Eritrea maintains a vast detention network and regards anyone who tries to leave the country as a traitor. About 6 percent to 10 percent of Eritreans are now registered as refugees by the United Nations, and Eritreans are prominent in a growing wave of migrants from Africa and the Middle East trying to make their way by boat across the Mediterranean to Europe.

Eritrea has operated a shoot-to-kill policy on its borders to stop people fleeing. The U.N. commission said people were still being shot in 2014, including children. The government says it has ended the policy. (Text ends)

The brutal dictatorship the world keeps ignoring
WORLDVIEWS (June 12, 2015)

On Monday, the United Nations released the results of a year-long investigation into human rights in Eritrea. What it found was horrific. Detailing "systematic, widespread and gross human rights violations," the U.N. commission of inquiry argued that Eritrea was operating a totalitarian government with no accountability and no rule of law.

"The commission also finds that the violations in the areas of extrajudicial executions, torture (including sexual torture), national service and forced labor may constitute crimes against humanity," the report said. However, it appears the report failed to produce any mainstream outrage. Unlike similar U.N. reports on alleged crimes against humanity in North Korea, or online criticism of human rights abuses in places such as Saudi Arabia or Qatar, the horrific accusations against Eritrea didn't produce a viral outcry.

Why not? It certainly doesn't seem to be because of the severity of the accusations. Crimes against humanity are pretty much as serious as you can get, and its hard to read the United Nations' full report and not be shocked. Its hard to imagine now, but hopes were initially high for Eritrea in 1993 after it gained independence from Ethiopia after 30 years of civil war. Since then, however, President Isaias Afwerki has clamped down and allowed no room for an opposition. The U.N. report described a Stasi-like police state that leaves Eritreans in constant fear that they are being monitored.

“When I am in Eritrea, I feel that I cannot even think because I am afraid that people can read my thoughts and I am scared,” one witness told the U.N. inquiry. The system leads to arbitrary arrests and detention, with torture and even enforced disappearances a part of life in Eritrea, the U.N. probe found, and even those who commit no perceived crime often end up in arduous and indefinite national service that may amount to forced labor. Escape is not a realistic option for many: Those who attempt to flee the country are considered “traitors,” and there is a shoot-to-kill policy on the border, the report said. (Text ends)

Side note: In June 2014, the UN Human Rights Council commissioned an investigation into alleged violations of human rights in Eritrea. Including: “…extrajudicial killings; enforced disappearances; arbitrary arrest and detention; torture and inhumane prison conditions; violations of freedom of expression and opinion; freedom of association and assembly; freedom of religion and belief; freedom of movement; and forced military conscription.” A new 500 page report published by the United Nations Human Rights Commission, following the investigation concludes that:

“The Government of Eritrea is responsible for systematic, widespread and gross human rights violations that have created a climate of fear in which dissent is stifled, a large proportion of the population is subjected to forced labor and imprisonment, and hundreds of thousands of refugees have fled the country.”

The violations, according to the UN report, “may constitute crimes against humanity,” with the chair of the commission, urging for renewed commitment from the international community “to help end the climate of fear in Eritrea.”

The perpetrators, according to the UN report, are the Eritrean Army; the National Security Office; the police; the Ministry of Information; the Ministry of Justice; the Ministry of Defense; the People’s Front for Democracy and Justice; the office of the President; and the President Isaias Afwerki.”

The UN report also describes the “repressive systems used by the Government to control silence and isolate individuals.”

“As a result of this mass surveillance, Eritreans live in constant fear that their conduct is or may be monitored by security agents and that information gathered may be used against them, leading to arbitrary arrest, detention, torture, disappearance or death.”

The North African state makes up a distinct proportion of refugees and migrants who make the perilous journey across the Mediterranean Sea each year to reach the European Union. A situation which has led to the death of thousands, and that has led EU leaders to approve a military sea mission to destroy boats used by people smugglers and to rescue those on board.

However, this mission has been criticized by human rights groups, who are accusing EU leaders of ignoring the humanitarian issue of why these migrants are so desperate to leave their country in the first place.

Eritrea is also on the radar of campaign group Reporters Without Borders. The Country has been at the bottom of its press freedom index for the past seven years. The organization is now calling on the European Union to condition the additional aid it sends to Eritrea through the European Development Fund. (Text ends)

Eritrea defends conscription as thousands flee By

AFP June 23, 2015

Nairobi (AFP) - Eritrea has defended its controversial policy of decades-long national service from which some 5,000 people flee each month, saying it has "no other choice" due to threats from long-standing enemy Ethiopia.

Dismissing a United Nations commission of inquiry on the human rights situation in Eritrea—which said the government is responsible for systematic and widespread human rights abuses on an almost unprecedented scale—Asmara justified the mass, open-ended conscription of its people.

Eritreans make up the second-largest number of people risking the dangerous crossing of the Mediterranean Sea, after Syrians, running the gauntlet of ruthless people smugglers and dangerous waters in the hope of reaching the European Union.

But Asmara said UN criticism of the national service—which begins for children in their last year of high school—"is effectively denying the Eritrean people the right to defend themselves in an existential crisis against a foe 15 to 20 times their total population size," said a foreign ministry statement posted at the weekend.

The UN report described horrific torture, including electric shock, near drowning and sexual abuse. Its nearly 500-page report released in early June details how the country, under Isaias Afwerki's iron-fisted regime for the past 22 years, has created a repressive system in which people are routinely arrested at whim, detained, tortured, killed or go missing. Asmara said the report was filled with "bias, errors, unsubstantiated and illogical claims, misrepresentations and evidentiary weaknesses that are used to reach final and extraordinary conclusions."

Eritrea, which broke away from Ethiopia in 1991 after a brutal 30-year independence struggle, remains in a tense stand off with Addis Ababa after a 1998-2000 border war. Troops still eyeball each other along the frontier, with Ethiopian soldiers defying an international ruling to leave Eritrean land.

“By law national service is only required for 18 months,” Eritrea’s Ministry of Foreign Affairs said.

“However, due to Ethiopia’s refusal to abide by a final and binding ruling, and the international community’s continued indifference to this deliberate flaunting of international law by Ethiopia, the government of Eritrea had been left with no other choice but to rely on its population to defend its independence and sovereignty.”

Eritrea, which denied investigators entry to the country, also criticised the evidence as “emanating from self-described “human rights activists” with an “openly declared regime-change agenda.”

It also rejected accusations its leadership could be guilty of possible war crimes.

“There is no evidentiary support for the claim,” Asmara said. (Text ends)

Police in Geneva guard U.N. investigators into Eritrea’s human rights after threats

(Reuters June 25, 2015) GENEVA, June 24 (Reuters) - Swiss police were guarding three U.N. investigators into Eritrea’s human rights record in Geneva on Wednesday after a top official said they had received threats on the street and at their hotel.

The inquiry’s report published earlier this month showed human rights violations in Eritrea that may amount to crimes against humanity, including extrajudicial killings, widespread torture and enforced labour.

As the investigators began testimony before the U.N. Human Rights Council, council president Joachim Ruecker told the session they had been subjected to “various threats and acts of intimidation in their hotel and in the streets since their arrival in Geneva”.

He said security had been redoubled, the Swiss police had been contacted and security measures had been taken to ensure the council meeting could go on “with calm and dignity”.

A Reuters witness saw Swiss police guarding the team even though the meeting was held within the United Nations compound in Geneva. A police spokesman said he could not immediately comment.

Mike Smith, who led the commission of inquiry into Eritrea, said the threats were related to a demonstration against the inquiry on Monday, when 6,000 people from Eritrea and around Europe protested outside the U.N., organisers said.

“Accidentally or not, members of the commission came into contact with some of the demonstrators. And there was a bit of a discussion that got a little bit more than that,” Smith said.

There was also “stuff on the blogosphere” aimed at his fellow commissioner Sheila Keetharuth, which he said was “not very pleasant”.

Keetharuth said the threats were “specific” but declined to give details.

Smith said the government was able to influence Eritrean communities abroad and was “very active” in promoting its interests abroad, while witnesses were scared to give evidence even though they were living securely outside the country.

Eritrea’s government systematically spies on individuals and entities inside and outside Eritrea, the inquiry’s report said.

Harsh conditions in the country have been widely blamed for an exodus of around 5,000 Eritreans fleeing to Europe across the Mediterranean each month.

The U.N. inquiry, constrained by its terms of reference, stopped short of declaring whether Eritrea’s government was committing crimes against humanity but recommended this be examined further, so a decision could be taken about whether to refer the case to the ICC.

Eritrea’s neighbours Djibouti and Somalia are backing a Human Rights Council resolution to extend the team’s mandate for a year to enable it to say if crimes against humanity were committed and to ensure “full accountability”.

“The government must understand that the system that they have set up is simply unacceptable in the modern world,” Smith said.

Eritrea has not cooperated with the investigators nor let them into the country. It has tried to discredit the methodology and motives of the report but has not shown any contrary evidence, he said.

Its ambassador Tesfamicael Gerahtu was upbraided by Ruecker for telling the council that the commission was “ignorant”, that it had “a sinister political agenda” and that their report - based on 550 interviews and 160 written statements - was “a travesty of justice”. (Editing by Raissa Kasolowsky/Hugh Lawson)

Eritrea faces more U.N. scrutiny, a step closer to global court By Tom Miles, Reuters (July 3, 2015)

GENEVA (Reuters) - Eritrea faces a second year of scrutiny by human rights investigators after the U.N. body overseeing them extended their mission on Thursday, a decision that may put the government at risk of referral to the International Criminal Court.

The U.N. Human Rights Council asked the independent investigators to use the time to consider if the Horn of Africa country was committing “crimes against humanity” - a level of offence that can be prosecuted by the global tribunal. Eritrea’s envoy to the Geneva-based rights council described the decision as “politicised” and dismissed an earlier report detailing testimony of widespread torture, sexual violence, forced labour and mass surveillance as unfounded and biased.

Eritrea is one of the poorest countries in the world and around 5,000 of its citizens flee every month to try and join migrants heading towards Europe, according to the United Nations. Somalia, which formally asked the U.N. council to extend the investigation of its near neighbour Eritrea, has regularly accused Eritrea of backing militants on its a territory, a charge Asmara rejects. Djibouti, which shares a border with Eritrea, also backed the resolution.

The investigators, who submitted a report last month, had recommended that the council extend their remit to decide whether crimes against humanity had been committed.

In the past they have said such a finding could lead later to a case before the Hague-based global court - a tribunal set up to investigate the worst crimes when local courts fail. Thursday's resolution told the investigators to look into "systematic, widespread and gross violations of human rights in Eritrea with a view to ensuring full accountability".

Eritrean envoy Tesfamicael Gerahtu told the 47-member Council that his country believed that "the draft resolution is a recipe for sustained confrontation with no dividend for the promotion of human rights". He called Djibouti and Somalia "the usual bidders... on behalf of the main known architects".

Gerahtu said Eritrea was "redoubling its development efforts to achieve a qualitative leap in the next three to four years," and was strengthening human rights as part of this effort. Last week the three U.N. investigators were given police protection, even inside the secure U.N. complex, after a senior official said they had received threats on the street and at their hotel. (Text ends)

July 10, 2015: Eritrea and Israel Joint Military Agreement – USD 1 bn Military Finance

Eritrea gives Israel a military base in the Red Sea against the billion-dollar arms deal.

Asmara got 30 military aircraft and 230 tanks... Tel Aviv is seeking to trim toenails and Egypt control of the Strait of Bab el Mandeb. Military sources said that the Israeli entity has succeeded in establishing a military base port "of Massawa," the Red Sea state of Eritrea against the arms deal estimated at about one billion dollars includes [b]30 military aircraft [u]MiG 29 and 25 in addition to providing the Armored Corps 230 tanks T-72 and 62 and Senturiom, which was considered the beginning of the strategists to cut Parties southern Egypt for the loss of control of the Red Sea. Source: adoulis.com

Eritrean migrants face new asylum battle in EU'
By Martin Plaut, BBC (July 11, 2015)

The exodus from Eritrea is complicating Europe's efforts to tackle the Mediterranean migrant crisis. Eritreans - struggling ashore or picked up at sea - form the second-largest group of migrants risking their lives to reach Italy, after Syrians. Eritrea, in the Horn of Africa, is not in the grip of war or famine. Yet around 5,000 Eritreans flee every month. Why? A damning United Nations Commission of Inquiry report blames the country's "gross human rights violations". "Faced with a seemingly hopeless situation they feel powerless to change, hundreds of thousands of Eritreans are fleeing their country," the UN says.

Rights abuses

Indefinite national service is one of the main drivers, according to the report. Everyone from the age of 17 can be conscripted into the military, and it continues for years. Some conscripts have served for more than 20 years. UN investigators say "slavery-like practices" are widespread, with conscripts subjected to hard labour, with poor food, bad hygiene and wretched pay. The Eritrean government has dismissed the UN's findings as "totally unfounded and devoid of all merit".

Yet for most Eritreans, it is impossible to get an exit visa to leave the country legally. And by fleeing conscription they risk being arrested as "traitors" if they return. The EU cannot send Syrian refugees back to their war-torn country. And Eritreans' asylum claims have generally been treated as legitimate in the EU. But despite the abuses in Eritrea, documented by the UN and human rights groups, some countries are now considering sending Eritreans home.

Policy shift

A Danish Immigration Service report, from November 2014, suggested that Eritrea's policy towards returnees had become more lenient. It was based on a fact-finding mission, but did not name its sources. It quoted the Eritrean Foreign Ministry as saying Eritreans abroad could now "regularise their relationship with the authorities" by paying a 2% income tax at an Eritrean embassy and signing an apology letter. "This has been done by a number of people and they have returned to Eritrea without any complications," the report said, quoting a ministry statement.

But the ministry gave "no specific information" about whether Eritrea's national service would be changed. The report was criticised by Danish media and Human Rights Watch, which described it as "more like a political effort to stem migration than an honest assessment of Eritrea's human rights situation". The Norwegian government sent its own assessment team to Eritrea. It was led by Norway's Deputy Minister of Justice Joeran Kellmyr.

Speaking to the BBC, Mr Kellmyr said he had received an assurance from Eritrea's foreign minister that national service would be reduced to 18 months. "Its important for everyone," said Mr Kellmyr. "If national service is reduced, according to human rights standards, this could mean that a lot of Eritrean people don't any more have the right to seek asylum."

Nation of six million on Red Sea - one of Africa's poorest countries.
One-party state - no functioning constitution or independent media
Former Italian colony, later formed loose federation with Ethiopia

In 1962 - Ethiopian Emperor Haile Selassie dissolved Eritrean parliament, seized Eritrea

Eritrean separatists - the Eritrean People's Liberation Front - fought guerrilla war until 1991, when they captured capital Asmara Eritrea voted for independence in April, 1993
May 1998 border dispute with Ethiopia led to two-year war costing 100,000 lives
Still no peace settlement - thousands of troops face each other along 1,000km (620-miles) border

Controversial tax
In 2011 the UN Security Council condemned Eritrea's collection of a 2% tax on the incomes of all of its citizens living abroad - the so-called "diaspora tax".

UN Resolution 2023 accused Eritrea of using the tax to fund armed opposition groups in the Horn of Africa, including the Islamist al-Shabab in Somalia.

That was denied by the Eritrean government, but many Western nations backed a UN arms embargo and other sanctions against Eritrea. They also suspect Eritrea of using mining revenue to fund Horn of Africa rebels.

The UK government told Eritrea that the "use of coercion or other illicit means to collect the [diaspora] tax in the UK must cease".

Yet Eritreans in the UK say they are still being pressurised to pay up.

Eritrean opposition activist Selam Kidane, based in London, said "they examine your pay slips and calculate how much your 2% tax comes to, but the actual payment is made in Asmara".

She said the payment was necessary before any official transaction could be made in Eritrea - whether it was selling a parent's home or getting a visa. "It is clear coercion," she said.

The UK Home Office has decided that Eritreans are not at risk if they refuse to comply with a "reasonable request to pay diaspora tax". So their fear of the consequences of not paying the tax cannot be grounds for UK protection.

"Previous country guidance indicated that those who had left illegally were at risk on return to Eritrea.

"However, up-to-date information from inside Eritrea suggests this is no longer the case," the UK Home Office says.

The Eritrean government maintains those who leave are economic migrants and says Eritrean "victims of human trafficking" who return home will not face punishment.

Yet the recent UN report spoke of some Eritrean returnees suffering detention for eight months to three years and maltreatment "to the point of torture".

Would more aid for impoverished Eritrea help to stem the exodus, by boosting growth and making life more bearable?

That seems unlikely, as many want to escape conscription and human rights abuses.

Unless ordinary men and women can be convinced that they will not have to face years in the grim trenches on the desolate border with Ethiopia they are likely to continue to risk everything and flee the country. (Text ends)

Ed's note:Why Are Eritreans Leaving Home In Mass?

The UN Human Rights Commission has condemned Eritrea's "widespread and systematic" human rights violations, including torture - the government rejects this

In 2013 Amnesty International said 10,000 people had been imprisoned for political reasons since independence in de-jure in April 1993 – the state denies this

Men and unmarried women are conscripted for national service for indefinite periods, often serving into their 40s.

Opposition parties are outlawed.

It is the only African country to have no privately-owned news media

ERITREA: Hit by migrant exodus, urges UN to investigate trafficking'

Reuters (July 30, 2015) NAIROBI (Reuters) - Eritrea urged the U.N. Security Council to help bring human traffickers to justice on Thursday and said smuggling groups, not human rights abuses, were causing an exodus of migrants to Europe.

About 5,000 people flee Eritrea each month, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees says. Thousands have been picked up in the Mediterranean trying to cross to Europe, and many say they are fleeing military conscription and rights abuses.

"The principal objective of this organised crime is to prevent Eritrea and its people from defending their sovereignty by dispersing and debilitating their human resources," Eritrea's foreign ministry said in a statement.It said the Security Council should investigate the issue and said Eritrea would submit "incontrovertible and indisputable" evidence of crimes.

A U.N. report last month said the Eritrean government presided over forced labour, torture and other rights violations. An Eritrean diplomat, Tesfamicael Gerahtu, told Reuters this month that the count of people fleeing Eritrea was inflated and that many of those claiming to be Eritrean in order to secure asylum were lying.

Eritrea, one of the most tightly-controlled countries in Africa, has been ruled by President Isaias Afewerki since winning independence from Ethiopia in 1993. A one-party state, it has never held a national election. It has long accused its much larger neighbour Ethiopia—with which it fought a 1998-2000 war over a disputed border—and others in the region of trying to destabilise it.

(Text ends)

Two decades after achieving independence from Ethiopia, Eritrea is back in the European headlines above –all for a wave of refugees arriving in Europe. At the same time, a recent United Nations Commission on Human Rights report accuses the Eritrean regime of gross human rights violations. President Isayas Afewerki sees Eritrea's regional and international isolation since its war with neighbouring Ethiopia (1998– 2000) as evidence of a conspiracy between Ethiopia and influential Western states. Every month between three and five thousand Eritreans attempt to flee the total mobilisation instituted for national defence. Reintegrating the country in regional structures could build trust and neutralise the Eritrean narrative of Ethiopian aggression and international conspiracy. (Text ends)

ERITREA - Paths out of isolation'
By Annette Weber, SWP Berline August 14, 2015
In 2014, according to the UN High Commissioner for Refugees, 360,000 refugees left Eritrea, 37,000 of whom came to Europe. Altogether, more than 6 percent of the population have fled the country, despite Eritrea suffering neither famine nor war nor terrorism. It would therefore appear that emigration is driven by other motives. The main cause is in fact the potentially unlimited military service that was introduced in 2002. Both men and women are obliged to complete this "national service", which must officially be completed between the ages of eighteen and fifty. While the duration is supposed to be limited to eighteen months, it can in reality last ten years or more. Apart from national defence, citizens may be ordered to work in agriculture, roadbuilding or mining. For the Eritrean government in Asmara, national service therefore represents a significant economic factor.

In the interests of creating a national identity transcending ethnic ties, the government has taken to rotating conscripts between locations (a strategy already applied by the Eritrean People's Liberation Front from which today's governing PFDJ emerged). In combination with the lack of a time limit, however, the concept leaves young people spending long periods far from home without contact to their families. Where they are rewarded at all, conscripts are also so poorly paid that they are unable to provide for a family or make any kind of investment in their future.

The government, on the other hand, regards compulsory service as a vital safeguard for Eritrea's national defence and independence. For the ideologists of the SWP Comments ruling party, the country's defence and autonomy form an imperative more important than individual liberties. Fleeing the service is tantamount to treason, so returnees must expect persecution and imprisonment. Because it is more or less impossible to leave the country legally, a dense network of organised traffickers has arisen specifically serving Eritreans. A range of methods are involved. In "normal" trafficking, refugees are taken to Israel or Libya via Sudan. But traffickers also make money by kid napping refugees and blackmailing their families in Eritrea. A string of beneficiaries, including members of the border police and the Eritrean and Sudanese armed forces, members of nomadic groups in eastern Sudan and the Sinai, and trans-African trafficking networks, profit enormously from Eritrean asylum seekers, whose journey and ransom cost upwards of $10,000.

Background

Eritrea achieved independence in 1993, after thirty years of fighting against Ethiopian rule. The Eritrean and Ethiopean liberation movements were originally closely linked, having jointly toppled communist military dictator Mengistu Haile Mariam in 1991. This led to hopes of peaceful coexistence following Eritrea's secession, for which ideal preconditions appeared to exist. The two states shared an interest in regional trade, while Ethiopia wished to use the Eritrean ports of Massawa and Assab after losing its access to the Red Sea through the secession.

But only five years after Eritrean independence, war broke out between the two allies– over exactly those supposedly shared interests, such as Ethiopian access to the sea. The conflict quickly escalated, with border disputes leading to occupation of territory by both parties and air strikes on each other's airfields. The war lasted two years and cost about one hundred thousand lives, before ending as a "frozen conflict".

The Algiers Agreement of 2000 and the 2002 decision of the Eritrea Ethiopia Boundary Commission (EEBC) delimiting the border created the formal preconditions for peace. Yet Ethiopia refuses to this day to recognise the proposed border line and continues to occupy Eritrean territory. Neither the African Union nor the UN nor bilateral partners demand that Addis Abeba observe the agreements and implement binding decisions. Ethiopia is one of the West's closest allies in the "war on terror" and valued as a stable (albeit repressive) regional power in the Horn of Africa. The AU even has its headquarters in Addis Abeba. Ethiopian preeminence creates a situation where the West is much more conciliatory towards Ethiopia than to other countries in the Horn of Africa, generally turning a blind eye to repression, human rights violations and anti-democratic measures. In fact the states in the region are not far apart in the relevant indices of human rights, political freedoms and democratisation. The Asmara government, in turn, sees Ethiopia's refusal to implement valid agreements, in conjunction with the attitude of Western states, as a wholesale betrayal.

Human Rights and Liberties

Repression spiralled in Eritrea following the war of 1998 to 2000, with Isayas Afewerki instrumentalising the external enemy Ethiopia and the West's "complicity" to largely suspend civil liberties, democratic mechanisms and rule of law structures. Instead, Afewerki established an autocratic one party regime under his rule. He was, like his cousin Meles Zenawi in Ethiopia, initially the leader of the national liberation movement before assuming the presidency after independence in 1993. The parliamentary and presidential elections scheduled for 2001 were cancelled, and the constitution adopted in 1997 never came into force. To this day political decisions are promulgated by presidential decree. Shortly after the war a group of Afewerki's closest advisers, the so-called G15, criticised his policies as "illegal and unconstitutional". Eleven of them were detained, and it remains a mystery where they are being held, whether they will ever face charges, and whether they are even still alive. According to the UNHCR report, disappearances, torture and detention without trial are common practice in Eritrea.

In 2001 President Afewerki closed all independent newspapers and had a number of journalists arrested. According to Reporters without Borders, sixteen journalists were still in prison in 2015, and Eritrea has occupied last place in its regular World Press Freedom Index for the past s even years.

The Economy

Investment in the future of the population has been sacrificed to the imperative of security. As in the rest of the continent, the Eritrean population is young, with more than 60 percent under 35 years of age. As already mentioned, many regard military service as an odious burden rather than a legitimate and necessary patriotic duty.

More than 70 percent of the population work in agriculture, which contributes less than 10 percent of GDP. Eritreans live largely from subsistence farming, livestock herding and fishing. Conscripts doing their national service also work on state-run farms. The mining sector has grown rapidly in recent years, with China and Canada most strongly involved in the country's gold and copper mines. Russia and Turkey have also shown interest in the sector. The mining expansion was responsible for a jump in GDP growth from 1.3 percent in 2013 to 4.5 percent in 2014. The relatively high price of gold and copper in 2015 means that the government in Asmara can expect strong foreign exchange revenues. But with almost all resources channelled into the defence budget, Eritrea's economy lags far behind its potential. The inflation rate is estimated to be 11 percent.

Remittances from migrants represent an important source of revenues, both for private households and for the government. In that context, growing numbers of Eritrean refugees arriving in Europe guarantee a steady flow of cash to the homeland. Eritrea introduced a diaspora tax to fund national reconstruction, and for a time this represented an important pillar of the government budget. The levy took 2 percent of the income of diaspora Eritreans, mostly collected by embassies without violating international law. But when the UN imposed sanctions in 2011, it became illegal to collect taxes abroad. The regime now instead demands payments to be made in Eritrea itself, treating the tax as a development levy enabling the state to invest in infrastructure without becoming dependent on foreign donors.

Regional Situation and Outlook

In the Horn of Africa the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD) is an important regional organisation, especially as a conflict mediator and integration motor. However, Eritrea suspended its membership of IGAD in protest after Ethiopia's 2006 military intervention in the Somali civil war. Asmara applied to rejoin in 2011, but has yet to be readmitted. In response to the Ethiopian intervention, Eritrea granted asylum to the leadership of the "Islamic Courts Union", which governed Somalia from June to December 2006. The UN Monitoring Group on Eritrea and Somalia also accuses the Eritrean government of having supplied military and financial support to the jihadist al-Shabaab militia in Somalia. This led to UN and EU sanctions against Eritrea. Eritrea has thus acted as a spoiler in the region, whose other states support the anti-Shabaab mission of the African Union (AMISOM).

The conflict between Eritrea and Ethiopia is deadlocked and it is unlikely that they will be able to "thaw" it themselves in the foreseeable future. In view of the large proved. The country is part of a region, and use should be made of the regional mechanisms both for conflict mediation and for trade and economic integration. Regional integration of Eritrea could defuse the threat scenario of external intervention and thus delegitimise the regime's policies. This would contribute to transforming Eritrea from regional spoiler to constructive actor. The African Union could assume an important function by for example assuming a security guarantee for Eritrea. The international community would need to increase pressure on Ethiopia to implement the Algiers agreements. In return Eritrea could be expected to curtail its military service and engage constructively in the region. The international community could assume the role of a guarantor of regional integration, and should work to neutralize the Eritrean conspiracy narrative. But to reduce Eritrea's mistrust the West will have to pursue a more balanced policy towards the different countries in the Horn of Africa numbers of refugees, however, a solution for Eritrea is urgently needed. Above all, the lives of the population need to be improved.

The country is part of a region, and use should be made of the regional mechanisms both for conflict mediation and for trade and economic integration. Regional integration of Eritrea could defuse the threat scenario of external intervention and thus delegitimise the regime's policies. This would contribute to transforming Eritrea from regional spoiler to constructive actor.

The African Union could assume an important function by for example assuming a security guarantee for Eritrea. The international community would need to increase pressure on Ethiopia to implement the Algiers agreements. In return Eritrea could be expected to curtail its military service and engage constructively in the region. The international community could assume the role of a guarantor of regional integration, and should work to neutralize the Eritrean conspiracy narrative. But to reduce Eritrea's mistrust the West will have to pursue a more balanced policy towards the different countries in the Horn of Africa. Annette Weber is a Senior Fellow of the German Institute for International and Security Affairs.

Young Eritrean Refugees in Ethiopia Paint Grim Realities By Christian Fuchs, JRS (August 15, 2015)

More than 130,000 Eritrean refugees have crossed the border to Ethiopia escape human rights abuses. Eritrean youth flee forced indefinite military conscription as well as torture at the hands of an oppressive government. Those who cross the border risk their lives: Eritrea's strict "shoot to kill" policy spares no one. Mai Aini refugee camp is located in north central Ethiopia, and home to about 18,500 refugees from neighboring Eritrea. Many of the camps residents are young. Eighty percent of the refugees in this area are under the age of 24; most of them flee on their own without parents or guardians before they reach the age of recruitment.

Angela Wells, of JRS Eastern Africa, recently visited the camp and spoke with some of the young refugee's art classes which are part of the JRS program in Mai Aini. Her portraits of the young artists are shared here, along with first person descriptions from the artists explaining their work.

Youth in Mai Aini refugee camp have access to education. While they spend a few hours a day in school, there are still many hours of the day where they are confronted with the never-ending tedium of camp life. Camp life can be brutally dull, and combined with promise of better prospects elsewhere it is easy to see why a youngster may seek to leave. It is important for both their physical and mental wellbeing that children— and adults—be given the opportunity to pass their time in a refugee camp learning and socializing in a healthy way with others.

Jesuit Refugee Service is working with the young refugees in Mai Aini to help alleviate the negative aspects of camp life and provide hope for their future. Utilizing a grant from the U.S. State Department's Bureau of Population, Refugees and Migration and other funding, JRS works to promote the mental and physical wellbeing of refugees through the provision of library services and recreational activities such as sports, music, theatre, dance and art.

The art classes enable young people to express their visions, fears and memories about their dangerous journeys. The paintings are exhibited at events in the camp and used to raise awareness about the perils of onward migration. Leaving the camp to study or work is an unlikely possibility for most, and resettlement is rare; many of the young refugees feel trapped. Preying off the energy and dreams of these young people, smugglers convince some Eritrean refugees that making the harsh journey to Europe will allow them to start their lives over.

They attempt to move on to Sudan and Libya with the intention of getting to Europe, and end up attempting the unsafe passage across the Mediterranean that has resulted in so many deaths. Others are trafficked into the Sinai, where they are sold to criminal gangs and exposed to torture and extortion, as smugglers extort high sums from their families abroad or in Eritrea. With nearly 35,000 Eritreans reaching the shores of Italy in 2014, they are the largest African population to make the perilous Mediterranean journey. An unknown number have perished in the desert or sea, never to be heard from again. (Text ends)

ERITREA: Divided and dispersed, opposition struggles to harness spirit of resistance

With critics split along ideological lines and many living in exile, there is no meaningful movement to oppose president's repressive 14-year rule

By Martin Plaut
Wednesday 19 August 2015 12.15 BST
Last modified on Wednesday 19 August 2015 12.48 BST

The brute strength of president Isaias Afwerki's regime has been the weakness of the Eritrean opposition. As leader of the Eritrean People's Liberation Front, the tall, austere man led the country to freedom from Ethiopian rule in 1991 following a 30-year war, promising hope and autonomy to his war-wearied citizens.

But today, Eritrea is a one-party state, and the threat of war hangs over its people. The constitution has never been enacted, there is no independent media and the only legal party is the ruling People's Front for Democracy and Justice (PFDJ).

All independent political activity is banned, and power is concentrated in the hands of the president and a small clique that surrounds him, a gaggle of army officers and senior party officials who serve at Afwerki's whim.

"The country is now run without an institutional framework," says Noel Joseph, a London based Eritrean activist. "All real power now lies in the hands of one man."

A damning United Nations commission report published in June found that political repression was so severe it might "constitute crimes against humanity". As commission chairperson Mike Smith put it: "Instead of a country ruled by law and good governance, the Eritrea we see today is marked by repression and fear."

As yet, no single, charismatic leader to mobilise the dispersed opposition – forced to flee abroad following a crackdown in the early 2000s – exists, leaving them without direction, or organisation.

With the critics of the regime unable to form a coherent movement, members of the diaspora have turned to a range of civic organisations instead.

Some, like Meron Estefanos, campaign for the rights of the 5,000 Eritreans fleeing monthly from the country to be recognised by the international community as refugees. Others demonstrate against the ruling party's seminars and fundraising activities abroad.

A movement calling itself Freedom Friday uses the internet and mobile phones to contact members of the public inside Eritrea. They encourage internal dissidents to distribute leaflets and put up posters and slogans.

But the most significant evidence of internal resistance came in January 2013. Soldiers with tanks advanced on Asmara and took over the headquarters of the state broadcaster, EriTV. The troops, thought to be up to 200 strong, called for the release of political prisoners and the implementation of the constitution.

But the broadcast was soon interrupted as the transmission line to the studio was cut. The dissidents were hunted down by troops loyal to President Afwerki and rounded up.

There have also been recent attempts to circulate an underground newspaper: MeqaleH Forto (Echoes of Forto) was inspired by the 2013 coup, and was produced by a small team made up of writers and editors both inside the country and living in the diaspora.

Activists linked to Freedom Friday network said that while the pilot circulation was limited, they remain hopeful that it can still expand.

Historical divisions

Rifts in Eritrea's political landscape stretch back to the 1960s, and are closely linked to the 30-year war for independence – a history that has come to define contemporary national identity.

Founded in July 1960 in Cairo, the first movement to fight colonial rule came in the form of the Eritrean Liberation Front. But in October 1966, Afwerki, then just 20 years old and a Christian from the highlands, joined their ranks and was appointed as a commander. His arrival strengthened the movement, but also triggered tensions between Muslim, conservative fighters and the Marxist-Leninist and Christian members, who rallied around the young leader.

As a result of growing disagreements, in 1972 Afwerki led a breakaway group, which became the famous Eritrean People's Liberation Front (EPLF), cementing a major rift in the country's politics that continues to divide the Eritrean population today.

Running parallel with the war against Ethiopia, these ideological differences soon exploded into a bloody civil war, with the two movements concentrating their efforts on eliminating each other. By late 1980, the EPLF had emerged victorious, having driven the ELF into neighbouring Sudan.

Independence soon followed, but the EPLF ensured that it remained the sole legitimate party – despite the decision to rename itself the People's Front for Democracy and Justice (PFDJ) in February 1994.

Crushing the G-15

In 1998, war erupted with Ethiopia once more, this time over control of the border village of Badme.

Throughout the dispute, Afwerki intervened personally in military decisions, overruling military commanders during critical battles. The consequences were disastrous, allowing the Ethiopians to break through the Eritrean lines. When peace was restored, a group of his closest colleagues confronted him, accusing him of mishandling the war and failing to bring democracy to the country. Now known as the G-15, these voices of dissent were promptly rounded up in September 2001, and have remained imprisoned, without trial, ever since.

The full-scale conflict, possibly the largest Africa has seen since the second world war, finally ended with a peace treaty in May 2000, but it cemented Afwerki's brutal approach to any and all opposition.

Today, the two nations remain locked in a no-war, no-peace stalemate which the president exploits to suggest that the country faces an ongoing existential threat, requiring unquestioning loyalty to his regime. He demands absolute control over his citizens, prompting comparisons to North Korea.

EPLF dissidents have attempted to re-organise in exile, but they too have been plagued by factionalism. Numerous attempts have been made by Eritrean elders to unite these splits – often divided down the original two-party lines – but with little success.

A chart published by an Eritrean opposition website provides some indication of the complexity of these movements.

The 2013 attempted coup may point to the way ahead for the Eritrean opposition. The civic movements in exile are growing in popularity and confidence. Eritreans in the diaspora who were once wary of criticising Afwerki now openly attack his government and there are regular opposition demonstrations around the world.

There continue to be reports from inside Eritrea of sporadic opposition: clashes inside the army and of men and women venting their frustration on the streets. The Eritrean spirit of resistance that saw them through a 30-year war of independence clearly remains unbroken, but whether it can be harnessed into a movement remains to be seen.

ERITREA: Eritrea unleashes its troll patrol
By Maeve Shearlaw, Mail & Guardian August 24, 2015
The Horn of Africa state is going to great lengths to derail activism and stifle criticism online.

Daniel Mekonnen has been the target of online attacks from forces loyal to the Eritrean regime for more than a decade. They range from abusive emails to death threats – one serious enough to warrant temporary police protection. He says the offensive started after he cofounded the Eritrean Movement for Democracy and Human Rights in 2004 – "the first diaspora-based movement to openly oppose the government". After living in exile for 12 years, the Eritrean lawyer and human rights activist has been marked as an "enemy number one" by the government because of his work in exposing its brutality, he says.

The situation in Eritrea has been called into focus in recent months: in June, a United Nations investigation concluded that the government's abuse of its citizens "may constitute crimes against humanity", bringing the state's secretive and totalitarian practices into the spotlight and drawing international criticism.

Though governments from Moscow to London have been accused of using devious ways to manufacture support online, testimonies from Eritrean activists suggest pro-regime accounts are pushing abuse to extreme lengths. Mekonnen says the threats against him intensified when he openly called for the international criminal court to investigate the regime, led by President Isaias Afwerki.

A Twitter account, @HagerEritrea, which means the "state of Eritrea" in Tigrinya, denounced Mekonnen and called on him to "be hunted for justice". A few days later he was called a "criminal" who would "heave [sic] price for the crimes he committed against humanity". The account's bio claims "Eritrean policies are the best in Africa". The tweets, with rumours of other dangers among Mekonnen's network, were interpreted as a serious threat to his safety by the UN inquiry team and he was put under temporary police protection in June.

UN investigators working on the Eritrean inquiry have also been placed under police guard after several were threatened by pro-regime activists in Geneva. This week Mekonnen says he has a number he can call if he ever feels in danger – "a satisfactory arrangement". He would be more worried if he still lived in Africa. "They have limited capability here [in Europe]," he says.

Nameless, faceless accounts

Journalists who write critically about Eritrea say they are bombarded with abusive tweets, but it is activists who bear the brunt of the online vitriol.

Many say they are deluged with messages from nameless, faceless accounts, repeatedly pushing the same accusations.

Selam Kidane, an outspoken critic of the regime, has suffered this treatment since 2001, the early days of her activism. “First it was speculations about my identity and motives, then it moved to name-calling and threats. Now it includes insults against my entire family,” she says. “Recently, they started picking on my sister, at first by mistake because she shared the same name as another activist, but when they discovered she was my sister it got even worse.” Kidane’s sister is not an activist.

Kidane has also received death threats and harassment over the phone, which she reported to the authorities. In the past she tried to “stand up to the abuse” by blocking those responsible on Facebook and Twitter but “the sheer volume makes it impossible”. Feruz Werede, another human rights activist in exile, describes a similar experience. Facebook photos have been edited to “make me look bad”, and she’s received “explicit private messages”, she says.

Dissent and criticism of the government is not possible inside Eritrea, where even the slightest whisper is stamped out quickly. The government has dismantled the independent press and it is the world’s most difficult place to connect to the internet. Werede is convinced this online trolling is part of an orchestrated campaign by people “handpicked by the government” to counter criticism from abroad. “If I block one account, a different account with different name pops out and continues what the blocked account started,” she says. “What these trolls do is like a broken record; they will repeat almost the same thing again and again.”

Kidane believes young pro-government activists are being trained to challenge anti-Eritrean views. “They call it ‘challenges’; I call it cyber-bullying,” she says. “I’ve been called a ‘sellout’, a ‘political whore’ and an ‘ugly woman in search of attention’.” She says online accounts have also falsely claimed that her father and her husband “are Ethiopians implicated in the mass murder of Eritreans”.

According to Werede, “99% of the accounts are nameless and faceless”, and often appropriate the names of famous Eritreans. Mekonnen’s threat also emerged from a faceless account, before being shared by Sophia Tesfamariam, an online commentator who the lawyer says has taken it upon herself to be a pro-government “spokesperson for the diaspora”.

Silencing people

Victoria Bernal, an academic who has charted the Eritrean diaspora’s history online, says even if the widely held belief of government orchestration turns out to be false, “the belief that exists has the same effect: silencing people, making them afraid”. “Its in the government’s interests to [promote the idea] that there is this slick operation, when in fact it might not exist,” she says.

“Totalitarian regimes work by uncertainty.” She also believes the regime likes to encourage polarisation among communities living abroad, dividing people into distinct pro-government and anti-government camps, yet the reality is more nuanced.

For years the internet has been a crucial space for the country's diaspora, explains Bernal. First used during the 1998-2000 war with Ethiopia to promote nationalist sentiment and rally support for the war effort, websites are now more commonly used to mobilise communities living abroad and to collect money from migrants to send back home.

But it soon became clear that where dissent and criticism were impossible in the country the internet became "a space to construct the possibility of dissent" for the diaspora, explains Bernal. Today it an essential tool for those outside the country to subvert or support the state through forums on sites such as Dehai, Asmarino and Awate, and on social media. Twitter hashtags such as #HandsOffEritrea, #LiesAboutEritrea and #Erispotlight are frequently used to discuss, defend and promote the regime. The running theme over the past few months has been an attempt to discredit the methodology of the UN's "bogus" or "hatchet" report.

Although there are other African governments that go to great lengths to protect their reputation at home and abroad, Bernal says "Eritrea stands out as being incredibly oppressive", seemingly prepared to go to great lengths to protect its image. "In the end they are trying to force me to quit," says Mekonnen, who shows no signs of being cowed. "No one gives you your rights for free; you have to earn them." – © Guardian News & Media 2015

Eritrea warns Ethiopia of war 'sabre-rattling'

AFP (September 7, 2015)

Nairobi (AFP) - Eritrea has accused arch-rival Ethiopia of "sabre-rattling" and of threatening to invade, with the neighbours still in a tense standoff following a 1998-2000 border war.

Asmara's Ministry of Information said in a statement that war-like rhetoric from Ethiopia's main party in the ruling coalition—the Tigrayan People's Liberation Front (TPLF) -- had increased.

Eritrea, which broke away from Ethiopia in 1991 after a brutal 30-year independence struggle, remains on an effective war-footing with Addis Ababa after a return to war in 1998.

"The TPLF's sabre-rattling has been a common staple throughout winter. And this has been ratcheted up in the past few weeks," said the information ministry statement, released Monday.

"The TPLF regime is resorting to tactics of covert intimidation to dissuade various circles from associating with Eritrea. It has gone beyond these hints to openly assert that, 'it has secured a green-light from the United States to unleash war against Eritrea.'

There was no immediate reaction from Ethiopia, but Addis Ababa has previously dismissed such statements as propaganda.

Eritrea is struggling to stem a flood of refugees from its borders to Europe, an exodus attributed to gross human rights violations in the hermit state.

Eritreans make up the third largest number of refugees trying to reach Europe, after Syrians and Afghans.

Asmara however says its controversial policy of decades-long national service—a key reason some 5,000 people flee each month—is due to threats from Ethiopia.

But Asmara said its progress had sparked "frustration bordering on insanity in the camp of the TPLF and its key sponsors."

Ethiopia Accused of fomenting chaos to ignite the fire of a devastating war September 7th , 2015 Nairobi (AFP + DIPLOMAT.SO) – Eritrea has accused arch-rival Ethiopia of "sabre-rattling" and of threatening to invade, with the neighbours still in a tense standoff following a 1998-2000 border war Asmara's Ministry of Information said in a statement that war-like rhetoric from Ethiopia's main party in the ruling coalition — the Tigrayan People's Liberation Front (TPLF) — had increased.

Eritrea, which broke away from Ethiopia in 1991 after a brutal 30-year independence struggle, remains on an effective war-footing with Addis Ababa after a return to war in 1998. "The TPLF's sabre-rattling has been a common staple throughout winter. And this has been ratcheted up in the past few weeks," said the information ministry statement, released Monday. "The TPLF regime is resorting to tactics of covert intimidation to dissuade various circles from associating with Eritrea. It has gone beyond these hints to openly assert that, 'it has secured a green-light from the United States to unleash war against Eritrea.'" There was no immediate reaction from Ethiopia, but Addis Ababa has previously dismissed such statements as propaganda.

Eritrea is struggling to stem a flood of refugees from its borders to Europe, an exodus attributed to gross human rights violations in the hermit state. Eritreans make up the third largest number of refugees trying to reach Europe, after Syrians and Afghans. Asmara however says its controversial policy of decades-long national service — a key reason some 5,000 people flee each month — is due to threats from Ethiopia. But Asmara said its progress had sparked "frustration bordering on insanity in the camp of the TPLF and its key sponsors."

Braving bullets: Eritreans on first step of dangerous journey to Europe By

Karim Lebhour, AFP (September 8, 2015)

Endabaguna (Ethiopia) (AFP) - Every day they come, hundreds of refugees sneaking across the river, risking being shot on sight as they flee their homeland of Eritrea for arch-rival Ethiopia.

Eritrea is no war zone, yet the people of this Horn of Africa nation make up the third-largest number of migrants risking the dangerous journey to Europe, after Syrians and Afghans, running the gauntlet of ruthless people smugglers and treacherous waters.

But for the refugees who arrive exhausted after fleeing the hardline rule in the hermetic Red Sea state, this is only the first step in a long, tough and extremely dangerous journey in search of basic freedoms and a better life.

On average, around 100 people cross each day, but numbers have risen dramatically in the past year, said Sahle Teklemariam, who coordinates the Ethiopian government's refugee agency ARRA work here, in the far northeastern Shire region.

"This year we have seen a sharp increase, with up to 200 to 300 people a day," Sahle told AFP. "And the numbers are increasing, even though it is rainy season. People are running from every corner."

The United Nations accuses the government in Asmara of being responsible for systematic and widespread human rights abuses on an almost unprecedented scale, including the mass, open-ended conscription of its people.

A June UN report described how the paranoid government targets opponents, routinely arresting at whim, detaining, torturing or killing.

In 2014, the United Nations refugee agency UNHCR registered more than 33,000 new Eritrean refugees arriving in Ethiopia. The numbers continue to grow.

'No peace there' -

Inside the centre, some 400 Eritreans, mostly young men stranded at the border, wait to be directed to one of four Eritrean camps run jointly by ARRA and UNHCR.

The Ethiopian authorities give them three meals a day and a basic allowance.

Tesfu, aged 20, took a week to escape, travelling under cover of darkness to reach Ethiopia—a country Eritrea remains on an effective war-footing with, following a brutal 1998-2000 border war.

With little if any hope to getting a visa in Ethiopia for onward travel to another nation, the young farmer plans to travel on his own northwards— perhaps to Germany, to join a cousin he believes is there but from whom he has no news, or otherwise to meet another family member in Israel.

"It didn't rain this year, so I couldn't farm the land," Tesfu said. "But even with good rains, I wouldn't have stayed in Eritrea. There's no peace there, you have no peace of mind."

Eritrea, which broke away from Ethiopia in 1991 after a brutal 30-year independence struggle, remains in a tense stand off with Addis Ababa. Troops still eyeball each other along the frontier.

But with Ethiopian soldiers defying an international ruling to leave Eritrean land, Asmara has defended its controversial policy of decades-long national service from which about 5,000 people flee each month, saying it has “no other choice” due to threats.

Asmara has also previously blamed the refugee crisis on a CIA conspiracy and human rights activists.

 ‘People die at sea’ -

Safe now in Ethiopia, Tesfu appears to know little of the challenges ahead. For now, he is focused on reaching neighbouring Sudan. “I know that people die at sea, but I’m ready to take my chances,” Tesfu added. Around him, new arrivals seem as poorly prepared, driven by the hope of joining a distant relative in the diaspora, inspired by word-of-mouth stories of those who survived and reached another, better country to live in. “In Eritrea, we have no other freedom than to live like slaves,” said Solomon, who said he fled after serving 18 years of military conscription. “Everybody must be a soldier or a student. Nothing else.”

Military service begins in a desert army camp for the final year of school, for both men and women. Not all continue to serve as soldiers, but it is the government that decides their future and assigns jobs. The salary they receive is minimal, too little to support their families, according to those who flee. Refugees in military uniforms in Endabaguna indicate the numerous desertions.”They told us the military service would be one year and a half, but we know from experience of others that once you’re in, you just can’t leave,” said Daniel, aged 21, still dressed in his military uniform, including Eritrea’s famous army footwear: plastic sandals.

He took advantage of being posted near to the border zone to escape with three comrades, and was welcomed “warmly” by the Ethiopian army, he said. Having made it safely across the border however, the next step remains unclear. Daniel dreams of getting to the US, though seems unsure of the exact route and how he plans to cross the ocean. “It is true, I don’t know where America is,” Daniel said. “But my brother is in Sudan. He will help me get there. (Text ends)

Escaped from Eritrea, refugee route leads to Europe By
AFP September 9, 2015

Hitsats , Ethiopia (AFP) -- Eritrea is a day’s trek through dusty hills from the refugee camp in Ethiopia, a way station for tens of thousands of Eritreans who have fled their oppressive homeland. But while life is tough in the town-like camp of thousands—living in baking heat in simple canvas tents or brick houses—no one thinks of going back, or of staying in the camps.

Escape from the hermetic Red Sea state means only one thing—to travel onwards for a better life. “We want to go, to go anywhere,” 25-year old Abraham told AFP in Hitsats camp in northeastern Ethiopia, just south of the Eritrean border. For those who have fled the dictatorial regime of President Isaias Afwerki, which has created a repressive system in which people are routinely arrested on a whim, detained, tortured, killed or disappeared, a return home offers only a prison sentence—or worse—for treason. Once they have left, the only possible move is onwards abroad - and for most, that dream is of an eventual life in Europe.

The Horn of Africa nation is no war zone, yet the people of the England-sized arid country of some six million people make up the third-largest number of those risking the dangerous crossing to Europe, after Syrians and Afghans. New arrivals in the camp dismiss the risks of ruthless people smugglers and treacherous waters to plot travel onwards north to Sudan, and then on to Europe. But for many their dreams are stalled, waiting for the hard cash needed to pay the traffickers to smuggle them onwards.

'We have no choice'

"Germany, Canada, England, Switzerland," the young people say in turn, all countries with significant Eritrean communities. Like most refugees here, they worry of reprisals against their family still in Eritrea if they give their full name. "If it is possible to go illegally to Sudan, we will go. We know its dangerous," Abraham added. "We know we can lose our lives, but we have no choice."

Officially, Hitsats camp houses nearly 45,000 refugees, although in reality, the number is far lower, according to aid workers. Ethiopian authorities mark arrivals but not departures of the 112,000 registered Eritrean refugees into the country.

Perhaps less than 40,000 are in the country today: Eritreans use Ethiopia only as a stepping stone to travel onwards. "No one wants to stay in the camps where they have nothing else to do," said Dennis Likule, a resettlement expert from the United Nations refugee agency, UNHCR.

"If we had opportunities for the refugees to be out of camps and have something meaningful then we would be encouraging a certain percentage to stay around and integrate." Ethiopia, one of the poorest and most densely populated countries in Africa, does not grant work permits to Eritreans on its soil. Instead, refugees here must find a visa and legal refugee status in a third country. Few however can do so.

Barely a thousand Eritrean refugees in Ethiopia were offered resettlement in the United States or Canada via UNHCR last year. The only European countries to have offered places—France, Norway and Switzerland—have taken only 12 people. With a lack of legal channels, the refugees are forced to seek a new life on their own. Everyone here knows the price of a one-way ticket to Europe: $1,000 (900 euros) to go to Sudan, then, after travel to Libya, some $4,000 or $5,000 for a place on a boat chancing the dangerous sea crossing to Europe.

'Dream of changing my life'

For those who cannot pay, family members already in the diaspora help with the cash. Once in Europe, the Eritreans are much more likely to get asylum than if they remain in Ethiopian camps. “I know all about the risks from relatives and friends,” said Meaza, a 25-year old woman, who left with a group of around 20 friends, hoping to reach Europe, or Canada.

“As a woman, I know I can face sexual assault. One of my relatives died in the Mediterranean... I dream of changing my life, and the life of my family who stayed in Eritrea.” But the wait can be long.

Samson, 28, has spent a quarter of his life in the camps here, waiting to find a route out. Denied a request for asylum in the US, he has spent much of the past seven years waiting on a request to Canada to be accepted. Now he is tired of depending on UN food aid handouts, boosting his income with a small job helping in the running of the camp.

“I need to go somewhere where I can make a living,” said Samson, who fled Eritrea’s capital Asmara after having been jailed for requesting a delay in military conscription to continue his studies. “Without any process, I will leave illegally - I’m young, I need to do something,” he said, saying he was eyeing the journey to Europe.

“It is not a good option—lots of people die, but if resettlement doesn’t work, it is a choice. Those who manage to go to Europe say it is dangerous, but it is worth it.”

The Ethiopian officers reproached the Eritrean opponents for lacking coordination and they firmly advised them to devise a coherent and realistic strategy to overthrow the Eritrean government. The Eritrean opposition’s eight armed factions, which have been in fruitless negotiations since 2009 to form a joint military front against Afeworki, were represented at the meeting. Namely, the Red Sea Afar Democratic Organization (RSADO) which lost one of its leaders on 7 July, Abdul Karim Qadr, killed by Eritrean border guards, the Democratic Movement for the Liberation of the Eritrean Kunama (DMLEK), the Eritrean National Salvation Front (ENSF), Eslah, the Democratic Movement of Eritrean Saho (DMES), the Eritrean Movement for Democracy and Justice (EMDJ), the Eritrean Democratic Unity Front (EDUF) and the Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF).The Ethiopian officers reproached the Eritrean opponents for lacking coordination and they firmly advised them to devise a coherent and realistic strategy to overthrow the Eritrean government. The Eritrean opposition’s eight armed factions, which have been in fruitless negotiations since 2009 to form a joint military front against Afeworki, were represented at the meeting. Namely, the Red Sea Afar Democratic Organization (RSADO) which lost one of its leaders on 7 July, Abdul Karim Qadr, killed by Eritrean border guards, the Democratic Movement for the Liberation of the Eritrean Kunama (DMLEK), the Eritrean National Salvation Front (ENSF), Eslah, the Democratic Movement of Eritrean Saho (DMES), the Eritrean

Movement for Democracy and Justice (EMDJ), the Eritrean Democratic Unity Front (EDUF) and the Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF).

A Testimony to Failed Autocracies: Eritrean Soccer Team Defected James M. Dorsey October 17, 2015

Eritrea's national team has for all practical purposes defected after 10 of its players this week refused to return home following a World Cup qualifier in Botswana.

The defection and effective demise of the squad underscored the failure of autocratic rule in Eritrea already highlighted by the large contingent of Eritreans among the hundreds of thousands of refugees washing ashore in Europe.

It also threw a spotlight on differing degrees of repression in failed autocracies and the way people deal with it. The defecting Eritrean players clearly felt they could afford to seek asylum without repercussions for family members left behind, a luxury Syrian players, for example, do not enjoy.

In seeking asylum in Botswana, the players joined a long list of athletes who have left Eritrea against the backdrop of United Nations assertions that government policies amount to slavery and crimes against humanity and that torture was widespread.

The players reinforced the political statement embedded in their defection by appointing the exile Eritrean Movement for Democracy and Human Rights (EMDHR) as their spokesperson.

Eritrean soccer like Syrian football has been leaking players, who are among the privileged few allowed to travel abroad, for years. As a result, the Eritrean team has had to rebuild from scratch several times.

Rebuilding the team is facilitated by the fact that Eritreans are enlisted for indefinite periods of time into national service. Eritrea has denied assertions in a 484-page UN report that it subjects its citizens to indefinite national service or kills people trying to flee the country.

While the Eritreans have often defected in groups, Syrians have either left their country individually without turning their escape into a media event to protect relatives left behind or in the cases of those players with dual nationality who lived abroad before the eruption of the civil war in 2011 quietly refused to play for what they saw as the team of President Bashar al-Assad rather than that of a nation that only still exists on paper.

The Eritrean defections are a blow to the government's prestige in a country that according to a 2009 US embassy cable disclosed by Wikileaks is "mad about soccer." The cable noted that "senior government and party officials are avid fans of the British Premier League and sometimes leave official functions early to catch key matches.”

Twelve members of the national soccer team disappeared in Kenya in 2009 during a regional tournament. Another 13 players sought asylum in Tanzania in 2011. A year later, the reconstituted 17-member national team defected in masse together with their doctor while in Uganda. Four other Eritrean athletes requested political asylum in Britain after the 2012 London Olympics.

EMDHR spokesman Dick Bayford, a Botswanan human rights lawyer, told reporters that the most recent defecting players were still doing national service and risked being charged with desertion which is punishable by death if they were forced to return to Eritrea.

Pro-government media denied Mr. Bayford's statement and asserted that the Eritrean team dispatched to Botswana had 34 members, 24 of which had returned to Eritrea.

Writing in Tesfanews, Mike Seium charged that EMDHR "seem(s) to think that because 10 players defected the country is in uproar and we have serious problems. However, they don't know Eritrea…The nucleus of the team is still there along with many other players. To those that defected, the sad part of it is that you are using the Eritrean national team to send a political agenda that allows failed organizations like the EMDHR to gain propaganda points."

While Eritrea ranks among the world's most repressive nations, Syria hosts one of the world's most vicious regimes, which explains why Syrian players when they choose to defect do so quietly.

As a result, Syria has largely been able, despite multiple defections, to keep its national team intact. Surprisingly, the team is performing well on the pitch and despite the mayhem and bloodshed is closer to reaching the 2018 World Cup finals than it ever has been.

The stories of individual players nevertheless reflect Syria's crisis. Mosab Balhous, the Syrian team's goalkeeper, was arrested in 2011 on charges of supporting opposition movements and sheltering rebel fighters, and vanished for a year before suddenly re-joining the squad in 2012. The national youth team's folk-singing goalkeeper, Abdel Basset Al-Saroot, became a leader of the uprising in Homs before initially joining the Islamic State (IS), which he left last year to join Al-Qaeda's Syrian affiliate, Jabhat al-Nusra.

Swedish-Assyrian international Louay Chanko opted out of the Syrian team because of what he called "corruption." Striker Firas al-Khatib, who plays for Kuwait's Al-Arabi SC, left the national team in 2012 because he did not want to represent the Assad government. The departure for Germany of youth team captain Mohammad Jaddoua prompted the Syrian Football Association (SFA) to ban players from traveling abroad except for on official business.

Other players have joined a team in Lebanon fielded by the U.S.-backed Free Syrian Army that hopes to one day be Syria's national team. It sports green jerseys, the color of the anti-Assad revolt as opposed to the national squad's red. The team's coach, Walid al-Muhaidi, says he escaped Syria in 2013 together with some 100 athletes.

Syrian national team captain Abdulrazak Al Husein told The Guardian in advance of a qualifying match earlier this month against Japan that his squad represented "all aspects of Syria. Whether you are a Christian or a Muslim or any sector of Islam we're all one family, we're playing for one team, one country,"

His professed optimism put a brave face on a bad situation. "At the end of the day, we're playing for the country, hoping it will get back to the way it was. The best thing we can do is unite the people of Syria," he said.

Mr. Al-Hussein's optimism is all the more remarkable given that, unlike Eritrea which toils under repression but is not threatened by disintegration of its nation state, restoring Syria to its pre-2011 colonial borders is at best a distant dream.

Few believe that Syria can be restored as a nation state within its pre-conflict borders. Russian intervention is widely seen as an effort to ensure that Mr. Assad controls a swath of land stretching from Damascus to Latakia on the Mediterranean coast that could constitute a rump state built around his Alawite minority — one of several entities that could emerge from the ruins of Syria.

Using options, which are far less available to their Syrian counterparts, Eritrean players have with their repeated mass defections been doing what FIFA and other international sports associations should have been doing: penalize regimes that blatantly violate human rights and use soccer to distract international attention and polish their badly tarnished images. (Text ends)

Meet Haben Girma, Harvard Law's first deaf-blind graduate By Arthur Chatora on November 18, 2015

Haben Girma was born deaf-blind but she had access to opportunities afforded by the Americans with Disabilities Act. Girma is Harvard Law School's first deaf-blind graduate and her academic achievements have catapulted her advocacy career, fighting for the rights of people with disabilities

Eritrean-American Haben Girma, who is the first deaf-blind graduate at Harvard Law School's story is a true inspiration.

Girma's extraordinary story highlights her courage and determination despite physical challenges, and she is living proof that disability is certainly no barrier to achieving academic excellence.

Girma is an attorney who "advocates for the civil rights of persons with disabilities. A celebrated speaker, she provided the introductory remarks for the 25th Anniversary of the ADA [Americans with Disabilities Act] at the White House".

Her success has been shared and appreciated by many including her grandmother back in Eritrea. During her introductory remarks at the White House, Girma noted that in Eritrea, "there was simply no chance," for deaf-blind children to go to school. Her grandmother had difficulties finding a school in Eritrea for Haben's older brother, also born deaf-blind.

Girma's family moved to the United States, where Haben was born deaf-blind but she had access to opportunities afforded by the Americans with Disabilities Act.

The 27 year-old has achieved a lot despite her disability, "For my grandmother back in Africa, my success in law school seemed like magic," she says.

Girma appreciates the opportunities she has been offered and "the hard won power of the ADA."

Her academic achievements, a "J.D. in 2013 from Harvard, and her B.A., magna cum laude, in 2010 from Lewis & Clark College" have indeed catapulted her advocacy career which have seen her fighting for the rights of people with disabilities. (Text ends)

ARCHIVE:
Eritrea: from colonialism to independence
(By Martin Plaut) It is remarkable is quite how well the history of Eritrea was captured in early photography. Eritrea's colonial masters were keen to celebrate their successes via photos. These are from my collection. For the Italians the use of images had been an important element of the Risorgimento, with Garibaldi's campaigns photographed and distributed by popular carte de visite. The British too had an appetite for colonial photography, both to illustrate the extent of their imperial conquests and to capture the 'ways of the native.'

Britain, furious that the Ethiopian Emperor Tewodros II imprisoned several missionaries and two representatives of the British government, sent a vast army to release them. Some 13,000 British and Indian troops arrived from Bombay on 280 vessels they landed at Zula on Eritrean coast 48 km south of Massawa, preparing to attack the Emperor inside Ethiopia itself. Having defeated and killed the Emperor and looted his palace, the British departed. However London was worried about expanding French influence in Africa, and chose to encourage Italy to take Massawa. The Italians were ideal candidates to play this role: they already had an Eritrean foothold.

In 1896 Italy decided to use Eritrea as a base from which to attack Ethiopia itself. This was a mistake. In a rare reversal of the normal run of clashes between European and African nations, the Italians were decisively defeated at the battle of Adua. The defeat was a major blow to the Italians, who lost thousands of troops killed and captured. With the rise of fascism under Mussolini, Italy was determined to avenge this loss of face and extend its presence in the Horn of Africa.

In October 1935 Italy invaded Ethiopia from the territory it controlled in Eritrea. What is remarkable about the occupation of Eritrea and the invasion of Ethiopia is that the Italians were extremely proud of the fact that they had raised thousands of Eritrean local troops – or 'askaris'. These were formed into individual battalions and each had a postcard made to celebrate its achievements. The postcards portray the Eritreans in a distinctly heroic light and there was certainly no attempt to denigrate the 'askaris' on whom the Italians relied.

Despite the League of Nation's condemnation of the Italian action aggression it was not until the outbreak of the Second World War that the world took a decisive stand against their aggression. Using tanks, aerial bombardment and nerve gas the Italians captured Addis Ababa on 5 May 1936. The emperor had left for exile in Britain but Ethiopian guerrilla forces continued the fight.

By 1941 Emperor Haile Selassie had been returned to his throne by a combined force of British, South African, Indian and Sudanese troops fighting alongside Ethiopian patriots. When the war was over Britain was uncertain quite what to do with Eritrea, which had been run by a temporary British Military Administration after it was captured in March 1941. In 1949 London referred the matter to the United Nations, which sent a mission to investigate quite what should happen to Eritrea.

In 1952 the United Nations finally to decide that the territory should be federated with Ethiopia.

Emperor Haile Selassie on 3 October 1952, using 'golden scissors to sever tape on boundary between his country and Eritrea Oct. 3, marking federation of Eritrea and Ethiopia,' as the caption reads.

There matters might have rested.

However, the Emperor’s absolutist rule alienated the Eritrean population by a series of decrees. These included outlawing the teaching of Eritrean languages, replacing them with Amharic (the official language of the empire), dismantling industries and removing them to Addis Ababa and repressing the trade union movement and political parties allowed under the British military administration. In 1962 the Federation was ended and Eritrea became a province of the Empire.

By the early 1960's this repression was being met by armed resistance from the Eritrean Liberation Front. The ELF, drawn mainly from the Muslim population of the lowlands, attacked key installations.

The railway line blown up in December 1970.

In this period the ELF took western hostages, as bargaining tools against Ethiopia.

Most – including these two Americans – were well treated and released in January 1976.

By 1981 the ELF had been forced out of Eritrea by the Eritrean People's Liberation Front (EPLF) in a bloody civil war. At the same time the war against Ethiopian continued.

By June 1990 the EPLF took the port of Massawa and this photograph is captioned: 'A EPLF rebel stands in front of a captured Soviet-made cannon used in the taking of the port of Massawa. The EPLF says it has an enormous supply of weapons, all Soviet-made and captured from the Ethiopians.'

With Massawa having fallen the Ethiopians used their air superiority to bomb the city. Here civilians are seen in June 1990 taking refuge in a culvert to escape the attacks.

Finally, after a war of liberation lasting three decades, the EPLF entered Asmara on 24 May 1991. Greeted with jubilation, many of the fighters were seeing their capital for the first time.

The EPLF decided against declaring immediate independence, preferring to have the UN oversee an independence referendum in 1993. The result was 99.83% in favour, with a 98.5% turnout. Independence was declared on 27 April 1993. Eritrea had emerged as a fully fledged member of the UN and the Organisation of African Unity.

It was the culmination of three decades of sacrifice – some moments of which had been captured in the photographs of the journalists and photo-reporters who had visited the country. (Text ends)

Eritrea Urged to Release Orthodox Patriarch Under House Arrest for 10 Years

The U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom has urged the authoritarian government of Eritrea to release Patriarch Abune Antonio, who was illegally removed as head of the Eritrean Orthodox Church and remains in detention for 10 years.

USCIRF Chairman Dr. Robert P. George earlier this week called on the Eritrean government to "immediately release" Patriarch Antonios and "allow him to return to his rightful position" that he held at the time of his removal and detention in January 2006.

Antonios, who remains under house arrest incommunicado at an undisclosed location, was detained after he called for the release of political prisoners and refused to excommunicate 3,000 parishioners who opposed the government at the time.

In 2007, the government made Bishop Dioscoros of Mendefera as the head of the Orthodox Church.

"This anniversary should remind us all that the Eritrean people are denied the fundamental, universal human right of religious freedom," said George in a statement. "The Eritrean government sends those whom they imprison for their religious beliefs to the harshest prisons and subjects them to the cruelest punishments. We must continue to shine the light on these prisoners of conscience until they are free."

USCIRF has recommended, and the State Department has designated, Eritrea as a "country of particular concern," for its "systematic, ongoing and egregious" violations of religious freedom since 2004.

Eritrean President Isaias Affewerki, who has ruled Eritrea since 1993, is a member of the Eritrean Orthodox Tewahedo Church, an Oriental Orthodox church, in the capital city of Asmara – belonging to the largest among only three Christian denominations allowed to function in the country.
However, Affewerki is known to be an alcoholic and an autocrat.

Eritrea, one of Africa's smallest countries, has also jailed, tortured and killed numerous evangelical protestant Christians over the past years.

Affewerki, the leader of the ruling People's Front for Democracy and Justice party, restricts religious freedom out of his fear that religion will mobilize people, which could be a threat to his hold on power, according to the World Evangelical Alliance's Religious Liberty Commission.

Particularly after a war with Ethiopia from 1998 to 2000 – which cost Eritrea around 70,000 lives – Affewerki, who led the country to independence from Ethiopia, became over-suspicious and a lot more autocratic.

The government also claims to fear that that religious freedom will lead to evangelism by Christian groups and thereby cause social tensions which can be exploited by "outside forces" to destabilize the nation. (Text ends)

Eritrea 'haemorrhaging' youth fleeing atrocities: Amnesty By Peter Martell, AFP December 2, 2015
Nairobi (AFP) - Eritrea's claims it has ended indefinite national service are untrue and refugees arriving in Europe should not be labelled economic migrants, Amnesty International said in a report Wednesday, warning of "persistent atrocities" in the Horn of Africa country.

Refugees from the repressive Red Sea state make up the third-largest number of people risking the dangerous journey to Europe after Syrians and Afghans, running a gauntlet of ruthless people smugglers to make the treacherous Mediterranean crossing.

There was no immediate response from Asmara to Amnesty's report, but Eritrea has defended the conscriptions from which some 5,000 people flee each month, saying it has "no other choice" given the threat from long-standing enemy Ethiopia.

Amnesty dismissed Asmara's claims it had limited compulsory military service to 18 months, an announcement seized on by some in Europe to argue that Eritreans can now safely be sent home.

"Conscription continues to be indefinite for a high proportion of conscripts and sometimes lasts for decades," London-based Amnesty said in the report.

"The situation facing conscripts in Eritrea is desperate, and exposes the lie behind claims made by certain host countries that most Eritreans arriving at their borders are economic migrants," Michelle Kagari, Amnesty's deputy regional director for east Africa said.

"These people, many of them children, are refugees fleeing a system that amounts to forced labour on a national scale."

A group of Eritrean refugees prepare to board a plane to travel to Sweden as part of a new EU progra …

The report, titled "Just Deserters: Why indefinite national service in Eritrea has created a generation of refugees," describes the conditions that drive Eritreans to leave despite the fact the country is not at war.

Those interviewed recounted how the relatives of refugees who fled were sometimes arrested, to try force those who left to return and face punishment themselves.

- 'Lives of perpetual forced labour' -
During service, families are split, conscripts are "abysmally paid" and leave is often withheld for years, it added. Rule breakers can be incarcerated in "underground cells or in shipping containers."

Those who escape describe crawling under razor wire, tiptoeing across minefields or sneaking past armed border guards in their bid for freedom. An Eritrean refugee rides a cart at a temporary camp in Kassala, in eastern Sudan, on October 22, 20 …

In the past, entire Eritrean football teams have absconded while playing in tournaments abroad and fighter jet pilots have escaped in their aircraft. "Eritrea is haemorrhaging its youth. Children are walking alone, often without telling their parents, to other countries, to avoid lives of perpetual forced labour on low pay with no education or work opportunities," Kagari said.

"That they choose to undertake such precarious and unsafe journeys to supposed safe havens reflects the gravity of the human rights violations they would face if they stayed at home."

'Defend its independence'
Under Eritrean law, conscription is limited to 18 months, but Asmara says it has to rely on its people to defend it from Ethiopia, from whom it broke away from in 1991 after a brutal 30-year independence struggle. The two countries fought a war between 1998 and 2000.

Troops still eyeball each other along the frontier, with Ethiopian soldiers defying an international ruling that they should leave Eritrean land. Eritrea was "left with no other choice but to rely on its population to defend its independence and sovereignty," the government said in June. The Amnesty report, based on interviews with 72 Eritreans who fled the country since mid-2014, said Asmara's change of policy was just rhetoric.

"There have been no discernible changes... conscription into National Service continues to be extended indefinitely and conscripts continue to be deployed in a range of civilian as well as military roles," the report read. "The system therefore continues to amount to forced labour, in violation of international law."

Sending Eritreans back would see them locked up in dire conditions at home, Amnesty added. "Those who try to escape are arbitrarily detained," the report read. "The same fate would likely befall those forcibly returned from overseas upon the rejection of their asylum applications." (Text ends)

REGIONAL Geo-politics

Are oil interests at the heart of the EU's new relationship with

Eritrea?
(www.theguardian.com 19 Dec, 2015) - New research shows that Eritrea's Red Sea coast has "massive oil and gas reserves", but the endless conflict with Ethiopia and the isolation of the Afwerki government have left the country's natural resources largely untouched.

That may well be why, for example, the former UK Conservative leader Michael Howard led a group of British businessmen to seek investment opportunities in Eritrea's hydrocarbon sector in March 2014. Lord Howard is chairman of Soma Oil and Gas , a company that has been accused of bribing Somali officials to obtain a licence to explore and extract oil offshore.

In February 2015, Eritrean officials attended the Red Sea Oil and Gas summit in Dubai, where they said they were prioritising the petroleum sector as part of the country's economic development, promising incentives to foreign oil companies.

Even more evident are the interests of Italy in Eritrea. The country is a former Italian colony and currently a major business partner.

Last year, Lapo Pistelli, the vice-minister of foreign affairs, was criticised by human rights groups for shaking hands with Afwerki during a visit to Asmara. He claimed he was going to start new bilateral relations and bring Eritrea back to the international community "as a responsible and indispensable actor to stabilise the region".

A few months later, Pistelli played a decisive role in involving the Eritrean government in the Khartoum process, an EU-African Union initiative aimed at tackling the trafficking of migrants between the Horn of Africa and Europe.

In June this year, Pistelli became vice-president of Italy's oil giant ENI, already active in 15 African countries. The decision was opposed by some left-wing MPs, who accused him of a conflict of interest and suggested he might have planned the move while still in political office. www.oilprice.com said, "Eritrea is most likely sitting on massive oil and gas reserves, but the government doesn't seem to be too interested in exploiting them—for now. Eritrea's natural resources—especially oil and gas—remain virtually untapped largely as a result of the 30-year war for independence with Ethiopia.

Whilethereisplentyofevidencethat Eritreaholdsmassiveoilandgasreserves,thecountry'sleaderhaskeptquietaboutituntilrecentlyWhilethereisplentyofevidencethat Eritreaholdsmassiveoilandgasreserves,thecountry'sleaderhaskeptquietaboutituntilrecently

It was only in 2010 that the government even admitted that Eritrea was a potentially oil-rich country. Now it's actively pursuing foreign investment. In collaboration with Robertson Red Sea International Ltd., Eritrea's Ministry of Energy and Mines has compiled all technical information of the Red Sea prospective areas in two volumes to help investors determine hydrocarbon potential. The Ministry is also offering downstream opportunities, such as the rehabilitation of its Assab refinery, the construction of a new refinery, oil and gas distribution licenses and more."

AFRICAN GLOBE: Saudi Arabia And The GCC Are Expanding To Eritrea. Geopolitical Implications For Ethiopia

AFRICANGLOBE – Recent media reports indicate that Saudi Arabia and the UAE have contracted Eritrea's government for assistance in the War on Yemen, using the East African state as a transit and logistics base for their operations, as well as 400 of its troops for cannon fodder in Aden.

Add to it the Qatari soldiers that have already been present on the ground for a few years to "mediate" the border dispute with Djibouti, and the most important members of the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) have unexpectedly converged in what many might think to be among one of the most unlikeliest of places. While it may have been difficult to foresee this happening, in hindsight it actually makes quite a lot of sense, and contrary to the conventional assessment that this is about Yemen, the argument can be made that it's also just as much about Ethiopia as well. Unbeknownst to many, Qatar is the "ox driving the cart" in this case, and whether they like it or not, the rest of the GCC states will be reluctantly forced to follow its destabilizing lead if Doha decides to throw Ethiopia into chaos.

The research expands on the briefing first laid out by South Front and should be seen as a continuation of their original work. It begins by setting the context for what's been going on along the Horn of Africa lately and how the GCC's military advances fit into the larger context of recent history. The piece then investigates the levers of influence for how Qatar could destabilize Ethiopia as well as its radical ideological motivations for doing so. Finally, the article concludes with a scenario study of how Qatar could engineer an Unconventional War to bring down Africa's next up-and-coming power.

The Crowded Coast Geostrategy:
The Horn of Africa is one of the most geostrategic regions in the world due to its location along the Bab-el-Mandeb strait that connects the Gulf of Aden with the Red Sea. In a broader context, one can say that it's one of two maritime chokepoints (the other being the Suez Canals) that link Europe with South, Southeast, and East Asia, and until the Northern Sea Route becomes operable sometime in the next decade, all sea-bound trade between the EU and these corners of Eurasia must transit through its narrow passage. As could be expected, this makes control over the strait a heightened prize for any power or combination thereof, and it's not for naught that most Great Powers scrambled their navies to the region over the past decade ostensibly to "combat piracy".

Come One, Come All:
What was really happening was that the US was trying to militarize the waterway under the auspices of countering "Somali pirates", which it must be reminded, were bogeymen that were blown completely out of proportion by the Western mainstream media for premeditated geopolitical ends. The US wanted to create the conditions where the rest of the world would accept the continuous presence of its fleet operating in these strategic international waters, but precisely because their legal status, it meant that any other fleet could do the same thing on identical grounds, which is exactly what happened. While the UK and French navies were obviously there to support their American 'big brother', Russia, China, India, and Iran also sailed their ships there too, but for the purpose of both watching the West and symbolically showing that they won't allow NATO to completely control this space.

The Strategic Illusion:
While the "pirate" hype has largely died down and the multilateral naval positioning over the Bab-el-Mandeb has markedly subsided since its frenzied height in the late 00s, the importance of the strait obviously hasn't changed, and the American-initiated competition over its control merely took on another form and amphibiously migrated landward. The US joined its French partners in Djibouti by moving into Camp Lemonnier in 2001 (Paris never left the country after independence), thus giving it an on-land presence from which to project naval power if it chose to do so. It also opened up "anti-terror" facilities in Yemen during this time as well, but just like with the Djibouti base, these could also achieve the dual purpose of influencing the strait. With both of these power nodes already occupied by the US prior to the "anti-piracy race", it might seem strange why America started such a game in the first place, but more than likely, it did so as a manifestation of the "exceptional" hubris of the Bush Administration that was also continued during the early reign of his successor.

Thus, while the non-NATO states may have felt they somehow lessened the US' control over Bab-el-Mandeb by placing and then removing their navies from the Gul f of Aden, it was all just a carefully crafted illusion (one which hopefully resulted in the multipolar states acquiring some degree of useful information about the Western fleets). The US still retained its positions in Djibouti and Yemen, albeit without the ability to directly apply the same amount of force had its naval presence still been there in the same capacity, so nothing really changed in a simple strategic sense. That status of affairs would remain until the Yemeni Revolution finally succeeded in casting off the American- and Saudi-installed government in early 2015, which dramatically led to the US having to evacuate its military personnel from the country. For the first time since the end of the Cold War (when the Soviets had a naval base in Aden), the US didn't' fully control the Bab-el-Mandeb, and the strategic panic that this produced is partly why Saudi Arabia made the fateful and ill-planned decision to invade Yemen.

Bab-el-Mandeb And The War On Yemen:
The Saudis and their lackeys have succeeded in blockading the Yemeni coast and conquering Aden, thus returning most of the unipolar world's control over their lost 'real estate' in this ultra-strategic region, but capitalizing on their unofficial casus belli to make sure that they can indefinitely retain control there, the GCC decided to 'jump the pond' to the Horn of Africa, hence its interactions with Eritrea and the contracting of Amara's 'services'. In a sense, Eritrea is envisioned as being the Gulf's "back-up Yemen", a friendly territory under its proxy influence from which punitive measures can be launched against the people of Yemen if they ever do succeed in once more nearly liberating the entirety of their country.

So long as Eritrea is under the GCC's sway, then from a strategic-logistical standpoint, the Yemeni War of Independence will be all the much harder to win because the Saudis' and their bloc have a 'rear guard' base almost directly abutting the country. The GCC's actions in Eritrea can thus be seen as a type of "double insurance" in making sure that as many of the Yemenis remain under the Gulf boot for as long as possible, with such an unnecessary strategic consideration being seen as coming from a position of fear and weakness on their part, not strength. They fear the Yemeni militias so much that they're preemptively creating this 'rear guard' supply and logistics facility in Eritrea "just in case" a counter-offensive one day manages to unsuspectingly cripple their occupying forces.

It's appropriate at this juncture to take stock of all the international military forces currently present along the Horn of Africa. The Saudis and Emiratis now have a naval presence in Eritrea, and as South Front reported (and which was verified separately this summer), the UAE is also seeking to open a naval base in Berbera along the northern coast of Somalia in the breakaway Somaliland region. The US and France have an on-ground presence in Djibouti, but they're also joined by the Japanese, which opened their first military base abroad since World War II in 2011 under the opportunistic 'justification' of "anti-piracy". They might, however, soon be joined by China, if the rumors of Beijing eyeing the country for its first overseas base are true. China could of course call upon the convenient slogan of "anti-piracy" to justify any possible forthcoming presence, but no matter what its stated grounds for doing so are, such a base would serve the additional purpose of safeguarding the Chinese-financed Djibouti-Addis Ababa railroad to the fastest-growing economy in the world and the headquarter state of the African Union.

Gulf Interests Move Inland

Now's a good time to elaborate more in-depth about the continental African interests that the Gulf States seek to pursue through their partnership with Eritrea. To be more specific, it's better to look closely at Qatar's geopolitical objectives in this case, since the tiny emirate ironically leads the regional pack in its preexisting involvement in East Africa.

Eritrean Backgrounder:

This coastal state is one of the world's newest, having gained its independence from Ethiopia in 1993 after fighting a three-decade-long war to achieve it. Peace came only after the government in Addis Ababa, at that time run by a military entity known as "The Derg", was dissolved in 1987 and its leader Mengistu Haile Mariam was ousted in 1991 by a coalition of ethno-centric rebel groups. Due to the near-continuous fighting that took place on its territory, post-independence Eritrea was a wreck, but President Isais Afwerki helped to achieve stability and elevated living conditions, as attested to by journalist Andre Vltchek who visited a year ago. Nevertheless, the economy is in dire straits and Eritrea is largely isolated from the world community, partly due to the border disputes it has with all of its neighbors, and also because of successful Ethiopian lobbying against it. According to Ethiopia, Eritrea supports a variety of anti-government rebel groups and even has links to Al Shabaab in Somalia.

The Qatari Connection:

The last point is extremely contentious and has never fully been proven, although to clarify a bit, a Wikileaked US diplomatic cable quoted the Somalian President accusing Qatar in 2009 of using Eritrea as a financial conduit for Al Shabaab. Considering Doha's support to other terrorist groups such as ISIL, this doesn't seem implausible, and it might even be that rerouted Qatari funds channeled through Eritrea (which might have received a modest cut) could be to blame for why Ethiopia would allege that its nemesis was aiding terrorists.

No matter what shape it takes, Eritrea's direct or indirect links to Al Shabaab are one of the reasons why the UNSC initiated an arms embargo on the country in 2009 that was just renewed last month. In this connection it's relevant to remind one of Qatar's role in the region, and it's that it was asked to deploy "peacekeepers" along the Eritrean-Djibouti border by each of their governments in 2010 to assist in "mediating" their border dispute. One can cynically suggest that this provided nothing more than the perfect cover for Qatar to continue supporting Al Shabaab, which as was mentioned above, it had already been doing for some time. The reason Qatar supports this terrorist group is because it's basically a regional franchise of ISIL, and a faction of Al Shabaab had just pledged allegiance to its Arab "brothers" late last month. These two groups pursue the same radical Islamic goals that Qatar has been patronizing for years through its sponsorship of the Muslim Brotherhood, and ISIL and Al

Shabaab are pretty much the more visibly militant and globally notorious arm of the Brotherhood in this respect.

The Afro-Eurasian Caliphate:
To get a fuller grasp of why Qatar is promoting terrorism in East Africa, one should understand the macro-regional context of Doha's ideological ambitions. The peninsular pipsqueak uses its financial largesse to flex power disproportionate to its tiny size, and it manifests this through support of a hodgepodge of ultra-extreme Islamic groups, all of which are classified as terrorists by Russia: the Muslim Brotherhood; the Taliban; ISIL in Syria, Iraq, Libya, and Sinai; and Boko Haram. Each of these terrorist groups is active in a certain geographic area, with the only 'missing link' being the southern vector, ergo the ideological/militant 'necessity' of Al Shabaab. Altogether, these terrorist organizations represent the 'foot soldiers' of a transnational caliphate project that Qatar and its US ally would like to see expand all throughout the central pivot of Afro-Eurasia, the "Greater Middle East" of Central Asia, the 'conventional' Mideast, North Africa, and East Africa. While its current prospects of success have dramatically dimmed ever since Russia's anti-terrorist intervention in Syria, it still remains possible for Qatar and the US to actualize some aspects of this grand strategy in certain corners of their operational theater, which in this context is the Horn of Africa.

Double-Sided Chaos:
The introduction of "managed chaos" to the region via the Qatari-supported Al Shabaab terrorist group serves two main purposes. The first one is to pressure Ethiopia, which the US may feel more inclined to do if the country moves more solidly in a pro-Chinese direction in the future, and the second is to perversely use the presence of Al Shabaab to deepen its security relationship with Ethiopia by being the arsonist-firefighter that creates a problem and then 'helps resolve' it afterwards. It's useful to recall that the US contracted Ethiopia to invade Somalia in 2006 in order to destroy the Islamic Courts Union (ICU), a precursor of Al Shabaab, which thus strengthened the partnership between the two. Also, by keeping Islamic terrorism alive in Somalia, to whatever extent it's present at a given moment, the US can keep the 'justification' open for selectively intervening in the country with drone strikes or commando raids, thus entrenching its presence in the region and turning the criminal into the 'cop'.

The Enemy Of My Enemy:
Rewinding the focus back to Eritrea, Asmara is passively tolerant of Qatar's Al Shabaab patronage because it could supplement its grand strategic goal of destabilizing Ethiopia. To explain, Ethiopia has previously intervened in Somalia against Islamic terrorists before and subsequently occupied the country, and the idea that its forces could continue to do so again in the future, and thus be bunkered down in another potential quagmire and spread thin in critical (and rebellious-prone) interior regions, excites Eritrean strategists. Furthermore, as will be explained more fully in the third section, there's the potential for Al Shabaab terrorists to become the "freedom fighter" figureheads for the Somali population in Ethiopia's eastern provinces, formally the Somali Region but also known as Ogaden. Eritrea's most important objective is to have ethno-centric regions inside of its former colonizer achieve independence in the same manner that it did – through prolonged and militant struggle against the central government – so that its rival can never be in a position to threaten it again (let alone exist in its current state). If the Somali region just so happens to be the spark needed to set the whole federal haystack alight, then so be it, as Asmara's reckoning goes, whether its Qatari-supported terrorism that initiates the destructive domino effect that they expect or an indigenous ethno-centric uprising.

The Big Picture:
To bring everything together in a more simple understanding, Qatar has taken the lead in destabilizing the Horn of Africa out of ideological and unipolar-loyalty reasons, and it's using its "legal" presence in Eritrea to facilitate this. The War on Yemen provided the other main GCC states of Saudi Arabia and the UAE with a 'plausible justification' for also 'getting in on the action', knowing just as well as Qatar does that Eritrea is a 'double-hinged' state that can be used to simultaneously project maritime and continental influence, with the latter case being against Ethiopia.

Concerning the GCC's newest geopolitical target, it's one of the world's most promising emerging economies, and from a Gulf perspective, it could also be useful in satisfying their African-directed agricultural and construction-outsourcing needs. Placing their forces in Eritrea, Ethiopia's arch-rival and hated foe, is designed to put pressure on the rising, albeit potentially unstable, continental power and thus make it more amenable to whatever their forthcoming grand interests may be. Also, by making Eritrea an integral part of their regional military architecture, the Gulf States are essentially declaring that any aggression against it would also endanger their own interests, thereby blanketing Asmara with a de-facto security guarantee and altering Addis Ababa's perceived existing strategic balance of power (which it had earlier assumed was relatively even).

By itself and approached from a purely geopolitical standpoint, it's theoretically possible for Saudi Arabia and the UAE to maintain this new status quo between Eritrea and Ethiopia (perhaps even exploit it and each of those two states to their own advantage if shrewd diplomacy is applied), but the presence of Qatar, the 'loose cannon', means that the entire arrangement is inherently unstable and subject to sudden change. Qatar has proven itself much more prone to impromptu outbursts of rhetorical rage than any of the other Gulf States, and its comparatively younger leader (only 35 years old) is much less versed in the art of statecraft than his peers. Being so hot-headed and already harboring an inferiority complex vis-à-vis his larger and more mature neighbors, Qatari

Emir Tamim bin Hamad Al Thani is inclined to give the full terrorist 'go-ahead' whenever he feels like it (or if he 'thinks' it would be of strategic use for him), meaning that a Qatari-sponsored Islamic destabilization of Ethiopia cannot at all be discounted, and must be astutely prepared for by the country's authorities.

Towards The Unconventional War Scenario
GCC Support:
The final section of the research discusses the Unconventional War scenario that Qatar could help engineer alongside Eritrea and Al Shabaab (one of its ideological 'children', it could be argued) to throw Ethiopia into chaos. Once this process begins, Saudi Arabia and the UAE could be expected to assist Qatar and this scenario to some extent, knowing that Doha is much too tiny and inexperienced to ever fully control the larger developments that it helps to unleash (the "Arab Spring" Color Revolutions are a case in point), and they thus want to be in a position to gain as much self-benefit from what may turn out to be an irreversible course of events. Correspondingly, with these self-motivated interests in mind, they could act as force multipliers in their own way for advancing the chaos that Qatar created, thereby ushering in a chain reaction that could lend crucial and ultra-destructive force to the scenario that will be discussed.

Consequences:
The full consequences of Ethiopian chaos won't be discussed in the scope of this article, but they can be assumed to have the risk of virally spreading through parts of the North and East African regions (since Ethiopia is of the latter but capable of influencing the former through its border with the rebellious Blue Nile state of Sudan), and would at the very least impact the country's 95 million or so citizens to an undetermined extent (to say nothing of the transnational social implications). Also, with China's economy becoming more dependent for growth on trade with Africa, any significant disruption in Ethiopia, Beijing's prized partner nowadays, could directly ripple back to the East Asian giant and negatively affect it to a degree, all depending of course on the preexisting level of Chinese-Ethiopian trade. The higher that Ethiopia rises in terms of international significance (be it diplomatic, economic, military, etc.), the harder its fall could be and the further the aftershocks would travel across the globe, thus suggesting that the (US-advised) Qatari destabilization of Ethiopia could be timed to achieve maximum effect depending on its relationship to various actors (in this case, likely China) at the given moment.

Regional Geo-politics & security
GCC's geo-political ambitions in Horn of Africa
Tigrai Online updates, By Berhane Kahsay February 1, 2015
The precursor to the current conflict in Yemen is the dethronement of President Al Abdullah Saleh in February 2012. Ever since his departure, the country seems to have plunged into a stubborn turmoil and at this stage Sunni Saudi Arabia and Shia Iran have been battling out for the complete control of Yemen resulting in the demise of 6000 civilians according to the United Nations' recent estimates. Iran already has a foot-hold in Iraq, Lebanon (Hezbollah) and Syria. And Saudi Arabia is now going all out, after its failure to dislodge Bashir al-Assad, to prevent Yemen from becoming the fourth domain of the Islamic Republic. To complete the encirclement of Saudi Arabia, Iran would also continue with its efforts to bring Bahrain, which is almost 70% Shia but ruled by Sunni monarchy, into its sphere.

Saudi Arabia's military intervention in Yemen has the support of the United Arab Emirates (UAE), Qatar, Europe and America. It also has secured the participation Sudan, Somalia, Djibouti, Senegal and Eritrea. These African countries have condemned in the strongest possible manner the recent attack on Saudi Arabia's embassy in Tehran in protest at the execution of a dissident Saudi Shia cleric, Namir Baqr al-Nimr. The UN Monitoring Group on Somalia and Eritrea has stated that 400 Eritrean mercenaries have been embedded with UAE contingents, and the West African nation, Senegal, has also despatched 2100 legionnaires to fight alongside the Saudi-led coalition.

According to the Egyptian newspaper, Al-Monitor, Saudi Arabia's investment in Sudan has reached $13 billion and in November last year $1.7 billion was authorised for the construction of dams in the Kajbar, Dal and Al-Shiraik which are expected to be completed in five years to serve the agricultural needs of the Kingdom. Egyptian authorities are claiming that Sudan would consume her entire allocation of 18.5 billion cubic meters for this purpose and they are fearful that further Saudi agricultural projects would lead to the reduction of their share violating the Nile Agreement of 1959. By Egyptians standards, this was a muted reaction but when Ethiopia, source of the Nile, announced the construction of the Renaissance Dam, the uproar that reverberated throughout the Arab Republic shattered the Richter scale.

Eritrea, Senegal, Djibouti and Somalia can also expect monetary rewards for being used as cannon fodders for the Saudi-led involvement in Yemen. According to Herman Cohen, the former Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, UAE warships have been utilising the port of Assab and this has been leased to Saudi Arabia for five decades. UAE is also seeking to lease the former naval base in Barbera, Somaliland, as reported by South Front Analysis & Intelligence which is an independent body specialising in international relations and conflicts. It appears that the largest oil producer in the world has full control of the Red Sea corridor and this has enabled her not only to monitor cargo ships sailing in and out of the Suez Canal, but to also curtail Iranian arms shipments to Yemeni Houthis.

Eritrea which was Iran's ally until very recently changed sides as it believed that its strategic interest would be best served by joining the Saudi-led campaign in Yemen. The obvious motive for this move is to generate the desperately needed hard currency by leasing its port and sending its troops to fight against the Iran backed Houthis. But the primary and overriding factor must have been to take advantage of this great opportunity to restore its relationship with the US by being on the side of its strong oil supplying ally in the Middle East. There is no doubt that Saudi Arabia will very soon lobby the US to help lift the punitive UN sanctions (Resolution 1907) imposed on Eritrea for training, arming and financing the ISIS affiliated Al-Shebab of Somalia. The US alongside EU may also exert pressure on Ethiopia to accept and implement the recommendations of the Ethio-Eritrea Border Commission.

After all the US is benefiting from the current crisis in Yemen as its ally is massively pumping oil pushing the price to go down below $30 a barrel and the US is certain to reciprocate by being receptive to Saudi Arabia's efforts to bring Eritrea ,its newly acquired lackey ,in from the ''cold.'' And a further reduction in the price of the liquid gold is expected due to Iran's entry into the market after the lifting of US sponsored sanctions imposed on the Persian state for refusing to desist from its efforts to enrich weapon grade Uranium. For sure the US would like the conflict to persist as this would create additional opportunities for American arms manufacturing industries to sell their state of the art weaponry to Saudi Arabia and UAE whose annual defence expenditures presently stand at $49.7 and $15. 7 billion respectively. Ethiopia's entire budget for 2015/2016 fiscal year was $11 billion.

Saudi Arabia's next move would certainly be to resolve border and political issues that exist between Eritrea on the one hand and Sudan, Djibouti and Somalia on the other in order to protect and maintain it's newly created sphere of influence in Eastern Africa. In the not too distant future, the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia in conjunction with the other Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) would be in pole position to hurt Ethiopia by using its satellite states in the Horn coupled with the unrestricted use of the Red Sea and its surroundings giving her the opportunity to control Ethiopia's import and export commodities. And this would very much gratify the Eritrean dictator who has left no stone unturned to make this a reality but nothing to show for his incessant and futile efforts that he started after his conclusive defeat in the border war that he initiated in 1998. At present Ethiopia has excellent relations with Sudan, Djibouti and Somalia but this could abruptly change at the flick of the Saudi's petro-dollar fingers.

Up until the second half of April 2015, Eritrea was on the side of the Iranians and it allowed the Persian state to use its Red Sea islands to transfer arms to the Yemeni Houthis but the Eritrean leader switched his allegiance after his visit to Saudi Arabia at the end of April 2015. The Iranians must have been outraged to read the statement realised by Eritrea's Ministry of Information on 5 January 2016 which stated that '' The government of Eritrea reaffirms its strategic neighbourly ties with Saudi Arabia and condemns the violation perpetrated against the embassy of Saudi Arabia in Tehran.'' The Eritrean tyrant must have been plotting to pull the Saudi's to his side by using Iran and this is not a mean achievement by any standards.

Eritrea has greatly enhanced her position by allowing GCC member states on its soil. Its efforts to destabilise Ethiopia would now be intensified with the tacit approval of her sponsors and any retaliatory measures by Ethiopia would be viewed as a threat to their interest in the Horn region. Qatar has always been financing Eritrea and Al-Shebab to subvert Ethiopia and no doubt the other GCC members would now join in with a view to making Ethiopia a client state. Previously Islamic-inspired unrest was fomented from afar but now it would be organised and conducted from very close quarters. Chaos in Ethiopia would seriously affect the economic progress of the last twenty four years and this would indirectly adversely affect Chinese investments in Ethiopia which would greatly please the Americans who may be encouraging the Gulf States to proceed with their calamitous and short sighted geopolitical objectives behind the scenes.

The presence of GCC States in Eritrea is a serious threat to the security of Ethiopia which is still technically at war with its neighbour. Saudi Arabia launched an offensive against the Houthis because it claimed that its safety and security had been jeopardised by hostile Shia rebels armed and financed by its arch religious rival Iran. Yemen has now been reduced to rubbles and there seems to be no end in sight. These two opponents have also been involved in supporting various factions in Syria for regional hegemony and 250,000 people have been killed and 11 million citizens displaced from their homes since the conflict they have been part of began nearly five years ago.

The dynamics of the Horn region has been altered by the arrival of Saudi Arabia and UAE. Tiny Qatar, an ardent exponent of Muslim Brotherhood was already in the area as a ''mediator'' in the border conflict between Djibouti and Eritrea. Ethiopia was hoping the no war, no peace status would finish off the Eritrean dictator and usher a friendly government in his place. This has not materialised and it appears that his stay in power is likely to be extended as a result of the presence and support of the GCC members. Ethiopia has now been left with no option but to re-evaluate its position on Eritrea as recent developments in the region have made the current status quo untenable. The country shouldn't have been in such a serious quandary if its leaders had utilised numerous palpable breaks to eject the tyrant without resorting to an all-out war. So what should Ethiopia's next strategy be to forestall GCC's menacing geo-political goals?

To prevent one of the globe's emerging economies from being thrown into chaos, the prevailing political situation in the country has to be made much more inclusive and freer for loyal opposition parties to operate in any part of the nation without any hindrances. Its susceptibility to foreign interferences could also be substantially minimized by dealing with corruption and bad governance in a systematic and sustained manner before they precipitate serious and widespread unrests as happened in many countries over the years. Equally essential is ensuring that challengers of the ruling party have regular and fair access to state radio and television not just immediately before general elections which has been the case since the establishment of the federal state. This would enable them to express their political views and opinions on government policies without the need to rely on alternative media outlets such as VOA Amharic service, ESAT, Deutsche Welle and other sources which have been used by diaspora extremist couriers to instigate uprisings on several occasions. Focusing on bigger geopolitical picture is far more preferable than squandering valuable time and resources on minnow political opponents led by Merara Gudena and Beyene Petros who are coming to the end of their shelf lives.

Addressing issues that affect the Muslim community in general and the youth in particular, and identifying and resolving potential ethnic conflict areas before they turn into bloody clashes would also deny external enemies the opportunity to initiate disarray that could scupper the socio-economic developments which have been in motion since 1991. Stability and harmony coupled with fair distribution of wealth would guarantee a lasting peace which is needed to take the economic prosperity to a higher level by attracting foreign investors. Once our house is in order, we can then move on to take a decisive action to remove the Eritrean despot by inducing internal rebellion that has to be seen through to the end. At present the dictator is not facing stiff challenges from his own people and elsewhere giving him ample time to organise and despatch his surrogate organisations to Ethiopia to create chaos and instability. Forcing him to focus on his own survival would leave him with no opportunity to interfere in the internal affairs of a nation with nearly 100,000,000 people.

The measures taken by the Ethiopian government so far have caused the Eritrean economy to plunge into abyss in addition to the irreparable rift created between the tyrant and his people. But the bottom line is that the isolated and despised dictator is still in power orchestrating his destructive strategies against Ethiopia, and lately, he seems to have manoeuvred himself into a position where he would certainly receive financial and military support from GCC states enabling him to extend his brutal regime.

As Saudi Arabia appears to have become the lease holder of the port of Assab, the Ethiopian government has to convene an urgent meeting with the Arab nation to give assure that the current status would not be affected in the event of the dissolution of the dictator. The Saudis are very likely to acquiesce to this proposition as they have not fully settled in their new domain. Equally important factors that would compel them to grab this proposal include the military stalemates they have encountered in Yemen and Syria costing them huge amount of money as well as the dire state of their economy due to the substantial reduction in oil revenues. IMF is predicting that Saudi Arabia's budget deficit is set to exceed US $107 billion this year and the kingdom's officials and civil servants have been told to tighten their belts. The self-inflicted economic downturn was caused as a result of the overproduction of oil which was intended to hurt Iran that came out of a long period of US sponsored UN sanctions in January 2016. Saudi's geopolitical ambitions can also be checkmated by escalating Chinese economic involvements in Ethiopia as the second largest economy in the world would take whatever is necessary to deter foreign threats to her investments in the second most populous Horn nation.

Eritrea & Ethiopia: Separation vs. Integration By
Daniel Teferra (PhD) September 11, 2015

Globalization in the industrialized societies means bringing down borders and forming currency unions. For instance, during the Cold War period, the realities of international politics dictated the need for bigness in international affairs if a country was not to become a second-rate power compared to the United States or the former Soviet Union. Thus, to Western European countries, that necessitated integration.

On the other hand, when it comes to poor countries globalization in the Post-Cold War period has lent itself to fragmentation, erecting barriers and less freedom. The concept of self-determination and secession has been pushed in poor countries by the industrialized societies largely out of self-interest. Contrary to the conventional wisdom, the peoples of Ethiopia and Eritrea are not enemies. The bonds between the two are deep and strong.

In 1890, Eritrea was carved out of parts of northern Ethiopia and the coastal establishments by the Italians. Eritrea was ruled by the Italians for 50 years and by the British for another 10 years.

Sixty years of European rule had weakened Eritrea's feudal structure. Urban centers were established and infrastructure was built. Various consumer goods industries were created and the wage system was introduced. As a result of this modern influence, new social groups with a more progressive outlook developed in Eritrea. Compared to resource-rich Ethiopia, the Italian colony of Eritrea was very small and less endowed with agricultural lands. It had an industrious population, but its employment base was very limited. Ethiopia had existed as an independent country long before the European Scramble for Africa. Ethiopia was not colonized except for a brief Italian occupation of five years (1936-1941). Italian colonialism left very little impact on Ethiopia, which remained virtually unchanged as a feudal society.

Historically, Ethiopia was an isolated country, lying far beyond the horizon of Europe. It had to pay expensive transit cost for its external trade. For example, prior to the 1950s, Ethiopia paid, per ton, ten times higher than what was paid in Europe under similar conditions. The Addis Ababa-Djibouti railway carried about 70 percent of Ethiopia's foreign trade, and freight rates were very high. The remaining 20 percent was carried through Gambela and up to 10 percent through the Italian colony of Eritrea. These routes were difficult, expensive and entailed long hauls through European colonies to reach the sea. All these changed when Eritrea, with its own government and flag, was federated with Ethiopia in 1952. Ethiopia was now able to transit its goods through three major ports: Massawa and Assab on the Red Sea in Eritrea, and Djibouti on the Gulf of Aden. Most of Ethiopia's cargo transited through Assab.

The federation also created opportunities for many Eritreans to freely move to Ethiopia and fill positions in various technical and professional areas or to start businesses of their own. Most of them became quite successful. Eritreans were able to pursue modern education in institutions of higher learning in Ethiopia paid for by the Ethiopian government. The Ethiopian population always welcomed Eritreans, and their success was not viewed as a threat. The federation was mutually beneficial for both countries, but it did not last long. It was abolished unwisely in September 1962. Eritrea lost its autonomous government and was simply made one of the provinces of Ethiopia. This suppression of democracy in Eritrea provoked Eritrean nationalism and triggered armed resistance (ELF & EPLF).

Upon the overthrow of the imperial regime by the armed forces in 1974, the Eritrean conflict took a dangerous turn. A moderate position of reconciliation in Eritrea and a return to the federation was rejected by the junta. By acting in self-serving ways to hold on to power, the Mengistu Hailemariam regime exacerbated the conflict. Finally, as a result of the change in superpower politics in the late 1980s, the Eritrean nationalists (EPLF) and their allies (TPLF) gained the upper hand and toppled the Mengistu Hailemariam regime in May 1991. In 1993, Eritrea's independence was formalized by a U.N. sponsored referendum. In 1998, the EPLF and TPLF regime now went to war, even though they are ethnically the same, over boundaries, demarcated by the Italian colonialists.

The separation between Ethiopia and Eritrea did not produce a favorable outcome. For instance, it forced Ethiopia into isolation again. The resource-rich central and southern regions of Ethiopia became landlocked. Ethiopia's foreign trade no longer passed through Assab, and consequently Eritrea lost income from transit services. Ethiopia had to divert its cargo to the port of Djibouti that has a smaller capacity, thereby hampering Ethiopia's trade with the rest of the world. The flow of Eritrean capital and labor to Ethiopia ceased. Furthermore, Eritrea's secession created a wedge between Ethiopians and Eritreans. In guise of economic nationalism, the TPLF regime expelled Eritrean entrepreneurs and confiscated their property. This was detrimental to the Ethiopian economy because Eritrean entrepreneurs had been major players in the private sector. Eritrea's secession also sparked imitation throughout the region. This is currently threatening to create isolated peoples and fragmented markets, which could exacerbate poverty, ignorance, disease and the curse of famine.

Ethiopia and Eritrea are culturally and geographically cohesive. No ethnic group in the region has been untouched by others through trade, intermarriage or war. Ethnic mixing and changes in boundaries have continued for centuries. New borders may be drawn, but the peoples of Ethiopia and Eritrea cannot detach themselves from one another. The so-called conflict between Ethiopia and Eritrea is actually an intra-ethnic rivalry between the two Tigrinya-speaking regimes. This rivalry is also being fueled by external forces for their own self-interest. There is no historical or economic justification for separation between the two countries. Ethiopia and Eritrea need each other for their survival. Ethiopia's advantage is its rich resources. Eritrea's is its access to the sea and industrious population. For both countries, the benefits with integration are greater than the benefits without integration. Emeritus Professor of Economics at Ferris State University; UW-Whitewater, teferrad@uww.edu.

Ethiopian Rebel Opposition leader flees to Sudan: ST
September 12, 2015 (KHARTOUM)
A well placed Sudanese source revealed today that a dissident Ethiopian general fled to Sudan on Friday evening along with his soldiers after clashes with the Eritrean army. The source who spoke to the Turkey-based Anadolu news agency on condition of anonymity said that General Mola Asgedom who heads the Tigray People's Democratic Movement (TPDM) that is based in Eritrea, arrived at the Sudanese town of Hamdait at the border triangle between Eritrea, Ethiopia and Sudan. He explained that Asgedom escaped to Sudan after armed clashes broke out with the Eritrean army at the outskirts of the Eritrean city of Omhajer on Friday morning.

The source went on to say that Asgedom and 683 of his forces handed over their weapons to the Sudanese authorities. He explained that Khartoum succeeded in preventing the escalation of clashes between Asgedom's forces and the Eritrean army and evacuated the soldiers to Wad al-Hilu town in Kassala State while their leaders were transferred to unspecified areas inside Sudan. He added that 7 of the Ethiopian opposition forces were killed during the pursuit by Eritrean troops to its western border with Ethiopia and Sudan.

Eyewitnesses in the border areas said they heard gunfire during the clashes, noting that the entrance of Ethiopian opposition forces to Hamdait created a state of confusion among the population. A pro-Ethiopian opposition TV confirmed that Asgedom turned himself in to the Sudan, without giving details. The Eritrea-based Ethiopian opposition coalition consider TPDM to be the military wing while the Ginbot 7 of Berhanu Nega lead the political forefront. Ethiopia also backs Eritrean opposition groups in the context of proxy wars between the two longtime foes.

MINING IN ERITREA:
Ex-Official Says Forced Labour Built Canada Mine in Eritrea Test Case
(Toronto Reuters September 18, 2015)
Hundreds of men drafted into Eritrea's army were used as forced labour to build a Canadian company's copper-gold mine in central Eritrea, according to a former construction official, in a case testing the global responsibility of foreign firms to workers. Claims of forced labour at the Bisha mine, jointly owned by Nevsun Resources Ltd and state-owned Eritrean National Mining Corp, date back to 2008 but are now the subject of a class action lawsuit at British Columbia's Supreme Court.

Eritrean plaintiffs, living in exile in Ethiopia, say in the lawsuit filed last November they were forced to build the only operating mine in the Horn of Africa nation during national service, enduring filthy conditions, little food or barely paid. Although Nevsun was not directly responsible for hiring local staff - that was done through local contractor firm Segen - plaintiffs argue the Canadian company was complicit in their servitude, a claim the Vancouver-based company denies.

Lawyers representing the plantiffs would not discuss how much money they are seeking from the company. Although accusations about Bisha date back seven years, this is the first time workers have tried to take legal action outside Eritrea, which lawyers say could act as a warning to foreign companies working with regimes accused of human rights abuses.

"The case is still in its preliminary stages .. (but) if the plaintiffs win, it will set a precedent," University of Ottawa law professor Penelope Simons, a human rights legal specialist, told the Thomson Reuters Foundation. "So far very few of these types of cases have proceeded to trial ... Where a government systematically uses forced labour and a corporation goes into business with that government, there is a significant risk the corporation will become complicit."

Nevsun has repeatedly stated that none of the workers at Bisha, which started operations in 2011, were army conscripts and said it will "vigorously defend itself" against the lawsuit. The next court hearing is set for January. But the former construction official, a citizen of another African country, told the Thomson Reuters Foundation by phone that Eritreans conscripted into the military were forced to work at Bisha, 180 kms (110 miles) from the capital Asmara.

"There were as many as 500-600 conscripts working in the first round of construction," the former official said in his first interview since leaving Eritrea, requesting anonymity. "The heavy machinery operators wore military uniforms in the beginning," he said, adding that they lived in a separate camp. The Thomson Reuters Foundation could not reach exiled Eritrean plaintiffs for comment. Eritrea's Ministry of Energy and Mines, the body responsible for overseeing the Eritrean National Mining Corporation, did not respond to interview requests.

CONFLICTING REPORTS

Eritrea introduced compulsory military service in 1995, saying it would benefit the nation, which won independence from Ethiopia in 1993 after years of war and deep-rooted poverty. But human rights campaigners argue the open-ended programme - the average service lasts more than six years, according to a 2014 study - constitutes forced labour and thousands of Eritreans flee every year to avoid the draft. The Eritrean ministry of defence, which is responsible for the conscription programme, could not be reached for comment. The use of conscripted labour in mining in Eritrea was first reported by campaign group Human Rights Watch in 2013.

A United Nations Commission of Inquiry in June this year also said it had found evidence during a year-long investigation that forced labour had been used in the construction of the Bisha mine under Eritrea's national service programme. Nevsun has repeatedly denied the claims and described the U.N.'s human rights allegations as "sensational", saying U.N. investigators had not even visited the mine and based the report on interviews with Eritreans outside the country.

U.N. officials behind the report refused interview requests. The legal battle over workers at Bisha comes as Eritrea's weak economy banks on revenues from its resource sector and attracting mining firms from Australia, Canada and China. The involvement of Eritrean state-backed contractor Segen Construction in these projects has come under scrutiny, with the company accused of using conscripts in harsh working conditions and suggestions the government insists Segen is involved. Segen Construction did not respond to calls or emails. The Canadian court case centres on Bisha's use of Segen. Joe Fiorante, the lawyer representing alleged Eritrean victims, said Nevsun was negligent in partnering with Segen as the main sub-contractor building the mine from 2008 to 2010 and should pay damages under Canadian law.

"The risk of forced labour being used in Eritrea was well known prior to the construction of the mine," Fiorante told the Thomson Reuters Foundation. "That crosses the line from operating in a challenging environment into something unlawful for a Canadian company." But Nevsun, which runs only the Eritrea project, recently released an independent 70-page human rights audit stating that "national service workers are not permitted at the Bisha Mine" and that screening ensures subcontractors were not using conscripts.

INVESTMENT FOR BENEFIT

Nevsun spokesman Todd Romaine could not comment on the former construction official's specific allegations because of ongoing litigation, but defended the human rights monitoring of the company and its subcontractors. "The Eritrean government has taken proactive steps to make sure their mining environment is conducive to international business," Romaine told the Thomson Reuters Foundation. "The government indicated right from the get-go that national service was never to be used in the mining sector."

Asked if Nevsun could have worked with another construction firm due to concerns about forced labour at Segen, he said: "Eritrea has rules on supply chain and localization efforts and we have to adhere to the government's wishes." Romaine stressed the benefit of foreign investment in one of the world's poorest nations. Eritrea is ranked 182 of 187 nations on the U.N.'s Human Development Index. He said he has seen progress in Eritrea's labour record during his visits, with foreign investment helping to create more stable jobs and critical infrastructure which should make Eritreans less likely to board overflowing boats for Europe.

But the former site official and a former U.S. ambassador are not convinced that Nevsun could accurately verify who had completed national service and who was forced to work. "Can you operate in Eritrea without benefiting from forced labour? Probably not," Ron McMullen, the former U.S. ambassador to Eritrea, told the Thomson Reuters Foundation. "No company working there can claim to be lily white." Reporting By Chris Arsenault, Editing by Belinda Goldsmith

EU wants new aid for Eritrea soon to help stem migrant exodus By Edmund Burke, Reuters September 18, 2015

NAIROBI (Reuters) - The European Union aims to agree on 200 million euros (145.65 million pounds) in development aid for Eritrea by year-end to help stem an exodus of people from the poor Horn of Africa nation to Europe, a senior EU official said on Thursday.

The five-year package, already the subject of months of talks, was not prompted by the latest migrant influx into Europe but has gained impetus as the number of asylum-seekers arriving from the Middle East and Africa has surged.

European Commission President Jean-Claude Juncker told the EU parliament this month that, of the almost 500,000 people who fled to Europe this year, most came from Syria, Libya and Eritrea. Neven Mimica, the EU Commissioner for International Cooperation and Development, said the 200 million euro allocation now needed approval from EU states and a decision was expected "in November but not later than the end of the year". "This would be a development contribution to the root causes of migration in Eritrea," he told a news conference in Nairobi.

Eritrea, one of Africa's poorest and most tightly controlled nations with a programme of indefinite military service that many migrants says drives them out, received EU funds until 2011 when Asmara decided to stop the foreign aid programme. The nation, which secured independence from Ethiopia in 1993 after three decades of war, has often accused the West and others of conspiring against the government of Isaias Aferwerki, a former rebel who has been president since the secession.

Mimica said the EU funds would not be channelled via government agencies of Eritrea, a country often accused of abuses by rights groups and U.N. reports. Asmara denies this. Asked how Eritrea responded to the idea of using direct channels for aid and not the government, Mimica said: "Would you point at any government that would be happy if they are somehow circumvented by the development cooperation programmes?" The new EU programme was drawn up after Asmara offered an opening for renewed cooperation.

In addition to the 200 million euros, more funds could come from a 1.8 billion euro emergency Trust Fund announced by Juncker. Allocations across Africa are still being discussed, but about 500 million euros could go to the Horn of Africa. One focus of the 200 million euro programme would be to help Eritrea's energy sector, including small-scale generation for rural areas and support for expanding the national network. (Editing by Aaron Maasho and Mark Heinrich)

Many killed as Eritrean soldiers clash with Ethiopian rebels
Ethiomedia September 18, 2015

Omhajer, Sudan - Heavy fighting between Ethiopian rebels deserting their base in Eritrea and Eritrean soldiers on Thursday left several fighters dead, a source affiliated to the ruling party in Ethiopia has reported. The fight broke out when Eritrean soldiers tried to disarm about 200 Ethiopian rebels who got stuck near the Sudanese town of Omhajer after their commander, Molla Asgedom, and over 700 fighters abandoned their base in Eritrea and surrendered to Ethiopia last week, EthiopiaFirst reported on Thursday.

The 200 rebels were expected to join their comrades but were late by a day. Many were killed from both sides, and the remaining TPDM rebels took a different route, the source said, without giving details. Launched over 14 years ago to be used in a proxy war against Ethiopia, the Eritrea-backed TPDM grew to boasting thousands of combatants, but had never had any significant clash with Ethiopian forces.

Eritreans opposed to the ironclad rule of President Isaias Afewerki accuse TPDM of being an extended arm of Asmara, to the extent of being deployed in local operations to quash dissent. “There was no meaning for us to stay in Eritrea after we witnessed significant development in Ethiopia," earlier this week Molla told the media in Addis, where he admitted that he was a spy for the Addis Ababa regime for over a year.

The government is showcasing the former rebel commander as a hero who dented the pride of arch-foe Eritrea. Eritrea backs groups trying to topple the regime in Addis, and likewise, the Addis Ababa regime also hosts about a dozen Eritrean groups vowing to end Afewerki's rule.

MIGRATION

Why Are 5,000 Eritreans Fleeing Their Country Every Month? By Judy Molland, September 19, 2015

The desperate plight of refugees fleeing their countries simply in order to survive is heartbreaking. The image of three-year-old Aylan Kurdi's drowned body in his red T-shirt, long shorts, and a fresh haircut, may be the single factor that has finally jolted some European leaders into doing something after months of inaction.

Syrians have made up roughly half of the 380,000 refugees who reached Europe after crossing the Mediterranean by early September. According to U.N. figures, 75 percent of these people came from countries where there is either an armed conflict or a humanitarian crisis.

After Syrians come Afghans, a total of 13 percent. It's not hard to understand why Afghans are on the move. The country is extremely dangerous because extremist groups like the Taliban and Islamic State's local affiliate are conducting insurgencies across the country. The Afghans endure frequent bomb attacks, but many civilians are also fleeing because they have received death threats.

Next come Eritreans, who make up eight percent of those refugees arriving by boat. Why are an estimated 5,000 citizens of Eritrea fleeing their country every month? After all, the country is not at war, the population is relatively small, and there is no shortage of food.

What Do We Know About Eritrea?

Eritrea is a very long way from the scenes of refugees arriving in boats, having crossed the Mediterranean.

Eritrea is a small country in the Horn of Africa, with a population of a little over six million, as of 2013. Its capital is Asmara, and it is bordered by Sudan in the west, Ethiopia in the south, and Djibouti in the southeast.

The country gained independence from Italian colonial control in 1941, and after 10 years of British administrative control, the U.N. made Eritrea an autonomous region within the Ethiopian federation. When Ethiopia tried to completely take over Eritrea, a 30-year struggle for independence ensued; Eritrean rebels finally defeated Ethiopia in 1991.

Eritrea is thus a new country, just over 20 years old. What can be so bad about a young country?

The problem lies in the country's leader. Isaias Afworki has been the country's only president since independence, and he is both autocratic and repressive. His government has put in place an unpopular program of mandatory conscription into national service, sometimes of indefinite length, creating a highly militarized society.

Here's how Eritrean human rights lawyer Daniel Mekonnen, now living in Geneva, Switzerland, explained the gross human rights violations that are taking place in Eritrea on National Public Radio's Here & Now:

"(The government of Eritrea is) Killing citizens, arresting, torturing, abusing and committing all sorts of human rights violations. The victims of these human rights violations are in the thousands so that's why we have this large number of refugees coming to Europe and other places throughout the world.

There are two major grounds in Eritrea for persecution. You must be either politically or religiously different from what the government thinks is their own. In the political context, if you have a dissenting opinion you become a target, in the religious target, if you are not within the four officially recognized religious groups, you become a target. We have the Roman Catholic Church, we have the Eritrean Orthodox Church, we have Islam and we have the Eritrean Evangelical Church. Any other religions outside of these four groups is severely persecuted in Eritrea."

A country with no constitution, elections, or free press, where people must submit to lifelong military conscripts, basically a type of forced labor, Eritrea is forcing its dissenters to leave if they want to survive.

How do they get out?

A Journey On Foot, Across The Sahara, Ending In a Ramshackle Boat

As The Guardian explains, the first stage involves walking over the border into Ethiopia or Sudan. If refugees can avoid being shot by border guards or kidnapped by smugglers, the next target is to arrive in Khartoum, the capital of Sudan. From there they have to make it across the Sahara desert and into Libya in the back of pick-up trucks where they are squashed in with as many as 30 other people. Many do not survive the journey.

Once they arrive in the town of Ajdabiya, in northeast Libya, they are often held in by smugglers and tortured until their families send a $2,000 payment. They may have to go through this all over again at another location along the Libyan coast before they finally board a beaten-up boat and attempt the crossing to Italy. So far this year, around 2,800 refugees have perished on this stretch of their journey.

Eritreans Driven Out By Human Rights Violations

A damning report on Eritrea by the United Nations Human Rights Council emphasized the horrors of the dangerous journeys Eritreans are undertaking, evidence of the severe human-rights violations in their country and their very real suffering. It called on their need for international protection.

It seems clear that a shift in Europe's outlook is required, and perhaps this is beginning to happen. If the European Union can change the way it thinks and acts towards some of its southern neighbors, perhaps it can help to provide better conditions, so that inhabitants don't feel they have to flee.

The Eritrean refugee crisis, just like the entire refugee crisis, needs to be addressed both by helping those people who are fleeing for their lives, and by addressing the issues in their countries that are forcing them to escape.

DIPLOMACY
Eritrea blasts UN as unfair and undemocratic

UN News October 5, 2015

Addressing the General Assembly on October 3, the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Eritrea, Osman Saleh, focused on bolstering his country's socioeconomic and also emphasized the need revitalize the United Nations to create a more agile, democratic and equitable multilateral system.

Mr. Saleh said that, 70 years after the birth of the UN, "it is undeniable that we continue to live in an unfair and unequal world, where conflicts and wars rage, extreme poverty persists in the midst of plenty, children die from easily preventable diseases and justice is routinely trampled."

"The United Nations Organization itself is a reflection of this unfair, unequal and undemocratic global order," he continued. "In the UN, the overwhelming majority of member States are marginalized. This assembly of nations, which should be the most powerful organ, is bereft of real power and influence, with decision-making dominated by a few among the few."

He added that there is a need "to persist in our efforts to rebuild and revitalize the United Nations" and "strive and cooperate at the national, regional and global levels for sustainable and equitable development."

"Today, Eritrea is making remarkable progress in building a nation based on citizenship and an inclusive state and the respect of human dignity and rights. It is peaceful, stable, secure and harmonious."

He added that it was also "building a solid basis for sustainable development with social justice, as well as fighting human trafficking and giving youth and women adequate opportunities to pursue a high quality of life and build their nation."

ERITREAN FOOTBALLERS SEEK ASYLUM IN BOTSWANA Ten members of Eritrean soccer team seek asylum in Botswana Reuters/ Sunday Standard Reporter updates October 14, 2015.

After an intervention by Botswana Football Association Officials, 10 players from the visiting Eritrea National team agreed to board the bus enroute to Gaborone where they'll board a 18:20 flight to Johannesburg.

The team missed the morning flight due to stand off as some players showed their desire to remain in the country. Eritrea has a history of absconding whenever they are on national duty. In 2012 17 players and a team doctor were reported to have absconded in Uganda. Only 12 players returned from a shopping trip.

In 2010 after the CECAFA tournament in Tanzania 13 players from Eritrea team disappeared only to reappear in Houston Texas under refugee resettlement programme in the United States.

Ten Eritrean players who were part of the country's senior national team that lost to the Zebras in the 2018 World Cup qualifying game yesterday (Tuesday) have reportedly refused to return to their country, instead seeking refugee status in Botswana. Reports reaching Sunday Standard indicate that the ten players, who are currently held in custody at a police station in Francistown, have informed Botswana authorities that they are seeking political asylum, citing human rights violations in their country. Botswana Football Association (BFA)'s Acting Vice President Admin, Basadi Akoonyatse said this morning that after their team lost 3-1 against the Botswana national team, at least ten players who were part of the 24-man Eritrean national team did not return to their official lodging, instead handing themselves over the police and declaring that they were seeking political asylum. She added that the ten players were reported missing by security officers at Tati River Lodge where they had lodged. "Eretria's foreign based players are reported to have informed the national technical team that they had no problem with returning to their country. Only the locally based players had issues with returning to their country," said Koonyatse. As the drama unfolds, the Eritrean Movement for Democracy and Human Rights, which is registered in South Africa this morning instructed local law firm Bayford and Associates to represent the players. At the time of going to press the players were being interviewed by the Police at Kutlwano Police Station in Francistown. Sources from within the Eritrean diplomatic service have revealed that Eritrea is piling pressure on Botswana to have repatriated the ten players by end of business today. The Eritrean Movement for Democracy and Human Rights confirmed to Sunday Standard that they have been tipped off about plans to repatriate the players. All ten players are also members of the Eritrean army and there are fears that once repatriated they will be court marshalled and possibly charged with treason.Meanwhile, attorney Dick Bayford of Bayford and Associates has written to Botswana authorities seeking assurance that the players will be deported. Bayford also notified the police that his law firm will approach the courts with an urgent application should the Police fail to give assurance that the players will not be deported. This is not the first time that the Eritrean national team has refused to return home while on national duty. Media reports indicate that in 2008 the Home Office granted six members of Eritrea's national athletics team political asylum after they competed in the World Cross Country Championships in Edinburgh. In 2009, at least 12 senior national team players who participated in the Orange Council of East and Central Africa Football Associations (CECAFA) senior Challenge Cup tournament sought refuge status from the Kenyan government. In 2011 the entire national team also refused to return home after playing in Kenya. The Eritrean team also defected in 2012 after playing in Tanzania and Uganda. Furthermore, six national football team players requested political asylum in Angola after a match a year later. Many thousands of ordinary Eritreans also flee Africa's most repressed nation each year. The United Nations says hundreds of Eritreans flee the country every month. Critics say citizens are fleeing the country's repressive government, poverty and harsh national service regime. Under President Isaias Afewerki, who led the country to independence from Ethiopia in 1993, Eritrea's government has become increasingly oppressive and authoritarian, with no political opposition, no independent media, and no real freedom of worship. Eritrea has been cited for gross human rights violations and is understood to have more than 10, 000 political prisoners, some of whom have been on detention without trial.

SOCCER NEWS:
Eritrea asks Botswana to repatriate footballers The Standard October 15, 2015

Highlights: Eritrea is piling pressure on Botswana to have repatriated the ten players by end of business today [Wednesday]. All the 10 players are members of the Eritrean army, and repatriation means court-marshalling them. South Africa-based Eritrean Movement for Democracy & Human Rights has hired a lawyer to defend the rights of the defectors.
Ten Eritrean players who were part of the country’s senior national team that lost to the Zebras in the 2018 World Cup qualifying game yesterday (Tuesday) have reportedly refused to return to their country, instead seeking refugee status in Botswana.

Reports reaching Sunday Standard indicate that the ten players, who are currently held in custody at a police station in Francistown, have informed Botswana authorities that they are seeking political asylum, citing human rights violations in their country.

Botswana Football Association (BFA)'s Acting Vice President Admin, Basadi Akoonyatse said this morning that after their team lost 3-1 against the Botswana national team, at least ten players who were part of the 24-man Eritrean national team did not return to their official lodging, instead handing themselves over the police and declaring that they were seeking political asylum.

She added that the ten players were reported missing by security officers at Tati River Lodge where they had lodged. “Eretrea’s foreign based players are reported to have informed the national technical team that they had no problem with returning to their country. Only the locally based players had issues with returning to their country,” said Koonyatse.

As the drama unfolds, the Eritrean Movement for Democracy and Human Rights, which is registered in South Africa this morning instructed local law firm Bayford and Associates to represent the players. At the time of going to press the players were being interviewed by the Police at Kutlwano Police Station in Francistown.

Sources from within the Eritrean diplomatic service have revealed that Eritrea is piling pressure on Botswana to have repatriated the ten players by end of business today. The Eritrean Movement for Democracy and Human Rights confirmed to Sunday Standard that they have been tipped off about plans to repatriate the players. All ten players are also members of the Eritrean army and there are fears that once repatriated they will be court-marshalled and possibly charged with treason.

Meanwhile, attorney Dick Bayford of Bayford and Associates has written to Botswana authorities seeking assurance that the players will be deported. Bayford also notified the police that his law firm will approach the courts with an urgent application should the Police fail to give assurance that the players will not be deported.

This is not the first time that the Eritrean national team has refused to return home while on national duty. Media reports indicate that in 2008 the Home Office granted six members of Eritrea's national athletics team political asylum after they competed in the World Cross Country Championships in Edinburgh.

In 2009, at least 12 senior national team players who participated in the Orange Council of East and Central Africa Football Associations (CECAFA) senior Challenge Cup tournament sought refuge status from the Kenyan government. In 2011 the entire national team also refused to return home after playing in Kenya.

The Eritrean team also defected in 2012 after playing in Tanzania and Uganda. Furthermore, six national football team players requested political asylum in Angola after a match a year later. Many thousands of ordinary Eritreans also flee Africa's most repressed nation each year.

The United Nations says hundreds of Eritreans flee the country every month. Critics say citizens are fleeing the country's repressive government, poverty and harsh national service regime.

Under President Isaias Afewerki, who led the country to independence from Ethiopia in 1993, Eritrea's government has become increasingly oppressive and authoritarian, with no political opposition, no independent media, and no real freedom of worship. Eritrea has been cited for gross human rights violations and is understood to have more than 10, 000 political prisoners, some of whom have been on detention without trial.

SOCCER NEWS:
Botswana Court stops deporting Eritrean soccer players
Associated Press October 17, 2015

GABORONE, Botswana (AP) — A group of 10 players from Eritrea's national football team that are claiming asylum in Botswana after a World Cup qualifier have won a temporary reprieve, with a court ruling they shouldn't be sent back home.

The court said Friday the players could stay temporarily and will have their asylum case heard on Dec. 11.

The players refused to return to Eritrea and turned themselves over to authorities in Botswana's second city of Francistown on Wednesday, a day after their team lost 3-1 to Botswana to be eliminated from World Cup qualifying.

Lawyers say the players are members of the army at home and could face a court martial and treason charges if sent back. Human rights activists say all Eritreans are forced to join the army at 17, supposedly for two years of national service, but claim many are not allowed to leave.

The government of Eritrea, a country of around six million people on the northeast coast of Africa, has been accused by human rights groups of being among the most repressive in the world. The United Nations released a report this year alleging, among other abuses, that forced and prolonged military service was common.

The players are being represented by human rights lawyer Dick Bayford, who works for the South Africa-based Eritrean Movement for Democracy and Human Rights.

