973 the supply line was open and Israeli forces at the west bank of the canal were very vulnerable, so to secure themselves, they decided to break the cease fire decision by security council and cut the supply line to the vanguard of the 3rd army.

To completely maintain the upper hand against the 3rd army, Israel tried to occupy the city of Suez, an adventure that ended.

Our General “Saad El Din EL Shazly”, Chief of Command, asked Sadat to let him finish the Israeli forces circling the Southern western side of Suez Canal. He asked to withdraw limited number/equipment from the 2 nd Army east of the Canal to handle the Israelis who managed to cross the Canal. Sadat refused to listen to General El Shazly. Only God and the 2 men know what was the level of argument between the 2 leaders, one totally military thinking and the other mainly politically thinking. Sadat sacked General El Shazly and to keep him out of influencing the army sent him away to London as an Ambassador. I lived these times of determining the destiny of Egypt for generation to come. My personal opinion, if the Israelis tried to attack our 3 rd Army in Sinai, and General El Shazly responded by attacking the Israelis on the west bank of the Canal, it could have been a suicidal mission for both warriors. Practically; Massacres could have been done on both sides of the Canal, still no winner. Sadat listened to Kessinger as the Remote Controller and chose his political road map to get out of the war with the Egyptian Army intact.

Generally, Coptic Christians and Muslims in Egypt have the same facial features and you cannot distinguish between them based on looks, as most Muslims and Christians have the same ancestral roots.
Perhaps the only places in which you can distinguish between Muslim and Christian women based on their appearance are low/lower-middle class neighborhoods and rural areas, as the hijab in such areas became part of the customs of society and most Muslim women wear it and the only exception is for Christian women.

Of course, some Muslim Egyptians may have additional genetic flavors as a result of the natural mixing with non-Egyptian Muslims, who settled in Egypt during the past centuries, but this, of course, has a minor impact on the overall genetic map of the Egyptians.

Below is a study published in August 2020 concluding that Muslims and Christians in Egypt genetically originate from the same ancestors:

None of the mentioned Kingdoms.
Rather the first recordable civilisation in Africa was dated around 9000 BC. The location was in the Nubian desert between South of Egypt and North of Sudan, extending to parts of Southeeast Libya.

During at the fall of the Ice age 14,000 years ago, the Sahara was a lush land with wildlife and several lake basins. The Nubian desert in south Egypt which is called Nabta Playa, Archaeologist where able to prove that around 9000 BC that they were evidence of prehistoric religion, with a number of sacrificed cattle buried in stone-roofed chambers lined with clay.

The first practice of astronomy in human existence was also traced to the Nubian desert (Nabta Playa)The stone circle dating back to over 9000 years is among the oldest archeoastronomical devices in human history, designed as a prehistoric calender to mark to mark 2 significant celestial phenomenon-which is associated with the onset of summer rains and the arrangement of stars in the night sky, which was used to guide themselves across the desert.

Archeological findings also proved that it was during the Mesolithic period and the people were from the Halfan culture. The Halfan people had developed an advanced urban community, domesticated animals, established an organized labour force, built structures and most importantly the first ever people recorded to practice astronomy….

Desiccation kicked in, due to Climatic change and the once lush region gradually became a desert forcing it's people to settle along the Nile River. Leaving behind megalithic structures, numerous grave sites and building structures.

Some archaeologists believe that the people of Nabta Playa were the precursor civilization for the first Nile cities that arose in that region thousands of years later.

The next civilisation after that was Ta-Seti. Which by 3800 BC was at it's zenith. They were the earliest to have a monarchy system in the Nile valley and they showed the first use of Hieroglyphics even before the founding of ancient Egypt.

Around 3150 BC vassal kingdoms across the Nile united and Ta-Seti became the first administrative region of Upper Egypt.

HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Upper_Egypt" \l "List_of_nomes" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Upper Egypt - Wikipedia

Around 3100 BC Upper Egypt marched North and conquered the Delta region, subjugating it culturally and politically. Unifying the South and the North as one political unit…. The Kingdom of Egypt is born.

A lot of scholars don't talk about all these because of reasons best known to them…. Moreso it hurts them to tell the world that the oldest civilisation was from Black Africans.

If by Macedonia you mean Alexander the Great, who came from there, he did it in 332 BC. He was hailed as a liberator, because Egypt at that time was ruled by foreign overlords, the Persians. He arrived during a civil war and sided with the indigenous Egyptians.

Alexander the Great, king of Macedonia, 356 BCE - 323 BCE: “Your ancestors came to Macedonia and the rest of Greece and did us great harm, though we had done them no prior injury. I HAVE BEEN APPOINTED LEADER OF THE GREEKS and wanting to punish the Persians I HAVE COME TO ASIA, which I took from you.” (Arrian, “Anabasis Alexandri”, Book 2.14.4)

In 332 BC., Alexander the Great conquered Egypt an event that marked the beginning of the GREEK PERIOD IN EGYPTIAN HISTORY. He had captured Gaza and led his forces towards Pelusium, the eastern gateway to Egypt.

The new city of Alexandria, was formed by joining a number of Egyptian villages (April 331). Alexander supervised the religious ceremonies of foundation, including Greek-style athletic and musical games (an indication of his intentions to HELLENIZE those foundations, as far as their cultural life was concerned); he thought that the site was an excellent one and prospered indeed.

Giza pyramids were built at the fringe of the high desert plateau, before it descends into the wide (and green) Nile Valley. According to some reconstructions, there was a canal which allowed to reach the Sphinx by boat.

First of all, learn to spell. It's I-S-R-A-E-L, not "Isreal".
What a King might or might not have done 3,000 years ago is irrelevant.

It would be easier to demand reparations for the 850,000 Jews who were expelled from Arab lands after 1948, purely for the crime of being Jews.

The world meant a very different thing in ancient times to our interpretation, and it basically referred to the known world.
And for the ancient Egyptians, their world was very approximately bounded by the red line on this map:

With their knowledge becoming less and less the further towards that line they went, although some of the goods they traded came from even further away, but by way of third-party traders based within the regions they knew.

It is well known that the ancient Egyptians traded with:

Very little. They were too isolated. They regarded Nubia, to the south, as a horrible place—suitable to trade with and as a client state sometimes, but otherwise unpleasant. To the west was desert. East lay Palestine and the Levant, which they fought over, but beyond them were the hostile Assyrians. To the north was the sea.

This brings up my other point. They lacked a vital piece of technology that they needed to be better explorers: the triangular, fore-and-aft sail. With that, you can sail against the wind. Not easily, you have to tack back and forth, but it's possible. Without it, you can only sail with the wind, and if the prevailing wind is against you, you are out of luck. The ancient Egyptians knew almost nothing of Europe because they couldn't get there.

The prevalent theory is that the Great Sphinx was built for Khafre, son of Khufu, builder of the Great Pyramid. Khafre was a ruler of Egypt's Fourth Dynasty who lived circa 2603-2578 BC. Others propose that it was built by Khafre's older half-brother Redjedef, also known as Djedefre, as a monument to their father, Khufu, so it would be Khufu's face which is represented on the colossal statue. The argument is that the face resembles that of Khufu rather than Khafre.

The statue, carved from a single piece of limestone, represents Ra-Horakhty, a form of the powerful sun god. It is the incarnation of royal power and the protector of the temple doors, hence, the beast is guarding the pyramids as it faces the sunrise. Sphinxes are often included in tomb and temple complexes, as in the Sphinx Alley in Upper Egypt, a two-mile avenue lined with sphinx statues that connects the temples of Luxor and Karnak, built by Amenhotep III in the 12th century BC.

There are also scholars who posit that the Great Sphinx played a role in the resurrection of the soul of the king by harnessing solar and other celestial powers.

The Great Sphinx is the first example of a sphinx monument. Many rulers of ancient Egypt were later depicted as sphinxes, including queen Hatshepsut (1507–1458 BC) and queen Tiye (c. 1398 BC – 1338 BC). Sphinx of Hatshepsut ca. 1479–1458 BC. I wrote an answer about this topic a while ago so I won't get into specifics. Egypt never planned to capture the entirety of Sinai. Sadat wanted a limited war that would end quickly by capturing a small part of Sinai, then use that victory to pressure Israel into giving back the rest of the peninsula in exchange for peace.

Israel counter-attacked and crossed into the African part of Egypt inflicting massive casualties on Egypt and encircling the 3rd army. However, Israel failed to capture any major city losing at the battles of Suez, Ismaila and air battle of Mansoura. Later on, agreed to a ceasefire with Egypt maintaining the strip it captured along the east bank of the Suez Canal.

The Egyptian 3rd army would have been destroyed had the war continued, but Israel still wouldn't be able to capture Cairo or any other major city. Also the territories captured in Sinai would still be in Egypt's hands.

Different scenarios with same outcomes.

Egypt's official point of view emphasizes more on the earlier and latter victories while minimizing the importance of the defeats in between. That, coupled with the diplomatic successes in the aftermath of the war, enabled Sadat to sell the war to the people as a "military triumph" solidifying his power and gaining him enough momentum to sign peace with Israel.

Was the 1973 war really a "military triumph" for Egypt? More like a standstill. The war itself was a tactical defeat albeit a strategic, political and propaganda victory.

In the end, everyone won in one way or another.

I hope this helps.

What was the purpose for carving the Great Sphinx of Egypt?

The prevalent theory is that the Great Sphinx was built for Khafre, son of Khufu, builder of the Great Pyramid. Khafre was a ruler of Egypt's Fourth Dynasty who lived circa 2603-2578 BC. Others propose that it was built by Khafre's older half-brother Redjedef, also known as Djedefre, as a monument to their father, Khufu, so it would be Khufu's face which is represented on the colossal statue. The argument is that the face resembles that of Khufu rather than Khafre.

The statue, carved from a single piece of limestone, represents Ra-Horakhty, a form of the powerful sun god. It is the incarnation of royal power and the protector of the temple doors, hence, the beast is guarding the pyramids as it faces the sunrise. Sphinxes are often included in tomb and temple complexes, as in the Sphinx Alley in Upper Egypt, a two-mile avenue lined with sphinx statues that connects the temples of Luxor and Karnak, built by Amenhotep III in the 12th century BC.

There are also scholars who posit that the Great Sphinx played a role in the resurrection of the soul of the king by harnessing solar and other celestial powers.

The Great Sphinx is the first example of a sphinx monument. Many rulers of ancient Egypt were later depicted as sphinxes, including queen Hatshepsut (1507–1458 BC) and queen Tiye (c. 1398 BC – 1338 BC).

I wrote an answer about this topic a while ago so I won't get into specifics.

Egypt never planned to capture the entirety of Sinai. Sadat wanted a limited war that would end quickly by capturing a small part of Sinai, then use that victory to pressure Israel into giving back the rest of the peninsula in exchange for peace.

Israel counter-attacked and crossed into the African part of Egypt inflicting massive casualties on Egypt and encircling the 3rd army. However, Israel failed to capture any major city losing at the battles of Suez, Ismaila and air battle of Mansoura. Later on, agreed to a ceasefire with Egypt maintaining the strip it captured along the east bank of the Suez Canal.

The Egyptian 3rd army would have been destroyed had the war continued, but Israel still wouldn't be able to capture Cairo or any other major city. Also the territories captured in Sinai would still be in Egypt's hands.

Different scenarios with same outcomes.

Egypt's official point of view emphasizes more on the earlier and latter victories while minimizing the importance of the defeats in between. That, coupled with the diplomatic successes in the aftermath of the war, enabled Sadat to sell the war to the people as a "military triumph" solidifying his power and gaining him enough momentum to sign peace with Israel.

Was the 1973 war really a "military triumph" for Egypt? More like a standstill. The war itself was a tactical defeat albeit a strategic, political and propaganda victory.

In the end, everyone won in one way or another.

Why haven't we excavated the Giza pyramids?
HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/profile/Jeff-Kay" \t "_blank"
Jeff Kay Amateur with several digs under belt, visited some of the most important world sites. HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/Why-haven-t-we-excavated-the-Giza-pyramids/answer/Jeff-Kay" \t "_blank" Updated April 6, 2019

There's nothing to excavate. They're already above ground.

Ohhhh, you probably mean, "why haven't we tunneled our way into what we think are other empty spaces in the Great Pyramid?".

Well, that's an easy one.

First, the Pyramids of Giza are world treasures. Gone are the days of the Indiana Jones plundering and destroying. The treasure of the Pyramids are the Pyramids themselves. Maintaining them without damage is difficult enough.

The recent survey using HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Muon_tomography" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" muon tomography apparently discovered several chambers in the Khufu Pyramid, and this has led to some wild speculation of what these chambers might be. However, the board that approved the survey in the first place wanted to make sure that the survey wouldn’t damage the structure to begin with. Strict requirements and rules dictated HOW it would be done.

So, yes, it looks like there are some large cavities. How do you explore them?

By digging in, which is destructive. Without concrete proof, this isn’t going to happen, and unlikely even if there is incontrovertible evidence of a secret chamber.

What might be in this chamber? Missing treasures? The mummy of Khufu, himself? The secrets of ancient aliens?

Probably not. More likely, the large chamber above the Grand Gallery is a stress relief chamber, much like those above the King’s chamber. The Egyptians knew what they were doing, and putting stress relief throughout the Pyramid was essential to keeping intact. The chamber would have had to be sealed during the construction, and it’s unlikely that any pharaoh would give up all their treasures to a sealed space that couldn’t be accessed during the rest of their life.

To answer your question, excavating into a very important and famous structure like the Great Pyramid is a sure way to court disaster. It’s actually better to leave people wondering, and wanting to visit, than to find out the mystery is nothing more than HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/The_Mystery_of_Al_Capone%27s_Vaults" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Al Capone's Vaults.

Both are quite old, but this is an apples/oranges situation. Mohenjo-daro was constructed around 2500 BC, whereas Egyptian civilization dates to the second half of the fourth millennium BC, several centuries earlier. However, Mohenjo-daro was not a civilization in the way Egypt was. It was a single site, which was part of the Indus valley civilization, and the IVC developed cities before Mohenjo-daro. The IVC, like Egypt, arose in the second half of the fourth millennium BC. Indeed, it's difficult to confidently claim that one of them rose before the other.

They're really remarkably big—the tallest buildings in the world for many centuries—and they're made of stone. But they do show a lot of wear. Almost all their limestone casing has been stripped off, and the sandstone underneath is gradually degrading in the wind. Fortunately, it doesn't rain much or freeze in Cairo, which helps.

Up close, they're not the neat smooth stones that we think of them as:

Originally Answered: HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/Why-do-most-Egyptian-statues-have-broken-noses?no_redirect=1" \t "_blank" Why do most Egyptian statues have broken noses?

People who like to have a lot of religious statues at home, like me and my family (and millions of other Catholics, but also Hindus, Buddhists, followers of African Diaspora religions like Candomblé and Santería etc.), know fully well what happens to statues even after just a few years of wear and tear and the occasional fall: their noses are the first part to break off or to get very eroded to say the least. Of course they are made in much more fragile material than the majority of those Ancient Egyptian sculptures (many of them, though, were also sculpted in clay, plaster and so on), but they are also incomparably less ancient than those. If in 5 or 10 years erosion or even full rupture of the most protruding and vulnerable parts of status, particularly the nose, can happen, you can figure what can happen after 3,000 or even nearly 5,000 years.
The idea that there was a concerted and massive effort to break the noses of all statues of an entire country as a sort of transnational conspiracy to hide the “real racial nature” of Ancient Egypt strikes me as that fanciful idea that only ideological bubbles are able to unconditionally believe in, especially considering that in fact the majority of the ancient artworks from Egypt were underground, unknown to the modern people (and therefore protected from any “collusion” to break all the noses of thousands of pieces), till the 20th and 21st centuries archaeological expeditions.

ABOVE: That’s a statue of Saint Therese de Lisieux that my family has had for the last 6 or 7 years. Unfortunately the nose has already broken, I don’t even remember how that happened.

Why then are so many Greek, Mesopotamian, Roman statues also displaying such eroded or even broken noses? It is perhaps better not to ask questions like that, lest people also start claiming that those ancient civilizations were also victims of the “anti-black conspiracy” unanimously involving all modern Europeans, West Asians and North Africans, the generic “usurpers and “invaders” as some famous Quora users are wont to describe them without BNBR rules applying to them.

It is also honestly a claim very, I mean, VERY influenced by racist stereotypes about Africa, Africans and black peoples. It is not as if all black Africans, who actually belong to several highly distinct population clusters, have wide and flat noses. In fact, some of the people with finest, narrowest and “edgiest” noses in the world are native Africans, especially - and interestingly for this subject, I might say - in Northeast Africa right south of Egypt, in Nilo-Saharan, Cushitic and Semitic speakers living in what is now Sudan, South Sudan and the Horn of Africa.

It is not like longer, narrower and sharper noses are nonexistant or even rare in Africa, especially in Northeast Africa, where Egypt is located (mind you, I am talking about black people who are often darker-skinned than those who have the “stereotypical black/negroid” physique). Africa is a lot more than West Africa and Bantu-majority Africa.In fact, even if Ancient Egyptians were in fact mostly or even exclusively Black Africans as is claimed by those people who insist on the notion of a “conspiracy to hide the evidences of Egypt’s blackness”, it is far more likely that it would have had connections with the Horn of Africa and with Middle-Upper Nubia, especially Afro-Asiatic people like the Beja and the Amharic.

Those are not regions of Africa the peoples of which are known to have a large majority of short, broad and flat-nosed individuals. In fact, as far as noses and face shape are concerned, they are often, though not necessarily, more similar to West Eurasians than to West/Central Africans. The general shape of the nose of these dark-skinned Africans wouldn't differ much from that of some West Eurasian and lighter-skinned North Africans, so breaking their noses off would be pointless.

Besides, black Africans, particularly West, Central and South Africans, are not distinctive physically only because of the shape of their nose. You couldn't hide the "racial identity" of typically West/Central/South African-looking people just by breaking the noses of statues off or eroding them. That is giving too much credence and focus to a very restrictive stereotype.

Okay, are you now totally unable to recognize that those people in the photos above are from Sub-Saharan Africa and very likely with strong West African genetic affinities (addendum: that includes all Bantu Africans from Central, Eastern and Southern Africa, too)? I am sure you aren't. Black Africans are not just wide and flat-nosed people, the majority of them can also be readily identified by other traits, like jawline, face shape, hair texture, lip shape and size, cheekbones, mild prognathism, etc. Besides those, there are also several so-called outliers who don't fit most or some of those characteristics at all, because ancestry and genealogical ties between ethnicities is far more complex than arbitrary labels created to describe what is actually looks, not "races", and can't be accurately inferred from physical characteristics alone.

Finally, let me just point out that the very premise of the question is wrong, because in fact there are countless sculptures from Ancient Egypt with their noses still intact, which is a kind of small miracle if you come to think what 3,000 or 4,000 years really means in terms of natural erosion and various societal and natural upheavals. The noses depicted in the large majority of those well preserved sculptures are relatively long, sharp and narrow, without ex (keep in mind, though, that Ancient Egyptian art was highly standardised and idealized, so that is probably their ideal of beauty, not necessarily nor exactly how everyone looked like). These sculptures with noses still fully in place are so numerous that, honestly, it seems like the "conspirators" to hide the "true history" of Ancient Egyptians were very lazy and ineffective.

How did the Byzantines lose Egypt?

HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/How-did-the-Byzantines-lose-Egypt/answer/Matt-Riggsby" \t "_blank" October 7, 2020

The short version is that the rapidly expanding caliphate took over. The Byzantine empire and the neighboring Persian empire were both exhausted after decades of war with one another, and brand new Muslim armies, made up substantially of fast-moving cavalry, were able to push back the Byzantines and take over Persia. Egypt, cut off from the main part of the empire once the Muslims took Syria and the rest of the Levant, couldn't be supported well.

It is further suspected that native Egyptian resistance wasn't as strong as it might otherwise have been. The Egyptian church had more or less broken off from the Orthodox church centered on Constantinople in 451 over both administrative and typically obscure theological disputes. Egyptians felt that they were being mistreated by the capital, and it's been conjectured that some felt that they'd get better treatment from Muslims, who didn't really care about Christianity's internal divisions.

For those wondering about the “tip”, André Pochan HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/" \l "BhdRh" \t "_blank" [1] wrote

"[...] At present, the pyramid ends in a platform of about 11 m. on the aside. In Pliny's time, this platform measured 4.88 m. on each side, a value confirmed by Lambert (1630) at 4.80. It is certain that the Great Pyramid was never finished at the tip and surmounted by a summit similar to those of Sesostris and Ammenemes of the 12th dynasty. It was a solar temple and as such must have been surmounted by a small obelisk or perhaps, a sphere."

Wanting to add a bit to the matter, climbing to the top is super forbidden and punishable by up to 3 years in prison. After 5 pm the entire perimeter is heavily patrolled. On youtube, there is a story of an Egyptian content creator who tried the bureaucratic rigmarole to do it legally and was forced to give up. Such measures have been tightened especially since 2018, when a Danish photographer managed to climb to the top with his partner to take "artistic" photos HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/" \l "ozRUz" \t "_blank" [2] .

What articles of clothing survived from ancient Egypt?
HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/profile/Camille-759" \t "_blank" Camille Former Manager at Fred Meyer (2017–2019) HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/What-articles-of-clothing-survived-from-ancient-Egypt/answer/Camille-759" \t "_blank" Updated April 11, 2017

There are a few articles of women's clothing that I know of that have survived from as long as 5,000 years ago.

This is the Tarkhan Dress, which is 5,000 years old (though it looks like a shirt, fabric is extremely likely to break down after a short period of time; for this to have survived at all is awesome). Archaeologists don't know exactly how long the dress was, but do believe it was made for a younger, slender woman, probably in her 20’s. It was found in a burial tomb among a wad of clothing around 1913, but wasn't actually “discovered” until everything in the pile was separated in the 1970’s:

Here is an example of what a full-sized dress would have looked like:

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://ci5.googleusercontent.com/proxy/Fn88z2B_LwGl5GR_ULx-T8ol5W8slVT6Fq4IRe5DxiG7y4A6VQT10figfnKKpGRay4y90tOJZnuHAF69VyqVAiVpf3FV8am-q-OndRgep6ky7pYbih3v8iJr2BXZzg=s0-d-e1-ft#https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-dddbca8c988aaf531703ef2097ca4744.webp" * MERGEFORMATINET

Another popular look for women was to wear beaded dresses over linens such as the Tarkhan Dress. Though I'm not sure if this survived in excellent condition or was reassembled, this is a network dress from the 5th Dynasty:

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://ci5.googleusercontent.com/proxy/U5LJF7jbqeKZ3zYFXHRQ1ZRP_RAJOhUdnbc2Ulww6FKhTlQydvyX2LW6vIKa1hcYtma1SmbWOcuYkpKuiUxzUUGORpE_ypOQyXth3NNKf_5YWKlsOF6eHlfuNu8Auw=s0-d-e1-ft#https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-554df6e668716685e4dd71019e090885.webp" * MERGEFORMATINET
Normally with women's garments, the linen would actually be quite loose-fitting. Until the mid-18th Dynasty, women wore a tight-fitting sheath dress, a simple garment that falls from just below the breasts to just above the ankles, being held up by two shoulder straps. On statues the straps cover the breasts, but in paintings and reliefs the single breast depicted in profile is exposed. The dress hugs the body with no slack. Also, when women are shown in movement, sitting or kneeling, the dress still clings to the outline of the body as if elasticated. However, Egyptian clothes were mostly made from linen, which tends to sag. Surviving dresses consist of a body made from a tube of material sewn up one side (such as the Tarkhan Dress), supported not by straps but by a bodice with sleeves. In contrast to dresses shown in art, such linen garments tend to be baggy, and would conceal rather than reveal the body. The length of the dress denoted the social class of the wearer.

One more example, while not found in its original state, is a beadwork dress from the Egyptian Old Kingdom, reign of Khufu in the 4th Dynasty (from 2551–2528BCE). This design is believed to represent beadwork, which was either sewn onto a linen dress or worked into a separate net worn over the linen. This beadnet dress is the earliest surviving example of such a garment. It has been painstakingly reassembled from approximately seven thousand beads found in an undisturbed burial of a female contemporary of King Khufu. Although their string had disintegrated, a few beads still lay in their original pattern on and around the mummy, permitting an accurate reconstruction. The color of the beads has faded, but the beadnet was originally blue and blue-green in imitation of lapis lazuli and turquoise:

I guess your question is wondering if ancient Egyptian women were beautiful or not?

Yes they were definitely beautiful.

It was conquered by the Romans. Previous conquerors had either been driven out again or they preserved the Egyptian political system, but after Cleopatra died, the Romans just annexed Egypt to the Empire. No more pharaohs.

Why do some say that the Levant had no great civilization when Egypt historically is part of the Levant?
HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/profile/Salwa-Halabia" \t "_blank"

Salwa Halabia Hails from Levantine family HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/Why-do-some-say-that-the-Levant-had-no-great-civilization-when-Egypt-historically-is-part-of-the-Levant/answer/Salwa-Halabia" \t "_blank" April 22

The Levant was home to some of the greatest, and well-known civilizations such as the Assyrians, Phoenicians, Babylonians, Akkadians, Amorites, Hittites, Israelites, Yamhadians, and Eblans, etc. Let this be a lesson to you!

Egypt is not considered a Levantine country (Syria, Lebanon, Palestine, Jordan, some include Iraq), however, it is the gateway to these countries, so there is some overlap and trading that went on. For more on this see my other related answer below.

Notice that the statue lies within an excavated pit.

The Sphinx's head was carved from a natural outcrop of stone. But, to make the rest of the body, the sculptors had to dig into the bedrock. This makes the Sphinx sit lower than the surrounding surface.

Here it is from the side…

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://ci4.googleusercontent.com/proxy/vk4zQpq6ev_nt4djcO6vC5krky4tKE32mi6ncdve7g7CpHocX03mDAISZWjMVXM5SxYBf8jNLNKhBJuxxLJqnMSgXncjs3QHUgMH2GCGt1QMbWWjjlvINMw=s0-d-e1-ft#https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-bec2c98d115733ef74e78e4f28ff1dd6" * MERGEFORMATINET

Here, you can see just how high the back of the Sphinx is compared to the outside of the excavated pit. It doesn't sit much higher.

Untended, the pit would have filled in with sand, plus a bit more over time. This is why the Sphinx was covered over in antiquity.

Why did the Egyptians use such big blocks of different size and shape in the construction of the pyramid? Why not use smaller and similar blocks? What benefits does this have?

At the time (I speculate) the work necessary to bash them out was considered more so than that required to drag and move them into position. That or it was a tradition and custom ruled for some time.

Images showing one of the quarries next to the pyramids - you can see they were bashed out (the large trench between pieces) instead of cut.

The further back in time you go, the more impressive it gets! How is this possible? It should be the other way round? They tell us Imhotep’s Step Pyramid of Djoser at Saqqara is the oldest? It’s blatantly obvious to a nobody like me, the Step Pyramid was built thousands of years after the Giza Plateau! The mud bricked Pyramid looks like a structure built by the Neolithic people 5,000 years ago. The Great Pyramid tops all other man made structures on the Planet, even today it can’t be replicated.

I think you're confused.
The Yom Kippur War, although a tactical victory for Israel, was also a propaganda, political and strategic victory for Egypt.

When arguing about this war, one must understand the objectives of both Egypt and Syria as well as the opinion of the Arab World at this particular period.

Sadat inspecting the Sinai front.

However, even before the war started the Egyptian command knew that they could not defeat Israel in an extended conflict. That's why Sadat told Ahmed Ismail Egypt's Minister of War the following:

I want us to plan the offensive within our capabilities, nothing more. Cross the canal and hold even ten centimetres of the Sinai. I'm exaggerating, of course, but this will help me greatly and completely alter the political situation internationally and within Arab ranks.
As a result the Chief of Staff Sa'ad al-Shazly came up with a plan that matched Sadat's views in which Egypt would engage Israel in a short and limited conflict.

Apparently that wasn't enough so Sadat contacted Hafez al-Assad Syria's president, in order to coordinate a joint offensive on Israel to increase the chances of success. HOWEVER, Sadat never told Assad about Egypt's main objectives, an act that would cost both of them dearly in the future.

On the 6th of October 1973 Egypt and Syria surprise attacked Israel on the Jewish holiday Yom Kippur which also coincided with Muslim holy month of Ramadan. The attack was a success with Egypt destroying the Ber Lev Line, pushing Israel a few km into Sinai and Syria completely overpassing the purple line, threatening the Israeli heartland.

Now that Egypt had already achieved it's pre-planned operational objectives the army halted it's advance into Israeli held territory. Seeing that the Egyptians wouldn't move further anymore Israel concentrated it's forces against Syria and after 3 days of brutal counter-attacking Israel pushed the Syrians back to where they started.

Course of fighting in Sinai during the first week of the war.

Diplomatic pressure exerted by the Soviets and Arabs on Sadat forced him, against the advice of his generals, to order the Egyptian forces to continue advancing beyond the SAM missile aerial coverage. The plan failed with Israel countering the offensive, crossing the Suez into the African part of Egypt after exploiting a gap between the advancing enemy army groups and completely encircling the Egyptian 3rd army.

At this point the Soviets, who previously pressured Sadat to continue the war, compelled him to accept the UN mandated ceasefire bringing an end to most hostilities.

Final military situation right before the ceasefire came into effect.

Although the war took a u-turn later on, by that time Egypt had already long achieved its aims. That is to cross the Suez, destroy the fortifications built along the canal and push the Israelis a few km inwards to Sinai then negotiate the rest of the lands in exchange for peace.

Yes Egypt was militarily outmatched by Israel, yes Egypt suffered more casualties than Israel, but all that didn't matter. What mattered was that after the war the USA exerted pressure on Israel to start peace negotiations with Egypt that led to the return of the rest of the Sinai peninsula to Egyptian sovereignty and a peace treaty between the two countries.

The Egyptian public would have never agreed to this peace without the return of Sinai and this wouldn't have been possible if Israel was convinced that Egypt cannot beat them in a war. Although Israel did succeed at halting the Arab offensive, nevertheless they reckoned that the 1967 war will not be repeated again and the earlier shock that they endured coupled with American pressure compelled them to sit at a negotiation table with Egypt as an equal. Sadat offered peace in 1972 but Golda Meir rebuffed his offer. The situation had completely changed after 1973.

As to the claims that Israel could have captured Cairo it is just pure nonsense. Since the Israelis failed to capture a small city like Suez, what makes anyone think that they could capture a larger city let alone the country's capital?

Overall the Yom Kippur War was Sadat's Tet Offensive.

What was the best jet fighter in the Yom Kippur War?

As Oren Shani writes it was the F4 Phantom. The Israelis regarded it as big and ugly compared to the graceful looking French-made Mirages (and Israeli-made “Nesher” copies.) However, it was fast, powerful, sophisticated for its time, and an effective dogfighter even if not the most maneuverable aircraft in the sky. In the Yom Kippur War Phantoms achieved 85 air-to-air kills against four losses. Seven IAF pilots were pure Phantom aces (that is they had at least five kills in Phantoms) while several others were aces between Phantoms and Mirages (some of these pilots had kills before 1973 as well.)

But for all that, it was the Phantom's strike ability that made it so valuable to the Israelis and the best overall aircraft of the war. The IDF based a large part of its strategy and approach to the fighting on the question of "how many Phantoms can we commit to this mission."

In the critical first hours just before shooting started and shortly after the fighting broke out, the IDF was partly hamstrung by indecision as to how to arm the powerful planes. Hoping that the government would authorize a preemptive strike the IAF armed the Phantoms for strikes against Arab AA missiles and air bases. When the government declined, and right as the shooting started, the IAF rearmed the planes for air defense, which was understandable but some argue an over-reaction, given the Syrian and Egyptian air attacks were not that heavy or sustained. Anyway, it meant that ground forces were without available Phantoms in the first hours of the war.

An example of the Phantoms air defense in those opening hours was the air battle over the Israeli Ofir air base at Sharm el Sheik. There two IAF Phantoms fought off an attack by over twenty Egyptian Migs, downing seven for no losses.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://ci6.googleusercontent.com/proxy/k3q5t9-NdRMVjMbee9GYN4D7YGKeGml_u1dfcfaoWvsfnN5w4GFvgKcP8tES7FXzg6qdHz8NDQqs-jfsrmHxhbtn79jlq6lfZ5RTi8bqlVM1J6LQxCz9Na2YQJ3uqQ=s0-d-e1-ft#https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-9b83c634b574bc7328dd17a21f30e99e.webp" * MERGEFORMATINET
Wreckage of Egyptian Mig outside Ofir airbase.

IAF and as a result IDF strategy to some extent relied on whether the Phantoms were available, and how much risk to expose the planes and pilots during the fighting. When on the second day of the war a hasty and poorly planned attack on the Syrian AA missile alignment resulted in the loss of six Phantoms, the IAF pulled back the aircraft from direct attacks on the Golan. Much the same thing happened over the Suez Canal. Skyhawks were heavily used in their stead, taking heavy losses as well.

Ultimately though, the Phantoms came through, launching a daring strategic attack on Damascus despite heavy AA and aerial opposition, and hitting other Syrian strategic targets. This forced the Syrians to shift their AA alignment giving the IAF more room to operate, and when Syrian fighters came up to contest that, they were shot down in droves.

Phantoms flying low over Sinai to avoid Egyptian AA missiles

On the Egyptian front the Phantoms had to await the ground drive across the Suez Canal to free up operating space against the dense Egyptian missile batteries (for political reasons the Israeli government did not authorize a similar strategic campaign against Egypt.) Once a hole was cut in the Egyptian missile array the Phantoms pounced again, and when challenged from the air downed Arab aircraft accordingly.

Architecturally, it might have been even more magnificent, in terms of visual creativity. The Pyramids are impressive, but not terribly imaginative. However, it isn't possible that the Temple of Solomon was anything like the same size. The Israelites didn't have the resources, and there would be more of it left. Whatever it was, it was a lot smaller.

EGYPT: Why are the pyramids aligned with Orion's belt?
HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/profile/Matt-Riggsby" \t "_blank"

Matt Riggsby MA Archaeology, Boston University HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/Why-are-the-pyramids-aligned-with-Orions-belt/answer/Matt-Riggsby" \t "_blank" June 2

They're not.

The pyramids at Giza (just three out of hundreds of pyramids found worldwide) are arranged in not quite a straight line, which is to say a fairly flat triangle. A great many constellations also include fairly flat triangles, so some triangles will be a closer match to the pyramids than others. The belt of Orion is a closer match than some, though not as close as some others and the orientation is wrong (Orion's belt points down towards the south, the Giza triangle points up towards the north), but the real reason that Orion gets cited is that a pseudoarchaeologist "ran the clock back"—because the stars move relative to Earth, the shapes of constellations change over time—and discovered that Orion's belt was an even closer match, though still not exact, about 10,000 years ago. This got emphasized as support for his idea, contradicted by a lot of other evidence, that the pyramids were actually built by a much more ancient society.

Why do people think the ancient Egyptian did not understand pi when the pyramids were built? If the proportions of the great pyramid in Egypt incorporate pi into its design, why do people think that its coincidence giving the precision of the pyramid.

Because the Egyptians built more than one pyramid.

The ratio of the perimeter to height of the Great Pyramid at Giza comes fairly close to pi (with something like a 0.03% margin of error), but, well, so what? The Egyptians built literally dozens of pyramids. If we step back and take a look at those, we see that they were of different sizes, but the overall designs were broadly similar, with a base-to-height ratio usually around 3. Indeed, a series of later pyramids seem to have more or less standardized on 3, and no other pyramid comes as close to the pi ratio that the Great Pyramid does.

So we must ask ourselves whether that number-close-to-pi was on purpose. And it doesn't look like it. The Egyptians used geometric methods involving the elaborate use of squares to obtain the dimensions of circles, something which wouldn't likely lead them to pi. No other pyramid built before or after the Great Pyramid, including the other two pyramids at Giza, comes as close to pi as the Great Pyramid does, which raises the question that if they were trying to hit pi with their pyramids, why did they fail badly in nearly every case? And, of course, why on earth would the architects have decided to “encode” a peculiar mathematical value in the structure in such an odd way?

Instead, then, it looks pretty coincidental. Egyptian pyramid techniques were trying for steep but sustainable and affordable slopes. With the materials and technologies available, that worked out to slopes of around 50 degrees, which would in turn provide base-to-height ratios of around three. And that in turn, with a margin of error, encompasses pi. And even if we were to discover documentation of an ancient Egyptian geometer describing the ratio of a circle’s circumference to its radius or diameter, indicating that at least some Egyptians had come up with the concept of pi, that still doesn’t mean that the Great Pyramid is reasonable evidence of such a concept.

Distribution of haplogroup J1C3D1(Arab Gene) across the Middle East

As you can see Arab genes aren't predominant in Egypt.

So if Egyptians aren't genetically Arabs then why are they referred to as such? Because genetics have nothing to do with identities.

But why did Egyptians start identifying as Arabs from the first place?

Prior to the 7th century Islamic conquest and the Arabization process that ensued, Egyptians were known as Copts and that was the name used by peninsular Arabs to refer to Egyptians. However, as Egyptians started embracing Islam, and the Arabic language, the terms Copt and Egyptian were dropped in favour of Muslim from Egypt.

You see, in Islam there isn't really a concept of nationality or a separate identity other than being a Muslim. So once an individual converts to Islam he is expected to let go of all earthly affiliations other than being a member of the Ummah. As such, Muslims rejected national identities in favour of a single and unified religious one.

That's how some medieval Muslims, including Egyptians, interpreted Islamic texts; such theories aren't accepted by modern Muslims.

Back to our topic.

Because of this interpretation of Islam, Egyptians didn't care about forming a distinct national identity and whether they're Arabs or not until the late 19th and early 20th centuries when the country started getting rid of foreign influences.

Independence was surging across the region. These newly independent countries were culturally and linguistically similar to each other and so they decided that it would be in everybody's interests that they all unite. Thus, Arabism was born.

The vast majority of Egyptians speak Arabic as a first language and are culturally close to other Arabic-speaking countries. As such, the political leadership chose to align Egypt with Arabism and decided to join this new bloc becoming a founding member of the Arab League.

Does this make Egyptians any less Egyptian or less African than Nigerians? Nope.

Nobody forced Egyptians to speak Arabic and there was no mass extermination or displacement of Egyptians from their homeland. As such, any claims that Egyptians were forcibly Arabized or that modern Egyptians aren't natives are misleading, unfounded and baseless.

Not a pharaoh

Pharaoh means “Royal court of Egypt”, embodied by the King. It means the entire administration, not a single person or a title. It was named after the most important person, whom we now think of as “the Pharaoh”, but that is a misconception. The word Pharaoh means “Great House” in native Coptic, you don’t name the title of a person that way.

Not a dynastic king, though an Emperor

A King is the head of state (and sometimes a government) of a kingdom, all Pharaohs are headed by a king. In the early middle ages the kings were usually elected from the upper nobility, by late middle ages most were dynastic. Most reained the control of the government until the Enlightenment and French Revolution, Kings of England didn’t.

Not an emperor

Emperor actually means the King of Rome, the greatest western kingdom of all time. It comes from the word “Imperator”, which can best be translated as “Warlord” and was a honorific title bestowed by Roman Senate upon their greatest generals. It eventually became a title as well, in addition to the surname of the first Emperor of Rome (Caesar, Kaiser). Many high-ranking kings eventually adopted the title, because they wanted to be cool.

That depends which ancient Egyptian was speaking and what circumstances they were speaking under. Ancient Egyptian, like every language, had both formal and informal registers. Some people used formal language under some circumstances and informal language under other circumstances. Meanwhile, some people probably only ever talked formally and other people probably only ever talked informally.
Unfortunately, we know very little about what informal Egyptian sounded like for most of Egyptian history, since the vast majority of our information about ancient Egyptian language comes from very formal inscriptions and texts written by highly educated scribes.

Yes!!
The Pyramids were initially built to last forever by the ancient Egyptians. The Pyramids were primarily made of Limestone, finely cut as building blocks.

We have fossils of dinosaurs and other living things that are more than a million years old.

As a matter of fact, we have several Whale fossils in Egypt that are dated to be several millions old, exposed in the same climatic conditions as the pyramids.

The Pyramids, especially the Pyramids of Giza, will still exist in another million years. The actual structure was built in a fortified way, having a very solid foundational base.

What was a Magi in Egypt?

David M. Prus , I have an associates degree in history, as well as intensive scholarship HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/What-was-a-Magi-in-Egypt/answer/David-M-Prus" \t "_blank" Answered July 12

Magi did not exist in Egypt until 530 BC, when the Persians conquered the Sais-based Egyptian kingdom. As the Persians settled and made contact, they imported their religion, Zoroastrianism, and established temples in Egypt, where they prayed alongside native Egyptians, and many Egyptians converted to the new faith, but most retained their traditional worship.

The Magi are the priests of Zoroaster, ancestors to today's Zoroastrian priesthood. It's unclear whether the classes of Dastur, Mobad and Herbad existed in the Achaemenid time, but the Magi were an established religious authority. They were literate, knowledgeable not only in religious rites but also in statecraft and astrology.

The Canaanites who became part of a tribe called Israelites never stayed in Egypt for 430 years, as is claimed in the Jewish scriptures. During the Late Bronze Age, from the 15th century to the 12th century BC, Egypt dominated the land of Canaan. After 350 or 400 years of rule, the Egyptians were the ones who left the land of Canaan and returned to Egypt.

One prominent proof of the Egyptian presence are the remains of the large Ramesses II fortress hidden beneath the hilltop of Old Jaffa. Another discovery is the Egyptian brewery found in central Tel Aviv dating from 5,500 years ago. There have been numerous Egyptian items unearthed, including statues of pharaohs, amulets, sarcophagi, steles and more. Scarabs, for instance, were mass produced in Canaan.

Senior archaeologist Dr Yitzhak Paz explained:

There is no archaeological evidence of the Exodus event, in which 600,000 men were supposed to have participated, which means two million people including families, for the simple reason that of all the surveys conducted in Egypt, not one has revealed any activity in this period. The event of the Exodus from Egypt as described in the Bible is probably an event that never took place.

As an archaeologist and scientist, I can judge only according to findings, and the findings do not support the myth of the Exodus. The fact is that no Egyptian document has yet been found that describes an historic event of an exodus out of Egypt of such proportions. People left, people went back, people fled, but on a very small scale and not on the scale as described in the Bible.

From my readings on the height of the Egyptian kings, I have found reports indicating that the tallest of them all is said to be Sanakht, in the past known as Hen-Nekht, a ruler of the Old Kingdom Third Dynasty (c. 2686 BC - c. 2613 BC). The date of his reign is unknown due to lack of records nor are there any specifics as to his identity. However, skeletal remains of a male found in a mastaba have been identified as possibly being those of Sanakht. The measurements calculate his height as over 1.87 m (6 ft 1 1⁄2 in). The average height of prehistoric and later Egyptian males has been calculated at 1.67 m (5 ft 6 in). Ramesses II measures at 173 cm (5.67 feet).

The link between the identity of the deceased man and Sanakht is found in a passage written by Manetho (Ptolemaic Kingdom, early third century BC) in which he describes an unusually tall ruler of the late Second Dynasty named Sesochris. In 2017 Egyptologist Michael E. Habicht from Zurich University's Institute of Evolutionary Medicine and paleopathologist Francesco M. Galassi coordinated a group of researchers who concluded that the remains are the earliest know case of gigantism.

You've been misinformed. There was technology. Technology does not mean electric motors or diesel engines or iPads. Technology is any artificial means of manipulating or interacting with the environment. Hunter-gatherers making fire by rubbing sticks together and banging rocks to make stone tools have technology.

Anyway, the technology in question here was almost certainly solid wooden rollers being used to support the blocks as they were pulled up earthen ramps and then adjusted into their final position with the use of many workers using crowbars. We've got plenty of documentation from other pre-industrial societies from the Greeks to the Renaissance describing how they moved objects that size and even larger using such techniques, which would have been well within the reach of the ancient Egyptians.

(Oh, and the vast majority of the blocks used in the pyramids weight only a ton or two. It's not like they had to move those 80 ton blocks around every day.)

There is nothing in the pyramids that suggest anything other than copper age technology. The 90% of the blocks were low quality limestone roughly cut. There are parts where you can put an arm between the blocks. The space was filled with rocks, sand and mortar.
The blocks show the chisel marks? Alien? really? Modern tech can do much better.

Just compare how the pyramid quarries look. most of those limestone blocks were just 1.5 to 2.5 tons and the quarries are near the pyramids.

It is the nature of culture to change over time. In the particular case of Egypt, there were certainly significant influences from multiple foreign conquests: Mesopotamia, Alexander the Great, the Romans, and the Caliphate. The Romans certainly did play a key role in the end of traditional ancient Egyptian religion, though. The abolition of the office of pharaoh removed the core of the religion, which led to its decline and demise.

That said, in actual practice the Egyptians themselves were happy to violate the "sacred" pyramids and other tombs. The Great Pyramid, for example, had probably been looted during the Middle Kingdom period.

EGYPT: What did fashion in ancient Egypt look like? HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/profile/Adam-Ramzy-2" \t "_blank"

New research on the clothing of ancient Egyptians has revealed that arm warmers, socks, loincloths, and even underwear were commonly worn. While little work has been conducted on the clothing choices available at the time, Egyptologist Dr. Aleksandra Hallmann from the Institute of Mediterranean and Oriental Cultures of the Polish Academy of Sciences and the Oriental Institute decided that the time was right to thoroughly explore this unique area of ancient Egyptian history and set about examining fashion choices over thousands of years.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://ci6.googleusercontent.com/proxy/Si8jBYmWM-ICFeSSuXUDhL2pPKk3LjooPKBdu0DEz69vMEYt4mP0hi89td9Xq-WEOoWHIEqpHY2rnEEoSvqgj_4vZMiGzTyo8TKE4JMEq-8a3gd0sUm10uE=s0-d-e1-ft#https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-feea9a70139c34d91e26b1fcf3638916" * MERGEFORMATINET

Hallmann notes that “Egyptians most often used rectangular fabrics of various lengths and widths, which they wrapped in many ways around their bodies.” However, it is well documented that other items of ancient Egyptian clothing also included “socks, gloves, loincloths, and even underwear – a triangular piece of fabric girded around the waist.”

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://ci3.googleusercontent.com/proxy/md_Xu_ZxMjQ8LMBc-ElhDaWgRlOprO_kRDcD5bVdJj-zouH9fg4wnwhg11-_JQyxBTcKaYU3E1iO5HT3lvoZ7shNW1DaV9gxlQQON70xxev8cfkNmz7ZTro=s0-d-e1-ft#https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-10415e84000b50010c36a169b9b13ec8" * MERGEFORMATINET

By far the most prized piece of fabric for ancient Egyptians would have been linen. But this could be because, besides clothing, it also had numerous other uses, including being used to carefully wrap valuable statues and to hold other items that were once used for ritualistic activities.

“Linen cloth was used to wrap mummies. Egyptians used both long bandages made especially for the needs of a given burial, as well as bandages made of old fabrics that had been used as clothing. Some of them even showing traces of mending!”

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://ci3.googleusercontent.com/proxy/cI-1ogjcqT5lwWQONf7xApx2f6RME7_kd7ao49dWnYmxNyCmrtDiuS-KvNBsup4Tdan_H-rU3ISRtFzgUZawmJfbXLr9o_zbKmOFUw9rvZLqlwXrBRML7nE=s0-d-e1-ft#https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-ff5923efa2ae49d7cb4d848c44fc0cfc" * MERGEFORMATINET

Also, when it came to bartering, linen commanded a high price. According to Hallmann, “Linen was present in almost all areas of life of the ancient Egyptians.”

Wool was also commonly worn by ancient Egyptians, and the clothing choices available at the time were one of two types – either wrapped or sewn.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://ci4.googleusercontent.com/proxy/kvs554jMt_PKU5Pf0MiRBnaEKzimio4K95Men2EQl2okOHOxdAtG9VlI0OtoP1P_dR4mOUAXwaTnUiFb_ez1LVRd4aNanL1jbfDcElUliYbn227kMPJ5PKQ=s0-d-e1-ft#https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-d882c5c5c2eee6ba65c03b53b478cef5" * MERGEFORMATINET

“Bas-reliefs depict women in dresses, but not a single sewn-up dress has been found during excavations. They were appropriately arranged and draped rectangular pieces of fabric, and not specially sewn clothes”

Sewn clothes included items like tunics, which women, men, and children all wore, and their style changed somewhat throughout Egyptian history. Men oftentimes wore linen loincloths, which were also known as kilts or skirts, although unfortunately, their original Egyptian name is unknown. Some of these kilts would have been extremely short, while others ran straight down to the ankles. These kilts could be worn with other kilts, or complemented with a tunic.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://ci6.googleusercontent.com/proxy/p9qeQz-aayGXM9XzGb1uLFYKy6BOPAc-Yu6Z-GC3ojqqwFVW6ShyCYwjevLYVVehUSez0lcwtqWP0901g0TpwUDZIwazvXUymFiPQeke7CooKmcLRnt1IAE=s0-d-e1-ft#https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-1333d5d7c689ff00ce6d4d8b20b62cbb" * MERGEFORMATINET

In general, clothes reserved for Egyptian royalty were much more colorful and grandiose, according to Hallmann.

“Of course, fabrics had different quality and finishes, which also influenced their prices. Royal garments were more colorful and had more decorative elements, such as tassels or decorative hem.”

Most scholars are inclined to believe that neither Abraham nor the captivity in Egypt were ever real. That said, traditional dates for Abraham are mostly in the early second millennium BC. The pyramids at Giza were constructed in the early-mid third millennium BC. If Abraham existed, the pyramids would already have been several centuries old by the time he was born. Indeed, by that time the Egyptians were much closer to the end of their period of pyramid-building than the beginning.

The hieroglyph for “Pharaoh” has an interesting history; it’s actually a kind of HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Metonymy" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" metonym , a part-for-whole turn of speech rather than (at least at first) a formal title.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://ci4.googleusercontent.com/proxy/WDrY84CJzVcUDuhlBDc576HCrxBic65YHqEX6NEextT85wGPzSkrrstrlHioEurFv_muN9LMqqBF0C6t8kSHya7oz0PEfCMuVIXtoCwkFRXcZ7TGh5xbb3M=s0-d-e1-ft#https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-3e0b0a54c9124f2042e0d5d5229f2b6e" * MERGEFORMATINET The upper glyph is a house, the lower one depicts a wooden column but it means “great” . So “pharaoh”* is literally “the Great House," that is, the royal palace. Egyptian scribes used it to refer to the king indirectly in much the same way we'd say "the White House" when we really mean "the president" or "Number 10 Downing St." when we mean the prime minister.

In long-lived Egypt the term gradually lost its original meaning; in round numbers you could say the "place" meaning was in use by around 2000 BC and by around 1000 BC the "royal" meaning had pretty much taken over. However it's important to remember that Egyptians loved to talk about their kings in detail: why just say "pharaoh" when you can say.

The strong bull, beloved of Ra, whom the latter caused to appear as king in order to unite the Two Lands or He who has appeared in the Double Crown like Horus, the son of Isis, and pacified the gods with Maat

(Royal titles galore at HYPERLINK "https://pharaoh.se/pharaoh/Shoshenq-I" \o "pharaoh.se" \t "_blank" pharaoh.se)

As a very Egyptian metonym, "pharaoh" didn't have any real relevance to other countries. It was specific to an Egyptian monarch in the same way "Sublime Porte" is specific to Ottoman Turkey. There are titles which did make that jump to trans-national appeal: Caesar became a word for emperor in many languages (Czar, Tsar, Kaiser) and the ancient Mesopotamian title "King of Kings" became a cliche in languages everywhere from Ethiopia to India. Pharaoh, however remained resolutely Egyptian. The Ptolemies didn't bother to translate it when recording things in Greek, even when they preserved other titles — for instance on the HYPERLINK "http://rosettastone.hieroglyphic-texts.net/sections/sections-1-2/" \o "rosettastone.hieroglyphic-texts.net" \t "_blank" Rosetta stone you find "Pharoah" repeated many times in the Egyptian portions but never transliterated into the corresponding Greek.

There is however one possible exception.

The Nubian kingdom of HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/List_of_monarchs_of_Kush" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Kush , Egypt's southern neighbor, had a long a complex (though not always peaceful) relationship with Egypt. Their kings used the title Qore (we've found it written in the Kushite HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Meroitic_script" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Meroitic script and the Egyptians wrote it phonetically as kwr in Demotic). P-Q swaps are not uncommon sound variants; for example Greek pente becomes Latin quinque, and Latin aqua is Romanian apa. So, it's conceivable that the Kushite kings adopted the title "pharaoh" from their Egyptian neighbors but their pronunciation was sufficiently different that when the Egyptians heard it (during the campaigns of HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Psamtik_II" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Psamtik II, just after 600 BC) the didn't realize its origin. HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Twenty-fifth_Dynasty_of_Egypt" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Several Kushite kings were also Egyptian pharoahs in the most literal sense so it's an appealing hypothesis. Nonetheless this is just a guess — we don't really know much about the Meroitic language so the resemblance could be entirely coincidental.

The HYPERLINK "https://christhum.wordpress.com/2010/10/11/an-etymological-history-of-pharaoh/" \o "christhum.wordpress.com" \t "_blank" actual Egyptian pronunciation is hard to reconstruct and must certainly have changed over the millennia. "house" is pr but we don't know what its thematic vowel was; "great" is ʕ where the first sound is probably similar to an Arabic HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Ayin" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" ayin and the second is similar to an HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Aleph" \l "Ancient_Egyptian" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" aleph — again without the intervening vowel. In the Hebrew Bible its פַּרְעֹה something like "par-oh" — but the vowels there were added only about 1500 years ago. So we're mostly dependent on Herodotus, who transliterated the word as φερων. It entered Latin as farao via the Vetus Latina Bible, and pharao in the Vulgate. It's also □ □ □ □ □ in the Coptic Bible, so it's either (a) pretty close or (b) Egyptians had abandoned the word and then re-introduced it from Greek while translating their Bible.

Including two in the 20th century, Ethiopian emperor Haile Selassie was a Nəgusä Nägäst and the Shah of Iran was a Shahanshah.

Should Israel build a Mediterranean-Red Sea canal in competition to the Suez Canal?

This is the 100 m above sea level cutoff. To get a canal through, Israel would need to excavate a massive ~200 km at this height, at least 20 of them at elevations of over 400 m. I guess that part can be done in a tunnel with d=60m, but nothing even close has been attempted.

In any case, I roughly estimate that 10 cubic kilometers will have to be excavated. That's enough to build Mount Hermon, Israel's tallest mountain, from scratch.

The UAE was (is?) contemplating building a much more modest mountain, with costs estimated at over US $100 billion. A canal project as described would cost far more than that. At this time Israel can probably afford to spend ~ILS 200 billion (US $60 billion) on a long-term project without going into a financial tailspin. This is the approximate cost of the planned Tel Aviv Metro system, and even then the government doesn't want to fully fund it.

In any case, a much more feasible project is a freight railway between Eilat and Ashdod, which would have about 5% the capacity of the Suez Canal, but would still compete with it in its own niche. This project has been frozen, and it's rumored that Egypt vetoed it. I hope Israel got something worthwhile in return.

Edit: Several commenters have suggested locks as a solution for the elevation differences. I don't know if this is physically possible, given that there are some steep cliffs on the route, but needless to say, it wouldn't be simple. Such a system would require dozens of locks with significant depths, making the Panama Canal or even the Antwerp lock system look puny in comparison. Water would need to be pumped from the outside and maintained around the locks, which would require extensive damming. I don't know how much such a system would cost, but it doesn't seem like a significant saving (if at all) to me. A system like this would be a maintenance and security nightmare.

Are Nubians Egyptians?

There is a very big Misconception on the term Nubian. However it is very important to know that Nubia was not a Kingdom. We have a lot of people, even from the Academic circle who carry this Misconception.

Nubia is a region in Southern Egypt and Northern Sudan. The region was home to several Kingdoms throughout antiquity, which included the precursor civilization that birthed the Nile Valley Civilization (Nabta Playa), earliest parts of ancient Egypt, Kerma, Kush, Yam, Blemmyes, Nobatia, Makuria and Alodia.

During the Proto-Dynastic period, the Northern Nubian region called Lower Nubia, was the Birthplace of the ancient Egyptian tradition that was responsible for the emergence of the Pharaonic traditions.

The earliest representations of Pharaonic Iconographies was excavated in Aswan, which is also within the Lower Nubian region.

According to the Prehistorical Timeline of Egypt the earliest Phases were deeply rooted in the Lower Nubian region of Southern Egypt.

Nabta Playa which is also regarded as an early Phase of Prehistoric Egypt was located in the Lower Nubian region of Southern Egypt.

Nabta Playa is a remarkable site composed of hundreds of prehistoric tumuli, stelae, and megalithic structures located in the Nubian Desert, approximately 100 kilometers west of Abu Simbel in southern Egypt. They are the result of an advanced urban community that arose approximately 11,000 years ago, and left behind a huge assembly of stones, which have been labelled by scientists as the oldest known astronomical alignments of megaliths in the world. Some archaeologists believe that the people of Nabta Playa were the precursor civilization for the first Nile cities that arose in Egypt thousands of years later.

Below is an excerpt from a Peer-reviewed publication by Maria C Gatto.

To sum up, Nubia is Egypt's African ancestor. What linked Ancient Egypt to the rest of the North African cultures is this strong tie with the Nubian pastoral nomadic lifestyle, the same pastoral background commonly shared by most of the ancient Saharan and modern sub-Saharan societies. Thus, not only did Nubia have a prominent role in the origin of Ancient Egypt, it was also a key area for the origin of the entire African pastoral tradition.

HYPERLINK "https://www.academia.edu/545582/The_Nubian_Pastoral_Culture_as_Link_between_Egypt_and_Africa_A_View_from_the_Archaeological_Record?email_work_card=title" \o "www.academia.edu" \t "_blank" The Nubian Pastoral Culture as Link between Egypt and Africa: A View from the Archaeological Record

Many people confuse Nubia with Kingdoms like Kerma, Kush, Nobatia etc.. These were separate Kingdoms that were within the Upper Nubian corridor, just as part of ancient Egypt was within the Lower Nubian corridor.

Ancient Egypt had its earliest Nomes located within the Lower Nubian corridor, this was Ta-Seti and Westjeshor, which were the 1st and 2nd Nomes respectively of ancient Egypt. Ta-Seti today is modern day Aswan, while Westjeshor is modern day Edfu.

Technically, there is no such ethnicity as Nubian. The word Nubia was derived from the word Nubt, which meant City of Gold, Nubt was a town in Kom-Ombo, Ta-Seti. Ancient Egyptians never called anyone Nubians. The term Nubian was a modern social-construct created and championed by the Egyptian Government, who are mostly descendants of foreign invaders and occupiers, to segregate the Native Egyptians and alienate them from their Historical Heritage. Every black Egyptian is called a Nubian today.

I personally social network with my Egyptians friends in Aswan, Egypt

Britain, France, and Israel, after Nasser nationalized the canal. The United States threatened to depress the value of the British pound by dumping its stocks of pounds on the foreign currency markets. This would have reduced the UK's buying power at a time when it desperately needed it to rebuild Britain after the Second World War. Britain was forced to back down. France and Israel followed suit; they couldn't do it by themselves.

The Land of Punt was a real, but largely undocumented state which had a flourishing trade with Egypt between 2,000 and 1,000 BC. What little we know about it comes from Egyptian records and frescoes. Since there is no mention of it after the 1,000 BC one must surmise that its civilization did indeed go into decline

(for climatic, political or military reason) at that time, and that at the very least it lost its ability to trade with Egypt. Even it location is debated by historians:

I think the OP is asking if there are African countries that invented their own writing systems. I also assume the person is talking about SubSahara Africa, but not sure.
Most modern countries in Africa did not exist very far in the past:

Egypt is an African country. Africa is called the Black Continent because of the skin color of its unmixed and earliest inhabitants. There are no African people who was originally black. Indigenous Africans are either part or full Black.

Upper Egypt (Pathros) in southern Egypt is the original home of ancient Egyptians. Pathros is even recorded in the Bible. The Saidi of Upper Egypt, the custodians of the oldest Egyptian cultural heritage. There are no Whites among the Saidi of Upper Egypt.

Only the extreme northern coastal regions of Egypt along the Mediterranean world. Afro-Mediterraneans, including those of Egypt are classified as Whites. Truth be told, Mediterranean people are a bit Black.

Journey To Egypt

Sahara Desert, Sahara Desert Map, Where Is The Sahara Desert, Sahara Desert Location Sahara DESERT, AFRICA Sahara , (from Arabic ṣaḥrāʾ, “desert”) largest desert in the world . Filling nearly all of northern Africa , it measures approximately 3,000 miles (4,800 km) from east to west and between 800 and 1,200 miles from north to south and has a total area of some 3,320,000 square miles (8,600,000 square km); the actual area varies as the desert expands and contracts over time. The Sahara is bordered in the west by the Atlantic Ocean , in the north by the Atlas Mountains and Mediterranean Sea , in the east by the Red Sea , and in the south by the Sahel—a semiarid region that forms a transitional zone between the Sahara to the north and the belt of humid savannas to the south. Sahara Desert Map Physical Features Physiography The principal topographical features of the Sahara include shallow, seasonally inundated basins (chotts and dayas) and large oasis depressions; extensive gravel-covered plains (serirs or regs); rock-strewn plateaus (hammadas); abrupt mountains; and sand sheets, dunes, and sand seas (ergs). The highest point in the deser t is the 11,204-foot (3,415-metre) summit of Mount Koussi in the Tibesti Mountains in Chad. The lowest, 436 feet (133 metres) below sea level, is in the Qattara Depression of Egypt . The name Sahara derives from the Arabic noun ṣaḥrāʾ, meaning desert , and its plural, ṣaḥārāʾ. It is also related to the adjective aṣḥar, meaning desertlike and carrying a strong connotation of the reddish colour of the vegetationless plains. There are also indigenous names for particular areas—such as the Tanezrouft region of southwestern Algeria and the Ténéré region of central Niger —which are often of Berber origin. The Sahara sits atop the African Shield, which is composed of heavily folded and denuded Precambrian rocks. Because of the stability of the shield, subsequently deposited Paleozoic formations have remained horizontal and relatively unaltered. Over much of the Sahara, these formations were covered by Mesozoic deposits—including the limestones of Algeria , southern Tunisia , and northern Libya, and the Nubian sandstones of the Libyan Desert—and many of the important regional aquifers are identified with them. In the northern Sahara, these formations are also associated with a series of basins and depressions extending from the oases of western Egypt to the chotts of Algeria. In the southern Sahara , downwarping of the African Shield created large basins occupied by Cenozoic lakes and seas, such as the ancient Mega-Chad. The serirs and regs differ in character in various regions of the desert but are believed to represent Cenozoic depositional surfaces. A prominent feature of the plains is the dark patina of ferromanganese compounds, called desert varnish, that forms on the surfaces of weathered rocks. The plateaus of the Sahara, such as the Tademaït Plateau of Algeria, are typically covered with angular, weathered rock

Black ancestry of Mediterranean people is evidenced by DNA studies.

-Sickle cell anemia of Africa origin, in non-African populations, Mediterranean people in particular. Europe. “It was very surprising to find that more than 35 percent of the sub-Saharan lineages in Europe arrived during a period that ranged from more than 11,000 years ago to the Roman Empire times,” said Dr. Antonio Salas of the University of Santiago de Compostela and senior author of the study. The other 65% of European haplogroup L lineages arrived in more recent times. The authors explain that these contacts likely connected sub-Saharan Africa to Europe not only via North Africa, but also directly by coastal routes. Salas said that it still remains unknown why there was genetic flow between Africa and Europe in prehistoric times, but one possible scenario is that some bidirectional flow was promoted when the last glaciation pushed some Europeans southward, until the glacier receded and populations returned north. In addition.

Carleton S. Coon - Wikipedia

Carleton Stevens Coon (23 June 1904 – 3 June 1981) was an American physical anthropologist, Professor of Anthropology at the University of Pennsylvania, lecturer and professor at Harvard, and president of the American Association of Physical Anthropologists. [1]

After decades of research and travel, he clearly indicated Mediterranean people have a negroid tendency, which is evident in the color of their skin, the type of hair and facial features.

Mediterranean Proper (hereafter meant when the word "Mediterranean" is used alone): Short-statured, dolicho- and mesocephalic form found in Spain, Portugal, the western Mediterranean islands, and to some extent in North Africa, southern Italy, and other Mediterranean borderlands. [...] often carries A SLIGHT NEGROID TENDENCY. - Carleton S. Coon, Ph.D

The accretion of a small amount of Negroid blood by the Mediterranean stock causes a frizziness of hair form; a darkening of skin color, which becomes extremely variable; a broadening of the nasal breadth; an increase in interorbital and biorbital dimensions; and often an increase in facial and nasal lengths, as well as a tendency to nasal profile convexity. Vault dimensions and body dimensions change little. - Carleton S. Coon, Ph.D

Uniparental Markers of Contemporary Italian Population Reveals Details on Its Pre-Roman Heritage

This analysis indicated that Italians have a basal proportion of SUB-SAHARAN ANCESTRY that is higher (9.2%, on average) than other central or northern European populations (1.5%, on average).

The amount of AFRICAN ANCESTRY IN ITALIANS is however more comparable to (but slightly higher than) the average in other MEDITERRANEAN COUNTRIES (7.1%)

The renowned French ethnologist Dr. Paul Rivet, used to say: ‘ there is a ratio of 4 to 18 percent black blood around the Mediterranean sea’. He thus referred to the Negroids of the early Paleolithic and Mesolithic - Grimaldi Man and Caspian Man -- an important group of the Mediterranean populations until the Neolithic.

-SICKLE CELL OF AFRICAN ORIGIN (BENIN TYPE IN PARTICULAR) IS FOUND AMONG LEVANTINES AND SOUTHERN EUROPEANS

Sickle cell genes of African origin have been detected in Europe, mostly in the Mediterranean region. This is taken from a Wikipedia article.

In Eastern Mediterranean regions, such as Italy, Greece, Albania and Turkey THE BENIN HAPLOTYPE IS THE MOST FREQUENT SICKLE CELL VARIANT. The Benin haplotype is also the most frequent variant in the Middle East and has been observed in Syrians, Palestinians, Israeli Arabs, Israeli Jews and Western Saudi Arabians.

This suggests that the Benin haplotype may have expanded from West Africa into North Africa and then into the Middle East and Europe. The spread of the Benin haplotype to the Mediterranean region has been associated with various events including Late Stone Age expansions from West Africa into North Africa, the trans-Saharan trade and the Arab Slave Trade.

The occurrence of sickle cell trait is particularly high in Sicily where frequencies of 13% have been reported. In New York City, Sicilian Americans are second to African Americans in occurrence of Sickle cell disease.

The high frequencies of the trait have been associated with the Arab invasion of Sicily in the 7th Century during which Sudanese soldiers were recruited by the Caliphate.

Portugal is the only region in Europe where the Senegal and Bantu haplotypes are frequent. These may be associated with Portuguese naval exploits, including the Atlantic Slave Trade and the colonization of various African countries.

How did ancient Egyptians cut a rock mountain into 3-ton stones without dynamites (sic)? Here's an ancient secret among quarrymen. That’s only passed down from father to son. You only use dynamite. If you plan to make gravel, not intact stones.

So ancient quarry men lit fires in a row on a bare rock surface.

Both countries have always been on good terms, which is evident by the fact that we've never had a conflict with the Kingdom. The healthiness of our relationship is further proven by our many similarities such as the Arabic language and Islam. It's really easy for Saudis and Egyptians to get along.

Most Egyptians travel to Saudi Arabia either as expats or pilgrims. As a matter of fact, Egyptians are the third largest community of expats in the Kingdom and it hosts the largest number of Egyptian expats worldwide. This tradition of working and studying in Saudi Arabia goes back to the days of our post-independence from the British.

Egypt and KSA are in on the same side in so many issues such as the Qatari embargo, preventing Turkey from spreading its geo-political power, and ensuring peace and stability in the Middle-East.

Politically speaking, Egypt and Saudi Arabia have always been close allies in the Middle-East. While Egypt tries not to get too involved in Middle-Eastern affairs in an attempt to maintain neutrality, Egypt always support Saudi Arabia. Egypt tends to defend Saudi Arabia and stand by its side at all times. Our relationship is similar to that of the US and UK.

It was when Abdel-Fattah El-Sisi became president that the relationship truly flourished. It flourished so much, in fact, that Sisi sold the islands of Tiran and Sanafir to King Salman. Eventually, the islands will be used to build a causeway linking Egypt and Saudi Arabia HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/" \l "JBCrB" \t "_blank" [2] .

One of the proposed plans for the causeway. Here are what the numbers are labelling.

1. First causeway linking Ras Sheikh Hamid (KSA) to Sanafir Island.
2. Second causeway linking Sanafir Island to Tiran Island.
3. Third causeway linking Tiran Island to Sharm El-Sheikh (Egypt)

The decision to sell Tiran and Sanafir wasn't well received in Egypt. Protests erupted and people demanded that the islands stay Egyptian. After all, Egyptian soldiers died on those islands while fighting Israel's occupation.

Nobody blamed Saudi Arabia and it didn't cause any sort of tension between Saudis and Egyptians, but it caused widespread disappointment for those who opposed Sisi's rule. Also, there were mass arrests.

Now for my personal opinion which nobody asked for…

I agree with our strong relationship with KSA and I think we should keep developing it. We must remain strong allies. They're a great country with a marvellous success story and history. The Arab culture there is simply amazing and I hope to travel there one day to see it for myself.

The only thing I don't like about KSA is the way they sometimes abuse their ownership of the two holy mosques by banning people (like Qatari and Syrian people) from visiting them. I also don't like how they sometimes act as the "representatives of Islam" simply because they own the two holy mosques. Not everyone agrees with KSA as Islam's spokesperson.

Also, it's sad that they don't have a film industry in KSA. All this money and nothing to spare for making some art.

Apparently, there was a 35-year ban of cinemas in KSA that was recently lifted.

The Egyptian mission under Zahi Hawass discovered an ancient Egyptian city in Luxor - The Rise of Aten - that was lost under the sands 3000 years ago. The city - dubbed the Lost Golden City - dates to the reign of Amenhotep III, and continued to be used by Tutankhamun and Ay.

The Egyptian expedition was surprised to discover the largest city ever found in Egypt. Founded by one of the greatest rulers of Egypt, king Amenhotep III, the ninth king of the 18th dynasty, who ruled Egypt from 1391 till 1353 B.C.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-ce119f38270c38188f36fed2e325763b-lq" * MERGEFORMATINET

This city was active during the great king’s co-regency with his son, the famous Amenhotep IV/Akhenaton.

Archaeological finds at the site, such as rings, scarabs, colored pottery vessels and mud bricks bearing seals of King Amenhotep III’s cartouche, confirmed the city’s age, which was the primary purpose of the mission.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-9ffd44e0256eb46ecdc3dc0b3df2e944-lq" * MERGEFORMATINET

The mission also discovered several tools used in industrial activity, such as spinning and weaving works, as well as rubble of metals and glass. But the main area where such activity would be carried out has yet to be unearthed. Two uncommon burials of a cow or bull were also found inside one of the rooms, and the search is still in progress to determine the nature and purpose of these burials.

The mission also found a skeleton buried with its arms spread out next to it and the remains of a rope wrapped around its knees. Hawass described the location and position of this skeleton as “rather odd,” and more research is being carried out on this matter. A vessel was found containing 2 gallons of dried or boiled meat and bearing inscriptions that read “Year 37, dressed meat for the third Heb Sed festival from the slaughterhouse of the stockyard of Kha made by the butcher Iuwy.”

This is an exciting period for exploration, especially since Akhenaten, one of the kings of this era, left Luxor and moved to the Amarna region to reside there with his family.

The discovery of residential, industrial and administrative communities with this level of accuracy and organization is an important matter. There are not many discoveries throughout history of urban agglomerations in ancient Egypt, and therefore it is an addition to history and science.

Changed the policy of the world? WORLD? There is no need for globalizations, then they were not invented yet. He changed the use of the Suez Canal - for sure. He managed to realize the strengthening of Arab self-identity, nationalism and independence. A convinced supporter of the ideas of pan-Arabism, Nasser wanted to consolidate the nation, "export" the revolution to other Arab countries. By the end of the 1950s, the ideas of pan-Arabism had become the dominant ideology in the Arab world. The first step on this path, he saw the unification of Syria and Egypt into one state, which, however, existed for only three years (1958-1961). Attempts to revive the union state again, already within Egypt, Syria and Iraq, have not been crowned with success. But the name "United Arab Republic" (as part of one Egypt) formally survived until 1971, having outlived its main ideologist.
The people remember the president as a politician who defended the independence of Egypt. One of his first decrees as head was the announcement of the nationalization of the Suez Canal. The decree caused a widespread resonance throughout the world and caused the dramatic events that followed. The channel brought super-profits to Western owners, while its true owners, the Egyptians, received no more than 15% of the income, and at a certain stage this share dropped to 6%. At the same time, the republic was in dire need of funds for the construction of the Aswan High Dam.

France and Britain, which owned some of the property, made desperate efforts to return the Suez Canal to their control. Various options were considered, including placing it under the control of an international body appointed by the UN, but Egypt rejected them. Three months later, the former co-owners launched a military campaign against Egypt, which is better known outside the Arab world as the Suez Crisis.

Then the Soviet Union (the loyal and best friend of the Arabs!) issued a historic statement in which it warned of the possibility of striking the aggressor countries. Fearing the threat of a global war, on November 7, 1956, France and Great Britain announced a cessation of hostilities.

The nationalization of the channel was followed by the nationalization of foreign banks, insurance companies, trade and industrial firms.

These measures elevated Nasser to the rank of a national hero. In the international arena, the main ally of the president was the USSR, which provided him with economic and military-technical assistance. The culmination of the Egyptian-Soviet friendship was the construction of the Aswan Dam, which not only provided the country with electricity, but also saved entire areas of Upper Egypt from flooding during the flooding of the Nile.

He created a system of free education and medical care in Egypt, built schools, factories, and enterprises. The country has begun its new serious upsurge. The people loved him. He changed the life of Egypt, but not the whole world.

The USSR, which hated the West, was the one who really changed the policy of the world.

In 1967, the USSR broke off diplomatic relations with Israel. The reason was the Six Day War, during which Israel defeated the Egyptian-Syrian-Jordanian coalition. The role played by Moscow in it remains one of the "white spots" of history. (Indeed ?! Not known what role ?! Someone may not know, but not Jews!)

According to researchers, the generation of Soviet leaders that survived World War II tried in every possible way to expand their sphere of influence, but had a "red line": to avoid direct participation in wars.

The taboo was broken only in 1979 by the invasion of Afghanistan, and this is probably because the mujahideen were considered a frivolous enemy.

Six days of fighting …

The hostilities during the Six Day War were stopped at the request of the world community: on June 8 (on the morning of the 9th, due to the time difference between New York and the Middle East), the UN Security Council made a decision.

According to experts, from a military point of view, Israel was able to take Cairo and Damascus.

The Israelites took the Sinai Peninsula from Egypt, the Golan Heights from Syria, and the West Bank of the Jordan River and East Jerusalem from Jordan.

June 13, 1967: Jews did not have access to the Western Wall until the Six Day War

In general, it cannot be denied that Nasser did not influence world politics - now all Arab friends have a headache because of Israel ...

The Arab countries were saved from complete defeat by the intervention of the international community, which their leaders had spoken of with contempt two weeks earlier.

Do Egyptians consider themselves to be ethnic Arabs or just Arabic speaking descendants of ancient Egypt?

Arabic speaking descendants of ancient Egypt, not just according to us but also according to many studies and tests.

People also have to understand something, Egypt is 6262 years old. There is so much culture and history to celebrate and be proud of. We are Egyptians first and foremost.

Beautiful image of Cleopatra, an ancient queen of Egypt.

Cleopatra VII ruled ancient Egypt as co-regent (first with her father, then with her two younger brothers and finally with her son) for almost three decades. She was part of a dynasty of Macedonian rulers founded by Ptolemy, who served as general under Alexander the Great during his conquest of Egypt in 332 B.C. Well-educated and clever, Cleopatra could speak various languages and serve as the dominant ruler in all three of her co-regencies. Her romantic liaisons and military alliances with the Roman leaders Julius Caesar and Mark Antony, as well as her supposed exotic beauty and powers of seduction, earned her an enduring place in history and popular myth.

No, not even slightly.

There was a popular theory advanced in the early 90s, I think, that the pyramids of Giza aligned with Orion or somesuch thing, but it's complete nonsense.

They are laid out the way they are because of the shape of the plateau of rock on which they are built, that's it.

Boring, but factual. Allegedly certain shafts in the pyramids also line up with stars, but this is also incredibly dubious.

This is a very simple question, I am surprised why a few people here struggle to give accurate answers.

The Origin of Haplogroup E1b1b is known by Academia to be located within the East African corridor of Horn of Africa, with the highest concentration in Somalia. Haplogroup E1b1b (formerly known as E3b) represents the last major direct migration from Africa into Europe. It is believed to have first appeared in the Horn of Africa approximately 26,000 years ago and dispersed to North Africa and the Near East during the late Paleolithic and Mesolithic periods. E-M78 and E-Z827 originated respectively at 20,000 years and 24,000 years. E1b1b lineages are closely linked to the diffusion of Afroasiatic languages.

Prior to Mesolithic period of the Levant region, carriers of Haplogroup E from Africa settled in that region and were responsible for the Natufian Technocomplex practice later on.

E-M78 = Natufian/Basal Eurasian/Ancient 'Non-African'.

E-V22 could be Natufian, seems later (9500 BC vs 14k-11k BC).

E-V13 spread with the Neolithic.

The distant ancestor of haplogroup E1b1b along with its relative subclade E1b1a, is haplogroup E. Its origin is said to be in the Eurasia, and migrated (along with the human migrations of course), to mostly Africa and the Mediterranean regions, in addition to other places in the lesser extents. The link and excerpts below highlights the fact that haplogroup E indeed originated in Eurasia and back-migrated to Africa. HYPERLINK "https://indo-european.eu/2018/06/recent-africa-origin-with-hybridization-and-back-to-africa-70000-years-ago/" \o "indo-european.eu" \t "_blank"

Recent Africa origin with hybridization, and back to Africa 70,000 years ago | Indo-European.eu

Open access Carriers of mitochondrial DNA macrohaplogroup L3 basal lineages migrated back to Africa from Asia around 70,000 years ago, by Cabrera et al. BMC Evol Biol (2018) 18(98). Abstract (emphasis mine): Background The main unequivocal conclusion after three decades of phylogeographic mtDNA studies is the African origin of all extant modern humans. In addition, … Continue reading Recent Africa origin with hybridization, and back to Africa 70,000 years ago →

Archaeologists recently made a highly significant discovery in Egypt. In a find some are describing as the most significant since the Tomb of Tutankhamen, a lost "Golden City" of Egypt has been found, with the potential to change our understanding of Egyptian history forever.

The recent discovery, found near Thebes in HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/egyptology/" \t "_blank" Egypt has been dubbed "The Rise of Aten" and dates back more than 3,000 years. This discovery is said to be the largest ancient municipality that has ever been discovered within the country.
The city has been hidden underneath the sands of Luxor's western bank in the south of Egypt. This city dates to the rule of King Amenhotep III, from around 1391 to 1353 BC, according to the lead archaeologist, Zahi Hawass.

Amenhotep was the 9th king of the 18th dynasty, ruling over a peaceful, prosperous and wealthy land. His reign, free from war, saw the construction of many huge public buildings and HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/james-graham/" \t "_blank" temples .

A Chance Discovery

The Lost Golden City was not the prime discovery that the archaeologists had intended to make. Hawass and his other team members had initially visited the area in September 2020, in the hopes of finding a mortuary temple. But, instead of the expected religious buildings, a whole HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/hattusa/" \t "_blank" city began to emerge.
HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/wp-content/uploads/2021/11/location.jpg" \t "_blank" INCLUDEPICTURE "https://ci3.googleusercontent.com/proxy/-_aVYBBjCwOYmmIKb56z7SyaKqnR763i4thVdVCiEQaJhtAQcD2FBsoQT2OXIzb0x9X-OipXX8_gvXLlytj772SaLCOqLPrQuW_NWVlu11gBkWO7uK0qLb-5aeM=s0-d-e1-ft#https://www.historicmysteries.com/wp-content/uploads/2021/11/location.jpg" * MERGEFORMATINET The location of the city on an early map of the area. The site is across the Nile from the great palace complex of Karnak (Description de l'Égypte / HYPERLINK

The city was well organized, with an administrative area consisting of several large buildings with 10 foot (3 meter) brick walls, separate from that of the residential district. Further discoveries revealed a workshop area, where amulets, mud bricks, and other goods were made. The archaeologists also found other mercantile buildings, including a bakery.

HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/heracleion-sunken-egyptian-city/" \t "_blank" Heracleion – Discovery of the Ancient Sunken Egyptian City
But the focus of the workshops was the construction and adornment of the huge HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/gobekli-tepe/" \t "_blank" temples , potentially including those in the large HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/celtic-prince-of-lavau/" \t "_blank" burial area was also discovered around the city outskirts. Much of this latter area, including the skeletal occupants of the graves, is still to be excavated.
But it is with the areas used by the living inhabitants of this city that there is the most potential. This discovery has the potential to give us a glimpse into how ancient Egyptians lived their lives, during a peaceful and wealthy time for Egypt.

The excavation began in September 2020, but the work is not yet over. Only the southern part of the newly-discovered city has been excavated or explored to date, with even the full extent of the city being unclear.

Treasures Beneath the Sands

Archaeologists had initially theorized that the site might have held a mortuary structure, where the subjects of HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/king-tuts-curse/" \t "_blank" Tutankhamun would have placed funerary items and food that they offered to him after he died in 1325 BC. But instead they discovered the zigzagging mudbrick walls and artifacts of a living city.

The structures around the city contained everyday items, including items used by artists, alongside more industrial finds. Evidence from the homes found around the city suggested that they housed workers. Everything pointed to this being the Pharaoh's capital city.

Evidence of glass and metal production was found, as well as a cemetery filled with rock tombs. Apart from human skeletons, unusually skeletons of HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/aurochs/" \t "_blank" cows or bulls have also been found within the city walls. Researchers are investigating why these livestock animals were found in this way.
But the crowning achievement of this archaeological expedition must be the discovery of 22 mummies, all royal, and with no fewer than 18 kings. These HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/psusennes-i/" \t "_blank" mummies included those of Amenhotep III and HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/nitocris/" \t "_blank" Queen Tiye, his wife, and are on display in the New National Museum of Egyptian Civilization.

HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/mummy-in-vermont/" \t "_blank" Story Behind the Ancient Egyptian Prince in Vermont
Some of the buildings bore the name of Amenhotep III's son, Akhenaten. A controversial Pharaoh, Akhenaten abandoned the old Egyptian HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/egyptian-set-animal/" \t "_blank" pantheon in favor of worshipping a single sun god. Akhenaten also abandoned many of the existing religious sites in Egypt, including apparently this newly-discovered city.

Abandoned and Forgotten

The researchers note that ancient Egypt's loss is modern archaeology's gain, as the decision to abandon the site has led to its preservation over the millennia. While Akhenaten's new religion did not survive long beyond his death, his son Tutankhamun seemed to prefer not to return to The Rise Of Aten, instead building a new capital at Memphis.

HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/tampering-with-the-chariot/" \t "_blank" Tutankhamun , and his Vizier Ay who succeeded him, seem to have continued to make some use of the site, but it was never the focus of Royal patronage as it was before Akhenaten's sudden religious reforms. Analysis of the four settlement layers at the site suggests it was inhabited as late as the 7th century AD, before being abandoned to the sands altogether.

Not since the discovery of the nearby Tutankhamen's tomb in 1922 has such a significant discovery been made. Hawass named this city "The Golden City" because it was built during the golden age of Egypt, and in the hopes of the archaeological treasures which might be found there.

Amenhotep III may well have been the wealthiest Pharaoh of all time, and this city was built during this peaceful period in HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/ancient-egyptian-medicine/" \t "_blank" Egypt's history. Many answers, including how these people lived, and why the grandson of Amenhotep chose not to return, may await discovery.

No, not even slightly.
There was a popular theory advanced in the early 90s, I think, that the pyramids of Giza aligned with Orion or somesuch thing, but it's complete nonsense.

They are laid out the way they are because of the shape of the plateau of rock on which they are built, that's it.

Boring, but factual. Allegedly certain shafts in the pyramids also line up with stars, but this is also incredibly dubious.

If Egypt is so fertile because of the Nile river, why is there no jungle/forest in Egypt, instead most of Egypt is desert?

The Nile River flows in a desert area, so you find that agriculture is only around the course of the Nile, and the area around the Nile is a dry, sandy desert area.

Of course, there are some oases in the Egyptian desert, but it does not change that it is a barren desert.

I honestly do not think so, just because she looked a certain way folks tended to brand her that way, the family was supposed to hail from Akhmim.

Early Life & Marriage

According to some scholars (Margaret Bunson, among them), Tiye's father was Yuya, a provincial priest from Akhmin, and her mother was Tjuya, a servant of the queen mother, Mutemwiya. Other sources, however, claim Yuya was Master of the Horse of the royal court and Tjuya a priestess. Tiye grew up in the royal HYPERLINK "https://www.worldhistory.org/disambiguation/palace/" \o "www.worldhistory.org" \t "_blank" palace but was not a royal herself. She would have been a part of the court life if her mother had been the queen's servant but it seems more likely that both her parents enjoyed a more elevated status.

She had one brother, Amen, who later took over his father's position and eventually became high priest of the cult of Akhmin, and she may have had another brother, Ay, who would later rule Egypt (though this is disputed). Her parents' names, some claim, are not HYPERLINK "https://www.worldhistory.org/disambiguation/Egyptian/" \o "www.worldhistory.org" \t "_blank" Egyptian , and it has been suggested that they were Nubian. Scholars who have noted Tiye's unusual role in the affairs of state point to the Nubian custom of female rulers. The Candaces of Nubia were all strong female rulers, and so some scholars speculate that perhaps Tiye felt free to wield power in the same way as a male ruler because of her upbringing and heritage.

TIYE RULED WITH THE SAME AUTHORITY AS A MAN AND EXERCISED HER POWER IN EQUAL MEASURE WITH THE GREAT KINGS OF THE ANCIENT WORLD.

This theory is disputed, however, as it has been pointed out that HYPERLINK "https://www.worldhistory.org/article/623/women-in-ancient-egypt/" \o "www.worldhistory.org" \t "_blank" women in ancient Egypt had more rights and were held in higher regard than in most other ancient cultures and, therefore, there is no need to seek a reason in neighboring Nubia for Tiye's behavior.

The counter-argument, however, is that this latter objection does not account for the Nubian-sounding names of Tiye's parents. The Egyptologist Zahi Hawass claims that the names are not Nubian and that “some scholars have speculated that Yuya and Tjuya were of foreign birth, but there is no good evidence to substantiate this theory” (28). He also contradicts Bunson by claiming that Tiye's parents were associated with the clergy from the Egyptian region of Akhmin, serving the gods Amun, HYPERLINK "https://www.worldhistory.org/Hathor/" \o "www.worldhistory.org" \t "_blank" Hathor , and Min; Yuya was Master of the Horse and Tjuya was not a servant of the royal house but a priestess of considerable power.

If Hawass is correct, this would explain how Queen Tiye came to wield as much power as she did — far more than any other queen of Egypt before her (as HYPERLINK "https://www.worldhistory.org/hatshepsut/" \o "www.worldhistory.org" \t "_blank" Hatshepsut was pharaoh, not queen, she cannot be considered in this equation).The historian Margaret Bunson notes that, "Tiye probably married Amenhotep while he was a prince. She is believed to have been only 11 or 12 at the time” (265). When Amenhotep III came to the throne, Tiye ascended with him.

The real Queen Tiye recreated using her real mummy and not sculpture:

Queen Tiye with husband, as depicted by ancinet Egyptians themselves.

If she were Nubian, we would know, because an ancinet Egyptians tend to leave a hint if she weren't Egyptian, like as with the hyksos, 14th dynasty Pharoah Nehsei Aasahre (literally Nehsei the Nubian/black) or queen Kemi Set (black lady) one of the Nubian Queen of the II, or the Vizier of Nubian origin Maiherpri

One of the few Egyptian of Nubian origin ever found. The mummy is immediately distinct for other other mummies ever discovered.

Not according to her DNA which was Asiatic. She also has silky, wavy hair which is only found in Nubians who are heavily admixed with Asiatic or Egyptian ancestry, or, you know, just Egyptians who aren't Nubian at all, which is what Tiye was.

July 23, 1956, President Nasser nationalizes the Suez Canal.
This is part of the remaining influence of President Gamal Abdel Nasser. During his rule which spanned two decades, he arose as a charismatic leader which much of the Arab World saw as a unifier. His success was measured by his supporters based on the nationalization of the Suez Canal, and his defiance to two former occupiers, Britain and France. Nasser had made it well known that the French war of occupation in Algeria was not only a violation of basic human rights but an aghast war where a nation which openly proclaimed “Democracy”, kept a nation in servitude for its own benefit. The Nationalization of the Suez Canal had come about when Britain and the United States withdrew support for the Aswan High Dam, claiming the project would “overwhelm” the Egyptian economy. The reality was that the House of Saud was being groomed as a counter balance to a Nasser which fought for the domestic interests of Arabs against colonial influence, though the Western powers would define this as Nasser being a socialist and leaning towards the Soviet Union. Nasser had nationalized British and French controlled companies in Egypt and would have done so across the Arab World as his call to Pan-Arabism was broadcast across the Middle East via Radio. His popularity soared and he would sign a treat of Friendship with India and join the Non-Aligned Movement, cementing his credentials as an anti-colonialist leader at a global level.

Nasser would complete the Aswan High Dam with the assistance of the Soviet Union, and create a joint Republic with Syria in 1957. Though the Union only lasted until 1961, Egypt continued to be known as the United Arab Republic until the year after Nasser's death in 1971. Nasser to this day remains a popular figure in Egypt, his ideas on secular government seem far more modern than the fate the Middle East has suffered. His ideas of uplifting the Arab World through secular education, health care, and political reforms is far removed from the reality of a fractured reality found. Nasser and his ideas were opposed heavily by the U.S., Britain and France, though the result would have been the planting of a basis of continued Secular Society. Nasser was labeled as a Socialist and even as a Communist though he opposed Communism in all forms. Though little remains of his rule politically, the official name of Egypt still bares testament to Nasser.

Herodotus in his History Bk. vi, ch. 55 wrote the following : How it happened that Egyptians came to the Peloponnese and what they did to make themselves kings in that part of Greece has been chronicled by other writers. I will add nothing, therefore, but proceed to mention some points, which no one else has yet touched upon.

It was not the first archaeological discovery that showed such evidence. Greek legend holds that an Egyptian king Danaos landed in Apobathmi, in the Peloponnesus with a great fleet. He made himself ruler and ordered the natives to call themselves "Danaans".

Ancient tradition places African dynasts at the head of some of Greece's most powerful and prominent cities. Homer states that the Greeks do not call themselves Greeks or Hellenes, but Danaans. Coincidence?

All historians agree that at some point Greece was Invaded by the Egyptians the ones history calls "Hellens" who were African Egyptians and conquered the Islands of Greece and then spread. These people were the Danaan of Egypt.

Story goes Danaan and his brother Egyptos had 50 daughters and 50 sons. Egyptos 50 Sons were to marry Danaan's 50 daughters so Danaan to escape Egyptos fled with his daughters. Eventually Egyptos caught up with him and on the wedding night All 50 daughters except for 1 killed their husbands. It is from this marriage that the first Hellen Kings of Greece were born.

The beginning of Greek history is often dated to this “exile” from Egypt of the Danaoi, who appear in classical writings as the “Danaans.” You will also find them under other spellings such as the Danaoi (Danaoi used 138 times in the Iliad), Danaus, Danae, Danaans, Danoi, Danaids,or Dananites. It was said by these families; “which remain to be considered no new race of people was introduced. Danaus and his descendants were engraed on the Pelasgi; Cadmus and the Labdacidai on the Aborigines of Boetia. Pelops and the Pelopidce were incorporated with the iEolians and Achaeans; Hercules and his posterity were adopted by the Dorians. The Arcadian kings belonged to the original Pelasgic stock.”

This region of Greece is where King Danaus and the Tribe of Dan had gone to aer their exodus from Egypt, and it is in this area where we can find an amazing 47% concentration of this unique E1b1b E-M78 Haplogroup

In addition, by ancient Greek accounts, settlers from Egypt and Phoenicia had, much earlier, either founded or supplied ruling dynasties to such Greek cities as Thebes, Argos, Sparta and Athens. Athens is actually named after an Ancient Egyptian city Sais which was reportedly also called Athenai; and the Greek goddess Athena is a version of the goddess Neith of the Egyptian Sais/Athenai. In addition, many Greek words, (about 25% of the Greek vocabulary, by some expert estimates) are derived from Ancient Egyptian.

There is an incredibly high frequency of about 47% of E1b1b YDNA in the Peloponnese region of Greece. This region is the same place that King Danaus (Tanaus or Dan) who was founder of the Tribe of Dan had arrived at Argos in the Peloponnese when he had fled Egypt to Hellas with his five daughters

History of the Balkan Egyptians

By Rubin Zemon

The archeology gives evidence of the existence of people with Egyptian origins in the Balkans, too. A lot of temples of Isis and other Egyptian gods have been preserved around the Balkans, but the most famous are the temples of Isis in lihnidos (ohrid) [Ill. 7] and heraclea (Bitola) [Ill. 8]. Also, on the ornaments the scarab (a holy insect in Egyptian mythology) of the Balkan people can be observed. Egyptian cults and their monuments were highly present in the Balkan Peninsula during the Roman Empire. Some of the Egyptian monuments were brought by Roman legionnaires, officials, servants etc.

It's not "divided into four quarters". Traditionally, the Old City had four ethnic/religious neighborhoods, each with their own unique cultures.
These were the Jewish Quarter, the Muslim Quarter, the Christian Quarter and the Armenian quarter.

How many mummies were actually found in the pyramids?

Short answer... There were no mummies found in any of the pyramids.
HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/profile/Jeff-Kay" \t "_blank"

Jeff Kay Amateur with several digs under belt, visited some of the most important world sites. HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/How-many-mummies-were-actually-found-in-the-pyramids/answer/Jeff-Kay" \t "_blank" 7y

But, as my I tell my kids, you don't get a short answer without some explanation. There are a couple of thoughts on the subject, but the most plausible is that they were taken out in antiquity, not long after burial. You don't create a massive monument to someone rich and famous without it being an advert to grave robbers. Looting was as prolific then as it is now. Even with elaborate security measures, determined thieves will always find a way.

At some point, the Egyptians decided that pyramids were too much a temptation, and began burying Pharaohs in the Valley Of The Kings, where many of the more famous mummies had been found, including a minor Pharaoh named Tutankhamen, who has the distinction of having the only royal tomb left largely intact since ancient times. Even creating a secure location for burials was no guarantee that someone wouldn't rob the tombs. Tut was lucky that his had been buried under debris from the construction of a later tomb, although there was evidence of some looting very early in its history.

Some famous kings had been relocated by later generations and placed together in common tomb, possibly in an attempt to prevent further damage to their remains after their original tombs suffered repeated looting.

One, more controversial, idea is that the pyramids were never intended as an actual tomb, but more of a monument (like Lincoln's or Washington's in DC). The pyramids are each part of a temple complex, meant for the worship of the deified dead Pharaoh. Each complex was headed by the pyramid, which makes for a really impressive symbol for the Pharaoh's cult. Part of the reasoning behind this idea is partly because no bodies were ever found, but also because the "sarcophagus" found in the Khufu pyramid is almost too small to have held human remains.

Illustrated facts Pyramid of Khufu (Cheops)

The stone sarcophagus would have been the outer coffin of several nested coffins inside. The object above is itself almost too small to fit a modern human alone.

Side note*- While the new world pyramids in the Americas look similar to their Egyptian counterparts, the building techniques and purposes were completely different from those in Egypt. American pyramids are generally piled dirt cores and stone casing, and were used as centers of religious functions, rather than as tombs. Some human remains have been found in them, but may have been fallen workers or consecratory sacrifices, rather than later human sacrifices as some have suggested.*

The Nile River flows in a desert area, so you find that agriculture is only around the course of the Nile, and the area around the Nile is a dry, sandy desert area. Of course, there are some oases in the Egyptian desert, but it does not change that it is a barren desert.

Once among the greatest cities of the Mediterranean world and a centre of Hellenic scholarship and science, Alexandria was the capital of Egypt from its founding by Alexander the Great in 332 bce until its surrender to the Arab forces led by ʿAmr ibn al-ʿĀṣ in 642 ce.

AFRICA, ITS PAST AND FUTURE.1

AFRICA, the oldest of the continents, containing the earliest remains of man, and the birthplace of European civilization, is the last to be explored. Long before the temples of India or the palaces of Nineveh were built, before the hanging garden of Babylon was planted, the pyramids of Cheops and Cephren had been constructed, the temples of Palmyra and Thebes filled with worshippers.

Greece owes its civilization to Egypt: its beautiful orders of architecture came from the land of the Nile. The civilization of Egypt had grown old, and was in its decay, when Rome was born. Think what a vast abyss of time separates us from the days of Romulus and Remus! And yet the pyramids of Egypt were then older by a thousand years than all the centuries that have passed since then.

We know that Africa is capable of the very highest civilization; that it was the birthplace of all civilization. To it we are indebted for the origin of all our arts and sciences, and it possesses to-day the most wonderful works of man. I believe that Africa, whose morning was so bright, and whose night has been so dark, will yet live to see the light of another and a higher civilization.

S. Mill , was an English philosopher , political economist , Member of Parliament (MP) and civil servant. One of the most influential thinkers in the history of classical liberalism , he contributed widely to social theory , political theory , and political economy. Dubbed "the most influential English-speaking philosopher of the nineteenth century", [11] he conceived of liberty as justifying the freedom of the individual in opposition to unlimited state and social control . [12] In his later years, whilst continuing to staunchly defend individual rights and freedoms, he became more critical of economic liberalism and his views on political economy moved towards a form of liberal socialism . [13] Mill was a proponent of utilitarianism , an ethical theory developed by his predecessor Jeremy Bentham . He contributed to the investigation of scientific methodology , though his knowledge of the topic was based on the writings of others, notably William Whewell , John Herschel , and Auguste Comte , and research carried out for Mill by Alexander Bain . He engaged in written debate with Whewell . [14] A member of the Liberal Party and author of the early feminist work The Subjection of Women , Mill was also the second Member of Parliament to call for women's suffrage after Henry Hunt in 1832. [15] [16] Biography [edit] John Stuart Mill was born at 13 Rodney Street in Pentonville , Middlesex , the eldest son of Harriet Barrow and the Scottish philosopher , historian, and economist James Mill . John Stuart was educated by his father, with the advice and assistance of Jeremy Bentham and Francis Place . He was given an extremely rigorous upbringing, and was deliberately shielded from association with children his own age other than his siblings. His father, a follower of Bentham and an adherent of associationism , had as his explicit aim to create a genius intellect that would carry on the cause of utilitarianism and its implementation after he and Bentham had died. [17] Mill was a notably precoc

Fraser's Magazine for Town and Country

It is curious, withal, that the earliest known civilization was, we have the strongest reason to believe, a negro civilization. The original Egyptians are inferred, from the evidence of their sculptures, to have been a negro race: it was from negroes, therefore, that the Greeks learnt their first lessons in civilization; and to the records and traditions of these negroes did the Greek philosophers to the very end of their career resort (I do not say with much fruit) as a treasury of mysterious wisdom.

But I again renounce all advantage from facts: were the whites born ever so superior in intelligence to the blacks, and competent by nature to instruct and advise them, it would not be the less monstrous to assert that they had therefore a right either to subdue them by force, or circumvent them by superior skill; to throw upon them the toils and hardships of life, reserving for themselves, under the misapplied name of work, its agreeable excitements.

Three powerful quotes on ancient Egypt and Hamites reclassified from Blacks to Whites.

1. Hamites" cursed as "blacks" now become "white" and therefore the just progenitors of civilization in Africa, beginning with Egypt.

2. The Hamite went from being the cursed father of African people, doomed to slavery, to being some superior, civilizing white or near white race in order to rationalize the presence of civilization in Egypt.

3. Eurocentrics classify Ham as all "black" people first (to justify slavery and colonization) then they all magically became "white" people after that point so that they could claim Egypt for themselves

Africa has an impressive list of firsts and some of the most wonderful works of humanity, starting with Ta-Seti, south of Egypt and ancient Egypt, the River Nile Civilization.

Here are 25 of these firsts; there are others.

1. The First World Wonder, the Great Pyramid of Giza;

2. The first written records;

3. The first superpower (Egypt),

4. The first flash of thought,

5. The first inscribers of meaning (Blombos 77.000, Ishango 28.000);

6. The first in technology discovery and use, in governance and (collective) government, and in statehood;

7. The first city-state;

8. The first awakening of intelligence in the human species;

9. The first in history to produce books;

10. The first monumental structures;

11. The first architecture;

12. The first systematic removal of metals from the earth;

13. The first copper mines;

14. The first use of beds, tables, and chairs;

15. The first paved road (by Khufu 3 000 BC);

16. The first walled cities;

17. The first megalithic calendar;

18. The first medical textbooks;

19. The first kingship;

20. The first geometry experts.

21. The first bone tools;

22. The first abstract art;

23. The first jewellery;

24. The first stone tipped spears and arrows:

25. The first creation of carbon steel. HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/History_of_science_and_technology_in_Africa" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank"

History of science and technology in Africa - Wikipedia

Aspect of history Map of the regions of Africa. Africa has the world's oldest record of human technological achievement: the oldest stone tools in the world have been found in eastern Africa, and later evidence for tool production by our hominin ancestors has been found across Sub-Saharan Africa . [1] The history of science and technology in Africa since then has, however, received relatively little attention compared to other regions of the world, despite notable African developments in mathematics , metallurgy , architecture , and other fields. Early humans [edit] The Great Rift Valley of Africa provides critical evidence for the evolution of early hominins . The earliest tools in the world can be found there as well: An unidentified hominin, possibly Australopithecus afarensis or Kenyanthropus platyops , created stone tools dating to 3.3 million years ago at Lomekwi in the Turkana Basin , eastern Africa. Homo habilis , residing in eastern Africa , developed another early toolmaking industry, the Oldowan , around 2.3 million years ago. Homo erectus developed the Acheulean stone tool industry, specifically hand-axes, at 1.5 million years ago. This tool industry spread to the Middle East and Europe around 800,000 to 600,000 years ago. Homo erectus also begins using fire. [2] Homo sapiens , or modern humans, created bone tools and backed blades around 90,000 to 60,000 years ago, in southern and eastern Africa. The use of bone tools and backed blades eventually became characteristic of Later Stone Age tool industries. [3] The first appearance of abstract art is during the Middle Stone Age , however. The oldest abstract art in the world is a shell necklace dated to 82,000 years ago from the Cave of Pigeons in Taforalt , eastern Morocco. [4] The second oldest abstract art and the oldest rock art is found at Blombos Cave in South Africa , dated to 77,000 years ago. [5] There are evidences that stone age humans around 100,000 years ago had an elementary knowledge of chemistry in Southern Africa, and that they used a specific recipe to create a liquefied ochre-rich mixture., [6] according to Henshilwood "This isn't just a chance mixture, it is early chemistry. It suggests conceptual and probably cognitive abilities which are the equivalent of modern humans". [7] Education [edit] Northern Africa and the Nile Valley [edit] In 295 BC, the Library of Alexandria was founded in Egypt. It was considered the largest library in the classical world. [citation needed] Al-Azhar University , founded in 970~972 as a madrasa , is the chief centre of Arabic literature and Sunni Islamic learning in the world. The oldest degree-granting university in Egypt after the Cairo University , its establishment date may be considered 1961 when non-religious subjects were added to its curriculum. [8] West Africa and the Sahel [edit] Three philosophical schools in Mali existed during the country's "golden age" from the 12th to the 16th centuries: University of Sankore , S

Ancient technology - Wikipedia

Technological results from advances in engineering in ancient civilizations During the growth of the ancient civilizations , ancient technology was the result from advances in engineering in ancient times . These advances in the history of technology stimulated societies to adopt new ways of living and governance. This article includes the advances in technology and the development of several engineering sciences in historic times before the Middle Ages , which began after the fall of the Western Roman Empire in AD 476, [1] [2] the death of Justinian I in the 6th century, [3] the coming of Islam in the 7th century, [4] or the rise of Charlemagne in the 8th century. [5] For technologies developed in medieval societies, see Medieval technology and Inventions in medieval Islam . Ancient civilizations [edit] Technology in Africa has a history stretching to the beginning of the human species, stretching back to the first evidence of tool use by hominid ancestors in the areas of Africa where humans are believed to have evolved. Africa saw the advent of some of the earliest ironworking technology in the Aïr Mountains region of what is today Niger and the erection of some of the world's oldest monuments, pyramids, and towers in Egypt , Nubia , and North Africa . In Nubia and ancient Kush, glazed quartzite and building in brick were developed to a greater extent than in Egypt. Parts of the East African Swahili Coast saw the creation of the world's oldest carbon steel creation with high-temperature blast furnaces created by the Haya people of Tanzania. Mesopotamia [edit] The Mesopotamians were one of the first to enter the Bronze Age in the world. Early on they used copper , bronze and gold , and later they used iron . Palaces were decorated with hundreds of kilograms of these very expensive metals. Also, copper, bronze, and iron were used for armor as well as for different weapons such as swords , daggers , spears , and maces . Perhaps the most important advance made by the Mesopotamians was the invention of writing by the Sumerians . With the invention of writing came the first recorded laws called the Code of Hammurabi as well as the first major piece of literature called the Epic of Gilgamesh . Several of the six classic simple machines were invented in Mesopotamia. [6] Mesopotamians have been credited with the invention of the wheel . The wheel and axle mechanism first appeared with the potter's wheel , invented in Mesopotamia (modern Iraq) during the 5th millennium BC. [7] This led to the invention of the wheeled vehicle in Mesopotamia during the early 4th millennium BC. Depictions of wheeled wagons found on clay tablet pictographs at the Eanna district of Uruk are dated between 3700 and 3500 BCE. [8] The lever was used in the shadoof water-lifting device, the first crane machine, which appeared in Mesopotamia circa 3000 BC. [9] and then in ancient Egyptian technology circa 2000 BC. [10] The earliest evidence of pulleys date back to Mesopotamia i

Demotic: The History, Development and Techniques of Ancient Egypt's Popular Script

Worlds oldest writing tablets, Abydos, Egypt Photo: Kenneth Garrett When most people think of ancient Egyptian scripts, they think immediately of hieroglyphic writing, the pictorial script that has fascinated non-Egyptians for thousands of years. The ancient Egyptians devised this "picture writing" in their predynastic period, with the earliest examples known found in an elite chamber in Abydos, Tomb U-J, which dates to around 3200 BCE. Along with these iconic hieroglyphs, Egyptian scribes also established a more cursive method – hieratic (priestly) script. This style adapted the essentials of hieroglyphic signs but was intended for more rapid writing with ink on surfaces such as pottery and, especially, papyrus. At first, hieroglyphs and hieratic were used mostly to write individual words, including names of persons, places or commodities. By the third dynasty (about 2686 to 2613 BCE), the scribal skills and traditions for hieroglyphic script were fully developed, allowing complete, continuous prose. Egypt's literary tradition was born and soon to produce religious works such as the Pyramid Texts, Coffin Texts, and Book of the Dead; great fictional tales like the Middle Kingdom Story of Sinuhe ; important autobiographies, like those of Weni and Harkhuf in the sixth dynasty and of Ahmose, the Son of Abana, in the 18th, and more. Those literary traditions continued until roughly 650 BCE, when hieratic began a rapid evolution that resulted in two new scripts: the short-lived "abnormal hieratic" of Upper Egypt and the more durable "Demotic" of Lower Egypt. It was not long before Demotic had become the dominant script of everyday business in Egypt – never completely supplanting hieroglyphic and hieratic but, over time, relegating those older scripts to religious, ceremonial or emblematic functions. Heinrich Karl Brugsch (1827 - 1894), first real scholar of Demotic Photo: Steve Vinson In Egyptology, Demotic was traditionally a poor stepchild to the older scripts, appealing to only a handful of scholars. Champollion himself never mastered it. The first expert to unlock the mysteries of Demotic was the German, Heinrich Karl Brugsch, who published Egyptology's first systematic grammar of Demotic in 1848 – a generation after Champollion's 1822 breakthrough in deciphering hieroglyphic translations. Demotic acquired a reputation of being extremely difficult to learn, which discouraged students from tackling it. Demotic also suffered from its association with long centuries of Egyptian "decline," originating some 400 years after the end of the mighty New Kingdom. The new script flourished only when Egypt found itself under the domination of foreign empires: Persians, Greeks and Romans. Indeed, until the 1950s and 1960s, few Egyptologists showed much interest in those last centuries of ancient Egyptian history or in using Demotic to study them. Since the 1970s, however, and especially since the 1990s, Demotic studies has made a comeback as younger scholars r

It's usually said that writing originated in Mesopotamia - the land between the Tigris and Euphrates rivers - and that Egypt adopted writing practices from there.

Africa has the world's oldest and largest written languages known to mankind, a long ancient history of written language and graphic history, which is today part of a broader global history of literacy. The continent has contributed substantially to the global history of written languages of today, which has largely been ignored.

Examples of ancient writing in Africa are the Ge’ez script of Ethiopia, the most ancient African script still in use, the Nsibidi of Nigeria, Adrinka of the Akan people of Ghana, the Tifnagh of the Tuareg people, and Val and Mende of Liberia and Sierra Leone,(evidence of its Liberian/Sierra Leonean age date from Goundaka, Mali, that date to 3000 B.C). Scripts from the Proto Saharan of The Sudan, Aire Soroba of Mali, and many others.

For thousands of years, Africans artists have included writing and graphic symbols into their art, and created some works of art which show genius, in objects dated from ancient times. Even today, African artists still use a diffusion of different forms of letters, words and symbols to create meanings which go back historically and merge ancient with modern.

African Writing Ancient Africa has the world's oldest and largest collection of ancient writing systems, and is home to the world's first identifiable proto-writing. Evidence of such dates to pre-historic time and can be found in various regions of the continent. However, Africa's oldest known writing system is over 6,000 years old. By contrast, continental Europe's oldest writing, Greek, was not fully in use until c. 1400 BC (a clay tablet found in Iklaina, Greece) and is largely derived from an older African script called Proto-Sinaitic. Ancient The oldest Asian writing, Proto-Cuneiform, dates to around 3000 BC (clay texts found at Jemdet Nasr). Proto-Writing (60,000 BC): How Writing Developed in Africa The purpose of writing has always been to communicate ideas, and humans have been doing so for at least 100,000 years in the form of engravings, such as those uncovered at the Blombos Cave in South Africa. Such engravings would later evolve into so-called proto-writing or identifiable symbols that were used to convey information but are not known to be part of language. University of Bordeaux researchers in Diepkloof, South Africa have found 60,000-year-old ostrich eggshells with symbolic patterns that are believed to communicate the names of local communities. The Wonderwerk cave paintings (c. 25,000 BC) in northern South Africa feature hundreds of unique symbols and patterns alongside images of people and wildlife. This uncovers an important link in the development of writing by modern humans. Proto Saharan (5000 - 3000 BC) Perhaps the world's oldest known form of writing are inscriptions of what some archaeologists and linguists have termed, \"Proto Saharan\" near the Kharga oasis west of so-called \"Nubia\" that date to at least 5000 BC. The writings under the image that looks like the Nilotic god Seth show similarities to later writing systems such as Tifinagh and Vai. Nsibidi (5000 BC - present) An example of Nsibidi characters. Nsibidi is an ancient script used to communicate in various languages in West Central Africa. Most notably used by the Uguakima and Ejagham (Ekoi) people of Nigeria and Cameroon, Nsibidi is also used by the nearby Ebe, Efik, Ibibio, Igbo, and Uyanga people. The script is believed to date back to 5000 BC, but the oldest archaeological evidence ever found dates it to 2000 BC (monoliths in Ikom, Nigeria). Similar to the Kemetic Medu Neter, Nsibidi is a system of standardized pictographs. In fact, both Nsibidi and Medu Neter share several of the exact same characters. Moorish architecture - Wikipedia

Architectural style historically developed in the western Islamic world Moorish architecture , is a style within Islamic architecture which developed in the western Islamic world, which included al-Andalus (Muslim-ruled Spain and Portugal between 711 and 1492), and the Maghreb (now Morocco , Algeria , and Tunisia). [1] [2] [3] [4] [5] The term \"Moorish\" comes from the Western European designation of the Muslim inhabitants of these regions as \" Moors \", [6] [7] [8] which itself comes from Latin \" Mauri \", originally a designation of the inhabitants of the Berber kingdom of Mauretania (present-day Morocco). [9] Some scholars also use the term Western Islamic architecture or \"architecture of the Islamic west\" for this subject. [1] [10] This architectural style blended influences from Berber culture in North Africa , pre-Islamic Iberia (Roman , Byzantine , and Visigothic), and contemporary artistic currents in the Islamic Middle East to elaborate a unique style over centuries with recognizable features such as the \"Moorish\" arch , riad gardens (courtyard gardens with a symmetrical four-part division), and elaborate geometric and arabesque motifs in wood, stucco , and tilework (notably zellij). [1] [2] [7] [11] [4] Major centers of this artistic development included the main capitals of the empires and Muslim states in the region's history, such as Cordoba , Kairouan , Fes , Marrakesh , Seville , Granada and Tlemcen . [1] Even after Muslim rule ended in Spain and Portugal, the traditions of Moorish architecture continued in North Africa as well as in the Mudéjar style in Spain, which made use of Moorish techniques and designs and adapted them to Christian patrons. [12] [5] Much later, particularly in the 19th century, the Moorish style was frequently imitated or emulated in the Neo-Moorish or Moorish Revival style which emerged in Europe and America as part of the Romanticist interest in the \"Orient\" and also, notably, as a recurring choice for new Jewish Synagogue architecture. [13] [14] History [edit] Early Islamic period (8th–10th centuries) [edit] Bab al-Wuzara (or Puerta de San Esteban), one of the earliest gates of the Great Mosque of Cordoba (late 8th and early 9th centuries) In the 7th century the region of North Africa became steadily integrated into the emerging Muslim world during the Early Arab-Muslim Conquests . The territory of Ifriqiya (roughly present-day Tunisia), and its newly-founded capital city of Kairouan (also transliterated as \"Qayrawan\") became an early center of Islamic culture for the region. Moorish Revival or Neo-Moorish is one of the exotic revival architectural styles that were adopted by architects of Europe and the Americas in the wake of the Romanticist fascination with all things oriental . It reached the height of its popularity after the mid-19th century, part of a widening vocabulary of articulated decorative ornament drawn from historical sources beyond familiar classical and Gothic modes . Neo-Moorish architecture drew on elements from classic Moorish architecture and, as a result, from the wider Islamic architecture . [1] In Europe [edit] The \" Moorish \" garden structures built at Sheringham Hall, Norfolk , ca. 1812, were an unusual touch at the time, a parallel to chinoiserie , as a dream vision of fanciful whimsy, not meant to be taken seriously; however, as early as 1826, Edward Blore used Islamic arches , domes of various size and shapes and other details of Near Eastern Islamic architecture to great effect in his design for Alupka Palace in Crimea , a cultural setting that had already been penetrated by authentic Ottoman styles . By the mid-19th century, the style was adopted by the Jews of Central Europe , who associated Moorish and Mudéjar architectural forms with the golden age of Jewry in medieval Muslim Spain . [3] It has also been argued [by whom?] that Jewish communities adopted this architecture (which in Western eyes was seen as stereotypical of \"Islamic\" or \" Oriental \" culture more broadly) for more complex reasons; mainly, as an affirmation or reclamation of the Middle Eastern or Semitic roots of their history and thus as a way of setting themselves apart from the surrounding Western or Christian society. [3] [4] This came at time when Jews were gaining more freedoms in some European societies and the construction of ostentatious synagogues was possible for the first time, thus provoking a search for a new distinct style of architecture. Historian John M. Efron of the University of California at Berkeley regards the popularity of Moorish revival architecture among builders of synagogues as a counterpoint to Edward Said 's Orientalism , which criticizes European orientalism as inherently imperialist and racist, since the builders chose the style as an expression of admiration for the culture of the Muslim world. [5] As a consequence, Moorish Revival spread around the globe as a preferred style of synagogue architecture for a long period until the early 20th century. [4] [3] In Spain, the country conceived as the place of origin of Moorish ornamentation, the interest in this sort of architecture fluctuated from province to province. The mainstream was called Neo-Mudéjar . In Catalonia , Antoni Gaudí 's profound interest in Mudéjar heritage governed the design of his early works, such as Casa Vicens or Astorga Palace . The article by David Assouline is reprinted from The Oxford Encyclopedia of the Islamic World in the Oxford Islamic Studies

The earliest European account of the Moorish invasion of Spain, the Chronicle of 754, refers to the Visigothic capitulation, the so-called “loss of Spain” (perdida de España) at the hands of the “Arabs and Moors sent by Musa,” or Espanna (History of Spain), the first vernacular chronicle composed in Spain, we find a characteristic portrayal:

All the Moorish soldiers were dressed with silk and black wool that had been forcibly acquired … their black faces were like pitch and the most handsome of them was as black as a cooking pans. Europe boasts the oldest fossil evidence of cannibalism. In a 1999 Science article, French paleontologists reported that 100,000-year-old bones from six Neanderthal victims found in a French cave called Moula-Guercy had been broken by other Neanderthals in such a way as to extract marrow and brains. In addition, tool marks on the mandible and femur suggested that tongue and thigh meat had been cut off for consumption.

Africans were the first slave traders.

Used for the first time in 937 the Latin term sclavus - Slavic - will henceforth designate the slave in most languages. It refers to the trafficking of human beings affecting the Slavs of central and eastern Europe, Orthodox Christians, considered heretics and devoid of "soul", therefore "talking goods", sold to the Muslim world from the 8th to the 18th century. Thus, the current Serbs, Bulgarians, Romanians, Moldovans, Belarusians, Ukrainians and Russians will be captured by the Franks and Scandinavians first, then relayed from the 12th to the 15th centuries by the Venetians and Genoese; finally, the Crimean Tatars will continue the slave trade on behalf of the Ottoman Empire; a phenomenon which will affect millions of victims in total. A secret of History that has been hidden for too long is thus revealed.

Egypt is the Exhibit A here - Egypt is IN Africa but Egypt was not black African but Near Eastern and Mediterranean, racially and culturally.

Really?

Physical anthropologists are increasingly concluding that racial definitions are the culturally defined product of selective perception and should be replaced in biological terms by the study of populations and clines. Consequently, any characterization of race of the ancient Egyptians depend on modern cultural definitions, not on scientific study. Thus, by modern American standards it is reasonable to characterize the Egyptians as 'blacks' [i.e in a social sense] while acknowledging the scientific evidence for the physical diversity of Africans." Source: Donald Redford (2001) The Oxford encyclopedia of ancient Egypt, Volume 3. Oxford University Press. p. 27-28

"The evidence also points to linkages to other northeast African peoples, not coincidentally approximating the modern range of languages closely related to Egyptian in the Afro-Asiatic group (formerly called Hamito-Semetic). These linguistic similarities place ancient Egyptian in a close relationship with languages spoken today as far west as Chad, and as far south as Somalia.

Archaeological evidence also strongly supports an African origin. A widespread northeastern African cultural assemblage, including distinctive multiple barbed harpoons and pottery decorated with dotted wavy line patterns, appears during the early Neolithic (also known as the Aqualithic, a reference to the mild climate of the Sahara at this time). Saharan and Sudanese rock art from this time resembles early Egyptian iconography.

Strong connections between Nubian (Sudanese) and Egyptian material culture continue in later Neolithic Badarian culture of Upper Egypt. Similarities include black-topped wares, vessels with characteristic ripple-burnished surfaces, a special tulip-shaped vessel with incised and white-filled decoration, palettes, and harpoons...

Other ancient Egyptian practices show strong similarities to modern African cultures including divine kingship, the use of headrests, body art, circumcision, and male coming-of-age rituals, all suggesting an African substratum or foundation for Egyptian civilization." -- Source: Donald Redford (2001) The Oxford encyclopedia of ancient Egypt, Volume 3. Oxford University Press. p.28

This quote from 1867 by a founding father of Egyptology Champollion-Figeac – "The first tribes that inhabited Egypt that is, the Nile Valley between the Syene cataracts and the sea, came from Abyssinia to Sennar. The ancient Egyptians belonged to a race quite similar to the Kennous or Barabras, present inhabitants of Nubia. In the Copts of Egypt, we do not find any of the characteristic features of the ancient Egyptian population. The Copts are the result of crossbreeding with all the nations that have successively dominated Egypt. It is wrong to seek in them the principal features of the old race." From Letters published by Champollion-Figeac (Founding Egyptologist).

To sum up, Nubia is Egypt's African ancestor. What linked Ancient Egypt to the rest of the North African cultures is this strong tie with the Nubian pastoral nomadic lifestyle, the same pastoral background commonly shared by most of the ancient Saharan and modern sub-Saharan societies. Thus, not only did Nubia have a prominent role in the origin of Ancient Egypt, it was also a key area for the origin of the entire African pastoral tradition."

The written word of ancient time is crystal clear about what ancient Egyptian looked like.

Lets start with Hesoid in 850-800 B.C.E.

" To the lands of the messagetae and of the proud half dog men, of the underground folk and of the feeble pygmies; and to the tribes of boundless black-skins and the Libyans" -Hesoid,Catalouges of Women(850-800-B.C.E.) Boundless Black skins referring to (Egyptians-Ethiopians) Its clear that Hesoid distinguished the Libyans from boundless skin tribes and it is also evident that he was referring to the Egyptians and Ethiopians as boundless BLACK skin tribes of Africa. But, Hesoid also says the Libyans were Dark skin and NOT like White Europeans. "From Cronos sprang the Dark Libyans and the high souled Ethiopians" -Hesoid,Catalouges(850-800B.C.E.)

Hesiod made it clear that dark was different from black and called the Ethiopians and egyptians boundlessly black and Libyans dark skin. proving that black means black, not dark or tanned.

Next is Aeschylus in 500 B.C.E.

(DESCRIBING THE EGYPTIANS)

Next is Aristotle in 350 B.C.E.

"Those who are too BLACK, are cowards like for instance the Egyptians in the Ethiopians"... -Aristotle 350 B.C.E. (Physiognomies). It seems to me that Aristotle ,felt the need to disrespect the Ancient Egyptians and Ethiopians by calling them cowards because of they're BLACK SKIN, but it is fact, that the Ancient Egyptians and Ethiopians were never cowards but they were indeed BLACK. " THE EGYPTIANS AND THE ETHIOPIANS ARE TOO BLACK"... -Aristotle, 350 B.C.E. (Physiognomies).

Next is Apollodorus 180-120 B.C.E.

"Aegyptos conquered the country of the BLACK FOOTED ones and named it EGYPT"... -Apollodorus, Family of Inachus (Book 11, 180-120 B.C.E.). Proving the country of the BLACK FOOTED ones was called Kemet (Khamit) before it was Egypt. Many people like to believe thay Kemet meaned "the Black Land", because of it's soil. But, the quote above tells otherwise.

Next is Didorous Siculus 90-30 B.C.E.

"They say also that the Egyptians are colonist sent out by the Ethiopians, Osiris having been the leader of the colony"... -Didorous Siculus 90-30 B.C.E. (Book 3).

"The larger part of the customs of the Egyptians, are they hold, Ethiopian, the colonist still preserving their Ancient manners"... -Didorous Siculus 90-30 B.C.E. (Book 3).

Didorous Siculus also states that before foreign rule, all Egyptian Kings were Natives and the land was the most prosperous of the whole inhabited world (Book 1, para 44, 69). Proving that they were Natives, NOT foreign invaders.

"The Ethiopians as historians relate, were the FIRST of all men"... -Didorous Siculus 90-30 B.C.E. (Book 3, para 2).

"The proofs of this statement, they say are manifest, for that they did come into their land as immigrants from abroad but were NATIVES"... -Didorous Siculus 90-30 B.C.E. (Book 3, para 2).

This also proves that both Egyptians and Ethiopians were both Natives of Africa and early Egyptians were offspring from the 1st Ethiopians, just as the BIBLE proves that Cush (Ethiopia) was the big brother of Mizraim (Egypt).

Next is Ammianus Marcellinus, 325-330 A.D. (before the Arab & Turk invasions)

"The men of Egypt are mostly BLACK or BROWN with a skinny dessicated look"... -Ammianus Marcellinus, 325-330 A.D. (Book 22)

The earliest known description of Aithiopia is in Homer (9th or 8th century BCE), though the concept certainly existed before. The Homeric tradition articulated a vision of one continent divided in two, one half situated towards the sunrise, the other towards the sunset, both at the ends of the earth. The Homeric notion of the black people ("face burned") of the distant Aithiopia was part of a broader understanding of the relationship of the inhabited world, oikoumenè, to the cosmos. The use of the term Aithiopia changed over time, referring, in epic poetry, to the lands and peoples of Africa and Asia, places conceived of as being home to "burnt" skinned people or Aethiops, including Arabia, Mesopotamia, Persia, and India.

Herodotus' work provided an important confirmation of the pre-existing Greek notion of Africa (or Libya) as a continent divided into two parts, known as the two Aithiopias, one civilized and one barbaric. The civilized Aithiopia consisted of Egypt and the first-millennium BCE Nubian states of Kerma, Kush, and Meroë. The "other Aithiopia" referred to the land south of Aswan as well as the fantastical interior west of the Nile. Herodotus's description of the "other Aithiopia" was at once historical, geographical, and mythical.

In modern geography the name Ethiopia is confined to the country known as Abyssinia, an extensive territory in East Africa. In ancient times Ethiopia extended over vast domains in both Africa and Asia. "It seems certain," declares Sir E. A. Wallis Budge, "that classical historians and geographers called the whole region from India to Egypt, both countries inclusive, by the name of Ethiopia, and in consequence they regarded all the dark-skinned and black peoples who inhabited it as Ethiopians. Mention is made of Eastern and Western Ethiopians and it is probable that the Easterners were Asiatics and the Westerners Africans." (History of Ethiopia, Vol. I., Preface, by Sir E. A. Wallis Budge.) In addition, Budge notes that, "Homer and Herodotus call all the peoples of the Sudan, Egypt, Arabia, Palestine and Western Asia and India Ethiopians.

(Herodotus, Vol. I., Book. I., Appendix, Essay XI., Section-5.)"the uniform voice of primitive antiquity, which spoke of the Ethiopians as a single race, dwelling along the shores of the Southern Ocean from India to the Pillars of Hercules (the Strait of Gibraltar)."

Yes, they are treated with respect and decency for the most part. Syrian refugees make up about half of the refugees and asylum seekers in Egypt. Egypt is a major destination for the Syrian refugees, especially under Morsi who was a critic of Syrian President Assad.

Syrians are welcomed in the country and there is a favorable treatment by society and authorities alike. While visa requirements introduced in July 2013 for Syrians entering Egypt are maintained, a number of Syrians continue to enter Egypt, including on the basis of family reunification. The Government of Egypt (GoE) continues to allow refugees and asylum-seekers registered with UNHCR to regularize their residency and grants six-month renewable residence permits.

Egypt: 3RP Regional Refugee & Resilience Plan in Response to the Syria Crisis (2020/2021) - Egypt

Syrian refugees are able to reside in cities next to Egyptian communities in Egypt with concentrated settlements in Cairo, Alexandria, and Damietta. They have access to accredited public education, with aid in registration, and health services the same as their Egyptian counterparts. They also have access to employment.

Health, protection, education, basic needs, livelihoods, and food security are secure in Egypt for the refugees. Egypt participates in the Regional Refugee and Resilience Plan (3RP), a coordinated plan amongst neighboring countries of Syriaincluding Jordan, Lebanon, Turkey, Iraq, Egypt, and UN agencies with NGOs including UNHCR and 240 partners.

There have been minor problems with political issues, but most have been addressed successfully and resolved.

There is a brotherhood between the Egyptian and Syrian people mostly, and at one time they were consolidated in the United Arab Republic. Syrians stood in solidarity with the Egyptian people during protests against former President Hosni Mubarak in 2011. Egyptians in return have extended their solidarity with Syrians in the recent crisis.

Currently, up to 100,000 Syrians live in Egypt. If you walk on the streets of 6th October City, located near Cairo, you can sometimes feel like you have been transported to Syria because of the number of Syrian restaurants, cafes, and stores. Syrians quickly became part of the Egyptian community.

The Nile River is not just one river. The Nile is actually three rivers: the White Nile, the Blue Nile, the Black Nile (the Atbara River) and the dried up Yellow Nile. The Sahara was not always a desert. As someone said: Once upon a time, the Sahara was green. there were vast lakes, hippos and giraffe lived there, and large human populations of fishers foraged for food alongside the lakeshores HYPERLINK "D:\\AFRICA-ALL-IN-ONE (Latest file)\\AFRICA ALL-IN-ONE word file\\5.9 kiloyear event – Wikipedia https:\\en.wikipedia.org\\?title=5.9_kiloyear_event&redirect=no"

https://www.climate-policy-watcher.org/tropical-rainforest/the-green-sahara-of-the-past.html

Evidence from a whole range of sources shows that only a few thousand years ago, the climate of the whole Sahara region was very different from now. Animal bones in the desert sands show that giraffes and elephants once walked where there is now no vegetation and no water. The people who lived in the central Sahara at that time even recorded the animals they saw in rock paintings and engravings, vividly illustrating just how completely this place has changed in a few thousand years. A more detailed picture of the landscape at that time comes from pollen which has ended up preserved in the dried muds of old lake beds and empty river channels. It reveals a mosaic of scrublands, open woodlands and grasslands, consisting of plant species that now only grow hundreds of kilometers farther south. Even the extremely arid core of the Sahara, which nowadays gets less than 25 mm of rainfall a year, had a dense vegetation cover capable of sustaining cattle-herding and localized wheat-growing. All the evidence shows that the moistness of the Saharan climate at that time far exceeded the alternative "green Sahara" state of the present-day world. Perhaps we should honor the memory of this remarkable phase in climate history with the upper case "Green" Sahara, to distinguish it from the merely "green" Sahara.

The picture assembled from pollen, animal fossils and ancient lake sediments shows that the ancient Green Sahara phase lasted from about 9,000 to 6.000 years ago (Figure 5.6a, b*), followed by a halting decline in rainfall to reach essentially the present state of aridity by 4,000 years ago. So, when the first organized societies began in Egypt some 6,000 years ago the landscape beyond the edges of the Nile Valley may have been entirely different from now. When the great pyramids were being constructed 4,500 years ago, the landscape they were built in was probably not yet the bare sand that exists at present. Instead, there would have been small bushes and clumps of grass dotting the landscape, spaced perhaps a few feet apart from one another. So, the landscape the pyramid builders saw around them was rather different, perhaps offering more of a contrast with the yellow rock of the pyramids themselves. https://link.springer.com/chapter/10.1007/698_2016_95#:~:text=Concerning%20the%20Nile%20Basin%2C%20this,1).

The Nile Basin consists of a number of ecological zones between two extreme opposites: the rainforest in the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC) and the Sahara desert, which receives almost no rain. Some regions receive most or exclusively all of their water from the Nile, while others receive most of the water from rain, or from a combination of water sources. Still, it is the water in the Nile which links the otherwise different ecological zones together. It is the rains in the DRC, Burundi, Rwanda, Tanzania, Kenya, Uganda, and Ethiopia which provide the Nile with water so the river can flow and give life to barren and desert areas in Sudan and Egypt.

Some places become drier and experience more droughts, whereas others are more regularly flooded or experience more fluctuations in precipitation patterns. These are overall climatic premises, but there are also human factors. The richness of species depends partly on climate variables such as temperature and rainfall patterns but also on population pressure and human activities and their interaction with the environment.

The range of ecosystems within the Nile basin rivals that of any other river basin in the world, with high mountains, tropical forests, woodlands, savannas, high and low altitude wetlands, arid lands and deserts, culminating in an enormous delta partially below sea level. The tropical rain forests are found along the divide of the Nile and the Congo Rivers in the Lake Victoria basin and in southwestern Ethiopia. The Nile River flows in a desert area, so you find that agriculture is only around the course of the Nile, and the area around the Nile is a dry, sandy desert area. Of course, there are some oases in the Egyptian desert, but it does not change that it is a barren desert.

Everyone knows Tutankhamun, it seems, simply because his tomb was discovered a hundred years ago and found mostly undisturbed. He was just a boy when he was King and died young and unaccomplished. Cleopatra is also famous — primarily for her famous lovers, and for being the last Pharaoh. But the most famous in his day and age? The greatest? The one who ‘made Egypt great again’?

Ramesses II

Ramesses II was a badass to the max. He reigned for 66 years, dying at the ripe old age of 91. He was already fighting wars in Syria at the age of 14 back when he was his father Seti’s crown prince. He also fathered 200(!) children, built countless monuments and expanded his empire enormously. Under his reign, one of his sons built the world’s first library, safeguarding knowledge for future generations. The Greeks knew Ramesses as “Ozymandias”. His face is the only one of all the characters in the Bible who we have seen. This is the face of a guy who’d known Moses. But also a man so powerful that to him, Moses would have been little more than a flea.

When they found the remains of Ramesses, he was found to still possess some of his original hair, which was curly and reddish in color as well as most of his teeth. He appeared to be in remarkably good shape for a man his age. I remember being amazed as a boy to read of how long he had lived, all those thousands of years ago. Long before Christ, the Romans, Alexander the Great. Back in the days when somewhere far away in a remote corner of Siberia the final mammoths were slowly dying out, there was a leader in Egypt so powerful, ruling so long, that few of his subjects had any recollection of life before his ascension to power.

He died, as all men do. His numerous descendants now encompass most of current Egypt and the Middle East. When they found his mummified remains and flew them abroad to preserve them, the Egyptian government issued the great Pharaoh, ancestor of all of Egypt, a passport.

As a sign of ultimate respect, they wrote on the passport, underneath profession: ‘King (deceased)’.

On the same level: Tutankhamun & Nefertiti. Yes, Nefertiti also, you all know her bust. You all know she was a queen. Turns out she ruled as a pharaoh. Tutankhamun and Nefertiti lived in the same time, in the same household at Akhetaten, Middle Egypt, present day Tel el Amarna, belonged to the same family. Nefertiti died when Tutankhamun was 8 or 9; Nefertiti was the Great Royal wife of Akhenaten, the one who was believed to create the first monotheistic belief and Tutankhamun was a nephew of Akhenaten and also his son-in-law (mmm, sweet home, Alabama).

The stela above depicting two kings puzzled specialists leading into thinking that Akhenaten was gay and had a intimate relationship with his brother and also later king for less than a year, Ankheperure Smenkhkare. Turns out there are two Ankheperure-s, one with masculine appellatives in his royal name, the other with feminine appellatives like “effective for her husband”, “beloved by Wa en Re” (Wa en Re is the throne name of Akhenaten).

Another unfinished stela showing a king pouring wine to another king. Since the king on the right has kinda big breasts I assume it is Nefertiti, not Smenkhkare

After the death of the heretic king, Akhenaten, the one who tried to impose some pseudo-monotheism unto his people in the form of the main belief in the Sun Orb, Aten, neglecting the traditional chief god of Thebes Amun, a power vacuum occurred, because he didn’t have any male heirs. After the rule of less than a year of his brother Smenkhkare, Nefertiti took the throne and kinda usurped the throne name of Smenkhkare, “Ankheperure”, only to puzzle Egyptologists 3300 years later. Or maybe it was the other way around… Historians aren't sure which Ankheperure came first. During her time she tried to establish an agreement with the fallen from grace Amun priests just to mend the animosity between the late pharaoh and the priesthood. The agreement was probably something like reopening the Amun temples and restoring the privileges of the Amun priests, but also letting the Amarna family to worship the Aten.

After her death Tutankhamun became pharaoh at the age of 8–9. His first name was actually Tut-ankh-Aten and you can see some attempts of the Royal house to continue with the Atenist faith, lingering on his possessions from his tomb like the famous golden coronation throne in which the name of "Tutankhaten" is still visible on the sides and both him and his wife, the daughter of Nefertiti and Akhenaten, Akhesenamen, are blessed by the rays of the Aten. Soon into his reign the capital Amarna was abandoned and they returned to Thebes and abandoned the failed project of Akhenaten and Nefertiti, Tutankhaten changing his name to Tutankhamun.

Akhenaten and Nefertiti

Akhenaten is coming in close as being one of the most famous. At the beginning of the 20th century when stuff about his city was unraveled at Amarna and the bust of Nefetiti discovered, it was believed that he created some proto-monotheism because of his Hymns to the Aten chiseled on Amarna tombs being very similar to a Biblical psalm and because of his obsession with this single god. It turns out later with more recent discoveries that he didn't entirely interdict the faith in all Egyptian gods, but only in that that of Amun and his family. There have been found in the remains of the households of his subjects from Amarna amulets or other religious items dedicated to several traditional gods like Bes.

Now this idea that his religion might have inspired the later Hebrews from hundreds of years after his reign is put into question, the most obvious contra-argument being that soon after his death, the royal court abandoned his faith and his capital city, returning to believing in the chief god Amun. So much about Aten was soon forgotten. A better connection between the faith of the Israeli and the Egyptians could have been through the centuries of cultural, military and economic contact between these two peoples, and if there are religious similarities it could be better explained through the worship of Amun or other traditional and more enduring chief gods like Ra, not Aten. Aten until Akhenaten was a minor god. It became again a minor god after him. Although the Egyptians were polytheistic, Amun "the Hidden one" was a creator transcendental god, superior to many and much of the rhetoric in the Hymn to the Aten could have been inspired from earlier hymns to Amun.

You can read part of the Hymn to the Aten bellow and the parallels to the Psalm 104 that are very striking in fact, not only because of the similar generic adorations for the two gods, but because the order in which these ideas are written is almost the same in both cases. So the similar structure and also ideas in both cases is more intriguing.

Who Was King Tut?

Tutankhamun, colloquially known as King Tut, was the 12th pharaoh of the 18th Egyptian dynasty, in power from approximately 1332 to 1323 BC

During his reign, Tutankhamun accomplished little. However, his powerful advisers restored the traditional Egyptian religion, which had been set aside by his father, Akhenaten, who led the "Amarna Revolution."

After his death at age 19, King Tut disappeared from history until the discovery of his tomb in 1922. Since then, studies of his tomb and remains have revealed much information about his life and times, making Tutankhamun one of the best known ancient Egyptian kings.

King Tut's Full Name

King Tut was born circa 1341 BC in ancient Egypt was given the name Tutankhaten, meaning "the living image of Aten."

After taking power, the boy king changed his name to Tutankhamun, which means "the living image of Amun."

King Tut's Father

King Tut was the son of the powerful Akhenaten (also known as Amenhotep IV). His mother was probably one of Akhenaten's sisters.

At the time of his birth, ancient Egypt was going through great social and political upheaval. Tutankhaten's father had forbidden the worship of many gods in favor of worshiping one, Aten, the sun disk. For this, he is known as the "heretic king."

Historians differ on how extensive the change from polytheism to monotheism was, or whether Akhenaten was only attempting to elevate Aten above the other gods. It does seem, however, that his intent was to reduce the power of the priests and shift the traditional temple-based economy to a new regime run by local government administrators and military commanders.

As the populace was forced to honor Aten, the religious conversion threw the society into chaos. The capital was changed from Thebes to Armana, and Akhenaten put all of his efforts into the religious transition, neglecting domestic and foreign affairs.

As the power struggle between old and new intensified, Akhenaten became more autocratic and his regime more corrupt. Following a 17-year reign, he was gone, probably forced to abdicate, and died soon after. His nine-year-old son, Tutankhaten, took over around 1332 BC.

Boy King

Because Tutankhaten was just nine years old when he assumed power in 1332 BC the first years of his reign were probably controlled by an elder known as Ay, who bore the title of Vizier.

Ay was assisted by Horemheb, Egypt's top military commander at the time. Both men reversed Akhenaten's decree to worship Aten in favor of the traditional polytheistic beliefs.

King Tut had the royal court moved back to Thebes. He sought to restore the old order, hoping that the gods would once again look favorably on Egypt. He ordered the repair of the holy sites and continued construction at the temple of Karnak. He also oversaw the completion of the red granite lions at Soleb.

While foreign policy was neglected during Akhenaten's reign, Tutankhamun sought to restore better relations with Egypt's neighbors. While there is some evidence to suggest that Tutankhamun's diplomacy was successful, during his reign battles took place between Egypt and the Nubians and Asiatics over territory and control of trade routes.