In 2012, 17 Eritrea players and a team doctor went missing during a tournament in Uganda and eventually applied for asylum. It later emerged that they had been granted asylum in the Netherlands. The entire Eritrean team sought refugee status at the same regional tournament in 2009. (Text ends)

Seven Eritrean cyclists flee to Ethiopia

By Tesfa-Alem Tekle, Sudan Tribune October 20, 2015
ADDIS ABABA – In a latest sign of discontent with the regime in Eritrea, seven of the 14 higher division Eritrean cyclists have fled to neighbouring Ethiopia.

The latest defection comes only a few days after ten football players from the Eritrean national team sought political asylum in Botswana after they lost 3-1 to the host nation in a qualifier match for the 2018 World Cup.

According to sources, the group of Eritrean cyclists fled to Ethiopia risking their life to cross the heavily patrolled borders of the country. Upon arrival, the Eritrean team was welcomed by the local officials in Tigray region, bordering Eritrea, and are currently sheltered at Enda Abba Guna, a temporary refugee processing center in northern Ethiopia.

The cyclists had bitter disputes with the Eritrean sports authorities on a number of issues, including on their repeated demands for the purchase of new bicycles and other equipment necessary to keep them competitive.

However, none of their demands were met, which led for their decision to pull out of the national team which was having a competition in few days. Angered by their decision, Eritrean authorities threatened the cyclists to send them to a military training camp as a punishment, which led for the team to defect. There have been frequent mass defections by Eritrean sports persons in recent years mostly among football players of the national team.

Eritrean athletes often refuse to return home after international matches mainly to escape mandatory military service which is compulsory to every Eritrean aged 18 to 45. The latest defections are said to be a big blow for one of the world's most repressive country which is often referred by right groups as the North Korea of Africa.

The Red Sea nation has been accused by the UN of forcing its citizens to indefinite national military service and of killing own citizens who try to flee the country under an imposed shot-to-kill policy. Eritrea which has been led by President Isaias Afwerki since it gained independence from Ethiopia in 1993 has never had elections and the ruling People's Front for Democracy and Justice (PFDJ) has never implemented constitution.

The government has become increasingly repressive and dictatorial with zero-tolerance for dissent. There are no opposition political opponents functioning in Eritrea. Eritrea currently has an estimated 10,000 political prisoners, most of them in jail without trial. A report issued by the UN human rights Council in June, unveil systematic and widespread gross human rights violations in the country, including extra-judicial killings and torture.

According to the report by the UN body, some of the human rights violations in Eritrea may amount to crimes against humanity. The UN has ordered probe onto whether Eritrea was committing the alleged crimes against humanity, a crime which could be prosecuted by the International Criminal Court (ICC). (ST)

MIGRATION:
Battling migrant crisis, EU urges Eritrea to respect human rights By Aaron Maasho, Reuters October 21, 2015

ADDIS ABABA (Reuters) - European Union foreign policy chief Federica Mogherini called on Tuesday for greater respect for human rights in Eritrea, a major source country of refugees who risk their lives trying to cross the Mediterranean to reach Europe.

The U.N. refugee agency UNHCR says 5,000 people flee the impoverished Red Sea state each month, with those who make it to Europe often saying they fled indefinite military conscription and other human rights abuses.

Officials in Asmara deny the charges, saying human traffickers, not rights abuses, are to blame for the large exodus of people from the Horn of African country.

"In Eritrea there is a relevant need for important reforms inside the country, to improve on the one side the human rights record and on the other the living conditions of the population," Brussels' top diplomat told reporters during a visit to Addis Ababa, capital of neighboring Ethiopia.

Faced with the biggest inflow of migrants since World War Two, the 28-nation EU has been discussing for months how to reduce numbers arriving from Africa, the Middle East and Asia, often via dangerous crossings of the Mediterranean Sea.

EU officials announced in September that the bloc aimed to agree on 200 million euros ($226.72 million) in development aid for Eritrea by year-end to help stem the exodus of people.

Eritrea received EU funds until 2011 when Asmara decided to stop the foreign aid program.

Eritrea, which won independence from Ethiopia in 1993 after three decades of war, has often accused the West and Ethiopia of conspiring against the government of Isaias Afewerki, a former rebel who has been president since the secession.

Eritrean government officials say they have maintained a lengthy military service program owing to the unresolved border dispute with Ethiopia - a legacy of their 1998-2000 war that killed more than 70,000.

"An Eritrea that is reformed from within would be very beneficial not only when it comes to the issues related to migration flows but also to the overall stability and security of the region," Mogherini said.

ERITREA: Human Rights violations, torture in prisons and extrajudicial killings: Crimes against humanity

By Florence Taylor October 21, 2015

Christians and Muslims are among the worst treated in Eritrean prisons, according to a doctor working in the hospital that looks after them.

At a highly emotive and charged meeting yesterday hosted by Christian Solidarity Worldwide (CSW), Human Rights Concern Eritrea and Lord Alton, a clinician who has worked in Eritrean prison hospitals shared the horrors he had witnessed.

The daughter of one of his patients, who had not heard from her father for over a decade, also shared the tragic story of his imprisonment.

In its report the Commission of Inquiry on Human Rights in Eritrea (COIE) found that "systematic, widespread and gross human rights violations have been and are being committed in Eritrea under the authority of the Government. Some of these violations may constitute crimes against humanity," including violations in the area of extrajudicial killings, torture (including sexual torture), forced labor and national service.

The clinician, who could not be named for security reasons, had worked in Halibut hospital, the only hospital in Eritrea working with prisoners, since 2009. He worked on Ward P, the prisoners' ward, which is kept separate to ensure they have no contact with the outside world.

The clinician said that many had been imprisoned because of their religious beliefs.

"Some of them were arrested because of religious affiliations, accused of having any type of religious affiliation to the West, when the person has no idea what the 'west religion' means by itself, because there is no 'west' religion. Christianity is considered the religion of the West and Islam is considered the bigotry of the Middle East. You cannot be a Christian, you cannot be a Muslim, you have to be somewhere in the middle if you are not going to be accused."

The majority of the prisoners "did not know why they had been arrested, they were taken from their home, work and the streets and they do not know why they are imprisoned or tortured." They were often left nameless, referred to with a code.

The degrees of torture in the hospital are shocking and have been described as "crimes against humanity."

"[The guards] would put black cloth over the prisoners' faces and torture them for two or three hours," according to the clinician.

He felt helpless. "There was nothing I could do except listen to their stories and pretend as if I didn't hear them."

The most brutally treated prisoners were the political prisoners, who were not allowed to spend the night in the hospital, however serious their injuries. They were kept in isolation in the hospital, only the doctor was able to enter the isolation room.

"They were not supposed to see the light, they were not supposed to go out of their room, they were not supposed to know anything about the outside world, nothing about their parents or relatives. None of them know why they were arrested, none of them know why they are there."

Stress disorder, suicidal thoughts and insomnia are common among prisoners, who are often victims of rape, sexual abuse and torture.

The prison did not have separate wards for men and women, rather they "have to share the same bathroom, of which the door does not work."

"Sometimes I would be forced to stay overnight because I could not trust the security guards. I don't think I could find words to explain the type of torture they face in the prisons."

Patients were denied medical attention if they were disobedient in any way. If they told a doctor that their injuries were due to torture they would be taken straight back to their prison cell, out of hospital, even if they were due to have surgery.

No one has the right to call or speak to her father, and the last time she heard him was in 2006 when he was leaving the hospital, "until half an hour ago when I met this doctor who has seen my father."

"It is very difficult for Eritreans to fight the system," she said. "It doesn't matter if I have a lawyer or ten lawyers.

"Even Europe deals with its difficult children like Greece and so forth by giving money in return for reform. It breaks my heart to see Europe giving money to Eritrean government without anything in return; that is just a shame."

As a result of widespread human rights violations, the "general climate of impunity" and the government's "pervasive control systems", Eritrea has become the largest refugee-producing country in the world per-capita, generating more refugees than any other nation apart from Syria.

Also at the meeting, a story was shared of a daughter of two imprisoned Eritrean activists, who fled the country not once, but twice, despite fear of the government's "shoot to kill" border policy and several years imprisoned and on labor camps in between the two attempts.

CSW remains concerned that despite the large scale human rights violations, some European countries are choosing to view Eritreans as economic migrants.

The reality is that Eritrean 30,000 refugees did not cross the Mediterranean sea between January and October 2014 because they were unemployed. The reality is far darker.

October 29, 2015: ERITREA: Botswana Finally Grants Asylum to 10 Defecting Eritrean Football Players

The Botswana government has finally granted asylum to 10 Eritrean footballers who defected and refused to return home after losing a 2018 World Cup qualifying match earlier this month.

According to Dick Bayford, lawyer of the team, the players were officially granted political asylum on Wednesday.

Bayford, who works with the South African based Eritrean Movement for Democracy (EMDHR), said Botswana's secretary for justice, defense and security Augustine Makgonatsotlhe confirmed the news.

Since Oct. 13, when Eritrea lost 3-1 to Botswana in the World Cup qualifier, the players have been held in a center for illegal immigrants in Francistown, Botswana's second largest city.

Last week, the EMDHR voiced concerns that the players had not been provided with new clothes. They were reportedly still wearing their jerseys and had not be given soaps to bath of wash.

According to reports, all 10 players could now be transferred to another facility about 110 miles outside Francistown. Bayford said the athletes would be transferred to the Dukwi Refugee Camp located in the northeastern part of Botswana.

The decision of the Botswana government to grant political asylum to the players came quickly. A High Court judge had scheduled Dec. 11 as the date for a hearing of the players' political asylum applications.

The defection of these players is the latest in an ongoing trend among Eritrean athletes, who use international competitions to escape their country and seek asylum. The United Nations has accused the Eritrean government of human rights violations.

Although, Eritrea government has denied these charges, thousands reportedly flee the country every year.

In 2012, 18 Eritrean footballers sought political asylum in Uganda after participating in a regional competition. In 2009, 12 players sought asylum in Kenya and six did the same in 2007, while representing their country in Angola.

Reports indicate that many Eritreans risk their lives to flee their home country in order to escape prolonged service in the army.

Bayford says some of the 10 players who have been granted political asylum in Botswana had been in the Eritrean army. They could face court martial if they return home. Eritrea reportedly punishes this crime with the death penalty.

It's not clear if the players have been able to contact their family members back in Eritrea since their defection.

EMDHR, which represented the players, said they were raising money to pay the legal fees incurred in defending the players. (Text ends)

ERITREA PRESS: Botswana: 'Losers' should resettle

GABORONE, November 5, 2015 - Botswana wants 10 Eritrean soccer players it granted asylum to be resettled in another country by the United Nations, as under Bostwana's law they must stay in a refugee camp for 10 years.

A government official said the southern African nation was not withdrawing asylum for the players but giving them a chance to seek refuge in a country where the resettlement process was faster. The players claimed asylum on Oct. 13 after playing the match against Botswana, becoming the latest in a series of defections by athletes from a country under investigation by the United Nations for human rights violations.

"We are not saying we don't want them here," Botswana's deputy permanent secretary in the ministry of defence, justice and security, Augustine Makgonatsotlhe, told Reuters. "They certainly cannot go back to Eritrea and the law here requires a refugee to have stayed here for at least 10 years for them to be integrated into the society. The only option is for the UNHCR to seek an alternative host country."

Makgonatsotlhe said the players could apply to get out of the camp as long as they could sustain themselves, but ordinarily most refugees who have no hope of securing employment are not allowed to leave the camps. Angolan refugees who fled years of civil war that ended in 2003 have been stuck at the camps for years, the official said.

Pretoria based UNHCR spokeswoman Tina Ghelli said the players had three options: voluntary repatriation to their home country; receiving alternative status, such as citizenship or permanent residence, or resettlement to a third country. Ghelli said the decision to refer these refugees to a resettlement country would be based on individual assessments of the player's cases and whether they meet specific criteria.

Botswana did not set a deadline for the UNHCR to respond, she said. The soccer players are being housed in the Dukwi refugee camp about 500 km (310 miles) east of the capital, Gaborone. (Text ends)

November 11, 2015: VoA News: President of France said Eritrea is becoming empty of its own people as they flee the hellhole country.

Side note: French President Francois Hollande says Africa needs more international development aid in order to curb the flow of migrants from African countries. Speaking at a meeting of more than 60 leaders from both Africa and the European Union, Hollande said that unless the EU delivers in terms of aid, the migration crisis that has sent hundreds of thousands of people fleeing to Europe this year will continue. Hollande noted that a lot of the migrants are from Eritrea and Sudan. He said that in the case of Eritrea "maximum pressure" has to be applied to the country's leaders to mend a serious situation. "Nobody is talking about it. It is a country that is becoming empty of its own population with unscrupulous leaders who let their people go."

MIGRATION:
Authoritarianism in Eritrea and the migrant crisis By Zachary Laub, CFR November 12, 2015
Tens of thousands of Eritreans have arrived at Europe's shores in recent years seeking asylum. They make up a significant share of the unprecedented stream of migrants and refugees making their way to the European Union, undertaking dangerous journeys while challenging the bloc to find a collective response consistent with refugee law.
Many more Eritreans reside in neighboring Ethiopia and Sudan, bringing the refugee population to about half a million, and making the country of six million people "one of the world's fastest-emptying nations," according to the Wall Street Journal. The scale of the migration has heightened Western interest in conditions inside what is one of the world's most closed countries, where those who have fled describe a long-standing system of forced labor, among other human rights violations, that a UN commission said "may constitute crimes against humanity."

Five thousand Eritreans leave the country each month, the UN commission found, making it one of the world's top producers of refugees.

How is Eritrea governed?

Eritrea, Africa's second-newest state, came into being in 1991, when the Eritrean People's Liberation Front (EPLF) broke away from Ethiopia after three decades of guerrilla struggle. Its independence was codified in a 1993 popular referendum backed by the UN. Isais Afwerki, a guerrilla leader, became president, and remade the EPLF as the People's Front for Democracy and Justice (PFDJ). It remains the only legally sanctioned political party.

The one-party system, a holdover from Eritrea's tumultuous birth, became entrenched as the military and ruling party refused to relinquish their privileged positions, citing external threats to the young country's survival. National development was the first priority for the economically ravaged country, and at the outset the EPLF/PFDJ were widely perceived as legitimate rulers. The government convened a legislature, and a draft constitution was ratified in 1997. But the legislature remained without authority, and the constitution was never implemented, nor were promised national elections ever held.

Eritrea's political culture was forged in the liberation struggle, when the guerrilla movement had little international backing and considered any dissent a threat to its survival, according to the International Crisis Group. A UN Human Rights Council commission of inquiry established in 2014 characterized the regime's methods as "rule by fear." Eritrea has rejected the commission's findings. According to the UN inquiry and research by rights groups, the country has widespread networks of informants, coerced by the state, and those suspected of treasonous behavior are subject to arbitrary arrest, forced disappearances, extrajudicial executions, and torture. Individuals who run afoul of the authorities are often held in harsh conditions in makeshift prisons. Citizens face restrictions on internal movement and speech, and domestic media is controlled by the state.

Is Eritrea at war?

No, but residual tensions from a 1998–2000 war border with Ethiopia remain, experts say. That war ended with the Algiers Accord in 2001, but Ethiopia does not recognized the border demarcated under the agreement, and Eritrea considers some territory that remains under Ethiopian control as illegally occupied. Ethiopia rejects that claim. The ongoing state of hostility, which the Eritrean regime characterizes as one of "no war, no peace," fostered a siege mentality that provided Afwerki with a rationale for entrenching the police state, experts say.

In 2009, the UN Security Council sanctioned Eritrea for its alleged support of al-Shabab, an Islamist militia in Somalia, as a means of undermining the much larger and more powerful Ethiopia. The UN measures include an arms embargo and travel bans and asset freezes for designated individuals. By 2012, UN monitors found that Eritrea hadbowed to international pressure and stopped supporting al-Shabab, but said Eritrea continued to lend support to Ethiopian antigovernment militias.

This finding raised pressure for the Security Council to rescind the sanctions, but the veto-wielding United States has opposed such measures and the sanctions remain in effect. This U.S. position stems, at least in part, from its close security ties with Ethiopia. Watchdog groups have recently called attention to a declining human rights situation in Ethiopia. If the United States were to temper its support for Ethiopia in response to rights concerns, it could change its policies on Eritrea, experts say.

Why are people fleeing the country?

Conscription in the national-service program is the factor most commonly cited by asylum seekers who have fled the country. The state has justified the mass mobilization with the need for national development and to foster a common sense of national identity. A statutory requirement of eighteen months of military or civilian service was extended in 2002, following the war with Ethiopia, so that it became, in practice, indefinite, with many adults reportedly serving the state into their fifties. Conscripts often earned less than a subsistence wage.

The UN commission of inquiry found that national service often entails “arbitrary detention, torture, sexual torture, forced labor, absence of leave, and the [sic] ludicrous pay,” calling it “an institution where slavery-like practices are routine.” For many, leaving national service is only possible by deserting the military and fleeing the country, the commission found.

The Eritrean foreign ministry called the report's allegations "totally unfounded," and said they were part of a "politically motivated campaign to undermine the political, economic, and social progress the country is making."

Eritrea has little foreign investment, but the extractive industry has raised concern from Human Rights Watch about foreign firms being complicit in forced labor. The Canadian mining firm Nevsun Resources contracted with the PFDJ-owned Segen Construction Company to build infrastructure around a mine it operates. Nevsun faces a lawsuit by Eritrean refugees in Canada alleging its complicity in forced labor. The company has denied the allegations.

"The Eritrean government pushes strongly for these companies to contract work out to state- and party-affiliated contractors, which themselves make heavy use of forced labor through the country's national-service program," says Christopher Albin-Lackey, a researcher at Human Rights Watch who wrote the report.

How many people have fled?

Five thousand Eritreans leave the country each month, the UN commission found, making it one of the world's top producers of refugees. The government has taken an ambivalent stance toward the outflow, the International Crisis Group reports, in part because it benefits from the large diaspora. Through consulates or party affiliates overseas, it collects a 2 percent income tax from many émigrés, reportedly on the threat of denying them consular services like travel documents, or services to family members who remain in Eritrea. In 2011 the UN Security Council called on Eritrea to "cease using extortion, threats of violence, fraud, and other illicit means" to collect this tax, which yielded $73 million for the state from 2010 to 2013, the UN monitoring group found in 2014.

Eritreans in the diaspora also contribute to Eritrea's economic survival by sending their families remittances, which provide the country with foreign reserves and keep families afloat. (The UN Development Program ranks Eritrea 182 out of 187 countries and territories for human development, but limited access for humanitarian agencies and organizations mean there is little reliable information.)

Where do the refugees and asylum-seekers go?

A quarter million Eritrean refugees and asylum seekers have settled in refugee camps and cities in neighboring Ethiopia and Sudan. A shortage of services and few educational and employment opportunities there, as well as protracted and seemingly indefinite stays in refugee camps, cause some to take the risky journey to Europe. "Deprived of any prospects for a better future and feeling that they have nothing to lose, many fall prey to unscrupulous smugglers," the UN said, calling particular attention to a rise of unaccompanied minors. By the end of 2014, the UN refugee agency reported eighty thousand Eritrean refugees residing in the EU, and its member-states received another 16,690 asylum applications in the first eight months of 2015. (EU countries grant asylum to about 90 percent of Eritrean asylum seekers.)

The major route takes asylum seekers through the Sahara Desert to Libya, where they board often-unseaworthy vessels bound for Italy. From Italy they often go on to other European destinations. In the first eight months of 2015, the top three recipients of asylum applications from Eritrean nationals were Switzerland (7,475), Germany (5,500), and Sweden (4,645)—countries which, along with the UK and United States, have well-established diaspora communities.

Eritreans are the most common users of the central Mediterranean route, which spans from North Africa to Italy. In the first eight months of 2015, 30,708 Eritreans arrived in Italy, according to the International Organization for Migration (IOM). In the same period, another 2,703 migrants—Eritreans perhaps foremost among them—died at sea along that route, which the IOM calls the world's most dangerous border crossing.

Another oft-traveled route goes through Egypt to Israel. In the Sinai Peninsula, Eritreans face torture, extortion, and rape at the hands of traffickers—at times with the collusion of police and military, Human Rights Watch reports (PDF). From Sinai, they cross into Israel, where some thirty-three thousand Eritreans reside, the country's interior ministry said in August 2015. Israel has turned back nearly three thousand people to Eritrea and third countries.

What are the EU and U.S. policies toward Eritrea and Eritrean asylum seekers?

Eritreans have prima facie designations from the UN refugee agency, meaning they are presumed to have legitimate asylum claims, a policy that most European governments have adopted. Eritrea denounced the designation, saying it misrepresented national service as forced labor and made the UN an "unwitting catalyst" of the exodus, putting it in league with the country's adversaries.

"In refugee law, it can be tricky to draw the line between an economic migrant and someone who is fleeing persecution," says Felix Horne, a researcher at Human Rights Watch. "Eritrea is the best example of that," he says, noting cases of minors who have fled the country. Many are anticipating conscription, though they have not yet served. They raise the question of whether they are fleeing the abuses of forced labor, or an apparent lack of work opportunities outside of the national-service program.

“It can be tricky to draw the line between an economic migrant and someone who is fleeing persecution.” —Felix Horne, Human Rights Watch

Amid a broader backlash to mass migration, some countries are moving away from the prima facie status for Eritreans. Denmark and the UK have cited the Eritrean government's recent promises that it will limit the duration of the national service. "Nothing has changed on the ground," says Gaim Kibreab, of London South Bank University. "Europe will be better off adopting evidence-based policies."

U.S. refugee policy prioritizes those Eritreans seeking protection on the basis of religious persecution. In its October 2015 report to Congress, the Obama administration called attention to what it says is Eritrea's repression of those subscribing to evangelical sects, as well as government control of state-sanctioned Christian and Muslim denominations. In all, the United States admitted 1,488 Eritreans in FY 2015, just over 2 percent of its total refugee admissions.

The EU is reportedly considering a five-year aid program worth 200 million euros ($214 million). By easing Eritreans' economic plight at home, it hopes to reduce the migrant and refugee outflow toward Europe. Meanwhile, some Africa experts call for ending Eritrea's isolation, which they believe could allay the ruling party's sense of siege and begin a process toward domestic reforms. Others point to normalization of Ethiopia-Eritrea relations as a way to provide both countries with savings to transfer to domestic spending. (Text ends)

Ethiopia accuses Eritrea over Yemen crisis
By Yemane Negash, The Reporter November 17, 2015

Recent reports show that Eritrea is officially involved in the Yemeni crisis allowing the Saudi-led Arab coalition to use its southern port of Assab airspace and territorial waters in fighting the Houthi rebels in Yemen.

A high official from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Ethiopia, who wants to remain anonymous, told The Reporter that the move could easily be manipulated to jeopardize the security situation in the Horn of Africa. “The Ethiopian government has been closely following the developments in Yemen and Eritrea’s recent involvement,” he stressed.

The news comes after the UN Monitoring Group on Somalia and Eritrea reported that Saudi Arabia and the UAE made the deal with Eritrea after neighboring Djibouti rejected the proposal. The arrangement would allow the coalition to use Eritrea’s land to establish a military base instead of fighting on Yemeni soil. Eritrea’s support also includes sending over 400 soldiers to join the Emirati contingent forces in fighting against the strong Houthi forces.

It was also reported that Eritrea will receive fuel and financial compensation in return. The UN fears the agreement may violate the Security Council resolutions, which were imposed against Eritrea in case it diverted the compensation and destabilized the horn region. The coalition is working hard to bring back President Abdurabuh Mansur Hadi who was forced to flee to Saudi Arabia after Houthi rebels assaulted the capital, Sana'a, last year.

From Somalia to Yemen

Over a decade after the fierce border war between Ethiopia and Eritrea, which left thousands dead on both sides, the two countries met on Somali soil, one supporting one group against the other. That instance had paused the no-peace-no-war situation. Ethiopia entered Somalia following official invitations by the weak but internationally recognized transitional government while Eritrea was allegedly backing the Islamic Union Courts (IUC). Many observers had explained the situation as purely a proxy war fought on Somali soil.

The UNSC had imposed successive sanctions on the country in 2009 following the confirmation that the Eritrean government was providing military and financial support to Al-Shabaab, an Al-Qaeda-linked militant group. The accusations had included Eritrea sending 2,000 troops to Somalia to fight along with militants.

As a result, Eritrea has been isolated from the region and from world politics. According to UN reports, the internal socio-political situation in the country is worsening and is resulting in its citizens scattering all over the world. Some believe that the country was even on the verge of state failure.

However, the current move by the Asmara is considered as a way out from the difficult situation. Apart from the financial calculation, allying with the Saudi coalition, a move which is also supported by the west and the US, may completely change the geopolitical settings and form of alliances in the Horn region.

"Eritrea will likely seek to expand its relationships beyond the region in an attempt to break its isolation in the region. Djibouti and Ethiopia have been trying to turn it into a regional rogue state through the African Union. So, from Eritrea's perspective, accepting Saudi and Emirati cash and resources is a logical move," explained a South Front analyst in a brief documentary titled "Arab Coalition Expands into the Horn of Africa".

An Ethiopian military observer to Yemen, who also wants to remain anonymous, reiterates that Eritrea, a state he accused of being behind all instabilities in the horn region, was behind the Houthi movement, a Shia-led movement that is allegedly supported by Iran. Last year, the Houthi militants crumbled the former government from San'a and making the president flee to Saudi Arabia.

The conflict has also taken a regional orientation, such that both Iran and Saudi, archenemies in the Middle East bordering Yemen, are involved in the crisis. Saudi is a Sunni-led country. “We know Eritrea still supports the north-based Houthi movement. And now, it’s ironic to see the same government officially support the Saudi-led Arab coalition. As far as it gets cash, the Eritrean government will support any sides,” he accused.

There have been no immediate comments coming from Asmara following the UN report. Both the military observer and the analyst agree that this move will completely complicate the situation in Yemen and the bigger region as well. “Indeed, Eritrea is ready to accept cash and resources from anyone who is ready to provide it to them,” concludes the South Front analyst.

This analyst also believes that there was a time when Eritrea supported Yemen’s Houthi fighters and functioned as a transshipment location for Iranian supplies heading to them. For the South Front analyst, involving Eritrea in this Arab coalition is a politically calculated decision for two reasons: one, to stop contact between Eritrea, Iran and the Houti militants, and to reduce Iran’s engagement in Yemen; and, second, to use the port of Assab as a local logistics hub. Given the great distances that must be traveled by sea to get to Aden from Sudan, Egypt, Saudi Arabia or the United Arab Emirates, the port of Assab is located at a much more advantageous location.

Does it matter to Ethiopia?

In 2011, when the North Africa uprising expanding, the late Prime Minister Meles Zenawi was asked if it would have any impact on Ethiopia.

“It is highly unlikely,” he responded. “The one country that is likely to affects us directly is Yemen. If the demonstrations in Yemen lead to some sort of disorder, this might give Al-Qaeda, which is based there, good opportunity to expand,” he explained. “If the current demonstrations are not managed well, they could lead to an unwelcome political vacuum and possible state failure in Yemen,” he added. “That will be a major security risk for all of us and the Horn of Africa”.

It appeared to be true that, in any case, a power vacuum in Somalia or Yemen could be the perfect situation for the Asmara regime to use as a springboard to destabilize Ethiopia and the Horn Africa. Last year, Elisabeth Kendall (PhD) of Oxford University, who commented on Yemen’s crisis before participants of the Global Security Seminar that was held in London, observed a close link between Somalia and Yemen. She noted that the Yemeni insurgents have close ties with Somalia, explaining that Al-Shabaab had been closely followed up by the Al-Qaeda wing in the peninsula.

The South Front report also looks into another reason for the arrangement between Eritrea, the UAE and Saudi Arabia. It says Saudi Arabia will be able to turn Eritrea into a tool to destabilize the situation in Ethiopia. “It is possible through the mono-ethnic communities of Ogaden and Oromo,” the report stipulates, adding that the Ethiopian government is pushing out anti-Saudi sentiments and is annihilating pro-Saudi Islamist entities. In fact, these views challenge the official media reports that Ethiopia and Saudi Arabia have agreed on a comprehensive cooperation just last month when Prime Minister Hailemariam Dessalegn visited the country.

However, the high official in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs confirmed that the Ethiopian government recognizes the president in exile as the legitimate Yemeni leader and that he observed no problems with Saudi Arabia and the broader coalition it leads. “The Ethiopian government is well aware that some countries want to take advantage of the crisis in Yemen. Eritrea was there since day one. Its current involvement will have impact on the broader geopolitical situation,” he explained. “Ethiopia’s concern is about Eritrea’s involvement. It has always been a factor of destabilization in the Horn region. We will be closely following the situation in case its current activity immediately affects Ethiopia’s peace and security,” he stressed.

Sudan, which borders Eritrea and Ethiopia, is also part of the Saudi-led coalition in Yemen, and provides aircraft and deploys at least 300 infantry troops. So does Egypt. For South Front, the Saudi and Emirati presence in Eritrea will not be limited by the duration of the Yemeni conflict. The UAE took Assab on lease for 30 years. Separately, South Front reported the UAE is seeking to take a former naval base in Berbera, Somaliland on lease. “The Emirati activity in Eritrea is a first step in a big plan to establish a naval base network on the Horn of Africa’s coast,” the analyst concluded.

Apart from this, it is clear that the US and French governments have naval and military bases in Djibouti. In this case, the current Arab alliance in Yemen and their expansion to the Horn of Africa might remake the geopolitical settings of the East African region. (Text ends)

ETHIOPIA: dying to live

(Mai Aini, 8 December 2015) – "Have you ever counselled someone who later disappeared on the way to Europe?" Sebhat* gazes off, detaching himself from the reality in Mai Aini camp. Only his eyes tell a story of pain and loss.

For reporters and government officials, heads of state and humanitarian agencies, the record numbers of refugee lives lost at sea or in the Sahara in recent years are indigestible statistics devoid of emotion. For 58-year-old Sebhat, they are faces, memories, loved ones and compatriots.

An Eritrean refugee himself, his work as a JRS counsellor has brought him close to so many other refugees in the camp, one of four in northern Ethiopia where 113,000 Eritrean refugees currently seek protection and 300 more arrive daily.

Faced with a traumatic past and limited future opportunity in Ethiopia, many decide to make a perilous journey north – to Europe or Israel. Out of all of Africa, it is Eritrea that generates most refugees that cross the Mediterranean to Italy.

In late September, nearly 1,000 Eritrean refugees were rescued by a Médecins Sans Frontières ship. They were the lucky ones. Many have drowned at sea or fallen victim to kidnapping by militias, sexual violence, human or organ trafficking as well as dehydration and starvation before even reaching Libya.

Why would they take these horrendous risks?

"People often say they must be animals or that they aren't thinking, but come on, they only want to survive. The degree of inhumane experiences at home pushes us. If you stay home you might be killed by your own people. It's better to take a risk so that even if you're killed, you're killed by strangers," said Semret*, an Eritrean refugee.

In June 2015, the United Nations cited "torture, extrajudicial executions, disappearances, forced labour, and sexual violence" in Eritrea "on a scope and scale seldom witnessed anywhere else in the world."

Sebhat lived 23 years in and out of prison, an experience ripe with torture and brutality. To this day he does not know why he was imprisoned. He never went to court or saw any charges filed against him.

"I still have so much pain from the abuse I suffered in prison," he said.

While Sebhat could not seek refuge until later in life, the young people in the camp have fled to escape forced conscription in the notoriously abusive Eritrean military: 84% of refugees in Mai Aini are younger than 24.

"They range in age from 8 to 17 years old. Most of the time their parents don't know they are leaving, they wake up one day and find their children gone," said Hagos*, whose own son fled the military aged 14.

Compulsory military service in Eritrea is 18 months by law, but in practice, the refugees say, it can last decades, or even a lifetime. There has been no word from Semret's brother in the eight years since he joined.

Hagos was one of the first to settle in northern Ethiopia. Today, out of the 23,000 people who seek refuge in Mai Aini camp, 1,500 are unaccompanied minors seek refuge.

Upon reaching the Ethiopian camps, the youngsters often feel trapped and isolated. Many children attend school, but as they grow older, some cannot cope with the bleak future ahead of them.

Unless sponsored and housed by a citizen, the majority of refugees in Ethiopia reside in camps. Ethiopian law does not allow refugees to partake in formal employment. The chance of being resettled to a country where they could access higher education, work and a new life are close to none. Despite the best efforts of UNHCR, the Ethiopian government and implementing partners in the camps, this exclusion pushes many youth away.

Two years ago, at the age of 16, Sammy* decided to take the leap of faith to reach Europe.

"We had no freedom in Eritrea, but when I got here I also felt trapped. I wanted to go to Europe to support my family, I had no other agenda. The smugglers told me that I would easily find a job or anything else I want."

"They told me I wouldn't have to pay anything, they said it was all catered for. Then after a month, when we reached Sudan, they demanded US$1300. They held us in a very small room for months where we were hit, burned, abused. It was very difficult to survive there," he said.

Sebhat says this practice is far too common.

"The smugglers come to the camp and become close to the youngsters without parents. They convince them they are sponsoring their trip for free, but it doesn't work like that. The money has to come from somewhere. They take these kids to Sudan and lock them up… until their families send high amounts of money, otherwise they just kill them," he said.

Other times smugglers demand the money upfront which, according to Sebhat, usually amounts to US$11,000 USD for a passage from Ethiopia, through Sudan, Libya and on to Italy.

Sammy was lucky enough to have the chance to return back to the camp, once he realised the danger of his trek, but most never get that opportunity.

"One day I escaped around 9 or 10pm when the smugglers went out. Kind strangers helped me return back here. My friend stayed until his family paid for him to get out. He did end up reaching Europe but he told me the journey to Libya was even more difficult than Sudan. It's very hot and there's absolutely no water. If you meet extremists you are in big trouble. He saw many people die on the way. I don't want to go anymore after hearing from him. I'll stay here for now," said Sammy.

Sammy envisions the day he can go home to work as a nurse and provide for his family, but until harsh human rights abuses end, more Eritreans are likely to arrive in Ethiopia rather than return home.

"When you aren't able to live freely, you aren't home. There's a consequence to going back – we'll be imprisoned and tortured or killed. Sure this is better than that, it is a safe house, but it isn't enough," said Semere who has a journalism degree but is not allowed to work in Ethiopia.

"If there were opportunities to work in Ethiopia then people wouldn't risk their lives to leave…. Refugees are talented and intelligent, many have degrees and had careers at home but here they feel they have failed. This pressure adds coal to the already burning fire."

Allowing refugees to go to local schools and to work – as business owners and self-reliant employees – would help reverse the hopelessness that causes too many to risk their lives in secondary movement.

"Kids in this camp don't feel their future is very bright. They know the problems they'll face in Sudan and Libya or the sea. We as elders advise them not to go but many tell us they'd rather die on the way than be prisoners in Eritrea or this camp. Maybe they have their daily bread here, but it's not enough. They don't want hand-outs, they want to work and help their families," said Hagos.

"My son had to join the army at 14. He was then imprisoned and later escaped and fled to Europe, but now he's dead. He perished in the sea. I didn't want him to go, I said, 'please don't go kill yourself,' but he left anyway," added Simon.

Refugees will ultimately continue to 'leave anyway'. Many will perish but the message of their life and death should not be forgotten by the rest of the world. Compassion and political will are essential to ensure that refugees can travel through safe humanitarian channels and that they can belong and contribute to their new societies, living a life of dignity.

The 'refugee crisis' is a global one which will go down in history. How we have welcomed and protected those who knock on our doors will define our generations for years to come. *Names have been changed Angela Wells, JRS Eastern Africa Communications Officer US shuts down drone operation in Ethiopia

ERITREA: The EPLF's Praise of Italian Colonialism

PERSPECTIVE By Worku Aberra (PhD) December 17, 2015

The Theory of Comparative Advantage

The EPLF and its supporters invoke the theory of comparative advantage to advocate a common market between Ethiopia and Eritrea. The theory states that trade between two countries is mutually beneficial when countries specialize in production that reflects their resource endowment. It suggests that a country with a relative abundance of capital and skilled manpower (for example, Germany) produces manufactured goods and a country with a relative abundance of land suitable for growing coffee (for example, Ethiopia) produces coffee. The theory postulates that Germany will export manufactured goods to

Ethiopia and Ethiopia will export coffee to Germany. Trade is mutually beneficial because it enhances choices, reduces the cost of living, and improves living standards in both countries. As a result, Germans and Ethiopians are better off with trade than without trade. The same arguments apply in justifying a common market between two or more countries. According to the theory then, for Eritrea to enjoy comparative advantage in manufacturing over Ethiopia, it must have relatively more capital and skilled manpower than Ethiopia, but is the economic reality in Eritrea consistent with this assumption? In Praise of Italian Colonialism

To be sure, no one has claimed that Eritrea possesses more capital than Ethiopia. Instead, those who claim that Eritrea has comparative advantage in manufacturing justify their assertion by referring to Italian colonialism. Under Italian colonialism, the EPLF and its supporters argue that Eritrea had more capital and skilled manpower than Ethiopia, both in relative and absolute terms. That is true. But they get it wrong when they assume that the economic gap between Eritrea and Ethiopia is permanent and wide.

The comparative advantage that a region or a country enjoys is temporary. Relative positions change constantly, as regions and countries that were once advanced, decline overtime; think of the Rust Belt in the US and Argentina in the early 20th century. Where is England today, the cradle of the industrial revolution, the once powerhouse of manufactured goods? Countries that were underdeveloped in the past become industrialized. Where were China and South Korea 50 years ago? So, the only constant is the constant change of relative positions, and it is this reality that the EPLF and its supporters have failed to grasp.

The Beginning of the Decline

In the 50s and 60s the manufacturing sector in Eritrea was larger than Ethiopia's, but since the mid 70s, its relative position declined because of the secessionist war. The EPLF has attributed the decline to Haile Selassie's government policy of "de-industrializing" Eritrea by dismantling factories and shipping them off to Ethiopia. The allegation is patently false. Yes, some capital left Eritrea for Ethiopia, not because of government machinations but because of economic calculations: in search for a larger market and a higher rate of profit.

Second, the "de-industrialization" of Eritrea was accentuated by the EPLF's destructive military actions. During its war of independence, the EPLF destroyed factories, blew up mines, and damaged infrastructure in Eritrea for 30 years. The war increased the flight of capital from Eritrea, undermined investment confidence in Eritrea, and discouraged businesses from investing in Eritrea. Capital, like humans, avoids war zones. At the same time, the manufacturing sector in Ethiopia expanded, albeit on a small scale.

Consequently, Eritrea’s position as the manufacturing hub of Ethiopia declined considerably. Whatever small advantage Eritrea enjoyed over Ethiopia in manufacturing in the 1950s and 1960s had dissipated by the late 1970s.

Small-scale Production vs Industrialization

The claim that Italian colonialism industrialized Eritrea is inaccurate because industrialization implies economic transformation, at least the onset of it. Far from industrializing Eritrea, the manufacturing sector under Italian rule, constrained by a small domestic market and incapable of competing internationally, was small. As a result, its share of GDP and total employment was insignificant. So, comparing the manufacturing sector in Eritrea with the one in Ethiopia is like comparing the height of two dwarfs, and declaring one is taller. Both dwarfs remain short, in comparison to rest of the population. Similarly, the assertion that Eritrea was industrialized, compared to Ethiopia, is misleading.

First, Eritrea's economy, like that of Ethiopia's, was predominantly agricultural during the colonial era, where more than 90% of the labor force was engaged in subsistence agriculture, a far cry from industrialization. Second, the small number of factories owned and operated by the Italians produced light manufactured goods that required a low level of skill and a small amount of capital. These types of factories can easily relocate in any country with abundant semi-skilled or unskilled workers, such as Ethiopia. Some did just that. Third, when many Italians left Eritrea after World War II—the number of Italians decreased from 53,000 in 1939 to just 25,000 in 1947 (Tekeste Negash, 2007)—some of the capital left Eritrea with them.

Given these facts, the claim about Eritrea's industrialization under Italian colonialism is highly exaggerated. If we generalize the assertion that colonialism equals industrialization, we must conclude that the colonized countries will be more industrialized than the non-colonized countries. But there is no empirical evidence to support this assertion. Nor are there any data that show colonized countries are generally industrializing at a faster rate than non-colonialized countries. The non-colonized countries, such as Turkey and Thailand, with the added advantage of protecting their culture, history, dignity, and collective psyche from the colonial onslaught, have been industrializing as fast as or faster than most of the former colonies.

Colonialism, many economists argue, undermined industrialization in the former colonies by distorting their entire economies to fit the needs of the colonizers, with the exception of the settler colonies like the US, Canada, and Australia (and to some extent South Africa). So, the EPLF's praise of Italian colonialism for Eritrea's "industrialization" is unmerited.

Italy's Colonial Interests in Ethiopia

Strange as it may seem, it was Italy's colonial ambitions over Ethiopia that determined its investment in Eritrea. Italy invested in Eritrea not to industrialize Eritrea, rather to colonize Ethiopia. Italy had always been more interested in Ethiopia than any of its colonies in East Africa because of Ethiopia's larger population and richer agricultural resources. Historical data show that up until the early 1930s, Italy invested little in Eritrea, but once it decided to invade Ethiopia, its investment increased. It built more factories in Eritrea, with the objective of selling the products in Ethiopia. It brought more Italian setters, raising the number of Italian settlers to 12% of the population by 1939 (Tekeste Negash, 2007). As part of its preparation to occupy Ethiopia, Italy also expanded Eritrea's infrastructure. If other colonial powers invested in infrastructure in their colonies to facilitate the extraction of resources and the production of agricultural commodities, Italy invested in Eritrea's infrastructure to occupy Ethiopia.

The Real Comparative Advantage between Ethiopia and Eritrea

Neither Ethiopia nor Eritrea enjoys relative advantage in manufacturing against each other. Their relative advantages lie elsewhere: Ethiopia has ample agricultural land to grow coffee and other products; Eritrea has plenty of fisheries and pristine beaches. According to the theory of comparative advantage, in a common market, Ethiopia will export coffee to Eritrea and Eritrea, fish to Ethiopia. The exchange of coffee for fish may not be such a fishy idea, but I am not sure how large the demand for fish is in Ethiopia. Eritrea can also specialize in tourism and entertain the newly TPLF-minted millionaires on its beautiful beaches. That will be specialization in accordance with resource endowment, 100%. But a common market that benefits ordinary Ethiopians and Eritreans requires the establishment of democratic regimes in both countries, for democracy is the handmaiden of economic integration.

A Perpetual Banana Republic?

Although Ethiopia has rich agricultural resources, the designation of Ethiopia as the permanent supplier of agricultural products is indefensible, theoretically or empirically. No country has ever industrialized by producing agricultural commodities, however modern they may be. If such were the case, Honduras, a country that has been producing bananas since the 1870s, would have become industrialized by now, yet it remains underdeveloped. Brazil is industrializing not by producing and exporting coffee, but by manufacturing and exporting airplanes. Ethiopia will not transform its economy by producing coffee, bananas, and cut flowers, nor by joining a common market with a dictator who has vowed to destroy it. To achieve transformation, Ethiopia must improve its agricultural productivity, must diversify its manufacturing sector, and more importantly, must create the right set of institutions. These are the challenges Ethiopia faces.
Worku Aberra (PhD) is a professor of economics at Dawson College, Montreal, Canada.

The U.S. government has shut down its drone operation base in southern Ethiopia, an embassy official announced.

January 4, 2016 ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (AP) — A decision has been reached that the base in Arba Minch, 450 kilometers (280 miles) south of Addis Ababa, is no longer necessary, embassy spokesman David Kennedy told The Associated Press by email.

“U.S. military personnel are no longer in Arba Minch,” Kennedy said. “In our ongoing bilateral discussions on defense cooperation, we reached a mutual decision that our presence in Arba Minch is not required at this time.”

Ethiopian media reported about the base when it was set up in 2011 but the U.S. has never publicly confirmed its existence. A security expert in Addis Ababa, who insisted on anonymity for fear of Ethiopian government reprisal, said the base was used to attack Islamic extremists in Somalia.

Ethiopia is a staunch U.S. ally in East Africa and has sent hundreds of troops to Somalia to counter the Islamic extremist rebel group. Although Ethiopia has a history of human rights, it is also a key U.S. ally in the fight against al-Qaida and other Islamic extremists in the Horn of Africa.

Ethiopia had troops in Somalia between 2006 and 2009 to defeat extremists. Ethiopia redeployed its troops to Somalia in 2011 to combat al-Shabab. Al-Shabab, al-Qaida’s East African affiliate, is fighting the internationally-backed Somali government. The rebels were pushed out of Somalia’s capital, Mogadishu, in 2011 with the help of African Union troops. But al-Shabab still carries out numerous guerrilla attacks in Somalia and the countries contributing A.U. troops, including Kenya, Djibouti and Uganda. (Text ends)

The troubled Yemen says, "Thank Eritrea"

January 2016 - Yemen unveiled a major painting of President of Eritrea, Isaias Afwerki, entitled "Thank Eritrea" in Aden under the auspices of the "truth" of the Media Foundation, and raised the painting in the main streets of the capital of Aden city of Cairo Road leading to the Directorate of Sheikh Othman.

The head of the campaign Firas Al Yafei said that the State of Eritrea has provided significant support within the framework of the Arab coalitio...n led by Saudi Arabia, and its participation in the storm packets process and the subsequent re- Hope for Yemen and Eritrea have contributed to the help of the coalition in restoring legitimacy to Yemen, including the training of the resistance and the forces of the national army on its territory as well as the use of "nerve" base for liberation of Aden process of being "the backbone" of air which passes into the port of Aden.

Adding that Eritrea stressed on more than one occasion that it stands on its support and legitimacy in Yemen, which produced a legitimate leaders.

And he stressed the need for security, stability and unity of Yemen's land and people, and said that the stability of Yemen is interested in the first place, because of links between the two peoples of the Eritrean and Yemeni interdependencies and overlap and historic neighborhood.

And it began the Arab coalition led by Saudi Arabia launched air strikes against rebels and forces loyal to Saleh since March, and fled to the forces on the ground in support of Hadi. (Google translation)

2015 In Review: Eritrea – Escaping 'Isolation'
By Simon Keleta, TesfaNews January 23, 2016

Focused on providing perspective, this current piece will shift some attention to the changing geopolitical context to answer questions as to why the now-defunct, politicized, pro migration policies existed in the first place; how new, responsive policies towards Eritrea will inevitably change the situation in Eritrea.

Witnessing the aimless stroll of frizzy-haired youth down palm-lined boulevards during siesta may have given Asmara's 2015 visitors the false impression of a nation at peace. Despite the tranquility, let us be clear about one thing: Eritrea is at war. Let us not relegate it to a border "dispute" or the oft confusing "no-peace-no-war" situation, politicized descriptions forwarded by newspapers and governments.

Thus, Eritrea is at war.

More specifically, it is in a proxy "war of attrition" (i.e. one until the death) against the US backed, minority ethnic regime in Ethiopia, the Tigrayan People Liberation Front (TPLF), that bet every single one of its chips on Eritrean regime change during its 1998-2000 military campaign; that has yet been unable to accept the loss of the disputed border town of Badme decided by "final and binding" international arbitration in 2002, much less the official demarcation of the border by that same arbitrating body in 2008.

With demarcation, there no longer exists, under international arbitration, a "border dispute" but only the TPLF-led military "occupation" of Eritrean territories in an ongoing war of attrition.

In 2015, we saw an ongoing stalemate in the war of attrition. An ideal situation for the US-TPLF axis that has adopted a geopolitical isolation strategy of prolonged and never-ending war that, according to a leaked US embassy cable sent by CDA Vicki Huddleston from Addis Ababa on November 1, 2005, seeks "to isolate Eritrea and wait for it to implode economically." The operator word here is "wait".

Following now disproven US allegations of state-sponsored terrorism, which provided the pretext for Eritrea's sanctioning by the UN in 2009 to accelerate isolation and regime change, the Barack Obama-led US and

Gordon Brown-led UK, both liberal regimes, turned to a "nonviolent action" strategy, as espoused by Gene Sharp, that sought regime change by raising a youthful mob of mass public discontent and indignation through championing human rights advocacy.

Further delineating this strategy in a speech delivered in Washington, DC on May 2013, now in the official public record, US regime-change activist Dan Connell told purportedly "Eritrean" activists to "make regime change more possible" by campaigning for an "end to unlimited conscription into national service" and "focusing our attention on the trafficking issue and always linking it to the source of the refugee flows. This trafficking issue is a consequence of the situation inside Eritrea. No other issue is likely to generate attention and support from the American public."

Helping to create and exacerbate politicized trafficking of Eritreans, US Ambassador Ronald K. McMullen, writing in a May 5, 2009 US Embassy cable from Asmara, confessed, "we intend to give opportunities to study in the United States to those who oppose the regime."

By 2011, a UN group charged with monitoring the Eritrean sanctions began making allegations of state-sponsored human trafficking in 2011 rather than sticking to its limited mandate of investigating alleged terrorism.

That same year, UNHCR published its updated Eligibility Guidelines on Eritrean asylum seekers, allowing Eritreans virtually guaranteed asylum in any nation in the world, assuming that one was (1) bold enough to brave the deadly risks required to get there and (2) willing to testify to human rights abuses in Eritrea that are harrowing enough to win favor with asylum officers.

These vulnerable migrants and their tales of persecution in national service, often recited from and coached by the detailed stepby-step criteria in the Guidelines, a "How To" guide that tells them exactly what to say and how to say it, are then anonymously exploited by regime-change seeking human rights activists for building a human rights case against the Eritrean government.

As other pieces in our series will highlight, this is exactly what we saw with the June reports of "special mandate holders" that were extra-procedurally commissioned by the UN Human Rights Council. These include the Commission of Inquiry (COI) and Special Rapporteur, which based virtually all their anonymous testimonies on vulnerable migrants often willing to say anything to gain asylum.

These reports, with their hyperbolic allegations of "crimes against humanity", are intended to further isolate Eritrea, which in turn slows economic development and deteriorates living conditions in Eritrea, which in turn drives more public indignation and more migration in a never ending cycle.

Thus, in summary, the overall US-TPLF geopolitical strategy against Eritrea is this: To support Eritrean human rights activism that campaigns around migration and human trafficking, inextricably linked to national service, such that Eritrean leadership will become isolated, domestically and internationally, allowing for Eritrea's eventual economic collapse, toppling of the government and, ultimately, victory in the protracted war of attrition.

Without the stream of migration requiring asylum-seekers to badmouth national service, the anonymous testimonies buttressing politicized human rights reports, derived almost entirely from asylum-seekers, would not be possible. Eritrea's enemies would also be much less likely to isolate Eritrea since, recalling Dan Connell's warning, "No other issue is likely to generate attention and support from the American public". Activists have raised, to no avail, the issue of the 2% Recovery and Rehabilitation Tax, calling it "extortion" despite the fact the United States levies the exact same tax under a different name.

Thus, with cautious optimism moving forward, it must be understood that the Eritrean state and people's recent defeat of pro-migration, "strategic depopulation" policies, which have siphoned off Eritrea's most economically productive demographic, ushers among the most decisive victories in the seventeen-year war against Eritrea.

It is through this geopolitical lens that we must view the UK Home Office's April 2015 country guidance report on Eritrean asylum-seekers. UNHCR's asylum criteria and final conclusions outlined in its 2009 and 2011 Guidelines were based in large part on references to the Home Office's country guidance that wholly and intrinsically deemed national service persecution (i.e. "in itself"). Therefore, what happens to the Guidelines when the UK's country guidance changes?

By explicitly declaring that national service "does not, in itself, constitute persecution", the UK Home Office fundamentally challenged UNHCR's prima facie designation, which automatically grants asylum to Eritreans en masse rather than on a case by-case basis. This is not to say that persecution does not exist but rather that one cannot automatically assume that every Eritrean is necessarily persecuted by the Eritrean "State and its agents."

Consequently, such a profound shift in UK country guidance, which is the foundation upon which UNHCR guidance rests, must similarly trigger an equally profound shift in UNHCR guidance on Eritrean asylum seekers. Will new Guidelines be passed in the coming years? Only time will tell. In any case, we must keep in mind that country guidance, like multilateral sanctions, only work when nations abide by them. Europe doesn't seem to be abiding.

It is for this reason that human rights activists and the pseudo leftist/pseudo-radical press in the UK fought tooth and nail in 2015 to reverse the Home Office's seminal decision and used the COI's June report to put pressure on any state officials seeking to curb Eritrean migration.

No newspaper in 2015 has been more up this task, vitriolic, unabashedly biased, intensely propagandist than the Guardian. Perhaps its June 10 editorial, published in the days following the COI report, brandishing the headline "The Guardian view on Eritrea: a regime of terror", best highlights the Guardian's official position on Eritrean migration vis-a-vis human rights.

Using over-the-top, gloom and-doom characterizations we were told that Eritrea, slated for €300 million in European aid, suffered from "systematic inhumanity", a "dictatorial system", "a totalitarian state" and "real terror". The editor lamented that Europe was not only "turning a blind eye to tyranny" but was "rewarding a regime with aid instead of thinking strategically".

The histrionic prose and alarmist title, depicting impending and certain doom in the wake of European aid disbursed to Eritrea, suggests an emerging desperation from the pseudo-leftist newspaper and the motley crew of regime change activists it represents.

Since the Danish Immigration Service and Home Office publications issued in December and April, respectively, the Guardian has led a barrage of regular and unrelenting sensational pieces on Eritrea, seeking to stir up the UK's liberal base to pressure their politicians for Eritrea-policy reform.

The newspaper's constellation of checkered writers covering Eritrea in 2015 can hardly call themselves journalists as they proved themselves, more accurately, to be full-blown activists. Such is the case with Dan Connell, Martin Plaut and Vittorio Longhi, who all dished out more opinion than fact in the non-opinion pages this past year.

Though the Home Office later momentarily considered changing its guidance in the wake of the COI's June report championed by the UK media, academics and Baroness Kinnock, we saw no change but rather superficial deliberations for public consumption. Sources in contact with the UK immigration agency indicate that little change is likely given that their offices are currently overburdened with cases of false Eritrean asylum claims running upwards of 50 percent, most of which are Ethiopian.

If there remained any outstanding doubts behind claims in early 2015 of rampant asylum fraud, a blitz of new credible, corroborating reports surely put all qualms to rest by year's end. In a November interview with APA, Austrian Ambassador to Ethiopia, Andreas Melan, stated, "We believe that among the thousands of Eritrean migrants in Europe, 30 – 40 percent are Ethiopians."

Perhaps more shocking, was the November 25th revelation, in a piece by Sudan Daily Vision citing a high level Sudanese police official, "that the number of foreigners residing in violation of the law in Khartoum state has reached three million. Two million are from the neighboring Ethiopia…200,000 from Eritrea."

Thus, Ethiopians make up 67 percent of all illegal migrants in Sudan, Eritreans only 7 percent—a "drop in the ocean", as Presidential Advisor Yemane Gebreab told the UK's Channel 4 host John Snow in July.

By citing inflated numbers and unverifiable testimonies, the Eritrean migration situation has been made to look totally exceptional and in need of exceptional action (i.e. regime change) by those seeking to change the geopolitical order in the Horn of Africa. The key words here are "made to look". Exceptional Eritrean migration is now a vanishing illusion.

Though Eritrea is certainly racked by real migration, negatively affecting economic, social and political development, nations equally burdened by migration are starting to look beyond misleading geopolitical campaigns to find mutually beneficial solutions.

We saw these efforts redouble and accelerate in 2015, building on the Khartoum Process and leading to Eritrea joining the International Migration Organization, which inevitably will give it greater sway on Eritrean migration issues.

With a growing consensus that Eritrea's lack of economic development is the primary cause of migration, states have chosen to assist and grow economic engagement with Eritrea.

The irony of the isolation strategy against Eritrea is that it has had the unintended consequence of inextricably binding Eritrea to many desperate "third nations" burdened by migration. However, all third nations, even America, have their immigration limits, as we learned with the highly publicized case of cuban immigrant Elian Gonzalez.

Action stimming from migration burdens is only part of the story. Much of Eritrea’s growing ties— escaping isolation—also come from a diplomatic blitzkrieg by Eritrea in recent years, growing significantly through 2015.

Regional Geo-politics
President Isaias Afwerki says GERD is a White Elephant

Ethiopian News, Tigrai Online, January 28, 2016
Isaias Afwerki the Eritrean leader undermines the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam in an interview he gave to the ErTV.
President Isaias Afwerki was interviewed by his TV station as part of his annual mind-numbing speeches addressing his tiny nation. The whole world knows after the Badme war the false myth that was created by the Egyptian mercenary leaders of Shabiya is cut down to size.

The Eritrean people learned the truth about the Shabiya leaders the hard way that after one quarter of their country was occupied by the gallant Ethiopian defense forces in less than a month at the battle of Badme. The sad truth is the Eritrean tyrant thinks he is somebody and the world masses are his audience, so year after year he repeats himself like a broken record about issues he has absolutely no idea.

This year the Eri-TV journalists asked him what he thought about the arguments between Ethiopia, Egypt and Sudan concerning the GERD mega dam. It is unbelievable how this moronic imbecile tried to reduce the GERED in to a personal vendetta of the late Prime Minister Meles Zenawi.

He said when Ethiopia and Eritrea was in good terms in 1993 Prime Minister Meles Zenawi and himself were in Cairo for and OAU meeting and Meles mentioned to him he will bring the Nile issues to the stage, but Isaias advised him not bring it up because it was not the right time. He says at dinner time Meles looked furious, when Isaias asked him what was wrong, allegedly Meles told him when he told some Egyptian official that Ethiopia was bringing the issue of Nile to the stage, the Egyptian government official told him "who are you". After that Meles threatened punish the Egyptians by saying he will do what the Turkish did to Syria and Iraq.

The truth is the evil tyrant is manufacturing lies to make himself grandeur than Meles.

First of all the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam is Ethiopian and has nothing to do with Eritrea. Second the Blue Nile River is an Ethiopian issue not Eritrean so the moron has no say on it.

We know he is trying to do his masters work by labeling the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam as a political tool, but he is not doing a good job of it.

In reality the idea of building a dam on the Nile River was started long time ago not in 1993 as the Eritrean tyrant claimed. Read the following paragraph from an article by by Andrew Carlson in the University Ohio website. In the article Mr. Carlson says: "Emperor Haile Selassie was offended by President Nasser's exclusion of Ethiopia in the Nile Waters Agreement and in planning for building the Aswan Dam. He negotiated the 1959 divorce of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church from the Orthodox Church in Alexandria, ending 1600 years of institutional marriage.

He also began planning for several dams on the Blue Nile and its tributaries, contributing $10 million dollars from the Ethiopian treasury towards a study by the U.S. Department of Reclamation resulting in a seventeen volume report completed in 1964 and titled Land and Water Resources of the Blue Nile Basin: Ethiopia.

Nasser responded by encouraging Muslims in Eritrea (reunified with Ethiopia after World War II) to secede from Ethiopia. He also encouraged Muslim Somalis to fight for the liberation of Ethiopia's Ogaden region." Source: http://origins.osu.edu/article/who-owns-nile-egypt-sudan-and-ethiopia-s-history-changing-dam

Regional Diplomacy
Eritrea opens doors for outside world
By Edmund Blair, Reuters March 1, 2016
Engagement extends to a U.N. rights delegation

* Minister reveals first U.N. jail visit in years
* Eritrea says world has come knocking
* Diplomats see new openness after sanctions isolation
* Asmara denies backing al Shabaab militants in Somalia

ASMARA, Feb 29 (Reuters) - Europe's migration crisis and the conflict in Yemen have created opportunities for Eritrea to draw closer to the European Union and Gulf Arab states, offering the poor Horn of Africa nation the chance to end isolation it blames on U.N. sanctions.

In Reuters interviews in the capital Asmara, Eritrean government ministers and senior officials outlined deepening ties with Gulf nations and closer relations with the European Union. The foreign minister also revealed that Asmara had allowed a U.N. human rights team to tour a prison for the first time in years.

Eritrea, which insists it has always been open to improving relations, says regional and world powers are waking up to the importance of the country's strategic position on busy Red Sea shipping lanes in a volatile region. Western diplomats see a greater readiness to engage by the tiny nation that has long had a "go-it-alone" attitude, born of its solitary 30-year armed struggle for independence from its far bigger neighbour, Ethiopia, a quarter of a century ago.

This comes despite Eritrea's deep resentment of the U.N. sanctions mainly imposed following accusations it backed Somalia's Islamist al Shabaab militants, a charge Asmara denies. "Over the last year or so, they have been much more open," said one senior Western diplomat in Asmara, who requested anonymity. "A number of ministers see the isolationist, autarkic (self-sufficient) approach they had was not serving their best interests," he added.

But diplomats say it is not just Asmara which wants better ties. The European Union signed a 200-million-euro package of financial support in January, fretting that an economically fragile Eritrea means more migrants landing on its shores and believing more employment would discourage youths from fleeing. Gulf states have found a regional partner in their fight with rebels in Yemen, which lies just 40 km across the Red Sea.

The United Arab Emirates now uses Eritrean "logistical facilities", Eritrea's Foreign Minister Osman Saleh Mohammed told Reuters in an interview in his Asmara office. "Eritrea wants to engage, (and) now the world wants to engage." Yet the nation that is one of Africa's poorest and which has in the past rejected foreign aid it felt would create dependence rather than development, says it is not changing tack. "We have never changed our vision," said Yemane Ghebreab, political adviser to President Isaias Afwerki who has ruled since independence in 1991. "We are not very good at or very keen to play the game that we have been told we need to play."

That is the kind of stance which has given Eritrea its "go-it-alone" reputation, which Western diplomats say often hinders their efforts to soften the approach of their capitals on U.N. sanctions - basically an arms embargo - imposed in 2009. Yet the diplomats in Asmara, who asked not to be identified, say Asmara's growing outreach extends beyond bilateral ties to thorny issues like human rights in a nation that is accused of holding political prisoners, a charge Asmara denies.

JAIL VISIT

In February, a delegation from the U.N. Office of the High Commissioner on Human Rights was allowed to visit Sembel prison, south of the capital, the first time a U.N. mission toured a jail after years of requests. "We are engaging with them," Osman said, giving the first official confirmation of the visit. A U.N. official acknowledged the visit took place without giving details. "That was a big deal," said a diplomat while another said he believed it was the first since about 2008.

Despite the jail visit, Asmara still refuses access to another U.N.-appointed rights team, which it says is biased. The U.N. commission of inquiry issued a report in June that listed abuses, such as arbitrary detention and forced labour under the country's national service programme. It said Eritrea may have committed crimes against humanity.

Sheila Keetharuth, the U.N. special rapporteur on the human rights situation in Eritrea and commissioner on the commission of inquiry who has not been allowed to visit, told Reuters that any sign outsiders were seeing inside any prison was positive. But on the Sembel prison visit, she also said: "Was this a kind of PR access? Do we have today or are we going to have in the near future broader independent assessment and monitoring of prison conditions?"

Eritrea has also blocked visits by a U.N. monitoring group which last year declared it found no evidence Eritrea was backing Somalia's Islamist al Shabaab militants. "There are no grounds for the Security Council to continue sanctions," the foreign minister said, speaking after the latest U.N. Security Council sanctions briefing. He said sanctions were an international effort "to go for isolation of Eritrea".

For now, the monitors' assessment is based on research abroad. Western powers insist a report will only carry real worth - and so lead to lifting sanctions - when it is based on research inside Eritrea. Asmara says monitors ignored past cooperation so there is no point letting them in. At the United Nations, Russia and China lean towards easing sanctions while Britain, France and the United States do not. After the end of Italian colonial rule, Eritrea was under British control for a decade until the United Nations established Eritrea as a federated region with Ethiopia. Haile Selassie's annexation of it as a province sparked war.

Asmara has long felt betrayed by world powers, who they say failed to force Ethiopia, now with a population of 97 million, to abide by a boundary arbitration ruling after the 1998 to 2000 border war. Ethiopia says it wants talks on implementation, which Asmara rejects.

Sanctions on Eritrea, which has an official population of 3.6 million though other estimates suggest it could be almost double that, then followed in 2009. "They became introspective. They were rather shocked they had lost so many friends," said Cedric Barnes, Horn of Africa director for the think-tank Crisis Group. "It takes a while to reverse the situation."

NEW DYNAMIC

But the migration and Yemen crises are creating a new dynamic, which diplomats say is spurred on by what they see as a realisation in government that the economy cannot afford to lose more of its educated youths leaving the country in droves. Each month as many as 5,000 people flee Eritrea according to U.N. figures, estimates the Eritrean government disputes. Those who have left usually blame Eritrea's compulsory national service that can last many years with low pay.

Minister Osman said migration "become a catalyst for improving that relationship with European countries". On Gulf ties, he said: "The Yemeni situation has created a common understanding to deal with terrorists, with extremists and at the same time with piracy." Eritrea was "building up the relationship" with Saudi Arabia and letting UAE use "logistical facilities" like Assab port, he added, without outlining specific UAE activities there. The minister said Eritrea was not receiving anything in return - an assertion diplomats question. One diplomat suggested a link between deepening Gulf ties and improvements in fuel supplies in a country which had faced shortages in early 2005. Osman dismissed any oil transfer but he said Eritrea, which has few foreign investors outside the nascent mining industry, wanted investment from the Gulf and elsewhere. "This will create employment," he said.

Western diplomats acknowledge a new approach is not just coming from Eritrea, which lies in a turbulent region next to Sudan where an Islamist government is in power, near Yemen where al Qaeda is active and north of Somalia where a Western-backed government is battling the al Shabaab Islamist insurgency. "We want this country to contribute to rather than detract from stability in the Horn of Africa," said the senior Western diplomat. "We don't need another failed state on the shores of the Red Sea."

Eritrea's population is roughly half Christians, mostly living in the highlands, and half Muslims, many of whom live along the Red Sea coast. With Islamist ideas on its doorstep, Western nations want a stable nation that can avert any seepage of ideologies. As a Gulf ally, Eritrea could also be a target for al Qaeda in Yemen. "It's a fairly bad neighbourhood," another diplomat said.

But Eritrea, run by a government with a strongly secular approach, says concerns that its citizens could fall prey to extremism are misplaced. "Extremist ideas taking root in Eritrea is very difficult," said presidential adviser Yemane. "It has been attempted over the past 25 years. It has failed miserably." (Writing by Edmund Blair, editing by Peter Millership)

Eritrea accuses Ethiopia of contemplating full-scale war
By Tom Miles, Geneva March 12, 2016

Ethiopia is contemplating full-scale war against Eritrea, an Eritrean official told the U.N. Human Rights Council on Tuesday, as he defended his country against allegations of crimes against humanity.

Eritrean and Ethiopian troops clashed along their border on June 12. Each has accused the other of starting the hostilities.

Last week, Eritrea's Foreign Ministry blamed the United States for playing a role, referring to "Washington's instigation" of the attack by Ethiopian forces. Eritrea also said at least 200 Ethiopian troops were killed.

"As we speak, Ethiopia is making preparations for a bigger military offensive and contemplating a full-scale war," Yemane Ghebreab, an Eritrean presidential advisor, told the U.N. council on Tuesday.

"Ethiopia reckons that the gross accusations against Eritrea afford it with the perfect pretext, and that it may be now or never. It reckons that those who are only too eager to blame Eritrea will as usual look the other way and fail to act as Ethiopia commits what are truly crimes against humanity against its people and unleashes another war."

Asked what prompted Eritrea's warning about Ethiopia's military preparedness, he told Reuters: "They've been saying that for a long time, but we also see the reinforcements they are making on the ground. There are massive reinforcements coming to the border."

He said it was a large build-up of troops and Eritrea was prepared to defend itself.

Yemane said 18 Eritreans were killed in the recent fighting, and it had lodged a formal complaint with the U.N. Security Council.

Ethiopia has said both sides suffered casualties but would not discuss specifics. It has also said does not expect the situation to escalate.

"We are capable of waging a full-scale war against Eritrea, but simply we don't choose to. That is why we have withdrawn our forces once our objectives were achieved," Ethiopian government spokesman Getachew Reda told a news briefing on June 14.

U.N. human rights investigators have accused Eritrea's leaders of crimes against humanity, including torture, rape and murder, over the past 25 years and called for the case to be referred to the International Criminal Court.

They have also accused Eritrea of enslaving 300,000 to 400,000 of its own people and operating a shoot-to-kill policy on its borders to stop people from fleeing abroad.

Eritrea has rejected all the allegations, and Yemane said 200,000 people had signed a petition supporting the government. Thousands more were protesting on a square outside the U.N.

Representatives of Somalia, Djibouti and Kenya told the Council that they favored setting up a new U.N. mechanism to protect and promote human rights in Eritrea.

"There is an urgent need to ensure accountability," said Ethiopian Ambassador Negash Kebret Botora, calling the U.N. report conclusive, robust and extensive. He did not respond to Yemane's comments on Ethiopia's military posture.

(Reporting by Tom Miles, additional reporting by Edmund Blair in Nairobi; Editing by Larry King)

PUBLIC EDUCATION IN ERITREA:
The Norwegian Agency for Quality Assurance in Education (NOKUT) has given official recognition to all Higher Education qualifications from Eritrea and took action by including it on its database. By TesfaNews, March 17, 2016

This official recognition comes three years after NOKUT and NUCAS, the Norwegian Universities and Colleges Admission Service, assess the scope, level and qualifications of the seven Higher Education Institutions in the country. "We hope that this information [database] will be useful for the higher education sector, the various approval offices and employers in their work with Eritrean qualifications," said the statement posted on NOKUT website. Eritrea has seen a change in its higher education system in the period 2004–2010. The country's only accredited institution before higher education, the University of Asmara, was laid down and a number of its underlying faculties have restored to independent educational institutions in various parts of the country, and each of the institutions covers a single subject, which appears in the institution name.

The reform generally was not meant to introduce change in the system itself, but to change the number of institutions offering higher education in the country. As the result, higher education becomes more easily accessible to students living outside the capital for the first time.

NOKUT's recognition of higher education from Eritrea, therefore, includes all qualifications from these seven state accredited Higher Education institutions and not to private institutions, although the legislation allows for this. The seven Higher Educations institutions that are beneficiary from Norway's accreditation, and by default by all Nordic countries, are: the Eritrea Institute of Technology, Hamelmallo Agricultural College, College of Health Sciences, Orotta School of Medicine and Dental Medicine, College of Marine Sciences & Technology, College of Business and Economics, and the College of Arts and Social Sciences.

BISHA GOLD MINING IN ERITREA
Nevsun in Eritrea: Dealing With a Dictator - the fifth estate By CBC News March 25, 2016

When a small Vancouver mining company Nevsun struck gold in a remote corner of Africa, it started with so much promise. In remote Eritrea, Nevsun built a mine that was generating $700 million in profits in its first four years of operation. But it was also generating a lot of controversy – because Nevsun was partnered with a brutal dictatorship that runs the country and controls 40% of the mine. That has led to allegations by the UN and Human Rights Watch that the regime has used conscripted military labour in the mine. The Eritrea government has also been accused of funneling arms to the terrorist group al-Shabaab.

Nevsun denies the allegations of human rights abuses and insists it is a "template for responsible international business." What is the price of doing business with a dictator? Mark Kelley investigates.

A trip to Eritrea By Nicolas Germain – France 24
Text by Nicolas GERMAIN: 19-03-2016

Among African refugees in Europe, most come from one small nation, Eritrea. Why? France 24 were given rare access to the country and they went to find out. Reporter's notebook, by Nicolas Germain.

It's 1am when the plane lands in the small airport of Asmara, Eritrea's capital, which lies 2,400 metres above the sea. The last time I was here was ten years ago. Reporting for AFP and RFI was my first job as a free-lancer. It lasted nearly two years.

But these last few years, there has been no Western correspondent in Eritrea and very few visas are given to Western journalists. However there's been a change in recent months: reporters from Britain, Italy and now France have been given access to the country for a few days. My colleague Romeo Langlois and I were able to stay six days in the little-known Horn of Africa nation.

Since I last left, little has changed: it's still the same President Isaias Afeworki, who has been president since independence in 1993, there's still only one party and no free press. But I do notice there are fewer soldiers on the streets, fewer check-points on the roads to Keren and to the port of Massawa.

During these six days, a government minder from the information ministry was with us most of the time. But not all the time. We were able on several occasions to go and film in the capital alone, but most residents didn't want to answer questions about the political system.

According to the UN up to 5,000 people flee the country every month. Because of poverty, lack of freedom of expression, but above all, according to the people we spoke to, because of the poorly-paid indefinite national service. Some people do it for two years, others four, and some for more than a decade. This service can be carried out in the army, in an office or even in a café as a waiter.

One day on the road between Asmara and Keren we see about twenty men breaking huge rocks with sledgehammers. They tell us it's the national service and that they aren't paid enough. "No, it's a voluntary service," snaps their supervisor.

The authorities say the national service exists because of the border tensions with Ethiopia, following the 1998-2000 war that left some 80,000 people dead. A peace agreement said the small town of Badme belongs to Eritrea but to this day Ethiopia occupies it.

Asmara says the international community has not done enough to force Addis Ababa to accept the border ruling. It says the West favours Ethiopia, a vast country that is nearly twenty times more populated than Eritrea.

But are the tensions still strong? Several officials told us the situation along the border is quite calm. There has been no major incident for 16 years. We weren't given the authorisation to go and film the border area.

Some analysts rightly point out that diplomats and the media are prompt to talk about Eritrea's human rights violations and less so about Ethiopia's, yet it also has a poor track record. As a result Eritreans are given political asylum more easily than other Africans. In Germany, Switzerland and Scandinavia, more than 90 percent of Eritreans obtain it. But recently countries like Denmark and the UK have decided to make it harder for Eritreans to obtain this status.

And to try and stem the number of Eritreans arriving in Europe, Brussels has just announced it will give €200 million to Asmara. "It's shameful to support such a regime," one man told us. "Europe has been criticizing this government, and now to stop the flow of refugees it gives it a lot of money, even though the government has made no promises to reform the country or to release political prisoners."

When we asked Yemane Gebreab, one of the heads of the ruling party, if the eleven leaders arrested in 2001 after having criticized the president were still alive, he said Eritrea didn't answer this question "for reasons of national security".

The authorities didn't want us to film the border area with Ethiopia, but they were eager to show us the Bisha mine (gold, copper, zinc). The Canadian company Nevsun has a 60 percent stake in the enterprise, and the remaining 40 percent belongs to the State of Eritrea. Owning a large part of the country's firms is one of the major policies of this government, whose roots lie in a Marxist guerilla, the EPLF. It was the EPLF that fought with no outside help for three decades, from 1961 to 1991, for Eritrea to gain its independence from Ethiopia.

Another partnership has been set up by the government with the Italian construction firm Piccini. The aim is to build hundreds of new houses. We visited the site near Asmara where many employees told us they were soldiers, paid some 2,400 Nakfa per month (€160).

In this poor nation where the government doesn’t publish economic data, some businessmen nevertheless believe tourism will bloom here one day:

Asmara boasts stunning art deco architecture, there is the Red Sea and the Dahlak islands, and the old Ottoman port of Massawa.

Primo Giovanni Gebremeskel, who's half Italian, half Eritrean, is the owner of the huge Grand Hotel Dahlak in Massawa. This elderly man showed us round his beautiful hotel, regretting that nearly all his rooms are empty. "But in the next few years tourists will come here," he said.

Supporters of the regime say several factors could help the tourism industry: the streets are safe, there are no major problems among the different ethnic groups, among Christians and Muslims, and less corruption than in many other African countries. In Asmara there are many internet cafes – but wifi is slow and there is no 3G. And there is no personality cult here like there is in North Korea. In the streets of Asmara we only saw one poster of the president, where he's surrounded by many Eritreans.

But the opposition (which is in exile) says it's hard for tourists to obtain visas, and in the country foreigners need a travel permit every time they want to leave the capital.

In Asmara we met several Eritreans who grew up in Europe or the United States, and who after their university studies have come to live in their native land. They support the government and stress that education and health are free here. They told us the regime is slowly opening up.

Yet some diplomats are more skeptical. They say that until former guerilla leader Afeworki, who's 70, remains president, he's unlikely to implement radical reforms.

Eritrea security shot and killed 11 army conscripts in Asmara By

Ethiomedia April 6, 2016

ASMARA - Eritrean security guards on Sunday shot and killed six young army conscripts who tried to jump off trucks and flee, Eritrean opposition sources have reported.

Twenty-three conscripts were admitted to hospital with serious wounds, where five died later, thus rising the death toll to 11, according to the opposition website, assenna.com.

Six of the conscripts, one of them a female, were shot to death on the spot as five died later at Halibet Hospital, which has come under heavy security guard. Two of those five who died in the hospital were bystanders, the source said.

Eighteen truckloads out of 4,200 army conscripts trained in western Eritrea were passing through Asmara on Sunday on route to the distant army outposts near the Port of Assab when the killings took place in the heart of the Eritrean capital.

Parents and city residents who knew their children were passing through the city were crowding the streets when security guards opened fire and killed their children in full public view, Assena reported.

Shocked residents who tried to help the victims were beaten up and some of them arrested. In an unconfirmed melee, a police van was totally destroyed by angry folks. Fearing a citywide uprising, the government immediately deployed 46 security squads that were searching till 1:00am Monday morning, awate.com reported.

killings surfaced when the government of President Isaias Afewerki was preparing to celebrate its silver jubilee next May.

A damning report released in June by the UN commission of inquiry on human rights in Eritrea said: “Faced with a seemingly hopeless situation they feel powerless to change, hundreds of thousands of Eritreans are fleeing their country. In desperation, they resort to deadly escape routes through deserts and neighbouring war-torn countries and across dangerous seas in search of safety. They risk capture, torture and death at the hands of ruthless human traffickers.”

Hundreds of thousands have fled Eritrea. This ghastly massacre is a reminder why.
- Washington Post April 13, 2016

By Max Bearak

In Eritrea, your last year of high school is also your first year in the army. The nation fought a 30-year war against its much larger neighbor Ethiopia, and because of a continuing land dispute, still considers hostilities active. Although obligatory conscription isn't exactly unusual around the world, in Eritrea, there are three huge downsides: Your service is indefinite, you're not allowed to leave the country, and the pay is dismal — about $10 on the black market.

The rest of the world doesn't really hear much about the country, as the foreign press is mostly barred from entry, and Eritrea ranks dead last in Reporters Without Borders' press freedom index (behind North Korea).
But last week, unconfirmed reports began filtering through the crevices of the Internet about the possible killing of conscripts who attempted escape while being transported to a labor camp.

The most complete report describes a scene of utter chaos and desperation. Its version of the carnage goes like this: As a truck full of conscripts passed through the capital city of Asmara, two jumped out and were immediately shot by guards in the truck. Then, just down the road, a more planned breakaway happened. Some conscripts had apparently alerted their family members in Asmara that they were being transported across the country, and asked them to wait at a major intersection so that they could jump out of the truck and be quickly whisked away. Family members commandeered a city bus to block the road, but as the conscripts left the truck, they and their families were sprayed indiscriminately with bullets.

The numbers of dead and injured vary in the reports, ranging from four to 29. The tight-lipped Eritrean government indirectly acknowledged the incident in a tweet from its information minister, who claimed that it was an accident, and that two conscripts had fallen off the truck.

If the story is true, it offers a glimpse into the terrifying system of conscription and forced labor in Eritrea, and the lengths people are willing to go to escape it. The United Nations estimates that 5,000 Eritreans leave their country every month as refugees. The Wall Street Journal recently referred to Eritrea as one of the "world's fastest emptying nations." Many of them are young men, and researchers on the ground have noted that the ages of Eritrean refugees have gotten progressively younger, floating the idea that they are leaving prior to conscription. Ten Eritrean soccer players refused to get on a flight back to Eritrea after a tournament in Botswana in October, two years after another group did the same in Uganda and was granted asylum.

Last year, WorldViews reported on a U.N.-led inquiry of human rights violations in Eritrea. My colleague Adam Taylor summarized some of the findings:

The system leads to arbitrary arrests and detention, with torture and even enforced disappearances a part of life in Eritrea, the U.N. probe found, and even those who commit no perceived crime often end up in arduous and indefinite national service that may amount to forced labor. Escape is not a realistic option for many: Those who attempt to flee the country are considered 'traitors,' and there is a shoot-to-kill policy on the border, the report said."

In the first eight months of 2015, more than 30,000 Eritreans used the central Mediterranean smuggling route from Libya to Italy — more than any other group — and it is presumed that many if not most of the approximately 2,700 of those who drowned during the journey were Eritrean.

Beyond conscription, the country is one of the least developed in the world, with an abysmal Human Development Index rating, and is suffering through a prolonged drought. The country has no constitution, no court system, no elections and no free press.

The U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) gives prima facie designations to Eritrean asylum-seekers, which means they are presumed to have good reason. Eritrea says the United Nations is mistaking conscription for forced labor, and accuses the organization of fueling the exodus from the country. As refugees have begun to weigh heavily on European countries, and public opinion has shifted against open-door policies, some nations, such as Denmark, have imposed greater restrictions on Eritreans, citing fact-finding reports that say human rights violations in Eritrea are not as bad as previously thought.

The surge in Eritrean refugees in the past two years also raises the possibility that the Eritrean government is less and less able, or inclined, to stem the flow of those leaving. Refugees send back remittances that provide Eritrea with hard cash, and allowing them to leave might provide a safety valve to give the disaffected a way out that doesn't involve fighting the government. Source: Washington Post

FOREIGN POLICY DIARY:
Arab Coalition Expands in to The Horn of Africa

Jane's Defense Weekly April 18, 2016

The United Arab Emirates (UAE) appears to be constructing a new port next to Assab International Airport in Eritrea, which could become its first permanent military base in a foreign country.

Satellite imagery shows rapid progress has been made since work began sometime after September 2015. A square of coastline measuring about 250x250 m has already been excavated and dredged, while a pier and/or breakwater is being constructed and already extends over 700 m from the original coastline.

IHS Maritime & Trade data show that two vessels are currently working at the site. While neither have IMO numbers, one that has been at the site since 16 February is using the MMSI number 470331100 and the name Al Khatem .

ERITREA
Fb page vows to lift the lid on Eritrea's secret reign of terror

By Abraham T Zere, The Guardian April 27, 2016
Eritrea has become nicknamed 'Africa's North Korea' in recent years.

In a bid to upend years of secrecy in the country dubbed "Africa's North Korea", a new Facebook page is publishing documents claiming to show how the Eritrean government abuses its citizens.

In just two months, SACTISM – Classified Documents of the Dwindling PFDJ has garnered more than 16,000 followers on the social media site by alleging to have new information about human rights violations committed at the hands of president Isaias Afewerki's ruling party, the People's Front for Democracy and Justice.

The name "sactism" comes from a colloquial Arabic word that roughly translates as "nothing", and was coined by the anonymous whistleblower behind the page, who goes by the name Samuel.

Samuel claims he is an Eritrean underground blogger who once held a “key post” in the government but who later fled the country. He says he is now sorting through the documents he collected while working in the capital, and says he is determined to expose the regime.

Over the last decade, the Eritrean government has been branded one of world's worst human rights abusers, with Amnesty International estimating the country is holding at least 10,000 political prisoners in more than 360 secret prisons.

As a result, thousands of young men and women are fleeing the country. In 2014,50,000 Eritreans sought asylum in Europe, with the UN estimating that around 5,000 nationals continue to escape each month.

With such a severe crackdown on civil liberties, and with little information able to enter to leave the country, Sactism has garnered a significant amount of attention from the Eritrean diaspora, despite the fact that the documents are impossible to verify.

'Shaking the status quo'

In early February, posts appeared on Sactism claiming to show new information about the political prisoners and journalists who have been incarcerated for more than 14 years in Eritrea's secret prisons.

Samuel also published accompanying notes he claims originate from 2001, which offer information about the security agents who arrested the journalists and their subsequent treatment in the notoriously secretive prison in Eiraeiro.

"The page is shaking the status quo," says Daniel Mekonnen, a prominent Eritrean human rights lawyer living in Geneva. "Although it is difficult to ascertain the truthfulness of every information published on the page, some [readers] have already given their own independent opinion confirming the veracity – in whole or in part – of some of the information revealed," he says.

The allegations have also been read out on popular Eritrean radio stations abroad, such as Radio Assenna, and have been extensively republished on diaspora websites.

Blocks

President of PEN Eritrea in exile, Ghirmai Negash, describes Sactism "as a new genre in Eritrean writing, the importance of which lies in its subversive power in the context of a nation under tyranny."

But a few prominent figures have criticised the way in which Samuel is releasing the information. Awet Weldemichael, professor of African history at Queen's University, says he is concerned about the ethics of the way in which the information is being released.

“I am not sure if it helps to family and friends of the disappeared to learn it through Facebook,” he says, adding that he also worries about the authenticity of the documents.

Facebook initially blocked the page, originally published exclusively in Tigrinya, after a petition emerged claiming that Sactism was “inciting hatred”. Samuel then began publishing certain posts in English, and provided a short blurb to clarify his intentions to readers.

Though he’s been approached by various outlets, he says he has chosen to stick to publishing on social media to allow him to “operate at an individual level” and to be “part of the democratisation of information sharing”, he has written.

“The regime was surviving mainly through the dread of information sharing,” he explained in a post in February. As a result, he has made it his mission to fight “misinformation and secrecy”, promising that “all the information shared on the page is most accurate.”

INDEPENDENCE DAY (24th MAY 1991)
Eritreans are still waiting on freedom, 25 years after independence

WRITTEN BY Valerie Frank*
Exactly 25 years ago this month the Eritrean People’s Liberation Front marched into Asmara, sending the Ethiopian forces they had been fighting for 30 years scrambling out of the city. There was widespread elation. The underdogs had triumphed against an army that had been bankrolled for decades by American and then Russian finance.

Two years later a referendum overwhelmingly confirmed the country’s independence. And in 1994 the popular liberation front transitioned into the People’s Front for Democracy and Justice. It has ruled ever since, turning Eritrea into one of the most isolated countries in the world and dashing its population’s hopes of freedom and development.

Eritreans now make up a significant proportion of those entering Europe on dangerous crossings from Libya. From being a country relatively undiscussed in Europe five years ago, Eritrea is now at the forefront of policymakers’ minds on how to “stem” those movements.

How did it get to this point? And what dynamics are at play in this small state with a population of 5.1 million?

Major milestones since independence

Optimism about the future of Eritrea was high in the 1990s. The Liberation Front’s discipline and impressive achievements in providing services to areas under Ethiopian occupation resulted in a strong belief that Eritrea’s new government could produce similar successes. But the devastation caused by decades of fighting for liberation, compounded by conflicts with all its neighbors in the 1990s, undermined the country’s vision for progress.

Young people are leaving Eritrea, at a rate of 5,000 a month, driven by harsh conditions, poor pay and national service. The subsequent outbreak of the border conflict between Ethiopia and the now independent Eritrea in 1998 fundamentally altered the nation's course. It wreaked further devastation in the areas affected by the fighting around the countries' shared borders. It also entrenched Eritrea's militarization. Senior members of the ruling party maintain that with the border conflict as of yet still unresolved, Eritreans must remain in national and military service in case of repeat Ethiopian aggression.

This sense of constant threat has been used to legitimize the government's restrictions on freedom of speech, association, movement and the press. With 17 journalists in jail, the country ranks among the worst in the world for press freedom.

More recently, the United Nations (UN) imposed sanctions on the country for its alleged support for Al-Shabaab and its refusal to withdraw its troops from Djibouti following an inter-state conflict. Though no recent evidence has been found to suggest Eritrea's backing for the terrorist group, the UN appears reluctant to drop the sanctions until the Eritrean government permits UN observers to enter the country.

Social and economic development

Restrictions on movement into and around Eritrea makes understanding conditions there extremely difficult. More foreign journalists have visited in recent years, but reports of what is going on there are largely provided by state-controlled sources. Laudable successes in reducing child mortality, improving maternal health and combating infectious diseases must therefore be viewed with caution.

Accounts of people who have fled the country suggest glaring gaps in resource provision. Potable water and food are limited and rationed. Electricity is erratic and fuel regularly runs out. The country ranks 186 out of 188 on the UN Human Development Index.

A boom in the country's mining sector has provided one potential engine for economic growth, as has increased Chinese interest in various sectors. Money is also likely flowing to the ruling party in exchange for allowing countries – ironically including both Iran and Israel – to maintain military bases within its borders.

A loosening on import regulations and foreign exchange has boosted small-scale trading after years of heavy state control. But the private sector will remain underdeveloped if the majority of Eritrea's workforce are employed indefinitely, unproductively and against their will by the state, as appears to be currently the case.

Emigration

Young people are leaving Eritrea, at an estimated rate of 5,000 young people a month. This is driven by harsh conditions, poor pay ($10 per month) across civil and military employment, and disproportionate punishment associated with national service. This service is viewed as persecutory and as condemning individuals to a life of debilitating servitude. Conditions have been written about extensively elsewhere.

Electricity is erratic and fuel regularly runs out. Eritrea ranks 186 out of 188 on the UN Human Development Index.

Beyond this, young people feel smothered by the lack of opportunities and options within the country. Obtaining exit visas to study elsewhere, for example, is notoriously difficult even though further education within the country is immensely under-resourced.

Speculation also abounds that the youth's exodus constitutes a "safety valve" for the regime. The government is unable to provide opportunities within Eritrea. Allowing a certain number to leave – and send back remittances as a vital lifeline for family and friends back home – takes pressure off the government's national service programme and reduces the likelihood of youth agitating for change within the country.

Given this rather grim picture of conditions within Eritrea, are there any silver linings?

Success stories

In the past few years, the Eritrean regime has suggested that it will reduce the duration of national service, pay conscripts more per month and draft a new constitution. A document drawn up in 1997 was never implemented. There has unfortunately been no evidence of developments on any of these fronts.

Eritrea's modernist capital city, Asmara, is edging closer to being given UNESCO World Heritage status in recognition of its unique architectural style. This would provide money for much needed restoration work and, perhaps, put Eritrea on the tourist map.

The greatest success stories are arguably on the sporting front. Eritrean middle- and long-distance runners are gaining podium places in major international races. The nation's cyclists have shot to global fame after two riders – Daniel Teklehaimanot and Merhawi Kudus – became the first black Africans to race in the Tour de France last year.

If emigration from the country continues at the current scale, it is hard to imagine where Eritrea will stand in the coming years. Those leaving may provide vital remittances, which in 2006 were understood to constitute just under 40% of gross domestic product, but their exit will expose a gap in the country's demographic profile.

Agitation for political change from those who have left appears to have achieved little. Some insurrection has been noted within the country. The most notable were the events of Forto 2013, when the country's Ministry of Information was surrounded by disgruntled soldiers demanding political reform, and the Freedom Friday Movement, which has attempted to encourage citizens to undermine the government through small, subversive acts But the political system remains unchanged. It is unclear who or what will follow President Isaias Afewerki, who is 70 years old and unlikely ever to stand down.

The country's development will remain under-realized unless there is change on two fronts. First, in the country's leadership. Second, the impasse over the demarcation of the border with Ethiopia needs to be broken to end the excuse for Eritrea's continuing militarization. The international community must do more here to stick to the terms it brokered between the states in 2000.

For many of those celebrating 25 years since independence there is thus a heart-breaking truth being simultaneously acknowledged: that the respected fighters who so valiantly won them their freedom after decades in the trenches are so painfully and egregiously failing them – and the next generation – now.

This article appears under a pseudonym to protect the identity of the author who meets the criteria required to write for The Conversation.The ConversationThabo Leshilo, Editor, The Conversation*

This article was originally published on The Conversation. Read the original article. Source: http://qz.com…

EUROPE'S REFUGEE CRISES

Identity of 'smuggler' extradited to Italy questioned Authorities identify suspect as Medhane Yehdego Mered, but witnesses reportedly say it is a case of mistaken identity

Italian prosecutors are looking into claims that they got the wrong man in a major operation that led to the arrest and extradition of an Eritrean man presented as a major human smuggler.

On Wednesday, Italian and British anti-crime agencies announced the arrest of Medhane Yehdego Mered, who was caught in Sudan and flown to Italy to face trial. Italian police released a video of the man they said was Mered arriving at an airport in Rome, but Meron Estefanos, the Sweden-based executive director of the Eritrean Initiative on Human Rights, told Al Jazeera it was a case of mistaken identity.

Sudan extradites alleged people-smuggling kingpin to Italy.

Estefanos, who says she has interviewed Mered in the past, said the man in the footage was not Mered, but Medhane Tesfamariam Kidane, an Eritrean refugee living in Sudan.

"These are two different people," she said from Stockholm. "If you notice the one that the Italians have, he is shorter and younger, while the real Medhane Mered is older, a 36-year-old much taller [man]. If you see the pictures close-up, it just doesn't add up."

Estefanos also said she had spoken to relatives and friends of the man transferred to Italy who all "confirmed" that it was a different person.

"Just to be sure, I also interviewed many of the refugees that the actual smuggler has smuggled into Europe, and all say that it is not the same person," Estefanos added.

"He happened to have the same first name as the smuggler, but [it is] not the right person," she said. "I would not put my credibility just like this. I hope for the sake of this innocent young man, that they release him as soon as possible and apologise to him."

Borderless: Undercover with the People Smugglers

Earlier on Thursday, Francesco Lo Voi, chief prosecutor in the city of Palermo, had said the authorities were "carrying out the appropriate checks.

"At the moment all we can say is that the identification, arrest, handover and extradition to Italy of the fugitive were communicated to us in an official manner by [Britain's] National Crime Agency and by Sudanese authorities," the ANSA news agency quoted him as saying.

The suspect is being held in Rome's Rebibbia jail and is due to face his first interrogation on Friday, ANSA said.

A spokesman for the National Crime Agency (NCA) in London said it was too soon to comment on media reports, and referred further questions to Italian authorities.

Witnesses identified the detained man as Medhanie Tesfamariam Berhe, a 27-year-old refugee arrested in Sudan last month, not Mered.

'Completely innocent'

The suspect has been described as a ruthless criminal known as the "General," a self-styled name referring to Libyan strongman Muammar Gaddafi.

In a statement, the NCA said he was "one of the world's most-wanted people smugglers", while Italian police executive Renato Cortese said in a Wednesday press conference that he led "a criminal network that turns over millions of euros".

But unnamed friends of the arrested, quoted by the BBC, said his real name was Mered Tesfamariam. A woman in Norway who said she was his sister told the BBC's Newsnight programme that her brother was "completely innocent".

The Guardian, also quoting friends, named the man as Medhanie Tesfamariam Berhe, and said he was a 27-year-old refugee arrested in a street in Khartoum late last month.

"It's incredible - he's not a human trafficker. He's from my family," Fshaye Tasfai, an Eritrean refugee in Sicily, told the Guardian.

Two lawyers have been named to defend the Eritrean man held in Rome. Neither was immediately available for comment. Source: Al Jazeera and agencies

POLITICS

Refer Eritrea's human rights crimes to ICC, UN group says

By Associated Press June 8, 2016

JOHANNESBURG (AP) — Eritrea's "systematic, widespread" human rights abuses should be referred to the International Criminal Court as crimes against humanity that include enslavement and torture, a United Nations commission of inquiry said Wednesday.

The commission said the tiny Horn of Africa country has made no progress on the most critical rights violations the group first documented a year ago.

Eritrean refugees are one of the largest groups trying to cross the Mediterranean Sea to Europe. The new report says 47,025 Eritreans applied for asylum in Europe in 2015.

Rights groups say Eritrean President Isaias Afwerki, who has been in power since 1991, has become increasingly repressive.

"The crimes of enslavement, imprisonment, enforced disappearance, torture, persecution, rape, murder and other inhumane acts have been committed as part of a widespread, systematic campaign against the civilian population since 1991," commission chair Mike Smith told reporters in Geneva.

The commission's role was investigative, not prosecutorial, Smith said, stopping short of identifying any potential suspects or saying how many there are.

"Officials at the highest levels of state" bear responsibility for crimes against humanity, the report said, and the commission has compiled dossiers of evidence for a number of officials that "will be made available at the appropriate time to relevant institutions, including courts of law."

Eritrea's government quickly shot back. A statement from presidential adviser Yemane Gebreab accused the panel of being "entirely one-sided."

The three-member U.N. commission, which was not allowed to visit Eritrea, said many violations occur behind "the facade of calm and normality that is apparent to the occasional visitor to the country."

It highlighted the indefinite duration and abusive conditions of Eritrea's military service.

Smith estimated that between 300,000 and 400,000 people are enslaved in Eritrea, mostly through military conscription.

Jamey Keaten contributed from Geneva.

ERITREA UPDATES

Leaders should be tried for crimes against humanity: UN says By Tom Miles, Reuters June 9, 2016

GENEVA (Reuters) - U.N. human rights investigators accused Eritrean leaders on Wednesday of crimes against humanity including torture, rape, murder and enslaving hundreds of thousands of people and called for the case to be referred to the International Criminal Court.

Atrocities had been committed since the country's independence in 1991 and were continuing, the U.N. Commission of Inquiry said in a report that was immediately rejected by the government.

"Particular individuals, including officials at the highest levels of State, the ruling party - the People's Front for Democracy and Justice - and commanding officers bear responsibility for crimes against humanity and other gross human rights violations," the report said.

"We probably think there's 300,000-400,000 people who have been enslaved," Mike Smith, the Australian diplomat leading the inquiry, told a news conference, referring to people drafted into military service and sent away for years to remote areas.

Eritrea's poor treatment of its own people has motivated many thousands to flee the country, according to the U.N. refugee agency. Smith said he believed the country still had a "shoot-to-kill" policy on the borders to stop them. However, it seemed the policy was not being rigorously enforced, he said.

The inquiry has compiled files on key suspects to assist future prosecutions, but Smith declined to give details or to say if President Isaias Afwerki was among them.

Presidential Adviser Yemane Ghebreab said the report was biased and based on false evidence and failed to take into account Eritrea's achievements and the "continuing state of war" with neighbouring Ethiopia.

The central accusation of crimes against humanity was "laughable", he said, and compared the shoot-to-kill allegation to the claims of Iraqi weapons of mass destruction that preceded the 2003 U.S. invasion of Iraq, which later proved false.

Eritrea was a "low crime society" with only one or two rapes a year in a population of almost 4 million, he said. "Crimes in general are very rare in Eritrea. Anyone who has been to Eritrea will tell you that this is the case."

The report said visitors should not be fooled by the "general sense of calm and order" in the capital Asmara, because abuses were carried out in military training camps and detention centres.

"The facade of calm and normality that is apparent to the occasional visitor to the country, and others confined to sections of the capital, belies the consistent patterns of serious human rights violations," it added.

Eritrea's government did not allow the inquiry team to visit the country, although its diplomats met the investigators at the U.N. headquarters in New York and in Geneva.

The inquiry said there had been no improvement since a year ago when it published a 484-page dossier describing extrajudicial killings, widespread torture, sexual slavery and enforced labour. At the time it did not have a mandate to recommend referral to the ICC.

The U.N. Human Rights Council will debate the report on June 21, and Eritrea will be the subject of a resolution brought by other African countries. Diplomats say Eritrea lacks allies who will defend it.

"It's early days at the Human Rights Council," Yemane said. "The mood is much different now and people are much more aware."

(Reporting by Tom Miles; Editing by Andrew Heavens and Toby Chopra)

Eritrea confirms raging war with Ethiopia
Ethiomedia June 13, 2016

UPDATES - Eritrea on Sunday confirmed war with Ethiopia along the Tserona front.

In a press statement posted on Shabait, a government website, Eritrea said: "The TPLF regime has today, Sunday 12 June 2016, unleashed an attack against Eritrea on the Tsorona Central Front. The purpose and ramifications of this attack are not clear. The Government of Eritrea will issue further statements on the unfolding situation."

Counter to the statement by Eritrea, Asmara launched low-level, provocative military attacks one week ago along four fronts, and Ethiopian forces launched counter-offensive on Saturday June 11. Details follow:

Ethioia-Eritrea War rages along 4 fronts

MEKELLE, Ethiopia (June 12) - An all-out war between Eritrea and Ethiopia broke out on June 11 following Eritrea's provocative, low-level military attacks that began one week ago, an Ethiomedia reporter in this capital of Tigrai region has reported. Ethiopian forces have launched a counter-offensive and fighting is raging along Humera, Tsorena, Zalambessa and Badme, the source said. The four cited areas are prominent war fronts, though Badme was the flashpoint of the 1998-2000 Ethiopia-Eritrea War for which over 70,000 soldiers were killed on the Ethiopia side alone.

The latest flare-up of war is attributable to Eritrea's anger over the latest UN accusation that Eritrean leaders be tried for crimes against humanity for which Asmara believes Ethiopia is the author behind the punitive UN measures. Despite the ongoing fighting, both Asmara and Addis have remained silent, and no one knows where the latest war will lead to.

ERITREA
'Significant' casualities in Eritrea and Ethiopia border battle
AFP updates June 14, 2016
Arch-rivals Ethiopia and Eritrea traded blame Monday for a border battle in which "significant" casualties were reported, one of the worst clashes since the end of a 1998-2000 border war.

"There were significant casualties on both sides, but more on the Eritrean side," Ethiopian government spokesman Getachew Reda told AFP.

He said the battle that began Sunday was one of the most serious in recent years, noting that while the two sides had exchanged gun fire in the past, this clash was on a far larger scale. The fighting had reportedly calmed on Monday.

"We used to take precautionary measures against this regime, but this time was much more important in terms of magnitude than the measures that were taken so far," Getachew added.

Both sides blamed the other.

Ethiopia on Sunday "unleashed an attack against Eritrea on the Tsorona Central Front," Eritrea's ministry of information said in a statement.

Getachew instead claimed the fighting started when Eritrean artillery fired shells across the border.

"Eritrean forces started shelling our positions, including civilian ambulances, and we responded," said Getachew, who had initially claimed no knowledge of the fighting.

Eritrea won independence from Ethiopia in 1991 after three decades of war, but returned to battle in 1998-2000.

- Fortified frontier -

The two remain bitter enemies, with their troops still eyeing each other along the fortified frontier. Tensions are never far from the surface.

"The purpose and ramifications of this attack are not clear," Eritrea said, adding it "will issue further statements on the unfolding situation."

Eritrea and Ethiopia have long traded accusations of attacks and of backing rebels to needle each other.

In March 2012, Ethiopia attacked an Eritrean military base, accusing the country of supporting "terrorist activities" on its territory.

In February, Ethiopia accused Eritrea of being behind anti-government protests in the Oromia region last year which led to a violent clampdown by the government in Addis Ababa.

The two countries remain at odds over the flashpoint town of Badme, awarded to Eritrea by a United Nations-backed boundary commission but still controlled by Ethiopia.

It was not immediately possible to verify independently the scale of the clashes and exact reason they started.

Eritrea's media is ranked below North Korea as worst in the world for press freedom by Reporters Without Borders.

However, opposition Eritrean websites, run from abroad but with contacts inside the country, reported there were clashes along the border.

"Each side appears to be calling up reinforcement," Awate.com website reported.

The Asmarino website carried a statement from opposition campaigners appealing for calm. "The prospect of another war is inconceivable," the statement read.

Thousands of Eritreans risk their lives to flee the hardline regime every month according to the UN, fleeing across the border into Sudan and Ethiopia despite a shoot-to-kill policy along the frontier.

Those who escape describe crawling under razor wire, tiptoeing across minefields or sneaking past armed border guards in their bid for freedom.

Last week the United Nations Commission of Inquiry (COI) on human rights said the government of President Isaias Afwerki, in power since 1991, was guilty of systematic enslavement, forcible conscription and other abuses. Eritrea rejected the findings as "laughable."

Gedab News

Eritrean Deserters Triggered Eritrea-Ethiopia Border Clash

By Admas 14 Jun 2016, 15:59

Gedab News has received credible information that the shoot-out between Eritrean and Ethiopian border-patrol soldiers of last weekend was triggered when some of Eritrea's conscripted soldiers crossed the border to Ethiopia, were shot at by Eritrean soldiers, and members of armed Eritrean opposition groups hosted by Ethiopia returned fire.

Here's the timeline:

(a) On Saturday night, around midnight, Eritrean youth, mostly members of the National Service, crossed the border to Ethiopia. Past the border town of Tsorona, on the Ethiopian side, are at least three armed Eritrean opposition groups;

(b) Members of Eritrean Defense Forces (EDF) pursuing the escapees and deserters fired their guns;

(c) Members of Eritrea's opposition groups returned fire;

This exchange goes on from midnight to four am on Sunday morning, with the Eritrean Defense Forces escalating by using mortars and RPGs;

By 5:00 am, the Ethiopian National Defense Forces (ENDF) joined the fray and the Eritrean opposition groups retreat from the area;

From 5:00 am Sunday until mid-afternoon Monday, the EDF and ENDF call re-enforcement and exchange heavy artillery fire, with Ethiopian forces penetrating into Eritrea and Eritreans waging counter-offensive.

The Ethiopian government's initial statement that there were "no clashes" is either because it was not aware of the clash between the Eritrean Defense Forces and Eritrean opposition or, more likely, that it doesn't want to draw attention to the fact that it is hosting armed Eritrean opposition groups.

Similarly, the Eritrean government is not going to admit that it is engaged in a civil war with Eritreans since it doesn't even recognize that they exist.

Despite the fact that Ethiopian government spokesperson has reported "significant casualties on both sides", the international community is yet to voice its concern and call on both parties to de-escalate the tense environment.

Supporters of the Eritrean government have already begun pointing to the conflict as justification for why Eritrea needs to maintain a large conscript army pressed into indefinite service. The battle also highlights the fact that the Eritrea-Ethiopia border remains un-demarcated due to Ethiopia's refusal to abide by the ruling of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission, and, despite representations made by the International community that they would apply pressure on the party which doesn't comply, they have not.

Opponents of the Eritrean government are also pointing out to the conflict to demonstrate that for as long as the "National Service" remains indefinite and Eritrean youth are forced into harsh labor, its members will use every avenue, even the militarized border between Eritrea and Ethiopia, to risk death and try to escape.

Additionally, the fact that there are still exiled armed groups, twenty-five years after Eritrea's independence, demonstrates the absence of the right to organize, assemble and practice peaceful politics within your own country.

It is unclear if the guns are silent now. Eritrea's president, Isaias Afwerki, has given orders to the Eritrean Defense Forces to remain in a state of alert and to anticipate an offensive from Ethiopia.

Over the years, whenever the government of Ethiopia battled with Eritrea-hosted Ethiopian opposition groups, it had repeatedly threatened that any future military engagement with Eritrea would result in Ethiopia taking overwhelming measures to ensure that such engagements would not be repeated. In this engagement, the Ethiopian opposition forces do not seem to have been involved. Source: http://awate.com/deserters-combatants-t ... ia-battle/

Ethiopia-Eritrea border clashes fuel fears of war
By Jeffrey Gettleman June 14, 2016
Nairobi, Kenya: The Eritrean Embassy in Kenya sent a text message alert Monday morning: The Ethiopians had attacked. Fighting on the border. Situation unfolding.

The jagged line separating Eritrea from its former ruler, Ethiopia, has been one of Africa's most combustible flash points. Tens of thousands of soldiers died from 1998 to 2000 in a war that had been called as pointless as two bald men fighting over a comb.

As the news of renewed clashes in the rocky, barren frontier began to spread Monday, many Ethiopians and Eritreans feared the worst.

Witnesses said both sides were rushing troops to the Tsorona border area, and heavy artillery was apparently fired from both sides. On the Eritrean side, several people were reported to have been killed. The reports of fighting and the lack of solid information raised fears that the two countries could be sliding once again toward all-out war.

But by Monday afternoon, the extent of the fighting was unclear. The Ethiopian government said Eritrea started it. Getting more information out of Eritrea is like trying to see into a pitch-dark room: The government is one of the most secretive, isolated and repressive nations in the world.

Just last week, a UN panel accused Eritrea's leaders of committing crimes against humanity, including murder, rape and enslavement.

According to Meron Estefanos, a journalist and activist from Eritrea living in Sweden who maintains a large network of contacts in Africa, anger at the government is steadily rising within Eritrea, and the shelling across the border may have been started by Eritrea as a distraction.

"There is no reason for Ethiopia to start a war right now," Estefanos said. "It just doesn't add up when everything is going their way." "But," she added, "if there is a war, or the rumour of a war, it could be a way for the Eritrean government to get support and divert attention". Source: New York Times

United States Sets Stage for Libya-Like Regime Change in Eritrea

Posted by Álvaro d'Escoto on June 15, 2016

The U.S. is moving towards war against Eritrea, a fiercely independent African nation of only six million people. Washington has deployed its UN "human rights" proxies to justify another "humanitarian" military intervention, remarkably like the UN-sanctioned aggression against Libya, in 2011. The UN panel charges Eritrea with "enslaving" and murdering its own people – a pack of imperial lies. Obama is set to add another war to his bloody legacy.

By Glen Ford
"Eritrea's fierce independence has put it in imperialism's crosshairs."

The United States is methodically setting the stage for a so-called "humanitarian" military intervention against the small northeast African nation of Eritrea, under legal pretexts much like those used to justify NATO's war of regime change against Libya, in 2011. As in Libya, the U.S. has hijacked the United Nations human rights apparatus to claim a "responsibility to protect" (R2P) Eritrea's citizens from alleged abuses by their own government. War and regime change are the intended result.

Washington engineered UN sanctions against Eritrea, beginning in 2009, on the patently bogus charge that Eritrea's determinedly secular government provided "political, financial and logistical support" to Islamist Shabaab fighters in Somalia. Islamic jihadism is anathema to Eritrea, whose population of six million on the shores of the Red Sea is about evenly divided between Muslims and Christians. But few people in the United States knew Eritrea existed, much less its secular revolutionary history and politics. The lies stuck, as did the sanctions, even after the UN Human Rights Council conceded there was no further evidence of Eritrean aid to the Shabaab.

A three-person UN panel now alleges that Eritrea is a lawless state that has committed "crimes against humanity," enslaving up to 400,000 people and engaging in murder, forced disappearances, rape and torture. Mark Smith, the Australian chairman of the UN Commission of Inquiry on Human Rights in Eritrea, demands that Eritrea be put on trial before the International Criminal Court, a body that has indicted only Africans – and only those that were on the wrong side of U.S. foreign policy – since its creation in 2002. Smith laid the legal groundwork for the overthrow of the Eritrean government:

"There is no genuine prospect of the Eritrean judicial system holding perpetrators to account in a fair and transparent manner. The perpetrators of these crimes must face justice and the victims' voices must be heard. The international community should now take steps, including using the International Criminal Court [ICC], national courts and other available mechanisms, to ensure there is accountability for the atrocities being committed in Eritrea."

"The UN commission demands that Eritrea be put on trial before the International Criminal Court, a body that has indicted only Africans."

In February of 2011, the United Nations Security Council, led by the U.S., Britain and France, referred the case against Libya to the ICC, to provide a criminal justice rationale for the military assault that was already underway against Muammar Gaddafi's government. This time, Washington has instructed its UN proxies to give "humanitarian" legal cover in advance for an attack on Eritrea. The demonization campaign is built around two Big Lies: one, that Eritrea's system of national service – a form of draft, which is the right of all nations – amounts to "slavery"; and two, that domestic oppression in Eritrea is a prime source of African refugees to Europe, with the tiny nation allegedly accounting for more cross-continental emigration than every other country except war-ravaged Syria.

National service in Eritrea, as in many other countries, includes not only military duty on the front lines with Ethiopia – which still occupies parts of Eritrea in clear violation of an international arbitration agreement – but also labor in public works projects as well as service in health and education infrastructures. (Most teachers in Eritrea, for example, are national service workers.) Lots of folks would call that socialism or nation-building – which is how the Eritreans see it.

The Eritreans defend extended national service on grounds of necessity, citing an existential threat from the Ethiopian military, backed to the hilt by Washington. Economic sanctions have also necessitated that Eritrea mobilize the population to develop its own national resources. However, self-reliance is also a cornerstone of Eritrean domestic development policy, and seen as central to maintaining true national sovereignty and independence. Eritrea rejects foreign "aid" and entanglements with structures of international capital, and is one of only two nations in Africa that has no relationship with AFRICOM, the U.S. military command on the continent (Zimbabwe is the other).

"It is insane to believe that little Eritrea, with only six million people, has set more people to flight than neighboring Ethiopia, one of the poorest countries in the world, with a population 15 times greater."

Eritrea's fierce independence has put it in imperialism's crosshairs. Eritrea is "Africa's Cuba" – and the United States treats it as such in a striking variety of ways. Indeed, the other Big Lie against Eritrea – that it is the second largest contributor to the waves of refugees risking life and limb to reach Europe – is directly related to European immigration policies, urged on them by the U.S., that put Eritrea in much the same bind as U.S. policy towards Cuba.

It is insane to believe that little Eritrea, with only six million people, has set more people to flight than neighboring Ethiopia, one of the poorest countries in the world, now in the throes of a devastating drought, with a population 15 times greater; or neighboring Sudan, also desperately poor and afflicted by multiple wars, with 40 million people; or nearby Somalia, a nation without a state, inhabited by 10 million people. Indeed, economic, political and war refugees from all across Africa claim to be Eritrean because, unlike citizens of any other African country, Eritrean refugees are afforded special status on arrival in Europe as presumptive political refugees who might face torture if returned home. As with U.S. Cuba policy, the Eritrean exception was designed to weaken and destabilize the country through a brain and human resource drain. Inevitably, however, the policy has made Eritrean identification papers the hottest selling documents on the streets of Khartoum and other refugee gathering points. Europe is awash, as is Israel, with fake Eritreans fleeing various military, political and economic catastrophes – most of them rooted in Euro-American foreign destabilization policies and the global capitalist Race to the Bottom.

If Latin Americans could pass for Cubans, the populations of U.S. "Little Havanas" would number in the tens of millions, full of Hondurans, Guatemalans, Salvadorans and Mexicans.

"Economic, political and war refugees from all across Africa claim to be Eritrean."

Ethiopians pass most easily as Eritreans, since millions of them share the same ethnic background. About half of Eritreans are Tigrayan, the ethnic group that is the fourth largest in Ethiopia and dominates the ruling party in Addis Ababa. The Austrian Ambassador to Ethiopia, Andreas Melan, last year estimated that "among the thousands of Eritrean migrants in Europe, 30 to 40 percent are Ethiopians." That may be an underestimate. And many more "Eritreans" actually hail from as far away as West Africa.

The Eritrean ambassador to Israel believes that Ethiopians account for half of the purported Eritreans seeking refugee status in that country. "They know the Eritreans automatically receive a six-month visa, so they pretend to be Eritrean," said the ambassador.

The Eritrean refugee scam is an open secret all across Europe, and is well known to the American and European governments. The Big Lie is maintained to serve imperial purposes, and will now be deployed to justify an armed assault on Eritrea as an alleged mass enslaver and rogue nation. The UN Commission of Inquiry on Human Rights in Eritrea will submit its manufactured findings to the Human Rights Council on June 21, setting the imperial lynch mob in motion.

“They know the Eritreans automatically receive a six-month visa, so they pretend to be Eritrean.”

Eritrea cannot expect a fair hearing from a UN apparatus that is puppeteered from Washington. As the Eritrean government stated in its preliminary response to the UN commission’s charges:

“The purposes of national service in Eritrea are clearly stated in a legal proclamation of 1994 and are three-fold: national defense, economic and social development and national integration. The service is not indefinite although for a time and in certain cases it has been prolonged due the already explained existential threat of war.”

The commission based its findings on the testimony of about 800 (alleged) Eritreans interviewed in various foreign cities, while ignoring the 42,000 Eritrean expatriates that have petitioned the world body to lift sanctions against their home country.

The UN panel is ignoring what is “effectively a continuing state of war with Ethiopia, the illegal occupation of Eritrean territory which constitutes a flagrant violation of human rights, repeated armed aggression, sanctions and mistaken policies that consider almost all Eritreans asylum-seekers,” said Eritrean government spokesperson Yemane Gebreab. That’s a diplomatic way of putting it. By referring the case to the International Criminal Court, and implicitly threatening military action against Eritrea, the commission has become a warmonger.

On Monday, the New York Times reported that thousands of Ethiopian and Eritrean troops were rushing towards the disputed border, the site of heavy artillery duels. The Times quoted an Eritrean dissident living in Sweden as their expert of the moment. “If there is a war, or the rumor of a war, it could be a way for the Eritrean government to get support and divert attention,” said the dissident. The newspaper also relayed a Twitter message from an Eritrean American in his homeland’s capital. “Here in Asmara, it’s peaceful despite #EthiopianAttacks against #Eritrea on the Tsorona front. And you wonder why there’s national service?”

President Obama seems intent on adding War #8 to his imperial legacy.

NEWS ANALYSIS

Latest Ethiopia-Eritrea Clash is Culmination of Long-festering Tensions

By Salem Solomon, VOA June 17, 2016

Despite a lull after hostilities earlier this week, tensions remain high across the militarized border between Ethiopia and Eritrea.

Eritrea claimed Thursday it had killed more than 200 Ethiopian troops and wounded more than 300. A Ministry of Information statement did not say how many Eritrean troops were killed or wounded.

There has been no independent confirmation of the figures released by Eritrea in a government statement Thursday.

In an interview with VOA's Horn of Africa Service, Ethiopia's Communications Minister Getachew Reda suggested the figures are inaccurate but stopped short of denying them.

He also said Ethiopia has no interest in disclosing its assessment of damages during the battle.

'Active hostilities'

Reda added that "active hostilities ... launched by the regime in Asmara" were stopped, and Ethiopia was prepared to repel what it views as Eritrean hostilities.

“What we do next will ultimately depend on what the regime in Asmara decides to do next,” Reda said.

Awet Weldemichael, a professor of history at Queen’s University in Kingston, Canada, said despite the fact that these clashes were dismissed by some as “skirmishes” similar to others that have periodically flared up, they were quite serious.

“These involved heavy bombardment using medium- and long-range artillery weapons and it went on both sides," Weldemichael said. "These were not mobile units or militia using their handguns or light weapons. So that makes it different in scale which means that there are damages endured by either or both sides."

He also said the Eritrean ministry statement issued Thursday that cited casualties must be viewed cautiously and skeptically since there is no independent media on the ground to corroborate it.

U.S. State Department spokesman John Kirby issued a statement Tuesday stating that the U.S. is concerned about military action and called on both governments to “exercise restraint and engage in political dialogue,” referencing the 2000 Cessation of Hostilities Agreement.

On Wednesday, U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon held a pre-scheduled meeting with Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn and discussed the conflict, stressing that both parties need to continue the "application of restraint and a peaceful resolution through political means."

Nkosazana Dlamini-Zuma, chairperson of the Commission of the African Union (AU), similarly stated that Ethiopia and Eritrea need to refrain from statements and actions "likely to aggravate the situation and further endanger regional stability."

Time for solutions

International observers said the June 12 clash between Eritrean and Ethiopian forces is just the latest of a long series of violent incidents that have erupted between the two nations over the past five years.

Among those closely following the events is Cedric Barnes, the Nairobi-based Horn of Africa project director for the International Crisis Group.

Since 2011, there have been eight confrontations along the militarized border, Barnes said. Some have directly involved the national militaries of the two countries, while others involve rebel groups supported by one side or the other.

"Once it seems that this action has died down and various forces withdrawn maybe to their original positions it [reoccurs] nevertheless and shows how tense the border is, how vulnerable it is to flare ups," Barnes said.

He said that reliable information about the latest incident is difficult to come by with many of the accounts coming from people who are not on the ground. Tensions have heightened recently with Ethiopia threatening to take proportional military action if it saw a threat.

"It is very difficult to say that what particularly precipitated this incident apart from the fact that the very presence and unresolved nature of that border means that the tensions can spill over very quickly," Barnes said.

He said that over the past several years Eritrea has become more confident in its international standing and better funded due to its participation in the Saudi-led coalition in Yemen, the United Arab Emirates use of Eritrea's port of Assab and its engagement with the European Union.

"Eritrea was really on the back foot, but now it feels a little bit more secure and Ethiopia is more concerned about the capacity of Eritrea to cause it trouble," he said.

However, Weldemichael, of Queen's University, said the responsibility is now squarely on the governments of Ethiopia and Eritrea.

The international community has lost years' worth of opportunities to push both in the right direction, he said.

"Whatever the reality on the ground, this is tragic. It's going to be another tragedy of epic proportions for these two countries to go back to conflict however low intensity," Weldemichael said.

"It's high time that the international community gears up to address the root causes of this problem and compel the two countries to abide by international law and normalize relations," he added.

Salem Solomon is a journalist and web producer at Voice of America's Horn of Africa Service, where she reports in English, Amharic and Tigrigna. Her work has appeared in The New York Times, Poynter.org, Reuters and The Tampa Bay Times. Salem researches trends in analytics and digital journalism, and her data-driven work has been featured in VOA's special projects collection.

NEWS ANALYSIS

A Wake-Up Call for Eritrea and Ethiopia

By Cedric Barnes June 17, 2016

By Cedric Barnes

A 12 June clash between Eritrea and Ethiopia comes as the Horn of Africa's two most implacable rivals face a crossroads.

As Asmara seeks ways out of its long isolation, and Addis Ababa seeks to maintain and expand its role on the global stage, they and their partners would be wise to turn this new outbreak of violence into an opportunity to seek a compromise settlement to their long-running border dispute. Otherwise, the risk remains of sinking into a destructive new round of conflict in which both would lose.

Details are hazy and contested, but the fighting near the border town of Tserona appears to be the most serious conventional military engagement for some time. Despite the impression of a frozen conflict since the 1998-2000 war that killed an estimated 70,000 people, there have been at least eight significant flare-ups since 2011, often involving rebel groups sponsored by one or the other of the two belligerents. Indeed, one theory for the Tserona clash is that it is a response by Addis Ababa to an armed action by the Asmara-linked Ginbot 7 group in southern Ethiopia in May.

Still, Eritrea has not always been at daggers drawn with Ethiopia, from which it won independence in 1991, especially since both post-1991 governments were led by former rebel fronts that had (mostly) fought together during the 1970s and 1980s. Recent shifts in Eritrea and Ethiopia's international and regional standing, and relative internal vulnerabilities, may offer opportunity to end the two-decades-long estrangement.

Border Impasses

The international community has done very little to push for a resolution of the border issue since 2008, mostly because neither side has appeared to believe it is in their interest to pursue it.

Both sides actions' have blocked international efforts to end the dispute, despite the Algiers Agreement of 2000 that ended hostilities with both parties' agreement to binding international arbitration. The Ethiopia Eritrea Boundary Commission (EEBC) ruled in 2002 awarding gains to and extracting losses from both sides, but, in what proved the biggest obstacle to peace, awarding of the original trigger-point of Badme to Eritrea.

Ethiopia refused to implement the ruling without further consultations.

Eritrea refused to talk before action on implementation. Faced with losing diplomatic good will in 2004, Ethiopia offered a "Five Point Plan" for negotiations and normalisation of relations; on justifiable legal grounds, but with less diplomatic finesse, Eritrea refused. In late 2007, after Ethiopia had ceased its cooperation with the EEBC, it declared a virtual demarcation and dissolved itself. In 2008, facing increasingly hostile Eritrean deployments in the Temporary Security Zone patrolled by the United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea (UNMEE), that too wound down operations.

Diplomats put the dispute on the back burner as other imperatives for regional peace and stability demanded attention, including the resolution of the Sudanese civil war, the Darfur conflict, the independence of South Sudan and attempts to reestablish formal government in Somalia. Nevertheless, Ethiopia and Eritrea's rivalry has played a complicating role in all of these processes, crises and conflicts.

Even worse, Eritrea's frustration toward what it perceived as the international system's failure to pressure Ethiopia into implementing the 2002 border ruling led it to take unilateral initiatives to keep its rival on the back foot. This is reported to have included assistance to the Somalia's Islamist extremist and al-Qaeda-affiliated Al-Shabaab.

Global opinion soon branded Eritrea as a regional spoiler. The international community slapped on sanctions in 2009, included Eritrea in the United Nations Monitoring Group on Somalia and Eritrea in 2010 and then established a United Nations Commission of Inquiry into Human Rights in 2014; its latest report condemning Eritrea's "systematic, widespread and gross human rights violations" was published a week previous to the Tserona clash.

Asmara's Wilderness Years

From 2009, Eritrea was regionally and diplomatically isolated by the sanctions regime, its own decision to "suspend" itself from East Africa's regional peace and security organisation, the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD), and its parallel absence until 2011 from the new African Union, based in the capital of its Ethiopian rival.

Internally, losses in the 1998-2000 war triggered a downward spiral.

High-ranking officials who criticised the conduct of the war were incarcerated without trial and systemic internal repression became the norm. The country remained on a war footing and the already shaky economy nose-dived. Mandatory and prolonged national service (beyond the official eighteen months) for those aged between eighteen and 40 became an integral part of the state regulation of daily life.

President Isiais Afewerki, a guerrilla leader once lionised by international opinion, looked increasingly belligerent and autocratic in power, with ill-health doing little to improve his humour in public. A growing number of young people chose to leave in search of economic opportunity, as in the rest of the Horn. In Eritrea's case, youth were particularly anxious to avoid national service and used well-developed paths for refugees and diaspora forged during the 30-year independence struggle.

Ethiopia, meanwhile, was riding high. It had suffered a post-war political crisis which split the regime's core Tigrayan People Liberation Front in 2001; disputed elections in 2005 that led to violent protest and repression; a pervasive closure of political space including restrictive legislation on non-governmental organisations. But Addis Ababa also managed to retain international support for its development agenda in support of the poor; its contribution to peacekeeping in the region; and robust action in Somalia that fit with the U.S.-led global "war on terror".

Latterly, Addis Ababa also delivered impressive economic growth. In Prime Minister Meles Zenawi, Ethiopia had an international star, who, with an experienced diplomatic cadre, made sure national interests chimed with those of the international community. The country sustained this balancing act even after his death in 2012.

Eritrea's luck turns

In the last few years, the pendulum has swung back in Eritrea's favour, and - against expectations - the government has used the opportunity to regain status in the Horn that it had so completely lost to Ethiopia.

Proof of support to Al-Shabaab has not been forthcoming for several years. While links with other rebel groups continue, they don't threaten international interests. Most importantly, its dire economic isolation - despite continuing sanctions - has eased.

Revenues have been helped by the large Bisha mine, which began producing gold, silver, copper and zinc in 2011. But even though many hopes for self-reliance were staked on the new business, external factors were more important. The European Union and its member states, anxious to assist the regime in stemming the flow of migrants toward the Mediterranean, have offered renewed development assistance of €200 million in late 2015.

Then the Huthi-takeover of Yemen and the Saudi-led alliance to oust them suddenly made Eritrea's long and adjacent Red Sea coast extremely strategic. Money that the president had periodically extracted from certain Gulf states was suddenly offered in greater quantities. The United Arab Emirates (UAE) reportedly spent hundreds of millions of dollars to lease the port of Assab, mothballed since the border-conflict ended its sole function as Ethiopia's main entrepot. The leadership will feel vindicated that their strategic patience has paid off, and President Isiais, despite reports of emergency medical interventions abroad, survives as leader.

Ethiopia - at least compared with when Prime Minister Meles was the regional first among equals - is struggling to maintain the unqualified support of the international community. Though it continues to play a vital role in regional mediation and security - including in South Sudan and Somalia - and its economy is still viewed with admiration, the longstanding criticism of its dirigiste approach to economic development and intolerance for political opposition is increasingly heard.

Prime Minister Haile-Mariam Desalegn, who occasionally makes reformist noises and whose background as a non-Orthodox Christian from a small "southern" ethnic group is testament to Meles's vision of a new Ethiopia, leads more collectively but without the intellectual fizz and decision of his mentor. The ruling party is unusually open about its internal disagreements, corruption is a growing problem, and drought and famine have returned.

Ethnic Oromo protests that began last November and rumbled on for several months were clumsily contained; they were only half-heartedly blamed on Eritrea, an allegation that no one really believed. Ethiopia's well trained and armed military probably knows that delivering a decisive blow against Eritrea may fatally damage the regime and risk (another) complicated civil war on its doorstep. A policy of robust containment has been pursued instead, but that looks increasingly difficult to sustain.

Tserona's Wake-up Call

Given the reversals of fortune, and Ethiopia's regular warnings that it would take action against Eritrea if it perceived a threat, the Tserona incident should not have come as a surprise. That it should have alarmed domestic and international observers alike is recognition that this particular fault line is not dormant and that recent seismic shifts of the plates of regional power make it particularly unstable right now.

Ethiopia, despite slightly changed circumstances, still holds most of the military, economical and political cards. It will take (uncontested) the seat reserved for African states as a non-permanent member of the United Nations security council for 2017-18, meaning sanctions on Eritrea are unlikely to ease.

However the Tserona incident could also be a wake-up call that after a decade on the sidelines, the stalemate of no peace, no war is unsustainable. The regional and international context is shifting on both sides of the equation. Ethiopia's enduring friends and Eritrea's renewed acquaintances should once again try to find a new diplomatic track toward resolving the border issue.

Cedric Barnes is Horn of Africa Project Director at International Crisis Group, the independent conflict-prevention organisation.*

ANALYSIS

The Human Rights Council: Saudi Arabia and Eritrea

By Dawit W. Giorgis June 23, 2016

The Saudi Arabia and Eritrean stories on human rights violations exhibit graphically the anomalies and inconsistencies of positions being taken by the United Nations on issues related to Human Rights.

In 2013 European Union declared Wahabism as the main source of global terrorism. In 2001 the Pentagon labeled Saudi Arabia as the “kernel of evil.” Fifteen of the nineteen, 9/11 terrorists are from Saudi Arabia. Al-Qaida and it’s affiliates, Al-Qaida in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM), Al Shabab, Al Nusra front in the Middle East, Al-Qaida in the Arabian Peninsula (AQUAP), Boko Haram and ISIS are the products of Wahhabi radicalization and Saudi Arabia funding. It is now generally acknowledged that the root of violent extremism is the Wahhabi ideology. The former CIA Director James Woolsey told Congress: "One analogue for Wahhabis’ political influence today might be the extremely angry form taken by much of German nationalism in the period after World War I…. Just as angry and extreme German nationalism of that period was the soil in which Nazism grew, Wahhabi Islamist extremism today is the soil in which al Qaeda and its sister terrorist organizations are growing." Internally, Saudi Arabia is the most oppressive government in the world violating every letter in the International Human Rights Law, by enslaving its people, torturing and abusing immigrants and implementing the most primitive system of justice. And yet for decades the US and Europe have supported Saudi Arabia and condoned the expansion of its version of Islam, Wahabism.