Tutankhamun was trained in the military, and there is some evidence that he was good at archery. However, it is unlikely that he saw any military action.

King Tut's Wife

Around 1332 BC, the same year that Tutankhaten took power, he married Ankhesenamun, his half-sister and the daughter of Akhenaten and Queen Nerftiti. While the young couple had no surviving children, it is known they had two daughters, both likely to have been stillborn.

Death

Research suggests King Tut died circa 1323 BC from a gangrene infection at age 19. The infection was possibly the result of a broken leg.

Early investigations pointed to bone fragments in Tutankhamun’s skull to propose the theory that he died from a blow to the head by political rivals. However, a full scan of his body in 2006 found the damage to King Tut’s skull occurred after his death due to bad handling of his mummy.

Another 2010 study of Tutankhamun’s DNA found he had malaria and was disabled, requiring a cane to walk, which could have precipitated his fall and made his leg infection worse.

King Tut's tomb

The tomb is in the Valley of the Kings near Luxor, Egypt. This was where the Pharaohs and powerful nobles were buried for around 500 years during the history of Ancient Egypt.

By 1914 many archeologists believed that all of the Pharaoh's tombs in the Valley of the Kings had been found. However, one archeologist named Howard Carter didn't agree. He thought that the tomb of Pharaoh Tutankhamun was still undiscovered.

Carter searched the Valley of the Kings for five years finding little. The man funding his search, Lord Carnarvon, became frustrated and nearly stopped paying for Carter's search. Carter convinced Carnarvon to pay for one more year. The pressure was on. Carter had one more year to find something. In 1922, after six years of searching, Howard Carter found a step underneath some old workmen's huts. He soon uncovered a stairway and the door to King Tut's tomb.

Once inside the tomb, Carter found rooms filled with treasure. This included statues, gold jewelry, Tutankhamun's mummy, chariots, model boats, canopic jars, chairs, and paintings. It was an amazing discovery and one of the most important made in the history of archeology. In all, there were over 5,000 objects in the tomb. It took Carter and his team ten years to catalog everything.

Probably next to nothing, and certainly nothing of importance was lost. Alexandria was hardly the only library in the world, and the libraries at Pergamum and later Rome herself rivaled Alexandria in scale.

Alexandria Library. Image Source: Google.

Mark Antony replaced the losses of the fire during the Alexandrine War with copies made from the library at Pergamum, and libraries in gymnasia or simply founded for citizens abound during that period in the Greek world, they're in like literally every city of any size. If anything at all was lost it was almost certainly mainly critical commentaries on various authors, as well as catalogs of their works—both the Alexandrian library and the Pergamene one were famous for producing such commentaries. Pretty much everything else of value would have existed elsewhere. It's possible that a few (at that time probably little-known) philosophical texts might have been lost, but even such texts are likely to have had other copies elsewhere. For example, Aristotle's didactic texts are practically unknown in the Hellenistic Period, before the first century, B.C. edition was compiled, but they existed at the very least probably both in Alexandria and the library of the Peripatetics themselves (probably also in Pergamum). We do not lose texts because of catastrophic events that wipe out all copies of them. We lose texts because they stop being copied. Papyrus is really freaking old and even in Egypt doesn't preserve as well as we'd like. Fragmentary papyrus finds are extremely important to Classicists, but the overwhelming majority of our texts (and pretty much all our complete ones) are known from medieval copies. The destruction of the library, whenever exactly it happened, would have had next to no impact on the transmission of texts. Imagine if we went down to the Library of Congress right now—or better yet forty years ago before the Internet—and burned all the stacks and catalogs. That would be a big deal, but would it wipe out knowledge of what was there? Besides the catalogs themselves and any supplementary material that the library had put together for its own purposes...no, not really. Those books all exist elsewhere, except for a handful of infrequent texts and the stuff the library puts together for its own purposes. Most texts that are lost now were already lost in late antiquity or the early Middle Ages, simply because they were not copied enough. Even a brief period of unpopularity might result in a sharp decline in the survivability of an author—Catullus, despite being unanimously praised by ancient and modern critics, briefly lost popularity under the Antonines and already by late antiquity authors were lamenting the difficulty in obtaining a copy of his poems. The most likely texts to survive were the ones used in the school curricula, which is why we have so many copies of Caesar, Virgil, and Homer, or foundational philosophical texts, especially Plato and Aristotle's didactic works (his exoteric texts had already been lost by the early Middle Ages). The loss of textual material has very little to do with catastrophic events. After all, what would have happened if the Library had survived? The collection would be long-decayed by now—the large papyrus finds at places like Oxyrhynchus are due to a large part not to Egypt as a whole but the fact that the climate combined with the garbage heaps in which these papyri are found causes the papyri to get stuck in airless pockets and stuff. So we would know the texts by copies anyway. Alexandria was cut off from the Byzantine scholars who copied Greek (and Muslim scholars generally worked from translation), so the survival of the collection would not have influenced their work significantly. And in any case, as I keep stressing, what was in there was already known elsewhere. Even within the city of Alexandria itself several copies of those texts existed in various locations, many of them on warehouses at the harbor ready to be exported (Badian, for example, conjectured that it was one of these warehouses that Caesar's troops set fire to, since he was nowhere near the palace complex).

It might be nice to have some of the commentaries on various authors that we knew certain Alexandrian scholars put together for their private use, but commentaries are like reading footnotes; we'd rather have the texts themselves—and the texts on which the commentators were commenting existed elsewhere as well.

For anyone who said that the ancient Egyptians were so-called Middle Easterner and not brown(black) skinned African, it appears to be a case of cognitive dissonance.

Eurocentrists will never ever admit that ancient Egyptians (Kemites) and ancient Berbers a.k.a Moors were black skinned Africans, despite the written word of the time, historical documentation (Diodorus, Strabo, Procopius, Herodotus etc), eyewitness accounts (Aristotle, Jean Mandeville etc.), biblical accounts and oral traditions (the descendants of Ham, the epitomy of blackness) or entries in old dictionaries.

You can post anything and everything that support the blackness of original Egyptians and Berbers, to no avail.

Eurocentrists will come back and say that regardless of their skin tone, ancient Egyptians and Berbers were NOT sub-Saharan Negroes.

Being black then does not equal being black today.

Only sub-Saharan Negroes (and their lookalikes such as the Papuans or Kanak) are classified and categorized as black people. Only “Negroid” people are black people.

It is crystal clear that the original skin tone of ancient North Africans is a sensitive issue among Eurocentrists.

North Africa is considered a border zone where white skinned migrants free (invaders, conquerors etc.) or forced (slaves, expelled Muslims, refugees etc.) and Blacks, the original inhabitants, have mixed but fought over land and power position for thousands of years.

Unmixed Blacks were pushed down, south or in the Sahara Desert.

It comes from the Greek word “Egypt”, originally derived from the Coptic name of the temple-city of Memphis; the Arabs heard it from the old Greek rulers in the 7th century, not the Copts themselves.

The actual Coptic word for themselves is remənkhēmi (□ □ □ ̀□ □ □ □), from the traditional name of the Egyptians for Egypt, kh-m-t or “Kemet”, meaning the “black (land)”, referring to the fertile soil of the Nile, as opposed to the “red (land)” of the desert—although modern Copts will use Arabic in everyday life.

The “Coptic” Church (which uses primarily Coptic in its liturgy) is referred to as the Egyptian (□ □ □ ̀□ □ □ □) Church in Coptic. This being said, the ethnic names for Churches (“Coptic”, “Armenian”, “Russian”, &c.) while very popular in English, are not actually part of those churches’ historical usage. The fact that different local bishoprics use Coptic or Ge’ez or Arabic in their liturgy has not meant that the locals divide themselves into “Coptic Christians” as opposed to “Syriac Christians”, the way Anglicans and German Lutherans are divided, for instance.

The actual division(s) between Eastern Churches—between Eastern (Byzantine) and Oriental (Monophysite) Christians, and more recently Uniate Catholic groups that kept their eastern liturgies—ignore ethnic lines.

The Suez Canal was built by Ferdinand de Lesseps, the former french consul to Egypt, in 1854. Construction began in April 1859, and at first digging was done by hand with picks and shovels wielded by forced laborers. Later, European workers with dredgers and steam shovels arrived. Labor disputes and a cholera epidemic slowed construction, and the Suez Canal was not completed until 1869–four years behind schedule. On November 17, 1869, the Suez Canal was opened to navigation. Ferdinand de Lesseps would later attempt, unsuccessfully, to build a canal across the Isthmus of Panama.

Certainly the Suez Canal wasn't built by Moses and his Slave Labor to the Pharaohs of Egypt.

We, the Egyptians, are the Builders of our Suez Canal, as we built before our Great Pyramids of Giza.

Tens of thousands of Egyptian farmers lost their lives during digging the Canal with primitive tools and very harsh accommodation conditions.

The workers had to dig a trench 100 feet wide, 50 feet deep, and 100 miles long, for which they received only enough food and water to survive and no pay. Ferdinand Marie de Lesseps - Scientist of the Day - Linda Hall Library

Ferdinand Marie de Lesseps, a French diplomat, was born Nov. 19, 1805. De Lesseps was deeply involved in two French canal efforts. The first was the Suez Canal project. De Lesseps had no training in engineering, but he knew how to make friends with people in power, and how to raise funds. When he was vice-consul to Egypt, he hit it off with the Pasha in Cairo, and he was able to obtain the rights to a canal construction enterprise to connect the Red Sea with the Mediterranean. The French government was very much in favor, because a canal across the isthmus at Suez would cut about 4000 miles off voyages from France to the East Indies. De Lesseps attracted investors, and the project got under way in 1859. Digging the Suez canal, photograph, 1860s (ahram.org) Unfortunately for de Lesseps’ later reputation in Egypt, the Suez Canal was dug almost entirely by conscripted Egyptian laborers, by hand, with the French providing no digging machinery (second image). Opening of the Suez Canal, painting, 1869 (fineartamerica.com) But the canal was completed, in just ten years. Interestingly, its opening in 1869 (third image) coincided almost exactly with the opening of the trans-continental railroad in the United States, meaning the pace of transportation around the globe picked up significantly in just that one year. Map of the proposed French sea-level canal in Panama. from Congrès international d’ètudes du canal interocéanique , 1879 (Linda Hall Library. A.B. Nichols collection) De Lesseps was a national hero for the next twenty years in France. Unfortunately, with one canal under his belt, he decided in 1879 to dig another, across the isthmus of Panama (fourth image). There was great enthusiasm in France for the project, and it easily attracted investors, but the Panamanian terrain and the hostile climate posed insurmountable obstacles for the French, and it didn’t help that de Lesseps insisted on a sea-level canal, with no locks, an impossible stipulation. The effort was abandoned in 1893, with the investors losing nearly everything. De Lesseps, 87 years old, was actually hauled into court and convicted of fraud. He died in 1894, a broken man. When we celebrated the centennial of the successful U.S. Panama Canal project in our exhibition, The Land Divided, the World United: Building the Panama Canal (2014), we devoted several cases to the failed French project. You may read about the French plan and the French attempt in our online version of that exhibit. Statue

King Farouk and Winston Churchill. Pintrest

King Farouk I ruled Egypt from 1936 to 1952 – a reign marked by corruption, incompetence, and weirdness among other things. It seems that the king was a literal kleptomaniac who could not resist stealing things and picking people's pockets. He would be overcome by the urge when the opportunity presented itself.

He actually took pick pocketing lessons. One of his victims included Winston Churchill, whom Farouk invited to a dinner during WWII. So Farouk as Churchill to dine at his home as a guest. During the visit the urge overcame him.

At the meal, Churchill discovered that his pocket watch was missing. This was no ordinary pocket watch. It was a family heirloom that had been gifted by Queen Anne to his ancestor John Churchill, First Duke of Marlborough. After an outcry, anguish and search, Farouk, who had been seated next to Churchill, sheepishly turned it in, claiming to have "found" it.

Do Egyptians consider themselves to be Arabs or Berbers?

There are very few (both numerically and as a percentage) of Egyptians who live west of the Nile Valley, but many of those who do consider themselves to be Amazigh (often identified by the exonym Berber). The most famous concentration of Amazigh in Egypt is at the oasis of Siwa. When it comes to the prevailing Egyptian populations, most Egyptian Muslims often embrace both an Egyptian identity that harkens back to the time of the Pharaohs and an ethnolinguistic Arab identity which connects them to the Muslim conquerors of Egypt. This creates a multilayered identity.

Egyptian Christians, the Coptic population, embrace both the national Egyptian identity and a Coptic ethno religious identity. The ethnic aspect of Coptic identity is seen as being inseparable from the national Egyptian identity since the Coptic Church has always been the Church of Egypt.

Tomb looting began almost as soon as the royal mummy had been placed in its final resting place. Some tombs were robbed before they were sealed. During the early Dynastic Period (c. 3150 - c. 2613 BC) tombs were emptied of their treasures soon after the burial. At the time of king Djoser (c. 2670 BC), the pyramid complex contained a hidden burial chamber and the chambers and hallways were filled with debris. That did not deter the robbers who made off with the riches and even took Djoser's mummy.

Royal burials grew more elaborate with time, with enormous amounts of treasures including gilded coffins, exotic furniture inlaid with gems, precious unguents and adornments. Even the mummy contained a tempting hoard as amulets made of gold and precious stones were wrapped in the linens encasing the body. The looters had no respect for the dead. They included the corrupt employees who were in charge of protecting the tombs. The dauntingly enormous pyramids of Khufu, Khafre and Menkaure were emptied completely of all contents, including the royal corpses.

The New Kingdom (c. 1570 - c. 1069 BC) ushered in a less ostentatious mode of entombment. Amenhotep I (reign dated from 1526 to 1506 BC), second king of the 18th dynasty, was the first ruler to build a burial place apart from his mortuary temple in the hope of keeping the location secret. He founded the necropolis known today as the Valley of the Kings and the Valley of the Queens, located in the desert outside of Thebes. A special village was also commissioned, Set Ma'at, the Place of Truth. The village known as Deir el-Medina The Monastery of the Town today was isolated as well from Thebes. The workers who excavated and constructed the tombs were entrusted with guarding the burial places. In payment, the workers received supplies from Thebes and water shipped from the Nile.

Deir el-Medina (CC BY-SA):

However, the workers became more and more disgruntled with time as supplies were not always delivered. There was actually a labour strike, perhaps the first in recorded history, in about the 25th year of the reign of Ramesses III (c. 1170 BC) when exasperated artisans and labourers threw down their tools, refusing to continue until their grievances had been addressed. Conditions for the villagers worsened after the reign of Ramesses IV (c. 1155–1149 BC). That is when tomb robbing developed into a culture incorporating fences and even officials who could be bribed. Most of the tombs in Egypt's Valley of the Kings were robbed within one hundred years of their sealing. Although the robbers were tortured and punished, many could get off by paying an official. The looting continued unabated with the workers using the tools which had built the tombs as implements with which to break into them.

Panorama of the valley, looking north:

Nowhere in the world is the density of ancient monuments higher than on the west bank of Thebes (today's Luxor). From «The Complete Valley of the Kings», by Reeves and Wilkinson. Thames and Hudson, 1996:

Although many of the organised gangs of tomb robbers, especially those consisting of royals and nobles, went unpunished, some of the thieves who were apprehended were whipped, tortured or had one or both hands cut off. The really unfortunate ones were impaled, beheaded or burnt to death, which meant that there would be no afterlife.

Amenpanufer, a mason of Deir el-Medina c. 1110 BC, testifies in his confession, recorded in the Leopold II and Amherst Papyrus, to the facility with which one could rob tombs and escape punishment by bribery of the officials in the time of Ramesses IX. There is no limit to the temerity and disrespect shown to the royal mummies:

We opened their sarcophagi and their coffins, and found the noble mummy of the king (Sobekemsaf II) equipped with a sword. There were a large number of amulets and jewels of gold on his neck and he wore a headpiece of gold. The noble mummy of the king was completely covered in gold and his coffins were decorated with gold and with silver inside and out and inlaid with precious stones. We collected the gold that we found on the mummy of the god including the amulets and jewels which were on his neck. We set fire to their coffins. (Lewis, 256-257)

Even the tomb of Tutankhamun (ruled c. 1332 – 1323 BC), which yielded so many dazzling treasures, did not escape looting. Before Howard Carter's discovery in 1922, the tomb had been looted twice, as evidenced by a hole which was later replastered and sealed. The first looters were probably in search of the precious commodities of linen, metal and cosmetics. The second group, who were after jewels and figurines, took approximately eight hours to ransack the entire tomb. They absconded with most of the jewelry and several vessels made from precious metals.

During the 21st Dynasty, in about 1000 BC, priests began secretly moving the royal mummies and contents of the plundered tombs from the Valley of the Kings to a secure hiding place. Almost 3,000 years later, when Westerners began showing an interest in acquiring Egyptian antiquities, the royals were once again victims of looters, this time the fellahin. In the beginning of the 1870s, Ahmed Abd el-Rasool from Sheikh Abd el-Qurneh lowered himself by means of a rope into a shaft, according to one version of the event, while attempting to rescue a kid which had fallen into the cavity. By chance, he had discovered the very place where the ancient priests had deposited the cache of royal mummies behind a sealed doorway.

From left: The Adb el-Rasool brothers, Gaston Maspero and Ahmed Kamal outside the shaft leading down to the Royal Cache in Deir el-Bahri. From «The Complete Valley of the Kings», by Reeves and Wilkinson. Thames and Hudson, 1996:

The family enjoyed a good income by selling canopic jars, alabaster vases, papyrus scrolls, ushabti figures and other items for several years. In 1881, Gaston Maspero, head of the Antiquity Service, found out through his spies that via the black market ancient artefacts had been appearing in private collections. On 4 April 1881, Ahmed and his elder brother Mohammad Abd el-Rasool confessed, under brutal interrogation, to the discovery of the cache. Thanks to the detective work of Maspero, forty royal mummies with grave goods and sarcophagi were recovered. In an interesting development, the eldest of the looter brothers, Mohammad Adb el-Rasool, consequently became interested in Egyptology and began to study the science. In 1891 he assisted the famous Egyptologist George Daressy on an official excavation in Deir el-Bahri. This story is worth a read:

This was an ancient shaft that could lead them to fantastic riches. Once the men opened up the surface hole, Ahmed went down into the shaft. Time passed, but the two thieves heard nothing from their leader below. Suddenly a terrifying scream emerged from the shaft, followed by Ahmed hastily clambering up the rope. Gripped with fear, he told his cohorts of his brush with an afrit, a malevolent demon that villagers believed sometimes dwelled in ancient tombs. The looters left in a hurry. Sure enough, proof of the afrit came the following day when villagers detected a nauseating stench on that area of the path, the telltale sign of an angry afrit whose resting place had been disturbed. During the course of several years following the incident, some extraordinary artifacts slowly turned up at bazaars, auction houses, and in private collections. This set off a stream of rumors that someone must have discovered a treasure-filled royal tomb. Some of the most remarkable artifacts being sold included ushabtis (small blue statuettes) engraved with the name Pinedjem, a 21st dynasty pharaoh, as well as illuminated papyri in unusually impressive condition. This, in turn, set off an investigation by Sir Gaston Maspero, director of the Egyptian Antiquities Service, in the spring of 1881. An investigator dis..

The Suez Canal was built by Ferdinand de Lesseps, the former french consul to Egypt, in 1854. Construction began in April 1859, and at first digging was done by hand with picks and shovels wielded by forced laborers. Later, European workers with dredgers and steam shovels arrived. Labor disputes and a cholera epidemic slowed construction, and the Suez Canal was not completed until 1869–four years behind schedule. On November 17, 1869, the Suez Canal was opened to navigation. Ferdinand de Lesseps would later attempt, unsuccessfully, to build a canal across the Isthmus of Panama.

Certainly the Suez Canal wasn’t built by Moses and his Slave Labor to the Pharaohs of Egypt. We, the Egyptians, are the Builders of our Suez Canal, as we built before our Great Pyramids of Giza. Tens of thousands of Egyptian farmers lost their lives during digging the Canal with primitive tools and very harsh accommodation conditions.

Quote: “Unfortunately for de Lesseps’ later reputation in Egypt, the Suez Canal was dug almost entirely by conscripted Egyptian laborers, by hand, with the French providing no digging machinery (second image). The workers had to dig a trench 100 feet wide, 50 feet deep, and 100 miles long, for which they received only enough food and water to survive and no pay. Working conditions were horrible, and disease rampant. At least 100,000 Egyptians died over the course of the project.” HYPERLINK "

Ferdinand Marie de Lesseps, a French diplomat, was born Nov. 19, 1805. De Lesseps was deeply involved in two French canal efforts. The first was the Suez Canal project. De Lesseps had no training in engineering, but he knew how to make friends with people in power, and how to raise funds. When he was vice-consul to Egypt, he hit it off with the Pasha in Cairo, and he was able to obtain the rights to a canal construction enterprise to connect the Red Sea with the Mediterranean. The French government was very much in favor, because a canal across the isthmus at Suez would cut about 4000 miles off voyages from France to the East Indies. De Lesseps attracted investors, and the project got under way in 1859. Opening of the Suez Canal, painting, 1869 (fineartamerica.com) But the canal was completed, in just ten years. Interestingly, its opening in 1869 (third image) coincided almost exactly with the opening of the trans-continental railroad in the United States, meaning the pace of transportation around the globe picked up significantly in just that one year. Map of the proposed French sea-level canal in Panama. from Congrès international d'ètudes du canal interocéanique , 1879 (Linda Hall Library. A.B. Nichols collection) De Lesseps was a national hero for the next twenty years in France. Unfortunately, with one canal under his belt, he decided in 1879 to dig another, across the isthmus of Panama (fourth image). There was great enthusiasm in France for the project, and it easily attracted investors, but the Panamanian terrain and the hostile climate posed insurmountable obstacles for the French, and it didn't help that de Lesseps insisted on a sea-level canal, with no locks, an impossible stipulation. The effort was abandoned in 1893, with the investors losing nearly everything. De Lesseps, 87 years old, was actually hauled into court and convicted of fraud. He died in 1894, a broken man. When we celebrated the centennial of the successful U.S. Panama Canal project in our exhibition, The Land Divided, the World United: Building the Panama Canal (2014), we devoted several cases to the failed French project. You may read about the French plan and the French attempt in our online version of that exhibit. Ferdinand Marie de Lesseps - Scientist of the Day - Linda Hall Library

Ferdinand Marie de Lesseps, a French diplomat, was born Nov. 19, 1805. De Lesseps was deeply involved in two French canal efforts. The first was the Suez Canal project. De Lesseps had no training in engineering, but he knew how to make friends with people in power, and how to raise funds. When he was vice-consul to Egypt, he hit it off with the Pasha in Cairo, and he was able to obtain the rights to a canal construction enterprise to connect the Red Sea with the Mediterranean. The French government was very much in favor, because a canal across the isthmus at Suez would cut about 4000 miles off voyages from France to the East Indies. Soqotri language spoken on the island of Soqotra, Yemen by the Soqotri.
Speaks Serbian and English

Believe it or not, this language got its first alphabet in 2014. Even though people are still working on it since it's not complete, Soqotri is still a language without a script. And the first alphabet was made in Moscow, Russia by a Russian Arabist (Vitaly Naumkin) who studied the language and its morphology/phonology and overall characterics for a very long time before finally starting with his plan.

This is a very, very old and archaic South Arabian language (one of the few that are still "alive" today). It belongs to the Semitic family, but due to the very long isolation from the mainland, it developed sounds and traits that are not found in other languages (at least those who surround it).

There is no distinction between the Old South Arabian interdentals θ, ð, and θˤ and the stops t, d and ṭ:. The ejectives that Soqotri had became pharyngeal consonants (a feature that many Semitic languages have). Many call Soqotri a time machine since it is one of the oldest Semitic languages and can tell linguists more about the development of various Semitic languages in general. Soqotri has a sound called "parasite H" in nouns (it is a non-morphological sound) which reflects its uniqueness.

It also heavily relies on affrication/spirantization in many Soqotri dialects.

Example: éfo >éBo, iGodiHen > iyodiHen, ¿eGík >¿eGíbÈk.

In the Qafiz dialect, there is (a variation) of the connective -d + pronoun.
In some dialects of Soqotri, the velar fricatives are merged with the pharyngeals (thus not pronounced) while in others they still exist. Such as this example:
Qalansiya: xœmÊh (Qadhub : HÎmeh) 'five'; Qalansiya ġayğ (Hadibo ʕɛyğ).

Overall, Soqotri is something rather unique and interesting to read about. It is probably not that well known among non-linguists, but it's a really unusual language.

In Sudan, the White Nile joins the Blue Nile at Khartoum, creating a larger river. It then flows on up north through Egypt and empties into the Mediterranean. If you mean the longest part of the Nile, the longest part is in Sudan. It goes through a huge S-curve, extending its length considerably.

Here's a map of the whole Nile. As you can see, the longest part of it, counting both the Blue Nile and the White Nile, is in Sudan.

HYPERLINK "https://fr.quora.com/profile/Remi-Beral" \t "_blank"
Remi Beral étudiant en architecture et en quête de connaissances HYPERLINK "https://fr.quora.com/Quel-est-le-pays-le-plus-puissant-dAfrique/answer/Remi-Beral" Mis à jour le 9 janv.

Définissons d'abord ce qu'est la puissance d'un pays. Au XXe siècle l'Américain Joseph Nye développe les concepts de soft power et hard power, termes qu'on pourrait traduire par rayonnement et puissance (sous-entendu militaire). Ces deux power sont utilisées pour définir la puissance globale d'un pays. Pour bien poser la définition je prendrais l'exemple de la France. La France a un hard power (puissance militaire) très important. Son armée est l'une des plus puissantes du monde, elle peut intervenir à peu près partout dans le monde et sa force de frappe est colossale. De plus ses technologies militaires sont très élaborées ce qui en fait un des principaux exportateur d'arme et un des rare pays à avoir l'indépendance militaire totale. Tout ça lui confère un hard power absolument énorme. La France serait ainsi classée 7e puissance militaire du monde (HYPERLINK "https://atlasocio.com/classements/defense/puissance-militaire/classement-etats-par-puissance-militaire-monde.php" \o "atlasocio.com" \t "_blank" Classement des États du monde par puissance militaire). En terme de rayonnement on frappe à la bonne porte. Il n'y a qu'à voir le scandale international des caricatures de Mahomet pour réaliser à quel point la France à une influence énorme dans le monde. Elle est particulièrement réputée dans les domaines culturels, artisanaux et intellectuels, tout en ayant une bonne place dans les technologie et en économie. Ces dernières années la France s'est même plusieurs fois classée pays le plus influent du monde (HYPERLINK "https://softpower30.com/wp-content/uploads/2019/10/The-Soft-Power-30-Report-2019-1.pdf" \o "softpower30.com" \t "_blank" https://softpower30.com/wp-content/uploads/2019/10/The-Soft-Power-30-Report-2019-1.pdf). Ceci compris, passons à l'Afrique. Je précise que je ne proposerais que ma propre analyse de la situation. Je ne suis pas expert.

Je retiens trois critères : la puissance militaire, la puissance économique et l'influence culturelle (à quel point on entend parler en bien du pays dans le monde pour faire simple). J'ajoute la taille de la population.

Pour la puissance militaire c'est facile. En reprenant le classement donné plus haut on obtient : Egypte (9e mondiale), Algérie (28e mondiale), Afrique du Sud (29e mondiale), Nigeria (42e mondiale) et Angola (56e mondiale). Je vous laisse vérifier. Ce qui saute aux yeux c'est que l'Egypte est très bien classée.

Elle est même proche du bloc des superpuissances. Ne lui manque plus que l'innovation je pense.

Pour la puissance économique c'est plus compliqué. Je regarderais 4 choses. La richesse totale du pays (PIB), le PIB par habitants, l'IDH et la diversité de l'économie. En terme de PIB on a d'après la Banque mondiale : Nigeria (31 mondiale), Afrique du Sud (34), Egypte (45), Algérie (55), Maroc (60) et Angola (63).

Cependant en PIB par habitants (j'exclus déjà tous les pays que je n'ai pas cité jusqu'ici car leurs puissances militaire et leur richesse totale deviennent vraiment trop faible face aux têtes du classement) : Afrique du sud (109), Algérie (129e), Angola (142), Maroc (144), Egypte (154e) et Nigeria (164).

Pour compléter le PIB par habitant regardons l'IDH : Algérie (122), Afrique du Sud (148), Egypte (153), Maroc (159), Angola (187), Nigeria (196).

Enfin, regardons la diversité de l'économie. L'Afrique du sud a une économie bien diversifiée à la manière des pays développées. Elle ne dépend pas de ressources minières mais touche de manière équilibré à tous les secteurs. Cependant la croissance est faible depuis plusieurs années.

L'Algérie tiens beaucoup sur les exportations d'hydrocarbures, ce qui la rend très vulnérable en cas de crise pétrolière. Son manque de diversification lui empêche de décoller économiquement. sa croissance est ainsi ni forte ni faible.

L'Egypte a une économie bien diversifiée et très équilibrée avec un poids encore important des hydrocarbures et ressources minières mais aussi agricoles et commerciales (canal de Suez entre autre). Ses dernières années sa croissance a décollé, pour monter parmi les plus hautes du contient. Ses perspectives de développement sont donc grandes et c'est un pays qui attire beaucoup les investisseurs.

L'économie de l'Angola tiens principalement sur les exportations d'hydrocarbures et de minerais. Economie peu diversifiée donc fragile. Depuis plusieurs années le pays est même en récession.

Le Maroc a une économie assez diversifiée avec un secteur agricole important mais peu de ressources minérales. Sa croissance est forte et le pays attire les investisseurs.

Le Nigeria dépend principalement des hydrocarbures. De fait sa croissance est est moyenne depuis quelques années. Plus inquiétant, avec la forte augmentation de la population, le PIB par habitant diminue et les nigérians sont aujourd'hui guère plus riche que ceux des années 80.

En terme de puissance économique le constant est claire. L'Egypte combine à la fois une économie diversifiée, une très forte croissance, un IDH médian (parmi les pays sélectionnés) mais un PIB par habitants un peu faible. L'Afrique du Sud me semble suivre avec une économie certes ralentie mais avec un bon IDH, une économie diversifiée. Le Maroc suit avec une économie dynamique, un IDH médian et une économie diversifiée. Le Nigéria arrive après grâce à la puissance de son économie. Cependant sa dépendance aux hydrocarbures et la pauvreté de sa population le déclasse de beaucoup. Arrive enfin l'Angola, pays le plus pauvre du classement et en récession. Je l'exclurait donc pour le reste de l'analyse car un pays en mauvaise santé économique ne saurait être la première puissance du continent. Passons enfin au rayonnement culturel. Le Nigéria est culturellement peu connu. Son influence à l'international est faible mais est en hausse, surtout en Afrique mais aussi auprès de populations américaines. L'Algérie est peu-etre aussi influente, mais sa dépendance aux hydrocarbures et son histoire compliqué limite sa portée. Le Maroc a un rayonnement culturel bien plus fort, notamment grâce à un tourisme dynamique. Le pays est bien connu des européens et les relations avec les grandes puissances du continent sont très positives. De plus, sa position sur l'une des route des migrants vers l'Europe lui donne une certaine puissance sur cette dernière. On a ensuite l'Afrique du Sud dont le monde entier connaît l'histoire et au moins quelques aspects culturels. Le pays fait plus au moins parti des pays occidentaux, ce qui lui donne une certaine crédibilité et son image de pays développé lui donne une bonne image. Le pays est même parmi les BRICS c'est à dire parmi certaines des pays émergeants les plus puissants (Brésil, Russie, Inde, Chine HYPERLINK "https://fr.wikipedia.org/wiki/BRICS" \o "fr.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" BRICS — Wikipédia). L'Egypte enfin me semble être le pays le plus influent des 5. Sa puissance culturelle n'est pas discutable. Que se soit par l'incroyable rayonnement de la civilisation antique qu'elle abrite que par sa position centrale dans la civilisation arabo musulmane, l'Egypte a un poids considérable. Le Caire est d'ailleurs la plus grosse ville du continent, du Moyen-Orient et de Méditerranée. Dans la capitale Egyptienne se trouve HYPERLINK "https://fr.wikipedia.org/wiki/Universit%C3%A9_al-Azhar" \o "fr.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Université al-Azhar , l'institution la plus influente de l'islam sunnite (son immam est parfois comparé, a tors, au pape). J'ajouterais que le pays s'octroi les faveurs des pays riches en luttant activement contre le terrorisme et en se rangeant du côté de l'Europe face à la Turquie. Pendant un temps elle fut d'ailleurs presque le seul pays à s'opposer frontalement à la Turquie, notamment en Libye.

J'aborde rapidement les tailles de populations. Nigeria (7e mondiale avec plus de 206 000 000), Egypte (14e avec 102 000 000), Afrique du Sud (25e avec 58 000 000), Algérie (32e avec 43 000 000) et le Maroc (39e avec 36 000 000). Le Nigéria et l'Egypte pèsent donc lourds.

On retiens donc que le Maroc est une puissance économique assez bonne avec une influence non négligeable. L'Algérie est moyenne en tout. Le Nigeria est une puissance économique importante mais fragile avec cependant une puissance militaire intéressante mais une influence très faible. L'Afrique du Sud est une bonne puissance économique mais ses perspectives de développement sont actuellement faibles. Le pays a cependant une bonne influence. L'Egypte arrive en tête du classement avec une économie diversifiée et assez bonne avec une très forte croissance et un potentiel de développement important, accompagné d'un rayonnement culturel important.

Donc pour moi le pays le plus puissant d'Afrique est l'Egypte, suivie de l'Afrique du Sud et du Nigeria puis de l'Algérie et du Maroc.

At the time of the Arab conquest of Egypt (took place 639 – 646 AD), there were two main languages spoken in Egypt. The language that was probably spoken by the majority of the population outside the Nile River Delta was Coptic, a late form of the Egyptian language that continues to be used by the Coptic Orthodox Church as a liturgical language.

The language that was spoken by educated elites throughout Egypt and by most people in the Nile River Delta was Greek. Greek had become widely spoken as a result of the fact that Egypt was ruled by the Greek Ptolemaic Dynasty from 323 BC to 31 BC. The Ptolemies introduced and promoted the Greek language and Greek culture.

After Egypt was annexed by the Roman Empire following the suicide of Cleopatra VII Philopator, the last Ptolemaic ruler of Egypt, Greek remained a very prominent and culturally important language. Latin, on the other hand, never really became widely spoken in Egypt.

It was Ancient Egyptian which formed its own branch within the Afro-Asiatic language family. It was written in the hieroglyphs:

And was unrelated to other languages. However, while many do think that it died out, it is still alive, but it is not spoken by many people - the latest stage of the language is the current Coptic language which is used by Egyptians Christians, mostly for liturgical purposes. There are speakers of Coptic as well (but their number is small, maybe a hundred people or so).

Coptic was the main language spoken in Egypt before the Arab/Muslim conquest. The modern-day official language of Egypt is Egyptian Arabic. It is one of the many dialects of the Arabic language. Coptic is still spoken in Egypt, however not very widely. It is spoken in the Coptic church as the liturgical language.

Cheers.

Probably next to nothing, and certainly nothing of importance was lost. Alexandria was hardly the only library in the world, and the libraries at Pergamum and later Rome herself rivaled Alexandria in scale.

Alexandria Library. Image Source: Google.

Mark Antony replaced the losses of the fire during the Alexandrine War with copies made from the library at Pergamum, and libraries in gymnasia or simply founded for citizens abound during that period in the Greek world, they're in like literally every city of any size. If anything at all was lost it was almost certainly mainly critical commentaries on various authors, as well as catalogs of their works—both the Alexandrian library and the Pergamene one were famous for producing such commentaries. Pretty much everything else of value would have existed elsewhere. It's possible that a few (at that time probably little-known) philosophical texts might have been lost, but even such texts are likely to have had other copies elsewhere. For example, Aristotle's didactic texts are practically unknown in the Hellenistic Period, before the first century, B.C. edition was compiled, but they existed at the very least probably both in Alexandria and the library of the Peripatetics themselves (probably also in Pergamum).

We do not lose texts because of catastrophic events that wipe out all copies of them. We lose texts because they stop being copied. Papyrus is really freaking old and even in Egypt doesn't preserve as well as we'd like. Fragmentary papyrus finds are extremely important to Classicists, but the overwhelming majority of our texts (and pretty much all our complete ones) are known from medieval copies. The destruction of the library, whenever exactly it happened, would have had next to no impact on the transmission of texts. Imagine if we went down to the Library of Congress right now—or better yet forty years ago before the Internet—and burned all the stacks and catalogs. That would be a big deal, but would it wipe out knowledge of what was there? Besides the catalogs themselves and any supplementary material that the library had put together for its own purposes...no, not really. Those books all exist elsewhere, except for a handful of infrequent texts and the stuff the library puts together for its own purposes. Most texts that are lost now were already lost in late antiquity or the early Middle Ages, simply because they were not copied enough. Even a brief period of unpopularity might result in a sharp decline in the survivability of an author—Catullus, despite being unanimously praised by ancient and modern critics, briefly lost popularity under the Antonines and already by late antiquity authors were lamenting the difficulty in obtaining a copy of his poems. The most likely texts to survive were the ones used in the school curricula, which is why we have so many copies of Caesar, Virgil, and Homer, or foundational philosophical texts, especially Plato and Aristotle's didactic works (his exoteric texts had already been lost by the early Middle Ages). The loss of textual material has very little to do with catastrophic events.

After all, what would have happened if the Library had survived? The collection would be long-decayed by now—the large papyrus finds at places like Oxyrhynchus are due to a large part not to Egypt as a whole but the fact that the climate combined with the garbage heaps in which these papyri are found causes the papyri to get stuck in airless pockets and stuff. So we would know the texts by copies anyway. Alexandria was cut off from the Byzantine scholars who copied Greek (and Muslim scholars generally worked from translation), so the survival of the collection would not have influenced their work significantly. And in any case, as I keep stressing, what was in there was already known elsewhere. Even within the city of Alexandria itself several copies of those texts existed in various locations, many of them on warehouses at the harbor ready to be exported (Badian, for example, conjectured that it was one of these warehouses that Caesar's troops set fire to, since he was nowhere near the palace complex). It might be nice to have some of the commentaries on various authors that we knew certain Alexandrian scholars put together for their private use, but commentaries are like reading footnotes; we'd rather have the texts themselves—and the texts on which the commentators were commenting existed elsewhere as well.

Soqotri language spoken on the island of Soqotra, Yemen by the Soqotri.

Believe it or not, this language got its first alphabet in 2014. Even though people are still working on it since it’s not complete, Soqotri is still a language without a script. And the first alphabet was made in Moscow, Russia by a Russian Arabist (Vitaly Naumkin) who studied the language and its morphology/phonology and overall characterics for a very long time before finally starting with his plan. This is a very, very old and archaic South Arabian language (one of the few that are still “alive” today). It belongs to the Semitic family, but due to the very long isolation from the mainland, it developed sounds and traits that are not found in other languages (at least those who surround it).

There is no distinction between the Old South Arabian interdentals θ, ð, and θˤ and the stops t, d and ṭ:. The ejectives that Soqotri had became pharyngeal consonants (a feature that many Semitic languages have). Many call Soqotri a time machine since it is one of the oldest Semitic languages and can tell linguists more about the development of various Semitic languages in general. Soqotri has a sound called “parasite H” in nouns (it is a non-morphological sound) which reflects its uniqueness.

It also heavily relies on affrication/spirantization in many Soqotri dialects.

Example:

éfo >éBo, iGodiHen > iyodiHen, ¿eGík >¿eGíbÈk.
In the Qafiz dialect, there is (a variation) of the connective -d + pronoun.

In some dialects of Soqotri, the velar fricatives are merged with the pharyngeals (thus not pronounced) while in others they still exist. Such as this example: Qalansiya: xœmÊh (Qadhub : HÎmeh) 'five'; Qalansiya ġayğ (Hadibo ʕɛyğ).

Overall, Soqotri is something rather unique and interesting to read about. It is probably not that well known among non-linguists, but it's a really unusual language.

If you mean the largest volume of water, Sudan and Egypt. In Sudan, the White Nile joins the Blue Nile at Khartoum, creating a larger river. It then flows on up north through Egypt and empties into the Mediterranean.

If you mean the longest part of the Nile, the longest part is in Sudan. It goes through a huge S-curve, extending its length considerably.

Here's a map of the whole Nile. As you can see, the longest part of it, counting both the Blue Nile and the White Nile, is in Sudan.

Archaeologists recently made a highly significant discovery in Egypt. In a find some are describing as the most significant since the Tomb of Tutankhamen, a lost "Golden City" of Egypt has been found, with the potential to change our understanding of Egyptian history forever.

The recent discovery, found near Thebes in HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/egyptology/" \t "_blank" Egypt has been dubbed "The Rise of Aten" and dates back more than 3,000 years. This discovery is said to be the largest ancient municipality that has ever been discovered within the country.

The city has been hidden underneath the sands of Luxor's western bank in the south of Egypt. This city dates to the rule of King Amenhotep III, from around 1391 to 1353 BC, according to the lead archaeologist, Zahi Hawass.

Amenhotep was the 9th king of the 18th dynasty, ruling over a peaceful, prosperous and wealthy land. His reign, free from war, saw the construction of many huge public buildings and HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/james-graham/" \t "_blank" temples .

A Chance Discovery

The Lost Golden City was not the prime discovery that the archaeologists had intended to make. Hawass and his other team members had initially visited the area in September 2020, in the hopes of finding a mortuary temple. But, instead of the expected religious buildings, a whole HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/hattusa/" \t "_blank" city began to emerge.

HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/wp-content/uploads/2021/11/location.jpg" \t "_blank" INCLUDEPICTURE "https://ci3.googleusercontent.com/proxy/-_aVYBBjCwOYmmIKb56z7SyaKqnR763i4thVdVCiEQaJhtAQcD2FBsoQT2OXIzb0x9X-OipXX8_gvXLlytj772SaLCOqLPrQuW_NWVlu11gBkWO7uK0qLb-5aeM=s0-d-e1-ft#https://www.historicmysteries.com/wp-content/uploads/2021/11/location.jpg" * MERGEFORMATINET

The location of the city on an early map of the area. The site is across the Nile from the great palace complex of Karnak (Description de l'Égypte / HYPERLINK "https://commons.wikimedia.org/wiki/File:Location_of_the_city_of_Aten,_discovered_2020-2021,_overlaid_on_the_first_detailed_modern_map_of_the_area.jpg" \t "_blank" CC BY-SA 4.0)

The city was well organized, with an administrative area consisting of several large buildings with 10 foot (3 meter) brick walls, separate from that of the residential district. Further discoveries revealed a workshop area, where amulets, mud bricks, and other goods were made.

The archaeologists also found other mercantile buildings, including a bakery. HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/legend-of-el-dorado/" \t "_blank" The Search and Legend of El Dorado HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/heracleion-sunken-egyptian-city/" \t "_blank" Heracleion – Discovery of the Ancient Sunken Egyptian City

But the focus of the workshops was the construction and adornment of the huge HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/gobekli-tepe/" \t "_blank" temples , potentially including those in the large HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/celtic-prince-of-lavau/" \t "_blank" burial area was also discovered around the city outskirts. Much of this latter area, including the skeletal occupants of the graves, is still to be excavated. But it is with the areas used by the living inhabitants of this city that there is the most potential. This discovery has the potential to give us a glimpse into how ancient Egyptians lived their lives, during a peaceful and wealthy time for Egypt.
The excavation began in September 2020, but the work is not yet over. Only the southern part of the newly-discovered city has been excavated or explored to date, with even the full extent of the city being unclear.

Treasures Beneath the Sands

Archaeologists had initially theorized that the site might have held a mortuary structure, where the subjects of HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/king-tuts-curse/" \t "_blank" Tutankhamun would have placed funerary items and food that they offered to him after he died in 1325 BC. But instead they discovered the zigzagging mudbrick walls and artifacts of a living city.

The structures around the city contained everyday items, including items used by artists, alongside more industrial finds. Evidence from the homes found around the city suggested that they housed workers. Everything pointed to this being the Pharaoh's capital city.

Evidence of glass and metal production was found, as well as a cemetery filled with rock tombs. Apart from human skeletons, unusually skeletons of HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/aurochs/" \t "_blank" cows or bulls have also been found within the city walls. Researchers are investigating why these livestock animals were found in this way.

But the crowning achievement of this archaeological expedition must be the discovery of 22 mummies, all royal, and with no fewer than 18 kings. These HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/psusennes-i/" \t "_blank" mummies included those of Amenhotep III and HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/nitocris/" \t "_blank" Queen Tiye, his wife, and are on display in the New National Museum of Egyptian Civilization.

A controversial Pharaoh, Akhenaten abandoned the old Egyptian HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/egyptian-set-animal/" \t "_blank" pantheon in favor of worshipping a single sun god. Akhenaten also abandoned many of the existing religious sites in Egypt, including apparently this newly-discovered city.

Abandoned and Forgotten

The researchers note that ancient Egypt's loss is modern archaeology's gain, as the decision to abandon the site has led to its preservation over the millennia. While Akhenaten's new religion did not survive long beyond his death, his son Tutankhamun seemed to prefer not to return to The Rise Of Aten, instead building a new capital at Memphis.

HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/tampering-with-the-chariot/" \t "_blank" Tutankhamun , and his Vizier Ay who succeeded him, seem to have continued to make some use of the site, but it was never the focus of Royal patronage as it was before Akhenaten's sudden religious reforms. Analysis of the four settlement layers at the site suggests it was inhabited as late as the 7th century AD, before being abandoned to the sands altogether.

Not since the discovery of the nearby Tutankhamen's tomb in 1922 has such a significant discovery been made. Hawass named this city "The Golden City" because it was built during the golden age of Egypt, and in the hopes of the archaeological treasures which might be found there.

Amenhotep III may well have been the wealthiest Pharaoh of all time, and this city was built during this peaceful period in HYPERLINK "https://www.historicmysteries.com/ancient-egyptian-medicine/" \t "_blank" Egypt's history. Many answers, including how these people lived, and why the grandson of Amenhotep chose not to return, may await discovery. *Top Image: Amenhotep III and his sun temple at Luxor. No, not even slightly. There was a popular theory advanced in the early 90s, I think, that the pyramids of Giza aligned with Orion or somesuch thing, but it’s complete nonsense.

They are laid out the way they are because of the shape of the plateau of rock on which they are built, that’s it.

Boring, but factual. Allegedly certain shafts in the pyramids also line up with stars, but this is also incredibly dubious.

If Egypt is so fertile because of the Nile river, why is there no jungle/forest in Egypt, instead most of Egypt is desert?

The Nile River flows in a desert area, so you find that agriculture is only around the course of the Nile, and the area around the Nile is a dry, sandy desert area.

Of course, there are some oases in the Egyptian desert, but it does not change that it is a barren desert.

In this answer, I'll not try to directly prove modern Egyptians descent from ancient Egyptians, but I will prove that modern Egyptians can't be the descendants of other peoples than the ancient Egyptians. Here's a long list of all peoples that ever conquered or settled in Egypt, and why modern Egyptians can not descent from them.

Persians

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-b6fb8e907cecba2336f73a7597325cdd-lq" * MERGEFORMATINET
Persians never settled in the areas they conquered, except for maybe some soldiers and bureaucrats.

Greeks

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-022fa6113ea46b33f921a2e03dac3049-lq" * MERGEFORMATINET
When the Macedonian Greeks conquered Egypt, they actually did settle in Egypt. In some cities, like Faiyum, Greeks made up 30% of the population.

But here’s the thing, since Greeks had a higher status than native Egyptians, there was an insentive for people to adopt Greek culture. So it's extremely likely that many of these Egyptian Greeks were actually, at least in part, Hellenised Egyptians.

Romans

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-267b896b02f4f874be4cfe0c26e3109d-lq" * MERGEFORMATINET
While there certainly were some Romans who settled in Egypt, they were just a small part of the population.

Arabs

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-7caf77aaeec0d709cbd2a4d914c88e01-lq" * MERGEFORMATINET
In 600 AD, there were only 1–2,000,000 Arabs, but around 6,000,000 Egyptians. HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/" \l "HpNJu" [1] Even if every single Arab in existence at that time settled in Egypt, it still wouldn't have been enough to become the majority population. And that's if every Arab settled in Egypt. Usually, only a minority of the population migrates to a recently conquered land, unless there was some crisis in there native land. As far as I'm aware, no such crisis existed in Arabia. So at most, only a few hundred thousand Arabs would've settled in Egypt.

Jews

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-e16807de67ca2a6b80bcf1bdceea5f3c-lq" * MERGEFORMATINET
This one is obvious. Jews never made up more than a few percent of Egypt's population and mostly confined themselves to their own community.

Mamluks (Circasians and Turks)

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-23beade39cc285e419607851248291ce-lq" * MERGEFORMATINET
The Mamluks were little more than a small warrior elite, making up only a few percent of Egypt's population, at most.

Turks

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-aeed8e796cad392f924a7fbcc22ce5da-lq" * MERGEFORMATINET
The Ottoman Empire never settled Turks in territories they conquered, with the notable exception of Northern Syria and the Southern Balkans. Maybe some Turks settled in Egypt, but that's it.

In conclusion: it's extremely safe to assume that most modern Egyptians still descent from your average New Kingdom, Late Egyptian speaking, Pagan peasant.

Israel and Egypt share a 208 km long border from Rafah to Taba.
The Egyptian side of the border is visibly lighter than the Israeli side.

It's not entirely clear what causes this, but the most accepted theory is that Bedouin tribes living on the Egyptian side graze their livestock more often and in larger numbers, leaving less vegetation.

If you look closely, you can see the difference between the Gaza Strip and Israel. That one is technically not a recognized international border, but still.

No. The Majority of Ancient Egyptians would have resembled these people, generally, beginning the Old Kingdom, although of course, statues like this, broadly, would have been painted, as was the common practice, while it tended to vary considerably between males and females, or at any point, although throughout Egyptian history you see all types of exceptions, for males and females, and the art, certainly, knows no real boundaries. Yes, at times, almost anything goes. Therefore, still very much an opinionated topic.

There is speculation that the first title signified that he grew up in the royal nursery as a prince of a HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Vassal" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" vassal territory, or perhaps was the son of a lesser wife or concubine of the pharaoh. He was among the first during the HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/New_Kingdom" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" New Kingdom to hold the second title, and was literally true in that he was by the pharaoh's side, likely as an advisor or bodyguard. Not much is known about Maiherpri as he does not appear in sources outside the tomb. Only two titles appear on the objects within the burial: child of the nursery and fan-bearer on the right side of the king. The mummy showed that he was a young man when he died.

Maiherpri was placed in a set of three coffins. The outer one is rectangular, painted black with gilded inscriptions and gilded decoration. It is more a shrine than a coffin. Inside it there were two anthropoid coffins also in black with gilded decoration. There is a third anthropoid coffin found next to this coffin ensemble with its lid placed next to the box. This caused some confusion and discussion in Egyptology. It seems that the 'extra' coffin was intended as the innermost one, but was actually too big to fit into the set and was therefore left unused next to it. KV36 - Wikipedia

Tomb KV36 , located in the Valley of the Kings in Egypt , was used for the burial of the noble Maiherpri from the Eighteenth Dynasty . Rediscovered by Victor Loret in his second season in the Valley of the Kings, on 30 March 1899, the tomb was found to be substantially undisturbed, but as it has for a long time not been properly published, it is not as well known as other burials in the valley. [1] All the objects found were taken to the Egyptian Museum in Cairo where they were published in the Catalogue General (short: CG). The only source for the arrangement of the objects in the burial chamber was a short article by Georg Schweinfurth . [2] He visited the tomb briefly before its contents were brought to Cairo. However, recently the notebooks of Loret were found and published, providing a detailed list and description of the objects found and their arrangement in the tomb chamber. [3] The tomb of Maiherpri is a small shaft tomb with a chamber at the bottom on its west side. [4] The burial chamber was undecorated, as with all burial chambers of non-royals in the Valley of the King. It is 3.90 m long and 4.10 m wide. [5] Not much is known about Maiherpri as he does not appear in sources outside the tomb. Only two titles appear on the objects within the burial: child of the nursery and fan-bearer on the right side of the king . The mummy showed that he was a young man when he died. Maiherpri was placed in a set of three coffins. The outer one is rectangular, [6] painted black with gilded inscriptions and gilded decoration. It is more a shrine than a coffin. Inside it there were two anthropoid coffins [7] also in black with gilded decoration. There is a third anthropoid coffin [8] found next to this coffin ensemble with its lid placed next to the box. This caused some confusion and discussion in Egyptology. It seems that the 'extra' coffin was intended as the innermost one, but was actually too big to fit into the set and was therefore left unused next to it. A similar situation was found in the burial of Tutankhamun , where his second coffin was also slightly too large for the outermost one. There the coffin was shortened directly in the tomb chamber, while in the burial of Maiherpri a new coffin was obtained. [9] Maiherpri mummy was adorned with a mummy mask. [10] At the foot end of the rectangular coffin, on the east side was found his canopic box [11] with the four canopic jars still in it. Next to it there was the Book of the Dead of Maiherpri [12] and there were found several boxes with mummified pieces of meat. [13] At the head of the coffins many pottery vessels were found. Other objects from this tomb are stone vases, a senet game, a nicely painted faience bowl, a quiver, a glass vase and a funerary bed with the shape of Osiris laid out in wheat. Maiherpri - Wikipedia

Maiherperi was an ancient Egyptian noble of Nubian origin buried in the Valley of the Kings , in tomb KV36 . He probably lived during the rule of Thutmose IV , and received the honour of a burial in the Valley of the Kings , the royal necropolis . His name can be translated as Lion of the Battlefield ,. [1] Amongst his titles were Child of the Nursery and Fan-bearer on the Right Side of the King . There is speculation that the first title signified that he grew up in the royal nursery as a prince of a vassal territory, or perhaps was the son of a lesser wife or concubine of the pharaoh. [2] He was among the first during the New Kingdom to hold the second title, and was literally true in that he was by the pharaoh's side, likely as an advisor or bodyguard. [3] This same title was also used to denote the Viceroys of Kush later in the New Kingdom. [4] Tomb of Maiherpri [edit] In Maiherperi's tomb, a papyrus was found depicting him with literally "blackish" skin, leading scholars to believe he was an Egyptian of Nubian descent. [5] The papyrus in question was the Book of the Dead , in the eyes of O'Connor and Cline "[c]ertainly the most famous and arguably the most beautiful" Book of the Dead. [6] The mummy was unwrapped by Georges Daressy in March 1901, [7] revealing a mummy whose dark skin matched that depicted on his copy of the Book of the Dead, and thought that this was likely Maiherperi's natural colour, unchanged by the mummification process. [8] He also had tightly curled, woolly hair, which turned out to be a wig that had been glued to his scalp. Ramesses 11? Eleventh? Or does the OP mean Ramesses II, who has a famous mummy pictured and reconstructed below? I notice nothing particularly or specifically “African” in his face, beginning with the quite aquiline nose and no noticeable prognathism, which is a typical feature of most indigenous African peoples (nowadays at least).

By the way, which African phenotype does the OP think Ramesses II's statues resemble? There is very little in common, except perhaps for dark skin — I say “perhaps” because even the particular skin tones vary —, between a Somali, a Yoruba and a Khoekhoe man. I do see some resemblance between those ancient statues and paintings and people like Beja, Eritreans, Tigrayans and Amharas — who are indeed known to share high proportions of the same ancestral components with modern and ancient Egyptians, encompassing both Eurasian and African admixtures —, but West Africans and all those from Central Africa southwards look really different for the most part.

Likewise, I don’t think he looks very much like a European, at least not any more than he resembles people from Egypt itself and nearby areas.

In my view, instead, the man looks clearly within the broad and diverse cline of physical appearances that extends from Nothwestern Africa to West Asia, passing through Egypt. It mustn’t be hard to find modern Egyptians who have a similar look.

His statue, though certainly more “African-like” than his actual mummy, also looks to me distinctive enough to be identified as Northeast African, as you’d expect from a civilization born in the northern Nile Valley. Egyptian faces, then and now, look somewhat like an intermediate stage in a cline between Levantines, Horn Africans and Berbers, which is reasonable, since it matches their geographic location as well as all those populations’ mixed genetic history.

A face like this (photos below), if you take all the royal trappings away and put him in modern clothes, certainly doesn’t look extraordinary in modern Egypt, so, yes, he looks African in the sense that North Africa and Egypt in particular are also part of the diversity of phenotypes and genetics found in modern as well as ancient Africa:

As for the blond hair, if we consider that Ramesses II is likely to have died at some 85–90 years old, honestly the most parsimonious explanation is that it must be some remant of a dye that wealthy Egyptians may have applied on their hair, which would also explain all the surprisingly red-haired mummies (by the way, dying one’s hair with a very bright orange color, using henna, is still pretty common in some parts of the Arabian peninsula and Northeast Africa).

As for why his statues don’t look like him, I think anyone can notice that the men and women in formal paintings and sculptures from Ancient Egypt often look uncannily similar, and most of them are depicted with pretty much the same proportions and traits, even if they lived centuries or even millennia apart.

That’s of course not just because they were all Egyptians and hence shared similar features, but rather because Ancient Egyptian art was highly stylized, idealized and symbolic — and definitely not particularly interested in realism, if at all.

When you look at the statue or painting of a pharaoh, you’re probably seeing what Ancient Egyptians considered an ideal of a beautiful, healthy and glorious countenance made to fit certain artistic conventions and expectations and to impress all the people that would take a look at them — certainly not a purported “photograph” of that particular pharaoh, with all the good and not so good aspects of his/her face and body.

It’s an artistic statement of what a pharaoh was ideally thought to be, not a realistic, down-to-earth portrait of people as they really were. Poor ill Tutankhamun, for instance, appears to be a handsome and healthy young man in his official depictions.

That explains why some mummies look so different from the pictures that are supposed to represent themselves (it’s not just Ramesses II, also see Tuntakhamun, Yuya’s or Tiye’s mummies, among others). Conversely and intriguingly, they look very much like countless other people also depicted in other pictures.

How likely is that that is just a coincidence? No, it’s just that Ancient Egyptian civilization was so stubbornly rigid and idealistic in its artistic conventions that there weren’t any dramatic changes in the general appearance of statues, frescoes and paintings for virtually 3 millennia in Egypt. Visual arts absolutely had to look a certain way, and not even the real physical appearance of the person used as a model for the artist could get in the way.

Yes, at times, almost anything goes. Therefore, still very much an opinionated topic.

Not much is known about Maiherpri as he does not appear in sources outside the tomb. Only two titles appear on the objects within the burial: child of the nursery and fan-bearer on the right side of the king. The mummy showed that he was a young man when he died.

Maiherpri was placed in a set of three coffins. The outer one is rectangular, painted black with gilded inscriptions and gilded decoration. It is more a shrine than a coffin. Inside it there were two anthropoid coffins also in black with gilded decoration. There is a third anthropoid coffin found next to this coffin ensemble with its lid placed next to the box. This caused some confusion and discussion in Egyptology. It seems that the 'extra' coffin was intended as the innermost one, but was actually too big to fit into the set and was therefore left unused next to it. The Romans did it.

Hieroglyphic script was closely associated with the Egyptian state religion and pharaonic government. That was maintained even by rulers of foreign origin up through the Ptolemaic dynasty. However, when the Romans took over, the pharaoh was deposed and not replaced, knocking the center out of those two related systems. Individual temples soldiered on for a while, but deprived of their ideological and official core, they started to fade away. Moreover, only a few decades after the Romans took over, Christianity started to move in. It took quite some time to get going, but it became an active force pushing out other religions and, of course, the related use of hieroglyphics, as opposed to just contributing to their decay. They'd already pretty much vanished by the time the empire became officially Christian under Theodosius in the late 4th century and appear to have fallen entirely out of use at that time. With that knowledge lost, it would take a lot of detective work to put the evidence back together again.

The Romans did it.

Hieroglyphic script was closely associated with the Egyptian state religion and pharaonic government. That was maintained even by rulers of foreign origin up through the Ptolemaic dynasty. However, when the Romans took over, the pharaoh was deposed and not replaced, knocking the center out of those two related systems. Individual temples soldiered on for a while, but deprived of their ideological and official core, they started to fade away. Moreover, only a few decades after the Romans took over, Christianity started to move in. It took quite some time to get going, but it became an active force pushing out other religions and, of course, the related use of hieroglyphics, as opposed to just contributing to their decay. They'd already pretty much vanished by the time the empire became officially Christian under Theodosius in the late 4th century and appear to have fallen entirely out of use at that time. With that knowledge lost, it would take a lot of detective work to put the evidence back together again.

BY G. H. RICHARDSON

SIR Richard Burton speaking of Egypt said, "It was the inventor of the alphabet, the cradle of letters. . . .and, generally speaking, the source of all human civilization." This appears a sweeping statement but all recent researches are establishing it. Egypt is the teacher of the nations. From whatever country we look back along the pathway of the arts, sciences, and religion, in the dim distance tower the mighty gateways of Egypt, beneath which the rites of religion and the blessings of civilization passed out to the world. Our modern civilization is the outgrowth of that of the Mediterranean, and this can be traced back to the Nile valley, where, if the antiquity of the monuments is a safe guide, we find an advanced civilization many centuries before we find it in Babylon.^ In fact it is in the Nile valley that we find the first civilization. When Egypt first appears in history proper we find her with a civilization practically complete — writing, administration, cults, ceremonies, a philosophical religion, and a social system. The antiquity of Egypt is almost unthinkable. "Seven cycles of civilization take us back to the beginning, with strides for which our two cycles in Europe, the classical and the medieval, scarcely prepare us."

Thanks to the labors of a great number of devoted scholars, we can begin to measure the influence of Egypt upon the world's life and thought. Her arts, religion, literature, sciences, and laws are still exerting their influences. Thales the Greek astronomer was taught by the Egyptians, six centuries before Christ, to calculate eclipses ;•' Eratosthenes was taught how to measure the circumference of the earth ; Aristarchus was the first to compute the relative distances of the stars and moon, and their magnitudes, under the tutelage of Egyptian teachers ; Euclid perfected mathematical knowledge of the Egyptians; Hipparchus discovered the precession of the equinoxes, made the first star catalogue and in- vented the planisphere ; Ctesius invented the siphon ; Plato and other philosophers were proud to sit at the feet of Egyptian priests. These are but few of the names of the great who owed a debt but they are sufficient to convince us that the world owes a great debt to ancient Egypt

Hemiunu - Wikipedia

Hemiunu (fl. 2570 BC) is a man who lived in ancient Egypt , and who is believed to have been the architect of the Great Pyramid of Giza . [1] [2] As vizier , succeeding his father, Nefermaat , and his uncle, Kanefer , [3] Hemiunu was one of the most important members of the court and responsible for all the royal works. His tomb lies close to Khufu's pyramid. Biography [edit] Hemiunu was a son of prince Nefermaat and his wife, Itet . [4] He is a grandson of Sneferu and a relative of Khufu , the Old Kingdom king . Hemiunu had three sisters and many brothers. In his tomb he is described as a hereditary prince, count, sealer of the king of Lower Egypt (jrj-pat HAtj-a xtmw-bjtj), and on a statue found in his serdab (and now located in Hildesheim), Hemiunu is given the titles: king's son of his body, chief justice, and vizier, greatest of the five of the House of Thoth (sA nswt n XT=f tAjtj sAb TAtj wr djw pr-DHwtj). [5] Hemiunu's tomb lies close to Khufu's pyramid and contains reliefs of his image. Some stones of his badly damaged mastaba (G4000 [es]) are marked with dates referring to Khufu's reign. [6] His statue [7] can be found at the Pelizaeus Museum , Hildesheim , Germany. [4] This statue is scheduled to be loaned for the opening of the Grand Egyptian Museum in 2021. His statue was found in the walled-up serdab of Hemiunu's mastaba by archaeologist Hermann Junker in March 1912. Ancient looters had ransacked the mastaba in their quest for valuable items and the wall to the serdab had a child-sized hole cut into it. The robber forcefully gouged out the statue's precious inlaid eyes and gold castings, in the process the right arm was broken and the head severed. The head has been restored, [8] using a relief of Hemiunu as a guide for the nose's profile. The seated statue is well-preserved, apart from the damage mentioned above, and is notable for its realism, not found in ancient Egyptian art depicting royal figures. Hemiunu's features are only lightly stylized and clearly based on his appearance. He is depicted as obese, with notable accumulation of fat in the pectoral region. This contrasts with the more idealized representation of male subjects in royal portraiture in this and most succeeding periods of ancient Egyptian art . The statue of Hemiunu was found on March 12, 1912, by Herman Junker.

Ancient looters had devastated the mastaba looking for precious items. In the wall to the serbad they cut a hole for a small person or child to fit through. Once inside the petite robber could pass objects of worth including the eyes and gold casings around them through the opening. In gouging out, using forceful blows, the precious eyes and gold castings, one arm was broken and the head was severed at the neck.

Why does nobody help Palestine?

HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/profile/Jean-Marie-Valheur" \t "_blank" Jean-Marie Valheur political aficionado & former journalist HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/Why-does-nobody-help-Palestine/answer/Jean-Marie-Valheur" \t "_blank" Nov 16

The Palestinians serve a purpose to other countries — for many Arab governments they are an ideal excuse to point at Israel and say: "Look those Zionists are evil!”, therefore the less help they receive and the more pitiful they are, the better they serve the agendas of the people claiming to be their brothers. The right-wing pro-military hawks in the Israeli governments love to keep the Palestinians down on their luck, too, because the more angry and broke they are, the more hostile they remain, which allows the military to keep spending billions. You have to sustain the conflict somehow, and it fills many pockets, keeps an entire industry up and running and countless politicians owe their entire careers to this.

Finally the Palestinian leaders themselves, many of them are corrupt and terrible. The aid that does come in from the Middle East and European Union member states, a lot of it never reaches ‘the people’ and disappears instead into the pockets of their own morally corrupt leadership. A well-fed, well-educated population does not benefit them.

Why does nobody help the Palestinians, you ask? Because it pays more not to help them. Whatever those in power, those calling the shots, benefit from the most, is what will happen. Right or wrong has little to do with it — Palestine is a nation of puppets, being used for decades and having little say in the how or why of it all.

Sorry for answering late, But after seeing lots of answers justifying killing of innocent civilians. I am compelled to add mine.

Basically the USA effectively blocks each time the UN security council tries to contain Israeli atrocities. for decades US has given blanket for Israeli war crimes and apartheid. Apart from this we have many apologetics who try to equate all of palestinian civlians with hamas, or justify killing of Palestinian civlians

They figured it out. From a certain point of view, a pyramid is one of the easiest kinds of monuments you can build. If you just pile up a lot of stuff, you'll get something with a more or less triangular cross section. Square it off, and you get a pyramid.

And to some extent, that's what the Egyptians did. They started off building mastabas, monumental platforms covering important graves.

Then they started stacking up layers of mastabas, the ones higher up being smaller than the ones beneath. That made a step pyramid.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://ci5.googleusercontent.com/proxy/h83qW4xEk0ln2dGWhtlQPTuFQW2pVGFgkDoGXspA8_bU_nkRVYV_auuSxBp6cYj08TKIBkq2117uzSt8oSwTQlwtXUfUukwXlh9yUCZBYAHeTgbb6TF1NnYtfi0I1A=s0-d-e1-ft#https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-dfe63d6096297f6c6124c8cba31bbd3e.webp" * MERGEFORMATINET

They made those with more, thinner layers for a smoother appearance of the sides, though they were still learning what the ideal slope for such a pyramid was, resulting in the “bent pyramid,” where they changed the slope in mid-construction.

So, then, the Great Pyramid at Giza and its smaller companions are the product of centuries of technological development and experimentation with building pyramids.

Islam, at this point in time, is one of the world's most popular religions and according to research and survey reports, Islam is expected to become THE most popular and followed religion in the next 53 years.

According to the research conducted by Washington DC-based firm Pew Research Center (PRC), Islam will overcome Christianity to become the most popular religion in the world by 2070 and furthermore; their research also predicts that Europe and the United States of America (USA) will constitute 'more' Muslims in next 53 years.

The research further reveals that the followers of religion Islam, pre-dominantly known as Muslims, are the fastest-growing religious group in the world and almost seven years ago in 2010, there were over 1.6billion in the world – about 23 per cent of the global population and since then, the figures are increasing progressively.

And as far as Christianity is concerned, there are over 2.2 billion Christians living on this planet making up to 31 percent of the population, but this PRC research about Islam predicts that Islam will surpass Christianity to become the most followed, believed and practiced religion in the world – in next 50 to 53 years by 2070.

Despite all the propaganda and anti-islamic compagins still Islam is progressing faster than before and further in most educated peoples around the globe.

I am not surprised why there is so much hatred and islamophobia about Islam. It's just because Islam is spreading fast and affecting others relegions count, so the reaction is normal. Whenever there is anything wrong happen by humans of Islamic belief always become headlines is also a normal thing, when the relegion is growing with that intensity

Originally answered: What is the current scholarship position on Greco-Roman historians who stated that ancient Egypt was initially a colony of the 'Ethiopians'?*

The reference here is to Diodorus Siculus (= "Diodorus of Sicily") a Greek historian who was roughly contemporary with Julius Caesar. His HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bibliotheca_historica" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Historical Library was written to be a "universal history", one that covered the events of the entire known world.
Quick note about terms:

When Diodorus says "Ethiopians" he generally refers to the HYPERLINK "https://www.nationalgeographic.org/media/kingdoms-kush/" \l "%3A~%3Atext%3DThe%20Kingdom%20of%20Kush%20is%2CKerma%2C%20Napata%2C%20and%20Mero%C3%AB.%26text%3DKerma%20was%20the%20most%20powerful%2C2450%20BCE%20and%201450%20BCE." \o

"www.nationalgeographic.org" \t "_blank" Kingdom of Kush , which in his day was ruled from the city of HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Mero%C3%AB" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Meroë near what is today Shendi, Sudan. This area is often known in modern sources as "Nubia," though the people referred to themselves as Qoš and their Egyptian neighbors usually called them K3š; you can mentally substitute "Nubian" if you prefer but I'll stick with Kushite for consistency with Diodorus' time.

Sometimes, like other Greek writers of his time, Diodorus uses "Ethiopian" to refer to any dark-skinned people living south of the Sahara and "Libyan" to refer to the inhabitants of coastal North Africa, the ancestors of today's Berbers. Modern Ethiopia traces its heritage to the HYPERLINK "https://www.nationalgeographic.org/article/kingdom-aksum/" \o "www.nationalgeographic.org" \t "_blank" Empire of Axum , centered about a thousand kilometers to the east and south of Meroe, speaking an unrelated language, and coming to power more or less by displacing the Kushites. I'll use his "Ethiopian" for consistency, but reader should be aware of the vagueness of the original terminology.
If you're looking for simple checkbox answer, it boils down to this: Diodorus was repeating information that was then current, even though that information was often contradictory. He was mostly repeating things he had read in earlier Greek accounts, though he made an effort to fact check them by speaking to Egyptian priests and visiting Ethiopians during a trip to Egypt. Those two groups gave him opposing points of view, and he repeated both without trying to reconcile them. I've appended the relevant bits to the end of this article for those who'd like to compare them first hand.

Overall Diodorus' method might seem like shoddy workmanship, but it's not — at least by the standards of his own time. Greek and Roman writers were very aware that the early history of their own people was extremely murky, full of conflicting stories, myths, and rival versions of the same events. They tended to err on the side of collecting stories about the semi-legendary past without being very definite about the truth of what they recorded, since they were well aware of how shaky the "facts" they had to work with could be. Diodorus affords the same treatment to ancient Egyptian and Ethiopian material that he does to the mythical origins of Greece. He also does the same for "Libya", our North Africa, and for — tellingly — "Atlantis". His primary addition to the stories he collects is a strong tendency towards assuming that most traditional gods were mortals who had received worship after their deaths, a common idea in his day known as "□ HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/Were-Greek-gods-real-individuals-or-were-they-at-leastimmortalisations-of-real-individuals/answer/Steve-Theodore?ch=10&oid=297709247&share=4bd65a4f&srid=zLvM&target_type=answer" \o "www.quora.com" \t "_blank" Euhemerism ".

So: modern scholars will generally regard Diodorus as a fairly reliable reporter of what the discussion of deeper antiquity was like in the first century BC. However they don't take his assertions literally, since he himself clearly did not do so: to take a different example, he provides nine different birth places for the god Dionysus (Ethiopia, Egypt, India, four different named Greek cities, and two different cities called "Nysa", one in Libya and one in Arabia) and he also entertains the idea that there were three different Dionysuses — a Libyan one, an Egyptian one, and a Greek one — at HYPERLINK "https://penelope.uchicago.edu/Thayer/E/Roman/Texts/Diodorus_Siculus/4A*.html" \o "penelope.uchicago.edu" \t "_blank" different times . When dealing with ancient matters (to him, anything before about our sixth century BC) his method was to collect and pass on whatever his sources said without aggressively vetting their assertions.

Obviously, therefore, his information is treated with caution. Modern historians will often take his statements into account as they examine other sources — for example, Egyptian records which we can read but which Diodorus clearly could not. His text is suggestive of areas for research, but not treated as authoritative. In this particular example, the respective claims of the Egyptians and Ethiopians are not assumed to be any more factual than Aeneas's escape from the fall of Troy and founding what would eventually become Rome., a story he also relates.

We can trust Diodorus that someone told him the Ethiopians believed themselves to be the real ancestors of the Egyptians: he speaks of talking to Ethiopian ambassadors and Egyptian priests. It's an interesting fact in itself, indicative of how intercultural communication worked in his era — but not particularly solid evidence for events three thousand years prior.

As regards the specific claims Diodorus retails about Egypt being an Ethiopian colony, the most concrete claim happens to have a couple of errors which are visible in light of what we know from archaeology.

Diodorus appears endorse an Ethiopian claim that they were the originators of Hieroglyphic writing: he actually calls it "Ethiopian writing which is called hieroglyphic among the Egyptians." He quotes the Ethiopians as saying that among the Egyptians hieroglyphic literacy was secret knowledge passed down among the priests, but ordinary people didn't use the hieroglyphs — while in Ethiopia, he say, everyone is literate in hieroglyphic writing.

However we can be sure this is incorrect for two reasons.

First, the account he gives of how hieroglyphics work is plainly wrong: He says (HYPERLINK "https://penelope.uchicago.edu/Thayer/E/Roman/Texts/Diodorus_Siculus/3A*.html" \o "penelope.uchicago.edu" \t "_blank" book 3, chapter 4) their writing does not express the intended concept by means of syllables joined one to another, but by means of the significance of the objects which have been copied and by its figurative meaning which has been impressed upon the memory by practice.

In other words, the hieroglyphs are a purely symbolic script that records ideas, not spoken words. However are able to read hieroglyphic writing, and it's clearly a complete way of recording the Egyptian language phonetically. Ideograms make up only a fraction of any hieroglyphic text. The idea that hieroglyphs were a purely symbolic language was popular with Greek writers in his day and later — but anyone who actually used hieroglyphics would not describe them way Diodorus (or his Ethiopian informant) does.

Second, the claim that the Ethiopians used hieroglyphics exclusively is also demonstrably incorrect. There's no doubt that the Kushites were literate in hieroglyphics — they used them to write both Egyptian and their own language. However they had HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Meroitic_script" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" a script of their own invention as well — although it borrowed characters from Demotic Egyptian, it was a streamlined alphabetic script, much easier to use than either hieroglyphs or Demotic.

An inscription in the Meroitic script, from the second century BC, more than a century before Diodorus. Photo: HYPERLINK "https://www.livescience.com/62272-oldest-meroe-inscriptions-sudan-africa.html" \o "www.livescience.com" \t "_blank" Vincent Francigny/Sedeinga

When used formally Meroitic script could be written using hieroglyphic characters (used for their sound values) but more commonly it was written in a cursive, non-pictorial form. The cursive version was much more common than the hieroglyphic version and had been for over a century in Diodorus's time. It's worth mentioning that the oldest Meroitic language inscriptions date from around the second century BC: before that time, the Kushites used the Egyptian language for their records; if the "Ethiopians" really were the originators of hieroglyphic writing, it's a bit puzzling that they started using it to write Egyptian rather than Meroitic.

Does this story still have anything to tell us about the prehistory of written language in the Nile Valley?

The relative priority of hieroglyphic writing in Egypt and Kush has been a hot topic in academia for the last forty or fifty years. Given the enormous disparity in archaeological attention between well-explored Egypt and much less thoroughly documented Sudan, this argument might someday swing either way. For now, though, the balance of opinion still favors and Egyptian origin. In older works, written in the shadow of European imperialism, it was more common to see Kushite civilization as a colonial offshoot imposed by Egyptians. Higher quality surveys resulting from a UNESCO mission in the 1960's and subsequent investigations have revised that unbalanced view. A good example of the current scholarly opinion could be found in the late László Török's HYPERLINK "https://books.google.co.uk/books?id=i54rPFeGKewC&printsec=frontcover" \l "v%3Donepage%26q%26f%3Dfalse" \o "books.google.co.uk" \t "_blank" The Kingdom Of Kush: Handbook of the Napatan-Meroitic civilization (1997), which essentially sees the Kushite civilization as a peer of Egypt: formed around the same time under similar conditions, but neither an ancestor of nor a colonial offshoot of Egypt.

The main scholarly sponsor of a Kushite-first scenario was HYPERLINK "https://whitelevy.fas.harvard.edu/people/bruce-williams" \o "whitelevy.fas.harvard.edu" \t "_blank" Bruce Beyer Williams , whose 1980 Article "Lost Pharoahs of Nubia" made the case for a Kushite origin based on an artifact known as the HYPERLINK "https://oi.uchicago.edu/museum-exhibits/nubia/qustul-incense-burner" \o "oi.uchicago.edu" \t "_blank" Qustul incense burner. which he claimed showed a Kushite origin for symbols and rulership styles traditionally described as Egyptian. His view however is not widely accepted; an example of the counter-arguments is William Adams' 1985 HYPERLINK "https://www.jstor.org/stable/544904?read-now=1&refreqid=excelsior%3A93db42fa3d356196ef248f5ad611f409&seq=1" \l "page_scan_tab_contents" \o "www.jstor.org" \t "_blank" "Doubts about the 'Lost Pharoahs'." Since then, more ancient early hieroglyphic finds and a chemical analysis of the Qustul censer make the Kushite-priority view seem much less plausible.

TLDR:

The modern archaeological consensus does not depict Egypt as a Kushite (or Nubian, or Ethiopian) "colony" in the sense that Diodorus reported. Historians who read Diodorus would generally not use his evidence to prove anything about the real origins of Egyptian or Kushite/Nubian civilization three thousand years before his own time, but they do think it throws an interesting sidelight on the way Kushite, Egyptian and Greek cultures interacted and jostled for prestige in the first century BC.

It you want to put the whole thing in context for yourself, here are the relevant bits of Diodorus, with emphases added for focus (the complete text is HYPERLINK "https://penelope.uchicago.edu/Thayer/E/Roman/Texts/Diodorus_Siculus/home.html" \o "penelope.uchicago.edu" \t "_blank" here) .

Regarding the Egyptian - Ethiopian issue he says this in Book 3, chapter 2 (full text HYPERLINK "https://penelope.uchicago.edu/Thayer/E/Roman/Texts/Diodorus_Siculus/3A*.html" \o "penelope.uchicago.edu" \t "_blank" here) :

Now the Ethiopians, as historians relate, were the first of all men and the proofs of this statement, they say, are manifest. For that they did not come into their land as immigrants from abroad but were natives of it and so justly bear the name of "autochthones" is, they maintain, conceded by practically all men; furthermore, that those who dwell beneath the noon-day sun were, in all likelihood, the first to be generated by the earth, is clear to all; since, inasmuch as it was the warmth of the sun which, at the generation of the universe, dried up the earth when it was still wet and impregnated it with life, it is reasonable to suppose that the region which was nearest the sun was the first to bring forth living creatures. And they say that they were the first to be taught to honour the gods and to hold sacrifices and processions and festivals and the other rites by which men honour the deity; and that in consequence their piety has been published abroad among all men, and it is generally held that the sacrifices practised among the Ethiopians are those which are the most pleasing to heaven. As witness to this they call upon the poet who is perhaps the oldest and certainly the most venerated among the Greeks; for in the Iliad he represents both Zeus and the rest of the gods with him as absent on a visit to Ethiopia to share in the sacrifices and the banquet which were given annually by the Ethiopians for all the gods together.
And in 3.3 (same link as above):

They [= the Ethiopians] say also that the Egyptians are colonists sent out by the Ethiopians, Osiris having been the leader of the colony. For, speaking generally, what is now Egypt, they maintain, was not land but sea when in the beginning the universe was being formed; afterwards, however, as the Nile during the times of its inundation carried down the mud from Ethiopia, land was gradually built up from the deposit. Also the statement that all the land of the Egyptians is alluvial silt deposited by the river receives the clearest proof, in their opinion, from what takes place at the outlets of the Nile; for as each year new mud is continually gathered together at the mouths of the river, the sea is observed being thrust back by the deposited silt and the land receiving the increase. And the larger part of the customs of the Egyptians are, they hold, Ethiopian, the colonists still preserving their ancient manners. For instance, the belief that their kings are gods, the very special attention which they pay to their burials, and many other matters of a similar nature are Ethiopian practices, while the shapes of their statues and the forms of their letters are Ethiopian; for of the two kinds of writing which the Egyptians have, that which is known as "popular" (demotic) is learned by everyone, while that which is called "sacred" is understood only by the priests of the Egyptians, who learn it from their fathers as one of the things which are not divulged, but among the Ethiopians everyone uses these forms of letters.

He goes on to list some other examples of Egyptian customs which the Ethiopians claim prove that Egypt was an Ethiopian colony, concluding “Many other things are also told by them concerning their own antiquity and the colony which they sent out that became the Egyptians, but about this there is no special need of our writing anything.” Before considering the historicity of this from a modern perspective, it’s worth pointing out that Diodorus is quoting what he says is contemporary Ethiopian opinion. This is completely in keeping with his general approach, which he lays out earlier in book 1, chapter 4 (full text HYPERLINK "https://penelope.uchicago.edu/Thayer/E/Roman/Texts/Diodorus_Siculus/1A*.html" \o "penelope.uchicago.edu" \t "_blank" here) with respect to the antiquity of the human race, not only do Greeks put forth their claims but many of the barbarians as well, all holding that it is they who were autochthonous and the first of all men to discover the things which are of use in life, and that it was the events in their own history which were the earliest to have been held worthy of record. So far as we are concerned, however, we shall not make the attempt to determine with precision the antiquity of each nation or what is the race whose nations are prior in point of time to the rest and by how many years, but we shall record summarily, keeping due proportion in our account, what each nation has to say concerning its antiquity and the early events in its history.

The first peoples which we shall discuss will be the barbarians, not that we consider them to be earlier than the Greeks, as Ephorus has said, but because we wish to set forth most of the facts about them at the outset, in order that we may not, by beginning with the various accounts given by the Greeks, have to interpolate in the different narrations of their early history any event connected with another people.

In other words, Diodorus says he’s going to repeat a variety of conflicting accounts of “pre-history” — which for him means pretty much anything before the Trojan War, which he dated to our 1184 BC. He doesn’t say he’s going to resolve the differing accounts. In fact, he begins his catalogue of other people’s origin stories with the Egyptians, book 1 chapter 10:

Now the Egyptians have an account like this: When in the beginning the universe came into being, men first came into existence in Egypt, both because of the favourable climate of the land and because of the nature of the Nile. For this stream, since it produces much life and provides a spontaneous supply of food, easily supports whatever living things have been engendered; for both the root of the reed and the lotus, as well as the Egyptian bean and corsaeon, as it is called, and many other similar plants, supply the race of men with nourishment all ready for use. As proof that animal life appeared first of all in their land they would offer the fact that even at the present day the soil of the Thebaid at certain times generates mice in such numbers and of such size as to astonish all who have witnessed the phenomenon; for some of them are fully formed as far as the breast and front feet and are able to move, while the rest of the body is unformed, the clod of earth still retaining its natural character. And from this fact it is manifest that, when the world was first taking shape, the land of Egypt could better than any other have been the place where mankind came into being because of the well-tempered nature of its soil; for even at the present time, while the soil of no other country generates any such things, in it alone certain living creatures may be seen coming into being in a marvellous fashion.

In other words: the Egyptians say Egypt — not Ethiopia — was the real origin of mankind. He goes on to list famous Greek deities and mortals who were really, on the Egyptian account, Egyptians, climaxing with a long list of Greek and other cities which were really Egyptian colonies:

Now the Egyptians say that also after these events† a great number of colonies were spread from Egypt over all the inhabited world. To Babylon, for instance, colonists were led by Belus, who was held to be the son of Poseidon and Libya; and after establishing himself on the Euphrates river he appointed priests, called Chaldaeans by the Babylonians, who were exempt from taxation and free from every kind of service to the state, as are the priests of Egypt; and they also make observations of the stars, following the example of the Egyptian priests, physicists, and astrologers. They say also that those who set forth with Danaus, likewise from Egypt, settled what is practically the oldest city in Greece, Argos, and that the nation of the Colchi in Pontus and that of the Jews, which lies between Arabia and Syria, were founded as colonies by certain emigrants from their country; and this is the reason why it is a long-established institution among these two peoples to circumcise their male children, the custom having been brought over from Egypt. Even the Athenians, they say, are colonists from Saïs in Egypt, and they undertake to offer proofs of such a relationship; for the Athenians are the only Greeks who call their city "Asty," a name brought over from the city Asty in Egypt.

Much of this “Egyptian” material is borrowed from other Greek writers. Here his Belus is the Semitic deity HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Belus_(Babylonian)" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Ba’al , who he assumes to have been a real mortal king following HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Ctesias" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Ctesias of Cnidus . The story about the Jews being Egyptian colonists is borrowed from an earlier Greek writer, HYPERLINK "https://www.encyclopedia.com/religion/encyclopedias-almanacs-transcripts-and-maps/hecataeus-abderadeg" \o "www.encyclopedia.com" \t "_blank" Hecataeus of Miletus . The story of Danaus being an Egyptian colonist was a common version in Greek mythology. The story of the Colchians being Egyptian colonists is probably borrowed from Herodotus, who may have had it from an Egyptian source.

At this point however Diodorus does add a comment of his own, not exactly a ringing endorsement of the literal truth of what he has reported (1.29):

By many other statements like these, spoken more out of a love for glory than with regard for the truth, as I see the matter, they claim Athens as a colony of theirs because of the fame of that city.

In general, the Egyptians say that their ancestors sent forth numerous colonies to many parts of the inhabited world, the pre-eminence of their former kings and their excessive population; but since they offer no precise proof whatsoever for these statements, and since no historian worthy of credence testifies in their support, we have not thought that their accounts merited recording.

Why didn't Arabic split into many different languages like Latin did?

It sort of did. Arabic is a dialect continuum, and some of the dialects are not mutually intelligible with others. Many have large amounts of completely different words and different phonetics.

Furthermore, one language did completely diverge from Arabic: Maltese.

I think that if it weren't for the common bond of the Qur'an and mass media, the various dialects of Arabic would have already diverged as much as Maltese did.

Je ne répondrais qu'à la première partie de la question, à savoir le lien entre Afrique et civilisation égyptienne. Un parallèle s'impose. L'Amérique précolombienne a connu deux aires civilisationnelles majeures : la Mésoamérique et les Andes. Dans les deux régions des civilisations brillantes se sont développées et ont construit des sociétés qui continuent encore d'impressionner. Pourtant, malgré ces deux régions développées, le reste du continent était techniquement moins avancé, ne disposant pas d'écriture par exemple. Les brillantes civilisations américaines ont eu peu d'impacte sur de nombreuses autres sociétés américaines.

Pourquoi ? A cause des différances de climat, de biodiversité, à cause des distances, etc.

L'Afrique c'est la même chose. Le contient est immense et très diversifié sur les plans climatique et biologique. La civilisation a prospéré en Egypte grâce à la petitesse de son territoire imposant une forte concentration de population, grâce à sa vallée fluviale extraordinairement fertile, grâce à la Méditerranée qui fut très tôt un centre d'échange important avec d'autres civilisations, grâce au fleuve qui la reliait au cœur de l'Afrique, grâce à la proximité du croissant fertile ayant abrité la première civilisation du monde et ayant inventé l'agriculture, l'écriture et les villes, etc. L'Egypte avait tout pour se développer dans les meilleurs conditions possible.

Mais une fois passé Assouan on s'enfonce dans la Nubie, plus chaude et moins fertile avec un fleuve moins navigable. Au sud de la Nubie se trouvent des marécages et des terres immenses et peu peuplées. Le désert à l'est est difficile à franchir et seuls des peuples nomades du désert savent le dompter et faire du commerce. A l'ouest la Mer Rouge est restée isolée longtemps, avant que les romains ne mettent en place la première route maritime mondialisée allant jusqu'en Inde.

L'Egypte a eu assez peu de contacts avec l'Afrique subsaharienne. Elle passait presque toujours par des intermédiaires. Le cœur de la civilisation égyptienne était l'agriculture. Cependant l'Afrique subsaharienne est peu fertile. Les égyptiens n'ont donc jamais cherché à s'étendre vers le sud, hormis vers la Nubie pour prendre le contrôle des routes commerciales et des mines d'or.

La civilisation égyptienne ne s'est dont pas étendue hors de la vallée du Nil saharien. Il est donc maladroit de penser que l'Afrique devrait normalement être développée si l'Egypte était développée.

Je terminerais en disant que les continents ne sont qu'une convention non rationnelle. Ils n'existent que parce que les grecs les ont inventé. Les européens ont développé le concept de continent en les faisant rayonner autour de l'Europe. A l'est c'est l'Asie, au sud c'est l'Afrique et à l'ouest c'est l'Amérique. Pour les grecs de l'antiquité, ce qui faisait la limite entre les continents c'était les fleuves majeurs qui se jetaient dans le grand espace de mer qu'ils habitaient. L'Europe et l'Asie étaient séparées par un fleuve au nord de la Mer Noire et l'Asie et l'Afrique étaient séparées par le Nil. L'Egypte avait donc un pied en Asie du point de vue grec.

De nos jours il serait tout à fait possible d'inventer de nouveaux continents en s'amusant à redécouper le monde d'une autre manière. Suivre Remi Beral

Well, they aren't just European. They are also scholars and scientists from the Americas, from the Middle East, from East Asia, from South Asia, from Africa itself (yes, believe it or not North Africa is African). So, don't be Eurocentric on the pretext of fighting Eurocentrism, because that sounds unwittingly ironic.

As for the “Afro combs", since almost identical kinds of combs are also found in ancient archaeological sites from Europe, Middle East and East Asia, the most parsimonious explanation is that there were no specifically “Black African combs" back then nor anything particularly distinctive about the combs of Egypt, but just generic combs that were used for all the myriad of different hair textures that exists in the world.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-827cb27cde11b9b153195cf57bab2893-lq" * MERGEFORMATINET
Besides, we don't need to rely on speculations about combs when thanks to Egyptian mummification techniques we can actually see the hair texture of a lot of Egyptian people from Antiquity. The large majority of them seem to have had unmistakably Textures varying between straight, wavy and moderately curly (very common, in natural conditions, without chemicals, in modern North Africa, Middle East and Southern Europe). They were sometimes braided in complex ways with hair extensions, typical from Ancient Egypt (as in the reconstructed female’s face pictured above), but the underlying natural wavy to slightly curly texture is easily discernible in the root of the hair.

Even the presence of heavily coiled hair shouldn't come as a surprise and an undeniable signal of a Black African-majority genetic makeup in Ancient Egypt as a whole, because that hair texture is also found in non-negligible quantity in modern North Africa and Southwest Asia, and in fact even a relative minority of Black African input into Ancient Egyptians could introduce or increase the frequency of that feature in the local population.

So, there is no reason to believe those combs were specifically made to fit the needs of “Afro hair”. Who would they have been made for if the majority of mummified Egyptians don’t seem to have had naturally frizzy hair? Weren’t those mummies actually Egyptian in ethnnicity?

There must be much better arguments for proponents of a fully or mostly Negroid or Black African Ancient Egyptian population than this easily debunked “Afro comb" talking point.

Techniquement, le consensus est que la civilisation a commencé en Mésopotamie (Iraq), mais L'Égypte suit dans la foulée.

La civilisation est née dans le croissant fertile, dont L'Égypte est une extrémité, grâce à des conditions géographiques et climatiques très particulières. La Mésopotamie avait le Tigre et l'Euphrate, L'Égypte avait le Nil. Avec des terres très fertiles et des inondations annuelles, c'est le cocktail idéal pour l'agriculture. À noter que l'Europe a mis beaucoup plus de temps à découvrir l'agriculture et que c'est grâce à l'émigration massive à partir du Moyen Orient.

L'Afrique, c'est très très grand. Il y a des barrières naturelles (montagnes, déserts) qui sont des obstacles à la communication et à la diffusion d'idées.

L'Afrique n'a pas toujours été un continent sous développé. Il a connu des civilisations très riches et des histoires complexes qui sont encore méconnues en Europe, ce qui fait que certains peuvent affirmer par ignorance ou par omission volontaire qu'elle n'est jamais "entrée dans l'histoire" alors que ce sont eux qui, apparemment, ne sont jamais entrés dans certaines classes qui enseignent cette histoire ou n'ont jamais ouvert certains livres.

L'Occident a depuis longtemps exploité les richesses de ce continent et réduit une partie de sa population en esclavage. Elle n'avait aucun intérêt à lui reconnaître un brillant passé et à l'aider à se développer.

Ce continent immense à une particularité par rapport aux autres: il a toujours connu une grande variété de modes de vie. Si les cueilleurs chasseurs ont disparu d'Europe par exemple, il y en a toujours eu en Afrique. Par un effet de loupe, on réduit un continent à une partie de son histoire et de sa population.

Constantin François de Chassebœuf, count of Volney (1757 – 1820), traveled to Egypt in 1782–1783. Back in France he published 'Voyage en Egypte et en Syrie' (1787).
The book had illustrations made by him:

About the Egyptians, he names the "Copts", Volney wrote the following:

"All of them are puffy-faced, heavy-eyed and thick-lipped, in a word, real mulatto faces. I was tempted to attribute this to the climate until, on visiting the Sphinx, the look of it gave me the clue to the enigma. Beholding that head characteristically Negro in all its features, I recalled the well-known passage of Herodotus which reads: 'For my part I consider the Colchoi are a colony of the Egyptians because, like them, they are black-skinned and kinky-haired'. In other words the ancient Egyptians were true negroes of the same stock as all the autochthonous peoples of Africa and from that datum one sees how their race, after some centuries of mixing with the blood of Romans and Greeks, must have lost the full blackness of its original colour but retained the impress of its original mould. It is even possible to apply this observation very widely and posit in principle that physiognomy is a kind of record usable in many cases for disputing or elucidating the evidence of history on the origins of the peoples ..." La barrière construite par Israël le long de la frontière égyptienne a stoppé 99,9% de l'immigration illégale en provenance du Soudan et de l'Érythrée. L'armée égyptienne coopère avec Israël pour empêcher les franchissements illégaux de la frontière. Cette barrière, ainsi que les équipements de surveillance sophistiqués et la coopération avec la partie adverse, ont permis de réduire l'immigration illégale à quelques incidents isolés.

Il faut remonter au moins à l'antiquité. Je propose l'indépendance du nord de la Nubie lors de l'effondrement du Moyen empire égyptien. La frontière naturelle de l'Égypte est la 1ere cataracte (Assouan). Les terres au sud furent annexées pour exploiter l'or et contrôler les routes commerciales. On peut considérer que c'est une colonie je pense.

This is a good question. Well what we do know for sure is that the Nile flows from Ethiopia to Egypt. The Blue nile starts in the Ethiopian highlands (4000m above sea level) and is then fed into Lake Tana (1800m above sea level). It goes through Sudan to reach South Egypt (around 200m above sea level). Practically speaking it would make sense that civilization came from higher elevation.

Herodotus, a famous ancient greek historian that travelled the world, once said that ‘Egypt is a gift of the nile‘.

My theory is that Ancient Egypt was an offshoot of an Ancient Ethiopian empire that finally outmatched it. The astronomy, mathematics, engineering, etc.. that Ancient Egypt is known for would have first come from Ethiopia. I believe at the time the people were physically indistinguishable from one another. This would have been pre 10,500 BC. Then again who really knows what happened then.

Ethiopia was once a part of Egypt.

Egypt boarders changed many times through history.

This map shows the greatest space Egypt occupied one day, and it shows that Ethiopia was once part of it (1000 B.C)

Then the below one is Egypt today.

we have enough Educated Man Power to dedicate them for a specific fighters to Operate and Maintain it.

We have been doing this for 30 years.
Egyptian Armed Forces got an experience in Mixed Western and Eastern Camps weapons and systems.
Egypt got the best of both camps in Operation and Maintenance which most people won't understand because of their whole life dealing with one side.
So they know how to guide and control different types of Fighters and Aircraft to execute missions.

Libya actually did create a very advanced civilisation created by a group of Berber peoples called the Garamantes they were mostly situated within the South of Libya by Germa (Fez). Unfortunately not a lot of is known due to the political instability of the area but research in the area has picked up steam in the last few years.

This is a good question. Well what we do know for sure is that the Nile flows from Ethiopia to Egypt. The Blue nile starts in the Ethiopian highlands (4000m above sea level) and is then fed into Lake Tana (1800m above sea level). It goes through Sudan to reach South Egypt (around 200m above sea level). Practically speaking it would make sense that civilization came from higher elevation.

Herodotus, a famous ancient greek historian that travelled the world, once said that ‘Egypt is a gift of the nile‘. My theory is that Ancient Egypt was an offshoot of an Ancient Ethiopian empire that finally outmatched it. The astronomy, mathematics, engineering, etc.. that Ancient Egypt is known for would have first come from Ethiopia. I believe at the time the people were physically indistinguishable from one another. This would have been pre 10,500 BC. Then again who really knows what happened then.

Yes and no. The Greek “Ethiopia” is not the contemporary nation of “Ethiopia.” I think that confuses lots of people. When Greco-Roman writers such as Herodotus or Diodorus Siculus (writing nearly 400 years apart and including those other writers in between) stated that the Remetch (Ancient Egyptians) were colonists from “Ethiopia” the immediate civilization they were referencing was known as Nobatae/Noubatae/Nubia to the Greeks. Its location was contemporarily lower Sudan and Upper Kemet (Egypt in the south). At this time, the nation we currently know as “Ethiopia” had the kingdom of Axum that would Christianize and become Abyssinia. Axum would conquer Nubia/Nobatae (that had the city of Meroe in it) as it was on the verge of becoming a Christian kingdom under King Ezana who left a stone that chronicles his accounts on this and other matters.

However, the Greeks also used the term “Ethiopian” - “pan-Africanly” - to describe the physical features of black people who were not from “Nubia.” So you have them depicting black people in Turkey as “Ethiopian” describing Ancient Libyans as “Ethiopian,” even people from India were described as “Eastern Ethiopians” with different textured hair from “Ethiopians,” etc. So basically it became a term for primarily black people from where-ever and with dark skin toned Indians whom they perceived as culturally similar as well.

Dynastic Egyptians did not use the term “Ethiopian” or “Nubian” (well …relatively since Kemet had cities in Kemet named Nwb.t and the name has the same meaning) but used terms such as Kush, Yam, and …. Pwenet among many other names to refer to other African kingdoms from whence they state they migrated and with whom they traded, aligned, and even fought against.

Pwenet (believed to be the same reference as the Biblical Punt) was South of Kush (which had the same borders as the Greco-Roman writers’ Nubia). The Nswt (pharaoh) Hatshepsut chronicled a famed expedition to Pwenet from which she brought back baboons, incense trees, and even its queen and king. Hatshepsut also calls Pwenet as Ta-Netjer (Land of the Gods). Although scholars such as Budge have stated that Pwenet’s core was as far south as contemporary Uganda and expanded through the horn and beyond the Red Sea. What has been confirmed scientifically is that those baboons mummified in Kemet have a direct genetic connection to baboons in Eritrea and northern Ethiopia today. So, contemporary “Ethiopia” is too among the broader area of Africans south of Kemet being ancestral to the population of Kemet itself. So, you have the Greeks who essentially used “Ethiopian” in much the same ways we use “African” today but also with specificity to Nubia and the city of Meroe - er - much like sometimes people refer to all black or brown people in the Caribbean as being either “Jamaican” if they speak English, “Puerto Rican” if they speak Spanish, or “Haitian” if they speak French even though the entire Caribbean has other islands that speak English, French, Spanish as well as Dutch and Dutch Creole languages, and that goes beyond those three identities includes multiple ancestries from Africa, Asian, Indigenous Americans, and Europe.

So the confusing part would be to determine when the Greeks wrote of “Ethiopia” did they intend it as a direct reference to Nubians (Meroe formerly Kushites)? Did they mean it generically as any African people that directly populated Kemet? Did they mean it for any black person (or dark Indian person) they encountered in Western Asia? Did they mean it for any black person (or dark Indian person) they encountered in Europe? All of those more so than the current nation of Ethiopia which began using the name as a national identity the 1930s - which isn't totally wrong given the kingdoms of D'mt, Axum, Abyssinia, etc. are part of that broader "Ethiopian" usage by the Greeks even if most times they were referencing Meroe/Nubia (Sudan-Southern Egypt).

So, "yes" contemporary Ethiopia (and Eritrea) had its own ancient civilizations including Pwenet with direct contact and influence on Kemet as indicated by Kemety historical account and by genetic testing of mummified baboons (mind you this isn't the only civilization named by the Remetch as ancestral but it is one of them), and often times "no" as Greco-Roman writers frequently were speaking of "Nubia" (that contained the city of Meroe) as Ethiopia and that was geographically southern Egypt into northern Sudan at the same time as contemporary Ethiopia had Axum becoming Abyssinia who would conquer Nubia ultimately as the Romans couldn't do it. … But that's another story.

Egypt's Suez Canal Authority said the key waterway netted record revenues last year, despite the coronavirus pandemic and a six-day blockage by giant cargo ship the Ever Given.

Connecting the Red Sea and the Mediterranean, the canal accounts for roughly 10 percent of global maritime trade and is a source of much-needed foreign currency for Egypt.

In 2021, some 1.27 billion tons of cargo were shipped through the canal, earning $6.3 billion dollars (5.5 billion euros) in transit fees, 13 percent more than the previous year and the highest figures ever recorded, Suez Canal Authority (SCA) chief Osama Rabie said.

The number of ships using the canal rose from 18,830 in 2020 to 20,694 in 2021, or more than 56 ships per day, the SCA said in a statement.

In March, the Ever Given super tanker -- a behemoth with deadweight tonnage of 199,000 -- got stuck diagonally across the canal during a sandstorm.

A round-the-clock salvage operation took six days to dislodge it, and one employee of the SCA died during the rescue operation. Egypt lost some $12 million to $15 million each day during the canal closure, according to the SCA.

The Ever Given safely returned back through the canal without a hitch in August. In November, the SCA said it will hike transit tolls by six percent starting in 2022, but tourist vessels and liquefied natural gas carriers are be exempted. str-bam/sbh/pjm/fz Right… the war between Egypt and Yemen in the 1960s wouldn’t have happened.

The PLO’s attempted coup (1970) in Jordan wouldn’t have happened.

Lebanon’s civil war (1975–82) wouldn’t have happened.

The Syrian takeover of half of Lebanon (during the Lebanese civil war) wouldn’t have happened.

The Iran-Iraq war would never have happened.

Gulf Wars 1 & 2 would never have happened.

The Syrian civil war (2011-?) would never have happened.

Should I go on, or is this enough to prove the point that this question isn't exactly framed in any reality?

More than you have been told and taught.

The Nile Basin Initiative: Egypt is first and foremost a Nile-Land like 10 other African countries. The Nile Basin Initiative is not well known. The focus is always on the Saharan Divide, a complete farce and a racist fraud. The Sahara was never a barrier or a wall but always a bridge that has been crossed thanks to Trans-Saharan routes and the Nile River for Nile-Lands.

The farcical Saharan divide: The Saharan was not always a desert. Trans-Saharan populations like the Fulani are purposely omitted. Long distance trade and diplomacy between Egypt and "Sub-Saharan" countries is hardly talked about. Imperial Egypt was the largest empire in the 1800s. Its Equatoria province covered the Upper Nile region, including northeastern DRC and northwestern Uganda.

Exiled Egyptians : They are the descendants of ancient Egyptians who migrated south to West, Central, East and Southeasten Africa in order to escape Eurasian invasions and discrimination. There is documented evidence that the Dogon, the Mangbetu and Baule are the descendants of ancient Egyptians. There is a long list of clan names in the Great Lakes Region that are identical to the names of Egyptian Pharaohs.

Congo-Nile Divide: The Divide is where the basins of the River Nile and Congo River intersect. A statuette of Osiris and ancient Egyptian vases (canopy vases) were found in the DRC. The Congo-Nile Divide is the most likely explanation. Congolese and Egyptian authorities have been having talks on how to link the Congo and the River through hydro-projects in order to increase waster security in Egypt. The first project is dated 1902.

The Nile Basin Initiative (NBI) is an intergovernmental partnership of 10 Nile Basin countries, namely Burundi, DR Congo, Egypt, Ethiopia, Kenya, Rwanda, South Sudan, The Sudan, Tanzania and Uganda. Eritrea participates as an observer.

For the first time in the Basin's history, an all-inclusive basin-wide institution was established, on 22nd February, 1999, to provide a forum for consultation and coordination among the Basin States for the sustainable management and development of the shared Nile Basin water and related resources for win-win benefits.

How "African" was ancient Egyptian civilization? By juxtaposing visual evidence of common cultural features found in ancient Egypt and among African people across the continent, such as maternity images, headrests, masks, animal deities and symbols, body art, ancestor worship, depiction of the human form, circumcision, and male initiation, "Egypt in Africa" explores the highly controversial question of the African nature of ancient Egypt. Original contributions by 28 authors representing the perspectives of archaeology, art history, physical anthropology, African studies, Egyptology, Afrocentric studies, and classical studies present diverse and sometimes opposing viewpoints on aspects of this hotly contested topic. Among the contributors are Chike C. Aniakor, Molefi Kete Asante, Robert Steven Bianchi, Arthur P. Bourgeois, S. O. Y. Keita, Chapurukha M. Kusimba, Frank M. Snowden, Jr., and Frank J. Yurco.

These burial masks were made by the same lost-wax technique of casting; both are of gold and were intended for similar purposes. Among the Dogon, evidence can be grouped in a more uniform configuration. Denise Paulme has drawn parallels between the facades of African family dwellings and those of ancient Memphian and Theban houses. The appearance and motifs of the 14 "tower masks" recall the immense obelisk in Axum, Ethiopia. 15 Besides these analogies, there are similar mythical representations as well. Certain Dogon sculptures represent a couple, with the man's left hand always placed on the left shoulder of the woman.

Some of these variously stylized couples closely resemble the Pharaonic sculptures at the Barnes Foundation in the United States. Not every one of these works, but one characteristic series of them, is quite close to Egyptian sculpture. Dogon myths sometimes recall certain traits of Egyptian mythology. Nommo, a spirit who plays an essential role in Dogon cosmogony, is sacrificed to heaven; his body is hacked into five parts which are thrown, respectively, to the four cardinal points and to the center of the quadrangle. Osiris comes immediately to mind. Nommo, sometimes represented as a figure with uplifted arms imploring rain, evokes ideas of fertility and birth, of purification of the primeval realm, and of the life-force. The Egyptian hieroglyph ka, with two uplifted arms, represents man and his double. According to Alexandre Moret, this character has a determinative function in the hieroglyphic system. When placed next to another sign it defines the latter's class and elevates it to the sacred; it also unites and symbolizes ideas of generation, food, and life-forces.

Another parallel drawn by Denise Paulme reveals similarity between the Ashanti and Baule technique of hammering gold sheet metal onto a core of wood and the ancient Egyptian technique. The similarity can be seen in certain sculptures (called akuaba) carried by pregnant Ashanti women and in the copper, bronze, or wooden Egyptian mirrors fashioned in the New Empire style. Finally, some Baule masks undoubtedly recall Pharaonic figures. Numerous other analogies may be suggested. In Ife, among the Ashanti, the theme of the double human figure, probably associated with the worship of twins, is similar to that of some small Etruscan bronzes.

Egypt and Negro Africa by C.G. Seligman (1934)

If we look at the map of Africa and consider its deserts and forest belts, we see that there are three obvious routes by which Egyptian influence might reach the heart of Negroland-i.e. Upper Nile area, the Congo and the rainforest of the West. Further, when we examine the ethnological evidence we cannot but conclude that Egyptian ideas and technological devices reached both Equatorial and West Africa. This is perhaps least disputable on the technological side with regard to musical instruments. The routes in question are:

1. Up the White Nile, past its junction with the Blue Nile and southward along the River

2. Along the North African coastal belt to Tunis, ultimately reaching the area north of Senegal, but whether coastwise or south of the Atlas is not clear.

3. Up the Blue Nile, along the foothills of Abyssinia to what is now Uganda, and across the Great Lakes to the Congo

Here, too, is found an elaborate attempt at preservation of the royal body, which may well point back to mummification, while the “shooting the nations” by the king of Bakitara can scarcely be other than of Egyptian origin. West and somewhat north of the Lake area, the small harp of the Azande known as kundi so closely resembles that of ancient Egypt that there can be no doubt of genetic relationship, again, in the Belgian Congo such features as anthropoid coffins, and the enormous quantity of cloths in which a corpse is enveloped, clearly point to Egyptian influence. I think, too, that the belief in multiple souls, so common among the tribes of the north-flowing tributaries of the Congo, has the same origin.

So considered, the community in ideas and customs that I am about to set forth becomes most striking, and as we have just seen, we scarcely doubt that a number of the traits common to Ancient Egypt and our Eastern area arose in Egypt and were passed on to the Negroid tribes of the Nile Valley and the Negroes of the Congo.

Linking the Congo River to the Nile as Egypt's Other Alternative
Within the scope of two projects mentioned above, it is inevitable for Egypt to have an additional need for water. Adding rapidly growing population to the aforesaid projects, Egypt's dependence on the Nile River waters further increases. Continuation of the flow reaching Egypt does not seem likely to prevent the upstream countries from using the river water. It is assessed that linking the Nile to the Congo River, brought forward in the early 20th century to this end, might be brought up to the agenda again. The Congo River water amounts to 1000 billion cubic meters annually, and discharges approximately 14 times more amount of water than the Nile River. Transferring a certain amount of this water into the White Nile that originates at Lake Victoria through a canal to be opened is considered an important plan to increase the water flow.

The first plan was put forward by an Egyptian chief engineer Apata Pasha in Sudan in 1902, but failed to be implemented. No initiative was taken for the plan which was brought forward again by Mubarak in 1981 after he was elected as President of Egypt. Although Egypt's statements on the project seemed unfavorable, possibilities which currently seem utopian to meet the water demand in the future should be taken into consideration as well. Contribution from the Congo River, of which average flow rate is 41,000 cubic meters per second, to the Nile River, of which average flow rate is 2800 cubic meters per second, would eliminate the problems in the Nile river and especially make it possible for Egypt to carry out the projects mentioned above. You need to clarify your question. Are you talking about the geographical Aethiopia aforementioned in Hellenic mythology same as within Greek-Roman and early medieval European scholarly literature, or are you talking about the historical Abyssinia (present-day Ethiopia) ??

Because the answer would be that you need some clarifications about what is Aethiopia for the former, and of course not for the latter.

In Greek mythology, Aethiopia or "land of the burnt-faced people" meant generically the remote regions of the known world (e.g. the world whom the ancient Greeks were most familiar or lest heard from the telling of local or foreign mariners & traditions afar as early-to-mid Ist millenium BCE) lying south of Egypt; in other words the geo-historical polity of the same name - best known as Nubia by late Roman and European scientific literature, Cush for the Hebrews, Kasi (Kush) and Ta-Seti ("Land of the Bow") most interchangeably for ancient Egypt, then what modern scientific literature acknowledge now as respectively the historical A-Group Culture or "Second Nubian Culture" (3900 or 3800–3100BCE) and its impoverished successor period the so-called "B-Group Culture" (prior 2500BCE) , the C-Group Culture (2400 – ca. 1550BCE) , the Kerma Culture or Kerma Kingdom or Kush Kingdom prior its military annexation by the New Kingdom of Egypt (2500 – ca. 1550BCE) , the Egyptian-occupied Napatan period (ca. 1550–1069BCE) , the more-Egyptianized secessioned Kingdom of Kush or Kuluš in Meroitic language (1069BCE- ca. 350CE) from which originate the Egypto-Kushite forefathers of the short-lasting yet powerful XXVth Dynasty of Egypt or Kushite Empire (744-671BCE) and subdivize itself into two periods, so to speak a contuinity of the Napatan period (1069 to ca. 700–270BCE) followed by the Meroitic period (270BCE- ca. IInd-IIIrd centuries CE to ca. 350CE) , latter followed by the succession of various foreign occupations alike Christenized then latter Moslemized smaller local polities within medieval Nubia (ca. 400–1500CE) and its X-Group Culture period (ca. 300–600CE) - as well as subsaharian Africa under its mote vague geographical coining (by distinction to respectively Egypt or the Nile up north from the First Cataract, Lybia westward Egypt or Asia eastward the latter region) .

Nubia as a geo-historical and political entity meant the same thing with Aethiopia under the same denominators. Roman then latter Eutopean geographical literature merely interchanged between the two taxonyms because that region has been lately during its history populated by an massive afflux of Nilotic-speaking Nubas or Nobatae / Nobatians in Late Antiquity, who progressively drove away and/or assimilated the earlier Cushitic-speaking Kushites populating this area over several millenia. These ethnic Nubians, of Nilo-Sudanian stock (with some account of kinship to the mixed Berber-speaking Tehemu of Lower Nubia and Upper Lybia) and much darker complexion than their predecessors of mostly Cushitic stock, alike their mixed Nilo-Cushitic descendants, formed a major part of the latter Nilo-Saharian speaking and even a fewer Chadic speaking populations over subsaharian Africa (yet some interbreedings were due to latter subconsequent migrations of either these same populations alike the Abyssinians and other Cushitic speaking populations of the Horn in the tropical latitudes of interlacustrine Africa, Central Africa then the Eastern African seashore and their respective Cushitic, Pygmy/Khoisan, mixed Bantu-Cushitic or Bantu-Nilotic (or a mix of both) populations and vice versa, up from the Meroitic period to the course of the previous millenia.

Coming back to the subtopic of Greek mythos, Aethiopia meant the farthest extremities circumvoluting the known world as well: the westernmost edges of Lybia, the farthestmost regions of Scythia, the distant regions of Cimmeria and Hibernia, the Enchanted Isles of the Hesperides, Ogygia, the Hellespont and beyond, India, Chaldea, Elam, Assyria, the Levant, ancient Arabia, even *the Hades and its seven waterly affluents themselves were all never too far from Aethiopia from the perspective of the ancient Hellenes prior their intellectual expansion. Yet aside from the whole eschatological symbolism about the Aethiopians seen as a sometimes barely superhuman, sometimes even (because even race and color prejudices existed at those times) subhuman subrace of mighty Men and heroes dwelling at the cusp between the mortal realm and the invisible realms of the Olympian Gods (Poseidon and Hephaistos/Vulcan are often assumed to be the forefathers of the Aethiopians. The Lybians, a sister-kindred of the Aethiopians and Egyptians, have most oftentimes either a Giant bred from Gaea, Poseidon, Apollo, Artemis or Ares for forefather/s, whilst the Atlanteans or "people of Atlas" in Plato's Timaea, an another sister-kindred to the Aethiopians who possess a lot of commonality with respectively the Lybians, Egyptians and Pelasgians/Peoples of the Sea, don't even need to be specified about which one was their forefather. Most of the highest-frightening chtonic deities, monsters and sorceresses in the Greek world seems always to live in or nearby Aethiopia or being one way or another related or attuned to the people of those regions then most above all, about 2/3 of the Greek heroes and their respective bloodlines claims ancestry who hails back from eastward and/or southward the Mediterranean. Also, the Homerian Illiad mentions the Olympians like to take banquets amongst Aethiopians, even favouring these latter ones's appearances when it comes about cloaking their unearthly glory beneath the raiment of a still-glorious-yet-lesser human form… in other words when they are not invsting any random shape, identity or form for their own means or doesn't attempt to act like a bunch of jerkass meta-radioactive exhibitionists by revealing the fullest of their true form to these frail mortals like a well-known womanizer did one night to an overly curious Semele in some account, they pretty much look like the physical unearthly counterparts to Aethiopians) , it would also hint the Greeks long assumed that a major part of the Earth was predominantly populated by dark(er) complexioned populations going on from various tones of swarth(ier) to plainly jet-black skin colors… logical when it comes about the Mediterranean, the Near East and South Asia, not too far stretched about the Caucase and the Balkans and its sometimes dusky-complexioned populations at these times (matter-of-factly, the Colchidians of present-day Georgia claimed Egyptian and Aethiopian ancestry according Herodotus, whilst the vague matriarchal tribes in Minor Asia, the Danube and North Asia related to the Moschoi and the Sarmatians then assumed to be the legendary Amazons according the same Greek author, were assumed to be initially of Lybico-Egyptian ancestry as well) , could make sense about Bronze Age Western Europe and the Canary Islands, but Far Scythia?? Unless the ancient Greeks assumed the swarthy complexioned Euromongoloid and/or Paleo-Asian non-Iranic tribes who dwells in the toundra and Eurasian plains (or Hyperboreans for the connoiseurs) were "Burnt-faced" as well.

Historically speaking, a plethora of scientific evidence attests that Proto-Dynastic Egypt (4000 to 3400 - 3100BCE) , more especially the Princes of Abydos or "Dynasty 0" or Shemsu Hor "Followers of Horus" from which the founding ruler of Egypt Narmer/Menes hailed from, has been heavily influenced by the A-Group Culture as well as by the massive migrations of Saharian agropastoralists, the neighboring Berber-speaking populations west to the Nile and a migration of cattle-and-farm breeding Neolithic Afro-Asiatic speakers from the Near East (themselves descending back from earlier Proto-Afro-Asiatic speakers coming from Northeast Africa) . Studies led on the embalmed bodies of the A-Group culture natives were physically akin to the ancient Egyptians, who themselves and their modern descendants (the modern Fellahin, Saidis, Baladis and Copts) were (and still are) genetically akin to the Cushitic Proto-Somalis and of "Hamitic" (a taxonym to cautiously tackle) or "Ethiopid" stock (same as the Cushites, Berbers, Chadic-speaking populations, the ancient Canaanites/Phoenicians, the mixed Semitic/Canaanite - latter part Berber - Carthaginians, plausibly the earliest generations of Chaldeans then the Hymiarites/ancient Yemenis) , yet the Princes of Abydos alike the Dynastic then Old Kingdom period pharaohs were phenotypically closer to the Nilotic populations yet a mix of both Egyptian and Nilotic ancestry, genetically speaking. The B-Group and C-Group culture natives were from Cushitic stock (with minor Berber admixtures for the latter culture) while the X-Group natives were strongly admixtured with "Negroid" (an another taxonym to tackle cautiously) elements. Whom to the Proto-Dynastic Princes of Lower-Egypt, they were equally of Egyptian stock but strongly admixtured with Berber and Neolithic Asiatic (the famous cattle/farm breeding migrants) elements.

Still, regardless the age of Kush as a polity, both the Egyptians and Kushites long assumed that the formers were the descendants of colonists sent up north of the First Cataract by the latter ones and other akin ethnic Aethiopian ethnos from the very Sources of the Nile, claiming that ofall the ruler-gods of Nile nobility from being the descendants of a semi-mythical tribe native from the foothills of the Mountains of the Moon (Mounts Rwenzori, in Middle Africa) called the Anu, who might have migrated north of the ancestral homeland about 10,000+ years before our days. In any case, the Egyptians assumed their state was a successor state to some protohistorical polity or culture rooted back from the South. In one way, Kush was somehow older than the Egyptian state.

By cross-referencing their semi-fantastical kinglist to ancient kinglists dating from the Aksumite period, then by separating the folklore part from historical data, the "Solomonid" Abyssinian Empire or modern Kingdom of Ethiopia regardless what their theological propaganda (and some blindfully god-fearing Rastafari or "Hebrew Israelites" "history experts" on the World Wide Web would suggest) considers itself to be the successor state of respectively pharaonic Egypt, the Kingdom of Kush until early IInd century CE and the pre-Islamic South Arabian Kingdoms (Himyar, Sheba/Saba, Hadramaut, etc) with some affinity dating back to the Kingdom of Juda via the late implantations of minor branches of Egyptian and Mizrahi Jew Exilarchies alike of Diasporic Jews from the Mear Eastern and the Graecian-Roman world in the vicinities of the Tigray valley and the Tana Lake region. The Habesha ethnic groups has been first mentioned within the native populations of the Land of Punt in Egyptian texts dating back from ca. 2000BCE, has been Ethiosemiticized as early as Ist millenium BCE, then blah-blah-blah, the Aksum Kingdom has been founded ca. 400BCE, blah-blah-blah— I'm sorry but it's been six hours I'm writing off and I get impatient.

The fact is, the kingdom of Ethiopia is much younger than Egypt, Egypt is culturally younger than geographical Aethiopia but about the same age than Kush as a polity. The end.

The main issue is water. The growing populations of the 4 countries involved are about 350 million people. Also, the animals, and industry (and tourism) need water. A war between these 3 (or 4 countries) will not solved the problem.

The capacity of the NILE - can no longer cope with the increasing need for drinking and clean water. The new Ethiopian dam is only part of the problem - over- population is the basic problem.

So, instead of even thinking about a WAR - and this is a war that both Egypt and Ethiopia would lose…. and even if one side won the war -this still doesn't solve the water problem.

So, here is the solution:- With the help of the UN, or the USA as mediators - A deal & project is born:- 1/5 of the electricity generated by the new Renaissance Dam - in Ethiopia is sent 540 kms to the East to power 5 massive & new Desalination plants -on the Red Sea, that will supply clean water to about 50% of the populations of Ethiopia, Egypt, Sudan & South Sudan. All these countries will take out loans with the World Bank [or similar] to pay of the desal-plants, and the new railway(s) that will carry the clean water to each country. {A railway is cheaper that pumping the water over 2000 kms}, and this same railway complex will also serve industry, tourism and the locals.

Each country will have her own plant - and pay some rent to Ethiopia - but get the electricity for free… and this desalinated water will then supplement the falling NILE river and allow new towns, industry and tourism to flourish.

Security for the desal-plants, the trains and the electric pylons will be run by an international force of the four countries involved.

This project will avoid the next water-war - that is sure to come if Egypt is 'dried up' by Ethiopian politics.

Yes and no.

The Greek “Ethiopia” is not the contemporary nation of “Ethiopia.” I think that confuses lots of people. When Greco-Roman writers such as Herodotus or Diodorus Siculus (writing nearly 400 years apart and including those other writers in between) stated that the Remetch (Ancient Egyptians) were colonists from “Ethiopia” the immediate civilization they were referencing was known as Nobatae/Noubatae/Nubia to the Greeks. Its location was contemporarily lower Sudan and Upper Kemet (Egypt in the south). At this time, the nation we currently know as “Ethiopia” had the kingdom of Axum that would Christianize and become Abyssinia. Axum would conquer Nubia/Nobatae (that had the city of Meroe in it) as it was on the verge of becoming a Christian kingdom under King Ezana who left a stone that chronicles his accounts on this and other matters.

However, the Greeks also used the term “Ethiopian” - “pan-Africanly” - to describe the physical features of black people who were not from “Nubia.” So you have them depicting black people in Turkey as “Ethiopian” describing Ancient Libyans as “Ethiopian,” even people from India were described as “Eastern Ethiopians” with different textured hair from “Ethiopians,” etc. So basically it became a term for primarily black people from where-ever and with dark skin toned Indians whom they perceived as culturally similar as well.

Dynastic Egyptians did not use the term “Ethiopian” or “Nubian” (well …relatively since Kemet had cities in Kemet named Nwb.t and the name has the same meaning) but used terms such as Kush, Yam, and …. Pwenet among many other names to refer to other African kingdoms from whence they state they migrated and with whom they traded, aligned, and even fought against.

Pwenet (believed to be the same reference as the Biblical Punt) was South of Kush (which had the same borders as the Greco-Roman writers’ Nubia). The Nswt (pharaoh) Hatshepsut chronicled a famed expedition to Pwenet from which she brought back baboons, incense trees, and even its queen and king. Hatshepsut also calls Pwenet as Ta-Netjer (Land of the Gods). Although scholars such as Budge have stated that Pwenet’s core was as far south as contemporary Uganda and expanded through the horn and beyond the Red Sea. What has been confirmed scientifically is that those baboons mummified in Kemet have a direct genetic connection to baboons in Eritrea and northern Ethiopia today. So, contemporary “Ethiopia” is too among the broader area of Africans south of Kemet being ancestral to the population of Kemet itself. So, you have the Greeks who essentially used “Ethiopian” in much the same ways we use “African” today but also with specificity to Nubia and the city of Meroe - er - much like sometimes people refer to all black or brown people in the Caribbean as being either “Jamaican” if they speak English, “Puerto Rican” if they speak Spanish, or “Haitian” if they speak French even though the entire Caribbean has other islands that speak English, French, Spanish as well as Dutch and Dutch Creole languages, and that goes beyond those three identities includes multiple ancestries from Africa, Asian, Indigenous Americans, and Europe.

So the confusing part would be to determine when the Greeks wrote of “Ethiopia” did they intend it as a direct reference to Nubians (Meroe formerly Kushites)? Did they mean it generically as any African people that directly populated Kemet? Did they mean it for any black person (or dark Indian person) they encountered in Western Asia? Did they mean it for any black person (or dark Indian person) they encountered in Europe? All of those more so than the current nation of Ethiopia which began using the name as a national identity the 1930s - which isn’t totally wrong given the kingdoms of D’mt, Axum, Abyssinia, etc. are part of that broader “Ethiopian” usage by the Greeks even if most times they were referencing Meroe/Nubia (Sudan-Southern Egypt).

Except from EA Wallis Budge’s work “A Short History of Egypt” Ezana Stone: HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Ezana_Stone" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Ezana Stone - Wikipedia

So, “yes” contemporary Ethiopia (and Eritrea) had its own ancient civilizations including Pwenet with direct contact and influence on Kemet as indicated by Kemety historical account and by genetic testing of mummified baboons (mind you this isn’t the only civilization named by the Remetch as ancestral but it is one of them), and often times “no” as Greco-Roman writers frequently were speaking of “Nubia” (that contained the city of Meroe) as Ethiopia and that was geographically southern Egypt into northern Sudan at the same time as contemporary Ethiopia had Axum becoming Abyssinia who would conquer Nubia ultimately as the Romans couldn't do it. … But that's another story.

Le califat Umayyad in 750 AD.

Après l'émergence de l'Islam, les tribus arabes unifiées derrière un seul dieu, ont formé des armées et ont conquis, converti et colonisé un territoire de plus de 10 millions de kilomètres carrés. En Afrique du Nord, il y existe toujours ces divisions ; plus particulièrement au Maroc, en Algérie entre les Arabes qui ont conquis les villes sur la côte et les tribus berbères natives de la région qui sont plus nombreux dans les montagnes.

Israel had invested a lot in Taba. It wasn't really a town, it was a tourist spot directly adjacent to the Israeli resort city of Eilat and served by the Israeli utility infrastructures. Not big enough for much more than one impressive hotel (which the Israelis built).

Whether Taba belonged historically in Israel or was part of the Sinai depended on whose map you used. Both Israel and Egypt could show documentation to support their claims.

Eventually Shimon Peres ceded Taba (by agreeing to phrase an arbitration question in a way that favored Egypt), apparently in return for Hosni Mubarak's consent to hold a now long-forgotten summit meeting.

Israel had invested a lot in Taba. It wasn't really a town, it was a tourist spot directly adjacent to the Israeli resort city of Eilat and served by the Israeli utility infrastructures. Not big enough for much more than one impressive hotel (which the Israelis built).

Whether Taba belonged historically in Israel or was part of the Sinai depended on whose map you used. Both Israel and Egypt could show documentation to support their claims.

Eventually Shimon Peres ceded Taba (by agreeing to phrase an arbitration question in a way that favored Egypt), apparently in return for Hosni Mubarak's consent to hold a now long-forgotten summit meeting.

Without getting into the problematic phrase "sub-Saharan Africa," we do find monumental architecture in Africa outside of Egypt. But we have to look very, very hard for it, and most of it doesn't look very impressive because most African societies preferred to build in materials which don't preserve well.

For example, the great mosque at Timbucktoo is about as monumental a building as one could hope for, the walls of Benin are one of the world's great defensive structures, and there are signs of vast agricultural modifications made around the Congo river. However, characteristically, substantial portions are made out of quite perishable materials like wood and dried earth or are in locations with dreadful preservation conditions (large parts of West Africa have absurdly bad conditions for archaeological preservation). We known from historical accounts that a number of African societies built large, sprawling settlements, but since they were constructed of earth, perishable plant-based materials, and even cultivated thorn bushes used as barriers and dividers, they didn't survive their makers and they're hard to find traces of today, which compounds the problem that large parts of Africa remain archaeologically under-explored. It's possible to find remains of occasional stone buildings like Great Zimbabwe and Ethiopia's substantial tradition of rock-cut monasteries, but for the most part Africans preferred other materials. They clearly could have built in stone, because sometimes they did, so we must conclude that didn't build anything like the pyramids because they didn't want to.

Termites, mostly. The hot climate encouraged people to build in wood and adobe, but the moist air and termites meant such structures didn't last. They also eat paper records (and a lot of African societies didn't have writing anyway). The rise of Islamist fanatics who destroyed old libraries didn't help.

It is too often forgotten that, when the Europeans emerged and began to extend themselves into the broader world of Africa and Asia during the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, they would colonize world scholarship, mainly to show or imply that Europeans were the only creators of what could be called civilization. In order to accomplish this, the Europeans had to forget, or pretend to forget, all they previously knew about Africa—John Henrik Clarke.

Self-inflicted historical amnesia. There is no other reason.

A Swahili ship pilot from the East African coast guided Vasco da Gama to India. Advanced city-states along the Swahili coast traded with Asia as far as China. There is documented evidence of a giraffe given as a gift to Imperial China from one of the Swahili rulers.

The Monomotapa Empire of southern Africa had trade links in Asia as far as China. Chinese porcelain was excavated as far as South Africa. It is still a mystery why the oldest gold mining town in Australia is named Sofala. Sofala was the main seaport of the Empire in present day Mozambique.
Somalia had trade and diplomatic relationship with China. Between the 14th and 17th centuries, the Ajuran Sultanate centered in modern-day Somalia practiced hydraulic engineering and developed new systems for agriculture and taxation, which continued to be used in parts of the Horn of Africa as late as the 19th century.

In 1525, Afonso I, king of Kongo, seized a French ship and arrested its crew because it was trading illegally on the Loango coast. The incident probably explains why a guide for French shippers in the central African region of about 1530 cautioned all who traded there not to pass any village but to wait for a boat to come to them from the shore and bring royal permission from Kongo.

For hundreds of years, the kingdoms of Benin, Dahomey, Kongo, Oyo and Songhay produced exquisite works of art – illustrated manuscripts, sculptures and statuary – developed complex state mechanisms, and built diplomatic links to Europe, North Africa and the Americas

The Kingdom of Kongo had embassies in Rome (with the Papacy), in Holland (with the Dutch Court), in Lisbon and in Brazil. The Kingdom of Kongo converted to Christianity in 1491, before the "discovery" of America by Columbus.

The most common answer to the question, "Why was Africa called the Dark Continent?" is that Europe did not know much about Africa until the 19th century. But that answer is misleading and disingenuous. Europeans had known quite a lot about Africa for at least 2,000 years, but because of powerful imperial impulses, European leaders began purposefully ignoring earlier sources of information.

At the same time, the HYPERLINK "http://www.bbc.co.uk/history/british/abolition/" \o "www.bbc.co.uk" \t "_blank" campaign against enslavement and for missionary work in Africa actually intensified Europeans' racial ideas about African people in the 1800s. They called Africa the Dark Continent, because of the mysteries and the savagery they expected to find in the interior.

Exploration: Creating Blank Spaces

It is true that up until the 19th century, Europeans had little direct knowledge of Africa beyond the coast, but their maps were already filled with details about the continent. HYPERLINK "https://www.thoughtco.com/african-history-4133338" \o "www.thoughtco.com" \t "_blank" African kingdoms had been trading with Middle Eastern and Asian states for over two millennia. Initially, Europeans drew on the maps and reports created by earlier traders and explorers like the famed Moroccan traveler HYPERLINK "https://www.thoughtco.com/ibn-battuta-biography-travels-4172920" \o "www.thoughtco.com" \t "_blank" Ibn Battuta , who traveled across the Sahara and along the North and East coasts of Africa in the 1300s.

During the Enlightenment, however, Europeans developed new standards and tools for mapping, and since they weren't sure precisely where the lakes, mountains, and cities of Africa were, they began erasing them from popular maps. Many scholarly maps still had more details, but due to the new standards, the HYPERLINK "https://www.thoughtco.com/european-exploration-of-africa-43734" \o "www.thoughtco.com" \t "_blank" European explorers —Burton, Livingstone, Speke, and Stanley—who went to Africa were credited with (newly) discovering the mountains, rivers, and kingdoms to which African people guided them.

The maps these explorers created did add to what was known, but they also helped create the myth of the Dark Continent. The phrase itself was actually popularized by the British explorer HYPERLINK "https://www.thoughtco.com/henry-morton-stanley-1773821" \o "www.thoughtco.com" \t "_blank" Henry M. Stanley, who with an eye to boosting sales titled one of his accounts "Through the Dark Continent," and another, "In Darkest Africa." However, Stanley himself recalled that before he left on his mission, he had read over 130 books on Africa.

Imperialism and Duality

Imperialism was global in the hearts of western businessmen in the 19th century, but there were subtle differences between the imperialist hunger for Africa compared to other parts of the world. Most empire-building begins with the recognition of trading and commercial benefits that could be accrued. In Africa's case, the continent as a whole was being annexed to fulfill three purposes: the spirit of adventure, the desire to support good work of "civilizing the natives," and the hope of stamping out the trade of enslaved people. Writers such as H. Ryder Haggard, Joseph Conrad, and Rudyard Kipling fed into the romantic depiction of a place that required saving by strong men of adventure.

An explicit duality was set up for these adventurers: dark versus light and Africa versus West. The African climate was said to invite mental prostration and physical disability; the forests were seen as implacable and filled with beasts; and crocodiles lay in wait, floating in sinister silence in the great rivers. Danger, disease, and death were part of the uncharted reality and the exotic fantasy created in the minds of armchair explorers. The idea of a hostile Nature and a disease-ridden environment as tinged with evil was perpetrated by fictional accounts by Joseph Conrad and W. Somerset Maugham.

18th-Century Black Activists and Missionaries

By the late 1700s, British 18th-century Black activists were campaigning hard against HYPERLINK "https://www.thoughtco.com/african-slavery-101-44535" \o "www.thoughtco.com" \t "_blank" the practice of enslavement in England. They published pamphlets described the horrid brutality and inhumanity of enslavement on plantations. One of the most famous images showed a Black man in chains asking “ HYPERLINK "http://www.bbc.co.uk/history/british/abolition/abolition_tools_gallery_06.shtml" \o "www.bbc.co.uk" \t "_blank" Am I not a man and a brother? ”

Once the British Empire abolished enslavement in 1833, however, Black activists turned their efforts against the practice within Africa. In the colonies, the British were also frustrated that former formerly enslaved people didn’t want to keep working on plantations for very low wages. Soon the British were portraying African men not as brothers, but as lazy idlers or evil traders of enslaved people.

At the same time, missionaries began traveling to Africa to bring the word of God. They expected to have their work cut out for them, but when decades later they still had few converts in many areas, they began saying that African people’s hearts were unreachable, "locked in darkness." These people were different from westerners, said the missionaries, closed off from the saving light of Christianity.

The Heart of Darkness

Africa was seen by the explorers as an erotically and psychologically powerful place of darkness, one that could only be cured by a direct application of Christianity and, of course, capitalism. Geographer Lucy Jarosz describes this stated and unstated belief clearly: Africa was seen as "a primeval, bestial, reptilian, or female entity to be tamed, enlightened, guided, opened, and pierced by white European males through western science, Christianity, civilization, commerce, and colonialism."

By the 1870s and 1880s, European traders, officials, and adventurers were going to Africa to seek their fame and fortune, and recent developments in weaponry gave these men significant power in Africa. When they abused that power—especially in the HYPERLINK "https://www.thoughtco.com/congo-free-state-atrocities-rubber-regime-43731" \o "www.thoughtco.com" \t "_blank" Congo —Europeans blamed the Dark Continent, rather than themselves. Africa, they said, was what supposedly brought out the savagery in man.

The Myth Today

Over the years, people have given lots of reasons why Africa was called the Dark Continent. Many people think it is a racist phrase but can't say why, and the common belief that the phrase just referred to Europe's lack of knowledge about Africa makes it seem out-dated, but otherwise benign.

Race does lie at the heart of this myth, but it is not about skin color. The myth of the Dark Continent referred to the savagery that Europeans said was endemic to Africa, and even the idea that its lands were unknown came from erasing centuries of pre-colonial history, contact, and travel across Africa. HYPERLINK "

Romans in Sub-Saharan Africa – Wikipedia

Roman expeditions to Sub-Saharan Africa west of the Nile river Between the first century BC and the fourth century AD, several expeditions and explorations to Lake Chad and western Africa were conducted by groups of military and commercial units of Romans who moved across the Sahara and into the interior of Africa and its coast. The primary motivation for the expeditions was to secure sources of gold and spices. [1] Characteristics [edit] The Romans organized expeditions to cross the Sahara along five different routes: All these expeditions were supported by legionaries and had mainly a commercial purpose. Only the one conducted by emperor Nero seemed to be a preparative for the conquest of Ethiopia or Nubia ; in 62 AD, two legionaries explored the sources of the Nile . [3] One of the main objectives of the explorations was to locate and obtain gold , using camels to transport it overland back to Roman provinces on the Mediterranean coast. [4] The explorations near the coasts were supported by Roman ships and deeply related to overseas commerce. Main explorations [edit] The Romans conducted five main explorations: two in the western Sahara, two in the central Sahara, and one in the area of Lake Chad . Western Sahara expeditions [edit] In western Sahara there were two Roman expeditions, just south of the Atlas mountains : Cornelius Balbus expedition : [5] According to Pliny, the first Roman expedition through the Sahara was the one led by Cornelius Balbus , who in 19 BC probably reached the Niger River near Timbuktu . He embarked from Libyan Sabratha and with ten thousand legionaries conquered the Garamantes capital in Fezzan . He then sent a small group of his legionaries further south across the Ahaggar Mountains to explore the \"land of the lions.\" There they found the Niger River, which in their opinion flowed into the Nile River. In 1955, Roman coins and ceramics were found in the area of Mali . Suetonius Paulinus expedition : The second was done in the year 41 AD by Suetonius Paulinus , a Roman Consul, who was the first of the Romans who led an army across the Atlas range. At the end of ten days' march he reached the mountains summit covered by snow and later he arrived at a river called Gerj. He then penetrated into the semi deserted country south of Morocco and some of his legionaries probably went near the river Daras (modern Senegal river). From the first century AD there is evidence (coins and fibulae) of Roman commerce and contacts in Akjoujt and Tamkartkart near Tichit in Mauritania . Central Sahara expeditions [edit] The two main explorations/expeditions in the central Sahara were: Flaccus expedition : During the reign of Augustus , Lake Chad was a huge lake and two Roman expeditions were carried out in order to reach it: Septimius Flaccus and Julius Maternus reached the \"lake of hippopotamus\" (as Lake Chad was called by Ptolemy). They moved from coastal Tripolitania and passed near the Tibesti mountains. Both did their exp

He then sent a small group of his legionaries further south across the Ahaggar Mountains to explore the "land of the lions." There they found the Niger River, which in their opinion flowed into the Nile River. In 1955, Roman coins and ceramics were found in the area of Mali . Suetonius Paulinus expedition : The second was done in the year 41 AD by Suetonius Paulinus , a Roman Consul, who was the first of the Romans who led an army across the Atlas range. At the end of ten days' march he reached the mountains summit covered by snow and later he arrived at a river called Gerj. He then penetrated into the semi deserted country south of Morocco and some of his legionaries probably went near the river Daras (modern Senegal river). From the first century AD there is evidence (coins and fibulae) of Roman commerce and contacts in Akjoujt and Tamkartkart near Tichit in Mauritania . Les pyramides sont des bâtiments construits pendant l'Egypte Antique, donc environ dans les années 3000-2500 Avant JC (il y a 5000 ans).

Vu leurs impressionnantes tailles, on pourrait croire que les pyramides sont des gigantesques palais où vivaient les pharaons (les rois égyptiens).