Saudi Arabia bribes and blackmails its way out of condemnation for its human rights abuses in its own country and fomenting trouble in other countries. Recently Saudi Arabia blackmailed the UN Secretary General who, in unprecedented move, was forced to take the name Saudi Arabia out of the UN report, which accused Saudi Arabia of committing war crimes against children in Yemen. UN Investigators had found that the Saudi coalition was to blame for the deaths of more than half of the 510 children killed in the conflict in Yemen last year. Ban Ki-Moon said the removal of Saudi Arabia from the list was "one of the most painful and difficult decisions" he has had to make as Secretary General. He described the pressure exerted as "unacceptable." But he had the power to say no and exercise other options. Sajjad Mohammad Sajid, Oxfam Director in Yemen stated: "It appears that political power and diplomatic clout have been allowed to trump the UN's duty to expose those responsible for the killing and maiming of more than 1,000 of Yemen's children." Amnesty International wrote: "The credibility of the United Nations is on the line after it shamefully caved in to pressure to remove the Saudi Arab military coalition from the UN's list of states and armed groups that violate children's rights in conflict,"

In it's 2015/2016 report Amnesty International reports that Saudi Arabia "continued to severely restrict freedoms of expression, association and assembly. The authorities arrested, prosecuted and imprisoned human rights defenders and government critics, including under the 2014 anti-terror law, often after unfair trials. Some of those detained were prisoners of conscience. Torture and other ill-treatment of detainees remained common."

Here is a government that has violated every letter of the human rights law and has waged war, not only on its people, but on all humanity and yet being forgiven by the highest institute of international justice and law. Does this not make the UN complicit in crimes against humanity?

During the same week we witnessed a small poor country, Eritrea, condemned by the experts of the UN Human Rights Council and accused of crimes against humanity. Unlike Saudi Arabia, Eritrea is not swimming in oil, rather struggling to come out of poverty. It has its own political and governance issues like many other African countries and a stressed relationship with its neighbor, Ethiopia. It has serious problem which it needs to address so that it becomes an active and equal participant in global and regional affairs and in the affairs of African Union. But whatever problem it has cannot warrant such a grossly misguided and biased report and recommendation. It is so easy for the UN and the most powerful governments to accuse and punish small poor countries who do not have leverage in the international system and cannot exert “pressures “ like Saudi Arabia which continues to oppress its people and create international havoc with impunity.

If the Human Rights Council goes ahead and accepts the recommendation of the committee of experts it will indeed be seen as a classic action to destabilize a nation. And this will not be in the interest of Ethiopia, the neighboring countries, its other neighbors, the region and the world as a whole. Eritrea’s strategic location is too critical to be ignored. The only way forward is meaningful engagement with Eritrean government and its neighbors to bring about regional stability. Eritrea is in-between several unstable states including Yemen across the Red Sea, which separates Africa from the Arabian Peninsula. The Gulf of Aden is one of the most important shipping routes, and the second most dangerous maritime zone in the world, next to the Gulf of Guinea.

Instability in Eritrea will invite proxy wars in the region with several players (US, Ethiopia, North and South Sudan, Somalia, Kenya, Djibouti, Yemen, Saudi Arabia, Egypt), the kind of war that can only be compared to what we see in Syria. The stakes are high and the interests of each of these countries vary significantly. The horn of Africa is one security complex and the most explosive region in the world with numerous interstate and intrastate problems. Paramount concern should be regional security and stability. Africa Union, and US policies in the horn are geared towards engagement and regional stability. The UN Human Rights Council should be supporting this effort not undermine it by approving this report and recommendation which is unfair and founded on double standard. Taking punitive measures based on this report will obviously offend the sense of justice of Africans and further isolate Eritrea, breed belligerence and create obstacles for peaceful resolution of all outstanding issues through constructive dialogue.

ERITRO-ETHIOPIA BORDER SKIRMISHES

Issaias Affewerki places troops on high alert over Ethiopia border clashes

(IBTimes) June 15, 2016:

Eritrean President Issaias Affewerki is believed to have placed his troops on high alert after intense clashes broke out in the border region between his country and Ethiopia. The fighting was one of the worst in more than a decade in the Horn of Africa region raising fears of a fresh war.

According to the local daily awate.com, Issaias has instructed the forces in the border region to expect a renewed offensive from the former colonial ruler.

Ethiopia and Eritrea – both bitter arch-rivals – have remained at loggerheads for several years. The clashes broke out suddenly over the weekend and it is still unclear what caused the fighting or who started it. Both countries blame each other for this round of violence.

The death toll in the clashes is yet to be ascertained though an Ethiopian governmentofficialtoldtheAFPnewsagencythatthereare“significant casualtiesonbothsides”.Thevolatileborderregionremainstensethough the fighting has halted in the past few hours.

A military source, speaking on condition of anonymity, told the Horn Affairs that the Ethiopian troops have captured a strategic location of a mountainous chain, which forms a natural defence, in the area.

Inanearlierstatement,theEritreaninformationministrysaid:“The [Ethiopian] regime has today, Sunday, 12 June, 2016, unleashed an attack against Eritrea on the Tsorona Central Front. The purpose and ramifications of this attack are not clear. The Government of Eritrea will issue further statementsontheunfoldingsituation.”Heavyartilleryandtroopspresence was reported in the region previously.

Eritro-Ethiopia conflict simmering 16 years later

By Anadolu Agency June 23, 2016

Border clashes between Ethiopian and Eritrean troops earlier this month were the latest in a cold conflict that has dragged on for 16 years and, according to analysts, shows little sign of ending.

The countries fought a 1998 to 2000 border war that left an estimated 70,000 dead following Eritrean independence from Ethiopia in 1993.

Clashes on June 12 were the latest in a series of military confrontations focused on the border.

“Theintractableno-war-no-peace situation is a continuation of war in many wayswithoutresortingtofullscalewar,”RegassaAbdissa,alecturerin federalism and conflict at Addis Ababa University, told Anadolu Agency.

According to Abdissa, the chances of a permanent peace are slim while border disputes remain and the stalemate between the two sides has “significantlydamaged”theconditionsforpeace.

“TheEthiopiangovernment,whichunflinchinglypoliticallyand militarily supportedEritrea’sindependencefromEthiopiain1991,tookthe1998 Eritreanattackasastabintheback,”hesaid,referringtotheEthiopian

People’sRevolutionaryDemocraticFrontgovernmentthattookpowerwith Eritrean backing and subsequently supported independence for its neighbor.

However, in May 1998 President Issaias Affewerki of Eritrea ordered troops to annex Badme in the province of Tigray.

Since the war ended, both countries have been in hostile deadlock with each accusing the other of attempting to destabilize the region.

Abebe Aynete, a senior researcher with the Ethiopian Foreign Relations and Strategic Studies Institute, described the relationship between those in power in both countries as one mired in suspicion and mistrust.

“Theconflictaddedanotheranimosityandmistrust,”hesaid.“Duetothis, sitting at the negotiation table has become increasingly difficult.

“Onbothsidesthereisacultureofrigiditytocompromisewhichmeansthat compromise is equated with an admissionofdefeat.”

However,publiclythesidesmaintainafacadeofoptimism.“Itisimperative toaddresstherootcausesthroughdialoguebeforedemarcation,”Ethiopian ForeignMinistryspokesmanTewoldeMulugetasaid.“Wearewillingtotalk for a durablepeace.”

Chane Kebede, chairman of the opposition Ethiopian Democratic Party, told Anadolu Agency that the ruling parties of both countries had created a perpetualstateoftensionandpointedtoEthiopia’slackofaccesstothe sea as a major point of contention.

“TheymadeEthiopia,alandlockedcountry,”hesaid.“TheportofAssab[on the Red Sea] is Ethiopian through and through. Even if the Badme case is resolved,durablepeaceisnotpossibleunlessweretainAssab.”

To find a path to lasting peace, Regassa called on civic and religious groups to talk and motivate their governments to begin normalization.

Eritrea says Dawit Isaak, jailed nearly 15 years, is still alive
International Press Institute June 28, 2016
Following Eritrea's announcement this week that Swedish-Eritrean journalist Dawit Isaak is alive after nearly 15 years behind bars without trial or official charge, the International Press Institute (IPI) renewed its call for the release of Isaak and all journalists detained there in connection with their work.

Eritrean Foreign Affairs Minister Osman Saleh made the announcement on Monday, but added that the journalist will only be sentenced when the government decides it is ready to do so.

Eritrea detained Isaak in the aftermath of the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks in the United States on allegations of support for terrorism amid a general crackdown on dissent in Eritrea ahead of elections that were later cancelled without explanation. Many journalists detained during the crackdown and in subsequent years remain in prison with little or no word as to their fate.

IPI Director of Advocacy and Communications Steven M. Ellis welcomed Monday's announcement, but he called on Eritrea's government to prove its claim by releasing Isaak immediately.

“Dawit Isaak and his colleagues have spent far too long behind bars on unknown charges that they were never even allowed to challenge, and many of them are reported to have died in the face of indefinite detention amid appalling conditions,” Ellis said. “We are pleased to hear reports indicating a gradual opening of the country, at least to foreign reporters. But the government needs to rectify the ongoing injustice against Isaak and other journalists by freeing them immediately, and it needs to allow all journalists in the country to report news freely and without interference.”

Swedish journalist Martin Schibbye – who was himself held for 438 days in neighbouring Ethiopia and who recently returned from a reporting trip to Eritrea – said he viewed the announcement as a positive sign in light of other recent developments in the country.

In addition to Schibbye, reporters from the British Broadcasting Company (BBC) and France 24 have been allowed to enter the country on visas this year. Eritrea has been called “Africa's North Korea”, and allowing more journalists in could broaden the narrative coming from the country and help it lose this unwelcome title, Schibbye said.

He also noted that the announcement on Isaak came on the heels of the release of a U.N. Commission of Inquiry on Human Rights in Eritrea report earlier this month, one of the harshest assessments the country has received in recent years. Schibbye said that the announcement that Isaak is alive might be a move to draw attention away from the damaging report as the country attempts to improve its image and keep younger generations from leaving.

Relations between Eritrea and the EU have also improved in recent years, Schibbye observed, with the latter recently approving a €200 million aid package over the next four years intended to stimulate Eritrea's economy.

Schibbye said he was hopeful for progress in Isaak's case, but that it remained to be seen how the matter would play out. Eritrea's government has denied requests by Schibbye and others to meet with Isaak in prison, and it has yet to announce when he will be officially tried or when he might be released. Schibbye also said that while Swedes were glad to hear the claim that Isaak is alive and being treated well, he expected his country would not rest and would continue to devote time and resources to bringing Isaak home safely.

Isaak was born in Eritrea in 1964 and fled the country in 1987 amid conflict as the country sought independence from Ethiopia. He became a Swedish citizen in 1992, but returned to Eritrea after the country gained independence the following year. In 1997, he and several other journalists founded Eritrea's first independent newspaper, “Setit”.

After a group opposing the policies of President Isaias Afewerki, who has held power since 1993, issued a May 2001 open letter criticising measures he had taken as illegal, Eritrean authorities in September 2001 shut down all independent press outlets and arrested some 11 journalists, including Isaak. Eritrean authorities have issued no official confirmation of the accusations on which Isaak and the other journalists are being held, but Afewerki has publicly referred to them as “spies”.

Isaak was allowed to leave prison for a few days in 2005 for medical reasons and he made contact with his family, but there has been no word from him since then. Afewerki, responding to pressure from press organisations and the Swedish government to free Isaak, said in 2009: “We will not have any trial and we will not release him. We know how to handle his kind.” Isaak's lawyers filed a habeas corpus petition with the High Court of Eritrea in 2011 that was ignored.

Ten years after Isaak was detained, the World Association of Newspapers and News Publishers (WAN-IFRA) awarded him its Golden Pen of Freedom for his courageous work in building a free press in Eritrea. Isaak has also been honoured with Reporters without Borders (RSF)'s Freedom of the Press Prize, the Swedish National Press Club's Anna Politkovskaya Award, Swedish PEN's Tucholsky Prize and the Norwegian Authors Union's Freedom of Expression Prize.

Eritrea is consistently rated as one of the worst countries in the world in terms of press freedom and one of the leading jailers of journalists. There is currently no independent press and media outlets are run by the Eritrean Ministry of Information. Access to the Internet is extremely limited and heavily monitored.

Imprisoned journalists reportedly live in poor conditions, enduring torture and a lack of proper medical care. For the entirety of their detention, Isaak and other journalists reportedly have been held incommunicado and often in solitary confinement. According to RSF, at least four journalists arrested with Isaak have died during their imprisonment.

Eritrea escapes U.N. Security Council referral over human rights
July 1, 2016 5:02pm GMT By Tom Miles

GENEVA (Reuters) - Eritrea may escape censure by the U.N. Security Council over its human rights record after the U.N. Human Rights Council passed a watered-down resolution against the African state on Friday.

A U.N. investigation set up by the Human Rights Council said last month that Eritrea's leaders should be tried for crimes against humanity, including torture, rape, murder and enslaving hundreds of thousands of people.

The investigators, who published a 484-page report a year ago detailing the crimes and the country's use of a "vast security network", recommended that the situation in the country to be referred to the International Criminal Court.

But the resolution on Eritrea passed by the Human Rights Council on Friday merely requested that the U.N. General Assembly in New York submit the investigators' work to "relevant organs of the UN for consideration and urgent action".

An earlier draft had said the General Assembly should involve the Security Council to hold wrong-doers accountable via the "appropriate international and/or regional criminal justice mechanism".

The council did "strongly encourage" the African Union to mount an investigation and bring suspects to justice, but its treatment of Eritrea is more conciliatory than its actions against North Korea, subject of an earlier U.N. investigation.

The text of the Eritrea resolution, which was initiated by Somalia and Djibouti, was watered down after several countries - among them the United States and China - objected to the tough language.

At a drafting meeting earlier in the week, U.S. diplomat Eric Richardson said the Eritrea report did not have "the same level of sophistication and precision" as the report on North Korea and the United States could not support the language of the text without revisions.

Eritrea has rejected all the allegations in the U.N. investigators' report. Ghebreab Yemane, an adviser to President Isaias Afwerki, told the council the resolution was unfair, unjust and a deliberate U.S. and European attempt to "ratchet up harassment of Eritre

"Its grave consequences will not be limited to Eritrea but will engulf the entire region," he said. "This resolution will be used and abused to fan the flames of war."

ERITREA
Interesting Facts About President Issaias Afwerki

"Self-reliance is interpreted as an isolationist trend, which it is not at all ... Self-reliance is preparing yourself for partnership, equal partnership." - Isaias Afwerki (Reporting by Tom Miles, editing by Larry

(MadoteEritrea)

Despite being among the most accomplished leaders in the world today, President Isaias Afwerki is also one of the most demonized politicians in Africa. When you challenge superpowers, as Isaias has been doing since the mid-1960s, this should be expected.

But Isaias isn't your ordinary president. He fought for a quarter of a century as a freedom fighter and lead his people to victory. Since then, he has transformed the country for the better, too. Eritrea has arguably accomplished more in 22 years than any developing country in Africa. Some of these accomplishments include:

Eritrea is 1 of 4 African countries on track to achieve 6 out the 8 UN Millennium Development Goals

Eritrea's life expectancy has doubled since independence and leads continental sub-Saharan Africa.

The country has had one of the fastest-growing economies in East Africa for nearly half a decade.

Eritrea's literacy rates have nearly doubled from 43% in 1991 to 80% today.

The government provides free health care, education and subsidized foods to its citizens (real human rights).

Think as nine but act as one - Eritrean motto

Isaias also helped forge a culture revolution among the different ethnic groups in Eritrea. For many developing countries, having nine ethnic groups divided along two of the world's major religions is considered a challenge. But Isaias celebrated these differences and created an environment in which Eritreans celebrated their similarities and respected their differences.

Even with the ongoing demonization campaign against him, Isaias still enjoys popular support among his people. In fact, he's the only world leader that can be seen walking around the capital without any security detail. When American Major General Mastin M. Robeson met Isaias walking alone in Asmara, he was impressed and knew he was dealing with a confident man who was cut from a different cloth. So it's no surprise when he returned home to the states, he would defend Isaias from journalists looking to criticize him.

"Isaias doesn't need bodyguards," he told me. "He goes around alone. He lives in a normal house. He governs an African capital that is crime-free, without slums, even though there are relatively few police. There's no terrorist threat in Eritrea. More than any other country in my AOR [area of responsibility], it has a secular Western sense of patriotism. Isn't that what we claim we want?"

This isn't to say Isaias is perfect. He's human and does make mistakes. But the demonization of him in the media is a disturbing trend that is becoming more extreme and outrageous by the day. By shaping a distorted and extremely negative perception of him in the press, the U.S. administration is hoping this will turn the diaspora against him. Unfortunately for them, it's a difficult task trying to convince people with a thousand words or less that a man who has spent nearly 25 years risking his life for the greater good of his people and country is somehow against their interest when their administration is at odds with him.

The following information are interesting facts about President Isaias Afwerki:

As a young guerrilla fighter, Isaias got a tattoo of the letter 'e' on his chest to symbolize Eritrea and the Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF).
He writes all his speeches and is considered an excellent speech writer. He obtained his Masters in Business Administration in the early 2000s. He's the only leader in Africa that can be seen walking around in urban centers without any security detail.

He's a big fan of classic rock such as Pink Floyd, the Beatles, and Jimi Hendrix.

His favorite international football (soccer) team is Arsenal F.C.

He knows how to speak a total of seven languages: Tigrinya (native), Tigre, Hidareb, English, Arabic, Amharic and basic Mandarin Chinese.

According to the LA Times, he makes less than $12,000 dollars a year; making him one of the least paid presidents in the world.

History & Politics:
Heruy Tedla Bairu on Eritrea and Ethiopia [SBS Amharic]
Borkena, News January 31,2017

"It is difficult to separate Eritrea from Ethiopia historically. What led to Eritrea and Ethiopia to armed struggle was a political question, not a historical question" –Tdla Bairu Heruy Tedla Bairu was among the founders of Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF) and was active during Ethiopian Students movement before the Ethiopian revolution that erupted in February, 1974. He grew up in Addis Ababa, went to Tefari Mekonen school and later studied at what was then University college, now Addis Ababa University. His father, Dejazmatch Tedla Bairu, was a top Ethiopian official in the former Eritrea province under the imperial government of emperor Haile Selassie after Eritrea was federated with Ethiopia.

In an interview with SBS Amharic, Heruy talked about ELF, Ethiopia, Eritrea, the genesis of what later became Eritrean People's Liberation Front, and the mistake that he thinks the imperial government of Ethiopia did in relation to Eritrea.

On the issue of common history of Ethiopia and Eritrea, "It is difficult to separate Eritrea from Ethiopia historically. What led to Eritrea and Ethiopia to armed struggle was a political question, not a historical question" said Heruy Tedla Bairu. However, he noted that Eritrea was known as Mereb Melash, land of Bahre Negasi. It had its own internal administration and was not governed like the rest of the provinces in Ethiopia.

What were the factors that weakened Eritrean Liberation Front?

Heruy Tedla Bairu says that there was a stiff power struggle within Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF). Contours of power struggle at times took a religious form and at times took regional form. The latter was getting more impetus. Heruy raised the role of Usman Saleh Sabeh in the split of ELF and for the later formation of EPLF, Eritrean people's Liberation Front.

Current state of Eritrean opposition and Eritrea after Isayas From what Heruy says, Eritrean opposition is divided. But there is currently an effort to unite it. He sees a possibility of military dictatorship after Isayas. However, he also seem to be optimistic that there could be a possibility for transitional government.

Written by Dimetros Birku. Can be reached on twitter : @dimetros

REFUGE
Face to face with the Eritrean exodus into Ethiopia

By James Jeffrey, IRIN March 17, 2017

Under the early morning sun in the most northern region of Ethiopia a motley group of Eritrean men, women and children arrive dusty and tired at the end of a journey – and at the start of another.

After crossing the border under cover of darkness (leaving Eritrea without authorisation is a crime punishable by up to five years in jail), they are found by Ethiopian soldiers and taken to Adinbried – a compound of modest buildings at one of the 12 so-called "entry points" dotted along this barren 910-kilometre border. This is where their long asylum process will begin.

"It took us four days travelling from Asmara," a 31-year-old man tells IRIN of his trek from the Eritrean capital, about 80 kilometres north of the border. "We travelled for 10 hours each night, sleeping in the desert during the day."

With him are another three men, three women, six girls and four small boys. The smuggler who guided them charged $2,500 each.

"He was good," the man says. "He showed us the safe paths, and helped carry the children on his shoulders. He didn't ask for more money like some do."

He says they carried very little because of the distance and because they didn't want to betray their intentions to Eritrean soldiers.

Asylum pipeline

From the 12 entry points, Eritreans are taken to a screening centre for registration in the town of Endabaguna, 60 kilometres west of the popular tourist destination of Aksum. Then, they are assigned to one of four refugee camps in the Tigray region, bordering Eritrea.

In February 2017, 3,367 Eritreans arrived in Ethiopia, according to Ethiopia's Administration for Refugee and Returnee Affairs.

There are around 165,000 Eritrean refugees and asylum seekers in Ethiopia, according to the UN refugee agency. Thousands more Eritreans live in the country outside the asylum system.

“Sometimes we get more than 120 people a day,” says Luel Abera, the reception coordinator at Adinbried. “The stories I hear are very sad: pregnant women delivering on the way, people shot at or wounded, hungry and hurt children.”

Luel fought with the Tigrayan People’s Liberation Front when it was a rebel group (it is now the largest party in Ethiopia’s ruling coalition), which, alongside the Eritrean People’s Liberation Front, toppled Mengistu Haile Mariam’s dictatorship in 1991. In May of that year, the EPLF marched into Asmara, reinstating Eritrea’s independence from Ethiopia.

“The Eritrean people are good,” Luel says. “They fought for independence for 30 years. But from day one, [Eritrean President] Isaias [Afwerki] has ruled the country without caring about his people’s interests.”

Push factors

Among those dropped off at Adinbried when IRIN visits are three Eritrean soldiers – or deserters. Escaping poorly paid and protracted national service is one of the most common reasons cited by Eritrean migrants for fleeing their country.

“Living conditions in Eritrea are more dangerous than crossing the border,” says one of them, a 39-year-old who served 20 years in the military.

He explains that the three of them were farmers from the same village who, when drafted into national service, were posted to different locations along the Ethiopian border.

They decided to cross as it was getting harder to leave their duty stations for the month they needed to be on their farms for harvest time, and because the government recently introduced a new tax on each head of livestock.

The three soldiers weren’t allowed mobile phones, so, in planning their escape, they communicated by word of mouth and through letters using colleagues they trusted. Each left a wife and child behind.

“The wives didn’t want us to go and were too scared to come,” the 39-year-old says. “But they’re not angry with us. Whether we are in national service or Ethiopia, they still can’t see us.”

It’s just over 24 hours since they crossed the border and both groups have moved to the screening centre in Endabaguna. The place is jammed with migrants – mostly teenagers and young adults.

“Most say they faced military conscription, religious persecution, arbitrary detention, torture. Land division by the government is a new complaint,” says centre coordinator Teshome Kasa, adding that 1,008 new asylum seekers have arrived in the last seven days alone.

Forgotten

From the reception centre at Endabaguna, it is on to the camps.

Opened in 2004, Shimelba was the first Ethiopian camp for Eritrean refugees. Residents are allowed to construct their own dwellings here and now it looks like a small town. It is home to more than 6,000 people, mostly from the Kunama ethnic group, one of nine in Eritrea and historically the most marginalised.

Asked whether she would like to be resettled outside Ethiopia, Nagazeuelle, a Kunama who has been here for 17 years, tells IRIN: “I have no interest in going to other countries… My interest is in my country [Eritrea].

“I need my country,” she repeats. “We had rich and fertile land, but the government took it. We weren’t an educated people, so they picked on us. I am an example of the first refugees from Eritrea, but now people from all nine ethnic groups are coming.”

Haile, a Tigrayan Eritrean in his fifties who has been a refugee for five years, tells IRIN his father and brother died in prison in Eritrea.

“The world has forgotten us, apart from the US, Canada and Ethiopia,” he says. “The United Nations is too tolerant of Isaias. What is happening is beyond [words]. It is a deep crisis. So why is the international community silent?”

About 50 kilometres south of Shimelba lies Hitsats, the newest and largest of the four camps. It has 11,000 refugees and four in five of them are under the age of 35.

Outside camp coordinator Haftam Telemickael’s office, a group of Eritreans is meeting a staff member to renew ration cards. Each month, every Hitsats resident is entitled to 10kg of wheat, 1kg of palm oil, 1kg of protein powder, a quarter kilogramme of salt and sugar each, one piece of soap, and 60 Ethiopian birr ($2.75) spending money.

“At least here they get permission to move freely and visit family in places like Addis Ababa,” says Tesfaye, a refugee who also works as a camp social worker. “In Eritrea there are six zones and you can’t move to another zone without permission. Even in Asmara you have to get permission to move to different parts of the city.”

Sudan is the other main overland option for Eritrean asylum seekers. But around and even inside the refugee camps there, Eritreans are particularly vulnerable targets for gangs who kidnap migrants for ransom, often torturing them during phone calls to relatives to persuade them to send money.

“In Sudan, there are more problems. We can sleep peacefully here,” says 32-year-old Ariam, who came to Hitsats four years ago with her two children after spending four years in a Sudanese camp.

Ariam owned a small hotel in Asmara but couldn’t sell it before she left as that would have aroused government suspicion. She lost about 80,000 nakfa ($5,000) on it. Now she survives on rations and by making and selling flatbread injera, generating about 3,000 Ethiopian birr ($136) a month.

The common thread to everyone’s story here is the hardship they experienced in Eritrea, a country under semi-autocratic rule that is all but cut off to journalists.

“It was difficult to live in Eritrea because of my small salary,” says 23-year-old Samrawit after entering Ariam’s home for coffee. “My husband is in prison because he tried to cross the border. I want to go to another country. I don’t dislike it here, but from Ethiopia it’s difficult to communicate with my family. From other countries it would be easier.”

Worst of neighbours

Relations between Addis Ababa and Asmara soured not long after Eritrea regained independence and in 1998 degenerated into a two-year border war that cost thousands of lives. The neighbours remain bitter enemies to this day and their shared border is highly militarised.

One of the entry points is in the town of Badme, the war’s flashpoint, in a region still occupied by Ethiopia in defiance of an international adjudication attributing it to Eritrea.

“I crossed after hearing they were about to round people up for the military,” says 20-year-old Gebre. “I wasn’t going to go through that – you’re hungry, there’s no salary, you’re not doing anything to help your country; you’re just serving officials.”

With Gebre are another 14 young men ranging in age from 16 to 20 who also crossed to avoid military service, but there are plenty of young mothers too.

“Life was getting worse,” says 34-year-old Samrawit. “I had no work to earn money to feed my children.” Only her two youngest children are with her. “I would like to make sure coming here is worth it before the elder two come,” she explains.

She travelled with 22-year-old mother-of-two Yordanos, having met her at the Eritrean town of Barentua, about 50 kilometres north of the border – their rendezvous point with their smuggler. He took them by car to the Mereb River, where they crossed into Ethiopia.

Neither knows how much the smuggler was paid, payment having been organised by their husbands who now live in Switzerland and Holland.

An army truck pulls up while the women and young men are waiting at the Badme entry point. It hasn’t come to take them to the screening centre, rather to deposit another eight refugees picked up at the border. “Our soldiers don’t get any sleep they are so busy at night collecting refugees,” says an Ethiopian major.

Ed's side note: Eritrea, one of the most isolated countries in the world, has faced increasing international criticism after last year's release of a UN report accusing the government of President Isaias Afwerki of crimes against humanity. Tens of thousands of Eritreans are believed to have fled Afwerki's hardline regime, which forces people to join a national service programme the UN report likened to "enslavement".

According to advocacy group Christian Solidarity Worldwide, thousands of prisoners of conscience are detained for indefinite periods of time and often experience torture.

Since 2002, religious minority communities have been targeted in campaigns of arrest across the country, effectively outlawing all practices not affiliated with Sunni Islam, Catholicism, Evangelical Lutheranism and Orthodox Christianity. Members of authorised Christian groups also report harassment, detention and persecution.

In June 2016, the UN found "reasonable grounds to believe" that crimes against humanity had been committed by state officials in Eritrea since 1991; including persecution of religious groups and rape by detention officials.

A former Italian colony, Eritrea was later annexed by Ethiopia with whom it fought a 30-year war before finally declaring independence in-de-jure April 1993. No election has been organised since independence and authorities crack down on all opposition.

Sudan Tribune

Egypt to establish military base in Eritrea
By Tesfa-Alem Tekle

April 17, 2017 (ADDIS ABABA)

The Red Sea Afar Democratic Organization (RSADO), an Eritrean opposition group, claimed on Monday that the Red Sea nation had allegedly granted Egypt green light to build a military base within the country's territory.

Officials from opposition group, quoting "reliable" sources in Eritrea, claimed Asmara has allowed Cairo to acquire a military base in Nora locality at the Dahlak Island for an indefinite period of time.

The agreement, RSADO further said, comes in the wake of last week's high-level visit of the Egyptian delegation to Eritrea. An estimated 20,000 to 30,000 Egyptian naval forces will be deployed at the planned base, officials from the group hinted.

As it had long been anticipated and if true, Egypt will be Africa's first and third Arab country to build a military facility in the reclusive East African nation, currently under United Nations sanctions for arming and financing Al-Shabab, a terrorist group allied with al-Qaeda.

According to previous U.N reports, Eritrea has already leased its port town of Assab to Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates (UAE) to establish military bases to ease their coalition battle against Houthi rebels in Yemen. Concerned by Saudi and UAE military presence in Eritrea, Ethiopia warned the two Arab nations against supporting what it said was "Asmara's long-standing destabilizing agenda against Ethiopia".

Recently, Egyptian leaders have reportedly been engaged in diplomatic efforts for regional countries including Somalia, Somaliland and Djibouti to grant them military and commercial base in their selected soil. However, none of Cairo's efforts were reportedly successful, prompting the opposition group to disclose this matter.

What are the demographic, cultural and religious differences between Eritrea and Ethiopia?
Eyob Fitwi Abraham
,
Religious demographics are just one of the reasons.

The countries do have cultural, historical, linguistic and religious relations.

Linguistic
The most widely spoken language in Eritrea is Tigrinya (around 50%), also spoken in Tigray in north Ethiopia, which is the third (maybe fourth) most spoken language after Afan Oromo & Amharic (& possibly Somali). The second most spoken language in Eritrea is Tigre, which is not found in Ethiopia but nevertheless descended from Geez like Amharic and Tigrinya. In Eritrea you'd find the Bilen people, one of the four subdivisions of the cushitic Agaw people, of which the remaining three are in Ethiopia (Qimant, Awi and Xamta).

Demographic
Tigrinya speakers are the most numerous in Eritrea (the people are called Tigrinya), while they are a third/fourth in population size in Ethiopia (called Tigrei or Tigraway, not to to be confused with Tigre). They are rather a (significant) minority. The Afan Oromo are the most populous in Ethiopia, followed by Amhara. These two account for 50-60% of the Ethiopian people, while the Tigrinya speakers make about 6%. Ethiopians are quite diverse, with around 80 groups of people, though dominated by a few cultures, most particularly that of the Amhara historically. Eritreans are fewer - Tigrinya, Tigre, Bilen, Rashaida, Kunama, Afar, Beja, and some others. A few of these are found in Ethiopia also (Afar, Kunama). In Eritrea Semitic people are the most numerous (50% Tigrinya and 30% Tigre) while in Ethiopia there is balance between Semitic and Cushitic people. There are also Omotic and Nilotic peoples.

Culturally
They have a lot in common. Most of their culture are similar, though each have their various local flavours as well. Perhaps one particular feature of Eritrean culture is that it has noticeable Italian and Arab influences, while Ethiopia's is pretty diverse with only minimal external influence, mostly leftovers from Italy's short occupation during WWII. In Eritrea Semitic influence is heavy due to the composition of the people, while in Ethiopia although Semitic influence is heavy as well, it is rather due to historical play; the north, particularly the Amharas, dominated the other people.

Religious
Eritrea has about half of each, while according to a recent census in Ethiopia Christians outnumber Muslims by a little. Yet the role these religions experienced in both countries have a significant difference. In Ethiopia Orthodox Christianity has been the state religion for a long while, and influenced Ethiopian culture and politics. As for Eritrea, ever since it was colonized by Italy it was free from the dominance of a single religion. So compared to Ethiopia Islam may appear to have a more pronounced presence in Eritrea more on par with Christianity.

History
Eritrea was officially ceded to Italy in the late 19th century and has stayed an Italian colony for five decades, and for about a decade under British administration when Italy was kicked out during WWII. By this time competing factions arose. Educated Eritreans and Muslims favoured independence (the latter viewed Ethiopia as a Christian nation), while Christians and rural Eritreans favoured unification (religious affinity and cultural/national consolidation). Not only this, there was extensive foreign intervention as well due to Eritrea's strategic position and geographic affinity to neighbouring Red Sea nations (read pro-Muslim affinities). The Arabs/Muslims wanted Eritrea free, possibly to counteract a Christian Ethiopia, while the West preferred it to unite with Ethiopia, their ally more or less. There was also the Cold War, etc etc. Federation with Ethiopia seemed to solve the Eritrean question, until the then Emperor Haile Selassie I dissolved it an annexed Eritrea. This sparked off a 30 year war of independence until it achieved its independence. Careful on this one though. This is a politically and emotionally charged issue and both Eritreans and Ethiopians will vehemently argue against you :-). Eritreans will want to go further back and sever historical ties with Ethiopia, and Ethiopians will want to attribute Eritrea's independence to the current regime's actions while disregarding the historical forces that gave rise to it.

Are the Tigray people of Ethiopia and Tigrinya of Eritrea the same people ethnically? And if so why is Tigray not part of Eritrea?

Kevin Richardson
, former Academic Researcher Updated October 17, 2020

Tigrinyans are the majority of the population in Eritrea (55%). They are the same ethnic group with Tigrayans with the same Orthodox Christian religion, same traditions, same culture. Why is Eritrea not a part of Ethiopia?

Tigrinyans are the majority of the population in Eritrea(55%). They are the same ethnic group with Tigrayans with the same Orthodox Christian religion, same traditions, same culture. Many of the first people to push for independence from Ethiopia were actually Muslims from other ethnicities besides the Tigrinya. Some Muslims in Eritrea were wary of how Ethiopia treated the Muslim minority, as well as dissatisfaction with how the British and United Nations handled the political situation in Eritrea. A group of Eritreans living in Cairo would go on to form the Eritrean Liberation Front: This group attracted not only Muslims of various ethnicities, but also Christian Tigrinya intellectuals and activists who were dissatisfied with the political situation. Since the movement was centered around nationalism and socialism, it attracted people (regardless of their religion or ethnicity) who felt marginalized by Ethiopia’s occupation of Eritrea.

For 30 years Eritrea waged a war of liberation against Ethiopian rule . This conflict was rooted in ethnic strife, complications from past Italian colonialism, and the complexities of the Cold War era. This photograph from Life Magazine shows an Eritrean woman soldier fighting for the Eritrean People's Liberation Front. She is holding an Ak-47. It was published in 1978, when Ethiopia was under leadership of the Derg. This Marxist-Leninist one party state was supported by the Soviet Union and Cuba getting Ethiopia more entrenched into competition between the world superpowers. The Eritrea and Ethiopia conflict was a regional and domestic matter that attracted the interference from other nations. For the Eritrean people, they felt that staying unified with Ethiopia would provide no beneficial future. Women fought in the cause for Eritrean independence. Images such as these are a reminder that women have played roles in combat even before governments made their positions official. Eritrea gained its independence in 1993 and it remains one of the few African states that allow women to serve in combat. This was an amazing transformation for a half Muslim and half Christian state in which the roles of women in viewed through a context traditional conservatism. Although women fought and won liberation for the country, they still did not get a guarantee of equal political and legal rights.

How did the League of Nations respond to the invasion of Abyssinia?

the league of nation didnt do anything. Ethiopias last emperor HIM HAILESELASSIE said

I ask the fifty-two nations, who have given the Ethiopian people a promise to help them in their resistance to the aggressor, what are they willing to do for Ethiopia? And the great Powers who have promised the guarantee of collective security to small States on whom weighs the threat that they may one day suffer the fate of Ethiopia, I ask what measures do you intend to take?

Representatives of the World I have come to Geneva to discharge in your midst the most painful of the duties of the head of a State. What reply shall I have to take back to my people?"

June, 1936. Geneva, Switzerland.

Britain did help finally in the liberation but Ethiopians bear the brunt of fascism. the educated youth were all gone,

Samuel Kibret
Answered August 10, 2020

Yes they are. Not only the tigre’s but also the people of afar in Ethiopia and eritrea are the same. The ethiopian,kenyan and Somalia's somali are also the same. The oromo in Ethiopia are also found in kenya. There are many ethnicities like this in Africa for mainly two reasons.

1,colonialism

2, not finished nation building

For your question we should delve into how Eritrea was formed so any short answer given by any one is wrong and misleading

I WILL TRY TO MAKE IT SHORT.

At the time of Emperor tekle giyorgis(ፍፃ ሜመን ግስ ት) an Italian shipping agent opened its branch on ሞፅ ዋ. but the emperor didn't even manage to stay in power for long. by the time his successor atse yohannes(አፄ ዮሐንስ) came to power the shipping agent had already transfered its stake to the government of Italy. Italy started taking chunk of lands from ምፅ ዋ the then regional ruler alula aba nega fought the italians many times.battle of dogale is the well known.

Emperor yohannes didnt like what the Italians were doing so he marched to northern ethiopia to asmara to fight them but by that time the mahdists were burning churches and cities in gondar . so he changed his plan went to ጦጣ ማ with alula leaving asmara and died fighting the mahdists.in that time there was a power vaccum since asmara's ruler alula also went with yohannes so the Italians occupied asmara and named the region ERITREA but the Italians didnt stop there, they went further till they reach mereb river.

Emperor Menilik came after yohannes. His first years in power were marred by famine and conspiracies . With the wuchale treaty menilik agreed with the Italians that they will not pass the mereb river but the italians occupied the now tigray region. Minilik fought them at the battle of Adwa, won but didn't go beyond mereb. The reason was mass casualty and the famine ravaging the country.

So when ERITREA became a country ethnicities that were once the same people had to be splitted.this was the case with tigre and afar people.

I know the Eritrean Highlands (Kabassa).
By Zeghay Enquay Updated September 15, 2019

Ethiopia has the military capability to invade and occupy Eritrea in a conventional war. Eritrea has the military knowhow, discipilined and fiercly nationalistic population with the stamina to wage a murderous conventional and guerilla war with man and mice which will eventually cause the desintegration of the fragile Ethiopian federal state as a nation. During the last border war, out of the combined war casualties, Ethiopia lost about 120k soldiers to Eritrea's 19k.

The myth of a huge nation dwarfing a small nation is not always true. Don't underestimate the unpredictable dynamics of war.

In mid-February, 1978 six successive major offensives involving 100,000 Ethiopian soldiers fighting on four fronts in northern Eritrea were undertaken to be beaten back with disgrace. Afabet was the site of the main attack by some 30,000 elite Ethiopian troops moved up from the Ogaden desert in the south after guerrilla activity there was put down with the help of 16,000 Cuban soldiers. Ethiopian troops, Soviet Generals and thousands of additional Cuban soldiers were unable to dislodge a rag-tag army of Eritrean women and men which amounted to no more than 10,000 in numbers.
The Soviet Naval fleets from around the Indian Ocean and Mediteranen Sea also supported the Ethiopian army by bombarding the Eritrean position with their advanced missiles. Soviet, East German and Cuban fighter jets attacked positions around Massawa, Nakfa and Asmara. All these were beaten back. Against all odds, Eritreans led by the then EPLF won the battles and the war. Huge population and big armies are nothing if you don't have the determination and big moral backbone.

30% of the Eritrean fighters of the liberation war were women

Eritrea, despite its North Korean like political appearance now is a nation which has a political unity put several times to test among its ethnics and a religious peaceful coexistence among its population while Ethiopia might easily be destabilized and collapsed by unpredictable war adventures in a volatile region as the Horn of Africa. I wouldn't underestimate the Eritrean position vis a vis Ethiopia if it comes to a big military conflict which might expand to the whole Red Sea and Horn of Africa. Therein lies the unpredictable dynamics of a possible war.

And believe me, no one fights a protracted war with a desperate determination as Eritreans. That is more powerful than having 100 + millions of population.

I hope it doesn't come to that.

How do Ethiopia and Eritrea differ?

Tseganeh Kuma lives in Ethiopia Answered July 26, 2018

The people are literally the same, like North Korea and South Korea. They have the same cultures, the same recipe, identical traditional clothes,similar religious practices…etc.

The difference came as a result of Italian colonization and the then Ethiopian governmental style. That time Ethiopia was not like this time's Ethiopia it was governed dividely by local kings who competed one another to conquer as far and wide as possible.

Eritrea was the port, it was easy as a result to get to it for colonizers and be held. The territory between Ethiopia and Eritrea was made by the colonizer, Italy.

Why did Eritrea ask for independence from Ethiopia when it was originally a part of Ethiopia?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam Independent since 1960.

Eritrea did not ask; it fought for independence because identity and blood ties are a fig-leaf. In certain conditions even blood relatives will fight to the death. Indeed, that event is foundational to many national origin stories.

What is now Eritrea was long the contested frontier region of the Abyssinian Empire. First against the Ottomans and later, the Egyptians and Italians. Those long periods outside the control of the Ethiopian Empire(s) created a distinct identity despite their ethnic and historical ties to some ethnic groups in modern Ethiopia.

One of the more remarkable aspects of modern post-imperial history is the stickiness of its borders and institutions. In Eritrea, the emergence of manufacturing-based middle and working classes compared to Ethiopia's continued feudal state increased the sense of alienation. Visitors today still attest to the distinctly Italian-tinged aspects of urban Eritrean life.

The active participation of Eritrean auxiliaries in the two Italian invasions of Ethiopia, their coolness to the Emperor-centred resistance, the expropriation of their industry by the victorious Ethiopians (to be fair, they were scavenging bits left over by the incompetent British Military Administration) and the Imperial Government's reneging on promised Federal rights also bred anti-Ethiopian sentiment.
All that could have been prologue.

Countries endure solely based on the stability of their constituent regimes. In the case of Ethiopia, none of its regimes since the restoration have been stable. In contrast, since it suppressed the Eritrean Liberation Movement, politics in the Horn of Africa has revolved around the centre of gravity that is the Eritrean Peoples Liberation Front.

The EPLF not only won Eritrean independence after thirty-plus years of bitter war, but they have also had a hand in toppling three Ethiopian regimes. It is ultimately the progenitor of the modern Eritrean State (and arguably, at least, a partial midwife of modern Ethiopia).

The shortest answer to your question is that Eritrea is not part of Ethiopia because the EPLF has been stronger than its Ethiopian counterparties. Had the reverse occurred, Eritrea would be part of Ethiopia. Often, it does just come down to the side with the better 'degrees in violence'.

The Italian regime suppressed its fair share of revolts and governed based on a racial hierarchy. Yet, by the by, Eritreans stayed loyal. The EPLF is the only true Marxist-Leninist State in Africa and shrugged when presented with a national constitution. More democratic regimes have come and gone. It persists.

Could Ethiopia invade and conquer Eritrea?
Kristoffer Harbo Updated August 5, 2018 Resident of Ethiopia 1996-2001

There is a joke about Eritrea's military. God looks upon Eritrea and asks the angel Gabriel, "Why is Eritrea so green? I made that country dry and yellow." And Gabriel answers, "My Lord, those are military fatigues."
The enmity between Ethiopia and Eritrea is arguably Africa's most passionate rivalry. In one corner, you have one of Africa's strongest and most efficient militaries. And in the other corner, you have the world's second-most militarized nation.

Personally, I would state Ethiopia is capable of invading and occupying Eritrea, but the invasion would no doubt result in massive losses in manpower and equipment which would severely diminish Ethiopia's military as the primary stabilizing force in the region. A number of western nations, including the US, would rather this doesn't happen, as Ethiopia is pretty much the eye of a storm in a fragile area and stands as a bulwark against jihadist influence in the region.

Let us first check the background. The Ethiopian National Defense Force (ENDF) was founded after the fall of the Derg, a military junta which controlled both Ethiopia and Eritrea from 1974 to 1987, and its successor state, the People’s Democratic Republic of Ethiopia. Though it was announced initially as a multi-ethnic force, it took several years to transform the ENDF from a ragtag militia-oriented force to a structured conventional military.

The Eritrean Defense Force (EDF) began as the military wing of the Eritrean People's Liberation Front, a political movement to liberate Eritrea from Ethiopian/Derg control. Once the Derg/People’s Democratic Republic of Ethiopia was dissolved, both nations were separated and to this day both parties maintain strangleholds on their countries.

But relations between the two former allies quickly broke down during the 90s and Eritrea launched an attack on disputed border areas in 1998. The Ethiopians, still in the lengthy process of transforming their military, did not anticipate this move and were completely unprepared. But after a massive restructuring and rearming, the Ethiopian army gained the upper hand and made successful advances into Eritrea (I even remember seeing a truck convoy bringing large ship containers of equipment into the capital). The international community stepped in, and both nations signed a peace agreement before Ethiopia advanced deeper. While the Eritreans showed considerable innovative tactics and suffered fewer casualties, the last two decades has arguably favored Ethiopia in terms of military development.

Today, the ENDF is ranked among the top five militaries of Africa, and that is not surprising considering the geography. To the west you have South Sudan, and to the east Somalia, two nations topping the fragile states list. Add Eritrea to the mix and go figure why the Ethiopian government prefers to have a capable military ready at all times.

Although it has shortages regarding equipment, the military's two strongest advantages are population and experience. Ethiopia has the second largest population in Africa, with 24 million fit for active service and 2 million reaching service age annually. And as for experience, the Ethiopian military has been involved in one form of conflict or another since the 1930s.

Ethiopian troops have been combating militants in Somalia since 2006. The ENDF is also the second-largest contributor of combat personnel to peacekeeping operations worldwide.

But what is truly impressive is that although Ethiopia ranks below Nigeria, Egypt, South Africa and Algeria, it only uses a fraction of what these four nations spend on their military.

African nations ranked according to military strength: *

1. Egypt - .6214 (the closer to zero, the more power)

2. Algeria - .8705

3. South Africa - .9233

4. Nigeria - 1.1602

5. Ethiopia - 1.2009

Now, African nations ranked according to annual military spending:

Now, African nations ranked according to annual military spending:

2015 Defense Budget by Country

1. Algeria - 10.57 billion USD

2. South Africa - 4.61

3. Egypt - 4.4

4. Angola - 4.15

5. Morocco - 3.4

6. Libya - 3

7. Sudan - 2.47

8. Nigeria - 2.33

9. Kenya - 595 million USD

10. Tunisia - 550

11. South Sudan - 545

12. Ivory Coast - 540

13. Cameroon - 370

14. Ethiopia - 340 million USD

In other words, when looking from a demographic and financial point of view, the Ethiopian military is a sleeping giant. Like its military ranking, it is also the fifth-largest economy in Africa, but only uses a fraction of its available manpower and spends one-eighth of the annual defense budget of its closest equivalent Nigeria. In fact, Ethiopia has actually decreased its military budget, reversing Africa's trend of increasing budgets. And this is despite the country's impressive double-digit growth. Once known for its widespread famines, the "African Lion" is currently the third-fastest growing economy in the world.

Ethiopia Spends Very Little Money on Its Military—And It Works — War Is Boring

Eritrea's ranking on the other hand is difficult to ascertain due to incomplete information. In contrast with Ethiopia, Eritrea has a higher percentage of the population serving in the armed forces. Despite its small size, it has one of the largest militaries in Africa. 5% of the 6.3 million Eritreans are living in military barracks at any given time, and these are just the standing forces. Observers estimate that the EDF has at least 100,000 active troops stationed alongside the Ethiopian border. Mandatory conscription includes both men and women.

Currently, it ranks as the second-most militarized nation in the world, aptly called "Africa's North Korea", and nowhere is this stranglehold more visible than in the EDF.

If you write "Eritrean military" on Google, you will find article after article highlighting the miserable conditions of their army. Task & Purpose writes "Eritrea is the last place in the world you would want to serve in the military", and that is impressive considering the competition. There is a reason why more migrants have fled from Eritrea than any other African country, and that is to avoid the nation's infamous conscription. As one conscripted Eritrean soldier stated:

"The hearts and minds of the conscripts are elsewhere, not in Eritrea. A large majority spend their time planning to escape, and daydreaming. A defence force cannot be built by daydreamers."

Regarding the economy, Eritrea's growth is hampered by restrictive economic and social policies. With the youth emigrating in droves (5,000 per month according to some) and the military's high conscription, the country has acute labor shortages and famines as there are fewer able-bodied men, and women, to hold jobs or work the fields. While Ethiopia enjoys a GDP of at least 150 billion dollars, Eritrea has to rely upon a mere 7.8 billion dollars (2014 figures), resulting in one of the highest military expenditures in the world. Businesses are mostly in the hands of party members and corrupt officers, while crippling taxes are placed upon private actors thus scaring away foreign investors. Eritrea is also one of two nations in the world which taxes its own people living abroad, adding a significant amount of revenue to the government.

Note: Many have pointed out that the United States taxes foreign citizens abroad, though there are certain distinctions.

So would an army in this state be enough to hold off one of Africa's rising superpowers? Hard to say, but as Peter Topping mentioned earlier, the cost would undeniably be high. Although the EDF may seem to outsiders as a demoralized military controlled by corrupt officers, a full-out invasion by the ENDF could reignite the old patriotic flames which gave Eritrea its independence back during the civil war.

Just like their respective nations, both militaries have strong contrasts. The ENDF is a fan of proactive strikes, while the EDF is a defensive force that supports insurgent groups throughout the region. Currently the most advanced tank in the EDF is the T-55 while the ENDF complements their larger T-55 arsenal with newer T-62s and T-72s. The Ethiopian Air Force is also one of the few operators of the SU-27 fighter. Because the EDF lacks significant means to attack Ethiopia, it will focus on bogging down Ethiopian troops in a costly ground war. The EDF's acquisition of the 9M133 Kornet anti-tank missile and the 9K38 Igla SAM highlights their strategy of countering Ethiopia's tank and air supremacy.

Should Ethiopia decide to invade, they will likely begin with air strikes to ground Eritrea's aircraft, which will be followed by mobilized infantry supported by tanks and artillery. In this situation, the EDF can rely upon two factors: their mobility and popular support. Although the EDF lacks ENDF's firepower, a strong, latent patriotism continues to run among Eritreans. Even though the current leadership is not popular, many would take up arms to liberate the country from their historical enemy. If combined with the EDF's mobile weaponry, a dangerous guerilla force may rise to resist the ENDF.

So as a result, an invasion could present Ethiopia with a bigger problem. It would replace the conventional, yet greatly demoralized EDF with a massive motivated guerilla force supported by other insurgency groups in the region, thus destabilizing the area even more. The small coastal nation of Djibouti is Ethiopia's gateway to the Red Sea, and any violence spilling over from Eritrea or Somalia would be detrimental to Ethiopia's growing economy. 70% of Djibouti's seaport activity consists of import and export goods from its larger neighbor. It's quite understandable why the Ethiopian government, and its foreign benefactors, prefer a hands-off approach.

But the truth of the matter is that Ethiopia may not have a choice. Considering the population exodus and current political status of Eritrea, the country will undeniably face great problems if (or rather when) the current leadership is challenged. Since 1991, Eritrean president Isaias Afwerki has grown increasingly paranoid and many of his closest supporters are either dead or imprisoned. Even within the military, cracks of dissent are beginning to appear as veterans grow more disillusioned with Afwerki's failed promises of prosperity and democracy. Given the country's high number of weapons and militarization, civil war is not an unlikely outcome should Afwerki be removed and militant extremism will push Eritrea down the same path as Libya, Yemen and Central African Republic. Eritrea's proximity to Somalia and its significant Sunni population could lead to an additional sectarian front on the continent, and in such an event, Ethiopia may be compelled once more to act as the center of stability in the region, for better or worse. When God looks upon Eritrea the next time, it may be the color red.

*Updated on April 18th 2016. Ethiopia is now currently listed as the third most powerful military in Africa.

- Egypt .3056
- Algeria .4514
- Ethiopia .7619
- Nigeria .7856

When will Ethiopia and Eritrea be one country again?

Mahmoud Ibrahim Born in Eritrea lives in Canada, Studies Politic

The people who say Eritrea and Ethiopia will return as one are Ethiopians. Like with Kosovo and Serbia there needs to be a reality check. Whatever reasons Ethiopians feel Eritrea wanted to leave (ex: Egyptian Experiment, Italian Colony.. etc etc) The facts on the ground don't change. Eritrea was returned to Ethiopia as a gift for helping the Brits in WW2. The Eritrean people were supposed to live under an autonomous region of Ethiopia. The Ethiopians annexed Eritrea like the Russians annexed Crimea. Eritreans started a war of independence and paid dearly… Mosques were locked and burned down during prayers, teens strangled with piano wires by government soldiers, Rape, Confiscation of property, Famine, forced disappearances.. etc.

Ethiopians don't want to admit this and try to claim we all at one point should go back to "Happy times". It doesn't work like that, Eritrea fought for its independence and earned it. Now Eritrea has a dictator destroying the country and killing the people but sadly dictatorships are all over Africa. Hopefully this dictator will be removed but one thing is clear.. Eritrea has no interest in going back to Ethiopia.

How did the League of Nations respond to the invasion of Abyssinia?

Samuel Kibret March 5

The league of nation didnt do anything. Ethiopias last emperor HIM HAILESELASSIE said

I ask the fifty-two nations, who have given the Ethiopian people a promise to help them in their resistance to the aggressor, what are they willing to do for Ethiopia? And the great Powers who have promised the guarantee of collective security to small States on whom weighs the threat that they may one day suffer the fate of Ethiopia, I ask what measures do you intend to take?

Representatives of the World I have come to Geneva to discharge in your midst the most painful of the duties of the head of a State. What reply shall I have to take back to my people?"

June, 1936. Geneva, Switzerland.

Britain did help finally in the liberation but Ethiopians bear the brunt of fascism. the educated youth were all gone, ethiopians were never colonised though. they wouldnt let the italians move into the cities, the italians were merciless they comited war crimes. they killed 30,000 ethiopians in 3 days, massacared monks.

By the way GRAZIANI never faced justice for the war crimes he committed.

CPJ joins call for Canada to impose targeted sanctions on Eritrean officials

> The Committee to Protect Journalists yesterday joined 15 other rights organizations, journalists, and human rights experts in a statement calling on the government of Canada to impose targeted sanctions on senior Eritrean officials for human rights abuses, including the 20-year imprisonment of newspaper editor Dawit Isaac and other journalists.
>
> “After two decades, the devastating mistreatment of Dawit [Isaac] remains an emblem of the horrific environment for journalists operating in Eritrea. Dawit and all jailed journalists in the country must be freed and this government’s ongoing crusade to censor or silence its critics must be brought to an end,” CPJ’s Africa program coordinator, Angela Quintal, said in the statement, which called Isaac’s detention without charge or trial “effectively an enforced disappearance.”
>
> Canada’s 2017 Justice for Victims of Corrupt Foreign Officials Act is part of a global network of legislation known as Magnitsky laws that enable governments to target foreign nationals responsible for or complicit in human rights violations, according to media reports.

On September 18, 2001, Eritrea's government shut down the independent press in the country and proceeded to detain many journalists, including Dawit, most of whom have not been seen since, according to CPJ research. CPJ identified Eritrea as the world's most-censored country in 2019 and the worst jailer of journalists in Sub-Saharan Africa in 2020. Read the joint statement

If we peacefully unite Ethiopia, Eritrea, Somalia, and Djibouti by creating a Horn of Africa nation, what would this country look like?

Adey Gurshan 1 year

A unified Horn of Africa is not feasible for the next 50–100 years. All four nations have serious dilemmas to deal with individually and need to fix on their own before ever entertaining such thoughts.

Ethiopia is still debating if ethnic federalism is divisive or holding the country together by respecting people's differences. Somalia has to deal with Islamic fundamentalist terrorists known as Al-Shabab who blow themselves up whenever any progress is made in the country, because of jihad (holy war) in a country that is 99% Muslim, go figure! If this isn't the very definition of mental illness I don't know what is.

Eritrean dictator Isaias Afwerki has been in power since 1991 and turned the country into the North Korea of Africa. 29 years of Socialism has left the youth jobless and on top of that there's mandatory conscription in a border war with Ethiopia that ended in 2018! Djibouti has had the same "president" Ismail Guelleh for 21 years.

I guess if the countries do you unite the one good thing is the fact that there's NO difference between Eritrea/Somalia/Djibouti in relation to Ethiopia. What I mean is that ALL the ethnic groups in those countries are found in Ethiopia.

That's why the Eritrean dictator's family is from Kola Tembien, Ethiopia. Ismail Guelleh of Djibouti is from Dire Dawa, Ethiopia. Somalia's prominent leaders are Ethiopian like Siad Barre who's from Shilabo, Ethiopia.

Ethiopia's states named after the biggest ethnic groups there, except for SNNPS which has like 70 different ethnic groups.

The main tribes of Somalia Hawiye-Issaq-Darood-Dir are all native to eastern Ethiopia.

Ethnic breakdown of Djibouti. The native Somali and Afar of Djibouti are also native to Ethiopia.

Only Tigre, Hedareb (Beja), and Rashida in Eritrea are not found in Ethiopia. Tigre speak a language that descended from Ge'ez like Ethiopian semitic speakers (Amharic, Gurage, Tigrinya, Harari, ect). Beja are a Cushitic people like Afar, Somali, Oromo, ect. The only outlier in Eritrea are the Rashida who are an Arab tribe from the Hejaz region of Saudi Arabia who moved to the Horn of Africa in the 1800s.

Personally I don't think we need political integration as long as we have deep economic ties like in the EU, and military cooperation with something akin to NATO so that we are deterred from fighting with each other. I believe this is what our leaders are currently working on.

The tiny nation of Eritrea beat Ethiopia because of various reasons:

Ethiopia was an a state of emergency- after the began of the coup d Etat in 1974 the new dictatorship, known as derg was established.

Many Ethiopians were against the derg- it wasn't only the Eritreans who want independence- oromo, Somali, Ogaden want to overthrow the gouvernment.

Everyone from Eritrea was to a certain degree part of the national independence movement. 30% of the fighters were women. Many people supported the army though money, goods etc.

“How did Ethiopia lose the Eritrean War of Independence?”

The background to that was the collapse of the Derg, after the collapse of the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union had propped up the Ethiopian government (the Derg) from 1976 until 1991. Without Soviet Union support, and with clear antagonism from the United States and Western Europe, the Derg collapsed. Prior to that, Ethiopia supported the largest standing army in Africa, with 800,000 troops. With Soviet supplies, neither side was winning, with the Derg butchering thousands of Eritreans from 1974 until 1991.

Why did Eritreans want to secede from Ethiopia during the Cold War?

Eyob Fitwi Abraham works at Afrolingo

Because the then government of Haile Selassie didn't respect the terms of the union, in which they were to be a federation, and annexed them as a province.

Why was this special arrangement needed? Well, Eritrea hadn't been a part of Ethiopia ever since Emperor Menelik accepted it's colonial state under Italy, and this continued until after the end of World War II. That's over 60 years, two or three generations that didn't live under motherland Ethiopia. By this time they had developed their own national identity, but had enough memory to be still willing to unite with Ethiopia under certain circumstances. Or that was the compromise the rival Eritrean factions managed to agree on. While they lived under Ethiopian sovereignty, they ruled themselves with their own elected council (or assembly, I don't remember which), and things seemed to be going great. Until Emperor Haile Selassie 'thought better'.

By politically manipulating and forcibly dissolving the ruling body, he eliminated the conditions that Eritreans accepted for union. Then the Derg came and it's military hard-handedness made things far worse, so the fight for independence gained more resolve. The rest is history.

It's really unfortunate for both people. They have a lot in common and got along quite well (leaving nationalistic sentiments aside).

Of course, there were factions that never wanted a union, even a federation. Half the population, mostly Muslims, some urban dwellers, and intellectual elite wanted independence, and the other half constituting mostly rural residents and Christians wanted a union. A federation was proposed as a compromise. As for Haile Selassie's annexation, I seriously doubt he never had any plans to annex Eritrea as it didn't happen overnight and was preceded by a gradual erosion of Eritrean autonomy. He was a control freak and that's just not his style. There were a number of reasons he felt an annexation was pertinent, and one of them was that Eritrea's short-lived ruling body called the Assembly was considered democratic and cast a negative light on the monarchy's regime, and they wanted to be rid of this embarrassment. Rather it can be argued that Idris Awate's actions were an inevitable reaction.

Benhur Mosazghi Comments on December 26

Idris Awate, a warrior from the western lowlands of Eritrea, started the armed struggle as the resistance for the Emperor's atrocities. Haileselassie was notoriously Islamophobic and he burned and massacre countless peasants in that region. Thus, it was a fight of the people. His annexation was imminent even without that, as the Ethiopian emperor already started degrading Eritrea autonomy and even banned Eritrean languages from school or official use!

What is the historical reason for Ethiopia being landlocked, and why did Eritrea gain independence?

King Hailu Teaching history 9m

There is no historical reason. the west especially England France & Italy try to conquer Ethiopia serval times France annex Djibouti Italy occupied Eritrea as a colony territory for a while, England tried to invade Ethiopia again and again they couldn't hold hostage Ethiopia. After all kinds of invasion and crime they fail to colonize Ethiopia. then they go to plan B to make Ethiopia a landlocked miserable poor nation forever. France left in 1977 instead of returning Djibouti to its original home Ethiopia; they declared Djibouti as an independent country. In 1993 they used the newly installed Ethiopian government AKA TPLF to annex Eritrea. now we only have the port of Assab? When the former prime minister Meles Zenawi negotiated with Eritrea in London the issue of Assab being Ethiopia's was never decided, they just put it on the back burner due to other priorities! Now rumor has it has been intentional by Prime Minister Melese to harm Ethiopia? PM. Abiy & President Essays should make it right they must agree to return Assab without any delay to Ethiopia, its long overdue.

Related Links

Why were the Eritreans so determined to win independence from Ethiopia?

Why didn't Ethiopia keep a small coastal strip to develop a port and have access to the sea when it granted independence to Eritrea?

When will Ethiopia and Eritrea be one country again?

Why did Eritrea ask for independence from Ethiopia when it was originally a part of Ethiopia?

Why doesn't Eritrea give Ethiopia even just a tiny bit of coast, like with Congo & Iraq, so that's it's not completely landlocked? Should they? Or Djibouti or Somalia? Why didn't Ethiopia demand that in exchange for their independence?

What's wrong with East Africa? Why can't Ethiopia, Somalia, Eritrea and Djibouti prosper and see peace?

At the time of its independence, Eritrea had 3 million people against Ethiopia's population of almost 50 million. How was Eritrea able to achieve independence from Ethiopia, a nation far larger in terms of land and people?

When did Ethiopia occupy Eritrea for the first time, and when is it over? Did they resist the firsttime? Why did Eritrea not become an independent country after the Italian occupation ended?

Is it possible that Ethiopia might annex Eritrea at some point to avoid being landlocked?

Why did Eritrea make Ethiopia a landlocked country instead of allowing Ethiopia to own a small exit to sea or even purchase a small part of Eritrea so as not to become a landlocked country?

How did the tiny nation of Eritrea defeat Ethiopia?

Do the Oromo people in Ethiopia want independence?

What are the significance of Badme and the surrounding areas to Eritrea and Ethiopia? Why do they fight over the region?

How did Eritrea gain independence?

Why did Eritrea break off from Ethiopia?

ERITREAN PRESS

Translations of this press release available in 中文 (中国), हिन्दी, Français, Русский, and العربية

China remains the world's worst jailer of journalists; India and Mexico rank among the deadliest

New York December 9, 2021--The number of journalists behind bars reached a record high in 2021, with 293 behind bars as political upheaval and media crackdowns reflect increasing intolerance for independent reporting around the world. At the same time, targeted killings of journalists persist, with 24 documented by the Committee to Protect Journalists in its annual prison census and survey of attacks on the press.

China continues to be the world's worst jailer, with CPJ's 2021 prison census documenting 50 behind bars as the country prepares to host the Beijing Winter Olympics in February 2022. It is followed by Myanmar (26), which arrested scores of reporters in a wave of repression following its February 1 military coup, then Egypt (25), Vietnam (23) and Belarus (19). For the first time, CPJ's census includes journalists jailed in Hong Kong, such as Apple Daily founder, Jimmy Lai, who was honored with CPJ's 2021 Gwen Ifill Press Freedom Award. In Ethiopia, an escalating civil war prompted new media restrictions that saw it emerge as the second-worst jailer of journalists in sub-Saharan Africa, after Eritrea.

"This is the sixth year in a row that CPJ has documented record numbers of journalists imprisoned around the world. The number reflects two inextricable challenges -- governments are determined to control and manage information, and they are increasingly brazen in their efforts to do so," said CPJ Executive Director, Joel Simon. "Imprisoning journalists for reporting the news is the hallmark of an authoritarian regime. It's distressing to see many countries on the list year after year, but it is especially horrifying that Myanmar and Ethiopia have so brutally slammed the door on press freedom."

Rounding out the top ten were Turkey, Eritrea, Saudi Arabia, Russia and Iran, where leaders routinely weaponize tech and security laws to stifle dissent and continue to flout international norms without consequence. Globally, anti-state charges remain the most common, but this year CPJ also documented at least 17 jailed journalists charged with cybercrimes, which in some cases can result in criminal prosecution for anything published or distributed online.

In Europe, Belarus, which infamously diverted a commercial flight from to arrest journalist Raman Pratasevich, now has 19 journalists behind bars – the country's highest since CPJ started keeping data on imprisoned journalists in 1992. In Latin America, which historically has had fewer numbers in prison, journalists were jailed in Cuba (3), Nicaragua (2) and Brazil (1), and threats to press freedom intensified across the region.

No journalists were jailed in North America at the time of the census deadline. However, the U.S. Press Freedom Tracker, a partner of CPJ, recorded 56 arrests and detentions of journalists across the U.S. during 2021, with the vast majority occurring during protests.

While countries like Turkey and Saudi Arabia seemingly bucked the trend of putting more journalists in prison than in previous years, this does not signal an improved climate for press freedom, but rather a diversification of censorship, with authorities using tools like surveillance and internet shutdowns along with prisoner releases under conditions that deny the very notion of freedom.

Globally, India had the highest number – four – of journalists confirmed to have been killed in direct retaliation for their work, and another killed while covering a protest. Mexico, however, remained the Western hemisphere's deadliest country for journalists, with three murdered for their reporting and the motives for six other killings under investigation.

Of journalists killed worldwide this year, nearly 80% were murdered. In democratic and authoritarian regimes alike, the cycle of impunity remains, sending a chilling message that perpetrators will not be held accountable.

This week the Summit for Democracy, a new foreign policy centerpiece of the United States, includes participation by at least seven countries on CPJ's prison census, several of which also have a record of impunity, including Brazil, India, Iraq, and the Philippines, where authorities continue to retaliate against independent journalists like this year's Nobel Peace Prize winner Maria Ressa, issuing yet another trumped up charge against her this week.

Despite the grim picture painted by the report, CPJ continues to fight against censorship. CPJ advocacy contributed to the early release of at least 100 imprisoned journalists worldwide in 2021. Recently, as part of A Safer World For The Truth, CPJ and partners launched a People's Tribunal to address impunity in journalist killings. The tribunal, a form of grassroots justice, relies on investigations and high-quality legal analysis involving specific cases to provide a framework for justice and accountability.

CPJ's prison census is a snapshot of those incarcerated at 12:01 a.m. on December 1, 2021. It does not include the many journalists imprisoned and released throughout the year; accounts of those cases can be found at http://cpj.org. CPJ's analysis of journalists killed for their work is based on data as of December 1, 2021. CPJ's website is continually updated at cpj.org/data/killed/

CPJ is an independent, nonprofit organization that works to safeguard press freedom worldwide.

Note to Editors:

CPJ's report is available on cpj.org in multiple languages.
CPJ experts are available for interviews.

Are there any ethnic groups that don't have a script to write their language? Soqotri language spoken on the island of Soqotra, Yemen by the Soqotri.

Lara Novakov (ლარა ნოვაკოვი) Speaks Serbian and English Updated 3y

Believe it or not, this language got its first alphabet in 2014. Even though people are still working on it since it's not complete, Soqotri is still a language without a script. And the first alphabet was made in Moscow, Russia by a Russian Arabist (Vitaly Naumkin) who studied the language and its morphology/phonology and overall characterics for a very long time before finally starting with his plan.

This is a very, very old and archaic South Arabian language (one of the few that are still "alive" today). It belongs to the Semitic family, but due to the very long isolation from the mainland, it developed sounds and traits that are not found in other languages (at least those who surround it).

There is no distinction between the Old South Arabian interdentals θ, ð, and θˤ and the stops t, d and ṭ:. The ejectives that Soqotri had became pharyngeal consonants (a feature that many Semitic languages have). Many call Soqotri a time machine since it is one of the oldest Semitic languages and can tell linguists more about the development of various Semitic languages in general. Soqotri has a sound called "parasite H" in nouns (it is a non-morphological sound) which reflects its uniqueness.

It also heavily relies on affrication/spirantization in many Soqotri dialects.

Example:

éfo >éBo, iGodiHen > iyodiHen, ¿eGík >¿eGíbÈk.
In the Qafiz dialect, there is (a variation) of the connective -d + pronoun.

In some dialects of Soqotri, the velar fricatives are merged with the pharyngeals (thus not pronounced) while in others they still exist. Such as this example: Qalansiya: xœmÊh (Qadhub : HÎmeh)

‘five’; Qalansiya ġayğ (Hadibo ʕɛyğ). Overall, Soqotri is something rather unique and interesting to read about. It is probably not that well known among non-linguists, but it’s a really unusual language.

Footnotes
[1] http://llacan.vjf.cnrs.fr/fichiers/Senelle/SoqotriDial.pdf

The Horn Of Africa:
Why are Horn-Africans Ethiopians, Kenyans, Somalis, and Eritreans considered Caucasians by race?

Angelis Revocatus Ancient History Narrator (2019–present) 12h
How could they be Caucasians as they are not from the Caucasus mountains region! Isn't that what Caucasians or Caucus-Asians mean, as the natives of the Caucasus mountains region? So they are not Caucasians, and will never be one!

Many of the inhabitants of the region you mentioned are Hamitic people, that is, the descendants of Ham.

How could they be Caucasians as they are not from the Caucasus mountains region! Isn't that what Caucasians or Caucus-Asians mean, as the natives of the Caucasus mountains region? So they are not Caucasians, and will never be one!
Many of the inhabitants of the region you mentioned are Hamitic people, that is, the descendants of Ham.

AFRICA

MAP INDICATING THE APPROXIMATE LOCATION OF THE AFRICAN RACES.

Now, if we have Hamitic people anywhere around the world, it means we should also have Semitic people and Japhetic people or Indo-europeans.

In Africa, apart from the white South Africans, Africa doesn't have any more Japhetic people. This means those who are not Hamitic and Japhetic (in the maps above) are obviously Semitic. Like those so called Bantoid or Bantu — they are Semitic. Many of sub-Saharan Africans, majority of whom are Bantu people, are Semites. No rocket science!!

Mizraim

Father of the Egyptians and Philistines (now called in Latin Palestinians)

Egyptian Cross – La Cruz Egipcia

Mizraim, son of Ham. Mizraim is a name for Upper and Lower Egypt and literally translates as Ta-Wy in Ancient Egyptian ("The Two Lands"). The -aim in Mizraim represents dual number. Arabic-speaking modern Egyptians refer to their country as miṣr.

According to Genesis 10, Mizraim (a son of Ham) was the younger brother of Cush and elder brother of Phut and Canaan, whose families together made up the Hamite branch of Noah's descendants. Mizraim's sons were Ludim, Anamim, Lehabim, Naphtuhim, Pathrusim, Casluhim (out of whom came Philistim now called in Latin Palestinians), and Caphtorim.

According to this Bible Dictionary below, the descendants oh Ham do not include Negroes/Bantus, which means they are included in the descendants of Shem.

And that makes sense, because the descendants of Shem were another dark-skinned descendants of Noah. The descendants of Japheth were the only fair-skinned.

Pirkei DeRabbi Eliezer 24

Chapter 24

ברך נה ובניו שנא׳ ויברך אותם אלהים במתנותיה והנחילם את כל הארץ.
ברך לשם ולבניו שחורים ונאים והנחילם את כל ארץ נושבת ברך לחם
ובניו שחורים כעורב והנחילם חוף הים ברך ליפת ובניו כלם לבני׳ ויפי׳
והנחילם מדבר ושדות אלה הנחלות שהנחילם.

Noah brought his sons and his grandsons, and he blessed them with their (several) settlements, and he gave them as an inheritance all the earth. He especially blessed Shem and his sons, (making them) dark but comely, and he gave them the habitable earth. He blessed Ham and his sons, (making them) dark || like the raven, and he gave them as an inheritance the coast of the sea. He blessed Japheth and his sons, (making them) entirely white, and he gave them for an inheritance the desert and its fields; these (are the inheritances with) which he endowed them.

The Persian historian Tabari quotes Ibn Abbas (d. 686-8) as saying: "Born to Noah were Shem, whose descendants' colors are a black complexion with a light-brownish undertone (bayādh) and a dark blackish brown (Udmah); Ham, whose descendants' colors are true black (sawād) and a few are a black complexion with a light-brownish undertone (bayādh qalīl); and Japheth, whose descendants are very fair-skinned (al-shuqrah) and olive-skinned (al-humrah)". (Tarikh al-Tabari)

So, the Horners are mostly Hamites, but there also could be Semitic Edomites. They are NOT Caucasians!

As an African historian, how does your field use the term "Tribe"? What meaning/definition does the term have in your specialty? If your specialty has moved away from the term, when & why did this come about? What words do you use in place of Tribe?

Kevin Richardson PhD in History, The University of Texas at Austin Thu
I will go ahead and offer an Africanist perspective.

Three young Zulu women friends, dressed in traditional beaded Zulu garments, pose happily for the camera.

The term Tribe was used among historians of Africa from at least the 19th century up until the late 1960s or early 1970s. Since the 1970s, Africanist historians and anthropologists have engaged in a good deal of discussion within their fields about the term. The resulting consensus has been that Tribe is not a useful term to use in an African context, for several reasons. For organization purposes, I will list a few reasons as headings, and provide a little more context under each heading.

The term was over-applied, so that 'tribe' has no clear meaning

Many, many different societies in Africa have been described as "Tribes". For instance, there was a discussion of the Yoruba tribe, the Zulu and Kikuyu tribes, and the "bushmen" (San) tribes.

The problem with applying one term to all of those societies is that the social organizations of these groups are completely different. For example, in the 1950s, momentarily after the article about the Yoruba "tribe" was written, a more significant proportion of Yoruba-speaking people were living in cities than the population of Canada. As well, historically, Yoruba modes of subsistence was based on agriculture (this changes in the 20th century), while the Kikuyu were a pastoral-agricultural people (ditto), and the San have been hunter-gatherer peoples.

Additionally, if we look at recent population figures, there are approximately 40 million Yoruba people in Nigeria and Benin, perhaps 12 million Zulus, 6 million-or-so Kikuyu, and 90,000 San. So somehow, the "tribe" is meant to describe a predominantly urban population larger than Canada, and also a hunter-gatherer population in the tens of thousands.

It promotes notions of timeless identity and social organization

This is connected to the problem of over-application. In the popular imagination, it seems that not only is every society in Africa a "tribe", but that tribes began with the dawn of man. See this recent biology article as a demonstration.

As a corollary, it is often thought that tribal identity can be traced back through the centuries. That is, someone who identifies as a BaLuba today had ancestors who identified as BaLuba in the year 1890, and ancestors further back who identified as BaLuba in 1700.

In the past few decades, historians and anthropologists have come round to the idea that identities are situational and overlapping.

So, to come back to our Baluba example, a person in rural Katanga province might identify much more with their village or family, or occupational identity. They might even identify as non-baluba ethnically. However, when they move to a city like Kinshasa with a diverse population, it might be that they identify to others as Baluba, and the other identifiers become less pronounced.

The term promotes the idea of primitivism.

The usage of the word Tribe to describe African societies is deeply tied to the era of European colonization of Africa. In the context of the 19th century, it was understood to draw a connection between Africans and ancient Germanic and Gallic tribes encountered by the Roman Empire. The assumption made was that societies develop along a path from bands -> tribes -> chiefdoms —>kingdoms -> empires, and that African societies had only progressed to the tribal stage of development.

More recently, when phrases like "tribal-based conflict" is used to describe political violence, it promotes the idea that such conflict is intractable and the "ancient hatreds" are incomprehensible to sensible, modern Westerners. Thus, talk about "tribal violence" becomes a convenient shorthand to avoid delving into political, economic, or philosophical causes of violence.

Conclusion*:

I think my answer is pretty straightforward. For Africanists, “tribe” carries the baggage of colonial-era designation systems that were reified and naturalized by a combination of governmental and individual selection. More than that, however, it carries the connotation of primitivism and atavism (as befits its ethnographic origins as a stage of sophistication) as well as a lack of “civilization,” and so it is inherently prejudicial. People from Africa use tribe in English primarily because this is what they’ve been taught to use; the real terms in vernacular are closer to nation or community (e.g., isizwe in isiZulu). The reality was that affinities were multiple and overlapping, and patron-client relations (even relative to centralized states) were far more important as identifiers and might change over time.

It’s not analytically a precise or useful term, when there are others that give much more detail (or at least not less) without the historiographical baggage. So among Africanists, it is definitely a term in eclipse. Where the term persists academically, it persists entirely because of colonial-era inertia and a lack of systematic challenge/broad education to change the perception. But then, that last bit is common to a lot of subjects connected to Africa.

Related Links

Why is much of African history were preserved by oral (a.k.a hearsay) rather than written tradition? Is it because there’s just weren’t that many literate people? Or is it because we haven’t found many surviving historical records in mainland Africa?

Are Nilo-Saharans like the Dinka and Masai closely related to West Africans and the Bantu tribe? Or are they more closely related with East Africans genetically?

Why are Africans called black people when our skin color is not black?
Where do the South African Bantu people originate from, if the Khoi and Sans are the only tribes originally from S.A.?

Why aren’t there any “White” tribes left like there are Native-American tribes, Arab tribes, African tribes, or Asian tribes? Why is that?

Were the Numidians Black Africans or Arab-Africans as we see today in North Africa?

Why do people keep saying "Africans sold other Africans into slavery?" I mean, duh. Do people not know there were various African tribes of different people?

Why did Nigeria and other African nations fight colonialism? What made the indigenous Africans make the whites leave Africa? Is life better now than it was at the period of colonialism?

How do ethnic native Southern Africans also known as Khoisans differentiate from other non-Khoisan Native Africans and non-native Africans as a whole?

I've seen a number of black Americans make the blanket statement that black African

COMMENTARY by Elias Teshome, Answered 8h ago

I've been to Africa/Ethiopia twice and Italy once.
Mengistu Hailemariam had created the administrative map below and it was in effect from 1988-1991. Mengistu had suggested Eritrea be allowed to secede and Ethiopia keep Aseb province as you suggested. He was outnumbered, everyone insisted Eritrea will never be allowed to separate. Keep in mind this was brought up around 1990 when things were not looking good. When the government fell in the middle of 1991 they were not a position make demands. Keep in mind the TPLF was busy locking up soldiers that served under the DERG, they were only let of prison in 1998 when they went to war with Eritrea because they were the only experienced military personnel in the country (especially airforce pilots).

Related Links

At the time of its independence, Eritrea had 3 million people against Ethiopia's population of almost 50 million. How was Eritrea able to achieve independence from Ethiopia, a nation far larger in terms of land and people?

Why doesn't Eritrea give Ethiopia even just a tiny bit of coast, like with Congo & Iraq, so that's it's not completely landlocked? Should they? Or Djibouti or Somalia? Why didn't Ethiopia demand that in exchange for their independence?

Why did Eritrea ask for independence from Ethiopia when it was originally a part of Ethiopia?

Why were the Eritreans so determined to win independence from Ethiopia?

How is Ethiopia dealing with the loss of a direct access to the ocean after Eritrea broke away?

When Eritrea was carved off of Ethiopia, why was Ethiopia left with no access to the coast?

Do the Oromo people in Ethiopia want independence?

When will Ethiopia and Eritrea be one country again?

Why is there a rivalry between Ethiopia and Eritrea?

Could Ethiopia invade and conquer Eritrea?

Why was Ethiopia never colonized?

Why didn't Ethiopia keep a small coastal strip to develop a port and have access to the sea when it granted independence to Eritrea?

How did the tiny nation of Eritrea defeat Ethiopia?

How did Eritrea gain independence?

When did Ethiopia gain independence?

What and where is geographically the Danakhil Desert located?

Bollepalli Subbarao worked at Teaching Feb 7, 2020

Danakil desert is located partially in southern part of Eritrea along the Red sea. This area is known for its volcanoes and extreme heat, with day time temperatures surpassing 50°C. It is inhabited by a few Afar tribes who engage in Salt Mining.

Related Links

Why are most deserts located away from the equator?

Why are deserts located where they are located?

Where is the Farafra Desert located?

In which country is the Karakum Desert located?

Why are most of the deserts located in the Western side of the continent?

Where is the great Indian desert located?

Where is the driest desert on Earth, the Sahara Desert, the Mojave Desert, the Sonoran Desert, or the Atacama Desert?

Where is the Thar Desert situated?

Where is the Thor Desert located?

Where is the Chihuahuan Desert located?

What state is the Sonoran Desert located in?

Where is the Namib Desert located?

How do deserts exist when the wind has been blowing the sand around for so long?

Where are most deserts located?

What country is the Great Sandy Desert located?

Will Ethiopia, Eritrea, Somalia and Djibouti unite as one country?

Related Links

Why can’t Ethiopia annex Djibouti, since it’s such a small country and is useless?

What's wrong with East Africa? Why can't Ethiopia, Somalia, Eritrea and Djibouti prosper and see peace?

Should Ethiopia and Somalia unite? Somalia needs stability and investment, and Ethiopia needs a coast. The Ogaden region would feel more at home knowing that they are living under Somalia.

Were Djibouti & Ethiopia one country before the French colonised Djibouti?

If we peacefully unite Ethiopia, Eritrea, Somalia, and Djibouti by creating a Horn of Africa nation, what would this country look like?

Why was Ethiopia never invaded during the Islamic Conquests just like Somalia and Sudan?

Would there be a peaceful way for Ethiopia to gain a patch of land from Eritrea, Djibouti, Somaliland or Somalia and cease being landlocked?

Why are Sudan and Somalia considered part of the greater Middle East, but Ethiopia is not?

When will Ethiopia and Eritrea be one country again?

How do Ethiopia and Eritrea differ?

African Biographics

Eritrea has often been described as one of the most repressive states in Africa, where people lack basic political and religious freedoms. This is not surprising as it has been a one-party state ruled by President Isaias Afwerki since it officially gained independence from Ethiopia in de-jure on April 1993. The government has banned opposition parties and local private media, jailed critics (some of whom have not been heard of for years), and has imposed military conscription on young people. This has forced hundreds of thousands of Eritreans to flee the country, some of whom perish during the treacherous journey across the Sahara desert and the Mediterranean Sea as they try to reach Europe. In this episode of African Biographics, we look at what led Eritrea to become like this and life inside Eritrea.

Sources:
https://www.google.com/amp/s/www.bbc....
https://www.google.com/amp/s/www.bbc....
https://blogs.lse.ac.uk/africaatlse/2...
https://en.m.wikipedia.org/wiki/Isaia...
https://www.google.com/amp/s/theconve...
https://www.google.com/amp/s/www.alja...
https://www.google.com/amp/s/www.bbc....
https://issafrica.org/iss-today/the-e... https://www.britannica.com/topic/hist...https://www.britannica.com/biography/...
https://www.google.com/amp/s/www.bbc....https://www.researchgate.net/publicat... https://www.hrw.org/world-report/2019...

Horn of Africa (Ethiopia, Somalia, Djibouti and Eritrea) hasn't been updated in ages due to its lack of historical details, attention and plausibility, but what do we know about pre colonial Northern East Africa (Somalia, Ethiopia, Djibouti, Eritrea)?

Kevin Richardson · Follow PhD in History, The University of Texas at Austin Sat

For the Islamic era, the region had three major centers of gravity: Aksum/Ethiopia, the Swahili settlement at Mogadishu, and the Sultanate of Adal and its precursors (later). Histories of Ethiopia are fairly easy to get at; for the others, you have some first-hand accounts (like Ibn Battuta's; boy he hated Zeila, the major seaport of Adal), but you also have essays in Levtzion and Pouwels, The History of Islam in Africa (2000), which gives you a tremendous amount of information from exceptionally well-regarded scholars on those areas. Paul Henze's 2004 Layers of Time may be the newest general history of Ethiopia in the first edition, but I'm happy to be wrong.
Fortunately, for all of those regions, we have some documentation; literate communities existed everywhere, and although original material in Ge'ez has huge gaps (for Aksum and Ethiopia), we can piece together a lot.

Title: Illuminated manuscript in Ge'ez on vellum. Publisher: Ethiopia, late 18th century.

The journal Northeast African Studies headed by Jonathan Miran now (author of Red Sea Citizens, which is a bit more modern than you want to be, I think) gets a lot of this material from scholars in the region too. So we know the major political formations, the shifting state entities, and sometimes even fairly fine detail about the spread of religion and syncretization of culture. For example, we know that Mogadishu used to be right at the joining point of transhumant pastoralist Afrasan Somali cultures and agropastoral Bantu-speaking ones, which was part of its strength; it was on a fertile plain with a good harbor, so everyone gained until changing conditions pushed the farmers south.

Further back (circa 1st century AD and before), our information is very sketchy and speculative.

The land of Punt is believed to have been located in this area (Eritrean/Djibouti coast), based on accounts of what Egyptians traded (Ivory, Hippo tusks, baboons, incense) as well as not-very-precise directions inscribed on a monument commemorating Queen Hatshepsut's commissioning an expedition to Punt.

From the 9th century to the 5th century, we have some few inscriptions in a proto-Ge'ez alphabet of land called "D'mt" or maybe Damot (early Ge'ez, like ancient Aramaic does not note vowel sounds, so linguists have to speculatively reconstruct words sometimes). The capitol of D'mt has been located in Tigray province of Eritrea, and the kingdom follows the Red Sea coast. Unfortunately, so far, there has been only little archaeological work for this region and time, so what we know is still quite limited.

The picture starts getting much clearer around the 1st century AD, when we see reference to the Kingdom of Aksum in the Roman geography work Periplus of the Erythrean sea. Then, in the 4th century, the Negus of Axum is converted to Christianity by the missionary Frumentius (Aba Salama). We also begin seeing coinage minted by Axum with greek inscriptions in this time period.

By the 6th century AD, Aksum exists as a quasi-ally of the Byzantine empire. Sassanid tolerance of Judaism and their influence in modern-day Oman makes the presence of the Jewish king Dhū Nuwās of the Himyarite kingdom (modern Yemen) unacceptable, and the Axumite forces invaded southern Arabia in the 520s, with armies marching all the way to Mecca in 560 (if traditional Arab sources are to be believed).

With the rise of Islam, the kingdom of Axum soon found itself at odds. There are references to early Axumite raids on Arabian ports in the lifetime of Muhammad, and a major raid on Jeddah in 702. In response, Arab forces began a settlement on the Dahlak islands off the coast of Adulis, Axum's largest port, and subsequently, Axum became much less involved in the Red Sea trade, becoming landlocked.

With the disruption of trade, Axumite wealth dwindled, and communities that had been previously incorporated into the Axum Empire began to revolt, most notably Agaw-speaking people of the north. Certain of these Agaw speaking families would be co-opted to fight against their more rebellious colleagues. Eventually, one of these families would seize the royal throne as the Zagwe ("of Agaw") dynasty. The Zagwe dynasty ruled from about 900-1270 AD. As I noted above, the rise of the Zagwe dynasty introduces a contentious debate about Axum-Ethiopian cultural continuity. From about 900 onward, we begin to speak of Ethiopia.

UNESCO covers this time period from 700-1100 AD for Ethiopia quite thoroughly in their General History of Africa vol III chapters 19 and 20.

Also, I am glad to see that Annales d'Ethiope has been opened to the public for free. Lots of information on what some recent digs in Ethiopia are turning up.

That turned out to be a bit longer than I intended, and I didn't even cover the Muslim states.

At the same time as the Zagwe dynasty was declining in Ethiopia, circa 1300, Muslim influence was spreading from the coast inland to what is now Somaliland, and the Sultanate of Ifat took shape. There is evidence of Muslim presence in Shewa (the province Addis Ababa is in) in the 9th century, and Ifat would absorb Shewa by 1300.

The Ifat Sultanate and Solomonic dynasty Ethiopia would fight for most of the Sultanate's short history, and the last Ifat sultan would die in battle in 1415.

Out of the ashes of the Ifat sultanate rose the Agaw Sultanate, of roughly the same region. The Adal had more tremendous success against Ethiopia in the Ethiopian-Adal War along with Ottoman aid.

Over on the coast of East Africa, as many others have stated, Muslim colonization led to the development of many trading cities on the Swahili Coast. In Somalia, the region was governed under the Sultanate of Mogadishu from the 900s until the late 1600s.

In the history of the Swahili coast, one major area of debate has been the degree to which cities like Mombasa, Mogadishu and Kilwa arise because of Arab and Persian immigration and architectural styles. This is part of the more extensive debate over the respective contributions of Arab vs. Bantu cultures infusing to make Swahili culture. The oldest scholarship (and the oral histories of elite Swahili families) tended to stress the role of Arab immigration. However, the trend in the academic community has been to recognize that there did exist trading villages built by Africans on the coast, that they were there when the first Arab and Persian migrants arrived. This is part of the larger trend in putting more emphasis on the Bantu-speakers' contributions (to language, social structure, customs, etc.).

The Mogadishu sultanate was also notable for having a conspicuous Sufi presence starting in the fifteenth century. As an aside, with the recent rise to power of the Al-Shabab militia and they're instituting their interpretation of Sharia, there were numerous instances of desecration of tombs of Sufi saints for being "un-Islamic".

The Mogadishu sultanate continued to be a trading center even after the arrival of the Portuguese in the Indian ocean, but Portuguese military efforts (mainly directed against Oman but also targeting Mogadishu) led to disruptions in the Indian Ocean Trade. At the same time, the Ajuuraan state was gaining in strength in the Jubba and Shebelle river valleys throughout the 1500s and would annex Mogadishu by the end of the 1600s.

The Ajuuraan Sultanate, arising in the context of Portuguese control of Indian Ocean Trade, and their military hostility, regarded itself as a successor to the Ifat an Agaw states of northern Somalia in being militant defenders of Islam in the Horn of Africa.

By the 1700s, Portuguese military pressure would cause the collapse of the Ajuuraan Sultanate into several more diminutive successor states. However, we are starting to hit up against the period of colonization, so I will stop here.

Sources — Raphael Chijioke Njoku's History of Somalia is an excellent, recent primer on Somali history. It is more focused on the colonial and post-colonial period, however.

If you have a JSTOR account, or access to an academic library, Neville Chittick's Medieval Mombasa is a good article. From 1982, it is at the beginning of the period of reconsideration of Arab-Bantu contributions to Swahili.
Follow Kevin Richardson

Related Links

If we peacefully unite Ethiopia, Eritrea, Somalia, and Djibouti by creating a Horn of Africa nation, what would this country look like?

What's wrong with East Africa? Why can't Ethiopia, Somalia, Eritrea and Djibouti prosper and see peace?

Is there a connection between the Maghreb and the Horn of Africa? For example, I know there is a city called, "Berbera." Some people of Mauritania have a Ethiopian look etc.

Why doesn't Eritrea give Ethiopia even just a tiny bit of coast, like with Congo & Iraq, so that's it's not completely landlocked? Should they? Or Djibouti or Somalia? Why didn't Ethiopia demand that in exchange for their independence?

Why are Sudan and Somalia considered part of the greater Middle East, but Ethiopia is not?

Why are Sudan Somalia, Djibouti, Eritrea, and Mauritania considered Arab countries?

Are the Tigray people of Ethiopia and Tigrinya's of Eritrea the same people ethnically? And if so why is Tigray not part of Eritrea?

Why can't Ethiopia annex Djibouti, since it's such a small country and is useless?

Why didn't Ethiopia keep a small coastal strip to develop a port and have access to the sea when it granted independence to Eritrea?

Why is Djibouti not part of Somalia?

Were Djibouti & Ethiopia one country before the French colonised Djibouti? Will Ethiopia, Eritrea, Somalia and Djibouti unite as one country?

Would there be a peaceful way for Ethiopia to gain a patch of land from Eritrea, Djibouti, Somaliland or Somalia and cease being landlocked?

At the time of Ahmad 'Gurey' Ibn Ibrahim Al Ghazi what was Somalia's relationship with Eritrea and what role did it play in the war with Ethiopia?

Do people of Ethiopia, Somalia, and Eritrea share most of the same ancestry? Why do they look so similar to each other?

Are Somalis, Ethiopians, and Eritreans considered black by Europeans?

Walter Smyth Fascinated by ancient history and genetics Mar 24

Yes, they are seen as black Africans, no different to other black Africans. The are Sub Saharan Africans in origin closely related to other Sub Saharan Africans as according to DNA.

The terms, Caucasoid, Negroid and Mongoloid are no longer used and the term Caucasian is only used for people living in countries surrounding the Caucasus Mountains.

Are Horn Africans (Ethiopians, Eritreans, Somalis) genetically related to West Africans?

Françoise Marie, Master's Degree Public Administration, Syracuse University Updated Mar 19

People who ask all these questions have the stereotypical view of the West African.

They fail to understand that the Tuareg of West Africa (as far as northern Burkina Faso) are also West Africans. Tuareg are Imazighen aka Berbers. Berbers migrated from the Horn of Africa. Their prime ancestors looked like Horners they share the e1b1b hg.

They seem to forget that the Fulani of West Africa are also found in East Africa. The Fulani are genetically and culturally close to Kushite Horners.

The Fulani have lookalikes among Kushite Horners because they migrated from East Africa. There are still millions of Fulani in East Africa, as far as northeastern DRC. The Fulani group in the DRC is called the Mbororo.

The Tuareg and the Fulani are the living proof that there is no such as thing a "West African" look and a West African can look like a Horner.

Do Somalis, Ethiopians And Eritreans consider themselves as Whites?

Jason Ford, studied Computer Science at Howard University Answered Nov 17

Ask yourself what came first, the African or the European? The African. Why would the parent (Africans) consider themselves the child (all non Africans)?

Do Somalis, Ethiopians And Eritreans consider themselves as Whites? No.

FYI these are Ancient Europeans, even there're not "White":

Cheddar Man - Wikipedia:

Archaeologist Shows How The People Who Lived Thousands Of Years Before Us Really Looked And The Result Is Amazing:

Are Somalis, Ethiopians, and Eritreans considered black by Europeans?

Walter Smyth

Fascinated by ancient history and genetics Mar 24

Yes, they are seen as black Africans, no different to other black Africans. The are Sub Saharan Africans in origin closely related to other Sub Saharan Africans as according to DNA.

The terms, Caucasoid, Negroid and Mongoloid are no longer used and the term Caucasian is only used for people living in countries surrounding the Caucasus Mountains.

Related Links

There's a lot of debate on whether Somalis and Ethiopians are real Africans with some of them purportedly claiming not to be Africans. I wanna hear from the public of the views.and also Hey Somalis and Ethiopians, do you see yourselves as Africans?

What is your opinion on the unique look of Somali people? Do you think they are not considered black?

Why do Eurocentrics claim Ethiopians Somalis and other East Africans are not Africans?

Some Eritrean people I know told me they are not black but habesha, what does this mean?

Were the Europeans who said that the ancient Egyptians and Ethiopians were "black" Africans lying when they said it?

Are Horn Africans (Ethiopians, Eritreans, Somalis) genetically related to West Africans?

In general, can Ethiopians, Kenyans, Ugandans, Somalis, and other East Africans be distinguished from one another? How?

Why do Somali and Ethiopian people look different from other Africans?

Were Horn Africans (Somalis, Ethiopians and Eritreans) originally Nilotic people and the reason they have different features is because of their Western Eurasian ancestry?

As a Muslim Ethiopian/Habesha it boils my blood when people lump my people with Somalis. Do they even know that most Horn African Muslims aren't even Somalis?

COUNTRY FACT FILE

Location

On Northeastern coast of Africa bordering the Red sea. The northeast and east of the country has an extensive coastline on the Red Sea, directly across from Saudi Arabia and Yemen.

Official title of the state

The State of Eritrea (English)

Hagere-Eritrea (national): is a country in the Horn of Africa.

Eritrea is the Italian form of the Greek name Ἐρυθραία, meaning “red land”.

Flag description: Red isosceles triangle (based on the hoist side) dividing the flag into two right triangles; the upper triangle is green, the lower one is blue; a gold wreath encircling a gold olive branch is centered on the hoist side of the red triangle; green stands for the country’s agriculture economy, red signifies the bloodshed in the fight for freedom, and blue symbolizes the bounty of the sea; the wreath-olive branch symbol is similar to that on the first flag of Eritrea from 1952; the shape of the red triangle broadly mimics the shape of the country.

Neighbors

Ethiopia on S and SW, Sudan on N and NW, Djibouti on SE. Land boundaries; total 1626 km. Border countries; Djibouti 109 km, Ethiopia 912 km, Sudan 605 km.

Founder of The State of Eritrea
Essaias Affeworki

Local divisions
6 regions (Zobatat) including the capital, Asmara.

There are about six administrative regions (Zobatat) in Eritrea, each with regional, sub-regional and village administrations.

Zoba Anseba (Keren)

Zoba Debub (Mendefera)

Zoba Debubawi Keyih-Bahri (Assab),

Zoba Gash-Barka (Barentu)

Zoba Semenawi Kayih-Bahri Batse (Massawa),

Zoba Maaekel (Asmara)

Government type

Eritrean Government (Presidential)

Legislation chamber
Unicameral - Transitional National Assembly (TNA)

Form of State

Presidential government with one interim legislative body. The Transitional National Assembly, 150 seats, members are elected by direct popular vote to serve for five-years terms.

A transitional government: Currently the sole legal party is the People's Front for Democracy and Justice (PFDJ). The President is both the Head of State and Government. President elected by the National Assembly for a five-year term (eligible for a second term). The most recent and only election held on June 8, 1993: next election date uncertain as the National Assembly did not hold a presidential election as anticipated to hold in December 2001.

Executive branch

The president is both the Chief of State and Head of Government. The chief of state heads the State Council & the Transitional National Assembly, and confers the Council of Ministers. Elected indirectly by the TNA to serve for five-year terms, without presidential term limits & election date uncertain due to constitution-pending.

Judicial chamber

High court ; Including Regional, sub-regional, military & special courts.

Capital city

Asmara Altitude 2334 mtrs/7656 ft.

Geographic coordinares 15.20'N , 38.56'E (15°20′N 38°55′E/15.333°N 38.917°E/15.333; 38.917. The capital of Eritrea in East Africa situated on the Hamassien plateus.

Brief History of Asmara city
Although, it would be easy to think of Asmara, the Eritrean capital, solely as an Italian built colonial city, its origins actually backdates some 700 years, according legends.

In the late 1890s Asmara became the capital of the Italian colony of Eritrea and in the 1930s it was developed as an Italian base from which the invasion of Ethiopia launched in 1935. Asmara, the national capital of Eritrea, former Italian colonial out-post, is best known for its off-crimes status, to have petty thefts in Africa. The City of Asmara also considered among 10 tourist-attraction cities in the world.

Originally, it is said, its name was born out of a union of four villages that took place during the 12th century. As legends said, there were four clans living in the Asmara area on the Kebessa Plateau: the Gheza Gurtom, the Gheza Shelele, the Gheza Serenser and Gheza Asmae. Encouraged by their women, the men united the four clans and defeated the bandits who preyed on the area. After the victory, a new name was given to the place, Arbaete Asmara which literally means, in the Tigrinya language, "the four are united." Eventually Arbaete was dropped and it has been called Asmara, it became called in Italianized version of the word “Azmara”. Although there is still a zone called Arbaete Asmara. Another legend tells that in this region the Queen of Sheba gave birth to the son of King Solomon, Menelik I.

Asmara was made the capital city of colonial Eritrea in preference to Massawa by Governor Martini in 1897. The city therefore bears many traces of the Italian colonial area: in its infrastructure, its architecture and some culinary traditions. Asmara is by far the largest city in Eritrea, with a population of some 600,000. Asmara sits atop (2,334m) the Eritrean highlands on the eastern edge of the escarpment.

Unlike many of the other towns in Eritrea it is relatively undamaged, the Ethiopian forces having fled the city without fighting a full-scale battle at the end of the war. Under thirty years of Ethiopian occupation, the city was allowed to deteriorate, but it still retains its essential beauty and since coming under Eritrean control in 1991 it has been undergoing a rapid improvement in infrastructure, building repairs and repainting.

The day begins early in Asmara with the first call to prayer of the muezzin from the tower of Asmara ’s main mosque. Not long afterwards the massive bells of the Catholic Cathedral chime the beginning of the Christian day while the Orthodox Church celebrates its early morning mass.

Asmara is possibly the safest African capital for travelers. It is one of the cleanest cities in Africa. The streets are elegantly lined with palms and a string of boutiques, coffee-shops and restaurants reminiscent of southern Italy.

The Italianization of Asmara, per the policy of Fascist Italy, the demography of the city was rapidly turning Italian: while in the early 30s the Italian population in Asmara was about 3,000 out of the city’s total population of 18,000 (about 17 percent), by 1938 it has mushroomed into 53,000 out of the total population of 98,000 (about 53 percent)8. That is, with the increase of the Italian population from 17 percent to 53 percent of the city’s population in those six years had started in earnest at this time. And, third, besides those years being “war years” into which Eritreans were disproportionately conscripted, those also happen to be the years remembered for the severity of the Fascist imposed apartheid system, most strictly enforced in Asmara. While the Italians occupied bella Asmara, the natives were relegated to the shanty towns of Aba-Shawul, Gheza-Berhanu, Haidsh-Adi, etc. That doesn’t mean that all was rosy before Fascism. In fact, the apartheid system in Asmara was already in place in 1909 (in schools) and 1916 (in residential areas), long before the Fascists came to enforce their own harsher versions. Most of the industries associated with colonial Italy were built during the reign of Emperor Haile Selassie I of Ethiopia, meaning at the time of Eritrea Federation with Ethiopia and beyond until the fall of the Duerg regime in May, 1991.

Names of main towns

Keren, Agordat, Mendefferra, Massawa, Assab.

Date of independence

From Italy (as protectorate) November 1941

From United Kingdom (under UN mandate) March 1951

From Ethiopian rule (de-facto) 24th May 1991

From Ethiopian rule (de jure) 24 April 1993

Religions (Major)

Eritrean Orthodox Tewahedo Christians (ErOTC) mainly in the central highlands (Kabassa), Muslim, mainly in the western, northeastern & south of Semhar (Dankhalia) lowlands, Catholics & few others.

Main spoken languages

Tigrinya, Arabic (Officials)

Tigre is also the widely spoken language. Saho, Bilen, Afar, Kunama, Nara, Haidareb are the main ones. English, is the major foreign language widely spoken, understood & taught in schools.

Currency unit

Nakfa (ErN): it is divided into 100 cents. Eritrean Nakfa currency was introduced on 8 November, 1997 to replace the existing Ethiopian Birr (ETB) at par, and it was renamed after the western Eritrean town of Nakfa.

Area in Km2

117,600.00

Country area comparison in Africa

38 out of 55 states

Demographic terms

Average annual population growth rate 2.522 %

Birth rate 33.48 births per 1,000 population

Death rate 8.25 deaths per 1,000 population

Average life expectancy ; 62.15 years

Male 60.06 years ; Female 64.3 years;

Illiteracy rate (%)
Male: 33, Female: 47

Average per capita income

USD 680

Population density

44.4/km2

Urban population (%)

22

Contributor groups (%)

Farming, Fishing: 21, Industry: 23, Social service: 56

Main Export Items

Livestock, fresh fish-meat.

Economy is based on

With 85 % Agriculture & Agro-pastoral.

Eritrea is not self-sufficient in staple food. It produces between 20% in severe drought years and 75% in very good crop years of local demand. Major crops in central highlands include Wheat, Barley, Teff, Sorghum, Millet, Chickpeas and horse-Beans. As cash crop, Groundnuts are grown in Senhit, production in Sahel is very low. It is highest in Seraye and Hamassien. Agricultural production in the eastern lowlands depends on the winter rains (December) and is done by spate irrigation with the run off water from the eastern slopes of the central highlands. In the western lowlands, staple crop production is limited to Sorghum, Maize and Millet and is landly self-sufficient with rainfall averages below 500 mm/m2. However, irrigation in the Gash, Setit and Barka river basins is possible and production of mainly cash crops like vegetable, Banana and other fruit trees and sesame mainly around Ummhajer (Setit river) is profitable.

Various economic developments and the exploitation of natural resources such as agriculture, tourism and mining. Food security has been the priority as diverse factors converge to affect the demand for food around the world and in particular in Africa. In Eritrea, there was scarcity of mechanization, transportation and storage. Hence Agro-Macro policy were devised, irrigation based agriculture was introduced to increase output and create surplus in cereal corps, vegetables, fruits, and livestock. Dams, micro-dams and water diversion schemes were constructed. Since 1991 in Gash Barka region about 90,000 hectares of land have been cultivated through irrigation, splash irrigation, and drip irrigation. Agro-industries have been put in place. Ali-Gider cotton farm, Gereset, the Fancos and Ad-Omer agro-industry are examples of what is to come. Entrepreneurs are also involved in the agro-businesses. Dankhalia, the desert strip along the Red sea coast produces virtually no crop.

Climate- Cooler & wetter in the central highlands (up to 61 cm Rf annually, heaviest is June to September), semi-arid in western hills and lowlands, dry in Dankhalia.

Extremes

Lowest point; Collul, Danakhil Depression -75 mtrs (Dankhalia).

Highest point; Imba-Soira 3,018 mtrs (Zoba debub).

Weather of the capital city (Asmara) average annual temperature 16,2oc.

Altitude 2334 mtrs/7656 ft.

Hottest Month December - January 11-26oc.

Coldest Month July-August 5-24oc.

Driest Month April-May 5mm average Rf.

Note: Main rains June to September Minor rains December to March.

Measures

Metric system and Local measures used.

Time zone

EAT (UTC+3 hours) - Summer (DST)

Public holidays

January1 (New year), May 24 (Independence day), January 19th Epiphany (Timkat), Tensae (Easter) variable Spring, September 11, 27 (christian holidays), All Muslim holidays.

Ethnic groups

Tigrigna speaking (Kabassa) 60%, Tigre 30%, Afar 4%, Saho 3%, Kunama 2%, others 1 %.

Topographic & Environmental concern

Geographically speaking, Eritrea can be divided into four major climate zones:

The Eastern lowlands: Semhar, part of Akkle-Guzay and part of Sahel.

The Central highlands;-Part of Akkle Guzay, part of Seraye, Hamassien (with Asmara) part of Senhit and part of Sahel, concentrated by thicker population.

The Western lowlands: Part of Seraye, part of Senhit, part of Sahel, Barka & Gash-setit.

Dankhalia at southern Red sea: A sparsely populated region, located at south of Semhar to the Djibouti boarder. Environment: deforestation; desertification; soil erosion; overgrazing; loss of infrastructure from civil war.

Elevation major towns above sea level

Keren-1675 mtrs/5494 ft.

Agordat-1000 mtrs/3280 ft.

Barentu- 800 mtrs/2624 ft.

Massawa At Sea Level (situated in a volcanic area). The entire Red Sea coast (Ras Kassar to Ras Dumeira) – Is at Sea levels of about 20mtrs/66 ft.: noted for its high summer humidity and its mean annual temperature, one of the highest in the coastal region. Colluli, in the Danakhil Depression – 75mtrs below sea level.

Economy Overview

Industry

Food-processing, beverages, textiles, garments, manufacturing, salt, cement. Positive signs of growth, especially in tourism, agriculture, and fisheries.

Tourism

The archaeological site Quahito, Italian constructed tunnel roads and a zig-zag mountainous highway through a mountain slope on the road to Massawa (Batse) commonly known as “Filfil Solomona”, and the ancient red sea harbour “Adulis” and the monastries of Debre-Bizen are some of tourist attractions at present Eritea.

Debre Bizen Monastery Church in Debre Bizen in Eritrea: is the best-known monastery of the Eritrean Orthodox Tewahedo Church. Located at the top of Debre Bizen the mountain (825 meters) near the town of Nefasit in Eritrea. Its library contains many important Ge'ez manuscripts. Debre Bizen was founded in the 1350s by Abba Filipos, who was a student of Abba Absadi. By 1400, the Monastery followed the rule of the House of Ewostatewos, and a gadl of Ewostatewos was later composed there.

According to Tom Killion, it remaine...d independent of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church, while Richard Pankhurst states that it continued to be dependent on the Ethiopian Orthodox Church centered in Axum. In either case, a charter survives of the Emperor Zara Yaqob in which he granted lands to Debre Bizen.

The monastery was one of several habitations damaged by the Ottomans in their campaigns to establish their province of Habesh in the 16th century. When Abuna Yohannes, who came from Cairo to Ethiopia to serve as head of the Ethiopian Church, was held for ransom at Arqiqo by the local Naib, the abbot of Debre Bizen helped him to escape.

Chief crops

Sorghum, lentils, vegetables, corn, cotton, tobacco: livestock, goats, fish.

Natural resources

Mining and minerals in Eritrea: Eritrea's substantial mineral deposits are largely unexplored. According to the Eritrean government, artisanal mining in 1998 collected 573.4 kilograms of gold. Eritrea is estimated to have some unknown kilograms of total gold reserves. International observers also have noted Eritrea's excellent potential for quarrying ornamental marble and granite. As of 2001, some 10 mining companies had obtained licenses to prospect for different minerals in Eritrea. The government of Eritrea reportedly is in the process of conducting a geological survey for use by potential investors in the mining sector.
At present there is processing of Bisha-Gold, in the northwestern region of Gash-Barka. Suspected deposits of Debarwa copper-gold-zinc, Emba-Derho copper-gold-zinc, Adi-Nefas zinc-gold-copper, and the Gupo-gold deposit.

Deposits of silver, lead, marble, salt, granite, natural gas, and suspected underwater Oil crude deposits in the Red sea. The Vancouver-based Nevsun Resources TSE:NSU (AMEX:NSU) said it posted strong first quarter results, and raised its gold production forecast for 2012 to 260,000 ounces.The gold and base metal explorer/developer is currently focused on advancing its high grade gold, copper and zinc "Bisha Project" in Eritrea. Because of unusually high gold grades encountered, Nevsun said it is increasing its gold production guidance for the full year 2012 by approximately 25 percent to a range of 240,000 ounces to 260,000 ounces. This is up significantly from a previous target of 190,000 to 210,000 ounces announced earlier, when the company said it has overestimated the size of its gold resources at its Bisha mine.

Land in use (percentage)

Arable land 4.78

Grassland: NA

Forest woods: NA

Others: NA

Marine

Coastline; the Red sea coast extends 600 miles (1, 151 km), from Ras-Kassar of the Sudan border to Ras-Dumeira of the Djibouti border. The northeast and east of the country has an extensive coastline on the Red sea, directly across from Saudi Arabia and Yemen. Eritrea's territorial size is approximately 45,406 sq. miles (Water (%) 0.14%). The Dahlak Archipelago (nearly 63 islets) and several of the Hanish Islands are parts of Eritrea. The archipelagos, and several of the Hanish islands estimated overall coastline of 1, 083 km.

Commercial Sea ports

Port of Massawa (Wedeb-Batse), the main port also known as Mitsiwa (Ge'ez miṣṣiwa, Arabic مصوع maṣṣawaʿ, Italian Massaua) and Batse (Ge'ez bāṣi) or Badi (Arabic بضِب baḍiʿ) is a city on the Red Sea coast of Eritrea.

Massawa was an important port for many centuries, and was the capital of the ex-Italian Colony of Eritrea until this was moved to Asmara in 1897. It was ruled by a succession of polities, including the Axumite Empire, the Umayyad Caliphate, the Beja Kingdom, the Ottoman Empire, Egypt, Britain, and Italy and at last Ethiopia.

Port of Assab (wedeb-Hasseb): is the other harbour on the Red sea coast of Eritrea which is located at the extreme south of the Red sea near the Djibouti border currently operating in its lowest capacity.

Development prospect

Eritrea claims to have been drought-free in 2011. But refugees, continuing to flee across the borders into Sudan and Ethiopia at the rate of up to 3,000 a month despite the dangers of minefields and a shoot-to-kill policy by border guards, tell a different story. Satellite imagery showed below-average rainfall during the main rains. Food deficits in rural areas are expected to continue even if next year's harvest is good. The government hopes that new mining will resolve its economic problems, and the possibilities of mining profits led to predictions that Eritrea might record economic growth of 8 per cent in 2011.

These calculations have yet to materialise and may be upset if the UN decides to impose tougher sanctions. In February 2012 Canada's NEVSUN began to produce gold at Bisha project in which the government has a 40 per cent stake. Another Canadian company, SUNRIDGE Gold Corporation will be completing feasibility studies in four concessions by early 2012. The profits from these and other mining prospects, including the open pit potash mine that South Boulder hopes to start in 2016, will make a major difference to Eritrea's stagnant economy but the government is unlikely to see much profit for another three or four years. There is concern about the use of conscript labour, and over the possibility the funds will go to support for....

Has Eritrea been colonized?

Massimo Saracino

.

Follow Knows English Sat

Yes. Eritrea was a colony of Italy for 50 years, from 1890 to WWII, although Italy had already set foot in Eritrea some years before.

The colonization of Eritrea was particularly intense in the 1920s and 1930s. Right before WWII, around 75k Italians lived in Eritrea (whose total population was just below one million), mostly at Asmara. Italians refurbished the cities (since 2017 Asmara is an UNESCO World Heritage site due to the Italian architecture), built a road and railways network, hospitals (accessibile also to locals), upgraded agricolture and started an industrial development (over 2,000 small factories were active in 1940), employing largely local labor. They also built the then longest world's cableway (72 Km, or 46 Miles) to move supplies between Asmara and the port of Massaua, dismantled by the British after WWII.

Eritrean railways in 1939

1938: road construction in Eritrea

Italian colonialism in Eritrea was not necessarily more 'human' than elsewhere (not many education opportunities were offered to locals, Eritrean workers got lower wages than Italian ones, some areas of Asmara were not accessible by Eritreans etc.), however there were significant investments which indirectly positively impacted locals.

What is the history of Eritrea?

Tesfay

.

Follow

Health Information 1y

Eritrea officially celebrated its independence on May 24, 1993, becoming the world's newest nation. Prior to Italian colonization in 1885, what is now Eritrea had been ruled by the various local or international powers that successively dominated the Red Sea region. In 1896, the Italians used Eritrea as a springboard for their disastrous attempt to conquer Ethiopia. Eritrea was placed under British military administration after the Italian surrender in World War II.

In 1952, a UN resolution federating Eritrea with Ethiopia went into effect. The resolution ignored Eritrean pleas for independence but guaranteed Eritreans some democratic rights and a measure of autonomy. Almost immediately after the federation went into effect, however, these rights began to be abridged or violated.

In 1962, Emperor Haile Sellassie unilaterally dissolved the Eritrean parliament and annexed the country, sparking the Eritrean fight for independence that continued after Haile Sellassie was ousted in a coup in 1974. The new Ethiopian Government, called the Derg, was a Marxist military junta led by strongman Mengistu Haile Miriam.

During the 1960s, the Eritrean independence struggle was led by the Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF). In 1970, members of the group had a falling out, and a group broke away from the ELF and formed the Eritrean People's Liberation Front (EPLF). By the late 1970s, the EPLF had become the dominant armed Eritrean group fighting against the Ethiopian Government, and Isaias Afwerki had emerged as its leader. Much of the materiel used to combat Ethiopia was captured from the Ethiopian Army.

By 1977 the EPLF was poised to drive the Ethiopians out of Eritrea. That same year, however, a massive airlift of Soviet arms to Ethiopia enabled the Ethiopian Army to regain the initiative and forced the EPLF to retreat to the bush. Between 1978 and 1986, the Derg launched eight major offensives against the independence movement -- all failed. In 1988, the EPLF captured Afabet, headquarters of the Ethiopian Army in northeastern Eritrea, prompting the Ethiopian Army to withdraw from its garrisons in Eritrea's western lowlands. EPLF fighters then moved into position around Keren, Eritrea's second-largest city. Meanwhile, other dissident movements were making headway throughout Ethiopia. At the end of the 1980s, the Soviet Union informed Mengistu that it would not be renewing its defense and cooperation agreement. With the withdrawal of Soviet support and supplies, the Ethiopian Army's morale plummeted, and the EPLF -- along with other Ethiopian rebel forces -- began to advance on Ethiopian positions.

They united states played a facilitative role in the peace talks in Washington during the months leading up to the May 1991 fall of the Mengistu regime. In mid-May, Mengistu resigned as head of the Ethiopian Government and went into exile in Zimbabwe, leaving a caretaker government in Addis Ababa. Having defeated the Ethiopian forces in Eritrea, EPLF troops took control of their homeland. Later that month, the United States chaired talks in London to formalize the end of the war. These talks were attended by the four major combatant groups, including the EPLF.

A high-level U.S. delegation also was present in Addis Ababa for the July 1-5, 1991 conference that established a transitional government in Ethiopia. The EPLF attended the July conference as an observer and held talks with the new transitional government regarding Eritrea's relationship with Ethiopia. The outcome of those talks was an agreement in which the Ethiopians recognized the right of the Eritreans to hold a referendum on independence.

Although some EPLF cadres at one time espoused a Marxist ideology, Soviet support for Mengistu had cooled their ardor. The fall of communist regimes in the former Soviet Union and the Eastern Bloc convinced them it was a failed system. The EPLF now says it is committed to establishing a democratic form of government and a free-market economy in Eritrea. The United States agreed to provide assistance to both Ethiopia and Eritrea, conditional on continued progress toward democracy and human rights.

In May 1991, the EPLF established the Provisional Government of Eritrea (PGE) to administer Eritrean affairs until a referendum was held on independence and a permanent government established. EPLF leader Isaias became the head of the PGE, and the EPLF Central Committee served as its legislative body.

On April 23-25, 1993, Eritreans voted overwhelmingly for independence from Ethiopia in UN-monitored free and fair referendum. The Eritrean authorities declared Eritrea an independent state on April 27. The government was reorganized and after a national, freely contested election, the National Assembly, which chose Isaias as President of the PGE, was expanded to include both EPLF and non-EPLF members. The EPLF established itself as a political party, the People's Front for Democracy and Justice (PFDJ), and is now in the process of drafting a new constitution and setting up a permanent government.

SOURCE: U.S. Department of State

Tsehai Alemayehu

.
Follow
Studied at Berea College4y

Related
Why didn't Ethiopia annex Eritrea?

I almost did not answer this question. And it is not because I did not know the answer(s), but because this is an immensely complicated question you raise. Let me try to put here the short version because the complete answer requires an entire book and a willingness to engage in conspiracy theories among others.

So, for thousands of years, Eritrea was part of Ethiopia. No, that is incorrect. Eritrea was Ethiopia. The seat of government and the boundaries of the nation state we call Ethiopia have moved around over the last 2 thousand years or so. At times, it has covered territories as far east as India and north to Egypt and west to the Nile. At other times, the kings and princes of Ethiopia retreated to their mountain top fortresses. But Eritrea had been nearly always been part of Ethiopia. Except, that is, for the period beginning the middle of the 1600′s when a succession of European and North African states sought to poach the Ethiopian coast, what we now call Eritrea.

At the end of World War II as the world order was being redrawn, Eritreans demanded to rejoin Ethiopia and following a referendum in 1952, Eritrea once again become a part of Ethiopia. Except 300 years apart meant not everyone was enthralled with the idea of becoming Ethiopian again. So a small group of unhappy Muslims took up arms almost immediately. Thirty years of fighting later, Eritrea became a separate country once again.

Seven more years later a border skirmish turned into an all out war. Eventually, the Ethiopian defense forces destroyed the Eritrean fighting forces and advanced all the way to the outskirts of their capital. For reasons unknown to the Ethiopians people, the Ethiopian forces were ordered by their commanders to halt the advance and retreat.

And that is where things stand. For now. But everyone knows this story is to be continued.

Why isn't Ethiopia in a better position if it is an African country that resisted colonization for a long time and was only colonized for a short time?

Robert McCann

Born in, live in, love and study Africa.Updated 7y
.
Follow

Originally Answered: Why isn't Ethiopia in a better position with it being an African country which resisted colonization for a long time and only being colonized for a short time?

Ethiopia I feel is not very good at adapting to global change. It is a very internal kind of place. Changes happen because of internal issues. This was good in resisting colonialism. But it made Ethiopia quite susceptible to absolute monarchy (ending with haile selassie) and absolute dicatorship (haile mariam) such that by the time the got a halfway decent leader in meles zenawi, who was no messiah, there had been a really long time of suffering. Ethiopia strikes me as a country whose culture tolerates strict authority in government and this made them resist colonialism, but has hampered economic progress.

Edit: it should also be pointed out that Ethiopia has been the fastest growing economy in East Africa for a while, shows no signs of slowing down, and by many accounts its government is working for the people. Many Kenyans go to Addis Ababa, and are sufficiently impressed to come back with photos to show us how our government should be working.

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam

.
Follow
Independent since 1960.Updated 1y

Related

Why did Eritrea ask for independence from Ethiopia when it was originally a part of Ethiopia?

Eritrea did not ask; it fought for independence because identity and blood ties are a fig-leaf. In certain conditions even blood relatives will fight to the death. Indeed, that event is foundational to many national origin stories.

What is now Eritrea was long the contested frontier region of the Abyssinian Empire. First against the Ottomans and later, the Egyptians and Italians. Those long periods outside the control of the Ethiopian Empire(s) created a distinct identity despite their ethnic and historical ties to some ethnic groups in modern Ethiopia.

One of the more remarkable aspects of modern post-imperial history is the stickiness of its borders and institutions. In Eritrea, the emergence of manufacturing-based middle and working classes compared to Ethiopia's continued feudal state increased the sense of alienation. Visitors today still attest to the distinctly Italian-tinged aspects of urban Eritrean life.

The active participation of Eritrean auxiliaries in the two Italian invasions of Ethiopia, their coolness to the Emperor-centred resistance, the expropriation of their industry by the victorious Ethiopians (to be fair, they were scavenging bits left over by the incompetent British Military Administration) and the Imperial Government's reneging on promised Federal rights also bred anti-Ethiopian sentiment.

All that could have been prologue.

Countries endure solely based on the stability of their constituent regimes. In the case of Ethiopia, none of its regimes since the restoration have been stable. In contrast, since it suppressed the Eritrean Liberation Movement, politics in the Horn of Africa has revolved around the centre of gravity that is the Eritrean Peoples Liberation Front.

The EPLF not only won Eritrean independence after thirty-plus years of bitter war, but they have also had a hand in toppling three Ethiopian regimes. It is ultimately the progenitor of the modern Eritrean State (and arguably, at least, a partial midwife of modern Ethiopia).

The shortest answer to your question is that Eritrea is not part of Ethiopia because the EPLF has been stronger than its Ethiopian counterparties. Had the reverse occurred, Eritrea would be part of Ethiopia. Often, it does just come down to the side with the better 'degrees in violence'.

The Italian regime suppressed its fair share of revolts and governed based on a racial hierarchy. Yet, by the by, Eritreans stayed loyal. The EPLF is the only true Marxist-Leninist State in Africa and shrugged when presented with a national constitution. More democratic regimes have come and gone. It persists.

Related Links

What is it like to live in Eritrea?

How many times has Eritrea been colonized?

Is Africa poor because of colonization? If colonization never happened, how would Africa have been?

What makes Eritrea unique from other African countries?

Was Eritrea ever part of Ethiopia since it was colonized by three nations for a long time?

What is happening in Eritrea?

Why did Eritrea and Ethiopia split up, and what were the repercussions?

What would have happened to Africa if it hadn't been colonized?

Why are Ethiopia and Eritrea acting against people in the Tigray region?

Eritrea: What are some good Eritrean films?

Why did Eritrea break off from Ethiopia?

Mahmoud Ibrahim

.

Follow

Born in Eritrea lives in Canada, Studies Politics 1y

I don't argue about the previous history of Eritrea before 1900's. Why? Because it was under Italy, Ethiopia and even had their own kingdoms. Depending your birth place, everyone has their on version on where Eritrea belongs too.

I look at after 1900's when Eritreans made their voice clear! They wanted Independence.

Eritrea in the late 1800's became an Italian Colony. They were treated better then the Ethiopians but they didn't submit to Italian rule.

After WW2 Britain was in control of Eritrea. The UN was deciding what to do with Eritrea and they found out that Eritreans clearly wanted Independence. The United States and western nations called for Eritrea to be apart of Ethiopia as a gift for fighting in WW2 and they believed Ethiopia should have access to the sea. So in 1952 Eritrea was merged with Ethiopia under condition it can control its domestic's affairs'.

A decade later Ethiopia annexed the whole Province and revoked its special rights and from there the ELF (Eritrean Liberation Front) (Rebel group) fought for a independent Eritrea. It later split and the EPLF (Eritrean People's Liberation Front) continued this battle.

For 30 years 1961–1991, Eritreans fought, with very very limited support against the biggest army of Africa with massive support from the USSR, Cuba, Libya, E. Germany etc. It even killed a soviet colonel and captured 3 (Battle of Afabet 1988).

1991 the EPLF take over the whole of Eritrea as Asmara (Capital) and Assab (largest city was liberated in May 24, 1991 and May 28, 1991 respectively. It agreed to a 2 year transition and a vote for independence or continuation of Ethiopia.

99% of the country voted for Independence and on the 24th of May 1993, Eritrea was admitted to the UN.

Why did Eritrea break off: It wanted independence for a long time and tried political action, killings of Eritreans in Asmara were documented, Students strangled with Piano wires, Massawa (second largest city) bombed by cluster bombs (1990). This isn't a nationalistic Eritrean talking about the killings, these were documented and photographed.

Eritreans weren't treated as humans, many (not all) Ethiopians say Eritrea was an Arab project or people tricked by Italians. A joke as the population was 50\50 in religion between Islam and Christianity. By 1990, some 3% of all Eritreans in existence joined the rebel group.

These comments on Quora show what I am saying, Ethiopians making no mention of a genocide against Eritreans while claiming Eritrea was an Arab experiment.

When Eritrea was carved off of Ethiopia, why was Ethiopia left with no access to the coast?

Melaku Teguegne

.

Follow

A direct descendant of Africa and Africans Updated Jan 25

"When Eritrea was carved off of Ethiopia, why was Ethiopia left with no access to the coast?"

Someone has asked an excellent question. Prior to Eritrea's separation from Ethiopia, the narrow strip that includes the port of Asseb had been carved out as a separate administrative zone. However, the TPLF, who took over in 1991, were determined to undermine Ethiopian sovereignty and weaken its long term viability. TPLF started out as a Communist liberation front (the L and F in TPLF). Consistent with Communist dogma, they were focused on undermining the existing state, even if it meant denying the state access to the sea. It was a glaringly counterproductive step. A reunification with Eritrea will correct the mistake.

Related Links

[What is it like to live in Eritrea?]

[How many times has Eritrea been colonized?]

Is Africa poor because of colonization? If colonization never happened, how would Africa have been?

What makes Eritrea unique from other African countries?

Was Eritrea ever part of Ethiopia since it was colonized by three nations for a long time?

What is happening in Eritrea?

Why did Eritrea and Ethiopia split up, and what were the repercussions?

What would have happened to Africa if it hadn't been colonized?

Why are Ethiopia and Eritrea acting against people in the Tigray region?

Eritrea: What are some good Eritrean films?

Has Asmara always been the biggest city in Eritrea?

Ezana Tnsaie

.

Follow

Lived in Eritrea 2y

Well the first city in Eritrea according to history is the ancient port city of Adulis which was the biggest at it's time . After the collapse of the Aksum empire our ancestors retreated to the highlands and occupied the area. Then rose the city of Dubarwa which was the biggest at it's time. In 1542 Cristóvão da Gama stayed the rainy season in Dubarwa and described it as bigger than Massawa. After the fall of bahri negash the capital moved to Tseazega a town near Asmara. At this time Massawa which was controlled by the Egyptians became the biggest city. So the biggest Eritrean cities in retrospect to their times are.

1. Adulis: 2000BC-700AD
2. Debarwa: 1400AD-1700AD
3. Massawa : 1700AD-1880AD

4. Asmara: 1880AD-present time

Related Links

What are people not telling you about Asmara, Eritrea?

What is it like to live in Eritrea?

Are there unsafe areas in Asmara, Eritrea?

How do Ethiopia and Eritrea differ?

When will Ethiopia and Eritrea be one country again?

What are the good and bad neighborhoods of Asmara, Eritrea?

Why did Eritrea and Ethiopia split up, and what were the repercussions?

Why is Eritrea so secretive?

Did Eritrea used to be part of Ethiopia?

Why should I never visit Eritrea?

Truth About Russia

What does Eritrea gain from supporting Russia?

Answered by

Dimitri Vulis

Mar 29

25 African states voted in favor of the resolution condemning Russia's war against Ukraine, 24 African states abstained, and only 1 African state, Eritrea, joined the pariah states Russia, Belarus, Syria, and North Korea in voting against the resolution.

Eritrea has been ruled since 1993 by the bloody dictator Isaias Afwerki:

According to Eritrea's constitution, presidential elections should be held every 5 years. However they haven't had one since 1993.

They also haven't had a parliamentary election since 1997. The same 150 people elected in 1997 are still in the same parliament.

There is, of course, only one legal political party, headed by the President.

Of course such a country would support Russia's criminal aggression.

Related Answer

What does Eritrea gain from supporting Russia?

Jakub Mařík

Lives in The Czech Republic Apr 3

Money.

Eritrea is a poor state but situated in a strategic place - end of Red Sea. And Russia is planning to build a military base here which will become a significant source of money for Eritrea. So their support to Russia is motivated by keeping this lucrative deal.

Related Links

In Russia, Brittney Griner pleaded guilty to possession of less than 1 gram of hashish oil. Do you think she thought they would not select her to have her luggage searched, or the vape cartridges would be overlooked?

If Central American nations are playing host to the Russians and Chinese, how much of a threat would they pose? Could they pull a sneak attack?

Can Russians travel abroad during a war with Ukraine?

How do you feel about legislation that would grant a "pathway to USA citizenship" for citizens of Mexico who Ukraine accepts as foreign military recruits for a certain number of tours, and then receive a verifiable honorable discharge from Ukraine?

Will Russia be the loser in the future of Ukraine and the people of Ukraine

Why did Russia attack their city Belgorod with their own missiles?

Putin said that from now on the Russian army will move to really serious things in Ukraine. What did he mean? Does it refer to more mass murder, more destruction, or more rapes?

Is Boris Johnson resigning good or bad for Putin?

In this age of anti-West propaganda, shouldn't NATO play up its power more? Why shouldn't NATO countries agree to also fly NATO flags at standard border crossings to non-NATO nations?

What will happen to Britney Griner now that she plead guilty to Russian drug charges?

What will happen to Putin after this conflict with Ukraine is over?

New Zealand PM says Russia's war in Ukraine is morally bankrupt but should not be seen as a conflict of democracy versus autocracy? Do you agree with her?

Is it okay to support the Russian invasion of Ukraine?

Is now the time for the UN/NATO to move into Ukraine and show the Russians what we are capable of? Ignore the threats of nuclear weapons but stand up for what is right and deal with them on the battlefield?

Why do you think former president Trump hasn't intervened in an effort to get Paul Whelan and Brittney Griner back from Russia since he claims to hold such sway with Putin?

Are Eritreans sub-Saharan Africans?

Alexander Balogun

.
Follow
African history Ph.D. Aug 15

Sub-Saharan Africa is Africa below the Sahara desert. Eritrea and the entire Horn of Africa are geographically located below the Sahara region of Africa, which makes the countries within that region Sub-Saharan African countries. So yes, they are Sub-Saharan Africans.

Related Links

Are African Americans considered to be Sub-Saharan Africans? If or if not, what is the difference?

Why do many Native Horn Africans like to disassociate themselves so much from other Sub Saharan Africans?

What is sub-Saharan Africa?

Why do East Africans look so different from other Sub-Saharan Africans?

Why do so many racists claim that sub-Saharan Africans have invented nothing? Is this a lie to mortify Africans?

Are the Ancient Egyptians Sub-Saharan African (Black) or North African (non-Black)?

Why do people say that Sub-Saharan Africans have no relationship to Ancient Egyptians when the only people who carry out ancient Egyptian traditions are Sub-Saharan Africans?

Is there racism towards Sub-Saharan Africans in North Africa?

In sub-Saharan Africa, how do well-educated Africans feel about the uneducated people they encounter there? It seems nowhere else on Earth has such a broad divide.

What are the reasons why Sub-Saharan African history is ignored?

ESWATINI

National Flag and Emblem

Locator Map

TEXT HIGHLIGHTS: Diaries updates, key events, brief analysis and relating news articles in timeline.

Overview

Bantu peoples migrated southwest to the area of Mozambique in the 16th century. A number of clans broke away from the main body in the 18th century and settled in Swaziland. In the 19th century, these clans organised as a tribe, partly because they were in constant conflict with the Zulu. The Swazi nation has been led by a monarchy since about the middle of the seventeenth century. In 1890, Swaziland was brought under the protection and administration of the British Governor of the Transvaal. It was assumed that it would in time be incorporated into South Africa, though not against the wishes of its inhabitants.

In 1910 the Transvaal became a province of the Union of South Africa and Swaziland came under the direct control of the UK.

When the National Party with its policy of apartheid came to power in South Africa in 1948, incorporation of the protectorate was rendered unacceptable to both British and world opinion. Swaziland gained limited self-government in 1964, and became a protected Kingdom in 1966 under a new constitution that recognised the King as Head of State.

Former UK colony;

It was made a protectorate under the British High Commission in 1906.

A semi-autonomy for the Swazis of southern Africa was guaranteed by the British in the late niteenth century, and a self-rule in 1963, achieved it's independence on the 6th of September, 1968.

King Sobhuza II remains protected monarchial head of Swaziland, in the 1970s a new constitutions were framed, based on the supreme authority of the King.

The kingdom of Swaziland is one of the world's last remaining absolute monarchies.

The king rules by decree over his million subjects, most of whom live in the countryside and follow traditional ways of life. The power of the throne, however, has not gone unchallenged. King Sobhuza scrapped the constitution in 1973 and banned political parties.

Sobhuza II crowned as monarchial head of independent Swaziland in 1971 untill the date he passed away in 1982.

King Mswati III, on the throne since 1986, is upholding the tradition of his father, King Sobhuza II, who reigned for almost 61 years and had scores of wives.

Elections were held in April 1967 and full independence was granted on 6 September 1968. In April 1973, King Sobhuza II repealed the Westminster-style Independence Constitution and assumed supreme powers. In 1978, the King instituted an electoral system whereby royal nominees selected 40 members of the House of Assembly. King Sobhuza II died on 21 August 1982, having reigned for 61 years. Within a few days, a caucus of Princes and Chiefs had chosen one of Sobhuza's many sons, Prince Makhosetive as heir. After a four-year regency, the Prince was crowned as King Mswati III on 25 April 1986.

Headship since independence; Swaziland is a small kingdom in southern Africa, whose held a coronation ritual in April, 1986 for it's current monarch, Mswati III. Although Swazi tradition required the king to wait until his twenty-first year to be crowned, Mswati was crowned three years early due to disputes between different factions in the regency council (Liqoqo). Swazi chiefs paid a tribute of 105 cattle to the family of Mswati's mother, Ntombi, as a dowry for the woman who was to become the new “Mother of the Nation”. The rite itself included various secret rituals, after which the new king took part in several ritual dances in full feathered regalia.

Names of Origins: Ngwane, means “the land of Swazi”, who are the main ethnic-group, the nation, as well as its people, are named after the 19th century

The Swazi culture is mainly of the native

Bantu A small kingdom in Southern Africa.

It was settled by the Bantu speaking Swazi people migrated in there in the nineteenth century. The British gained control of the area in the early nineteenth century after the Swazi King sought their aid against the Zulus. It was made a protectorate under the British High Commission in 1906. A semi-autonomy for the Swazis of southern Africa was guaranteed by the British in the late niteenth century, and a self-rule in 1963, achieved it's independence on the 6th of September, 1968 when then King Sobhuza II remained protected monarchial head of Swaziland, in the 1970s a new constitutions were framed, based on the supreme authority of the King, Sobhuza II crowned as monarchial head of independent Swaziland in 1971 untill the date he passed away in 1982. The great council of the state, known as "the Liqoqo" introduced the fourteen years old, prince in 1983 to be the next King but for the next four years the two wives of the late King served as regents while the prince continued to his education, he is one of many sons of King Sobhuza II who had about seventy wives and at the time of death left over one thousand children & grand children. His son, on the lineage, prince Makhosetive crowned as Mswati III on the 25th of April, 1986, became king of the southern African tiny kingdom, succeeding his father. Mswati III is the king of Swaziland and head of the Swazi royal family, he is generally considered to be an absolute monarch with the authority to appoint the head of the government. A new constitution came into effect in 2006, that contained a bill of rights with all political parties remain banned. The Kingdom of Swaziland is a kingdom rule by usually from the Royal House, elected by a group of Elders & Tribal chiefs, in Swazi, no King can appoint his successor only a special traditional council called, "the Liqoqo".

TIMELINE: The SWAZI MONARCHY

Ngwane III was King of Swaziland to 1780. He is considered to be the first King of Swaziland

Sobhuza I (Ngwane IV) Dlamini (ca. 1780–1839?) was king of Swaziland, from 1805 to 1839

Ngwane V (1876 – December 10, 1899) was the paramount chief of Swaziland from February 1895 until his death. He is sometimes referred to as king Bhunu.

Sobhuza succeeded Ngwane V as Paramount Chief of Swaziland on December 10, 1899, when he was only a few months old.

King Sobhuza II December 10, 22, 1899 – 21 August 1982 (82 years, & 254 days) was king of Swaziland, Ngwenyama Sobhuza II was the Paramount Chief and later King of Swaziland. He was the son of Ngwane V. Coronation: December 22, 1921 Died: 21 August 1982 (1982-08-21) aged 83.

Swaziland – Timeline Diaries updates and related key notes:

1894 - Britain and the Boer Republic of Transvaal jointly rule Swaziland.

1907 - Swaziland becomes a British High Commission territory.

1921 - King Sobhuza II succeeds to the throne.

1962 - The Ngwane National Liberatory Congress (NNLC) is formed.

1964 - Swaziland's first constitution enters into force.

1964 - King Sobhuza establishes a political party, the Imbokodvo National Movement (INM). It secures all the seats in the new Legislative Council.

1967 - A new constitution comes into effect, providing for the introduction of self-government once independence is gained.

The Legislative Council is dissolved. Elections to a new bicameral parliament - including a House of Assembly and Senate - take place. The INM gains all 24 elective seats in the lower house. Despite not gaining any seats, the NNLC emerges as the main opposition.

1968 - Swaziland is granted formal independence, within the Commonwealth, and adopts a new constitution. Authority is vested in the new parliament, a proportion of the members are nominated by the monarch.

Capital: Mbabane

Founded in 1902

Former HQ of British colonial government

Population: Estimated 70,000

1972 - Elections to the House of Assembly see the INM retaining 21 seats and the NNLC gaining the remaining three.

1973 - King Sobhuza suspends the constitution and bans political parties.

1977 - The parliamentary system is abolished and replaced by traditional tribal communities.

1978 - The new constitution enshrines electoral representation by 'Tinkhundla'. Under the system candidates are nominated by Tinkhundla's (local councils) and elected by secret ballot. The king retains the power to appoint a proportion of parliamentarians. Parliament's role is advisory.

1978 - Elections are held.

1979 - The new parliament is opened.

1981 - King Sobhuza's diamond jubilee.

1982 - The body advising on Swazi tradition - the Swaziland National Council - made up of members of the royal family, is renamed the Supreme Council of State (Liqoqo).

1982 - King Sobhuza dies.

1982 - Queen Mother Dzeliwe is authorised to act as Regent until Prince Makhosetive reaches 21.

1983 - Queen Regent Dzeliwe is deposed. Queen Ntombi, Prince Makhosetive's mother, is made regent.

1983 - The People's United Democratic Movement (Pudemo) is formed.

1986 - Prince Makhosetive is crowned - three years early - and assumes the title of King Mswati III.

1986 - King Mswati dissolves the Supreme Council of State (Liqoqo).

1987 - Elections for the electoral college take place, but turnout is low. Many interpret this as a sign of dissatisfaction with the Tinkhundla system.

1988 - A motion calling for a review of the legislative structure is rejected by the prime minister, despite majority support in the senate.

1990 - Pudemo calls for electoral reform.

1991 - King Mswati agrees to review the Tinkhundla system by setting up a commission. Pudemo rejects the commission.

1992 - The king sets up a second commission to review political reforms.

1992 - Pudemo rejects the second commission's proposals. King Mswati dissolves parliament and announces he will govern by decree until the elections.

1993 - Elections are held.

1995 - The Swaziland Federation of Trade Unions (SFTU) organises a general strike.

1996 - Pudemo announces a campaign of civil disobedience, citing the government's failure to respond to demands for a multi-party system and constitutional change. Strike action again takes place.

1996 - King Mswati announces a Constitutional Review Commission to draft proposals for a new constitution.

1997 - Half of the labour force observes a general strike called by the SFTU. The government declares the strike illegal.

September 1997 - The king dissolves the National Assembly (the redesignated House of Assembly) to prepare for elections. Elections are held in November.

September 2001 - The king forbids men from sleeping with teenage girls for the next five years to help stem the Aids crisis.

April 2001 - Constitutional Review Commission recommends King Mswati's powers are extended and that all political parties continue to be banned.

November 2002 - King Mswati takes delivery of a $45m jet, despite the country's parliament voting to cancel the order.

October 2003 - Parliamentary elections; pro-democracy activist Obed Dlamini wins a seat.

February 2004 - Prime minister declares a humanitarian crisis after three years of erratic rainfall.

March 2004 - UN Aids envoy says Swaziland has the world's highest rate of HIV infection.

July 2004 - King proposes to build new royal residences to house some of his wives.

March 2005 - High Court rules that Swaziland's banned political parties are "non-existent" under the law. The parties had been bidding for a say in a draft constitution.

August 2005 - King signs a new constitution. The document has been eight years in the making.

March 2006 - 16 opposition activists from the banned Pudemo party are freed on bail after being charged in December and January over series of petrol bomb attacks.

The European Union bans more than 90 airlines, including six registered in Swaziland, in a move to boost air safety.

April 2006 - South African police fire at protesters trying to blockade a border crossing with Swaziland to demand political reform there.

April 2007 - Six members of the opposition are charged with sedition after trying to block borders with South Africa to mark the anniversary of the 1973 royal decree banning political parties.

July 2007 - Thousands protest in the commercial capital Manzini to press for democratic reforms.

February 2008 - Opposition groups decide to boycott forthcoming elections as part of their campaign for multi-party elections.

September 2008 - Elections held, boycotted by opposition.

Authorities blame failed bomb attack near a royal palace on opposition Pudemo party.

November 2008 - Pudemo leader Mario Masuku detained under anti-terror laws over palace bomb attempt.

September 2009 - Opposition leader Mario Masuku released from prison, says he will continue to fight for democracy.

September 2010 - Pro-democracy demonstrators march through Manzini, despite the arrest of some 50 activists the previous day.

March 2011 - Economic crisis worsens, with government warning of possible civil service pay cuts.

April 2011 - Police crack down on opposition ahead of planned demonstrations for political reform.

November 2011 - Swaziland is hit by a budget crisis described by the IMF as "critical", with the government struggling to pay the salaries of public sector workers.

April 27, 2012 The Swaziland Army recently ordered $1.25 million worth of cell phone monitoring equipment from a South African distributor. At the last minute the army said it could not pay for the equipment. So the distributor went to the Swazi High Court and sued the army for the money. This made public a purchase the army had hoped to keep secret.

This sort of monitoring gear is only sold to governments or government agencies, and the Swaziland Army qualified. The army was acting at the behest of the government, in order to establish an espionage operation to keep tabs on the growing number of people trying to overthrow the king, the last absolute monarch in Africa.

The problem here is money. Swaziland is poor and never has enough cash, except to pay for the lavish lifestyles of the royal family and their friends. This would include the senior army officers.

Swaziland is a small country (population 1.2 million) between South Africa and Mozambique. The armed forces (the army) have about 3,000 personnel and are mainly used to keep the unruly population in line. This will now be more difficult with details of the army's proposed spying operation exposed. It is made worse by the fact that the army will have a harder time getting the money for the equipment, since it's quite possible that the money was provided but was stolen by someone in the government. James Dunnigan

November 2012 - Anglican Church of Southern Africa ordains first woman bishop in Africa, Ellinah Wamukoya, to serve as bishop in Swaziland.

Eswatini police detain, abuse 2 reporters from South African outlet New Frame

Journalists Cebelihle Mbuyisa (left) and Magnificent Mndebele (right) were recently arrested and abused by authorities in Eswatini. (Photo: Andiswa Mkosi)

Lusaka, Zambia, July 8, 2021 – Eswatini authorities must conduct a swift and thorough investigation into the recent arrests and abuse in custody of journalists Magnificent Mndebele and Cebelihle Mbuyisa, and hold those responsible to account, the Committee to Protect Journalists said today.

At about 9 a.m. on July 4, soldiers on the MR3 highway near the central town of Matsapha arrested Mndebele and Mbuyisa, both reporters at the nonprofit South African news website New Frame, according to a report and tweets by their outlet, and both journalists, who spoke to CPJ via messaging app.

The soldiers threatened the journalists at gunpoint, seized their cameras, and forced them to delete footage of the funeral of a police shooting victim, which they had just attended, according to those sources.

Soldiers then took Mndebele and Mbuyisa to the nearby Sigodvweni Police Station, where police officers interrogated them about how they entered the country, what kind of coverage they were doing, whom they had spoken with, and the identity of the editor who assigned their coverage, the journalists told CPJ.

In detention, a group of dozens of officers took turns punching and kicking both reporters, squeezed Mndebele’s genitals, hit Mbuyisa with an office paper-puncher, and held plastic bags over both their heads to suffocate them, the journalists said.

Mndebele told CPJ, “We nearly died; it was a traumatic experience.”

They were released at about 3 p.m. after the intervention of a lawyer acting on behalf of New Frame, and they both returned to South Africa the following day, according to the outlet’s report and tweets.

Since June, Eswatini authorities have cracked down on pro-democracy protests in the country, including partially shuttling down the internet, according to news reports.

“Eswatini authorities must thoroughly investigate police officers’ abuse of journalists Magnificent Mndebele and Cebelihle Mbuyisa in detention, and ensure that the officers responsible for such actions are held to account,” said Angela Quintal, CPJ’s Africa program coordinator, in New York. “Instead of harassing, assaulting, and censoring reporters, authorities must allow the press to cover the news safely and without restrictions, so the public can be served by accurate and timely information during this period of turmoil in the kingdom.”

Mndebele and Mbuyisa were treated at a local hospital in Eswatini following their release, they said. Magnificent told CPJ that he sustained a swollen lower back and neck, and injuries on his head and elbow from the beatings. Cebelihle told CPJ that he suffered bruises on his ribs and abdominal area, and pain on his face.

Separately, on June 29, the Eswatini Communications Commission, the government telecommunications regulator, ordered telecom companies to shut down internet access throughout the country as protests against King Mswati III spread nationwide, according to multiple news reports and a statement by the South African telecom company MTN Eswatini, which CPJ reviewed.

Mbongeni Mbingo, chair of the Eswatini Editors Forum, told CPJ via messaging app that the shutdown disrupted many journalists’ work, adding that the state-owned Eswatini Observer and privately owned Times of Eswatini both failed to publish on June 30 and July 1 due to difficulties imposed by the internet shutdown.

On Twitter, New Frame wrote that it was “very difficult to keep in touch with the two journalists as internet communication in the country had been severed.´´

Beginning on July 4, authorities allowed website traffic to resume in the country, but have continued blocking social media platforms, Mbingo said.

Additionally, at least two journalists were injured amid the protests in the country, according to Mbingo and a statement by the Media Institute of Southern Africa, a regional press freedom group.

On June 29, police shot Eswatini Observer reporter Wonderboy Dlamini with a rubber bullet, and the following day, authorities tear-gassed Andile Langwenya, a reporter with the privately owned weekly Independent News, as police attempted to disperse a protest, Mbingo said. CPJ could not immediately determine the extent of either journalist's injuries.

In a statement, the South African National Editors' Forum, an industry body of editors and senior journalists, said that South African news organizations including public broadcaster SABC and independent broadcaster Newzroom Afrika were forced to pull their journalists out of Eswatini due to concern for their safety.

Eswatini police spokesperson Phindile Vilakati referred all queries to government spokesperson Sabelo Dlamini. In an emailed statement to CPJ yesterday, Dlamini said that the government took the reports about Mndebele and Mbuyisa detention and abuse "very seriously," adding, "we have reached out and requested a meeting with the reporters in question in order to get to the bottom of this matter."

"We will update the public as we continue to receive further developments in this regard," he said in the statement, which did not address the other attacks on local journalists.

He also said that the government would meet with journalists whose work was hindered by the internet shutdown, and added that "internet is working as we speak."

On July 6, CPJ and 20 other press freedom and civil rights organizations wrote an open letter to King Mswati III, urging him to guarantee the safety and security of journalists and media workers and to restore full internet access to the country.

Why do Eswatini (Swaziland) and Lesotho exist? How come they exist separate from South Africa (or, in E Swatini's case, possibly Mozambique)?

Kevin Richardson PhD in History, The University of Texas at Austin Aug 20

They exist because of a confluence of African and European colonial factors. The reasons are slightly different for their initial separate existence, but not at all different for their continued existence. In the case of Lesotho (or Basutoland, in colonial parlance), it came into being by the initiative of Moshoeshoe I, its first king:

He was an exceptionally shrewd political operator, and accepted French Protestant missionaries in his territory as conduits to information and diplomatic access; I've seen no hard proof, but suggestions abound that the French Protestants gained special entry in part because they couldn't possibly be direct agents of any colonial government. Eugène Casalis' recollections of his time in Lesotho are available online, in fact, and speak in fairly glowing tones about Moshoeshoe. The king was able to build a stable kingdom from a variety of incoming groups of people, often through marriage (by one count he had up to 70 wives at one point) but also through the more mundane exchange of cattle back and forth. The result was a cohesive, accretive kingdom from the beginning. They also adopted the Griqua/Koranna/Boer method of warfare from horseback, and were very good shots, and the capital was a virtual fortress atop Thaba Bosiu—nearly 2 square miles on top, and only one way up, with plenty of sheltered enfilades. So it was not possible to storm it.

So Moshoeshoe had enormous power, a secure position, and remarkable political acumen. He used this to make alliances at various times to benefit him, for example, siding with the Orange River Sovereignty Boers against the British in 1853/4. But eventually, military capacity overtook the mountain kingdom, to the point that even though the now-Orange Free State couldn't conquer the mountain, they could basically starve them slowly. In that environment, in 1868, Moshoeshoe arranged for a British protectorate; they negotiated away a strip of arable land along the Caledon River (which Lesotho to this day calls "the conquered territory" and wants it back) but assured British colonial overlordship and recognition of the house of Moshoeshoe. He emphatically did not want the country being given over to any of the South African settler colonies or republics.

Of course, once Moshoeshoe was dead (1870), the imperial government in London sought to do just that. They handed the administration of Basutoland over to the Cape Colony, which imposed some laws initially and levied taxes, but when they began to try to carry out "native law" justice in the area, they provoked a rebellion (1879) that they put down rather brutally. At that point, they wanted to disarm the baSotho in keeping with regulations in the Transkeian Territories to the south and southeast, and began to make designs on key parts of the country they felt were "disused," so the whole country rose up in the Gun War (1880-81) against the colonial forces of the Cape.

They were able to make it costly, combined with other risings in the Transkei, and made a settlement that secured their weapons and rolled back other regulations in return for an honestly ceremonial indemnity of cattle. But even that wasn't enough to get baSotho to hew to Cape colonial rule; they honestly wanted to return to Protectorate status, and the Cape didn't want to have to pay to run the territory—besides which its anomalous legal position was a bad precedent for other elements of "native policy." So Basutoland became an Imperial protectorate once again in 1884, which it remained until 1966.

Between those years, there were a number of attempts to convince them to merge with South Africa. Every single time (and see Hyam's Failure of South African Expansion on this), the House of Moshoeshoe and various Christian (usually Catholic by now, as French Catholics had supplanted the Protestant missionaries) educated baSotho made it very clear that they would fight with material and legal means to the end if necessary. What's more, over time, South Africa continued a long turn towards Afrikaner nationalist control, which not only made the British warier of handing over the territory, but made Sotho resistance that much stronger. So that territory remained out of the country. Elizabeth Eldredge's books are strong expositions on Lesotho within systems of colonial power, and so are worth checking out.

(Next: Swaziland.)

OK, Swaziland. This one’s a little harder. The Swazi kingdom is a remnant of the Ngwane confederation, in particular, the Dlamini ruling clan, combined with the people who were already on the territory. Dlamini ascendancy there is connected to the wars of Dingiswayo (and Zwide), Shaka, and Dingane, but for purposes of why it exists, we have to look forward to the 1840s. In effect, the Boers of the Ohrigstad settlement (so really it ought to be “Swatiland”) signed certain agreements with King Mswati II in the late 1840s and early 1850s to establish their occupation of certain lands, after the latter had expanded his reach north and west, and had come to an agreement with King Mpande of KwaZulu to the south. The argument still exists over whether these were bills of the actual sale, or agreements to enjoy use in return for payment of tribute to Mswati II; the Boers (and farm owners today) maintain the former, while emaSwati suggest the latter.

In any case, with some kind of boundary, the emaSwati had at least a semblance of security and autonomy as a European power in the region grew. They employed Boer assistance against their enemies at times; more often, the Boers of the South African Republic (ZAR) employed them. Swazi (Swati) levies were essential in virtually every major military campaign against other chiefdoms they waged, even after they had machineguns and artillery as in the north. The lack of their presence sort of proves the point: when they decided that storming the Pedi stronghold of Sekhukhune was a fool’s errand in 1876, they left the field, and Sekhukhune forced a stalemate and bankrupted the ZAR in the process.

Half-length photograph of Sekhukhune King of the Bapedi people. He is looking to the left and has a fur blanket wrapped around his torso. (Even the British, fighting the Pedi a few years later, used emaSwati in their attacks.) So this was no small kingdom; it was recognized and had boundaries, and was an active player in political and military conflicts.

The change came with the concessionaires. People interested in obtaining grazing rights, homesteading rights, or (often) mining rights could pay Mswati's successor (Mbadzine, after a period of regency and a bit of chaos) to prospect and exploit resources. In the process however they were denying land and wealth to emaSwati, and the kingdom was being slowly swallowed up by White settlers who took seasonal rights to mean occupation. (Bonner's Kings, Commoners, and Concessionaires is still the key work on this process.) To try and manage the issue, they brought in a trusted administrator, Sir Theophilus Shepstone, to manage these external affairs; he proved to have a pretty corrupt method of operation. The result was that the Boers began to seek governance over Swaziland, which the British didn't want, in no small part because it put them that much closer to the sea. Only in 1894-5 the British and the Boers of the ZAR agree to co-administer the now-bankrupt territory.

The Swaziland Wikipedia history page doesn't have a lot in good detail, but they do have the South African War (1899-1902) and machinations internally. The important outcome here is that the British annexed the ZAR as the Transvaal, and initially they considered Swaziland to be part of that territory. But the return of responsible government to the Transvaal in 1906 also occasioned the severing of Swaziland as a separate colony in the interests of fair and equitable administration of Swati, company, and settler interests. The royal house made a concerted effort to collect money to buy out as much of the White-owned land and as many concessions as possible; they had some success in doing this, but the struggle between settler interests and the Swazi throne continued.Eventually, a two-tier system existed: the King had almost total power over emaSwati, while Whites had connections to the South African legal and judicial system via the British High Commission. (The connection of jurists in South Africa with Swaziland continues today, by the way.)

But for the same reasons that Lesotho stayed out of South Africa, so too did Swaziland. The idea, just as with Lesotho, was that Swaziland would eventually become part of South Africa. But the Whites weren't powerful enough (and frankly, they were too English and enjoyed certain freedom from state demands they wouldn't have in South Africa) to agree to it when they could have effected it; when they might have been willing later, the emaSwati would never accept it and the British couldn't countenance it. So Swaziland remained separate until its independence in 1968...and Mswati III is effectively the sole authority over emaSwati because that tribalized system has continued to exist.

You didn’t ask about Botswana, though. It exists for much the same reason—it’s a definable kingdom, they fought to remain separate from Colony or Company rule, and remained a protectorate in deteriorating SA/UK relations—so became a separate nation. But that’s the short, dirty story.

Reporter Nomthandazo Maseko at the hospital in Matsapha, Eswatini for medical attention on February 8, 2022, after she was assaulted by correctional officers after livestreaming a protest outside a prison. (Siphesihle Maseko)

Lusaka, February 16, 2022 — Authorities in Eswatini must immediately investigate the brutal assault by correctional officers on Nomthandazo Maseko, a reporter for the privately owned news website Swati Newsweek, and hold those responsible to account, the Committee to Protect Journalists said Wednesday.

At noon on February 8, about 20 correctional services staff in Matsapha, a town about 22 miles from the capital Mbabane, assaulted the journalist, according to Maseko and her editor, Eugene Dube, who spoke to CPJ via messaging app, and a report by her employer. Maseko was assaulted after livestreaming a protest on Swati Newsweek's Facebook page by members of the Swaziland Liberation Movement (Swalimo) activist group outside the local prison where two pro-democracy members of parliament have been detained since their arrest on July 25, 2021.

When officers spotted her in her car, they hauled her out, slapped, kicked, beat her with sticks, and an unidentified officer pointed a gun at her and threatened to shoot, Maseko told CPJ, adding that she lost her two cell phones during the beating.

"Eswatini police must investigate the vicious assault on reporter Nomthandazo Maseko and ensure that the prison officers responsible are brought to justice," said Angela Quintal, CPJ's Africa program coordinator, from New York. "A prison visit by pro-democracy activists is a legitimate news story, and to violently attack a journalist for being on the scene is unacceptable and must not be condoned by authorities."

Maseko and Dube told CPJ that Maseko had worked for Swati Newsweek for less than a month and her only other coverage was a livestream when she covered a student protest on February 3.

Maseko said Swalimo members gathered outside the prison after they were denied permission to visit the two members of parliament, who have been charged under the Suppression of Terrorism Act and contravening COVID-19 regulations during pro-democracy protests last year.

On February 8, the protesters sang songs and listened to statements by their leaders, only to be violently dispersed when prison warders charged at them and began to beat those who were unable to run to safety, she said.

In a 13-second video after the protest which was also livestreamed on the publication's Facebook page, Maseko says, "Mama, they (officers) are now beating someone," before the broadcast was abruptly cut. Then she was the forcibly taken out of her vehicle and assaulted by officers.

"As they were beating me, they kept asking questions like 'Why did you come here? Do you think this is your grandparents' house?'" Maseko told CPJ.

The officers then took Maseko behind a market, where they were beating protesters, and told her to lie down, the journalist told CPJ. At some point, she was ordered to run, and when she did, officers began assaulting her and pushed her to the ground. When she objected, another jailer pointed a firearm at her, Maseko said.

On instructions from the correctional services officers, an unidentified man drove her out of the prison vicinity, and she was dropped off near some protesters who had fled to safety, Maseko said.

Maseko sought medical attention at a state-run hospital first, which declined to treat her beyond giving her painkillers. At a second hospital, she was treated, and they found she suffered tissue injuries and was badly bruised, according to Maseko and a medical report reviewed by CPJ.

"The attack on our brave reporter Nomthandazo Maseko was totally unjust. She was mercilessly brutalized for just carrying out her job and sadly, she sustained injuries and lost her two phones and one of them is what she has been using to work," Dube told CPJ. "We challenge King Mswati to speak out against these attacks on independent journalists."

CPJ repeatedly called and text messaged Guguleth Shongwe-Dlamini, a correctional services public relations officer, for comment, but no one picked up the phone and the messages were unanswered.

Eswatini prison officers assault, threaten to shoot reporter covering pro-democracy protest

Reporter Nomthandazo Maseko at the hospital in Matsapha, Eswatini for medical attention on February 8,

2022, after she was assaulted by correctional officers after livestreaming a protest outside a prison. (Siphesihle Maseko)

Lusaka, February 16, 2022 — Authorities in Eswatini must immediately investigate the brutal assault by correctional officers on Nomthandazo Maseko, a reporter for the privately owned news website Swati Newsweek, and hold those responsible to account, the Committee to Protect Journalists said Wednesday.

At noon on February 8, about 20 correctional services staff in Matsapha, a town about 22 miles from the capital Mbabane, assaulted the journalist, according to Maseko and her editor, Eugene Dube, who spoke to CPJ via messaging app, and a report by her employer. Maseko was assaulted after livestreaming a protest on Swati Newsweek's Facebook page by members of the Swaziland Liberation Movement (Swalimo) activist group outside the local prison where two pro-democracy members of parliament have been detained since their arrest on July 25, 2021.

When officers spotted her in her car, they hauled her out, slapped, kicked, beat her with sticks, and an unidentified officer pointed a gun at her and threatened to shoot, Maseko told CPJ, adding that she lost her two cell phones during the beating.

"Eswatini police must investigate the vicious assault on reporter Nomthandazo Maseko and ensure that the prison officers responsible are brought to justice," said Angela Quintal, CPJ's Africa program coordinator, from New York. "A prison visit by pro-democracy activists is a legitimate news story, and to violently attack a journalist for being on the scene is unacceptable and must not be condoned by authorities."

Maseko and Dube told CPJ that Maseko had worked for Swati Newsweek for less than a month and her only other coverage was a livestream when she covered a student protest on February 3.

Maseko said Swalimo members gathered outside the prison after they were denied permission to visit the two members of parliament, who have been charged under the Suppression of Terrorism Act and contravening COVID-19 regulations during pro-democracy protests last year.

On February 8, the protesters sang songs and listened to statements by their leaders, only to be violently dispersed when prison warders charged at them and began to beat those who were unable to run to safety, she said.

In a 13-second video after the protest which was also livestreamed on the publication's Facebook page, Maseko says, "Mama, they (officers) are now beating someone," before the broadcast was abruptly cut. Then she was the forcibly taken out of her vehicle and assaulted by officers.

"As they were beating me, they kept asking questions like 'Why did you come here? Do you think this is your grandparents' house?'" Maseko told CPJ.

The officers then took Maseko behind a market, where they were beating protesters, and told her to lie down, the journalist told CPJ. At some point, she was ordered to run, and when she did, officers began assaulting her and pushed her to the ground. When she objected, another jailer pointed a firearm at her, Maseko said.

On instructions from the correctional services officers, an unidentified man drove her out of the prison vicinity, and she was dropped off near some protesters who had fled to safety, Maseko said.

Maseko sought medical attention at a state-run hospital first, which declined to treat her beyond giving her painkillers. At a second hospital, she was treated, and they found she suffered tissue injuries and was badly bruised, according to Maseko and a medical report reviewed by CPJ.

"The attack on our brave reporter Nomthandazo Maseko was totally unjust. She was mercilessly brutalized for just carrying out her job and sadly, she sustained injuries and lost her two phones and one of them is what she has been using to work," Dube told CPJ. "We challenge King Mswati to speak out against these attacks on independent journalists."

CPJ repeatedly called and text messaged Guguleth Shongwe-Dlamini, a correctional services public relations officer, for comment, but no one picked up the phone and the messages were unanswered.

COUNTRY FACT FILE

Location

In southern Africa.

Official title of the state

Kingdom of Swaziland (Umbuso we-Swazini), and sometimes called Ngwane or Swatini: is an inland kingdom in Southern Africa.

Flag description:

Three horizontal bands of blue (top), red (triple width), and blue; the red band is edged in yellow; centered in the red band is a large black and white shield covering two spears and a staff decorated with feather tassels, all placed horizontally; blue stands for peace and stability, red represents past struggles, and yellow the mineral resources of the country; the shield, spears, and staff symbolize protection from the country's enemies, while the black and white of the shield are meant to portray black and white people living in peaceful coexistence.

Neighbours

South Africa on north west, Mozambique on east.

Land boundaries; total 535 km. Border countries; Mozambique 105 km, South Africa 430 km.

Founder of The Nation
King Sobhuza II He repealed the Westminster-style Independence Constitution and assumed supreme powers.

Local division

4 districts.

Government type
Absolute monarchy

Legislation chamber
Bicameral Parliament (Libandla)

Form of State
Absolute Monarchy

Head of monarch is the King. The monarch is hereditary;

Prime Minister appointed by the monarch from among the elected members of the House of Assembly. A monarchial State with two legislative houses. The Senate 30 seats, 10 members appointed by the House of Assembly, 20 members apponted by the monarch, and the House of Assembly /elective/ 65 seats, 10 members appointed by the monarch, and the other 55 members elected by popular vote to serve for five-year.

Executive branch

King, Prime Minister, Bicameral parliament (Libandla).

Separated by monarchial head (hereditary), and head of Government. Head of Government appointed by the monarch from among the elected members of the House of Assembly, following national legislative elections.

Former Rulers

1971 to 1982 King Sobhuza II

April 25, 1986 to present King Mswati III

Judicial chamber

High Court; Supreme Court; Judges for both courts are appointed by the monarch.

Capital city

Mbabane /Administrative & judicial/ Altitude 1163 mtrs/3815 ft.

Geographic coordinates - 26.18S , 31.06E. Located on the Mbabane river. Derived from Swazi name "Chief Embabane Kunene", who lived in the area when the British settlers arrived, founded as a village in 1902, became national capital at independence in September,1966, others are Lozitha & Lodzidzini (Royal seat), Lobamba (Legislative).

Names of main towns

Greater Manzini, Shiselweni, Hlatikuku, Siteki, Hhohho, Lobamba.

Date of independence

September 6, 1968.

Religions (Major)

Christians 70%, traditional belief 23%, others 7%.

Main spoken languages

English & Si-Swati.

Currency unit

Lilangeni (plural Emalangeni) =100 cents.

Area in Km2

17,364,00

Country area comparison in Africa

49 out of 55 states.

Demographic terms ;-

Average annual population growth rate 1.213 %

Birth rate 27.12 births per 1,000 population

Death rate 14.99 deaths per 1,000 population

Average life expectancy ; 47.8 years

Male 48.14 years ; Female 47.8 years;

Illiteracy rate (%)

Male: 15, Female: 17

Average per capita income

USD 4, 500

Population density

64.7/km2

Urban population (%)

25

Contributor groups (%)

Farming, Fishing: 12, Industry: 46, Social service:

42 Main Export Items

Sugar, wood, pulp, chemicals, canned & fresh fruit.

Economy is based on

Agriculture, Agro-processing & Manufacturing dominates the economy.

Climate

Varies from tropical to near temperate. Mostly mountaines and hills, some moderately sloppy plains.

Extremes;-

Lowest point; Great Usutu River 21 mtr.

Highest point; Emlembe 1862 mtrs.

Weather of the Capital city (Mbabane) average annual temperature 16.4oc.

Altitude 1163 mtrs/3815 ft

Hottest Month January- February 15-25oc

Coldest Month June 5-19oc.

Driest Month June 18mm average Rf.

Wettest Month January 252mm average Rf.

Measures

Metric system.

Time zone

2 hours ahead of GMT/UTC

Public holidays

September 6, March 25, All Christian holidays.

Ethnic groups

Swazi 90%, Zulu 2.3%, Tsonga, Shangaan, Europeans, others. Topographic & Environmental concern

The country descends from W. to E. in broad belts became arid in the low veld region then rising to a plateau in the East. Average Rf at lowlands 600mm. Average Rf on highlands raises to 1500mm. Environment: limited supplies of potable water; wildlife populations being depleted because of excessive hunting; overgrazing; soil degradation; soil erosion

Economic Overview

Industry

Pulp-wood, textiles, coal, sugar processing, apparel, soft-drinks.

Chief crops

Sugarcane, corn, cotton, rice, pine-apples, citrus fruits, sorghum, peanuts : cattle, goats, sheep.

Natural resources;

Asbestos, iron ore, coal, clay, gold, diamond deposits, hydro-power, quarry stones.

Other resources

Forest & forestry products

Land in use (%)

Arable land: 12

Grassland: 61

Forest woods: 7

Other: 20

Marine:

Coastline; None

Commercial Sea port:-

An Inland kingdom. It's main outlet to the sea are Maputo (Mozambique) and the Durban & Richards Bay (RSA) seaports just 600 km and 400 km away respectively.

Development prospect;-

Any economic and financial handouts from South Africa is likely to come with demands for political and economic reform, concepts that make the Swazi monarch feel uneasy. A deficit hovered at around 14 per cent of GDP in 2011, way off finance minister Majozi Sithole's 8 per cent end-of-year target. The government managed to squeak by in 2011, but only barely and only by drawing down foreign reserves to below the three months of import cover the IMF considers safe. Events in 2011 provided a taste of what might happen if the economy is left to deteriorate further: delayed payments closed schools and the supply of anti-retroviral drugs ran dangerously low – a serious concern as Swaziland has the world's worst HIV/AIDS pandemic. Protests led by public sector unions became increasingly frequent, culminating in the burning of cloths printed with the king's face in September. Inflation climbed to 6.3 per cent in July 2011 driven up by high international food prices. Meanwhile growth is slowing and the World Bank predicts negative growth for 2011. Despite the dampening effect of a strong South African rand (to which the lilangeni currency is pegged 1:1), sugar exports rose 13 per cent in the second half of 2010 according to the central bank. But the prospects for sugar are less bright in 2012 when reforms to the EU market could drive prices down and threaten Swaziland's preferential market access. Manufacturing diversity, on the rise since the 1980s, took a knock with the closure of the only wood pulp mill in 2009 and the sector contracted by 1.1 per cent in 2011. Swaziland scored slightly higher in the World Bank's 2010 'Ease of Doing Business' report than in 2009, but still ranks one of the lowest in the region. There has been no progress on ending one of the world's last telecoms monopolies by granting an additional mobile operator licence. Royal interference is another turn-off for investors. Euphemistically referred to as the 'esteemed shareholder' where matters of business are concerned, Mswati expects as much as 25 per cent of new ventures.

Why is Queen Elizabeth II the longest reigning monarch in the UK and the world?

Jerome Cohen
Feru, bitten and had-you-believed Translator · June 15

Claire Jordan
Degree in biology and folklore; programmer, shop owner, secretary on newspaper
This answer may not be a faithful translation of the answer of Claire Jordan
in Quora in English :
Why is Queen Elizabeth II the longest reigning monarch in the UK and the world?

The longest reign in the UK, as her father died when she was very young. At the end of the week, she will overtake Bhumibol Adulyadej of Thailand and move into second place in the world, and in 23½ months, if she is still with us, she will overtake Louis XIV of France to become the longest-reigning monarch in the world. history of which the country was completely independent throughout its reign, and whose dates are definitively proven.

However, even if she surpasses Louis, if we include monarchs whose countries were protectorates of other countries for part of their reign, there will still be sixteen before her. I don't see her surpassing Sobhuza, King of Swaziland/eSwatini, who ascended the throne as a child and reigned for 82 years and 254 days. To match it, she would have to live to be 108 years old.

Similar questions

In how many years (at the earliest) will a Queen Elizabeth III reign?

Does Queen Elizabeth II have the power to stop Brexit?

Who was Britain's most insignificant monarch?

Did Queen Elizabeth II give her opinion on Brexit, and if so, what was it?

Did Queen Elizabeth II love Winston Churchill?

Is it true that Queen Elizabeth II feared Margaret Thatcher?

Most queens and kings are no longer recognized in the modern world. Why is the Queen of Great Britain still so respected?

Did Prince Philip ever have the chance to become king?

Has Queen Elizabeth II ever been assassinated?

Will Queen Elisabeth II abdicate because of her age?

ETHIOPIA

National Flag and Emblem

Locator Map

TEXT HIGHLIGHTS: Miscellaneous historic files of importance expressed intimeline i.e. Hisoricize, Diaries updates, Key events, News analysis relatingarticles et-al...

Overview, Diaries updates and Refreshes:

(Transcribed in bilingual i.e. dual english/ethiopic-Ge'ez characters) Origins of names: Ethiopia thought to have been derived from the Greek word "Aithiopia", and from "Aithiops" 'an Ethiopian', derived in turn fromGreek words "ethio" meaning "burned" and "pia", meaning "face", of the"burned face". On the otherhand "Ethiop" meaning for "the gift of yellowgold to God". Thus, the land started to be called "Ethiopia", according tohistorians. Abyssinyans or Habeshas have a very interesting facial expression, and facial feature with a straight long nose, brown skin color et-al. Abyssinyans have mixed heritage across the Mediterranean sea, beyondthe Arabs.

Welcome to the free Encyclopedia for Ethiopia.
We will give clear pictures about the history, languages and cultures of Ethiopia and its people. The posts and most of the images will be originalfactual information from the 400 volumes of the Emperor Tewodros Ethiopian Library located in Washington DC. Ethiopedia does not publish personal opinions and remarks about religion politics and tribalism.

Kings and Queens of Abyssinya from 4470 B.C.E. to 1930 A.D. We are listing here the magical history of the rulers of Abyssinya fromvarious sources. In 1914, a document listing the line of sovereigns of Ethiopia was provide to the traveller Charles Rey by Ras Teferi, Regent of Ethiopia. This extensive and continues line of Kings and Queens has yet totell wonderful stories of Kingdoms past, a challenging task for Ethiopianists. We will attempt to scrape off the mist of history and time toreveal the grandeur of Ethiopia, also known as Abyssinia. This will be a slow process, sort of like painting the Mona Lisa with the secret smile. Modifications will be slow and an on-going event or as the Ethiopiansaying goes "patience turns milk into butter"

(Kings and Queens of Ethiopia from 4470 B.C.I. TRIBE OF ORI or ARAM: Years are in BCE) Ethiopedia or Encyclopedia for Ethiopia
From Ori or Aram 4440 to Soliman Tehagui 3244
II. TRIBE OF KAM: BCE
From Kam 2635 to Piori I 1985
III. AGDAZYAN DYNASTY of KINGDOM of JOCTAN: BCE
From Akbunas Saba II 1930 to Queen Makeda 982. Son of Makeda (Queenof Sheba or Saba) begins the Solomonic line.
IV. MENELIK I SOLOMONIC DYNASTY: BCE
1. Menelik I 957 to Bazen BCE YEAR 8 to AD YEAR 9
Non-Christian Rulers After Christian Era (AD):
From Sartu Tsenfa Assegd to Ahywa Sofya (Queen) 306 (The line continues with Christian rulers and Ethiopia becomes a Christian nation)
Christian Rulers After Christian Era (AD):

From Ahywa (Sofya, mother of Abreha Atsbeha) to Pazena Ezana 493(Kaleb continues the line as a Dynasty until Emperor Gedajan)

Kaleb Dynasty:

From Kaleb 523 to Del Naad 920 (Events ends Solomonic dynasty andbegins the Zagwe (line of Moses) Dynasty)

V. ZAGWE Dynasty

From Mara Takla Haymanot (Zagwe) 933 Ediam Sagad). (Yekuno Amlak throned and continues the Solomonic line)

List of Emperors of Ethiopia

The following is a list of Emperors of Ethiopia, from the founding of the Zagwe dynasty in the 933 century until 1974, when the lastEmperor from the Solomonic dynasty emperor Haile Selassi was deposed by the Ethiopian military in September 1974.

Ethiopian Empire Zagwe dynasty Solomonic dynastyGondarine line

Zemene Mesafint (Age of the Princes)

Tewodros dynasty Zagwe dynasty Solomonic dynastyThe Tigrean line The Shewan line Italian East Africa

House of Savoy(ORIENTALLE ITALIANA)

Restored Ethiopian EmpireSolomonic dynasty

The Shewan line

Ethiopia In History:

The End of the Aksumite Empire

Ethiopians love to brag about their history and the once upon a time greatempire that now exists only in our memories. The Aksumite Empire was one of the grandest, richest, and most respected nations in the first 6 centuries A.D. The market flourished of gold and other riches. The merchants traded with the Roman Empire, the Egyptian Empire, the Greek Empire, the Persian Empire.

So, what happened to that great nation? No one ever discusses the fall of the Aksumite empire or even the events that led to the fall of the great kingdom. Aksum, the capitol of the Aksumite empire, was located in the North of Ethiopia. The Empire included Djibouti, Eritrea, Yemen, parts of SW Arabia, the Red Sea, and great parts of the nile. It's most important area of control, in terms of economy, was the Red Sea allowing easy tradeand international relations. Aksumites exported gold, rhinoceros horn, ivory, incense, and obsidian; in return, they imported cloth, glass, iron, olive oil, and wine.

The 4th century AD: Aksumite converted to Christianity.

The 6th and 7th century AD: Aksumite lost the SW Arabia, including Yemen, and Red Sea ports(it was taken over by Sassanian Persians). Still,parts of the Red Sea coast were controlled by Byzantine Egypt, which hadgood relations with Ethiopia being a Christian state. However, Sassanian Persians expanded and took control of Byzantine Egypt ports. So, Ethiopia's network on the sea declined.

The 7th and 8th century AD: the spread of Islam. Islam conquered the Arabian Peninsula and Byzantine Egypt's territory. Egypt was Aksumite's greatest trade partner. When Islam was established in Egypt, the good relations between the Aksumite (Christian) state and Byzantine (Christian)state vanished. Muslim Arabs took control of the Red Sea; and Islam spread fast to Djibouti and Somalia and other areas along the Red Sea.

The 11th and 12th century AD: The grand Aksumite Empire had been forced inwards cutting off much access to wealth and leaving it landlocked. Moreover, the Christian state was threatened by its new Muslim neighbors; so the Christian state focused on preserving and strengthening its religious laws. It also began to expand southward. Usingits military, it spread the Aksumite culture, Semitic languages, and Christianity southward all the way to Shewa and took possession of a lot of land (it gained more land than it had before).

The 12th century AD: Islam spreads into the mainlands of the Aksumite Kingdom, east and south of the central highlands. The native cushitic people (Oromo is one main group) who practiced indigenous religions converted to Islam. This group struggled with the Amhara-Tigray SemiticChristian people for the throne of Ethiopia.

VI. YEKUNO AMLAK AND HIS SOLOMONIC POSTERITY

From Yekuno Amlak 1268 to Minas 1555. The Emperors and Empresses moved around the realm until the establishment of Gonder as a Capital City. The line continues as House of Gondar. This dynasty was devoted tothe Christian religion. Lalibela, along with many other churches, was constructed during this reign. The religion was very strict, devotional, andcentered. There was no focus on spreading Christianity (missionary work).There was little contact with outside nations leaving the nation reliable on its own land and resources. Source: Ethiopian Country Studies, Library of Congress.

VII. THE HOUSE OF GONDAR

From Sartsa Dengel 1589 to Takla Giyorgis 1779 .

The accession line continues by Princes who claimed the throne asEmperors. These Princes began the Zemene Mesafint Era.

VIII. RULERS of ZEMENE MESAFINT ERA

From T. Yasus 1784-88 to Sahala Dengel (again) 1841-55 .(The end of Zemene Mesafint begins with Tewodros)

IX. RULERS of MODERN ETHIOPIA

From Theodore 1855-68 to Negus Tafari Makonnen (King) 1928-1930 Haile Selassie I 1930-1974 (The Royal line is terminated by Marxist Juntaknown as the Duerg) The present Ethiopia known as Abyssinya this time.

X. THE SOLOMONIC LINE DISRUPTED BY MARXIST STALINISTREVOLUTIONARIES

From Communist oriented Duerg 1991 to Ethnic-oriented TPLF leadersreversed the continuity of the Solomonic line.

Ethiopians are among the first literate people in the world, having written,read, and created manuscripts in their ancient language of Ge`ez, later known Amharic alphabet since the second century. All boys learned to read the Psalms around the age of 7.

Prior to Ethiopia’s Solomonic Dynasty, Ethiopia had a beautiful queen known as Queen Makida or the Queen of Sheeba. The Queen of Sheba or Queen Makeda in her other name, her union with King Solomon of Israel produced ason named Menelik I. She once went to Israel to visit Jerusalem and met thewise and powerful King Solomon. The queen was greeted with great hospitality in Jerusalem and King Solomon enjoyed her company.

The meeting of the Queen and the King eventually resulted in an affectionate relationship and the Queen of Sheba went back to Ethiopia pregnant with Solomon's son. The son was Minilik the first who became the first king of Ethiopia as anointed by his father, launching Ethiopia’s long line of Solomonic Dynasty. All of Ethiopia’s emperors and empressesare descendants of Minilik I – the first-born of King Solomon.

The Solomonic Dynasty was founded in 1268, with Yekuno Amlak becoming the first emperor. Her dynasty ended in 1975 with the death ofthe last Ethiopian emperor Haile Selassie.

The arrival of the Somalia delegation at Addis Ababa

SPECIAL REPORT

ETHIOPIA AND SOMALIA

from a Correspondent

"Gestures by Siad Barre and Emperor Haile Selassie, though welcome, only saved the OAU from wrecking itself on the question of Somalia's relations with its neighbours, rather than solving the issue itself. The situation is marked by irreconcilable standpoints".

The ominous clouds of war are once again hovering over the Horn of Africa after an eight-year period of tenuous peace in the region. However, the signals of the oncoming storm were long audible when talking seemed no longer an answer to the exigencies of the situation. Somalia's claims over the Ogaden area of Ethiopia, in conformity with Mogadishu's demand for "Greater Somalia" which led to a "mini war" in the Horn from 1963-65, acquired a new dimension, an explosive one, when a few months ago this desert pasture area suddenly was found rich in oil and natural gas deposits. Oil politics being what it is, the strength that oil could yield to its home country watered the mouths of the contenders over the area. Mogadishu, which also claimed the Territory of Afars and Issas (former French Somaliland) and North Frontier District of Kenya, as part of a "Greater Somalia" campaign, appears for the time being to shelve its claims to those areas while pressing hard on claims on the Ethiopian territory.

Consequently, as a group of American companies, under contract from the Ethiopian government, set about exploring the region for oil and gas late last year, skirmishes, of course on a minor scale, took place on the Ethio-Somali borders. Finding the Ethiopian government seriously concerned over these disturbances which generated hesitancy on the part of American oil prospectors to work in the area, and suitably exploiting the "Rabat Spirit" of conciliation and negotiations, Somali Foreign Minister Omar Arteh, accompanied by military experts, came to Addis Ababa, to talk with the Ethiopians. They, however, wanted time to prepare their case, and sought to obtain it. Ethiopia's Foreign Minister Minasse Haile subsequently visited Mogadishu for talks with his Somali counterparts. Each side stuck to its prepared position and the talks broke down.

All this happened early this year. Following the breakdown of talks, both Ethiopia and Somalia began visibly to reorganise their armoury for what seemed then to be the approaching eventuality. The climax came when Somalia was reported to have decided to raise the issue at the OAU summit. Just a few days before the twenty-first session of the OAU Council of Ministers was to begin in Addis Ababa on May 17, Emperor Haile Selassie made what looked like a "crisis dash" to the United States to ask President Nixon to replenish the Ethiopian armoury.

The die was finally cast when the OAU secretariat announced to the Press on May 16 that Somalia had asked for the introduction of an item on the agenda of the Council of Ministers meeting. The item read as follows: "The solution by the OAU of the territorial dispute between the Somali Democratic Republic and the Imperial Ethiopian Government". As the council set about adopting its over 40-item agenda, Somalia's Omar Arteh asked for the adoption of the Somali item too.

In his introductory remarks, Mr. Arteh not only pressed Somali claims over the Ogaden, about one-third of the nomad-inhabited area of Ethiopia, on "ethnic, cultural and historical" grounds, but also accused Ethiopia of massing troops along the Ethio-Somali borders. Ethiopia's Minasse Haile rejected the Somali claims and allegations, asserting in a spirited mood that if colonial boundaries long accepted by international conventions, the United Nations and the OAU in its resolution in 1964 at Cairo, were to be disputed, the whole continent of Africa would have to be reorganised and there was no need for "an OAU". In essence Ethiopia disagreed that there was a "territorial" dispute. What the Ethiopians accepted was the need for a proper demarcation of the boundary with Somalia such as Addis Ababa had done with the Sudan and Kenya.

As the rival stands on the issue toughened, the OAU ministerial conference was put in a state of stalemate. Hard lobbying and bitter sentiments overtook the otherwise dull and routine atmosphere of Africa Hall—a venue which, since the OAU's inception in 1963, had seen the resolution of many an African dispute. Ironically Addis Ababa, the reputed "cradle of Africa", and Emperor Haile Selassie, "the father of African Unity", so far instruments of disentanglement of Africa's manifold tangles, were now themselves intricately involved.

A four-country committee, made up of Algeria, Ivory Coast, Tanzania and Liberia, after several night-long sessions, failed to hammer out a mutually acceptable formula. Frustrated, Somali Foreign Minister Arteh described the whole business as a "cancer in the OAU", and warned that his country did not want to "create a new Vietnam in the area". Asserting that there was a "military threat from Ethiopia", he asked the OAU to find a solution to the dispute. "We should have the courage to solve this problem", he said, warning, at the same time, otherwise, it may create other problems that may destroy our stability and our unity in the region".

The continuing stalemate resulting in further acrimonious debate, led the OAU ministerial council chairman, Nigeria's Okoi Arikpo, to suggest that the whole issue be handed over to the OAU summit to examine.

As could be expected, when Somali Vice President Ismail Ali Abucar, rose to speak during the celebration session, opening the summit, a storm once again seemed to lash across Africa Hall. Mr. Abucar read President Siad Barre's message to the OAU in which the President attributed his absence to the "serious and grave situation obtaining on the Somalia-Ethiopia borders". In this "critical situation", said Siad Barre, "I wanted to be with my people". There was, he said, an "imminent threat" from Ethiopia, which he alleged had "mobilised forces" near the common border. Referring to the "artificial territories" inherited from colonial days, Siad invoked the OAU charter which calls for "self-determination" for all African people. He said the credibility of the OAU principles "will be in serious doubt if we do not uphold them". He therefore asked the OAU to intervene in the crisis and ask Ethiopia to "withdraw her forces" away from the borders. However, he warned that while Somalia was not interested in "shedding African blood", the crisis, if unabated, could let the present situation "go out of hand". This was an open challenge to Ethiopia.

After hasty discussions within the Ethiopian delegation, led by the Emperor, the Ethiopian Prime Minister Aklilu Habte-Wold sought the floor to answer the Somali charges. The French-speaking Akliluu, who had, ironically, exactly ten years ago answered Somali charges of similar nature, once again reiterated, in the strongest terms, that Ethiopia had no cause whatsoever to mass her troops on the border, since Ethiopia "does not claim any part of Somali territory". Further, he said Ethiopia had never "refused demarcation of the common border" about which there is "absolutely no dispute". He argued that the 1950 Trusteeship agreement, ratified by the General Assembly of the UN through its resolution 292, and the OAU resolution of 1964 had clearly established the authenticity of territories. But, he remarked, "Somalia's government does not wish to honour these international agreements. We shall not accept Somali claims", said Akliluu, adding, "it is known the world over that it is Somalia which is arming itself, and not Ethiopia".

Reconciliation: Gen. Siad and Emperor

As an important background to the present crisis it is essential to study the history of the conflict from its origins. "Greater Somalia", an idea to unify all the areas inhabited by Somali-speaking people, was "a brain-child of the British Foreign Office in the early 1940's". The British have a notorious habit of leaving some sources of friction from wherever they withdraw. The crisis in the Indian sub continent, in Kashmir, in Nigeria, lately in Cyprus, in Rhodesia or Central Africa, in the Northern Frontier District of Kenya, are all classical examples of British attempts to engender friction in their wherever they withdraw.

Ethiopia's forces—how strong?

Having sown the dangerous seeds of "Greater Somalia" in the minds of the Somali people, the British Foreign Office sent a mission to make on the spot assessment of the Somali sentiment in the NFD of Kenya. The mission produced facts and recommendations which were never taken into account when Kenya was granted independence in 1963. By that time, the idea had already been incorporated in the Somali constitution on the country's independence in 1960. Under the Greater Somalia plan, Mogadishu wanted to incorporate the NFD of Kenya, Ogaden province of Ethiopia, and the French Territory of the Afars and Issas into Somalia. The claims were based purely on ethnic and linguistic foundations.

For centuries Somali nomads, who inhabit Ogaden and number about a million, have crossed the borders back and forth with occasional rows and skirmishes with Ethiopian border patrols. After 1960, however, with the apparent encouragement of Mogadishu to these tribesmen, the skirmishes gradually developed into a "mini-war" between Ethiopia and Somalia that reached its peak in 1965. Open hostilities indeed flared up following the uprising of Somali nomads in the Ogaden against the Ethiopian authorities in 1963. Thanks to the mediation of the newly-created OAU and the good offices of Sudan, the fighting was brought to an end under the Khartoum agreement of 30 March 1964. Among other things, it called for a mutual cessation of hostile propaganda, the setting up of a joint Ethio-Somalia military commission to monitor the border incidents, and for demilitarisation of a zone of 10 to 15 kms. on each side of the border. Although there was peace, the war euphoria hung high, especially for Somalia, a desert country with a population of less than three million and with a small para military force which was no match for Ethiopia. Several significant developments therefore took place. First, Ethiopia and Kenya, faced with a common enemy, entered into a defence agreement. Second, Somalia's Prime Minister Shermarke's government asked Western countries for help in raising an army of 20,000. But the West, fearing an escalation of the conflict, agreed to help only to the extent of raising a 5,000-strong army. Third, frustrated by the weak Western response, the Shermarke government turned to the Soviet Union which responded readily to the request for armaments.

However, the Somali stance, though without relenting much, took a smoother turn in 1967. After the election of Mohammed Egal as Prime Minister and Shermarke as President, Egal found a better advantage for his country's development in improving relations with neighbours. Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia and President Jomo Kenyatta of Kenya responded favourably. Egal's new posture reflected clearly the disappointing support Somalis had got internationally for their objectives of "Greater Somalia". Mogadishu's confrontation with Ethiopia and France had proved costly. Arab states on whose help Somalia tended to rest had been mauled in the Arab-Israeli conflict of 1967. Further, the closure of the Suez canal threatened the Somali economy on many fronts, notably by curtailing banana exports to Italy. Egal's stand was therefore welcomed.

To give practical shape to his desire to improve relations with his neighbours, Egal made trips to Kenya and Ethiopia which led to the signing of the Kenya-Somalia Memorandum of Understanding of 28 October 1967 and the Ethio-Somali joint communique of September 5, 1968. The two accords not only reflected an intent of good neighbourliness and cooperation in a variety of fields, but also devised joint commissions to sort out peacefully the areas of friction. At the same time, Mogadishu improved its non aligned image by reviving relations with the West. Diplomatic relations with Britain, cut off in 1963, were resumed. Egal made visits to West Germany and US. Vice-President Hubert Humphrey's visit to Mogadishu followed Egal's own stay in Washington. Relations with France (with which Ethiopia shares a common and crucial railway link to Djibouti) were also put on a firm footing. No less importance was attached to improvement of relations with the Arab and South-Asian world.

Things, however changed suddenly and radically after the 1969 October revolution, where a military government took over under General Siad Barre. The new government pledged itself not only to the Greater Somalia objective but also to scientific socialism. The US quit, the British mellowed, the Russians strengthened and the Chinese slowly began peeping in. More important, Mogadishu tilted more strongly towards the Arabs. Emperor Haile Selassie's government took nervous note of these developments and began mending her fences. Ethiopia improved her relations with Sudan and a number of conservative Muslim countries who had sympathies for Somalia. And to woo the enemy in his home, the Emperor paid a state visit to Somalia in October 1971.

However, none of these acts appears to have discouraged the Somalis from arming themselves with Moscow's full military support. The Soviet Union which had lost friends everywhere in Africa, and whose position became shaky in Egypt, tended to do whatever the Somalis wanted. Soviet desire to spread her influence in the Red Sea also prompted her to strengthen Somali's defences. She was equally anxious to contain the growing interest of the US and China in Ethiopia. While assuring Ethiopia that arms sold to Somalia is essentially for defence, not offence, the Soviets supplied to Somalia large quantities of automatic arms and modern artillery, 150 T-34 tanks, 60 APCs and about 25 MIG-15 and MIG-17 and about 20 Yak reconnaissance trainer planes. While 300 Soviet experts are training Somalis in Somalia, about 500 Somalis are said to be undergoing or have undergone training in Russia. So far, the Soviet Union has given $55 million (US) in loans to equip and train a 15,000-strong Somali army which will eventually be raised to the strength of 20,000.

The Ethiopian army is said to number about 40,000. While the Ethiopian air force with six Canberra B-2 bombers, a squadron of 8 SAAB-17 ground support planes, a squadron of 8 supersonic F-5A fighter-interceptors, a squadron of 12 subsonic F-86 fighter bombers, a reconnaissance squadron of six T-28 and three T-33 trainers, a transport squadron of DC3s and several helicopters is considered one of the best in Africa, her navy is small. Apart from the regular army Ethiopia has a 3,000-strong commando unit and a 10,000/20,000 strong territorial army. However, compared with Somalia's sophisticated arms, Ethiopia's arms are considered to be somewhat antiquated, though in quantity considerable. Moreover, a sizeable portion of the Ethiopian army remains perpetually locked in Eritrea where an emergency was declared in 1970 and martial law is still in force.

However, it is assumed generally that the Ethiopian army—if not necessarily the weapons it has—is superior in fighting experience to Somalia's. Somalis themselves seem to appreciate this, which is probably a reason why they thought that "their best chance to achieve their territorial aspirations lay in the disintegration of Ethiopia". In 1964, the Eritrean Liberation Front, ELF, had an office in Mogadishu and several of its members were reportedly provided with Somali passports. Somalia's national broadcasting system not only began, in 1965, a service in Galinya, language of the vast Galla people (who form 40 per cent or more of Ethiopia's population), but also often incited Galla dissidents against what Radio Mogadishu said were "Amhara oppressors". Somalia's claims over the territory of the Afars and Issas were put at least temporarily at rest by President Pompidou of France, who during a recent visit to that territory and Ethiopia not only expressed French determination to remain in the territory, but also promised to protect and promote Ethiopian interests in it and along the 56-year old Franco-Ethiopian railway, linking Addis Ababa with Djibouti.

Having thus been put recently in a disadvantageous diplomatic position and stung by the hopeful rumours of the discovery of oil and natural gas deposits in the Ethiopian territory claimed by it, Mogadishu had no option but to ask the OAU to intervene in its favour. Presidents Siad Barre's arrival in Addis Ababa on May 28, at the height of the heat generated by acrimonious debates and angry press conferences, was considered a welcome development. And so it proved when both Siad Barre and Emperor Haile Selassie made reconciliatory statements, taking much of the heat out of the OAU summit. But in essence their gestures, though welcome, only saved the OAU from wrecking itself on the question rather than solving the issue itself. The OAU's current chairman, Gen. Gowon, offered to make a list of African Heads of state and government to make a goodwill mission to both countries and find a solution to a situation which is marked by "irreconcilable standpoints". Thus the OAU, as ever, has succeeded in building a façade of goodwill over the strong undercurrents of tension, disbelief and doubts between Ethiopia and Somalia. The OAU has cautiously avoided the storm, but could not abate its real fury. Perhaps as a means to gain time the OAU has "bribed" Somalia by selecting Mogadishu as the venue of next year's OAU summit. Traditional goods hosts, the Somalians may well hold their breath and keep their hands off the trigger for the next twelve months. ■

The last emperor of Ethiopia’s Solomonic Dynasty was Emperor HaileSelassie I who died at age of 84 in August 1975.

Ayssinyans go by their first names unlike other foreign countries.The present Abyssinya to be renamed as Ethiopia

Ethiopia is a country where black and white were only colors that had littleto do with race.

Old geographical map in about 1665: showing all of Africa being calledEthiopia, and the Atlantic Ocean was the Ethiopian Ocean.

The ancient African calendar still used in Ethiopia being seven to eightyears behind the Gregorian calendar. In addition to the New Year, theEthiopians commemorate the end of the country’s long rainy season, when the sun comes out and the fields fill with yellow daisies.

Emperor (Atse) Téwodros II Defeted at Magdalla and commits suicide.Prince Alámayehu of Ethiopia (1861-1879), son of Atse Tewodros, wastaken to Britain after his father’s suicide under the care of Captain Tristram Speedy.

Ethiopians infer Faranjis (“faranjis” is a local terming for trans-Caucaciansor westerners), initiated through the mission by the French Studies centrein Addis Ababa.

Ethiopia that lays claim to be the birthplace of humankind, with the remains of the ancient hominid Lucy in Addis Ababa. The locale of the 3.5million year old Lucy, hosted numerous pioneering human achievements including the development of the earliest pebble tools (circa 70,000 BC), the domestication of animals (circa 5000 BC), and regional trade in antiquity in gold, ivory, myrrh and frankincense with Pharoahnic Egypt, Greece, Rome and Persia.

Apart from a five-year occupation by Mussolini's Italy, it has never been colonised. It has a unique cultural heritage, being the home of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church and a monarchy that ended only in the coup of1974. It served as a symbol of African independence throughout the colonial period, and was a founder member of the United Nations and the African base for many international organisations.

Ethiopia, then Abyssinya resisted colonisation by Italy and achieved international recognition in 1896 as a traditional monarchy, led by Emperor Menelik II. For much of the 20th century Ethiopia was ruled by Haile Selassie, crowned as Emperor in 1930. In 1936 Italy attacked Ethiopia from its colonies in neighbouring Somalia and Eritrea and occupied the country until May, 1941.

Emperor Haile Selassie spent his exile in the UK, and was restored to power with British and the Commonwealth military assistance. His long rule ended with the Ethiopian February Revolution of 1974. Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam emerged as the leader of the Provisional Military Administrative Council (known as the Duerg) in March 1977 which becamea brutal Marxist dictatorship. Ethiopia was wracked by civil war for most ofthe Duerg period, including a secessionist war in the northern province of Eritrea, an irredentist war with Somalia, and regional rebellions - notably in Tigrai and Oromia. Ethiopia has suffered periodic droughts and famines that lead to a long civil conflict in the 20th Century. The population experienced massive human rights abuse and intense economic hardship, including acute famine in 1984-5. The Duerg was in turn overthrown on May, 1991 when rebels of the Ethiopian Peoples' Revolutionary DemocraticFront (EPRDF) captured Addis Ababa. The rebel turned politician Meles Zenawi took the leadership.

Ethiopia – Ancient history:

2nd century AD - Ethiopia is Africa's oldest independent country. Locale ofthe 3.5 million year old Lucy, hosted numerous pioneering human achievements including the development of the earliest pebble tools (circa70,000 BC), the domestication of animals (circa 5000 BC), and regional trade in antiquity in gold, ivory, myrrh and frankincense with Pharoahnic Egypt, Greece, Rome and Persia.

The Kingdom of Axum becomes a regional trading power. The Kingdom of Axum was one of the great world powers of the 3rd century and the first major empire in the world to officially adopt Christianity as a state religionin the 4th century. Axum civilization is best known for the outside world init's enormous monolithic stelae or standing stones. These marks the tombs of a ruling elite of a remarkable civilization that until around 300 AD held sway over both sides of the Red sea, in both Southern Arabia, across the Horn of Africa and deep into the interior of the continent. Axumwas the centre of an African empire. The Kingdom or Axum, also known asthe Axumite Empire mostly the current northern Ethiopia including the present Eritrea, was an important trading nation in northeastern Africa, that had trade links with India, Arabia, Roman, Egypt and Persia as well as Greece, as Adulis was the main port of the Kingdom of Axum, located on the coast of the Red Sea. It is thought that the modern town of Zula in present Eritrea may be the Adulis of Axumite times, as Zula may reflect the native name for the Greek "Adulis" , existing from approximately 100–940 AD. Axum remained a strong empire and trading power until the rise of Islam in the 7th century.

The Ethiopians were the first who invented the science of the stars, and gave names to the planets, not at random and without meaning, but descriptive of the qualities which they conceived them to possess; and it was from them that this art passed, still in imperfect state to the Egyptians." (Lucian of Samosata 125-180 AD). Ethiopian was the first established country on earth; and the Ethiopians were the first who introduced the worship of the gods, and who established laws (Stephanusof Byzantium, 6th C. AD). The Ethiopians conceive themselves to be of greater antiquity than any other nation: anit is probable that, born under the sun's path, its warmth may have ripened them earlier than other me. They suppose themselves also to be the inventors of divine worship, of festivals, of solemn assemblies, of sacrifices, and every other religious practice. They affirm that the Egyptians are one of their colonies, and thatthe Delta, which was formerly sea, became land by the conglomeration ofthe earth of the higher country which was washed down by the Nile" (Diodorus Siculus, 60-30 BC).

The home of mankind: human evolution in Ethiopia

It is appropriate to start with the fossil evidence as Ethiopia has remainsthat cover much of human evolution ranging from Chororapithecus Abyssinicus, (12 to 7 million years ago), a possible ape relative of humanity, to Homo Sapiens Idaltu ('Elder') the earliest modern human fossil at 160,000 year old found in the Afar Regional State at Horto.

Recent discoveries include the 4.4 million year old Ardipithecus Kadaba and Selam, an almost complete skeleton of a three year old female child dating to 3.3 million years ago. The most famous of the discoveries in theAfar region, of course, is that of Lucy ('Dinkenesh' – 'wonderful'), the most complete skeleton of an early hominid yet found and dating back some 3.2 million years. A replica of her skeleton is on display in the National Museum of Ethiopia. Lucy (Australopithecus Afarensis) walked ontwo legs and stood about 3.5 feet tall. Australopithecus subsequently evolved towards the genus Homo, with the appearance of Homo Habilis (2.4 - 1.8 million years) and Homo Erectus (1.4 – 1 million years), and then Homo Sapiens, probably about 200,000 years ago. There are severalnotable fossil sites in Ethiopia including the lower Omo Valley and the Awash Valley, both registered as UNESCO World Heritage Sites, the latter including the Hadar area, Aramis and Melka Kunture, the scenes of numerous paleontological discoveries.

Ethiopia accepted Christianity as its national religion in 340 AD. Christianity introduced from Egypt then spread across the region with churches and monastries being established and the priesthood exerting a powerful influence overtime among the population. In thousands of years of history some of the most important sites in Ethiopian Christianity. The Axum, Bete-Giorgis Rock-hewn Churches of Lalibela, Chapel of the Arc of the covenant in Axum, and mountains housing Rock-Churches of northernEthiopia are the main ones.

A History of Islam in the Abyssinyan empire is as old as the religion itselfaccording to Islamic scholars as the early persecuted Muslims, relatives and followers (Al-Sahaab) of prophet-Mohammed on the first hejira (migration) first fled to the sub-region known as then the "Bilad Al- Habashi" to seek safety and protection from the quraishi at the court of the Axumite emperor in modern time Ethiopia whose some of the Muslimsthat were granted protection are said to have settled in several parts of countries known as the Horn of Africa today to promote Islam in the region. Islam is the second most widely practiced religion in Ethiopia afterChristianity, approximately with over thirty million (33.9%) of the total population adhering to Islam.

The Tigray region in northern Ethiopia is the cradle of the country's religious history-including the beginnings of Christianity and Islam. SoniMethu's journey leads her to a place where the original followers of Mohammed are believed to be buried, she walks inside the oldest free standing building in sub-Saharan Africa and visits the church where it isbelieved that the Ark of the Covenant is kept.

Having arrived in Abyssinya at about 615 AD, the first Muslims in then Abyssinya were immigrants from Mecca, persecuted by the ruling Quraishitribe. They were received by the ruler of Habashi, whom the Arabic tradition has named "Ashama Ibn-Abjar", and he settled them in Nejash, where it was located at present Tigrai region of Ethiopia. "Nejash" is the Islamic historical site in present Ethiopia and parts of East Africa.

In 1530-31 - Muslim leader Ahmad Gragn (Gurey) conquers much of Ethiopia. The assault of ‘Imam’ Ahmed ibn Ibrahim al-Ghazi dealt with devastating the Ethiopian Christian Empire, its population, resources, religious culture and architecture. Imam Ahmed Ibn Ibrahim El-Gazi (Grangn), invaded most of Abyssinia comprised much of the territory ofpresent day Ethiopia, and changed the balance of power in favor of theMuslims.

1550 to 1700 A number of Abyssinian kings tried to militarily defeat the Oromo cavalry warriors but failed because of the strength of the Oromos.1590 - A monk by the name Bahrey first wrote about the so-called "Oromo Invasion of Ethiopia," a tale almost invariably accepted by European historians as a fact.

1628 - 46 M. de Almeida had the following to say on the traditional Oromoreligion: "The Oromo are neither Christians, moors nor heathens, for they have no idols to worship." Source: "The History of High Ethiopia or Abassia"

1700 - In Yejju and Wallo, the Dynasties of Warra Sheika and WarraHemanu respectively were found.
1800 - Limmu, the first of the five Gibe States (Limmu, Guuma, Gomma,Geera and Jimma), was formed.
1810 - Gumma, the second of the five Gibe States (Limmu, Guuma,Gomma, Geera and Jimma), was formed.
1820 - Gomma, the third of the five Gibe States (Limmu, Guuma,Gomma, Geera and Jimma), was formed.
1830 - Jimma, the fourth of the five Gibe States (Limmu, Guuma,Gomma, Geera and Jimma) was formed.
Jimma Aba Jiffar: an Oromo Monarchy:
The progress of the Galla into these regions was remarkably rapid. Withinthirty years they had accomplished their major conquest and occupied perhaps one-third of the empire. Today the Galla occupy much of the bestland in Ethiopia, and although they are not in continious distribution they extend from northeastern Ethiopia to southeastern Kenya, and from the Sudan to the Somalilands. The Galla arrived at the area west of AddisAbaba late in the sixteenth century. They they came in to contact with a number of non-Galla monarchies such as Gafat,Damot, Shoa, Gojjam, Enarea, Janjero, Garo, and Kaffa. The relation between the Gall and thesekingdoms were unfriendly. Manuel Almeida's account of Fernandes' Travels in southern Ethiopia in 1613 and 1614 tells of the hostility between the Galla and their neighbours in Enarea, Shoa, Gojjam, Garo and Janiero. Source: From Ethiopia 1830 to 1832 by Herbert S. Lewis.
In 1855 ‘Kasa Haile Giorgis of Quarra’becomes Emperor Tewodros II.
In 11th February, 1855 Kassa Haile-Giorgis who baptized as Sahle-Dingilwas born in Quarra, Dembia, of northern Gondar enthroned as Emperor(Atse) Thewodros II, of Ethiopia in 11th February, 1855. Horsenamed Aba-Tatek, the modern Ethiopia began with the reign of Emperor (Atse)Tewodros II, he has began the consolidation of the country. Emperor Tewodros II was committed suicide after his defeat by the British, led by Sir Robert Napier, at the “Battle of Maqdala” in April, 1868.The youngprince Alemayehu Tewodros (23 April, 1861 to 14 November, 1879), sonof Emperor Tewodros was taken as prisoner of war to Great Britain at histeen age for safe keeping, under the care of Captain Tristram Speedy.
Until 1868 - Lij Kasa conquers Amhara, Gojjam, Tigray and Shoa.
The powerful emperor, Tewodros II (1855-1868) was introduced the vision of a unified and modern Ethiopia. He managed to set up then asemblance of a central state and collected royal revenue from the northern regions. While challenging the encroachment of the Egyptians inthe coastal area, Tewodros, at the same time, came intocollision with theBritish when he took hostage and locked up a number of obscure European missionaries. The British sent an expeditionary force with superior arms, and besieged his mountain fortress Maqdala, where Tewodros, encircled by the British and his offers for negotiation refused, on 13 April 1868 took his life rather than surrender to the invader.2 His patriotic action remained a print of bravery to future generations.

After a brief interlude, Emperor Tewodros was succeeded by Emperor Yohannes (r. 1872-1889). He too had to fight against the Egyptians andlater the Italians who had maintained the dream of conquering Ethiopia.

On 26 January 1887, at the Battle of Dogali (some 30 k.m. south of the Red Sea coast, Massawa), the Italians suffered their first defeat at the hands of Ras (= chief)3 Alula Ingida, Yohannes' general. At last, towards the end of his reign, Yohannes himself had to march to stop the invading Sudanese Mahdists in the westernpart of the country,where he finally diedat the Battle of Metemma on 12 March 1889.4 His successor Emperor Menelik (r. 1889-1913) who grew up amid the patriotic encounters of bothTewedros and Yohannes was also a patriotic and modernizing leader. He too defeated the Italians at Adwain 1896 with a resounding victory that haunted the Italians until 1935. Why Menelik did not pursue the broken Italian army until they relinquished the land they named Eritrea since theiroccupation in January 1, 1890, however, is still a riddle. Yet, to challenge the unbridled ambition of the foreign invaders he was fully engaged in the competition with France, Italy and Great Britain to expand territorial influence in the Horn of Africa, incorporating a large number of previously autonomous regions into the empire.5 The last of the emperors, Haile Selassie (r. 1930-1974) too had to fight the Italian invasion (an issue taken on here). Although he had to face defeat on the battle ground in 1936, he continued the struggle from exile and finally saw victory in1941 when Italy was defeated in all fronts.

These last four emperors more or less maintained a similar vision of creating a unified and stronger

Ethiopia in order to counter the challengesposed by external forces, mainly that of the resource-hungry Europeans. Loyalty to the Ethiopian state coupled with adherence to religious edifice was expounded in this process unlike the Europeans who concentrated onindustrialization. Associated with ancient historical referents, the effects ofthis long history of struggle against series of invaders evidently procured an assertive sense of national identity which would play upon the invadersof a sovereign nation.

1868 - Tewodros II defeated by a British expeditionary force and commitssuicide to avoid capture.The same year in Lasta, Wagshum Gobezzie, nicknamed "Tirsso" the future emperor Tekle-Giorgis (1868 to 1871), as raised the standard of his rebellion after he had see his own father executed by Tewodros II, enthroned as Emperor Tekle-Giorgis II of Ethiopia.

1872 - Tigrayan chieftain in the name of Dejazmatch Kahssay Merchabecomes Yohannes IV.

On 12th January, 1872 Dejazmatch Kahssay Mercha (1837 to 1889), Dejazmatch Kahssay Mercha horsenamed as "Aba-Bezbiz" who could claimSolomonic blood through the line of his paternal grand-mother enthroned as Emperor Yohannes VI, after his victory over Emperor Tekle-Giorgis, Thewodros's immediate successor in 1872. He was coronated as YohannesVI "Emperor, Conquering Lion of the Tribe of Judah, King of Tsion, King of kings of Ethiopia, Elect of God".

In 1860 - Krapf proposed the term Ormania to designate the nationality orthe country of the Oromo people.

In 1868 - A. Plowden stated, "among republican systems, Gadaa issuperior." Source: "Travels in Abyssinia and the Oromo Country

1878 in the "Treaty of Wadara" Negus Menelik of Shoa state submitted toEmperor Yohannes VI of Ethiopia, and in turn Emperor Yohannes VI by then had recognized Menelik as king of Shoa state awarding him with numerous arms as presents included four cannons and several hundred rifles and ammunitions, it was also stipulated that the capital of Shoa- state moved from Liche to Debre-Birhan. On the 20th January, 1881, in Debre-Tabour Emperor Yohannes VI also appointed Ras Tekle-Haimanot Tessema of Gojjam state inaddition appointed him Negus of Kaffa province, however the latter province was only his if he was able to conquer it. Emperor Yohannes ruled Ethiopia (1872 to 1889) until his reign ended up on his death at the “battle of Mattama”, sometimes refered as the “battle of Galabat”, on the 9th of March, 1889.

November3, 1889 Yohannes IV killed while fighting Mahdist forces and issucceeded by the king of Shoa, who becomes Emperor Menelik II. The sudden death in action of Emperor Yohannes IV of “Battle of Matamma (Gallabat)” gave a chance King Menelik of the Shoa state to assume power and coronated as "Neguse-Negest Menelik II Emperor of Ethiopia".

What are some interesting facts about Ethiopia?

Svet Sedov Angel Investor, running a business incubator and the investment Fund in CA, USA
Answered September 28, 2016

1. It's one of the oldest states on the Black Continent and it's only one which has remained independent for almost all of its history (except for a brief period 1936 - 1941).
2. It is the largest Christian country on the African continent. However, it became one of the staunches allies of atheist USSR in Africa.
3. It's the fastest growing economy in the world. On the other hand, it's one of the poorest countries on Earth.
4. From almost 100 million people in Ethiopia more than 25 million leave under the poverty line.
5. Agriculture is the major source of income for almost 80% of countries population with coffee beans being the main crop.
6. Frequent droughts have caused major famines several times in the past.
7. Ethiopian history goes back to the dawn of human civilization. Name 'Ethiopia' (which means 'burned face' in ancient Greek language) is mentioned in 'Iliad' and 'Odyssey'.
8. Egyptian Queen Hatshepsut organized the expedition to the Land of Punt (Egyptian name for Ethiopia) in XIV century B.C.
9. Ethiopian army defeated Italy in the Battle of Adwa on 1 March 1896 but in 1936 fascist dictator Benito Mussolini occupied the country which became the part of Italian Empire until its liberation by British forces during the East African Campaign in 1941.

10. From 1970th to the beginning of 1990th, Ethiopia came under the influence of USSR and joined socialists camp. Ethiopian Marxist-Leninist experiment led to economic collapse followed by social unrest.
11. After the break down of the Soviet Union at the beginning of XX century the democratic political system was implemented in Ethiopia for a brief period of time.
12. However, soon after that only one party - Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front or EPRDF - began to dominate the political scene in Ethiopia.
13. Currently there is no opposition members in the country's parliament - the House of People's Representatives. All 547 seats in it belong to EPRDF or its allies.
14. All of key Ethiopian industries such as telecommunications, transport and finance remain under the strict central government's control.
15. The fastest developing industry in the country is gold mining.
16. Despite the record GDP growth rate (around 10% in past 10 years) Ethiopia is falling behind most countries in the World.

Related Links

What is life like in Ethiopia?

What is it like to live in Ethiopia in terms of the average person, say, in the average city?

What is Ethiopia?

Can you tell me what you know about Ethiopia?

Why does Ethiopia remain poor when it has a potential?

What facts about Ethiopia do foreigners not believe until they come to ETHIOPIA?

Emperor Menelik II of Ethiopia (1844 - 1913) Briefly

He proclaimed to be a descendant of the legendaries Queen of Sheba and King Solomon, Menelik II was a dominant figure of... his time in Africa andwould be known as the King of Kings. He converted a group of independent kingdoms into the strong, stable empire known as the UnitedStates of Abyssinia, otherwise known as Ethiopia. His feat of pulling together several kingdoms, which often fiercely opposed each other, earned him a place as one of the great statesmen of African history. His further accomplishments in bringing Ethiopia into the twentieth century, coupled with his stunning victory over Italy in the 1896 Battle of Adwa, in their attempt to invade his country, placed him among the great leaders of world history and maintained his country's independence until 1935.

Menelik II was Emperor of Ethiopia from 1889 until his death in 1913. He was originally ras or ruler of Shoa in central Ethiopia. After the death in 1868 of Emperor Tewodros II, Menelik, with Italian support, gained steadystrength. He seized the throne after Emperor Johannes IV died. In 1889, Menelik concluded the Treaty of Uccialli with Italy. However, when he learned that the Italian version of the treaty was different from his amharic version, essentially making Ethiopia a protectorate of Italy, he denounced the agreement. The Italian invasion that followed in 1895–96 was crushed by Menelik's great victory near Adwa with great assistance from his wife Empress Taitu. Italy was forced to renounce all claim to Ethiopia and to pay an indemnity. Menelik took important steps to strengthen and modernize his domain. He made Addis Ababa his capital, constructed a railroad, attempted to end the slave trade, and curbed the feudal nobility. His conquests doubled the size of the country and brought the present day southern Ethiopia, which was largely Muslim, into the realm. Gradually his health failed, and the end of his reign was marked by intrigue and maneuvering for the succession due to his lack of a living male heir. He was succeeded as emperor by his grandson Lij Eyassu. It is interesting to note that a young man in the name of Taffari Makonnen whoin 1911 married Menelik's daughter Wayzaro Menen, was now working his way up in the ranks and would later become Ethiopia's last emperor.

In 1889 - Menelik signs a bilateral friendship treaty with Italy at Wuchalewhich Italy interprets as giving it a protectorate over Ethiopia. Ethiopia rejects this interpretation, later renounces the treaty and repays a loan.

November 1889 - Addis Ababa becomes Ethiopia's official capital. March 2, 1896: Battle of Adwa (March 2, 1896) : marks the defeat of an Italian invasion force in the northern mountainous town of Adwa in Northern Ethiopia by the nationalist forces of Emperor Menelik II. The African victory at Adwa assured the independence of Ethiopia, then called Abyssinya, making it one of the most significant battles against a European army of the colonial era. The victory of Adwa made Ethiopia visible as a beacon of African independence. Due to this victory, the tri- color Ethiopian flag /Green, Yellow, Red/ influenced the flags of many African countries. Ethiopia is unique with it's Ge'ez alphabet, calendar, andnumeric. It has the largest number of UNESCO World Heritage Sites in Ethiopia, dating back to 3,000 years of history. March 2 remained a national day of celebration in Ethiopia, and the events of 1896 are remembered as national pride. Since the 1880's, the Italians had had their eyes on Ethiopia, or then Abyssinia, (as it was called) however; Emperor Menelik's forces decisively deflected their attempts at colonization. The barefooted Ethiopian patriots from all walks of life have humiliated the European aggression and destroyed the coming colonization in Adwa in the year 1896 and proved the greatness of unity,The barefooted Ethiopian patriots from all walks of life have humiliated the Italian aggression and destroyed the coming colonization of Abyssinya at the "Battele of Adwa" in March1896 that proved the greatness of Emperor Menelik II and his nationalist army, and glorified what matters because the victory of Adwa has brought all Ethiopians from all directions as one mighty family. The Battle of Adowa of March, 1896 and its victory brought Ethiopia to international attention.

Europe for the first time acknowledged an African nation that had resistedand defeated an European power.

Thomas Hughes, the daring British war corespondent of that era who claimed visiting the historical battle ground a few days after the defeat ofthe Italians quoted as saying ..... “The moment I saw countless headless corpse of the falling men from the Italian army scattered all over the placerandomly, I nearly collapsed right as I stood in disbelieve, Then I gatheredmyself with all my energy, and took off to a nearby village as fast as I canwhile screaming hysterically.” The frightened journalist has truthfully admitted in front of history

June 11, 1908 after 24 years of reign, experiencing sickness, Emperor Menelik II has informed his officials that Lij Eyassu, at a female line of hisdaughter, Woizaro Shewarega Menelik who she was the younger of Menelik's two daughters. And Lij Eyassu's father, Ras Michael was the regional king of Wollo for such a reason, he would succeed him in his choice. However, due to Eyassu's youth, Menelik II agreed to the suggestion that he would appoints a regent. Until he came of age, Lij Eyassu would be "Regent-plenipotentiary".

May 15, 1909 at "Jan-Meda", an official Imperial cremonial parade ground,a proclamation of Emperor Menelik II the soldifier of Ethiopian state was read to assembled throngs of officials, diplomats and subjects. It read as "My child Lij-Eyassu will succeed me". And Lij-Eyassu became the designated heir to the throne.

December 12, 1913 after his briefly reigning, he appears in the eastern lowlands of Harrarghe. Meantime while at the city of Harrar king Eyassu Vwas officially removed by then “Council of Elders” in favor of his aunt Woizaro Zawditu.

September 27, 1916 The death of Emperor Menlik II officially announced this time both the Orthodox Church and the "Council of elders" removed Eyssu V, in favor of his aunt Woizaro Zawditu Menelik Woizaro Zawditu Menelik was summoned to the throne by the "Council of elders". Ras Taffari groomed to be the regent behind the Empress Zawditu Menelik, hispolitical thoughts and experiences in promoting unity and stability have proved seminal and enduring, and Menelik IIs modernization programs were to be continued by daughter Zawditu.

April 2, 1930 Empress Zawditu passed away of serious ilness of typhoid. Ras Taffari Makonnen rose to the throne. Empress Zawditu Menelik is thefirst woman ever to become monarchial head of an internationally recognised state in Africa in recent history. She was enthroned Ethiopia for 13 years, 187 days.

November 3, 1930: His Royal Highness Ras Taffari Makonnen who was Ethiopia's regent from 1916 to 1930 under the Empress Zawditu Menelik officially crowned as "Emperor Haile-selassie I" at the St. George Cathdralin Addis Ababa.

July, 21, 1932: (Zikre Neger Hamle 14, 1924 EC) King Haile Sellasie I(Janhoy) made important speech to the first parliament that was convened. He had high hopes for his country, that it will ultimately transform itself into a democratic polity with an elected parliament.

October 3, 1935 - Italy invades Ethiopia.

April 1936 - Italians capture Addis Ababa, Haile Selassie flees earlier, kingof Italy made

Haile Selassie’s Refuge in Britain

While war raged across Europe, the once and future emperor of Ethiopia planned his resistance from Somerset

Meena Venkataramanan*Meena Venkataramanan is a book critic, journalist and essayist who writes about identity, culture and race*

August 29, 2025

Haile Selassie at Victoria Station, London, en route to Geneva to appeal to the League of Nations, June 25, 1936. (Keystone/Hulton Archive/Getty Images)

Listen to this article
17 min

Listen to this article
17 min

“As we were looking out through the windows straight across, the countryside reminded us of the hills of Harar,” the former Ethiopian Emperor Haile Selassie wistfully recalled in his memoir, “My Life and Ethiopia’s Progress.”

But the emperor wasn’t writing these homesick sentences from anywhere near the hills of Harar; rather, he was in the genteel city of Bath, England, where he was exiled between 1936 and 1940. The city in southwestern England, known for its Roman baths and medieval abbey, gave refuge to the emperor after Italy, under Benito Mussolini, invaded Ethiopia. He lived in Fairfield

House, on the town's western outskirts, and the period he spent there proved to be transformative for his political program.

Although well documented in various photograph and newspaper archives, Haile Selassie's exile in Bath is not well known to the modern public. Fairfield House is not included among Visit Bath's list of historic sites, nor does it feature on Time Out or The New York Times' lists of places to visit in the city. (There was a subtle irony in Haile Selassie fleeing the Italian occupation and ending up in Bath, which was formerly a Roman city, and living in Fairfield House, an Italianate villa.) "A lot of biographies of the emperor … only give a small amount of space to the exile as if it was an insignificant period, but I would argue it had a massive impact on him," Keith Bowers, author of "Imperial Exile" — the first and only intensive study of Haile Selassie's time in England — told me.

Indeed, despite spending profligately and consequently facing financial difficulties that led to a dependence on the British government and private donors for funding, the emperor accomplished a great deal during his exile in Bath. He rallied British organizations to back the Ethiopian cause and sought financial aid for those who had fled before Italy's advances to Palestine, British Somaliland and other British colonies. In addition, he befriended British campaigners, including the prominent women's rights activist Sylvia Pankhurst, who championed his cause, committing to such an extent that she eventually moved permanently to Ethiopia.

In the summer of 1936, Haile Selassie gave a powerful, symbolic speech at the League of Nations condemning Italian aggression and asking European nations for their support. He made waves among activist groups in Britain and many student groups embraced the emperor: He was conferred honorary life membership by the Cambridge Union, the world's oldest continuously running debating society, and a group of students at the University of Edinburgh nominated him as rector. It was an active time for Haile Selassie, during which he built and developed a strong network of support and used his platform. Far from being a break in a quiet English town, these few years in exile were vital to his cause.

Just as Haile Selassie's time in England is often relegated to the margins in his life story, military action in East Africa is a similarly overlooked part of World War II. When Mussolini became Italian prime minister in 1922, he was determined to colonize Ethiopia to expand his country's empire and regain its prestige after Ethiopia had defeated Italy in the 1896 Battle of Adwa, preventing its colonization. But historians devote more attention to the war's European and Japanese fronts, rather than its African one, to the detriment of understanding both Mussolini's colonial project in Africa and Ethiopia's resistance.

It was a tricky moment for Britain diplomatically. The Italian Ambassador Dino Grandi warned that any British governmental skepticism of Italy's claim to Ethiopia "would have an exceedingly bad effect in Rome." This included any recognition of Haile Selassie's title as the country's emperor, a claim that Italy rejected. Nevertheless, Britain offered him asylum.

Haile Selassie, who had traveled to Europe in 1924 as Ethiopia's prince regent, was already famous in the West. "The press covered him a lot, the national press, the regional press, which was very well read in those days," Bowers, a former BBC producer, told me. The emperor was seen as a reformer, modernizing Ethiopia by developing its education, financial and military sectors, and the country was admitted to the League of Nations in 1923. His coronation as emperor in 1930 was the subject of significant Western press coverage, and European and North American representatives attended the event. But most significantly, his resistance to Italian occupation symbolized a non-Western nation standing up to the injustices of Western colonialism, garnering global attention as Europe was catapulted into war. When he fled from the Italians occupying his country, it was a British warship that rescued him, underscoring his existing influence even before he set foot on English shores.

Perhaps because of Italy's warning to Britain, or perhaps simply because he was so famous, Haile Selassie was officially classified as an "incognito" visitor by the British authorities to minimize public scrutiny around his exile, according to the economic historian Lutz Haber, who wrote an article for Bath History on the emperor's time in the city. But the world already knew of his plans: On June 3, 1936, before settling in Bath, the emperor arrived at London's Waterloo Station to jubilant fanfare. "Outside the station, there was a wild rush by Londoners to catch the first glimpse of the monarch who has been front-page news for nearly a year," said a Reuters newsreel documenting the event.

Later in the same month that he arrived in England, Haile Selassie was already on the move, with similarly exuberant attention from crowds. "This is a journey of hope," Haile Selassie told them, as he left to give a speech at the League of Nations in Geneva, where he was also greeted by cheering crowds of Europeans. Yet his hope was for naught: Despite the Emperor's passionate address on June 30, 1936 — still referred to as his "greatest hour" — when he rebuked Italy for its use of chemical weapons and condemned the league for failing to intervene, the league neglected to act. In the words of Paul Henze, author of "Layers of Time: A History of Ethiopia," the speech won Haile Selassie "applause from the assembly and worldwide sympathy, but not much else." The very next month, the league overturned its sanctions against Italy and all but one of its member nations recognized Italy's claim to Ethiopia.

This setback didn't stop the emperor's advocacy for his country. He returned to England to continue his political organizing, settling in Bath. "From London one reached the world," the emperor declared in one of the unfinished chapters meant for his memoir.

Britain was indeed strategically positioned. France and Switzerland were too close to Italy: An exile in either country could cause problems between neighbors, especially for Switzerland, which maintained a policy of neutrality in the years leading up to World War II. In addition, the U.K. "had the power, military power, and strategic position in order to potentially liberate Ethiopia," said Ras Benji, an independent researcher who focuses on Haile Selassie's imperial rule and exile and is the operations manager of Fairfield House. "It could have been quite a swift job if the British put their full mind to that cause, but at that time, they were appeasing Mussolini."

But if London was Britain's political nexus, why was Bath the location the emperor chose for his exile? "The main reason he chose Bath," Ras Benji said, "was the hot springs, because the Roman baths in those days and the mineral hospital nearby were known for treating all sorts of ailments," including the burns the emperor suffered from Italian use of chemical weapons, in particular the substance known as mustard (dichlorethyl sulphide). According to a Bath Chronicle reporter in 1936, "Bath was the only place in the United Kingdom where the monarch had felt really well."

The surrounding quiet in Bath also offered the emperor refuge. He lived a seemingly domestic life. Although he made several public appearances in Bath, attending a garden party in Englishcombe and the Bath Dog Show, as well as visiting the Post Office Exhibition, "we did not go to the theatre or places of entertainment," he reflected in his memoir. "Our only time of relaxation was when occasionally we conversed with our children," who, along with his wife, joined the emperor in exile. "In the evenings we were engaged in reading books until midnight and in writing the history of our past life." Between praying, reading and championing his cause, the emperor was known to sleep for only five hours a night, falling asleep at midnight and waking up with the lark at 5 a.m., according to Ras Benji.

Yet despite this apparently quiet life, Haile Selassie's troubles were mounting, thanks to his "extravagant spending," combined with purchasing Fairfield House and losing some of his assets, per Quentin Holbert, a scholar of African imperial history who wrote a dissertation on the emperor's relationship to Britain and contributed a chapter to the recently published book, "The Second World War in East Africa, 1940-1941." In 2005, interwar files from the Foreign Office were released detailing Haile Selassie's financial affairs, a full 65 years after the emperor left England, shedding light on his exile. They revealed that the Foreign Office was reluctant to fund him because it would sour Anglo-Italian relations just as the British were trying to drive a wedge between Fascist Italy and Nazi Germany.

Government officials' reactions to the emperor ran the gamut from hesitant to supportive. Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden, who would go on to become the country's prime minister two decades later, before resigning in the wake of the 1956 Suez Crisis, was "regarded in England and indeed throughout the world as the champion of the League of Nations, and the most valiant friend of Ethiopia," Haile Selassie wrote in a draft chapter of his autobiography. Eden's private secretary greeted the emperor at Waterloo Station and Eden visited him in London on his third day in the city.

Despite Eden's sympathy, the emperor was met with mixed feelings from other British officials. Then-Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin, according to Bowers, is said to have ducked under a table when he saw the emperor on a tour of the Palace of Westminster, evidently embarrassed over being associated with Haile Selassie while Britain was trying to appease Mussolini. The emperor also wrote that Baldwin was "notoriously uninterested in foreign affairs." Neville Chamberlain, who would succeed Baldwin as premier but was then chancellor of the exchequer, delivered a speech arguing against sanctioning Italy even before the emperor gave his own appeal to the League of Nations, asking for more direct support.

"We should do nothing which could arouse Italian suspicions or be construed as provocative," said Chamberlain, who became prime minister in 1937. His successor as chancellor, John Simon, shut down Eden's suggestion that the Secret Intelligence Service covertly offer a financial grant to the emperor, fearing it would embarrass the government if discovered.

Instead, private organizations came to Haile Selassie's aid. The Abyssinia Association and British Red Cross donated to the emperor and his family to "lighten the heavy responsibility which falls upon Him in administering the many [Ethiopian] officials and Exiles." The emperor was grateful, although he confessed in his memoir that "the available assistance could not offer succour to our violated country."

In the end, a private philanthropist, later revealed to be William Cox, came forward and offered him 10,000 pounds — worth over 800,000 pounds ($1.1 million) today, enough to ensure the emperor was "adequately provided for for the next five years," according to the Foreign Office. The payment "depended on the Emperor discouraging any public appeal on his behalf, particularly one such as that envisaged by the Abyssinian Association, which would cause the British government considerable discomfort," according to Graham Macklin, a researcher at the University of Oslo and expert on the history of British intelligence. After originally rejecting the offer, the emperor eventually accepted it, writing, "It is difficult for us adequately to express our feelings of respect and gratitude towards one who in wishing to remain unknown joins to his generosity a rare disinterestedness."

But confusion abounded among government officials when the Abyssinian Association continued its appeal for funds for the emperor and his country, and Haile Selassie's secretary claimed he had never accepted the deal — incensing officials who claimed he was "taking money under false pretences." Committed to his cause, the emperor refused to remain silent.

Beyond politics, there were also mixed feelings about the emperor. Brig. Maurice Stanley Lush, who became a leader in the British military in Ethiopia, called him "the pawn who thought he was king," doubting his military prowess while still acknowledging that he helped to unify Ethiopian and British troops. And although remembered as a Pan-Africanist who helped establish the Organization of African Unity, the emperor allegedly snubbed a delegation of Pan-Africanists, including Marcus Garvey, who were present at his welcome at Waterloo Station. Garvey, a Jamaican political activist who advocated the return of those of African descent to Africa, became strongly critical of Haile Selassie, calling him "at best … but a slave master."

While in England, Haile Selassie also developed a friendship with Pankhurst, the renowned women's rights activist and daughter of Emmeline Pankhurst, the suffragette who helped women win the right to vote in Britain. The younger Pankhurst was present with her son Richard at Waterloo Station for the emperor's arrival. Although opposed to monarchy in principle, Pankhurst empathized with Haile Selassie and despised fascism, passionately espousing the Ethiopian cause. Later named an "honorary Ethiopian" by the emperor, she raised money to build Ethiopia's first teaching hospital and founded the New Times and Ethiopia News to publicize Ethiopian struggles in the wake of the Italian occupation.

Ultimately, the Pankhursts moved to the quiet western outskirts of Addis Ababa — paralleling, albeit unintentionally, Haile Selassie settling in the similarly peaceful western outskirts of Bath during his exile. They devoted their life to the Ethiopian cause — Richard Pankhurst, Sylvia's son, helped found the Institute of Ethiopian Studies and wrote extensively about Ethiopia, his mother and Haile Selassie. This fiercely English family of suffragettes and activists made a second home in Ethiopia, underscoring the emperor's influence on their lives.

While in exile, the emperor also fundraised for Ethiopian refugees in Palestine and other British colonies, dedicating his after-lunch talks with his visitors in Bath to discussing "the fate of supporters in [Ethiopia] and the refugees in Kenya, Sudan and Palestine," whom he assisted with payments. "The Abyssinian Refugees Relief Fund … raised substantial sums for distribution in Africa," writes the historian Lutz Haber, adding that "the [Abyssinian] Association managed the Emperor of Ethiopia's Fund which supported exiles in Palestine when Haile Selassie was no longer able to do so."

The emperor eventually left England in 1940 for Sudan, where he crossed the border into Ethiopia and fought the Italians with both Ethiopian and British forces (the latter made up largely of African troops, including Sudanese, South African and other contingents), emerging victorious. The Italians left Ethiopia in 1941. The emperor reclaimed his title.

His financial struggles notwithstanding, the emperor refused to be silenced by money from the government and private donors. He continued to pursue his cause, even as he risked poverty and the ire of British officials.

In spite of the British government's exhortations to Haile Selassie to keep a low profile, the emperor used his time in England to build a platform. Eventually, his plans succeeded: Ethiopia was indeed liberated from Italian occupation and Haile Selassie returned home. This period in the emperor's life may be relegated to a footnote in the history books, but this mistakenly diminishes his quiet — but formative and productive — few years in Bath.

emperor of Ethiopia; Ethiopia combined with Eritrea and Italian Somaliland to become Italian East Africa.

በቀዳማዊ አፄ ኃይለ ሥላሴ ዘመነ መንግሥት የነበረ ካርታ
Map of Ethiopia during Emperor Haile Selassie's regime

February 19, 1937 (Yekatit 12, 1929 local calendar) is a date in the Ethiopian calendar, equivalent to 19 February, 1937 in the Gregorian calendar, which is commonly used to refer to the indiscriminate massacre and imprisonment of Ethiopians by Italian occupation forces following an attempted assassination of Marshal Rodolfo Graziani on the 19 February 1937. Marshal Rodolfo Graziani had led the Italian forces in the 1935 invasion of Ethiopia and was supreme governor of Italian East Africa. Thiswas one of the worst attrocities committed by the Italian occupation forces. Estimates of the number of people killed in the three days that followed the attempt on Graziani's life vary. Ethiopian sources afterwardsestimated as many as 30,000 people were killed by the Italians. Over thefollowing week, numerous Ethiopians suspected or accused of opposing Italian rule were rounded up and executed, including members of the Black Lions, and other members of the aristocracy.

February 24, 1937: The Execution of Ras Desta Damtew by the invadingItalians.

Ras Desta Damtew (1892 - 1937) was an Ethiopian noble, an army commander, and a son-in-law of King Haile Selassie I along with other patriots Dejazmach Guebremariam Gari, Dejazmach Beyene Merid (Shum of Bale Province), and a dwindling number of followers were trapped near Lake Shala in the Battle of Gogetti caught and executed in a market place.

The Fall & The Rise of Ethiopian tricolor flag, and the King Haile Selassie'sReturn to the throne (timeline)

የቅዱስ ጊዮርጊስ ስፖርት ማህበር ሰባ ዓመት በዓል
ST. GEORGE SPORTS ASSOCIATION
80TH ANNIVERSARY
1935 - 2015

ምዕራፍ ሦስት፤

የቅዱስ ጊዮርጊስ ስፖርት ክለብ

በንጉሣዊው አስተዳደር ዘመን

ከ1933 እስከ 1966 ዓ.ም

Emperor Haile Selassie I AND THE VISION FOR PAN-AFRICAN UNITY

The commemorative statue of Emperor Haile Selassie I, to be erected in the compound of the African Union Headquarters in Addis Ababa, will be inaugurated during the 32nd Ordinary Session of the Assembly of the African Union in February 2019. It will indeed be a solemn occasion dedicated to celebrating the work of a great statesman who made a monumental contribution to the beginning of the liberation of Africa and the establishment of the Organization of the African Unity.

This essay was prepared by The Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Ethiopia

Bridging the divide then existing among newly independent African countries may not look all that difficult now. However it required the statesmanship of Emperor Haile Selassie I and his pragmatic evaluation of what was possible at the time to get Africans together to achieve what has always been the dream of Pan-Africanists — the creation of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) in 1963. This historic step lay the foundation for Africa to play a critical role in speeding up the further liberation of the rest of the continent.

The people of Ethiopia take immense satisfaction at what their country was able to contribute to African unity and the liberation of the continent under the leadership of Emperor Haile Selassie I. The Emperor's prioritization of the unity of Africans which he thought could only be better advanced when they spoke in one voice was well-articulated in the historic speech he made on 25 May 1963. The following was what this great African, about whom Mandela spoke so glowingly in his autobiography, said during that historic occasion:

"What we require is a single African organization through which Africa's single voice may be heard, within which Africa's problems may be studied and resolved. We need an organization which will facilitate acceptable solutions to disputes among Africans and promote the study and adoption of measures for common defense and programs for co-operation in the economic and social fields. Let us, at this Conference, create a single institution to which we will all belong, based on principles to which we all subscribe..."

We recall, Emperor Haile Selassie I and his country, Ethiopia, had witnessed a five-year colonial occupation that the defiant people drove out of their territory and made history against colonization. Despite Ethiopia being a member of the League of Nations, it was not sealed from colonial aggression, for great power duplicity made it easy to abandon Ethiopia. This must have had a decisive impact on the Ethiopian Emperor to seek salvation in the unity of Africans and in commitment to Pan-Africanism to which he remained loyal until the end of his life.

The erection of the Statue of Emperor Haile Selassie I in the compound of the African Union, the inheritor of the legacy of the OAU, is therefore an appropriate homage to this African leader. Selassie's statesmanship was legendary and his pragmatism helped Africa embark on a long journey towards the unity of Africa, which will be in the interest of all its peoples, a journey yet to be completed.

This is a journey which has had many ups and downs and would continue to be full of challenges because Africa still has many mountains to climb and numerous hurdles to overcome. This is the responsibility of this generation of Africans to

May 1941 - British and Commonwealth troops, greatly aided by the Ethiopian resistance - the arbegnoch - defeat the Italians, and restoreHaile Selassie to his throne.

November 1952 - United Nations General assembly authorizes Eritrea tofederate with Ethiopia.

=

September 1962 - Haile Selassie annexes Eritrea, which becomes anEthiopian province.

May 1963 - First conference of the Organisation of African Unity held inAddis Ababa.

April 1964 - Ethiopia was able to swat away a Somali incursion with ease.

HAILE SELLASSIE I UNIVERSITY

ሳንቲሞች Coins

የገንዘብ ወረቀቶች
Paper Notes

ቴምብሮች
Stamps

1973-74 - An estimated 200,000 people die in near north province ofWollo as a result of famine.

September12, 1974: The last king of the solomonic dynasty of Ethiopia emperor Haile

ኣባባ ጃንሆይ

ABABA JANHOY

ግርማዊ ቀዳማዊ ኃይለ ሥላሴ
ንጉሠ ነገሥት ዘኢትዮጵያ

HIM Haile Selassie I
Emperor of Ethiopia

አባባ ጃንሆይ

Ababa Janhoy

ልዑል አልጋ ወራሽ አስፋወሰን ኃ/ሥላሴ

olk

30

SEMPERIT

Haile Selassie I overthrown in a slow, sometimes called as crippled military coup. Lt. General Aman Michael Andom becomes symbolic head of state. Exactly two and half months after it's formation, the Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC)

ሰማጌቶ (ድሬደዋ)

የጥንት የኢ

የጥንት የኢ

1960

commonly known as“the Duerg” headed by a junior logistics officer in the Ethiopian army who, significantly, had a military logistics training in Maryland state of the US had deposed the last Solomonic dynasty emperor, Haile-selassie I, and custodied the entirety of the regime's civilian and military authorities promising "Change without Bloodshed". Emperor Haile Selassie I, nicknamed the "spotlight of Africa" was to be custodied as famine discredited emperor by the so called "crippled coup d’etat of September, 1974".
August 22, 1975: Emperor Haile Selassie I dies in mysterious circumstances while in custody. The ex-Emperor Haile Selassie, who had been under intensive-nursing for a uratory bladder at undisclosed location, dies at age of eighty four in due to failing health, state media-outlets announced.
April, 1976: Relations b/n historical rivals Ethiopia & Somalia deterioratedfurther after talks in ex-South Yemen to end the row.
In May, 1976: In the wake the ruling-Provisional Military Government's extending a nine-point policy declaration known as "Eritrea-Autonomous Region in Ethiopia", which that initiative was firmly rejected by then rebel Eritrean scessionist movements mainly the Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF).Negotiations and Political mediations had taken place in various countries like ex-GDR, ex-Soviet Union, ex-South Yemen, and Cuba in various occasions with rebel opposition Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF). Although the ELF initially sought a limited scope of restoration of the federal arrangement that had terminated in September, 1962, it’s also widely believed that the escalation of hostilities among the two had pushed the secessionist rebels into the agenda of independence. Then the Eritrean problem came to be posed not as a constitutional issue but turned a colonial question. The Duerg regime accused of dishonouring the EthiopianArmed Forces by pledging publicly to handover power to a civilian rule andthen gone back on it’s word from the start. Now comes under attack by joint operation of the two rebel groups namely, the Eritrean Peoples Liberation Front (EPLF), a separatist group which founded in early 1960s, which fought for Eritrea's independence, and the Tigrai Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF), which fought for a greater autonomy for the region of Tigrai.
In 3rd February, 1977 – Brigadier General Taffari Banti killed with eightothers and replaced by Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam.

February, 1977 to April, 78 - Thousands of government opponents die in"Red Terror" orchestrated by the regime.
In late April, 1977: The United States government, a former ally ofEthiopia ceased arms sales to new military rulers of Ethiopia.
In June, 1977: The ruling Ethiopian Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC) tilted to the Soviets to sign a 20 years mutual economicagreement and ideologically encamped with the communist bloc.
In July, 1977 – The State of Somalia committed to invade Ethiopia'sSomali speaking Ogaden region.
In March, 1978 - Somali National Army (SNA) defeated by Ethiopiantroops with massive help from the Soviet Union and Cuba.

1984-85 - Worst famine in a decade strikes; Western food aid sent; thousands forcibly resettled from Eritrea and Tigre. Collectivisation of agriculture begins; Tigrayan People's Liberation Front (TPLF) launches war for regional autonomy.
August, 1987 – Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam turned civilian presidentof PDRE under a newly ratified constitution.In 1988 - Ethiopia and Somalia sign a peace treaty in Djibouti to exchangePoWs.
The Post-Duerg May 21,1991: A week before the EPRDF seizure of Addis Ababa, meaningas rebel forces approached the capital, the Ethiopian head of State Lt.
Colonel Mengistu Haile-Mariam had surprisingly left Addis Ababa makingLt. General Tesfaye Guebre-kidan acting head of state of the PDRE. Lt.
Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam has fled to Harare, Zimbabwe leaving hisclose associates behind.
May 28, 1991 - Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front captures Addis Ababa, forcing Mengistu to flee the country; Eritrea establishes its own provisional government pending a referendum on independence.
Ethiopia - At A Glance: Called sometimes ‘the nation of nations’. Ethiopia is credited with being the origin of mankind. Bones discovered in eastern Ethiopia date back 3.2million years. Ethiopia is the oldest independent country in Africa and oneof the oldest in the world. Herodotus, the Greek historian of the fifth century B.C. describes ancient Ethiopia in his writings. The Old Testament of the Bible records the Queen of Sheba's visit to Jerusalem. According to legend, Menelik I, the son of King Solomon and the Queen of Sheba, founded the Ethiopian Empire. Missionaries from Egypt and Syria introduced Christianity in the fourth century A.D. Following the rise of Islam in the seventh century, Ethiopia was gradually cut off from European Christendom. The Portuguese established contact with Ethiopia in 1493, primarily to strengthen their influence over the Indian Ocean andto convert Ethiopia to Roman Catholicism. There followed a century of conflict between pro- and anti-Catholic factions, resulting in the expulsionof all foreign missionaries in the 1630s. This period of bitter religious conflict contributed to hostility toward foreign Christians and Europeans, which persisted into the 20th century and was a factor in Ethiopia's isolation until the mid-19th century.Under the Emperors Theodros II (1855-68), Johannes IV (1872-89), and Menelik II (1889-1913), the kingdom was consolidated and began to emerge from its medieval isolation. When Menelik II died, his grandson, Lij Iyassu, succeeded to thethrone but soon lost support because of his Muslim ties. The Christian nobility deposed him in 1916, and Menelik's daughter, Zewditu, was made empress. Her cousin, Ras Taffari Makonnen (1892-1975), was made regent and successor to the throne. In 1930, after the empress died, the regent, adopting the throne name Haile Selassie, was crowned emperor. His reign was interrupted in 1936 when Italian Fascist forces invaded andoccupied Ethiopia. The emperor was forced into exile in England despite his plea to the League of Nations for intervention. Five years later, Britishand Ethiopian forces defeated the Italians, and the emperor returned to the throne.

After a period of civil unrest, which began in February 1974, the aging Haile Selassie I was deposed on September 12, 1974, and a provisional military administrative council of middle rank officers and non-commissioned soldiers, known as the Duerg ("committee") seized power from the emperor and installed a government, which was socialist in nameand military in style. The Duerg summarily executed over 61 members of the royal family and ministers and generals of the emperor's government;Emperor Haile Selassie was strangled in the basement of his palace on August 22, 1975.

Lt. Col. Mengistu Haile Mariam assumed power as head of state and the ruling Duerg council chairman, after having his two predecessors killed. Mengistu's years in office were marked by a totalitarian-style government and the country's massive militarization, financed by the Soviet Union andthe Eastern Bloc, and assisted by Cuba. From 1977 through early 1978 thousands of suspected enemies of the Derg were tortured and/or killed ina purge called the "red terror." Communism was officially adopted during the late 1970s and early 1980s with the promulgation of a Soviet-style constitution, Politburo, and the creation of the Workers' Party of Ethiopia (WPE).

In December 1976: Ethiopian delegation led by Majour Moges wolde Michael, head of economic affairs of the Provisional Military AdministrativeCouncil (PMAC), signed a bilateral economic assistance agreement with the Soviet Union in Moscow. The following April, Ethiopia abrogated its military assistance agreement with the United States and expelled the American Military Assistance Advisory Group, shortly known as US-MAAG mission based in Ethiopia.

In July 1977, sensing the disarray in Ethiopia, Somalia attacked across theOgaden Desert in pursuit of its irredentist claims to the ethnic Somali areas of Ethiopia. Ethiopian forces were driven back deep inside their own frontier but, with the assistance of a massive Soviet airlift of arms and Cuban combat forces, they stemmed the attack. The major Somali regularunits were forced out of the Ogaden in March 1978. Twenty years later, development in the Somali region of Ethiopia lagged. The Duerg's collapsewas hastened by droughts and famine, as well as by insurrections, particularly in the northern regions of Tigray and Eritrea.

In February, 1989, the Tigrayan People's Liberation Front (TPLF) mergedwith other ethnically based opposition movements to form the Ethiopian Peoples' Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF). In May 1991, EPRDF forces advanced on Addis Ababa. Mengistu fled the country for asylum inZimbabwe, where he still resides.

In July 1991: EPRDF, Oromo Liberation Front (OLF), and others established the Transitional Government of Ethiopia (TGE) which was comprised of 87-member Council of Peoples Representatives (CPR) and guided by a national charter that functioned as a transitional constitution.

In June 1992: The OLF, a transitional partner withdrew from thegovernment

In March 1993; Members of the Southern Ethiopia Peoples' DemocraticCoalition left the government.

In May 1991: Eritrean People's Liberation Front (EPLF), led by Issaias Affewerki, assumed full control of Eritrea and established a provisional de-facto government. This provisional government independently administered Eritrea until April 23-25, 1993, when Eritreans voted overwhelmingly for independence in a UN-monitored free and fair referendum. Eritrea was with Ethiopia's consent declared independent on April 27, and the United States recognized its independence on April 28, 1993.

In June 1994: Ethiopia, President Meles Zenawi and members of the TGE pledged to oversee the formation of a multi-party democracy. The electionfor a 547-member constituent assembly was held and this assembly adopted the constitution of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia in December 1994. The elections for Ethiopia's first popularly chosen national parliament and regional legislatures were held in May and June 1995.Most opposition parties chose to boycott these elections, ensuring a landslide victory for the EPRDF. International and non-governmental observers concluded that opposition parties would have been able to participate had they chosen to do so. The Government of the FederalDemocratic Republic of Ethiopia (FDRE) was installed in August 1995.

SOCIO-CULTURE: Ethiopia is a country of diverse cultures, as well asdiverse people and climate.

In terms of culture and people, Ethiopia is home to almost a hundred ethnic groups that are native to the land, each with its own language and way of life. In terms of the diversity of its climate, Ethiopia's land is one ofthe most lush and fertile on the African continent while bearing the hottestinhabited place on earth. Ethiopia is also an ancient country whose enduring existence in the modern world is largely shrouded in history, ancient legend, customs and rituals.

In terms of the history of the origin of the Ethiopian Solomonic dynasty that was founded in 1268, for instance, the legend of the Queen of Shebaof Ethiopia and King Solomon of Israel provides a fascinating account.

Ethiopia has always been independent and prides itself on being the onlycountry in Africa to have never been colonised, having defeated its colonial aggressors resoundingly. Supported by ample historical and scientific evidence, Ethiopia also prides itself on being the origin of mankind, and mankind's best enjoyed beverage of coffee.

In terms of ancient customs and rituals, Ethiopia is among a few group of countries in the world with most of its old cultural practices intact – this being particularly evident, almost daily, at the hundreds of Ethiopian Orthodox churches all over the country. Despite popular belief, Ethiopia's geographical landscape is among the most magnificent and scenic in Africa. But much of Ethiopia's beauty and character and strength lies in itspeople who are known to be among the most benevolent and proud in theworld.

What Historical sites to see?

Northern Ethiopia the beautiful and the booming!

The Tigray region in northern Ethiopia is the cradle of the country'sreligious history-including the beginnings of Christianity and Islam.

Thousands of years of history and some of the most important sites inEthiopian Christianity sit alongside new buildings, roads and airports.

Tigray is the citadel of glory when Ethiopia was one of the four powerfulempires on our planet Earth. Tigray belongs to all Ethiopians. It is the cradle of civilization of all the descendants of Noah: - Ham, Shem, and Japheth. Kush being the first born son of Ham is credited for establishingthe Kushetic Kingdom later succeeded by the Axumite Kingdom. According to historians, Tigray considered the cradle of Ethiopian civilization, and it’s home to the original black Christian Church. Tigray is home of ancient warrior kings, emperors, maritime merchants, monks andpopes, and big time composers like Saint Yared who wrote soothing musicnotes centuries before the world knew about Mozart and the Bach brothers. The marriage of Ethiopia and Tigray is natural and inseparable because everytime we go back in time and trace the state of Ethiopia we always end up in Tigray. But, this article is not about Tigray, it is about Ethiopia that includes Tigray. What is good for Ethiopia is always good for Tigray, and of course what is good for Tigray is also good for the rest of Ethiopia as long as it is acted upon with good heart and impartiality. The Judaic, Christian, and Islamic faiths lived together in relative harmony for centuries.

Axum: More evidence of man's mastery of the environment is visible on the high plateaus of Amhara state and in the mountains of Tigrai, where the fields and hills are lined with small rock walls built to stop soil erosion.History has taught farmers of their necessity: the Axumite empire that dominated the region for most of the first millennium AD fell partly because of rampant deforestation and erosion. A compulsory government community programme now requires inhabitants of the region to spend 20days a year maintaining these walls.

Today Axum is a shadow of its former glory. At its centre lies a small blue chapel which Ethiopians believe houses the true Arc of the Covenant. A couple of metres away, construction is underway for a three-storey libraryto house Axumite manuscripts. Perhaps it will soon be filled with more treasures from the site where excavation continues each year under millennia-old stone obelisks. This library is part of a wider drive to rebrandEthiopia's Tigrai region as a safe tourist destination for trekkers and history buffs exploring the clusters of rock-hewn churches chiselled out of caves nestled on mountain cliffs. But a few kilometres from the border with Eritrea, where there is still an uneasy 'no peace, no war', the effort isslow going. Chinese constructors completed a road that wends its way through the hills from Axum, south to Addis Ababa.

Mequ'ele: The capital of Tigrai in northern Ethiopia. Tigrai is aregion raw with recent history.

Adwa – the town at the centre of the mountains where the army of Emperor Menelik II and his nationalist army defeated the Italians in March, 1896 – is the hometown of Ethiopia's recently deceased PrimeMinister, Meles Zenawi. Tigrean mountains housing rock churches.

Mek'ele, the region's capital, is a busy student town and industrial centre,home to a cement factory and steel mill. It also houses the headquarters of the Tigre'an People's Liberation Front (TPLF), towered over by a soaring monument to the victory over Mengistu's Duerg and replete with Soviet-style statues depicting the sacrifices of Tigre'an villagers during the civil war. Here, history is never far from the surface.

Lalibela: One of the holiest places in Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahdo Christianity. Lalibela is the world famous site of rock-hewn churches carved into the mountains. Lalibela is filled with the sound of children practising the chants that form a central part of Orthodox Christian rituals.Sleepy and devout, this town is famous for its towering rock-hewn churches which legend says were carved in the 12th century with the helpof angels. The Orthodox Church remains wealthy and powerful, and has recently started buying up hotels in the town, further cementing its dominance.

Gondar: A town in northwestern Ethiopia to the north of Lake Tana. It wasa centre of Christian culture and capital of Ethiopia from 1732 to 1855.

Gondar is a city and separate woreda in Ethiopia, which was once the oldimperial capital and capital of the historic Begie-Midr Province.

Castles of Gondar (Fasil Ghibbi): is a fortress-enclosure located in Gondar,Ethiopia. It served as the home of Ethiopia's emperors in the 17th and 18th centuries.The site was inscribed as a UNESCO World Heritage Site in 1979. This complex of buildings includes Fasilides castle, Iyasu's Palace, Dawit's Hall, a banqueting hall, stables, Mentewab's Castle, a chancellery,library and three churches: Asasame Qeddus Mikael, Elfign Giyorgis and Gemdjabet Mariyam.

Bahir-Dar: Elsewhere in northern Ethiopia, signs of modernity are forcing their way through. It’s the capital of Ethiopia's Amhara region is a bustlingtown on the shores of Lake Tana – a prime example of the government's attempt to boost secondary economic centres in an effort to take population pressure off the capital city, Addis Ababa. An hour's drive out of Bahir-Dar are the Blue Nile falls, known in Amharic as Abay Tis-Isat or 'smoking water'. In early times, the water levels were low, in part becausehigher up the river two hydroelectric plants – one built by the Italians 50 years ago, and the other, more recently by the Yugoslavs and Chinese.

The historic walled city of Harrar: Harrar is an eastern city in Ethiopia, formerly the capital of Harrarghe and now the capital of the Harari ethno- political division (or kilil) in Misraq Harrarghe of Ethiopia. The city is located on a hilltop, in the eastern extension of the Ethiopian highlands about five hundred twenty five kilometers from Addis Ababa with an elevation of 1,885 meters. For centuries, Harrar has been a major commercial centre, linked by the trade routes with the rest of Ethiopia, the entire Horn of Africa, the Arabian Peninsula, and, through its ports, the outside world. Harar Jugol has been included in the World Heritage List in 2006 by UNESCO in recognition of its cultural heritage. According toUNESCO, Harrar is known by it's Hyena feeding man where entertains within its part of the city-walled. Harrar is "considered 'the fourth holy city' of Islam" with 82 mosques, three of which date from the 10th century, and 102 shrines. Harar is also famous for its distinctive, naturalprocessed coffees which bear the same name.

Diredawa: A trading town in former Harrarghe province, in central Ethiopiaon the railway from Addis Ababa to Djibouti.

Ethiopia is one of the oldest sites of human existence known to scientists.Ethiopia is the site of the first Hijra in Islamic history and the oldest Muslim settlement in Africa at the so called “Nejashi”. Until the end of Haile Selassie I's reign in September, 1974, Ethiopia was a monarchy for most of it’s history tracing its roots to the 2nd century BC. Ethiopia's ancient Ge'ez script, also known as“Ethiopic”, is one of the oldest alphabets still in use on the continent. The Ethiopian calendar, which is seven years and about three months behind the Gregorian calendar.

During the Scramble for Africa, Ethiopia was the only African country beside Liberia that retained its sovereignty as a recognized independent country, and was one of only four African members of the League of Nations (LoN). Ethiopia then became a founding member of the UNO. When other African nations gained their independence following World War II, many of them adopted the colours of Ethiopia's flag, and Addis Ababa became the location of several global organizations focused on Africa. Ethiopia is one of the founding members of the Non-Aligned Movement (NAM), G-77 and the defunct Organisation of African Unity (OAU). Addis Ababa is currently the headquarters of the African Union, thePan-African Economic Chamber, UNECA. There are about 9 UNESCO Registered World Heritage Sites in Ethiopia.

Internal conflicts

Who: Central government of Ethiopia versus Eritrean secessionist rebelforces

When; September, 1961 to May, 1991Why: War of secession

Outcome: Several thousands dead, several thousands migrated.

Major conventional wars

First Ethio-Somalia border warWhen: April, 1964

Outcome: Invading Somali armies were driven out of Ethiopian Territories.

Second Ethio-Somalia border warWhen: July, 1977

Outcome: Invading Somali armies were driven out of Ethiopian Territories.