Mais pas du tout.

Les pyramides sont en réalité des tombeaux destinés aux pharaons et à leur famille.

À leur mort, les pharaons étaient momifiés (entouré de sparadrap), puis mis dans des sarcophages avec leurs richesses à l'intérieur de la pyramide.

C'était censé leur faciliter le passage vers l'après vie.

(Des gigantesques bâtiments en guise de cercueil ! Ils ne seraient pas un peu narcissiques les pharaons ?)

Si impressionnantes que ça les Pyramides ?

En Egypte on retrouve plus de 100 pyramides, mais la plus célèbre est la pyramide de Khéops (tombeau présumé du pharaon Khéops).

La pyramide de Khéops est non seulement la plus grande, mais elle fait également partie des 7 merveilles du monde.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-d55d0f8102468c2f5595baf51c66ded0-pjlq" * MERGEFORMATINET
Aujourd'hui, on a l'habitude de voir des gratte-ciel et des gigantesques monuments.

Mais à l'époque, il n'y avait pas de grues, de tractopelles…

Les moyens utilisés étaient comment dire ? Un peu rudimentaires.

Pour vous montrer à quel point la pyramide de Khéops est impressionnante regardez ça.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-41c6155f9ec923a72f94368b746738a2" * MERGEFORMATINET

L'Homme paraît minuscule, mais c'est bien l'Homme qui a construit ces monuments sans technologies.

La pyramide de Khéops est composée de + 2 millions de blocs de pierre.

Et chaque block de pierre pèse environ 2.5 tonnes.

La pyramide pèse donc environ 5 millions de tonnes.

Ça fait 5 000 000 000 kg, soit 62 millions de fois le poids moyen d'un homme.

Maintenant vous comprenez pourquoi jusqu'à aujourd'hui, on ne comprend pas entièrement comment des humains ont réussi à les construire sans les technologies qu'on possède aujourd'hui.

D'où viennent les blocs de pierre ?

Bon, vous l'avez compris la construction des pyramides relève de l'exploit.

Mais même si on ne sait pas exactement comment ils ont fait, on a compris certains des moyens qu'ils ont utilisés grâce à un vieux rouleau de papyrus retrouvé.

Les Egyptiens ont utilisé les blocs de pierre qu'ils trouvaient à proximité des lieux de construction.

Mais les pyramides sont composées de millions de blocs de pierre, donc tu imagines bien qu'il n'y en avait pas assez. ♂

Ils sont donc partis en chercher plus loin, puis les ont transportés en bateau le long du Nil.

Ils ont ensuite créé des bassins d'eau artificiels, pour pouvoir rapprocher les blocs de pierre en bateau jusqu'au lieu de construction.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-d55c3e72999f0c48a784a59dfe7546d9-pjlq" * MERGEFORMATINET
Plutôt ingénieux les Égyptiens.

Comment ont-ils monté les blocs de pierre ?

C'est sûrement le plus grand exploit des pyramides : monter des blocs de pierre de 2 tonnes à + 100 mètres de hauteur.

Les ouvriers lorsqu'ils ont vu les blocs de 2.5 tonnes.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-96cfcf5eb98d6e2a0a3a2c0157572cfb" * MERGEFORMATINET
Encore une fois, on ne sait pas exactement comment ils ont fait.♂

Il y a énormément de théories, comme celle qui suppose que les Egyptiens avaient inventé des sortes de tractopelles en bois. Mais aucune preuve tangible à l'appui. □

La seule théorie qui tient la route, est la théorie des rampes.

Des vestiges de rampes ont été trouvés au pied de certaines pyramides.

Les Egyptiens auraient alors utilisé des rampes, qu'ils auraient humidifiées, pour y faire glisser les blocs de pierre.

Mais ça reste une théorie, et pour certains détails techniques, ces rampes n'auraient pas pu servir à acheminer tous les blocs de pierre.

Donc concrètement, ça fait 4500 ans que les pyramides ont été construites, et on va encore devoir attendre avant de comprendre comment.

De nombreuses théories ont vu le jour et d'autres vont bientôt naître.

Comme promis, certaines des théories les plus farfelues sur les pyramides (des personnes y croient dur comme fer) :

Elles ont été construites par des extraterrestres en guise de balise d'atterrissage.

Les pyramides sont des vestiges de la cité perdue d'Atlantide.
Les pyramides sont une prédiction de la fin du monde.
Elles sont un modèle de construction de l'arche de Noé.
Ce sont de gigantesques centrales électriques. (EDF ?)

Ça dépends. Si c'est un Marocain du Maroc, oui car au Maroc, les gens ont toujours été exposés à la culture égyptienne, que ce soit au cinéma, la télévision et la musique. Les chanteurs égyptiens des années 40 et 50 comme Oum Kalthoum, Abdelhalim Hafez ou Mohammed Abdelwahab sont les équivalents arabes d'Edith Piaf ou de Frank Sinatra pour tout le Maghreb et le Moyen-Orient. Donc les Marocain(e)s non seulent comprennent tres bien le dialecte égyptien, mais ils peuvent aussi le parler. L'inverse par contre est moins évident, car le cinéma et les chansons du Maghreb n'ont jamais fait connaitre le même engouement (cela change depuis quelques années grace aux médias sociaux et à une nouvelle génération d'artistes maghrébins qui s'imposent au Moyen-Orient comme le controversé Saad Lamjarred). Et aussi les Egyptiens qui vivent en France ou dans des pays avec une grosse communauté maghrébine ou marocaine, et qui finissent par comprendre le dialecte marocain à force de fréquenter des Marocains, Algériens ou Tunisiens.

Pour les Marocains ou Maghrébins nés en Europe, c'est moins évident, car ils sont plus exposés aux dialectes arabes de leur pays d'origine, et pas trop aux dialectes arabes d'Egypte ou du Moyen-Orient. La plupart des français d'origine maghrébines ne comprennent pas du tout les dialectes orientaux, même si ils

Akhenaton and Nefertiti carved by modern Egyptians

Everyday Egyptians does not acknowledge the division of ‘ancient’ and ‘modern’ Egypt. There is a political, cultural and genetic continuity between ancient and modern Egyptians. Egyptians are aware that they founded the oldest continuing state on earth. The pride in their ancient past is unmistakably vivid in their life. Although, Egypt is one of the leaders of Pan-Arab ideology, Egyptians feel that they are culturally and genetically distinct from the people in Arabia.

As to the 'cultural distinction' — it is true that Egyptians have always held a position of 'exceptionalism' within the Arab region. Egypt has been the cultural and intellectual heart of the Arab World — the center of art; the center of music; the center of literature; the center of cinema; the center of poetry; etc., to the point where the Egyptian dialect of Arabic has become a lingua franca in the Arab World. What happens in Egypt affects the surrounding Arab countries more often than not and its position as 'leader of the Arabs' (especially during the Nasser era 1952-1970) is something other Arabs acknowledge.

This exceptionalism can be attributed to several different reasons — it is the oldest continuous national identity and thus has never had to deal with sectarianism and ethnic conflict like its neighbors; its geography (Egypt is the nexus of Africa and the Middle East and is thus right at the center of the Arab World); or it's geo-strategic position (Suez canal, Red Sea, etc.) which means it was often courted and occupied by foreign powers.

Whatever the reasons, it is true that there is a certain 'Egyptian exceptionalism' when it comes to culture, and Egyptians are very aware of it. It is part of the modern Egyptian identity. This position of intellectual leadership within the Arab World, coupled with the long and storied past of Ancient Egypt makes for a very formidable and domineering national consciousness in Egyptians. This consciousness was bridled at the height of Arab nationalism and unity in the '50-'60s but the cost of several exhaustive wars meant that Arab nationalism experienced a backlash in Egypt, and Egypt's relationship and position within the Arab World was put into question. In times of crisis and polarization, national identity is heightened and many Egyptians feel that they should 'break away' from the Arab sphere and celebrate their own, individual Egyptian identity, instead of being subsumed into the pan-Arab identity.

It is noteworthy to mention that Egyptians feel that Arabs are half-Egyptian because HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Hagar_in_Islam" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Hagar , Abraham's second wife, gave birth to Ishmael that Muhammad, Islam's last prophet, has directly descended from.

The ancient Egyptians considered lettuce to be a symbol of what?
HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/profile/Steve-Theodore" \t "_blank"
Steve Theodore Antiquarian Oct 22

This is an NSFW answer, and a bit… wierd.
Egyptian lettuce tends to ooze a milky substance if you break a stalk. This was somewhat, uh, suggestive to ancient Egyptian minds.

Here's a pharoah (at right) offering two heads of lettuce (Egyptian style lettuce, like romaine, is tall rather than round) to the fertility god HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Min_(god)" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Min — who is, in a complex roundabout way, also Horus — who responds quite visibly. From the temple of Abu Simbel. Photo: HYPERLINK "https://www.voyagevirtuel.co.uk/egypt/photo/abou-simbel-n6.php" \o "www.voyagevirtuel.co.uk" \t "_blank" C. Rozay

More importantly, that suggestion got included in the set of stories involving Horus, Set, Isis and Osiris. The whole thing gets complex.

Lettuce plays a key role in the interesting face-off between the rival gods Horus and Set. Set tries to claim dominion over Horus by having intercrural sex with him while he sleeps. Horus wakes up and catches his rival's semen in his hands — but Isis is scandalized and cuts off Horus's hands as a result. This degradation threatens Horus's claim on the throne of Egypt. Isis, however, tricks Set into eating some of Horus's semen hidden in a milky-lettuce leaf. This is even more emasculating — not only does the revelation of this trick scuppered Set's claims to power, Set actually becomes pregnant and gives "birth" to a solar disk through his forehead.

This is, I should add, merely a greatest-hits reel of the Horus-Set-Isis-Osiris saga; like I said, it's complex. You can find the whole thing HYPERLINK "https://chesterbeatty.ie/assets/uploads/2018/11/The-Library-of-A.-Chestera-Beatty-Description-of-a-Hieratic-Papyrus-with-a-Mythological-Story-Love-Songs-and-Other-Miscellaneous-Texts.pdf" \o "chesterbeatty.ie" \t "_blank" here (though this translation is a bit elderly). If you're a structural anthropologist there's all sorts of deep material here regarding sexuality, fertility, intergenerational inheritance and political power. For the rest of us, it's time for a knowing look and a subdued "uh-huh".

The whole "sexy-lettuce" thing is also found in Mesopotamia, where you get love-poems like HYPERLINK "https://resgerendae.wordpress.com/2013/02/14/the-lettuce-of-my-heart/" \o "resgerendae.wordpress.com" \t "_blank" this bit from Sumeria (it's racier in cuneiform but you can get the gist).

He's sprouted! He's burgeoned! He's lettuce planted by the water,
My well-stocked garden of the… plain, my darling of his mother's womb,
My barley-stalk luxuriant in its furrow – he's lettuce planted by the water,
My apple tree which bears fruit up to its top – he's lettuce planted by the water.
The honey-man, the honey-man does sweet things to me!
My lord, the honey-man of the gods, my darling of his mother's womb,
Whose hand is honey, whose foot is honey, was doing sweet things to me!
His limbs are honey-sweet, and he was doing sweet things to me!
He was doing sweet things to my insides, all the way up to my navel!
My darling of his mother's womb,
My […] of the fair thighs, he's lettuce planted by the water.

Alexandria had a relatively brief reign as the capital of Egypt, from its foundation by Alexander to the Muslim conquest. During most of Egypt's history, though, the capital was in the general vicinity of what's now Cairo, around the base of the Nile delta. The reason, I think, has to do what Egypt's relationship with the surrounding region. Alexandria is in an excellent position to communicate with the rest of the Mediterranean world. Indeed, it remained an important port through the Middle Ages and into the modern era. But it faces outwards.

Cairo, though, and its predecessors like Memphis, Giza, and al-Fustat, are in a very different geographical position in Egypt. They're a bit more in the interior. This means they're that much closer to Upper Egypt, and communications are that much faster and easier. They also control access from up the Nile through the delta and thereby to the outside world. That spot is a better capital for governing Egypt.

Alexandria is a better capital for connecting a province of Egypt to a Mediterranean empire.

Pythagoras of Samos (lived c. 570 – 495 BCE) is undoubtedly among the most famous of all ancient Greek philosophers. Unfortunately, extremely little can be said about him historically with any degree of certainty. As far as we know, Pythagoras never wrote anything himself and the only contemporary references to him come from the meagre fragments that have survived from the originally much more voluminous writings of his contemporaries. These sources are enough to establish that he was almost certainly a real person, but his life is almost completely obscure.

The later sources about Pythagoras that provide most of our information about him are filled with all kinds of unreliable legends. As I discuss in HYPERLINK "https://talesoftimesforgotten.com/2018/03/24/did-pythagoras-discover-the-pythagorean-theorem/" \o "talesoftimesforgotten.com" \t "_blank" this article from March 2018 , although most people today believe that Pythagoras was a mathematician, the earliest sources about his life actually portray him as more of a mystic sage. It's only in later sources that he starts to be portrayed as having done anything involving math. The theorem that now bears his name isn't even attributed to him in any written source until many centuries after his death.

In this article, I want to talk about one of the most famous stories about Pythagoras's life: the story that he travelled to Egypt, learned about religion and philosophy from the Egyptian priests, and then introduced Egyptian religious ideas to the Greeks. This is a story that is attested in some ancient sources and that has become very prominent in popular discourse about Pythagoras—but is it historically correct?

The earliest attestation of the story

The earliest known securely datable reference to the story of Pythagoras studying philosophy in Egypt comes from the ancient Athenian orator Isokrates (lived 436 – 338 BCE). At some point between c. 390 and c. 385 BCE (i.e., a little over a hundred years after Pythagoras's death), Isokrates wrote an oration titled Bousiris, in which he praises the Egyptians and their customs at great length, attributing the greatness of Egyptian civilization to the supposed reforms of a mythical Egyptian king named Bousiris.

In order to illustrate the greatness of Egyptian piety, Isokrates tells a story (which was evidently already well known by the time he was writing) that none other than Pythagoras himself studied among the Egyptians. He writes, in Bousiris, sections 28–29, HYPERLINK "http://www.perseus.tufts.edu/hopper/text?doc=Perseus%3Atext%3A1999.01.0144%3Aspeech%3D11%3Asection%3D28" \o "www.perseus.tufts.edu" \t "_blank" as translated by George Norlin :

"If one were not determined to make haste, one might cite many admirable instances of the piety of the Egyptians, that piety which I am neither the first nor the only one to have observed; on the contrary, many contemporaries and predecessors have remarked it, of whom Pythagoras of Samos is one. On a visit to Egypt, he became a student of the religion of the people, and was first to bring to the Greeks all philosophy, and more conspicuously than others he seriously interested himself in sacrifices and in ceremonial purity, since he believed that even if he should gain thereby no greater reward from the gods, among men, at any rate, his reputation would be greatly enhanced."

"And this indeed happened to him. For so greatly did he surpass all others in reputation that all the younger men desired to be his pupils, and their elders were more pleased to see their sons staying in his company than attending to their private affairs. And these reports we cannot disbelieve; for even now persons who profess to be followers of his teaching are more admired when silent than are those who have the greatest renown for eloquence."

This is the earliest securely datable surviving reference to the idea of Pythagoras having studied philosophy anywhere outside the Greek-speaking world. It is, however, far from the last such reference.

Klemes of Alexandria and the growth of a legend

Legends about Pythagoras's supposed international travels proliferated over the course of many centuries. Around seven hundred years or so after Pythagoras's death, the early Christian writer Klemes of Alexandria (lived c. 150 – c. 215 CE) wrote a miscellaneous philosophical work titled Stromata.

Klemes's background is rather complicated; he was probably of Greek heritage and he may have even been born in Athens, but he lived for most of his adult life in the city of Alexandria in Egypt. He wrote exclusively in the Greek language, he was highly educated about Greek philosophy and literature, and he had a quite enthusiastic admiration for a lot of Greek philosophical ideas, but he was also a very devout Christian, meaning he saw the traditional Greek deities as false idols at best and Greek religion as irredeemably heathen. As a result of this complex background, Klemes's attitudes towards Greek philosophy are fairly complex.

In the Stromata 1.15, Klemes argues that Greeks are not inherently philosophically superior to other peoples and that the majority of Greek philosophers were either of non-Greek ancestry themselves, learned their philosophy from non-Greek peoples, or both. As part of this argument, Klemes makes several noteworthy statements about Pythagoras, which read as follows, as translated by William Wilson (with a few minor edits of my own):

"Thales was a Phoinikian by birth, and was said to have consorted with the prophets of the Egyptians; as also Pythagoras did with the same persons, by whom he was circumcised, that he might enter the adytum [i.e., the inner sanctum of an Egyptian temple] and learn from the Egyptians the mystic philosophy. He held converse with the chief of the Chaldaians and the Magoi; and he gave a hint of the church, now so called, in the common hall which he maintained."

"And Pythagoras is reported to have been a disciple of Sonches the Egyptian arch-prophet; and Plato, of Sechnouphis of Heliopolis; and Eudoxos, of Knidios of Konouphis, who was also an Egyptian."

"Alexander, in his book On the Pythagorean Symbols, relates that Pythagoras was a pupil of Nazaratos the Assyrian (some think that he is Ezekiel; but he is not, as will afterwards be shown), and will have it that, in addition to these, Pythagoras was a hearer of the Galatians and the Brahmins."

Thus, according to Klemes, Pythagoras not only studied with the Egyptians, but also with the Chaldaians of Mesopotamia, the Magoi of Iran, the Galatians of Asia Minor, the Brahmins of India, and an Assyrian teacher named Nazaratos.

Historically speaking, all of these stories are extremely dubious. The specific story of Pythagoras studying with the Galatians cannot possibly be true, since the Galatians did not settle in Asia Minor until the third century BCE, around two centuries after Pythagoras's death. Nonetheless, what Klemes says certainly reflects the kinds of stories that many educated people of his time believed.

Diogenes Laërtios's The Lives and Opinions of Eminent Philosophers

The oldest surviving detailed account of Pythagoras's entire life was written by a Greek man named Diogenes Laërtios, who probably flourished at some point between the early and the middle parts of the third century CE (i.e., about a generation or two after Klemes). Diogenes Laërtios wrote a very long book titled The Lives and Opinions of Eminent Philosophers, which includes short biographies of all the famous Greek philosophers, including Pythagoras of Samos.

Diogenes Laërtios was basically a philosophy fanboy, not a critical scholar, and his biographies are replete with unreliable anecdotes and implausible legends. Nonetheless, his work is tremendously valuable because he had access to many ancient sources that have since been irretrievably lost and, at least in some cases where he cites his sources, he provides information that we otherwise would not have.

In The Lives and Opinions of Eminent Philosophers 8.1.2-3, Diogenes Laërtios repeats the familiar stories about Pythagoras having studied philosophy with the Egyptians, the Chaldaians, and the Magoi, but he adds a few more details not found in earlier accounts—namely that Pythagoras also learned to speak the Egyptian language and that he also went into the cave of Zeus under Mount Ida on the island of Krete with Epimenides of Knossos. He writes, HYPERLINK "http://www.perseus.tufts.edu/hopper/text?doc=Perseus%3Atext%3A1999.01.0258 %3Abook%3D8%3Achapter%3D1" \o "www.perseus.tufts.edu" \t "_blank" as translated by R. D. Hicks :

"Now he [i.e., Pythagoras] was in Egypt when Polykrates sent him a letter of introduction to Amasis; he learnt the Egyptian language, so we learn from Antiphon in his book On Men of Outstanding Merit, and he also journeyed among the Chaldaians and Magoi. Then while in Krete he went down into the cave of Ida with Epimenides; he also entered the Egyptian sanctuaries, and was told their secret lore concerning the gods."

You may notice that Diogenes Laërtios cites a source for his statement that Pythagoras learned to speak the Egyptian language: a certain work titled On Men of Outstanding Merit, which he attributes to someone named "Antiphon."

A famous Athenian orator of this name, Antiphon of Rhamnous (lived 480 – 411 BCE), lived about a generation earlier than Isokrates. If the Athenian orator Antiphon is the author of the work cited by Diogenes Laërtios, this would push back the earliest attestation of the story about Pythagoras studying in Egypt by about thirty years at least.

Unfortunately, Antiphon was an extremely common name among Greek men in antiquity and there seem to have been a large number of different writers by this name. Since Diogenes Laërtios does not specify Antiphon the fifth-century BCE Athenian orator as the author of the treatise he cites, we cannot be sure if he was the one who wrote it.

Porphyrios of Tyre's The Life of Pythagoras

Around a generation or two after Diogenes Laërtios, the Phoinikian Neoplatonic philosopher Porphyrios of Tyre (lived c. 234 – c. 305 CE) wrote his own biography of Pythagoras titled The Life of Pythagoras. In this biography, he repeats the classic stories about Pythagoras studying philosophy with the Egyptians, Chaldaians, and Magoi, but adds the additional claim that Pythagoras also studied among the Phoinikians. He writes in his Life of Pythagoras 6–7, HYPERLINK "http://www.tertullian.org/fathers/porphyry_life_of_pythagoras_02_text.htm" \o "www.tertullian.org" \t "_blank" as translated by Kenneth Sylvan Guthrie (once again, with a few of my own minor edits):

"As to his knowledge, it is said that he learned the mathematical sciences from the Egyptians, Chaldaians and Phoinikians; for of old the Egyptians excelled, in geometry, the Phoinikians in numbers and proportions, and the Chaldaians of astronomical theorems, divine rites, and worship of the gods; other secrets concerning the course of life he received and learned from the Magoi."

"These accomplishments are the more generally known, but the rest are less celebrated. Moreover Eudoxos, in the second book of his Description of the Earth, writes that Pythagoras used the greatest purity, and was shocked at all bloodshed and killing; that he not only abstained from animal food, but never in any way approached butchers or hunters."

"Antiphon, in his book On Men of Outstanding Merit praises his perseverance while he was in Egypt, saying, 'Pythagoras, desiring to become acquainted with the institutions of Egyptian priests, and diligently endeavoring to participate therein, requested the Tyrant Polykrates to write to Amasis, the King of Egypt, his friend and former host, to procure him initiation. Coming to Amasis, he was given letters to the priests; of Heliopolis, who sent him on to those of Memphis, on the pretense that they were the more ancient. On the same pretense, he was sent on from Memphis to Diospolis.'"

Here you may notice that Porphyrios actually quotes the same lost work attributed to "Antiphon" that Diogenes Laërtios merely cited. Unfortunately, he does not give us any more information about the author other than that his name was Antiphon.

Conclusion

We can probably discount all the stories about Pythagoras supposedly studying philosophy with the Chaldaians, Magoi, Galatians, Brahmins, Phoinikians, and so forth as later additions to the mythos, since these are not attested in any of the earliest sources.

The story about Pythagoras studying philosophy in Egypt, however, is already attested in Isokrates's Bousiris, which is securely dated to the very early fourth century BCE, and the treatise On Men of Outstanding Merit cited by Diogenes Laërtios and Porphyrios as a work of "Antiphon," which is of uncertain date. This demonstrates that, by at least the late fifth century BCE, the story about Pythagoras studying in Egypt was already circulating, at least among Athenian orators. Because this story is attested reasonably early, it is probably worth taking seriously.

It is entirely plausible that Pythagoras could have studied philosophy in Egypt. We must, however, exercise caution and treat this story with some degree of skepticism, since people started making up fabulous stories about Pythagoras at a remarkably early date and there are legitimate reasons why a Greek person in antiquity might have decided to invent a story about Pythagoras studying in Egypt.

Notably, at least by the time Isokrates was writing, the Egyptians were already renowned throughout the Greek world for their supposedly highly advanced knowledge in matters of religion and mysticism. In other words, Egypt had prestige. Claiming that a famous philosopher had studied in Egypt was therefore potentially a way of boosting that philosopher's reputation by associating them with a culture that was already so widely respected for its knowledge in this particular area.

The best position here in my opinion is one of agnosticism. The evidence can reasonably be interpreted either way.

Wasn't willing to answer this Q but I found that answers don't cover the real reasons (in my opinion).
Back in 20th century when most African countries started to gain independence, there was no appropriate infrastructure.

Without linking infrastructure between north and Sub-Saharan Africa that was bad in terms of developing all kinds of relations.

Most roads linking north Africa to Sub-Saharan Africa are desert dirt roads like this.

So if you are a north African it is a lot easier to travel to Europe or Arab countries than traveling to Sub-Saharan Africa.

And if you have some knowledge about North African population distribution then you know that about 80–90% of the population is concentrated in the far north near to the Mediterranean where they shared economic relations and cultures through the sea.

I see a lot of people say that the reason is racism or superiority that North Africans think they have over other Africans but surely No !!

The main reasons are :

1. Infrastructure
2. GREAT SAHARA DESERT
3. LANGUAGE
4. RELIGION
5. COLONIALISM
6. ECONOMIC RELATIONS

Edit 1 :

I want to make it clear that North Africans do not want to give up or deny their African identity, which seems to be the understanding of the author of the question. North Africans will always be Africans and what we are discussing is the lack of affiliation problem resulting from the reasons I mentioned above.

Edit 2 :

Another reason for strong relations between Egypt and levant or middle east is that ancient Egyptians were culturally close to Mesopotamia.

Also there were trade relations between Egypt and Mesopotamia.

There were wars between ancient Egyptians and Assyrians and Babylonians.

Thanks for Michael Darmawan for drawing attention to those points.

John chewe suggested:

I may not totally agree with your answer because if it is infrastructure, why can't the Egyptian government make such roads and connect with other African nations? They only have one neighbor: south-Sudan.They want to either connect with Europe or the Middle East, where is that " paved" road to link them to these two continents?

There surest thing is that of racial discrimination and self-acceptance. They have the highest form of inferiority complex by virtue of belonging to ' Africa '. Egyptians think Africa is only for black People and their Orange skin makes them " white"!

Thank you John for those suggestions but you still trying like a lot of others to highlight racist acts without giving any link to geography and economy!!

Actually it’s good that you made me realize that there is another reason besides infrastructure, which is economic strength

See you say why Egyptians don't make roads that links them with other African nations.

Why should any government make roads which are really really expensive to a place which they have no trade relations with?

Our nations are poor so governments don't have that as their priorities.

But what you might not know is that nowadays there are roads linking Egypt to Sudan. Of course they are harsh roads with minimum services but that's due to that south Egypt and North Sudan have small population.

but at least those roads are paved and there are trades and a lot of economic relations between Egypt and Sudan.

Now look at economic relations between Sudan and its neighbors and the linking roads between them you will find that those roads are really unusable and thats for most African nations in general not only Sudan.

On the other hand Egypt is well linked with Libya which is well linked to Tunisia and Algeria which is also well linked to Morocco !

Economically, you must know that all African nations are too weak in industrial terms including north African countries.

You also might know that most African exports are raw materials.

So, how would those trades improve if we don't have the ability to use those things they export?

But I do think that in the near future we must "as Egyptians" do more trade because of the food and water shortages we are about to experience because of the Ethiopian dam.

This Kingdom led by King Namer the Catfish King of the Southern Egyptian Kingdom marched with His army to the Northern Delta region around 3,150 BC, conquering the region and subjugating the region culturally.

Now, the indigenous ancient Egyptians were apparently from the Southern part of Egypt. They were the Custodians of the ancient Egyptian tradition and Civilization.

According to genetic studies, the indigenous people of Southern Egypt were strongly related to the people of Sudan of which they shared closest proximity.

HYPERLINK "https://www.nature.com/articles/ncomms15694" \o "www.nature.com" \t "_blank" Ancient Egyptian mummy genomes suggest an increase of Sub-Saharan African ancestry in post-Roman periods - Nature Communications

Here is an excerpt from the Genetic Study above:

Abusir el-Meleq's proximity to, and close ties with, the Fayum are significant in the context of this study as the Fayum in particular saw a substantial growth in its population during the first hundred years of Ptolemaic rule, presumably as a result of Greek immigration33,43. Later, in the Roman Period, many veterans of the Roman army—who, initially at least, were not Egyptian but people from disparate cultural backgrounds—settled in the Fayum area after the completion of their service, and formed social relations and intermarried with local populations44. Importantly, there is evidence for foreign influence at Abusir el-Meleq. Individuals with Greek, Latin and Hebrew names are known to have lived at the site and several coffins found at the cemetery used Greek portrait image and adapted Greek statue types to suit 'Egyptian' burial practices2,45. The site's first excavator, Otto Rubensohn, also found a Greek grave inscription in stone as well as a writing board inscribed in Greek46. Taken together with the multitude of Greek papyri that were written at the site, this evidence strongly suggests that at least some inhabitants of Abusir el-Meleq were literate in, and able to speak, Greek.

However, we note that all our genetic data were obtained from a single site in Middle Egypt and may not be representative for all of ancient Egypt. It is possible that populations in the south of Egypt were more closely related to those of Nubia and had a higher sub-Saharan genetic component, in which case the argument for an influx of sub-Saharan ancestries after the Roman Period might only be partially valid and have to be nuanced.

So no, indigenous ancient Egyptians are not genetically related with Europeans. They are more strongly related to people of Sudan, who they shared Cultural Technocomplexes with throughout the Paleolithic, Mesolithic and Neolithic periods.

Hypothetically, could part of the construction of the great pyramids of Egypt been done using the Nile flood season?

Egypt has received very little rainfall for thousands of years, ever since the end of the Ice Age. So, the people of Egypt learned back in ancient times to rely on the Nile River to maintain life. At some point, ancient Egyptians realized that the Nile was prone to a predictable “flood of a hundred days,” as spring rains hit the Ethiopian highlands. The floods left behind nutrient-packed silt carried down from the mountains, lakes, and forests upstream. The Egyptians learned to farm in this silt, at the edge of the normal flood zone, where they had the water to irrigate their crops, but the crops themselves would not be flooded. It is thus understandable that the centers of their civilization were in this same area.

In time, the Nile became an aquatic highway, as traders brought goods from the south in Africa and from the north through the Mediterranean. In time, Egypt’s influence spread across the ancient world. It was this same aquatic highway that brought the pyramid-building supplies. It is believed that many of the stones for the pyramids were quarried hundreds and miles to the south and ferried down the Nile to Giza. At the time of the “flood of a hundred days,” the water pushed right up to the pyramid construction site. Egyptian engineers made transportation and construction even easier by digging canals to bring the flood waters even closer to where the stone was needed.

No for the construction , but for transportation.
There was a channel that conected the Nilo River with the pyramids, it used some gates to control the level . The channel was uses to bring suplies of food, metal, tools, wood , granite blocks from Aswan and high quality limestone from Tura for the external cover of the pyramid. Unfortunately the late was stripped away to build the near cities.

Probably the port was here:

Whilst the river Nile probably was a good source of transport, the Ancient Egyptians used tools such as Torus Stone's they emit sound frequencies in high gigahertz and electromagnetic frequencies, written in Tablets to be used to levitate objects and matter.

The interesting thing about ancient civilizations, is that most have megalithic structures where it would be impossible to move the size and weight of some slabs, interestingly enough we have found similar tools around each of the sites.

Once we figure out how the ancients utilised these tools, which we are still catching up with, then the answer will become a lot more clear.

There is a quite strong consensus among historians that there was never an Exodus from Egypt as portrayed in the Bible. Israel Finkelstein puts the figure at about 95 per cent of modern historians.

F. S. Frick says, in ‘Israel as a tribal society’, published in The World of Ancient Israel: Sociological, Anthropological and Political Perspectives (edited by R. E. Clements):
The assumptions regarding the origins of the Hebrews can be defined by ‘immigration’, ‘revolt’ or ‘emergence’. It is towards a concept of ‘emergence’ that most recent scholarship about Israel's origins has been moving.

Studies on Israel's origins tend to suggest ‘emergence’ or ‘evolution’ as the descriptions of the process whereby Israel made its appearance in Palestine. The ‘immigration’ model has been largely abandoned, though the ‘revolt’ model still has its adherents. (my emphasis)

J. W. Rogerson says, in ‘Anthropology and the Old Testament’, published in The World of Ancient Israel: Sociological, Anthropological and Political Perspectives (edited by R. E. Clements):

Until the 1970s, Old Testament scholars were broadly in agreement on a number of topics that overlapped with anthropology. The Israelites, prior to the establishment of the monarchy, were semi-nomads, who had either forcefully or peacefully entered Canaan, and had become sedentary.

By the late 1970s a different consensus was emerging, particularly in America, according to which the Israelites had been peasant farmers in Canaan who withdrew or revolted from the influence of the city states and formed a new society with a tribal structure and an egalitarian ideology.

Avraham Faust says, in HYPERLINK "https://www.academia.edu/11906343/Faust_A._2015_The_Emergence_of_Iron_Age_Israel_On_Origins_and_Habitus_in_T.E._Levy_T._Schneider_and_W.H.C._Propp_eds._Israel_s_Exodus_in_Transdisciplinary_Perspective_Text_Archeology_Culture_and_Geoscience_Springer_pp._467-482" \o "www.academia.edu" \t "_blank" ‘The Emergence of Iron Age Israel’, published in Israel’s Exodus in Transdisciplinary Perspective (Managing Editor: Brad C. Sparks) :

We have noted above that both the military conquest and the social revolution theories seem to have been discredited by the vast majority of scholars (see, e.g., Finkelstein 1988; Weinstein1997; Faust 2006, and references) and the main archaeological debate regarding Israel’s origins can therefore be divided into two questions:(1) whether the first Israelites were pastoralists/ seminomads or a sedentary group, and (2) whether or not they came from outside Cisjordan (my emphasis)

HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Sources_and_parallels_of_the_Exodus" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Sources and parallels of the Exodus - Wikipedia cites Davies and Redmount:

The consensus of modern scholars is that the Bible does not give an accurate account of the origins of the Israelites. There is no indication that the Israelites ever lived in Ancient Egypt, and the Sinai Peninsula shows almost no sign of any occupation for the entire 2nd millennium BCE (even Kadesh-Barnea , where the Israelites are said to have spent 38 years, was uninhabited prior to the establishment of the Israelite monarchy) (my emphasis)

HYPERLINK "https://rationalwiki.org/wiki/Evidence_for_the_Exodus" \l "Mainstream_scholarly_consensus" \o "rationalwiki.org" \t "_blank" Evidence for the Exodus - RationalWiki cites William Dever, “an archaeologist normally associated with the more conservative end of Syro-Palestinian archaeology”:

The archaeological evidence of local Canaanite, rather than Egyptian, origins of the kingdoms of Judah and Israel is "overwhelming," and leaves "no room for an Exodus from Egypt or a 40-year pilgrimage through the Sinai wilderness." (my emphasis)
RationalWiki adds:

Israeli archaeologist Ze'ev Herzog provides his view on the historicity of the Exodus: “The Israelites never were in Egypt. They never came from abroad. This whole chain is broken. It is not a historical one. It is a later legendary reconstruction — made in the seventh century [BCE] — of a history that never happened.”
As to the stories of the purported Exodus and conquest of Canaan, Lester L. Grabbe says, in Ancient Israel:

The Pentateuch and the Deuteronomistic History (DtrH) are collections that scholarly consensus regards as late compilations but possibly having early material in certain sections

The vast bulk of the Pentateuchal text describing the Exodus and related events seems to be late, even Exilic or early post- Exilic.

Les premiers habitants de la région étaient noirs, c'est incontestable. Il y a toutefois eu d'importants changements ces dix derniers millénaires.

D'abord il y a eu la néolithisation de la région. Le phénomène est assez simple :

L'agriculture apparaît il y a environ 12 000 ans en Anatolie et au Levant. Elle arrive en Egypte il y a environ 8000 ans. On sait que l'agriculture antique et préhistorique de l'Egypte est d'origine levantine car elle est à base de blé et d'orge comme au Levant, alors que l'agriculture sahélienne cultive le sorgho et le millet. On trouve toutefois une petite culture de sorgho au sud de l'Egypte qui montre un contact entre les deux modèles agricoles

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://ci6.googleusercontent.com/proxy/Kb1jLC029HhCNyUSQevl7VokxFHlsLF9FaOHUY4P_amW9A32M0wGKaVlOsHWCTpMLcN-_gfqrcKrNOsjcbqjtyLxcmtWM8Q2z1liaqv1rN6xzDTxW4vIX4Csv48=s0-d-e1-ft#https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-838b97fe1d669dbc6851c7e51bf73aa7-lq" * MERGEFORMATINET
L'agriculture se diffuse par migration. Donc les premiers agriculteurs d'Egypte étaient d'origine levantine.

Les agriculteurs font beaucoup plus d'enfants que les chasseurs/cueilleurs. Donc les populations d'origine levantine deviennent plus nombreuses que les populations autochtones.

Les agriculteurs vont peu à peu se métisser avec les autochtones. Plus on s'éloigne du foyer (le Levant) et plus les métissages sont importants, d'autant plus que la Nubie est le point de contact entre l'agriculture levantine et l'agriculture sahélienne. Le sud de l'Egypte voit donc se développer une culture différente de celle du nord, une culture nilotique ayant peu de points communs avec les cultures du Levant.

On sait aujourd'hui que les premiers agriculteurs d'Anatolie et du Levant étaient blancs. On le sait car les chasseurs/cueilleurs européens n'étaient pas blancs alors que les premiers agriculteurs étaient blancs la population la plus proche de ces premiers agriculteurs (presque inchangée) est la population Sarde.

Donc les agriculteurs levantins d'il y a 10 000 ans ressemblaient beaucoup à ça :

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://ci6.googleusercontent.com/proxy/6IArNLEcRJlGM87Cau4RVeSwpaL6KEgMQVaVHrK44mT6FlnagTrcORO0McjKvXU_b_KOotwYB_2PrzU8ntZ_WK0

Logiquement les premiers agriculteurs d'Egypte étaient donc blancs. Dans le delta ils étaient sans doute très largement majoritaires. Plus on descend vers le sud plus ils étaient métissés. La transition entre les blancs et les noirs s'est faite le long du Nil, à partir du sud de l'Egypte.

Deuxième changement il y a 7000/5000 ans avec la désertification du Sahara. Les populations nomades du Sahara ont migré vers des régions plus habitables. Certaines sont allées au nord, d'autres au sud et un groupe est allé vers l'Egypte. Ils se sont probablement métissés avec les locaux, en n'oubliant pas que la population était déjà métisse, du blanc au noir.

Troisième point, la région est un carrefour depuis 5000 ans. Du sud de l'Egypte jusqu'à l'Anatolie et la Mésopotamie, tout le croissant fertile est un important lieu de passage où des populations du monde entier n'ont cessé de se mélanger.

Nubiens qui descendent en Egypte, Berbères qui entrent dans le delta, indo-européens arrivés en Mésopotamie et en Anatolie, Arabes et Européens au Levant, Turcs et Européens en Anatolie, esclaves noirs dans toute la région, etc. C'est une région riche avec une agriculture prospère et de grandes cités commerciales où se trouvaient des produits venus des quatre coins du monde. Par exemple l'Egypte antique importait son Lapis-Lazuli d'Afghanistan et son encens du sud de la mer Rouge. Les échanges se sont intensifiés avec le temps jusqu'à l'effondrement des routes de la soie dès le XVIe siècle à cause de la nouvelle route navale autour de l'Afrique.

En conclusion :

Il y a 10 000 ans les habitants de l'actuelle Egypte étaient des chasseurs/cueilleurs probablement noirs.

Il y a 8000 ans, les agriculteurs blancs venus du levant dominaient démographiquement la région, en se métissant peu à peu vers le sud jusqu'à ce que la population soit totalement noire au nord de la Nubie.

Il y a 6000 ans arrivée des nomades du désert.

Depuis 5000 ans, migrations et échanges permanents avec le monde entier. La population s'homogénéise mais les différences entre le nord et le sud de l'Egypte restent très marquées (au moins culturellement) pendant au moins 2000 ans.

Actuellement la population est assez diversifiée, allant du blanc au noir en passant par toutes les nuances du brun.

Mr. Khaled, have you actually looked at a map? Do you think that any sufficient Egyptian force could reach Saudi Arabia over the Gulf of Aqaba/Eilat without being detected?

The only other way would be to cross Israel and Jordan to reach Saudi Arabia, which isn't an option.

Before asking a question like this, look at a map and figure it out yourself.

Why do many people revere Gamal Abdel Nasser even though he ruined Egypt and reversed the beauty of pre-Republic Egypt?

What beauty?

75% of all Egyptians were living in poverty and a similar percentage of the population was illiterate. The constitutional monarchy, albeit a democratic government, was extremely corrupt and subservient to the UK.

I don't personally like Nasser for a variety of reasons; however, the living standards in Egypt under Nasser were far much better than during the monarchy.

The rural fellahin (peasants) in the Nile Delta and Upper Egypt revere him because of the land reforms. You see, the indigenous peasants who worked in the fields for meagre wages didn't own these lands and had their rights abused by land owners who were mostly non-Egyptians. Nasser oversaw the redistribution of lands among the people and made sure everyone gets their rights.

He provided workers with a minimum wage, profit shares, free education, free health care, reduced working hours, and encouragement to participate in management. Land reforms guaranteed the security of tenant farmers, promoted agricultural growth, and reduced rural poverty.

During his presidency, thousands of families were uplifted from poverty and joined the middle class and literacy rates increased.

Other noteworthy achievements were granting women full voting rights in 1956, building Aswan Dam and opening several factories.

And most importantly, Nasser was a man of the people and his accessibility to the public was unmatched by any of Egypt's modern rulers.

Average Egyptians could easily meet Nasser and and had the chance to talk to the President about their problems. In comparison, Egypt's later rulers lived in their lavishly splendid palaces far away from the sufferings of the people. That's why many people revere him.

Now, I don't like Nasser mainly because of his abysmal human rights record and many Egyptians share my opinion.

He killed Egypt's democracy in it's crib transforming the country into an authoritarian one-party state after banning other parties and unleashing the security forces on the opposition and basically anyone who dared voice his/her opinion or was considered a threat to the regime. His reign of terror saw the infringement of rights and imprisonment of thousands of people who were subsequently tortured in his notorious prisons.

He also persecuted Egypt's Jewish community and eventually expelled the Jews after confisticating their properties.

Not to mention that Egypt got involved in several unnecessary regional conflicts because of his hubris and warlike character.

Both wars were avoidable and tens thousands of Egyptian lives could have been spared.

That's why I'm not a fan of Nasser.

Having said this, I still categorically reject the statement that Egypt was better before he came. Yes he was a genocidal dictator, but Egyptians greatly benefited from his social and economic reforms nonetheless.

And I don't think this is a genuine question, but I'm willing to give the OP the benefit of the doubt and answer the question. Let's say Egypt destroyed the GERD using long range missiles or an airstrike. Can Ethiopia retaliate by targeting Aswan Dam? The answer is no.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-7c00a56c71e51f7cc3e1036acc8847b7-lq" * MERGEFORMATINET
Ethiopia simply doesn't have the potential to pull such a move. They don't have any kind of long-range surface to surface or ballistic missiles that can target Egypt.

Ok so no missiles. But what about aircraft? The answer is still no.

Ethiopia's air fleet is dwarfed by that of Egypt. Ethiopia has a grand total of 90 aircraft including only 23 fighter jets and 0 attack aircraft. On the other hand, Egypt's air force boasts the strength of more than a 1000 aircraft including 250 fighter jets and 93 attack aircraft.

The fighter jets operated by Ethiopia, MiG-23s and Su-27s, are of obsolete old tech dating back to the Cold War era. Egyptian F-16s and Rafales would destroy them from a distance of thousands of kilometres. They won't even see them coming.

And I didn't mention even mention Egypt's air defence capabilities.

This is why this scenario is unrealistic considering the facts mentioned. Thus, Aswan Dam is in no danger whatsoever of getting bombed.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-24d2a83aa8009e72b687638d8a8bd422-lq" * MERGEFORMATINET
Aswan Dam

In any case, bombing the GERD makes no sense strategically wise. If a war erupts, Egypt would take advantage of Ethiopia's aerial inferiority and decimate it's army using it's superior air force. Then Sudan's army will mount a ground invasion and seize the Dam as well as the surrounding areas. Sudan has a special relationship with Egypt and is going to be equally harmed by GERD unless all parties agree on a solution.

Now, I don't believe a "war" over the Nile water is going to happen and sincerely hope all three countries reach a peaceful resolution to the dispute guaranteeing the rights of everyone.

From his contemporaries apparently all true. In his al-Bidāya wa-'l-nihāya fī 'l-ta'rīkh ("The Beginning and End of History"), Ibn Kathīr testifies Mansā Mūsā was accompanied by 20,000 "Maghribīs" (presumably West Africans) and slaves upon arrival in Cairo.37 Badr al-Dīn al-Halabī, meanwhile, states that he "appeared on horseback magnificently dressed in the midst of his soldiers," with a retinue of more than 10,000.38 When their estimates and descriptions of Mūsā are taken together, it would appear Ibn Kathīr and Badr al-Dīn al-Halabī had access to information that al-Umarī and Ibn Baṭṭūṭa did not, as neither quantifies the mansā's entourage. Neither does Ibn Khaldūn.

Mansā embarked "with great pomp and vast wealth [borne by] a huge army" numbering 8,000 people. Ta'rīkh as-sūdān is far more generous, allowing Mūsā made the Pilgrimage "with great pomp and a large group, with an army of 60,000 men who walked before him as he rode. There were [also] 500 slaves, and in the hand of each was a golden staff each made from 500 mithqāls of gold."

But The substantial discrepancies are partially explained by what happened to Mūsā's expedition along the way: "He proceeded along the Walata route in the upper lands to the location of Tuwat, and many of his companions stayed behind there because a foot ailment, called 'Tuwat' in their language, befell them there . . ."40 An obvious conclusion is that Mansā Mūsā began with many more followers than actually arrived with him in Cairo.

While the numbers of the enslaved arriving in Cairo were clearly impressive, eyewitnesses were more astounded by the amount of gold they carried. Ta'rīkh al-fattāsh refers to the bearing of "vast wealth," while Ta'rīkh as-sūdān attempts a quantification, with each of 500 slaves bearing a staff of 500 mithqāls of gold equaling 250,000 mithqāls (over 900 kilograms or 2,000 pounds, nearly a ton). In like fashion, the external sources provide qualitative and quantitative estimates, with Ibn al-Dawādārī writing in the 730s/1330s that the mansā brought so “much gold with him” that he and “his followers bought all kinds of things from New and Old Cairo.

They thought that their money was inexhaustible.”42 Approximately a hundred years later, al-Maqrīzī reiterates that Mūsā arrived in Egypt “with magnificent gifts and much gold.” Ibn Khaldūn hints at a figure, recording that the mansā gave the Mamluk ruler al-Nāṣir Muḥammad (708–41/1309–40) 50,000 dīnārs of gold (that is, 50,000 mithqāls, or slightly more than 180 kilograms/400 pounds), yet in another place and on the testimony of al-ḥājj Yūnus, estimates the Malians imported “80 loads of gold dust (tibr), each load weighing three qinṭārs”; with one qinṭār equaling 50.8 kilograms, 80 loads translate into 12,192 kilograms, or 26,879 pounds/13 tons of gold. Al-‘Umarī, however, estimates that Mūsā “left his country with 100 loads of gold,” some 15,240 kilograms or 33,600 pounds/17 tons. This is raw, unworked specie (tibr), and when the golden staffs of the 500 slaves are included, the total rises to just over 16,000 kilograms, or 35,600 pounds/18 tons. This is well within the conjecture that Bure produced 4 tons of gold per year and Bambuk .5 tons, or 45 tons over ten years.

There are no doubts about that, except for what they looked like.
The original home of ancient Egyptians is Pathros (Upper Egypt), in the south of Egypt, next to Sudan. Pathros is even recorded in the Bible in Ezekiel and Jeremiah.

Pathros - Wikipedia

Pathros (Hebrew : פַּתְרוֹס , Pa̱trōs ; Greek : Φαθωρῆς , Phathōrēs ; Koine Greek : Παθούρης , Pathourēs) refers to Upper Egypt , primarily the Thebaid where it extended from Elephantine fort to modern Asyut north of Thebes . [1] Gardiner argues it extended to the north no farther than Abydos . [2] It is mentioned in the Hebrew Bible in Jeremiah 44:1 and 15; Isaiah 11:11; and Ezekiel 29:14, 30:14. It is the homeland of the Pathrusim . The name is a loan from Egyptian pꜣ tꜣ-rsy "the southern land" (e.g., pBritish Museum EA 10375, line 16 ; cf. Pathros (Hebrew: פַּתְרוֹס , Pathrôs; Greek: Φαθωρῆς, Phathōrēs; Koine Greek: Παθούρης, Pathourēs) refers to Upper Egypt, primarily the Thebaid where it extended from Elephantine fort to modern Asyut north of Thebes.[1] Gardiner argues it extended to the north no farther than Abydos.[2] It is mentioned in the Hebrew Bible in Jeremiah 44:1 and 15; Isaiah 11:11; and Ezekiel 29:14, 30:14. It is the homeland of the Pathrusim.

What did ancient Egyptians look like?

The descendants of Eurasian invaders and slaves are adamant that ancient Egyptians were not "Negroes" and looked nothing like "Negroes".

Who are the "Negroes"? Africans who fit the Negro stereotype (prognate skull, nappy hair, a broad nose, thick lips and black skin).

Ancient Egyptians were none of that. They had copper brown skin. They had the "Caucasoid skull" not the Negro skull, that is the prognate skull.

Ancient Egyptians were not "Negroes" but the racist concept of "nigrescence' was equally applied to North Africans, including Egyptians.

In Africa where the Negro is found completely at home, it has been noted that his distribution at one time covered Egypt, Morocco, Tripolitania, Tunisia and Algeria. The appearance of other races in North Africa modified the predominantly negroid character of the population, but even in the modification, to repeat a phrase from Sir Harry H. Johnston, both in nigrescence and in facial features the ancient negroid strain has never been completely eliminated in these lands. In Mauritania, the ancient Negroes were partly driven out by Caucasian invaders and partly absorbed—John Coleman De Graft-Johnson

Egypt is basically an arab politically and linguistically dominated country in Africa!

The copts are the religious minority of the egyptian population while the majority is muslim. Egypt is a transcontinental country located in africa and asia!

So basically the answer to this question is that egypt is a arab linguistically and politically dominated country with 17% of the population being arab, 68% of being egyptian and egypt is basically coptic minority!

The question is never asked for other countries in North Africa: Morocco, Tunisia, Algeria and Libya. Egypt is the main target of these biased questions.

North Africa is Arab Africa. Arabs conquered North Africa in the 7th. Arabs are the dominant group in every North African country.

North Africa is Arab Africa. It must be stated over and over again.

Conquerors tend to impose a foreign identity and an alien culture on the conquered people. Egypt is no exception. More importantly, conquerors treat the conquered people the same way: disrespect and disregard.

The Saidi of Upper Egypt (Pathros), the original home of ancient Egyptians, are the ones who are disrespected the most in Arab-dominated Egypt.

The Saidi of Upper Egypt are the custodians of the oldest Egyptian cultural heritage. All anthropologists carry out their research among the Saidi in order to learn more about the oldest customs and ancient rituals inherited from the Pharaohs.

An Arabo-Egyptian once wrote that the Saidi are the true heirs to ancient Egypt and they look more like Africans (implying Blacks). He said it all. HYPERLINK "https://joshuaproject.net/people_groups/14643" \o "joshuaproject.net" \t "_blank"

Upper Egypt (Southern people): Commonly called "Saidi" people in the Egyptian language. They are the residents of the old Upper Egypt of the Pharaonic empire. This region has its own traditions, considerably different from the North and the Capital, Cairo. Nowadays, and as cities in this region are becoming urbanized, the cultural gap is closening to a great extent. People living in the extreme south, are a special type of African-Egyptian people called Nubians … they have a very special, friendly and truly Egyptian culture since the times of the Pharaonic eras. Many Egyptians from this region have a darker skin complexion. Big cities here include Luxor, Aswan , Assiut, and Hurghada (on the Red Sea). …..

The original home of ancient Egyptians is Upper Egypt (Pathros). It is even recorded in the Bible in Ezekiel. Upper Egypt is located in the south, next to Sudan.

The Egyptians regained independence.
The British took over
The French took over
The Ottomans took over
The Arabs took over
The Romans took over
The Hellenistic Ptolemies took over. (Basileus of Egypt)
The neo-Assyrians took over. (25/26th Dynasties)

The Meshwesh took over. (23rd Dynasty)
The Hyksos took over. (15th Dynasty).

The prehistoric peoples who settled the Nile were a melange from all the surrounding peoples from the south, the west and the north east. Most probably because of climate change causing persistent droughts at a time when farming was invented.

The amazigh\berber people were the aboriginal egyptians. they descend from noah's son ham. they are not arabs. the arabization(semitic origin) of egypt started with yishmael, the son of abraham the semite and hagar the amazigh mother of yishmael. the major factor in the arabization of egypt however was via immigration. egypt was like mother earth to the world, due to the fertile nile river. in times of famine all came to egypt for food and survival: and many many stayed. those many many were true pure arabs from saudi arabia. i believe yishmael to be a bedouin arab, significantly different than the saudi arab.

Within the race debate, ancient Egypt has become a terrain contested by three mutually exclusive views:

Modern Egyptian: the ancient Egyptians are the same group of people as the modern Egyptians.

Afrocentric: the ancient Egyptians were black Africans, displaced by later movements of peoples, for example the Macedonian, Roman and Arab conquests

Eurocentric: the ancient Egyptians are ancestral to modern Europe

New Research Reveals Surprising Origins of Egypt's Hyksos Dynasty

An analysis of ancient tooth enamel suggests the enigmatic ancients were immigrants, not invaders

HYPERLINK "https://www.smithsonianmag.com/author/theresa-machemer/" \t "_blank" Theresa Machemer

Correspondent

Wall art dated to around 1900 B.C. shows visitors to Egypt wearing colorful robes distinct from the white clothing worn by locals. HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Hyksos" \l "/media/File:Semitic_visiters_to_Egypt,_in_the_Tomb_of_Knumhotep_II,_circa_1900_BCE.jpg" \t "_blank" Public domain via Wikimedia Commons

Popular lore suggests the HYPERLINK "https://www.britannica.com/topic/Hyksos-Egyptian-dynasty" \t "_blank" Hyksos , a mysterious group of foreign invaders, conquered the Nile Delta around 1638 B.C. and remained in power until 1530 B.C. But written records of the dynasty are scarce, and modern archaeologists have found few material signs of the ancient military campaign.

Now, new research lends weight to an alternative theory on the Hyksos' origins. As Colin Barras reports for HYPERLINK "https://www.sciencemag.org/news/2020/07/invasion-ancient-egypt-may-have-actually-been-immigrant-uprising" \t "_blank" Science HYPERLINK "https://www.sciencemag.org/news/2020/07/invasion-ancient-egypt-may-have-actually-been-immigrant-uprising" \t "_blank" magazine , chemical analysis of skeletons found at the Hyksos capital of Avaris indicates that people from the HYPERLINK "https://www.britannica.com/place/Levant" \t "_blank" Levant —an area encompassing the countries surrounding the eastern Mediterranean—immigrated to Egypt centuries before the takeover. The Hyksos dynasty, then, was likely the result of an immigrant uprising, not a hostile outside invasion.

The findings, published in the journal HYPERLINK "https://journals.plos.org/plosone/article?id=10.1371/journal.pone.0235414" \t "_blank" PLOS One , center on variations in HYPERLINK "https://cais.uga.edu/service/strontium-isotope-analysis/" \t "_blank" strontium isotopes present in 75 skeletons' tooth enamel. Strontium, a harmless metal found in water, soil and rocks, enters the body primarily through food. Comparing isotope ratios found in enamel, which forms between ages 3 and 8, with those present in a specific region, can help scientists determine whether an individual grew up there, as levels "vary from place to place," writes Ariel David for HYPERLINK "https://www.haaretz.com/middle-east-news/.premium-new-find-the-hyksos-didn-t-invade-ancient-egypt-they-lived-there-1.8995876" \t "_blank" Haaretz .

Around half of the skeletons were buried in the 350 years before the Hyksos' takeover; the rest were interred during the dynasty's reign. Per the paper, the researchers found that 24 of the pre-1638 skeletons were foreign-born, pointing toward significant immigration prior to the supposed invasion.

"This was clearly an international city," lead author HYPERLINK "https://www.researchgate.net/profile/Chris_Stantis" \t "_blank" Chris Stantis , an archaeologist at Bournemouth University in England, told HYPERLINK "https://www.sciencenews.org/article/mysterious-hyksos-dynasty-conquered-ancient-egypt-marriage" \t "_blank" Science News Bruce Bower last April, when she and co-author HYPERLINK "https://bournemouth.academia.edu/HolgerSchutkowski" \t "_blank" Holger Schutkowski presented the research at a HYPERLINK "https://meeting.physanth.org/program/2019/session33/stantis-2019-migration-into-egypt-during-the-second-intermediate-period.html" \t "_blank" conference .

A seal amulet bearing the name of the Hyksos pharaoh Apophis The Metropolitan Museum of Art

Archaeological finds further testify to the Hyksos culture's diversity: Ancient artwork depicts members wearing colorful robes distinct from Egypt's traditional white clothing, while records indicate that they had names similar to people from southwest Asia, according to Science.

Tombs unearthed at Avaris also offer evidence of "non-Egyptian burial customs," explains Stantis to HYPERLINK "https://www.livescience.com/hyksos-did-not-invade-egypt.html" \t "_blank" Live Science 's Laura Geggel. Males were buried "with bronze weaponry in constructed tombs without scarabs or other protective amulets," and "[t]he most elite had equids of some sort (potentially donkeys) buried outside the tombs, often in pairs as though ready to pull a chariot."

The archaeologist adds, "This is both a foreign characteristic of burial style, but also suggestive of someone [with] very high status."

Chemical analysis revealed that many of the foreign-born people buried at Avaris were women. The researchers posit that local-born rulers married women from western Asia, possibly to cement alliances. Strontium levels found in the teeth of individuals raised outside of Egypt varied widely, suggesting people immigrated to the region from a range of places.

"It is fascinating to see corroborating evidence from a new direction which demonstrates that men from the Levant did not settle at Tell el-Dab'a in large numbers at the start of the Hyksos period—which is what one might expect to see in the wake of a huge military invasion," HYPERLINK "https://english.tau.ac.il/profile/deborahs" \t "_blank" Deborah Sweeney , an Egyptologist at Tel Aviv University who was not involved in the study, tells Haaretz.

The researchers theorize that members of Avaris' immigrant community rose to power during the unrest of the HYPERLINK "https://www.ancient.eu/Second_Intermediate_Period_of_Egypt/" \t "_blank" Second Intermediary Period . After ruling northern Egypt for more than 100 years, they were deposed by the returning pharaohs. Per Science, historians have previously speculated that when the pharaohs reclaimed the territory, they exiled the Hyksos rulers to southwest Asia—a move that may have inspired the biblical story of HYPERLINK "https://www.springer.com/gp/book/9783319047676" \t "_blank" Exodus .

Mentions of the Hyksos' rule are scarce. One of the earliest sources describing the dynasty dates to the third century B.C., when a priest named HYPERLINK "https://www.britannica.com/biography/Manetho" \t "_blank" Manetho penned a comprehensive history of history of Egypt. Manetho's work was later transcribed in fragments by another historian, HYPERLINK "https://www.britannica.com/biography/Manetho" \t "_blank" Josephus . Written long after the Hyksos' actual reign, the tome claims that the invaders brought an army "sweeping in from the northeast and conquering the northeastern Nile Delta," according to the paper.

Manetho's history of the Hyksos may have acted as propaganda that supported Egypt's plan to invade the Levant under the expansionist New Kingdom.

"The Hyksos invasion was presented as a shame that had to be prevented from repeating itself by controlling these lands," HYPERLINK "https://imjnet.academia.edu/DaphnaBenTor" \t "_blank" Daphna Ben-Tor , former curator of Egyptian archaeology at the Israel Museum in Jerusalem, tells Haaretz. "The Hyksos were the devil incarnate, while the Egyptian king was the savior of the world."

Art work from this link □□□

From his contemporaries apparently all true.

In his al-Bidāya wa-‘l-nihāya fī ‘l-ta’rīkh (“The Beginning and End of History”), Ibn Kathīr testifies Mansā Mūsā was accompanied by 20,000 “Maghribīs”

(presumably West Africans) and slaves upon arrival in Cairo.37 Badr al-Dīn al-Halabī, meanwhile, states that he "appeared on horseback magnificently dressed in the midst of his soldiers," with a retinue of more than 10,000.38 When their estimates and descriptions of Mūsā are taken together, it would appear Ibn Kathīr and Badr al-Dīn al-Halabī had access to information that al-Umarī and Ibn Baṭṭūṭa did not, as neither quantifies the mansā's entourage. Neither does Ibn Khaldūn.

mansā embarked "with great pomp and vast wealth [borne by] a huge army" numbering 8,000 people. Ta'rīkh as-sūdān is far more generous, allowing Mūsā made the Pilgrimage "with great pomp and a large group, with an army of 60,000 men who walked before him as he rode. There were [also] 500 slaves, and in the hand of each was a golden staff each made from 500 mithqāls of gold."

But The substantial discrepancies are partially explained by what happened to Mūsā's expedition along the way: "He proceeded along the Walata route in the upper lands to the location of Tuwat, and many of his companions stayed behind there because a foot ailment, called 'Tuwat' in their language, befell them there . . ."40 An obvious conclusion is that Mansā Mūsā began with many more followers than actually arrived with him in Cairo.

While the numbers of the enslaved arriving in Cairo were clearly impressive, eyewitnesses were more astounded by the amount of gold they carried. Ta'rīkh al-fattāsh refers to the bearing of "vast wealth," while Ta'rīkh as-sūdān attempts a quantification, with each of 500 slaves bearing a staff of 500 mithqāls of gold equaling 250,000 mithqāls (over 900 kilograms or 2,000 pounds, nearly a ton). In like fashion, the external sources provide qualitative and quantitative estimates, with Ibn al-Dawādārī writing in the 730s/1330s that the mansā brought so "much gold with him" that he and "his followers bought all kinds of things from New and Old Cairo.

They thought that their money was inexhaustible."42 Approximately a hundred years later, al-Maqrīzī reiterates that Mūsā arrived in Egypt "with magnificent gifts and much gold." Ibn Khaldūn hints at a figure, recording that the mansā gave the Mamluk ruler al-Nāṣir Muḥammad (708–41/1309–40) 50,000 dīnārs of gold (that is, 50,000 mithqāls, or slightly more than 180 kilograms/400 pounds), yet in another place and on the testimony of al-ḥājj Yūnus, estimates the Malians imported "80 loads of gold dust (tibr), each load weighing three qinṭārs"; with one qinṭār equaling 50.8 kilograms, 80 loads translate into 12,192 kilograms, or 26,879 pounds/13 tons of gold. Al-'Umarī, however, estimates that Mūsā "left his country with 100 loads of gold," some 15,240 kilograms or 33,600 pounds/17 tons. This is raw, unworked specie (tibr), and when the golden staffs of the 500 slaves are included, the total rises to just over 16,000 kilograms, or 35,600 pounds/18 tons. This is well within the conjecture that Bure produced 4 tons of gold per year and Bambuk .5 tons, or 45 tons over ten years.

En 1881, on trouva une ancienne momie non identifiée d'une femme égyptienne. Apparemment, son visage était figé de terreur (littéralement, ndt), la bouche grande ouverte et émettant ce qui semblait être le tout dernier cri. Elle captiva et hanta les experts aussi bien que les amateurs égyptologues.

Aujourd'hui, de nouvelles études ont établi que la cause de sa mort provint d'une crise cardiaque alors qu'elle avait la bouche ouverte. La HYPERLINK "https://fr.wikipedia.org/wiki/Tomodensitom%C3%A9trie" \o "fr.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" tomodensitométrie a découvert des gisements étendus de plaques graisseuses au sein des vaisseaux sanguins. Les égyptologues soutiennent que la femme mourut toute seule d'une affreuse crise cardiaque, et qu'elle fut introuvable pendant plusieurs heures. Au cours de cette période, l'on croit que son corps dût se raidir, ce qui eut pour résultat la bouche gelée et grande ouverte pour l'éternité.

It is part of Africa no matter How hard Europeans try to say it isn't. It is absolutely disgusting how European grave robbers (so-called “Egyptologists”) take artifacts fron Egyptian graves and colour the faces white.

Because ignorance prevails.

Egypt is part of Africa with a small part of it's lands being located in Asia at the Northern Eastern edges of the country, that's Sinai peninsula, that lies between the bay of Suez and the bay of Aqaba which are branches of the Red sea. So it is also considered a transcontinental country.

HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/profile/Matt-Riggsby" \t "_blank"

Matt Riggsby MA Archaeological Studies, Boston University HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/Who-discovered-the-land-of-Punt/answer/Matt-Riggsby" \t "_blank" Jan 1

Nobody, yet.

There are a number of references in ancient Egyptian records to the land of Punt. It was a notable trading partner, the source of a variety of desirable luxury goods. The problem is that we don't know where it was. We lack consistently detailed descriptions of the place itself, we don't know what language the natives spoke or what they called their own country, and we don't have many artifacts which unambiguously originate from Punt. We know it was reached by sea, and by Red Sea routes in particular. Most scholars place it somewhere along the Horn of Africa, but there have been associations with Arabia as well, and it's plausible that "Punt," like "the Indies" in later millennia, referred not to a specific location but rather a shifting and poorly understood complex of trading partners lying generally to the east.

How dare Egypt warn Ethiopia of war since it benefited thousands of years from the river which starts from Ethiopia which suffers from lack of electricity?

The problem is that Ethiopians believe that Nile is their river , and that flowing water to downstream countries is a gift or grant from Ethiopians to downstream countries. This makes them think that they can withhold the water or control it at their will unilaterally. This is not accepted by any sane human outside Ethiopia or by any law. Nile is an international river , its water doesn't belong only to upstream countries so that they think they have the right to do whatever they do to it unilaterally. If Ethiopians get this point this will make a significant progress.

Understanding this , leads to the understanding that filling the dam , and operating it , doesn't affect only Ethiopia or is a solely Ethiopian matter . It affects the lives of millions in the downstream countries and hence they must be partners in the decisions that decides their lives.

Ethiopia , in negotiations , doesn't want an agreement with obligations. It just wants recommendations that it can unilaterally change. It also doesn't want to address the fact that during drought periods , the priority is to the downstream countries whose lives depend on the Nile.

Back to the question , Egypt hasn't threatened of military action , it has been negotiating for a decade to reach an agreement but Ethiopia is stubborn and rigid in negotiations. Ethiopia is just buying time to impose a status quo.

Bringing military to the table was only mentioned by Ethiopian officials. They are facing internal problems and they are escaping them by demonizing Egypt to unite Ethiopians against a common enemy. Also , Egypt is being used as a scapegoat for successive Ethiopian governments failure to provide for their people and to develop their country. Egypt didn't prevent Ethiopia from using wind power , non renewable power plants , hydropower , or anything. Egypt just demands a long enough period for filling the reservoir so that impact on water in Egypt is bearable

It is one of the oldest banyan trees in Cairo, and according to several sources, it is the only one remaining.

However, the banyan tree is not native to Egypt and its presence in the country hides an interesting story. Khedive Ismael, keen to imitate colonial powers and express the country's reach, imported the unusual trees from India in 1868. He wanted to make Cairo a world city that showed off its wealth and promotes himself as a cultured man of the world, and a large part of this was the import of exotic flora and fauna. The exotic trees were initially planted across the capital, although only a few still exist, mainly along the corniche bordering Garden City, Azabakeya and of course, the most impressive in Zamalek's Sharia Al Borg.

Over the years, the tree became an icon of Zamalek, one of the nicest neighbourhoods in Cairo. This huge banyan tree is located in Al Borg street, which leads to the Cairo Tower.

These perennial trees are classified among the world’s largest. By nature, banyan trees send their roots downwards, creating branch-like pillars that look like more tree trunks.

North africans have definitely experienced racism from afrocentrists who claim that north africans were all black before the muslim conquest of the region. I have seen this trend happening online and mostly against north african diaspora.

The 17 year old egyptian mariam moustafa was beaten to death by a group of black girls in the united kingdom cause they thought that mariam wasn't a real egyptian. This is an example of how afrocentrism can make pseudohistory claims that ancient egyptians were all black before muslim invaders came in and thus can also brainwash youths who haven't studied history yet which could to brainwashed youths to violently or threaten white people! Here is how an egyptian was typically harrased by an african american:

Anyways, I'm half english and african and therefore i have experienced harrasment from most quora users cause i debunked afrocentric claims on ancient egyptians

HYPERLINK "https://fr.quora.com/Pourquoi-certains-Afro-Am%C3%A9ricains-sont-ils-si-inspir%C3%A9s-par-les-anciens-%C3%89gyptiens" \t "_blank"
Pourquoi certains Afro-Américains sont-ils si inspirés par les anciens Égyptiens ?
HYPERLINK "https://fr.quora.com/profile/Aequo-Animo" \t "_blank"

Aequo Animo · Suivre Éboueur (1900–aujourd'hui) HYPERLINK "https://fr.quora.com/Pourquoi-certains-Afro-Am%C3%A9ricains-sont-ils-si-inspir%C3%A9s-par-les-anciens-%C3%89gyptiens/answer/Aequo-Animo" \t "_blank" dim.

La raison est simple…

Parce que l'Égypte antique a joué un rôle primordial dans l'histoire de la civilisation humaine. Parce que comme les égyptiens anciens, leur origine est africaine. Parce que comme les égyptiens anciens, ils sont noirs.

S'en inspirer, c'est rappeler dans l'Histoire, infalsifiable en soi, qui est celle du monde que leurs aïeux, qui étaient, d'un point de vue générale, les mêmes que ceux des égyptiens anciens, n'avaient pas choisi d'être noirs, mais ils l'étaient parce que telle est la nature des choses. S'en inspirer, c'est rappeler dans l'Histoire, en soi infalsifiable, du monde que leurs aïeux n'avaient pas choisi d'être des esclaves, mais étaient ainsi réduits, parce que telle est la bêtise de l'esprit esclavagiste. S'en inspirer, c'est rappeler qu'en effet, pour leurs aïeux, peu importait la couleur de peau et qu'ils n'avaient pas fait le choix d'inventer et de valoriser la discrimination raciale, mais l'avaient tout simplement subie. Comme eux, encore aujourd'hui.

S'en inspirer, c'est rappeler que la couleur d'origine de l'être humain est noire et que d'un point de vue physique, le noir rassemble toutes les couleurs en lui-même ; elle est la raison que jamais le raciste n'aura.