Recurrent droughts

1973 to 1974 in near north province of Wollo

1984 to 1986 in near north provinces of Wollo and Tigrai. Worst famine ina decade strikes; Western food aid sent; thousands forcibly resettled fromEritrea and Tigre. Collectivisation of agriculture begins; Tigrayan People's Liberation Front (TPLF) launches war for regional autonomy.

1994 in south and south western regions of Ethiopia

Ethio-Eritrea border war

When May, 1998 to December, 2000,

Outcome: Devastating war costed the two sides over 80, 000 livesboundary remains undemarcated due to Ethiopia's refusal

Economy

Ethiopia's economy is heavily reliant on agriculture (90% of the totalGDP).

Coffee, Hides and skins, cereals and gold production, and individual remittances from abroad, are major sources of foreign exchange. Sound macro-economic management along with high prices for Coffe and gold helped sustain GDP growth last years. Ethiopia remains one of the world poorest countries and currently ranks in the bottom two of the UN Human Development index. Sixty-six per-cent of its land area is arable and about24% of its land semi-desertic and it has a highly water resources in Africa,with 85 per-cent of the country's labour force engaged in agriculture. The country's main exports are Coffee, gold , cotton, cereals and cut-flowers; Ethiopia is extremely vulnerable to world price fluctuations. The country iscurrently implementing a World Bank prescribed structural adjustment programmes as it seeks to diversify it's economy, with what observers sayhave been tangible results. The continued tension with neighbouring Eritrea has negatively affected growth prospects though, for the landlocked country, but Ethiopia is now building a energy grids network that will connect it to adjacent countries, in addition to maintenance of a railway line to neighbouring Djibouti.

Social

Ethiopia suffers from extremely high rates of poverty, however, Ethiopiahas made significant progress to reduce household poverty since 2005.

Civil society unflourished.

The ruling party's hand picked National Electoral Board of Ethiopia (NEBE)is one of the most controversial institutions. The Electoral Board has remained under the same Chair, since it's foundation in the spring of 1992. The Tigrai Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) forms the core of the Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) coalition, which rules the incumbent government has not been willy for fair and freeelections, and national reconciliation. The opposition accuses the ruling party of being unable to establish a commission to review alleged human rights abuses during its rein. Media and academia restricted under the massmedia proclamation number 590/2000 to publish seriously and freelyon governance.

Social

Unemployment – in 2012, it stood at 45% and has been going up. Thecountry struggles to accommodate refugees running away from neighboring countries of Eritrea, Somaia and the Sudan. Formerly: Imperial Ethiopian Government (IEG) November, 1930 toSeptember, 1974

Provisional Military Govenment of Ethiopia (PMGE) September, 1974 toAugust, 1987

Peoples Democratic Republic of Ethiopia (PDRE) August 1987 to May,1991.

Ethiopia is the second largest country in terms of population. Currently: Amharic:የ ኢትዮጵያ ፌዴራላዊ ዲሞክራሲያዊ ሪፐብሊክ (Nehasse, 1987)

English: Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia (FDRE) from August,1995:

Ethiopia is a country located in the Horn of Africa.

Ethiopia considered an independent country in Africa with an ancient history, considered also one of the top 10 oldest nations in the world, being at least 2,900 years old apart from a five year facist Italian occupation, believed to be a unique among the African countries, has ancient heritage, and contains the oldest human bones of 3. 4 million years "Lucy" ever discovered, the 3, 000-year old city of Axum, Ethiopia's most ancient city, where anyone can visit the holiest church in the country, a chappel where the Ark of the Covenant is said to rest, and of course, the palace of the Queen of Sheeba. The 12th century rock-hewn churches of Lalibella, where eleven complete churches were hewn out of asolid-rock almost 800 years ago, as well as the 15th century built castles of Gondar are the main ones. Called "museum of nations, nationalities andpeoples" or "nation of nations" as its official parlance depicts it. It's perceived as a largely coptic-Christian nation by western countries, bordering two Islamic states of modern days Sudan & Somalia. In the previous years the Ethiopian Empire used a coronation ritual for its Emperors. The last such event was held on 2 November 1930, for Emperor Haile Selassie, the final monarch of Ethiopia. Heavily influenced by Ethiopia's Coptic Christian tradition, preparation for the coronation ceremony commenced seven days prior to the actual event. Following an ancient Ethiopian custom, forty-nine Coptic bishops and priests continuallychanted from the Psalter in groups of seven, in seven corners of the Cathedral of St. George, in Addis Ababa, where the crowning was to take place. On the eve of the ceremony, the imperial robes and regalia were taken into the church to be blessed and prayed over by the Abuna, or Archbishop, followed by the new Emperor and his family, who arrived at midnight and remained inside the cathedral that night in prayer. The following morning, the Emperor was met inside the cathedral by the Archbishop, who presented him with a Gospel book and asked him to takea four-part coronation oath. This oath required him to defend the Ethiopian Orthodox Faith, rule according to law and the interest of his subjects, safeguard the realm and establish schools for teaching of both secular and Orthodox religious subjects. After this, the Abuna read a special prayer of blessing, while drums and harps accompanied the chanting of Psalm 48. Various items of the Imperial Regalia were brought forward, blessed and presented to the new sovereign one-by-one.

Ethiopia's main tourist destinations are located on the northern historic sites of Axum and Lalibela. The World-famous monolithic Stelaes of Axum mark the tombs of a ruling elite of a remarkable civilization that held power in the region until around 333 AD. The town, which acknowledged as the cradle of Ethiopian culture, is where the Ark of the Covenant is saidto reside, in a small chapel at the Church of St. Mary of Tsion. It is guarded by priests from the eyes of all corners, but reputed to be a pure gold container in which the stone tablets with Ten Commandments are kept. Further South is the Cluster of 11 majestic free standing and Rock- hewn Churches at Lalibela. Described as the "eighth wonder of the World",they probably date from the 12th century, and local legend has it they were built by the angels. The Axum and Lalibela may be the main attractions of the Northern route, but Bahir Dar on the exquisite Lake Tana (the source of the Blue-Nile), and Gondar with it's majical castles- aswell as Emperor Fasilades bath house, a focus of the local New year celebrations. Timkhat- are equally compelling destinations. So too the Simien (Northern) escarpments, a mountain range intersected by more than 100 deep gorges, that lies between Axum, Gondar and Lalibela and isone of the 43 natural world heritage sites found in Ethiopia that are listed by UNESCO. Here, to the delight of wildlife enthusiasts, are found three species that exist nowhere else in the world: the Walia Ibex with its Crescent-shaped horns: the Simien Qabaro (Northern Wolf) and the extremely rare Chelada baboon. Several emerging destinations in southern, western and eastern Ethiopia also provide a wide range of historic, cultural and natural attractions. To the east, close to the nearest airport at Dire Dawa (which, incidentally is also served by the Addis Ababa - Djibouti railway, the only railroute in Ethiopia) is the ancient, Muslim walled city of Harrar, home to 90 mosques and holy shrines and considered the fourth most sacred centre in the Islamic world after Mecca,the Medina and the Dome of the Rock in Jerusalem. It's recorded that when the prophet Mohammed fled to Meddina, many other Muslims crossed the Bahar Al-Habesh (Red sea) to seek sanctuary in Ethiopia. Onesuch group that made the crossing included the prophet's daughter- Ruqayya, and his future wife Habiba. The slopes of the Chercher mountainrange, just outside Harrar, are said to grow the finest Coffee ever in the world, the factor that probably drew Arthur Rimbaud, the rebellious 19th century French poet (who was, for a time, a Coffee trader) to live in the city of Harrar. Ethiopia believed to number about 88 million- the second largest populated in Africa after Nigeria - Ethiopia is a complex composite of around 80 ethnic groups, the Oromos are about 40% of the population and live primarily in the southern half of the nation. The Amharas and theTigreans that constitute 32% of the population, have traditionally lived to the north. A number of smaller groupings such as the Sidamas of the southern foothills and savanna regions account for just under 10% while the Shanquilas in Beninshangul-Gumuz that live to the west make up about 6%. The ethnic Somali peoples (not to be confused with Somali nationals) represent around 6.2 % and the Afar 4%, settled mainly in the east and southeast respectively. Nilotic peoples live in the west and southwest along the Sudan border, principally the Guraghes that accountsfor 2% of Ethiopia's population while the remaining 1% is made up of other groups. The "Falashas" or "Beta-Israel also known as "black -Jews" live in the Simien (northern) mountains although the majority have resettled in Israel. Historically there have been strong ties with the Arabian Peninsula and one can find a strong contingent of Yemenis who are actively engaged in the local economy. The Beja of the northernmost region, the Agaw of the central plateaus, and the Sidamas of the southernfoothills and the savanna regions are the remnants of the earliest known groups to have occupied Ethiopia, but migration flows have seen many other peoples enter Ethiopia's ethnic mix, such as Yemenis, Greeks, indians, and Turks. In recent years, a number of Afro-Caribbeans have followed the call of their leader Marcus Garvey's to "return to Africa".

Ethiopia is a home for Saba-Geez (Ethiopic-text), the rock-hewn Churchesof Lalibella, and it's Solomonic dynasty emperors. The "Solomonic dynasty", is an ancient imperial order ruled the nation through its 237 Emperors, Queens and Kings, starting from Menellik I until recently.

Ethiopia is meaning for "land of dark-skinned people". The Ethiopian Ge'ezcalendar is the principal calendar used in Ethiopia and also serves as the liturgical calendar for Christians in present day Eritrea, belonging to the present day Eritrean Orthodox Church (ErOTC). It is based on the older Alexandrian or Coptic calendar, which in turn derives from the Egyptian calendar, but like the Julian calendar, it adds a leap day every four years without exception, and begins the year on August 29 or 30 in the Julian calendar. A 7 to 8 years gap between the Ethiopian and Gregorian calendars results from alternat calculations in determining the date of the annunciation of Jesus Christ, meaning that like the Coptic calendar, the Ethiopian (Ge'ez) calendar has 12 months of 30 days each plus five or six epagomenal days which comprise a 13th month. Thus the first day of the Ethiopian new year is 1st Maskaram is usually to rest on Gregorian September 11th, but falls on Gregorian 12th of September in years beforethe Gregorian leap year. Enkutatash is the word for the Ethiopian new year in Amharic, the national language of Ethiopia, while it's called "Re'eseAwde-Amet" (head anniversary) which the term is usually preferred to useby the Ethiopian Orthodox Church through the outdated Ge'ez, a languagewhich remains nowadays only at churches.

According to the Holy-Bible "A land of Kush", meaning for "land of dark- skinned people", and thought by many, one of the oldest nations in the world with an ancient history, with the emergnce of Solomonic and later the Zague kingdoms between the 1st century BC and the seventh centuryAD to control at it's height an area that covered the present day northernpart of Ethiopia, Yemen, and stretches into parts of northern Sudan, and parts of present day Somalia and southern Saudi Arabia. Formerly Abyssinya currently known as Ethiopia can claim to be the first country inthe world to adopt Christianity as a state religion in the 4th to the 7thth century.

The Axumite Empire & Civilization

Whose kingdom during the time becomes a regional military and trading power with a strong naval presence over the Red Sea known as the "BahrAl-Habash", the origins of many much older empires can be traced to within its borders. The most important of these is Axum that dates back it's beginnings to two or three hundred years before the birth of Christ.

The Aksum or Axum Empire was an important military power and tradingnation in the area that is now Eritrea and northern Ethiopia, existing fromapproximately 100 to 940 A.D.

At its height, it was one of only four major international superpowers of itsday along with Persia, Rome and China. Axum controlled northern Ethiopia, Eritrea, northern Sudan, southern Egypt, Djibouti, Western Yemen, and southern Saudi Arabia, totaling 1.25 million square kilometers, almost half the size of India. Axum traded and projected its influence as far as China and India, where coins minted in Axum were discovered in 1990.

Axum is best known for the outside world in it's enormous monolithic stelae or standing stones. These marks the tombs of a ruling elite of a remarkable civilization that until around 300 AD held sway over both sidesof the Red sea, in both Southern Arabia, across the Horn of Africa and deep into the interior of the continent. Axum was the centre of an African empire that had trade links with India, Arabia, Roman, Egypt and Persia as well as Greece.

According to legend, long before this, this was the region where Makeda, "the Queen of Sheeba, reigned. 3,000 years ago, the ruler of Sheeba, which spanned modern-day Ethiopia and Yemen, arrived in Jerusalem with vast quantities of gold to give to King Solomon. King Solomon of Israel, nomean connoisseur of beautiful females, is said to have succumbed too easily to the beautiful Makeda, the fabled "Queen of Sheeba", her enchanting beauty was often the subject of Ethiopian folklore. Queen of Sheba is not part of the Axumite linage. She was of a line of very dignified, august linage known as the Candance linage, who visited King Solomon with whom she offspring-ed Menelik the first, and who brought with him the Ark.

"Menellik I" was the son of King Solomon, who's himself son of King Davidof Israel, and the Queen of Sheeba was the first ruler of Ethiopia, and the one to whom the family traced its ancestry, Menellik I, originally named Ebna-la-Hakim meaning for "son of the wise", was the first Jewish emperor of Ethiopia and ruled around 950 BC. Menellik I was head of the dynastic family that led Ethiopia for over 2,900 years until the fall of the monarchy in 1974, which resulted by the Ethiopian revolution ended their monarchial rule. King Solomon was known for his judicious works of wisdom, one of his works of wisdom was :- two women came to his throneclaiming that a child is theirs, then the wise king had no any technology touse test or he did not form a jury to make his decisions, instead he used his wisdom of identifying what a true mother will do to her child, he demanded a sword and asked one of his aids to bring the child on place, he then told to the two women that he is going to equally divide the child and they can take their shares- when one of his aids raised his sword pretending to cut-equally the child, the real mother fallen on top of her child to protect him from death while the pseudo-mother stood quietly and watched the drama.Then the wise king Solomon made his DNA analysis ofwisdom and gave the child to the real biological-mother.

In the 4th Century the Original church of St. Mary Zion in Axum was built during the reign of King Ezana, is also the place where the revered "Ark ofthe covenant" was brought by Menelik I, son of "Queen of Sheeba" and king Solomon of Israel, as detailed in the latter thirteenth century account"Kebra-Negast" i.e. "the book of the glory of kings". King Ezana who converted the Axumite kingdom to Christianity after he himself was converted by two Syrian Christian priests who told him about the forthcoming of Jesus Christ. Christianity then spread across the region with churches and monastries being established and the priesthood exerting a powerful influence overtime among the population.

A Brief history of each of the preceding monarchs is being worked on Menelik I – The first Solomonic King of Kings of Ethiopia Menelik I was theson of Makeda, Queen of Sheba and King Solomon of Israel. He was the founder of the Solomonic Dynasty in Ethiopia, and is said to be the first monarch to use the title of King of Kings of Ethiopia. Makeda, according tothe Kebre Negest, returned from her biblical visit to Jerusalem pregnant with Solomon's son, as did one of her servants. (The Zagwe dynasty would later claim to be the descendants of the servant). When her son was born, she raised him as her heir, and then sent him to meet his fatherin Jerusalem when he came of age. After meeting his father, Menelik returned to his homeland. When Menelik returned, Solomon arranged for a copy of the Ark of the Covenant to be made for him to take with him, and ordered the eldest sons of all his nobels and priests to go with Menelik. The son of Zadok the High Priest, apparently reluctant to go off to a strange land with just a copy of the Ark, crept into the temple and exchanged the replica with the real Ark, and brought the Ark of the Covenant to Ethiopia. It is kept at the Cathedral of St. Mary of Zion to thisday, in a special sanctuary Chapel that only one guardian monk is permitted to enter. Emperor Ezana (Abraha) - First Christian Emperor Ezana was the son of Emperor Ella Amida. During his fathers reign, two Syrian youths were shipwrecked on the Red Sea Coast and brought to the Imperial Court. Oneof them, Adesius, became the trusted cup bearer and food taster for the Emperor, while the other, Fermentius, became his secretary. Upon the death of the Emperor Ella Amida, the widowed Empress begged the two Syrian Christians to remain in the country and help her rule until her son came of age. Fermentius remained, and assisted the Empress as well as becoming the tutor to the young boy Emperor. Fermentius converted Emperor Ezana to Christianity, and when the Emperor came of age, he replaced his coins that bore an emblem of the sun and moon along with his image, with new coins that bore the Holy Cross. They are the first coins in the world to bear the Christian emblem. Fermentius went to Alexandira to request that the Patriarch of the See of St. Mark, who at thetime was St. Athnathius himself, to appoint the first Bishop of Ethiopia. Patriarch Athnathius sent Fermentius himself back as the first Bishop, withthe new name of Abune Selamma. This bishop is known to the west as St.Fermentius of the Ethiopians. Ever since this event in the fourth century, Ethiopia has been identified as a Christian state in Africa, and one of the oldest Christian states in the world. Ethiopian tradition maintains that Ezana's brother Shezana also served as a co-ruler with his brother, and the brothers are known in Ethiopia commonly as Abraha and Atsbeha. Thebrothers recieved a letter from the Byzantine Emperor Constantius that instructed them to expell the bishop Abune Salamma as he did not subscribe to the Arian doctrine supported by the Byzantine Emperor, and was a supporter of St. Athenathius, Patriarch of Alexandria who was the leading opponent of Arianism. The Ethiopian monarchs refused, and heald fast to the Orthodox doctrine supported by St. Athnathius. Ezana was a significantly successful soldier, whose military victories are recorded in numerous inscriptions at Axum. He is also credited with having brought the Ark of the Covenant from the island of Tana Kirkos in lake Tana, to theCathedral of St. Mary of Zion which he built, removing it from the custody of the Bete Israel Jews (Falashas) and placing it in the hands of Ethiopia's Christians.

The Reign of Emperor and Saint Gebre Meskel’

Saint (Mahletai) Yared (25th April 505 AD - 20th May, 571)

Saint (Mahletai) Yared was born in the city of Axum from his father Abyud(Isaac) and his mother

Christina (Tawklia) was a semi-legendary Ethiopianmusician credited with inventing the sacred music tradition of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church and Ethiopia's system of musical notation. He is responsible for creating the Zema or the chant tradition of Ethiopia, particularly the chants of the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Church, whichare still performed today. He is regarded as a saint of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church with a feast day of 11 Ginbot (May 19). Reading the Bible in Gee’z and the Yaredian soundings and position how to serv the church are preserved. The Holy St. Yared developed and composed the liturgical music and chants of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church, as well as a unique 5 note system and notation system for Ethiopian music. Emperor Gebre Meskel is said to have been so mesmerized by Yared's music, that he accidentally pierced St. Yared's food with his spear while listening to a recital by Yared. Gebre Meskel was a particularly pious Emperor who was himself eventually declared a saint of the Ethiopian Church.

Emperor Kaleb the Great -

Emperor Armah - The welcomer of first Muslims The Emperor Armah is theEthiopian monarch who was the first ruler to give sanctuary to the first Muslims. Soon after the Prophet Mohammed began his teaching in Arabia,the Kings of the region began to ruthlessly suppress and persecute his followers. Many fled across the Red Sea to the Axumite Empire, including members of the Prophet's family. When the pagan Arab kings heard that many Moslem refugees had fled to Ethiopia, they sent messengers to Armah offering a large bounty for the return of these fugitives to them.

The Axumite Emperor, hesitant and unsure of the nature of these exiles had them investigated by his officials, and was told that they were simplepeople who believed in one God, and were mostly poor women and children who had thrown themselves at his mercy. After seeing this for himself, he is said to have replied to the Arab Kings, "Even if you were topay me a mountain of gold, I could not in good conscience betray these people and send them to you." This act was possibly a key event in the survival of the young Islamic religion, and the Prophet deeply appreciatedthis act of compassion. He explicitly instructed his followers to leave the Ethiopians in peace, and exempted Ethiopia from Jihad. This in turn allowed Ethiopian Christianity to survive intact as the Nubian Christian kingdoms and the Christians in Egypt succumbed to eventual Muslim conquest. When news that Emperor Armah had died reached the Prophet Mohammed in Mecca, it is said that he wept and mourned for him.

Muslims and Christians have lived side by side in Ethiopia ever since. Relations have not always been smooth, but there has been very little deep seated hatred or religious atrocity outside of the Gragn era and it'saftermath. Muslims refer to Armah as Najashi (a variation of Negasi or Nigus, which means King).

A History of Islam in the Abyssinyan empire is as old as the religion itself according to Islamic scholars as the early persecuted Muslims, relatives and followers (Al-Sahaab) of prophet-Mohammed on the first hejira (migration) first fled to the sub-region known as then the "Bilad Al- Habashi" to seek safety and protection from the quraishi at the court of the Axumite emperor in modern time Ethiopia whose some of the Muslimsthat were granted protection are said to have settled in several parts of countries known as the Horn of Africa today to promote Islam in the region. Prophet Mohammed, according to the many "prophecy speeches ofHaddis", then Land of Abyssinya was not considered part of "Dar Al-Harb" and thus was not subject to "Jihad", because according to the Muslim prophecy, the "Arthur-Habashi" meaning the "Land of Abyssinya" had granted asylum to the persecuted followers of the prophet. For such a reason, the Islamic-prophet chose an Ethiopian born Bilal Al-Habashi, effectively making him the first Muaa-din of the Islamic faith in Mecca thatwas in the late 6th century, sometime b/n 578 and 582 AD. And at the latter, Islam introduced at the walled-city of Harrar, a once Islamic centre,and later Muslim stronghold during the middle age then still an important commercial centre in the region. At the time Ethiopia's, Muslims had had the opportunity of promoting Islam with having very positive relationships and lived in harmony with christian families and friends.

Islam is the second most widely practiced religion in Ethiopia after Christianity, approximately with over thirty million (33.9%) of the total population adhering to Islam. Having arrived in Abyssinya at about 615 AD, the first Muslims in then Abyssinya were immigrants from Mecca, persecuted by the ruling Quraishi tribe. They were received by the ruler ofHabashi, whom the Arabic tradition has named "Ashama Ibn-Abjar", and he settled them in Nejash, where it was located at present Tigrai region ofEthiopia. "Nejash" is the Islamic historical site in present Ethiopia and parts of East Africa. The Quraishis have sent emissaries to bring them back to Arabia, but the king of Habashi refused their demands. The prophet Mohammed himself instructed his followers who came to Abyssinya, to respect and protect "Habashi" as well as live in peace and harmony with Abyssinyan Christians. Islam later to widely develop more inthe coastal regions of the eastern and southern horn of Africa, particularly among the pastoral Somali communities which adapted it at first.

There are few countries as diverse as Ethiopia, it's a proud nation perhapsa unique among the African countries, believed a sprawling christian led kingdom until the end of it's Solomonic dynasty recently. It's perceived asa largely coptic-Christian nation by western countries, bordered by mainlyIslamic states. It has ancient heritage, and contains the oldest human bones of 3. 4 million years "Lucy" ever discovered, the 3,000-year old cityof Axum, Ethiopia's most ancient city, where anyone can visit the holiest church in the country, a chappel where the ark of the covenant is said to rest, and of course, the palace of the Queen of Sheeba. The 12th century rock-hewn churches of Lalibella, where eleven complete churches were hewn out of a solid-rock almost 800 years ago, as well as the 15th century built castles of Gondar are the main ones. It's official parlance depicts it "Museum of nations, nationalities, and peoples" or "Nation of nations". The montainous landscapes of northern Ethiopia are breathtaking and the culture vibrant and eclectic. Is to be Africa's oldestindependent nation, apart from five year facist-Italian occupation, has never been colonized or occupied and with reason; is the only African state which defeated their would-be-European colonizers and remained independent even throughout the colonial era. Emperor Anbassa

Widim and the Fall of the Axumite Empire: During the long reign of Anbassa Widim, a Jewish (Falasha or Bete Israel) woman named Yodit led an uprising that swept much of the land and fought to eliminate Christian hegemony and regain custody of the Ark of the Covenant for the Ethiopian Jews. Upon the death of Yodit, Anbassa Widimwas restored breifly, but following his death, the weakened dynasty fell, and were replaced by the Zagwe dynasty.

The Zagwe Dynasty

Following the fall of the Solomonic Dynasty, the throne was assumed by anew royal house known as the Zagwe Dynasty, founded by Emperor Mara Tekle Haimanot. These Emperors were said to have been of Agew origin, and the name Zagwe is believed to be derived from the words Ze Agew (which means "of Agew"). Although what is known as Agew Midir (land of the Agews) is located in modern day Gojjam, the Agew are known to haveoccupied a much wider area in earlier times, and been a major ethnic group in the Empire. Over the centuries, they have assimilated more and more into the Amhara ethnicity which surrounded them and are now indistinguishable for the most part, except for the very few remaining Agew who still speak their distinct language. The new dynasty from it's origins had difficulties with establishing it's legitimacy. It is said to have claimed decent from King Solomon through the maid servant of the Queen of Sheba who according to the Kibre Negest was also impregnated by the Israelite king at the same time. They also claimed an even older lineage by claiming decent from Moses through his Ethiopian wife. None the less, they seem to have always suffered from a perception of a lack of legitimacy, especially since the Solomonic descendants of the Axumite Emperors continued in existence in Shewa. The Zagwe's moved the capitalof the Empire from Axum to the south, into the district of Lasta, to a towncalled Roha. This town would be renamed for the greatest of the Zagwe Emperors, Lalibella, who would build the great rock hewn churches that are still in use today as places of worship and pilgrimage. Below is a list ofthe Zagwe Emperors, and the dates of their reigns. Several of them wouldlater be canonized by the Coptic and Ethiopian Orthodox Churches.

Emperor Mara Tekle Haimanot, reigned 916 – 919

Emperor Tatadim, reigned 919 - 959 Emperor Jan Seiyoum, reigned 959 - 999 Emperor Germa Seiyoum, reigned 999 – 1039 Saint and Emperor Yemrehana Christos, reigned 1039 - 1079Saint and Emperor Harbe, reigned 1079 – 1119 Saint and Emperor Lalibela, reigned 1119 – 1159 Saint and Emperor Na'akuto Le'Ab, reigned 1159 - 1207Emperor Yetbarek, reigned 1207 – 1247

Emperor Mairari, reigned 1247 - 1262 Emperor Harbe II, reigned 1262 –1270

On 10th Century AD: Ge'ez was the national tongue and lingua franca of Ethiopia up until the 13th century CE' There was a destructive civil war in the capital (Axum) between the Christian Solomonic Dynasty & the JewishEthiopians led by Yodit descended from Ethiopians who refused the state religion since the early 4th century CE. This civil war caused decentralization and mass migration in all directions of the Ge'ez speakers and allowed Ze Agew (the Agew speakers who also happened to be Christian) to rule. It was around this time that the Ge'ez speakers in northern and western Eritrea as well as northeast Sudan began forming Tigre. The ones who stayed in northeast Eritrea (Massawa region/Dahlak islands) formed Dahlak language (a recently re-discovered language) & several other small Ge'ez descended languages which for the most part are now swallowed up by Tigre or Tigrigna. Over the next 2 centuries, Ge'ez speakers who stayed in the vicinity of the now central Eritrea and &Tigrai region formed Tigrai-Tigrigna. And the migrants who decided to go south, southwest or southeast formed Amharigna, Guragigna, Argobigna, Sletogna, Harrarigna, Gafatigna and around 30 or so other Ge'ez descended languages.

The Solomonic Dynasty was restored in 1270 when the founding Abbot ofDebre Libanos Monastery, Saint Tekle Haimanot, convinced Harbe II to step aside and allow the Solomonic heir, Yekonu Amlak, to assume the Imperial Throne rather than face a humiliating military defeat. Legend states that Harbe II took religious vows and became a monk, and his heirwas the one who received the settlement from the new Emperor and became the first Wagshum, with the district of Wag as his hereditary fief.The descendants of the Zagwe Emperors bore the title of Wagshum from the year 1270 right up to the revolution of 1974. The Abdication Settlement not only granted the district of Wag and the hereditary title ofWagshum, but also granted the Wagshums the right to be seated on a silver throne one step bellow the golden throne of the Emperor. They wereentitled to have the great negarit drum beaten for them in salute on greatoccasions, and also during military campaigns just like the Emperor. They were also granted the privilege of being seated in the Imperial presence, so long as the Emperor was also seated. They were treated with princely deference by all, and deeply revered in Lasta and Wag. The Solomonic Emperors honored this agreement until the fall of the Ethiopian monarchy 804 years later.

Saint & Emperor Lalibela of the Zagwe DynastySome Medeival Emperors

Emperor Yekonu Amlak and the Solomonic RestorationEmperor Yigba Tsion Upon the death of Yekonu Amlak, he was succeeded by his son Yigba Tsion who speant much of his reign fighting various sons and grandsons ofYekonu Amlak for the succession. After a brief reign that ended with his death in 1294, the fighting intensified among his brothers and nephews untill 1300 or so when it was decided to return to the old custom of imprisoning all male heirs of the House of Solomon to prevent wars of succession. Instead of the old royal prison on Debre Damo monastery, they royal men were taken to the new monastery prison built on Amba Gishen.

Emperor Amde Tsion

On August 1270: AD the Solomonic dynasty, a bastion of Ethiopian Orthodox Christianity came to rule Ethiopia. Amde Tsion was crowned in 1313 and brought all the Christian distrincts of the northern highlands under his firm control. He expanded his power deeper into Shewa, Gojjam, Damot and Agew Midir. He established stronger control of the Lake Tana area, establishing a strong base on the Zegey penninsula where he built the beautiful St. Mary's church which still stands today withit's magnificent murals. He also expanded deep into the south into Hadiya,which is in modern Sidama (Sidamo), and spread Christianity throughout the south. He strengthened the monarchy and established a more stable system of government. Emperor Amde Tsion died in 1344.

During the reign of Emperor Tekle Giorgis I, in an attempt at consolidatingdeclining Imperial power, the Emperor proclamed the imposition of new taxes on the population of Beghemidir, (in particular a tax on honey produced) the Province in which the capital, Gondar, was located. The nobles of the province appealed to the Emperor, stating that they had long been exempt from such taxes. He refused to accomidate them. The "Enderase" was a noble who was appointed to serve as a type of Grand Vizier or PrimeMinister. At this time, it was the Yejju Oromo nobleman, Ras Gugsa the Great. The nobles assembled at Debre Tabor, and summoned him to them. They told him that they no longer wanted to be ruled by the Emperor, and if he stood with them, and agreed to act only inconsultation with them, he could assume power and relegate the monarchto a powerless symbolic role confined to the Castle compound in Gondar.

The Enderase swiftly agreed. Emperor Tekle Giorgis I was informed that he was to refrain from participating in affairs of state, and symply reign from his thone as the supreme source of legitimacy, and a symbol of sovreignity, but devoid of all power. Stripped of all their traditional power,the Emperors became mere puppets of whomever could assume the Enderaseship. The people contemptuously refered to the successive monarchs as Our Ladies the Castle Keepers (Woizazir Ye Gimb Tebakioch).The loss of Imperial prestiege had begun with the murder of Eyasu the Great by his son Tekle Haimanot I, but probably the greatest blow to Imperial power was the killing of Emperor Eyoas I on the orders of the Enderase, Ras Michael Sihul. The emasculating of Tekle Giorgis I's power was simply the final straw. The Emperors struggled to maintain their role, but Tekle Giorgis I was the last of the elder Gondar branch of the Imperial dynasty to excersize any real authority. The era that followed was the Zemene Mesafint (Era of the Princes) in which regional leaders governed with little oversight from the capital. They fought each other for power and territory, and struggled to sieze the position of Enderase for themselves. Athough others did manage to sieze the Enderaseship from time to time, it was usually held by members of Ras Gugsa the Great's family, a noble family of Oromo origin from Yejju and Wollo. Each Enderase would choose a prince of the Imperial House and place him on the throne as his puppet, but when another Enderase siezed power, or theincumbent monarch displeased the Enderase, the puppet Emperor would be replaced by another. Some monarchs would be deposed and restored several times in their lifetimes. Although they held the strings of power and authority the House of Yejju never presumed to seize the throne for themselves, always aknowledging the right of the House of Solomon to occupy the Imperial throne even if only symbolically. Often refered to by foriegnors as princes, the Yejju rulers of Ethiopia were in fact nobles and not princes. The following is a list of the monarchs of this era who had no power, but were legitimate monarchs in whose names the nation was ruled by its many warlords. Many were contemporaries of each other, and found themselves switched on and off the throne at the whim of the Enderase. They followed as, Emperor Tekle Giorgis I.

Emperor Eyasu III Emperor Hizkias Emperor Beide Mariam IIEmperor Solomon II Emperor Yonas

Emperor

Dimitros Emperor Igwale Tsion (Gwalu)Emperor Eyoas II

Emperor Gigar

Emperor Beide Mariam IIIEmperor Eyasu IV Emperor Gebre Christos Emperor Sahle Dingil Emperor Yohannis III

With the deposing of Emperor Yohannis III in 1851 by Kassa of Kwara, who usurped the throne as Tewodros II, the elder line of the Solomonic Dynasty, the Gondar Branch, came came to an end. Emperor Yohannis III was deposed and expelled from the Palace compound in Gondar and went to live in another house in the city. He apparently fell on hard times, and would write a pitiful letter to Emperor Napoleon III of France, pleading for funds because he had become destitute. There are stories that he converted to Catholicism. Following Tewodros II's death, three branches ofthe dynasty, the Tigrai Branch, the Gojjam Branch, and the Shewa Branchbecame the leading representatives of the House of Solomon. They were challenged by Wagshum Gobeze who set forth claims as both the Zagwe heir, and also by virtue of Solomonic blood on his mother's side. Emperor Yohannis IV was the only member of the Tigrai Branch to reign, but his decendants were recognized as the hereditary princes of Tigrai. The Shewan Branch eventually became the reigning branch of the family, and recognized as the senior one of the three lines. The head of the Gojjam Branch became King Tekle Haimanot of Gojjam, and his decendents ruled Gojjam as it's princes for many decades afterwards. The family trees are extensive.

On 1100 Century AD: The modern era Abyssinyan monarchy. And theAmhara dignitaries known as “Amharas Agere-Gejiwoch” or Amhara dignitaries had expandedsouth, since the time of the slow collapse of the Axum empire.

On 1120 AD: The Adal Sultanate of Afari-Aussa who ruled the Afar- triangle including the Denkhel and Ankala b/n 1120 to 1543 raised asinfluential in the region.

On the 1215 to 1313: Tekle-Haimanot was known in the Ethiopian Orthodox Christian faith as Saint Tekle-Haimanot of the Orthodox Tewahdo Church of Ethiopia, and was an Ethiopian monk who founded a major monastry in his native province. He is the only Ethiopian Saint to becelebrated in foreign churches and in local churches, the 24th day of everymonth in the Ethiopian calendar is dedicated to St. Tekle-Haimanot.

On 1313: According to legends, the Tigrigna speaking areas of Tigrai & Mereb-melash were divided by then Amharan kingdoms into two separated regions by the Mereb river (River-Gash setit). The Governor ofthe northern province of Bahr-Negash would receive the title of "Bahr- Negash" meaning for "ruler of the Sea", whereas the governor of the southern province of Tigrai receives the title of "Makonnen-Tigrai".

On 1342: Atse Amde-Tsion (b. 1313 to 1342) founded the currentEthiopian nation.

On 15th century AD: The Oromos developed an indigenous democratic system similar to the Grecian Polls called Gada in which elected officials including the Abba Gada (President), the Abba Dula

(Commander of the Army), the Abba Hori (Chief of the Treasury), and nine Hayyuus (Judges)assumed public office for non-renewable 8 year terms. With universal male training in warfare including equestrian skills, archery and the martial arts. The Gadaa System of the Oromos was the traditional social stratification system of Oromo males in Ethiopia and the now northern Kenya:
Side note;- "The most important of other races that occupy this portion ofAfrica is Oromo..... themselves from Red Sea and the Blue Nile to the Equator. They are divided into numerous tribes, having the one common characteristics of being undaunted horsemen." –Historians Historically speaking, the Oromos make up a significant portion of the population occupying the Horn of Africa. As per the Gadaa system of government, a democratic socio-political institution of the Oromo people, one Gadaa leader serves for a period of eight years. There are five Gadaa systems within this system among which the leadership rotates. Gadaa, a traditional system of government in Oromo culture, witnessed transfers ofpower among all of the five Gadaa Oromo political stages in four rotations.The Oromos alone constitute about 50% of the total inhabitants of presentEthiopia. Mainly engaged as agriculturalists (coffee, several crops, spices, vegetables) and animal breeding;Their “Gadaa system” has been seen as a better method of governing than other forms in the region. it is also practiced by the Gedeo people of southern Ethiopia. Each class, or luba, consists of all of the sons of the men in another particular class. The entire class progresses through eleven different grades, each based on an eight-year cycle, and each with its own set of rights and responsibilities.Though the Gadaa system itself is no longer widely practiced, it remains influential in Oromo society at large. The Oromos areone of the Kushitic speaking groups of people with variations in colour andphysical characteristics ranging from Hamitic to Nilotic. A brief look at the early history of some of the peoples who have occupied north-eastern Africa sheds some light on the ethnic origin of Oromo. The Cushitic speakers have inhabited north-eastern and eastern Africa for as long as recorded history. The land of Kush, Nubia or the ancient Ethiopia in middle and lower Nile is the home of the Cushitic speakers. Social scientists of diverse backgrounds at different times have studied the Oromo Gadaa system. Many of them have testified that it is uniquely democratic.The history of the arrival of the Oromo people in the sixteenth century in East Africa from outside is a denial of historical facts. The so-called "Gala invasion of Ethiopia" is also a tale. It was first written around 1590 by a monk called Bahrey and henceforth European historians and others almost invariably accepted this story as a fact. The recent discovery, (Lynch & Robbins, 1978), in northern Kenya of the pillars that Oromo used in the invention of their calendar system, dated around 300 B.C., is another indication that Oromo have a long history of presence as a community of people, in this part of Africa. There follows a brief description of how the Gadaa system works: there are two well-defined ways of classifying male members of the society, that is, the hiriyya (members of an age-set all born within the period of one Gadaa rule of eight years) and Gadaa grade.The Gadaa grades (stages of development through which a Gadaa class passes) differ in number (7-1 1) and name in different parts of Oromia although the functions are the same. The following are the Gadaa structures and grades:-

1. Dabballee (0-8 years of age)
2. Folle or Gamme Titiqaa (8-16 years of age)
3. Qondaaia or Gamme Gurgudaa (16-24 years of age)
4. Kuusa (24-32 years of age)
5. Raaba Doorii (32-40 years of age)
6. Gadaa (40-48 years of age)
7. Yuba I (48-56 years of age)
8. Yuba II (56-64 years of age)
9. Yuba III (64-72 years of age)
10. Gadamojjii (72-80 years of age)
11. Jaarsa (80 and above years of age)

The following are the Gadaa officials and their duties according to theTuullama Gadaa practice: 1. Abbaa Bokku - President

2. Abbaa Bokku - First Vice-President
3. Abbaa Bokku - Second Vice-President
4. Abbaa Chaffe - Chairman of the Assembly (Chaffe)
5. Abbaa Dubbi - Speaker who presents the decision of the presidium tothe Assembly
6. Abbaa Seera - Memoriser of the laws and the results of the Assembly'sdeliberations.
7. Abbaa Alanga - Judge who executes the decision
8. Abbaa Duula - In charge of the army
9. Abbaa Sa'a - In charge of the economy

Thus, the entire presidium consists of nine members, called "Salgan Yaa'iiBoranaa" (nine of the Borana assembly). The Abbaa Bokkus are the chief officials. (Bokku is a wooden or metal sceptre, a sign of authority kept bythe Abbaa Bokku, the president). The Abbaa Bokkus have counsellors andassistants called Hayyus who are delegated from the lower assemblies.

There are three level of assembly - inter-clan, clan and local chaffes, chaffe being the Oromo version of parliament. The chaffe assembly was held in the open air in a meadow under the odaa (sycamore) tree. The chaffe made and declared common laws and was source of the accumulated legal knowledge and customs. In the hierarchy of Gadaa chaffes, the assembly of the entire presidium of the ruling- Gadaa Class isthe highest body whose decision is final. It, is the assembly at which representatives of the entire population come together, at pre-determinedtimes, to evaluate among other things, the work of those in power. If those in power have failed to accomplish what is expected of them the assembly has the power to replace them by another group elected from among the same Gadaa class or Luba. And this was one of the methods ofchecking and balancing political power in the Oromo society. The second highest Gadaa assembly is the clan chaffe. It is from these assemblies that special delegates to the higher assembly are elected. The lowest Gadaa chaffe is the local chaffe. This is made up of local members of the Luba from among whom representatives to clan chaffes are elected. The holders of these responsible posts can remain in office for eight years only, in normal times, and are then replaced by a new group of officers. The power is handed over at a special ceremony at a special place and time. The office-holders conduct government - political, economic, social,ritual and military - affairs of the entire nation for this period. During wartime all capable men fight under the leadership of the group in office.

During the eight year period the officials live together in a village (yaa'aa village) and when necessary travel together. There are five Gadaas in a cycle of 40 years. If a man enters office (becomes Luba) now, his sons willbecome Luba 40 years from now. The five Gadaa (some times called Buttaa) in the cycle have names, which vary slightly from region to region. Among some Oromo communities the sets of five Gadaa names used by the sons are different from those of the fathers. Whereas among other communities the same set of Gadaa names are used for both fathersand sons. For instance the Gadaa practised in the Borana community usesthe following different sets of names for the five Gadaa (i.e. could be likened to five parties who take power in turns).

Fathers Sons: 1. Birmajii Aldada 2, Melba Horota 3, Muudana Bifoole 4,Roobale Sabaqa

5, Duuioo Kiloolee -

In this manner a given name repeats itself every 80 years. This is in fact the complete Gadaa cycle divided into two semi-cycles of 40 years each. The first 40 years is the Gadaa of the fathers and the second is the Gadaaof the sons. Although it is not known with any degree of certainty where and when the Gadaa system started, it is known and documented that theOromo have been practising it for well over 500 years.

In 1520: The king, Henry the navigator, sent an exppeditionary forces, these Portuguese mission traveled some 450 miles from the Red sea coastMassawa to central Ethiopia to find the king, observing the great number of Orthodox Churches in the region, but finding the kingdom and its leader, Emperor Lebna-Dengel, lived far removed from the mythical splendour of legend and, despite their best attempts, could not be converted from Orthodox Christianity to the catholic faith. Almost as soon as the Portuguese left, a Muslim army of the Ottomans through their proxies sieged Abyssinya.

In 1529: In the death of the Adal-sultanate, a rising young Immam in thename of Ahmed Ibn Ibrahim El-Gazi (Grangn), invaded most of the Abyssinian Oromo and Sidama lands, which comprised much of the territory of present day Ethiopia, and changed the balance of power in favor of the Muslims died.

Artistic rendition of Dom Cristovão da Gama (son of the legendary Dom Vasco da Gama), who led Ethiopia's Portuguese allies during the Adalite War & was later executed for refusing to convert to Islam after being taken prisoner by Ahmed Gragn at the Disaster at Wofla. Among his 400 Portuguese musketeers was the man who killed Ahmed Gragn at the GreatVictory at Weyna Daga. Dagama, a true European hero, who sacrificed hislife for the Abyssinya, as did the vast majority of his men.

Side note;- Ahmed Ibn Ibrahim Al-Ghazi who was known as "Immam Ahmed Gurey" Somali meaning for "Ahmed the left handed" who firmly cosolidated his hold onto the Adal Sultanate invaded much of the Ethiopian highlands, which then under the kingship of emperor Lebna- Dengel, and Immam Ahmed Gurey was able to defeat the Abyssinyans atthe "battle of Shimbra-Kure". Immam Ahmed Gurey who seized control ofthe wealthy Abyssinyan northern highlands, succeeds in the total destruction of the Abyssinyan towns, churches and monastries, most people in the highlands were forcefully converted to Islam, though the Abyssinyans were continued to resist him from the highlands until Atse Lebna-Dengel sent a frantic message to the Portuguese who later they sent a force from India to come to his rescue.
In 1537: The Futuh al-Habasha records Ahmad Ibn Ibrihim al-Ghazi visited the tomb of Ashama ibn Ajbar in Nejash during his invasion of theprovince of Tigray. Negash is known as the earliest Muslim settlement in Africa; a seventh century cemetery has been excavated inside the village boundaries. Nejash is also known for the Nejash Amedin Mesjid (mosque).Nejashi is a village in the Tigray Regional state of Ethiopia, which straddles the Adigrat-Mekele road 10 kilometers north of Wukro, in Wukroworeda of Tigray.
In February 21, 1543: Ethio-Portuguese joint victory over Jihadist ImmamAhmed Gurey glorified east of Lake-Tana.
Side note;- Imam Ahmed Ibn Ibrahim Al-Ghazi known as "Ahmed Gurey" who ruled much of what is now Somalia, led a daring invasion of ChristianEthiopia, looting monasteries, burning down churches and slaying all who resisted. Centuries on, memories of Imam Ahmad Gragn still haunt both countries, and echoes of that long and bloody history still ripple across theHorn of Africa region which considers Somalia the greatest threat to its stability. Back then, the Ethiopians were beleaguered as the invaders occupied some two-thirds of the country. Help eventually came in the form of 400 Portuguese musketeers, who sailed into Massawa port and embarked on a six-day march to the front. Imam Ahmed Gragn had his backers too. Reinforcements from Arabia soon rolled in alongside a gift from the Ottoman Empire: 900 of its famously hardened musket experts. The war known as "the battle of Woina-Dega" lasted over a decade. The Portuguese army under Christopher Dagama, son of the Potuguese explorer Vasco Dagama fought the Immam and his Jihadist army alng the Abyssinyan army. The Ethio-Portuguese military alliance counted asthe first connection with such an European power, and considered a first contact with Europe too.
In 1550: Abyssinian kingdoms whos successfully defeaed the Oromos militarily, failed to achieve political goal because of the strength of therival Oromo warriors and their Cavalry. March24, 1559: After Dil-Wenbera ex-wife of the Jihadist Immam Ahmed Gurey (Gragn) announced marriage to whom he kills or bring the head skull of Atse Galawdios, then Muslim forces led by Nur Ibn Mujahid, the nephew of Immam Ahmed (Gurey) killed Atse Gelawdeos and avenged thedeath of his uncle who was killed by Galawdeos's forces 16 years ago.

In 1559 to 1563: Menas enthroned as Atse Admas-seged of Ethiopia.

In 1590: A monk by the name of "Bahre" first wrote a tale about the so-called "Oromo Invasion of Ethiopia," almost invariably accepted by European historians as a fact.

October 4, 1597: Atse Tsertse-Dengel (1563 to 1597), who was enthronedin 1950 as negusa-nagast (Emperor) Malaak-seged meaning that "to whom the angel bows" of Ethiopia as died as member of the Solomonic dynasty. He drove out the Ottoman invaders.

In 1622: The Roman Pope Gregory 10th (1621 to 1623) converted King(Atse) Susenios as to promote Catholicism in the region.

In 1628 – 46: M. De Almeida had the following to say on the traditional Oromo religion: "The Oroms are neither Christians, moors nor heathens,for they have no idols to worship."

Source: "The History of High Ethiopia or Abassia"

On 17th century - The realm Ethiopian rationalist philosopher Zara-Yacob, is likened to the greatest of Europe's philosophers of that era. His immense contribution to epistemology (theory of knowledge), ethics, aesthetics, metaphysics (the study of reality) and logic is universally acknowledged. That is why non-traditional scholars compare Zara Yacob, the authentic Ethiopian philosopher to Rene Descartes, Spinoza, and Leibniz. He stands head and shoulder above the rest in another realm - onthe issue of gender. For instance, he challenged the superiority of monastic life over marriage, which the Christian Church propounded. He also rejected polygamy because he thought the law of creation orders oneman to marry one woman. The 17th century considered Ethiopia's gloriousphilosophical past

On the mid-17th century: Solomonic Emperors of Ethiopia were made Gondar a seat. Subsequently King Fasilidas built his permanent castle, thisserves Gondar as Ethiopia's capital until mid-19th century when Theodros II where he moved to "Maqdalla".

In 1700 - In Yejju and Wollo, the dynasties of Warra-Sheika and Warra-Hemanu respectively were found.

In 1734: Aussa Sultanate (1734 to 1749) known later as the AfarSultanate (Kadaffo) established.

Side note: The Aussa Sultanate or Afar Sultanate succeeded the earlier Imamate of Aussa raised once again after only four hundred years of decline. The latter polity had come into existence in 1577, when Muhammed Jasa moved his capital from Harrar to Asahita (Aussa) with the split of the Adal Sultanate into Aussa and the Harrari city-state. At some point after 1672, Aussa declined and temporarily came to an end inconjunction with Imam Umar Din bin Adam's recorded ascension to the throne. The Sultanate was subsequently re-established by Kedaffo aroundthe year 1734, and was thereafter ruled by his Mudaito Dynasty.

In 1755 Zemene Mesafint (Ge'ez: ዘመነ መሳፍንት zemene mesāfint), variously translated "Era of Judges,"

"Era of the Princes," "Age of Princes," etc.; named after the Book of Judges) was a period in Ethiopian rent by conflicts between warlords, the Emperor was reduced to little more than afigurehead confined to the capital city of Gondar, and both society and culture stagnated. Religious conflict both within the Ethiopian Orthodox Church and with Ethiopian Muslims were often used as the pretext for thepowerful to battle each other.

Traditionally, the beginning of this period is set to the date Ras Mikael Sehul deposed Emperor Iyoas (7 May 1769), and its end to Kassa's coronation as Emperor. Some historians date the murder of Iyasu the Great (13 October 1706), and the resultant decline in the prestige of the dynasty, as the beginning of this period. Others date it to the beginning ofIyoas's reign (26 June 1755).

Nobles came to abuse their positions by making Emperors, and encroached upon the succession of the dynasty, by candidates among the nobility itself: for example, on the death of Emperor Tewoflos, the chief nobles of Ethiopia feared that the cycle of vengeance that had characterized the reigns of Tewoflos and Tekle Haymanot I would continueif a member of the Solomonic dynasty were picked for the throne, so theyselected one of their own, Yostos, to be King of Kings (Negusa Nagast).

However, the tenure of Yostos was brief and the throne came into thehands of the Solomonic house once again.

On 20th July 1779 to Tekle-Giorgis I was enthroned further as Emperor"Fiqir-seged" of Ethiopia as member of the Solomonic order.

In 1800 - Limmu, the first of the five Gibe States (Limmu, Guuma,Gomma, Geera and Jimma), was formed.

In July 1808: The history of the US based Abyssinian Baptist Church? Ethiopian merchants founded the Abyssinian Baptist Church in Harlem,New York.

In 1810 - Gumma, the second of the five Gibe States (Limmu, Guuma,Gomma, Geera and Jimma), was formed.

In 1813 Sahle-Selassie (1795 – 22 October 1847) was a Merid-Azmach and later Negus of Shoa i.e. Neguse-Shoa from 1813 to 1847, an important noble of Ethiopia. Sahle-Selassie, was the first leader of Shoa-state to become a "Negus" (King) He was a younger son of Wossen- Seged. Sahle-Selassie was the father of Haile-Melekot, Seyfe Sahle- Selassie, and Darge Sahle-Selassie.

In 1820 - Gomma, the third of the five Gibe States (Limmu, Guuma,Gomma, Geera and Jimma), was formed.

In 1830 - Jimma, the fourth of the five Gibe States (Limmu, Guuma,Gomma, Geera and Jimma), was formed.

Side note: Jimma Aba Jiffar: an Oromo Monarchy

The progress of the Galla into these regions was remarkably rapid. Withinthirty years they had accomplished their major conquest and occupied perhaps one-third of the empire. Today the Galla occupy much of the bestland in Ethiopia, and although they are not in continious distribution they extend from northeastern Ethiopia to southeastern Kenya, and from the Sudan to the Somalilands. The Galla arrived at the area west of AddisAbaba late in the sixteenth century. They they came in to contact with a number of non-Galla monarchies such as Gafat,Damot, Shoa, Gojjam, Enarea, Janjero, Garo, and Kaffa. The relation between the Gall and thesekingdoms were unfriendly. Manuel Almeida's account of Fernandes' Travels in southern Ethiopia in 1613 and 1614 tells of the hostility between the Galla and their neighbours in Enarea, Shoa, Gojjam, Garo and Janiero. Source: From Ethiopia 1830 to 1832 by Herbert S. Lewis.

August 19, 1844: The birthday of Ethiopia's future exceptional King and most dearest Emperor (Emiye) Menelik was born on the day of Saturday. Born to be Sahle-Mariam, the future Menelik was baptized in Angolela Kidane Mihret of Ankobar, near Debre Birhan, he was Negus/King of Shoa(August 17, 1866-December 12, 1889) state, then Nəgusä Nägäst (King of Kings) of Abissinya from 1889 until his death 12 December 1913. His paternal grandfather, it was he who gave his grandson the name Menellik.It is said that King Sahle-Sellassie predicted that his grandson would growto a great man, a king who would restore Ethiopia's empire. Yes the King dearly called 'Emeyee'. It's to be recalled that King Menelik of Shoa state paid a blood to keep today's Ethiopia's nation state and it's national and territorial sovereignty by for the first time defeating a European nation, Italy at the battle of Adwa
May 9, 1852: Makonnen Wolde Mikael Gudisa the future Warrior anddefender of the nation born in Derefo Mariam.
The end of 'Era of the Princes'
Zemene Mesafint (Ge'ez: ዘመነ መሳፍንት zemene mesāfint), "Era of Judges," or"Age of Princes," etc. to end in former Abyssinya. Emperor (Atse) Tewodros' rule is often placed it as the beginning of modern Ethiopia, ending the decentralized Era of the Princes (Zemene Mesafint).

February 11, 1855 Kassa Haile-Giorgis who baptized as Sahle-Dingil wasenthroned as Emperor (Atse) Thewodros II, (ቴዎድሮስ) of Ethiopia.
(Ge'ez ቴዎድሮስ), baptized as Sahle-Dingil, and often referred to in the westby the English equivalent Theodore II) (c. 1818 – April 13, 1868) was the Emperor of Ethiopia from 1855 until his death. He was born Kassa Haile- Giorgis, but was more regularly referred to as Kassa Hailu (Ge'ez ካሳ ኃይሉ —meaning "restitution" and "His [or the] power").
Kassa was the son of a Christian nobleman of the Quara district of theprovince of Dembiya named Haile Giorgis Wolde Giorgis. His baptized paternal grandfather, Dejazmatch Wolde Giorgis, was a widely-respected figure of his time. Dembiya was part of the large territory known as Ye Maru Qemas, or "that which has been tasted by Maru". It was the personal fief of Dejazmach Maru, a powerful warlord, and relative of KassaHailu (possibly a half-uncle). Kassa's mother, Woizero Atitegeb Wondbewossen, was of the upper nobility, and was originally from Gondar. Her mother Woizer Tishal was a member of a noble family of Begemder, while her paternal grandfather, Ras Wodajo, was a powerful and highly influential figure. Although generally regarded as a non-royal usurper, Tewodros II, would late in his reign claim that his father was descended from Emperor Fasilides by way of a daughter, although most ofhis contemporaries did not acknowledge the legitimacy of these claims.

When Kassa was very young, his parents divorced and Woizero Atitegeb moved back to Gondar taking her son with her. Not long after their departure, news reached them that Kassa's father had died. Popular legend states that Kassa's paternal relatives split up the entire paternal inheritance, leaving young Kassa and his mother with nothing and in verydire circumstances financially. To make ends meet, it is often repeated that Woizero Atitegeb was reduced to selling "Kosso", a native herbal remedy used to purge patients of intestinal worms (a common occurrencebecause of the Ethiopian love of raw meat dishes). Kassa would be taunted often for being a "Kosso seller's son", an insult that Tewodros II seldom forgave. There is actually no evidence that Woizero Atitegeb was ever a Kosso seller, and several writers such as Paulos Ngo Ngo have stated outright that it was a false rumor spread by her detractors.

Evidence indicates that Woizero Atitegeb was fairly well to do, and indeedhad inherited considerable land holdings from her own illustrious relativesto lead a comfortable life. Kassa's youth was probably not lived lavishly, but he was far from a pauper.

Tewodros sought to unify and modernise Ethiopia. However, since he wasnearly always away on campaign during his tenure as emperor, disloyal leaders frequently tried to dislodge him whilst he was away fighting.

Within a few short years, he had forcibly brought back under direct Imperial rule the Kingdom of Shewa and the province of Gojjam. He rushed the many warlords of Wollo and Tigray and brought recalcitrant regions of Begemder and Simien under his direct rule. He moved the capital city of the Empire from Gondar, first to Debre-Tabor, and later toMagdala. Tewodros ended the division of Ethiopia among the various regional warlords and princes that had vied among each other for powerfor almost two centuries. He forcibly re-incorporated the regions of Gojjam, Shoa and Wollo under the direct administration of the Imperial throne after having been ruled by local branches of the Imperial dynasty(in Gojjam and Shoa) or other warlords (Wollo). With all of his rivals apparently subdued, he imprisoned them and their relatives comfortablyat Magdala. Among the royal and aristocratic prisoners at Magdala was the young Prince of Shoa, Sahle Mariam, the future Emperor Menelik II.

Tewodros doted on the young prince, and in fact married him to his own daughter Alitash Tewodros. Menelik would eventually escape from Magdala, and abandon his wife behind, offending Tewodros deeply. (Atse)Tewodros has candidated Alequa Guebre-Hanna who was born in 1822 in Nabaga-Giorgis of Fogera locality, Gondar as minister "Justice" to assist him rewrite the Fitha-Negest, Kibre-Negest,and Siratte-Negest. Alequa literally meaning for “Church cleric”, Guebre-Hanna who's known as prominent Comedian and social-criticizer of his time also known as “Aristofanus of Ethiopia” was previously served as Lique-Kahin /Quese- Guebez/ (intellectual) of the Orthodox Church.

In 1855: Maria Theresa thalers and blocks of salt called "amole tchew" (አሞሌ) served as currency in Ethiopia. The thaler was known locally as theBirr (literally meaning "silver" in Ge'ez and Amharic) or ታላሪ taleri. The Maria Theresa thaler was officially adopted as the standard coin in 1855, although the Indian Rupee and the Mexican Dollar were also used in foreign trade.

The talari (thaler, dollar, birr) became the standard unit (on 9 February 1893) and 200,000 dollars were produced at the Paris Mint in 1894 for Menelik II. The talari, equivalent to the Maria Theresa thaler, was dividedinto 20 ghersh (also guerche or gersh, the name coming from the Ottoman Empire's qirsh) or 40 bessa (a small copper coin).

A new Ethiopian coinage appeared (in 1903). The new silver birr maintained the same weight and fineness as the old, but there was now aquarter-birr and a silver ghersh, the latter 1/16 the weight of the birr. Themoney of account now became 1 birr' = 16 ghersh = 32 bessa.

The first Birr: Copper coins (Between 1894 and 1897) were introduced indenominations of 1⁄100 and 1⁄32 birr, together with silver 1 ghersh, ⅛, ¼, ½ and 1 birr, and gold ¼, ½ and 1 werk. In 1931, a new series of coins was introduced consisting of copper 1 and 5 metonnyas, and nickel10, 20 and 50 metonnyas.

In 1860: Krapf proposed the term Ormania to designate the nationality orthe country of the Oromo people.

April 13, 1861: Alemayehu Tewodros was born by emperor Tewodros andempress Tiruworq in Dabra Tabour of South Gondar.

In 1864: Emperor Tewodros II offered Menelik the hand of his daughterAltash Tewodros in Marriage, at age 20.

Side note;- In 1864, Menelik married Woizaro Altash Tewodros, whom he divorced in 1865; the marriage produced no children. In 1865, he marriedwoizero Bafena Getatchew, whom he divorced in 1882; the marriage produced no children. Finally, in 1883, he married Taytu Betul, who remained his wife until his death.

Previous to his marriage to Taytu Betul, believed Menelik fathered several"natural children". Three natural children that Menelik recognized were Woizero Shoaregga Menelik (born 1867), Woizero (later Empress) ZauduituMenelik, (born 1876), and Abeto Asfa-Wossen Menelik (born 1873).

July 1, 1865: Born to be Sahle Mariam, the future Menelik king of Shoa escaped as political prisoner from Maqdalla detention camp, returned to Shoa leaving his wife Wro Alitash behind. In Shoa married his second wifeWeizaro Bafena, but divorced her seven years later in 1874.

In 1868: A. Plowden stated, "Among republican systems, the Gadaa system is superior." Source: "Travels in Abyssinia and the Oromo Country"

April 13, 1868: The brief history of Britain’s invasion to Ethiopia & the death of Atse (emperor)

Thewodros (ቴዎድሮስ) II at age 49–50 inMaqdalla.

Side note: In December 1867 Britain invaded Ethiopia on the orders of Queen Victoria. The aim was to put an end to Emperor Tewodros II, who had taken hostage a missionary and diplomats sent to free him. The campaign (which lasted from December 1867 – May 1868) was led by SirRobert Napier. The result was a vast punitive expedition, consisting of 13,000 British and Indian troops, reinforced by thousands of transport staff and camp followers, and including 44 trained Indian elephants.

Finally they confronted the Emperor's forces at the fortress of Magdala, where the hostages were being held. His forces defeated, Emperor Tewodros committed suicide rather than face the ignominy of imprisonment, with a pistol originally given him by Queen Victoria. His crown was taken back to Britain and only restoredto Ethiopia when it washanded to the Emperor Haile Selassie in 1925.

Ethiopia's first modern emperor, he began the task of centralisation and unification in style marked more by vision than by method. His rule is often placed as the begining of modern Ethiopia ending the decentralized Era of the Princes.The modern Ethiopia began with the reign of Emperor (Atse) Tewodros II, horsenamed "Aba-Tatek" has began the consolidation of the country. Born to be Lij Kassa Hailu of Quara, Dembia, later known asTewodros II, conquers Gojjam, Shoa and Tigrai, sought to unify and modernise Ethiopia. Emperor Tewodros II is known to end the division of Ethiopia among the various regional warlords and princes that had vied among eachother for power for almost two centuries. Internally, regional rulers of the time sought external allies to subvert their imperial overlordsand improve their own chances for the throne. Internal opposition to Tewodros's authority had started as early as 1855. In the subsquent decade, Atse Tewodros was to spend much of his time moving in haste from one province to another, faced with a fresh outbreak of rebellion before he had succeeded in putting down the previous one. In Lasta, Wag- shum Gobezzie,"Tirsso" the future emperor Tekle-Giorgis (1868 to 1871), raised the standard of his rebellion after he had see his own father executed by Tewodros II. Therefore, Atse Tewodros was confronted by a gloomy pictures. Internally, he has less achieved from the unification of Ethiopia, the abolition of slavery that sparks of many profound nation- building initiatives, then he faced a nation-wide opposition and rebellion, from the Europeans whom he had expected to come to his aid, he received only indifference or insolence. The frustration of his lofty objectives led him to seek extreme solutions. In exasperation, violence aggravated his situation, at home, it multiplied his enemies. Externally, it moved the British to act against him, in which they were indefferent to hisdemands for arms assistance, but not to his imprisonment of the British, then he committed suicide on easter monday of April, 1968 as the British invading-troops stormed the citadel of Maqdalla, the purpose of the British forces incursion into Ethiopia was to achieve the release of hostaged British nationals those imprisoned by Emperor Thewodros II mainly due tothe fact that Queen Victoria of Britain failed to respond to his diplomatic initiatives for an increased ties between Ethiopia and the Great Britain, butfailed and defeated by the British expeditionary forces and commits suicide to avoid capture, his body was drawn to the center of the spot where the British regiment had halted, by then the British forces under Lt.General Sir Robert Napier in 1868, had full control of Maqdalla and cheers were being made with enthusiasm.

Emperor Tewodros II committed suicide after his defeat by the British, led by Sir Robert Napier, at the Battle of Maqdala in 1868. Emperor (Atse) Thewodros II was emperor of Ethiopia (1855 to 1868) until his death at the citadel of Maqdalla refusing to surrender to British invading troops led by Sir Lt. General Napier.
Whatever his leadership failures may have been, he is noted for his immense bravery and for the pride with which he held his firm patriotism.It was in his estimation preferable to die than to live under the British rule. Alemayehu Tewodros of Ethiopia the young prince and son of Emperor Tewodros II of Ethiopia was taken to Great Britain for safekeeping, under the care of Captain Tristram Speedy.
In August 1866: Born to be Sahle-Mariam, who was grown in Angolela, Shoa, in the central region of present Ethiopia, to become Negus (king of)"Shoa state" at his youth.
In 1868: The brief Zagwe Restoration:
In Lasta, Wag-shum Gobezzie, "Tirsso" the future emperor Tekle-Giorgis (1868 to 1871), as raised the standard of his rebellion after he had see hisown father executed by Tewodros II, later enthroned as Emperor Tekle- Giorgis II of Ethiopia. Tekle Giyorgis II (Ge'ez - ተክለ ጊዮርጊስ, "Plant of Saint George" born Wagshum Gobeze ዋግሹምጎ በዜ lit. "Governor of Wag, my courageous one"; died 1873) was nəgusä nägäst (Emperor) of Ethiopia from 1868 to 1872. Gobeze based his claim to the Imperial throne on a dual heritage: through his father Wagshum Guebre-Medhin, he was the heir to the old Zagwe dynasty and the rulers of Lasta, and his mother wasa descendant of the Solomonic dynasty. His principal rivals for sole rule were Menelik II (who was at the time king of Shoa), and Dejazmach Kahssay Mercha of Temben (the future Emperor Yohannes IV). Gobeze married the sister of the latter, Dinqinesh Mercha. Emperor Tekle-Giorgis II reigned from 1868 until a Tigrean chieftain in the name of Dejazmach Kassa Mercha becomes Emperor of Abyssinya as Yohannes IV, killing him brutally in a battle.
In 1868 (1868 to 1879): Aba Mathias, a Catholic preacher becomesadvisor to Negus Menelik of Shoa state.
In 1869: The port of Assab was bought by an Italian Shipping Companycalled ‘Rubatino’ from a local Sultan.
Side note: The port of Assab is situated on the west coast of the Red Sea.It was bought by the Rubattino Shipping Company in 1869 from the local Sultan, namely Ibrahim, and was acquired by Italy in 1882 who found theport inadequate for exploitation of its hinterlands, and came to use Assab as a coaling station. Assab possesses an oil refinery built by the Soviet Union as an economic assistance to Ethiopia. Assab is an inlet of the Red Sea, on the African coast, near the Bab-el-Mandab. It is about 16 miles long by 5 miles wide, and about 50 feet deep at Busna, the main anchoring-place. Together with two small islands in front of it, Assab was ceded to the Italian Government, in 1881, by an Italian steamship company, which had acquired it in 1869. The town of Assab is situated at the entrance to the bay, and has a population of 500 this time. The city is very hot during summer months, temperatures can touch a scorching highof 54°C (129°F) in July and August.

July 11, 1871: Dejazmatch Kahssay Mercha of Tembien who claimes the Solomonic dynasty through his maternal line defeated and killed emperorTekle-Giorgis known as ‘Tirsso Gobezie’ in "Battle of Anchin".

The restoration of Solomonic order: The Solomonic dynasty is the ImperialHouse of Abyssinia. Its members claim lineal descent from King Solomon and the Queen of Sheeba, the latter of whom tradition asserts gave birth to the first King Menelik I after her Biblically described visit to King Solomon in Jerusalem.

The dynasty, a bastion of Judaic and later of Ethiopian Orthodox Church, came to rule Ethiopia in the 10th Century A.D. Precise records of the dynasty's history had been maintained by the Ethiopian Orthodox monasteries to near antiquity. However, the resurgent Judaic Queen Judith I and her subsequent destruction of Orthodox monasteries resultedin the destruction of most such records. Yekuno Amlak I re-established the dynasty through birth traced to the last Solomonic King of Axum Dil Naod. The Dynasty re-established itself on 10 Nehasé 1262 EC (August 10, AD 1270) when Yekuno Amlak overthrew the last ruler of the Zagwe dynasty. Yekuno Amlak claimed direct male line descent from the old Axumite royal house that the Zagwes had replaced on the throne. MenelikII, and later his daughter Zewditu, would be the last Ethiopian monarchs who could claim uninterrupted direct male descent from King Solomon andthe Queen of Sheeba (both Lij Iyasu and Emperor Haile Selassie I were in the female line, Iyasu through his mother Shewarega Menelik, and Haile Selassie through his paternal grandmother, Tenagnework Sahle Selassie). The male line, through the descendants of Menelik's cousin Dejazmatch Taye Gulilat, still existed, but had been pushed aside largely because of Menelik's personal distaste for this branch of his family.

The Solomonic Dynasty continued to rule Ethiopia with few interruptions until September, 1974, when the last emperor, Haile Selassie I, was deposed. The royal family is currently non-regnant. Members of the familyin Ethiopia at the time of the 1974 February revolution were imprisoned, some executed and others exiled. In 1976, ten great grandchildren of Emperor Haile Selassie were extracted from Ethiopia in an undertaking later detailed in a book by Jodie Collins titled " Code word : Catherine".

The women of the dynasty were released by the Duerg regime from prisonin 1989, and the men were released in 1990. Several members were then allowed to leave the country in mid-1990, and the rest were left in 1991 upon the fall of the Duerg regime. Many members of the Imperial family have since returned to live in Ethiopia in recent years.

Imperial Coat of Arms was adopted by Emperor Haile Selassie, and is currently held by his direct heirs in the male line. The arms are composedof an Imperial Throne flanked by two angels, one holding a sword and a pair of scales, the other holding the Imperial scepter. The throne is often shown with a Christian cross, a Star of David, and a crescent moon on it (representing the Christian, Jewish, and Islamic traditions). It is surmounted by a red mantle and an Imperial crown, and before the throne is the Lion of Judah symbol. The Lion of Judah by itself was at the center of the Ethiopian tri-color flag during the monarchy, and now servesas the chief symbol of the Ethiopian monarchist movement. The phrase "Moa Ambassa ze imnegede Yehuda", (Conquering Lion of the Tribe of Judah) appeared on the arms, and always preceded the Emperor's officialstyle and titles signaling the Emperor's submission to Christ, to whom thetitle belonged. It was an often repeated mistake that the title of "Lion of Judah" referred to the Emperor himself. The official Imperial Dynastic motto was "Ityopia tabetsih edewiha habe Igziabiher" (Ethiopia stretches her hands unto the Lord). Yohannes IV (Ge'ez ዮሐንስ ፬ኛ Yōfiānnis ዮሐንስ, Amharic Yōhānnis, also known by the English equivalent "John", 11 July 1837 – 10 March 1889), born Lij Kassay Mercha Ge'ez, was Emperor of Ethiopia from 1872 until his death.

Yohannes was born at Mai-beha a village then within the jurisdiction ofEnderta province. He was the son of Mercha, Shum (or "governor") of Tembien, and his wife Woizero (or "Dame") Silass Dimtsu (Amata Selassie), who was the daughter of Dejazmach (roughly equivalent to "Duke") Dimtsu Debbab of Enderta the nephew of the powerful Ras WoldeSelassie of Enderta. Yohannes could claim Solomonic blood through the line of his paternal grandmother Woizero Workewoha KaleKristoss of Adwa, who was the granddaughter of Ras Mikael Sehul, and his wife AsterIyasu, daughter of Empress Mentewab and her lover Melmal Iyasu.

Yohannes could also claim Solomonic descent more distantly through his father's Tembien family, also through a female link to the dynasty. AmataSelassie's father Dimtsu of Endarta belonged to the family which in late 18th and early 19th centuries had held overlordship of Tigray, and her mother descended from the aristocratic line of the Shums of Agame. It’s well known that Dejazmatch Kahssay Mercha, has collaborated with the British against Atse Tewodros II in 1867 to 68 to strengthen his bid for succession of the throne.

January 12, 1872: Dejazmatch Kassa Mercha known in his horsename as"Aba-Bezbiz" claims Solomonic blood through the line of his paternal grand-mother enthroned as Emperor Yohannes IV, after his victory over Emperor Tekle-Giorgis, Thewodros's immediate successor in 1872.

Side note: Yohannes VI coronated "Emperor, Conquering Lion of the Tribe of Judah, King of Tsion, King of kings of Ethiopia, Elect of God". He ruled Ethiopia from 1872 until his reign ended up on his death on the 9th of March, 1889. During his reign there have been made a signed treaty by Ethiopia (then Abyssinya) and the Great Britain on behalf of Anglo-Egypt on 3rd June, 1884 (the Hewitt treaty) wherein to recognise the king as "Emperor Yohannes VI" is "Neguse-Negest" Amharic meaning for "King of kings" of Ethiopia. Menelik the king of Shoa state, who later became Emperor of Ethiopia for example engaged in correspondence of a dubious nature with the Egyptians & the Mahidist forces against Yohannes IV whileYohannes IV was poised in hostile confrontation with them assiduously thefriendship of the Italian, needless of the warnings of Yohannes and undettered by the bloody engagements in the north. Starting as the best friends, Menelik II and the Italians later to end-up as the worst of enemies, it's also well known that a group of noblemen have also collaborated with the Italians against emperor Haile-Sellassie I, as politicalfoul play during the latter years of Italo-Ethiopian war. However, history and the role of the great Ethiopian Army-General, patriot and a national hero under Emperor Yohannes VI, was Ras Alula Iquebe, nicknamed "Aba Nega" played in defence of Ethiopia's northern borders. Ras Alula Equibe was a fierce defender of his country's borders, the founder of present Asmara and the last Governor-general of the Bahr-Negash Governorate until the Italian colonialists sneaked-in and tookover the territory of Baher-Negash in 1890 when he and Emperor Yohannes VI were away battling the Mahdist-Dervishes at the "the battle of Metema", externallyknown as "the battle of Gallabat" where he died in action at age of 51. Emperor Yohannes VI considered a martyr for the territorial integrity of Ethiopia. Ras Alula Engida "Wadi Qubi", was also the son of Engida Eqube,a farmer of modest origin, a renowned army-General and a politician under Emperor Yohannes IV and he was one of the important leaders of the Abbissinyan armies of the 19th century, was governor of Mereb- Melash & Midri-Bahri, the highland parts of present day Eritrea. He participated in many battles for the independence of present day Ethiopia,most importantly at Gundat, Gurae, Gudagudi which were fought with Egyptians who were tried to invade Ethiopia in various times of the 1870s.Egyptian forces who sought to control the entire source of the River-Nile, the two armies were met at Gundat on the morning of 16th November, 1975, the Egyptians were tricked into marching into a narrow and steep valley and were wiped-out by Ethiopian gunners surrounding the valley from the surrounding mountains, virtually the entire Egyptian force, alongwith its many officers of European and north American background, were killed, the news of this huge defeat was surpassed in Egypt for fear that itwould undermine the government of Khedive Ismail, and a new Egyptian force was assembled and sent to avenge the defeat at Gundat, the Egyptians were defeated again at the battle of Gurae on the 7th to 9th of March, 1876, where the Ethiopians were led again by the Emperor Yohannes IV himself and his loyal army general, known by Nom de-guere "Abba-Nega". Indeed, the Abbissinyan army led by the famous Ras Alula defeated againthe Italian army whos unsuccessfully marched to secure-control of the Abyssinyan highlands on the 26th of January, 1887, at the battle of "Dogali", southwest of the port of Massawa, in present day Eritrea. Ras Alula "Wadi-Qubi" was demonstrated his military skills where he routed allthe Anglo-Egyptian forces in battles of Gundat, Gurae, and Gudagudi thenMahdist forces at the "battle of Kufit", where he himself was wounded at the battle, as Governor of Mereb-Melash & Midri-Bahri, at present day Eritrea. Indeed the Abbissinyan army led by the famous Ras Alula defeated again the Italian army whos unsuccessfully marched to secure- control of the Abyssinyan highlands on the 26th of January, 1887, at the battle of "Dogali", southwest of the port of Massawa, in present day Eritrea. Ras Alula "Wadi-Qubi" was demonstrated his military skills where he routed all the Anglo-Egyptian forces in battles of Gundat & Gurae, and the Mahdist forces at the "battle of Kufit", where he himself was woundedat the battle, as Governor of Mereb-Melash & Midri-Bahri, at present day Eritrea. Mahdist forces of Ismael Pasha and Tawfiq Pasha had repeatedly tried to occupy Gondar in the 19th century. Emperor Yohannes IV then King of Christian Abyssinya, is better known for to have fought-back the Mahdist-Dervishes at present bordertown of Metema, which known in it's other mame as "the battle of Gallabat", on the 9th of March, 1889, had defeated the Mahdist invaders, but they turned back to defeat the Abyssiniyan army when the Emperor was shot-dead in action while fighting Mahdist forces, put-off his head-skull of the king to show-up at present day Khartoum. Emperor Yohannes IV considered a martyr onto territorial sovereignty of then Abbissinyan Christian kingdom, of course, the death of the Emperor at the "battle of Metema", opened the way for the Italians to steady advance from Red sea coastal areas as to occupy more districts previously held by the nobles of Tigrai, and the following events ultimately reduced the influence of Tigrean noblemen in the Ethiopian politics, taking advantage of this political disorder in Tigrai. Ras Mengesha Yohannes (1868 – 1906) was the "natural" son of Emperor Yohannes IV of Ethiopia, Ras of Tigrai, and, as a claimant of the Imperial throne, is often given the title of Leul. Ras Araya Selassie Yohannes was his older half brother. Prior to the Battle of Metemma, Mengesha Yohannes was considered to be a nephew of Emperor Yohannes IV. Duringthe battle, the Emperor was mortally wounded and it was on his death bedthat Mengesha Yohannes was acknowledged as his "natural" son and designated as his heir. This created something of a succession problem.

Fighting between various relatives of the slain Emperor split his camp andprevented Mengesha Yohannes from making a viable bid for the Imperial throne. Instead, the throne was assumed by King Menelik of Shoa. Ras Mengesha refused to submit to Menelik and later even flirted with joining the new Italian colony of Eritrea. He hoped that the Italians would supporthis rebellion against Emperor Menelik II. However, encroachments by the Italians into his native Tigrai, their previous enmity to his father YohannesVI, and recognition that the ultimate goal of the Italians was to conquer Ethiopia themselves, led Mengesha Yohannes to finally submit to Menelik II.

Menelik the king of Shoa state, later to become Emperor of Ethiopia engaged with correspondence of a dubious nature with the Egyptians & the Mahidist forces against Yohannes IV while Yohannes VI was poised in hostile confrontation with them assiduously the friendship of the Italian, needless of the warnings of Yohannes and undettered by the bloody engagements in the north. Starting as the best friends, Menelik II and theItalians later to end-up as the worst of enemies, it's also well known that a group of noblemen have also collaborated with the Italians against HaileSellassie I, as political maneuvering during latter years of Italo-Ethiopian war. Born on the 19th August, 1844, and born to be Sahle-Mariam, in Ankobar, a capital in the autonomous Ethiopian province of Shoa, his paternal grandfather, Sahle-

Selassie, was the first leader of Shoa-state tobecome a "Negus" (King), it was he who gave his grandson the Menellik. It is said that Sahle-Sellassie predicted that his grandson would grow to agreat man, a king who would restore Ethiopia's empire.

March 9, 1876: Egyptian forces who sought to control the entire source ofthe River-Nile, defeated by the the Abyssinyan forces (in 7th to 9th of March) led by the famous Ras Alula at the battles of Gundat and Gurae.
Ras Alula "Wadi-Qubi" was demonstrated his military skills where he routed all the Anglo-Egyptian forces in battles of Gundat & Gurae. The news of this huge defeat was surpassed in Egypt for fear that it would undermine the government of Khedive Ismail, and a new Egyptian forcewas assembled and sent to avenge the defeat at Gundat, the Egyptians were again defeated at the battle of Gurae on the 7th to 9th of March, 1876 for once and for all where the Ethiopians were led again by the Emperor Yohannes IV himself and his loyal army general, Ras Alula's, (nom de-guered Abba-Nega) armies of the 19th century and was described by Haggai Erlich as the greatest leader whom Abyssinia produced since the death of Emperor Tewodros II in 1868, and was referred to by Europeans as "the Garibaldi of Abyssinia". He participated inmany battles for the independence of Ethiopia, most importantly in Gundet, Gurae, Dogali, Seharti, and Adwa.

March 20, 1878: King Menelik of Shoa state: approached King Yohannes on his foot. He was carrying a rock on his neck and his face was down in the traditional form of submission. However, very aware of how precarioushis own position was, Yohannes IV recognized Menelik as "Negus of Shoa"and gave him numerous presents which included four cannons, several hundred modern Remington rifles, and ammunition for both.
Novembe 14, 1879: Prince Alemayehu Tewodros (23 April, 1861 to 14 November, 1879), the son of the late emperor tewodros was died at age 18 in Far Headingley, Leeds, England after six weeks of illness, despite themedical attentions of Dr. Clifford Allbutt of Leeds and other respected consultants.The funeral of Prince Alemayehu Tewodros took place on 21st November, 1879 in the presence of Cyril Ransome, Chancellor of the Exchequer Sir Stafford Northcote, General Sir Robert Napier, and Captain Tristram Speedy. A brass plaque in the nave of St. George's chapel commemorates him and bears the words "I was a stranger and ye took me in", but Alamayehu's body is buried in a brick vault outside the chapel.
April 29, 1883: King Menelik of Shoa state has married WoizaroTaitu Bituland lived in peace until his death in December, 1913.
In 1884: Abba-Jiffar II who was king of the Gibe-kingdom of Jimma,agreed to submit to the Menelik army of Shoa state.
December 1886: "Arsi Oromos resistance finally broke down by the Menelik II armies during the last campaigns between September to December of 1886, and the region then fell on to the hands of Menelik II armies led by his cousin Ras Dargie. In the final analysis it was the firearms of the invaders which won them the contest. It was only after considerable loss of life on both sides and then Arsi was finally annexed byKing Menelik armies led by Ras Dargie whos led the army of many thousands equipped with up-to-date firearms….In one battle alone on 6 September, 1886 over 12, 000 warriors were killed on both sides.

January 6, 1887: In “you either conquer or get conquered” mind, Atse Menelik conquered the bettle of Chelenko in about 90 minutes and fullycontrolled the whole Harrarghe. The "Battle of Chelenqo" led to the incorporation of the Harraris under Amir Abdullahi into the Emperor Menelik II of Ethiopia's growing empire based in Shoa. Emperor Menelik IIwas decisively defeated such proxy war led by the Harrari Amir Abdullahi.
January 26, 1887: Italia whose was captured the Red sea coastal areas and the port of Massawa defeated at the Battle of Dogali. The war was fought between the well equipped Italian army and the poorly equipped Ethiopian patriotic army led by the famous Ras Alula (Wadi Eqube) in Dogali near the port of Massawa, at present-day Cheste Eritrea (የ ዶጋሊ ድል 1879 ዓ ምተገ ኘ)

መብቱን ዮሐንስ ላሉላ ቢሰጠው
እንደ ቀትር እሳት ቱርክን ገላመጠዉ፡ ፡ አባ ነጋ አሉላ ካስመራ ቢነሳ
እንደ አንበሣ ሆኖ እሳት እያገሣ ቢቸግረው ጣሊያን አለ ፎርሣ ፎርሣጣሊያን በአገርህ አልሰማህ ምወሬ የበዝብዞች
አሽከር እነሞት አይፈሬ ዘለውጉብ ይላሉ እንደ ጎፈር አዉሬ አሉላ አባነጋ የደጋ ላይ ኮሶ
በጥላውያደክማል እንኳንስ ተቀምሶ ጣሊያን ሰሐጢላይ እግሩን ቢዘረጋበብረት ምጣዱ በሰሐጢ አደጋ አንገብግቦ
ቆላውአሉላ አባነጋ
ተውተመከር ጣሊያን ይሻላል ምክርሰሐጢላይ ሆነህ መሬት ብትቆፍር ጎላ ይሆንሐል ላንተው መቃብር፡ ፡ ይች አገር
ኢትዮጵያ የበዝብዝ አገር ምንምአትቃጣ እንደራስ ነብር

January 28, 1887: Makonnen Wolde Mikael Gudissa appointed Governor ofHarrarghe in the title of Dejazmatch.
March 10, 1889: Emperor Yohannes IV was killed in a war against thedervishes during the Battle of Gallabat (Metemma). With his dying breaths, Yohannes IV declared his natural son, Dejazmach Mengesha Yohannes, as his heir to the throne.
March 25, 1889: The Emperor and the Empress heard the sudden death ofEmperor Yohannes VI in a war at Metema while both are in Wutchalle (Wollo).
Side note: The Emperor and the Empress sorrowfully heard news of the sudden death in action of Emperor Yohannes VI in at war in Metema. Uponhearing of the news, Negus Menelik of Shoa immediately proclaimed himself “Nəgusä Nägäst of Ethiopia”. The succession now lay between Ras Mengesha Yohannes of Tigrai and Menelik II of Shoa. Menelik argued that while the family of Yohannes

IV claimed descent from King Solomon and the Queen of Sheeba through females of the dynasty, his own claim wasbased on uninterrupted direct male lineage which made the claims of theHouse of Shoa equal to those of the elder Gondar line of the dynasty. In the end, Menelik was able to obtain the allegiance of a large majority of the Ethiopian nobility.
April 3, 1889: Woizaro Mennen was born in Ambassel, Wollo. Woizaro Mennen was the daughter of Asfaw, the Jantirar of Ambassel, and WoizaroSihen Michael, half sister of the latter Lij Eyassu Mikael, a son by Shewarega Menelik, king of Shoa state.
May 2, 1889: Menelik II discussed the concept of a treaty known as the“Wuchale Agreement” with the Italians led by Marco Antonelli.
Side note;- Controversy soon emerged on the interpretation of article 17of the treaty. While the Amharic text reads that Menelik could, if he wished, call upon the services of the Italian authorities in his communications with other powers, the Italian version made this obligatory, thereby making Eritrea in effect a protectorate of Italy.
Emperor Menelik denounced it and demanded that the Italian version bechanged. Negotiations failed, so Menelik II renounced the treaty, leadingItaly to declare war and invade from Eritrea.
In July, 1889: Ras Gobena Dacche horsenamed as “Aba-Tiggu” had suddenly felt ill, and died after three days of treatment, buried at “Debre-Libanos monastry” just few months before the official coronation of Menelik II, whom he had served devotedly for so long.
Side note: Ras Gobena Dacche was one of the outstanding army generals of Menelik during the first reign of the emperor. Ras Gobena Dacche horsenamed as “Aba-Tiggu” was an ethnic-Oromo aristocrat who was known for coordinating a Shoan Oromo army to side with the central armyof Menelik, who later to become Emperor of Ethiopia. Ras Gobena Dacche had to incorporate more Oromo lands into the Ethiopian empire was passed away of natural sickness. He was one of the prominent architects who brought about a fiscal and military integration of the southand western provinces of Ethiopia under a centralized imperial control.
Gobena was born around 1821 of a noble family of Oromo in Aman, Wegda, in Shewa. He was a close relative of the Aba Mudda, a spiritual head of the Oromo. It is not clear when exactly he started his career, buthe came into the picture when he rebelled against Theodros, at a time when the later was trying to bring Shewa under imperial control. When Menelik escaped from Meqedela and returned to Shewa, Gobena was oneof the nobles who welcomed him and joined his service. Gobena had demonstrated his bravery, leadership and war tactic when he rebelled against Theodros, and his appointee in Shewa. In the court of Menelik hewas given the office of Agafari, master of the ceremonies, who received and introduced guests to Menelik. Usually this office was given to a trusted person. Soon after his appointment, Agafari Gobena was orderedto pacify a rebellion in Meskala, southern Wollo, in which he succeeded. (Nadew, Y{-Ras Gobena Tarik, a manuscript in private hands, p. 3.

Hereafter referred as Nadew). He established his Ketema (military camp) at Bisi and began to "straighten out" (Hager-Maquenat), all lands up to Selale. He continued to conquer, that was Hager Maknat, in the regions ofMetta, Mecha, Ada, Cebo, Gulele and Yeka, the last two regions are now inthe city zone of Addis Ababa. To boost his moral and power, Menelik gave him the title of Dejazmach. At that time Menelik had only two Dejazmach (and no Ras), the other person who was given the title of Dejazmach was,Menelik's paternal uncle, Darge. Dejazmach Darge was one of the four sons of king Sahle Selasie of Shewa, a potential claimer to the throne of Shewa. As title holder of Dejazmach, Gobena had the right to appoint his military officers with a rank of Fitawrari, and he gave this title to his best military officers and left them in charge of continuing their expansion.

Dejazmach Gobena himself proceeded to get the submission of the Balabats in the regions beyond Awash river, just to mention, Dendi Maru,Weliso, Chebo, Dulal, Amya, Nono, Sodo, Agemge, Qebene, Enemor. When Menelik got the title as King of Shewa, confered by Emperor Yohannes IV in 1878, he gave a rich feast at his town, Liche, and honoured Degazmach Gobena with the title of Ras, thus enhancing furtherhis popularity (the other holder of the title of Ras was Dejazmach Darge). Ras Gobena continued his campaign in the remaining regions in Gudru, Mecha, Jebat and Gurage. He crossed the Gibe river and brought the territories in the remote south under cetral control system. King Tekle- Haimanot of Gojjam had also sent his general, Ras Deresu, who crossed Abay and campaigned in the regions of Gudru, Leqa, part of Wellega. The Shewans and the Gojjame aristocrats were rivals in control of the regions south of Abay. In their advance into the south, the troops of Ras Deresu encountered the force of Ras Gobena that was approaching from north.

Ras Gobena sent a message to Ras Deresu, to withdraw from the region leaving behind the rich ivory and other items collected. Ras Deresu complied, but King Tekle Haimanot of Gojjam was infuriated and sent a message to Menelik to settle the problem in a battle, known as the Battle of Embabo. The battle took place in 1881, and King Tekle Haimanot was defeated. During this battle, Ras Gobena employed an out manoeuvre tactic and attacked behind the rear position, which led into the Gojame army into confusion and disarray. (On the background and event of this battle, see Caulk, R. "Territorial Competition and the Battle of Embabo", inJournal of Ethiopian Studies, IX, 2.) Once the power of the Gojjam aristocrats was removed from the scene, Ras Gobena continued his campagn in Cala, Lago Horo, Leqa, Neqemt and Sayo, some of which had submitted to Ras Deresu. In 1883, he continued his campagn in the direction of Illubabor until Gimira. Following the religious agreement among the aristocracy of Ethiopia in 1878, known as the Council of Boru Meda, Ras Gobena was ordred to establish churches in the regions where he received submission. To this effect, he gave an order to the Meslene and district governors, and he consulted with his wife, Weyzero Ayelech, who, accordingly, founded fourty one churches (See Nadew, 8-9). In 1886, Menelik consulted Ras Gobena and appointed governors along with central troops over the vast areas "straigten out" (Y! Qena Hagar) by the later. (See, Bairu Tafla, 1987, Asme Giorgis and His work: History of the Galla and the Kingdom of Shewa. p. 757). Menelik then marched in to Arsiin which Ras Gobena participated. When Menelik set out to march to Hararin 1887, Ras gobena was entrusted guarding the town of Entoto, and he mobilized his Wellega troops and camped near Entoto. When Menelik returned he gave him a warm welcome. Soon after, Ras Gobena, together with Fitawrari Habte Giorgis marched in to the region of Gurage to suppress a rebellion instigated by a leader, who declared Jihad. They succeeded in suppressing the rebellion and Ras Gobena returned into Entoto. In 1889, the governors on the boarder of Wellega wrote a letter toRas Gobena, that they were attacked by the Mahdist of Sudan, the letter was shown to king Menelik, and Ras Gobena left Entoto, on September 15, crossed Gibe river on the 26th, mobilised his troops and engaged war against the Mahdist on October 14. He defeated them and thus checked their advance. While in Wellega he received a letter from King Menelik informing him the intention of Emperor Yohannes to invade Shewa. Ras Gobena advanced with his troops to Shewa, and upon consultation he wasgiven the responsibility of guarding a route coming from Abay. While he was there, Ras Gobena received a letter from Menelik notifying him a rebellion once again in the Gurage region. He returned with his army to Entoto and the Ras accepted the order to march to Gurage region. Menelikthen gave Ras Gobena as present his horse, named “Raswerq Ambaye”, and Gasha (shield) decorated with gold. No sooner had he received the prize, Ras Gobena left for Gurage. According to the tradition, Ras Gobena was expected to hold a banquet at his house for his followers marking the prize award, but he did not. Instead, Ras Gobena marched straight to Gurage region and crushed the resistance there and sent a message of congratulation to King Menelik. Ras Gobena heard the death of Emperor Yohannes while in campaign, he was deeply touched and he ordered his soldiers to fire into the air. When Menelik marched north to get the submission of the northern nobles after the death of Emperor Yohannes, Ras Gobena was as usual entrusted to guard the town. One day, after he returned home, passing the whole day in receiving appeals from the people. Meantime Ethiopians who advocate the Ethiopian unity and opposeethno-centricism often glorify the great Ras Gobena Dacche as an Ethiopian hero and as a unifying figure. It’s to be recalled that 1886 to 1899 about 87 military campaigns were undertook by Emperor Menelik II and his unionist army in a territorial expansion mission. And that’s well known many Oromos from Aanole and Calanqo were victimed whose women's breasts were cut, children adults burnt alive; men mutilated by the emperor's unionist army.

October 1, 1889: Ras Makonnen Wolde Mikael Gudissa led a delegation toItalia to sign for 'Wutchalle Agreement 2, met with several Italian dignitaries.

Side note: The renowned warior Ras Makonnen Wolde Mikael Gudissa led a delegation to Italia to sign for 'Wutchalle Agreement 2' Couple of years later Emperor Menelik II expands his territorial holds so far to the near south and the far-south and conquered the kingdom of Kullo and Kaffa. Healso expanded southwest, and the southeast to decicively control, soldify, and enforce surrender all local kingdoms and chiefdoms of the time, by imposing the Orthodox faith as a state religion and Amharic as as conquering language. Menelik II, not only did he wisely manage to forge the political unity and centrainty, but he also brought the imperial powerhouse to the center (Shewa). The factor of Ras Makonnen Wolde Mikael Gudissa had a significan part during the expansion period. Taffari Makonnen the future focal person in the Ethiopian politics but not to be a future prince was born from the renowned warrior Ras-Makonnen Woldemichael Guddisa (Aba-Kagnew), the "Shum" (Governor) of Harrar by Woizaro Yeshimebet Aba-Jiffar in Ejersa Goro of Jarso sub-district near the eastern city of Harrar.

October 11, 1889: The Italian Chief Minister Crispi officially notifies the United States and other 12 European nations in a written letter "Abyssinyais under control of the great Italian empire".

November 3, 1889: King Menelik of Shoa state crowned as Nəgusä Nägäst(Emperor of Ethiopia) in the hands of Abuna Matheos before a glittering crowd of dignitaries and clergy at a ceremony held at Intoto Mariam.

Emperor Menelik II GCB, GCMG, (Ge'ez ምኒ ልክ) baptized as Sahle Maryam (17 August 1844 – 12 December 1913), was Negus of Shoa (1866–89), later Nəgusä Nägäst of Ethiopia from 1889 to his death. At the height of his internal power and external prestige, the process of territorial expansion and creation of the modern empire-state had been completed by 189 Ethiopia was transformed under "Nəgusä Nägäst Menelik": the major signposts of modernization were put in place. Externally, his victoryover the Italians had earned him great fame: following Adwa, recognition of Ethiopia's independence by external powers was expressed in terms of diplomatic representation at the court of Menelik and delineation of Ethiopia's boundaries with the adjacent colonies. Menelik II is considered an African icon and one of the most powerful black people in history. King Menelik of Shoa state assumed power and coronated as "Neguse-Negest Menelik II Emperor of Ethiopia", upon the death of Emperor Yohannes IV of Ethiopia who fought against the Mahdists in "Battle of Matamma" sometimes refered as the "Battle of Galabat". Menelik was consecrated and crowned as Nəgusä Nägäst before a glittering crowd of dignitaries andclegy. He was crowned by Abuna Mattewos, Bishop of Shoa, at the Churchof St. Mary on Mt. Entoto. The newly consecrated and crowned Nəgusä Nägäst Menelik II quickly toured the north in force. He received the submission of the local officials in Lasta, Yejju, Gojjam, Wollo, and Begemder. He then fully brought the political power-house to the center by succeeding Yohannes VI, as well he expanded his rule to the south, southwest, and the southeast to firmly control and surrender the tribal kingdoms and chiefdoms imposing the Coptic-Orthodox religion as conquering state-religion, and the Amharic language as dominant dialect.. Excluding local governors, the emperor structures the government comprising of, Affe-Negus who oversights the whole Judiciary process (supreme court), Tsaahafi-Taezaz who holds the official Seal (emblem) orchannels orders on behalf of the emperor, Ligaba, who executes day to day government affairs, and Tor-Abegaz, who oversees the armed troops,

Menelik II expands his territorial holds so far to the south and far-south and conquered the kingdom of Kullo. He also expanded southwest, and the southeast to decicively control, soldify, and enforce surrender all local kingdoms and chiefdoms of the time, by imposing Orthodox faith as state-religion, and Amharic as conquering language. Menelik II, not only did he wisely manage to forge the political unity and centrainty, but he also brought the imperial powerhouse to the center (Shoa).

It’s widely believed that it was Emperor Menelik II, who exactly inherited the Imperial idea of Emperor (Atse) Thewodros II and the tolerance of his predecessor Yohannes VI, whose policy in this regard was crowned with relatively greater success. Meantime, Menelik horsenamed as Aba-Dagnewsigns a bilateral friendship treaty with Italy at Wutchale which Italy interpretes as giving it a protectorate over Abyssinya, he rejects this interpretation, later renounces the treaty and repayes a loan. In a couple of months, Dejazmatch Makonnen Wold-Micheal led the Ethiopian delegation to Italia. Later this time, the Italians continued to extend to thewest not only around Teseney and Agordat, but also around Adwa, unknown to Emperor Menelik II, the Italian version of the treaty had language-making Ethiopia, a protectorate of Italia, and the Italian actions were in preparation for its enforcement on his empire and making it a colony upon then "Berlin agreement of scrambling for Africa". When Emperor Menelik II learned of this treachery, he renounced the treaty which led to the first Italo-Abyssinyan war, later known to be the "battle of Adwa", and as the bitter news spreads through Ethiopia the major nobility and military figures, including Ras Alula of Tigrai, the proudful Army-General, who devoted himself to defend northern and northwestern borders of Abyssinya against occupants unanimously joined him. The conflict has its climax at the battle of Adwa on 1st of March, 1896, which gave official official recognition to Italian possession of all of the lands the Italians were occupied, and later the defeat of Italy at the battle Adwa at the hands of Emperor Menelik II.

In 1890: A year after his coronation as Emperor Menelik II, used a monogram the Ge-ez letter meh (the first letter of his name) surmounted with a Crown as personal emblem. Emperor Menelik's consort, Empress Taitu's clever monogram was the letter Ta surrounded by sun rays as her emblem. Her name Taitu when translated means "the Sun" and she had the additional honorific title of "Berhan ze Ityopia" or "Light of Ethiopia" so the sun rays played on those connections.It has to be recalled that MOA-Anbessa was recognized as the official national seal of Imperial regimes since emperor Adiam Seged (1674 to 1698), who has initiated it first in the late 17th century. It was renewed by Menelik II to use it as national coat of arms until the desposition of the last imperial dynasty in September, 1974.

In 1890: Emperor (Atse) Menelik II has appointed Alequa Guebre-Hannawho was born in 1822 in Nabaga-Giorgis of Fogera locality in Gondar theformer famous critic and satire as royal chatter.

Side note: Alequa Guebre-Hanna, a lay person of religious learnings of theEthiopian Orthodox Church (EOC) and a renowned oral tradition"Quene" appointed as a royal chatter of king Menelik. Aleqa Guebre-Hanna (flourished late 19th century) was a dabtara (a lay person of religious learning) of the Ethiopian Church, renowned in Amharic oral tradition for his "quick and biting wit." He was a master of the genre of Amharic poetryknown as qene, as well as introducing a new style of ceremonial dancing to the Ethiopian Church. Guebre-Hanna was born in Fogera, a district on the eastern shore of Lake-Tana, and his interest in religious learning brought him to the city of Gondar towards the end of the Zemene Mesafint, where he became a teacher at the Church of Ba'eta Maryam in the city and eventually its aleqa(head). Alequa Guebre-Hanna, had been served under emperor Tewodros II as law jurist and to rewrite the Fitha-Negest, Kibre-Negest, and Siratte- Negest equivalent to a constitution. “Alequa” literally meaning for “Churchcleric”, Alequa Guebre-Hanna who had known for his Comedian and social-criticizer of his time also known as “Aristofanus of Ethiopia”. He waspreviously served as Lique-Kahin (Guebez) meaning for intellectual of the elite Orthodox Church. He was known and well accepted for his social- criticizing by then emperors Tewodros II, Yohannes IV, and Menelik II.

January 29, 1890: Italian troops under General Aurora captures the townsof Adwa and Axum in the highlands.

In May 1891: In the presence of the emperor, the Italians led by SignorMarco Antonelli signed the 'Wutchalle Agreement'

July 23, 1892: Taffari Makonnen the future focal person in the Ethiopian politics but not to be a future prince was born from the renowned warriorRas-Makonnen Woldemichael Guddisa (Aba-Kagnew), the "Shum” (Governor) of Harrar by Woizaro Yeshimebet Aba-Jiffar in Ejersa Goro of Jarso sub-district , near the eastern city of Harrar, some 572 km from Addis Ababa.

Side note: As many say a boy was born, but not to be a prince, he later toserve in titular governorships of Selale, Gondar and Sidamo starting from the year 1906 until 1917. His father, Ras Makonnen Woldemichael Gudissa like Emperor Menelik was a grandson of King Sahle-Selassie Neguse-Shoa who reigned from 1813 to 1947, the founder of the Shoan monarchy of central Ethiopia. Ras Makonnen was served as senior Army-general in the latter Italo-Ethiopian war, playing a key role at the "battleof Adwa".

In 1892, Twenty-five-year-old Woizero Shewaregga Menelik was marriedfor a second time to forty-two-year-old Ras Mikael of Wollo. They produced two children, a daughter Woizero Zenebe-work, and Menelik's eventual successor, Lij Iyasu Mikael.

February 11, 1893: Emperor Menelik announces that the "WutchalleAgreement" is invalid.

June 2, 1894: Leul Ras Mengesha Yohannes the son of late emperor Yohannes II and his three major lieutenants went to the new capital at Addis Ababa. Within the newly constructed reception hall of the Grand Palace, the Emperor Menelik II awaited them. He was seated on his thronewith a large crown on his head. Ras Mengesha Yohannes and his lieutenants each carried a rock of submission on their shoulder. They approached, prostrated themselves, and asked for forgiveness. The Emperor (Atse) Menelik simply declared them pardone. Ras Mengesha Yohannes was the "natural" son of Johannes IV. Because of his descent, Leul Ras Mengesha Yohannes was a rival to Emperor Menelik II, who he had risen from rule of Shewa Province to become the Emperor on Yohannes' death.

December 19, 1894: Bahta Hagos aka "Bahta Segeneiti" was at a Dejezmatch title in the Abyssinian resistance against colonialism before the battle of Adwa. He was born in the mid-19th century in the town of Segeneiti in Akele Guzay sub-Region and was killed in the Battle of Halaiagainst the Italian Colonial Army.In 1894: The Berlin Conference of the European Imperial powers includingdelegates of King Menelik II, whos nationalist armies were considered then black-African power, had been convened upon the official call of KingLeopold II of Belgium to carve-out colonial territories in Africa.

Side note;- It was called the "scramble for Africa", fourteen European andother countries including the U.S., “G-14” of the era held a land grab conference known as “scramble for Africa” termed as “Save Africa, the Dark Continent” in Berlin. The publicity cover for the conference was the liberation of Africa from the slave trade and the need to undertake a civilizing mission. To that end, the Berlin Conference passed hollow resolutions. But the real agenda was to carve up Africa between the European powers peacefully and without the need for internecine imperialistic wars. The Scramble for Africa gave Britain a nice slice of Africa stretching from Cape-to-Cairo. France gobbled up much of westernAfrica. King Leopold II of Belgium took personal possession of The Congo.

Portugal grabbed Mozambique, Angola, Guinea-Bissau, Capeverdes, and the Sao Tome & Principe islets. Accordingly the imperialist Italia snagged,Libya, Somalia, designed to control the Red sea coast by occupying first the port of Massawa and it’s surrounding areas, laid claim to parts of Ethiopia, the seizures made by the Italians at this time ultimately resultedin the creation of the "colony of Eritrea". Then the Italian signor Conti- Antonneli, who represented his country in Ethiopia, hastened to the “Wutchale agreement" where he negotiated a treaty with Menelik II, a treaty in which a few months later, they used to declare Eritrea, as their colony.

In 1894 Emperor Menelik granted a concession for the building of arailway to his capital from then French overseas territory of port ofDjibouti .

Side note;- The Emperor, alarmed by a claim made by France in 1902 to the control of the line in Ethiopian territory, he stopped for four years theextension of the railway beyond Dire Dawa. When in 1906 France, the United Kingdom and Italy came to an agreement on the subject, grantingcontrol to a joint venture corporation, Menelik officially reiterated his full sovereign rights over the whole of his empire. The “Imperial Railway Company of Ethiopia” often refered to by its French name "Compagne Imperiale Des Chemins de Fer Ethiopiens" a semi-private firm founded tobuild and operate a railway across eastern Ethiopia from Addis Ababa to the port of Djibouti, in what was at the time French Somaliland founded. The single track 781 km which has a 1, 000 mm (a 3ft 3/3") gauge, mostof it on the Ethiopian territory, and about 100 km inside Djibouti.

In early 1895: The Italians had had their eyes on Ethiopia, or Abyssinia,(as it was called) however; Italy in preparation for war with Ethiopia in two directions, one from the so-called Italian territory of Eritrea, and theother the Italian-Somaliland in the southeast.

Side note;- Imperialist Italia designed, took control of the Red sea coastalareas, by occupying first the port of Massawa and surrounding areas, the seizures made by the Italians at this time ultimately resulted in the creation of the "colony of Eritrea". Then the Italian signor Conti-Antonneli,who represented his country in Ethiopia hastened to the "Wutchale agreement" where he negotiated a treaty with Menelik II, a treaty in which a few months later, they used to declare Eritrea, as their colony.

Meantime, Menelik II expanded to the near-south and conquered the kingdom of Wolamo, the present Wolayta. Walayta conquered by MenelikII expansionist armies and incorporated into Ethiopia. King (Kawo) Tona (died in the next year) the last king of Welayta, was defeated, and Welayta was then incorporated into the Ethiopian Empire'

The conqueror and the conquered:

Atsé Menelik and Kawo (King) Tona of Welayta. The dethroned Kawo (King) Tona, the last king of Welayta, was defeated and Welayta conquered in 1896. Welayta was then incorporated into the Ethiopian Empire. However, Welayta had a form of self-administrative status andwas ruled by Governors directly accountable to the king until the fall ofEmperor Haile Selassie in September 1974.

Wolayta (also spelled Wolaitta) (Ethiopic: ወላይታ Wolaytta) is the name ofan ethnic group and its former kingdom, located in southern Ethiopia.

Their language, Wolaytta, belongs to the Omotic branch of the Afro-Asiaticlanguage family. Wolayta is one of the 13 Zonal Administrations in the Southern Nations, Nationalities and Peoples Region (SNNPR), Wolayita is named for the Welayta people, whose homeland lies in this Zone. Wolayitais bordered on the south by Gamo Gofa, on the west by the Omo River which separates it from Dawro, on the northwest by Kembata Tembaro, on the north by Hadiya, on the northeast by the Oromia Region, on the east by the Bilate River which separates it from Sidama, and on the south east by the Lake Abaya which separates it from Oromia Region. The administrative center of Wolayita is Sodo. Despite their small population, Wolayta people have widely influenced national music, dance and cuisine in Ethiopia. The people of Wolayta have a rich history. Wolaytas are known for their patriotism, rich culture and modern music. The people of Wolayta had their own kingdom for thousands of years with kings (called "Kawo") and a monarchical administration. The earlier name of the kingdom was "The Famous Kingdom of Damot" - this included the south, south east, south west and part of the central region of the present Ethiopia. The famous King of this Kingdom was King (Kawo) Motolomi.

After the defeat which overcame the northern part of its territory the kingdom was reduced to its present size and the name became the Kingdom of Wolayta. It remained thus for hundreds of years until the expansion of Emperor Menelik II into the regions south of Shoa during theearly 1890s. The war of conquest has been described by historians "one ofthe bloodiest campaigns of the whole period of expansion", and Wolayta oral tradition holds that 118,000 Welayta and 90,000 Shoan troops died inthe fighting. However, Welayta had a form of self-administrative status and was ruled by Governors directly accountable to the king until the fall of Emperor Haile Selassie I in September, 1974. The Duerg afterwards restructured the country and included Welayta as a part of the province ofSidamo.

September 17, 1895: Emperor Menelik II declares an emergency statement and announces preparation for the inevitable war with Italians.The Emperor confered with local governors and troop commanders (Tor Abegazes) at Intoto on how to fight back the invaders. And orders a totalmobilization of local forces to join the war urgently until mid-October in Wara-Ilou (Wollo).
October 9, 1895: The Emperor alerted by the Italians move, purchased about 70, 000 to 100,000 rifles with over 5 million bullets from Russia andFrance that's imported through the port of Djibouti.
In mid-October, 1895: Italian troops led by General Baldisera have arrivedin port city of Massawa.
October 28, 1895: After 18 days of tiresome trip, the emperor and the empress have joined the combined national army at Wara-Ilou (Wollo).
In early December, 1895: Local troops known as then 'Neftagnas' under Basha Habta-Giorgis Dinagde (born c. 1944 in Jibat & Mecha), the futuredefence minister paraded infront of the emperor to join the nationalist army to defend the invading Italian troops.
December 27, 1895: The first incursion with the Italians at Imba-Alagefront started.
January 6 to 19, 1896: The second incursion with the Italians at Mequelefront started.
January 20, 1896: Italian troops under General Galiano surrendered forarmed troops under Ras Makonnen Wolde Mikael.
February 3 , 1896: Eyassu born to be Kifle Yaqub born in Tanta of Wara- Himanou by Woizaro Shawarega Menelik and Ras Mohammed Ali later RasMichael, the king of Wollo. Children by Woizaro Shawarega and Ras Mohammed Ali later Ras Michael of Wollo were, son Eyassu and daughter Zanaba-worq.
February 28, 1896: The third war known as 'the Adwa battle front'started.
Side note: During the War, two army generals namely Arimondi and Dabormida have been killed. Reported about 13, 000 Italian soldiers to have been killed. General Albertoni surrenders, about 700 infantry soldierswere held prisoners of war. At the Ethiopian side: over 20, 000 men were died in action, over 7, 000 injured. After defeating the Italians at Amba Alage and Mekele, Menelik inflicted an even greater defeat on the Italians at Adwa once again forcing them to capitulate.
Achieving the unachievable: Menelik and Glory of the 'Battle of Adwa': Menelik had signed the Treaty of Wutchale with Italy in May 1889 in whichItaly would recognize Ethiopia's sovereignty so long as Italy could control an area north of Ethiopia (part of modern Eritrea). In return Italy was to provide Menelik with arms and support him as emperor. The Italians usedthe time between the signing of the treaty and its ratification by the Italian government to further expand their territorial claims. This conflict erupted in the battle of Adwa on 1 March 1896 in which Italy's colonial forces were defeated by the Ethiopians. The Great Ethiopian Famine known as "Hidar beshita" of 1888 to 1892 cost Abyssinia roughly one-thirdof its population.

GUZO ADW

March 2, 1896: Since the 1880's, the Italians had had their eyes on Ethiopia, or Abyssinia, (as it was called) however; Emperor Menelik'sforces decisively deflected their attempts at colonization
April 12, 1896: Emperor Menelik declares the invader Italia is defeated ata battle in Adwa, Abyssinya is fully liberated, but he held the expansionistItalia accountable for damage followed.
Side note: . The Battle of Adwa of March, 1896 and its victory brought Ethiopia to international attention. Europe for the first time acknowledgedan African nation that had resisted and defeated an European power.
While claiming the throne against Mengesha Yohannes,the son of Yohannes VI Menelik reached at Wuchale (Uccialli in Italian) in Wollo province a treaty with Italy, putting the northern province of Eritrea temporarily under the Italian protection. Most of the highlands of Kabassa of this province was part of Abyssinian kingdoms for hundreds of years under the title of Medri-Bahri (Land of the Sea), consisting of the districts of Hamassien, Akele-Guzay, and Seraye. It was also referred to as Merab Melash, meaning the "Land Beyond the River". The river was the boundarythat separated the two northern Abyssinian provinces; Medri-Bahri and Tigrai.
June 12, 1896: After eight months engaged with Adwa war efforts, theemperor arrived in Addis Ababa (then Intoto to the official seat) in a victorious spirit.
Updates: A treaty which replaces 'Wutchalle agreement' to sign at AddisAbaba recognizing the absolute sovereign independence of Ethiopia.
Menelik II considered father of modern Ethiopia.The Italians were admitted fully ousted again by Menellik II and his nationalist army whos gathered from all corners of Ethiopia to fight the war at the "Battle of Adwa". The jubilant emperor Menellik II, unifier of the nation, who had just overwhelmed the Italians at Adwa was known for his carrot & sticksdiplomacy among the Imperial powers of the time, Great Britain, France,Italy, and of course the Abyssinyan empire, as black-African power, he had the wisdom to concede then part of his country (Eritrea) to save thefar larger part (what is now Ethiopia minus - Eritrea) Menellik II considered a descendant of King Solomon, who defeated the Italian colonial army and prevented Ethiopia from becoming a European colony.He also modernised his country.
August 23, 1896: The Itallians officially announced the 'Agreement ofWutchalle' is invalid.
Updates: Menelik II was the emperor of Ethiopia who, led his army to victory over Italian armies at the "Battle of Adwa", and the fact that they were defeated by an African army was a shock at the time, it's a victory for Africa at a time when the story is one of unrelenting setback and defeat,", as historians, because a black army defeated a white army, and afterwards, many white European officers and soldiers were held prisonersof war of black Africans, that's the reverse of the usual situation at the time. Menellik II was considered a descendant of King Solomon, defeated the Italian colonial army and prevented Ethiopia from becoming a European colony. Emperor Menelik II officially accepted the Mereb boundary after his victory over the Italians. Itally recognised his kingship over Ethiopia to carry out an exchange of prisoners of war. The jubilant emperor Menellik II, unifier of the nation, who had just overwhelmed the Italians at Adwa was known for his carrot & sticks diplomacy among the Imperial powers of the time, Great Britain, France, Italy, and of course theAbyssinyan empire, as then black-African power, he had the wisdom to concede then part of his country (Eritrea) to save the far larger part (whatis now Ethiopia minus - Eritrea). Kabassans, (the highlanders) in present Eritrea still felt some attachment to the rest of Ethiopia were greatly disappointed and felt betrayed. They felt to understand that Menelik II had correctly perceived that any attempt to drive-out the Italians from Eritrea would not have been tolerated by other European colonial powers and would have resulted into an ultimate defeat. Please readers take your note, "Kabassa" is used mainly for the people of the central highland of Eritrea. Menelik II ruled Abyssinya further (now Ethiopia) from 1989 to 1913, progressive & benevolent monarch who was keen sighted to modernize his country in the followed years, then Abyssinyan empire was prospered under his reign, the more, he had no any registered personal property or fixed assets in his name or members of his family, saying thathe owes only "the great nation of Ethiopia". The jubilant emperor Menellik II, unifier of the nation, who had just overwhelmed the Italians at Adwa was known for his carrot & sticks diplomacy among the Imperial powers ofthe time, Great Britain, France, Italy, and of course the Abyssinyan empire, as black-African power, he had the wisdom to concede then part of his country (Eritrea) to save the far larger part (what is now Ethiopia minus - Eritrea) Menellik II considered a descendant of King Solomon, defeated the Italian colonial army and prevented Ethiopia from becoming a European colony. He also modernized his country, He ruled Abyssinya (now Ethiopia) from 1989 to 1913, progressive & benevolent monarch who was keen sighted to modernize his country, then Abyssinyan empire was prospered under his reign, the more, saying he owes a great nation ofEthiopia, he had no any registered personal property or fixed assets in his name or members of the royal family, his modernization programs were tobe continued by his daughter who enthroned from 1916 until her death in April, 1930.

September 17, 1896: Emperor Minilik wrote to the Roman Pop about the Prisoners ofWar in custody of the Ethiopian government as well as Italy Government during the Ethio-Italian war on March 1888 E.C

October 26, 1896: A new part of ‘Wutchalle agreement’ written with ninesub-articles which replaces the previous Wutchalle agreement signed.

Italia has payed about 10 million Lire as compensation.

April 9, 1897: Emperor Menelik II as part of his embrace for European modernization, imported Cinema projector to introduce Cinema in Ethiopia. As to launch a Cinema for the first time with the help of foreigners living at home, the emperor attends at a launching ceremony towatch the "crucification" of Jesus Christ on the day of "Good Friday" together with the nobility.

Dejazmatch Balcha Safo was appointed Shum (Governor) of Sidamo.

September 9, 1897: Menelik II expanded f to the far-south and conqueredKaffa.Ethiopia was almost completely unexplored in that direction. Only three Europeans had up until then been on that side of the Didessa River:The Armies of Menelik II at the end of 1897 events were in the making in Africa which were destined to be of the greatest importance for its future

January 1, 1898: Atse Menelik Expansion To The South: From Entoto toRiver Baro, he to the battle, and participants try their best to discover and follow the same route the fighters used over a century ago. "We consider this a way of rediscovering the truth about the battle and learning from it," explains Yared. "The route from Wukroto Enticho, which is 90 kilometres long, is one of the actual routes we discovered during our first trip."

Places like Angolela—located 10 kilometres away from Debre Brihan, where Emperor Menelik II was born—and Koremash in Northern Shewa (used to store weapons during the battle) are visited by travellers.

After exploring such places, the journey organisers also try to preserve historical sites by talking with officials in the area. For instance, Koremash reopened for visitors after the organisers informed officials about the site's significance, while the area where Emperor Menelik II was raised is now fenced.

A health centre built in honour of Emperor Menelik II has now started to give service, while Debre Birhan University has named one of its campuses after the Emperor. "These things were achieved through the efforts of travellers and organisers," says Yared.

Another significant accomplishment of Guzo Adwa is opening a museum where the Italians built their fortress in Mekelle town. "Skeletons of Ethiopian soldiers were visible in the area," Biruk remembers. "While the Italian government collected the remains of its soldiers, it was painful to see the scattered remains of Ethiopian soldiers."

But things are now changing. Debre Birhan University took action immediately, collected the skeletons, and put them in a museum constructed after receiving a letter from Guzo Adwa organisers about the situation. "We appreciate the management of the University for their Immediate Action," says Yared. Organisers of the journey are also planning to rehabilitate the spring Ethiopian soldiers blocked to cut access to water for the Italians during the time.

Organisers believe that Adwa still has many secrets to disclose, and the journey will help unlock some of them by opening an opportunity for public exploration, discussion, and debate. Since the idea of being Ethiopian brought the fighters at Adwa together, modern Ethiopians, who face all the ills that come with a divisive system, can learn a great deal from the battle and save the values this country once held. EBR conquered all the far-south including Kaffa and Gimira.

ጣሊያንንም አድዋ ላይ አሸነፉ። ምኒልክ ሁሉን አስገበሩ። አንድ ስጋት ብቻ ቀረ ከወደ ደቡባዊ ከፍታዎች የመሸገ ባላንጣ። ከአርሲ ዘመቻ በፊት ምኒልክን በአንድራቻ ደጅ ያስጠና ጌታ። የኻሀ ጀግና መጠሪያ ስም ጭኔ ቶ ጋሊቶ ሲሆን የዙፋን ስማቸው ካፊ አቲዮ ጋኬ ሻረቾ (አጼ ጋኪ ሻረቾ) የካፋ ንጉሰ ነገስት ነው። ሕዝቡ ዝወትር በፍቅርና በአክብሮት የሚጠራቸውግን ታተኖ ጭኒ እያለ ነበር። የካፋና የሞቻ ሕዝብ በነገስታት መሪነት ቢያንስ ሶስት ምዕተ ዓመታት ወረራን በመከላከል የብሔር ሀልውናውን አስከብሮ እነሆ ዛሬ የጎንጋ ሕዝብ ታሪክና ባህል ዋና አንጸባራቂ ምልክት ሆኖ ይገኛል። በተለይ የመጨረሻዎቹ ሶስት የካፋ ነገስታት፤

አጼ ካዮ ሻረቾ (ኪምዩሮ) እ.ኤ.አ. 1854 – 1870 አጼ ጋሊ ሻረቾ (ታተኖ ጋሊ) እ.ኤ.አ. 1870 – 1890 አጼ ጋኪ ሻረቾ (ታተኖ ጭን) እ.ኤ.አ. 1890 – 1897
የምኒልክን የግዛት መስፋፋት ዘመቻ መከላከል ዋና ወታደራዊና ፖለቲካዊ ተግባራቸውአድርገውቆይተዋል። የጎጃሙን የንጉስ ተክለ ሀይማኖትንና የራስ ደርሶን ሙከራ ሳይጨምር ከምኒልክ የመጨረሻ የካፋ ዘመቻ ጋር ከአራት መራራ ጦርነት በኋላ ነበር ጥንታዊውየካፋ መንግስት የተደፈረውና ዝነኛውየቡሸሼ ሜንጀ ስርወ መንግስት (ዳይናስቲ) የፈረሰው። የካፋ መንግስት ለአጼ ምኒልክ አላድርም ብሎ 17 ዓመት ሙሉ እጁን ሳይሰጥ ቆየ። ከአድዋ ጦርነት በኋላ ግን ማለትም ጣሊያን በተሸነፈ በዓመቱ ተረታ። ይህም ሊሆን የቻለው ከጣሊያን ሽንፈት በኋላ መሳሪያ በመገኘቱ በ20000 (ሀያ ሺህ) ዘመናዊ ጠመንጃ በሶስት አቅጣጫ ተከቦ 9 ወራት ገትሮ ከተዋጋ በኋላ ነበርበነ ሐሴ 29 ቀን የካፋውንጉስ የተማረከው።
The last traditional King of Kaffa sent to Ghizot in Ankobar (የ ሜጨረሻውየ ካፋ የ ቲዮ (የ ካፋ ንጉሰ ነገስት) አጼ ጋኪ ሻረቾ የጦር እስረኛ ሆነ ውወደ አንኮበር ተውሰዱ። አብረዋቸውየነበሩት ባለቤታቸውምእ.ኤ.አ. በ 1906 አረፉ። The last traditional King of Kaffa Gaky Sharecho passed away twenty years later in 1917 (ሲያርፉ አስከሬናቸው ደብረሊባኖስ እንዲያርፍ ተደረገ)
The same year Emperor Menelik II of Abyssinya and Ethiopia conqueredthe Ogadien, a vast remote region in the eastern most of Ethiopia soldifying the occupation with imperial powers by treaties.
The process of territorial expansion to the east, south, southeast and thecreation of the modern empire-state had been completed.
Side note;- In followed years, believed Ethiopia was transformed under Menelik II, major signposts like railroad, vehicles, hotel (Taitu hotel), postal mail & telecom services were put in place. Menelik II, a benevolentand farsighted for his country, he is known for introducing Hotel receptionservices, and of course vehicle driving as he had been the only licenced driver among the noblemen, and he had also the vision of beautification by replanting the "Eucaliptus tree" which locally called later as "Bahir-Zaf" meaning for an "overseas-tree" from Australia brought by a French citizennamely, Monseur Mondon Vidaye to make Ethiopia more beautiful, eventhough he is now passed away, many Ethiopians still enjoy the beauty of this Australian origin tree. Emperor Menelik II sympathized as "Emiye" cares for his people, not only in the present, but to come in the future, left a wonderful legacy of harmony, prosperity, unity and justice rather than a legacy of deceit, hatred, violence, corruption and poverty

November 18, 1899: Emperor Menelik's audio message to Queen Victoria

- The message delivered on to the Queen of England.

March 23, 1900 Ras Dargie Sahle-selassie, a son of Negus Sahle-selassieof Shoa-state and half-brother of of Negus Haile-Melekot of Gojjam was an Ethiopian prince, and the much respected among the nobility, and much loved uncle of Emperor Menelik II of Ethiopia died.

July 10, 1900: Italo-Ethiopian treaty signed on to demarcate the borderline.

January 10, 1901 Ras Tekle-Haimanot of Gojjam, an army commanderand a member of the nobility of the ethiopian empire had died.

In 1902, Dire Dawa was founded after the Addis Ababa-Djibouti Railwayreached the area.

In 1902 the Italo-Ethiopian-British a tripartite treaty known as the"added-Note" signed up.
Britain, Italy and France signed a secret agreement to disposses Ethiopia,from being co-founding the LoN in fear of that Ethiopia appealed for a possible membership to the coming League of Nations (LoN).

August 1902: Ras Makonnen Wold Mikael led a delegation to ParisThe Abyssinian Envoy on an Automobile at Chalais-Meudon. Ras Mekonnen Welde Mikael Gudisa (1852-1906), invited to the crowning of King Edward VII. The Ethiopian Envoy, Ras Makonnen, and his Suite, in their National Costume. Illustration for The Illustrated London News, 20September 1902. Mäkonnen Wäldä-Mika'él (May 8, 1852 – March 21, 1906) or simply as Ras Makonnen, was a general and the governor of Harar province in Ethiopia, and the father of Tafari Mäkonnen, Attendingthe Coronation of King Edward VII in London.

May 8, 1904: US PRESS: Justice and Crime Under Emperor Menelik In Abyssinia.... (እምዬ ምኒ ልክ)
Human life and property are safer In the greaterpart of Abyssinia than in New York or California (written by Maynard Shipley 8th of May 1904)

A man who was gathering plums fell from the tree on top of his friend below and killed him, but escaped himself uninjured.. The family of the man who was killed demanded from the Emperor Menelik the life of the other. His Majesty pointed out that it was an accident, but the plaintiffs persisted. "Very, well," said the Emperor. "By the law of Abyssinia you have the right to demand this man's life, but the law also says that he must suffer the same death, as his victim. Therefore he shall stand under the tree and one of you shall, fall from the tree on top of him." As none ofthe plaintiffs showed any readiness to carry out the sentence in their own person the man escaped. Now, thanks to the vigorous administration of Menelik II and his Chiefs, human life and property are safer In the greaterpart of Abyssinia than in New York or California.
“ሕይወትና ንብረት ከኒውዮርክና ከካሊፎርኒያ ይልቅ በምኒልክ ግዛት በአብሲኒያ ደህንነቱ የተጠበቀ ነው”
አንድ ሰው ዛፍ ላይ ወጥቶ ፍሬ ሲለቅም ካዛፍ ስር የነበረው ሰው ላይ ወድቆ ገደለው::የሟች ቤተሰቦች ነፍሱን እንሻለን ሲሉ ምኒልክ ጋ ለፍትሕ ቀረቡ::ምኒልክ ድንገተኛ አደጋ መሆኑን ቢያሳውቁም ከሳሾቹ አሻፈረኝ አሉ::ዓይን ለዓይን: ጥርስ ለጥርስ:ነፍስ ለነፍስ:እንዲሉ ምኒልክ እንግዲህ በሕጉ መሰረት ገዳይ በገደለበት መንገድመገደል አለበትና ተከሳሽ ከዛፍ ስር ቁም:ከሳሾች ከእናንተ መሃል አንዳችሁ ዛፉ ላይ ወጥታችሁ ወድቃችሁበት ግደሉት ሲሉ ፈረዱ::
ከከሳሾች አንዳቸውም ከዛፍ ላይ መውደቅ አልፈለጉም::ከግማሽ ምዕተ ዓመት በፊት ነፍስገዳይነትና ዝርፊያ በአቢሲኒያ የተለመደ ነበር::አሁን ግን ምኒልክ እና አዛዦቻቸውምስጋና ይግባቸውና የሰውሕይወትና ንብረት ከካሊፎርኒያና ከኒውዮርክ ይልቅ በአቢሲኒያ መድሕኑ (ደህንነቱ)የተጠበቀ ነው::

September 30, 1904: Treaty Between the King of Ethiopia and The UnitedStates signed: His Majesty Menelik II, king of kings of Ethiopia proclaimedon to Regulate Commercial Relations between the two countries.

March 21, 1906: Ras Makonnen Wolde Mikael Gudissa, the great Warriorand defender of the nation died on Kulubi on his way to Addis Ababa.

Ras Mekonnen Wolde Michael Gudissa, the Cousin of Emperor Menelik II, Father of the latter emperor of Ethiopia, the Governor of Harrarghe Province and De-Facto Foreign Minister ...of Ethiopia who was certainly well introduced to European traditions and culture, was a friend of the French poet and adventurer Arthur Rimbaud (1854-1891) and by the turnof the following century he would attend King Edward VII's coronation and visit a number of European countries. He visited several Imperial European Countries met with several dignitaries at his peer in the 1902 Coronation of King Edward VII, in the early 19th century, was the leadingcommander at the Battle of Adwa in March 1896.

In addition, Ras Makonnen Wolde Michael Gudisa, the governor of Harrar,renowned warrior of the battle of Adwa, once the de facto foreign minister, and the cousin of Emperor Menelik II, is the biological father of Ras Taffari Makonnen, the last Solomonic emperor of Ethiopia who reignsfrom November, 1930 to September, 1974. Ras Makonnen Wolde Mikael of Shewa was a man of dignity the first dark skin official to ever enter thehighest office and speak before the parliament members of Italy in Romawhen he led a delegation to Italia to sign for 'Wutchalle Agreement 2' around the year 1889 just three years before the battle of Adwa.