Puis contre le racisme, l'esclavagisme, le ségrégationnisme qu'ils ont combattu tout au long de leur histoire, c'est montrer qu'ils sont encore capables de combattre la mauvaise foi institutionnalisée.

Dans l'antiquité, en effet la question ne se posait pas véritablement de savoir qui était noir et qui était blanc… et c'était bien comme ça… jusqu'à ce que l'ignorant qui s'ignore en fasse le dogme religieux, le racisme, dont la pure turpitude est, à partir de là, censée déterminer la destinée de chaque être humain. Ce n'était pas les égyptiens anciens, ce n'était pas les aïeux des afro-américains qui avaient créé les sciences pour diviser les hommes dans le but de réaliser leurs propres ambitions, d'en préserver les intérêts et d'élever leur égo.

Il suffit d'ouvrir les livres d'Histoire pour comprendre que dans l'antiquité jusque (… à partir) au XVIe-XVIIe siècle environ, il ne faisait aucun doute pour personne que les égyptiens anciens étaient noirs, sur un continent dont la qualification a presque toujours connoté la négritude et qui est encore aujourd'hui majoritairement noir.

Qu'est-ce qui a donc changé ?

Le racisme est passé par là et sous-couvert de la Science a tout prétendu… sauf le bon sens :

On a prétendu le polygénisme contre toute raison. On a prétendu que le noir est une race inférieure contre toute humanité. On a prétendu, malgré tous les éléments déjà en place, que la vie n'a pas pu apparaître en Afrique. On a prétendu que le noir est incapable de bâtir une civilisation comme celle de l'Égypte, puis comme celle de Koush. On a prétendu que les égyptiens anciens étaient des européens. On a prétendu que les koushites étaient des européens. On a prétendu que les koushites n'avaient connu de vraie civilisation que celle des égyptiens. On a prétendu que les grecs anciens et tout ancien qui témoignaient de la négritude des égyptiens anciens étaient aveugles et mentaient. On a prétendu, contre démenti aujourd'hui, que l'agriculture s'était exportée originellement de l'Asie vers l'Afrique. On a prétendu que les grecs et les romains étaient les tout premiers précurseurs de la civilisation humaine. On a prétendu, sans aucune preuve, que l'Égypte à l'origine de sa civilisation avait été influencée par des civilisations du Levant. On a prétendu que l'Égypte se trouve en Asie, que si elle ne s'y trouve pas, elle est coûte que coûte asiatique. On a prétendu que l'Égypte antique n'avait aucun lien avec le reste du continent, mais qu'elle avait des liens avec les populations du Nord-Ouest qui avaient des liens avec le Sud et qu'elle commerçait elle-même avec le Sud. On a prétendu que des termes comme "Éthiopie", "koushites" avaient un sens univoque, alors qu'à la lecture des textes anciens, on observe aisément qu'ils avaient différentes connotations et que leurs sens étaient évolutifs. On a prétendu, sans que les concernés eux-mêmes n'aient jamais parlé de rien de tel et sans aucune preuve, que les égyptiens anciens avaient des esclaves noirs. On a prétendu, sans que les concernés eux-mêmes n'aient jamais rien dit de tel et sans aucune preuve, que les égyptiens anciens engageaient des mercenaires "nubiens". On a prétendu, sans que les concernés eux-mêmes aient mentionné rien de tel, que seuls les pharaons identifiés comme koushites étaient noirs. On a prétendu, sans que les concernés eux-mêmes aient rien affirmé de tel, que les égyptiens anciens se peignaient par pur symbolisme et qu'ils peignaient systématiquement, ce qui est faux, les hommes en brun-rouge et les femmes en jaune. On a prétendu que, par conséquent, les égyptiens étaient rouges de peau et les égyptiennes étaient elles jaunes. On a prétendu que la complexion claire en Afrique du Nord qui est autochtone était foncée par le soleil, dans un climat adouci et … forcément, comme le climat l'est encore plus, elle ne l'est plus. On a prétendu que le climat adouci de la méditerranée donnait aux égyptiens un teint brun et comme le climat s'adoucit encore plus, il leur donne aujourd'hui une peau blanche. On a prétendu que dans la préhistoire et dans l'antiquité, il n'existait pas de noirs dans le Sahara et le Nord du continent, que s'ils y vivaient, c'était parce qu'ils y étaient trainés comme des esclaves. On a prétendu que le Sahara était une barrière naturelle, mais que le Sahara était vert dans la préhistoire. On a prétendu que la première cataracte était une barrière naturelle, mais que non seulement le désert d'Arabie, la mer rouge ne l'étaient pas, mais qu'en plus en "paléoarchéologie", les différents groupes humains depuis la préhistoire venaient parfois à être en contact entre la Basse-Égypte et la Haute-Égypte et qu'au-delà de tout, l'Homme, parti de la Vallée du Grand Rift, est passé par l'isthme pour conquérir l'Asie. On a prétendu qu'il n'existait aucun noir en Égypte antique. Puis, on a prétendu que c'était kif kif. On a prétendu que la population égyptienne n'a pas changé, ce qui serait totalement une exception, depuis plus de 5000 ans, malgré tout ce qu'on sait, mais que pourtant la Nubie égyptienne est sensiblement moins noire qu'elle ne l'était dans l'antiquité et que le copte descend d'un métissage. On a prétendu que Ramsès II est roux et que miracle, ses cheveux l'étaient encore à 90 ans. On a prétendu que la blondeur et même la rousseur était exclusivement une caractéristique génétique de l'ethnie blanche. On a prétendu avoir la preuve que les égyptiens anciens "n'étaient pas noirs, mais européens d'abord, puis levantins par des tests génétiques complets sur 3 échantillons de momies et des tests génétiques incomplets sur 90 échantillons de momies. Des momies dont on ne sait presque rien, sauf, par exemple, qu'il y avait des inscriptions en grec et en latin sur les tombes de certaines dans une région entièrement cosmopolite, réputée totalement un foyer d'accueil pour les immigrés en Égypte antique. On a prétendu que l'égyptien ancien ne se souciait pas de la couleur de peau, mais ne peignait pas sa peau en noir, tandis que différemment de sa peau, il peignait le koushite en noir et le libyque en blanc, parce que ceux-ci étaient à juste titre noir et blanc. On a prétendu que la peau noire ne présente qu'un ton de couleur qui est le noir foncé. On a prétendu que tout ce qui est noir a nécessairement le nez épaté et les lèvres charnues et tombantes. Puis, on a prétendu que les noirs étaient pour certains blancs, parce qu'ils ont le nez allongé, les lèvres amincies, puis parce que les gènes. Et après avoir prétendu tout ça, on a prétendu qu'il importait peu de connaître, ce qui serait une exception en Science, la véritable couleur de peau des égyptiens anciens.

Un jour, c'est noir, le lendemain, c'est blanc. Puis, non…

On en a prétendu des choses… et encore… tout cela au nom de la Science.

Les afro-américains n'ont pas pris l'initiative de remettre en cause l'ethnie des égyptiens anciens. Les égyptologues, à la naissance de la discipline, l'ont fait… de façon totalement absurde…. et avec une mauvaise foi, force est de constater encore aujourd'hui, décomplexée…

… et comme il paraît aujourd'hui clair aux afro-américains que l'origine de cette culture de biais en égyptologie, malgré l'évidence et le bon sens, trouve sa raison dans l'importance que revêt la civilisation égyptienne antique dans l'Histoire humaine, ils trouvent tout à fait opportun de s'identifier aux égyptiens anciens qui venaient comme eux du même continent et qui avaient les mêmes phénotypes et génétiques qui valent à eux, afro-américains, de faire l'objet, depuis quelques siècles, de mépris effroyables institués.

Comme leurs aïeux, ils peuvent réconcilier le monde avec son histoire et son destin. Mieux ils en auront conscience, mieux ils pourront à nouveau rassembler les peuples par leur histoire. Comme l'avaient fait les égyptiens antiques.

Mais avant, il leur faudra vaincre l'ignorance qui nourrit le racisme, aujourd'hui plus que jamais, insidieux.

Cordialement.

If modern Egypt once called their country the Arab Republic of Egypt, why are they ashamed to be called Arabs today?

HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/If-modern-Egypt-once-called-their-country-the-Arab-Republic-of-Egypt-why-are-they-ashamed-to-be-called-Arabs-today" \t "_blank" This Question seems to miss the nuance of the actual debate going on in Egyptian politics. As the other Answerers point out, most Egyptians, especially Egyptian Muslims, happily and proudly identify as Arabs today, there is no shame in this. There are also many Egyptian Muslims (although they are a minority) who do not identify as Arab and identify as strictly Egyptian and there is no shame in that either.

The name “The Arab Republic of Egypt” — Jomhoriyyat Mesr al-Arabiyya (جمهورية مصر العربية) is a modern creation of Gamal Abdel Nasser and represents his political view that Egypt was one constituent part of a larger Arab World to which all Arab countries should eventually become part. This Pan-Arab View was replicated in other countries’ naming practices, like Syria (the Syrian Arab Republic).

Increasingly, today, Egyptians are more aware of (1) the cultural diversity of Egypt, including a large minority of Egyptian Non-Arabs (especially Copts, but also Türks, Greeks, Armenians, Amazigh, Nubians etc.) and (2) a desire for the Egyptian government to withdraw from a Pan-Arab political project to focus on the needs and desires of the Egyptian people first and foremost. The desire to remove the term Arab from the title of The Arab Republic of Egypt should be understood in this context. It is a depoliticization of the Arab identity and restoring it to its proper place as a personal identity for Egyptians to embrace or reject as individuals.

President Hosni Mubarak along with most of the population on Northern Egypt are descendants of foreign occupiers and invaders who settled in Egypt after the fall of the indigenous New Kingdom Dynasty.

Since the fall of the New Kingdom 1,077 BC, ancient Egypt had been occupied by foreign occupiers and settlers who pushed the indigenous people Southwards, while they occupied the favorable terrain of the Northern Delta region.

Imagine you claiming that President Obama is black so the indigenous ancient Egyptians were black. Also, President Biden is white and vice-versa…

Indigenous people of ancient Egypt came from the Southern Nile Valley of Southern Egypt.

This is what the Oxford University Press states about indigenous ancient Egyptians:

Physical anthropologists are increasingly concluding that racial definitions are the culturally defined product of selective perception and should be replaced in biological terms by the study of populations and dines.

Consequently, any characterization of the race of the ancient Egyptians depends on modern cultural definitions, not scientific study. Thus, by modern American standards it is reasonable to characterize the Egyptians as "black," while acknowledging the scientific evidence for the physical diversity of Africans.

The evidence also points to linkages to other northeastern African peoples, not coincidentally approximating the modern range of languages closely related to Egyptian in the Afro-Asiatic group (formerly called Hamito-Semitic). These linguistic similarities place ancient Egyptian in a close relationship with languages spoken today in northeastern Africa as far west as Chad and south to Somalia. Archaeological evidence also strongly supports an African origin.

A widespread northeastern African cultural assemblage, including distinctive multiple barbed harpoons and pottery decorated with dotted wavy line patterns, appears during the early Neolithic (also known as the Aqualithic, a reference to the mild climate of the Sahara at this time). Saharan and Sudanese rock art from this time resembles early Egyptian iconography. Strong connections between Nubian (Sudanese) and Egyptian material culture continue in the later Neolithic Badarian culture of Upper Egypt.

Arab nationalists, especially the Ba'athists, were only good at making patriotic songs. However, when it comes to working together in order to achieve real unity they were all useless. That applied to Nasser as well. He took care of Umm Kulthum and Abdel-Wahab, but failed at rallying the Arabs behind him.

Nasser waving to the crowds in Hama, Syria.

Gamal Abdel Nasser reached the zenith of his popularity in 1958 when the Syrian leadership approached him to unite the two countries. That displayed how much popular Nasser was in Syria and the extent of enthusiasm for a united Arab world. However, in reality this unity was by far different than what the Syrian president Shukri al-Quwatli had in mind.

The agreement stated that both Egyptians and Syrians will share powers equally with no one being superior over the other. But Syria ended up as a colony for Egypt and all of the high positions in this newly created state were occupied by Egyptians. Which means that Syrians were almost completely marginalised with the exception of Abdel Hamid al-Sarraj, Nasser's man in Syria.

Naturally Syrians didn't like this new situation but there was nothing that they could do as their new leadership was extremely brutal and unforgiving. All parties were disbanded with the exception of the Ba’ath, Communist and Socialist parties. Torture was introduced for the first time in Syria as well as wide scale censorship, Nasser gave free rein to al-Sarraj who terrorized Syrians. He also forcibly imposed socialism on the country. Unlike Egyptians (at the time) the Syrians resented socialist ideals and this demonstrated the difference between the two mindsets.

In 1961 the unity ended after a coup thatvwas organised by disgruntled Syrian officers.

This was a slap to Nasser's face and the dream of Arab unity was shaken. He hoped that he would restore his image as the leader of the Arab world by successfully venturing in another country and by this victory would influence Syria to return back and possibly other Arab countries. Luckily for him there was an anti royalist movement in Yemen that planned to topple the monarchy and establish a republic, for Nasser it was an extraordinary chance that offered him redemption and he took it.

Nasser and Imam Ahmed facing the camera along with other leaders at Bandung Conference.

Egypt had pretty warm relations with North Yemen at the time and Imam Ahmed and Nasser could be considered as friends. Unfortunately for the Imam he didn't know that it was his Egyptian friend who would stab him in the back and end his rule; however, Ahmed didn't live long to witness this betrayal and died before the plot was set to motion. A week later his son Badr was overthrown by the republicans supported by Egypt, Badr didn't give up and waged a war to restore back the monarchy.

This war lasted 8 years and polarised the Arab community even more. Saudi Arabia and Jordan supported the royalists while Egypt pledged 70 thousand soldiers to help the rebels in their struggle. Long story short, the war was a disaster and there are estimates of Egyptian casualties that reach as high as 26 thousand military deaths as well as tens of thousands of Yemenis were killed in this civil war.

Egypt was stuck in Yemen and this intervention severely weakened it's army, drained the country's treasury and depleted it's resources. After 5 years Egypt was just a shadow of it's former self. Once again Nasser failed in his goals and Yemem was the 2nd slap to his face.

While the war in Yemen was raging on Nasser's rival in Iraq Abdul-Karim Qasim has been overthrown and executed in a bloody coup orchestrated by the Ba'athists and the Nasserist Abdel-Salam Arif was elected president of Iraq.

Shortly afterwards the Ba'athists had a fallout with Nasser and they were overthrown by Arif with the help of Nasserist factions in the army, only to regain power years later in yet another coup.

Simultaneously there was another coup in Syria that brought to power the Syrian branch of the Ba'ath party. Now both the Syrians and the Iraqis were pro Nasser and favoured unity between Arab countries. However, negotiations would eventually reach a dead end and all three countries remained independent but they were still close to each other.

This development of events greatly disturbed King Faisal of Saudi Arabia as he had recently survived numerous plots to overthrow him and some were supported by Nasser. Faisal responded by financing and giving refuge to the Egyptian opposition, the Muslim Brotherhood organisation. It was not just Faisal and the house of Saud who were threatened by Nasser, King Hussein of Jordan also survived countless assassination attempts by republicans. Nasser would occasionally engage with those two monarchs in diplomatic dog fights especially with Hussein. Nasser also sent aid to help the Algerians in their struggle for independence from France and sided with them against Morocco during the Sand War further dividing the Arab world.

Algerian soldiers during the Sand War.

This period of rocky relations between the Arab countries is known as the Arab Cold War and there were two camps, the republican one lead by Egypt supported by the USSR and the royalists lead by Saudi Arabia supported by the US.

In my own humble opinion Nasser was more into controlling the Arabs rather than uniting them and this is evident in the way he treated the Syrians. Even the Gazans were forced to live under military occupation after Nasser dissolved the All Palestine government.

Those two episodes as well as the bloody war in Yemen and his unjustified hostilities to Arab monarchies all imply that he envisioned himself as the unopposed leader of the Arab world. Because of him the Arabs spent a decade beating the crap out of each other which allowed Israel to easily beat them in 1967.

That is why he failed, because of greed.

Absolutely. That water is the single most important political tool in Northern Africa. If Ethiopia wants to increase their own Authority, managing the water resources in the area is a great start. The fact is that too much fresh water goes out to sea, and not enough is utilized for agriculture. Just look at what Syria and Iraq have done with the Euphrates and Tigris Rivers.

They did adopt some marvelous canals already in place though. There is another thing that historians are stumbling into now. The Nile was not always the river it is now. At some point around 3750 BC, year zero on the Hebrew Calendar, the Nile changed course near the fifth cataract, and began to flow more heavily south.

Before this time the river continued west at the bend near Al Dongola, between Al Dabbah and Al Goled. To this day a small island in the Nile exists where the River historical split. Many old maps show this fork in the river and the greater patch leading into the Sudanese desert. The Lake. Had basin is the largest dry lake in the world. Over the last 6000 years this body of water has slowly shrunk to the size of a small saline lake.

This was obviously caused by the loss of fresh inflow from the Nile River. This change caused a domino effect, lowering precipitation in the area and staring the process of Desertification. Today we can change this and unblock the western flow of the Nile River. This would have a drastic effect on the climate and agriculture of North Africa as a whole. Now Sudan is responsible for that site, but Ethiopia can help. By damming up the blue Nile they can lower the flow temporarily to create a redivide upstream, while workers fix the river course farther south.

With the river level lower work crews could safely engineer a more robust flood control Loch system along this stretch of the river. This would help farmers downstream to avoid the periodic over flooding that can ruin crop lands. This is an effort that will involve all three governments working together toward a common goal of increased agricultural production. The burden is on Ethiopia to initialize this positive change. Honestly more countries would benefit from this change than Ethiopia, Sudan and Egypt. Chad, DRC, Rwanda, and CAR would all benefit from this arrangement with increased rainfall for their crops. Refilling the Lake Chad Bain would not be quick project, and could take up to 25 years to just complete the river project. Once water flows into Chad again though, the world itself will change for the better.

edit 1/22: I see some interesting comments in here bringing up some valid and provocative points. Also some I have deleted. My intention here was twofold: A to demonstrate the potential and B to document potential historical changes. This is not intended to be an inflammatory or provocative statement, merely an explanation of what is transpiring and a theoretical approach to addressing the issue from a historical perspective. Obviously we cannot refill the entire Basin, that would take too much time. As for Climate change, yes that is the entire point of this exercise, to drastically redistribute Rain throughout North Africa, effectively changing the climate by several degrees.

TEMPLE OF DANDRA

The Dendera Temple Complex is located about 2.5 km southeast of Dendera, Egypt. It is one of the best-preserved temple complexes in Egypt. This area was used as the sixth nominee of Upper Egypt, south of Abydos. The entire complex covers an area of about 40,000 square meters and is surrounded by a massive mud brick wall. Dendera was inhabited in prehistoric times and was a rewarding oasis on the banks of the Nile. Pharaoh Pepi I (c. 2250 BC) appears to have built this site, and there is evidence of the temple's existence during the Eighteenth Dynasty (c. 1500 BC). The earliest surviving building in the complex today is the Mammizi, erected by Nectanebo II, the last of the local pharaohs (360–343 BC).

Nope, Egyptians were not forcibly Arabized.

Arabic tribes settled Sinai, Red Sea Mountains and Eastern Delta since before the Arab conquest in the 7th century. After the Muslims wrested control of the province from the Byzantines they designated Arabic as the official language of the country.

Muslim conquest of Egypt

As such, learning Arabic was a must in order to be appointed in an office. Any Copt who wanted to to improve his social status had to learn Arabic. The same applied to traders since Egypt was now more interconnected with other Arabic speaking peoples who had business dealings in the country.

So we gather that Arabic was the language used in trade and administration, meaning that Coptic was no longer relevant.

Arab governors appointed by the Rashiduns, Ummayads and Abbasids didn't follow a policy of Arabization. Although later Ummayad and early Abbasid governors were corrupt and overly taxed Egyptians (Muslims & Copts) to line their pockets which led to several revolts, they never tried to forcibly convert or Arabize Egyptians.

The failed revolts no doubt led to further decline in Christianity, but it hasn't been documented that Egyptians were forcefully converted or Arabized.

The only time any forceful Arabization took place was during the reign of the Fatimid Caliph al-Hākim bi-Amr Allāh. Al-Hākim was a deranged psychopath who oppressed all people regardless of ethnic or religious background; however, there is a possibility that such reports were false and aimed at slandering al-Hākim's reputation because he was a Shia Muslim.

Even if such reports were true, that still doesn't mean that said policies of Arabization were the norm of that period as it's a well established fact that Egyptians (Muslims & Copts) flourished under the Fatimids.

Generally speaking, the policies followed by medieval dynasties that ruled Egypt were tolerant with the exception of few isolated instances.

The Coptic language irreversibly declined when Egypt was hit badly by plagues and civil wars during the 14th century. HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/" \l "vYMJU" [1]

Egypt never really recovered since the bronze-age collapse.

Ancient Egypt went down because of complacency. The deserts east and west of the Nile were a natural protection against enemies, until they weren't. There was no will to explore more territories north of the Mediterranean or to the south beyond the origins of the river. Things were just too comfortable and stale. Meanwhile, other peoples were developing modern warring technologies and techniques. The inevitable happened and Egypt fell to foreign invasions.

From that point on things went downhill. Egypt's fate was decided outside her territory for a vast period of her modern history. The world's wealth and trade moved from the Mediterranean to the North Sea. All this makes it unlikely Egypt will ever be as strong as in ancient times. However, she can still, with a lot of hard work and good sense, become influential and prosperous.

Egypt survived the invasion of the Sea Peoples c.1200 BC. But it was severely weakened. It was easily conquered by the Iron Age Nubians/Kush in 747 BC. Then the Neo-Assyrian Empire kicked out the Nubians and re-established a native dynasty in 656 BC. The 26th dynasty prevented a Neo-Babylonian invasion by projecting the Egyptian army into Mesopotamia. They lost the Battle of Carchemish in 605 BC. But the Neo-Babylonians never went beyond Judah. Later they lost against an invasion by Cambyses II of Persia. He was crowned Pharaoh of Egypt in 525 BC. Battle of Carchemish - Wikipedia

The Battle of Carchemish was fought about 605 BC [3] [4] [5] between the armies of Egypt allied with the remnants of the army of the former Assyrian Empire against the armies of Babylonia , allied with the Medes , Persians , and Scythians . This battle is also mentioned in Ezekiel chapter 30 in the Bible. Background Edit When the Assyrian capital Nineveh was overrun by the Medes, Scythians, Babylonians and their allies in 612 BC, the Assyrians moved their capital to Harran . When Harran was captured by the alliance in 609 BC, [6] ending the Assyrian Empire, remnants of the Assyrian army joined Carchemish , a city under Egyptian rule, on the Euphrates river. Egypt (a former vassal of Assyria) was allied with the Assyrian king Ashur-uballit II , and marched in 609 BC to his aid against the Babylonians. [7] The Egyptian army of Pharaoh Necho II was delayed at Megiddo by the forces of King Josiah of Judah . Josiah was killed, and his army was defeated at the Battle of Megiddo (609 BC) . The Egyptians and Assyrians together crossed the Euphrates and laid siege to Harran, which they failed to retake. They then retreated to north western Assyria (in what is today north eastern Syria). The Egyptians met the full might of the Babylonian and Median army led by Nebuchadnezzar II at Carchemish, where the combined Egyptian and Assyrian forces were destroyed. Assyria ceased to exist as an independent power, and Egypt retreated and was no longer a significant force in the Ancient Near East .

Babylonia reached its economic peak after 605 BC. [8] Records of the battle Edit The Nebuchadnezzar Chronicle , now housed in the British Museum , claims that Nebuchadnezzar "crossed the river to go against the Egyptian army which lay in Karchemiš. They fought with each other and the Egyptian army withdrew before him. He accomplished their defeat, decisively. As for the rest of the Egyptian army which had escaped from the defeat so quickly that no weapon had reached them, in the district of Hamath , the Babylonian troops overtook and defeated them so that not a single man escaped to his own country. At that time, Nebuchadnezzar conquered the whole area of Hamath." [9] The battle is also mentioned and described in the Bible , in the Book of Jeremiah . [10] Discrepancy Edit While historians typically take Necho II to have been fighting in support of the remaining Assyrian forces, [11] according to Flavius Josephus in his account Antiquities of the Jews [12] Necho entered the battle in order to take advantage of the power vacuum created by the Assyrian forces' defeat. ^ Neciyev, Elnur. The Ben Ben pyramid that has puzzled scientists for thousands of years and they have been unable to solve the mystery.

The pyramid is made of black stone, but it is not an ordinary stone because all of its components are not found on earth. The black iron stone is only found in space in space meteorites, and here the other puzzle appears because it's a very hard iron stone and difficult to mold and dig, but it's not difficult to break, so how was it cut with so much accuracy in angles and deviations ?? How was your face polished with such unique precision? As were these very delicate inscriptions on the sides of the pyramid, scientists found it impossible for any tool, old or new, to carve these inscriptions except with a laser cutting tool. And now we come to the last mystery, which is that the black stone of the iron meteorite, thanks to its composition, has a positive electromagnetic energy transfer in its surroundings that makes everyone who approaches feel psychologically comfortable – and affects the human energy.

The pyramid is displayed in the Egyptian Museum.

Réponse originale : Il est avéré que le pharaon Montouhotep 2 était noir. Comment peut-on encore nier l'apport de la civilisation noir sur l'Égypte antique ?

Il y a eu des pharaons noirs, c'est incontestable. Et il y a eu des égyptiens noirs. Mais il y a eu aussi des pharaons libyens et des égyptiens d'origine libyenne, des pharaons perse et des égyptiens originaire d'Asie. Il y eut même des pharaons grecs et romains et des égyptiens originaires d'Europe.

L'Égypte est un carrefour culturel entre l'Europe, l'Afrique et l'Asie. On a donc une population métisse ressemblant beaucoup à la population actuelle.

Vous parlez ensuite de "civilisation noir". Prière d'expliciter cette expression qui ne veut rien dire…

L'Égypte s'est construite sur les bords du Nil entre la Méditerranée et la première cataracte. La population des alentours s'est regroupée et à fini par donner une civilisation très unis par l'agriculture. Donc dans les périodes archaïques il n'existe pas encore de population égyptienne mais une myriade de peuples. Mais dès les premiers pharaons on estime que le pays s'est unifié et stabilisé et que les apports étrangers ne sont plus que marginaux. L'Égypte a eu très tôt une culture forte qui a plutôt eu tendence à influencer les cultures voisines (le meilleur exemple étant les cultures nubiennes qui ont aboutis à la première civilisation d'Afrique noir vers l'an mil avant JC, une civilisation bâtisseuse de pyramides par exemple…). Même les envahisseurs comme les Hyksos se sont actulturés, perdant petit à petit leur propre culture au profit de celle d'Égypte.

PS : Montouhotep ressemblait à tous les autres égyptiens. Ce qui fait dire à certains qu'il était noir c'est une de ses statue où il est représenté en Osiris, symbole de fertilité (le noir symbolisait la fertilité pour les égyptiens à cause de la couleur noire de la terre fertile après la décrue).

Why do some blacks claim that the original Arabs were black? What is their argument?

It's mainly afro supremacists who make this claim!

They're basically trying to create their own version of black history as means to live in a fantasy world. Actually, there is a malicious site which is so racist and claims to publish accurate history but eventually has made the same pseudohistory claim that the original arabs were black: HYPERLINK "http://realhistoryww.com/world_history/ancient/Misc/True_Negros/The_True_Negro_2.htm" \o "realhistoryww.com" \t "_blank" http://realhistoryww.com/world_history/ancient/Misc/True_Negros/The_True_Negro_2.htm

The other claim that afro supremacists do about the Arabs is this one:

Extremists assassinate Anwar Sadat in Cairo, 1981.

The assassins' bullets ended the life of a man who earned a reputation for making bold decisions in foreign affairs, a reputation based in large part on his decision in 1977 to journey to the camp of Egypt's foe, Israel, to make peace.

President Sadat was the first Arab leader to recognize the state of Israel since its creation in 1948. In September 1978, he met with Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin in the United States, where they negotiated a peace accord and, in 1979, a peace treaty.

For their achievement, the leaders were awarded a joint Nobel Peace Prize. However, Sadat's efforts were not so highly acclaimed in the Arab world. Arab states boycotted Egypt for breaking ranks and negotiating a separate treaty with Israel.

On 6 October 1981, a victory parade was held in Cairo to commemorate the eighth anniversary of Egypt's crossing of the Suez Canal. Sadat was protected by four layers of security and eight bodyguards, and the army parade should have been safe due to ammunition-seizure rules.

As Egyptian Air Force Mirage jets flew overhead, distracting the crowd, Egyptian Army soldiers and troop trucks towing artillery paraded by. One truck contained the assassination squad, led by Lieutenant Khalid Islambouli. As it passed the tribune, Islambouli forced the driver at gunpoint to stop.

From there, the assassins dismounted and Islambouli approached Sadat with three hand grenades concealed under his helmet. Sadat stood to receive his salute. Anwar's nephew Talaat El Sadat later said: "The president thought the killers were part of the show when they approached the stands firing, so he stood saluting them".

Islambouli threw all his grenades at Sadat, only one of which exploded (but fell short), and additional assassins rose from the truck, indiscriminately firing AK-47 assault rifles into the stands until they had exhausted their ammunition and then attempted to flee. After Sadat was hit and fell to the ground, people threw chairs around him to shield him from the hail of bullets.

Egyptian soldiers tend to the wounded after an attack on the reviewing platform which killed Egyptian President Anwar Sadat.

The attack lasted about two minutes. Sadat and ten others were killed outright or suffered fatal wounds. Security forces were momentarily stunned but reacted within 45 seconds. One of the attackers was killed, and the three others injured and arrested.

Sadat was airlifted to a military hospital, where eleven doctors operated on him. He died nearly two hours after he was taken to the hospital. Sadat's death was attributed to "violent nervous shock and internal bleeding in the chest cavity, where the left lung and major blood vessels below it were torn".

In addition to Sadat, eleven others were killed, including the Cuban ambassador, an Omani general, a Coptic Orthodox bishop, and Samir Helmy, the head of Egypt's Central Auditing Agency (CAA). Twenty-eight were wounded, including Vice President Hosni Mubarak, Irish Defence Minister James Tully, and four US military liaison officers.

The assassination was undertaken by members of the Egyptian Islamic Jihad. A fatwā approving the assassination had been obtained from Omar Abdel-Rahman, a cleric later convicted in the US for his role in the 1993 World Trade Center bombing. Islambouli and the other assassins were tried, found guilty, sentenced to death, and executed by firing squad in April 1982.

As a result of Anwar Sadat's growing authoritarianism and treatment of his opposition, tensions in Egypt began rising shortly after the Camp David Accords were signed. Regular Egyptians were unsatisfied with the treaty's results in addition to the state of the economy. His own security people had become increasingly concerned, as Sadat did not like to be told that he had to be on his guard or take safety precautions, and there had been plots against him. Sadat continually made his circle of advisors smaller, and there was no clear way to solve the tension. On October 6th, 1981, just three years after signing the Camp David Accords, Sadat was assassinated. Ambassador Alfred Leroy Atherton, Jr. was in the reviewing stands with Sadat that day and recounts the assassination, its aftermath, and dealing with one of the highest-ranking delegations the U.S. has ever sent abroad. Read Part I about the HYPERLINK "https://adst.org/2013/09/the-assassination-of-anwar-sadat-part-i/" growing disenchantment with Sadat .

The Assassination

ATHERTON: There was increasing tension but no sign of how it was going to be resolved, until it was suddenly resolved by an assassin's bullet at the October 6 parade, 1981, celebrating the October 1973 War, which Egypt had always celebrated as their victory. It was an occasion for a very large military parade. Each year all of the latest Egyptian military equipment, most of which was of American origin, passed by the reviewing stand in view of the public and dignitaries. There were flybys by airplanes, including acrobatic flights, all of which was viewed from the reviewing stand by visiting dignitaries from other countries, the diplomatic corps and military attachés. It was a big parade celebrating the crossing of the canal against the Israelis on October 6, 1973. There was some sense of foreboding in the atmosphere. There had been an authenticated aborted attempt to assassinate Sadat once before that. So one worried a bit. But because this was a military parade, it was controlled by the military and security was in the hands of the military. Our area was a secure area that people couldn't get into without credentials being checked. It was assumed that nothing could happen here.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://adst.org/wp-content/uploads/2013/09/photo-1-piece-2.jpg" * MERGEFORMATINET

I was there in the reviewing stand where the diplomatic corps sat. I was sitting with the British and Canadian ambassadors not too far from the Israeli ambassador plus the visiting delegations that happened to be in Cairo, including one, I think either Chinese or North Korean delegation that was further back in the reviewing stands. And in the center up front were Sadat and his cabinet and senior officers and other distinguished guests.

I was behind them in the tiered reviewing stands. On the right were the diplomatic corps and the visiting delegations. On the left was the attaché corps and visiting military dignitaries. We had two senior American generals in town at the time, who were guests of the military. They were sitting down in the front section along with the vice president and all of the religious dignitaries; so our two generals were down in the area just a few rows behind Sadat. Their military aides were sitting with our defense attachés.

The parade went on and on and on, with occasional disruptions. A vehicle would break down occasionally and had to be hand maneuvered out of the way. There was one live demonstration of paratroopers who made a precision drop and came down in circles that were drawn on the ground in front of the reviewing stand. They came up and saluted the president.

There were flybys, and I did have one chilling moment, because in one of the very low flyovers, the planes came straight at the reviewing stand, then at the last minute pulled up. And I suddenly found myself thinking, “You know, what if somebody really wanted to wipe out the president, his whole government, and anybody else, if they had that mission and decided to do it, we would be perfect targets…” Anyway that went on, and we all watched them fly away.

Near the end of the parade, along came the heavy artillery with their crews sitting in the back of the trucks pulling the heavy guns. One of them stopped in front of the reviewing stand. The crew scrambled out. Our assumption, and it was certainly Sadat’s assumption, was that this was going to be another one of these salutes for the president, as the paratroopers had been. The president stood up to take the salute. We all were watching. And at that moment, suddenly hand grenades were thrown and automatic weapons were being fired. Clearly this was an assassination attempt at Sadat.

I didn’t witness anything else, because, along with all of my colleagues, I was down, hugging the ground as fast and as far as I could. But there was a lot of shooting, and you could hear the shots. I could hear occasional bullets whizzing by. It was just luck who got hit and who didn’t.

A number of people in the diplomatic reviewing stands did get hit. They were after Sadat, certainly, but they were firing at random to keep down any potential counter-fire from the security forces that might have protected us. As it turned out nobody did, because Sadat’s own security had let their guard down, thinking that this was something that the military was in charge of and therefore they didn’t have to worry.

Anyway, it was total chaos. When the firing stopped we all stood up and looked down at the front. There was a jumble of chairs upside down. They had already carried Sadat out and gotten into a helicopter that was standing by, and we heard the helicopter leave. With all that training as a political officer I immediately began seeing who was there, comparing notes. . . Is that Mubarak? Is that the minister of defense? Who isn’t there? Who’s been hit? Where’s Sadat?

Sadat was nowhere to be seen. But we did try to get some impression of what the damage had been. We only learned sometime later that there had been 8 people killed in addition to Sadat and some 30 people had been wounded — some diplomats, the Belgian ambassador, the Australian commercial officer, and one member of the Chinese or Korean delegation whom I remember seeing as I was leaving. He had been hit in his wrist, bone shattered — his hand sort of dangled. It was a pretty bloody scene.

"The Grenade didn't go off"

The assassins ran out of bullets, and they had no escape plan. I guess they expected to be killed in the process. They were all captured, and eventually they were tried, and several of them were executed. It was ascertained that this was an Islamic fundamentalist cell led by an officer in the army that had infiltrated the military, got military uniforms and used forged papers and substituted them for the crew of this artillery prime mover. This was that it was not in the main stream of the Muslim Brotherhood but was a spin-off, a group dedicated to violent overthrow and to establish Islamic rule in the country. To them Sadat had become the personification of evil, because he had made peace with Israel, because of his lifestyle, because he was seen as anti-Islamic. He had done all the things that the Islamic fundamentalists disapproved of.

The remarkable thing wasn't that the attempt took place, I suppose, as much as it was that this proved not to be a grassroots group; they didn't begin a ground swell of revolution of opposition to the regime. Even the disaffected didn't want this kind of violence for the most part. And so they didn't represent the mainstream of the Islamic movement. They didn't represent the mainstream of the Muslim Brotherhood, which had decided to operate within the law.

In any case, there was utter confusion. It wasn't quite clear whether Sadat had been killed or whether he had been wounded. We saw the vice president with a small bandage, so obviously he was all right. The minister of defense had gotten a superficial wound, but he was all right too.

Probably the reasons not more of the leaders had been killed were twofold. First, the very first opening move was the throwing of a hand grenade. I was told later by the minister of defense it had bounced off his head. But the grenade didn't go off. And there was one man whose job it was to kill Sadat. We've seen some of the pictures of this. He was up, actually up, aiming the gun down, because Sadat by that time had fallen to the ground. Others were simply providing covering fire for the man whose job it was to kill Sadat. They were not targeting other individuals, but they weren't trying to avoid killing other people — and they did kill other people. But the target was clearly Sadat.

By that time I was being urged by my security detail to get away. Somebody had organized the diplomatic cars, which had been parked out behind the reviewing stand, and gotten them into some kind of order. I went and found my car and driver, and we headed back to the embassy. I had a radio in the car… so I was able to get on the radio as soon as I got in the car and called the embassy and talked to the DCM [Deputy Chief of Mission], Henry Precht, who was at the Embassy.

I knew my wife was going to be watching the parade on television at the embassy. She had turned down an invitation to sit in the ladies' reviewing stand with Mrs. Sadat, up behind where the president and all of us were. She was watching this at the embassy; so I said, "Please tell Betty I'm all right. Tell everybody I'm on my way back". I told Henry it looks here as though it was a single assassination attempt. We couldn't tell at the time whether there was a follow-up plan or whether there was going to be an attempt to take over the usual targets: military headquarters, television stations, and so forth. So he'd better get a team and get people scattered around to do as much reconnaissance as possible. Well, Henry had already started doing these things.

I learned later from Betty what went on at the embassy while they were watching the parade on television. Suddenly the screen went crazy, and it was clear that the cameras were pointing in the air and in all directions. Henry just said right away, "Something's happened." He got on the phone and opened a line to the operations center in Washington and said, "I don't know what's happening, but clearly something is happening that is very serious…keep the line open, and we will report to you as soon as we get some facts." So we were able to get to Washington pretty early and report that there had been an assassination attempt. I was all right. I didn't know yet whether the president was alive.

There were others who saw some bodies down there, but they weren't the president's. The senior bishop of the Coptic Church was killed. Then we had to worry, are all the Americans accounted for? By the time I got back to the Embassy the two general officers had arrived. They had been down in the reviewing area but had escaped any of the bullets. They were worried about their aides, who had been sitting in the reviewing stand. Well, we had to find out what had happened to the military aides; we had to establish a task force; we had to get word out to the American community; set up an information center to answer the inevitable questions.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://adst.org/wp-content/uploads/2013/09/sadats-body.jpg" * MERGEFORMATINET

Our initial reporting was that it looked like an isolated event, no indication that there would be a follow-up or trouble anywhere else. The Egyptian radio and TV were showing films at that point, and playing light music and no news at all was coming over. We assumed that meant that everyone in the government was getting themselves together to try to take stock of what had happened and let everybody know who was in charge.

Then, the most bizarre phone call was one from the minister of defense, Field Marshal Abu Ghazalla, who had been the military attaché in Washington and was considered very much a friend of the Americans, one of the strong advocates of U.S. military cooperation. He phoned me and said, “I just want to let you know that everything is under control in the country, the government is meeting, and the president has been seriously wounded but it is not life threatening.” I had no choice but to accept that until we had evidence to the contrary.

And at that point I had a telephone call from former President Carter. He wanted to know what had happened to his friend Sadat. And I said, “All I can tell you is that there has been a serious attempt on his life. He certainly had to have been seriously wounded by all of the fire, but I have just been told by the minister of defense that he wasn’t killed.” This is in Carter’s book, that he had been reassured by my report.

“He’s dead”

There was a period of almost seven hours, between the time of the assassination attempt and the time the Egyptian government announced the death of the president, when we were still in doubt. We kept getting urgent requests from the American press corps to confirm that the president had been killed. And I said, “I can’t. We are waiting for the Egyptian government to announce it. I can’t announce it.” I got a certain amount of criticism in fact, from the press corps, that we were behind the power curve on this.

The CBS correspondent, a woman correspondent whose name I’ve forgotten, was the first to go on the air and announce that the president had been killed. And, of course, we were asked to confirm it. And my response was that it was not up to the American ambassador or the American government to announce the death of the president of Egypt. It was up to the Egyptian government.

I later learned that she (the correspondent) was outside the military hospital in Maadi, where the helicopter had taken Sadat, and had taken Mrs. Sadat too. The correspondent had gotten hold of a doctor coming out of the hospital, one of the surgeons or an assistant. She had said “What about the president?” And he had said “He’s dead.” And so she went on the air and announced it. But it was not official.

We told Washington not to confirm it, but that they should be prepared. And then the radio and the TV began to play and chant verses from the Koran. I tried to call the family; I tried to call the foreign minister, and I tried to call various other people in the government. I kept being told that they were all at a meeting. And, of course, they were.

They were having a meeting at senior level of government to make sure that authority was maintained. The radio came on and announced that Sadat had been killed, that the government was intact, order would be maintained. Everyone should remain calm. So we had our confirmation – about seven hours after he had been killed.

Mubarak announced that the constitutional procedure would be followed. Under the constitution that was then in force, the vice president was not an elected official. The president was elected by the parliament and then confirmed by a general referendum. The president in turn appoints the vice president. He is not elected, and he does not automatically succeed to the presidency. The speaker of the People’s Assembly becomes the president ad interim. So a very senior, amiable, professional politician, Sufi Abu Jalah, who was speaker of the Parliament, became president of Egypt through that interim period, after which parliament would elect a new president.

Well, I did get a phone call soon thereafter from if I remember correctly Kamal Hassan Ali, an old friend, who was one of those loyal, intelligent, able servants of the state. He had been named by Sadat to head the Egyptian delegation to the peace treaty negotiations in Washington after Camp David. At this point he was foreign minister. He did finally get to me. He was the first senior Egyptian I was able to talk to, as I recall. Kamal Hassan Ali confirmed that everything was under control. There had been some uprisings in Upper Egypt where there were attacks on police stations by Islamic fundamentalists. It was not at all clear that they were coordinated or whether they were spontaneous attempts to take advantage of the situation. And there was some unrest in some parts of Cairo, but very local and very quickly contained.

And the government functioned as the constitution provided. The establishment rallied round and announced that all the members of the government, and the government party in Parliament, the Peoples' Assembly supported President Sadat's choice of Mubarak, and therefore he was the only candidate when the Parliament voted to elect a new president. Unlike when Nasser died, when there was a power struggle and it took several months for Sadat to emerge on top as the ruler of Egypt. Mubarak, upon whom Sadat had laid hands, was chosen without opposition. The whole mood in the country then, and even of those who had been basically opposed or were becoming increasingly disenchanted with Sadat, was that we don't want unrest in this country. We want an orderly transfer.

I think perhaps one of the best insights I had was from a very senior Egyptian, retired by then, but formerly foreign minister and senior diplomat – a good friend of ours. He came to call on me at the embassy a few days later and said: "I think we have to say that out of something bad (Sadat's assassination) something good can come."

I'd like to just add a footnote to what I said in the last segment about the Sadat assassination. I mentioned that two very senior American generals were there as guests, and the guests were sitting up behind Sadat, and both of them escaped somehow unscathed from the hail of bullets. What I forgot to mention was that each of them had a military aide. And the aides were sitting in the military part of the reviewing stand. Both aides were hit. Neither one fatally, but they both had rather severe bone injuries, from bullets which were flying around at random. We did not know where they had been taken.

The Egyptian medics were very quick, and I give them full credit for being on the spot and taking all the wounded that they could find, and there were quite a few, there were thirty or more injured in various degrees of severity, Egyptian and foreign. It took quite awhile to finally locate them at the hospital where they had been taken. The concluding chapter was that they were given absolutely first-rate attention by Egyptian orthopedic surgeons. When they were finally medevaced back to US military facilities in Europe, the American medical people were full of praise for the surgical treatment they had had, which really probably made their recovery–not easy, because they had severe problems — but less complicated than it otherwise would have been.

The Funeral and a Top-Heavy U.S. Delegation

President Reagan announced that he was going to send a very special, high-powered delegation to Sadat's funeral, in honor of our high respect for Sadat. The delegation consisted of three former presidents — Nixon, Ford, and Carter; a former secretary of state, Henry Kissinger; a large congressional contingent, the chairmen of both Senate and House Foreign Affairs, Foreign Relations Committees, minority members; a large press delegation… and also the chief of protocol, Leonore Annenberg, and Jeane Kirkpatrick were there, our representative to the United Nations. So it was a very top-heavy delegation.

It was a very strange kind of a funeral. In fact, it was a strange kind of mourning period. There was no outpouring of popular grief after Sadat's assassination. The city was very strangely muted; the country was strange. There were some outbreaks of violence, some local incidents and instability, anti-government, to build on the Sadat assassination in some parts of Cairo and in some parts of Upper Egypt, none of which was difficult to contain, although there were some casualties in the process.

When Nasser died, there were mobs in the streets and tremendous demonstrations of public grief throughout the whole Arab world, and certainly in Cairo. It was well documented on television that it was really out of control at the time of Nasser's death. There was none of that.

Now one explanation was that the Egyptian authorities were concerned that Sadat had died in a totally different way than Nasser. Nasser had had a heart attack and had died and had left an obvious vacuum. Sadat was assassinated, and the government wasn't sure whether it was going to be the beginning of a chain reaction of events, and therefore there was more security and the people were intimidated. But I think the more likely explanation was that in fact Sadat's popular base had badly eroded by that time.

There was a feeling on the part of many people that Sadat, in those last months, overreacted to signs of opposition, expressions of opposition from disparate groups concerned about the economic situation about reports of growing corruption, or about the fact that the peace process had bogged down, had not brought the promised economic miracle, and Egypt was isolated. But, in any case, Sadat had begun to crack down and reverted to some more authoritarian methods, and some of the freedoms that had been given for public expressions of dissent were really being reversed.

So there was no great popular outpouring of grief at Sadat's death. You might almost say some people found it a relief. It relieved tensions. They didn't know quite where Sadat would go next, where the country would go next. They had a foreboding that there was internal tension building up, and there was conflict among different elements of the population. They were isolated in the Arab world. There was just a sense of public malaise in those last weeks of Sadat's regime. Not that the people who felt this way advocated a violent solution. Most of them were appalled. I think most Egyptians did not think that this was the Egyptian way to solve their problems. They genuinely wanted to see stability maintained. There was very little attempt to exploit the situation and destabilize the transition to a new government.

The speaker of the People's Assembly became acting president under the constitution until the Parliament could vote and elect a new president. The president was elected by the People's Assembly and not by popular vote, although there was a referendum afterwards. So the person that actually received the condolences from the various delegations to the funeral was, in the first instance, the speaker of the Parliament.

Everybody of course knew that Sadat had appointed Mubarak as vice president, and all the indications were that nobody would contest the election of Mubarak as president, that he would be the next president. It was taken for granted that the constitutional procedures would be followed. But there had to be some delay before that vote could be taken, so Mubarak was not actually president at the time. He was still vice president at the time of the funeral though he clearly was prepared to be leader of the country. So the delegations called on the speaker of the Parliament first, and then they called on Mubarak.

In any case, the funeral went off without incident. It was very tight security. Remember, among the heads of government who came to the funeral was Menachem Begin, the prime minister of Israel, with an Israeli delegation. It was a typical Moslem funeral. Everybody marched, walked in the cortege behind the casket. It took the same route, incidentally, exactly the same route as the military parade had taken, right past the stands where Sadat was assassinated, where the ladies, who were not taking part in the Moslem funeral, were sitting. It is just the men who march. The ladies, Mrs. Sadat and friends of the family and other ladies including Betty, my wife along with Mrs. Mubarak, who would be the new First Lady, were all sitting in the stands where the president had been sitting when he was assassinated.

The reason for this route was that the burial was to be in a mausoleum right next to the tomb of the unknown soldier, which was right across the street from the military reviewing stand. That's where Sadat is interred. It was a very simple ceremony. There was a receiving line, and there was a certain amount of chaos. Everyone was trying to pay condolences to Mrs. Sadat. Her family were all there.

There was one little footnote, which was rather interesting, because we had two senior ladies in our delegation: Jeane Kirkpatrick and Lee Annenberg, ambassador to the UN, with cabinet rank, and the chief of protocol. And the question was raised: Shouldn't they be marching in the procession with the rest of the members of the delegation? All the rest of them were men. And it fell to me, as part of the briefing, to deal with this. And I had to say that I think that really we should follow Moslem customs, follow the customs of the country. The ladies accepted this, although there was a certain amount of discomfort about it. I remember Jeane Kirkpatrick saying "Well, if I see any other ladies in this parade, I'm going to be very unhappy." As it turned out, one of the senior members of the French delegation insisted that his wife walk with him in the funeral parade. That caused a little bit of unhappiness, but I still think we were right in following local custom in this.

There was a dinner that evening for all members of the American delegation and the American Embassy at the hotel where the American delegation was staying; with three presidents, each making remarks. It was interesting, because each took a very different tack.

Nixon spoke first as the senior ex-president. And he spoke in terms of the man with the most experience who had been in the House, who had been in the Senate, who had been vice president, who had been president, how he had been through all of these things before. He took the high road as the sort of world statesman in his remarks. But he was the only one of them who paid a tribute to the embassy personnel and the men and women of the Foreign Service for their role in all of this.

Gerry Ford gave the most low-key of all of the presidential remarks, rather general, but recalling his own association with Sadat and his part in the peace process. Probably the most personal, recalling his special relationship, were Jimmy Carter's remarks. His were very personal, about his relationship with Sadat, the relationship between the Carter and the Sadat families. It was not a gay occasion, but it was a relaxed occasion, and the presidents all agreed to have their pictures taken, endless photo opportunities. They had their pictures taken with various members of the staff, all of them delighted to have pictures taken of themselves with the presidents.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://adst.org/wp-content/uploads/2013/09/piece-1-3.jpg" * MERGEFORMATINET

And, of course, [their visit] involved, in addition to calls on the vice president, calls on Mrs. Sadat. And that was a rather emotional experience, especially for Henry Kissinger. He got all choked up in trying to make his remarks, because she was there with the children, and he had gotten to know her and the kids pretty well during the shuttles. And it was a very personal experience, and he clearly was deeply touched.

The Carters had the same experience. Mrs. Carter was the only spouse of the senior people in the delegation. After the main parties had left, the secretary stayed behind for some more substantive consultations with Mubarak about the future. And the main thrust was concerned that this was going to begin a period of instability, and what could we do to help stabilize Mubarak's regime and ensure that the peace process continued as it had under Sadat.

[Mubarak] was very interested, we had very close consultations on this with the Egyptians, to reinforce their declared intention that the government would not change course and would remain committed to Sadat's commitment to peace with Israel, the treaty, Camp David Accords, and a strong Israeli-US relationship.

But there were nuances of difference. Mubarak was much less strident in his rhetoric about the other Arabs. He began to signal that he was interested in trying to repair Egypt's relations with the Arab world, which Sadat had not paid much attention to, and in fact he had taken a sort of pride in antagonizing the Arabs when they objected to his making peace with Israel. So Mubarak said he was prepared to make up with the Arabs but not at the expense of peace with Israel. They would have to accept Egypt as it was. While he would like Egypt to rejoin the Arab world, it was up to the other Arabs to take the initiative.

Egypt was ready.

Nefertiti looked looked like a Sudanese/Ethiopian woman. Her bust shows she had golden brown/beige complexion.

The Sudanese and Ethiopians are the closest modern population to ancient Egyptians in terms of appearance and culture. Both countries are considered to be part of what is called Sub-Saharan/Black Africa.

Please keep in mind that ancient Egyptian civilization was founded by black Africans indigenous to the Nile valley in what is now southern Egypt. Black people continued to be a fundamental part of Egyptian civilization until Egypt began to be overran by foreigners like Hyskos, Assyrians, Greeks etc… In today's Arab Egypt, Black people are a minority.

Mohamed Emara · Follow Egyptian HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/Will-the-Copts-ever-be-accepted-in-Egypt/answer/Mohamed-Emara-18" \t "_blank" Sun

When Egyptians let go of this stupid notion that Islam in its core promotes Islamism, hence secularism is not against Islam!

Islam is a religion while Islamism is a political ideology that promotes Muslim chauvinism, and it dates back only to the 19th century. Early proponents of Islamism weren't extremists themselves. They wanted to use the common religious affiliations of Muslims as a means to mobilise the masses against European colonialism.

Ironically, this ideology which was supposed to safeguard the rights of the oppressed became a tool to opress minorities in the Muslim countries including Egypt.

Islamism doesn't necessarily mean the implementation of Sharia. Egypt was a secular country since it's independence in 1922 till 1971 when the government started pandering to radical Islamists to counter Nasserists and Leftists.

The Crescent and the Cross were often put together to symbolise the national unity during the popular uprising against British rule in 1919

During this period, religion was officially neutralized in the state; however, Muslims never abandoned Sharia nonetheless. While religion was separated from governing, the personal status laws were based on Islamic laws. This system worked perfectly fine until the 70's when the attitude of average Egyptian Muslims shifted and Islamism (Muslim chauvinism) became popular. That is when the sufferings of Copts started.

Nowadays, Islamism as an ideology has been discredited in the eyes of most Egyptians with the South being an exception. The status of minorities would significantly improve as soon as the rest of the country follows suit. How to accelerate this process? By educating the people on the importance of tolerance and accepting others.

I am not sure what this question implies.

Copts are the descendants of Ancient Egyptians, they sometimes were mixed with Greeks & Romans during the Greco-Roman period but generally speaking, they have to a great extent preserved their ethnicity.

They are a subsect of Eastern Orthodox but are autonomois and do not follow the Russian Church, they have their own pope. The pope of Alexandria.

That being said, the Copts have lived 1400 years alongside Muslims ever since Islam entered Egypt, the Muslims helped them get rid of the Romans at the begining, then a lot of Copts converted over hundreds of years to Islam for variois reasons, they constitute about 10% of the population now and are a fundamental part of the Egyptian society despite being a minority.

Just like the Jews when they lived in Egypt, the Copts have certain professions which they are more prominant in, such as Jewlery, Trading, Banking etc. They are an integral part of the society and a very productive part too.

From the Muslim pov, they are Christians and usually Muslims avoid conflicts with Christians and/or Jews if possible, so they cooperate well together, in fact they live in the same neighborhoods except for certain areas. Of course there are fundamentals on both sides who stir trouble once in a while but generally speaking, most Muslims of Egypt are easy going. There are some incidents that occur which can irritate Copts but those are usually triggered by fundamentalist groups not by mainstream Egyptian Muslims.

Die to the fact that Copts are a minority, they are very sensitive to any small act of discrimination that may occur, but not as sensitive as Jews in Europe during Medieval eras.

I hope that answers your question.

You are probably right. Ancient Egyptians look nothing like modern day Egyptians!

I don't know why modern Egyptians try so hard to looklike their ancient ancestors. Being offspring doesn't mean you are related to your grand parents.

Originally Answered: If modern day Egyptians are not related with the ancient Egyptians, what happened to the ancient Egyptian race?
You have these pseudo-scholars posting on Quora including Alexander Balogun. He posts a picture of a girl in Aswan and says that's how the ancient Egyptians looked like. The people of Aswan are not originally Egyptian. They are descendants of Nubians. Of course, they are Egyptians because they are citizens of Egypt, but Nubians are also Sudanese. They are not the same people of Ramses II and Ramses III. They had their own language.

We have had mummies discovered and tested. We need a lot more done. Some of the studies claim those mummies were related to Middle Eastern people. I have had people Did ancient Egyptians look like modern Egyptians or what are their differences?

The reason this questions is asked repeatedly and answered repeatedly - despite Quora's claim to eliminate redundant questions - is due to cognitive dissonance from those who have imagined a white Kemet that never was.

They resembled indigenous Africans - who are entirely black people; anyone else is admixed with non-African DNA and is "partially" African.

We know this because every Greco-Roman writer from Herodotus to Diodorus Siculus (spanning more than 400 years) who described the Remetch (People of Kemet) stated they were black people, and were migrates from up the Nile (that's south/inner E

Why do most paintings of ancient Egyptians look black while ancient Ethiopians look white?

Many ancient Ethiopian Christian art portrays the Middle Eastern Jews with light skin as shown by these religious paintings from Ethiopia.

Why do ancient Egyptians look exactly like Afar people?

Ancient Egyptians were black Africans in all forms of life. It was a region that encompassed several other ethnic groups in addition to the Afar ethnic group. In the ancient times, these would have generally been considered as one group of people, at least to foreigners.

Ancient Egypt gave birth to many other African ethnic groups that currently are situated in the southern part of Egypt and beyond the Sahara desert.

The Afar tribes are known for their dark brown skin tone, and thick to loose curly hairs, in addition to their unique dressing style.

Like the rest of Africans from the River Nile Valley.

The Nile river is our greatest African river in length and shared history. Egypt is a Nile-Land first and foremost.

People of the Nile who founded ancient Egypt are a very specific and yet a diverse group of Africans.

They are categorized into four sub-groups as follows:

Kushite Horners (Beja, Somali, Afar etc.). Kushite Horners are also known as elongated type of Africans. They have elongated faces and sharp features.

Kushite Nubians who built a brilliant civilization of their own (Kerma, Alwa, Napata-Meroe, Dongola etc.).

Nilo-Saharans (Fulani,

Egypt was and is still the cross roads to Asia and the middle east, Europe, and the rest of Africa. As a result Egyptians have a range of prototypes. While most people cherry pick their pictures I try to show the wide range of ancient Egyptians. They did not all look exactly the same, just as all New Yorkers don’t all look the same. Anyone claiming all Egyptians are homogeneous are either misinformed or lying. Here is some random art work from the Ancient Egyptians and their mummies:

Modern Egyptians look just like ancient Egyptians. Why do some deny that fact?

Because they either have some agenda or trying to appropriate our history. Modern Egyptians are the only descendants of the Ancient Egyptians. The Ancient Egyptians originated from the mesolithic cultures of Egypt. Modern Egyptians look Identical to Ancient Egyptians…not only in features but also in skin, hair and eye color.

It depends on how ancient?

The indigenous ancient Egyptians originally came from the South of modern day Egypt. These people were more related to people from ancient Sudan, they looked like any typical African.

Go to the Upper Nile and the Southeast region (Red Sea coast). You will see the least indigenous people of Egypt with little or no foreign admixture.

Egyptian ancestry seems to be rare in Israelites. Our core ancestry is Canaanitic, i.e. indigenous Levantine.

Centuries of Egyptian colonial rule notwithstanding, intermarriage between Jews and Egyptians was scarce.

As we can glean from genetic studies on Ashkenazi Jews (who were highly endogamous in exile, relative to other Jewish diaspora clusters), Israelites do have a certain amount of ancestry from what is now Iraq and Iran, but not Egypt.

The ancient Egyptians were all black, and I mean black according to 20th century scientific definition of black, and not peoples arbitrary opinions or explanations, identity politics, etc.

The ancient Egyptians were indigenous to Africa, and the Nile valley, and there is no archaeological evidence that supports they came from the Mediterranean or the near east. They were Africans culturally, linguistically, and biologically.

In the 20th century an Italian Anthropologist named Guiseppe Sergi published his book titled "The Mediterranean Race." It was merely a scientific explanation for the origin of the European race. Sergi's claim was the in Africa there was group known as the Hamites, they were divided into to main branches, the north western and eastern containing several sub-Saharan African ethnic groups.

Eastern Branch; Maasai, Watusi, Nubian, Somali, Afar(Danakil), Galla(Oromo),Beja, Abyssinian(Agaw,Amharic, and Tigre), Copts, and Fellahin.

North western Branch; Toubou(Tebu), Felbu(Woodabe), Berber(Tuareg),and Guanches.

If you look up the ethnic groups in each branch, both the north west and eastern branches, you will notice that the overwhelming majority of ethnic groups in both list are racially Negroid. With the exception of some Berber tribes, Fellahin, and the Copts.

Modern Copts & Egyptians vs Ancient Egyptians and sub-Saharan Africans

The idea that ancient Egyptians mysteriously disappeared off the face of planet is a completely fictitious idea. Genes are literally passed on from one generation to the next, inheriting the genes of parents, grandparents, and ancient ancestors-certain faces of the past would literally resurface in the posterity of tomorrow. I myself am living proof of that, resembling my great grandfather in appearance, but neither my biological mother and father. To put it simply, Coptic Christians who aren't even a race(one can not inherit being a Copt), do not resemble ancient Egyptians from bygone days.

Just on basis of Photographic and Artistic comparison, it should be obvious that ancient Egyptians were members to the Negroid, they were not Caucasians. Again that is culturally, linguistically, and biologically speaking. The Egyptians were not Indo-Europeans, and therefore could not have belonged to the Caucasoid race, they were Negroid. Thanks to Anthroplogist of 20th century such as E.A.Wallis Budge we know this for certain.

You need to analyze about this!

When the arabs invaded egypt in 646, the byzantines didn't kill or displace the native egyptian population. The majority of the egyptians at that time were mainly coptic christian and as of today the population of the coptic egyptian is mainly minority.

The arabs instead just converted the egyptian population from coptic christianity into islam but eventually made the coptic and greek language into extinction thus paving the way for arabic to become the sole language of egypt. However, the coptic language which has derived from the ancient egyptian language is still used by the copts especially on coptic egyptians.

Modern day egyptians are descended from ancient egyptians especially the copts. Modern day egyptians basically look genetically similar to ancient egyptians Rami Malek, a Copt, has a slight overbite just like Tutankhamun and his family. His overbite probably helped him get the role of Freddy Mercury? (Joking, of course) i know that the overbite is a great racial focus on Afrocentrics' mind, dismissing other facial characteristics ase shape of the nose and dismissing even the Caucasoid hait texture of most of the mummies.

It has been proven lately that all the maternal and paternal lineages of Tutankhamun's family, thus Upper Egypt 18th dynasty, thus not Hyksos, were of Eurasian origin. Tutankhamun, Akhenaten, kv55 and Amenhotep iii belonged to R1b paternal lineage. People went nuts and even claimed that this West Eurasian lineage is of African origin because some people of the Sahel like Toubou ot Hausa belong to a sub-lineage of R1b. Have in mind that we don't know exactly what sub-lineage Tutankhamun had. When you plug in the available data in an online haplogroup predictor the most possible lineages are European ones, not the lineage R1b-v88 from Africa. Nevertheless the oldest R1b-v88 ever found in ancient dna studies were in the Balkans and Iberia, thus it is very possible that pastoralist people carrying also R1b entered North Africa during a Green Sahara stage. When the Sahara dried out many people went southward in the Sahel and that's why you see R1b more predominant there. Others remained on the coast of the sea or around Oases because for ex The Siwa Oasis berber men belong in about 25% to this lineage. R1b is also found in almost 10% in Egyptians.

Yuya belonged to G2a paternal lineage and G2a was the predominant lineage of Early European farmer coming from.Anatolia. He is a clear proof that farmers entered Egypt also.

The supposed mummy of Thutmoses I is L y-dna (this is a supposed mummy of the king, but it is not him, simply because his arms aren't pulled over the chest in the Osiris pose, a pose restricted to pharaohs in the 18th dynasty). L is of Caucasian origin, the oldest L being found in Armenia Neolithic. Today is abundant in India because Indians are also part Caucasian.

The maternal lineage of all the mummies except Amenhotep III and Thutmoses i is K mtdna haplogroup coming from the Middle East. Amemhotep III belonges to the H2 maternal lineage. You can argue that H2 is from a Mitanni princess but the presence of K is not, because Yuya and Thuya were clearly Egyptian and not from foreign princes and princesses.

If you don't know who are all these people, shame.

Looks like they are all invaders.

This is the general principle, but this one is carved with texts on a famine I believe

Then you move the boulder to the place where you want to build the pyramid and repeat the process another 2,299,999 times and you have your pyramid. At 20 years with about 150 work days each (to account for work in the fields and travel to and from the site) that amounts to moving 767 boulders a day, on average. With 20,000 workers that gives you a crew of 10 for each boulder, with some 60% of the workforce engaged in logistical support (sourcing and preparing food, preparing tools, preparing ramps, repairing ropes, etc, etc, etc).

Ancient Egyptian civilization is adjudged to have started with the First Dynasty of Egypt in about 3100 BCE (plus or minus a century). It was at that time the upper and lower kingdoms were united under a single monarch. This is as far back as archaeologists can trace the names of actual rulers.

It is generally though that Egyptian civilization ended with the death of Cleopatra in 30 BCE. This ended Egypt's independence and made it a Roman province.

So, more or less, 3,000 years.

What civilization?; and when/where did "it" begin, and when/where did "it" end, are the questions that need answers and what has to be determined first in order to honestly answer the question: How long did the Egyptian civilization last? The Narmer Palette gives us some of the earliest hieroglyphs and the stepped pyramid at Saqqara gives us an example of a very early pyramid, and both give us a sense of the very beginnings of an upper and a lower civilization associated with the Nile River. So with all that, real Egyptian Civilization, including the entire span of the Greco-Egyptian Ptolemaic Empire well into the dawn of Islam, lasted an easy 4000+ years. There is obsidian from Afghanistan found in the ancient 4000+-year-old tombs and burial sites in Egypt, and that is certainly indicative of an extremely early Silk Road kind of trade dimension to pre-dynastic ancient Egypt. Little is it understood that Egypt was in the early years of Prophet Muhammad himself still a mover and a shaker in the Hamito-Semitic/Coptic/Indo-European world(s). And don't accept with haste any of the prevailing nomenclatures, lexicons, Orientalist or classicist generalities about any of this. But rather, dig in with your own intellectual, scholarly, and innovative tools to excavate a new classicism, and avoid the Orientalism-tainted neo-classicism catching on today.

Why did early civilization first begin in Egypt?

HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/Why-did-early-civilization-first-begin-in-Egypt" \t "_blank" Two main reasons: strategic location and the Nile, the longest river on the oldest inhabited continent, Africa and the papyrus Strategic location : a crossroads. Someone said it all as follows : Egypt is located at the crossroads of three continents. It is at the back door of Europe, the side door of Asia, and the front door of Africa.

The Nile River : the longest river in Africa, but it is also the longest river in the whole world.

HYPERLINK "http://visav.phys.uvic.ca/~babul/AstroCourses/P303/WebContent/egyptian.html" \o "visav.phys.uvic.ca" \t "_blank" The Nile Valley

The Egyptian or the Nile Valley civilization developed, as the name suggests, along the banks of the river Nile in Egypt. Its long, narrow flood plain was a magnet for life, attracting people, animals and plants to its banks, and providing ideal conditions for the development of stable communities. Seen as a gift from the gods, the annual flooding of the river deposited nutrient rich silt over the land, creating ideal conditions for growing wheat, flax and other crops.

Evidence suggests that the region was inhabited as far back as 700,000 years ago by Neolithic and Paleolithic Man. To date, the oldest tools found in the lower Nile Valley have been found in and near the cliffs of Abu Simbel, just across the river from where, millennia later, the descendants of these people would build the temple of Rameses II. Geological evidence indicates they are around 700,000 years old, giving a fairly good estimate as to when a Stone Age people was living in the area. It is believed that nomadic hunters settled in the valley and over the course of time, began to grow crops to supplement their food supply. Evidence suggests that beginning in 5500BC, hunting ceased to be a major support for existence and the Egyptian diet was made up of domesticated cattle, sheep, pigs and goats, as well as cereal grains such as wheat and barley.

Artifacts of stone were supplemented by those of metal, and the crafts of basketry, pottery, weaving, and the tanning of animal hides became part of the daily life. The transition from primitive nomadic tribes to traditional civilization was nearly complete. The first communal project of this fledgling society was the building of irrigation canals for agricultural purposes. By predynastic Amratian times, about 3600 BC, agriculture appears to have begun in the valley alluviums of the Nile. By late predynastic times, about 3100 BC, there is evidence of a considerable growth in wealth consequent upon the earlier agricultural development and accompanied by a more integrated social system and the rise of the pharaoh dynasties

Papyrus discovered on the banks of the Nile

Papyrus paper is the first paper in history. Found in the tombs and temples of Ancient Egyptians as far back as 2700 B.C. It was made by Ancient Egyptians from papyrus plant.

Thanks to the discovery of the papyrus on the banks of the Nile, the African continent was the first in history to produce books. Long before the use of paper became widespread, an Egyptian brotherhood of scribes had already started making books under the leadership of the elite of priests.

The priests of Sais said to Solon, "You Greeks are novices in all the knowledge of antiquity. Again the significant questions arise, why were the Greeks so ignorant as to their ancestors, and why did Egypt hold the knowledge of earlier Hellenic life? It must have been that the historic Greeks were but emigrants into Hellenic lands; that in prehistoric ages had been filled with the rich culture of another race akin to the Egyptians.

When did the Egyptian civilization collapse?

HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/profile/Ernest-W-Adams" \t "_blank" Ernest W. Adams , lived in Egypt HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/When-did-the-Egyptian-civilization-collapse/answer/Ernest-W-Adams" \t "_blank" Answered Nov 4, 2017

It didn't collapse, it morphed. From the 25th dynasty (715 BC) on it was subject to a series of invasions, first by the Nubians and then by the Assyrians and the Persians. By the time that Alexander the Great conquered it in 332 BC, he was viewed as a liberator. He had pretty broadminded views, however, and realized that it was politically expedient not to attack the Egyptian religion. Instead, he merged Greek gods in with Egyptian ones, and declared tolerance for various religious faiths. His general Ptolemy took over after he died, and the line of the Ptolemies continued, still calling themselves Pharaohs, until Cleopatra committed suicide and Egypt became a province of Rome. But by that time the spread of the worship of the Egyptian goddess Isis had gone all over southern Europe. In the period between Alexander and Caesar, the Egyptians still mummified their dead, but they painted the coffins in Greek style rather than Egyptian style. Here's one:

It was the influx of Christianity that really put paid to the old religion, but it wasn't a collapse, just a change. The Coptic Christians even today consider their cultural roots to be in ancient Egypt, and they name their children things like Osiris (I've met one). They also believe that Jesus was entirely divine and not human, another connection to older ways of thinking about gods.

How did the Egyptian civilization start and end?

Egypt underwent many different cultural periods before the dynastic period that we're all familiar with. HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Prehistoric_Egypt?wprov=sfla1" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Prehistoric Egypt - Wikipedia You can't point to one date and say "Egyptian civilization started here." It emerged over centuries as the Egyptians grew so much food that they could afford to have different classes of people, such as warriors and priests and construction workers. Hieroglyphics began to appear in an early form around 3200 BC (literacy is an essential quality of civilizations), but the first decipherable sentence dates to 2800 BC.

As for ending, it never ended. Egypt has been continuously civilized from that day to this. But the old religion dwindled under the Romans, and Christianity came to Egypt early, around 42 AD according to legend. It took over Egypt during the next couple of hundred years. Egypt was solidly Christian until the Muslim invasion of 639.

The Greeks actually conquered Egypt around 330BC, and essentially put an end to Egypt’s new kingdom period. Alexander the Great conquered Egypt, and after his death they started the Ptolemaic Dynasty. This went on for about 300 years, until 30BC. Ever heard of Cleopatra? She was the last ruler of the Ptolemaic Dynasty until the Romans started their conquest.

There aren't.

Pyramidal-shaped buildings are pretty much what you are stuck with if a) you want to build giant-structures, but, b) have just past stone-age technology. They are stable, simple to build (just keep piling up stuff), and look very impressive…which is why you were building a giant-structure in the first place.

That said, well…this is an

This is one from at Teotihuacan in Central Mexico:

Notice that apart from having four sides and being smaller at the top than the bottom, they really don't look that much alike. Nor did they have the same purpose. And they were built about twenty-five hundred years apart.

What about Yellow Asia?
What about Red America?
Black Africa is a code word for “Sub-Saharan” Africa, a geographic region racialized as the Land of the Blacks of Africa. This is really pathetic.
The Saharan racial divide is a racist fraud and a complete farce. There are indigenous black populations in the Sahara, supra-Sahara, trans-Sahara and sub-Sahara. At the very beginning of civilization, there was no Sahara Desert. There was no “Sub-Saharan” Africa. There were not “Sub-Saharan” Africans.

The farcical Saharan racial divide is brilliantly exposed through the colonial concept of “nigrescence”

Original Question :Did Africa have a written language before colonization? Huh….

Where do you think writing started?

Let me just tell you of our own Ge'ez. Eritrea and Ethiopia still use it.

Not quite. The world's first civilization is generally considered to be that of Sumer, in lower Mesopotamia. The Sumerians probably were the first to use writing and the wheel, and built the first city, between around 3500 B.C. and 3000 B.C. Bronze smelting and chariots soon followed, the world's first empire, long-distance trade, commercial contracts, etc. Is that civilization? Well, it's commonly accepted as such. You may have another definition in mind.

This was at one end of the Fertile Crescent, the other end being in Egypt. If you consider Egypt African — a solid case could be made that M

The first known people’s were the Bantu-speaking people. They were named after the language they spoke which is a mixture of several different African languages. The bantu’s were living in central africa near present day CAR and Congo. At the time of the bantu’s Africa had different geographical aspects and living conditions were different. The bantu’s became known as the founder’s of civilization. As the climate changed after the last Ice Agethe bantu’s split according to matriarchal roots and migrate to different parts of Africa. However, outcasts of the Bantu’s lived in Africa and when large groups of people entered the others land war and intertribal marriage increased. The kingdom’s of Egypt, Kenya, Zimbabwe, Mali, Almoravids, Niger, Nigeria, Algeria, Sudan, Ethiopia, Congo, Mozambique, Ghana, and Togo/Benin came forth throughout history and their roots could be traced back to bantu’s.

Civilisation is defined by cities so why did no cities or civilisation worthy of the name, ever evolve where humans first evolved, in Sub-Saharan Africa?

There were no cities or civilization worthy of the name in sub-Saharan Africa.

You learn what you learn; but it does not make it true or accurate.
Queen Sheba of Ethiopia, the iconic ruler of Axum, one of the greatest empires of the ancient world, was building temples when Paris did not exist. The Great Zimbabwe, the impressive stony palace of the Monomotapa is regarded as an architectural wonder.

…the ruins of the Great Zimbabwe are comprised of several stone walls, monuments, and buildings built mainly of granite. The structures were created using a method called dry stonewalling, which requires a high level of masonry expertise. The internal structure contains many passageways and enclosures. It spans almost 1800 acres of the southeastern area of the country of Zimbabwe.

It takes only a quick Google search to learn about cities in sub-Saharan Africa.

Actually, European colonialists destroyed between 50 to 100 cities in sub-Saharan Africa, including Benin City. It had street lighting and elaborated city walls. They also looted royal palaces and sacred shrines. It is estimated that 90% of Africa's cultural heritage sits in colonial museums in Europe and the US. Many European countries (Belgium, for instance) have decided never to return the artifacts and works of art looted during colonial wars in Africa.

European explorers like the famous Stanley wrote down in his journal that he destroyed 28 major towns in Congo. The Force Publique, the private army of King Leopold, King of the Belgians destroyed the double during the Congo Free State, his slave colony and personal fiefdom.

Modern estimates suggest that at one point the walls were four times longer than the Great Wall of China, using up to a hundred times more material than the Great Pyramid of Cheops. Beyond the city limits, further walls were constructed to divide the surroundings of the capital into around 500 distinct villages. This complicated network of walls was all dug by hand, the mosaic of settlement boundaries covering 6,500 sq. km in total.

Huge metal lamps fueled by palm oil lined the city's streets, a precursor to modern street lighting. When the Portuguese first laid eyes on the city in the middle of the jungle, they classified it as one of the most beautiful, well designed cities in the world. Lourenco Pinto, the captain of a Portuguese ship, observed in 1691: "Great Benin, where the King resides, is larger than Lisbon, all the streets run straight and as far as the eyes can see. The houses are large, especially that of the king which is richly decorated and has Fine columns. The city is wealthy and industrious. It is so well governed that theft is unknown and the people live in such Security that they have no door to their houses." Now, nothing of that city, believed to have been founded in 900 CE, remains. A new city has been built on the site, but no traces of the original's unique splendor can be seen.

Kano

Founded: Around 600 CE

A thousand years ago, Kano was a major crossroads for traders traveling from northern to sub-Saharan Africa. Today it’s the oldest city in West Africa, the second largest in Nigeria, and still an important trade hub for the country. Its rich history is most evident in the city wall, a 12-mile, 30-50ft-high structure with 14 gates that’s believed to have been constructed sometime in the 15th century. While the discovery of tools from the iron age indicate that there may have been prehistoric settlements here, Kano as far as we know was founded as Dala around 600 CE and crowned its first recorded king, Bagauda, in 999 CE.

European explorers did not tell the whole truth about Africa and Africans. They created a stereotypical view of Africa, full of jungle static primitives. A stereotype is an incomplete narrative. It is used to break other peoples’ dignity.

The Kingdom of Kongo was a well-organized and sophisticated kingdom.

Detailed and copious description about the Kongo people who lived next to the Atlantic ports of the region, as a sophisticated culture, language and infrastructure, appear in the 15th century, written by the Portuguese explorers.

Later anthropological work on the Kongo of the region come from the colonial era writers, particularly the French and Belgians (Loango, Vungu, and the Niari Valley), but this too is limited and does not exhaustively cover all of the Kongo people. The evidence suggests, states Vansina, that the Kongo people were advanced in their culture and socio-political systems with multiple kingdoms well before the arrival of first Portuguese ships in the late 15th century.

Great Zimbabwe under King Munhumutapa who is of Shona descendant. About 70% or more of world gold used to come from the kingdom of Great Zimbabwe. Great Zimbabwe ruins is surrounded by more than 5000 ancient mines.The Shona people are known to be experts in mining, farming & sculpturing.

Great Zimbabwe was very civilized with advanced mining and trade. Great Zimbabwe was the Wall Street of ancient times. Europeans mostly the Portuguese & Dutch; Chinese & Arabs used to come for trade. Great Zimbabwe was known to have abundance of gold, ivory, copper, salt, iron & unique gigantic cattle because of unique grazing land that surrounds it. Great Zimbabwe is in between two great Rivers in Zimbabwe, Mutirikwi & Popoteke. Because of these two great rivers, fishing & farming was very common.

It is believed that Great Zimbabwe has numerous underground tunnels that links with various places, ancient civilizations where Kings used to hide their abundance of treasures. Some historians believe that Queen Sheba presented gold to King Solomon that came from Great Zimbabwe. I don't know how far true it is. In my opinion Great Zimbabwe was more advanced than the Pyramids, it's now because of social media many people in their millions are visiting the ruins.

Which other tribes in Africa did Ancient Egypt interact with ?

This question is based on another Eurocentric falsehood that ancient Egyptians had little interaction with “African tribes”, except for Ethiopians.
Truth # 1 : Egypt is,first of all, a Nile-Land. Ancient Egypt was founded and ruled by people of the Nile—all indigenous Africans— for thousands of years before it was invaded, conquered and occupied by people from outside the River Nile Valley (Hyksos, Romans, Greeks, Persians, etc.).
For ancient Greeks and Romans, Blacks were closely tied to the River Nile. Delusional Eurocentrists should telll us all at village along the Nile, Whites are found as first settlers and earliest inhabitants. That is, at what village along the Nile, black becomes white categorically speaking ? Ancient Egyptians stated loud and clear in the Papyrus of Hunefer : We came from the beginning of the Nile.

Where is the source of the Nile ? In the Great Lakes Region. They also recorded that they came from the south led by their king in the Edfu text.

The Greek geographer Claudius Ptolemy, the father of the geography, in 150 AD speaks of the “Lunae Montes”, the “Mountains of the Moon”, high mountains covered by snow located in the inner Equatorial Africa and indicated as the source of the Nile. This resulted from the findings he had gathered at the Alexandria library, related to the oral stories coming from this unknown part of the world.

The Mountains of the Moon were first reported around 50 AD by Diogenes, a Greek trader who claimed to have found the source of the River Nile after travelling inland from the city of Rhapta, a market city whose location is unclear but it believed to be in what is now Tanzania.
Diogenes reported that the Nile rose from a range of snowy mountains, located near two great lakes. He named these snowy peaks the Mountains of the Moon. Today, his great lakes are thought to be Lake Victoria and Lake Nyassa and the Mountains of the Moon are probably the Rwenzori range on the border between Uganda the The Congo.

HYPERLINK "https://grahamhancock.com/bauvalosman1/" \o "grahamhancock.com" \t "_blank" The Soul of Ancient Egypt - Graham Hancock Official Website
Today the world refers to the long and narrow fertile strip running from the border of Sudan in the south to the shores of the Mediterranean in the north, as “Egypt.” This name is universally accepted as being true and correct for this country. As for the people who inhabit it today, they are called not only “Egyptians” but also “Arabs.”

It thus often comes as a surprise when one is told that these names are not original or even native to this country. The name “Egypt” was coined by Greeks colons in the 4th century CE, and it is a corruption from the name Koptos, itself a corruption of Gebtu, the name of an ancient area in the south of the country, probably as ancient as 3000 BCE.” The name of the country that was most commonly used by the ancient Egyptians themselves was Kemet.

According to Egyptologists, this name means “The Black Land”, and derives from the black alluvial soil which was deposited by the annual flooding of the river

Nile." But others contest this explanation, and propose that the name Kemet stems from the inhabitants themselves or, to be more precise, the color of their skin. It is highly likely that the original inhabitants of Egypt were dark or black-skinned Africans; a fact that can be ascertained even today by the dark-skinned Nubian people who live in the southern part of the country.

That Kemet may indeed mean 'The Land of the Blacks' is also supported by discoveries made recently in the Egyptian Sahara on rock art left by prehistoric black-skinned populace, found in caves in the remote mountain regions of Gilf Kebir and Jebel Uwainat. The name, therefore, would then read "Land of the Black-skinned" or simple "Black Country".

These names tally with the notion that the earliest settlers of the Nile Valley were Negroid Africans who came from the Sahara around 5000 BCE. We are not suggesting, of course, that Egypt should now be called Kemet (although there are some who advocate that it should). What we do think, however, is that it important to highlight this original name so that modern Egyptians be reminded of their true ancestral origins and, more importantly, how perhaps its soul came to be.

The terms Misr and Misrayin come from the Hebraic name "Mizraim" found in the Bible and used for "Egypt" by people of the Levant and the Arabian Peninsula. Foreign early civilizations and nations in the Middle East referred to the land of the pharaohs as Musri, Musur, or Misri. Even the biblical text personifies this name by associating the Egyptian civilization with a legendary eponymous founder named "Mizraim"—the son of Ham and grandson of Noah—(the Hebrew -im being a plural ending used to indicate "tribe of" or "descendants of").

So the Semitic-speaking peoples and even some of the Indo-European nations further north (such as the Hittites) knew Egypt as Musri, Misri, or Mizra. And from this come the classical Arabic (West-Semitic) name Misr (Egypt) and the more colloquial Arabic Masri (an Egyptian). The name Misr or Masr is used both for the country itself and, confusingly, also for the modern city of Cairo even though its official modern Arabic name is Al Kahira. Thus an Egyptian living in Cairo may claim to live at Misr, meaning the city of Cairo and not the country itself. Let us try, however, to now imagine "Egypt" before it became a state, before humans even settled there. Let us begin the search for its soul on a clean slate.

Tarharqa is a real historical figure, but he’s not exactly what we would call an Ethiopian.

In modern terms he’d be what we’d call Sudanese; his family ruled from the city of HYPERLINK "http://www.ancientpages.com/2015/12/30/ancient-great-city-of-napata-in-the-kingdom-of-kush/" \o "www.ancientpages.com" \t "_blank" Napata, about 250 miles north of modern Khartoum. in ancient times he would have been known as a Nubian or a Kushite (Nubia describes the region; Kush was one of the states in the region).

The confusion arises from the fact that the Greek geographical vocabulary was pretty vague. Greek and Roman use “Aethiopians” as a general word for people from the Horn of Africa — but also, more loosely, for any people who seemed dark-skinned to a particular writer. There’s a story in the New Testament, for example, about an “Aethiopian” eunuch who meets the apostle Phillip on the road to Gaza. The eunuch is identified as the treasurer of the HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Kandake" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Kandake , the “Queen of Aethiopia,”— but that’s actually the royal title of the Nubian realm of HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Mero%C3%AB" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Meroë, a much later successor of the kingdom ruled by Taharqa and his family.

The Kushite Dynasty

In any case, the HYPERLINK "http://www.livius.org/articles/dynasty/25-dynasty-nubians/" \o "www.livius.org" \t "_blank" 25th dynasty of Egypt were Nubians from Kush.
The Nubian conquest came during a low point in Egypt. The country was split into warring factions, and largely ruled by Libyans rather than Egyptians. This map is approximate, but it gives a good idea of how fragmented Egypt was prior to the Nubian invasion:

The “Rulers of Thebes” (in green) were allies of Kashta, the Kushite king.

The Kushite kingdom was a major force in Egypt’s confused affairs in the middle of the 8th century BC. Kushite king HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Kashta" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Kashta was powerful enough that he could arrange for his daughter HYPERLINK "http://www.unesco.org/culture/museum-for-dialogue/item/en/79/statue-of-the-divine-adoratrice-of-amun-amenirdis-i" \o "www.unesco.org" \t "_blank" Amenirdis to be adopted into the ruling house of Thebes. She became “God’s wife of Amun,” and part of the family of HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Osorkon_III" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" the last Egyptian who had ruled the entire country . This connection provided legitimacy for later Nubian claims on Egypt.
The first Nubian conqueror of Egypt was HYPERLINK "http://www.livius.org/articles/person/piye-or-pianchi/" \o "www.livius.org" \t

"_blank" Piye (reigned 741- 716 BC). He assumed direct control of Thebes and the rest of Upper Egypt, though it's not clear if this was achieved by violence or through the influence his kingdom already had through its alliance. In either case, the other factions in Egypt did not like the sudden appearance of a new power and they banded together against Piye. He defeated them soundly and firmly established his kingdom as the most powerful of the many Egyptian factions.

It's important to point out that the Kushites already had longstanding cultural and religious ties with Egypt: they didn't appear suddenly as unfamiliar barbarians. They were very familiar with Egyptian art, architecture and religion; their rule was always portrayed as being part of, rather than a break from, Egyptian tradition.

The Kushite dynasty consolidated its control over Egypt in the reign of HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Shabaka" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Shabaka (705–690 BC). Shabaka left a statue of himself at Karnak wearing the traditional Two Crowns, a symbol that he had united Egypt for the first time in over a century.

Shabaka also seems to have positioned himself as a protector of Egypt against outside forces. The Assyrian empire was becoming more and more powerful, threatening Egypt's traditional client states in Canaan and the Levant, so it's possible that ordinary Egyptians were more concerned about the truly alien power to the east than the more familiar Kushites.
However, the Kushite pharoahs faced a very serious challenge. The HYPERLINK "https://www.kingjamesbibleonline.org/Isaiah-36-6/" \o "www.kingjamesbibleonline.org" \t "_blank" biblical complaint Lo, thou trustest in the staff of this broken reed, on Egypt; whereon if a man lean, it will go into his hand, and pierce it: so is Pharaoh king of Egypt to all that trust in him. refers to either Shabaka or Taharqa, and it reflects the (quite correct) perception that Egypt could not stand up to Assyria.

Taharqa succeeded Shabaka in 690, but the surviving records leave a lot of questions. Some modern scholars believe that Taharqa dethroned Shabaka, rather than succeeding him peacefully. Years of proxy-wars in Canaan and the Levant turned into a direct conflict during the 670s; in 671 the Assyrian emperor HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Esarhaddon" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Esarhaddon defeated Taharqa and captured Memphis.

Tarharqa retreated to Upper Egypt to continue the fight, but the Assyrians had the upper hand. Over the next decade Assyrian and Kushite forces battled on and off in Egypt, with different Egyptian factions supporting each of the foreign emperors. The last Kushite pharaoh was HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Tantamani" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Tantamani , who was driven out by the Egyptian HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Psamtik_I" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Psamtik I . Whitewashing of ancient Egypt.

Egypt is a Nile-Land first and foremost like 10 other African countries. No Nile-Land has ever been inhabited by aboriginal white populations.
It defies basic common sense to find dissimilar aboriginal populations (Nubians and Whites) living side by side on the same land and on the same latitude sharing the same River and the same seasons. Nubians are some of the blackest Africans and yet, their closest neighbors and cultural relatives are aborginal Nilotic Whites.
Whitening of ancient Egyptians.

The written word of ancient times is crystal clear as to what ancient Egyptians looked like and where they came from.
Egyptians are a colony of Ethiopians (Diodorus Siculus).
Egyptians are a woolly haired people with black skin (Herodotus, Aristotle and many others).

The oldest Afro-combs were excavated in archeological sites across Egypt. Ancient Egyptians manufactured the oldest Afro-combs to comb their woolly hair.

Egyptians stated that loud and clear that they came from the south led by their King. The Valley of the Kings and the Karnak Temple mega-complex are located in Upper Egypt, far from the Mediterranean coast and where the darkest and blackest Egyptians are found.
Invaders come by the sea.
Invaders settle in seaside towns.
Invaders build forts along the sea.
Invaders get reinforcements from across the sea.
Egypt is no exception. The descendants of invading settlers are concentrated along the Mediterranean Sea.
Ancient Egyptians recorded that their worst enemies were People of the Sea who attacked Egypt repeatedly.
Yes, Egypt is the Land of Ham. Ham epitomizes blackness. To this day, countless people cling to the belief that Blacks are a race of slaves because of the curse of Ham. Black skin is a curse because Ham was cursed.

Truth be told, Ham was never cursed but Canaan was.

Originally Answered: If Noah's son Ham was black and his grandsons Kush, Khemet (Mizraim), Canaan (Canaanites), and Phut (Phutites), were black, why is there so much consternation about the ancient Egyptians being black?

Because no one wants to believe black people are anything accept uncivilized. Black Africans had massive civilizations before any Europeans stepped foot onto African soil. Ham was the progenitor of the dark races. His four sons are what produced the African nations today, excluding the mixed races that dominate North Africa. All true Africans were/are black. It makes no sense that a black man had one black son, Kush, and three white sons, Put, Mizraim and Canaan, that were not black albinos, but white Europeans. That notion is as ridiculous as a cat bearing puppies, and yet, this narrative is acceptive. There is no logic in it. Africa is the land of dark soil, and dark people, not tanned. I say this time and time again. Those who control history, control the narrative, and the collective mindset falls for it without question. Some things are just common sense.

That idea is non-biblical, and is based on an old, outdated assumption that Noah and everyone else on the ark with him were the only human survivors on earth after the flood. With that assumption, one then has to reconcile the different races of the world (of which there happen to be more than 3). So on top of being a false assumption, it was a very simplified false assumption. The much more likely scenario was that his 3 sons, with their families, split up and migrated to areas of the world where their descendants mixed with the people who were already in those areas, which were outside of the limited scope of the flood, which was a localized event which only affected the civilization(s) which were part of Noah's culture and sphere of influence. That was 'the world' to that culture.

It seems to me that Afrocentric writers are posting about this mostly, and they want to deny the ancient Egyptian people's connection to Middle Eastern and North African people, Copts, and modern Egyptians of all backgrounds. The ancients were related to North Africans and Middle Eastern people. They spoke a language related to the ancient Semites and the Copts, who descend mainly from the ancient Egyptians, are related mainly to North Africans and Middle Eastern more than others. This concept of white versus black is something that came out of American laws and ideas. Ancient North Africans whether Algerians, Moroccans, Tunisians, or Egyptian were primarily Caucasian just like the Semites of the Middle East. Anyway, the Egyptians saw themselves as Egyptians. Why do you guys have to keep discussing ancient Egyptians using terms like white or black?

The closest genetic proxy we have to ancient Israelites are the Samaritans, and they look more or less the same as today's Ashkenazi Jews, Sephardi Jews, Mizrahi Jews, Druze, Lebanese Christians, Syrians, etc.

The Samaritans were completely endogamous for more than 2 millennia. The only known foreign admixture they have is Assyrian, and that's on the maternal line.

Below you'll find pictures of Samaritans. From these photos, we can conclude that ancient Israelites can and often did have white skin, but most had a Mediterranean/honey-colored look.

The ancient egyptians did not depict themselves the same as “black” Africans. In fact Egyptian art categorizes people into four separate groups of stereotypes: Its "Egyptians," as defined against "Asiatics", "Nubians," and "Libyans."
INCLUDEPICTURE "https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-3c5940260eb048c771788c8b55da89dc-lq" * MERGEFORMATINET

Each of these stereotypes is easily recognizable based on distinct physical characteristics. Skin tone, clothing and hairstyles must be interpreted as particularly important indicators of perceived ethnic membership based on Egyptian attention to these details and their recurrence throughout Egyptian history.

In general, Egyptian men are portrayed with reddish skin, long hair and white linen kilts. Asiatics are depicted with yellow or white skin, long hair, full beards and fringed skirts with colorful patterns while the Berber/Amazigh/Temehu Libyan chiefs were depicted with feathers, tattoos and tunics with colors.

Nubians have much darker skin, short knappy hair, and are often shown wearing large earrings and bracelets. They also wear long skirts made of animal skins.

Egyptians also differentiated themselves from other peoples linguistically. Egyptians referred to themselves as rmt, a term that could signify "person" or "human" in addition to "Egyptian." Egyptians contrasted this term with various words for the various peoples they encountered. The peoples of the Near East were broadly termed '3mw, or "Asiatics. The peoples that inhabited the land to the south of Egypt were generally called nhsj, "Nubians and the peoples living to the west of Egypt were referred to as tmh,"Libyans.

The political relationship between Egypt and Nubia was quite different from the political connections between Egypt and its Asiatic neighbors.

Egypt's political and economic presence in Nubia was much more clearly defined, and it can thus be assumed that Egyptians, at least on the elite and royal levels, had a much higher degree of direct contact with Nubians than with Asiatics. However, much like the Asiatics of this time period, the Nubians that appear in Egypt's literature often serve as a symbolic enemy of the king; once again foreigners serve as chaotic forces in opposition to the ordered world of Egypt.

The image of Nubians from the Egyptian textual evidence of the Middle Kingdom is quite negative.

Many of these texts could be however steeped in royal propaganda, and can thus only offer insight into the royal rhetoric of the time. In these texts, Nubians are depicted as being rebellious groups that must be defeated and controlled by the pharaoh. Indeed, they are not merely seen as nuisances to be silenced, but rather, enemies to the Egyptian worldview.

An excellent example of the Egyptian view of Nubians is the Boundary Stele of Sesostris III. This text is also referred to as the Semna Stele because it once adorned a stele that stood at Semna on the border between Egypt and Nubia. The text itself clearly characterizes the stele as a boundary marker. Sesostris III praises his own ability to protect the borders of Egypt from attack, and his success in extending these borders farther south. Fixed borders are not simply a means of political control, but in a literary context may also be an ideological definition of the limits of social or even cosmic order.,,thus, the Semna Stele must be interpreted not simply as an official demarcation of Egyptian territory. The ideological and propagandistic elements of this work must also be taken into account.
At the end of this inscription, Sesostris III gives us details of his actions in Nubia and his encounters with the Nubians themselves. He explains,
I have captured their women,
I have carried off their dependents,
Gone to their wells, killed their cattle,
Cut down their grain, set fire to it.
As my father lives for me, I speak the truth!

It is, however, the assessment of the Nubians themselves that is of interest here.

The Egyptian king expresses his disdain for the Nubians, saying: "they are not people one respects, they are wretches, craven-hearted."

It is clear that this royal scorn serves a clear and valuable rhetorical function. There is no need to assume that the Semna Stele was inscribed to be read by any ordinary literate person, whether Egyptian or Nubian, who happened to have an idle half hour at the border. There is an element of address to posterity, and it is assumed that any successor'son'-of Sesostris campaigning in the area will show interest.

Thus, the demeaning language used to describe the Nubians serves to "justify" Egyptian economic and political control over the peoples to the south. The royal view of Nubians, therefore, must place these people below the Egyptians in order to maintain the legitimacy of Egyptian presence in the region.

The term “Nubia” is actually a modern word, which may be derived from the ancient Egyptian word for gold – nebu. To both the Egyptians and Nubians, the Nile River was the source of their lifeblood as it brought yearly floods that allowed their crops to grow, so both peoples were geographical orientated along a north-south axis. The Egyptians referred to anything south of the first cataract (cataracts are rocky portions of a river unnavigable by boat) as “Wawat” and anything south of the second cataract was called “Kush.” Collectively, Wawat and Kush comprise the region that modern scholars generally refer to as Nubia

Last note is that the Egyptians certainly don't fit into modern constructed dichotomy of “black” vs “white” Its pretty annoying when reading these questions trying to pigeonhole the ancient Egyptians into a ‘racial’ category or for political purposes. If this “black” here is a synonym for the negroid race, than no, indigenous north Africans dont cluster with “Black” Africans since they trace their origin from outside of Africa, the result of ancient back migrations from the Near East and therefor Eurasian in origin.

Originally Answered: Why did Egyptian Pharaohs stopped building pyramids by 1700 B.C.E. ?

The Egyptian practice of building pyramids actually lasted longer then 1700 bce, by about 200 years. The last pyramid was built by the founder of the 18th dynasty, Ahmose I, around 1525 bce. His successor, Thutmose I was the first pharaoh to be buried in the Valley Of The Kings.

There are several reasons why the Egyptians stopped building pyramids. First and foremost was the sheer resources it took to build one. Like just about anything manufactured in the world, they were being built with less quality than in the past, and often fell apart soon after they were finished.

The ruined pyramid of Senusret II (1897 - 1878 bce)

Every year, new pyramids are being found. Most of these are in a sad state, which is why they hadn't been noticed before.

The biggest reason was security, though. Many of the later pyramids were being build on the cheap, but with a number of security features meant to foil would be tomb robbers, such as false tunnels and quartzite walls. None of this helped, though. Pyramids are really just a big billboard that says "the richest guy in Egypt is buried here". Pharaohs would barely be sealed in when someone was breaking down the door.

The Valley Of The Kings is actually a very special place. It provides a number of features that made it ideal. It's well hidden, and it has one very obvious feature that makes it ideal for the pharaoh who wants a pyramid...

Al Qurm, overlooking the Valley Of The Kings.

The mountain Al Qurn is a pyramid shaped mountain that overlooks the valley. This meant that anyone who was buried here would still have a pyramid to call their very own.

From the 18th dynasty on, the pharaohs were having their tombs dug into the valley. This kept them hidden (or so they thought), and had a great natural feature as their monument.

However, the tenacity of thieves is without limits, and each of the tombs, with one notable exception, was looted in antiquity. It got to be so bad that in later years, many of the mummies had to be rescued and placed in a much more modest tomb together.

Only Tutankhamun, a relatively minor pharaoh, was spared, possibly because his tomb sits on the floor of the valley and had been covered over by debris during flash floods. Yet, even his tomb wasn't untouched. When Howard Carter entered the tomb, he found the tomb in a state of disarray, with objects jumbled in place and beads and other goods on the floor, as if robbers had been caught in the act.

Most people only think of the 3 Great Pyramids Of Giza, when they think of Egyptian pyramids. The fact that there are over a hundred that have been found, and many more probably not yet discovered, shows that it was one of the most important structures to the Egyptians. But, having such a large tombstone is like catnip to robbers, and the lack of quality of later pyramids meant it was time to try something else.

The Egyptian pyramids are oriented to the Geographic North Pole of the Earth and more specifically, most of them are aligned to half a degree of it and this is no surprise at all, the Egyptians were excellent astronomers.

On the other hand, we have absolutely no indication that the Egyptians knew about magnetism or had instruments like magnetic compasses.

The Geographic North Pole is the point in the Northern hemisphere where the Earth's axis of rotation meets its surface. It is called the True North Pole to distinguish it from the north magnetic pole which is a point on the surface of Earth's Northern hemisphere at which the planet's magnetic field points vertically downwards. The different locations are shown below:

 It isn't strong. In fact, it isn't even evidence from a legal point of view!
It is based on hearsay for the most part. In a court of law in modern times, hearsay is not evidence. It can not be entered into the record as testimony, because it is unfounded and there is no way to confirm it.

No physical evidence exists to prove the claim. Neither is there any ancient Egyptian texts or papyrus that state how the pyramids were conceived of or built.

There are however numerous ancient texts that state the pyramids were not used as tombs.

Despite these facts, people have "thought" that the pyramids were tombs for thousands of years, however, depending on which group of people you ask throughout time, the answers vary greatly as to whom they believed to be entombed there. The claims range from men to gods.

Just to put this into perspective… here is a shortlist that I know of off the top of my head, it should not be considered comprehensive by any means.

- Khufu, or Cheops (folks can't agree on who he was the successor of)
- Queens of Khufu
- Khafre (folks can't agree on who he was the successor of)
- Menkaure, or Mykerinos (folks can't agree on who he was the successor of)
- Hermes (was a god)
- Agathodaimon (was a god)
- Idris (was a prophet)
- Seth (third son of Adam and Eve)
- Aristotle
- Alexander (as in "the Great")

Folks can't agree who the "architect" was either and have debated who built them and for what purpose they served since ancient times.

I should not have to point out that when varying groups of people have different opinions of who is buried in a specific location, how something was built, or who designed the structure. It definitively means that there is no evidence and that nobody knows… period.

Facts vs. Opinion…. What is a tomb?

Definition from Websters Dictionary of tomb:
noun \ ˈ*tüm* \
(Entry 1 of 2)

1a: an excavation in which a corpse is buried
b: a place of interment

No body, No corpse, No intact mummy, has ever been discovered in a pyramid.

Not in Giza. Nor in any other of the HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/How-many-pyramids-exist-in-the-world/answer/Jeff-Davis-172" \o "www.quora.com" \t "_top" thousands of pyramids that are scattered around the world.

Most of the discoveries of pharaonic mummies found in tombs are located in the Valley of the Kings in the hills across the Nile River from Luxor proper. These tombs are located in deeply hidden chambers below the ground.

The funny thing is that many notable historians have told this for thousands of years… why people still argue this point is beyond logic.

What is significant, yet rarely spoken about in regards to Giza?
Some of the earliest Arabic accounts (1,730 - 1,575 BC) of Giza are in regards to pilgrimages of "Sabian" star worshipers from the ancient city of Harran (Şanlıurfa, Turkey aka: "Urfa") which is located just south from the recently discovered temple in Gobekli Tepe thought to date back 11,500 years with a statue discovery dating back over 13,500 years.

These "Sabians" were seen and recorded making sacrifices and performing ceremonies at the Sphinx and pyramids by many Arabic notables, even the scribe of Saladin witnessed these "Sabians" gathered in a circle sacrificing white roosters and burning incense in front of the Sphinx while he and his host debated about the builders of the pyramids and their function.

To say that Harran was a center for knowledge is an understatement. Many philosophers and scientists, such as Al-Battanai (858–959 AD), who is credited with calculating the distance from the Earth to the Moon, Thabit ibn Qurrah (836–901 AD), who translated Greek classics and scientific works into Arabic, and wrote on mathematics and astronomy, and the physicist and chemist Jabir ibn Hayyan (721–813 AD) aka "Father of Chemistry" are just a few of the notables who gained prominence at the Harran University.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-4c1329937650ef33540a49312b095bb9-pjlq" * MERGEFORMATINET
Thought to have been the first university, the Harran University was destroyed in 1251 AD. Only the ruins exist now. Note the obelisk-shaped tower in the background.

Were the Harranians who visited Giza really Sabians?
It is said that the Caliph al-Ma'mum while passing through Harran in approximately 830 AD during an expedition to Byzantium, asked the Harranians what religion they belonged to. They said, "We are Harranians," and made it clear that they were not Muslim, Christian or Jewish. The Caliph said that was not good enough, they had to be either Muslims, Jews, Christians or Sabians, as only these are lawful "People of the Book" according to the Quran. The Caliph continued on his journey and said that if they did not convert by the time he returned, it would be lawful to shed the blood of idolaters. After consultations, the Harranians were advised to say "We are Sabians," and thereby the Pagan "Sabians" were able to continue their faith without harm until in 1251 when Harran was destroyed by a Mongol invasion.

Harranians were known as “Star Worshipers”. Both Islamic and Jewish sources claim that Abraham himself was a star worshiper, and there is a mutually told story (Islamic and Jewish) in which after contemplating the setting of Sun and the Moon, he came to the conclusion that there must be one God.

There was a great temple dedicated to the moon god Sin at Harran, and it is claimed that Harran was one of seven cities, each of which was dedicated to one of the seven planets known at the time.

This is a most compelling argument for star worshipping being the oldest form of religion known to modern man. This idea is further substantiated by the many astronomically aligned megalithic monuments such as Stone Henge, Adam’s Calendar, Gobekli Tepe, and even the pyramids at Giza.

The kings of the 4th Dynasty - often referred to as "the pyramid builders" - were able to command these resources because of the stability of the government and the wealth they were able to acquire through HYPERLINK "https://www.ancient.eu/trade/" \o "www.ancient.eu" \t "_blank" trade . A strong central government, and a surplus of wealth, were both vital to any efforts at pyramid building .

While the resources existed, the pyramids likely were maintained and were sites of importance and respect by the populace. The builders were probably kept, though in smaller numbers, to perform maintenance tasks, guard (fruitlessly) against tomb robbers, and generally keep their eyes on the cause of their incomes.

The status quo changed over the centuries. For example, from circa 1570–1069 B.C.E. attention shifted to the place now known as the Valley of the Kings.

As money and men moved to the new focus, the slow but relentless forces of time began to cause deterioration of the great pyramids. Earthquakes added their special damage.

This is not to suggest that Giza was forgotten, there is ample evidence of New Kingdom pharaohs such as HYPERLINK "https://www.ancient.eu/ramesses/" \o "www.ancient.eu" \t "_blank" Ramesses the Great (1279-1213 BCE) taking great interest in the site. He is, in fact, considered the world's "first Egyptologist" for his work in restoration, preservation, and recording of ancient monuments and especially for his work at Giza. Despite the shift of focus, declining economies, and a host of other factors: Giza continued be regarded as an important site and funds were allocated as long as they were available for its upkeep. Giza was a thriving community for centuries with temples, shops, a market place, housing, and a sturdy HYPERLINK "https://www.ancient.eu/economy/" \o "www.ancient.eu" \t "_blank" economy .

Although the Great Pyramid of Giza, and the other smaller pyramids, temples, monuments, and tombs there, continued to be respected throughout Egypt's history, the site fell into decline after the HYPERLINK "https://www.ancient.eu/Roman/" \o "www.ancient.eu" \t "_blank" Roman occupation and then annexation of the country in 30 BC.

Today, the Giza Pyramids and the Valley of the Kings are well-maintained and tourist-oriented. I especially liked the light and sound show held in front of the Spinx. The Valley of the Kings impressed me with the safety of the site—armed guards dotted the slopes of the valley.

Pyramids and pyramid-like structures were built by a number of societies around the world, and people stopped building them for a number of reasons.

In Egypt, pyramid building had trailed off somewhat from the early dynasties. The end of the pyramid-building period essentially came to an end after the 13th dynasty. Those rulers had seen increasing internal problems and they were eventually conquered by the Hyksos. These foreign rulers had no interest in pyramids themselves, so none were built under their rule, and the interest in new native rulers starting a century later was desultory. Basically, Egyptian rulers had gotten out of the habit and found better things to do with their money. Conversely, in the New World, various societies built pyramids from their earliest days up until the Spanish conquest when their entire societies were upended.

The current feeling about ancient artifacts is that their intervening history is part of the whole, so we don't do restoration any more, except to prevent further decay. So the 19th century graffiti carved into the inside of the Great Pyramid should stay, because that, too, is part of its history.

That said, the Sudanese restored some of the Pyramids of Meroë, because there are a lot of them and they felt it was worth it to sacrifice a couple's historical appearance to show they how they originally looked. Here's a picture showing both the restored ones and the old:

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-a37dafeb58fda3110557ddb00cc58d22-lq" * MERGEFORMATINET

Unfortunately, an Italian treasure-hunter blew the tops off most of them looking for a way in, but they have a rubble core and there was nothing inside.

Anyway, I don't think the Egyptians should try to restore the original ones. They could build a replica nearby, maybe.

HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/How-did-the-Shia-dynasty-of-the-Fatimid-come-to-control-the-Sunni-kingdom-of-Egypt" \t "_blank" It wasn't really that hard, most Egyptians weren't even Muslims during this time. When the Fatimids annexed Egypt in the year 969 the bulk of the population were still Coptic Christians.

The conquest:

The Ikhshidid dynasty that ruled Egypt prior to the Fatimid conquest was in decline and anarchy ensued in the country. The ruling elite, who were mostly Sunnis, were tired of this status of instability and knew that the Fatimids are planning to attack Egypt soon, so they contacted the Fatimids offering to help them in exchange for preserving their aristocratic status and a guarantee of freedom of religion.

Previous attempts to invade Egypt were repulsed but the Fatimids succeeded this time in part due to the weakness of the Ikhshidids and due to the assistance they had from internal allies.

The Fatimids led by general Jawhar al-Siqili found little to no resistance when they reached the capital Fustat as their agents were all over the country. After a few encounters the Ikhshidids were easily overthrown, the khutba was recited in the name of al-Mu'izz the Fatimid Caliph and Egypt was no longer an Abbassid vasal state.

The Fatimids were largely dependent on Kutama Berber infantry who were instrumental in the conquest of Egypt.

After the successful incorporation of Egypt into the Fatimid domain a poet in al-Mu'izz's court called Muhammad ibn Hani commemorated the conquest with a poem:

فقل لبني العباس قد قضي الأمر

وقد جاوز الإسكندرية جوهر

تطالعه البشرى ويقدمه النصر

The sons of Abbas ask has Egypt been conquered?

Tell the sons of Abbas that the deed has been done

As Jawhar has overpassed Alexandria

He proceeded with good news and delivered victory

Administration:

Jawhar was the Caliph's viceroy in Egypt and in order to strengthen his position he implemented a number of policies:

Jawhar employed a number of former Ikhshidid officers to help in putting down revolts in the Nile Delta.

Kept earlier promises of integrating the old elite into the new government.

Reformed the taxation system.

Started building a new capital for the country later known as Cairo.
and after fending off two Qarmatian invasions from Arabia the Fatimid gains in Egypt were consolidated and it would transform into the empire's new centre of administration.

Generally speaking with the exception of the reign of al-Hakim the Fatimids were tolerant to the non Isma’ili Shias such as the Sunni Muslims, the Copts, Armenians and Jews. They often appointed officials from the aforementioned communities.

Due to the cordial relations between the rulers and the locals peace and prosperity prevailed with Egypt flourishing under the Fatimids.

Despite repeated efforts the Fatimids failed to convert most of the populace through preaching to the Isma'ili branch of Shia Islam.

Very positive.

Amr was a devout Muslim who liberated Egypt from the Roman yoke (Byzantine Empire) and treated the population fairly. Unlike the Romans, Amr did not persecute Egyptians for their beliefs, invited the Patriarch to return from exile, gave the Coptic Church autonomy and appointed Egyptians as government officials.

Some consider him an invader no different than the ones who came before and after him, but such views are not held by the vast majority of Egyptians.

I'm sceptical about whether Twelvers were in any way the "main" Shi'i movement in the 9th century. AFAIK, Zaydis and Batinis/Seveners could probably make the easier claim to represent mainstream Shi'ism in the middle ages and before the Safawid conquest of Persia in the 16th century. There were certainly Twelvers around (Hassan-i Sabbah is probably the most famous case of a Twelver-turned-Ismaili-turned-pseudo-Twelver, if I think about it), but they seem crowded out by the Zaydis and Batinis by far. I'm open to be corrected, though.

Anyway… the Fatimid treatment of Zaydis and others Shi'is who fell within their territorial Imamate/empire was very good, to the point where "treatment" doesn't feel like the right word for it. While other Shi'is were not handed the keys to power, they were not treated how we'd expect a subjected minority to be "treated". Where existing local institutions centred on *sharifs/*descendants of the Prophet and their adherents existed, whether they were Shi'a (from any movement) or Sunni, they were universally respected, and seen more as a way for the Fatimid dynasty to curry favour with the masses as a fellow Mohammedan "clan" than as rivals. While there were sometimes strong disagreements (insofar as other sharifs, who generally leaned Zaydi, with that school's emphasis on the collective authority of the Alids and legal learning over mystic charisma—saw the Fatimids as threatening the "equal authority" of the Ahl-ul-bayt with their special claim to Imamate).

But the disputes between other Shi'a movements and the ruling Ismailis were "family disputes"—even their ideological opponents knew the difference between the Fatimid regime (which always gave a modicum of respect to descendants of the Prophet) and the 'Abbasid one (with its long record of persecution, imprisonment, and torture of their most respected imams). As the following example of an "anti-Fatimid Shi'a's" sudden change of attitude when confronted with 'Abbasid state power illustrates—

Sharif Abu'l-Hasan Muhammad al-Radi (359-406 AH / 970-1016 CE), a Husaynid from the Musawi line, the naqib of the Alids in Iraq and from amongst the leading family of (Twelver) theologians in fourth AH/ tenth CE century Iraq, was one of the most notable signatories of the (anti-Fatimid) Baghdad Manifesto. His signature as well as that of his brother Sharif al-Murtada (355-436 AH / 967-1044 CE), would have undoubtedly added credence to the proclamation.

Yet, it was also to Sharif al-Radi that a line of poetry is ascribed, which privileged his kinship with the Fatimids, and which certain accounts note as a principal cause for the proclamation of the manifesto. Standing in the presence of the Abbasid Caliph while decrying the treatment meted out to him, the Sharif is reputed to have said:

"[Why should] I bear humiliation in the land of the enemy, when in Egypt the Caliph is an Alid ['alawi]. His father is my father, his friend [mawla] is my friend if the distant stranger bears malice for me. That which ties my neck to his neck [i.e. binds us], is the sayyid of all men Muhammad, and Ali." HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/How-is-Amr-ibn-al-As-taught-in-Egypt-positive-or-negative" \l "pZYYM" [1]

In other words, even Shi'as who opposed the full measure of Fatimid claims to caliphate knew the Fatimids were "their own people" in a way the 'Abbasids could never be. Which, in retrospect, looks like a plausible reaction on their part.

To adduce two corroborative examples: the Fatimids' first encounter with a major Zaydi-Shi'a political power, the Idrisid sharifs then ruling in the Maghreb, was cordial. Idrisids who were captured by the Fatimids got special treatment as "people of the House", and the Idrisid movement was allowed to remain the Imam's regents in the Maghreb while effectively retaining their Zaydi character. This also goes to underline that the Fatimids were generally fairly pragmatic about recognition of their claims to caliphate: ruling a large population of Christians, Sunnites, Shi'as, and others, the Fatimid state never made submission conditional on acceptance of Isma'ili orthodoxy. In this, the Fatimids remained quite unlike the later Almohad & Almoravid Berber religious movements of the middle ages, which made imposing their notion of orthodoxy on their conquests a central part of their public image.

On the other end of the Fatimid sphere, the tomb of the Ismaili hujjat of Islam and ruler of the Yemen, the "Little Queen of Sheba" Arwa as-Sulayhi, remains a site of pilgrimage and veneration by the locals, though the dominant Shi'a movement in Yemen remains Zaydi rather than Ismaili. I would think this popular habit indicates there was no general ill-feeling among the Zaydis from the time the Ismaili movement was ascendant politically (if anything, I'd expect the everyday Zaydi pilgrims to think the Shi'i saint they venerate was "just like themselves" in doctrine, though truthfully I'm just guessing).

He gave a false-alarm to Israel.
He alerted the Mossad about a "radish". Code for "War". The alert dragged on for three months and cost $35 million. But it was a false alarm. The Angel had been wrong.

He saved Israel.
His warning on 5 October 1973 that "war will start tomorrow", triggered an emergency Israeli military mobilization and prevented both a complete surprise on 6 October and the complete occupation of the Golan Heights by the Syrian Army a day later.

A few days after someone revealed his code name to the world, intentionally or unintentionally, he "died".

After a five story fall from his million dollar apartment authorities wrote his death off as "suicide". However, eye-witness accounts claim otherwise.

According to them, two Middle-Eastern men looked over his body from the balcony(implying it could be anyone from Israel, Egypt or in between).

Suicide or Murder? It's a cold case.

Opinion | Who killed Ashraf Marwan? (Published 2007)

Three days after meeting with the doctor, Marwan was contacted by the Mossad as he walked through Harrods, the London department store. His operational life as a spy began. From the start, Marwan delivered. He yielded so many top secret Egyptian documents it was as if, as one Mossad agent put it, "we had someone sleeping in Nasser's bed." Based on this trove of secrets, Israel developed what became an article of faith for the nation's political and military leaders: "the Concept." With biblical certainty, the Concept held that until 1) Egypt possessed missiles and long-range bombers and 2) the Arab states united in a genuine coalition, a new war with Israel would not take place. Running the agent, who was given code names including "Angel," "Babylon" and most frequently "the In-Law," grew into a small industry. For face-to-face meetings with his handler and often the head of the Mossad, a safe house was purchased in London not far from the Dorchester Hotel. It was wired to record every conversation, every aside. A special team of clerks turned the tapes into transcripts for the prime minister, the army chief of staff and a handful of other top Israeli officials. Marwan received £50,000 at each meeting, but this was only a minor expense compared to the estimated $20 million spent over the first four years of Marwan's operational life. Israel's leaders felt this was money well spent: They knew what their enemies were thinking. Then in April 1973, the In-Law sent a flash message to his case agent using the word "radish." This was the code for an imminent war. Zvi Zamir, the head of the Mossad, rushed from Tel Aviv to the London safe house. The In-Law revealed that on May 15, Egypt and Syria would launch a surprise attack. Israel called up tens of thousands of reservists and deployed additional brigades and support equipment in the Sinai and the north. The alert dragged on for three months and cost $35 million. But it was a false alarm. The In-Law had been wrong. Six months later, on Oct. 5, 1973, the In-Law sent another flash message with the code word "radish." Zamir was awoken at 2:30 a.m. with the news. The next morning, he took the first El Al flight to London.

However ancestry throughout north Africa and Arabia is complicated, take for example this Bedouin man from Jordan, whose appearance is slightly different from that of the first two individuals shown, indicating that not all Arabs/Semites share the same ancestry.

The ancient Egyptians frequently painted themselves reddish-brown, which was an artistic way of demarcating themselves racially from their neighbors, such as the Nubians(Nehesy), Libyans(Tjehennu), and Asiatics(Aamu).

Some have argued that the Egyptians painted themselves various colors, because it was meant to be symbolic, and not necessarily meant to convey any kind of realism in regard to what race the ancient Egyptians actually were.

This is only true however of how the Egyptians portrayed specific deities like Osiris for example, whose skin was painted green because Osiris personified agriculture.

Anthropological evidence however, whether ethnological, anatomical, or linguistic, has demonstrated that ancient Egyptians were more related to Sub-Saharan Africans, than they are to European or Asian populations.

Ancient Egyptian culture can be very complicated to understand, and most of what we know about ancient Egyptian culture comes from ancient Egyptian literature; such as the Pyramid Text, The Book of the Dead, and mythological text such as Plutarch's narrative on Osiris.

Ethnological or cross-cultural research has been carried out in the past by ethnologist to better understand ancient Egyptian culture as well as their biological origins: E.A. Wallis Budge who was one such anthropologist who published his work Osiris And The Egyptian Resurrection in 1911. In both volumes Budge compares ancient Egyptian theological doctrine with the beliefs and superstitions of modern Sub-Saharan Africans, as well as comparing many ancient Egyptian customs with those of modern Sub-Saharan Africans.

For example, in the first volume Budge dedicates a chapter to discussing the peculiar headdresses of the ancient Egyptians, stating that a great title in ancient Egypt was the “bearer of the feather."

Osiris And The Egyptian Resurrection, p.321

As can be seen below, this image of a procession of Egyptian men from Medina Habu shows them all decorated with feathers, likely ostrich, in their hair.

The custom of plumage decoration is very ancient in Egypt, and can also be seen on the Hunters Palette going back to the Early Dynastic period(3100 B.C.): Sub-Saharan Africans of course all over the continent decorate their headdresses with feathers, mainly Ostriches, but also other types of birds, no different than the ancient Egyptians.

Another ancient Egyptian custom was plaiting children's hair to indicate that they belonged to a specific age group, and in Sub-Saharan Africa youth of both sexes, of various tribes have their hair plaited like ancient Egyptian children: gods such as Harpokrates(Horus the Child) and Khonsu are depicted as children with a plaited hairstyle known as the side-lock.

Interestingly enough in of the book Arabia Felix published in 1930 by the british traveler and craniologist Bertram Thomas, he mentions that the Banu Halil plaited the hair of young females, and Henri Frankfort an archaeologist from Holland wrote that the side-lock distinguished princes of the New Kingdom.

Both the Afar and Maasai plait the hair of children, or in the Maasai's case young males who have not graduated from to warrior to elder, by going through Eunoto.

It's clear that princes in ancient Egypt, once they exceeded a certain number years, would have their side-lock cut off, no different than a young Maasai warrior who graduates to elder, and were no longer considered adolescent.

The important thing to recognize is that these hairstyles were only meant for the young, and that is the case for the ancient Egyptians, Maasai, and Afar which were all classified under Hamitic back in the 20th century by Carleton S. Coon, C.G.Seligman, and others.

Many ancient Egyptian customs and beliefs correspond to those of Sub-Saharan Africans. Again if the ancient Egyptians came from anywhere other than the continent of Africa, or even these fictitious “white north Africans," then where is the ethnological proof?

Aside from genetic analysis, which provides no explanation as to how the ancient Egyptians could have derived from anywhere else other than Africa, yet their culture not be reflective of an Indo-European or Mesopotamian origin: as stated already, the ancient Egyptian’s customs and beliefs strongly suggest that they are related to modern Sub-Saharan Africans, with little to no affinity ethnically or racially to middle eastern or other Asian populations.

How many questions do you guys need to ask about our race? I mean seriously. The DNA and skull type of Egyptians are unique to them only. Modern Egyptians are Haplogroup E-V68 (e1b1b1a) + some e1b1b1a2.
We are Egyptians, Most of us are olive/Brown.

Race: Caucasian.

Area: Middle Eastern, Mediterranean, and North African.

Second DNA test: Egyptians genetically closer to Eurasians than to other North Africans.

The two specific North African haplogroups, E1b1b1a-M78 and E1b1b1b-M81, are predominant in North African populations. The second most frequent haplogroup was J, which has been postulated to have a Middle Eastern origin.

Both J sub-branches, J-M267 and J-M172, were observed in North Africans.

Haplogroup E-M81 is frequent in Northwest Africa but declines towards Egypt and the Levant. On the other hand, E-M78 and E-M123 are frequent in the Levant and Egypt and decline towards Northwest Africa.

So called North African DNA is mentioned when one uses so called atDNA system; but you know there is no such thing as North African DNA, the same as there is no European DNA, sub-Saharan DNA, Asian DNA, Arab DNA, etc. Each region has a number of different ethnic groups, each of which have their own Y-DNA/mtDNA Haplogroups. So how could a region with many Haplogroups to be identified as having only one DNA. It doesn't make sense at all! atDNA system is used to hide certain facts about people's ancestries; that's why some do prefer it!

Modern Egyptians Y-DNA Haplogroups are J1, J2 and T-M184 to a lesser extent. These are Japhetic, Hamito-Japhetic and Semito-Japhetic Haplogroups.

Most people will not be honest when giving an answer to this question and will either say dark skinned only or light skinned only. ..but we have to consider the point in time in history….

So what about the colour of the arabian horse? Notice in the image below Pharaoh Ahmose slaying the Hyksos, Ahmose, being a native of Africa Ahmose is displayed in a colour of most native Africans i.e Brown just like his horse whilst the foreign Semitic Hkysos are depicted being light skinned as generally would be the case with people of the Semitic stock. It's a strange way to look at it but why not. See the colours, the horse and his owner are brown like all Afticans. The hooves are jet black as the nubian, the Hyksos are light skinned like fellow Semites and Easterners. Clearly they knew what colours were and painted them so.

Since the bulk of answers so far have posited the white or light side of Egyptian history, allow me to cast my vote on the darker side. Allow me to say that the Egyptians were horse coloured. Arabian horse coloured at that.

The fact is that Egypt, though in Africa, is situated in close proximity with the East and the West would have attracted numerous people from many neighbouring nations with different skin shades. Egypt, being a super power somewhat like what the USA is today, it would be understandable why people would've wanted to flock it.

Horses in Ancient Egypt

Horses were introduced into Egypt during the Second Intermediate Period (about 1700-1550 BC). The earliest remains of horses are a few bones from Avaris and the skeleton of a horse found at HYPERLINK "https://www.ucl.ac.uk/museums-static/digitalegypt/buhen/index.html" Buhen . The Buhen remains date to the early Second Intermediate Period, but this date is disputed. In the wars between the Theban 17th Dynasty and the Hyksos both sides used horses. In later times, the kingdom of Kush in the Sudan was famous for its horses, perhaps from good grazing grounds in areas of Upper Nubia: in the Victory Stela of king HYPERLINK "https://www.ucl.ac.uk/museums-static/digitalegypt/chronology/piy.html" Piy , special mention is made of the royal attention to horses.

In the New Kingdom horses were animals of the military elite and the ruling class. In general Egyptians did not ride on horses but used them for chariots. Two horses are the rule. Horseshoes were not used. Egyptian horses, which were probably almost identical to those in the Near East, are rather small by comparison with modern horses, and attested in different colours (brown, reddish etc.).

Actually that is inaccurate there are black Egyptians in increasing number as you go south across the Nile. Egyptians are diverse with more Mediterranean looking people in North and more East African looking in South that can be simply attributed to two factors:
Location: Egypt is big country and cross roads between three continents so geography affects race

This is like asking “why aren’t the Chinese brown like all other Asians?” or “why aren’t Norwegians as olive-skinned like all other Europeans?”

The problem with the question is the assumption that all Africans should be black, which is similar to the assumption that all Asians are Chinese or all Europeans should be white. Let me remind that we are talking about the second largest continent and the most diverse in the world HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/Why-arent-Egyptians-black-like-all-the-other-Africans" \l "nawYU" [1] .

Not all the other Africans are black. There are a whole lot of white ones in South Africa, and for exactly the same reason that the Egyptians aren't black: they are descended from lighter-skinned immigrants. Egyptians today consider themselves to be Arabs, though an Arab from Arabia would dispute that. :) Most of the other North Africans are lighter-skinned than their sub-Saharan neighbors.

The ancient Egyptians considered themselves as a race apart. They regarded themselves as much superior to the Nubians, their nearest neighbors to the south (who are indeed quite black), and the Assyrians fro

Not all ancient Africans were black.

North Africa is mainly Arab and white. There were Greek colonies at Thebes and in other places in Egypt. Phoenicians also lived in various places in ancient North Africa, and they were not black. Egypt is a cosmopolitan country with a mixed population. Non-black foreigners have lived there since the Old Kingdom, during the Bronze Age.
The ancient Egyptians depicted themselves in art as reddish brown people with dark straight hair, usually.

Why????, Is there any rule in the universe says Africans must all be black, and can't be lighter just because they all live in the same huge continent , and if they are,does that mean they are foreigners came from Europe or Asia so you must kick them out ???? Its very simple , just look at Europe , in the far north of Europe (like Nordic countries) they are whiter than south Europeans and you can easily differentiate between them , Ask yourself ,aren't they all Europeans and mostly have the exact same origins.So why in the ones in the north are whiter than the Europeans in the south , the answ

According with DNA studies the Sub-Saharan African component of the Egyptians is more now that antiquity, so some modern Egyptians are probably black as well.
The reason that Egyptians (in general) are not black like most Africans is because they are different people with different origins. That is pretty obvious!

The focus on the skin color of Egyptians both ancient and modern has a hidden agenda because of the greatness of ancient Egypt. The skin color of Tunisians, Libyans, Algerians, Moroccans does not seem to raise much controversy in comparison with the skin color of Egyptians.

It is a dogmatic belief among Eurocentrists and Afrocentrists that there are no black Egyptians, yesterday or today, respectively. The same goes for black Algerians, black Tunisians, black Libyans or black Moroccans. There are indigenous black skinned populations in North Africa. They mainly live in southern regions.

the Egyptians are a curious case and kinda goes against what we know about evolution and migrating patterns of mankind. All these studies of DNA say they came from the Levant region which is modern day turkey, Syria, Israel etc. yet every picture i see of mummies, on hieroglyphics, sarcophagus, statues has a light brownish people that look Arabic or Persian even the sarcophagus look Asiatic. in some cases they look a little Sudanese. but no they arent arabs they say. in their own drawings brownish ppl dominate with the occasional lighter hue. somehow evolution made the egyptians brown while in africa but lighter in the middle east and europe. the other curious thing is they migrated out of africa then came back? while at the same time other civilizations decided not to come into north africa? the arabian peninsula is right beside africa only a little water separates it.history shows that mankind traveled across whole continents even mountains and deserts didnt stop them except in africa. only in africa did the population spread in the south, east and west and interior but just gave up apparently and didnt go north at all.

Africa is the only continent where there are two races classified in history as completely different. north america had native americans with degrees of difference further north, south america and central had more native “indians” asia had asians with degrees of difference for india and that region. Europe has Caucasians which is so broad enveloping Spain to Russia into some asia. so after all the studies and discussion i have no idea about the Egyptians or Assyrians or any north african races?! just that despite egypt being in africa its DRUMMED into our head that 100 percent they werent native africans from the lower regions AT ALL!

if you think that somehow you are being foolish or afrocentic or a black racist

We can only assume that a large portion of the Ancient Egyptians also fled southwards into Nubia and Punt not willing to live under Persian rule.

Kemet suffered several invasions, first by the Persians, then by the Greeks, then followed the Romans and ultimately the Arabs and whomever else “Egypt” would become the “Arab Republic of Egypt” under President Gamal Nesser in 1952. As the new name indica

For the past 2,500 yrs. Egypt particularly and North Africa in general has been colonized and invaded by successive groups of Caucasian people i.e. Greeks, Romans, Vandals, Turks, British, French, Spanish and German. Trying to call all modern Egyptians direct descendants of the ancient Egyptians would be like calling all Americans direct descendants of the Iroquois. Why did Thutmose III erase Queen Hatshepsut's name from monuments?

This is a really, really, really great question.
Unfortunately however, there isn't actually a clear answer.

In the instances of other Pharaohs defacing the effigies of their antecedents, the reason for it was relatively straight forward. It was a practice called damnatio memoriae, or else the “damning of [one’s] memory”. Damnatio memoriae occurred in various cultures, but was particularly common and impactful in Egypt due to the theological convictions held by country’s populace. In the Egyptian religion, it was believed that a part of a person’s soul took residence within both their artistic and written depictions, and so by vandalizing monuments which represent a person, you were effectively denying their soul refuge in the mortal world, and therefore lessening their authority over aspects of it. In essence, when a Pharaoh of Egypt would destroy statues of their predecessors or strike their names from temple/tomb walls, they were solidifying their own absolute dominion by eschewing previous rulers influence via spiritual accommodation. Crossing out someone’s name was particularly significant, as in Egypt, your name (called rn in the Egyptian language) was literally an aspect of your soul that would endure so long as it remained written and spoken.

One might assume that upon ascending Egypt’s throne at the start of his sole tenure in January of the year 1458 BC, the Pharaoh Thutmose III would destroy monuments of his aunt/step-mother in order to deny her any lingering sway over her former kingdom. For many decades, there was a commonly held presumption that Thutmose III, both as Egypt’s prince and later co-regent, had harboured great resentment towards Hatshepsut, as she had assumed leadership of the nation in the wake of Thutmose II’s death (Thutmose II was the husband and brother of Hatshepsut, and father to Thutmose III). Thutmose III meanwhile had been the heir apparent, but as he’d only been a young child when his father died, Hatshepsut seized the opportunity to claim the crown for herself. It had been long speculated that while Hatshepsut had tolerated her nephew/step-son during her reign as Pharaoh, and afforded him prestigious positions within her administration in an effort to quell his ambition, he continued to bear a grudge against her, and upon her death and his ascension to the throne, hastily set out to depreciate her memory.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-8d5a95b985fbb3720f48766b1675b069-lq" * MERGEFORMATINET Above: statue of the Great Pharaoh Thutmose III, the biological nephew, stepson and successor to the Pharaoh Hatshepsut. His name is transliterated into IPA as mn-ḫpr-rA-ḏḥwtj-ms(w), or in English as Menkheperra Thutmose*, which* literally means "eternal/established (mn) existence (ḫpr) of Ra, born (ms) of Thoth (ḏḥwtj)".

Thutmose III did not begin desecrating effigies of Hatshepsut until well into the fourth decade of his reign, nearly 30 whole years after Hatshepsut had perished. Moreover, many of her defaced monuments actually ended up being repurposed and cannibalized rather than outright destroyed, and not all by Thutmose III, but many by his co-regent and successor, the Pharaoh Amenhotep II.

The idea of a supposedly sour relationship between Hatshepsut and Thutmose III is further cast into doubt by a number of conditions that would be implausible had they been feuding:

Hatshepsut went out of her way to establish Thutmose III as the heir of Thutmose II, even during the time when she was merely acting as his regent, and named him as her co-Pharaoh while he was still young. She could've easily had him deposed and taken the crown solely for herself, but she didn't, and never claimed Pharaonic superiority to him later on. This is an especially telling action, as Hatshepsut was not above advantageous successional revisionism; she in fact established her own kingship by falsely proclaiming herself to have been appointed heir apparent by her father Thutmose I, when in reality Thutmose II had been his official Pharaonic scion.

Once Thutmose III was old enough to reign in his own right, Hatshepsut immediatelynamed him her co-ruler, and made him the supreme commander of Egypt's military. If she had been worried about him potentially usurping her, she never, ever would have done this. She basically handed him the power to launch a coup and dethrone her, and he never did.

More on that point, Thutmose III himself never tried to claim the throne for himself while Hatshepsut was his co-Pharaoh, and all evidence indicates that he was very content ruling beside her. Egypt prospered under their combined leadership, and after Hatshepsut's death, Thutmose III would see to fruition many projects that had been commissioned during her tenure.

As mentioned, desecration of Hatshepsut's monuments did not begin until long, long into Thutmose III's reign, and increased in frequency during his co-regency with his son, Amenhotep II. Had the former been interested in deliberately destroying his predecessor's legacy out of spite, he would've done so immediately upon her death. And the fact that Hatshepsut's monuments started being vandalized in greater frequency during Amenhotep II's rise suggests he was the primarily responsible party.

Lastly, Hatshepsut's name and monuments were not the only ones that were destroyed. Other high ranking members of her administration, including her steward Senenmut, also had their names struck from walls, and their effigies broken and/or repurposed. This indicates that Hatshepsut was not solely targeted, as would most likely have been the case if Thutmose III bore a personal grudge against her.

Above: 18th dynasty stele erected during the the co-regency of Hatshepsut and Thutmose III, commemorating numerous construction projects in Thebes. Hatshepsut is the masculine, centre-left figure adorned in the blue Khepresh (ḫprš) war crown, bestowing offerings before the god Amun (far left). Thutmose III meanwhile stands to her right adorned in the white Hedjet (ḥḏt) crown of Upper Egypt.

So neither the incentive, nor the perpetrator responsible for vandalizing the Pharaoh Hatshepsut's monuments are as obvious as they once seemed to be. We don't know exactly why Hatshepsut's image was treated with such hostility. As I stated at the beginning of this answer, damnatio memoriae was somewhat common in Egypt, but Hatshepsut in particular was arguably the most extensive victim of this practice. The reason as to why that is will remain a mystery until more evidence is uncovered.

Egypt is currently ruled by a military dictatorship that monopolises all power in the country, which is not going to relinquish power anytime soon. Besides, there are no prominent female politicians who can challenge the military and win a free election.

As to Christians, their status in Egypt isn't really great. Coptic Christians have been suffering from institutional discrimination since the 1970's. Also Christians experience varying degrees of intimidation ranging from verbal harassment to outright vandalism of Churches in rural and poor areas. While the prejudice against Coptic Christians has largely subsided by now, a Copt is still more likely to encounter difficulties in his/her life in Egypt than a Muslim. There are no prominent Coptic politicians either and it would be extremely hard to convince the rest of Egyptians to elect a Christian to the presidency.

That's why the possibility of a Christian woman becoming the next president is non-existent.

Edit:

I decided to further clarify my answer in case anyone misinterprets what I wrote. Anti-Christian sentiments are not prevalent in Egypt. Yes, there is indeed discrimination against Copts, but this radical element does not by any means constitute the vast majority of Muslims. I am a Muslim Egyptian myself and feel nothing but love to my fellow Coptic countrymen.

Clear? I hope so.

Because these facilities were irrelevant in stopping the Egyptian second and Third Armies in Sinai.

Destroying or disabling these facilities would have had no effect on the outcome of the Yom Kippur War. Syria had no oil refineries in the Golan and the power plants served the military, so the reasoning for shutting them down and denying the Syrian infrastructure on the Golan with electricity did have an effect on the planning and maintenance carried out behind the lines.

One side from the pyramids is deliberately left undeveloped to allow you all those gorgeous shots of pyramids out there in the desert. The other side is the city of Giza, the fourth largest city in Africa, with a population of 9.2 million people.

In this shot we were having lunch at a local restaurant. Seating was on the 2nd floor of the building. It was such a bright day that the flash didn’t do much to light us up.

In my imagination I always had the pyramids way far out in the desert, but they're right up against the city. Here's a shot from the drive, Imagine living in an apartment with a view of the pyramids!

Many will say that race is a social construct but I beg to differ. I believe race is a beautiful thing and the differences between us is what makes humanity special.

That said, it is clear by their own depictions that Ancient Egypt, at least at it's start, had strong African roots. I could share many examples, but let me share only this…. the Ancient Egyptian symbol for a man or person.

Just look at the current Egyptians. They are the same. The modern Egyptians are the descendants of the ancient ones. There was no exodus from Egypt, except the mythical one of the Hebrews, which has no historical evidence. So, it is the same race as the current. Period.

Why people are obsessed with the origin of Egyptians and claim part of their history? I am a none Egyptian Arab and say leave them alone!

We don' see similar talk about, say, Greeks, Italians, Persians, etc. Ancient Egypt belongs to the people of Egypt who are on their land as we speak. Period. Period. period.

Egypt and Mesopotamia had comparatively big populations due to fertile lands around rivers. This is why civilization started there and nowhere else (culture is different, so don't star irrelevant argument). So the idea of these populations are being replaced doesn't make sense. True, intermarriage, tribal displacement, etc had an effect on the demography of Egypt but this was very limited.

As trading nations they enjoy close ties. There are many Iranian business men and businesses in the UAE. The issue lies on a political level. There are border disputes with Iran claiming various Islands and at times Bahrain and Eastcoast Saudi Arabia. This is not helped by the general Shia / Sunni divide. Bahrain and the Eastcoast of Saudi Arabia have sizeable Shia populations. This needs all to be taken in terms of a general distrust of Persian aspirations to resurrect the Persian Empire and distrust particularly of Saudi by the Iranians, and an overall geo political context where Saudi is perceived as part of a US-European-Turkish-Israeli interest zone and Saudi opposition to the lifting of sanctions. A contributing factor is that although the Iranian Government is religious it is a democracy that has arisen from the overthrow of the Shah, which as a political model operates in stark contrast to the Feudal monarchies of the Gulf States.

I don't think Arabs have historically hated Persians (or Iranians in general). Since the rise of Arab nationalism in the middle of the last century there has definitely been friction, like over the attempts to change the name of the Persian Gulf, and of course the sectarianism that's florid today. But I never heard of, or experienced, an ethnic hatred from that side.

The situation from the Iranian side is mixed. There are definitely ultra-nationalists who have a dim view of Arabs, but the "average" Iranian, in my experience (i.e. not from L.A. or North Teheran) is likely much less invested in a sense of racial superiority and may be more concerned with the Sunni/Shia thing instead.

One way to look at it is that the The Battle of Qhadisiyya in 636 A.D. was the Persian Battle of Gettysburg. Just like so many people in the U.S. South are still a bit obsessed with the defeat of the Confederacy, so it is with many Iranians who are still in some denial over the loss they suffered and the subsequent radical change in religion, culture, etc., that entailed.

And the resentment it generates against the "enemy".

Edit: Having said all that, I have heard that there is a historic "suspicion" of Persians amongst many in the Arab world in that they're not seen as "real" muslims due to their strong affinity with their pre-Islamic identity (and resentment at the Arab invasion in the 7th century). A pejorative term for Iranian is "Fire Worshiper" from what I've been told (harkening back to Iran's Zoroasterian past where fire was an important symbol and is still a part of Persian New Year celebrations after over 4 thousand years).