The barefooted royal figure has led a number of highly recognized Ethiopian delegates over several European nations for brief state visit in the said year above and if it has to be recalled brought the story of this well polished royal officer to your attention a number of times because he is worth to recall time and again. Ras Mekonnen the father of Dejazmatch Taffari was fit to be a king himself, he was intelligent with a natural diplomatic personality but he suddenly passed away in a brief illness in theyear 1906 relatively as a young age of 53. The stunning Ras Mekonnen was the first Ethiopian ever to obtain a driver license from a french drivingschool in Paris around the same year of his European tours. He was also the first banknote holder along with the Emperor Menelik and the second Ethiopian to drive a motorcar. A year later Taffari Makonnen whos father was served as senior army commander under Emperor Menelik II Army rightly commences service a year after his father's death at his teen age appointed as Dejazmach in titular governorship of Selale, Gondar and Sidamo subsequently. Dejazmach Yilma Makonnen, horsenamed as "Abba-Tenna" the Shum (Governor) of Harrar, the eldest child of the renowned army general, and the half-brother of Dejazmatch Taffari Makonnen died ayear later after his father's death in 1907. (Text ends)

Remembering the barefooted Army CommanderWho Is Mekonnen Wolde Mikael Gudissa:

He was born at Derefo Maryam near Ankober, and at the age of 14 his father took him to the court of Menelik Neguse-Shewa, the then ruler of Shoa, where he became a special companion of Menelik king of Shewa. Ras Makonnen was a general and the governor of Harrarghe in Ethiopia, and the father of Taffari Mäkonnen, later known as Emperor Haile Selassie

I. His father was Fitawrari Woldemikael Guddissa of a noble family of Oromo origin. Ras Makonnen was a grandson of Sahle Selassie king of Shoa through his mother, Leult Tenagnework Sahle Selassie Neguse Shoa.As such, he was a first cousin of Menelik king of Shewa.

In 1887, Ras Makonnen was given the governorship of Harrar after it wasincorporated into the Ethiopian Empire by his cousin, Emperor Yohannes
IV. Other posts Ras Makonnen served included temporary governor of Tigray after the removal of the rebellious Ras Mangasha Yohannes, as anarmy general during various military campaigns including during the FirstItalo–Ethiopian War, including a leading role at the Battle of Adwa whereEthiopian forces routed the Italians, and as a diplomat and de facto foreign minister.
October 29, 1906:Taffari Makonnen appointed governor of Gara-Mulattasub-region in the title of Dejazmatch.
December 16, 1906: The Washington Times Magazine Section....
HISTORICAL... this was how the world valued Emperor Menelik "Menelik IIof Abyssinya 'The most democractic of all monarchies is seriously ill, say dispatch from the capital of his empire to Rome, and, if he should die an outbreak menacing the safety of European representatives would likely befollowed by a fierce a fierce scramble among the powers for his rich domain."

November 4, 1907: A grand Hotel patroned by the Empress headed by Monsier Fredrick Hall inaugurated in the attendance Emperor Menelik II and other foreign dignitaries in Addis Ababa. (በ 1900 ዓ/ም ጥቅምት 25 ቀን ምኒልክ በአዲስ አበባ ያሉ ዲፕሎማቶችንና የውጭ አገር ሰዎችን ጋብዘው ሆቴሉን አስመረቁ ::የመጀመሪያው ሥራ አስኪያጅ ምሜ ፍሬደሪክ ሐል ነበር)
In January, 1908: Āffeworq Guebre Eyesūs (አፈ ወርቅ ፡ ገብረ ኢየሱስ ፡ ዘብሔረ ዘጌ); who he was born (July 10, 1868 – September 25, 1947) in Zegé of Bege- Midr on the southern shore of Lake Tana has received a traditional education from the church of Ura Kidana Mehrat under the direction of his grandfather was an Ethiopian writer, who wrote the first novel in Amharic,Libb Wolled Tarik ("A Heart-born Story").

Affawarq Guebre Eyasus, was appointed to decorate with frescoes some ofthe churches of the old capital of the kingdom, Entoto. It was then that heincurred the wrath of conservative Ethiopian and of Queen Taytu herself because he had worked in the church of Raguel without removing his shoes.

These included a work on Amharic grammar, an Italian-Amharic conversation manual, the satirical Guide du voyageur, and the novel LibbWolled Tarik. He also worked with the Italian Ethiopicist Francesco Gallinaat this time. Affeworq Guebre-Eyesus later claimed that it was he who pointed out the infamous discrepancy between the Amharic and Italian versions of article XVII of the Treaty of Wuchale.
Side note;- His writings include; ልብ፡ ወለድ፡ ታሪክ ። (Libb Wolled Tārīk) [A Heart-Born Story]. Rome 1908.899995ዳግማዊ ፡ ምኒልክ ፡ ንጉሠ ፡ ነገሥት ፡ ዘኢትዮጵያ ።
(Dāgmāwī Minīlik Nigūse Negest ze-'Ītyōṗyā) [Menelek II, King of Kings ofEthiopia]. Rome 1909;

second edition, Dire Dawa 1919

Short stories: እውነት ተመዶሻው ነው (Iwnet Temedōšāw New) 1898. አጤ ፋሲል (ĀṭēFāsīl)

Linguistics - Manuale di conversazione italiano-amarico con la pronunciafigurata. Rome 1905.

Grammatica della lingua amarica. Metodo practico per l'insegnamento.Rome 1905.

Guide du voyageur en Abyssinie. Rome 1911.Il verbo amarico. Rome 1911.

June 11, 1908: After experiencing series of sicknesses, Emperor Menelik IIhas informed his officials that Lij Eyassu, at a female line of his daughter, Woizaro Shewarega Menelik who she was the younger of Menelik's two daughters. And Lij Eyassu's father, Ras Michael was the regional king of Wollo for such a reason, he would succeed him in his choice. However, due to Eyassu's youth, Menelik II agreed to the suggestion that he would appoints a regent. Until he came of age, Lij Eyassu would be "Regent-plenipotentiary".

Shortly before the emperor Menelik II's official announcement his succession to the throne, Lij Eyassu was married to Leult Romane-WorqMengesha, the granddaughter of of Emperor Yohannes VI, and the nieceof Empress Taitu Bitul Birhane-Ethiopia. However, that marriage was annulled without having been consummated.

TERRITORIAL BORDERS: The Italo-Ethiopian "Treaty of Convenzione (Convention)" which relates to the eastern borders signed up with the Italans in 1908:. Then the eastern and southeastern borders with then "Somalia-Italiana" soldified in a treaty which that was highly involved byRas Makonnen Wolde Mikael Gudissa.

May 18, 1909: Emperor Menelik II declared Eyasu Mikael, the son of his daughter Shwarega Menelik by Ras Ali Mikael of Wollo to be his successor.Ras Tessema Nadew, horsenamed as Abba-quemmaw was appointed as regent to the twelve old Lij Eyassu.

Side note: At "Jan-Meda", an official Imperial cremonial parade ground, aproclamation of Emperor Menelik II was read to assembled throngs of officials, diplomats and subjects. It read as "My chiled Lij-Eyassu will succeed me". And Lij-Eyassu became the designated heir to the throne.

Shortly before the Emperor Menelik's announcement his succession to thethrone, Lij Eyassu was married to Leult Romane-worq Mengesha Yohannes, the granddaughter of Emperor Yohannes VI, and the niece of Empress Taitu Bitul Birhane-Ethiopia. However that marriage was annulledwithout having been consummated.

November 7, 1909: The New York Times commented about Emperor Menelik II “WAY AHEAD OF HIS TIME - has aided his people - Remarkableprogress during his reign - was intellectual who spoke French, Italian, English fluently, had personal collection of 10, 000 books, Abyssiniya's ruler said to be a heavy buyer of American Railway stocks”.

February 15, 1910: Below is excerpts of Emperor Menelik's letter sent to Abba Jifar, king of Jimma telling him his disdain for Oromo slaves he usedto sell and warning him not to sell anymore slaves.

Side note: Emperor Menelik II On Slavery to Abba Jifar, he had put a legislation in effect to abolish slavery. He wrote in his personal note to Abba Jifar, "I told you before again and again to stop selling and buying slaves in your area. However, you have continued such practice secretly. Moreover, in the remote areas, I have heared that the people have startedselling their wives as well as their kids. I remind you again whether in remote areas or any other place, abolish this inhuman practice. If you are found buying and selling slaves, I will imprison you and and your family and hand you over to someone as workers."

March 2, 1910: Dejazmatch Taffari Makonnen appointed governor (Shum)of Harrarghe by Empress Taitu Bitul.
April, 1910: Lij Eyassu married Woizaro Sabla-wongel Hailu, the daughterof Ras Hailu Tekle-Haimanot of Gojjam.
In July, 1911: Dejazmatch Taffari Makonnen married woizaro MennenAsfaw, the grand daughter of king Mikael.
Side note;- Dejazmatch Taffari's bride Menen was the granddaughter of King Mika'el who was of Muslim origin but converted to Christianity by Emperor Yohannes IV. The new princess was thus dynastically well- connected. Dejazmatch Taffari Makoonen's marriage to Woizaro Menen Asfaw (later his Empress) in and the arrival in the next year of Tenagneworq, a daughter was a joyful occasion for the family as well as the inhabitants of the medieval walled city of Harrar in eastern Ethiopia. Wro. Tenagneworq was her parents' only child to have been born at Harrar. When Ras Taffari Makonnen became Emperor of Ethiopia as Haile-selassie I, Woizaro Mennen Asfaw was crowned as Empress at his side.
December 12, 1913: Emperor Menelik II, the conquerer of Italian invadersand soldifier of much of the Ethiopian-nation state present boundaries whowas securely drawn during his rule, he ruled Abyssinya (now Ethiopia) reigning from 9th March, 1889 to 12 December, 1913.
Side note: Emperor Menelik II was fascinated by modernity, and like Tewodros II before him, had a keen ambition to introduce Western technological and administrative advances into Ethiopia. He founded the first modern bank in Ethiopia, "Bank of Abyssinia', introduced the first modern postal system, signed the agreement and initiated work that established the Addis Ababa-Djibouti railway with the French, introduced electricity to Addis Ababa, as well as the telephone, telegraph, the motor car and modern plumbing. He was progressive & benevolent monarch whokeen sighted to modernize his country then Abyssinyan empire, Ethiopia was prospered under his reign, the more, saying he owes a great nation of Ethiopia, he had no any registered personal property or fixed assets in his name or members of the royal family, his modernization programs were tobe continued. He died of natural sickness at age 69, his body rested in peace at a mausoleum of the Church of Ba'heta Le Mariam cemetry within the Grand palace. December 15, 1913: Upon the death of Emperor Menelik II, Eyassu Ali Michael the son of Empress Zawditu's half-sister, Woizaro Shawaregga, who had been publicly declared heir apparent in 1909, becomes designated successor to the throne, he is usually refered to as Lij, Amharicmeaning for "Child-wise" took the throne. Even if Lij Eyassu's de-facto accession were widely known and accepted but the Church, the Lord- regent and then "Council of the Elders" were agreed that Lij Eyassu's coronation should be postponed until he was a bit older. Exerpts,

Lij Eyasu Michael – Emperor Designate Eyasu V'

Lij Eyasu Michael was the son of Ras (later King) Michael Ali of Wollo, and Woizero Shewaregga Menelik, and was born in 1901. Lij Eyasu's father, Ras Michael Ali, was the ruler of the Wollo Oromo clan known as the Mammadoch. He was related to both of the rival Mammadoch Queens, Werqitu and Mestawat, who had fought each other as well as Emperor Tewodros II on behalf of their young sons for leadership of the Mammadoch and rule over Wollo. Born Mohammed Ali, son of Imam Ali Abba Dulla, a Moslem noble claiming direct decent from the Prophet Mohammed himself, Ras Michael (pronounced Mika-el) had been compeledto convert to Christianity by Emperor Yohannis IV following the Council of Boru Meda in 1878. Emperor Yohannis IV stood as his godfather, and renamed him Michael granting him the title of Ras, and the province of Wollo to rule. A long time freind and ally of Yohannis IV, he was at the Emperor's side when Yohannis was wounded and died at Mettema. Ras Michael was a later a key figure during Menelik II's reign as well, after finally aknowledging Menelik as Emperor following initial reluctance, as Menelik had long been the ally of his rival, Abba Watew. Ras Michael would lead the Wollo cavalry which smashed the Italian center force at thebattle of Adowa in 1896. As a reward for his submission and recognition ofhis accession, and to tie him more closely to his throne, Menelik married Ras Michael to his daughter Shewaregga. Previous to his marriage to the Emperor's daughter, Ras Michael had been married before, and one of hisdaughters was Woizero Sehin Michael, whose daughter would become Empress Menen, consort of Emperor Haile Selassie. Another daughter would marry Ras Seyoum of Tigrai, the grandson of Yohannis IV.

Lij Eyasu's mother, Woizero Shewaregga Menelik, was the younger of Menelik's two aknowledged daughters. Little is known of her mother, otherthan that she may have been a servant in the royal household named Desta. Menelik aknowledged Shewaregga after she had reached marriageable age, and the aknowledgement was promoted by Empress Taitu, who may have seem benefits in another step-daughter to marry off to her own political advantage. Shewaregga Menelik was first married to Dejazmatch Wedajo Gobena, son of Ras Gobena Dachi, a close friend and advisor of Menelik, and a major Oromo chief as well as an important military figure in his own right. From this marriage, she produced a son, Dejazmatch Wossen Segged Wedajo, who was eliminated from the Imperial succession due to dwarfism. The marriage to Dejazmatch Wedajodid not last however, and she was soon married to Ras Michael. Empress Taitu's Yejju family had traditionally been rivals of the Mammadoch for domination of Wollo, and her brother Ras Welle Bitul had very difficult relations with Ras Michael. The marriage was thus seen as a way of bringing ballance at court by bringing both Wollo families into the Emperor's family circle, ensuring loyalty from both. Following her marriageto Michael of Wollo, Woizero Shewaregga produced two children, a son Lij Eyasu, and a daughter, Woizero Zenebework Michael. Woizero Shewaregga died shortly after the birth of her daughter, and Emperor Menelik took his two grandchildren to Addis Ababa from Ras Michael's seatat Dessie. Ras Michael continued to be a favorite of the Emperor, and he was close with his children, but they were raised at the Imperial Palace with other children of Imperial blood under the eye of Empress Taitu.

Their governess was the half German Mrs. Hall (whose nationality cause much concern in the British, French and Italian legations in Addis Ababa).At the age of twelve, Zenebework Michael was married to the much olderRas Bezabih TekleHaimanot, son of King Tekle Haimanot of Gojjam, and went to live with her new husband at Debre Markos. Unfortunately, the young princess died a year later in childbirth. As the Emperor Menelik II had no aknowledged sons who lived to adulthood, the question as to who his heir would be was always open during much of his reign. He was said to personally favor his cousin Ras Makonnen, son of his paternal aunt, Woizero Tenagnework Sahle Selassie.Ras Makonnen had been a loyal and faithful subject, who had acted as thede-facto minister of foriegn affairs for many years. He had represented the Emperor at the coronation of King Edward VII in London, and had traveled extensively in Europe, including Italy where he had tried to negotiate a solution to the crises over the Treaty of Wuchale, which later resulted in the Battle of Adowa. He had also served at Adowa as a commander, shared most of the Emperor's progressive views, and was quite well respected and liked in court circles. His untimely death in March1906 however, left the succession up for grabs as the Emperor aged and became increasingly frail. Other candidates for the throne included Dejazmatch Taye Gulilat, direct decentdant of Menelik's paternal uncle, Merid Azmatch Haile Michael Sahle Selassie. Another was Ras Wolde Giorgis Aboye, the son of Woizero Ayahilush Sahile Selassie, another aunt of the Emperor. Nevertheless, Lij Eyasu Michael was always a favorite candidate for the possition of heir apparent as Menelik's only grandson. LijEyasu was educated at the Imperial Palace in Addis Ababa, and also at theold Shewan capital, Ankober. He also traveled often to his father in Desse.He was taught at the modern Menelik II school with other young noblemen later on. From an early age, he was made aware of his proximity to the throne of Solomon. His step-grandmother, Empress Taituseems to have had reservations about his position from the beginning.

Even as a young boy, and increasingly as he grew older, the prince showed little regard for her, and the childless Empress did not relish the thought of being at his mercy one day. The roots of this may have been inthe deep seated rivalry between the Mammadoch clan of his father, and the Empress's Werresheik clan of Yejju, both of whom claimed precidence in Wollo. Although relations between Ras Michael and Empress Taitu were always civil, her brother Ras Welle Bitul was an avowed enemy of Michael,and the two Rases often exasperated the Emperor with their constant feuding. Empress Taitu, in addition to her Yejju lineage, was also of Simien blood, and had Imperial ancestry in the Gondar line. As a thorough northerner, she was resented by the Shewan aristocrats as ambitious for her own family and their pretentions. Indeed, Taitu had managed to marryall her relatives into the major aristocratic houses of Shewa, Tigrai, and Gojjam. It was whispered, that the Empress would prefer Menelik's daughter Zewditu ascend the throne as Empress. As Zewditu was married to Taitu's nephew, Gugsa Welle, son of the aformentioned Ras Welle Bitul who was also of Imperial blood, it was said that she hoped that the couple would rule Ethiopia together, and return the capital to Gondar. Thus her Yejju-Gondar relatives would have unfettered influence at the expense of the Shewan aristocracy which surrounded Menelik and the non-Yejju Wollonobles whose hopes were pinned to Eyasu. As it was, the Tigreans and themost of the Wollo shared the concerns of the Shewans as far as the ambitions of the Empress, and there was little likelyhood of her being ableto carry out this plan. In October 1909, it was decided that Lij Eyasu should be betrothed to marry Romanework Mengesha, daughter of Ras Mengesha Yohannis, and grandaughter of Emperor Yohannis IV. She was also the daughter of Woizero Kefey Welle, and thus great-neice of Empress Taitu. It was a brilliant political match on several levels. This marriage was the second attempt at a union between the Houses of Tigraiand Shewa (the first being the marriage between Ras Araya Selassie Yohannis and Princess Zewditu which ended with the death of the Ras),and it had the added element of involving an alliance between Empress Taitu's family and that of Ras Michael. It was clearly a product of the Empress' policy of political marriage, and served her interests nicely.

As the couple were still very young, the nuptuals were not consumated,pending their coming of age. Possibly, no one wanted to repeat the tragedy of Zenebework Michael.

The death of Ras Makonnen at Kulibi in March 1906 eliminated the man in whom Menelik and many of his more progressive nobles had the most confidence, from the succession. Menelik was determined not to turn to Dejazmatch Taye Gulilat, who in fact after Menelik, was the next Shewan prince in the male line of succession. (Makonnen himself was in the femaleline). The Fit-ha Negest gave preference to direct male line decendants of King Solomon and the Queen of Sheba over female line decendants. Like Menelik II, Taye Gulilat had uninterrupted male line ancestry to the founders of the dynasty. In contrast, all other potential claimants from thehouses of Shewa, Tigrai and Gojjam could only claim decent through a female link. However, years earlier, Taye Gulilat's grandfather Merid Azmatch Haile Michael had claimed the Shewan crown for himself and rebled against his nephew Menelik. In his brief uprising, he had managed to burn the town of Ankober, but was quickly defeated and placed under house detention. Menelik had never forgiven his uncle, and held his decendants in deep suspicion. Menelik's options had narrowed, and the situation was about to get more urgent. Not long after the death of his cousin Makonnen, Emperor Menelik collapsed while watching renovation work being done on the Church of St.

Mary on Mt. Entoto where he had been crowned. Although he had recovered swiftly, and returned to the Palace, attempts to keep the incident quiet failed, and rumors of his ill health intensified. Menelik had actually suffered a stroke at Entoto. The visiting Italian governor Martini of Eritrea would state that signs of the stroke were apparent in the Emperor's eyes. Menelik suffered yet another stroke in August 1907, and although he endured the various celebrations of his 63rd birthday on August 19th, he looked very unwell to all who saw him. On May 18, 1908, Emperor Menelik was again on Mt. Entoto, on his way north to Sellale with the Empress to attend the dedication of a church, when he suffered yet another stroke. This time, his right side was paralized temporarily, and he was greatly weakened. He was unable to return to Addis Ababa until the 10th of June. Immediately upon his return to the capital, Empress Taitu began to tightly regulate access to the Emperor and began to assume more and more executive power. The Emperor had become dependent on support to walk, and his speech was greatly affected. His physical decline was steady after that. The cabinet continued to function in running the government, but with her control of access to the Emperor, and by force of her formidable personality, Empress Taitu easily dominated the decission making process. Over the next year, all the nobles and the foriegn diplomats were informally notifiedthat Lij Eyasu was the legitimate heir to the Emperor of Ethiopia. It had been generally assumed since the death of Ras Makonnen, but it took on amore formal existance now. Then in early May, 1909, the nobles were assembled before the Emperor, and Empress Taitu approached him and asked publicly who his successor should be. The weakened Emperor whispered in her ear and she turned to the assembly and said "He says LijEyasu". However, a few days later on May 15th, 1909, at Jan Meda (the Imperial parade ground), a proclamation of the Emperor was read to assembled throngs of nobles, diplomats and subjects. It read "My child (lij) will succeed me". There was no mention of Lij Eyasu's name, nor of any other person qualified to be called the Emperor's child. The proclamaition of the Archbishop anathamizing anyone who refused to accept the Emperor's choice of heir also did not mention the name of that heir. Some have said it may have been an attempt by elements of the Shewan aristocracy, most notably the governor of Ankober, Welde Tsadik,to put Taye Gulilat on the throne when Menelik died, or by Empress Taitu to place her nephew Ras Gugsa Welle on the throne, as he was married to Menelik's daughter Zewditu, and thus qualified to be called the Emperor's "child". It was clear to many that the Empress was unhappy with the idea that Eyasu might succeed her husband. However it was also clear that thewishes of Menelik were known to a great many of the most powerful people at court, and those wishes were clear that Lij Eyasu was the designated heir. It was at this point that Taitu arranged for her great- neice, Romanework Mengesha be betrothed to Lij Eyasu. The young bride was the daughter of Ras Mengesha Yohannis, granddaughter of Emperor Yohannis IV. Her mother was Woizero Kefey Welle, neice of Empress Taituand daughter of Ras Welle Bitul. The marriage was regarded as politically brilliant since it united the Shewan, Gondar/Simien and Tigrean branches of the Imperial dynasty as well as the Mammadoch and Yejju houses of Wollo. Shortly after this betrothal, on October 30th, 1909, it was publicly and unabiguously proclaimed that the Heir to the Throne and Crown Prince of Ethiopia was indeed, Lij Eyasu Michael, grandson of Menelik II. The Emperor also had his chairman of the cabinet of ministers, Ras Tessema Nadew proclaimed Lij Eyasu's guardian and Lord Regent of the Empire, and that he would serve in this capacity if Menelik should die before Eyasu reached the age of majority. Menelik had chosen Ras Tessema for several reasons. Ras Tessema was the elderly head of the powerful aristocratic Adissge clan, and a man generaly respected by the nobility. He was a man who had long displayed little personal ambition and had served Menelik loyaly and with true affection. His father, Ato Nadew, had been Menelik's much loved childhood tutor and advisor, and had been treated as a family member by the Emperor. This act however deeply hurt Menelik's surviving first cousin, Ras Wolde Giorgis Aboye, whoas an elder member of the Imperial family had believed (along with many others) that he was the natural choice for the Regency. He retreated to hisprovince of Keffa, clearly offended that he was not made Prince Regent and guardian of the Heir to the Throne.

Menelik's health deteriorated to the point where he became unresponsive,and Ras Tessema began to rule the Empire in trust for Lij Eyasu. However,Tessema not being the agressive autocratic type, was quickly and completely eclipsed by Empress Taitu . She continued to make decisions and issue edicts, make appointments and demotions at will. Soon her favorites, her Yejju and Semien relatives, and her various in-laws, were being appointed to all the posts of power and influence. This displeased large secitons of the Shewan and Tigrean nobility, and the Wollo relatives of the heir. A showdown was inevitable. In particular, the minister of war, Fitawrari Hapte Giorgis Denagde, was unhappy with her appointments to high office and her conduct in general. The old loyal soldier of Menelik found all her appointments to be scandalously nepotistic, and approved only of the appointment of Dejazmatch Taffari Makonnen to Harrar in succession to his late brother Yilma, and his father Ras Makonnen. The brief tenure of Dejazmatch Balcha Saffo (Abba Nefso) to Harrar following Dejazmatch Yilma's death had proved disasterous, and the appointment ofDejazmatch Taffari was regarded positively by most quarters.

Taitu's political conduct continued to irritate the Shewan nobility and angered the paternal relatives of the Heir to the Throne. When Ras Tessema and Fitawrari Hapte Giorgis urged the Empress to halt appointing only her relatives to office and to cease causing alarm to the foreign diplomats in February of 1910 with her cold beligerence towards foreign powers, she angrily called Ras Tessema an imbecile and Fitawrari Hapte Giorgis an invalid. This was the last straw. The two men summoned several other notables to Hapte Giorgis'home and resolved to remove the Empress from state authority. The group included Dejazmatch Gebre Selassie Baria-Gabr, ruler of Adowa and prominent Tigrean noble man, Dejazmatch Lul Seged (later Ras), Dejazmatch Demissew Nessibu, Dejazmatch Wesene Tirfe and Dejazmach Merid Hapte Mariam. After ascertaining the support of the Army, these prominent nobles notified the Archbishop Abune Mattiwos of their intentions (the archbishop was a long time foe of the Empress)and had sworn to him that they would not shed any blood. The Archbishop asked to go to the Empress to speak to her first and try to convince her. When he arrived at the Palace however, the women of the Imperial household staff came running out and threw stonesat the cleric, calling him a dog and a son of foreigners, telling him to go back to Egypt. Archbishop returned to his residence and sent the Empress a terse letter in which he stated that if she did not recieve him she would be turned over to soldiers. Taitu, aware of the plots, and also aware that the army was supporting her opponents, reluctantly agreed to recieve him. After some tense discussion, the Empress agreed to recieve the conspirators in audience, and the Archbishop left to convey this message to the nobles. The nobles (significantly without Fitawrari Hapte Giorgis) arrived dressed in court dress, and made the proper bows to the Empress.Dejazmatch Gebre Selassie then stepped forward and politely asked Her Imperial Majesty to confine herself only to the caring of the sovereign, her husband, and halt her involvement in the daily affairs of government which were the rightfull duties of the Regent of the Empire, Ras Tessema Nadew, in the name of the Heir, Lij Eyasu Michael. Although the Dejazmatch and the others had been meticulous in their etiquette, the Empress could not contain her rage. She berated Dejazmatch Gebre Selasse as a coarse and disgusting person, unrefined, and a mere shepherd. In a dig at her own Semien origins (Semien being known for it'ssheep), the Dejazmatch elegantly replied "If not for Emperor Menelik, we might all be shepherds, but thanks to him we are now shepherds of men." Exasperated, she then turned on Ras Tessema demanding to know what action she had ever taken without consulting him as regent, and asking him if it was not he who constantly involved her in state matters because of his insistance that she was far more experienced in these matters than he. His answer was considerably more feeble than the Dejazmatch's quick witty reply. He mumbled something about her constant interference. Ras Mengesha Atikem of Agew Midir, a man who had recently been agrieved by the Empress and who had been dispossesed of his province by her, hadarrived in Addis Ababa to appeal against the Empresses decission to remove him from Agew Midir, and happened to be at the palace when the delegation of nobles arrived. Although at the palace to complain about theactions of Empress Taitu against him, he was never the less offended at this affront to the wife of his master, and stormed angrily into the chamber. How dare these people "raise even thier eyes" to the wife of their master, much less conspire against her he demanded. Ras MengeshaAtikem and Dejazmatch Nessibu came to fisticuffs, but were calmed down and separated by the Archbishop. The Empress than sat on her throne andhaughtily looked away from the assembled nobles and in a sign of displeasure, refused to talk directly with them further. Instead she had a spokesman read a statement from her that asked for permission to leave the capital and take the Emperor either to Gondar, or if they insisted he remain in Shewa, to the monastery of Debre Libanos, or her personal fief of Bulga. She would care for him there with her servants and go into seclusion as she was clearly not wanted in the capital. The nobles were startled and pleaded with her not to leave, and to remain in the city and care for the Emperor in the Palace where he and she rightly belonged as the reigning monarchs of the Empire. They did not want Taitu marching off with the Emperor into territories where she could easily raise up a rebellion. Her spokesman replied that Her Majesty would think about it.

She would eventually agree, and the woman who had ruled Ethiopia alongwith her husband, probably the most powerful Empress-consort of Ethiopia ever, was thus deposed and relegated to simply caring for the Emperor. Ras Tessema was now the de facto as well as the de jure ruler of Ethiopia, and all business would now be conducted in the name of the Heir to the Throne, Lij Eyasu, rather than in the name of Menelik, King of Kings. Empress Taitu retreated to the Imperial chambers and continued tonurse her stricken husband with the help of her step-daughter Zewditu and a host of servants. All officials were discouraged by the government from meeting the Empress for any reason. Even social visitors were discouraged. Her personal staff was decreased little by little over time.
Increasingly her only outside contacts were the doctors that treated Menelik. She herself became quite ill during 1912, and Menelik's cousin, Tsehaiwork Darge (daughter of Ras Darge) came from her fief in Sellale tonurse both the Emperor and Empress much to the grief of the palace staffwhich feared and disliked this particular Princess with a vengence. Cut off from the world, Taitu's staff was continually being reduced, untill the pointthat she only had a few women helping her and Zewditu. She would complain in writing to the Regent "Why am I being deprived of male servants? Am I to be forbidden from hearing male voices?" The Empress and the others who nursed the Emperor depended on male attendants to lift him and bathe him. It was becoming very difficult to care for him. On certain occasions she was asked to present the Emperor for inspection by a delegation of nobles to ascertain his continued incapacity to rule. The Regent and the cabinet of ministers, and all the highest nobles would file into the Imperial bedchamber and approach the bed where the King of Kings lay completely unresponsive and shrunken away to a faint image of his once robust self. The nobles would weep and sob openly for their stricken master, and Taitu, regally seated in a chair nearby, would only look on in cold silence at the men she believed had betrayed her as they bowed before her before walking out backwards. She would slowly thus sink into isolation.
Quickly, everyone at court began to rush to realign themselves with the new powers in the land. The first victims were Empress Taitu's female relatives who had been married into the great noble houses and to powerful figures at court and across the land. One by one they were divorced by their husbands who quickly went about finding brides that were related to Lij Eyasu or to the Regent Ras Tessema. Most notably, Lij Eyasu's unconsumated marriage to Romanework Mengesha was desolved.He was instead married to Seble Wongel Hailu, daughter of Ras Hailu Tekle Haimanot, and granddaughter of King Tekle Haimanot of Gojjam.
His new father-in-law, Ras Hailu of Gojjam also divorced his wife, Aselefech (a niece of Taitu) as a result of this rush away from the Empress's circle. In order not to alienate the House of Tigrai however, Lij Eyasu arranged for his ex-brother-in-law, Dejazmatch (later Ras) SeyoumMengesha to marry his half-sister, thus keeping Seyoum as his brother-in-law inspite of his own divorce. Lij Eyasu would father a daughter by Woizero Seble Wongel named Alem Tsehai Eyasu (created an Emebethoi by Emperor Haile Selassie). She was his only legitimate child. DejazmatchTaye Gulilat was arrested as a rival claimant, and Ras Gugsa Welle was also arrested and charged with murder (his aunt Empress Taitu was to haughtily comment "Even if he had commited this murder, how dare they charge someone of his rank with a crime!?!") Gugsa was placed under house arrest at Falle, while his wife, Princess Zewditu remained in the capital caring for her stricken father with her stepmother. Ras Tessema now had a host of problems. First Ras Welle rebled against the government and was preparing to go to war against Ras Michael, father ofLij Eyasu. He believed that Ras Michael was behind the humiliation of his sister the Empress and the imprisonment of his son Gugsa. When Ras Tessema urged Empress Taitu to help him calm her brother down, she wrote to Ras Welle, as well as to Ras Michael to try and defuse the situation. When however, she was asked by the Regent to suggest a person for a delegation to be sent to Ras Welle to further molify him, she coldly informed the Regent that as she was not the cause of her brother'srebelion, the Regent should appoint whoever he chose. Ras Tessema wasalso concerned with Dejazmatch Taffari Makonnen. The Dejazmatch had been denied the governorship of Harrar when his father died even thoughRas Makonnen had explicitly indicated that this was his wish. Menelik hadreasoned that the boy was too young for such a huge responsibility.

Empress Taitu had also actively promoted the intrests of Makonnen's elderson Yilma, who was married to one of her neices. However, upon Yilma's death, she had appointed Dejazmatch Balcha Saffo, whose tenure in Harrar was a disaster as he had offended many of the local notables with his direct and undiplomatic manner of doing things. Taitu had then appointed Taffari to succeed his brother and father in Harrar, just one daybefore she was deposed. Although most of her appointments were reversed, most of the nobles had agreed that this last appointment shouldnot be changed. Harrar was a major source of foriegn trade duty income for the Empire, and most nobles were confident in the young Prince's ability to handle it, as well as it being the wish of his late father. Now however, concerned that the Prince was a potential threat to the Heir to the Throne, as he was popular with the nobility and had Imperial blood in his veins, Ras Tessema thought that somehow Dejazmatch Taffari's loyalty to Lij Eyasu should be cemented. He summoned Taffari to the Palace, and urged both princes to swear loyalty to each other. It is very telling that the oaths that the princes made that day would be conditional.Taffari swore to be a loyal brother and subject "..as long as my rights in Harrar are upheld by Lij Eyasu", and Lij Eyasu swore to be a loyal brother and friend "..as long as Taffari upheld my rights to the throne". Both Taffari and Lij Eyasu were men with a very progressive bent in their thinking. It would be logical that they be firm friends as well as relatives. However, Taffari was an advocate of gradual change, change in stages, and in harmony with ancient traditions, and by convincing the aristocracy and the conservative elements of Ethiopian society. Eyasu was all for forcing change on the recalcitrant aristocracy and power structures regardless of what they liked. Lij Eyasu also had views on religion and class structure that Dej. Taffari along with most of the rest of the nobility probably found dangerous. For the time being though, Ras Tessema had created a suitable alignment between the two. Ras Tessema's other royal problem was the public behaviour of the heir himself. Lij Eyasu exasperated the old man to no end. The Ras was constantly telling the Prince to behave in a more royal manner, to dress more aproprately, and to pay more attention to serious affairs of state. Lij Eyasu had grown into a handsome dashing young man, intent on seducing every woman in sight. It was rumored that even Woizero Beletshachew, wife of Ras Tessema, was one of the Princes lovers. He took to wearing wide borders on his netelas and shemas (shawls) that had customarily been reserved for women, and took great pride in starting this trend among young men of his age. This behavior was regarded as unseemly by the regent, who continuously repremanded the boy and act more seriously, heed his eldersmore closely and waste less time with his young co-horts and hangers-on.

Then quite suddenly, on the night of April 10th, 1911, Ras Tessema Nadew, Lord Regent of the Empire of Ethiopia, died suddenly at his home.His body was quickly taken to Debre Libanos and buried before the news was announced. The entire court was shocked, and people began to whisper rumors of poison. Suspicion flowed in two directions. First it was rumored that Lij Eyasu had ordered the poisoning, as he was growing tired of the lectures and the restraint on his authority that the regent represented. It was suspected that Tessema's widow, Beletshachew also had a hand in it as she was suspected of being Eyasu's mistress, and perhaps hoped for an elevation of her position with her husband out of theway. She fanned those fires even further when she refused to go into mourning for her husband. The other suspect was the Empress Taitu, whopeople regularly blamed for the deaths of her enemies and people in her way. Rumors aside, no proof has ever been made public that the regent was murdered.

Lij Eyasu was now in fact free of the Regency. His father arrived from Desse to try and organize a structure for his son's minority. Between November 1911 and January 1912, he reorganized the cabinet and the council, making them guides and advisors to Eyasu, rather than governorsover him. He believed perhaps that the added responsibilties would calm the boy down and focus him. However, Lij Eyasu would now do pretty much as he pleased. It was said he enjoyed insulting the nobles and sleeping with their wives and daughters. It was said that he could treat a prostitute like a princess, but that he also treated a princess like a prostitute. This was not the only act that aggrieved the aristocracy. Lij Eyasu's closest companion was "Tilahun" a former domestic servant to hismother. Tilahun was maliciously rumored to have offered Lij Eyasu his own wife (whom he later divorced) so that the prince could lose his virginity years before, and that the prince had happily accepted the offer. To make matters worse, Lij Eyasu granted Tilahun the title of Fitawrari, and the two led a group of young companions on boisterous pursuit of drink and women. To the horror of the Shewan aristocracy, Lij Eyasu arranged for Tilahun to marry Woizero Sakamyelesh Seyfu, decendant of King Sahle Sellasie of Shewa and a member of the Imperial house. He began to refer to the nobles and ministers of his Emperor Menelik as "my grandfather's fattened sheep" and contemptuously told many of them thattheir time had passed, and that it was time for him to choose new nobles and new ministers of his own preference and his own generation. He continued however to seduce their wives and daughters.

In February of 1912, Lij Eyasu went to Wollo to visit his father. He spent much time there meeting with people of many backgrounds, but Moslemsin particular, trying to show them that he was concerned about their interests as much as those of his Christian subjects. The aristocracy and the church hierarchy began to whisper uneasily about why he chose to spend so much time with moslems. He began to roam the north extensively, and even founded the town of Alem Tena (named after his warrior or horse name Abba Tena). He then led an attack on the Afar to punish them for their attacks on the Jille Oromo of Shewa. In yet anothereven more brutal contradiction of his seemingly benevolent progressive views, he led a raid on the Gimira in the southwest and forcibly enslaved tens of thousands of them after a bloody campaign. He was gone for a year. His return to Addis Ababa would be quite remarkable in it's disruptive scope.

Lij Eyasu returned to Addis Ababa with his huge band of new Gimira slaves, and made it known to the council of the realm that he wished to take up residence in the Imperial Palace, and have the invalid Emperor Menelik moved elsewhere. The aquiecent ministers began to make arrangements to move the Emperor to Ankober. The ministers approachedEmpress Taitu with the plan as "a change of scene for His Imperial Majesty", and asked her for an audience with her to discuss it, and to see the Emperor to certify that he was fit to travel. Taitu was furious, and instructed the commander of the Imperial Guard, Gebre Mariam, to prevent them from entering the Palace. Gebre Mariam took seriously his job to protect the Emperor and vowed to never allow anyone to remove Menelik from his Palace as long as he breathed. Lij Eyasu ordered the Palace with all it's soldiers and servants and royals, completely surrounded by his soldiers and laid under seige. He commanded that only enough food for the Emperor to be let in. The tension between the Imperial Guard and Lij Eyasu's soldiers grew by the second, and on February 8th, 1913, an all out gunbattle broke out. Bullets shattered the windows in the Emperor's room, and the Empress had to take refuge with her catatonic husband and their servants in a basement room while battle raged through the palace grounds. When the Archbishop heard the fighting he rushed to the palace from his home and quickly negotiated a truce. 30 people were dead, and 60 wounded, but the captured Gebre Mariam was not executed as Lij Eyasu would have prefered, but exiled to Gojjam thanks to the promises of the Archbishop which had ended the crisis. Lij Eyasu arrived at the Palace just in time for the Empress to emerge and publicly berate him as an ungrateful grandson who wanted tokill his grandfather and the cause of all the bloodshed. He stood sheepishly as his step-grandmother angrily related how the staff had to carry the Emperor from his bullet riddled room into the basements to protect him. She then imperiously declared that neither she nor the Emperor were going anywhere and stormed back to her rooms. Taitu had won the day.

A sulking Lij Eyasu left the capital almost immediately after the palace fiasco, and stayed away for six months, as he roamed about the country again, and returned then for only a brief stay before again leaving to go stay with his father in Desse. Lij Eyasu returned to Addis Ababa on December 9th, 1913. In the early hours of December 12th, 1913, EmperorMenelik II, the Elect of God, Conquering Lion of Judah, and King of Kings of Ethiopia, the victor of Adwa, died queitly in his sleep. As his widow, his daughter, and servants wept over his body, and before anyone outside of the palace knew, men were sent out to inform Lij Eyasu that he was now in fact Eyasu V, Emperor of Ethiopia. They found him at Jan Meda, the Imperial Parade ground. He was playing a game of Gugs (a horseback mock battle game). Lij Eyasu refused to stop playing and return to the palace. Some have interpretted this as a sign of contempt for his grandfather. Others see it as a deliberate action that was endorsed by thegovernment in secret so as to not reveal the Emperor's death to the public. Indeed, even the diplomats in Addis Ababa were not to be told of the Emperor's death until a week later. Indeed, there was no public announcement made of the death at all, but word slowly leaked out. The ministers seem to have determinded to hide the news of the Emperor's death in order to shore up the support of Lij Eyasu and ensure a smooth transition and avoid disorder. Empress Taitu was secretly taken out of the city, under heavy guard, in the wee hours of the following morning. She was taken up to the old palace on Mt. Entoto and ordered not to show her face in the capital so that her obvious mourning would not make the deathof the Emperor obvious. She would live out the rest of her life on this mountain perch looking down on the capital city that she had founded, reiciving few visitors. Princess Zewditu was kept under house arrest in thepalace for a short time, but was later sent to join her husband at his placeof arrest in Falle. As for Menelik the Great, he was secretly buried in the Se'el Bet Kidane Miheret Church (Our Lady Covenant of Mercy Church) on the Palace grounds. No family attended his burial. It is not known if this was actually ordered by the Cabinet and Lij Eyasu. It was an oddly forlorn death and burial for one who had brought so much progress to his people and successfully defended them from European colonialism, the only people in Africa to acheive this. The fact that the people were prevented from mourning and weeping for their beloved "Imiye Menelik" was one point for which Lij Eyasu could never hope for forgiveness in later years.

Lij Eyasu decided that he was not ready to be crowned Emperor yet. Athough he was in fact now Emperor Eyasu V, he insisted on being referedto as Abeto Eyasu or Lij Eyasu, or in his more grand moments "Abeto-hoi, Lij Eyasu". The Archbishop also believed that it would perhaps be better towait till the Prince reached the age of 18 before crowning him. Therefore, it is by the title of Lij that Eyasu is remembered today. He may have been reluctant to wear the Imperial crown immediately, but he had no problem with granting a royal crown. Lij Eyasu proclaimed that his father would now become King of Zion. This title gave Ras (now king) Michael hegemony over all northern Ethiopia, not just Wollo, but Tigrai and Gondar as well. The northern nobility were furious that they were now being presided over by a former muslim whom they had formerly out ranked. In particular, the Tigrean princes were enraged as the title "King of Zion" had last been used by Emperor Yohannis IV, and they believed their family had been robbed of it's inheritance. Shewans and southerners were not pleased with this sign of the ascendency of the Wollo relatives ofthe heir. In particular, the much overlooked Ras Wolde Giorgis, cousin of Empror Menelik II was resentful that he, a senior prince and member of the Imperial House was relegated to the mere title of Ras while Michael was made King of the north. He had already been offended that he hadn't been appointed Regent for Lij Eyasu instead of Ras Tessema, and now he was being superseded in rank and title by a non-Solomonic scion of a Muslim clan. The prominent Tigrean noble, Dejazmatch Gebre Silassie Baria Gabr, who had played a key role in removing Empress Taitu from state authority, rebelled against the declaration of Michael as king of Zion,hoping the heirs of Emperor Yohannis would join him in the rebellion.

However, Seyoum Mengesha, grandson of Emperor Yohannis, and son of Ras Mengesha decided it would be prudent to obey the powers that be, and he joined King Michael against Gebre Silassie. The Dejazmatch was defeated in battle and fled. He went into hiding and did not emerge until Lij Eyasu's fall. Michael was crowned King of Zion on May 31st, 1914 at Desse, and rewarded Seyoum Mengesha with the title of Ras. In deferenceto the sensitivities of the heirs of Emperor Yohannis, Michael stopped using the title "King of Zion" almost immediately and began to use "King of Wollo".

Lij Eyasu did institute many major reforms. He ended the practice of creditors and debtors, plaintiffs and defendants being chained together when appearing before a judge. He forbade the practice of druging young boys with substances that supposidly gave them the supernatural power to detect theives. Lij Eyasu also ended the practice of the state seizing all the property of a convict, letting the prisoner's wife, children or other heirs take over the properties. He establishd the metropolitan police force for Addis Ababa for the first time. He also waged a far ranging corruption probe in the government, and spoke often of expanding the rights and protection of the interests of previously marginalized groups and particularly moslems. He advocated the establishment of a meritocracy, where one would advance on his abilities and talents rather than on birth,pedigree or patronage. He also did his expected Christian duty by buildingthe Church of Medhane Alem (Saviour of the World) at Kechene, and dutifully, if reluctantly, attended the feast days of various saints at their respective churches. He did not hide his impatience and boredom during these events. He wanted to reduce the power of the church and the feudallanded nobility and expand the powers of a cadre of the largely non-nobleprogressives who initially supported him. At the same time however he would compromise these acts and ambitions with his unpredictable behavior. He would continue to frequent the most disreputable parts of town into the wee hours with his freinds in drunken debauchery of women, and then engage his newly formed police force in shoot-outs.

When the police realized who it was that was engaging in gun battles withthem they were horrified, along with the rest of the population. While conducting his corruption probe, he also made sure that people he didn't like, but who were otherwise honest, were framed along with the corrupt.His boon companions, mostly men who were trained as gardeners, chauffeurs and other low level palace retainers, became the beneficiaries of his largese, recieving titles, property and concessions. Lij Eyasu even granted the customs of Harrar, a major source of income to his Syrian freind, Ydbilli, an act that infuriated his cousin Dejazmatch Taffari Makonnen, the erstwhile governor of Harrar. Ydbilli deliberately provoked Dejazmatch Taffari by refusing to aknowledge his jurisdiction as the regional governor. Eyasu spent a very large amount of time absent from the capital touring the Empire, which allowed his opponents to freely plot his downfall. He had dreams of expanding his Empire at the expense of the European colonialists that surrounded Ethiopia. He secretly encouraged the rebellion of Somalis in British and Italian Somaliland, sending them weapons in secret, and dreamed of pushing the Italians out of Eritrea. This angered the Europeans who began to secretly incite peopleagainst him, and encouraged his enemies. In particular, as World War I broke out in Europe, Lij Eyasu showed increasing signs of favoring Germany, Austria and Turkey over France, Britain and Italy. The British inparticular were alarmed at these signs as they feared that the increasinglypro-Islamic occupant of the Ethiopian throne might encite their moslem subjects in Somaliland and the Sudan against them and in favour of Turkey. This would complicate matters by opening a new front in the world war in their colonies, not something they could easily deal with.

These suspicions were encouraged by Lij Eyasu's repeated pro-German and pro-Turkish statements he made in private company. In particular, the allied diplomats in Addis Ababa looked with deep suspicion on the influence of Mrs. Hall, the German woman who had been the governess ofall the Imperial children during the reign of Emperor Menelik, and was something of a mother figure to Lij Eyasu. Lij Eyasu however would later also fell in love with a picture of Princess Jolanda of Italy and made inquiries as to how he might propose a marriage alliance with the House of Savoy. The full story of this incident is to be found further down in this history, but aside from amusing the bigoted Italian officials, these inquiries angered his own nobles who still regarded Italy as the enemy and were angered at the prospect of a Catholic European born Empress.

His domestic marital adventures were causing enough contraversy as it was. Lij Eyasu had divorced Romanawork Mengesha of Tigrai, and marriedSeble Wongel Hailu of Gojjam. He remained married to the Gojjame princess, and they had produced a daughter, Alem Tsehai Eyasu (later granted the title of Emebet-hoi by Emperor Haile Silassie). She would be Lij Eyasu's only legitimate issue. Lij Eyasu had a dream of creating a new nobility in Ethiopia. This nobility would replace the old, and would be comprised of various ethnic and religious backgrounds, no longer dominated by the Orthodox Christian elites. This Eyasuist nobility would be created by him personally. he would do this by having children with the daughters of the various noble, royal, princely families, and with the daughters of all the chiefs and sultans and imams in the land. They would be Christians, Muslims, Oromo, Amharia, Tigrean, Afar, Northern, Southern, Western, Eastern, just from every region and sub-group imaginable, and they would all be tied to the throne because they were the blood of Lij Eyasu. He set about this task with great relish and enjoyment, and had much illigitimate issue. Much to the horror of the Christian clergy, he "married" the daughter of the Afar Sultan Abu Bakr, as well as the daughter of the Sultan of Jimma Abba Jiffar, and the daughter of the Harrar nobleman Haji Abdulahi (the former Emir), and also the daughter of the Wellega heir of the Kingdom of Leqa Qellam Dejazmatch Jote. Dejazmatch Jote's daughter, the beautiful Askale Mariam was said to have been converted to Islam by Lij Eyasu and renamed Mumina. These poligamous marriages scandalized the church and the clergy, and the fact that these women were muslims did not endear him to the Orthodox church at all. The Wollo noblewoman TiruworkAligaz was then installed in a palace in Addis Ababa as an Imperial concubine, and even presented to foriegn diplomats as such. Lij Eyasu also had a vast number of illigitimate children with a host of other women of varying backgrounds. All this while he remained legally married to Woizero Seble Wongel, grandaughter of the King of Gojjam. It was rumored in the more vicious anti-Eyasu circles, that Lij Eyasu had given Woizero Seble Wongel a venerial disease. Lij Eyasu was said to never let apretty face pass by him without taking advantage of his Imperial authorityand his skill at seduction.

In 1915, on the occasion of the birthday of the Sultan of Turkey, Lij Eyasumade a suprise appearance in his capital after yet another extended jauntaround the Empire, and visited the Turkish mission to attend a celebrationdinner. It is said that Lij Eyasu declared that as the Patriarch of Alexandria, who was the head of the Ethiopian church, was an Egyptian subject of the Sultan of Turkey, Ethiopians were also the religious subjectsof the Sultan. He went on to proudly proclaim his own decent from the Prophet Mohammed, and presented the Turkish minister with an Ethiopianflag with the words "Allah is Great, and Mohammed is his Prophet" embroyedered in Arabic where the Lion of Judah would have been. The allied diplomats in Addis Ababa were extremely angered at this overture to the Turks, the nobles who had always seen the Turks as old enemies were furious, and the Orthodox Church hierarchy was scandalized. This unpredictable behaviour of the Emperor-designate, which had at first amused the indulgent people as youthful hot blood, something the young heir would outgrow, was now seen as scandalous, reckless and horrifying. The Ethiopian Orthodox Church was beyond disturbed, the hierarchs were deeply angered. Lij Eyasu's lurid marriage games were not limited to himself. As stated above, a high ranking woman of Imperial blood, Woizero Sakamyelesh was made to marry to his co-hort Tilahun. He also ordered his neice, Woizero Menen Asfaw (daughter of his much loved half-sister Sihin Michael) to divorce her husband, Ras Leul Seged, and marry his royal cousin Dejazmatch Taffari Makonnen as a way of keeping that prince loyal to him. Although they had known each other well in youth, Lij Eyasu and Dejazmatch Taffari would soon have a major falling out.

Lij Eyasu's repeated mission was a conciliation between the state andEthiopia's moslems. He spent much time in the moslem areas of the Empire meeting with their elders and nobles, and addressing their concerns, winning their affection. He ate with them and dressed like them,and visited their mosques and homes. To us today, it would appear as an admirable effort to address the wrongs commited against a large group of Ethiopians, and to make them feel a part of the family that was Ethiopia.

It was infact a very admirable desire that unfortunately came much to early, and would probably have met with greater success a few decadeslater. However, Lij Eyasu coupled this with some behaviour that simply was not acceptable in the Christian monarch of the Ethiopian Empire.

Blatta Tekle Hawariat, a Russian educated noble and progressive, who wasa friend of Eyasu, and initially very sympathetic to him, states in his unpublished autobiography that in conversation, Lij Eyasu said to him thatChristianity was "too difficult" a religion, and that he prefered Islam or Atheism. The Blatta was shocked speachless by this statement. He also wrote that Lij Eyasu, during a visit to Dire Dawa, entered a Roman Catholic Church to attend Mass (itself an act that would outrage most of his nobles and the Orthodox Church heirarchy), but had then proceeded tohorrify the Catholic clergy and faithful by lighting a cigerette and smoking it during the Mass. Ras Imiru Haile Selassie in his unpublished autobiograhpy states that he and Lij Eyasu argued ferociously over the issue of Lij Eyasu's disdain for the Orthodox faith itself, and his conduct.

Lij Eyasu spent much of his time in Harrar and Dire Dawa meeting with undesirable elements, and consuming large quantities of the locally grownnarcotic Khat. He made unannounced visits to French Somaliland and spent much time with the muslim notables of Tadjura and Djibouti consuming Khat and during one visit, completely emptied the funds of theEthiopian legation there in order to indulge in his habits. His frequenting Moslem homes and places of worship, his many wives and concubines, and his actions at the Turkish Embassy looked as if he was returning to his father's old roots and was converting to Islam. The Entente allied powers (France, Britain and Italy) did much to encourage this belief. They obtained pictures of Lij Eyasu in Moslem garb, some which may have beendoctored by them, but many which were authentic, and had them spread far and wide as evidence that Lij Eyasu was a secret moslem. However theevidence provided by these nobles who were close to him indicates a general lack of respect for religious institutions or rules. Lij Eyasu was dissipated and becoming a desolute figure comprable to the later Roman Emperors.

In February of 1915 Lij Eyasu marched north and ordered Ras Yimer, Ras Wolde Giorgis, and Wag Shum Gebre Hiwot to join him with their armies and cross the Mereb river and invade Eritrea. The time had come to returnEritrea to her motherland he said. Not everyone was convinced that this was something that could be done, and there were many on both sides who were eager to avoid a confrontation at this time. The Italians sent as an emmisary to Lij Eyasu, the Italian educated Ethiopian, Afework Gebre Yesus, a man who had served them often and well in their past and futureadventures in Ethiopia. Afework Gebre Yesus had been studying in Rome when Ras Makonnen had arrived in Italy to witness the ratification of the Treaty of Wuchale, and had warned him about the Italian interpretation ofa protectorate over Ethiopia. Later however, he had been key in convincing Lij Gugsa Darge to co-operate witht he Italians when they invaded Ethiopia with hopes of placing him on the throne, but was thwarted with the defeat of Italy at Adwa. Afework had later returned to Ethiopia and had a huge falling out with Empress Taitu over the quality ofreligious paintings he had ordered for her from Italy, and had left Ethiopiain anger after the Empress cursed him by saying "May you be crucified".

He now approached Lij Eyasu at the behest of the Italians, convincing himthat there was no way Eyasu could beat the Italians, and that he should try to encourage better ties with them. The crafty Afework Gebre Yesus, knowing Lij Eyasus's weakness, produced a photograph of Princess Jolanda Margherita of Savoy, Princess of Italy, (who would later marry Count Carlo Calvi di Bergolo) and urged the Lij Eyasu to enter into marriage ties with the House of Savoy to cement a new friendship with Italy. It was then that the thought of marriage to an Italian princess was born in Eyasu's mind. He proclaimed himself in love with the Princess, raved about her beauty and goodness, and then ordered his troops back to their homes. He then made what he imagined to be subtle inquiries as to the possibility of asking for the Princesses hand in marriage. What his long suffering wife Seble Wongel thought of all this can only be imagined.His behavior angered his generals and his nobles to no end while causing much gigling and laughter in the diplomatic circles in Addis Ababa as well as among Italian authorities in Asmara and Rome. Having made a fool of his monarch, Afework Gebre Yesus smugly scoffed at Eyasu's lack of sense, and returned to his Italian friends to tell them their colony in Eritrea was safe for the time being, thanks largely to the beauty of Princess Jolanda.

All these actions, Lij Eyasu's repeated insults against the nobles of his grandfather, his irresponsible behavior, his flirtation (real or fabricated) with Islam, his inconsistancy, his exteded absences from his capital, and his humiliating conduct vis-a-vis the Italians all conspired towards his inevitable downfall. The biggest mistake however was in alienating two men. The first was Fitawrari Hapte Giorgis, the man who commanded loyalty in the Army, and who had served Menelik as a loyal and devoted officer. He had been the bulwark who had protected Eyasu from challenges. Now however, insulted and relegated to a powerless position, and deeply angered by the prince's actions, he was determined to end thefarce that Lij Eyasu's reign had become. The other man that Lij Eyasu should not have alienated was his cousin, Dejazmatch Taffari Makonnen, who as the leader of the progressive elements of the nobility, seperated Lij Eyasu from the only group that might have been his support.

In July of 1916, Dejazmatch Taffari Makonnen was summoned to Addis Ababa from Harrar by Lij Eyasu, and he arrived promptly and went to thepalace for his audience. Upon arriving, he was told Lij Eyasu was not at the Palace. He was told that the prince had gone to Entoto. Lij Eyasu hadgone up Mt. Entoto to pray at St. Mary's Church and pay a courtesy visit on Empress Taitu at the old Palace there. Empress Taitu ordered that theold mesob (elaborate free standing basketwork table) that had been usedby here late husband Emperor Menelik be set for Lij Eyasu's meal. When Lij Eyasu arrived for his visit, he heeded the dire warnings of his co-hortsand refused to eat anything provided in the Empresses house for fear of poisoning. After a brief conversation, he returned to Addis Ababa, leavinga deeply insulted Empress. Almost as soon as he left, Dejazmatch Taffari,who had finally been able to evade the guards placed on him on Lij Eyasu's orders, arrived at Entoto Palace and paid his respects to the Empress. Once hostile to him, the Empress had later been won over by Taffari Makonnen's impecable manners and his deep respect for her. She warmly urged him to eat the untouched food set out for Lij Eyasu.

Dejazmatch Taffari demured, saying he was surely not worthy of eatingfrom the same mesob that Menelik the Great himself had eaten from.

Taitu assured him that he was, and he complied. One might speculate thatmuch was whispered between the two about the plight of the state and what could be done about it. Returning to his house in Addis Ababa, Dejazmatch Taffari was informed that Lij Eyasu had sent him a telegram from Harrar where he had gone almost immediately after leaving Entoto, informing him that he was removed from the governorship of Harrar and had been made governor of the wealthy gold and coffee producing province of Kaffa. Lij Eyasu also handed over the extremely lucrative customs office to his good friend, the Syrian born merchant Ydbilli, with the title of Bejirond, much to the anger of Taffari and much of the Ethiopian nobility. Dejazmatch Taffari was furious at the deception employed by Lij Eyasu, and was angry at being deprived of his birthright. He found himself confined to the capital, and unable to go anywhere without an armed escort guarding him under orders of Lij Eyasu. He wouldbe escorted to take up his new post in Kaffa soon he was told. The oath that he and Lij Eyasu to support each other, that they had given before the late Regent Ras Tessema, had been distroyed by Lij Eyasu himself. Lij Eyasu was even then traveling through the Ogaden visiting with the Qottuand Somali clans, assuring them that the Christian domination they had suffered under Dejazmatch Taffari was over. He entered Harrar city itself, staying at first with a wealthy Harrari merchant, and ordering the return of property that St. Michael's church had recieved in the city from moslemresidents in a land swap. Dejazmatch Taffari asked to be able to return to Harrar where his wife (Lij Eyasu's neice) was about to give birth to their second child. Lij Eyasu refused permission. In the mean time Lij Eyasu took up residence in the governors palace and anounced that henceforth he himself would govern Ethiopia's leading moslem city himself. He ordered Taffari's wife (his own neice) to vacate the governors palace immediately. Woizero Menen was reaching the end of her pregnancy and begged her uncle for permission to deliver the child before having to move. Reluctant, but not wanting to hurt the feelings of his favorite sister Woizero Sehin (Menen's mother), Eyasu agreed. Dejazmatch Taffari and Woizero Menen became the parents of the future Crown Prince Asfaw Wossen (Emperor-in-exile Amha Sellassie) in August of 1916. Lij Eyasu permitted Woizero Menen to remain in the house till the baby was Christened, then on September 6th, Woizero Menen, her little daughter Tenagnework, the infant Asfaw Wossen and Kegnazmatch (later Ras) Imiru were put on mules and sent to Dire Dawa to board the train to AddisAbaba. Now that the progressives in the Empire were disillusioned with LijEyasu, his break with Dejazmatch Tafarri provided this camp with a new progressive champion prince to support in his stead. The conservatives under Fitawrari Hapte Giorgis were just waiting for the the moment when Eyasu would be weakest. Without solid support from the progressive camp, Eyasu had virtually no chance. Little did Lij Eyasu realize that his days on the Throne of Solomon were numbered, and he had undercut himself.

Lij Eyasu, Emperor-designate of Ethiopia (1913 until 1916) when he was deposed by Dejazmatch Taffari Makonnen highly supported by the British,French and Italian Ministers and excommunicated by the Ethiopian Orthodox Church, which deprived him of his rights of succession. Beginingon August 30th 1916, the nobles under the leadership of Fitawrari Hapte Giorgis had begun to assemble to discuss the deposition of Lij Eyasu.

Dejazmatch Taffari Makonnen is often credited with "Bringing Down" Lij Eyasu. Although clearly a member of the group that brought Lij Eyasu down, the assembly of nobles was dominated by conservatives led by Fitawrari Hapte Giorgis, who was the moving force and leader of this Palace Pusch. The progressive camp that congregated around DejazmatchTaffari had not yet aquired the necissary numbers, power, or savy to pull off the dethronement of an Emperor. The government was being run by the powerful Negadras Haile Giorgis who has recently married Lij Eyasu's sister Woizero Sehin (mother-in-law of Dejazmatch Taffari) and was an Eyasu loyalist. He had got wind of the conspiracy and warned both the Coptic Archbishop Abune Mattiwos, and the second ranking church heirarch, Echege Welde Giorgis not to attend the conspirators meetings.

However, further investigation revealed to the Negadras that the conspiracy included virtually the entire aristocracy of Shewa, Gojjam, Beghemidir and Tigrai, and that only Wollo seemed resolutely loyal to Eyasu. The Negadras decided that he would prefer to be on the winning side in what was coming, so he showed up at the summoning of nobles that had suddenly been issued from the palace on September 28th by Fitawrari Hapte Giorgis. Upon arriving however, the Negadras was told hecould not enter unless he brought both the Archbishop and the Echege with him so that they could attend. He hurried off and returned with both clergymen. With the Orthodox church represented, the assembly could now claim full legitimacy. A list of charges was read against Lij Eyasu thatwere submitted as evidence of his conversion to Islam. A message from the diplomatic representatives of France, Italy and Britain (the Entente powers) had been circulated warning of the dangers to Ethiopia if Lij Eyasu allied the Empire with Germany, Austria and Turkey. The nobles for the most part seemed to care little about this message, but were stirred more deeply by what was charged to be his "islamic behavior" and evidence that was provided by some of these same diplomats. His frequenting the homes of moslems, his eating their food, his visits and prayers at their mosques, the flag he had presented to the Turkish legate,his multiple marriages (in order to ensure the participation of Lij Eyasu's father-in-law, Ras Hailu, much was made of the insult to the honor of Woizero Seble Wongel and the House of Gojjam), his affection for wearingmoslem clothes, were all discussed openly. The diplomats provided pictures of him in muslim Afar and Harrari costumes. There is reason to believe that some of the pictures provided by the western diplomats were forgeries, but at least two of these pictures were genuine. Less emphasis was put on the radical progressive views of the Prince that galled the conservatives so much, as these would have lost them the support of Dejazmatch Taffari Makonnen and his supporters. The Archbishop was clearly taken aback. He was dismayed at what was clearly a certain sympathy for Islam and moslems on the part of lij Eyasu. However, he seems to at first have stated that all this was not sufficient evidence to prove that Lij Eyasu had converted to Islam, even if it was highly disturbing. Abune Mattiwos may have wanted to hear from Lij Eyasu himself whether or not he had become a muslim. The nobles and the Ethiopian born clergy were furious. They began to all talk at once, telling the Egyptian monk that this was all more than enough evidence, and that he was making this more difficult than it had to be. The Echege declared (in violation of canon law) that he would ex-communicate Lij Eyasu himself if the Archbishop did not. After some further arguement the Archbishop relented. The Echege propelled the Archbishop to his feet and to the center of the room where he stood behind Abune Mattiwos, and both clerics stood holding up their hand crosses. The somewhat reluctant Archbishop Mattiwos then declared "From this day forh, you are all freed from your oath to the apostate Lij Eyasu, and I the humble servant of Godhereby excommunicate him from the body of the Holy Church." The nobles kissed the crosses of the two clerics and began to rush about organizing the deposing of a monarch and the succession of another.

Fitawrari Hapte Giorgis had his triumph. The question as to who should inherit the Throne of Solomon was in the air. The person who was next in the direct male line after the late Menelik II, Dejazmatch Taye Gulilat, waseliminated from the succession because it had been made very clear that Menelik had been strongly against such an occurance, and the wishes of the late Emperor were important to the nobility. Ras Wolde Giorgis, the senior prince of the House of Shewa at the time, was considered too advanced in age and in uncertain health. Dejazmatch Taffari had been involved in the conspiracy to remove Eyasu, but he was a progressive, and the plot had been largely engineered by the conservative camp around Fitawrari Hapte Giorgis. There were several things working againstTaffari Makonnen. First, the majority of the nobles were very conservative, while the Prince was a known progressive whose views theydisliked. Ideas of educating the masses, modern administration, reducing the role of the nobility, centralizing all military functions under the centralgovernment, a written constitution, and the abolition of slavery and increasing contacts with foriegn powers were not to their taste. Secondly,there were other members of the Imperial family who could put forward as strong a blood claim to the throne as Taffari, in particular, Dejazmatch (later Ras) Kassa Hailu, son of Woizero Tisseme Darge, who was the daughter of Ras Darge Sahle Selassie, and granddaughter of King Sahle Selassie of Shewa. Kassa's father Hailu Wolde Kiros was also the non- royal half-brother of Emperor Tekle Giorgis III. Dejazmatch Kassa Hailu however was not interested in being Emperor and refused to even be considered for the crown. A devout member of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church, he was a married priest, and considered his priestly title to be higher and greater than his royal one. He had generally conservative leanings but did share some views with the progressives. His friendship with his cousin Taffari was very firm, and he would be his closest confidant and advisor for almost half a century. Considered the senior Prince of the Blood after the death of his cousin Ras (later King) Wolde Giorgis, and the long time President of the Crown Council, he would become the second most powerful person in the Empire after the Emperorduring the reign of Emperor Haile Selassie. Another road block to Taffari'saccession to the throne was the same deep loyalty that the nobles felt to Menelik II, and to his blood line, that was the deterent to Taye Gulilat.

Although he did not face the strong opposition of the late Emperor that Taye Gulilat faced, Taffari was faced with the fact that the late Emperor's wish that Lij Eyasu succeed him was being overturned by nobles who stillremained passionatly loyal to Menelik's memory. There was the nagging feeling on their part that they were violating the will of Menelik the Great who they continued to love so deeply, the man whom they credited with making them the men that they were. Dejazmatch Taffari however was a consumate diplomat, and the nobles found him to be polite, courteous, attentive to their views, and appropriately respectful of the memory of Emperor Menelik, all qualities that Eyasu lacked. He had the Imperial blood that was required, and they believed he was someone who would always take their views into account when making decisions, even if he was a progressive. A compromise was struck. The following day, at the celebrations of Meskel (Feast of the finding of the True Cross) September29th, 1916, for the first time since the Queen of Sheba, a woman was proclaimed monarch of Ethiopia in her own right. Zewditu, daughter of Menelik II and Woizero Abechi, was proclaimed Empress, Elect of God, Conquering Lion of Judah, and Queen of Kings of Ethiopia. Dejazmatch Taffari Makonnen was proclaimed Crown Prince, Heir to the Throne, with the title of Ras. Fitawrarri Hapte Giorgis, the ring leader of the plot to dethrone Eyasu, was proclaimed the supreme commander of the armed forces. Ras Wolde Giorgis Aboye, the senior Prince of the Blood was madeKing of Gondar. In order to prevent a return to power of Empress Taitu and her family, her nephew Ras Gugsa Welle was compelled to accept hisforced separation from his wife, the new Queen of Kings. He was restoredto his governorship of Beghemidir however, and sent to Gondar to govern that province from the ancient capital. Empress Zewditu also added to thecharges against her nephew Lij Eyasu, that he had denied her father (his grand-father) Emperor Menelik, a proper and fitting funeral "..what was not even denied to a stranger murdered on the road..." She asked her subjects "Have you heard of Christian dying in the country where he lived, and it was forbidden to have his name said in church or celebrate his funeral?" She stated that for two years, three months and two days, she had held her father's corpse and wept in the palace until she had been driven away to Falle. This ofcourse was a symbolic claim as she was indeed in the palace mourning her father deeply while under arrest, but his body had been buried in the Se'el Bet Kidane Meheret Church on the palace grounds. Empress Zewditu had resolved to build the Ba'eta Le Mariam Monastery (Presentation of the Virgin Mary to the Temple Monastery, the feast day of which was the day the Emperor had died)also in the palace grounds, and re-bury the late Emperor there in Imperial splendor. This did much to win over the emensly pro-Menelik population to her side and against Lij Eyasu, who had played gugs as his grandfatherdied, and who had kept the news of Menelik's death from them so that they could not weep for their "father and Emperor". The people came out to bow and ulultate to the daughter of their beloved and much missed monarch of blessed memory. The child of "Imiye Menelik" whose very name brought tears to their eyes. The response to Zewditu was imense and solidified the new government's position. The reign of Lij Eyasu, the unproclaimed and uncrowned Emperor Eyasu V was over.

Every effort was made to avert an angry reaction from Lij Eyasu's father, King Michael of Wollo with his tens of thousands strong Wollo army. Publicstatements of Lij Eyasu's crimes always included phrases that Lij Eyasu had done everything he did against the advice and urging of his father, who had tried his best to set Eyasu on the right path. It was of no use. Michael of Wollo was furious at the deposing of his son by the Shewans, and he promptly made preparations for war. In Harrar, news of his deposition reached Lij Eyasu and utterly shocked him. He ordered that seven priests from the Church of St. Gabriel at Kulibi be brought before him. As they stood before him, he placed his hand on a bible and a silver cross and swore that he was and always had been a faithful Christian and son of the Orthodox chruch. Although this act shook the clerics into doubting the story of his conversion to Islam, it did not help him. A force of soldiers was headed to Harar to seize him he was told. He called on themoslem population to defend the city against the government, and soon attrocities were being commited by the Harrari moslems on Christians andanyone who remained loyal to Ras Taffari. This did not last long, as Eyasuand his loyalists realized that they could not hope to hold on to Harrar as their military force was dwindling as soldiers were leaving by the minute to join the government forces. It was decided that Lij Eyasu should leave Harrar and join what was left of his force with that of his father in Wollo and march on Addis Ababa from there. It was a sensible plan, and had hebeen able to get a message to King Michael, his chances might have been better. Instead he was only bearly able to leave the city before the forces of the Imperial government swept in. In fact an advance force had approached the town of Meisso, and were about to enter, when suddenly, Lij Eyasu with his escort came out of the town and passed directly infront of them on his mule. Without specific instructions to arrest him, and probably in awe and instinctive respect for the heir of Menelik, the officersand soldiers that had been sent out to fight and capture him, instead fell to their knees and kissed the ground as the ex-monarch passed after a very brief shoot out. Lij Eyasu had escaped. The government forces entered the city of Harrar which was in open rebellion. An angry battle followed and Eyasu's loyalists were defeated. Hundreds died, and many fled into the Ogaden desert to disappear forever, or to engage in banditry for a while before fading away. Eyasu cut through the Afar lowlands northwards to Wollo. He would arrive too late. What he hadn't realized was that the trusted noble he had sent to Wollo to tell his father to wait for his arrival before marching on Shewa, had been attacked by a swarm of bee's and was forced to take to bed to recieve treatment and had nevermade it to Desse. Eyasu's father had already mobilized a huge force of close to 80,000 troops and marched south from Desse without waiting for Eyasu and his forces. An army was quickly assembled by the government under Ras Leul Seged Atnaf Seged, former husband of Ras Taffari's wife, Woizero Menen, the Crown Princess. Ras Leul Seged and King Michael metin battle at Tora Mesk on October 17th, 1916. The army of Wollo was victorious, and Ras Leul Seged was killed in battle. Panic spread among the nobles in Addis Ababa. Thoughts of defeat and being charged with treason must have cast fear into all their hearts. However, Fitawrarri Hapte Giorgis was determined. He sent conciliatory letters to the King of Wollo to buy time, and quickly assembled a new army. The Wolloye's and the Shewans met for the second time in battle at Segelle on October 27th.More Ethiopian blood would be shed at this battle than even at Adwa. The forces of Wollo were crushed utterly, King Michael was captured, and Lij Eyasu's chances of restoration reduced to ashes. In November of 1916, the King of Wollo, with gold chains marking his royal status shackled to his arms and legs, was made to march through the crowded streets of Addis Ababa carrying a rock of repentance on his shoulders. The King went into the throne room of the Imperial Palace and kissed the floor before his enthroned sister-in-law, the new Empress of Ethiopia, and asked for her mercy. Ras Tafari was not at the submission ceremony in consideration of the feelings of his wife Menen, who was the granddaughter of the King of Wollo. Thus publicly humiliated, the king wasplaced under house arrest at Emperor Menelik's country house at Holeta with his close relatives. He would die there in 1918.

Lij Eyasu realized that his cause was lost. He knew that nothing could restore him now that his father was defeated and Wollo crushed. Lij Eyasuwould roam the Afar lowlands for years, eluding capture with a small bandof followers. He even fortified Magdalla at one point to make a great last stand in a Theodorean fashion, but had to retreat when his position their became untenable. He entered Tigrai, and secretly entered the protection of the Hereditary Prince, Ras Seyoum Mengesha. However, the Prince got wind of the fact that the government had learned he was protecting Lij Eyasu and once again Eyasu had to flee. He entered Eastern Tigrai, the domain of the other Tigrean hereditary prince, Dejazmatch Gugsa Araya. However, one of Lij Eyasu's entourage betrayed his location, and on January 11, 1921, Lij Eyasu was surounded in the Church yard he was hiding in by the soldiers of Dejazmatch Gugsa Araya. Before he could evenput up a fight, it was over. Dejazmatch Gugsa, grandson of Yohannis IV, walked into the presence of Eyasu Michael, grandson of Menelik II. Gugsa was so overcome with being in the presence of the man who might have been his Emperor, that he fell to his knees and kissed Eyasu's shoes before arresting him. Four months later, Gugsa handed him over to the government. The Empress rewarded her former step-son Gugsa (his father had been her first husband) with the title of Ras, and the Crown Prince would give him his neice, Princess Yeshashework Yilma as his wife. Eyasu himself was placed in the comfortable custody of his cousin Ras Kassa Hailu at Fiche, where he would remain. Empress Zewditu, inspite of her accepting the throne, seems to have been wracked with guilt for violating her father's will by going along with the deposing of Eyasu. She also seems to have had much personal affection for her nephew even though he had treated her abominably for years. However, Zewditu would die in 1930, and she was succeeded by Nigus Taffari Makonnen who became Emperor Haile Selassie. The new Emperor bore him deep resentment for not only violating their mutual oaths, but for treating his wife and newborn son with such disregard. Eyasu did not help matters by escaping from Fiche in 1931. He was quickly re-captured and a plot was uncovered that angered the Emperor deeply and lost Lij Eyasu the protection of Ras Kassa who was livid at the escape. The plot was an intreguing one. Apparently, Ras Hailu Tekle Haimanot of Gojjam was angry at not having been made king of Gojjam by Haile Selassie. He resented the fact that he had gone against his son-in-law Eyasu and supported his deposing and didn't get anything out of it. Negotiations to marry Crown Prince Asfaw Wossen to Hailu's daughter Dinkinesh had fallen through and the Prince had married Princess Wolete Israel Seyoum of Tigrai insted. Now he decided that one way or another he would become king of Gojjam, and a daughter of his would be an Empress, so he had arranged for Lij Eyasu's escape from Fiche. Money was paid to an Italian adventurer (with the knowledge of the Italian colonial government in Eritrea) to fly an airplane full of weapons to a field between Holeta and Addis Alem. Lij Eyasu would escape from Fiche and come to this location, and he and the weapons would be flown to Debre Marcos in Gojjam and Ras Hailu, where Eyasu would be proclaimed Emperor Eyasu V, and Seble Wongel Hailu restored as his only and legitmate wife and Empress (which would have required something be done about her new husband, Dejazmatch Yigezu Behapte). Ras Hailu would be proclaimed King of Gojjam and they would march on Addis Ababa and depose Haile Selassie. Unfortunately for Eyasu, he was unable to escape on the planned day, and by the time he reached the rendez-vous with the plane, the nervous Italian pilot had taken off and returned to Eritrea. Eyasu had then tried to make it to Gojjam by horse, but he was quickly captured and taken to Addis Ababa. Ras Hailu was arrested and found guilty of treason and sentenced to die. The Emperor commuted the sentence to life immprisonment, and confiscated Ras Hailu's considerable property. Lij Eyasu was put on a special train in Addis and taken to Harrar where he was imprisoned in a specially constructed prison in Garra Muleta in conditions much less comfortable than before, but far from uncomfortable.It is said he now had to live with bars over his windows, but that beautiful young women continued to be brought to him for his pleasure. Eyasuism would continue to rise it's head in small outbursts of rebellion here and there, especially in Wollo during the rest of Eyasu's life. However upon the facist Italian invasion in 1935, leaflets were said to have been dropped by Italian airplanes over Addis Ababa and Wollo announcing that Italy only wanted to restore "the legitimate Emperor Eyasu V". Only a short time later, it was announced that Abeto-hoi Lij Eyasu Michael, grandson of Menelik II, had died. Stories of his death are plentiful, but none can be confirmed. One states that Emperor Haile Selassie's father confessor, Abba Hanna Jimma, came to Garra Mulleta and personally strangled Lij Eyasu, and that his remains were tossed into the Shebele River or left somewhere in the open in the Ogaden desert. Another story, advocated byLij Eyasu's grandson, Lij Girma Yohannis, maintains that shortly before the Emperor was to leave for the northern front, he had Lij Eyasu brought to Addis Ababa, to his Guenete

Leul Palace (the Little or New Guibi as it was called then)which is now the campus of the Addis Ababa University. Lij Eyasu was killed there he claims, and buried in the yard of St. Markos Church in the palace compound with Empress Menen (Lij Eyasu's neice) and some of her Wollo relatives in attendance at the burial. Others maintain that Eyasu was poisoned and buried near Garra Mulleta. None of these stories can be confirmed, and are all rather farfetched. What is certain is that Lij Eyasu died sometime in late 1935. His legal wife, Seble Wongel Hailu had remarried Dejazmatch Yigezu Behapte, and would live a relatively peaceful and uncomplicated life as a respected senior member ofthe aristocracy and granddaughter of a king, if never an Empress.

Lij Eyasu's daughter Alem Tsehai Eyasu, the only legitimate great- granddaughter of Menelik II was given the title of Emebet-hoi by EmperorHaile Selassie, married a nobleman, and remains in Ethiopia, largely unharrased through the governments of Emperor Haile Selassie, the Derg,and the current Federal Republic of the EPRDF, the elderly matriarch of the Eyasuist house. She has never claimed the Imperial throne for herselfor her heirs. The same cannot be said of all her half brothers and nephews. Lij Yohannis Eyasu, son of Lij Eyasu by the daughter of the Sultan of Jimma was closely watched by Emperor Haile Selassie. Upon thefacist invasion, he led a guerilla band of soldiers against the Italians, and corresponded regularly with the exiled Emperor. This won him a degree offavour from the Emperor, and when Haile Selassie returned to Addis Ababa in triumph on May 5th 1941, Lij Yohannis Eyasu was riding in an open car, alone, immediately behind the Emperor. Given the title of Dejazmatch, he fell back out of favor, suspected in being involved in a host of anti-government plots, and ended his days banished from court in Jimma, quietly. Another son, Lij Menelik Eyasu was the son of Eyasu by the daughter of the Afar Sultan. He lived most of his early life in exile in the French territory of Afars and Issas (French Somaliland) which is the Republic of Djibouti today. Upon the news of the death of his father, the Italians had approached him about him accepting the Ethiopian throne as a puppet monarch when their defeat of Haile Sellassie at Maichew made victory probable for them. Lij Menelik refused saying that Ethiopia had only one Emperor. Emperor Haile Selassie was greatful and he recieved Menelik in audience when Lij Menelik returned to Ethiopia after the restoration. He lived quietly also, acting as an occasional emmisary of the Emperor to the Afars. Two other sons and a grandson have been much more agressive with their claims. Lij Melake Tsehai Eyasu was a boy of 16 when in 1936, Balambaras Abebe Aregai, and other notable guerilla leaders assembled on Amba Aradam and crowned him "Emperor of Ethiopia" as a symbol to rally the people against the Italians. In return "Emperor" Meleke Tsehai bestowed the title of Ras on Abebe Aregai. The Italians mobilized a huge force to hunt down this "Emperor" or the "little Nigus" as the Italians called him, and pitched battles were fought all over northern Shewa to find the pretender. Emperor Haile Selassie was furious at this afront to his title as well. However it was not the exiled Emperor orthe Italian occupiers that did Meleke Tsehai in, but malaria, which killed LijEyasu's son later that same year. Emperor Haile Selassie resented Abebe Aregai for this action for a long time, and it was only under the strong urging of his British allies that he desided to recognize and confirm the title of Ras for him in order to co-opt his soldiers into the liberation forces in 1941. Ras Abebe knew the Emperor was resentful and angry over this episode, but won him over with a spontaneous gesture. Shortly before theEmperor was about to board his car to re-enter his liberated capital from Mt. Entoto, Ras Abebe arrived with a huge guard of honor for the Emperor, rushed up to him and with tears streaming down his face, said in very simple language, without using words like Emperor or majesty, "I never thought I would live to see your face again!" and fell to his knees and embraced the Emperor's shoes, moving Haile Selassie deeply. All was forgiven, but not forgotten. Eyasuist pretenders and their supporters did not generate much sympathy from Emperor Haile Selassie. Another Eyasuist claimant was Lij Mesfin Eyasu. Unknown before the 1974 revolution, he claimed that he had been confined to a monastery by Emperor Haile Selassie, and had only been able to leave because of the revolution. His arrival in Addis at the hieght of the Red Terror was interesting in that he would attend mass at Holy Trinity Cathedral and cry out the full titles of the Emperor of Ethiopia in the places where the Emperor's name had now been omitted from the service. Even Lij Eyasu's known decendants voiced doubts as to the truth of whether or not he was a true son of Eyasu, and in fact never aknowledged him as such. Although he started out poor in Addis Ababa in the mid seventies, he ended up quite wealthy by the time the Derg fell. When a demonstration was held toask the new transitional government to demolish the statue of Emperor Menelik II in Addis Ababa by revisionists, Lij Mesfin conspicuously paid for the statue of his great grandfather be guilded with silver (much to the chagrin of many who thought this ruined a beautiful statue). Lij Mesfin also personaly wrote a letter to then Transitional-President (now Prime Minister) Meles Zenawi requesting that the wall built accross the main entrance to Holy Trinity Cathedral by the Derg be removed. The government printed his letter in the newspapers, and then dismantled the wall the following week much to the jubilation of Addis Ababa's Christian population. When the Emperor-in-Exile, Amha Selassie (former Crown Prince Asfaw Wossen) announced from Washington D.C. the formation of the Moa Anbessa monarchist movement, and gave some interviews to the press, Lij Mesfin made his own pretentions official by giving an interview to the Ethiopian Review Magazine and stating that "Prince Asfaw Wossen is welcome to return to Ethiopia" but that "I (Lij Mesfin) am the legitimate and true Emperor of Ethiopia." His public behavior was reduced to theatrics as he insisted people bow to him, kiss his hand and refer to him as "majesty". He ran afoul of the EPRDF government and rumors spreat that he was to be arrested although he remained free. He died in 1999 and was buried at the Bale Wold Church (Church of the Feast of God the Son, also known as the Church of the Four Heavenly Creatures) which is part of the complex of Holy Trinity Cathedral. The current Eyasuist pretender to the imperial throne of Ethiopia is Dr. Girma Yohannis Eyasu, known also as Lij Girma Yohannis Eyasu. Lij Girma is listed in the Almanach de Bruxelle as the Eyasuist claimant, with the claimed title of Crown Prince of Ethiopia, and his German wife Claudia Bertram with the claimed title of Princess Claudia Iyasu Menelik. Like Lij Mesfin, Lij Girma also claims to have been confined to a monastery (in his case Asebot Monastery) during the reign of Emperor Haile Selassie. He insists on carrying the style and titles Abeto Lij Girma Eyasu Menelik, Crown Prince of Ethiopia (both the name and titles other than the title of Lij are not legitimate, as they imply he is the son of Eyasu and that Eyasu is the son of Menelik, when in fact they are the grandson of each). Lij Girma Yohannis claims that all the post 1917 governments in Ethiopia are illegitimate. Eyasuist claimants have seen much of their support dwindle from broad support in the mid-twenties to virtually nothing today. They are outside of the mainstream monarchist movement in Ethiopia. (Text ends)

May 28, 1913: Imperial Ethiopian proclamation on immigration andcitizenship implemented.

December12, 1913: After his brief reigning, Lij Eyassu appears in the eastern lowlands of Harrarghe. Meantime, while at the city of Harrar kingEyassu V was officially removed by then “Council of Elders” in favor of hisaunt Woizaro Zawditu. Side note: After a brief and contraversial tenure on the throne, Lij Eyasu was officially deposed by the nobility and the church. He narrowly escapedarrest at Harrar, and fled to the Afar lowlands.His father, King Michael of Wollo declared war and marched his huge army into Shewa. After initial victory at Tora Mesk, the army of Wollow was defeated at Segelle. The king was captured and was made to parade through the streets of Addis Ababa on foot carrying a rock of repentance on his shoulders, his hands chained with gold chains. Although he was made to pay public homage to Empress Zewditu, both the Empress and the Regent met with him privately to enquire after his health, and accorded him every royal dignity.He was then placed under house arrest at the Palace in Holeta where he spent the rest of his life. Lij Eyasu, upon hearing of his father's defeat, fled into the Afar lowlands with a small band of men and remained a hunted fugitive for months. He tried to fortify Magdalla in a quasi-Theodoran attempt of a great heroic last stand there, but had to withdrawfrom that possition when it became untenable. He would eventually be arrested by Dejazmatch Gugsa Araya, son of Zewditu's first husband Ras Araya Selassie Yohannis, and grandson of Emperor Yohannis IV. Gugsa was rewarded with the title of Ras. Empress Zewditu was informed of the capture of Lij Eyasu by officials who were sent by the Crownprince and Fitawrari Habte-Giorgis, who had gone to Dessie to recieve him into custody. Instead, Lij Eyasu was handed over to his cousin Ras Kassa Hailuand placed in comfortable detention at Sellale (Fitche).

October 27, 1915: The Battle of Segelle fought, it was a victory for the supporters of Empress Zawditu over those King Eyassu V of Ethiopia PaulHenze stated that "the battle of Segale was Ethiopia's greatest battle for power seizure since the battele of Adwa in March 1896. Lij Eyssu's Chief supporter crushed, removing his ability to keep the Imperial throne.

Belligerents:

Regents of Ethiopia - 120, 000Loyalist to Lij Eyassu - 80, 000

Commanders & Army leaders Fitawrari Habta Giorgis DinagdeRegional king Mikael

Army Strength:

Regents of Ethiopia:

Loyalists to Lij Eyassu

Casualities & Loses Regents of Ethiopia: TBD Loyalists to Lij Eyassu: TBD

September 27, 1916: Woizaro Zawditu Menelik was summoned to the throne by the "Council of Elders". Ras Taffari Makonnen groomed to be the regent and Enderassie (head of government) behind the Empress ZawdituMenelik. His political thoughts and experiences in promoting the Ethiopianstate have proved him seminal and enduring.

In 1916: Asfaw-wossen (the future Crownprince), second child by WoizaroMennen Asfaw was born by the time their father Ras Taffari Makonnen was about to become Regent and Crown Prince under the largely nominal reign of Empress Zawditu.

October 27, 1916: A month later after the removal of his son, king Michael (Ali) of Wollo marched to south from Dessie with 80, 000 troopsto protect Lij Eyassu, his son, but was unsuccessfully defeated by the Shoan army at the battle of "Sagalle Meda".

In November, 1916: Woizaro Zawditu was crowned Empress and Queen ofKings at the Cathedral of St. George. However, the nobility was reluctant to give further influence to the family of the Dowager Empress Taitu, the widow of Menelik II.

Side note;- Her Majesty Empress Zawditu on her Coronation Day, flanked by her cousin, Ras Taffari Makonnen, the Crownprince and Regent Plenipotentiary (Bale mulu siltan enderassie). Zawditu to be proclaimed. Empress, Queen of Kings, Elect of God, and Lion of Judah, the first womanto sit on the Imperial Throne in her own right since the Queen of Sheba.

Her cousin Dejazmatch Taffari Makonnen was declared Heir to the Throne with the title of Ras at the same time. The original plans seem to have been that Fitawrari Habte-Giorgis would preside over the cabinet, that theCrownprince Taffari would be in charge of all Government Affairs, and thatthe Empress would reign as a symbol over it all advised by the cabinet of ministers.The removal of Eyassu V, in favor of his aunt Woizaro Zawditu Menelik and the death of Emperor Menlik II is officially announced this time. Empress Zawditu Menelik to be coronated by both the Orthodox Church and the "Council of Elders" as "Empress Zawditu Menelik Queen ofKings of Ethiopia". Empress Zawditu was the daughter of Emperor MenelikII, by Woizero Abechi, a woman of mid-level nobility, born shortly after Menelik returned to Shoa following his captivity at Maqdalla. Woizero Abechi died while Zawditu was still a very young child, so Zawditu was raised by her father, in the care of nannies, and was closer to him than any other person save his wife Empress Taitu, believed that Zawditu was overly familiar with the palace. Zawditu also had a half sister, Woizero Shewaregga Menelik, the mother of Lij Eyasu, and a half brother, Prince Asfaw Wossen Menelik, who died in 1888 while still a child. Menelik IIs modernization programs were to be continue by daughter Zawditu.

Empress Zawditu Menelik is the first woman ever to become monarchial head of an internationally recognised state in Africa in recent history. Shewas enthroned Ethiopia for 13 years, and 187 days. Dejazmatch Balcha Safo appointed again to serve as Shum (Governor) ofSidamo.

In 1917: The regent Ras Taffari Makonnen, assembled “Mehal-sefaris” as"Imperial Bodyguard" unit under his direct control.

In 1919: The League of Nations (LoN) founded by independent and non-colonized nations.

The League of Nations (LoN) founded by independent and non-colonized nations. An official Ethiopian goodwill mission was sent to the United States to felicitate the Allied powers on their victory during the First WorldWar. The four-person delegation included Dejazmach Nadew, the nephew of Empress Zawditu and Commander of the Imperial Army, along with Blatten-Geta Heruy Wolde Selassie, Mayor of Addis Ababa, Kentiba Gebru,Mayor of Gondar, and Ato Sinkas, Dejazmach Nadew's secretary.

January 11, 1921: Lij Eyassu was captured and taken into custody undersupervision of Ras Kassa Haile Dargie at then Fitche detention camp.

September 14, 1921: A printing house entitled Birhanena Selam printing press launched at landmark in Addis Ababa. BSPP then afterward seriouslyengaged in printing spiritual books, national exam papers, noble advices and criticisms, daily news, cabinet reshuffles, Then printer machines were propelled by a number of manual labourers (የ ወቅቱ ማተሚያ መሣሪያ ዎች በእግር እየ ተረገጡ የ ሚንቀሳቀሱ መሣሪያ ዎች ሲሆኑ የ ሠራተኞቹ ቁጥር ከሰባት እስከ አሥራ-ሁለት እንደነበር ተዘግቧል።) at the time.

January 14, 1922: The foremost and the future state controlled “Birhanena Selam Haile Selassie I printing house” innaugurated.

In 1923, Ethiopia became a member of the League of Nations. Dejazmatch Nassibou Ze-Ammanuel appointed Consulate-General ofEthiopia in then Eritrea, the protectorate of Italia.

March 9, 1924 (1st Megabit, 1916 Eth. Calendar), Empress ZewdituMenelik approved a bill (order of awaj) on dual citizenship.

In 1924: HRH Crownprince Ras Taffari Makonnen visited the Yemeni townof Eden as to make a political consultation with then exiled Eritrean unionist dissidents.

April 16, 1924: Ras Tefferi Makonnen, the then Regent of Ethiopia, set outon an international tour. The group of Ethiopian delegation were visited Jerusalem, Cairo, Alexandria, Brussels, Rome, Amsterdam, Stockholm, London, Geneva, and Athens. Meantime, the Emperor met with King VictorEmmanuel III and the Crown Prince Umberto during a visit to Italy.

Side note: HRH Ras Taffari Makonnen, the then Regent of Ethiopia made his longest European tour from the 16th of April to 4th of September, accompanied by Ras Seyoum Mengesha of Tigre, Ras Hailu Tekle-Haimanot of Gojjam, Ras Mulugeta Yigezu of Iloubabour province, Ras Makonnen Endalkatchew, and Blatten-Geta Hiruy Wolde-selassie, the delegation on it's way was able to attend the Amsterdam summer Olympicgames. HRH Ras Taffari Makonnen the royal Crownprince and GovernmentRegent (Enderassie) was not yet crowned as emperor of Ethiopia. Il Duce Mussolini who felt the humiliation of the Italian defeat by the Ethiopians and the respectful reception that Regent Haile Selassie received, especially by those countries who were allies of Italy and the wide publicity and admiration he was being accorded humiliated Mussolini's andincreased his desire for revenge. But to camouflage the indignity, Il Duce invited Ras Taffari Makonnen the Regent to stay at the Villa Torlonia, making it appear as if Ethiopia were under the Italian protectorate and that he enjoyed an indirect influence!

September 6, 1924: The first musical Band of "Arba Lijoch" later known asthe Ethio-Armenians musical show team arrived in Addis Ababa, and alongwith their band leader Kevork Nalbandian became the first official orchestra of the nation' But given the shrinking numbers, the fight can feel daunting. Armenian immense contribution to Ethiopia: Armenian goldsmiths, traders and architects were invited to settle in Ethiopia by the Crown Prince HRH Ras Taffari Makonnen with the ties among the Ethiopianand Armenian Orthodox churches, the community thrived. After the Armenian Genocide in 1915, Ras Taffari Makonnen, Ethiopia's regent who later became Emperor, opened his arms to the Armenians adopting 40 orphans, known as "the Arba Lijoch"as custodian. In return, the Ethio- Armenians proved fiercely loyal. Side note: Kevork Nalbandian also composed the music for Marsh Taffari (worded by Yoftahé Negusé), which was the Imperial National Anthem from 1930 to September, 1974. Armenians had traded with Ethiopia from as early as the first century AD. Besides the obvious religious affiliation, there is also the story of the Arba Lijoch children coming to Ethiopia after the Armenian Genocide. "Arba Lijoch" were a group of 40 Armenian orphans who had escaped from the atrocities in Turkey, and were afterwards adopted by Haile Selassie I of Ethiopia, then Crown Prince Ras Taffari. He had met them while visiting the Armenian monastery in Jerusalem. They impressed him so much that he obtained permission fromthe Armenian Patriarchate of Jerusalem to adopt and bring them to Ethiopia, where he then arranged for them to receive musical instruction. Armenians have a much older presence in Ethiopia. Indeed one of the first recorded diplomatic missions to Europe from Ethiopia was led by Matthew the Armenian who traveled to Portugal and Rome at the request of the Dowager Empress Eleni of Ethiopia to appeal for aid against Islamic incursions into Ethiopia in the 16th Century.

There is a small community of Armenians in Ethiopia, primarily in the Ethiopian capital Addis Ababa. Armenians had traded with Ethiopia from the first century AD. The Armenian presence in Ethiopia is historic. On a religious basis, the Ethiopian Church and the Armenian Apostolic Church are both members of the Oriental Orthodox communion of churches alongside Coptic Orthodox, Syriac Orthodox, and Malankara Orthodox Syrian Church (India) churches. The Armenian inhabitants in Ethiopia areArmenian Apostolics (Orthodox Armenians) belonging to the Armenian Apostolic Church. The Armenian Apostolic (Orthodox) have their own church, Sourp Kevork (St. George) Armenian Apostolic Church in Adis Ababa. The first-ever pastor of the Armenian community was Rev.

Hovhannes Guevherian.

December 31, 1924: Berhanena Selam PP started it's operation with alocal publication entitled as “Birhanena Selam” (ብርሃንና ሰላም ማተሚያ ቤት እ.ኢትዮ.አቆጣጠር ታህሳስ 23 ቀን 1917 ዓ/ም በአንዷት “ብርሃንና ሰላም”በተሰኘች አነስተኛ ጋዜጣሕትመት ሥራውን ጀመረ።)

In 1926: Ten years before his invasion of Abyssinya, Marshal Pietro Badoglio,Chief of Staff of the Italian Armed Forces, had instructed GeneralMalladra to carry out a thorough study of Eritrea’s defenses preparations for war, including the possible use of poison gas, either through aerial bombing or through artillery shelling. Ten years later, in 1936, Badoglio, who directed Italy’s invasion of Ethiopia from Colonial Eritrea and Somaliland, did it precisely.

In 1927: Fit-Awrari Habta-Giorgis Dinagde horsenamed as “Abba-Mela”, ex-Ethiopian Minister of War during the reigns of Menelik II, Eyasu V, and Empress Zawditu Menelik, was passed away at age of 76. Fitawrari Habta-Giorgis Dinagde (Abba-Mela) had played a leading role in several locall battles. He was also central figure in the coup which removed Taitu Bitul Menelik from power during the period of Menelik II's incompetency as wellas the 1916 coup which removed Eyassu V.

February 1928: Addis Ababa - Djibouti Railroad transformed. Ras TafariMakonnen layed a foundation stone in Addis Ababa La Gare station.

August 6, 1928: Italia, Ethiopia signed a bilateral co-operation agreementexists for twenty years.

August 27, 1928: Italia, Ethiopia signed a non-agression treaty under theinternationally acknowledged agreement known as the “Kelogg-Braind Pact”

October 7, 1928: Ras Taffari Makonnen was initially crowned in "RoyalHighness" (Bale Mulu Siltan Enderassie) title.

May 7, 1929: There are signed international conventions… .There is agreement to regulate water usage between Egypt and Sudan. Great Britain representing then Anglo-Sudan rule signed equitable water sharingdeal with Egypt by alighning Ethiopia, the main source of the river. (ሱዳንን የወከለችው እንግሊዝ ኢትዮጵያን አግልላ ከግብጽ ጋር ባደረገችው ሰምምነት፡ ግብጽ 48 ቢሊዮን ሜትር ኩብ ውሃ፣ ሱዳን 4 ቢሊዮን ሜትር ኩብ ውሃ እንዲደርሳቸው ተከፋፍለዋል። ከዚህ ተነስታ ግብጽ የናይል ተፋሰስ ሀገሮች የውሃ ፕሮጀክቶችን ማንባት እንደማይችሉ አስጠነ ቀቀች።)

August 18, 1929: Imperial Ethiopian Air Force was initially organized byMishka Babitchef, the first Ethiopian pilot, who was of Russian descent.

March 27, 1930: After one year and seven months, of Ras Taffari's coronation, Empress Zawditu Menelik is passed away due to natural sickness (Diabetes) - Following Empress Zawditu's Death, Nigus Taffariwas given full title

April 2, 1930: Empress Zawditu passed away of serious ilness of typhoid.Ras Taffari Makonnen rose to the throne in November, 1928 he will get the title "Negus Taffari" meaning for King, he was then 36, and most of his life was still as Ras or a prince, not a king untill November, 1930.

Side note;- The Empress who was enthroned the nation from 1916 until her death. The Empress was then to be succeeded on the throne by NegusTaffari Makonnen who took later the coronation name of "Emperor Haile- selassie I". Empress Zewditu the first woman head of state in modern Africa., Conquering Lion of Judah, Elect of God, Queen of Kings of Ethiopia. Zewditu was the eldest of Menelik's three acknowledged children.Her younger sister was Woizero Shewaregga Menelik, daughter of a Palace servant named Woizero Desta. Shewarrega went on to marry Ras (later Negus) Mikael of Wollo and became the mother of Lij Iyasu and Woizero Zenebework Mikael. Menelik also acknowledged a son Abeto Asfaw Wossen Menelik, who died in childhood. Zewditu also had half-siblings on her mother's side.

August 27, 1928: Italia, Ethiopia signed a non-agression treaty under theinternationally acknowledged agreement known as the “Kelogg-Braind Pact”

September 28, 1930: Ethiopia joined the League of Nations (LoN).

November 2, 1930: The equestrian statue of Emperor Menelik II, “the victor of Adowa” erected at the present Menelik II square in Addis Ababa.

Side note: The statue was erected by Emperor Haile Selassie I and dedicated on the day before his coronation in memory of his great predicessor, and is closer to the City Hall. The distance markers on all thehighways in Ethiopia mark the distance to their location from the base of the statue of Emperor Menelik II in this Square. Every year, on the anniversary of the victory of the Battle of Adowa on 1st March i.e. 23 Yekatit in local calendar, the Emperor would lay a wreath at this statue after attending mass at St. George Cathedral because the victory hadoccured on the day of St. George.

November 3, 1930: November 2, 1930: HRH Ras Taffari Makonnen wascrowned as "Negusa-NagastHaile Selassie I, the Conquering Lion of theTribe of Judah, King of Kings of Ethiopia and Elect of God".

Side note: His Royal Highness Ras Taffari Makonnen who was Ethiopia'sregent from 1916 to 1930 under Empress Zawditu Menelik officially crowned as "Emperor Haile-selassie I" of Ethiopia.

He was the heir to a dynasty that traced its origins back to King Solomon and Queen of Sheeba like his predecessors. His royal highness Ras TaffariMakonnen whose father served as senior army general was born on the 23rd of July, 1892 in Jarso district, near the eastern city of Harrar, as many say a boy was born, not to be a prince, he served-in titular governorships of Selale, Gondar and Sidamo starting from the year 1906 until 1917, Ras Taffari groomed to be the regent behind the Empress Zawditu Menelik, his political thoughts and experiences in promoting unityand stability have proved seminal and enduring, and with the passing of Empress Zawditu Menelik, he rose to the throne in November, 1928 he will get the title "Negus Taffari" meaning for King, he was then 36, and most of his life was still as Ras or a prince, not a king untill November, 1930.

On the day before the coronation, Prince Henry Duke of Gloucester wasthe third son of King George V of Great Britain and younger brother of Kings Edward VIII (abdicated) and George VI. He was uncle to Queen Elizabeth II. He attended the Emperor's coronation representing his father. The Duke and Duchess of Gloucester were probably the Imperial family's closest British Royal friends. The Duchess of Gloucester was born Lady Alice Montagu-Douglas-Scott, and was the daughter of the7th Duke of Buccleuch, one of the biggest landowners and highest rankingaristocrats of Scotland. Can be noticed how deeply courtesy to the crowned king.

Empress and Emperor were greeting them while a visiting British naval marshing-band played the newly composed national anthem, the British 300,000 pound sponsored show started, on the coronation day of 3rd of November,1930 many distinguished guests to arrive local and foreign dignitaries attended at Addis Ababa on horsebacks, train, and airplanes, on the 3rd of November, 1930 he was crowned at the Addis Ababa Cathedral of St. George, by tradition back to King Solomon and the Queenof Sheeba, many have wrote about this day. He was then proclaimed HaileSelassie I, Emperor of Ethiopia, meaning for the "power of the Trinity", some know about that the great war b/n Islam and Christianity like we hear so much nowadays, was won by Selassie meaning the "Trinity", the name he took after 1930. The "king of kings of Ethiopia", "Elect of God", "the lion of Judah" were of his other titles. Prince Makonnen Haile Selassie, (16 October 1923–13 May 1957) was the second son, and second youngest child, of Haile Selassie of and Empress Menen Asfaw wasmade Mesfin (Duke) of Harrar upon the coronation of his parents.

In the late 1930: The monarchial head king (Negus) Haile-selassie inviteda Belgian military mission to train and moderize the Ethiopian military, which included the latter imperial bodyguards known locally as "Mehal- Sefaris" later “Kibur-Zebegnas”.

In 1930: Tenagne-Worq Haile Selassie, at a young age she was married toDejazmatch Desta Damtaw, to whom she bore four daughters, Aida, Ruth,Seble and Sophie, as well as two sons, Amha (who died in adolescence) and Eskinder who eventually became Commander of the Imperial Ethiopian Navy until the last years of the imperial regime.

March 31, 1930: The first war planes involved Ethiopian civil war, at the battle of Anchem. Three of the biplanes from Ethiopia's air arm played a dramatic role in a battle between Crown prince Ras Taffari Makonnen (not yet crowned as Emperor) and conservative forces led by King Mikael of Wollo seeking his ouster. During the Battle of Anchem, biplanes were effectivelyused to give Ras Taffari’s forces the upper hand.

November 2, 1930: HRH Ras coronated as king of Ethiopia.

Emperor Haile Selassie after his official coronation, sent forth the first batch of Ethiopian students to continue their education abroad. Almost a dozen Ethiopian students likewise went to the United States. They included Makonnen Desta, who studied anthropology at Harvard, and laterbecame an interim Ethiopian Minister of Education Makonnen Haile, who studied finance at Cornell, and Ingida Yohannes, veterinary medicine at New York. Three other students, Melaku Beyan, Beshah Wurred Hapte Wold and Worku Gobena, went to Muskingum, a missionary college in Ohio, two of them later transferring to Ohio State University. Melaku Beyan, who was one of the two who attended Ohio State, later received his medical degree at Howard Medical School in Washington, D.C.

Italy builds a fort at Walwal, an oasis in the Ogaden territory of Ethiopia,as part of their gradual encroachment into what had been generally considered Ethiopian territory.

November 3, 1930: Empress Zewditu commissioned the statue of of her father Menelik II in the centre of Addis Ababa, but died before it was completed, and so HRH Ras Taffari Makonnen inaugurated it a day beforehis coronation.

A year after his coronation, Emperor Haile Selassie used a three points star with three linked rings as a personal emblem. The three points star was known as the “Trinity Star”, and symbolized the Holy Trinity for whomthe Emperor was named (his baptismal name Haile Selassie means "Power of the Trinity"). He also used the entwined letters Ke-Ha-Seh, (for Kedamawi Haile Selassie, or Haile Selassie the First) sometimes surmounted with a crown and sometimes without. He was often refered toas Ke-ha-s for short
A rumor spreaded that Lij Eyassu Aba-Tena has escaped from a restrictedimprisonment in Fitche from where he was under control of Ras Kassa Haile.
Emperor Haile-Selassie removed Abba-Jiffar II from power and replacedhim with son-in-law Ras Desta Damtew as Governor (Shum) of Jimma while Abba-Jiffar was allowed to remain symbolic king of Gibe.
Onesimos Nesib who exists between1856-1931, also known as “Abba Gamachis” carries a unique position in the written literature of the Oromopeople of Ethiopia. After converting to Lutheran Christianity by the Swedish missionaries, he would go on to translate the Christian Bible intothe Oromiffa language.
July 16, 1931: King Haile Selassie introduced the first modern constitutionfor Ethiopia intended to officially replace the "Fetha-Negest" which had been the supreme law since the middle ages. Ethiopia's first written constitution, providing for a bicameral legislature. The constitution kept power in the hands of the nobility.
Side note: King Haile selassie I has proposed the first Constitution in hisfree will.The Ethiopian Constitution was a simple document of 55 articlesarranged in seven chapters. It was promulgated in "an impressive ceremony" held on 16th July, 1931 in the presence of Emperor Haile Selassie I, who had long desired to proclaim one for his country.
In 1931: King Haile Selassie the emperor of Ethiopia, formally requested that the international community use the name Ethiopia (as it had alreadybeen known internally for at least 1600 years) instead of Abyssinia, and the issuing Bank of Abyssinia also became the Bank of Ethiopia.
Ethiopia's First 500 Thalers banknote.
The Bank of Abyssinia. Obverse: Abyssinian warrior at left, Lion of Judahat top center, Bank of Abyssinia building right center, red manuscript annotation in Amharic in field by printers. Printed by:

Bradbury Wilkinsonand Company, New Madlen in Surrey, England.

Thus, the pre-1931 currency could be considered the Abyssinian birr and the post-1931 currency the Ethiopian Birr (ETB), although it was the samecountry and the same currency before and after.

The first Birr issued (1855–1936): In the 18th and 19th centuries, MariaTheresa thalers and blocks of salt called "amole tchew" (አሞሌ) served ascurrency in Ethiopia. The thaler was known locally as the Birr (literally meaning "silver" in Ge'ez and Amharic) or ታላሪ taleri. The Maria Theresathaler was officially adopted as the standard coin in 1855, although theIndian Rupee and the Mexican Dollar were also used in foreign trade.
The talari (thaler, dollar, birr) became the standard unit on 9 February 1893 and 200,000 dollars were produced at the Paris Mint in 1894 for Menelik II. The talari, equivalent to the Maria Theresa thaler, was dividedinto 20 ghersh (also guerche or gersh, the name coming from the Ottoman Empire's qirsh) or 40 bessa (a small copper coin).
A new Ethiopian coinage appeared (in 1903). The new silver birr maintained the same weight and fineness as the old, but there was now aquarter-birr and a silver ghersh, the latter 1/16 the weight of the birr. Themoney of account now became 1 birr' = 16 ghersh = 32 bessa.
The first Birr: Between 1894 and 1897 copper coins were introduced in denominations of 1⁄100 and 1⁄32 birr, together with silver 1 ghersh, ⅛, ¼, ½ and 1 birr, and gold ¼, ½ and 1 werk. In 1931, a new series of coins was introduced consisting of copper 1 and 5 metonnyas, and nickel10, 20 and 50 metonnyas.
Side note: Thousands from the drought striken and infertile regions of Wollo and Tigrai started a forcible resettlement programme known as "Villagization" in the western and southwestern part of the country. The new relocation program is known as "Sefera" locally. The objectives of theprogram, which grouped scattered farming communities throughout the country into small village clusters, were to promote rational land use; conserve resources; provide access to clean water and to health and education services; and strengthen security. Government guidelines stipulated that villages were to house 200 to 300 households.
Inauguration of the first Commercial aeroplane ኀ ሠረ -ኃ ይ ለ ሠ ላ ሴ (Nisre HaileSelassie) Addis Ababa Ethiopia.
December 1931: His Majesty King Fuad I of Egypt met with young CrownPrince of Ethiopia Asfaw Wossen Haile Selassie in Cairo.
In early 1932:The Imperial Ethiopian government divided the northern Tigre province into Western and Eastern administrative parts to effectivelyresolve power sharing among arch rivals Ras Gugsa Araya-selassie Yohannes of Eastern Tigre, and Ras Seyoum Mengesha Yohannes of Western Tigre, whose both were great grandsons of the late emperor Yohannes VI.

In April, 1932: Ras Gugsa Araya-selassie, an army commander and grandson of emperor Yohannes VI has died, and his son Haile-selassie Gugsa, replaced him in a position as "Shum" of eastern Tigre with the titleof “Dejazmatch.”

July 14, 1932: Dejazmatch Haile-selassie Gugsa married Leult Zenebe- worq, emperor Haile-selassie's second daughter at her teen age. A wedding reception given by Emperor Haile Selassie for his daughter Princess Zenebework's marriage to Dejazmatch Haile Selassie Gugsa. Thebride and groom are seated on the Emperor's left. Dejazmatch Haile Selassie Gugsa is the grandson of Emperor Yohannes, would become famous for his collaboration with the fascist invasion just a few years later.

In November, 1932: A year later after his announcement, the emperor introduced an imperial parliamentary chamber of deputies for the firt time.

June 24, 1933: A Protocol Agreement to a restriction of Mustard gas on wars signed among members of the League of Nations (LoN) in Geneva.

September 6, 1933: Etege Menen Asfaw at Jordan Monastery. Down the Jordan Valley from the Sea of Galilee to the Dead Sea.

Empress Mennen visits Jerusalem with members of the Ethiopian clergy onway to visit the Church of the Holy Sculpture.

Side note: Empress Menen asfaw was known to be active in promoting women's issues in Ethiopia, was Patroness of the Ethiopian Red Cross, andthe Ethiopian Women's Charitable Organization. She was also patroness ofthe Jerusalem Society that arranged for pilgrimages to the Holy Land. Shefounded the Empress Menen School for Girls in Addis Ababa, the first all girls school which had both boarding and day students. Girls from all over the Empire were brought to the school to receive a modern education, encouraged by the Empress who visited it often and presided over its graduation ceremonies. The Empress gave generously, as well as sponsored programs for the poor, ill and disabled. She was also a devoutly religious woman who did much to support the Ethiopian Orthodox Church.She built, renovated and endowed numerous churches in Ethiopia and in the Holy Land. Prominent among these are the St. Raguel Church in AddisAbaba's Merkato district, the Kidane Mehret (Our Lady Covenant of Mercy)Church on Mount Entoto, and the Holy Trinity Monastery on the banks of the River Jordan in the Holy Land. She gave generously from her personalfunds towards the building of the new Cathedral of St. Mary of Zion at Axum, but did not live to see it completed.

November 3, 1933: The King of Abyssiniya: King of Kings who claims unbroken descent from King Solomon guided by principles of Genuine democracy----------he lays cornerstone of his country's first imperial parliament on the 3rd anniversary of hiscoronation.

June, 1934: Woizaro Mulu Emebet Imru from Ethiopia started training (1934 to 1936) as Africa’s 1st female Pilot completing the course in 1936.She was also to become Ethiopia’s first licenced female pilot. In 1936 theAmerican Newspaper named her, “The lady Bird”

March 25, 1934: Princess Zenebeworq Haile-Selassie the second daughterof Emperor Haile-Selassie of Ethiopia, and his wife Empress Mennen Asfaw, died amid allegations of poor treatment at age 16, and buried in the royal family crypt under Holy Trinity Cathedral in Addis Ababa.

In 1934:Crownprince Asfaw-wossen Haile-selassie married Leult Lete- Mariam Seyoum, the daughter of Ras Seyoum Mengesha Yohannes, governor of western Tigre province. The two marriages were meant to cement ties between the reigning Shoan branch of the Imperial dynastywith both rival sides of the Tigrean branch of the dynasty.

In 1934: Ethiopia Scout Association opened a school in Addis Ababa....

The Scout movement was first introduced in Ethiopia around 1919.

September 29, 1934: Italy and Ethiopia release a joint statement refutingany aggression between each other.

In November, 1934: Holatta HSI Military Training College establishedunder Swedish officers with first 148 batch of recruited trainees.

In November 23, 1934: An Anglo–Ethiopian boundary commission discovers the Italian force at Walwal. British members of the delegationsoon retire to avoid an international incident.

In December 5, 1934: Tensions result in a border clash at Walwal.

In December 6,1934: Abyssinia protests Italian aggression at Walwal.In December 8, 1934: Italy demands apology for Walwal incident.

In January 3, 1935: King Haile Selassie of Ethiopia sent 1st appeal to theLeague of Nations (LoN) for arbitration into the Walwal incident.

January 7, 1935: On Pierre Laval's visit to Rome, the French and Italianssign a pact which, among other conditions, allows Italy a free hand in dealing with Ethiopia in exchange for Italian support against German aggression.

February 23, 1935: Benito Mussolini sends General Emilio De Bono toEritrea and Marshal Rodolfo Graziani to Italian Somaliland along with 100,000 Italian troops to prepare for the invasion of Ethiopia, who heterms as “to liberate or enable civilize Ethiopians”.

March 8, 1935: King Haile Selassie of Ethiopia sent 2nd appeal to the League of Nations (LoN) again, requests arbitration and notes well Italianmilitary build-up.

March 13, 1935: Italy and Ethiopia agree on a neutral zone in theOgadien.

March 17, 1935: Ethiopia again appeals to the League due to Italian build-up.

March 22, 1935: The Italians yield to pressure from the League of Nationsfor arbitration into the Walwal incident.

May 11, 1935: Ethiopia again protests the Italian mobilization

May 20 – 21, 1935: The League of Nations holds a special session todiscuss the crisis in Ethiopia.

May 25, 1935: League council resolves to meet if no fifth arbitrator hasbeen selected by June 25, or if a settlement isn't reached by August 25.

June 19, 1935: Ethiopia requests neutral observers.

June 23 to 24, 1935: Britain sends Anthony Eden to offer concessionsabout Ethiopia, they are rejected by Italy.

June 25, 1935: Italian and Ethiopian officials meet in the Hague, TheNetherlands to discuss arbitration.

July 9, 1935: Political discussions fall apart.

July 25, 1935: Britain declares an arms embargo on both Italy andEthiopia.

July 26, 1935: The League of Nationsconfirms that no fifth member hasbeen selected.

August 3, 1935: The League limits (LoN) arbitration talks to mattersexcept for the sovereignty of Walwal. They are to meet again on September 4, 1935 to examine relations between the two countries.

August 12, 1935: Abyssinia pleads for arms embargo to be lifted.

August 16, 1935: France and Britain offer Italy large concessions inEthiopia to avert war which are rejected.

August 22, 1935: Britain reaffirms its embargo on armaments.

September 3: The League exonerates both Italy and Ethiopia of the Walwal incident since both powers believed it was within their border.

September 10, 1935: Pierre Laval, Anthony Eden and Sir Samuel Hoareagree on limitations to Italian sanctions.

September 25, 1935: Ethiopia again asks for neutral observers.

September 27, 1935: Benito Mussolini’s intention to invade Ethiopia remains inevitable. Over 5 divisions armed troops, 5 divisions colonial Ascaris, 6, 000 machine guns, 700 pieces of artillery, 150 armored tanks, 150 aircrafts disembarked in ports of Massawa and Mogadishoui ex-ItalianSomalia in earlier months.

September 28, 1935: Ethiopia begins to mobilize its large, but poorly-equipped, army.

October 3, 1935: Italia commits to invade Ethiopia’

Preparation for the inevitable: The Italians with a passion for revenge fourty years later, the Benito Mussolini's Italian fascist armies reinvaded &occupied the northern highland parts and later to invade the entirety of the nation. Ethiopia officially declares war with patriotic armies whose voluntarily gathered from all corners of the country to fight the war against the Italian invaders. General Emilio De Bono advanced into Ethiopia from Eritrea without a declaration of War. Marshal Emilio De Bonohad a force of approximately 100,000 Italian soldiers and 25,000 Eritrean soldiers to advance towards Addis Ababa. In December, after a brief period of inactivity and minor setbacks for the Italians, Emilio De Bono was replaced by Pietro Badoglio. Haile Selassie launched the Christmas Offensive late in the year to test Badoglio. By mid-January 1936, Badogliowas ready to renew the Italian advance on the Ethiopian capital.

Badoglio ultimately overwhelmed the armies of ill-armed and uncoordinated Ethiopian warriors with mustard gas, tanks, and heavy artillery

Qualsiasi Mezzo: Obviously, the second time around in 1934, Italy's fascistinvaders came prepared and with the most modernized and automated machinery of war, including internationally banned weapons of mass destruction. This time around, failure was not an option. Mussolini's mottowas Qualsiasi Mezzo! or win by any means. The result was arguably the most unjust and brutal asymmetrical warfare of the 20th Century. Italianswere masters of the sky and poured a "rain of iron and poison" on /defenseless Ethiopians at will. Ethiopians had no air force to speak of andlimited modern weaponry. The bulk of the peasant soldiers were shoeless.The four Oerlikonanti-aircraft guns and twenty bullets at the Ethiopian army's disposal were ineffective antics and relics of the Adwa war of 1896.They could not prevent the steel, poison gas and fire of death raining fromthe sky.

Meantime, fourty years later, Ethiopia became once again the target of renewed Italian aggression. The fascist Italian regime was keen to avengethe military defeats Italy had suffered to Ethiopia in the first Italo- Abbissinyan war in March, 1896. The second Italo-Ethiopian war (Guera- de Etiopia) was said to be a colonial war. Italian forces under General Emilio De Bono advances from Eritrea into northern Ethiopia. Italian forcesunder Graziani stand ready to advance from Italian Somaliland into southern Ethiopia. Italy is condemned by the League for attacking withoutformal declaration of war. The Italian fascist armies of Benito Mussolini were occupied, gained control of the country, known as Ethiopia, and it was held as part of the Italian east Africa under King Vitorio Emmanuel III, as symbolic heir. The invasion of Ethiopia, was backed by as a civilising mission by quite a few western powers of the time, as example, Djibouti, then French there, prevented Ethiopians to import defensive weapons, denying the chance to betterly defend themselves against fascist-invaders. Mussolini's invading forces, decimated one budding generation of intellectuals, hanged and chopped off patriot's head with axes, spread terror, committed massacres in Addis Ababa and elsewhere, raped thousands of women, burnt Churches and killed even priests, hundreds of monks in the Debre-Libanos monastry and the then Orthodoxpope, Abune-Petros too, committed such untold cruelties over the population worst of all, the Italian invaders used mustard poison-gas against the people, killing thousands and injuring many more, close to onemillion Ethiopians were killed horribly. Italy's aggression war in Ethiopia, with use of poison and mustard gas bombs, collateral damages to a Swedish Red Cross camp hospital, due to the bombing of the troops of an Ethiopian Ras, are also well shown to the world by the invading Italians.

The Italian Airforce squad called "La Disperata" was led by Galeazzo Cianoand Alessandro Pavolini included by two sons of Benito Mussolini: Bruno and Vittorio as pilots. In his historic address at the League of Nations in 1936, the Emperor condemned the use of chemical-weapons against his people by the Italians, his views and legacy later led to Ethiopia becominga charter-member of the United Nation Organization (UNO), and many believed the invasion of Ethiopia by the fascist-Italia led to the dissolutionof the League of Nations itself, as no formal apology from any of post-WWII Italian governments and the Vatican itself who had blessed the war andfinanced the invasion.

October 5, 1935: The northern Italian army captures Adigrat.
October 5, 1935: Edition of The Sphere-Ethiopian volunteers awaitingdeparture orders at the Imperial Palace in Addis Ababa.
Side note: White-robed Abyssinian recruits listening to a member of the Imperial bodyguard as he reads out the Army Regulations in the attendance of the king .. While Italy continues to send troopship after troopship on the 2, 300 mile journey to Eritrea to swell the ranks of her ever growing army, preparations for the defence of the Black Empire areproceeding apace and it is estimated that, if war breaks out, the king willbe able immediately to deploy 200,000 warriors in the field.

October 6, 1935: The northern Italian army captures Adwa.
October 7, 1935: The League of Nations (LoN) declares Italy theaggressor, prepares to set sanctions against it.
October 10, 1935: Upon the Italian invasion, Dejazmatch Haile-selassie Gugsa had defected to the Italians during the early days of the invasion.
The Italians had made much propaganda use out of the fact that Haile Selassie Gugsa was the husband of Leult Zenebework Haile Selassie andtherefore Haile Selassie's son-in-law. As a result, Ras Seyum Mangasha was Shum of all Tigre province, a position which he held until 1960.
Dejazmatch Haile-Selassie Gugsa Araya Selassie was a Tigrean noble, the great-grandson of emperor Yohannes VI, and hereditary prince of the province of Eastern Tigre who married princess Zenebeworq Haile-Selassieearlier at her teenage as a dynastic alliance between the reigning Shoa branch of the Imperial dynasty with both rival side of the Tigrean branch of the dynasty, he has shocked the Imperial family and his country by being among the first to join the advancing Italians as collaborator to theirrule.
Dejazmatch Haileselassie Gugsa, betrayed his country and guides theItalians from Mekelle....
October 5, 1935: Edition of The Sphere: "A white-robed Abyssinian recruitlistened to a member of the Imperial bodyguard as he reads the Emperor's Army Regulations, while Italy continues to send troopship aftertroopship on the 2,300 mile journey to Eritrea to swell the ranks of her ever growing army, preparations for the defence of the Black Empire are proceeding apace and it is estimated that, if war breaks out, the Emperor will be able immediately to deploy 200,000 warriors in the field."
To entertain natives in theatrical and musical shows, “Hager Fikir TheatreHouse” founded in Addis Ababa.
Side note: When people of Addis Ababa founded "Hager Fikir Maheber" (Association for the love of the Motherland) to stand against the upcomingItalian invasion. The founder, Makonnen Habte-Wold, wanted to encourage the patriotic mettle of the Ethiopian people. The first open-air productions took place at Menelik Square, then city centre of Addis Ababa.Hager Fikir Theatre is not only the theatre with the greatest tradition in Ethiopia but also the oldest indigenous theatre in Africa. It stands for more than 70 years of cultural life in Addis Ababa.

October 11, 1935: Member countries in the League of Nations voted toimpose sanctions unless Italy withdraws.

October 14, 1935: Marshal Emilio De Bono issues a proclamation orderingthe suppression of slavery in Ethiopia.
October 15, 1935: The northern Italian army captures Axum.
October 18, 1935: Britain assures Italy it will not take independent actionin the Mediterranean.
October 28, 1935: War mobilization proclamation being read on the eve ofthe Italian invasion in Addis Ababa.
October 30, 1935: Italy's Invasion of Ethiopia – Coming To The Aid ofThe Emperor. Ethiopian patriotic troops under Dejazmatch Meshesha rallied to the cause of the Emperor Haile Selassie. Dedjasmatch Mashasha,one of Ethiopia's most influential leaders, recently marched into Addis Ababa with 10,000 of his followers to offer his services and those of his men to the Emperor Haile Selassie. Some of Mashasha's troops in Addis Ababa paraded before leaving for the North."
Side note: The Invasion and Occupation.
The longstanding ambition of Italy to colonize Ethiopia wasreinforcedby itsdesire to avenge its defeat at Dogali and later at Adwa. "As early as 1925,Mussolini gave orders for military preparation with a view of waging war against Ethiopia, but not until 1934 did plans for the conquest of Ethiopia receive his full attention. The preparation involved huge sums of money, and quantities of trucks, tanks, artillery, aero planes, and stockpiling of poison gas, to ensure Italy's military superiority.1 In fact, "De Bono's two visits to Eritrea in 1932 were more of military reconnaissance than a simple tour of inspection by the Minister for the Colonies".2 The Wälwäl "incident" of 5 December 1934, where Italian and Ethiopian forces clashedinside Ethiopian territoryover the line of the Ethiopia's eastern frontier wasby no means the cause of the Italian invasion. Mussolini'sfervor for a major onslaught on Ethiopia for a greater empire became obvious "… when he proclaimed that he was ready to declare war on Great Britain andFrance rather than give up the conquest of Ethiopia".3 As if the memory of40 years old victory at Adwa would stop fresh Italian offensive, the Ethiopians appeared to have done littleornothing comparable to the Italianfascists' preparation for war. Now, Ethiopians had to face one of the gravest offensives in their history.
Within two years the final preparation for the conquest of Ethiopia was completed under the trusteeship of Marshal Emilio De Bono, commissionerof colonies, who was sent to lead the invasion as commander in chief of the Northern Front, with nine divisions of 250,000 white combatants and 150,000 Africans from Libya, Italian Somaliland and Eritrea, collectively called askaris. Supported by 300 aircraft under his direct command, he had to advance from Asmara, Eritrea southwards into the hinterland of Ethiopia. On the Southern Front, one division with 100 aircrafts under Marshal R. Graziani was deployed to head northwards. The aircrafts were carryingnot only piles of bombs but also poison gas for which the Ethiopians had no defense. The Italian plan was to converge at Addis Ababa, the capital city of Ethiopia, within the shortest possible time, so that pressure for a negotiated settlement by the League of Nations, of which Ethiopia had been a member since 1923, could be avoided.

Although the Ethiopian army was estimated to be not more than 300,000 foot soldiers, the bulk of it was not even a regular army and was mobilizedby regional Rases or Princes whose horizontal relationship with each other was undefined and in many cases competitive. Such an army congregatedonly when there was a call from the Emperor and as history had it, Ethiopians often stood united when foreign enemies threatened to invade their independence. Emperor Haile Selassie was the commander-in-chief of the national army. But the lack of modern means of communication thwarted him from establishing a centralized command to coordinate the war of defense in the vast mountainous country. Tactically, thishad an outstanding advantage for the invaders who were to coordinate and concentrate their forces as situationsdemanded. The disparity in the possession of armaments was ridiculously high."The Ethiopian army was equipped with 200 pieces of light artillery, 1000 machine guns and rifles with 150 rounds per person".4 Logistics were self-supplied except for small ammunition and bombshells that wereprovided only sporadically.

With a few exceptions amongst those who had traveled abroad, Ethiopiansknew nothing about armored vehicles, tanks and bomber aircraft. What brought them together to confront a muscular enemy was a strong self- image of national pride, a love of freedom and specific ideals of human dignity they nurtured through a long history of nationhood. The determination to remain independent and defend their specific cultural and religious values was manifested in their prayers, folk music and war songs, carried through the war and the resistance that followed. It was commonto praise the gorges and mountains as allies in the defense of thecountry.