Originally Answered: Have Arabs historically (before the present day escalation of hostilities) hated Persians as much as the Persians have always hated them?

Prince Turki al-Faisal of Saudi Arabia has said this

The Iranian people are the most delightful people you can meet. And particularly across the Gulf in the Arab world there is respect and admiration for Iranian culture and historic achievements. Before they became Muslims and after they became Muslims. If you look at Iranian accomplishments in historic terms, they were one of the first to put down rules of civilized society, such as the code of Hammurabi. And other such developments in human history and culture. And many of the scientific accomplishments of the Muslim world occurred in what is now called Iran, by Persian-speaking Muslims: Al-Khwarizmi, who developed algebra; Omar Khayyam, who is a famous not just poet but also astronomer and mathematician, etcetera.

People who developed medicine and engineering and so on came from that part of the Muslim world in those days. There is an alphabetic script in Arabic which originated in what is now Iran, which was beautiful, a work of art.

So all of these things we share with Iran, with the Iranian people, this intermixture of culture and religion and history and science and human achievement. That should not be denied. On the contrary, it should be exalted and talked about and vocally expressed.

I also don't think the Shia Arab populations in Syria, Lebanon, Iraq, or the Gulf States hate Iran, Iran are their primary major backers.

How do modern Egyptians feel about Ancient Egyptian history?

HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/profile/Mark-Alexander-357" \t "_blank" Mark Alexander August 29, 2020

Today in modern Egypt there is a group known as the Copts - which are Egypt's Christians belonging to the Coptic Orthodox Church - the Egyptian Church of Alexandria. Coptic is derived from the word in Greek meaning Egyptian - the Copts were out of communion from the rest of the Christian world prior to Islam and the Arabs arrival. The Copts are the only group in Egypt that continued to speak Egyptian not Arabic till around 500 years ago. They are considered the direct descendants of the pharaoh's or so they claim. Just like other groups they were also mixed - probably more so before the excommunication of the Church which would have outlawed Copts marrying other Christians from around the world. A large number of Copts lived in Upper Egypt (southern part of Egypt) historically and Alexandria… You won't find for example turkish blood from among the Egyptian Copts due to religious differences and Islamic law not permitting the marriage of the two… the Copts is your best bet in finding a purer Egyptian that is closer to ancient Egyptians…I would do a full sample on Copts… being Christian however, the Copts might have married into French or British or other Europeans with imperialistic ventures into Egypt…again, the Europeans would have to convert into Coptic Orthodoxy to make that happen… so it is difficult to say… Egypt has been invaded so many times from antiquity to modern times that much of its racial identity changed over time… however, the Copts still kept the ancient Egyptian language alive in the tongue form - mixed a little with Greek - and adopted the Greek form of writing - yet their liturgical language is the language of ancient Egypt… so they carry in some for or another the spirit of ancient Egypt. One cannot however forget that they have been "arabitized" and that is obvious in the culture of Egypt.

The racial identity of ancient Egyptians is subject of debate for one reason: white supremacy. If ancient Egyptians were Nilean Blacks white supremacy is a lie. The denial of the black genesis of ancient Egypt must be constant.

White supremacists tend to keep quiet about the racist concept of "nigrescence" coined by the legendary John Beddoe equally applied to North Africans, Egyptians included. "Nigrescence" means how close you are to being a Negro.

In Africa where the Negro is found completely at home, it has been noted that his distribution at one time covered Egypt, Morocco, Tripolitania, Tunisia and Algeria. The appearance of other races in North Africa modified the predominantly negroid character of the population, but even in the modification, to repeat a phrase from Sir Harry H. Johnston, both in nigrescence and in facial features the ancient negroid strain has never been completely eliminated in these lands. In Mauritania, the ancient Negroes were partly driven out by Caucasian invaders and partly absorbed-- John Coleman De Graft-Johnso

It is a myth rooted in falsehood that there are no Blacks in modern Egypt.

The Nubians of Egypt are black people. The Beja of Egypt are black people.

The Nubians and Beja of Egypt are not occupiers but citizens of Egypt. Nubian-Egyptians and Beja-Egyptians are purposely ignored and conveniently forgotten.

Nubia is falsely presented as a race but it is, actually, a region located in southern Egypt and northern Sudan. There are several ethnic groups of Blacks who inhabit Nubia. They are not a monolithic group. They don't all look alike.

Today, Nubians in Egypt primarily live in HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Southern_Egypt" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" southern Egypt , especially in HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Kom_Ombo" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Kom Ombo and Nasr al-nuba north of HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Aswan" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Aswan a nd large cities such as HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Cairo" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Cairo , while Sudanese Nubians live in northern Sudan, particularly in the region between the city of HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Wadi_Halfa" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Wadi Halfa on the HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Egypt%E2%80%93Sudan_border" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Egypt–Sudan border and HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Al_Dabbah,_Sudan" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" al Dabbah

The Beja are a group of nomadic shepherds who live scattered across the desert regions of Sudan, Egypt, and Eritrea. The Beja are an important people group and represent the largest non-Arabic ethnic group between the Nile River and the Red Sea. They are an assertive people with small, strong, wiry frames, long noses, and oval faces.

The true heirs to ancient Egypt are the rural Fellahin and the Saidi of Upper Egypt. An Arabo-Egyptian man once wrote that the Saidi of Upper Egypt are the heirs to ancient Egypt and they look more like Africans (implying Blacks). He said it all. The Saidi are the custodians of the oldest Egyptian cultural heritage. They still observe the oldest customs and practice ancient rituals inherited from the Pharaohs.

Upper Egypt (Southern people): Commonly called “Saidi” people in the Egyptian language. They are the residents of the old Upper Egypt of the Pharaonic empire. This region has its own traditions, considerably different from the North and the Capital, Cairo. Nowadays, and as cities in this region are becoming urbanized, the cultural gap is closening to a great extent. People living in the extreme south, are a special type of African-Egyptian people called Nubians … they have a very special, friendly and truly Egyptian culture since the times of the Pharaonic eras. Many Egyptians from this region have a darker skin complexion. Big cities here include Luxor, Aswan , Assiut, and Hurghada (on the Red Sea).

The original home of ancient Egyptians is Upper Egypt (Pathros). It is even recorded in the Bible in Ezekiel. Upper Egypt is located in the south, next to Sudan.

According to Ezekiel 29:14, Pathros 'Southern Egypt" is considered the original home of the Egyptians.

Pathros (Hebrew: פַּתְרוֹס , Pathrôs; Greek: Φαθωρῆς, Phathōrēs; Koine Greek: Παθούρης, Pathourēs) refers to Upper Egypt, primarily the Thebaid where it extended from Elephantine fort to modern Asyut north of Thebes.[1] Gardiner argues it extended to the north no farther than Abydos.[2] It is mentioned in the Hebrew Bible in Jeremiah 44:1 and 15; Isaiah 11:11; and Ezekiel 29:14, 30:14. It is the homeland of the Pathrusim.

HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/What-is-the-reason-some-said-that-the-ancient-Egyptians-are-blacks-Is-this-really-true" \t "_blank"

"Ancient Egyptians were not black people" comes from the descendants of Eurasian invaders and slaves in North Africa and delusional Eurocentrists, followers of Eurocentrism, the ideological project of white supremacy.

The descendants of Eurasian invaders and slaves in North Africa use several tools of mass deception: the farcical Saharan racial divide, the Negro stereotype and caricature, the Caucasoid skull, the Bantu race, fake DNA studies, the fabricated Caucasian race, whitewashed frescoes and statues etc.

One cannot say that today's Egypt is the same as the Egypt of antiquity anymore than one can say that today's North America is the same as it was 5000 years ago." -From The Oxford Encyclopedia of African Thought, Volume 1 (2010).

Basic logic and common sense
It defies basic logic and common sense to have dissimilar aboriginal populations (Black Nubians and White Egyptians) living side by side, sharing the same land, the same river, the same vegetation zone, the same seasons and under the same climate and latitude. Nubians are some of the blackest Africans (hence the Nubian slave hoax) but their closest neighbors were aboriginal Nilean Whites. This is not true at all.

For ancient Greeks and Romans, Blacks were closely tied to the River Nile. They were perfectly right. The blackest Africans are Nilean people, people of the Nile: Nubians and Nilotes.

At what village along the Nile, black becomes white categorically? None.

At what village along the Nile, Whites are the earliest inhabitants and first settlers? None.

The written word of ancient time and the general voice of Antiquity.
Lets start with Hesoid in 850-800 B.C.E.

" To the lands of the messagetae and of the proud half dog men, of the underground folk and of the feeble pygmies; and to the tribes of boundless black-skins and the Libyans" -Hesoid,Catalouges of Women(850-800-B.C.E.) Boundless Black skins referring to (Egyptians-Ethiopians) Its clear that Hesoid distinguished the Libyans from boundless skin tribes and it is also evident that he was referring to the Egyptians and Ethiopians as boundless BLACK skin tribes of Africa. But, Hesoid also says the Libyans were Dark skin and NOT like White Europeans. "From Cronos sprang the Dark Libyans and the high souled Ethiopians" -Hesoid,Catalouges(850-800B.C.E.)

Hesiod made it clear that dark was different from black and called the Ethiopians and egyptians boundlessly black and Libyans dark skin. proving that black means black, not dark or tanned.

Next is Aeschylus in 500 B.C.E.

(DESCRIBING THE EGYPTIANS)

"I can see the crew, with their Black limbs and white tunics"... -Aeschylus 500 B.C.E.

Next is Aristotle in 350 B.C.E.

"Those who are too BLACK, are cowards like for instance the Egyptians in the Ethiopians"... -Aristotle 350 B.C.E. (Physiognomies). It seems to me that Aristotle ,felt the need to disrespect the Ancient Egyptians and Ethiopians by calling them cowards because of they're BLACK SKIN, but it is fact, that the Ancient Egyptians and Ethiopians were never cowards but they were indeed BLACK. " THE EGYPTIANS AND THE ETHIOPIANS ARE TOO BLACK"... -Aristotle, 350 B.C.E. (Physiognomies).

Next is Apollodorus 180-120 B.C.E.

"Aegyptos conquered the country of the BLACK FOOTED ones and named it EGYPT"... -Apollodorus, Family of Inachus (Book 11, 180-120 B.C.E.). Proving the country of the BLACK FOOTED ones was called Kemet (Khamit) before it was Egypt. Many people like to believe thay Kemet meaned "the Black Land", because of it's soil. But, the quote above tells otherwise.

Next is Didorous Siculus 90-30 B.C.E.

"They say also that the Egyptians are colonist sent out by the Ethiopians, Osiris having been the leader of the colony"... -Didorous Siculus 90-30 B.C.E. (Book 3).

"The larger part of the customs of the Egyptians, are they hold, Ethiopian, the colonist still preserving their Ancient manners"... -Didorous Siculus 90-30 B.C.E. (Book 3).

Didorous Siculus also states that before foreign rule, all Egyptian Kings were Natives and the land was the most prosperous of the whole inhabited world (Book 1, para 44, 69). Proving that they were Natives, NOT foreign invaders.

"The Ethiopians as historians relate, were the FIRST of all men"... -Didorous Siculus 90-30 B.C.E. (Book 3, para 2).

"The proofs of this statement, they say are manifest, for that they did come into their land as immigrants from abroad but were NATIVES"... -Didorous Siculus 90-30 B.C.E. (Book 3, para 2).

This also proves that both Egyptians and Ethiopians were both Natives of Africa and early Egyptians were offspring from the 1st Ethiopians, just as the BIBLE proves that Cush (Ethiopia) was the big brother of Mizraim (Egypt).

Next is Ammianus Marcellinus, 325-330 A.D. (before the Arab & Turk invasions)

"The men of Egypt are mostly BLACK or BROWN with a skinny dessicated look"... -Ammianus Marcellinus, 325-330 A.D. (Book 22)

The original home of ancient Egyptians is Upper Egypt (Pathros) in the south of Egypt next to Sudan. Pathros is even recorded in the Bible in Ezekiel and Jeremiah. There are no aboriginal Whites in Upper Egypt.

An Egyptian man provided the following description of both people on the Internet.

1. Sa3eadi people (Saidi): Generally, less mixed than Cairene or Bohary Egyptians. Generally, these people possess more phenotypes closer to Africans. Although some in Middle Egypt are more mixed, and the further south you go into Egypt particularly around Luxor/Aswan the darker the people become and more african features. They still practice many Pharaonic customs like the "et-Tala". Egyptians visit a grave of the deceased or love one and give offerings to the deceased. On the day of et-Tala, the souls of the dead are believed to return to their graves.

2. Fellahin: refers generally to farmers in the Delta but also includes farming communities from Beni Suef to Suhaj in Middle Egypt. Generally purer than the city dwellers in Egypt. Both Christians and Muslim populations are identical in appearance.The conditions of servitude and contempt in which the native fellah population has been held by foreign conquerors since the decline of the Pharoahs have helped preserve the race in its village. They are the real descendants of the ancient Egyptians. As poor peasant farmers in the countryside, neither Arabs nor any invaders bothered to mix with them.

Upper Egypt (Southern people): Commonly called "Saidi" people in the Egyptian language. They are the residents of the old Upper Egypt of the Pharaonic empire. This region has its own traditions, considerably different from the North and the Capital, Cairo. Nowadays, and as cities in this region are becoming urbanized, the cultural gap is closening to a great extent. People living in the extreme south, are a special type of African-Egyptian people called Nubians … they have a very special, friendly and truly Egyptian culture since the times of the Pharaonic eras. Many Egyptians from this region have a darker skin complexion. Big cities here include Luxor, Aswan , Assiut, and Hurghada (on the Red Sea).

Les Égyptiens ont fait de nombreuses illustrations d'eux-mêmes en train de tuer des gens, et aucune d'entre elles ne semble impliquer la pendaison. Le plus souvent, le pharaon est représenté en train de leur couper la tête ou de leur fracasser le crâne avec une sorte de masse.

First off, it's not really a "door" but rather a "block" in one of the air shafts. In 2002 a hole was drilled in the block by a robot and a camera with illumination was inserted unto the space behind the block.

It revealed a small space and another block in the shaft beyond.

And if you are speaking of folks living on the banks of the Nile, then inner Africa becomes upper Africa.

Civilizations rise and fall, some remains are buried under tons of sand , water or disappear all together through erosion , while others are hiding in plain sight , if

Egypt didn’t have those wonderful pyramids that last through the ages it is possible it would’ve attract less attention , alot of African archeological sites simply are under excavated or not surveyed at all.

Usually I’d be tempted to put in a lot of information concerning Africa and it’s civilizations, but you know what?..others can waste their time.

Ok, for starters, most ancient buildings are not destroyed by wars and tyrants. They would rather transform it and use it themselves or something. Agia Sophia, another old (though much younger, it's still nearly 1500 old) monument is in a fine shape, just made into a museum and now a mosque, with the addition of the minarets during the Ottoman period. Similar case for a Roman monument in my old neighbourhood inThessaloki, the Rotunda. An ancient Roman building built for, well, rituals(?),or -like the pyramids, a mausoleum, it was turned into a church then a mosque, then a museum of sorts.

Of course, later rulers did not use the pyramids. But why demolish them? They would be a proof that they ruled over the ancient land of the pharaohs. Rulers would destroy a monument pretty much only for the same reason as common folk: To get construction material. In fact most ancient buildings tend to survive only underground because it was extremely common for people to go get ready made stones from ancient houses to build their own. Stones from anceint temples to build new churches etc. But the stones of the pyramids are too big so it's not worth it.

Why weren't they destroyed by wars then? Well, before the use of gunpowder there was no easy way to destroy buildings. In some cases ancient armies would destroy big strong walls of a city they conquered so that it would be at their mercy. But this took a lot of time, effort and money. Desttroying the pyramids would serve no purpose. So, they could only be destroyed if someone used it for military purposes like Parthenon. Parthenon was severely damaged during the Turco-Venetian war in the 17th century when the Ottomans were using the Acropolis as their castle in Athens and the Venetians under Morosini bombarded the Parthenon which had the ottoman ammunition and it exploded. Such a thing wouldn’t happen to the pyramids of course.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://ci6.googleusercontent.com/proxy/2uymU0WyPINnOugZ1nTyBh6iEx6GJA8UVWluq6W9S9R8FMA4BotfQdy0HC6n57zzUoUEw2zQ8_4em6fyuQw457c7CFGxqmgq9VshPr_RtEQSuhN4Fql6Zv6SV0c=s0-d-e1-ft#https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-d7222d660180a78a54a73841e2641d81-lq" * MERGEFORMATINET
Besides, there is another reason why they still stand. Build a big castle on the sand and leave it for a while. Soon it will just a pile of sand in the shape of a cone or something similar to a pyramid. Trying to put lots of cards, glasses, sweets, burgers or whatever, together. The most efficiet way to pile them, the most stable is in the form of a pyramid.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://ci6.googleusercontent.com/proxy/oNC5P9Wc-0QPtpzO4lj-WNxWjnJtyknjdnKGP86FQdXP4X6vV3m4vNES7BWb8EXnRWZ-QDXOJI8FCcwvtgfoTIfDcTrmIRdRcyA-vBhLweUcmEbML4eKEm7NpOQ=s0-d-e1-ft#https://qph.fs.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-8da9dd3a2274f788be0f80dcea768d22-lq" * MERGEFORMATINET
So, despite the extraction of some small construction material, perhaps the damage and movement of some of their stones, a rogue bomb or something…the pyramids get too little damage to be destroyed. And it’s too much of an effort to destroy them.

Kent Etheridge HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/Were-pharaohs-of-Egypt-black-Africans-or-fair-skinned-immigrants/answer/Kent-Etheridge-1" \t "_blank" Dec 3

HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/Were-pharaohs-of-Egypt-black-Africans-or-fair-skinned-immigrants" \t "_blank" Seriously, no, Egyptians were not a black race or peoples, not culturally, or as a society. There is no good reason for exaggerated claims, or the assumption, this is true, when clearly, it seems quite irrelevant, now, and basically a time well wasted and frivolous.

Une chose que j'ai découvert il y a une semaine et qui m'a beaucoup surpris.

Vous connaissez probablement Hatshepsout. La pharaone avait inauguré une période de paix et de commerce de 20 ans. Elle en avait profité pour consolider et enrichir l'Egypte. Durant son règne elle eut le projet de faire deux obélisques en électrum (un mélange d'or et d'argent). Faute de matière première elle se contenta de deux immenses obélisques de pierre recouverts d'électrum, réalisés en moins d'un an.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://qph.cf2.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-655e5a92ea167e0743e2cdbedbc08a9e-lq" * MERGEFORMATINET
A la mort de la reine, son neveu, Thoutmosis III, dont elle avait usurpé une partie du trône, chercha à l'effacer. Il récupéra donc l'électrum des deux obélisques, faute de pouvoir les détruire. Il modifia également le temples de manière à cacher les deux aiguilles de pierres qui devenaient pratiquement invisibles (construction de murs de plus de 20m de haut).

Thoutmosis fut un immense guerrier. 13 campagnes militaires. Il en ramena des trésors considérable. Il put alors réaliser le projet de sa tante : deux obélisque en électrum. On sait qu'ils ont existé car on a des textes assyriens qui nous parlent du pillage de Thèbe et en particulier du pillage des deux obliques. Pour vous donner une idée, chaque obélisque pesait 38 tonnes chacun et devaient mesurer plusieurs mètres de haut ! 76 tonnes de métal précieux !

Pour vous donner une idée des niveaux de richesse de l'Egypte, voici un récapitulatif des trois plus grands temples d'Egypte quelques siècles après la pharaone :

Pour moi c'est l'Egypte. Civilisation prospère et très ancienne. Presque 4000 ans d'existence. Une grande stabilité notamment artistique. Et une société qui à ses début invente tout ce qu'il faut pour administrer un pays car l'Egypte des premiers temps était le seul pays du monde.

Comment un hélicoptère a-t-il été trouvé dans un pétroglyphe égyptien ?

Je pense que vous vouliez parler d'un hiéroglyphe, qui est le nom des symboles utilisés dans l'écriture égyptienne ancienne. Il ne s'agissait pas d'un hiéroglyphe, bien sûr, mais d'une mauvaise interprétation d'un glyphe qui a été écrasé, puis dont une partie s'est usée ou s'est détachée et a ressemblé à un hélicoptère. Cette histoire a été démystifiée il y a plusieurs dizaines d'années, mais elle reste populaire auprès de ceux qui aiment inventer des histoires stupides.

Montu the Egyptian god of war a god of the south and seemingly of the Deep South of Egypt, as Ta- Nahashi ethnic groups carried that name as part of the ethnic identifier.

Deity Montu or Mentu is different from the deity Men/Min. Min is a god of the Eastern Desert whose original cult center was in Akhmim in central Egypt.

Montu or Mentu was a hawk deity whose cult center was located in Erment which is located in Upper Egypt about a dozen miles south of Waset (Thebes). The name 'Mentu' literally means nomad the patron god of Abutu (Elephantine) has his consort Satet and his daughter Anuket.

1. L'ASCENSION D'UN OFFICIER NATIONALISTE (1918-1952)

1.1. UN ENFANT DES CLASSES MOYENNES EN QUÊTE D'ÉMANCIPATION (1918-1935)

Né dans une famille paysanne de Beni Mor, petit village de la Haute-Égypte, marqué à huit ans par la mort de sa mère, grand lecteur autodidacte, il fait ses études d'abord au Caire, où il est confié à son oncle, ensuite à Alexandrie, où son père, petit fonctionnaire dans l'administration des Postes et Télégraphes, est de nouveau affecté après quelques années passées à l'intérieur du pays. À partir de 1933, il se fixe définitivement, avec sa famille, au Caire, où son père tient une recette postale dans un quartier populaire.

La situation politique est alors critique en Égypte. Le pays reste, malgré l'indépendance formelle de 1922, dominé par la Grande-Bretagne. Nasser, comme beaucoup de jeunes de sa génération, supporte mal cette humiliation. Il souffre de la torpeur du peuple égyptien et évoque dès 1935 la nécessité pour l'Égypte d'un chef « qui peut réveiller ces malheureux plongés dans l'inconscience ».

1.2. L'ÉVEIL À LA LUTTE POLITIQUE (1935-1937)

Au milieu de cette nation assoupie, les étudiants constituent alors une force consciente et active. Nasser se mêle à leur mouvement et participe en 1935, en tant que président du Comité des lycéens, à l'organisation, avec les étudiants de l'université, d'une manifestation pour protester contre la déclaration d'un ministre anglais qualifiant d'inapplicable la Constitution de 1923, Constitution démocratique suspendue en 1930 et que l'opinion réclame.

Cette manifestation, au cours de laquelle de nombreux citoyens sont tués, blessés ou arrêtés, constitue le prélude à un mouvement qui aboutit au rétablissement de la Constitution de 1923 et au traité anglo-égyptien du 26 août 1936. L'indépendance de l'Égypte est élargie, mais le problème des troupes anglaises installées dans le pays et celui du HYPERLINK "https://www.larousse.fr/encyclopedie/divers/canal_de_Suez/145440" \o "www.larousse.fr" \t "_blank" canal de Suez restent posés.

Nasser termine alors ses études secondaires et se destine à la carrière militaire. Mais l'Académie militaire est encore réservée aux fils des grandes familles. Revenu au pouvoir en 1936, le parti HYPERLINK "https://www.larousse.fr/encyclopedie/divers/Wafd/149382" \o "www.larousse.fr" \t "_blank" Wafd l'ouvre aux cadets issus de la classe moyenne. En 1937, Nasser peut y accéder.

1.3. UNE CARRIÈRE MILITAIRE EXEMPLAIRE (1938-1950)

Sorti sous-lieutenant en 1938, Nasser est envoyé d'abord près d'Assiout en Haute-Égypte, ensuite pour deux ans au Soudan. C'est en Égypte, dans une garnison de province, qu'il apprend le coup de force britannique du 4 février 1942. L'intervention de l'armée britannique pour forcer le roi HYPERLINK "https://www.larousse.fr/encyclopedie/personnage/Farouk/119082" \o "www.larousse.fr" \t "_blank" Farouk à renvoyer son Premier ministre Ali Maher et à nommer à sa place le chef du Wafd Nahhas pacha l'indigne profondément comme la plupart des officiers égyptiens. L'indépendance de l'Égypte apparaît alors à ceux-ci comme une pure fiction. Beaucoup de jeunes officiers veulent passer à l'action pour libérer le pays.

Nommé professeur à l'Académie militaire en 1943, admis à l’École de guerre en 1946, reçu au concours de l’état-major en 1948, trois jours avant le début de la première guerre israélo-arabe, au cours de laquelle il se distingue en Palestine, il est nommé en 1950 professeur à l’École de guerre et à l’École d’administration militaire, couronnement d’une carrière au cours de laquelle il a acquis une réputation de soldat hors pair et d’enseignant.

1.4. UN CATALYSEUR : LA DÉFAITE DEVANT ISRAËL (1948-1949)

La question palestinienne marque profondément le jeune officier Nasser. Il l'a ressentie d'abord comme une injustice contre le peuple palestinien, chassé de sa patrie au profit d'une autre communauté venue en grande partie de l'étranger. Elle lui a révélé aussi le puissant courant de solidarité unissant les peuples arabes. Il y découvre enfin, et de la façon la plus concrète, la trahison et la corruption du gouvernement égyptien et plus spécialement du roi Farouk, qui n'a pas hésité à exploiter la guerre de Palestine pour trafiquer sur les fournitures de l'armée et amasser une immense fortune.

Promu commandant adjoint d'un bataillon, Nasser défend à la fin de la guerre la poche de Falluga, succès qui remonte quelque peu le moral de l'armée sans pour autant modifier la situation. Il est lui-même blessé lors de l'affrontement. À la fin de février 1949, après l'armistice israélo-égyptien, Nasser rentre au Caire et est affecté à Ismaïlia.

1.5. DES FRÈRES MUSULMANS AUX OFFICIERS LIBRES (1943-1949)

D'abord proche, à partir de 1943, des HYPERLINK "https://www.larousse.fr/encyclopedie/divers/Fr%C3%A8res_musulmans/120358" \o "www.larousse.fr" \t "_blank" Frères musulmans (fondamentalistes nationalistes et anticolonialistes, actifs depuis 1928), Nasser ne se satisfait pas de leur programme trop vague, ni de leur recours à la violence et rompt avec eux en 1949 pour fonder sa propre organisation, l'Association clandestine des officiers libres. Judicieusement structurée, comprenant cinq comités (finances, groupes de choc, sécurité, propagande, armement), cette organisation travaille dans la clandestinité la plus absolue. Son cerveau, Nasser, n'est connu que de quelques initiés. Pour obtenir l'adhésion du plus grand nombre d'officiers, il réussit à lui fixer un seul objectif : l'indépendance dans la dignité. Il s'agit, plus précisément, de chasser l'Anglais, d'épurer l'armée et d'établir en Égypte un gouvernement honnête et compétent.

2. LA PRISE DU POUVOIR (1952-1954)

2.1. LA CHUTE DE LA MONARCHIE (1952)

L'armée égyptienne, profondément humiliée, voit dans le roi et son entourage les principaux responsables de la défaite. Le mécontentement de la population est quasi général. L'affaire du trafic d'armes a définitivement discrédité le roi aux yeux de son peuple. Le climat est à la violence. À la fin de 1948, les assassinats politiques se sont multipliés au Caire. La situation est propice pour passer à l'action. En 1952, les officiers libres e sentent assez forts ; à la suite de l'émeute anti-anglaise du 26 janvier et de la proclamation de la loi martiale, ils s'emparent du pouvoir (22-23 juillet), obligeant le roi Farouk à quitter le pays.

2.2. L'ÂME DU CONSEIL DE LA RÉVOLUTION (1952-1953)

Le Comité des officiers libres constitue alors le Conseil de la révolution, dont le président est le général HYPERLINK

"https://www.larousse.fr/encyclopedie/personnage/Muhammad_N%C3%A9guib/134914" \o "www.larousse.fr" \t "_blank" Néguib et dont Nasser est l'âme. En janvier 1953, les partis politiques sont dissous, les communistes et les Frères musulmans emprisonnés et une nouvelle formation – le Rassemblement de la libération –, noyaute l'État : Nasser en est le secrétaire général. Dès septembre 1952, le nouveau pouvoir a tenté d'élargir son assise sociale en mettant en œuvre une réforme agraire qui a limité la propriété individuelle à 200 feddans (1 feddan = 4 200 m²), confisqué la terre en surplus, s'attaquant ainsi à la grande propriété aristocratique pour la redistribuer à une paysannerie moyenne.

2.3. LA MAINMISE SUR TOUS LES POUVOIRS (1953-1954)

Nasser et la nationalisation du canal de Suez

La république proclamée (18 juin 1953) et Néguib devenu président et Premier ministre, Nasser devient le maître effectif du pays, avec les titres de vice-président du Conseil et de ministre de l'Intérieur ; ses amis sont en outre aux principaux postes de décision (information, guerre, commandement des troupes). Tout en négociant l'évacuation échelonnée sur vingt mois de la zone du HYPERLINK "https://www.larousse.fr/encyclopedie/divers/canal_de_Suez/145440" \o "www.larousse.fr" \t "_blank" canal de Suez par les Anglais, Nasser s'oppose à Néguib, considéré comme trop conservateur et comme compromis avec les Frères musulmans : il l'écarte bientôt du pouvoir (octobre-novembre 1954).

Premier ministre le 14 novembre, président (raïs) de la République égyptienne le 25 juin 1956 (plébiscité par 99,84 % des voix), puis de la République arabe unie le 21 février 1958, Nasser – devenu héros national – confond désormais sa vie et sa carrière avec l'histoire de l'Égypte nassérienne (1954-1970).

3. L'ÉGYPTE NASSÉRIENNE (1954-1970)

3.1. LE CHAMPION DU NON-ALIGNEMENT ET DU PANARABISME (1954-1956)

LE LEADER TIERS-MONDISTE

En politique internationale, suivant les vues qu'il a définies dans son livre Philosophie de la révolution, paru en 1954, Nasser cherche à agir au sein des cercles – arabe, islamique et africain – où l'Égypte est appelée par ses vœux à tenir un rôle central.

Entre l'Est et l'Ouest, Nasser pratique une politique de bascule, le « neutralisme positif », et participe à la HYPERLINK "https://www.larousse.fr/encyclopedie/divers/conf%C3%A9rence_de_Bandung/107394" \o "www.larousse.fr" \t "_blank" conférence de Bandung (1955) aux côtés du Chinois HYPERLINK "https://www.larousse.fr/encyclopedie/personnage/Zhou_Enlai/150608" \o "www.larousse.fr" \t "_blank" Zhou Enlai et de l'Indien HYPERLINK "https://www.larousse.fr/encyclopedie/personnage/Jawaharlal_Nehru/134920" \o "www.larousse.fr" \t "_blank" Nehru . Il se rapprochera néanmoins au fil du temps des Soviétiques de manière de plus en plus nette.

LA NATIONALISATION DU CANAL DE SUEZ

L'État hébreu ayant détruit le quartier général égyptien à Gaza en février 1955, à la suite d'attaques de commandos palestiniens sur son territoire, Nasser reçoit, et accepte, une proposition de fourniture sans conditions d'armes tchécoslovaques, ce qui lui permet d'échapper à la contrainte de non-utilisation contre Israël, imposée par les contrats américains. De leur côté, les Soviétiques tentent, par cette brèche ouverte, d'établir leur influence au Moyen-Orient.

La politique intérieure de Nasser se heurte alors à ses choix internationaux : les crédits promis par les États-Unis pour la construction du barrage d' HYPERLINK "https://www.larousse.fr/encyclopedie/ville/Assouan/106471" \o "www.larousse.fr" \t "_blank" Assouan – qui doit permettre le contrôle des crues du Nil, l'irrigation de la vallée et la production de 10 milliards de kilowattheures par an – sont refusés, le 18 juillet 1956. Huit jours plus tard, Nasser proclame la nationalisation de la HYPERLINK "https://www.larousse.fr/encyclopedie/divers/Compagnie_de_Suez/114270" \o "www.larousse.fr" \t "_blank" Compagnie universelle du canal maritime de Suez , société privée où dominent les intérêts français et anglais, et annonce que ses revenus serviront à la construction du haut barrage. Ce coup d'audace, véritable défi à l'Occident, crée le mythe de Nasser dans le monde arabe, et plus largement dans le tiers-monde.

LA CRISE DE SUEZ (OCTOBRE-DÉCEMBRE 1956)

En revanche, il déchaîne l'indignation des opinions françaises – auprès de qui le raïs est présenté comme un nouvel Hitler, coupable d'aider les rebelles algériens – et britanniques. Paris, Londres et Tel-Aviv conviennent, à l'insu de Washington, d'une attaque militaire contre l'Égypte : le 29 octobre 1956, les troupes israéliennes commencent l'invasion du HYPERLINK

"https://www.larousse.fr/encyclopedie/mont/mont_Sina%C3%AF/144406" \o "www.larousse.fr" \t "_blank" Sinaï , qu'elles achèvent en six jours, arrivant jusqu'au canal. Le 5 novembre, les parachutistes français et britanniques sautent sur Port-Saïd et progressent vers le sud.

Défaite militairement, l'Égypte remporte pourtant une victoire diplomatique : l' HYPERLINK "https://www.larousse.fr/encyclopedie/divers/ONU/136167" \o "www.larousse.fr" \t "_blank" ONU condamne l'action franco-britannique, Moscou menace d'utiliser ses ogives nucléaires contre Londres et Paris, Washington s'oppose à ses alliés. Français et Anglais sont contraints au cessez-le-feu puis au départ, le 22 décembre, laissant un canal obstrué par les épaves et surveillé par les forces de l'ONU. Nasser, qui est ainsi parvenu à « battre » les puissances coloniales, et dont l'action est relayée par une propagande captée sur les nouveaux postes de radio à transistors, devient le héros du monde arabe.

3.2. UNE DIPLOMATIE ACTIVE ET GUERRIÈRE

L'ÉCHEC DE LA RÉPUBLIQUE ARABE UNIE

Désireux de constituer une vaste fédération arabe pour faire pièce au pacte de Bagdad signé en 1955 entre la Grande-Bretagne, la Turquie, l'Iraq, le Pakistan et l'Iran, avec le soutien des États-Unis, Nasser crée, le 1er février 1958, la République arabe unie qui groupe l'Égypte et la Syrie et qui est élargie au Yémen, le 8 mars, pour former l'État arabe uni. Mais il rencontre des difficultés dans son entreprise panarabe : sécession du Yémen en 1959, de la Syrie en 1961, échec de l'Union tripartite d'avril 1963 entre la Syrie, l'Égypte et l'Iraq.

UNE INTENSE ACTIVITÉ DIPLOMATIQUE

De 1962 à 1967, Nasser resserre ses liens avec Moscou, qui finance la construction du barrage d' HYPERLINK "https://www.larousse.fr/encyclopedie/ville/Assouan/106471" \o "www.larousse.fr" \t "_blank" Assouan : lors de l'inauguration de la seconde tranche des travaux, en 1964, il signe une alliance avec HYPERLINK "https://www.larousse.fr/encyclopedie/personnage/Nikita_Sergue%C3%AFevitch_Khrouchtchev/127445" \o "www.larousse.fr" \t "_blank" Nikita Khrouchtchev . Il mène par ailleurs une activité diplomatique intense, accueillant au Caire le IIème sommet de l' HYPERLINK "https://www.larousse.fr/encyclopedie/divers/UA/147777" \o "www.larousse.fr" \t "_blank" Organisation de l'unité africaine (OUA) (juillet 1964) et le IIème sommet des non-alignés (novembre 1964). Pour lutter contre Israël, il incite les Palestiniens à fonder l' HYPERLINK "https://www.larousse.fr/encyclopedie/divers/OLP/136841" \o "www.larousse.fr" \t "_blank" Organisation de libération de la Palestine (OLP) en 1964, sous la direction d' HYPERLINK "https://www.larousse.fr/encyclopedie/personnage/Ahmad_Chuqayri/113606" \o "www.larousse.fr" \t "_blank" Ahmad Chuqayri , juriste palestinien lié aux services secrets égyptiens.

L'ENLISEMENT YÉMÉNITE (1962-1967)

Nasser envoie enfin des conseillers auprès des militaires yéménites pour les aider à renverser, en septembre 1962, la monarchie ultraconservatrice de Sanaa. Pensant remporter un succès facile, il se heurte en réalité à une forte résistance des monarchistes réfugiés dans la montagne et appuyés par l'Arabie saoudite, et doit bientôt expédier au Yémen un corps expéditionnaire de 60 000 hommes – le quart des effectifs de son armée. Les troupes égyptiennes s'enlisent dans une guerre civile où elles doivent verser le sang arabe ; elles ne se retireront qu'en 1968, après la guerre des Six-Jours.

3.3. UNE POLITIQUE INTÉRIEURE AUTORITAIRE

LE DIRIGISME ÉCONOMIQUE ET POLITIQUE

À l'intérieur, l'issue de la crise de Suez, en 1956, entraîne la confiscation des biens français et britanniques dans la vallée du Nil ; l'État obtient ainsi le contrôle de plusieurs secteurs économiques modernes (banques, compagnies d'assurances…) ; la rupture des échanges commerciaux traditionnels avec l'Occident pousse Nasser à renoncer au libéralisme économique et à entreprendre une politique dirigiste concrétisée par le plan préliminaire d'industrialisation (1957-1960), financé pour un tiers par l'URSS.

L'étatisation de presque tous les secteurs favorise le développement d'une bourgeoisie d'État, qui se nourrit du clientélisme et de la corruption, tandis que l'armée et la police accentuent la répression contre les communistes, les Frères musulmans et les opposants libéraux.

Le parti unique, rebaptisé Union socialiste arabe en 1962, encadre les masses en étant présent dans les quartiers, les lieux de travail et les lieux de loisirs.

LE SOCIALISME NASSÉRIEN

La charte nationale du 21 mai 1962 consacre le ralliement au HYPERLINK "https://www.larousse.fr/encyclopedie/divers/socialisme/92317" \o "www.larousse.fr" \t "_blank" socialisme scientifique , fondé sur la planification économique et la centralisation du pouvoir ; mais le socialisme nassérien se différencie du marxisme-léninisme par sa référence à l'islam et par son rejet de la lutte des classes – perçue comme contraire à l' HYPERLINK "https://www.larousse.fr/dictionnaires/francais/umma/80509" \o "www.larousse.fr" \t "_blank" umma , la communauté des croyants.

Le plan quinquennal accorde la priorité au développement de l'industrie dans toutes les branches (textile, agroalimentaire, pharmaceutique, chimique, minière) ; pour financer ces projets, les nationalisations sont étendues à l'ensemble des banques. Une nouvelle réforme agraire limite la propriété à 100 feddans, permet aux travailleurs agricoles d'acheter des terres et rend obligatoire l'adhésion aux coopératives : bien acceptée, cette mesure favorise la progression régulière de la production agricole, bien qu'elle ne touche que 17 % des terres cultivables et seulement 8 % des paysans.

UNE DÉMOCRATISATION CONFISQUÉE

Pour développer l'enseignement supérieur, une loi de 1962 garantit à tout diplômé universitaire un emploi dans l'administration ; gage de stabilité sociale, cette mesure conduit à la prolifération d'une bureaucratie de moins en moins efficace (de 400 000 en 1960, les fonctionnaires passent à 1 600 000 en 1970), tandis que les dépenses militaires, qui représentaient 7 % du PNB en 1960, atteignent 12 % en 1965, et 19 % en 1970, confisquant les fruits de la croissance économique. La démocratisation promise en 1952 n'a pas lieu : le pouvoir est concentré entre les mains de Nasser, et les Assemblées, qui ne sont pas représentatives, ne possèdent pas les moyens d'agir.

3.4. UN TOURNANT AVORTÉ

LE TOURNANT DE LA GUERRE DES SIX-JOURS (1967)

Le raïs est réélu à la présidence de la République en mars 1965 et son influence ne se dément pas, malgré la nouvelle défaite (guerre des Six-Jours, juin 1967) devant Israël : sa démission du 9 juin – reprise dès le 10 juin – en faveur de Zakaria Mohieddine regroupe les Égyptiens autour de sa personne. Le 12 juin 1967, Nasser cumule les postes de président de la République, de Premier ministre et de secrétaire général de l'Union socialiste arabe. Pour reconstruire son pays, il renonce à toute action révolutionnaire dans le monde arabe en échange d'une aide financière accordée par les monarchies pétrolières. Le front intérieur et la consolidation du régime deviennent prioritaires.

UN NOUVEAU DÉPART À L'INTÉRIEUR

Le gouvernement est remanié en mars 1968, une nouvelle génération d'hommes accède au pouvoir ; seuls HYPERLINK "https://www.larousse.fr/encyclopedie/personnage/Anouar_el-_Sadate/141978" \o "www.larousse.fr" \t "_blank" Anouar el-Sadate et Hussein el-Chafei restent aux côtés de Nasser. Celui-ci procède à d'importants remaniements dans l'armée, dans le parti et dans l'Administration ; en même temps, il annonce un programme de réformes, ratifié par référendum, le 2 mai 1968, qui se concrétise lors des élections législatives de 1969 : le candidat unique disparaît, les électeurs ont le choix entre plusieurs candidats, tous membres du parti unique, mais sans investiture officielle.

UNE NOUVELLE STRATÉGIE INTERNATIONALE

Nasser ne cesse de développer les relations de l'Égypte avec l'URSS. Le 23 juillet 1969, il proclame le début de la guerre d'usure contre Israël. Sur le front militaire, les incidents se multiplient ; cependant, Nasser accepte, en juillet, le plan Rogers (du nom du secrétaire d'État américain de l'époque) prévoyant l'établissement d'un cessez-le-feu qui entre en vigueur le 7 août, le long du canal de Suez et se traduit par le retrait des troupes israéliennes, le retour des Égyptiens dans le Sinaï et la réouverture du canal.

Le raïs tente alors de renforcer les liens de l'Égypte avec le Soudan et la Libye et intervient comme médiateur dans plusieurs conflits arabes ; le 27 septembre 1970, il parvient à mettre fin à un nouvel affrontement jordano-palestinien connu depuis sous le nom de « Septembre noir ». Mais il succombe, le lendemain, à une crise cardiaque.

3.5. UN BILAN PLUTÔT MÉDIOCRE

Mais, malgré d'incontestables réussites, le bilan est plutôt médiocre : en 1970, les Soviétiques sont plus nombreux en Égypte que ne l'étaient les Anglais en 1954 ; la croissance économique est arrêtée depuis 1967, de nombreuses usines ont été détruites pendant la guerre des Six-Jours. Leader charismatique, idole des masses arabes de l'Atlantique au Golfe, le raïs n’a pas réussi à dépasser les contradictions du HYPERLINK "https://www.larousse.fr/encyclopedie/divers/panarabisme/76383" \o "www.larousse.fr" \t "_blank" panarabisme et du progressisme, de la lutte contre Israël et du soutien aux opposants des régimes réactionnaires arabes, et échoué dans son rêve d'unité.

We cannot trace them now, but surely some of the Pharaohs have descendants alive today, probably numerous in number. King Tut famously died young, his only children never surviving past childhood. By contrast, Ramesses II left a hundred children behind, fifty sons and fifty daughters. He absolutely is the ancestor of most of modern Egypt.

The Pharaohs ruled over Egypt for thousands upon thousands of years, they married the daughters of many royal houses in Africa, the Middle East and the Levant, as well as sending some of their sons out there. They conquered. They fought. They forever altered the history of the world. It was during their rule, that the first ever library was founded. Wisdom of the ages, stored forever. The first monotheistic religion ever invented…

And yes. They got around.

One day you'd be up and about, teaching the Assyrians or the Greeks or the Nubians who's boss… then you'd come home from a long campaign, still drenched in sweat from battle, and you'd retreat to your royal bedchambers to show your wife who's daddy…

You're a Pharaoh, after all! King of Kings! Not just any other ruler, no, yours is a dynasty as old as time itself. You're a living God. Hell, by the time Ramesses came around, he didn't even feel the need to build piramids anymore to remind people of his glory, just some statues and the finest ladies known to man were enough for the original Egyptian playboy. You'd come out of your royal chambers, strutting around with that Old Testament level BDE… knowing, in every pore, every nook and cranny of your body, that you're the man.

No seriously, people, how can you be this fine and not be the ancestor of… everyone? Genghis had to travel half the known world, rape and pillage his way through all the nations he came across just to spread his seed far and wide. The Pharaoh rode his chariot around a little, but had little need for raping and pillaging… one look and… boom! Pregnant.

Yes, there are still descendants of the Pharaohs alive today. Of course there are. You run into any random Egyptian person, really any Middle-Easterner, North-African, Sicilian, Italian, hell, anyone, anywhere, odds are they have a lil' Ramesses II in them.

Why did Gamal Abdel Nasser invite King Saud of Saudi Arabia to live in Egypt after his exile when Saud tried to have Nasser assassinated?

HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/Why-did-Gamal-Abdel-Nasser-invite-King-Saud-of-Saudi-Arabia-to-live-in-Egypt-after-his-exile-when-Saud-tried-to-have-Nasser-assassinated" \t "_blank" The same reason why El Sadat granted asylum to the Shah of Iran even though Iran had a cordial relationship with Egypt[although the relationship between the two countries were shipwrecked due to that].

The reason being that these head of states were the ones responsible for warming the relationship between the two countries, they shared the same goals and mutual respect if the tables were turned and Nasser was exiled, King Saud would have granted Nasser Asylum in Saudi Arabia.

Other important reasons are:

-King Saud believed all Muslims should unite and form a single powerful entity where all Muslim countries assist each other, this fell in line with Nasser's Pan Arabism.

-King Saud supported Egypt during the Suez Crysis

" When the trilateral aggression on Egypt took place on October 29, 1956 (Rabi I 1376 H) as a result of the nationalization decision, King Saud declared a general mobilization and ordered the opening of enlistment offices. He offered also total assistance to the Egyptian government; he supervised personally the operations and welcomed Egyptian combat planes in his country for their protection. Among the first to enlist were King Fahd of Saudi Arabia (Custodian of the Two Holy Mosques), Prince Sultan bin Abdulaziz, King Salman of Saudi Arabia, Prince Fahad bin Saud bin Abdulaziz Al Saud and many other princes. As means of exerting pressure on the British and French government, he used a weapon never used before, when he blocked the oil and banned all British and French tankers and other tankers carrying Saudi oil to these two countries. He also broke off relations with Britain and France."

"When the Suez crisis erupted during 1956, though at times taken unawares by Egyptian decision making, which went against the grain of mutual agreements to consult and keep each other informed in advance of vital political steps, Saud had unreservedly placed his Kingdom's resources at Egypt's disposal, providing it with financial and strategic help in a number of ways."

-Nasser also heavily relied on his reputation within the Arab world, Imagine how would Nasser look like if he denied King Saud asylum in Egypt after King Saud's continuous support to Egypt. It was a matter of prestige.

-The alleged assassination attempt wasn't really proven, no conspirator admitted being involved in the assassination attempt [no one was captured] so it more or less didn't warrant enough evidence to completely cut ties with King Saud, Saud also fervently denied the accusations.

TLDR: You don't simply throw your friends under the bus when they need you the most.

Helen Keller and Taha Hussien shaking hands

HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/What-are-the-happiest-pictures-you-have-seen" \t "_blank"
Helen Keller:

A Brief Background:

Hellen Keller was born in Alabama US, She became deaf-blind due to illness at the age of two, but her parents hired an excellent instructor [who was also blind] to educate her, Helen Keller wouldn't be hindered by her disabilities, she received excellent education and went on to be a very influential figure who campaigned for women suffrage, labor rights, pacifism and anti-militarism. She also led campaigns to raise funding and awareness for blind people. To put it simply, Helen proved to the world that deaf people could all learn to communicate and that they could survive in the hearing world. She is one of the most famous deaf people in history and she is an idol to many disabled people in the world.

Taha Hussien:

The 7th son who had 12 siblings, he was born in the rural areas in Egypt where almost all the population was illiterate. Taha Hussien became blind at the age of 3 due to faulty treatment by an unskilled practitioner. Taha went to a Kutab [a primary school that teaches reading, writing and Islamic studies], thereafter he was admitted into El Azhar, the only place where you could receive education in Egypt back then where he studied Religion and Arabic. When the secular HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Cairo_University" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" Cairo University was founded in 1908, he was keen to be admitted, and despite being blind and poor he won a place. He would later travel to France and become the first Egyptian and member of the mission to receive an MA and a doctorate (PhD) from France. When he returned to Egypt, he was appointed as a professor in the Cairo University.

In 1950, he was appointed a Ministry of Education in which capacity he led a call for free education and the right of everyone to be educated. Additionally, he was an advocate against the confinement of education to the rich people only. In that respect, he said, "Education is as water and air, the right of every human being". Consequently, in his hands, education became free and Egyptians started getting free education. He also transformed many of the Quranic schools into primary schools and established many universities in Egypt. Without Taha Hussein and his passion to promote education, millions of Egyptians would never have become literate.

These two individuals didn’t have what we all take for granted, they were stripped of the very senses that define humans nevertheless they didn’t lose hope, they fought against impossible situations and accomplished feats that many normal people weren’t capable of achieving, they simply didn’t let go of hope.

The photo was taken during Helen’s tour in the Middle East. The photo clearly shows these 2 wonderful individuals after their hard earned success, the photo just forces joy into my heart when I know that even in dire situations, a human can achieve extraordinary feats when s/he is armed with hope and undying enthusiasm.

They also look like a cute elderly couple :)

What was the domestic response to Anwar Sadat’s assassination? How much of Egyptian society sided with the Islamists?

HYPERLINK "https://www.quora.com/What-was-the-domestic-response-to-Anwar-Sadat-s-assassination-How-much-of-Egyptian-society-sided-with-the-Islamists" \t "_blank" Hard to tell. Sadat wasn't exactly popular with the people in 1981, the year of his assassination.

He surrounded himself with yes men, sycophants and corrupt people. His economic policies were also highly unpopular. In 1977, nation-wide violent riots that spanned from Aswan till Alexandria erupted when the government ended its subsidises of basic food staples.

Sadat called these riots the “Uprising of Thieves”. Naturally the poor folks, who back then consituted the majority of the population, were affronted by this comparison.

Bread riots in 1977

Sadat started displaying traits of authoritarianism towards the end of reign which pissed off the liberals. Signing the peace treaty with Israel didn't garner him any praise in the country either rather infuriated the leftists and Arab nationalists who deemed it a betrayal to their cause.

That applied to Islamists too who also thought Sadat was too secular and despotic just like his predecessor whom they loathed. Which is ironic, considering that it was Sadat who made Islam the state religion in 1971 and released Islamists from the prisons so that they would help him fight the Left. Needless to say, that didn't sit well with any of the liberals, leftists and Christians.

Speaking of Christians, Sadat had a habit of insulting Coptic clergy and had a famous rivaly with the pope of the Coptic Church, Shenouda iii. Islamic scholars were regularly humiliated as well.

Just a month before his assassination, he had thousands of people arrested in a massive and unprecedented crackdown on the opposition. That included liberals, leftists, Islamists, Muslim and Christian clerics, journalists, writers, teachers and basically anyone who opposed the regime. Some military officers were also purged.

Early in his tenure, he announced the end of the state “terror” and took part in symbolic gestures like burning tape records and documents used by the ministry of interior and intelligence agency to blackmail citizens. Again, it's quite ironic that Sadat resorted to oppression in the end.

His record was already stained and this crackdown made it really hard for many to sympathise with him despite not necessarily agreeing with the conspirators.

Nowadays, the public opinion of Sadat is mostly positive, but I still meet people with different religions, social backgrounds and political orientations saying that he got exactly what he deserved.

I view him as a hero who didn't throw us into a war blindly and managed to get our lands back.

Truth to be told, he made a huge military mistake in 1973(Battle of Sinai), but other than that, he signed a peace treaty which cost him his pride, his reputation(in Arab countries) and ultimately his life. He sacrificed all of that to lead our country in its recovery after Abdel Nasser screwed it up in many regions. The economy also was growing during his reign.

My family is rather torn by the political conflict in the country so I heard several views from Anti-Sisi, Neutrals and Sisi lovers. Our president is a controversial debate whenever he is mentioned.
Well here are some of the views I heard from people who support El Sisi:

1- The president El Sisi intervened at the best possible time, he saved our country from the very evil Muslim Brotherhood.

2- The Muslim Brotherhood that controlled our country is funded by the USA, they will draw lines and connect USA with supporting Saudi that supports Wahabism which is similar to MB’s ideals and stuff like that lol. They also support their claim by saying that USA gave military aid to Egypt under MB and supported them but when Sisi took over, they froze the military aid for two years because El Sisi snatched Egypt from the USA’s fangs and saved it.

[Yet El Sisi sold two Islands to Saudi Arabia showing his loyalty to the gulf states as they have funded Sisi's Egypt with 40 billion dollars, yet our economic situation deteriorated]

3- Morsi should have never won, the MB bribed their way through the elections

4- Morsi and several cabinet members were imprisoned [they fail to mention that they were political prisoners though], HOW COULD WE HAVE AN EX-CONVICT AS THE PRESIDENT?

5- Our current economic crysis isn't the fault of the current government, ITS THE BROTHERHOOD AND THEIR SCHEMES.

Their views toward the world:

1- Erodgan is a dog for denouncing the coup.

2-USA wants to control us and many countries conspire against us [Gulf states, Israel, western powers, you name it]

3- They seem to have conflicted views towards Syria [some support/don't support the revolution]

4- Al Jazira isn't bribed by our Egyptian government? Then it's clearly funded by the damn USA and the evil gulf states.

No matter the evidence I provide which proves his failure in administrating the Egyptian government, they simply label me as MB sympathizer or w/e, just recently a SISI lover told me here on Quora" He doesn't negotiate with terrorists". He is a damn military leader not an administrator and every "HUGE" national project he has started, won't benefit Egypt on the short or long term [namely the new Suez, the new administrative capital and other bollocks that the media tries to sell to us.]

Thanks for A2A Abdullah.

Traditionally Israel has been viewed as the enemy in the textbooks, I remember in grade 6–9 that in the Arabic and History subject, Israel was certainly heavily criticized for starting the 1948 war, Suez Crysis and definitely the 1967 war.

Some Arabic lessons highlighted the heroism of soldiers who did exceptional deeds to defend their country (some were fictional and some were real) and how they stood against the enemy.

History lessons regarding Modern Egypt discussed the causes of failure in 1948 (Weapons bought from Britian were faulty + Monarchy sucks) and 1967 (Not being prepared and no air superiority). Later on, the vital role of Egypt in unconditionally supporting the Palestinian cause.

After Sisi took over, his government drastically changed “Israel” in the history books in 2015–2016.

Now there is much less content regarding the Arab wars and more about the importance of peace.

The 2002 edition history book had 32 pages about Arab-Israeli wars and 3 pages about the peace process.

The 2015 edition has only 12 pages about the wars and 4 pages about the peace.

Current History books has replaced “Egypt's vital role in supporting the Palestinian cause” into “Egypt's vital role in supporting the peace process”

History text book also went into deep lengths about discussing the importance of Peace to Egypt, Israel and the Arab world.

It focuses alot on Egypt's role in meditating between Israel and Palestine and praises Israel and Palestine for the Oslo accords and the withdrawal from the west bank.

It also included the photo of Sadat shaking hands with Begin, thus making it the first time a photo of an Israeli PM is inside an

The government went into a great length in removing the importance of supporting the Palestinian cause from textbooks that it even removed a part from the lesson regarding Saladin which encouraged vigilance against the invaders in Jerusalem which could be misinterpreted and picture Israel as a modern day crusade.

I remember back in the day, when my history teacher told us we needed a modern day Saladin to unite the Arabs, fight the Shia and Israel, I guess we won't see a lot of these history teachers any more.

TLDR:

The textbooks stance changed from being pro- Palestine into being neutral in 2015–2016.

But Meir, was also renowned for her more xenophobic remarks, particularly at the expense of Palestinians.

"There were no such thing as Palestinians," she was quoted as saying in the Sunday Times and Washington Post in June 1969.

"When was there an independent Palestinian people with a Palestinian state? … It was not as though there was a Palestinian people in Palestine considering itself as a Palestinian people and we came and threw them out and took their country away from them. They did not exist,"

She was incapable of contemplating that the creation of Israel had given Palestinians, who lost their homes in the wake of its rise, a different narrative of events.

it was her alliance with the US that many of her advocates see as her ultimate achievement as the state's top diplomat. Her role in 1948 in raising millions of dollars in funds from the US to aid Israel's evolution, had given her national clout like few others as the rise of Israel saw the rights of Palestinians become ever more superfluous.

In response to the 1973 October war Meir's government was lambasted for its lack of preparedness. This remains the subject of fierce criticism from some in Israel for allegedly ignoring previous peace overtures from then Egyptian President Anwar Sadat.

3000 years ago would be 980 BCE.

That would be in the middle of the Third Intermediate period, characterized by a politically fractured, disorganized Egypt of weak Pharaohs, strong regional officials as de facto rulers of large portions of the region, foreigners with footholds in parts of the historically Egyptian territory, and based on Egyptian records which even during the intermediate periods tended to be more factual that contemporaneous records from adjacent cultures, which tended to be mythical (unsupported by objective evidence such as physical archaeology corroborative records from neighboring cultures), really not much worth mentioning.

Perhaps of more interest if the broader regional phenomenon known as the Late Bronze Age Collapse that saw organized societies and civilizations all around the eastern Mediterranean, not merely Egypt, struggle in the face of militaristic invaders. At least in part the Egyptian malaise of the Third Intermediate Period was a consequence of this phenomenon.

built of concrete from the ground up. It took more than 18 years to build. Each set of colonnades was poured on top of another.
What you do if you want to stack concrete, and you don't have the support, is you dig the foundation, pour the concrete, wait until it sets, then bury the what you have made except for the top. then build the form for the next layer on top, pour, and set. Repeat the process until it's completely built, and then remove the dirt.

I can imagine the giant hill of dirt the Colosseum was hidden in for a time. The people of Rome must have thought their Emperor was insane. Then when the time was right, the crews slowly removed all the excess soil, and the people were presented with this.

Over the 19 centuries it's existed (About 70 AD), It has survived wars, storms, plagues, earthquakes, and partial deconstruction in the 1100s.

As for the Parthenon, we know how it was built. The same way that the Colosseum was built, kind of… The floor and foundation was built in place, and then dirt was again brought in to support the roof of the massive building. Then, the columns, quarried from the nearby mountains, was brought to the end of the massive plateau overlooking Athens.

When the roof was done, they carefully excavated the dirt underneath, placing columns one layer at a time in place until they reached the floor. Finally the dirt was removed, the temple swept and painted red and white, and a massive statue of Athena built in one end of the Great Hall.

Supposedly her head is still intact 2000 years later, in some dusty museum in Paris or London.

Oh, You said Pantheon… Silly me.

Anyway, Again, it was made on top of a hill of dirt. That's how tens of millions of buildings throughout history were and still are built. It saves a lot of time and money. A local market here in Utah was built that way in the 1950s.

As for the Great Pyramid, evidence has been shown for a three kilometer long ramp built so the stone from the mountains across Cairo from Gaza, could be transported over a nearly level road. the ramp would have been marginally extended over time as it took more than 30 years to build the Great Pyramid and her sisters.

There's really no mysteries left. We know how the Romans, Egyptians, Greeks and Assyrians did just about everything.

Roman concrete was mixed with ash from Mount Vesuvius and other volcanoes. Pumice makes a nice aggregate.

Why are indigenous Africans accused of Afrocentrism when they tell the truth about African history, starting with Kemet?

Because Eurocentric folks decided it was awesome and that's what they wanted and that's what they're gonna get, so they invested a lot of emotional time and money making it so, who was gonna stop them□ They did this through the use of the racist Hamatic theory that turned Black men into white Black men without their sense of logic being the least offended , then with their massive media campaign started to lighten up then whitened up images they created out of thin air of the ancient Egyptians.

Some would quote recent genetic evidence as fact without ever explaining the caveat to their audience by the very people who produced those studies themselves.

As respect to Ancient Egypt and other African civilizations , I find the much maligned Afrocentrist take on them the least objectionable, matter of fact they are often ahead of the curve on this.

The Hamitic hypothesis states that everything of value ever found in Africa was brought there by the Hamites, allegedly a branch of the Caucasian race. This hypothesis was preceded by an earlier theory, in the 16th century, that the Hamites were black savages, 'natural slaves' - and Negroes.

Why are we calling the people of Kemet ancient Egyptians? If we do that, then we cannot find who the real people are.

Nonsense. There's no reason why using another name, instead of the very name used by the ancient society itself to name itself, would cause us to be unable to find who "the real people" was (assuming they were dramatically different from any modern people living in the same land, which is something that isn't very controversial only in those, honestly, quite fringe circles that take it as an indisputable dogma that there was a wholesale demographic replacement in Egypt between 2,000 years ago and now, a stance usually supported by people who, what a sheer coincidence, no bias at all!, claim that looked exactly like them and were closely related to them).

For starters, not everyone in the world speaks English, so not everyone uses the term "Egyptians" to refer to the present or the ancient inhabitants of the land known in English as Egypt. I know, I know, shocking, isn't it? ;-)

Moreover, we, in the English language, also don't call the ancient Greeks by the name they generally used for themselves (Hellens), nor do we call the ancient Chinese by one of the various names they used for themselves. The Germanic-speaking Scandinavians didn't refer to themselves as Northmen or Norse, either. The Phoenicians didn't call them as such, either, but by a name cognate to the English term Canaanites. What much of the world knew as the Persians didn't see them as just specific people from the region of Persia, but as Aryans (thus Iran, from Old Persian Aryana). The Aztecs weren't Aztecs either, but Mexihca. The Inca Empire was the Tawantinsuyu, there was in fact no "Inca" people at all (that's just the name of their ruler).

But of course, even though we know there is no direct relationship between the endonyms of those people and how we, modern people, call them in one specific language (English), we can and have investigated much about their history, society and culture.

We should at least be grateful that, at the very least, Egyptian is a word that does come from the old Egyptian language ultimately. Ancient Egyptians, like many other peoples of the world, such as the Chinese, had no single term to refer to their country and people. What term was more regularly used varied from time to time, location to location and context to context. Often, ancient Egyptians, like other peoples, would refer to their homeland by the name of its ruling capital, where the pharaoh lived.

That's where Egypt comes from, because the word means nothing at all in Greek nor in any other European or Asian language. It comes from the old native language of Egyptians, which is the direct antecedent of the Coptic language that is still in use by the Coptic Christians of Egypt and was still the mother tongue of some of them until at least as late as the 17th century A.D. The speakers of a later stage of Egyptian named Memphis something like Hikuptah, an evolved form of what's written (without vowels, as is the rule in Egyptian hieroglyphic writing) ḥwt-kꜣ-ptḥ.

Not only is it an ancient Egyptian word, but also one deeply connected to their culture and religion, since it meant "the home of the ka [soul] of [god] Ptah". That's where the Mycenaean Greek a-ku-pi-ti-yo (probably not pronounced like that, but written that way) spoken in the Middle-Late Bronze Age clearly derives from, which proves that the word was used to refer to the Egyptian state more than 3,000 years ago.

So, unlike many other nations, the ancient Egyptians are still today referred to using a name that also meant something for them, among other terms (not just "Kemet") that were used to refer to their own country. That is certainly no major problem in identifying who they were, how they lived and what their close and remote origins were.

INCLUDEPICTURE "https://qph.cf2.quoracdn.net/main-qimg-6c58ce514f5e3f178127e378c4dfc0f3-pjlq" * MERGEFORMATINET
By the way, the name Kemet is just an ad hoc simplified transliteration of the Ancient Egyptian term, adding an e between the consonants, as there was no indication of vowels in Egyptian hyeroglyphs. Historical linguists, analyzing the several stages of the Egyptian language, Egyptian loanwords in other languages, the later forms of Egyptian written in Greek-based scripts, and the phonetic evolution of dialects of the Coptic language, think the actual name of the country was Kumat, not Kemet.

So, those who peddle the idea that Kemet is a key "proof" of who the "real people" of the ancient Egyptian civilization were could at least try to pronounce and write it in a more historically accurate way. But, of course, it's well known that the Egyptians, apart from the "kemet", literally "the black black also referred often to the "deshret", the "red country, red land", in reference to the hyper-arid lands further from the valley of the Nile river and its delta, inhabited mainly by sparsely distributed nomadic herders, like Libyans. It's clear that the people of the deshret were not "red", but instead the landscape and its soil were perceived as "reddish" in comparison with the land where the overwhelming majority of Egyptians lived and which was absolutely essential for their entire way of life: the fertilized soil along the Nile.

If Egyptians were all “black people”, but all their African neighbors, according to the same proponents of that hypothesis, were also, in the first millennia of Egyptian history, all “black people”, too, then how calling their state “the country of black people” would distinguish Egyptians from non-Egyptians? It makes little sense. Now, if there is something that did really make a huge difference for Egyptians and did distinguish them from a lot of their neighboring populations and their respective traditional territories, it is that they lived in a very fertile river valley that, especially after the annual floods, had a much darker soil than the much lighter sands of the Sahara.

Is there validity to the notion that the Sphinx of Giza could be several millennia older than we think it to be?

The evidence* doesn’t support the notion. The opinion of Dr Schoch who proposed the idea has few geologist’s agreement.

One archaeological problem with the idea of an older Sphinx is the Sphinx Temple and Khafre’s Valley temple. Many people enamored of the ‘old sphinx idea’ tend to ignore the existence of the ancient Egyptian temple built from the stones taken from the quarry in which the Sphinx was left standing after stones were removed - probably from around an existing yardang.

The core blocks of the Sphinx Temple are matched geologically and archaeologically to the lower layers of Member II of the Sphinx quarry, indicating that the Sphinx lower body and Sphinx Temple were taken up as part of the same quarry-construction sequence. (the stones taken from around the Sphinx are in the Sphinx temple).

This is dated to the 4th dynasty. Next to it is Khafre’s valley temple - right next to the Sphinx temple.

Sphinx temple & Khafre Valley temple: A close geological study of the Sphinx and the nearby temples has revealed that the large blocks which were used to build the Valley Temple of Khefren's complex were most likely quarried from the layers that run through the upper part of the Sphinx's body.

This means that the Sphinx was sculpted at almost the same time as when the Valley Temple and temple in front of the Sphinx were built. As the Valley Temple was built as part of Khefren's Pyramid Complex, it thus stands that the Sphinx was sculpted out of the rock during Khefren's reign as well.

An overall view of the area showing the pyramids, sphinx and the sphinx temple.

*Evidence: it is possible that the Sphinx enclosure and the associated temples were started in the 1st–3rd dynasties or perhaps as early as the pre-dynastic? Perhaps, the evidence for this depends on one’s interpretation of geological evidence and weathering (which is still not fully understood). Certainly not millennia but a few hundreds years? Possible, plausible but not yet certain.

Can someone give a concise summary of what a mainstream Egyptologist's counter arguments would be to someone like Graham Hancock who claims the Sphinx is far older than we think?

The evidence or opinion provide by GH doesn't support such a contention. The consensus is that it was built in the Old Kingdom as part of the expansion of Giza as part of the Saqqara necropolis. It is considered possible that the 'head' part may have been a yardang which may have been deemed sacred.

The arguments for an earlier date remain debatable. The problem is that the various types of erosion, wind, water and salt HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Haloclasty" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" haloclasty cannot be deemed valid evidence of age due to a lack of information on long term erosion rates by all factors. This is influenced by lack of such erosion being seen on well dated structures.

Dates by association with sky are speculation.

The Northern part of Egypt is hot bed of descendants from several foreign occupations that had occupied Egypt for over 2,000 years. The Northern region which was by far the most arable and lush territory was usurped by all major occupiers, while the indigenous Egyptians were pushed further South to the deserts.

They weren’t negroid to start with.
That’s an Afrocentric revisionist fantasy.

Egyptians as coming from sub-Saharan Africa is largely nonsense.

Naturally, Ancient Egypt as an African country and empire had a representative population, and as such darker-skinned “negroid” individuals were certainly present.

But the idea that all Ancient Egyptians were “black” is nonsense and a fallacy.

I look forward to the comments section. Whoever is first to spam me with Photoshopped tomb paintings will win today’s Darwin Award.

EDIT - somebody has won the Darwin Award already. I am also astounded at how personally people take anything on this subject and how angry they get. Who cares, the Ancient Egyptians are all dead; they could have been pink with polka dots for all it matters.

Well, the simple answer is no, so yet again I have to use genetics. so, before starting here are some pictures and then the genetics rant

Realistic Fayoum portraits of Ancient Egyptians. Some of them could be Greek/Roman, but look at that guy on the last row, the forth from left, he looks like Akhenaten*.

The most important thing I have to say is Egyptians are quite indigenous to North East Africa living there from maybe 10–20 000 years ago.

Their indigenous paternal lineage is E-V12 (more exactly an undifferentiated E-V12* distinct to other sister subclades) which developed about 9-12 000 years ago in North-East Africa, maybe at the border with Lybia, maybe at the border with Sudan. E-V12 itself is child of the main E-M78 also indigenous to North Africa.

While the men belonged to E-V12 which can be traced back to E1b1b whose origin let’s say is in Horn of Africa about 40 000 years ago, the women were more diverse: M1, N, U6, R0, Hs, Ts, L3 etc. mainly of non-African origin. Either these female lineages appeared from back immigration into Africa, or E-M78 or E-V12 migrated at one point in time in the Arabian peninsula or Levant and acquired these ladies and return to North Africa, or N and M actually developed in North or East Africa from the African lineage L3, we don’t know for sure. Either way, M and N lineages and its children are mostly found outside Africa and thus we consider them of Eurasian origin.

The mtDNA haplogroups of Ancient Egyptians

At some point during the Bronze Age or maybe even earlier during some back immigration of people from Levant, Egyptians acquired also the J y-dna haplogroup, attested by its presence in two mummies from later periods. Also, in one mummy they found E1b1b, which I believe, even though they didn't state, is E-V12.

If we look at the modern population of ancient Egypt

HYPERLINK "https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/DNA_history_of_Egypt" \o "en.wikipedia.org" \t "_blank" DNA history of Egypt - Wikipedia

E-V12 is still prominent both in Upper and Lower Egypt and also J haplogroup. Even though they experienced immigration during its 5000 year old history and might have modeled their genome, E-V12 is still in place, not going anywhere. Of course there are other modern male lineages that I don't know how to exactly explain them, but I'll focus on the historical ones found in mummies just for now.

If we look at the wiki page and please check the articles quoted there, because I won't