Early in October 1935 the Italians made a swift advance towards Adwa, which was 30 kms from the colonial frontier that divided Eritrea from Tigray, the northern region of Ethiopia. The limited Ethiopian forces at Adwa were not only outnumbered but also could not withstand the long range shelling from the howitzers, the deadly machine gunsfrom the tanksand the raining bombs from the air. Before they made any serious engagement, they were ordered to withdraw in order to save their forces for a well thought-out defensive tactic deep in the country. On 6 October 1935, Adwa, where 40 years ago, an Italian army under four generals wascrushed, fell into the hands of the Italians. The seizure of Adwa gave the invaders some slight psychological relief from the humiliating defeat they had suffered at Dogali and Adwa in 1887 and 1896 respectively, yet for those on the front the war was just beginning and De Bono decide to advance with caution. A month later, on 8 November 1935, Mekele, the capital of Tigray came under the control of the Italians. Mussolini who wasinfuriated by the slow pace of the campaign replaced De Bono with another Marshal, Pietro Badoglio who was chief of staff of the Italian army. Following instructions from Rome, Badoglio resorted to harsh military tactics, including the raining of mustard gas from the air over Ethiopian troops and civilian areas, to score a quick victory. Thousands perished by this poison gas. Mustard gas had been banned in 1925 by the Geneva Convention, to which Ethiopia and Italy were signatories. Frontal engagement became untenable for the Ethiopians,yetin a different setting,the resistance was emergingas guerrilla warfare –an irregular form of waging war or what US generals nowadays call "asymmetrical warfare".Despite fire and air superiority accompanied by the mustard gas bombings, the Ethiopian rebels and resistance fighters, who came to be known as 'Patriots' (locally called Arbegnoch1), began to regroup in their respective districts under their local leaders and began to confront the enemy. A series of major battles were waged over a period of three months: 15 December 1935 at Shiré and Enda-Baguna, 20-24 January 1936 at Worsege-Tembien, 27-29 February at Workamba and Abiyadi- Tembien, 1-3 March at Selekhlekha, 12-15 of March at Emba Aradom and all the way to Mount Alage. The battles were intense and the determination of the Ethiopians was tested against all odds. In his autobiography, the Emperor later wrote: "Although the Italians were superior to us in modern arms, our soldiers had the advantage in terms ofcourage. While our soldiers, who had won the battles in the Tambien and Shiré regions, werefighting with obsolete rifles like the Fusil Gras, they yetmanaged to capture more than 300 machine-guns and many cannons andtanks". 2 Marshal P. Badoglio, on the other hand, estimated the number ofItalian casualties in the Shire region alone as follows: "Our losses, including dead and wounded, were: 63 officers, 894 Italians, 12 Eritreans.The losses of the enemy as ascertained on the field were about 4,000; to these must be added those inflicted by aircraft during the pursuit, the total of which was estimated atover 3,000".3 This battlefront in the districtof Shiré was just one of the several fronts in the province of Tigray and was lead by Ras Imru, governor of Gojjam province, who later retreated to Gore, southwest Ethiopia. Virtually the whole ofTigray had become a battleground for six months consecutively.

Although the frontal war was in favor of the invaders, on 31 March 1936 at Maichew and Lake Ashangé, the Emperor's main force put up a tenacious resistance, but at the end of the day, failing to stand up tothe aerial bombardment, the Ethiopians were forced to retreat further south towards Dessie, the provincial capital of Wollo. Dessie fell into the hands of the Italians on 4 April 1936 after three days of long and bloody battle. Unable to regroup and launch a counter-offensive, the Emperor and his remaining forces headed for Addis Ababa, the capital city. The Battle of Maichew where the Emperor had assembled his greatest force, eventually,turned out to be the end of the conventional confrontation and the official beginning of the "Patriots' resistance movement which appeared to have already started behind the enemy lines.

On the southern and southeast fronts, however, the battle remained intense, with the forces of RasDesta's, Dejazmach Nesibu, and DejazmachMekonnen, governors of Sidamo, Harrar and Illubabor Regions respectively, deterring the northward movement of Marshal Graziani's forces, who had vowed to deliver Ethiopia to Mussolini "… with the Ethiopians or without them".1 Graziani's statement, though wild and crude, was a reflection of Italy'songoingpolicy of resettling its overcrowdedfarmers in the fertile lands of Ethiopia. Graziani, not contented with showering the Ethiopians with bombs and mustard gas, also resorted to themassacring of non-combatant villagers with his tanks and armored vehicles, as was seen during battles in the Ogaden in early 1936. Appalledby such barbaric Italian war tactics, 900 well armed Eritrean askaris, deserted to the Ethiopian side to fight back thcolonialists. Previously, in mid-December 1935, 400 Eritreans had already joined the forces of RasImru on the Shiré front.2 These desertions revealed the extent to which the acts of the fascists were abhorred and that deep inside many Eritreans harboredsympathy for Ethiopia and the anti-colonial cause.

While Graziani was contained in the south-eastern front, Emperor Haile Selassie was unable to check the advancing Badoglio from the north. The Emperor retreated from Dessie and arrived in his capital Addis Ababa in the morning of 30 April 1936, only to depart three days later on his way to exile. On the 5thof May 1936 Addis Ababa fell into the hands of the invaders without any meaningfulof resistance but amid chaos and looting triggered by the Emperor's departure. Italy declared victory but the resistance was on its way. However, "In reality the success of the invasionof Ethiopia resulted from the Italians achieving huge material superiority, maintained by efficient logistical support to counterbalance the greater individual motivation of Ethiopian troops".3 As it turned out to be, now, the war was taking a different course. The day the Emperor arrived in his capital, he had hastily convened an assembly of his ministers and nobles and two important agreements were reached right there: (a) The Emperorhad to go abroad to present Ethiopia's deplorable case to the League of Nations and (b) the seat of the government had to move to Gore, south west of Addis Ababa, and Bitweded Wolde-Tsadik Goshu would be the regent. While the first decision called for a diplomatic and political struggle, the second one in effect meant the launching of a resistance against the Italian occupation and aimed atregaining independence. Yet, many of the younger patriots, aware of the ensuing authoritygap caused by the Emperor's absence, had not approved of his departure into exile. "Even the young Crown Prince had been suggesting to his own followers –to DejazmachFikremariam and DejazmachGurassu -that he should abandon his father and go with them as shiftato the hills (Mockler 1984: 135). But as the decision of the Emperor could not be contested, the resistance -shiftinnet (= 'banditry') - had to commence without him.

(Text ends)

November 5, 1935: Gra-Azmatch Affe-worq Wolda-Samayat an Ethiopianadministrator and army commander nicknamed the "The Qorahai patriot"martyred in Qorahai, in southeast part of the country after seriously wounded by fascist Italian bombings in Qorahai. Side note: At the outbreak of the Second Italo-Ethiopian War, Gra-Azmachand Affe-worq Wolda-Samayat was the acting Shum of Jigjiga. He worked tirelessly to prepare the Ogadien for war on what was known as the "southern front." Prior to the Battle of Genale Doria, Balambaras Affe- worq Wolda-Samayat was killed defending Qorahai. Qorahai was known asan old stronghold of Sayyid Mohammed Abdullai Hassan (called the "Mad Mullah") by the British. With approximately three thousand fighters under his command, Gra-Azmach Affeworq Walda-Samayat had turned Qorahai into an armed camp. Bombers of the Italian Royal Air Force (Regia Aeronautica) regularly attacked Qorahai and Affeworq himself directed thefire of the lone anti-aircraft gun a 37 mm Oerlikon The gun was mounted in one of the old-style turrets of the Mad Mullah's antiquated fort. Affe- worq's men quickly learned how to cope with air attacks by diving into deep trenches. In addition, they had sufficient modern arms to thwart assaults on the ground and to inflict heavy losses. Affeworq had even overseen the installation of a minefield around his positions. During one ofthe regular bombings by the Italians, Affe-worq was seriously wounded.

He refused to be taken to the hospital because he feared that the moraleof his men would suffer in his absence. Within 48-hours the wound became gangrenous and, Affeworq collapsed and died. On 7 November, his fear about the morale of his men proved to be correct and they abandoned Qorahei. Gra-Azmatch Affe-worq Wolde-samayat posthumously promoted to Dejazmatch by the emperor andofficially named "patriot of Qorahai".
November 6,1935: Due to the cautious approach of General De Bono,Mussolini threatens to replace him.
November 8, 1935: The marching northern Italian army captures Mekelle.
November 12, 1935: The date? Ethiopian troops march out of Harrar to take the fight against the Italian invaders. This is the caption from the photograph: “Off to the southern front. This picture, taken by H. V. Drees,Acme photographer with the Ethiopian army in the South, shows a columnof troops of Ras Nassibu’s force marching out of Harar for the southern front to take up their positions against the Italian advance of Gen. RudolfoGraziana. Ras Nassibu’s army has been operating from Harrar, Ethiopia’s second city.”
Ras Nassibu Zamannuel was the commander of the Ethiopian forces on the Southern Front. These troops were to face terrible odds and to be attacked with chemical weapons by the Italians, who used mustard gas against them. Addressing the International Community the Ras had this tosay:

“The League of Nations! We fight and die while the League talks. … If onlywe could fight men in the manner of men! But we are facing an invader who uses the most fiendish methods known to warfare all because he is angered that we protect our homes and land. Our lands are being laid barren by gas; our mules, sheep, and cattle are dying in the fields.” In General Graziana was one of the fascist’s most notorious leaders, known as the ‘Butcher of Ethiopia.’

After an attempt on his life by two Eritreans on 19 February 1937 he carried out a series of bloody reprisals. Graziani ordered indiscriminate killings, later remembered by Ethiopians as Yekatit12: up to thirty thousand civilians of Addis Ababa were killed indiscriminately; another 1,469 were summarily executed by the end of the next month, and over one thousand Ethiopian notables were imprisoned and then exiled from Ethiopia.

November 18, 1935: Sanctions go into effect against Italy. They do notinclude oil or steel.

In November 1935: Lij Eyassu Aba Tena died in political fallout with RasTaffari Makonnen, but the exact date and location uncertain. As believedhe fell down in a power struggle with then crownprince HRH Ras Taffari Makonnen, as the nation renowned for it's previous political history of intrigue, conspiracy, and intolerance, December 8, 1935: The 'Hoare-Laval Plan' is signed, which concedes two-thirds of Ethiopia to Italy.

December 9 1935: Hoare-Laval Plan is made public. It is rejected by Ethiopians and causes large political embarrassment in France and Britain.

December 12, 1935: Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia, and his son Dukeof Harrar, visiting Red Cross facilities, two American volunteer doctors were also at the time of the Italian-Ethiopian war.

December 14, 1935: Emperor Haileselassie visits an air bombarded sitenear the provincial town of Dessie in Wollo shortly after the Italian invasion.

December 14, 1935: At the deadly "battle of Enda-Abaguna" over 392 Itaian soldiers, 9 low rank officers, and several hundred colonial Ascariswere found dead.

December 17, 1935: General De Bono is replaced by Marshal PietroBadoglio as Commander in Chief of the entire operation and as the commander in the north. Soon after, Haile Selassie launches his "Christmas Offensive" to test the new Italian commander.

December 26, 1935: Aviator Tito Minniti is killed. Marshal Pietro Badoglio receives permission to use mustard gas to speed up the invasion. This wasin direct violation of the 1899 and 1907 Hague Conventions, which outlawed the use of chemical weapons. The alleged torture and mutilation of Minniti is claimed as justification.

January 3, 1936: A year after the Italian aggression, King Hailsellassie went abroad to appeal the League of Nations (LoN) about Italy's bombingof civilians' villages.

January 5, 1936: The Ethiopian forces were in the hills everywhere overlooking the Italian positions and launching attacks against them on aregular basis.

Side note: The spread of the resistance goes further: The prospect of conventional war gradually faded away, but the spirit of resistance persisted. A quite different attitude of defiance and conduct of attacks began to surface from many quarters. The entire membership of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church, the Ethiopian Women's Volunteer Service Association (EWVSA) and the Black Lion Organisation, leaving aside the many small groupings of individuals, appeared in the forefront of the resistance. The range of their activities was broad, including plain assaultson anything Italian, attack of its top leaders and also providing all round underground support to the patriots in the villages and mountains.

January 7 –10, 1936: In the Battle of Gannale Dorya, General Graziani counter-attacks the advancing troops of Dejazmatch Desta Damtew. Aftermore than three days of slaughter, the Ethiopians break and flee.

January 12, 1936: Dejazmatch Balcha Saffo meaning in local oromiffa for“replacing” … whos horsenamed as "Abba-Nefso" an accomplished Ethiopian army general, from his abode in Wolliso mobilized a small forceto march in Addis Ababa to fight the incoming Italian fascist invaders.

Side note: At the latter he Italians upon getting the news deployed one thousand soldiers supported by tanks, artillery units and fighter airplanesto engage the veteran warrior with only 200 militias under his command. In a day long fighting, the Fascists suffered 100 casualties versus only 15on the local militia side but with several men wounded. Several days laterthe Fascists made a surprise attack on a camp near his birthplace and killed the veteran hero. Balcha Safo paid the ultimate sacrifice, Balcha’s death motivated the likes of Abebe Aregay et al in Shoa; Mengesha Jembere and Belay Zeleke in Gojjam; Guebrehiwot and Abay in Tigray; Geresu Duky and Bekele Woya in southern Shoa. These illustrious heroeswere part and parcel of the first guerrilla organization in the world.

Incidentally, Dejazmatch Balcha Safo who served in both the first and second Italo-Ethiopian wars died instantly without having any suffering athis village, but at the rest of the time his death remained controversial.

ደጀአዝማች ባልቻ አባ ነፍሶ በልጀነታቸው ከጦርነት ላይ ተማርከው በአጼ ምኒልክ ቤት ያደጉ ታማኝ የጦር መኰንንነበሩ በአድዋ በመቀሌ ጦርነት ላይ በጀግንነት ተዋግተውከጦርነቱ መልስ ሲዳሞን ሐረርጌን አስተዳድረዋል፡አጼ ኃይለሥላሴ ከነገሱ በኃላ ባልቻ ...ከንጉሱ ጋር ስምምነት ስላልነበራቸውብዙ ጊዜያቸውን በግዞት አሳልፈዋል ::በ 1928 ኢጣሊያ ፋሺስት የአድዋን ብድር ለመመለስ አዲስ አበባን በያዘበት ጊዜ በ80 ዓመታቸው በአርበኝነት ዘመቱ "አጼ ኃይለሥላሴ ያልቻሉትን ጠላት እርስዎ አይችሉምና ለጣልያን ግቡ"ቢሏቸው "ሽምግያለሁ መሞቴ እንደውአይቀር በሰማይ ጌታዬ ምኒልክ በኢትዮድያ ዙፋኔ ላይ ማነውየተቀመጠው ብለውብጠይቁኝ ምን ብዬእመልሳለሁ"የሚል ቃል ተናግረውበወጨጫ ከጠላት ጦር ጋር ተዋግተውአርፈዋል ::

January 20, 1936: Negele Borana in Sidamo province is captured by troops led by Marshal Rodolfo Graziani. Ethiopia asks the LoN for strongersanctions against Italy.

January 20–24, 1936: The inconclusive First Battle of Tembien brings theEthiopian "Christmas Offensive" to an end.

February 1936: A Patriotic Resistance (1936-1941) to Italian Occupationof Ethiopia is underway.

Side note: Vittorio Emanuele Ferdinando Maria Gennaro di Savoia (9 May, 1936 to May 5, 1941) becomes symbolic head of Italian East Africa (AfricaOrientale Italiana) House of savoy. Italian East Africa (Africa Orientale Italiana) House of savoy established: The Italians also redrew the map of the country to create separate ethnic regions.They divided the country into six units as follows: 1) Eritrea to include Tigrai – capital Asmara 2) Amhara to include Begie-Midre, Gojjam, Wello and northern Shoa – capitalGonder 3) Galla/Sidamo –capital Jimma 4) Addis Ababa 5) Harrar 6) Territory of Somalia-capital Mogadishu.

Italy was an industrialized nation under the Fascist regime of Benito Mussolini. The invasion was conducted with the most advanced military organization and hardware -vast killing machine-against a spirited people of an old nation. In defiance of the occupation that ensued, the Ethiopianswere engaged for five years in a multi-dimensional ‘patriotic resistance’ todrive the invaders out of their country, while the Ethiopian Emperor, HaileSelassie was engaged in an outmatched diplomatic struggle from exile. It was aresistance against many odds, including indifference from the League of Nations and the Western countries.

Now the war was entering a new phase. By the time the invading army put Addis Ababa under its control and Mussolini on 9 May 1936 declared Ethiopia part of the Italian Empire, only a portion of the northern part of the country was under their influenceor control. "Five months after the defeat of Emperor Haile Selassie, Badoglio and Graziani controlled only one third of the country", Sbacchi noted.1 After the Battle of Maichew andthe retreat of the Emperor, it took no time for the resistance to commence. Under local chiefs, many patriotic groups were formed and immediately went to what they call "chaka" (literally the bush) of their localities from where they initiated the resistance. Throughout the occupied land the patriots became active and an ongoing nuisance to the Italians all over the country.

As the resistance was mounting, it was clear from the start the countrycould not be effectively occupied or colonized. On the other hand, Mussolini exerted repeated pressure on his marshals inthe frontlines to demonstrate a swift and profound victory over the would-be colony of Ethiopia so that his rivals (Britain and France) would recognize Italy’s might. This meant the total destruction of any resisting force.Yet, the paceof his modern army remainedfrustratingly, if notcautiously slow as a resultof the resistance it had to encounter every day. In the years to follow, theItalians had to fear what comes from every gorge, hill, mountainorvillage i.e. "the bush" and also from within the occupied towns.

For many Ethiopians, the occupation of their land and the subsequent fleeing of their Emperor to exile meant the loss of their dignity and identity as a nation. It also meant the threat to or destruction of their traditional values and institutions, and more so disruption of their life of which they were proud. The common motto at the time became ‘Tenes! atenesam woy, Hager siwrer zim telaleh woy’, which meant: ‘Rise up! Ohrise up! You cannot sit idle when the country is ravaged’. In connection with this motto, the author and eye witness Haddis Alemayehu, in his book of personal recollections called Tezeta, gives a list of poems, poeticcalls and war songs, like ‘Bälew attilewum woy! Tekur anbesa aydellehimwoy’, meaning: ‘Get him, aren’t you a black lion?’.

It appeared no time was spared to wage the war of resistance in defianceof the occupation. While the conventional battles were still raging deep inthe southeast, Tigray, the firstoccupied province of northern Ethiopia, hadalready become a battleground for theinvaders andpatriots. The patriots operated in small groups, not far from their respective localities.

DejazmachGebrehiwet Mesheha, DejazmachAbbai Kahsay, Dejazmach Tesfay Medebai, FitawrariTessema Tesfay, Dejazmach Gizaw, Dejazmach Taffari, Agafari Birru, Kassa Sibhat, KegnazmachAbbera Adale and on the women's sideWoizeroKebedech Seyoum and WoizeroDesta Gebre-Mikael were some of the prominent resistance leaders, independently operating from Adwa in the north to Maichew in the south of Tigray. Dejazmach Gebrehiwet Mesheha, for instance, shuttled between Shiguashugi in Geraalta, central Tigray and Lemalimo across the Tekeze River to attack enemy troops from ambush. As amatter of fact, acquiring arms by ambush was a favorite undertaking of all patriots. They were also engagedin various activities such asrolling downhuge rocks from mountains and cliffs when enemy convoys passed by, disrupting their communication systems bycapturingtheir messengers and later cutting telephone lines, setting fire to anything under enemy control, like offices and fuel or ammunition depots by firing from a long distance, and harassing or killing enemy collaborators.

As the activities of the patriots in Tigray escalated, the Italians began deploying more and more detachments to the spots of resistance but depleting their main force that was pushing southwards. The patriots, nowreferred to as shiftas (bandit) by the Italians, were liable to be hunted down. The equivalent word for shifta could be bandit or an outlaw, but theconcept shiftain Ethiopian traditional context ismuch broader than whatthe Italians wanted it to mean. To be a shiftameans to rebel against someonein authority or an establishment that had failed to render justice. It was also generally accepted as a means of bringing grievance to the attention of the public in order to gain sympathy when higher authorities had failedto deliver what was customary. Usually a shifta emerged from the enlightened or noble class and disposed some sort of critical vision on thesocial order. This enabled him/her to express, in words or in action, the real or perceived injustices and the responses to it. So the commitment todeliver justice that was initially denied is embedded in the concept of shifta, although a shiftamay not necessarily be free from wrongdoing.

Thus shiftinnet (being a bandit), as one form of 'conflict resolution'and inits diverse forms,had an important social function.1

In Ethiopia, enlightened and assertive individuals, who started as shifta shad risen to the level of kingship, legitimizing the concept of shifta. Two late nineteenth-century shiftas, Kassa Hailu of Gondar and Kahsai Mircha of Tigray, had passed through this political evolution to become Emperors Tewodros and Yohannes in succession. Thus "…. the shiftas formed the military elite and became the core of the resistance, using their military skills against the Italians".2 A shifta, however, whose acts surpass the socially acceptable norms would be called t'era-shifta (ordinary bandit) and would be regarded as a highwayman or a malefactor and would be denied the affection of the people. The Italians understandably preferred to deal with the patriots by calling them t'era-shiftas of the criminal type. Nevertheless, to be described as a shifta especially in the event of the Italian occupation was an honor to an Ethiopian and this was how the resistance started and spread. Among the commonly sung lyrical poems inthe region at that time goes:

'Adi tefiu, adi'do yewaal'ye,

Beti Hatsur akiblini meneshiraye,Ne'merebey iye ne'merebey!'

'In a lost country, you cannot stay a day,through the fence, throw me the gun,

I should go to Merebe, oh my Merebe!'3

Another song written by a patriot in the central region goes as follows:"From the bean fields,

Let us go to the virgin lands;From this endless plain,

Let climb uninhabited mountains.Or like a bandit with a rifle,

Run together to Adabai River in the gorges.

Or like a crow, a swan, fly in the air over the prairie."4

There were many such popular songs, which were in effect traditional callsfor resistance before the formal call came. Officially, though, on 9 December 1935, RasMulugeta Yigezu, the Ethiopian minister of war at thetime, issued an order to all the chiefs of northern Ethiopia to carry on with 'patriotic resistance against the Italians for taking away the independenceof Ethiopia', Sbacchi wrote.5 Guerrilla warfare, which had been basically the tactic of the shifta, was underway in the north wherethe enemy had assumed "full control".

Following the departure of the Emperor to exile and the fall of Addis Ababato the Italians on 5 May 1936, the Rases, Dejazmaches and all other notables had withdrawn to their respective localities or familiar areas within close range of Addis Ababa. They were situated in strategic villages,safe to recover from the exhaustion of eight months of war, and able to reorganise their forces for the next phase of the patriotic fight. These villages were also logistically well-situated, in that the leaders were able to follow events in the capital that could allow them to launch attacks.

RasAbebe Aregay was in Ankober, DejazmachBalcha Safo in Gurage Land,DejazmachZewdu Asfaw in Mullo, BlattaTakele Wolde-Hawariat in Limmu, the Kassa brothers (Abera, Asfaw-Wosen, and Wond-Wosen) in Selale, and Haile Mariam Mamo was engaged in hit-and-run tactics inside and around the city. With more than 10,000 troops, Abera, the son of RasKassa who had accompanied the emperor into exile, had been entrusted by the emperor to co-ordinate the resistance in that region and was doing his best to accomplish it. On 21 June 1936 for instance, he helda meeting of some Patriotic leaders, including the Patriarch of Wollo, Abune Pet'ros, at Debre Libanos, the renowned monastery dating from 1312, located some 70 km. north of Addis Ababa. They made a plan to storm enemy stations inside the capital. The attempt was repulsed because of lack of effective means of transportation and radio communication that prevented a co-ordinated assault from taking place.

As the information about the attempted attack on Addis Ababa reached the Italians, they encircled the city with barbed wire and thirty-eight cement forts. People and traffic could come into the city only through tengates, Sbacchi observed.1 This was indicative of the need for more precautions against resistance activity.

However, sporadic attacks by the different groups continued to dominate the battle scene around Addis Ababa. Goré, in southeast Ethiopia, now theseat of the displaced government run by the elder regent, BitwededWolde Tsadik Goshu was far from within easy reach and never had been effectivein providing nation-wide leadership to the resistance. The Rases and governors began to act independently i.e. without the Emperor's directiveswhom they considered as the legitimate leader and an able commander.

Indeed, for most of them the unexpected departure of the authoritative emperor into exile had created a gap nobody seemed to be able to fill. Thefew Rases, like Imru in Wollegaand Desta in Sidamo, who had made a very long retreat from the northernfrontline to the southern rearnear Goré, were exhausted. They could neither realize effective mobility nor acquire the resources to keep their troops intact. Yet their acts of defiancein itself helped to inspire others far away in resisting the occupation and "thus, they were capable of continuously 'distracting the Italians' mind and attention"2. For them, intelligibly it was a transition period from conventional warfare to guerrilla warfare, one form of resistance. (Textends)

February, 1936: The renowned "Taffari Makonnen School" was renamed during the Italian occupation "Scuola Principe di Piemonte" meaning "Prince of Piedmonte School" for the Crownprince of Italy, in Addis Ababa.

February 10, 1936: Italians attack and the Ethiopians under Ras Mulugeta Yigezu counterattack in the Battle of Amba-Aradom southwest of Chalacot.

February 19, 1936: The "Battle of Emba-Aradom" ends and the Ethiopiansare defeated with heavy losses, including the warrior Ras Mulugeta and hisson.

February 27, 1936: The Second Battle of Tembien begins'

Side note: The Second Battle of Tembien was a battle fought on the northern front of what was known as the Second Italo-Abyssinian War. This battle consisted of attacks by Italian forces under Marshal Pietro Badoglio on Ethiopian forces under Ras Kassa Haile Dargie and Ras Seyoum Mangasha. This battle was primarily fought in the area around Tembien. The III Corps and the Eritrean Corps linked up about three mileswest of Abbiy Addi and the trap was completed. Even so, a large portion of both armies managed to escape Badoglio's dragnet. However, the men of the Ethiopian armies were demoralized and their fighting days were over. The Ethiopians wanted to get away from the region, the high explosive bombs, the rattle of machine gun fire, and the deadly mustard gas. By the time Ras Kassa and Ras Seyoum reached Haile Sellassie's headquarters at Quorom.

The Aftermath: "Ras Kassa's army in the Tembien region of Ethiopia, northwest of Makale, has been destroyed. He himself is fleeing for his life with a few followers. Now between the Italian forces and Addis Ababa all Northern Ethiopia lies open and almost defenseless. Only Emperor Haile Selassie's private army can offer resistance, and it is not expected to be serious. Ras Mulugeta was dead. Ras Kassa and Ras Seyoum were beaten.All three armies commanded by these three men were destroyed. Only one of the four main northern armies remained intact. Badoglio now turned his attention towards Ras Imru and his forces in the Shire.

February 29, 1936: The Ethiopians are defeated in the Second Battle of Tembien leaving few survivors from the armies of Ras Kassa Haile and RasSeyoum Mengesha Yohannes.

February 29, 1936: The “Battle of Shire” in Tigre begins.

March 5, 1936: The Iron Will (Marcia della ferrea volontà) entered in AddisAbaba. May 9, 1936 to 11 June 1936: Marshal Pietro Badoglio, 1st Duke of AddisAbeba, 1st Marques of Sabotino, Viceroy and Governor-General.

June 11, 1936: Marshal Rodolfo Graziani appointed 1st Marques ofNeghelli, Viceroy and Governor-General.

December 21, 1936: Prince Amedeo, Duke of Aosta, appointed firstViceroy and Governor-General.

March 3, 1936: The League of Nations (LoN) asks Italy and Ethiopia toopen negotiations.

March 4, 1936: The Battle of Shire ends with the destruction of Ras Imru'Haile Selassie’s army.

March 5, 1936: Ethiopia accepts negotiations appeal.

March 20, 1936: Ethiopia again appeals to the League, stating thatnothing effective had yet been enforced.

March 21, 1936 Emperor Haile Selassie protests to the "League of Nations" again, reporting Italian atrocities such as use of chemical weapons, destruction of ambulances and the massacre of civilians. In his historic address at the League of Nations, the Emperor condemned the use of chemical-weapons against his people by fascist Italians.

March 29, 1936 Italian planes firebombed Harrar.

March 31, 1936: Emperor Haile Selassie personally leads an unsuccessful counter-attack in the Battle of Maichew. This is the last major battle of thewar on the northern front. As a unit the Mehal-Sefaris", known as later, "Kibur Zebegnas" (the Imperial bodyguard) participated in the battle of Maichew, but afterwards many of it's members joined the various groups of the Ethiopian resistance groups against fascist Italian armies.

April 1, 1936: Ethiopia pleads for removal of arms embargo, financial assistance, and heavier sanctions on Italy; Achille Starace's East AfricanFast Column (Colonna Celere de Africa Orientale) arrives in Gondar.

April 4, 1936: Most of what remained of Haile Selassie's withdrawing armyis destroyed at Lake Ashange.

April 14, 1936: The Battle of the Ogadien begins on the southern front.April 15, 1936: Dessie was occupied by the fascist Italian troops.

April 17, 1936: The League admits failure in the Italo-Ethiopian dispute.

April 25, 1936: The Ethiopians are defeated during the Battle of theOgadien, but much of the Ethiopian army escapes.
April 26, 1936: Marshal Pietro Badoglio launches his "March of the Ironwill" from Dessie.
April 27, 1936: As first trained Medical Nurse, Princess Tsehai Haile- Selassie of Ethiopia addresses to the League of Nations (LoN) in Geneva.
April 30, 1936: The crown advisory council known as ‘Negusawi Amakariwoch’ finally suggested the King Haile Selassie to appeal for theLeague of Nations (LoN) travelling to Geneva, Switherland.
May 2, 1936: Emperor Haile Selassie leaves the capital city of Addis Ababafor Djibouti. Haile Selassie at Geneva Airport during his exile from Abyssinia following the Italian invasion.
Side note: Emperor Haile selassie whence he travels to Europe to personally address the Council of the League of Nations, he appoints his cousin Ras Imru Haile Selassie as Prince Regent during his absence, and delegating Bitwadad Wolde Tsadiq Goshu to handle warfare and local administration duties departing to Geneva, Switzerland through Djibouti with his family. Following the invasion of Ethiopia by Italy in 1935, the imperial family was forced to flee into exile in Bath, England. However, Dejazmatch Desta Damtew the husband of Leult Tenagneworq remained behind to command the imperial armed forces fighting in the south of thecountry. Dejazmatch Desta Damtew was captured and summarily executed by the Italian fascist forces. The emperor posthumously appointed him "Ras".
May 4, 1936: Despite Ethiopia’s military collapse patriotic resistance continued throughout the occupation. Many patriotic Ethiopians were fromthe outset determined to continue the struggle. The first to do so was Lij Haile Mariam Mammo, of Dabra Berhan, 130 kilometres north of Addis Ababa, who successfully attacked a group of invading Italian fascist forceson it's way to the capital, Addis Ababa. This action earned him the title the“First Arbegna”, or, patriot, of Shoa. Other, more or less un-co-ordinated, attacks on the invaders followed.
May 5, 1936: Fascist Italian forces led by Marshal Pietro Badoglio capturesAddis Ababa.
The "March of the Iron will" is completed and Addis Ababa is fully capturedby Italian forces. Marshal Pietro Badoglio who was appointed Italian Governor-general (Governatori Italiana), has led the invading forces into Addis Ababa, Il Ducce Benito Mussolini declares the whole Abyssinya is now an "Italian overseas territory of Africa (Africa Orientale Italiana- AOI)". Among the League of Nations member states only five countries namely, Russia, China, US, New Zealand and Mexico were unrecognizedsuch act of invasion.
May 7, 1936: The second Italo-Ethiopian war resulted in the military occupation of Ethiopia and its annexation into the newly created "Colony of Italian East Africa (Africa Orientale Italiana-AOI)". Italy created a largercolonial administrative unit this time.
Throughout the fascist occupation of Ethiopia between until April, 1941, Ethiopia was proclaimed to have been annexed by Italy, and the King of Italy was declared "Emperor of Ethiopia" by the Mussolini regime.

Ethiopiawas incorporated into the new entity called "Italian East Africa" or "Africa Orientale Italiana". The Royal Italian flag, the green white and red tricolorwith the arms of the House of Savoy centered became the flag of the colony. Now under Italian occupation Ethiopia then Abyssinya was dividedinto six colonial regions known as Abyssinya-Scioa (Shoa), Amhara, Eritrea (Tigrai-Tigrigna), Harrarghe-Arsi, Galla (Oromo)-Sidamo, Ogadien-Somalia Italiana.

A British woman called Sylvia Pankhurst has devoted her life to theEthiopian cause after Mussolini's invasion of Ethiopia.

Side note: In 1935 Emperor Haile Selassie's forced exile in Britain, Sylvia Pankhurst wrote in support of Ethiopia to the British and international press. In 1936 she founded a weekly newspaper, the New Times and Ethiopia News, which she was to edit for nearly 20 years. She became Emperor Haile Selassie's closest and most effective ally in promoting the Ethiopia's cause, writing more of the text, articles and editorials than any other single individual in her role as being the spokesman of the emperor.Later on at the age of 74, she accepted an invitation from the emperor tocome, with her son, and make her home in Addis Ababa. She decided to edit her publication from Addis Ababa, replacing her politically oriented newspaper, the New Times and Ethiopia News, with a more substantial culture and development monthly magazine, the Ethiopia Observer.

The part about Sylvia's story which is sure to strike the reader is the way her passing affected her many admirers, Ethiopians and foreigners alike, and the tributes that poured in. She was buried at later times in a formal orthodox ceremony in Addis Ababa, at the Selassie Cathedral, which is reserved for Ethiopians who have served the country in distinguished careers. She was given a name, Welete-Krtistos, or Daughter of Christ, asthe token of the honour bestowed on her by the church. Interestingly, theBritish Embassy's Chancery in Addis Ababa, who could not be expected totake kindly to her criticism of their government policy over Eritrea and Somaliland, had to admit later that "as far as we know, no other foreignerhad been similarly honoured."

The Pankhursts lived in Ethiopia in the most significant years of the HaileSelassie era. Richard and Rita stayed on in Ethiopia after Sylvia's death.

Upon her death, Richard took over editorship, and in 1963 became a co- editor of the Journal of Ethiopian Studies. He began teaching at Haile Selassie I University and founded its Institute of Ethiopian Studies (IES) in1962. He became its first director, a position he held until 1972. Rita had a serious role to perform and did it brilliantly. After working as a librarian in the National Library of Ethiopia from 1956 to 1962 she was appointed director of the University Library of the then Haile Selassie I University, serving from 1964 to 1975. Fascinated by Ethiopian life and culture, Rita has written several articles on Ethiopian women in history. She has been active in the civic life of Addis Ababa, serving on the boards of several institutions. (Text ends)

Governorates of Italian East Africa (Africa Orientale Italiana) formed'

The governorates of Italian East Africa (A.O.I) formed the first level of country subdivision. The territory was divided into 6 Governments. Existeduntil 1938 the Governorate of Addis Ababa, whose territory was integratedin the new government of Shoa, with a municipal administration.

The governments were ruled by a governor assisted by a Governing Council, whose members the highest authorities of the Government. TheGovernments of Amhara, Galla-Sidamo, Harar and Shoa constituting the Italian Empire of Ethiopia, who was about half of the Ethiopian state until1936.

The governments were divided into the government commissioner, ruled by a government commissioner assisted by a Deputy Commissioner, usually also the owner of the residence in the central town of the Commissioner. The commissioners were divided into residences, sometimes divided into Vice Residences. As a rule, the seat of the High Commissioner was provided with primary schools, post office and telegraph, infirmary with a doctor, runway for airplanes. The residences'slocations were equipped with a post office, telegraph and infirmary with adoctor

Division of the Colony of Italian East Africa (Africa Orientale Italiana-AOI):Tigrai-Tigrign – capital Asmara - official language: Tigrigna

Amhara – capital Gondar – official language: Amharic

Gala-Sidama – capital Jimma; official language Oromiffa/KaffichoHarrarghe-Arussi – capital Harrar – official language Arabic

Shoa – capital Addis Ababa – Governatore Italiana

Ogadien –Somalia Italiana – capital Mogadishou – official language Af-Somali

The local open market known as "Markato-Indijino" also made availablefor the local population in Addis Ababa. The war ended, but the patrioticresistance still continues.

May 8, 1936: Marshal Rodolfo Graziani arrives in the eastern town ofHarrar.

May 9, 1936: Proclaimed Victor Emmanuel III is "Emperor of Abyssinia"and Marshal Pietro Badoglio is appointed as his Vice-Roy in Ethiopia.

May 10, 1936: Italian troops from the northern front and from thesouthern front linked-up at Dire Dawa.

May 1936, Ras Nasibu accompanied the Emperor and the Royal Court intoexile, where he died in October 1936, possibly as a result of the gas.

On mid-May, 1936: In an attempt to crush such resistance Marshal Rodolfo Graziani, who had by then become the Italian Viceroy issued an edict in the middle of May, proclaiming that Italy was the "absolute masterof Ethiopia", and would "remain so at whatever cost". He threatened that he would use "extreme severity" to rebels, but the "greatest generosity" to Ethiopians who submitted.

June 1, 1936: Italy merges Ethiopia with Eritrea and the Italian Somalia(Somalia-Italiana), calling the new state Italian East Africa "Africa Orientale Italiana".

June 5, 1936: El-Duce Benito Mussolini sent a telegraph, agreed withMarshal Pietro Badoglio's policy.

June 11, 1936: When Addis Ababa fell into the invading Italin troops, Marshal Rodolfo Graziani appointed (Governor (Governatori Abyssinya) Abyssinya, and Army commander of Italian East Africa, a position he heldfrom 11 June 1936 – 21 December 1937.

June 20, 1936: Emperor Haile Selassie I addresses the League of Nations(LoN). The League of Nations officially condemns the Italians with no further actions.

Side note: King Haile Selassie addressed the League of Nations (LoN), andsternly warns the League to distinguish the one out of the two, the ‘Collective security’ or the ‘International lawlessness’.

The King appealed to the League of Nations to take action against the invasion, but it was ignored as expected. By the time, the League of Nations (LoN) condoned Italy’s imperial project and maligned Ethiopia, one of its founding members. Italy thus committed the worst atrocities against the barely armed Ethiopians. At last, Italy managed to massacre over 750,000 Ethiopians with impunity. The following were the prophetic words Emperor Haile Sillasie spoke at League of Nations on June 30 1936 when ‘civilized’ European members of the League patently ignored his pleafor assistance despite Ethiopia’s membership. They did so contrary to the spirit of the League’s Charter that had clearly stipulated that an attack on a member of the League was an attack on all its members. ‘I Haile Sillasie1 Emperor of Ethiopia am, here to claim that justice is due to my people. Apart from the kingdom of God, no nation on this earth is higher than anyother. If a strong government can destroy a weak people, then the hour has struck for all weak peoples. I appeal to the League of Nations to give its judgement in all freedom. God and history will remember your judgment….’’, his views and legacy later led to Ethiopia becoming a charter-member of the United Nation Organization (UNO), and many believed the invasion of Ethiopia by the fascist- Italia led to the dissolutionof the League of Nations itself. The League of Nations (LoN) was an Inter-Governmental organization founded as a result of the Paris Peace Conference that ended the WWI. It was the first permanent international organization whose principal mission was to maintain world peace. Its primary goals, as stated in its Covenant, included preventing wars through collective security and disarmament, and settling international disputes through negotiation and arbitration. It had 58 member countries. (ትርጉም-ሃያላን መንግሥታት ሙግታችንን፤ የድረሱልን ጩኸታችንን ሰምተው ከጎናችን ለመቆም፤ ፍትሐዊ የሆነ ዳኝነት ለመስጠት የጀርመንና የጣሊያን ጊዜያዊ ሕብረት፤ የሞሶሎኒና የሒትለር እብደት ቢያሰጋቸውም እሳቱ ሲለበልባቸው ግን ሳይወዱ በግድ ከጎናችን ቆመዋል፡፡ ቀዳማዊ ኃይለ ሥላሴ በተባበሩት መንግሥታት መድረክ ያሰሙት ታሪካዊየትንቢት ንግግርም ይህን በእሳት የመለብለባቸው ጉዳይ የጊዜ ጉዳይ እንጂ ለእነርሱም የማይቀርላቸው መሆኑን ያረጋገጠ ነበር፡፡)

July 4: 1936: Historical Day: GENEVA, SWITZERLAND. Ethiopian EmperorHaile Selassie listens the LoN Assembly .... The League of Nations (LoN) drops all options sanctions against Italy.

Lorenzo Taezaz And The Italo-Ethiopian War of 1935 to 1941: Lorenzo Taezaz the Ethiopian diplomat could be considered as one of thelegendary heroes of the Italo-Ethiopian war of 1935-1941. From the dayhe left his homeland in 1925, until his untimely death in Sweden later in1946, he had an unusual life. Few Ethiopians of his generation have enjoyed a life so intense and so productive over a period of 21 years. Hecontributed more than his share to the liberation of Ethiopia from Italianfascism. Yet, the young generation of Ethiopians, which has grown up after the war, are almost entirely ignorant about him. The reason of his consignment to oblivion, for instance, has never been fully known. Similarly, the manner of his death which invites more questions than answers is passed over in complete silence. The actual role he played in the 1935-1941 period of Ethiopia's struggle against fascism. He met Ras Teferi Mekonnen [the future Emperor Haile Selassie I] in early years, andhow he started his career with the Ethiopian government.

July 14, 1936: SPORT: Saint George Sports Association founded byindigenous youth at the centre of Addis Ababa. St. George Sports Association was co-founded first by resident Greeks when Fascist Italy invaded Ethiopia in 1935. The Saint George SA was to its' strength by Ayele Atnash and George Dukas, the club quickly becomes the symbolof Ethiopian nationalism and a representation of the country's quest for freedom. The St. George Sports Association commonly called as "Kidus-Giorgis (Arada-Giorgis) Football Club" was strengthened as an indigenousSport Association mostly by natives during the Italian occupation.

July 15, 1936: The Italian Lira issued (1936–41) as main currency unitduring the Italian occupation of Ethiopia. Regular Italian coins and banknotes of Banca d'Italia circulated.

Side note: Not long after the Italian occupation and the transformation ofEthiopia into Italian East Africa. The Italian lira was introduced (on July 15, 1936) and Ethiopian banknotes were withdrawn from circulation at 3 lire per-thalar (birr). In an effort to increase the use of Italian paper money, the exchange rate for silver coin (Maria Theresa thalers) was raised to 4.50 lire, then to 5.00, and eventually, in stages, to 13.50. Still,many people kept their Ethiopian coins and banknotes. Regular Italian coins and banknotes of Banca d'Italia circulated after 15 July 1936.

Special notes with a red overprint were authorized for Italian East Africaon 12 September 1938, and a large quantity was printed. It is not clear,however, when, where, and to what extent these special notes actually circulated.

July 28, 1936: Undeterred by threats of vengeance numerous Ethiopian patriots determined to fight on. During the rains of 1936 several conceived the ambitious plan of re-capturing Addis Ababa. The two sons ofRas Kassa lead several thousand men in an attempt to recapture Addis Ababa from the Italians, but are driven back by the Italian garrison.

Suspected of supporting this action, the archbishop of Dessie, AbunaPetros, is shot by the Italians.

Side note,- One of the principal young Shoan chiefs, Dajazmach Aberra Kassa, the elder son of Ras Kasa Hailu, attacked from the northwest, butwas repulsed by Italian machine-gunning from the air. A month later, on26 August, one of Emperor Menilek's former commanders, Dajazmach Balcha, launched a further unsuccessful assault from the south-west, which was likewise defeated on account of Italian control of the air. Afterthe rains the Italians resumed the offensive, carrying out extensive bombing, and poison gassing, in Shoa, Lasta, Chercher, Yergalam, and elsewhere.

July 29, 1936: In an ambitious plan of re-capturing Addis Ababa, about400 patriotic liberation fighters led by Lij Fikre-Mariam, horsenamed as"Abba-Techan" made a surprise attack on to the Italians' hold in Addis Ababa.

September 26, 1936: Bilaten Getta Lorenzo Taezaz attended at GenevaLoN summit. Bilaten Getta Lorenzo Taezaz, born in sub-region of Akele-Guzay in then Eritrea under Italian protection, he was Ethiopia's chief diplomat until early 1940s.

October 16, 1936: Dejazmach Nasibu Zamanuel, the great anti-Fascistpatriot of the Ogaden, died of sickness in-exile (in Switzerland).

Dejazmatch Nassibu Zammnuel served as first Mayor of Addis Ababa from1922 to 1932, and an army commander who was later fought on the southern front during the war with the Italian invaders.

October, 1936: Italians begin armed campaigns into the two-thirds ofEthiopia still administered by Imperial officials.

October 26, 1936: Lij Fikre-Mariam "Abba-Techan" the renowned patrioticleader has devoted in a battle with the Italians at central Shoa district of Wurbu in Minjar-Shenkora.

November 6, 1936: Dejazmatch Balcha Safo (Aba-Nefso) the great warriorpassed away at his birthplace of Becho Abebe, his death remains controversial.

December 18, 1936: Ras Imru Haile-Selassie Abayneh surrenders to theItalians near the Gojeb River. Italy declares the country pacified.

Decemer 19, 1936: Lij Yewondwossen Kassa (posthumously Dejazmatch),the first son of Ras Kassa Haile Dargie, a member of the royalty of the Ethiopian empire, an army commander and a patriot captured in action bylocal rival groups, and was executed as a rebel.

December 21, 1936: Patriots Lij Abera Kassa and Lij Asfaw-wossen Kassa(both posthumously Dejazmatches) second and third sons of Ras Kassa Haile Dargie, the member of the royalty of the Ethiopian empire, were parts of the armed Ethiopian resistance surrendered to the Italians, then brutally executed as opposition rebels to Italian rule at a local market square in Lique.

In late 1936: Ras Kassa Haile Dargie who stayed in Ethiopia and was partof the resistance to the Italian occupation three of his four sons namely, Wond-wossen, Aberra, and Asfawwossen Kassa, were captured and brutally executed, he went exile flanking the emperor.

Side note: Abera, Wondwossen, and Asfawwossen were the sons of Ras Kassa Hailu, the governor of Selale, the noble of the House of Shoa, and President of the Imperial Crown Council for most of the reign of Emperor Haile Selassie. Ras Kassa Hailu himself was the decendent of the Shoan branch of the Imperial Solomonic dynasty on his mother's side, and the Zagwe dynasty on his father's side. Dejazmatch Abera and his younger brothers Dejazmatches Wondwossen and Asfaw Wossen Kassa assembled insurgent forces against the Fascist Italian occupation in 1936, and led a daring attempt to liberate Addis Ababa from the hands of fascists in 1937that failed. They were tricked into surrendering, and then executed at an open market. The wife of the elder Dejazmatch Abera Kassa, Woizero-hoyKebedech Seyoum was the daughter of the Prince of Tigre, HRH Leul Ras Seyoum Mengesha Yohannes, and a great-granddaughter of Emperor Yohannis IV. She became a great resistance fighter in her own right when she gathered up the remnants of her husbands army following his murder,and led them into battle against the Italian Fascist occupation forces in 14battles before retreating into then British ruled Sudan, following the liberation of Ethiopia in May 1941 ……

February 13, 1937: Italia: Earlier today the Pontiff had given his recognition of Italian sovereignty over Ethiopia by bestowing benedictionupon Victor Emmanuel as King of Italy and Emperor of Abyssinya.

February 19, 1937 (Yekatit 12, 1929 local calendar): An assassination attempt to kill Marshal Rodolfo Graziani, the Italian

Governor-general (Governatore Italiana) by two young Eritreans namely,Abraha Daboch and Moges Asgedom, flares massively massacre of an estimated 30, 000 to 46, 000 population of native Ethiopians in Addis Ababa, such horrible act opened a new phase of the struggle.

Side note: Timely eyewitnessing account of the various atrocities perpetrated on the Ethiopian population during the brief occupation of Ethiopia by Mussolini's regime witnesses as followed … Field Marshal Rodolfo Graziani was a member of Mussolini's Fascist High Command and served at Il Duce's pleasure. This arrangement paid off quickly in terms ofpromotion. By the early 1930s Graziani had become vice governor and military commander of Cyrenaica in Eastern Libya. By February 1935 he was appointed governor and military commander of Italian occupied Somalia. This position allowed him to participate in the invasion of Ethiopia from the South-East. By 1936, he became Viceroy of Italian East Africa and Governor-General of Shewa/Addis Ababa. This was the practicalculmination of his villainous phrase: "The Duce will have Ethiopia, with or without the Ethiopians."

Massive and Indiscriminate Execution: Rodolfo Graziani was a cruel andprolific mass killer whose major "killing fields" were in Ethiopia.

Fortunately, the oral history of the Ethiopian genocide handed down to ushas been validated in recently published books. The crucial events may bepresented as follows. Following the famousYekatit-February 1937 grenade-driven assassination attempt on Grazianiat the Palace, a bloody and indiscriminate repression followed. Terrified by an imminent insurrection, the panicking Italians opened fire indiscriminately unleashingterror throughout Addis Ababa. It was an "orgy of murder, bloodlust and mayhem" writes Campbell. The indiscriminate massacres, hangings and burning of people, homes/villages lasted for several days. To be sure, thedead have never been really counted, continues Campbell, but are estimated at 30.000 Ethiopian martyrs in three days. That is ten thousandEthiopians every day! The Acting British Consul General reported the atrocities as a “wholesale and indiscriminate execution” of Ethiopians found in the neighborhood of the Palace and elsewhere in an expanding cycle of death. In every case, the crime was one of being Ethiopian.Party Federal Secretary Guido Cortese declared to well-armed Fascists and Blackshirt troops “For 3 days I give you carta blancato destroy and kill and do what you want to Ethiopians.” In those days mutilated corpses littered the streets of Addis, ostensibly “to make an impression on the native mind” as the Viceroy grew fond of saying. All told, hyenas and dogs fed on the mutilated corpseof Ethiopians. The American Consul-General wrote that there have been mass executions of wretched people, in batches of 50 or 100, although they could not have any possible part in the attack on Graziani. The diplomat wrote “I have seen no display of unbridled brutality and cowardice since the Armenian massacres.”The parallel is instructive, although Consul-General did not yet conceptualize it as genocide. The military-political objective of the “mass executions” was to colonize Ethiopia by any means necessary, including (poison gas) and fratricide. It is high time the international community acknowledge that genocide was indeed perpetrated by Mussolini’s Italian fascist state in an effort to conquer, plunder and colonize Ethiopia.

No wonder Graziani became known as “the Butcher of Addis Ababa” in addition to his designation as “Butcher of Libya” and the “Hyena of Cyrenaica.” His designations speak to his bestiality, not to mention his predatory instincts and deadly intent. To illustrate the genocidal intent andaspects of his crime further: Il Duce Mussolini decided to invade and brutalize/exploit Ethiopia to expunge the humiliation of defeat “civilized” Italy had suffered at the battle of Adowa (1896). The Italians had returned to avenge the decisive and humiliating Adwa (1896) defeat that Ethiopians and Emperor Menelik had inflicted on the overall white supremacist imperialist-colonial project in Africa. The repercussions were worldwide and lasting. No European colonizing army had ever been so thoroughly crushed in Africa. The Adowavictory forced foreign powers to recognize Ethiopia’s very existence in the modern world’s inter-state system, its sovereignty and independence included. Also, Ethiopia’s victory had inspired Marcus Garvey’s Back to Africa Movement and awakened Black -and Pan-African consciousness.

Ethiopia thus emerged as a beacon for anti-colonial and anti-imperialstruggles.

Field Marshal Graziani was a member of Mussolini’s Fascist High Commandand served at Il Duce’s pleasure. This arrangement paid off quickly in terms of promotion. By the early 1930s Graziani had become vice governor and military commander of Cyrenaica or Eastern Libya. By February 1935 he was appointed governor and military commander of Italian occupied Somalia. This position allowed him to participate in the invasion of Ethiopia from the South-East. By 1936, he became Viceroy of Italian East Africa and Governor-General of Shewa/Addis Ababa. This wasthe practical culmination of his villainous phrase: "The Duce will have Ethiopia, with or without the Ethiopians."

Side note: The fascists, reacted violently to the attempted assassination oftheir leader Graziani, carried out a three-day massacre in Addis Ababa, in the course of which, between 19 and 21 February, thousands of innocent Ethiopians were killed. At this date equivalent to the local calendar, Yekatit 12 (February 19), the Italian Fascist troops under Governor- general Marshal Rodolfo Graziani have arbitrarily massacred to an estimated 30, 000 occassionally gathered Ethiopians, and to the imprisonment of many others by elements of the Italian occupationist forces following an attempted assassination of the Governor-general. Marshal Rodolfo Graziani is known for to have led the Italian occupationistforces to victory over the Abyssinyan occupation in the second Italo- Abyssinyan war of 1935 to 1941, and was the Supreme-governor of the Italian East Africa. The indiscriminate massacre was the single worst attrocity in history committed by the Italian Fascist armies.

February 24, 1937: The Execution of Ras Desta Damtew by the invadingItalians.

Side note: Ras Desta Damtew (1892 - 1937) was an Ethiopian noble, anarmy commander, and a son-in-law of King Haile Selassie I. along with other patriots Dejazmach Guebremariam Gari, Dejazmach Beyene Merid(then Shum of Bale Province), and a dwindling number of soldiers, weretrapped near Lake Shala in the Battle of Gogetti caught and executed.

Dejazmach Desta Damtew (posthumously Ras), including Dejazmatch Beyene Merid anti-Fascist patriotic leaders died in persecution by the fascist Italian invaders. Dejazmatch Beyene Merid and Dejazmatch Desta Damtew, both sons-in-law King Haile Selassie were captured in action by the Italians at a jungle in Sidamo. They were then immediately executed at a market place. Dejazmach Desta Damtew, and Dejazmach Beyene Merid (both posthumousely Rasses), and Dejazmach Guebre Mariam Gari were captured in a battle and were all executed by a firing squad during the War of Resistance against the Italian agressors. The Italians thought this public display might would discourage patriotism – it had the oppositeeffect.

Dejazmach Desta Damtew was an Ethiopian noble, an army commander,and a son-in-law of Emperor Haile Selassie I.

Born: on 1898 – Died (executed by Italian fascist troops): on February 24,1937,

Spouse: Princess Tenagnework Haile Selassie (m. 1924–1937)...Her place of burial: Holy Trinity Cathedral, Addis Ababa, EthiopiaChildren by Princess Tenagnework Haile Selassie:

- Aida Desta (born on April 8 1927)
- Lij Amha Desta (born on August 21 1928)
- Hirut Desta (born on April 20 1930)
- Sable-Wangel Desta (born on August 29 1931)
- Sofya Desta (born on January 1 1933)
- Lij (later Rear Admiral) Iskender Desta (born on August 6 1934) .....

Ras Desta Damtew was born in small village called Maskan, in the Ethiopian sub-region of Guraghe. He was a prominent nobleman, brave warrior and military commander during the war against the fascists

Italians. He was an appointed leader of the resistance against the Italiansin the South by the Emperor. He led an army against the fascists and distorted most of their strong holds in the South West part of Ethiopia. Hewas described as “a piece of iron” by Italian Generals for his fearless resistance in the battle fields.

In 1937 Ras Desta Damtew faced and encircled with three columns of Italian infantry. After days of bloody wars, the Italians lost in one of their three fronts but provided additional support which gave them the upper hand at the end. Ras Desta Damtew was encircled by the Italian army butmanaged to escape to Eya, Butajira. He was then chased by the Italian army in Butajira but he bravely fought back until he was captured and publicly executed by firing squared shortly afterwards in 1937. As stated by Jon Abbink (in 2003), “The Italians though that the execution of Ras Desta would kill the fervor of the resistance in Ethiopia but this proved to be wrong as more people were moving to support the patriots.” Ethiopia and history will always remember the sacrifices made by our heroes. Restin peace Ras Desta Damtew!

In Memory of The Great Ethiopian Hero

A poem wrote by Marcus Garvey in honor of the great patriot in 1937 asfollowed,

The flow'r of a nation's strength

Had thrown their valour and their mightAgainst the charging hordes of death

In history's most unequal fight!

One man remained-the last of them-To stand for Ethiopia:

All else surrendered, died or fled But, he, the lion-hearted-Ras Desta.

Graziani, Italian butcher

Had valiant Desta quickly shot, To seal his lips and tie his handsIn fear of what he called a plot. With death of such a noble man, A reign has passed to history;But time will bring to us againMore men to fight for victory (Text ends)

March 12, 1937: Italia: The Pointiff had given the word that "The war against Ethiopia should be considered as a holy war, a crusade to openEthiopia, a country of infidels and Schismatics to the Expansion of the Catholic Faith."

Italia: The Archbishop of Milan, cardinal Schuster, went farther and did allhe could to bestow upon the Abyssinian War, the nature of a Holy Crusade. "The Italian (Fascist Flag) is at the moment bringing in triumph the Cross of Christ in Ethiopia to free the road for the emancipation of theslaves, opening it at the same time to our missionary propaganda."

Italia: Pope Pius XI is credited with much admiration for Mussolini that theItalian Clergy as a whole are pro-Fascist is easy to understand, saying that Fascism is a nationalist, authoritarian, anti-socialist Force".

May 8, 1937: The town Harrar was captured by Italian troops underMarshal Rodolfo Graziani.

In 1937: At the League of Nations (LoN) in Geneva, Switzerland, KingHaile-Selassie condemned the Italian fascist armies and their use of chemical weapons against his people.

May 20, 1937: Marshal Rodolfo Graziani ordered the execution of the monks at the historic Shoan monastery of Dabra-Libanos. Two hundred and ninety-seven monks were accordingly shot, and 129 deacons were killed a few days later, after which Rodolfo Graziani proudly telegaphed toMussolini, “of the monastery, there remains no more trace”.
May 21, 1937: In Rome, Italy was celebrating its fourth anniversary of theproclamation of the Italian Empire. The celebratory parade was attended by Adolf Hitler, Benito Mussolini and King Victor Emmanuel III. Thousandsof subjects from Italy’s African colonies marched during the parade.
Among them was a young Eritrean man named Zerai Deres. He was carrying the sword to salute the King, the Führer, and Il Duce, at the grandstand. As the parade marched past the Vittorio Emanuele monument, Zerai Deres looked up and saw the golden Lion of Judah, the symbol of the ancient monarchy, to which his ancestors had long owed allegiance, erected as a war booty in the heart of Rome. The shock was too great for him, and he drew his sword and with it he slew five fascist guards, as well as wounding others, before he himself was killed on the spot in a hail of gunshots. It was too much for him to bear, and he promptly drew his sword and with tears of anger running down his face hefell on the first Italian officer he could find. He killed and wounded numerous Italian military officers before he was killed. His death is considered part of the anti-fascist movement against Italian occupation. Zaray Deres was born in Hazega, Hamassien district of present Eritrea, and is considered a folk hero in Ethiopia to this day. The Lion of Judah monument that provoked his fury has been restored to Addis Ababa, afterlong negotiations between Ethiopia and Italy in the 1960s.
Zerai Deres of the ‘Tsa-Hazega of Hamassien in Eritrea’ died in 1937 in Rome, Italy, in public opposition to the rise of fascist power in Italy and her African colonies. His death is considered part of the movement againstItalian occupation. Deres was born in Hazega, Eritrea and is considered a folk hero in both Ethiopia and Eritrea. Ethiopia was a member of the League of Nations when Italy invaded and occupied it from 1936 to 1941. It was a clear violation of the Covenant of the League of Nations and an act of aggression for a member State to invade and occupy another member State. The Ethiopians resisted the invasion until the Italians started to use chemical warfare agents like mustard gas. In June 1936, King Haile Selassie I appealed to the League of Nations to take action against the invasion. But it was ignored.
In the rains of 1937: Ethiopian patriots highly resisted the invasion until the Italians started to use chemical warfare agents like Mustard gas. Manysurvivors fled the capital, and joined the patriots. strengthened by this increase in their numbers patriotic forces again took the offensive in Lastaunder Dajazmach Hailu Kebede, and in Gojjam under Dajazmach Mangesha and Belay Zeleke. Benito Mussolini responded by ordering Rodolfo Graziani to “use all measures, including poisoned gas”. The Viceroy intensified his reign of terror, but, unable to crush the rebellion in Shoa, opened abortive peace negotiations with the area’s principal patriot leader, Ras Abebe Aregay Bachire.

June 29, 1937: Abune Petros was executed by the Italian fascists thatwere trying to colonize the country for his refusal to submit.

Side note: Abune Petros was one of the four first native Ethiopians who were anointed as bishops by the Coptic Patriarch of Alexandria to serve under the Coptic born Archbishop Abune Querillos of Ethiopia in 1932. Abune Petros was given the province of Wollo as his diocese. In 1936 when the Fascist armies of Benito Mussolini occupied much of Ethiopia, and Abune Petros traveled to the northern Shoan district of Menz to jointhe sons of Ras Kassa Hailu, Wondwossen, Abera and Asfaw-Wossen Kassa and other resistance leaders to plan an attack on the Italians to drive them out of Addis Ababa. The attack failed, and the Bishop was captured. Defiantly refusing to submit to Italian rule, he was condemnedto death. Shortly before his execution Abune Petros Bishop of Wollo, dressed in his clerical robes, held up his hand cross and pronounced his anathema on the people and on the very earth of Ethiopia itself, if they were ever to submit to the invader “may God give the people of Ethiopiathe strength to resist and never bow down to the fascist army and violence. May the Ethiopian earth never accept the invading army’s rule” Abune Petros quoted as saying. He was then shot to death in front of a horrified audience. Emperor Haile Selassie I had the statue erected in thememory of this great Bishop upon his restoration to the throne. The spotof his execution on the western edge of this square is also marked by a memorial slab.

November 9, 1937: Italian occupying forces took the offensive again afterthe rains, but the patriots did not lose hope. Well aware of the increasing political divergence between the “totalitarian” and “democratic” powers inEurope, they were confident that the latter would ultimately be embroiledin a European war and as a result be obliged to come to their assistance.

Marshal Rodolfo Graziani frankly admitted as much when he observed, that the “rebel patriots” were awaiting a European war. Some ofthe patriots at about this time also attempted to forge more integrated resistance, as indicated by the fact that three of the principal Shoan patriot leaders, Lej Zawde Asfaw, Dejazmatch Takala Walde-Hawaryat, and Shalaqa Mesfen Seleshi at about this time drew up a manifesto urgingthe Gojjam people to rally behind them. Marshal Graziani, however, continued to insist on repression. Referring to the Shoan patriots, he declared it necessary to “eliminate them, eliminate them, eliminate them”,as he had preached since assuming office. The patriots movement was centered mainly in Shoa, Begemider and Gojjam, but drew support from almost all parts of the country. Some of the most resolute fighters included Eritrean deserters from the Italian colonial army. There was also an active underground movement, in Addis Ababa and a few other provincial towns, composed of "wust arbagna", or “insiders”. They helped to provide military, medical and other supplies to the patriots in the field, and to inform them of the enemy movements. Many Ethiopian women, including one of the daughters of Ras Kassa and the renowned Shawaragga Gadle, were also prominent, either in the field or as wust patriots.

Ethiopia’s first taxi company on commencement:

Around 1937, about a year and half through the second invasion of Ethiopia by Italy, a taxi company was operating by an Italian businessmannamed Signore Fernondo. The company opened its doors for service around Georgis Church of Arada as seen. At the time, the taxis were dark brown and served only European residents around the city. Ethiopians were not allowed to ride them unless they were bandas or servitore (ኦገልጋይ). My other source, which is The Armenian Weekly, has quoted that the first taxi service in Ethiopia began to operate in Addis Abeba by Armenian drivers in the year 1915 not in the year 1937, according to historian Eduardo Byrono

In mid-December, 1937: Continued patriotic resistances were the causesof the Italian Vice-Roy's dismissal, and replacement.
December 21, 1936: Prince Amedeo, 3rd Duke of Aosta, appointed andreplaced the first Viceroy and Governor-General.
December 26, 1937: Continued patriots resistance was one of the causes of the Viceroy's dismissal, and replacement, by the Duke of Aosta, a member of the Italian royal family. Soon after his appointment the Duke'schief-of-staff, Ugo Cavellero, admitted that "large parts" of Shoa and Amhara were then in rebellion, and that `pockets of resistance' also persisted in the south-west. He added that the "rebel patriots" enjoyed the "full support" of the people, who were ready to join them. The extent of opposition to the invaders was confirmed by the exiled Emperor Haile Sellassie, who claimed that patriot resistance was then "more extensive" than ever before. Menilek's great-grandson, Lej Yohannes Iyasu, himself a patriot, observed that the invader, though in control of the major towns, had been unable to conquer the country.
Later in 1938: Blatten-Getta Lorenzo T'ezaz who self-exiles with the emperor led a secret mission to the Italian occupied territories, petitioned over 10, 000 patriots in favor of the monarch to provide the "British Middle East High Command" based in Cairo, Egypt. This time Dejazmatch Takele Wolde-Hawariyat led led a brief rebellion against thecoming monarch opposing the move.
June 10, 1940: Italia declares war against Britain and France, British EastAfrican Forces under Royal Gedeon expedtionary forces offered the Ethiopian monarch a military assistance to be reinstalled against the Italian invasion.
Side note: As a lawyer, and fluent in several European languages, LorenzoLorenzo Taezaz effectively argued Ethiopia's case in Geneva, and gained for his country considerable sympathy and support. When the British government hesitated in supporting Haile Selassie's return to Ethiopia, contending that the emperor had no power base inside the country, Lorenzo was instrumental in changing London's mind. He went to Italian occupied Ethiopia, collected the signatures of 10,000 important members of the resistance who affirmed their allegiance to the emperor, and convinced the British to go along with Haile Selassie.
Blatten-Geta Lorenzo Taezaz Mebrahtu: Brief Background: Lorenzo Taezazwas born on 30 June 1900 in the Akele Guzaie province of Eritrea, then anItalian colony. He received his first education in Italian schools in Asmara and Keren and started his career with the Italian colonial administration when he was still very young. Because of his intelligence and hard work, Lorenzo rose to the rank of Secretary to the Governor of Asmara, the highest position that an Eritrean could reach in the colonial administration.

In 1924, while on vacation in Aden, he met Ras Teferi Mekonnen, thefuture Haile Selassie, who was there on an official visit, and who encouraged him to go to Ethiopia. A year later, Lorenzo went to Addis Ababa. Subsequently, Ras Teferi Mekonnen arranged for his education, and along with other Ethiopians, he sent him to France on a government scholarship. Lorenzo spent the next eight years at the University of Montpelier where he completed his studies in Law and Philosophy. Apart from his native Tigrigna, he already spoke Amharic, Arabic and Italian, butMontpelier also provided him with an opportunity to master French and English.

He returned to Ethiopia in 1933 and began to serve the Ethiopian government in several capacities: Secretary, Ministry of Justice (1933); member of the Anglo-Ethiopian Boundary Commission which demarcated Ethiopia's borders with former British Somaliland (1933-34); member of the same Commission which was charged with the duty of surveying the grazing grounds of the Ogaden, and investigating the causes of the Wal- Wal incident of 1934, which led to the Italo-Ethiopian War of 1935-1941; appointed private secretary of Haile Selassie, and in addition he served asliaison officer to the international press (1935-1936). He even saw action at the Battle of Maichew (1936) that culminated in the defeat of the Ethiopians by the Italians.

Lorenzo had presented a plan to Haile Selassie to transfer the governmentcenter to Gore (1) – a remote and inaccessible town in western Ethiopia from where the counter-offensive could be prosecuted. However, the costsand risks of fighting the mechanized Italian army was debated and measured against the risks and costs of not fighting. When the Council of Ministers agreed by twenty one to three vote(2), that the risks were too grave and the costs too high, it was decided that Haile Selassie should go and personally present Ethiopia's case to the League of Nations. In May 1936, therefore, Lorenzo left Ethiopia and accompanied Emperor Haile Selassie in his exile to Europe. There, he was appointed Ethiopia's Permanent Delegate to the League of Nations and subsequently took an active role in the struggle against Italian fascism. During the occupation, Lorenzo secretly entered Ethiopia on several occasions. After Ethiopia's liberation in 1941, he was appointed Minister for Foreign Affairs (1941- 1943), Minister for Posts, Telephones and Telegrams (1943), President of the Chamber of Deputies (1943-1944), Minister to Moscow, USSR (1944- 1946), and Delegate to the Paris Peace Conference (May 1946). A month later, he died in a hospital in Stockholm, Sweden. To start with a brief survey of Italy's involvement in the affairs of the area – an involvement which probably caused Lorenzo's departure from his place of birth.

Background to the Italian Occupation of Eritrea and the Threat AgainstEthiopia: The Eritrea of the 1920s that Lorenzo left, was a sad place.

Eritreans were constantly reminded of their inferiority in their own countryby their colonial masters, the Italians. The Asmara municipality excluded them from all participation. In the central government hierarchy, they hadno part. Eritreans could at best aspire to be low-paid clerks or orderlies.
There was no trace when they could advance towards participation in government, or of administration scheme which could lead to it. There was to be, in perpetuity, only rulers and the passive ruled.(6) The combined effect of the policy of colonial oppression, social humiliation andmaterial deprivation had several results in Eritrea. Of immediate concern to us during this particular period is the immigration of some 200,000 Eritreans to Ethiopia. One such Eritrean was Lorenzo Taezaz.
Why did he escape from Colonial Eritrea? Was his immigration to Ethiopialargely inspired by personal feelings of hopelessness in his future in colonial Eritrea, or by some other purpose? Was he conscious of a specificthreat against Ethiopia at the time? How was it possible for him to play anoutstanding role in the resistance movement against fascism, and eventually to become Ethiopia's Foreign Minister? These questions are pertinent. It is useful to consider them in the context of the historical background that led to Italy's involvement in the affairs of the people of the region.
June 10, 1940: Pan-Africanism Leader Marcus Garvey Died On This Day In1940.
The contributions of Black Nationalist and Pan-Africanism leader MarcusGarvey (pictured) inspired other great leaders who forged similar movements. Garvey died on this day in 1940, but not without leaving behind a trail of noteworthy moments forever etched in to the annals ofAfrican History.
June 1940 to November 1941: The East African Campaign was a series of battles fought in East Africa during World War II by the British Empire, theBritish Commonwealth of Nations and several allies against the forces of Italy. Under the leadership of the British Middle East Command, British allied forces involved consisted not only of regular British troops, but also many recruits from British Commonwealth nations (Sudan, British Somaliland, British East Africa, the Indian Empire, South Africa, Northern Rhodesia, Southern Rhodesia, Nyasaland, British West Africa, as well as the British Mandate of Palestine). In addition to the British and Commonwealth forces, there were Ethiopian irregular forces.
(Text ends)
In mid-January of 1941: The former Italian protectorate of Eritrea wasoccupied by the British.
Side note;- The British UN mandated administration in Eritrea had established this time, and a Radio-communications base at the former Italian territory called "Radio-Marina", which was located in Asmara, and later that to be held by the US Army who received access to the base fromthe British begining in 1942 until the base officially name "Kagnew communications station". The British intention of separating Tigre provincefrom Ethiopia, as to incorporate into "Greater Tigrai-Tigrign monarchy" under either Dejazmatch Haile-selassie Gugsa Araya-Selassie or his archrival Ras Seyoum Mengesha Yohannes, both grandsons of emperor Yohannes VI and the pro-British Liberal Progressive Party formed underDejazmatch Abraha Tessema Asmerom in then Eritrea was failed to achieve it's political ambition.

January 18, 1941: Ethiopian Patriotic forces along with the British Gedeonforeces liberated the nation’
Side note: The exiled monarchial head King Haile Selassie who marches tothe Sudan from the Egyptian town of Alexandria, Egypt, crossed the Ethio-Sudanese border and hanged the Ethiopian flag at Umm-Iddla. Signaled the end of the Liberation war of Italian East Africa by the British, Commonwealth and the Ethiopian patriotic forces.
Italy had ambitions of empire in Ethiopia long before the 1930s. The World War II, or the second World War (often abbreviated as WW II or WW2) was a global conflict that was underway by 1939 and ended in 1945. It involved most of the World's nations including all of the great powers- eventually forming two opposing military alliances, the Allies and the Axis. Emperor Haile Selassie I, the monarchial head, who had reigned since November, 1930 maintained it's freedom from colonial rule with the exception of a short-lived Italian occupation from 1936 to 1941, until the date he dethroned. The Emperor marched to Addis Ababa, the capital in aa victorious spirit. This time Dejazmatch Belai Zeleke, one of whom brought the country's freedom, was accompanied him to be arrested in Addis Ababa upon his political confrontation with the emperor at his arrivalin Gojjam, inside the Ethiopian territory.

Ethiopian prisoners of war (most probably to be Italian Askaris) held by the British & latter released by the UK pushing one out of the nearly 100trucks that transports them from Sudan to Dessie. Italy’s invasion of theAfrican nation in 1936, when the Europeans were victorious, but the Italians remained in Ethiopia for only five years before being driven out,and Ethiopia has been independent ever since.

March 29, 1941: The city of Harrar was seized by the British commonwealth allies. Of Ethiopia's protracted guerilla warfare, Italy was defeated. Then all previous treaties with Ethiopia became null and void with the 1935 agression, and Italy's subsequent loss of the war. Italy lostnot only the war but also all it's colonial possessions in Africa.
April 1, 1941: ’British Military Administration In Eritrea’ formed under the auspices of the UN. The British military force had won the war against the Italian protection over Eritrea and occupied the city of Asmara in April 1, 1941. And "The British Military Administration in Eritrea” formed under the supervision of the British Commonwealth Office.
Meantime, a pro-unionist party known as “Mahber Fikri-Hager” led byunionist Guebre-Mesquel Habte-Mariam Woldu launched in the predominantly Christian population of Eritrean highlands (in Seraye, Hamassien, and Akele-Guzay), shortly known as “Kabassa". The MahberFekri Hager, meaning the 'Association of Love of Country' the Eritrean Unionist movement which championed union with Ethiopia, later labeledas 'Ye-Eritrea ena Ye-Ethiopia Andinet Mahber' (Association of Union of Eritrea with Ethiopia). It's founder Guebre Mesquel Habtemariam Wolduwas from Seraye. Guebre Mesquel completed his studies in engineering,University of Paris in 1928.

In the 1940s he was editor-in-chief of the Voice of Eritrea (Dimtsi-Eritrea),which demanded Eritrea's immediate unification with Ethiopia. Mahber Fekri Hager (Association of Love of Country) was by far the earliest political movement in Eritrean history. The Unionist Association had its headquarters in Asmara and a number of branch offices in different parts of Eritrea. Furthermore, Mahber Fekri Hager had its own newspaper called"The Voice of Eritrea" published in Tigrigna and circulated throughout Eritrea. The British Military Administration in Eritrea was by no means sympathetic to the pro-Ethiopian unionist movement there.

Then Eritrea can be divided geographically into four major climate orinhabiting zones:

THE EASTERN LOWLANDS;- Semhar, part of Akele-Guzay and part ofSahel, called as the 'Eastern lowlands.'

WETERN LOWLANDS: Part of Seraye, part of Senhit, part of Sahel, Barkaand Gash-setit, called as the 'Western lowlands.'

DANKHALIA: A sparsely populated region, located south of Semhar toDjibouti boarder.

KEBESA (The central highland): Part of Akele-Guzay, part of Seraye, Hamassien (with Asmara) part of Senhit and part of Sahel, concentrated by thicker population called usually as 'the central highlands' or commonlyknown as 'Kebessa'

Introduction to Highland-Eritrea:

The three major highland (Tigrign speaking) races in the then 'Eritrea under British Military Administration'. For those who don't know the difference between the three major Tigrigna speaking races i.e. EritreanChristian highlanders (Akele-Guzay, Seraye, and Hamassien), shortly known in common as 'Kebessa' .

Akele Guzay, Akele or Dequi Akele: are the best warriors in Eritrea. Any anti-Italian resistance was almost exclusively from the Akeles. Abraham Deboch and Moges Asgedom were originally from Akele-Guzay. The Akelesthink of themselves as patriotic, no nonsense high self esteem people and they undermine the Hamassiens and Serayes. Seraye, Serawatay or Dequi Seraye: do not look down on any other people. They look up to everyone. They are the most despised people andthe least intermarried among all Eritreans. They are looked down not onlyby both the Akeles and Hamassiens but even by the non-Tigrigna speaking Eritreans. The Serayes in real world never tell you they are fromSeraye clan, they chose to present themselves either as Hamassien or Akele out of shame, although it is very easy to tell apart a Seraye from his/her looks.

Hamassien, Hamasenay or Dequi Hamassien: think of themselves as thebest refined race in Eritrea citing their historical closeness with the leadership of the Italian colonial masters. They were considered the favored Negros by the Italians and the and the Hamassiens see themselves as more Italianized or modernized and hence superior to theAkeles and Serayes.

April 15, 1941: Emperor Haileselassie discussed military plans with UKmilitary officers-Brigadier Arthur Daniel Sanford & Colonel Wingate - atDembecha Fort on their advance from Sudan to Ethiopia.

April 18, 1941: Assela the provincial town of Arussi province had been captured by Ethiopian forces as a final military assault, and continued south supported by armored cars to capture the town of Bekodji. The townof Bekodji which located about 50 km south of the provincial town Assela, is well recognised at the latter times in the international athletics sports arena as the home of many famous Ethiopian athletes and track runners to come out of Bekodji (at the latter all celeberated athletes, from DarartuTulu to Kenenisa Bekele and from Fatuma Roba to Tirunesh Dibaba, and countless other elite runners, have dominated the long-distance athletics competitions at the Olympic Games and other major international races for the next half of the century.)

April 20, 1941: Ethiopian patriots who are fighting with their Emperor intheir own country displayed a banner on which is depicted the Lion of Judah in Ethiopia,

May 5, 1941:Ttriumphant Entry: Emperor Haile Sellassie's triumphantreturn to Ethiopia. "Today is a day on which Ethiopia is stretching herhands to Egziabher/God in joy and thankfulness and revealing her happiness to her children."

On this day in 1941, 5 years to the day that the troops of Fascist Italy had occupied Addis Ababa, Emperor Haile Selassie returned to his capital.

After weeks of intrigue by British regional colonial authorities to prevent the return of the Emperor, his allies, which included his military advisors Wingate and Sandford as well as his influential friends in London, had convinced Churchill and his government that it would be dishonorable to prevent it. The British had liberated the city from the fascists in the previous month, but the public had largely regarded the event as one colonial power replacing another. General Cunningham had raised the British flag over the palace, and had even tried to enforce racial separation laws that the Italians had never truly enforced. The Emperor and his Gideon Force of combined Ethiopian and British troops had entered Debre Markos, capital of Gojjam on the same day as Cunningham with his British, South African and Nigerian troops had entered Addis Ababa. The Emperor had wanted to fly to Addis Ababa right away. But Cunningham, Lush, and British colonial authorities in Nairobi, Khartoum and Cairo all urged the British government to prevent it. They argued to London that the "natives" would be so roused by the Emperor's return that they would massacre the Italians and possibly other white people. Orde Wingate and Daniel Sandford argued vociferously against such dishonorable conduct. Wingate was so passionate in his defense of Ethiopian independence and the Emperor's cause, that he would eventually be accused of split loyalties and was demoted in rank and made to leave Ethiopia without being allowed to say farewell to the Emperor. The Emperor had strong allies in London as well, and Sir Winston Churchill ordered that all obstacles to the Emperor's return be removed.

Now, after attending Holy Liturgy at St. Mary's Church on Mt. Entoto in the early hours of the day, Emperor Haile Selassie prepared to enter his capital. The Emperor was presented with a white horse on which to ride into the city in triumph. Perhaps in recognition of Wingate's battle for his cause, he granted the honor of riding the white horse to Orde Wingate, and he instead entered the city in the back of an open car. Accounts from the time say that many of the population had treated the news of the Emperor's return with disbelief. Now as they saw his unmistakable small figure in the back of the car, the people finally believed that foreign rule was over, and that the sovereign and sovereignty had returned to Addis Ababa. Ras Abebe Aregai had said to the Emperor "I never thought I would live to see your face again". But here he was, the Ethiopian monarch raising the Ethiopian flag over the Ethiopian Palace, and striding into the Throne Hall of the Menelik Palace to sit on the ancient Ethiopian Throne. They threw themselves to the ground in homage, and raised their arms to heaven and ululate with joy. Ethiopia had raised her hands to God, and He had answered.

The Solomonic Dynasty of Ethiopian Empire (Mengiste-Ethiopia) restored. Side note: Haile Selassie I entered with the British assistance in a victorious spirit in Addis Ababa, the Ethiopian capital, was restored to his throne, right after five years to the day since his May, 1936 exile. His Royal Highness Ras Taffari Makonnen who had been crowned as emperor Haile-Selassie since 2nd November, 1930 was restored to his throne with the assistance of British Commonwealth of Nations Royal Gedeon forces of Kings African Rifles (KAR) and several allies whos rounded up against the forces of Italy started from June, 1941 to November 1941 was led by Colonel Orde Wingate brought to an end. The king officially declares the liberation of Ethiopia from Italian occupation, and he addresses citizens tonot harm the surrendering Italian soldiers. The British forces, which consisted primarily of Ethiopian-backed African colonial troops under the "Gedeon Force" of Colonel Orde Wingate, coordinated the military effort tore-liberate Ethiopia.

May 17, 1941: "Il Duce De Auosta" of Italia lastly surrendered in an Ethio-British jointly operated bloody war with the last Italian forces at "battle of Amba-Alage"

Side note;- A leading fascist diarist, Arcanovaldo Bonacorsi, noted that throughout the empire there was "a state of latent rebellion", which: "would have its final and tragic denouncement when war breaks out with our enemies. If at any point whatever, a detachment of English or French were to enter with banner unfurled they would need little or no troops for they would find the vast mass of the Abyssinian population would unite themselves to that flag to combat and eject our forces. In the case of suchan emergency we should find ourselves unable to withstand our enemy given the state of unpreparedness and lack of equipment of our forces".

May 6, 1941: Forefathers liberated the country fully from Italian occupation within a five year patriotic struggle and bloodshed fight. Ethiopian patriotic forces along with the British forces who liberated Addis Ababa in early weeks paved the way to victoriously end the Italian occupation of Ethiopia.

Side note;- With victory in the Ethiopian campaigns by British,Commonwealth and Ethiopian patriot forces, the Fascist-Italy's attempt to colonize Ethiopia came to an ubrupt end on this day. Emperor Haile-Selassie was restored to his throne in victorious sprit after spendingthe preceding 5 years in exile in Europe. Members of the Ethiopian Royal Family were reunited for the first time in several years. The Arat Kilo monument stands at the heart of Addis Ababa's government district, and in front of the Ministry of Education building. The monument at the heart of the Square commemorates the victory over the fascist Italian invaders,and the struggle that preceded it (Meyazia 27 on the Ethiopian Calender, (May 5th on the Gregorian Calender), is both the day that Addis Ababa was occupied by the Fascists, as well as the day that Emperor Haile Selassie returned to his capital in triumph exactly 5 years later). The original monument includes a relief of the Emperor Haile Selassie holding the national flag, This square was the focus of Victory Day celebrations held on May 5th (Miazia 27) every year when the Emperor would lay a wreath here following his attendence at Mass at the Church of the Savior of the World (Meskaie-Hezunan Medhane-Alem) Church.
Ethiopia: taking the oath
An Ethiopian officer swears an oath of allegiance on the eve of the Italian invasion of the country in 1935. Ahead lay terrible battles and many wouldlose their lives, while the Emperor would be forced to flee into exile. “Taking the oath in Abyssinia. The officer’s right hand is raised, while his left had touches the Colours. the oath is as follows: ‘I swear as a soldier ofmy emperor, Haile Selassie, to remain for ever true to him and to Ethiopia. Never to give way in battle, and in war to die for Emperor and country only whilst attacking.'”

Lij Amha Desta Damtew, the first child son of Princess Tenagne-worq Haile-selassie by first husband Ras Desta Damtew, passed away at his teen age. The elder child son, Prince Amha Desta, died shortly before thefamily returned to Ethiopia.
May 23, 1941: Marshal Pietro Gazzera, appointed Acting Viceroy andGovernor-General.
Side note: However, following the Liberation of the nation, Haile Selassie'sreturn to Ethiopia, Dejazmatch Haile-Selassie Gugsa Araya-selassie writer (Tsehafe) Affaworq Guebre-Eyesus were officially labeled collaborators, and accused of national treason, and were being sent “Ghezot” meaning house arrested in remote locality, were tried for treason, and sentenced todeath—a sentence subsequently commuted to life imprisonment, by the restored Ethiopian government. The two were exiled Gorie (Illubabour) and Jimma (Kaffa) provinces where both were by then blind, died in separate times.
Ras Abebe Aregai Bachire appointed first governor of Addis Ababainaddition to that "Imperial Minister of War".

Princess Romane-worq Haile Selassie was the eldest child of Emperor Haile Selassie I of Ethiopia by Woizaro Altayech, who previously capturedby the Italians and taken in captivity as war prisoner to the Island of Azinara off-coast of Italy with other Ethiopian notables, died of natural sickness in-exile, her body was returned by the Italians after the war andwas interred in the Imperial family cript of the Holy Trinity Cathedral, in Addis Ababa.

To herald a new era of the country, Weekly columns of Ethiopian Herald &Addis Zemen launched in early months of post-Italian occupation.

In Revenge by Fascist Italians 40 years after the Battle of Adwa: The victory of our ancestors under the able leadership of the Monarch, His Empress, valiant Generals, and brave militia warriors at the battlefield dealt an unforgettably humiliating defeat to the Italian aggressors. So theItalians took forty years of extensive preparation and invaded Ethiopia in 1935 – an act of atrocious aggression in full view of the League of Nationsof which both Ethiopia and Italy were members. The European powers did nothing to prevent the naked Italian aggression. But when Mussolini and Hitler forged alliance at the start of WWII, the prophetic famous speech ofEmperor Haile Selassie at the League of Nations came to pass. Great Britain this time allied with the Emperor and His guerilla fighters and the alliance played a decisive role in driving out Marshall Graziani's occupyingforces from Ethiopia. The ouster led to the disgraceful fall of Mussolini.

Incidentally, the ferociously advancing Ethiopian militia warriors were within wee minutes of claiming the second Adwa victory in this war too. But, due to the sabotage by renegade Rayas (bought and armed the Fascists) attacking the advancing force to the stronghold of the enemy from behind the war was lost.In this war the Ethiopian peasant warriors vowed in the name of Emmye Menilik and fought with extraordinary gallantry. For example, the immortal legacy of the beloved Monarch was inherited by top patriot Abichu at his tender age of 17 years and his youngcompatriots under his command including the militia army of the children of Hamassein commanded by General Haptom;the militia army of the children of Tigray (Mekele) under the command of General Tesfatsion; themilitia army of the children of Gojjam (Damot) commanded by General Gashu; and the main militia army of the children of Selalle under the command of General Worqu. Source: Habešská Odyssea (YeHabesha Jebdu) የሃበሻ ጀብዱ by Adolf Parlesak Translated by Techane Jobre Mekonnen

– Page 274.

June 8, 1941: LOCAL PRESS LAUNCHED: Bandirachin (our flag) and AddisZemen (new era) the first post-Italian occupation local newspapers launched as government owned daily organs at Berhanena Selam Haile Selassie printing press with an initial 10, 000 copies each.

In June 1941: As part of nation building, a national need for a well-trainedarmed forces to defend the territorial borders is highly considered.

Imperial Bodyguard, also known as locally "Kibur Zebegna" is founded to provide security for the Emperor of Ethiopia, and later to being an elite infantry division. It was not, however, part of the organizational structureof the Ethiopian regular army.

July 6, 1941: Generale Guilermo Nazi, Acting Viceroy and Governor-General surrenders to the Ethio-British joint forces.

The Roosvelt administration declared that Ethiopia is eligible for a US Military Aid program known as "lend-lease program". And the Ethio-USdefense installation agreement signed this time.

In November 1941: The Italian fascist army surrendered fully after theBattle of Gondar which took place during the East African Campaign.

Side note: The Battle of Gondar was the last stand of the Italian forces inItalian East Africa during the WWII Campaign.The Italian garrison of 40,000 was commanded by Generale Guglielmo Nasi. General Guglielmo Nasi surrendered with military honors the last troops of the Italian colonialarmy in East Africa at Gondar, many of his personnel decided to start a guerrilla war in the mountains and deserts of Ethiopia, Eritrea and Somalia. Nearly 7,000 Italian soldiers (according to the historian Alberto Rosselli participated in this fight against the British army, in the hope thatthe German-Italian army of Rommel would win in Egypt (making the Mediterranean an Italian Mare Nostrum) and retake the recently liberated territories.

January 31, 1942 - Anglo-Ethiopian Agreement And Military Accord WasSigned.

Side note: “The Anglo-Ethiopian Treaty” recognized Ethiopia as sovereign independent nation. This came after time of tensions & mistrust between Ethiopian rulers and British government particularly Colonial officials in theimmediate months of post liberation. Here is an excerpt from an article written by Professor Richard Pankhurst about Ethio-British relations in the immediate post liberation era. Ethio-British Relations The Emperor, after his return to Ethiopia, was largely preoccupied with relations with the British. The latter, who had entered the country as liberators, had in fact replaced the Italians as an occupying power. Relations between the Ethiopians and the British were from the outset ambiguous. British policy towards Ethiopia was first enunciated, in general terms, by Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden, who told the British House of Commons, on 4 February 1941, that his government "would welcome the re-appearance ofan independent Ethiopian State and recognise the claim of Emperor Haile Sellassie to the throne". Official British policy was further clarified in high- level talks, held shortly afterwards in February and March. These were based, in accordance with Eden's statement, on the "rejection of any idea of a protectorate", or of "the provision of a strong western administration of the country".

Differing Views on Ethiopia's Political Future: After the Emperor's return toAddis Ababa, in May, there was, however, considerable tension between the Ethiopians and the British. The two parties differed greatly in their views on the country's future government. The Ethiopians expected to assume full sovereignty without delay, whereas the British considered thecountry's independence only as a long distance objective. A first clash on this question occurred as early as 11 May 1941, when the Emperor appointed his first post-war cabinet. The British representative, Brigadier Maurice Lush, sternly informed him that such appointments could not be made "until a peace treaty has been effected with Italy" Haile Sellassie was, not surprisingly, indignant. A compromise was, however, duly effected, whereby the British accepted the appointment of the ministers, but "chose to regard them as merely advisers" to the British military administration of the country. It was symptomatic that the Emperor's private mail was for a time subject to British censorship, and opened by British censors. His Imperial Majesty, we are informed, was not amused.

Liberators or Looters?

Tension was further increased by the decision of the British military authorities to appropriate, and take out of the country, some of the principal factories earlier installed by the Italians, as well as weapons, and military and other transport. Ethiopia was thus very visibly empoverished by its liberators, who soon came to be popularly regarded as its looters.

Friction was also created by the presence, in the Ethiopian capital, of white South African troops, who attempted to perpetuate the strict colourbar earlier instituted by the Italians.

British opinion in relation to Ethiopia's independence varied greatly. Sir Philip Mitchell, the chief British Political Officer in the Middle East, sought to impose particularly strong control over Ethiopia, but others in London took the view that Great Britain should demonstrate to the world that it could liberate a country without imposing political strings. Sir Philip, because of his official position, was nevertheless able to press the Emperor to abide by British "advice" in "all important matters, internal and external, touching the government of the country"; to levy taxes and allocate expenditure only with "prior approval" of the British Government;to grant British courts jurisdiction over foreigners; "to raise no objection" if the British Commander-in-Chief "found it necessary to resume military control over any part of Ethiopia"; and not to raise armed forces, or undertake military operations, "except as agreed by His Majesty's Government's representative". Taxation, expenditure, communications, and the jurisdiction of foreigners were to be under British control. In return for this extensive control he proposed that the Emperor be offered a subsidy, British advisers, and the opportunity of discussing proposals fora treaty. British Economic Controls

Side note: Ethiopia, as a result of its liberation by the British troops, was at this time firmly under British economic as well as political control. The country was incorporated into the British-based Sterling Area, used BritishEast African Shillings, was dependent on a British bank, Barclay's, and was served exclusively by the British Overseas Aviation Corporation,

B.O.A.C. Virtually all political power was likewise in the hands of the British military, who went so far as to censor the Emperor's private correspondence. The local British officials were so bent on perpetuating that paramountcy that an American Government memorandum of June 1941 bluntly asserted that Britain was seeking to "establish a protectorateover Abyssinia". Indeed British colonial circles coveted Ethiopian independence and wanted to treat the Emperor a puppet protege thus creating bitter resistance and friction. John H. Spencer, who was the Foreign Affairs adviser of the Ethiopian Government during those crucial years and who had personally participated at the negotiations with the BigFour in London, Paris, and later at the United Nations and whose book, Ethiopia at Bay (published in 1987) deals mainly with this subject.

Proposed Partition of the Country: Some British officials at this period, andfor the next few years, moreover sought to partition the country. In the north there were plans to unite parts of Tegray with the adjacent highlands of Eritrea, to form a new state under British protection. In the south-east the British Government proposed incorporating the already British-occupied Ogaden with British-occupied Somalia, to create a Greater Somalia, under British trusteeship. British official thinking also for a time envisaged the partition of Eritrea, with the western portion annexed to the then Anglo-Egyptian Sudan. For all the above reasons, thefund of Ethiopian good-will towards Britain, the Country's Liberator, was steadily dissipated, giving way to fear, suspicion, mistrust, and even anger.
August 27, 1942: Haile Selassie abolished the legal basis of slavery throughout the empire and imposed severe penalties, including death, forslave trading.
Side note: Slavery was practiced in Ethiopia, enslavery Act formallylegislated’
Abolition of slavery: Slavery as practiced in what is modern Ethiopia and Eritrea was essentially domestic. Slaves thus served in the houses of theirmasters or mistresses, and were not employed to any significant extent for productive purpose. Slaves were thus regarded as second-class members of their owners' family, and were fed, clothed and protected.
They generally roamed around freely and conducted business as free people. They had complete freedom of religion and culture.The first attempt to abolish slavery in Ethiopia was made by Emperor Tewodros II (r. 1855–1868), although the slave trade was not abolished completely until 1923 with Ethiopia's accession to the League of Nations.The Anti- Slavery Society estimated there were 2 million slaves in the early 1930s out of an estimated population of between 8 and 16 million.Haile Selassie described in the whole of Chapter 14 his efforts to eradicate slavery, which he noted was a persistent custom in Ethiopia arising from intertribalwars, where the captured slaves could hardly be distinguished in appearance from their owners and sometimes even married them. The slave trade had already been banned unsuccessfully by his predecessors Tewodros II, Yohannes IV and Menelik II, to minimal effect. Beginning in 1924, Haile Selassie I began doing everything possible to liberate all remaining slaves in Ethiopia, enrolling many of them in education programs.
October, 1941: Associated Press News: Empress Menen Asfaw seen on herarrival under the British held Nairobi station.
February 24, 1942: Ethiopian patriotic forces who liberated Addis Ababaand the whole country in early year ending the Italian occupation of Ethiopia paradedin glorious spirit in front of the Emperor.

March 1, 1942: The Italian Duke of De Auosta died as prisoner ofwar at detention Garrison in Dessie.
In March, 1942: Bitwadad Makonnen Endalkatchew appointed secondprime minister.
In 1942: Following the WW II, Emperor Haile-selassie renamed the Oromotown of "Adama" after the Biblical name "Nazareth".
In May,1942: The Emperor created the position of premier, appointed thepost-Italian occupation prime minister. Ras Abebe Aregai who was appointed first governor of Addis Ababa inaddition to that "Imperial Minister of War".
Side note: Blatten-Geta Lorenzo T'ezaz Mebrahtu, whos origin from southern Eritrea appointed as foreign minister of Ethiopia. Ethiopia's patriot and model civil servant who served his country and his king loyallywas born in Akele-Guzai part of present Eritrea. Blatten-Geta Lorenzo T'zaz considered a patriot and model diplomat of his time. His name was Lorenzo Taezaz. Some consider him as the architect of modern Ethiopian diplomacy. In the interest of educating present Ethiopian/Eritrean generation about their proud heritage and to commemorate the 112th birthday of this loyal servant to Ethiopia, Dr. Daniel Kinde, pian historian wrote a piece about Blatten Geta Lorenzo Taezaz. Dr. Daniel Kinde, one ofthe prominent scholars on Ethiopia's political history has written more extensive article about this patriot and his admirable role for the cause of liberating Ethiopia from Italian occupation.
1st Woyanne Rebellion under Blatta Haile-Mariam Redda which at one point captured the provincial town of Mekelle in the northern province ofthen Tigre erupted.
In the autumn of 1943: The Italian guerrilla war in Ethiopia is underwayas an armed struggle fought by remnants of Italian troops in Ethiopia, inwhat had been the short-lived attempt to incorporate Ethiopia as part ofItalian East Africa. Their guerrilla campaign was fought following the fascist Italian defeat during the East African Campaign of World War II, while the war was still ongoing in Europe.
The Artistic Printers the first private printing firm in Ethiopia founded.
Awash Winery Sc Pvt. Company Ltd. which based in Addis Ababa, was founded. Awash winnery Sc operates as a subsidiary of Government ofEthiopia.
The Emperor subsequently made Ras Abebe Aregai governor of Tigre, topacify the province. Addis Ababa Technical Training School, locally known as "Tegbbare-Edschool" founded.
In March, 1943: Roosevelt administration declared Ethiopia eligible for themilitary aid program known as the Lend-Lease program' An army Radio- station "Kagnew communication center" established in Asmara, Ethiopia.
The Kagnew station was home to the U.S. Army's 4th Detachment of thesecond signal service Battalion, and it operated the next 35 years.
Side note: This was done to support the British troops in Libya and Egypt which were fighting Germany's Africa Corps. The focus of the lend-lease program was in Eritrea, a former Italian colony which strategically bordered the Red Sea. British forces had established a communications base at the former Italian radio communications base named called Radio Marina, which was located in Asmara, Eritrea. The British used the former Italian name for the base, Radio Marina. The United States received access to the base from the British beginning in 1942. The United States would initially call the former Radio Marina the "Asmara Barracks," but thename "Radio Marina" would become the more enduring name for the base until the base was officially named "Kagnew Station." In 1943 a seven- man detachment refurbished the former British facilities and began testingthe new equipment they installed. Eritrea's geographical location; 15 degrees north of the equator at an altitude of 7,600 feet (2,300 m), was excellent for sending and receiving radio signals. Early testing proved so promising that the War Department moved to expand operations before Asmara Barracks officially opened.

United States Military Assistance Advisory Group (US MAAG) Mission in Ethiopia known as Kagnew Station (a communications and SIGINT station) was a United States Army installation in Asmara, Eritrea on the Horn of Africa. The installation was established in 1943 as a U.S. Army radio station, taking over and refurbishing a pre-existing Italian naval radio station, after Italian forces based in Asmara surrendered to the Alliesin March 1941. Kagnew Station operated until April 29, 1977, when the last Americans left. The station was home to the United States Army's 4th Detachment of the Second Signal Service Battalion.

May 18, 1943: The 1st Woyane rebellion led by Blatta Haile Mariam Reda erupted in southern and eastern Tigre Province. Several low level administrators and government security forces including peasants killed inthe incidence. Many captured as prisoners by the rebelled Wajerat districtto highten the rebellion in the next July under the theme “Arena-Harena”.

Side note: The "Woyane Rebellion" that broke out in southern and easternTigre Province whos was Ras Seyoum Mengesha is suspected of supporting the rebels clandestinely, as a consequence, he was recalled to Addis Ababa and replaced by Fitawrari Kifle Dadi and Dejazmach Fikre Selassie Ketema as well as General Tedla Makonen and General Issayas Guebre Selassie as the Commander of the Army in Tigray. Ras Seyoum Mengesha is Hereditary Prince of Tigrai, head of the Tigrean branch of theImperial Solomonic dynasty, son of Ras Mengesha Yohannes, and grandson of Emperor Yohannes IV.

September 13, 1943: The escalated Woyane rebellion fought with imperialgovernment army and security forces at Indayesus caught the battalion commander Majour Issayas Gebreselassie as prisoner.

September 21, 1943: Ras Abebe Aregai marched north to Tigre province to brutally suppress the violence with help of the Britiish airpower. Mekelleis badly bombed, several hundred civilians were killd in the incidence, andthe rebellion neared to victory severely crushed, and the rebel headquarters at Wukro seized.

Ras Hotel to become a major recreation centre in Ethiopia as to promotehotel business in post-Italian occupation nation building of Ethiopia.

June 1, 1943: Two officers, one warrant officer and 44 enlisted men beganintensive training at Vint Hill Farms to man Radio Marina. In December, 4 officers and 50 enlisted men staffed Radio Marina, a base located on an arrowhead-shaped tract of land, designated as Tract A by the U.S. Military. While the United States had access to base since 1942, a formalized agreement to permit the United States use of the site did not exist until 1952 when the Ethiopian government, the federation of Eritrea and the United States signed an agreement.

In November, 1943: With the expulsion of the Italians in May, 1941, andthe restoration of the Imperial government, the Imperial flag was also restored. The King of Italy officially renounces his Imperial title over Ethiopia.

Ethiopia started reorganizing the embryonic air force that had existed prior to the Italian invasion. A group of WWII African-American veteransset up a flying school at Lideta airport in Addis Ababa.

Ethiopian Football Federation (EFF) was created to regulate the EthiopianPremier League.

Side note: The Ethiopian Football Federation (EFF) was founded under theleadership of Lij Yidnekatchew Tessema Eshete to govern the nation's football. EFF becomes affiliated with FIFA (in 1953) and with CAF (in 1957). It organizes the national football league and the national team.

Princess Tenagneworq was married, secondly to Ras Andargatchew Messai, who had held various senior posts in the imperial governmentfrom 1952 to 1958.

The second Birr issued: (EE1936 in the Ethiopian calendar), coins were reintroduced, with copper 1, 5, 10 and 25 santim (Simuni) and silver 50 santim known locally as Shilling. A second series was issued in 1977 (EE1969) consisting of aluminium 1 santim, brass 5 and 10 santim, and cupro-nickel 25 and 50 santim. The most recent issues are: 5 santim EE1998 10 santim EE1996 25 santim EE1996 (also called "semuni") 50 santim EE1996 1 Birr EE2003 (bi-metallic). The dates, like the rest of thelegend, appear in Amharic, the official language of Ethiopia.

The Saint George Football Club was formed by Greeks when right FascistItaly invaded Ethiopia.

Side note: The club was formed by Greeks when Fascist Italy to invade soon Ethiopia in 1935. It was founded namely by Ayele Atnash and George Dukas, the club quickly became the symbol of Ethiopian nationalism and a representation of the country's quest for freedom. Afterthe Italians were defeated, FC St. George briefly turned into a pictogram of identity for many Ethiopians. As there weren't other Ethiopian clubs, it had been playing against foreign clubs. Haile Selassie I Stadium, later known as Addis Ababa Stadium constructed to serve for local and international sports events and football matches.

The renowned patriot Dejazmatch Belai Zeleke revered for his heroicdeeds during the Fascist invasion.

Sidenote: Four of the guards, who assisted in the breakout of Belai Zelekeand his accomplices from prison, were hanged side by side on a single gallows at Jan-Meda on the day of the religious procession of "Timikhat", which took place six days after the hanging. Many exonerate the Emperorarguing that justice was done; others criticize the monarch for the harsh measure against dissidents especially like the distinguished patriot.

Shegaw Belai (The Handsome-Belai) was, and still is, a moving affectionate popular song of dissent against the hanging of the awesomepatriot as the debate is still lingering.

In 1944: Imperial Decree No.2 of 1942 and the additional exemption granted in the Land Tax Proclamation of 1944, the Ethiopian Orthodox Church pays no taxes at all to the government of Ethiopia. Infact, becauseof these laws, the Church has become a government within the government of Ethiopia. Its role in decision making and its power within the government have been perfectly summed up by the Emperor when hesaid that "the Church is like a sword, and the government is like an arm; therefore the sword cannot cut by itself without the use of the arm." Of course the arm cannot cut any thing with out the sword. The Church officials outside the capital city can therefore engage in a great deal of independent decision-making regarding all aspects of Church affairs. "There are two major land tenure systems relating to the church; 'Semon'and 'Church Gult'. Semon refers to land where the 'primary interest' has been vested in the church….All taxes mentioned above are (land tax, titheand education tax from persons settled on the land) collected by the church and deposited in church treasury. "Church gult is landed property granted by the government to the Church, which the church in turn apportions among its ecclesiastical members. Each holder must pay a tithe to the Church. Holders of Church Gult can in turn rent or parcel out land demanding taxes and rent from tenants."

December, 1944: Ethiopia signed a secret agreement with Great Britain. "The Haud Reserve Area including the town of Jig-jiga in the east and Gambella in the west ceded to Ethiopia, the emperor got admiration for his diplomatic success, nicknamed famously "Aba-Tequil Haile" meaning inlocal Amharic "the unifier".

February, 1945: President Franklin Delano Roosevelt met personally with Emperor Haile Selassie aboard the USS Quincy (CA-71) in the Great BitterLake of Egypt.

Side note: The Ethiopian emperor who's met by President Franklin Delano Rusveldt held a successive one hour port-side official chatting known as usually the "Yalta Conference" in Alexandria, along with two other monarchial heads, aboard on carrier "USS Quincy", which docked off the Great Bitter Lake off the Egyptian coast. The US President official discussion included Kings, Farouk of Egypt, Abdelaziz Ibn Al-Saud of SaudiArabia. This was termed as the first face to face encounter between the leaders of Ethiopia and the United States where also discused possibility ofending the British influence in Ethiopia.

Indeed British colonial circles coveted Ethiopian independence and wantedto treat the Emperor a puppet protege thus creating bitter resistance and friction by the monarch. The British were kept in the dark about this meeting which took place near the Suez canal. Shortly called as FDR, wason his way back from the Yalta conference with Joseph Stalin and WinstonChurchill. FDR sent a plane to pick the Ethiopian emperor up ftom Addis Ababa. Firmly believed that the US/Ethiopian relationship was forged out of this war time meeting between the two.

John H. Spencer, an American who was the Foreign Affairs adviser of the Ethiopian Government during those crucial years and who had personally participated at the negotiations with the Big Four in London, Paris, and later at the United Nations and whose book, 'Ethiopia At Bay' (published in1987) deals mainly with this subject. (Text ends)

April 3, 1945: Dejazmatch Belai Zeleke, one of whom brought the country's freedom, given death sentence after he rejects in protest sub- region (Awraja) governorship position offered by the Emperor, his death at his 37 years was shocked the entire nation. In an inexperienced political decision the emperor has to execute the renowned anti-colonialist hero considering potential threat for his throne, labeled him as meretraitor, this remains a more debated issue in the latter times.
July 23, 1945: Ethiopian legal tender currency was issued by defining the monetary unit as the Ethiopian Dollar (E$) with a value of 5.52 grains (equivalent to 0.355745 grams) of fine gold and... replaced the Maria Theresa which had been circulating as legal tender. The linkage with fine gold was in accord with the monetary system established by the Bretton Woods Agreement of 1944 and it automatically established the exchange rate between the national currency and other currencies with the same arrangement. Accordingly, the official exchange rate of Ethiopian currencywith US dollar was created (with the official exchange rate of 2.48 Birr perUS dollar) on July 23, 1945.
The second Birr issued : The Birr was reintroduced at a rate of 1 birr = 2 Shillings. The name Ethiopian Dollar was used in the English text on the banknotes. It was divided into 100 santim (derived from the French centime). The dates, like the rest of the legend, appear in Amharic, the official language of Ethiopia. The name Birr became the official name, used in all languages, in September, 1976, two years after the depositionof the imperial regime.
In 1945: The Ethiopian Soccer Cup was created as the top knockout tournament of the Ethiopian Football. Winners of the Cup (1945 to 1960)as follows:
1945 : British Military Mission in Ethiopia -BMME (Addis Abeba)1946 : Army (Addis Abeba)
1947 : Polisportiva (Addis Abeba)1948 : Body Guard (Addis Abeba)1949 : Army (Addis Abeba)
1950 : Army (Addis Abeba)1951 : Army (Addis Abeba)
1952 : Saint-George SA (Addis Abeba)1953 : Saint-George SA (Addis Abeba 1954 : Army (Addis Abeba

1955 : Mechal (Addis Abeba)1956 : Mechal (Addis Abeba)
1957 : Saint-George SA (Addis Abeba)1958 : Mekuria (Addis Abeba 1959 : Omedla (Addis Abeba) (Police)1960 : Nib (Debre Zeit) (Air Force) No Cup between 1961 and 1969 1970 : Hamassien (Asmara
1971 : ELECTRIC (Addis Ababa)1972 : ELECTRIC (Addis Ababa)
1973 : Saint-George SA (Addis Ababa)1974 : Saint-George SA (Addis Ababa)
1975 : Mechal - Army (Addis Ababa)1976 : ELECTRIC (Addis Ababa)
1977 : Saint-George SA (Addis Ababa)1978 : Omedla (Addis Ababa)

June 26, 1945: Emperor Haile-selassie's inernational fame and recognitionled to Ethiopia becoming a Chartered member of the United Nations Organization that was founded in San-Francisco, USA. Ethiopia formally signs the Charter of the United Nations in San Francisco, USA.

December 21, 1945: Ethiopian Air Lines Sc was founded under the supervission of the American Trans World Airlines (TWA) of the United States commenced operations a year later on 8 April 1946, and made it's maiden flight to Cairo, Egypt. Expands to international flights a decade later in 1951. The firm became a share company in 1965, and changed itsname from Ethiopian Air Lines to Ethiopian Airlines. Pan American Airwayshelped modernize Ethiopian Airlines further. Americans were also teachersand mentors in high schools and colleges.

PUBLIC TRANSPORT: The Anbessa City Bus started as a Share companyfounded in 1945. The price of a single journey within the city limits was 0.15 cents.

March, 1946: Many patriots started to grieve on to the Emperor for disfavoring the “Arbagnas“ in favoring the “Bandas” (the Italan collaborators) and the “Sidetegnas” (the self-exiles) whom they had beenexiled with him during the Italian occupation years.
Side note ;- The emperor had wisely maintained a delicate balance amongrival political groups among the known as the Arbegnas or "the patriots" who had fought bitterly the Italian occupationist forces, "the Sidetegnas" who had accompanied him and got formal education abroad during the five-years exile period and "the Bandas" who were served and collaborated the occupationist Italians regularly as soldiers (Soldatos) andin the colonial bureaucracy such as informants (known as firmatori or Camicia bianca) positioning with clerical jobs. The Emperor proved that was progressive in his early years despite the fact that hismodernization was not as fast as the elites were demanding it.

In May, 1946: The Paris Peace Agreement signed.
In May, 1946: After continued requests for extradition, Dejazmatch Haile Selassie Gugsa Araya Selassie who collaborated with the invading Italiansforces was returned to the Ethiopians.
In June, 1946: Blatten-Geta Lorenzo Taezaz Mebrahtu, the distinguished Ethiopian diplomat, who led the Ethiopian delegation to Geneva and helps draft, and translate Haile Selassie's 1936 address to the League of Nations died in Swaden. Blatten-Getta Lorenzo Tezaz who was appointed by the emperor as post-Italian occupation Foreign Minister of Ethiopia, its who hewrote the historic script which the emperor addressed for the League of Nations (LoN), dies of intestinal Adhesion at age of 46 in Sweden, he was succeeded by Blatten-Geta Ephraim Tewolde-Madhin whose also originated from southern Eritrea, which then rested under British mandateadministration. John Spencer, an American who served the Ethiopian government for many years as an advisor on foreign affairs, as has already been pointed out, he knew Lorenzo from 1936-1946. In his informative book, Ethiopia At Bay (Algonac, Michigan 1984), he writes of Lorenzo's French education, the information he used to collect from the war fronts (1934-35) for the publication of war bulletins, his translation ofHaile Selassie's speeches into French in Geneva, and the detailed information he brought out of Ethiopia in 1939 regarding the status and operations of the patriotic forces. He also mentions the invaluable contributions Lorenzo made to the military campaigns through which the emperor returned to Ethiopia in 1941, and Haile Selassie's praise of the significant role played by Lorenzo in the liberation campaign of Ethiopia.
In 1938, Haile Selassie wanted to return to Ethiopia to lead the resistance,and so, he sent Lorenzo to Ethiopia to assess the situation and to help organize the Arbegnoch (the patriots). He did a thorough job. As a result, the Emperor decided to move. However, the British strongly objected to the plan, contending that it was premature. But the truth is, since they were negotiating with the Italians over the Mediterranean, they did not want the talks to be prejudiced. Lorenzo again spent some months inside Ethiopia in 1939 and re-organized the resistance, and distributed arms to the insurgents in Western Ethiopia in 1939.
Blaten Geta Lorenzo Taezaz (June 1900 - June 1946)
Blaten Geta Lorenzo Taezaz & The Italo-Ethiopian War (1935-1941)
Lorenzo Taezaz could be considered as one of the legendary heroes of theItalo-Ethiopian war of 1935-1941. From the day he left his homeland in 1925, until his untimely death in Sweden in 1946, he had an unusual life. Few Ethiopians of his generation have enjoyed a life so intense and so productive over a period of 21 years. He contributed more than his share to the liberation of Ethiopia from Italian fascism. Yet, the young generation of Ethiopians, which has grown up after the war, are almost entirely ignorant about him. The reason of his consignment to oblivion, forinstance, has never been fully known. Similarly, the manner of his death which invites more questions than answers is passed over in complete silence. The purpose of this study is limited in scope. First, it is to introduce Lorenzo Taezaz to the general reader, and possibly, to stimulate more discussion about him among scholars who study Ethiopia. Second, to investigate the actual role he played in the 1935-1941 period of Ethiopia's struggle against fascism. This requires some information about the man's early life, and the circumstances for his departure from Eritrea. Who was he? And what was his background? I will treat the essentials of his early life and discuss the reasons why he left his homeland, how he met Ras Teferi Mekonnen [the future Emperor Haile Selassie I], and how he startedhis career with the Ethiopian government.

I have reviewed the existing literature. As will be noticed, it gives him scant coverage. Most of the literature refers to him only in passing. Even important events in which he was involved appear in snippets rather than as a whole, so that their overall impact is diffused, preventing one from ever knowing his full story. For this reason, I had to interview a number ofpeople. These include: his daughter, Mrs. Woizerit Lorenzo, the late Ambassador Ephreim Tewolde Medhin, his lifelong friend, Dr. John Spencer, a war time colleague who knew him from 1936-1946, and Mebratu Taezaz, his brother. Three of them were interviewed in Asmara in1983, and Dr. Spencer, on 30 August 1987 in New Haven, Connecticut.

There is some controversy about the circumstances of his departure fromEritrea. The controversy has something to do with Italian war plans to invade Ethiopia, and Lorenzo's alleged understanding of that plan as related to me by his daughter. Before coming to grips with his actual rolein the fascist Italy period, therefore, I have found it important to evaluatehis daughter's version of Lorenzo's immigration to Ethiopia. For this reason, I had also to provide some sketchy information about the historical background of the Italian occupation of Eritrea and the subsequent threat to the rest of Ethiopia.

Brief Background

Lorenzo Taezaz was born on 30 June 1900 in the Akele Guzaie province ofEritrea, then an Italian colony. He received his first education in Italian schools in Asmara and Keren and started his career with the Italian colonial administration when he was still very young. Because of his intelligence and hard work, Lorenzo rose to the rank of Secretary to the Governor of Asmara, the highest position that an Eritrean could reach in the colonial administration.

In 1924, while on vacation in Aden, he met Ras Teferi Mekonnen, the future Haile Selassie, who was there on an official visit, and who encouraged him to go to Ethiopia. A year later, Lorenzo went to Addis Ababa. Subsequently, Ras Teferi Mekonnen arranged for his education, and along with other Ethiopians, he sent him to France on a government scholarship. Lorenzo spent the next eight years at the University of Montpelier where he completed his studies in Law and Philosophy. Apart from his native Tigrigna, he already spoke Amharic, Arabic and Italian, butMontpelier also provided him with an opportunity to master French and English.

He returned to Ethiopia in 1933 and began to serve the Ethiopian government in several capacities: Secretary, Ministry of Justice (1933); member of the Anglo-Ethiopian Boundary Commission which demarcated Ethiopia's borders with former British Somaliland (1933-34); member of the same Commission which was charged with the duty of surveying the grazing grounds of the Ogaden, and investigating the causes of the Wal- Wal incident of 1934, which led to the Italo-Ethiopian War of 1935-1941; appointed private secretary of Haile Selassie, and in addition he served asliaison officer to the international press (1935-1936). He even saw action at the Battle of Maichew (1936) that culminated in the defeat of the Ethiopians by the Italians.

Lorenzo had presented a plan to Haile Selassie to transfer the governmentcenter to Gore (1) – a remote and inaccessible town in western Ethiopia from where the counter-offensive could be prosecuted. However, the costsand risks of fighting the mechanized Italian army was debated and measured against the risks and costs of not fighting. When the Council of Ministers agreed by twenty one to three vote(2), that the risks were too grave and the costs too high, it was decided that Haile Selassie should go and personally present Ethiopia's case to the League of Nations. In May 1936, therefore, Lorenzo left Ethiopia and accompanied Emperor Haile Selassie in his exile to Europe. There, he was appointed Ethiopia's Permanent Delegate to the League of Nations and subsequently took an active role in the struggle against Italian fascism. During the occupation, Lorenzo secretly entered Ethiopia on several occasions. After Ethiopia's liberation in 1941, he was appointed Minister for Foreign Affairs (1941- 1943), Minister for Posts, Telephones and Telegrams (1943), President of the Chamber of Deputies (1943-1944), Minister to Moscow, USSR (1944- 1946), and Delegate to the Paris Peace Conference (May 1946). A month later, he died in a hospital in Stockholm, Sweden.(3)

When I visited the late Ambassador Ephreim Tewolde Medhin at hisresidence in Asmara, he was ninety years of age. The following is asummary of what I was able to gather from him:

Interview I. Ambassador Ephreim Tewolde Medhin:

Lorenzo was my lifelong friend. Ever since we left Eritrea, we shared adversity and happiness together. There was no future for both of us in Eritrea. In 1925 we escaped to Aden. It should be recalled that Lorenzo had met Ras Teferi Mekonnen in Aden a year earlier and had thus invited him to go to Addis Ababa. I took the boat and waited for him in Djibouti. When we met in Djibouti, both of us were in tears. From there, we took the train and went to Addis Ababa. Ras Teferi Mekonnen asked us what wewanted to do. Both of us requested him to send us abroad to school, which he did. I went to Beirut. Lorenzo went to France… What we did for Ethiopia during the war, is for history to judge. We stayed in Europe to help intensify the diplomatic struggle, but Lorenzo was exceptional. He even traveled inside Italian occupied Ethiopia on secret missions. I canassure you that he was a selfless patriot. At a time when an entire generation of educated Ethiopians was simply wiped out by fascism, he was Ethiopia's eyes and ears. The British only talked to him.

(4) Dr. John Spencer knew Lorenzo for some ten years. The followingprovides what he could recall from memory:

Interview II: John Spencer:

I met Lorenzo on 15 January 1936 in Dessie at the headquarters of His Majesty the Emperor Haile Selassie. I remember everything very well. Even the place where we met was kept dark for fear of Italian air raids. Ingeneral, he gave me the impression of an extremely reserved man.

Perhaps his inner nature needed privacy and solitude for reflection. He had a quick mind and a sharp tongue. He impressed me as being an intellectual. He spoke excellent French and English. We collaborated on the war bulletins for some months in Addis Ababa. We met again in London in June 1936 where we worked together. He was very meticulous.It was easy to work out a sentence with him. He helped draft Haile Selassie's 1936 address to the League of Nations, translated his speechesand led the Ethiopian delegation to Geneva. In 1938, Haile Selassie wanted to return to Ethiopia to lead the resistance, and so, he sent Lorenzo to Ethiopia to assess the situation and to help organize the Arbegnoch (the patriots). He did a thorough job. As a result, the Emperordecided to move. However, the British strongly objected to the plan, contending that it was premature. But the truth is, since they were negotiating with the Italians over the Mediterranean, they did not want the talks to be prejudiced. Lorenzo again spent some months inside Ethiopia in 1939 and re-organized the resistance. He did a marvelous job. The Italians left Ethiopia in 1941, and I met Lorenzo in Addis Ababa in 1943. This time, he was the foreign minister. He performed very well. It was not an easy task to evict the British from Ethiopia. He had a terrible time as they were toying with the idea of establishing a protectorate over Ethiopia. But, nevertheless, he came out with flying colors. The last time Imet him was at the Paris Peace Conference in May 1946. A month later, he died in Sweden.(5)

Source Review

There is an enormous literature on Italian fascism and Ethiopia. But aspointed out earlier, however, the coverage on Lorenzo is scanty, and where it is not, disconnected details are not united.

Kebede Tesema, an important Ethiopian intelligence officer of the time, who was later to occupy several ministerial posts in Haile Selassie's government, published Historical Notes (Addis Ababa, 1955). Among otherthings, his book contains invaluable information on how the Ethiopians managed to sustain effective guerrilla warfare against the mechanized

Italian Army. Although he fully recognizes Lorenzo's vital contribution to the prosecution of the war, strangely enough, he does not say much abouthis role in making that operation effective. Similarly, the Italian journalist,Del Boca, in his illuminating book, The Ethiopian War 1935-1941, (London, 1965), mentions Lorenzo three times. Even then, this is done in the context of his exile to Europe along with Haile Selassie, the speech he made at the League of Nations in 1938, and how he distributed arms to the insurgents in Western Ethiopia in 1939.

In the same way, Richard Greenfield, in his Ethiopia, A new PoliticalHistory, (New York, 1965), provides some insight into the valuable information Lorenzo brought out of Ethiopia describing the extent of guerrilla operations and the poor morale of the Italians.

John Spencer, who served the Ethiopian government for many years as advisor in foreign affairs, as has already been pointed out, knew Lorenzo from 1936-1946. In his informative book, Ethiopia At Bay (Algonac, Michigan 1984), he writes of Lorenzo's French education, the information he used to collect from the war fronts (1934-35) for the publication of warbulletins, his translation of Haile Selassie's speeches into French in Geneva, and the detailed information he brought out of Ethiopia in 1939 regarding the status and operations of the patriotic forces. He also mentions the invaluable contributions Lorenzo made to the military campaigns through which the emperor returned to Ethiopia in 1941, and Haile Selassie's praise of the significant role played by Lorenzo in the liberation campaign of Ethiopia.

In his recent book on the Italo-Ethiopian War, Haile Selassie's war: TheItalian-Ethiopian Campaign, 1934-1941 (New York, 1984), Anthony Mockler provides Lorenzo's biographical sketch in just six lines and dismisses his activities with the Ethiopian refugees in the Sudan and Kenya, in just a couple of paragraphs. Beyond that, there is nothing.

There is also the autobiography of Haile Selassie, My Life and Ethiopia's Progress, 1892-1937 (London, 1976). In this book, Haile Selassie praises Lorenzo's diplomatic skill and the outstanding services he rendered to thecountry. Let us then begin with a brief survey of Italy's involvement in theaffairs of the area – an involvement which probably caused Lorenzo's departure from his place of birth.

Background to the Italian Occupation of Eritrea and the Threat AgainstEthiopia

The Eritrea of the 1920s that Lorenzo left, was a sad place. Eritreans wereconstantly reminded of their inferiority in their own country by their colonial masters, the Italians. The Asmara municipality excluded them from all participation. In the central government hierarchy, they had no part. Eritreans could at best aspire to be low-paid clerks or orderlies.

There was no trace when they could advance towards participation in government, or of administration scheme which could lead to it. There was to be, in perpetuity, only rulers and the passive ruled.(6) The combined effect of the policy of colonial oppression, social humiliation and material deprivation had several results in Eritrea. Of immediate concern to us during this particular period is the immigration of some 200,000 Eritreans to Ethiopia. One such Eritrean was Lorenzo Taezaz. Why did he escape from Colonial Eritrea? Was his immigration to Ethiopialargely inspired by personal feelings of hopelessness in his future in colonial Eritrea, or by some other purpose? Was he conscious of a specificthreat against Ethiopia at the time? How was it possible for him to play anoutstanding role in the resistance movement against fascism, and eventually to become Ethiopia's Foreign Minister? These questions are pertinent. It is useful to consider them in the context of the historical background that led to Italy's involvement in the affairs of the people of the region.

As far as Italy was concerned, Asmara was merely a stepping-stone to bigger designs: Eritrea was acquired with the larger objective of the wholeEthiopia in mind.(7) The fact that between 1890 and 1896 Italy launched a series of assaults against Ethiopia from Eritrea is a sufficient testimony to that design. In any event, the series of intolerable military encroachments on Ethiopia's sovereignty culminated in the Battle of Adowa of 1896, in which the Italians were routed.

As The Spectator of March 7, 1896 observed regretfully:

The Italians have suffered a great disaster – greater than has ever occurred in modern times to white men in Africa. Adowa was the bloodiestof all colonial battles. (8) Italy's pride was wounded. If ever Rome was to occupy a respectable place in the councils of Europe, that national humiliation and disgrace had to be avenged. Thereafter, propelled by Mussolini's 1922 dictum, that "Italy must either expand or explode,"(9) fascism came to power. In such a situation, the first policy declaration el Duce made was to settle once and for all, the great account which has been left open since 1896.(10) "If only Italy had 6,000 more soldiers in Adwa, the result would have been different," he was to say later. To that end, he gave the necessary directives for building up Eritrea's economic infrastructure in order to facilitate military mobility for the conquest of Ethiopia. Such a direction can be discerned from a letter Mussolini wrote in 1925 to the Prince of Scala, the Minister of the Colonies, in which Mussolini called his attention to the poor defensive conditions of Eritrea, and to correct such deficiencies as might exist.(11) Since nobody was threatening Eritrea, one can only interpret that message to mean preparations for committing aggression against Ethiopia.

Similarly, Pietro Badoglio, the Chief of Staff of the Italian Armed Forces, had instructed General Malladra in 1926 to carry out a thorough study of Eritrea's defenses (read preparations for war), including the possible useof poison gas, either through aerial bombing or through artillery shelling.(12) Ten years later, Badoglio, who directed Italy's invasion of Ethiopia from Colonial Eritrea and Somaliland, did precisely that.

Lorenzo's Departure from Eritrea

I had heard contradictory accounts about Lorenzo's departure from Eritrea. Since the evidence provided by anyone of the people I talked to was insufficient to prove any point, I decided to interview Woizerit Lorenzo, his daughter. In response to my question why her father, who was privileged by the standards of many Eritreans, because he was working at the Civil and Political Affairs Department of the colonial administration, left Colonial Eritrea and went to Ethiopia, Woizerit Lorenzoexplained her father's immigration in the following way:

Interview III:

One day, while he was filing papers, he read a secret military document which spelt out Italian war plans against Ethiopia, including the intention to use poison gas. Taken by shock and horror, while he was weeping, his tears dropped on the papers and spoiled the document. No sooner had this taken place than his Italian boss discovered what had happened and asked him why he was sprinkling water on vital government document? Being naive and innocent, he confessed that it was not water that spoilt the pages, but his tears. "Why did you have to weep"? asked the Italian. "Because I read the secret document which tells a lot about what you intend to do against Ethiopia," he replied. "Yes, but that has nothing to dowith you Eritreans. You are worried about a different people and society, which should not be of concern to you," retorted the Italian. Three days later, Lorenzo told Ephreim Tewolde Medhin about what he had read. Afterthat, both discussed the matter and escaped to Aden and from there they went to Addis Ababa where they met Haile Selassie.(13)

How much reliance could be attached to the information, especially that provided by his daughter? Did he really escape from Eritrea because of what he had read? And did such information ever exist? The 1925 letter ofMussolini to the Minister of the Colonies may provide a clue. There is also Badoglio's handwritten instruction to General Malladra regarding the use of poison gas. These clues, when considered along with the fact that mustard gas that had been shipped into Massawa was utilized to substitute for the mountain warfare in which Italians lacked training (14), may lend considerable weight to what Woizerit Lorenzo contends.

However, when Italy launched its unprovoked aggression against Ethiopia in 1935, the country was not prepared to resist the aggression. In fact, the primary cause of Ethiopia's defeat was that it had no arms, and was allowed none. The secondary cause of its defeat was that it had no aviation.(15) It therefore appears very unlikely that Lorenzo had access to secret war plans. For, if he did, he would have made it available to HaleSelassie, and that would have given Ethiopia a span of ten years with which to strengthen its defenses.

One is inclined to think that his daughter has read back into the past on the basis of the actual use of poison gas, the likely Italian preparations to do something against Ethiopia and Lorenzo's patriotic role against fascism.In such a set-up, it becomes easy within the family to make Lorenzo into an even more prescient hero. While one does not deny the utility of oral sources, perhaps the most one can say in this particular case is that her information cannot be used to supply adequate answers to the type of questions we raised earlier.

That Lorenzo served the Italian authorities from 1920-1925, is not debatable, and that he met Haile Selassie in Aden in 1924 is not also in dispute. But what cannot be sustained is the contention that he escaped from Eritrea because of the "secret document" he had read. Available evidence does in fact support the view that his escape from his home landwas likely motivated by his daily exposure to constant humiliation, provocation and racial discrimination.

In this regard, let us consider the views of the London Times correspondent George Steer, who was expelled from Addis Ababa by theItalians in 1936, and who later participated in the liberation campaign of Ethiopia in the capacity of a British Intelligence Officer in charge of Offensive Propaganda. Steer who knew Lorenzo both in Europe and in Africa has this to say:

He rose to be Secretary to the Governor in Asmara when he was still veryyoung, for Lorenzo is quick as lightening. It was the highest position that he could reach: Lorenzo is not a white man. Embittered by his servile condition, he could bear it no longer after a scene in a small cinema to which Italian friends had invited him. Other Italians hissed them for bringing in a colored man. Lorenzo was already miserable enough. With his savings he fled to Aden and waited there in poverty until [Haile Selassie] picked him up.(16)

One is inclined to accept this version of Lorenzo's escape from Colonial Eritrea. It is also likely that Steer heard it from the man himself. Since impressions of youth are more lasting that those of the immediate past, itseems that such an experience had a chilling effect on his outlook. It made him resent the Italians very deeply. In expecting him to treat themnot as an equal, but with a submissiveness demanded of a subject, the Italians succeeded in converting him into an envenomed and resolute enemy for all time.

Thereafter, and as mentioned earlier, Lorenzo went to school in France,and having returned to Ethiopia in 1933, he began to serve the government in several capacities until he was forced into exile again bythe Italians, this time to Europe along with Haile Selassie.

Lorenzo's Role Against Italian Fascism

Haile Selassie's moving address to the League of Nations that stirred theconscience of the world and which was drafted by Lorenzo in part reads:

I am here to give Europe warning of the doom that awaits it, if it bows before force. I ask the fifty-two nations assembled here to give my country the support they promised her. There is not on this earth any nation that is higher than any other, apart from the kingdom of God. Godand History will remember your judgment.(17)

It should be noted here that after delivering this historic address to the League of Nations, the Emperor Haile Selassie settled in Bath, England. Asfar as the League was concerned, therefore, it was Lorenzo, who in his capacity as Permanent Delegate of Ethiopia accredited to that world body,who continued the diplomatic struggle in Geneva. To that end, he even carried his credentials signed and sealed in his pocket. If any motion prejudicial to Ethiopia were to be tabled at the Council, he had all the intention of walking into the Assembly Hall and occupying the vacant post.(18) However, he was also impatient with the obstacles that loomed on all sides. As was to be expected, when Ethiopia was sacrificed by the League at the altar of political expediency, Lorenzo could not but agree with those few Ethiopian ministers who saw the virtues of guerrilla warfare.

With regard to the situation inside Italian occupied Ethiopia, it should be noted that Italian atrocities that were regarded by many as the apogee of fascist barbarity had reached a climax. The Ethiopian nationalist movement was gaining ground. There was continuous rebellion, even if it was uncoordinated, bedeviled as it was by factions which adhered to personalities rather than programs. Italian censorship was so strict that little information reached the outside world. It was therefore assumed thatthe fascists were making good their occupation of the country. Hence, in February 1938, Haile Selassie decided to dispatch Lorenzo to make a secret visit to Ethiopia and to explore the possibilities of his return to lead the resistance. Lorenzo had to succeed in this mission, if only because theprospect of failure was too grim to contemplate. Accordingly, he went to Ethiopia and spent several months inside the country. He delivered Haile Selassie's messages to the various leaders of the resistance, assessed their strength and weakness, mediated their disputes, distributed arms at strategic points, helped to integrate them into a cohesive fighting force, and left the country. (19) Three months later, Lorenzo was back in Europe. Haile Selassie was so impressed by what he had to tell him, that he decided to report the whole situation to the League of Nations, some ofwhose members had started recognizing Italian occupation of Ethiopia.

But since the emperor was ill, Lorenzo had to read the speech for him,which in any case, he had drafted:

Is the League, the appointed guardian of the principles of international justice, about to sign its own death warrant by tearing up with its own hands the covenant which is the sole justification of its being? Is right totriumph over Might, or Might over Right? [Let me reiterate to you here and now] that an implacable guerrilla warfare is being waged and will continue to be waged until either the [country] is evacuated by the Italians, or the Ethiopian people have been exterminated.

… The Italian government exercises no control over the greater part of Ethiopia… Its troops merely control the towns (where) garrisons can only be supplied with provisions and munitions by means of aircraft. (I am annexing to this statement) the petitions presented by the Ethiopian warrior chiefs setting forth the situation and asking for the assistance of the League of Nations. (20) The petitions, no doubt, were written by warrior chiefs, at Lorenzo's suggestion. He took the petitions with him andannexed them to Haile Selassie's speech. And from the point of view of those States that were hesitating to recognize Ethiopia's occupation by Italy, the speech and the petitions mush have had a restraining influence. Countries like Sweden, Mexico, the USA, USSR and others never recognized Italian occupation of Ethiopia. In 1939, Lorenzo went back to Ethiopia on a similar mission. According to George Steer, who seems to have closely following his activities:

Lorenzo, a lively man who used to worry where to get the next stamp to send a letter to the Secretariat of the League of Nations, came to Paris by arrangement. His timing was good. The League of Nations did not meet that year. He went off dressed in a tarboosh, saying that he was a Sudanese of the Eritrean frontier tribe of the Habab. (21) The volcano (theEthiopian resistance movement) permanently simmered, and Lorenzo's coming gave it a poke. He poked it all around – north and south, east and west, skillfully exploiting the resentment that had been simmering. Amongother things, he composed the quarrels of the resistance leaders in Gojjam after three days of negotiation. Elsewhere, he promised the peoplethat the end is not far off. (22) Similarly, Christopher Sykes, who describes Lorenzo as "an Ethiopian of high character and distinguished record," reports that he was known at this time as Wolde Michael, elsewhere as Thompson and correctly as Lorenzo Taezaz.(23) The French intelligence officer, Colonel Robert Monnier, who had also made a clandestine journey in the interior of Ethiopia in July 1938, taught Lorenzo how to use a compass in his arduous travels. Lorenzo therefore extensively traveled inside Ethiopia. He constantly disguised himself in order to elude the Italians.

But in areas where he felt secure, he appeared in an Ethiopian army officer's uniform with a considerable escort of Ethiopian soldiers. The fact that Lorenzo was able to wonder about Ethiopia in uniform and with an escort, it was said, is an indication of the state of affairs prevalent inside the country. (24) At other times, he traveled disguised as a priest or as a peasant. (25) After several months in the country, and after having established an Ethiopian Intelligence Bureau in Khartoum Lorenzo proceeded to Cairo to give full account of his discoveries to the skeptical British Middle East Headquarters. (27) By the winter of 1939, he was backin England with news to gladden and inspire. Again Haile Selassie wanted to move, but this time, the British were not convinced that he had a large following in the country. In 1938, if Britain did not act in support of Haile Selassie, it must have been certainly acting, when it argued that the emperor's wish to move to Ethiopia and to lead the resistance was premature. But the truth is, as Spencer remarked, since Britain was negotiating with the Italians over the Mediterranean, it did not want the talks to be prejudiced. However, British reluctance a year later had some merit worthy of note. At a meeting of some 900 patriotic commanders which took place in Gondar, the need to abolish the monarchy and declare Ethiopia a republic was discussed. To that end, even a document was prepared for the League of Nations touching on the form which a future government of the country might take. (28) Since Britain was aware of that, London did not want to end up by backing a man whose leadership was challenged. To dispel their doubts, however, Lorenzo was sent back toEthiopia. This time, he was to provide evidence that important members of the resistance affirmed their allegiance to the emperor. He collected 10,000 signatures in a matter of weeks and helped to persuade the Britishto support Haile Selassie's claim to the throne.

On June 10, 1940, Italy declared war on France and Britain. As a result, Haile Selassie was allowed to go to Khartoum to organize and lead a liberation army. He immediately asked for the battalion of trained Eritreans which had deserted from the Italian army in 1937, but which was kept in internment in Kenya. (29) Who else but Lorenzo could go to Kenya? He went there and read them Haile Selassie's invitation requestingthem to join the resistance. They responded with wild cries of delight,(30)and they did. Back in Khartoum, more work was waiting for Lorenzo, and more duties that needed his attention. He wrote the decrees and the military mobilization orders of Haile Selassie, which the British Royal Air Force effectively utilized in the propaganda warfare against the Italians.

Eritreans in Kassala, for instance, were seen to kiss the seal, press it to their foreheads and weep.(31) At long last, as the British army moved toevict the Italians from Ethiopia, it entered the country along the tracks blazed by Lorenzo Taezaz. (32)

Conclusion:

It was pointed out earlier that because the existing literature gives scantcoverage to Lorenzo's background in general, and to the actual role he played in the Italo-Ethiopian war of 1935-1941 in particular, this study would attempt to rectify that limitation. From the discussion we havealready had, we can therefore make the following conclusions.

Although Lorenzo's escape from Eritrea was largely motivated by the reality of an empty future in his homeland, his uncompromising position against fascism seems to have been largely inspired by his early experience of constant humiliation and racial discrimination. Those painfulmemories have lived with him for very many years. In those days, Haile Selassie needed educated young Ethiopians to help him in his modernization program. He sent several of them to Europe to study European methods of administration, science and technology. As fate would have it, in sending Lorenzo to France, he did make a wise decision. It paid off.

Lorenzo, who lacked neither ideals nor insight, successfully played severalroles as a pressman, diplomat, intelligence officer, agitator, and counselor, and discharged his responsibilities with great distinction. In theprocess, he displayed great fortitude and endurance. For no one can dispute the key role he played in Ethiopia's liberation. But more than most, Lorenzo's commitment to duty must have strengthened Haile Selassie's faith in education.

By delivering the Emperor's messages to the various leaders of the resistance, Lorenzo provided the movement with a sense of direction and helped co-ordinate the internal and external struggle against Italian fascism. Whenever disputes arose among the leaders, by appealing to their sense of patriotism and by mediating their conflicts, he helped in theemergence of a cohesive and formidable fighting force that carried out devastating guerrilla operations against a mechanized army considered invincible at the time. If thousands of peasants could turn into soldiers overnight, fight with limitless courage, and turn the tide of the war, they owe it to Lorenzo's organizational and agitation ability and to the arms he distributed to themat critical times and places. If Eritrean soldiers, who were in the service offascism, could desert the Italian army and join the Ethiopian forces of resistance, it was in part because of the knowledge that Lorenzo was around.

As a lawyer, and fluent in several European languages, Lorenzo effectivelyargued Ethiopia's case in Geneva, and gained for his country considerablesympathy and support.

When the British government hesitated in supporting Haile Selassie's return to Ethiopia, contending that the emperor had no power base insidethe country, Lorenzo was instrumental in changing London's mind. He went to Italian occupied Ethiopia, collected the signatures of 10,000 important members of the resistance who affirmed their allegiance to theemperor, and convinced the British to go along with Haile Selassie. Is there any wonder then, if the late Prime Minister Endalkachew Mekonnencould immortalize Lorenzo's name in the funeral oration by paying tributeto his memory in words that are both fitting and deserving? (33)

The rumor mills in Ethiopia have been grinding out conflicting stories about his death. It is strongly alleged by many Ethiopians that Lorenzo was poisoned by Wolde Giorgis Wolde Yohannes, Haile Selassie's powerfulMinister of the Pen, who deeply resented Lorenzo's wide popularity with Haile Selassie. Spencer for one is convinced that he died a natural death. He claims that Lorenzo suffered from intestinal adhesions. Excerpted fromProf. Daniel Kindie's article (written in August 12, 2013)

In June, 1946: As to promote Hotels and Leisures in the country, AddisAbaba Filwuha SPA innovated by an Israeli company.

In June,1946: As part of restructuring and modernizing the EthiopianArmed Forces, Harrar Military Acadamy established in the outskirts ofHarrar town in eastern Ethiopia.

In June, 1946: Emperor Haile Selassie enforces Yohannes Eyassu the son of Lij Eyassu Mikael to exile, for no reason except for fear of possible challenge to his Throne. Lij Yohannes Eyassu was a patriot leader who fought the Italian occupiers for five years winning the admiration and respect of of thousands of Patriots and ordinary citizens while the Emperorwent on to exile to England.

January, 1946: An initial group of Swedes under Colonel Count Carl Gustav Von Rosen, who were to train aviation personnel and other supportive section for the newly designed Imperial air force arrived at Debre-Zeit (Bishoftu) "Harrar Meda airbase" after leaving Sweden.

The Swedes finally agreed to provide assistance and Carl Gustaf von Rosen was appointed as the head of the newly formed Imperial EthiopianAir Force (IEAF). The Ethiopian Air Force (ETAF); is the air arm of the Ethiopian National Defense Forces and is tasked with protecting the air space, providing support to the ground forces as well as assisting during national emergencies.

April 8, 1946: The Ethiopian Air lines commenced it's operation, serves asthe country's flag carrier, and is wholly owned by the government of Ethiopia.
December 24, 1946: The Air force base was moved from the Bole Airportin Addis Ababa that needed by the Ethiopian Air Lines for it's newly commenced operation, to Debre-zeit (Bishoftu) Harrar-Meda airbase, to officially launch the Ethiopian Air Force (EAF).
In 1947: Italy was forced to sign the "Paris Agreement" by the victoriousallied powers to relinquish any claim over it's former colonies that Italy lost as a result of it's war against the Allied Forces, and officially accepted"End of colony". But no formal apology from Italia or any of post-WW II Italian governments and the Vatican itself who had blessed the war and financed the invasion.Italy signed a peace treaty with Ethiopia renouncingthe invalidity of the previous treaties with Imperial Ethiopian Government.
Ras Seyoum Mengesha Yohannes appointed by the Emperor member ofthe Imperial Crown council in addition to his title "Shum" of eastern andwestern Tigre province.
Side note: The eastern Tigre was incorporated into western Tigre and wasjointly governed by Ras Seyoum Mengesha as hereditary prince of Tigre province. This was because of the treason of Dejazmach Haile Selassie Gugsa, the son of the late Ras Gugsa Araya Selassie. Ras Seyoum Mengesha was the son of Ras Mengesha Yohannes and grandson of Nəgusä Nägäst Yohannes IV of Ethiopia. Leul Ras Seyum Mengesha KBE (21 June 1887 – 15 December 1960) was hereditary prince, an army commander and a member of the Royal family of the Ethiopian empire
In 1947: The Ethiopian Football Federation (EFF) kicked the country's“National League” with three teams namely; St. George, Mechale andKe'ay Bahir.
Side note;- All football clubs remained within the league for over twenty-five years before the latter ruling-Duerg reorganized the football leagues,and forced all existing clubs to shut down at the latter.
The Commercial Printing Press (CPP) the third in it’s kind in Ethiopiaestablished.
The Emperor appointed Ras Abebe Aregai Minister of War of the Imperialgovernment.
Dejazmatch Haile Selassie Gugsa Araya-selassie stood trial and was officially labeled a Fascist collaborator and a traitor. As a result, his deathsentence was commuted to life imprisonment, and he was placed under house arrest at Gore, a provincial town of Illou.babour, and later at Ambofor 28 years.
September 25, 1947: The self-styled writer Affeworq Guebreyesus usuallyknown as "Affeworq the Bihere-Zegie" (July 10, 1868 –September 25, 1947) was an Ethiopian writer& essayist, who wrote the first novel in Amharic "Libb Wolled Tarik", a heart-born story passed awayin natural sickness.
A British firm for the first time found reserves of Petroleum in the Ogadienbelt which that later confirmed by the Teneco company of USA.

November 4, 1947: Emperor Haile Selassie I innaugurated a hospital in Addis Ababa built under the Soviet Red Cross & Red Crescent named afterthe renowned patriot Dejazmatch Balcha Safo horsenamed as “Aba- Nefso”.

December 5, 1947: Ethiopia’s National Football (Soccer) Team's firstInternational match against Djibouti.

September 23, 1948: The Ogaden, a region disputed with Somalia, wasgranted to Ethiopia. According to the "London Agreement on the ‘Haud and Reserved Area’ (areas close to Somaliland border), Great Britain handed over the region secretly to Ethiopia, a decision rejected by the Ogaden Somali population. The Imperial Ethiopian government for the first time starts administering the eastern part of Ogadien, and administrative officials were sent to the region headquartered at Qabridahare, Qualafo and Warder.
The corridor called the "Haud & Reserved Area" stretching from the Haud to then French Somaliland known as then the French Territories of Afar & Issas – TFAI (now Djibouti), handed over to the Imperial Government of Ethiopia as last parts of British controlled Ethiopian sovereign territories. It has to be recalled that under pressure from their World War II allies andto the dismay of the Somalis, the British "returned" the Haud (an important Somali grazing area that was presumably 'protected' by British treaties with the Somalis in 1884 and 1886) and the Ogaden region to Ethiopia, based on a treaty they signed in 1897 in which the British ceded Somali territory to the Ethiopian Emperor Menelik.
Aviation Experts from Sweden have actively engaged in training to build-up the new Imperial Ethiopian Air Force (IEAF) in Harrar Meda Airfield, Debre-zeit (Bishoftu).
July 13, 1948: Emperor Haile Selassie I of Ethiopia, the last reigning Orthodox Christian monarch in the world, successfully reached an agreement with the Coptic Orthodox Church in Alexandria, Egypt to the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahdo Church (EOTC) gain it's autonomy from thecoptic-Church of Alexandria, Egypt.
Side note: The Coptic Orthodox and Ethiopian Churches reached an agreement that led to the elevation of the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Church to the rank of an Autonomous Church; allowing the Archbishop of All Ethiopia to consecrate on his own bishops and metropolitans for the Ethiopian Church and to form a local Holy Synod. The Archbishop, however, is consecrated by the Pope of Alexandria along with the members of the Holy Synod of the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Church. This has led to the promotion of the Church of Ethiopia to the rank of an autocephalous Patriarchate. Five bishops were immediately consecrated by the Coptic Orthodox Pope of Alexandria. They later elected an Ethiopian patriarch for their church following the death of Abuna Querillos IV, thelast Copt to lead the Church of Ethiopia. The first Archbishop of Ethiopiawas Abuna Basilios, who was consecrated on 14th January 1951.
December 10, 1948: Ethiopia ratified the Universal Declaration of HumanRights (UDHR). The UDHR is the most idealistic, noble principle and international rule that the UN has produced. Despite many challenges it has now come into its real and universal implementation, not only at thelevel of states but accessible and inforceable for individual victims.

Emperor Haile Selassie appointed Ras Abebe Aregai Minister of Interior &Defence of the Imperial government.

February 17, 1949: Ethiopian Teachers' Union founded at a founding conference in Menelik II school. ETU is founded as a trade union centre forEthiopia. Ethiopian Teachers Association (ETA) founded as an independentprofessional association by a handful of contiountious individuals on the field to effectively maintain the rights of teachers on the profession and toassist the Learning/Teaching process at schools throughout the country.

In 1949: Emperor Haile Selassie and Empress Menen visiting the hospitalin Nazareth, Ethiopia. The hospital in Adama which renamed at the latterNazareth and the Hospital Haile Mariam Mammo was founded by the Mennonites at the invitation of Emperor Haile Selassie in a warehouse built by the Italians during the occupation years. Much respect to the Emperor; a great humanitarian, revolutionary and visionary of peace for all participating at the event.

May, 1949: The United States of America led by president Harry S. Truman with an outstanding commitment to Ethiopia at this time sets a programme known as “Point Four- Ethiopia” that would end in 1968. It was a success of the time that it led to the birth of several great collegeslike Jimma, Alemaya and Ambo along with teacher training institutes in Harrar and Debre-Berhan.

In 1950: The University College of Addis Ababa founded, then receivingit’s name, ‘Haile Selassie I University (HSIU)’ at the latter (in 1962.)

December 2, 1950: The UN General Assembly adopted Resolution 390 (AV), establishing the federation of Eritrea (the former Italian colony) intoEthiopia. Eritrea was to have its own constitution, which would provide forethnic, linguistic, and cultural balance, while Ethiopia was to manage its finances, defense, and foreign policy.

Side note: United Nation General Assembly voted 46 to 10 to have Eritreabe federated with Ethiopia, which was later stipulated in Resolution number 390 (v) known as the "Ethio-Eritrean federation formula". Eritrea would have it's own parliament and internal administration and would be represented in what had been the Ethiopian Imperial parliament and would become a federal parliament. And the two local rival parties known as the "Moslem League party of Eritrea (Rabitta Al-Islamia)" and the "Unionist party of Eritrea (Mahiber Fikri-Hager)" especially whos have theirown very newspaper organ should promote campaign for seats in the federal Eritrean parliament.

Updates: The United Nations resolved later to establish Eritrea as an autonomous entity federated with Ethiopia as a compromise between Ethiopian claims for sovereignty and Eritrean aspirations for independence. Unlike other African country’s colonial experience, Ethiopia and Eritrea have a unique historical relationship that is intertwined as one entity. The arrangement gave Eritrea a considerable self-government and autonomy, with its own legislation, police and taxation powers. The co- Federal Imperial government controlled only foreign affairs, defense and the ports. The United Nations made it clear, the new federal arrangement represented a compromise between the wishes and welfare of the inhabitants of Eritrea, the interest of peace and security in East Africa, andthe rights and claims of Ethiopia, in particular Ethiopia's legitimate need for adequate access to the Red sea.

The Imperial government's desire to promote such agriculture, combined with its policy of creating new tax revenues, put pressure on many pastoralists, especially the Afar and the Arsi Oromo. "Malaria Eradication" programs made irrigation agriculture in these areas possible. Major concessionaires, such as the Tendaho Cotton Plantation managed until thefall of the imperial regime in September, 1974 by the British firm Mitchel Cotts. This time pastoral life remained largely undisturbed by the highlanders, who intensely disliked the hot and humid lowland climate andfeared malaria.The Communist North Korea invaded the South Korea, sparking a war that would last three years. Ethiopia at the Korean War' In support of the principle of collective security, Emperor Haile Selassie sent Kagnew Battalion under the command of General Mulugeta Buli to join

U.N. forces in the Korean War which began in 1950. Ethiopia was the first African nation to provide troops. The Ethiopian Battalion was attached to the American 7th Infantry Division and fought hundreds of battles with theChinese including the famous Battle of Pork Chop Hill in the summer of 1953. Over 3,500 Ethiopian troops served during the war. 121 Ethiopian troops were killed and 536 wounded.

Side note: In keeping with the principles of collective security for which the emperor himself was an outspoken proponent, he sent a contingent under Brigadier General Mulugueta Bulli, known as the Kagnew Battalion,to take part in the Korean War by supporting the United Nations Command. Kagnew Battalion was attached to the American 7th Infantry Division, and fought in a number of engagements including the Battle of Pork Chop Hill. In his latter speech to the UN General assembly in 1954, the emperor spoke of Ethiopian participation in the Korean War as a redemption of the principles of collective security. The two sides are still technically at war after the Korean conflict, which began in 1950 and ended in 1953 in a truce, not a treaty.

Ethiopia's Music & Folk Dances At It's Peak:

Golden years (1950s to 1970s) of the Ethiopian popular musicians –Generation of Ethiopian elite musicians of their time

Vocalists included Bizunesh Bekele, Mahmoud Ahmed, Alemayehu Eshete,Tamirat Molla, Hirut Bekele, Ali Mohammed Birra, Ayalew Mesfin, MulukenMelesse, Tsedale Guebremariam, Tezera Hailemikael, Teffera Kassa, Bahita Guebre Hiwot, Zaritu Getahun, Telela Kebede, Tsehay Endale, Menelik Wosnachew, Melkamu Tebeje and the great vocalist Tilahun Gessesse, including Girma Bèyènè who only recorded only four songs as avocalist, but arranged more than 60 titles and collaborated to at least 25 other tracks. And the Ethio-jazz innovator Mulatu Astatke.

Tilahun Gessesse: The great vocalist Tilahun Gessesse is a true EthiopianMusical Genius. No wonder there is a lot said and written about him all over the local media, Tilahun Gessese remembered forever, he is at the hearts and minds of large number of Ethiopians, and in the neighbouringSudan.
In Ethiopia and for Ethiopians, the very concept of contemporary music is intertwined with the name Tilahun Gessesse. He was a singer like no otherwith tremendously charismatic appearance, holding his rightful place in Ethiopia as the country's one and only king of pop. From love, family and friendship to liberty, unity and justice, there isn't an aspect of life that Tilahun didn't sing about. Music has a special place in the everyday lives of Ethiopians and no singer has been able to win the sentiments of the people the way Tilahun did over the years. The veteran singer was not just a renowned artist – he was also a national treasure of highest standards.

'Asmara Theatherical Association' locally known as "Mahber Teyatr Asmara" (also abbreviated as Ma. Te. A) - 1961- 1974 : Is one of the firstand the biggest Modern bands in Eritrea province under Ethiopian administration. Among the prominent Tigrigna singers Atewe Birhan Segidknown better as "Aboy Segid", Bereket Mengistab, Taitu Baraki known better as "Gual Baraki", Tewelde Reda, Tiberih Tesfa Hunegn, Al-Amin Abdeletif, Beyene Fire known better as "Wadi Fre", Tekle Tesfa-Izgy, Asgedom Wolde Mikael, Tekle-Mikael Guebru known as Wadi-Guebru, Ousman Abdelrahim, Jabr Mahmud, Asli Tedros whos very known for her traditional drumming, and the composer Tekle Adhanom known better as "Tekle Hiwket", Masresha Tessema of the "Mahber-Theatre Asmara' and more among the popular lyricists, composers, arrangers, vocalists and pianists, most active at their time during the golden era of Ethiopian vinylrecord (1969-1978) are best remembered from then northern province of Eritrea under Ethiopian administration. Their old songs are still played andhave/are been remixed by many Eritrean and Ethiopian singers.

Asnaketch Worku: icon, singer and actress who mesmerised 50s and 60sEthiopia is still loved today. Muluken Melesse has an unmatched place in the Ethiopian music scene asthe best male love song singer Ethiopia has ever produced – and he certainly left an unparalleled legacy. He left the world of music in the mid 1980s after undergoing a religious conversion, abruptly ending what had been one of the most successful musical careers of his generation. Listen to his old records and you will know that he was one of a kind. Decades after he departed the Ethiopian music scene, yet to hear love songs with even a fraction of the qualities of Muluken's old songs. Though, the poorerfor our loss, we are immeasurably the richer for his many years of musicalleadership and unparalleled legacy. We will always regard Muluken as a true measure of a great Ethiopian musical talent.
Amha Eshete of the Amha Records, Kaifa Records, and Philips-Ethiopia were among the prominent Ethiopian record labels during this era while popular folk musicians included Assefa Abate, Alemu Aga, Kassa Tessema,Gemechu Etana, Ketema Makonnen, Tesfaye Lemma (flute), Geta-MessayAbebe, Esatu Tessema, Wossenu Dido, Demissie Komba, Asnaketch Worku, Mary Armede, Abebe Tessema, Argaw Bedasso, Leggese Abdi, Firew, and Bahiru Kegne Perhaps the most influential musicians of the period.

ETHIOPIAN MUSIC LEGENDS:

About Ethiopian traditional & nationalistic songs

Love songs

Love songs are by far the most popular song types in Ethiopia as they would be anywhere else in the world. But not all love songs have the same impact on the listener and some are definitely better than others. What makes for a great love song is a combination of many factors including lyrics that ring true to people's hearts and descriptions of love situations that they can relate to. One way or another, the songs listed below qualify as among the best Ethiopian love songs and whatever yourlove situation, we trust you enjoy listening to them.

Wedding songs

Whether there is a wedding or not, wedding songs are everyone’s favourite. For those who are getting married, wedding songs make the occasion happy, warm and memorable. For those who are already married, these songs bring back memories from their wedding day like nothing else could. And for those who are yet to tie the knot, wedding songs simply make them think about their prospective marriage and theprospect of reaching that special day.

This collection of wedding songs express promises of love, loyalty and friendship in ways that are both traditional and contemporary. They celebrate a milestone and the start of a new chapter in the lives of thosewho choose to tie the knot. Each one of these Ethiopian wedding songs are inspired by different traditional elements and they are uniquely Ethiopian.

Nationalistic & patriotic songs for and about Ethiopia

Ethiopian musicians follow an enduring tradition of singing for and about Ethiopia. Perhaps Ethiopia could be the only country in the world where each year several songs are released wishing the country well, admiring its beauty, praising its achievements and just expressing love for Ethiopia.With millions of Ethiopians now living outside of Ethiopia near and far across the world, there is literally a plethora of songs in which fond memories of the country and nostalgic feelings are expressed. Most songsabout Ethiopia are also about hope - hope for a better future, hope for cultural repatriation and hope for the day that one gets to reunite with thehomeland and family members. These are a selection of old and recent songs carrying all of these Messages.

Songs with special meaning

Ethiopian songs cover a lot of ground – they touch many aspects of life and their lyrics and delivery touch the hearts of many. In this collection, you will find songs about music itself, about the value of life and the daily struggle to make life work, the importance of friendship, the gratitude onemust feel towards one's mother and more. The collection will continue to grow.

Holiday songs

Holidays and festivities like Christmas, New Year and Easter are very important aspects of the Ethiopian culture – and there are songs for each holiday season. Some of the songs in this collection are songs from a longtime ago, but time only adds value to them. The collection also has holiday songs that were released more recently and they are a testamentto the continued trend in singing about holidays as Ethiopians' favourite seasons. (Text ends)

Cermonial songs (National Anthem)

The national Anthem of the Imperial government composed by Kevrok Nalbandian, it was Ethiopia's National Anthem that served until the fall ofthe imperial regime in September 1974. Kervok Nalbandian was uncle forNersis Nalbandian whose also an Ethiopian citizen of Armenian descent.

Nersis Nalbandian is accredited for modernizing the Ethiopian Music sincethe 1940s until the fall of the Imperial regime in September, 1974.

Professor Nersis Nalbandian with Ethiopian Musicians used to conduct theOrchestra of the Imperial guard and choired the imperial anthem.

The Golden years For Ethiopian Music

TRADITIOAL FOLKES MUSIC, MODERN ETHIOPIAN MUSICS, ETHIOPIANMODERN INSTRUMENTALS HITS, DISCOGRAPHIES REISSUED IN CD & VINYL BY AMHA RECODS, KAIFA, PHILIPS ETHIOPIA Et-Al

MULATU ASTATKE: Asiyo Bellema / Nefsh Nesh:Yekermo Saw:MecheDerische

ALEMAYEHU BOROBOR: Tez Alegn Hagere / Yeshebelewa et-al

SEYOUM GEBREYESS: Mech Ene Terf Felghu / Musika Musika:Hametegnaw / Yehagere Gegna et-al

GETACHEW KASSA: Zemam Sew Lebene / Altegenagenem:Tezeta (slow) /Tezeta (fast): Gumm Gumm:Bichayene Tekezie / Bey Lesenabetsh:Min Yihon Mistiru / Fikrishin Eshalehu et-al

GEMECHU ETANA: Serbi Tole / Teya Suma Hati:Yakolele / ShemermareTiya et-al

MULUKEN MELESSE: Tizita / Alagegnhwatem:Wotetie Mare / Ete EndeneshGedawo: Yemiaslekes Fikir / Hedech Alu:Tenesh Kelebe Lie / Embwa Bellew:Ishururu Belut / Dingetegna Fikir:Anchin Yagegnulet / Fikrishin Kelkiyiw et-al

ABEBE TESSEMA: Ashasha Beyew / Gebre Guracha Gote et-al

TEBEREH TESFA-HUNEGN (Gual Tesfahunegn): Addei Weladitei / WelladkaHazile:Kuhulaye / Imeneni:Temeharu / Sewit Lemlem :Bedilkani / Hadara Zikehadet et-al
ALEMAYEHU ESHETE & HIRUT BEKELE (Jointly): Temelese /TeyeGidyeleshime
DANIEL YOHANNES: Wud Inate / Yesew LijASSEGEDETCH KASSA: Marewa / Sewye
ZERIHUN BEKELE (ORCHESTRA ETHIOPIA): Lekidame Atbiya /ALEMAYEHU BOREBOR: Tew Irres
BEKELETCH TSEGAYE & ORCHESTRA ETHIOPIA: Hassabih / Abitchu
YIREFU MANYAZ & TESHOME AYELE (Jointly): Ayal Begonder / GondernaGojam:Yantchin Huneta /
KEBEDE W/MARIAM & YIREFU MANYAZ (ORCHESTRA ETHIOPIA): Weha /
Iddil
BIZUNESH BEKELE: Bayn Yemitay Edel / Tigel New :Atrakegne / Inramed:Aha Gedawo / Kal Kidan:Yemisserek Bihon / Hilm Norual Leka :Ayasayegn Chinkun / Ferenj Ager Sathed:Min Bedelkut Minew /Mehonu Asazenegn et-al

(JOINT) BEZUNESH BEKELE & GEMETCHU ITANA:
Esse Menike / Keloto Yabale Shashi
AYALEW MESFIN: Ketegegne Semi / Melyow Tela Alew: Tezetash Rekik / Harrar Dire-Dawa: Gunfan / Ahun New Tez Yaleno: Rehab / Wegene: Libe Menta Hone / "Endet Liyyeshi" Ambasel / Yikul Ineramed:Tereterkush Betam / Neye Temelesh Belwat:Che Belew / Gubilye :Ghedawou / Yesew Neger:Yewofie Birr Abeba / Indet Nesh Belulign:Sak-Sak-Beyelegni / Ewedish Neber:Good Aderegechegn / Feker Aydelmwey Makurefesh Yeker
/ Ho Bilo Hede:Wubeet / Zebeder:Degmo Layne / Yetembelel- Loga:Teregew Nebere / Konjo Lidge Nat:Hasabe / Hedech Gara Zura et-al
YIREFU MANYAZ & TESHOME AYELE (ORCHESTRA ETHIOPIA): Minjar /
KEBEDE ALI: Ittu Gela / Goradew Na
HIRUT BEKELE: Hedetch Alu / Kalkidan Akbari: Woine Alew Beju / JebaharDar Hareg:Letedar Entar / Antewneh Manalegne:Fekregnoche Feredugne /Atetfa Kefite:Des Yemiasegne / Ewnetegna Feker:Shega Lij / Teferoh Denknow:Almorkerkum Nebere / Esu Naw Meselegne:Yekonjowoch Mender / Man Yawkal Yebetein et-al
TADELE BEKELE: Enafkeshalehu / Anchie KonjoTEFERRI FELEKE: Kelkyiligne / Aynamaye:
BEYENE FIRE: Kab Konki Tsibikti / Sei Esemhal: Kedki Diki / Kemakira IleNeyre:Ketan Meanta / Woizerit Tsige:Ayneye / Meretseki et-al
ALEMAYEHU ESHETE: Tashamanalech / Wube Alem:Hedech Ashkbech / Wededkush Afkerkush:Timarkialesh / Ya Tara:Lib Tatefalech / Honey Baby:Fiker Fiker Naw / Gizew

Honeshyna:Mekeyershene Salawke / Heiwote Abatei Naw:Afer Yemegnshale / Chiro Adarie Negne:Bechayane Tegodahu / Teredechewalehu:Nefas Indagyeba / Ayalkem Tedenko: Yewoine Haregitu / Yelebene Bitayiw:Addis Ababa Bete / Alteleyeshignim: Temeheret Bete / Denyew Deneba: Enhoy Nat Yabay Dar / Yesew Bet Yesew Naw:Kochen Messasate / Eruke Yalesew:Eskegizew Berchi / Tedesteshal Woy:Konjit / Tilantina Zarie:Memar Memeramer / Shegitu Marie:Yewebdar / Man Yehon Telek Saw: Ete hol / Hameta:Nei Nei Woleba
/ Yemaynega Lelit:: Wetader Negn / Min Tichiye Midritu :Inat Yenjera Inat
/ Alem Girma: Tikur Gissila / Kenoru Lebitcha.Tsigeredaye / Yibekanal:Abebaye / Yetintu Fikratchin:Beliye / Temar Lije: Ambassel /Tenageri :Ittu Gela / Mushirit et-al

GETACHEW TESSEMA: Nuro Aybelew / Tilagn Kobelelech
TEKLE TESFAZGHI: "Abadit" / "Ab qètri berhan":"Sèlam témagwèt" /"Tsebuk zegeber tsebuk zeirekeb"
BEZUAYENE ZEGEYE: Shewit Sendai / Deke Adey:Woinai / Netsela Mai Mai
BEYENE HABTE: Embi Ila / Tefkereni Zeneberet:: Aimenekuan / Bi-IwanuAfkire
BAHTA GEBRE HIWOT: Gizie / Tessassategn Eko et-alSAMUEL BELAY: Aynochish Yirefu / Lebene Shiwshiw DAMTEW AYELE: Wofe Yillala /
SAMUEL BELAY: Keresh Endewaza
TEZERA HAILE MICHAEL: Ayitchat Neber / Kewedet Tegegnesh ASSRESS TESSEMA & HIS GROUP: Harestay / Meaza (instrumentals)
TEWOLDE REDDA: Ab Teqai Kerebi / Nehadar Zeietkewhune:Telsemki /Wuba:Hidri / Gamey:Kirar Mistequane et-al
HAILE WORKU: Bematebwa Ledagne / Enies Emamaye / YeborenawGamie / Tsegiereda Abeba:Milenu / Momona
PADDY GWADA:(ASHANTIS) I Wanna Do My Thing / Please Don´tGo:Come On And Do It / Silence
ISSATU TESSEMA (TEAM WORK): Ayamaru Ishetie:Tchimit Min Tegoda / Des Yilal Begizew:Endenesh Bebizu / Ken Ale:Lemlemwa Hagere / Gena Benigigrwa: Fiker Bekumena (jointly with Seifu Yohannes) :Yelijinet Fikir /Yikir Ayinesa et-al
LEMMA GEBRE HIWOT: Kulun Manqualeshi / Hay Loga:Asha Gedawo:Yeweyn Abebaye
Love & Wedding Songs:
ZENEBETCH TESFAYE SELAMAWIT G. SELASSIE:: Indalayish / Ahun
Demeksh Abebaye
ABAYNEH DEJENE: Yeberha Lomie / Balengerie / Ereneiete / Balengerie
TSEHAITU BARAKI (Gual-Barkhi): Hadareye / Megemeria Fikirie: Bazay /Aminie: Lalei Bola / Akeza Koynu et-al

HASSAN ATYA (Ethiopia): Kelim Kelim / Yagemil Yasada:Yamalak Yasada /Nenu Yanenu :Wahed Eyenek / Magafi Anid:Ethiopia / Ansa Yagelbi Alhob

THE ARAYA'S FAMILY: Teweldowal / Balehebet Zuria Abra/Engeda Negne Ene / Nedowen Ensebseb (Extended Play)

MENELIK WOSSENACHEW: Belew Bedubaye / Tezeta:Asha Gedawo / Nefse Eko Nat :Menew Bacher Kere / Eshet Eshet:Mekaberene Liyew /Chereka :Fikratchin / Mambo Sambo:Aderetch Arada et-al

AMLESET ABAI: Dekise Neire / SadulayeLP AMLESET ABAI and her Kirar

TELELA KEBEDE: Kelemewa: Lomi tera tera

MENELIK WOSSENACHEW: Belew Bedubaye / Tezeta:Asha Gedawo / Nefse Eko Nat :Menew Bacher Kere / Eshet Eshet:Mekaberene Liyew /Chereka :Fikratchin / Mambo Sambo:Aderetch Arada et-al

AMLESET ABAI: Dekise Neire / Sadulaye

MENELIK WOSSENACHEW: Belew Bedubaye / Tezeta:Asha Gedawo / Nefse Eko Nat :Menew Bacher Kere / Eshet Eshet:Mekaberene Liyew /Chereka :Fikratchin / Mambo Sambo:Aderetch Arada et-al

AMLESET ABAI: Dekise Neire / SadulayeLP AMLESET ABAI and her Kirar

TELELA KEBEDE: Kelemewa: Lomi tera tera

MENELIK WOSSENACHEW: Belew Bedubaye / Tezeta:Asha Gedawo / Nefse Eko Nat :Menew Bacher Kere / Eshet Eshet:Mekaberene Liyew /Chereka :Fikratchin / Mambo Sambo:Aderetch Arada et-al

AMLESET ABAI: Dekise Neire / SadulayeLP AMLESET ABAI and her Kirar

TELELA KEBEDE: Kelemewa: Lomi tera tera

ABEBE HAILE MICHAEL: Konjitie / Tekelkey BawaileGIRMA BEYENE: Set Alamenme /

TESFA MARIAM KIDANE: Yetesfa Tezeta

TESHOME METEKU: Gara Ser Now Betesh / Mote Adeladayou: Hasabe /Yezemed Yebada et-al

GIRMA BEYENE: Enken Yelelebish / Ene Negne By Manesh

SEIFU YOHANNES: Mecche Derische / Yekermo Saw:Ebo Lala:Mela Mela /Tezeta

ESSATU TESSEMA: Ere Dimamaye / Mushrit / Chibo Aymolan /Abebayenesh et-al

GETATCHEW MEKURIA: Antchi Hoye / Shilela:Aha Gedawo / Gedamay-Gedamay

GETETCHEW MEKURIA (Saxophone)KETEMA MEKONNEN & HIS KIRAR

ORCHESTRA ETHIOPIA: Ethiopian Folkloric Songs

TAMIRAT MOLLA: Ber Ambar Seberelewo / Ene YewodedquatSOLOMON SHIBESHI: Elil Bale Hoy / Lomi Wesheba

GIRMA BEYENE: Yebekagnale / MULATU ASTATKE: Yegele Tezeta

LEMMA DEMISSEW: Adrashash Tefabedgne / Lezelalem Nuree

TAMRAT FERENJI: Anchin Yagegnulet / Fikrishin Kelkiyiw:TAMRATFERENGI: Ya Jaleleto / Bultiko Woya:Anchin et-al

ASTER AWEKE: Anteye / Lomiye :Mulu / Etetu Beredegne WUBSHET FISEHA: "Mariyé Marwèlèla" /

"Sèw Endayhon Yèllèm"LP KASSA TESSEMA & HIS KIRAR

MISRAK KEBEDE & MESENQO et-al

ABDELLA AHMED: Beredu Jimma / Malo Ya Merole

BEREKET MENGISTAAB: Nibeyney Koyne / Imbaba:Uffey Bireri / Shew Beli:Meley / Imbeytey Weizero:Libey Keygage / Bilen Ayney:Amora Intezikewin / Neinay Indo:Fikirey Tselima / Harri Maetebey:Barih Getsa /Kewilowa Gime:Wessen / Kemey Aloki

AMBAYE HABTE MICHAEL: Gotena Hidmo / Gamey Welelo

TEFERA KASSA: Akale Wubie / Infelig Guadegna:Tilagnko Hedetch / FikirAygebatchew:Lemin Tefashi / Kenu Ken Yitilal et-alTESHOME DEMESSE: Hode Mela / Adarashu Bete

KETEMA ENDECHAW: Chekolata / Bediron Kemesew

ALI MOHAMMED BIRRA: Eshurourou / Hinyadini: Abba Lafa / EsetinSiarga:Awash / Sinhanbisin Werri

MAHMOUD AHMED: Asheweyna / Belomy Benna:Erre Mela - Mechenew /Nafkot Naw Yegodagne / Yasdestal Abbai Mado - Embewa Belew

:Sedegnashe Negne – Sameraye / Endenesh Gedawo:Tezeta / Eho Ho Gedama:Atawurulign Lela/Ebakish Tarekigni:Kulum / Fikir Endegena:Ambasel / Mela Mela: Ney Denun Tesesh / Wogenie:Gubelye /Anchie Enen Wudegigne:Etu Gela / Alemye:

Selam Almazeye / Lomiwen Tekebeletch: Ney Denun Tesesh / Belaya Belaya:Gizie:Ebo Lala / Fikir Bezebezegn / Hulum Begizew New Mella Tistegn / Tizita: Esset Mera Degu:Mar : Yeshiharegitu / Eneman NeberuTeb Yilal Kafesh / Aynoche Terabu Neger / Yieker Memekatish

TSEHAI ENDALE: Tsegurwa Wordo / Anten new(Text ends)

IN MEMORY OF THE FEMALE VETERAN SINGERS

NIGATWA KELKAY:is best known for her patriotic songs. Her singing inthe fifties shines much more whenever we remember. The very first women singer & dancer in Ethiopian music history.

MARY ARMEDE: is best known for her traditional Kirar

Mary Armeday's love-folk songs and her unique krar playing style have become a classic in the history of ethiopian music and she will forever beremembered for her talent and her love for entertaining.

ASNAKETCH WORKU (1935 – 2011): is best known for her traditionalKirar (ክራር) sometimes called “queen of the kirar” ...

Courage, Passion and Glamour - The legend of her relationship with her music begins with the Kirar (ክራር) she bought with 25 cents when she wasa young girl. (Text ends)

January 14, 1951: EOTC DIARIES: Abuna Basilios (April 23, 1891 – October 13, 1970) consecrated First Abune (Archbishop) of the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Church (EOTC). by the Coptic Orthodox Pope of Alexandria, in the presence of His Majesty the Emperor of Ethiopia at St. Marks Cathedral in Cairo, Egypt. Abune Basilios later elected an Ethiopian patriarch for EOTC following the death of Abuna Querellos IV, the last Copt to lead the Church of Ethiopia in 1959. His Holyness Abuna Basilios was the first Ethiopian archbishop Amharic meaning for "Abune", and laterto become the first patriarch of the EOTC to assume such title.

Side note: Abune Basilios was the first Ethiopian born Archbishop or Abune, and later the first Patriarch, of the Ethiopian Church. He was born to be Guebre Giyorgis Wolde Tsadik in Mada Mikael, a village in the districtof Merhabiete (woreda) in northern Shoa. Memhir Wolde Tsadik Solomon, his father, was a respected ecclesiastical official. In his home town Guebre Giyorgis received an elementary education at the local church then entered the Monastery of Debre Libanos where he received advanced religious education. He took the Holy Orders and became a monk at the age of 21. For the next 12 years he served in the same monastery. He went on to be appointed administrator of various churches in Ethiopia, most notably the Church of St. Mary at Menagesha. In early 1923 he was nominated Head of the Ethiopian Churches and Monasteries in Jerusalem with the title of "Memhir". During the Italian occupation, Ichegue Guebre Giyorgis lived in exile in Jerusalem, where he remained in touch with the Arbegnoch, or resistance fighters inside Ethiopia when the Egyptian CopticArchbishop of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church, "Abune" Querrilos had initially submitted to Italian rule.

February 27, 1951: His Majesty the Emperor of Ethiopia untied the ribbon's knot, at the Addis Ababa University College which symbolically offering to every Ethiopian the opportunity to pursue advanced educationin his or her own country.

Remembering Chief Educator The French Canadian Jesuit

Fr. Lucien Matte (1907–1975), SJ at the University College of Addis Ababain 1951..... later to become Haile Selassie I University (HSIU), was a Jesuit priest and educator.

Born in Quebec City of Canada in 1907, Lucien Matte attended the Universities of Montreal and Laval where he earned degrees in philosophy,natural science, theology and education. In 1930 he entered the Jesuit order and was ordained in 1938. Matte came to Sudbury in 1962 when hewas appointed president of the University of Sudbury. He was the driving force behind the creation of the Sudbury Teacher College at Laurentian University.

Education had been a special focus in his life. In 1945 he was asked by the King of Ethiopia, Haile Selassie, to reorganize Ethiopia’s school systems. Haile Selassie wanted his schools to be based on the Canadian system. Matte reorganized the primary and secondary schools, founded the University College of Addis Ababa in 1951 and in 1961 he became president of the newly formed Haile Selassie I University. In recognition ofthe work Matte did for Ethiopia, Haile Selassie donated $10,000 toward the University of Sudbury’s building fund.

May 1951: Ethiopians soldiers were taking part of the Ethiopianpeacekeeping mission in Korea until 1952/53.

Side note: In the spirit of “Collective Security”, three infantry “Kagnew battalions“ of Ethiopian soldiers have dispatched under UN mandate as part of the American second army division during the Korean war. Duringthe 3-year war more than 120 Ethiopians were died and over 500 injured.The Korean war kill millions of civilians and leave the peninsula divided by a Demilitarized Zone (DMZ) that today remains one of the world's mostheavily fortified.

In keeping with the principles of collective security for which the emperorwas an outspoken proponent, he sent a contingent under General Mulugueta Bulli, known as the Kagnew Battalion, to take part in the Korean War by supporting the United Nations Command. Kagnew Battalions were three successive battalions drawn from the Imperial bodyguard later to be known as 1st Division, sent by between June 1951and April 1954 as part of the United Nations Collective Security forces in the Korean War.

Kagnew Battalion was attached to the American 7th Infantry Division, andfought in a number of engagements including the Battle of Pork Chop Hill. In his speech to the UN General assembly in 1954, the emperor spoke of Ethiopian participation in the Korean War as a redemption of the principlesof collective security.
September, 1951: Emperor Haile-selassie I appointed Leult Tenagne-worqHaile-selassie and her third husband Ras Andargatchew Messai ViceRein and ViceRoy (Emperor's representative) in the former Italian colony, the newly federated Eritrea.
Side note;- Princess Tenagne-Worq and Ras Andargatchew Messai had presided over Eritrea which was then tranquil and experimenting with its new status as an autonomous unit within the federal structure of Ethiopia.However, both Eritrean supporters of Union with Ethiopia and those for Independence for Eritrea were numerous. Therefore a lengthy investigative process was launched by the allied victors of World War II known as “The Four Powers Commission”, and then carried on by the United Nations. Finally, after years of negotiations and widespread fact finding on the ground, in a compromise, it was decided that Eritrea wouldbe federated to the Ethiopian Empire under the sovreignity of the Ethiopian Crown. This was done in September, 1951. The Ethiopian Parliament would serve as the Federal Parliament, and Eritrea would haveit's own seperate parliament and constitution under the Ethiopian Crown for local issues. The Emperor would be represented in Eritrea by a representative, or vice-roy. The first to fill this post were Princess Tenagnework Haile Selassie and her third husband Betwoded Andargachew Messai. After serving for several years in this capacity in Asmara, they returned to Addis Ababa and Bitwoded Andargatchew took up many other further posts in government. He was elevated to the title of Ras, served as Minister of the Interior, and was made an Imperial Senator and a Crown Councilor. Princess Tenagnework and Ras Andargatchew Messai were the parents of a daughter, Mentewab Andargatchew, who died in childhood. Ras Andargatchew had three daughters previous to his marriage to the Princess, who were raised by her.

September, 1951: A pro-Britain “Liberal Progressive Party of Eritrea” founded with political support from the “British Administration in Eritrea”,as Abraha Tessema Asmerom it’s leader.
Side note: Secessionist concept of Tigrai-Tigrigna (Hagere-Tigrai): How it all started in northern Ethiopia? In March, 1941, the pro- British Liberal Progressive Party of Eritrea (Tigrai-Tigrign plattform) and the Italians devised a political strategy to defend their interests in the Red Sea and the Horn of Africa as a whole. They called it the “Politics of Tigrigna (Il politico Tigre) and The Politics of Showa (Il politico Shoana)”. (History tellsus that the Tigrean Yohaness IV, not only he conspired against Tewodros with the British but also he cooperated with the British in defeating Tewodros in exchange for arms. By the same token the Shoan Menelik II conspired with the Italians against the Tigrean Yohaness IV in exchange for arms.) The politics of Tigrigna, therefore, was intended to install a pro-Western government in the Horn of Africa with the help of aristocrats in Tigray or some what like a protectorate under UN or British administration. According to the plan, first the government of Shoa must be weakened and then the state of Eritrea shall be divided into two or three sects. To implement this plan, Stephen Longrigg made a deliberate effort to instil Tigrean nationalism inside Eritrea by authoring an article in English language under a pen name "Concerned Eritrean." Woldeab Woldemariam (whose origin is from Tigray), supposedly translated the article into Tigrigna and published it in the newspaper "Haddas Eritrea".
They argued that there were strong ties between segments of the Eritreanpopulation and Tigray. They refer to Tigray as having close ties with the highlands of Eritrea, thus in the 1950s it was called "Tigray-Tigrigna" by the Unionist pro-Ethiopia groups in Eritrea, and later in 1968 it was called "Hilmi Abay Tigray" (A dream for the Greater Tigray Republic) as it is stated on the February, 1976 TPLF manifesto.
September 1951: Ethiopian Rural Roads Authority, commonly known as, “Ye-Awra-Godana Balesiltan”, later to be known as “Ethiopian Roads Authority (ERA)”, is founded by the imperial government as an independent roads construction authority, with duties to plan, design, construct, and maintain rural roads. Since it’s creation in1951, the Imperial Highway Authority;has reconstructed or improved 7, 300 kms of all weather primary, secondary and feeder highways at a cost of $190 mln. Projects schduled for future construction total about 880 kms of primary, 400 kms of secondary roads, 1500 kms of feeder roads, 150 kmsof asphalting, and 2, 500 kms of service-to-traffic dry weather roads September 1951: Treaty of amity and economic relations signed betweenEthiopia and the United States.

November 10, 1951: Eritrean supporters of union with Ethiopiademonstrating (ኢትዮጵያዊያን መሆናችንን እያወቃችሁ ማን ትፈልጋላችሁ አትበሉን!)
Side note: A renowned Eritrean journalist in the name of Alaazar Tesfa- Michael wrote an article on the Eritrean weekly journal that “We Eritreansbeg the Great Britain to restore our ancient unity with Ethiopia, as she promised us in 1941. All Eritreans know that Ethiopia is our motherland. Every annual feast of Ethiopia belongs also to us. We celebrate the same religious festivals as in Ethiopia, and during feasts Ethiopian flags are displayed and Ethiopian patriotic songs are sung. When war broke out b/nEthiopia and Italy in 1935, thousands of Eritreans sacrificed their lives fortheir motherland and fought side by side with their Ethiopian brothers".

November 15, 1951: Emperor Haile Selassie Honors Korea War Veterans.Emperor Haile Selassie honoring wounded Ethiopian soldiers during Korean war. Wounded Ethiopian Soldiers returned from Korea have medals pinned on to them by Emperor Haile Selassie. He visited Addis Ababa's hospital to honor about 30 wounded Korean war veterans.

December 27, 1951: JET MAGAZINE: Eritrea wants Union with Ethiopia.

Eritreans for Ethiopian Union: A United Nations Political Team, surveying public opinion in Eritrea, has found that most residents of the former Italian colony want to federate their country with Ethiopia. The Un politicalteam offered Eritreans a choice of independence, colonial status under Italy or England or federation with Ethiopia. Students, youth organizations, the few industrial workers and most native leaders have demonstrated infavor of Union with their neighbor, Ethiopia.

Some ex-soldiers who had fought full scale war with England and Italy andborder skirmishes with Ethiopia preferred independence. Since the withdrawal of Italian forces from Eritrea a wave of banditry has swept the country. At least 20 bandit chieftains, with as many as 50 horsmen each, swoop down on the roads, waylay and rob travlers. A taskforce of 3, 000 Africans officered by the British is fighting the bandits. (Text ends)

March 26, 1952 Asmara, Eritrea: Eritreans Vote for Representative Assembly. The first election in the history of Eritrea was held on 26 March1952 when a Representative Assembly was elected by secret ballot. The Assembly, when convened, will deal first with the draft Constitution presented by the United Nations Commissioner in Eritrea. By a decision ofthe U.N. General Assembly, Eritrea, a former Italian colony will be federated with Ethiopia. Voters, Moslems and Copts, young and old, waittheir turn to vote in the Gheza Berhanu and Gheza Banda Constituency.
Source UN Archive

July 4, 1952. DIARIES: Major Tadesse Wondem Agegnehu, one of the commanding officers in the field of the first and third Ethiopian Kagnaw Battalions of Korea war, was the first Ethiopian to be awarded the BronzeStar Medal by the order of President Harry S.Truman.

September 15, 1952: The federation of Ethiopia and Eritrea was created under a federal structure between Ethiopia and Eritrea by the approval ofthe Federal act in Ethiopia and the Eritrea federal constitution. The UnitedNations led by Secretary-General Tregyv Lee of Norway unanimously endorses 'The federation of Ethiopia and Eritrea' whos country Norway extends diplomatic and political support for Ethiopia's political campaign.

Side note: The Federation of Ethiopia and Eritrea or Ethiopian–Eritrean Federation was created by the approval of the Federal Act in Ethiopia and the Eritrean Constitution. It was a federation of the Ethiopian Empire and Eritrea. The Emperor takes his seat to sign officially the Federation Act between Eritrea and Ethiopia in a ceremony held at the Guenatta-Leul palace in Addis Ababa. The Emperor in his declarations at the time of the federation, and by his actions for many years thereafter reveals a genuineconcern for the welfare and sensiblities of the Eritrean population. The United Nations passed a resolution earlier known as Resolution number 390v sponsors and conducts a referendum for the people of Eritrea to reunite or be federated with Ethiopia with an overwhelming decision, was undeniably the most important one, Ethiopia's need for and it's rights to have an outlet to the Red Sea. Believed it was undeniably the most important historic event. Ethiopian participation in the aims of "Collective Security", in the next decade in the Korean and the Congo wars under theUN contingency, and the combination of diplomacy with charm secured USand western powers support for the federation of Eritrea with Ethiopia.

The US policy of Soviet containment during the cold war era and the use of Kagnew communication facilities in Eritrea, the Emperor's attempts to gain international fame through an offensive diplomacy was a componentpart of his strategy to overshadow some moderate Arab states to defeat on the UN debate on Eritrea, the Emperor then succeeded in imposing hisabsolute rule over Ethiopia and Eritrea with no political reforms by meansof an internationally gained fame. Ethiopia's need for and it's rights to have an outlet to the Sea, Ethiopian participation in the aims of collectivesecurity, in the next decade in the Korean and the Congo wars under the UN contigency, and the combination of diplomacy with charm secured US and western powers support for the federation of Eritrea with Ethiopia.

The US policy of Soviet containment during the cold war era and the use of Kagnew communication facilities in Eritrea, the Emperor's attempts to gain international fame through an offensive diplomacy was a component part of his strategy to overshadow some moderate Arab states to defeat the UN debate on Eritrea, he then succeeded in imposing his absolute ruleon Ethiopia with no political reforms by means of internationally gained fame. The Federation of Ethiopia and Eritrea was a structure between Eritrea and Ethiopia. It was created by the approval of the Federal Act in Ethiopia and the Eritrean Constitution. Ato Tedla Bairu elected first Chief Executive of "Eritrea in federation with Ethiopia". The Federal structure, orsome semblance of it, existed between 15th September 1952 and 14th November 1962, was in direct contravention of the UN Resolution 390-A

(V) which established the Eritrea in Federation with Ethiopia".

October 3, 1952: Emperor Haile Selassie I entered Eritrea to mark “the federation of Eritrea and Ethiopia” cutting a ribbon using ‘golden scissorson the boundary between his country and Eritrea.

Emperor Haile Sellasie established the Imperial Board of Telecommunications of Ethiopia (IBTE) what would become later theEthiopian Telecommunication Service (ETS).

Wonji Sugar Plantation managed by the Dutch Company HVA, was granted large tracts of traditional Afar and Arsi grazing land and convertedthem into large-scale commercial farms. A forced desettlement of native “Jille- Oromo tribes” for the Sugar plantation earth working in the surrounding areas of Wonji commenced.

Debrezeit (Bishoftu) research center of the Ethiopian Institute of Agricultural Research (EIAR) established by the Imperial Ministry ofAgriculture.

In 1953: President Charles De-Gaulle of France made a state visit to Ethiopia. Ethiopia and France signed a bilateral agreement to maintaineconomic and cultural cooperation.

Ethiopia and the United States signed a Mutual Defence Assistance Agreement, and the United States Military Assistance Advisory Groupknown as the US-MAAG to open office in Addis Ababa.

Side note: A military agreement was entered between the United Statesand Ethiopia for a military assistance program. United States Military Assistance Advisory Group (US MAAG Mission) opened. Its aim was to provide Ethiopia with capable military force for defensive purposes. TheUS military sent a team to undertake a comprehensive study of the Ethiopian military capabilities, requirements and the probable threats facing Ethiopia. The IEAF was to be restructured organizationally and adopt US style operating procedures. IEAF also reputedly the most modern and efficient unit of the armed forces.

The Mutual Defense Assistance Agreement, under which the United Statesagreed to furnish military equipment and training, include an accord regularizing the operations of a U.S. communication facility at Asmara, Kagnew Station. United States Military Assistance Advisory Group known as shortly ‘US MAAG Mission In Ethiopia’ which used to have only advisorymission at different locations in all key military establishments such the Air force, Army aviation, the Army and the Navy is established under the Imperial Ethiopian Armed Forces.

Emperor Haile-selassie I lays foundation for the Alemaya Farming University. The University is one of the oldest Universities in Ethiopia founded with the help of US based Oklahoma State University, the campusofficially opened in January, 1958.

Emperor HSI becomes known for his centralization of the state power aswell as the armed forces following the fascist Italian occupation that existed from 1936 to 1941. His Political thoughts and experiences of theemperor in promoting unity, stability and tranquility among the nation, have proved him seminal and enduring. Subsequently, the Soviet Unionand Jugoslavia loans for an oil refinery, and the development of the portof Assab.

March 20, 1954: A Cornerstone was unveiled by His Majesty the Emperor of Ethiopia in commemoration of the opening of the Sugar Estate in Wonji,Adama. (የመጀመሪያው የስኳር ፋብሪካው ቅጥር ጊቢ በ1946ዓ.ም. መጋቢት ወር ላይ በ11ኛው ቀን ተሚቀ፡፡) The establishment of Wonji Sugar processing plant. Wonji Sugar Plantation managed by the Dutch Company HVA, established a Sugar factory at Wonji as leading capital of Eth. Dollar 32,000,000 million at the time.

Emperor Haile Selassie I welcomed by the Duke of Edinburgh and the PMWinston Churchill at his arrival to London for a three-day royal visit. His Majesty with Queen Elizabeth II saluted to the crowds that welcomed himon the occasion of his state visit to the United Kingdom.

March 27, 1954: Colonel John C. Robinson also known as ‘The Brown Condor’, the African American Aviator & Aviation instructor who was among Black professionals who offered their services to Ethiopia during the Italo-Ethiopian conflict died of injuries he suffered from a plane crashaccident that happened two weeks earlier at the Addis Ababa Airport. Hewas buried the next day at Gulele cemetery in a large & massive ceremony attended by huge crowd among others Emperor Haile Selassiehimself, The Duke of Harrar, Prince Mekonnen Haile Selassie, Military Commanders, Cabinet Ministers and other government officials.

The Ethiopian Mapping Agency, commonly known as the “Ethiopian Mapping and Geography Institute”, located in Addis Ababa was establishedas a department in the Imperial Ethiopian Ministry of Education & Fine Arts. It was initially established to produce graphic materials and geography textbooks for educational purposes. The Institute was transferred to the Ministry of Interior in 1960 and expanded its operationsto include some basic cartographic activities and extended research. The organization had benefited from the United States' Point Four Program of financial aid until it was discontinued in 1962.

May 27, 1954: Emperor Haile Selassie presents The Ethiopian Orthodoxholy cross made up of steel to Rev. Adam Clayton Powell, Jr.

June 1954: The three majour political parties, the pro-Independence Progressive party of Eritrea under Wolde Ab Woldemariam, Pro-Ethiopian Unionist party (Mahber Fikri-Hager) under Tedla Bayiru, and Rabitta Al-Islamia under Sheikh Ibrahim Sultan started to agitate, make political debates with their constituencies and supporters at present Eritrea.

June 18, 1954: His Majesty the Emperor touched down at Searcy Field airport in Oklahoma. He requested to meet with a Native American. The Native American in full Pawnee regalia, gave the Conquering Lion of Judaha war bonnet and renamed him “Great Buffalo High Chief.”

Gondar College of Medical Sciences opened under the monitoring of theImperial Ministry of Public Health.

November 8, 1954: ROYAL VISIT: Emperor Haile Selassie I in a royal visitto Federal Republic of Germany.

Side note: Emperor Haile Selassie I made a royal visit to the Federal Republic of Germany, and discussed bilateral issues with the Federal President and the Chanceler Konrad Adenaouer. His Majesty the Emperor (Neguse Negest, meaning, King of Kings of Ethiopia paid a visit in as the first foreign head of state to visit what was then generally referred to as Federal Republic of Germany (FRG) or shortly West Germany (to distinguish it from the postwar East Germany known as German Democratic Republic. On his arrival, the emperor who was dressed in an ornate uniform and wearing a helmet embellished with hair from Ethiopia'sheraldic beast, the black lion, attracted great public attention. He requested the federal government to send farming experts to his country, to help develop the agricultural sector. The Emperor was more open during a short trip to Hamburg where he presented surprised members of the public with gold coins before ennaugurating a hospital.

Emperor Haile Selassie was warmly welcomed in Switzerland, and hostedin the Castle Jegenstorf, the place where He stayed overnight during His visit in Switzerland.

November 18, 1954: ROYAL VISIT - Emperor Haile Selassie I made a royalvisit to the Kingdom of Norway.
His Majesty the Emperor, accompanied by HRH Prince Makonnen Haile Selassie, the Duke of Harrar, and other imperial officials arrived in Oslo,Norway from Ethiopia and was picked up from Fornebu airport by the Crownprince Olav.
ROYAL NORWEGIAN NAVY DIARIES:
On 18 of November, 1954: The emperor Haile selassie I, accompanied byHRH Prince Makonnen Haile Selassie, the Duke of Harrar, and other imperial officials arrived in Oslo, Norway from Ethiopia and was picked upfrom Fornebu airport by the Crownprince Olav.
On 19 of November 1954: The emperor flanked by imperial dignitaries embarked onboard the Royal Navy Destroyer ship KNM ‘Oslo’ departedfrom Oslo with the Crownprince Olav on board at 09.00 o’clock.
The Destroyer Ship KNM ‘Oslo’ arrived in Horten at 15 o’clock where theyhad a royal meeting and a dinner with the Crownprince of Norway and other royal dignitaries on board.
On 19 of November 1954: At 15:00 o’clock the Destroyer Ship KNM ‘Oslo’departed from Horten with emperor Haile Selassie and the Crownprince Olav on board and they arrived in Oslo at 18:00 o’clock.
The Emperor was more open during a short trip to Bergen where hepresented surprised members of the public with gold coins before departure.
Emperor Haile Selassie I and other imperial officials on the royal trip got abreak for photography at the bridge on KNM ‘Oslo’ with the Crownprince ofNorway, along with the Norwegian naval officers, whose later to travel to Ethiopia to reinvent the latter Imperial Ethiopian Navy.

The kingdom of Norway has sought food assistance: Emperor Haile selassie I donated a sum of NKR 150, 000 in a form of assistance to a public hospital, in return Norway extends diplomatic and political support for Ethiopia's political campaign to federate with Eritrea.

Emperor Haile Selassie I left Norway from Oslo airport on the 20th of November, 1954 in the afternoon. A major area of collaboration was thedevelopment of the Imperial Ethiopian Navy which due to continue until1955 to 1965. (Acknowledgement: Royal Norwegian Archieves)

February 21, 1955: Wonji Sugar factory under HVA, a Dutch Sugar investment company officially inaugurated by the Emperor as leadinginvestment in the country, launches it's Sugar production.

Emperor Haile Selassie I forced Eritrean Unionist politician Tedla Bairu(1914–1984) to resign as president Eritrean Federal Parliament.

Side note: Ato Tedla Bairu Eritrea's political figure and the last independent head of state of Eritrea to resign from his position as president as the emperorlabeled him as an "opporunist". Ato Assfaha Wolde Michael a pro-monarchy Eritrean politician elected "Chief Executiveof Eritrea in federation with Ethiopia". During the Federation the encroachment of the Ethiopian Crown was felt on the Chief Executive of Eritrea.

April 1955: A Public Radio Address System was installed in central squaresof provincial towns which was used to re-broadcast government declarations and public announcements to the general public through national Radio-Addis Ababa.

April 24, 1955: Emperor Haile-selassie has helped co-found the Non- Alligned Movement (NAM), even if that was largely the brainchild of the Jugoslavian president Marshal Josip Broz Tito at the Bandung Conference which was held in Indonesia, along with others namely, Ahmed Sokarno ofIndonesia, Jawaharlal Nehru of India, Gammal Abdel Nasser of the Arab Republic of Egypt, NAM is a group of about 120 countries in the developing world meddling between the western and eastern blocks during the Cold War era.

July , 1955: Ethiopia acquired a coastline and ports on the Red SeaImperial Ethiopian Navy (IEN) founded.

Side note: When earlier the United Nations have decided to federate Eritrea with Ethiopia with a final report from the Four power commissioncomprises of USA, Russia, France, and the UK.

The Imperial Ethiopian Navy was founded as a branch of the Ethiopian National Defense Force. Imperial Ethiopian Navy (IEN) was actively organized in 1958 as one of the three Imperial armed services under the"Chief of the General Staff" of the Imperial Armed Forces.

The Imperial Ethiopian Navy (IEN) established with one frigate from RoyalNorwegian Navy as a coastal guard for patrolling the territorial coast of Ethiopia from "Ras Kassar to Ras Dumeira" of Djibouti border with it's 3 miles off-coastal waters along with over 300 Dahlak archepelagoes in the Red sea, as Abdulkadir islet it's primary base at port city of Massawa. TheImperial naval college was officially commenced it's training courses with it's 48 recruits, to be graduated as the first naval cadet officers 3-years later.

Prince Iskinder Desta, the grandson of the emperor his mother royal princess Tenagnework Haile Selassie, and fitawrari Damtew ketema by hislate his late father Ras Desta damtew, whos born in August 1934 entered as a candidate in the Britannia Royal Naval college and passed as a MIDSHIPMAN. In 1955 He was commissioned in to the newly established IMPERIAL ETHIOPIAN NAVY as a SUB-LIEUTENANT and in 1958 at the age of 21 he was made deputy commander of IEN with the rank ofCOMMANDER. He married to princess Sofia Amanuel. (Text ends)

August 18, 1955: Pro-Unionist Asfaha Wolde-Michael tookover the title of“Chief Executive of Eritrea Federation with Ethiopia”, the succession of Asfaha Wolde-Michael to Tedla Bairu raised procedural concern.
September, 1955: The press department of the Imperial Ministry ofInformation launches the Amharic weekly "Dimtse-Gazzet".
November 2, 1955: Emperor Haileselassie I in commemoration of the silver jubilee of his coronation celebrated at the Jubilee Palace which islocated between the Ghion Hotel and the Filweha (Hot spring) spa.
Side note: Among the attendees at the St. George Cathedral in honor of Emperor Haile Selassie I's Silver Jubilee were, Princess Tenagnework HaileSelassie, (the Emperor's daughter); Princess Atsede Asfaw Darge (wife of Leul Ras Seyoum Mengesha, first cousin of Leul Ras Kassa Hailu and great-granddaughter of King Sahle Selassie of Shewa); Leul Ras SeyoumMengesha Prince of Tigray (son of Ras Mengesha Yohannes, grandson of Emperor Yohannes IV, father... of the present Leul Ras Mengesha Seyoum); Princess Yeshashework Yilma Makonnen (the Emperor's niece, daughter of his elder brother Dejazmatch Yilma Makonnen, great-niece ofEmpress Taitu Bitule on her mother's side, and wife of Prime Minister RasBitwaded Makonnen Endalkatchew), and Ras Bitwadad Makonnen Endalkachew, a writer ,and husband of Royal Princess Yeshashework Yilma, the father of Lij Endalkatchew Makonnen.

It’s during the celebrations of his Silver Jubilee Emperor Haile Selassie introduced a revised constitution. The 1931 Constitution of Ethiopia was replaced with the 1955 Constitution of Ethiopia, extending the power of Parliament. Haile Selassie improved diplomatic ties with the United States,as well as Ethiopia's relationship with the rest of Africa. He initiated the Organization of African Unity (OAU) to be founded in May, 1963.

Emperor Haile Selassie I proclaimed a revised constitution of the Empire of Ethiopia. This constitution was prompted, like its 1931 predecessor, bya concern with international opinion. The new constitution consisted of eight chapters and 131 articles. The revised Constitution of Ethiopia described in it's first section, in brief that "title of Emperor may pass onlythrough male descendants of HIM Haile-Selassie I, through the oldest male line before the younger". Such opinion was particularly important ata time when some neighboring African states were rapidly advancing under European colonial tutelage and Ethiopia was pressing its claims internationally for the incorporation of Eritrea, where an elected parliament and more modern administration had existed since 1952.(Textends)
In 1956: The US Military Assistance Advisory Group commonly known asMAAG Mission in Addis Ababa, instructs Ethiopian Army Personnel in the use of the 3.5 Bazooka, and other related heavy weaponry.

In the Summer of 1956:Ethiopia for the first time joined the Melbournesummer Olympic Games in Australia.

January 1957: AVIATION: "Captain Alemayehu Abebe was appointed thefirst Ethiopian aircraft commander. He was the first black African commercial Jet pilot and the first black African to command a commercialjetliner across the Atlantic. He is widely praised for taking on a new technological discipline that no other Ethiopian attempted before him. It isknown that he became interested in flying airplanes at the age of 10 as hesaw them fly over him in his hometown of Babile in the eastern Ethiopian province of Harrar. Unlike many pilots, he was not from a privileged family. Yet through determination and self-discipline he was able to fulfill not only his dreams of becoming a captain, but also to have his name in the history books as the first African commercial Jet pilot."

The first scheduled commercial flight took place to Cairo via Asmara in Douglas C-47 Skytrain. The national airline had been set up a few monthsearlier as Ethiopian Air Lines Inc., a joint venture with American airline, TWA (Trans World Airlines). Five US Government surplus C-47 aircraft were purchased for venture. Following the successful inaugural flight to Cairo, a regular weekly service was established. Weekly services to Djibouti and Aden followed, as well as a domestic service to Jimma. Demands for additional services were so great that towards the end of 1946, four more C-47 Skytrains were purchased. Since these aircraft wereex-US military, they had few comforts; all had folding bench-type canvas seats along the sides, with the central aisle kept clear so that cargo could be lashed to the floor.
Ras Kassa Haile, the grandson of Ras Dargie Sahle-selassie, the Shoan nobleman and the brother of Menelik II's father who had by birth a betterclaim to the Imperial throne passed away.

February 8, 1957: Confederation of African Football (CAF) was founded in Khartoum, Sudan by the Egyptian, Ethiopian, South African and SudaneseFAs' Ethiopia co-founded the Con-Federation of African Football (CAF) withEgypt, Sudan, and South Africa, agreeing with the Egyptian capital Cairo as CAF chartered seat. Ethiopia and the Sudan were held the posts of President and Vice President respectively. The inaugural tournament, heldafter the Confederation of African Football (CAF) was officially founded by the Egyptian, Ethiopian, South African and Sudanese Football Associations. Ethiopia received a bye into the final after South Africa weredisqualified for refusing to send a multi-racial team, and the Ethiopians were then beaten 4-0 by Egypt in Khartoum.

March 23, 1957: US VP Richard Nixon and his wife Mrs. Patty Nixon on theofficial visit to Ethiopia. The Vice President called Ethiopia "one of the United States' most stalwart and consistent allies".

May 12, 1957: Prince Makonnen Haile-selassie, the "Duke of Harrar" the second son, and second youngest child of Emperor Haile-Selassie of Ethiopia and Empress Mennen Asfaw has passed away at age 33 in a fatalautomobile crash on his way to the resort town of Awassa from Debre- Zeit, east of Addis Ababa. The beloved son of the emperor, Prince Makonnen Haile Selassie, "The Duke of Harrar" was died of an automobile accident. He was driving south from Addis Ababa to rejoin his parentswhos were vaccationing at Awassa town of ex-Sidamo province.

May 13, 1957: A 7-gun salute was officially announced the death of the young Prince to the local population and half-masted throughout the city,public buildings immediately hung in-black.The funeral service had takenplace in the crypt of Holy Trinity Cathedral in Addis Ababa.

Leul Makonnen Haile Selassie was the second eldest son of HaileSelassie Iand Empress Menen. On May 13. 1957 the second eldest son of the Ethiopian Emperor and Empress Menen Asfaw, was killed in an automobileaccident. The crash occurred between the city of Nazareth and Debre Zeit.Prince Mekennon, Duke of Harrarr, was born on October 16, 1923 , and was married to Sara Gizaw. In the city of Harrar, the Harrar Gate into the city is also known as Duke's Gate, in honor of the Prince. The late Prince Makonnen Haile Selassie is survived by 6 sons and a daughter by Princess(Leult) Sara Gizaw namely, Princes Wossen Seged, Michael, Dawit, also known as "Makonnen", Taffari, Beede-Mariam, Eyassu, and Princess Elleni.

September 23, 1957: There are two agreements, one in 1929 and the other in 1959 to regulate Nile water usage between Egypt and the Sudan.Ethiopia protested against the Egyptian rule over the Nile water sharing deal signed with the Sudanese by alligning Ethiopia, the source of the river. (ኢትዮጵያ ግብጽ በሚገኘው ዲፕሎማቲኳ አማካኝነት አባይን ጨምራ ባሏት የውሃ ሃብቶቿ በወቅቱም ሆነ በቀጣይ ከመጠቀም የሚያግዳት ምንም ሃይል እንደማይኖር በማስረገጥ ግብጽን አስጠነቀቀች)

Side note: More than any of the other countries along the basin, Egypt and Sudan are dependent on the water from the river because of their lack of secondary water resources and little rainfall. Egypt receives 55 billion cubic metres and Sudan receives 18.5bn cubic metres per year, under a series of agreements that date back to the May, 1929 treaty drawn up by Britain when it held power over much of North Africa. Those agreements have long irked upstream countries, which they describe as acolonial-era injustice because of treaties' favourable distribution of water to Egypt and Sudan, as well as giving them the right to veto projects thatwould be "harmful" to their national interests. At the latter Ethiopia's announcement has created new tensions in water-rights negotiations among the 10 countries that form the Nile Basin and emerged as one of the biggest diplomatic challenges for a growing Egypt.

November 27, 1957: Ras Abebe Aregai appointed prime minister ofEthiopia for the second time.

The UN engaged with serious consultations on future fates of ex-Italianprotectorates in Africa.

Ambo Agricultural & Forestry school opened with over 150 students.

December 1957: Dignitaries and politicians from then ‘Somalia under UNTrusteeship” led by Mr. Adan Abdulle Osman attended in Ethiopia to acquire Ethiopian support.

January 8, 1958: Mishka Babitchef becomes the first Ethiopian jet planepilot.

Emperor Haile Selassie met the designate leader of Ghana Dr KwameNkrumah. The two great men discussed decolonization of Africa that changes to the better future of Africa.

October 1958: Colonel Al-Feriq Ibrahim Abboud the Sudanese militaryhead of state made official visit to Ethiopia.

December 28, 1958: First Session of the UN Economic Commission forAfrica (UNECA) held in Addis Ababa. UN Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjöld arrived at Addis Ababa airport this day for the opening of the first session of the new UN Economic Commission for Africa (UNECA) on the 29 December. The Commission, the fourth regional commission tobe set up by the United Nations, will provide a focal point where the economic needs of the African people can be expressed and where actionto meet them can be initiated and stimulated.

February 3,1959: Emperor Haile Selassie Meets Josip Brozi Tito of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. The Ethiopian Emperor greets Marshal Titoon the outskirts of addis Ababa as the Yugoslavian leader arrives for a state visit to Ethiopia through inland trip. The Ethiopian Emperor Haile andEmpress met with President Josip Brozi Tito and Madame Broz tito at Addis Ababa palace. President Tito and his wife arrived in Addis Ababa during his world tour.

June 15, 1959: The new 226 meter-long highway bridge over the minor-Abbay river next to Bahir Dar town is inaugurated by the emperor.

June 1959: His Imperial Majesty Haile Selassie I Emperor of Ethiopia inthe Soviet Union. Emperor Haile Selassie welcomed by Premier Nikita Kruschev at Moscow airport.

June 28, 1959: Emperor Haile Selassie I of Ethiopia decorated the CopticPope Kyrillos VI in Cairo, Egypt with the Grand Cordon of the Order of Solomon.

In September, 1959: The first Nursing Training School established. The nursing school along with the hospital renamed under the first Ethiopiantrained nurse, Princess Tsehay Haile Selassie.
A Textile Factory in Dire Dawa, the “Cotton Company of Ethiopia” foundedunder the Japanese overseas investment.
December, 1959: Brigadier-General Abiye Abebe appointed “CrownRepresentative of “Eritrea Federation with Ethiopia.
The need for a well trained national army (Army & Air force, national army), system of education and a modern bureaucracy gradually began togrow up in Ethiopia.
The strategic importance of Eritrea as the transit zone for Ethiopia's foreign trade expanded rapidly with the opening of commercial ports of Massawa and Assab. The town of Assab in Dakhalia administrative part ofEritrea becomes relevant outlet to the Red Sea.
In 1959: Abuna Basilios, now Patriarch of Ethiopia, who was consecratedas Abune (Archbishop on 14th January 1951, is the first Ethiopian archbishop Amharic meaning for "Abune", and later to become the first patriarch of the EOTC to assume the title fully in the presence of His Majesty the Emperor of Ethiopia at the St. Trinity Cathedral Church was part of Egypt’s Coptic Orthodox Church, but got its autonomy this time.
Side note: Formerly entitled as "Ichegue" of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church at the time this was the highest rank open to an Ethiopian within the Church, for the title of "Abune", or equivalent to "Archbishop", was always a cleric of the coptic-Church. The Coptic Orthodox Church of Alexandria granted autocephaly to the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Church, and elevated the Archbishop to the Patriarchal dignity and was enthroned with the title of: Patriarch and Re'ese Liqane Papasat Echegue (Catholicos) of the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Church. The title of Ichegue (Supreme Abbot) of the See of St. Tekle-Haimanot of Debre- Libanos was subsumed into the Patriarchate. The title of Ichegue was revived and the title of Archbishop of Axum was added to the Patriarchal titles at the latter, as Axum was the seat of Ethiopia's first Bishop, and thethus the oldest see in the church.
May 12, 1960: HRH Crownprince Hussein of the Jordanian Hashmitekingdom made official visit to Ethiopia.
July 1960: The Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF) under it’s founder Idris Mohammed Adem was officially launched in Cairo, Egypt. Couple of yearslater the ELF opened it’s liaison office in Mogadishou, Somalia.
A Somali guerrilla activity in the Ogaden and in the Haud area east of Harrar flaredsporadically after Somalia gained its independence in July, 1960, but the guerrilla activity remained essentially a police concern until a border war between Ethiopia and Somalia erupted in April, 1964.

September 1960: Abebe Biquila won the Rome summer Olympics marathon race barefootedly in a record time of 2; 15; 16.2, becoming thefirst black-African to win the Olympic gold medal.
Side note;- Africa's first hit the World's headlines with the marathon triumph of Abebe Biquila at Rome Summer Olympic Games. The 1960 Olympic Games are given a historic makeover, as the events are held in Rome, Italy, a venue rich with ancient history. With history serving as a backdrop for this Olympiad, it was only fitting that more history be made at these Games. Ethiopian marathon runner, Abebe Biqquila, was primed for the challenge. At the Games Biquila became the first black African Olympic champion representing his country, Biquila prepared intensely forthe 1960 Games, so intensely that he suffered a blister on his foot, only days before the competition. Abebe Biquila could not find a pair of the sponsors' shoe that fitted him, and so decided at last to run the marathon barefootedly rather than be compromised by this injury. The race was started at Campidoglio Square and a sneakerless Abebe was ran the very long race bare-footed along the Roman roads. He had not running with the leaders until the 15-kilometer mark, where he started to gain momentum. By the 20-kilometer mark, there were only two leaders: Abebe and Abdesselem Rhadi of Morocco, who was considered among the favorites for gold. At the 35-kilometer mark Abebe and Rhadi were running neck and neck. But with 1 kilometer left, Abebe pulled away, setting a new record of 2 hours 15 minutes and 16.25 seconds, improving the old record by about eight minutes. With bare feet, Abebe made his historic footprint on the Rome Olympic Games. He becomes the first sub- Saharan African to win an Olympic Games gold medal.. , and it was reported widely, he is the member of the "Imperial Bodyguard". He repliedto journalists after the race, why he had run barefoot, "I wanted the worldto know that my country, Ethiopia, has always won with determination and heroism".
September, 1960: A strategic importance of Eritrea, due to it's Red Sea coastline and it's mineral resources during the cold war era, along with it'sshared demographic and linguistic history, as well as to avoid influences ofmoderate Arab nations in the region, Emperor Haile Selassie I, decided to annex it, triggering a 31-year armed struggle.
The main cause to consider federation with Eritrea, was to avoid influences from moderate Arab nations in the region, but majority Eritreans in the central highlands under "Mahber-Fikri-Hager party" to "unite with the motherland at all costs" was conveniently achieved. Some radicals in the government like premier Ras Abebe Aregai insisted the emperor “the Eritreans might familiarise themselves in conformity with thefederal structure otherwise we should preemptively….”. During the mid- twentieth century Assab became Ethiopia's main port. The ex-Soviet Unionlater built an oil refinery in Assab. During the Eritrean War of Independence and latter famine of the 1980s, food aid was brought to Eritrea and the Ethiopian province of Tigrai through this port. Assab is very hot during summer months, temperatures can touch a scorching highof 54°C (129°F) in July and August.

His Majesty The Emperor recieves president designate of Ghana KwameNkrumah in audience some time before he becomes President of the Republic of Ghana (hence in protocol sitting below the Emperor and notnext to him).

November 25, 1960: HRH Crownprince Akihito of Japanese kingdom madeofficial visit to Ethiopia.

December 11, 1960: The brothers Mengestu and Girmame Niway, had organized an abortive coup had been planned and was executed by only ahandful of conspirators. Brigadier General Mengistu Neway commander ofthe elite imperial bodyguard (Kibour Zebegna), Brigadier General Tsgie Dibou, chief of the Police Force, Colonel Workneh Gebeyehu, chief of security. Accordingly , the plan to oversee the Guenata-Leul palace, the national Radio station, to over control of the city dividing in to 10 sub- sections , and house arrest the entire nearly 21 imperial officials.

December 12, 1960: The Royal Crown Prince Asfawossen Haile Selassie addressed the nation, condemning his father, and he urged the nation to remain supportive for the plotters. The coup leaders were house arrested Empress Mennen Asfaw and some of her family under house arrest brieflywhen the Imperial Bodyguard coup attempts against her husband at her villa outside the Guenete-Leul Palace grounds in northern Addis Ababa. Atfirst hours of the coup the plotters compelled the Crownprince Asfaw- wossen Haile-selassie to read a prepared Radio-statement. The Crownprince Asfaw-wossen had been coerced into reading a radio statement declaring that he was to henceforth assume his father's throne as a "salaried monarch" announces far reaching political reforms. In his Radio addressed statement, he accepted the crown in his father's place and proclaimed a government of reform, announcing Emperor Haile- selassie is deposed and his son the Crownprince Asfaw-Wossen Haile Selassie himself was appointed in his place. However, the regular Army and the Orthodox Church both refused to accept the new government as legitimate. The head of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church patriarch His Holyness Abuna Basilios condemned the act and anointed those who involved or supported the coup, and he refused to recognize this act, by then he proclaimed that the rebeled army unit had no authority to deposethe Emperor, he condemned the act through pronounced and scattered statement in Addis Ababa by the Army helicopters. The Crownprince, whom His Majesty had never favored him, was to be compromised by the abortive coup of December, 1960 and later to be crippled by a stroke.

When later the emperor was asked about why he had not designated theCrownprince Asfaw wossen as heir to the throne, reportedly to have replied that "Why should we? He was already been on the throne!". Once the coup had been brought to the stage of execution, the announcement that the crownprince would be placed on the throne wasdesigned to respond to popular sentiment towards the monarchy.

According to close intelligence sources, the emperor must surely have been put on notice before his departure to a state visit to Brazil, South America. It’s the nearest the Emperor came to losing his throne despite it's failure, the coup represented the most serious challenge to his power, disappointing internal performance and to his final disgrace. The Imperial Bodyguard known as locally the “Kibour-Zebegnas” as well as the ImperialSpecial Security and Intelligence Unit attempted a coup d'etat which was rapidly unraveled by the Armed forces, the failed coup trial which was involved by the Crownprince Asfaw-wossen, who made a nationally Radio addressed speech infavour of the coup-plotters condemning his father while he was under a private visit to Brazil, South America, believed it waswithout the country's socio-economic problems had been described in radical terms.

With the support of the Police Commissioner Brigadier General Tsigie Dibou, and the Chief of Special Security and Intelligence, Lt. Colonel Worqineh Gebeyahu, both ringleaders in the abortive coup .. the Imperial Bodyguard forces seized control of the capital Addis Ababa staged an unsuccessfull coup attempt against the Emperor, as the Emperor was on astate visit to Brazil, South America at evening the coup plotters have thenmanaged to take hostage including then premier Ras Abebe Aregai and several key ministers of his government and other important figures at the Guenetta-Leul palace in Addis Ababa, proclaiming the Crownprince Asfaw-wossen Haile-Selassie would serve as head of constitutional monarch, and that reforms would be implemented. It was only the last three days, during the coup-attempt whos Ras Imiru Haile-selassie servedas prime minister.

December 17, 1960: EOTC’s patriarch's statement lent an ear among the Armed Forces led by General Merid Mengesha, whose later remain loyal tothe Emperor, and used it as proclamation to rally support for the emperor,and crush the coup.

December 19, 1960: Many of the hostages, including the premier Ras Abebe Aregai were brutally killed as the army stormed the Guenetta-Leul palace, the coup was crushed although about 13 of the notables taken hostages during the coup period, including Ras Abebe Aregai, Ras SeyoumMengesha, General Mulugeta Buli, who had been Chief of Staff of the Imperial Armed forces, later made civilian, minister of Social Affairs, Makonnen Habta-wald, including Abba-Hanna Jimma, the royal treasurer and others about eight officials of the imperial regime were brutally killed.Emperor Haile-selassie was survived the coup d'etat by the Neway brothers, the returned back after the coup was crushed by the regular army the emperor has returned in a victorious spirit through Asmara. The post of prime minister then remains vacant for the next one half a year (until 17th of April 1961).

Ethiopia in the past decades has lost its international image well colorfullycreated by Emperor Haile Selassie, the division among Ethiopians reachedto its deepest level. Ethnic and religious division was one of the tools usedby governments after the emperor to control full power. Crownprince AsfaWossen had strong interest to establish a Constitutional Monarch to reform the country from the highly criticized feudal system during the Emperor's reign.

The attempted Coup by Brigadier General Mengistu Neway could have restored a constitutional Monarchy in the country. Due to the current chaos and division among Ethiopians, the country's future is at risk. CouldConstitutional Monarchy can restore the image of the country, its unity, economic development, and other benefits for Ethiopia?

Remembering the military elite ‘Mulugeta Buli’

Majour-General Mulugeta Buli (1917–1960), co-founder of the modern Ethiopian military, and politician, after completing mission school Mulugeta Buli attended the Taffari Makonnen School and the Holeta Military Academy, and was the only Oromo officer cadet in the latter institution. He was an opponent of Italian fascism, and fled to Kenya and Djibouti during the Italian occupation of Ethiopia. He fought in the Battle of Maychew as a member of then Imperial bodyguard. As commander of the Imperial Body Guard from 1941 until 1955, he established the Kagnewbattalions and the Ethiopian Public Security Department. He served as chief of staff of the armed forces, chief of staff of the emperor, and as a member of the Ethiopian government, in which capacity he created a private security cabinet for Emperor Selassie I. Organizers of the December, 1960 coup attempt wanted Mulugeta to serve them as Chief of Staff because of his popularity among members of the armed forces. He (along with 20 other government officials) was takenhostage by the rebels and was killed with 14 others on 17 December, 1960 by forces under Brigadier-General Mengistu Neway, a leader of the coup. Mulugeta Buli considered one of the most charismatic figures amongthe young Ethiopian elite of his era. There is now a military technical college in Addis Ababa named in honour of him.

December 20, 1960: Brigadier General Tsigie Dibou, Commander of the Police Force was killed in a fighting while Lt. Colonel Workneh Gebeyehu,chief of Special Security and Intelligence Unit commits suicide in a shootout.

December 24, 1960: The Neway brothers (Mengistu and Germame), chief-coup plotters were surrounded by the army near the town of Modjo, Germame commits suicide at age of 36 in a village known as Dire Cherba, Near Mt. Ziquala, but Brigadier General Mengistu Neway captured.

December 29, 1960: Germame Neway who masterminds the coup, commits suicide near a village known as Dire Cherba near Mt. Ziquala, his slain body was hanged at a public square in the centre of the Addis Ababa.

Ethiopia contributed troops to the UN operation for peacekeeping force during the 1960 Congo political crises, to consolidate the Congolese integrity and independence from interventionist Belgian troops, per the UNSecurity Council Resolution No 143.

February 6, 1961: Emperor Haile Selassie I named the edifice “AFRICAHALL” who dedicated it to the service of the African People.

February 7, 1961: The Africa Hall shortly known as the UN-ECA bldg, seatof the United Nations Economic Commission for Africa, and the conferencehall for the African heads of state and government cornerstoned by the Ethiopian Emperor Haile SelassieI.

Side note: Designed by Arturo Mezzedimi, the civil work done by the Varnero construction firm. The construction of the UN-ECA bldg. which is to be completed later after two years (from 1959 to1961). commenced in Addis Ababa. It's designed by the Italian architect Signor Arturo Mezzedimi, Signor Mezzedimi was Emperor Haile Selassie's favorite architect who had studied with Italian futurist architect Alberto Sartoris in Lausanne, Switzerland. He also designed the town city hall, and the indoorswimming-pool in Asmara, Eritrea. It has to be recalled that the headquarters of the UN-Economic Commission for Africa shortly known as the UNECA bldgs were established in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia. Affe-worq Tekle a noted designer had he carved the stained glass windows in the Africa Hall of the United Nations Economic Commission of Africa (UNECA). The three windows cover an area of 150 Sq. mtrs, and represents the sorrow of Africa's past, the struggle of the present, and the hope for Africa's future.
March 28, 1961: Brigadier General Mengistu Neway, the elder brother ofGermame caught by the imperial security forces.
March 30, 1961: Brigadier General Mengistu Neway executed at a publicvenue, called "Tekle Haimanot square." His body was displayed for day long to be viewed by the public....
Side note: Brigadier General Mengistu Neway who was commander of theImperial Body Guard and who together with his brother Germame Neway,led an unsuccessful coup against Emperor Haile Selassie I was hanged onin public market after two days Emperor Haile Selassie I appointed Court ordered for him to be hanged. When the General was told to appeal after the sentencing, he refused and said the following: "..I shall not appeal, and am quite satisfied ..Truly, because some people have died on my account, I feel a certain sorrow, but had God been willing a coup would have come about sooner or later… I did all this for the sake of the Ethiopian people and I pray that God [will hold the judgement in his hand]… As to my death, I have been prepared to die since the 4th of Tahsas, 1953 (13 December, 1960), and I am quite unmoved that thisCourt has sentenced me to death…"
It was widely understood that the Emperor has ignored the December, 1960's coup significance, and has taken no reforms when he began to appoint a new government that reflects the deepening & worsening of thesocio-economic situation, farmlands was exclusively owned by the nobilityand other members of the few highly-privileged feudal landlords under a system known as Serfdom (Gebbar-system), under this land managementsystem, everything that the farmer produced on the farmland was the property of the feudal landlord, known as usually the "Bal-Abats" i.e. localofficials with land ownership, who would then redistribute grains back to their farmers. The tenant-farmers (Chesegna) were totally under the control of the feudal landlord and would face eviction from the land if theyfail to pay taxes in the form of farm-products. The "Gebbar system" and opted for the relatively milder, "Chesegna-system". However, progressivethe "Chesegna-system" looked in comparison to the "Gebbar-system", though, it stood in sharp contrast to the egalitarian land-tenure of the north, the "Irest system". And more of that, massive arable land giveaways by the Emperor, and further monopoly of fertile farmlands by the landlords (Bal-Abats) and the Military aristocrats had to widely exploittenant-tillers, so relations between land-owners and tenant-tillers becameso strained, in such urban areas the gap b/n the haves & have nots have widened.

April 17, 1961: Tsehafi-Taezaz Aklilu Habta-wald appointed primeminister.
In May, 1961: The Eritrean Federal Assembly voted to end the federationand becomes an integral part of Ethiopia by abolishing the Eritrean flag. Dejazmatch Tedla Bairu and Ali Redai, the Moslem vice president of the federal assembly forced to resign by the assembly, and succeeded by Dejazmatch Asfaha Wold-Michael. The pro-Independence bloc under Ras Tessema Ahferom pushed away to it's final political surrender.
The construction of the new town hall (municipality) of Addis Ababa whichis to be completed later in 1964 commenced in Addis Ababa. It's designedby the Italian architect Signor Arturo Mezzedimi, Signor Mezzedimi was Emperor Haile Selassie's favorite architect who had studied with Italian futurist architect Alberto Sartoris in Lausanne, Switzerland. He also designed the indoor swimming-pool in Asmara, Eritrea.
September 11, 1961: The lack of regard for the Eritrean public led to the formation of an independence struggle which erupted into a 30-years warof liberation against successive Ethiopian governments. Eritrean secessionist groups namely, Eritrean Liberation Front - commonly known as "Jabhaa", ensued a war in the western lowlands of Eritrea in the sixtiesand seventies for a political reason mentioned as "unconstitutional".
Updates;- In the quensequence of the reintegration of Eritrea was a redoubling of efforts by the neighboring Arab states, through propaganda warfare, money and arms to undermine the union of Eritrea and Ethiopia, specifically Syria moved to the forefront in providing headquarters for the Eritrean Liberation Front (Jabhaa) and its christian leader Tedla Bairu, former head of the unionists. A former colonial ascari under the Italian administration, namely Hamid Idris Awate who formed the armed wing of the Eritrean Liberation Front and declared the armed struggle for secession from Ethiopia, the 30-years Eritrean struggle for secession began, and the ELF came into violent conflict with the Imperial government on September of the same year, using guerilla war tactics to continue the armed struggle after the Eritrea Federal parliament under it'schief executive dissolved itself. A Militant opposition to the incorporation of Eritrea into Ethiopia had begun in earlier times with the founding of the Eritrean Liberation Movement (ELM), an organization made up mainly of students, intellectuals, and urban wage laborers. The ELM, under the leadership of Hamid Idris Awate, a former Eritrean Ascar, engaged in clandestine political activities intended to cultivate resistance to the centralizing policies of the imperial Ethiopian state. Overtime three scessionist armed groups known as Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF-RC) largely a pan-Arab in orientation led by Ahmed Nasser Mohammed, the Eritrean Peoples Liberation Front (EPLF) led by Issaias Affe-worki Abraha whos entertains Marxism Leninism as an ideology, and the Popular Forces for the Liberation of Eritrea (PFLE) led by Osman Saleh Sabbeh, a former ELF leader after a split with substantialArab funds at his disposal this time.All the rebeled elites blame the Imperial Ethiopian Government's act of disolution of the federal formula to the shutting down of Eritrea's federal parliament.

September 1961: The Non-Alligned Conference (NAC) known as usually“The Bandung Conference” more alerted Ethiopia to the need for accommodation with the third world and in particular, with the rest of Africa now approaching independence, through friend countries in the third world such as Jugoslavia, India, Ceylon (now Srilanka), Myanmar (now Burma) and Indonesia, which brought together reps of the Afro- Arab, Asian, and peoples of the world, among them was Ethiopia.
Meantime, Emperor Haile Selassie I attended the Conference of Heads of States and governments of the non-Aligned Countries in Belgrade, FPR Yugoslavia. This conference was to be the founding conference of the Non-Aligned Nations (NAN), which is largely believed it was the brainchild of Marshal Josip Brozi Tito of Jugoslavia. Emperor Haileselassie I, the most photographed and filmed leader of Ethiopia in modern history, a well traveled around the world, a King with lots of fans and admirers.
November 22, 1961: Jomo Kenyatta, the nationalist leader from Kenya, has visitedEmperor Haile Selassie in Ethiopia.

Administration for local Lottery games, whose success is controlled by luckcommenced through raising money by selling numbered tickets and givingprizes to the holders of numbers drawn at random, founded in proclamation No 183/1961 under the leadership of Ato Ebo Numer.
January 11, 1962: Imperial Government of Ethiopia considered one of theconservative kingdoms in Africa, offered a secret guerilla training for thenrevolutionary South African liberator Nelson Mandela. Meantime, the South African apartheid regime has released a warranty of imprisonment on Nelson Mandela, while he escapes slight capture.
Side note: Imperial Government of Ethiopia offered Nelson Mandela, a private visit to Ethiopia as freedom fighter. Mr Mandela the South African liberator had secretly, and illegally, slipped out of South Africa. His mission was to meet as many African political leaders as possible and garner assistance for the ANC, including money and training for its military wing. And to be moulded into a soldier himself learning how to bethe commander-in-chief of the upcoming ‘Umkhonto- we-Sizwe’, the armed wing of the African National Congress (ANC). It was Ethiopia who provided crucial support to the African National Congress(ANC) when the organisation embarked on an armed struggle and offered military trainingto the first “Umkhonto we Sizwe” cadres. Nelson Mandela as head of the armed wing of the ANC had been offered training in Ethiopia's town of Debre-zeit, and Kolfie a Police training centre in Addis Ababa as to commence the armed struggle of the African National Congress (ANC) by members of the Police Force, and the elite "Imperial bodyguard", just halfa year before his arrest and convicted of sabotage, to life imprisonment sentence in the Robben Islands of South Africa after living on the run for about seventeen months.

January 21, 1962: Addis Ababa Stadium renovated as to host the 3rd African Cup of Nations in Addis Ababa, has taken up the African Cup of Nations, defeating Egyptian national team 4 to 2. Ethiopian national team that won the 3rd African Cup of Nations are, Luciano Vassalo (captain), Awad Mohammed, Tesfaye GebreMedhin, Berhe Goytom, Asmelash Berhe,Kiflom Araya, Girma Zeleke, Gila-Michael Tesfa-Mariam, Italo Vassalo, Getachew Wolde, Mengistu Worku, Tilahun (trainer).

DIARIES (Wemezekir): Remembering legends of the third African Cup of Nations: The 3rd African Cup of Nations held in Addis Ababa from 14 to 21of January, 1962. The legend Mengistu Worqu scores 2 goals in the final ofthe 3rd African cup of Nations against Egypt, when Ethiopia won their onlymajor trophy to date. Ethiopia's football was at its peak then. Brothers Luciano and Italo Vassalo played for Ethiopian national team sharing in its African cup victory over Egypt. Others Awad Mohammed, Adamu alemu, Kebede Metaferi, Netsere Wolde Selassie, Berhe Goitom, Tekle Kidane, Gilla-Michael, Asmelash Berhe, Ayele Tessema (Djibo) were the famous ones in local tournaments and cup qualifiers. Luciano Vassalo elected the best African player of the yea in 1962. Luciano who had been born in Asmara, former province of Ethiopia was a legend Ethiopian footballer of Italian origin. He is the most capped international football in Ethiopian history. He is known for his skill, and mostly for his volleys, free kicks andpenalties. He played semi-professionally with FC Cotton Company of Ethiopia in Dire Dawa along with his younger brother Italo Vassalo.

Luciano Vassalo, along with legendary teammate and friend MengistuWorqu were selected in the group of the top 50 players, as the only Ethiopians.

Luciano Vassalo (15 August 1935 born in Asmara, Eritrea) is a former Ethiopian footballer of Eritrean and Italian origin. He is the most capped international football in Ethiopian history. He is known for his skill, and mostly for his volleys, free kicks and penalties. He played professionally with Saint-George SA along with his brother Italo. Luciano Vassalo playedfor the Ethiopia national football team in the qualifying rounds for the 1962 FIFA World Cup. With his brother Italo, Luciano was part of the 1962 African Cup of Nations campaign when Ethiopia won their only trophy to date. Luciano, captain of the team, scored 2 goals in the semifinal againstTunisia and was tied for third highest scorer in the tournament, and was named player of the tournament, the only Ethiopian to claim that award. He was personally handed the trophy by His Highness Haile Selassie. In 2006, CAF began the selection for the best African footballer in the last fifty years. Luciano, along with legendary teammate and friend Mengistu Worku were selected in the group of the top 50 players, as the only Ethiopians, but were not selected in the final 30, where Roger Milla was named number one.Many consider Vassalo to be the best Ethiopian footballer in history, after Mengistu Worku and Ydnekatchew Tessema.

After retirement, he had a short stint in coaching, with the then Dire DawaCotton FC.

January 28, 1962: Emperor Haile Selassie I has attended conference ofthe 19 African independent states that held in the Nigerian capital of Lagos.

February 12, 1962: Nelson Mandela the future South African liberatorunder guerrilla warfare training in Ethiopia'

Nelson Mandela travelled to Ethiopia for three months of military training under the name of David Motsamayi. He has been offered a training for guerilla warfare at then Kolfie Special Police Force (Fetno-Derash) TrainingUnit which was led by Brigadier General Tadesse Birru. Mandela's guerrillawar training in Ethiopia was supposed to last six months - Nelson Mandelawhos in Ethiopia under a disguised name has learnt how to be the commander-in-chief of 'Umkhonto-we-Sizwe' – the armed wing of the African National Congress (ANC). He quoted as saying, "here, for the firsttime in my life, I was witnessing black soldiers commanded by black generals applauded by black leaders who were all guests of black head of state. It was a heady moment. I only hoped it was a vision of what lay in future for my own country..." , but after only two weeks he was called back to South Africa by the ANC. He had already spent seven months outof the country, and he was needed back home. As Mr Mandela left Ethiopia to South Africa, then commander of the Special Police Force Training Unit led by Brigadier General Tadesse Birru presented him a Bulgarian made pistol with 200 rounds of ammunition. During this trip, heleft a deep impression on those who met him during his stay in the Ethiopian capital, Addis Ababa.

February 15,1962:Empress Mennen Asfaw has been passed away in natural sickness. Following her death the Empress was buried in the cryptof Holy Trinity Cathedral in Addis Ababa among the tombs of her children.It's was well understood the royal marriage had been one of peace and mutual support. The late Empress was survived by 6 children, three daughters and three sons by emperor Haile-selassie I.

Ghion Imperial Hotel, the biggest this time in Ethiopia inaugurated as topromote hotel business in the country. Wabe-Shaballe Hotel one the major hotels in Ethiopia owned by the late Prince Makonnen's family thistime inaugurated as to promote hotel business in the country.

March 4, 1962: The founding conference for United Nations EconomicCommission for Africa (UNECA) held on 20th February to 4th March, inAddis Ababa.

April 24, 1962: Prince Sahle-selassie Haile-selassie, the youngest child ofEmperor Haile-selassie by Empress Mennen Asfaw died at age of 31, andwas buried in the crypt of Holy Trinity Cathedral in Addis Ababa.

Updates: Prince Sahle Selassie Haile Selassie (27 February 1931 - 24 April1962) was the youngest child of Emperor Haile Selassie and Empress Menen Asfaw of Ethiopia. His full title was "His Royal Highness, Prince Sahle Selassie Haile Selassie". Born after his parents had been crowned Emperor and Empress of Ethiopia, he was the only one of the Emperor's children to have been born with the title of Prince. Since his older brothers, Prince Asfaw Wossen and Prince Makonnen, had both been born before the 1930 coronation, Prince Sahle Selassie was also the first legitimate child born to a reigning Emperor since the birth of Dejazmach Alemayehu Tewodros, son of Emperor Tewodros II.

Prince Sahle Selassie was married to Princess Mahisente Habte Mariam, the daughter of Dejazmach Habte Mariam Guebre-Igziabiher, the heir tothe old Oromo kingdom of Leqa Naqamte in Wellega Province, and laterserved as governor of Wellega province. They had a son, Prince Ermias Sahle Selassie, who currently is the President of the “Crown Council of Ethiopia”. The Prince was a man of an artistic bent, who is said to have made a movie which was banned from publication by the Imperial Government censor despite the fact the Prince was a member of the Imperial family. It was believed that the movie indirectly questioned thefast pace of development, and the strains it caused on rural society, andwas thus unflattering to the policies of the Imperial government. Prince Sahle Selassie died in 1962, months after the death of his mother Empress Menen Asfaw. He was survived by his wife and his son Prince Ermias, and was buried in the crypt of Holy Trinity Cathedral in Addis Ababa.
April 30, 1962: The Imperial Savings and Home Ownership Public Association (ISHOPA) was founded with a capital of ETB 1, 000, 000 out ofthe total 50% of the capital was emanated by the Imperial Government inthe form of capital donation and remaining 50% by the US government in cash.
University College of Addis Ababa renamed Haile Selassie I University(HSIU) after former Ethiopian emperor Haile Selassie I until his deposition.
Ethiopian Electric Light & Power Authority (EELPA) founded with imperialproclamation No. Ethiopian Electric Lights Power Authority (EELPA) renamed at the latter Ethiopian Electric Power Corporation (EEPCo).
August 5, 1962: Mr Nelson Mandela had been arrested at arrival on to for leaving the country illegally, shortly after his return from his trip around Africa - and still in the military fatigues in which he had been trained in Ethiopia. Sentenced to life imprisonment sentence in the Robben Islands of South Africa on the after living on the run for about seventeen months.A handgun that was awarded to Nelson Mandela by his trainers in Ethiopiathought to be buried somewhere on Lillesleaf Farm.
September, 1962: The 30-year Eritrean Struggle for Independence began,followed by Haile Selassie's dissolution of the federation and shutting down of Eritrea's parliament. It was the culmination of a gradual process of takeover by the Imperial Ethiopian Government. A process which included the 1959 edict establishing the compelsory teaching of Amharic, the national language of Ethiopia as mother tongue in all schools in Eritreaprovince. Ethiopia’s local divission reaches at, 14 provincial governorates, 144 higher levels i.e. Awrajas, 572 lower levels i.e. districts (Woredas) Tensions between independence-minded Eritreans and Ethiopian forces culminated in the Eritrean War of Independence. The emperor declared Eritrea the fourteenth province of Ethiopia in September, 1962. The war would continue for 30 years, as first Haile Selassie, then the Soviet- backed military ruling council that succeeded him, attempted to retain Eritrea by force.

September, 1962: The US Peace Corps Ethiopia Program commenced. US Peace Corps In Ethiopia is one of the best initiatives implemented by the US/Ethiopian governments to expand Education in rural Ethiopia. Thefirst group of Peace Corps Volunteers arrived in Ethiopia in September 1962, with more than 250 secondary school teachers. Volunteers worked in both secondary and vocational technical schools, with others working inthe health, rural development, and agricul...ture sectors. From 1962 - 1977, Peace Corps Ethiopia was one of the largest Peace Corps programs in the world. More than 3,000 Volunteers served in the country before Peace Corps terminated the program in 1977 due to the political situation.The primary focus of the program was on education, with the goal of training skilled workers and promoting economic development.

November 14, 1962: HIM Haile-Selassie I appointed Brigadier-GeneralAbiye Abebe Governor-General of Eritrea Province.
The Emperor flew into Bole International Airport aboard the jet. Thearrival of EAL's first jet airliner, a Boeing 720-B.
November 15, 1962: Following pressure from Haile Selassie I on to theEritrean Assembly, “Eritrea Federation with Ethiopia” was officially dissolved and Eritrea was annexed by Ethiopia.

Prior to the annexation of Eritrea, the Chief Justice of Eritrea was removedand the official Eritrean languages were eliminated in favor of Ethiopia's national language Amharic. During the Federation, the encroachment of the Ethiopian Crown was felt on the Chief Executive of Eritrea. This was indirect contravention of the UN Resolution 390-A(V) which had established the Federation. The federal structure, or some semblance of it, existed between 15 September 1952 and 15 November 1962.
Updates: “Eritrea in federation with Ethiopia” was officially dissolved andin turn led to Eritrea's fully annexation as Ethiopia's 14th province.
Following a vote to that effect by the Eritrean Assembly, the federation was declared terminated and Eritrea formally merged with Ethiopia. The vote by the Eritrea Assembly had certainly been engineered by the imperial regime in Ethiopa and the union therefore violated the spirit of the UN general assembly resolution No 390v. Widely thought this was done deliberately by Emperor Haile Selassie I, pressuring the Eritrean Assembly to abolish the federation. Prior to the annexation of Eritrea the Chief Justice of Eritrea was removed and the official Eritrean languages were eliminated in favor of Ethiopia's national language Amharic, and of course, and all these procession have been ignored by the United States and other allies of Ethiopia in the West. The lack of regard for the Eritreanpublic led to the formation of an independence struggle which erupted intoa 30-years war of liberation.

The United States Navy transfered the former Seaplane tender USS Orca (AVP-49) to the newly founded Imperial Ethiopian Navy from a Naval basein San-Francisco to mark the launching of the Imperial Ethiopian Navy as Red Sea port city of Massawa it's naval base.
The transferred former Seaplane Tender USS-Orca renamed after transferin various times as, AVP-49, His Majesty's Ship (HMS Ethiopia A-01), and placed in service as a training Ship, during the Duerg era it was renamed "Navy Ship-Ethiopia". It was the Ethiopian Navy's largest Ship for the remaining 29 years of the Navy's existence, until which the Navy deestablished following the capture (11th of February, 1991) of port city ofMassawa by the Eritrean Peoples Liberation Front (EPLF) rebel fighters at the latter.

November 18, 1962 was a day of public celebration: "Unity Day – Ethiopiaand Eritrea" celebration on Tukul Hill. (ትኩል ኮረብታ) - Eye witness (የ ዓይን ምስክር) "There gathered were many hundreds of local nobles and officials from throughout the province. The Governor and other high officials were sheltered in a large army tent where a crush of men tried to sit as close tothe Governor as possible. The celebration was held in recognition of the Eritrean assembly vote which dissolved the Federation of Eritrea with Ethiopia and allowed Eritrea to be annexed to Ethiopia.

Two menus were offered at the Unity celebration. One. roasted lamb (ጥብስ)and other cooked wats, (ወጥ) was served under a thatched roof tukul (a picnic type shelter) which was constructed on the mountain summit.
Today, on the site of the tukul the very nice Ghion Hotel where John and Istayed on our visit to Gondar six years ago now stands. We and other foreigners were ushered into the tukul to eat with all the priests of the area. The other menu which was for the hundreds of men seated along the path leading up the mountain consisted of large hunks of raw beef served with lots of talla and teg. The large metal trays of still warm (straight from the cow) beef were carried on the shoulders of dozens of smartly dressed soldiers.

The special one had been served chopped pieces of raw beef but we neverencountered half pound size hunks of raw beef. It was most intriguing to watch the guests holding the hunks of beef in one hand as their other hand cut the beef by slashing downward between their fingers using very sharp knives. I cringed imagining the potential damage to a hand had theknife slipped. The smaller piece of beef was then dipped into an extremelyspicy pepper sauce before it was eaten." (Text ends)

The Soviet Union Union have helped building an Oil-refinery in the portcity of Assab. Assab Refinery constructed with an initial capital of aboutEth Dollar 46 million, the Assab Refinery is known to be Ethiopia's leading investment at the time.

YWCA-Ethiopia country branch opened in Ethiopia as branch association ofthe World YWCA.
Side note;- The World YWCA is the umbrella organization of the global network of the YWCA, a movement of women working for social and economic change around the world. It advocates for young women's leadership, peace, justice, human rights and sustainable development, both on a grassroots and global scale. It is the largest women's organization in the world, and the second oldest organization of its kind, second only to the Relief Society. The full name of the organization is theWorld Young Women's Christian Association and is currently based in Geneva, Switzerland. The original Christian focus is still strong in many ofthe national associations, but some have changed their focus to social programs and services and mission-based topics. The YWCA is independent of the YMCA, though many local YMCA and YWCA associations have amalgamated into YM/YWCAs or YMCA-YWCAs, and belong to both organisations while providing the programs of each.
The "Institute of Health" under Imperial Ministry of Public Health founded at Gullale in Addis Ababa after the renowned French Chemist and micro- biologist Louis Pasteur. The "Pasteur Institute of Health" which renamed after the well known French Chemist and micro-biologist, Louis Pasteur: isto remember his remarkable breakthroughs in the causes and preventionsof diseases.

The Young Men's Christian Association (commonly known as YMCA or thatsimply was founded in London, opened country branch in Ethioipia. The Young Men's Christian Assocition (YMCA) is a worldwide organisation withmore than 58 million beneficiaries from 125 national associations. It was first opened on 6 June 1844 in London and it aims to put Christian principles into practice by developing a healthy "body, mind and spirit".
These three angles are reflected by the different sides of the (red) triangle
- part of all YMCA logos. The different local YMCAs are voluntarily affiliatedthrough their national organisations. The national organisations in turn arepart of both an Area Alliance and the World Alliance of YMCAs. The World Alliance's main motto is: "Empowering young people" and it is headquartered in Geneva, Switzerland.

The Arat Kilo YMCA seeks to develop people in the three dimensions of body, soul and spirit. It provides opportunities to de...velop their resources of body, soul and spirit helping them to reach their full potential and encouraging them to render service to the community.

To contribute to the spiritual, physical, intellectual, cultural, economical and socio- political well-being of young people... and marginalized groupsof the community through programs & activities that promote peace, andthe development of the Spirit, Mind and Body."

The National Scouting and Guiding organisation of Ethiopia established as part the various Scouting and Guiding organisations around the world, andhave continued to adapt its programmes to meet the requirements of the society they function in although the exact age ranges and names varied between the countries and organisations, then the core principles of the Scouting or Guiding Method are applied.
Crownprince Hussein Al-Abdallah of the Jordanian Hashmite Kingdommade an official visit to Ethiopia as guest of honour of the Imperial Crownprince Asfaw-wossen Haile-selassie.
The first private bank "Addis Ababa Bank Sc" established under a pioneerbanker Dababa Habta-Yohannes with an initial capital of ETB 3 million.
After World War II, Ethiopia becomes a charter member of the UnitedNations'
Ras Betwadad Makonnen Endalkatchew, the post-Italian occupation primeminister has led a delegation that represented Ethiopia at the summit in San-Francisco, USA that created the United Nations Organizaton (UNO).
Peasantry Revolt against government land-tenure system and existing land-taxes system in southeastern province of Bale have been brutally crushed by the Imperial Government Special forces for the second time.
The Poly-Technic Institute of Bahir-Dar , built in the form of economicassistance from Soviet Union with courses in Agricultural mechanics, Industrial chemistry, Electrical technology, Wood-working, Processing technology, Textile technology, and Metal technology launches.
Orchestra Ethiopia: A musical troupe was founded under the residence of former Haile Selassie I University (HSIU) comprised up to 30 traditional instrumentalists, vocalists, and dancers from many different Ethiopian regions and ethnic groups by the Egyptian-born American composer and ethnomusicologist Halim El-Dabh' The group, which was founded in Addis Ababa, comprised up to 30 traditional instrumentalists, vocalists, and dancers from many different Ethiopian regions and ethnic groups (including Amhara, Oromo, Tigray-Welayta, and Gimira). It was the first ensemble of its type, as these diverse instruments and ethnic groups previously had never played together. For a time, due to El-Dabh's efforts,the Orchestra was in residence at the Creative Arts Centre of Haile Selassie I University, now Addis Ababa University. Its main instruments included krar (medium lyre), masenqo (one-string fiddle), begena (large lyre), washint (end-blown flute with finger holes), embilta (end-blown flute without finger holes), malakat (straight trumpet), kabaro (drum), and other percussion instruments. On occasion, it also used the tom, an mbira-like instrument. Many of Orchestra Ethiopia's performances were theatrical in nature, such as the drama The Potter, which was arranged byEl-Dabh.
April 12, 1963: Nelson Mandela has completed the offered armed guerilla training as a trainee under then Special Police Force (Kolfe Fetno-Derash training camp). Mr. Nelson Mandela left the Ethiopian capital Addis Ababaas to lead the newly formed ANC's armed wing against the south African apartheid regime was arrested shortly after returning from Ethiopia wherelater on with other ANC leaders whose were arrested along with him and sentenced to life at the infamous Rivonia apartheid court.

Side note: Nelson Mandela Was Trained, Protected By 'HIM The emperorOf Ethiopia'
Nelson Mandela has secretly entered in to Ethiopia for military, political and spiritual training under the name of David Motsamai. Ethiopian army,on the orders of His Majesty himself first trained and armed Nelson Mandela in his struggle against the apartheid regime in South Africa. On the personal orders of His Majesy, the Ethiopian Police Colonel in charge of Mandela's military training gave him a gun with which he was to bring down the ignoble and unhappy apartheid regime still thriving at that timein South Africa. Mandela went back to South Africa to continue his armedstruggle. The rests on history. One of the things that Madiba recently learned is that while he was in Ethiopia, the apartheid government knew where he was and had paid his menders to kill him. (Recently the SA tv was joined by Captain Guta Dinka who not only looked after Madiba whilehe was in Ethiopia but was ordered to kill Madiba. (He has been recently on the South African TV along with the renowned historian Prof Mamo Muchie who will do the translation for Captain Guta Dinka)
May, 1963: His Imperial Majesty's 27 years back royal trip to Geneva wasceremoniously remembered'
Side note: It has to be remembered that Emperor Haile-Selassie I of Ethiopia had travelled to Geneva, Switzerland to address the "Council of the League of Nations and to appear for relief from the destruction which had been unleashed against his defenceless nation, by the fascist invaders. Then Council of League of Nations", the predecessor of the United Nations Organization (UNO), to collapse as dustbin of history whenthe world countries failed to act after Benito Mussolini's army arrogant invasion of Ethiopia in 1936.
Animal Health Assistants Training (School of veterinary) Collegeestablished in Debre-zeit (Bishoftu).
May 16, 1963: Emperor Haile Selassie welcomed President WilliamVakarant Shadrach Tubman of Liberia in addis Ababa.
May 20, 1963: Emperor Haile Selassie welcomed Alferiq Ibrahim AboudPresident of the Sudan, reviewed the guard of honour at the Bole HaileSelassie I International airport in Addis Ababa
May 25,1963: HIM Haile Selassie I presided over the formation of the Organisation of African Unity (OAU) establishing it's headquarter in AddisAbaba.

Side note: On this day of 25 May in 1963: 30 independent African states with the exeption of Togo whos president Sylvanous Olympio has assassinated by a military coup earlier on January 13, the same year, instituted under the leadership of Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana, and hosted by H.I.M. Haile Selassie I in Ethiopia, the Organization of African Unity andthis day declared as African Freedom Day. In May of that year, emperor Haile Selassie was elected as the OAU's first official chairperson, a rotatingseat. Of the same year Emperor Haile Selassie along with Modibo Keïta of Mali, would help successfully negotiate the Bamako Accords, which brought the border dispute usually known as "War of the Sands" between Morocco and Algeria to an end.

A Famous Excerpt taken from Haile Salassie’s addresses to the OAU founding conference held in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia: “That until the philosophy which holds one race superior and another inferior is finally and permanently discredited and abandoned: That until there are no longer first-class and second class citizens of any nation; That until the color of a man’s skin is of no more significance than the color of his eyes;That until the basic human rights are equally guaranteed to all without regard to race; That until that day, the dream of lasting peace and world citizenship and the rule of international morality will remain but a fleetingillusion, to be pursued but never attained; And until the ignoble and unhappy regimes that hold our brothers in Angola, in Mozambique and in South Africa in subhuman bondage have been toppled and destroyed; Until bigotry and prejudice and malicious and inhuman self-interest have been replaced by understanding and tolerance and good-will; Until all Africans stand and speak as free beings, equal in the eyes of all men, as they are in the eyes of Heaven; Until that day, the African continent will not know peace. We Africans will fight, if necessary, and we know that weshall win, as we are confident in the victory of good over evil”.

It was obvious Addis Ababa chosen as headquarters of the Organization ofAfrican Unity (OAU) in view of Ethiopia's leadership and staffing of the informal working machinery of the African states at the United Nations Economic Commission for Africa (UNECA), and it's initiative in calling up the OAU founding conference.. As more African states won their independence in early 1960. He plays a significant role as pan-Africanist inbringing Africa together under one roof, and hence Addis Ababa as the venue of the former Organization of African Union (OAU), which it was predecessor for the present African Union Commission (AUC), still based in Addis Ababa. Ethiopia’s role in the establishment and institutionalizationof the OAU in the 1960s needs no evidence to present here. Ethiopia’s humble contribution to the complete liberation of the African continent from the colonial yoke to the anti-apartheid struggle in South Africa is also well documented. That was all in the 1960s to the 1970s.

President AdanAbdalla Osman Daar (caadde) of the Somali Republic has delivered a longspeech in which he sets out the "Greater Somalia (Soomaliwein)" formulaas originally presented to include the National Frontier District of Kenya, the ethnic-Somali Ogadien part of Ethiopia, the Somalia Italiana, the British Somaliland, and French Somaliland then known as Territory of France Afar and Issas (TFAI), presently known as Djibouti.

At the conclusion of the conference, the Emperor has stressed the importance of political tolerance among post-colonial African states and anurgent need for political alliance against colonialism and the apartheid. Emperor Haile Selassie is known for pursuing a firm policy of decolonization in Africa, which was then largely under European colonial powers. Emperor Haile-selassie's post Italian occupation nation-building and modernization attitudes somehow at it’s peak this time has reconciledand wisely balanced between rival political attitudes among namely the patriots (Arbegnas), the pro-Italians (Bandas) and the self-exiled intellectuals (Sidetegnas), to promote equal education, unity and respect among the Ethiopians. According to then Horn analysts, the Emperor's international fame helped him outmaneuvered and outwait all who stood on his way.

June 1963: Emperor of Ethiopia Addresses The UN General Assembly inNew York’

Emperor Haile Selassie I – some of the words from that historic speech tothe UN in June, 1963, “until there are no longer first-class and second- class citizens of any nation; that until the colour of a man’s skin is of no more significance than the colour of his eyes; that until the basic human rights are equally guaranteed to all, without regard to race; that until thatday, the dream of lasting peace and world citizenship and the rule of international morality will remain but fleeting illusions, to be pursued but never attained . . . until bigotry and prejudice and malicious and inhumanself-interest have been replaced by understanding and tolerance and goodwill; until all Africans stand and speak as free beings, equal in the eyes of all men, as they are in the eyes of Heaven; until that day, the African continent will not know peace.

June 21, 1963: Wonji-Shoa Sugar factory with Dutch Company HVA investment, the second for the country, launches it’s sugar production (በሰኔ ወር 1955 ዓ.ም ደግሞ ሸዋ ላይ ሁለተኛው ፋብሪካ ተመርቆ ተከፈተ፡፡ ከዚያን ግዜ ጀምሮ የምድሩ ስም ወንጂ-ሸዋ ሆነ፡፡ የሀገሬውሰውየወል ስምደግሞ ወንጂዎች፤ ወንጂዎች ብጥርሳቸው ምልክት ይታወቃሉ፡፡) Shoa Sugar Plantation the second in Ethiopia managed by the Dutch Company HVA, established a Sugar factory at Shoa near Wonji. The Dutch Handels Vereeningung Amsterdam (HVA-ETHIOPIA) reinvested on a second factoryto process more Sugarcane after being successful in promoting Sugar in the country.

July 15, 1963: Ethiopia-United States Mapping Mission was activated having the assigned mission of establishing geodetic control and collectionof field classification data in Ethiopia to be used in future mapping programs. At any given time in it's existence an average of 150 officers and enlisted men were assigned to the mission. Moreover, building the Abay Dam is an original idea of Emperor Haile Selassie I, and he had actually commissioned dam construction companies for extensive studies on the Abay river vallies, and had tried for years to acquire international funding for such project.

August 28, 1963: Dr. Martin Luther King jr. was delivered a historic speech that transformed the American society at the Lincoln Memorial inWashington, D.C.

October 4, 1963: Emperor Haile-selassie I made a historic speech at the United Nations General Assembly in New York. HIM The Emperor addressed conference participants "If we are to survive, this Organization(UN) must survive. To survive it must be strengthened. It's executive must be vested with great authority. The means for the enforcement of it's decisions must be fortified, and if they do not exist they must be devised".

October 1963: His Majesty Emperor Haile-selassie I and then Malian president Modibo Keita negotiated in the hope of ending the Algeria- Moroccan war known as usually the “sand war”, a frontier conflict betweenthe two nations. It was a Moroccan attempt to claim the Tindouf and the Bechar areas that France as a colonial power had annexed to French Algeria decades earlier. Both the Emperor and the Malian president were successfuly negotiated the "Bamako Accords", which brought an end to the conflict.

November 25, 1963:The Emperor was among other heads of states, whotraveled to Washington D.C. and attended the funeral of assassinated President John F. Kennedy.
January, 1964: Ethiopian Shipping Lines Share Company Sc established toappropriately acquire the shares of Ethiopia in the international maritime waters.
February, 1964: A popular Revolt erupted by the ethnic Somali-Abo (Father of Somali) tribes in Bale province under Waqo Gutu aiming todetach the region from unsecular monarch in Ethiopia.
Mr. Levi Eshkol the 3rd prime minister of Israel made official visit toEthiopia.

Aster Ganno (c.1872–1964) died of natural sickness. She was an Ethiopian Bible translator who worked with the better known Onesimos Nesib (Hikma) as a translator of the Oromo Bible, published in 1899. She was born free, but was later enslaved by the king of Limmu-Ennarea. Shewas emancipated in 1886 when Italian ships intercepted a boat which wastaking her to be sold on the Arabian Peninsula, then took her to Eritrea where the Imkullu school of the Swedish Evangelical Mission took her in. Aster (by Ethiopian cu...stom, she is referred to by her first name) was educated at their school . Onesimos quickly “discovered that Aster was endowed with considerable mental gifts and possessed a real feeling for the Oromo language” (Arén 1978:383). She was assigned to compile an Oromo dictionary, which was first used in polishing a translation of New Testament published in 1893."

April, 1964:Ethiopia was provoked by the Somali army. The four years oldState of Somalia committed to invade the Ogadien region of Ethiopia, according to Ethiopian government documents.
Side note; Armed rebels from Somalia were creating disorders in the ethnic-Somali region of Ogadien. The Ethiopian Army under Army-GeneralAman Michael Andom and others like Colonel Tola Bedane set out in persuit and drove them back across the border into Somalia, and to further escalate into the territories of then Somalia to endlessly and ferociously fight inside enemy’s territory. Lt. General Aman Michael Andom, nicknamed "Desert Lion" for one of main reasons to be sent to defeat and began to counter-attack the ex-Somali National Army (SNA) into the territory of Somalia in April, 1964, was fought back as an ordinaryinfantry soldier in the deserts of Ogadien with the rank and files to preserve and protect the territorial integrity of his country. Lt. General Aman Michael Andom whos originally from then Eritrean province,when Ethiopia was provoked by the ex-Somali army, he endlessly and ferociously marched to fight inside Somalia, the Emperor who was feared that he would be accused of invading the new state of Somalia called him back to withdraw and scold him for his act later.

April 25, 1964: Ethiopian Television (ETV), an Ethiopian government- owned broadcast television channel launched it's programme. Its programming includes news, sport, music and other entertainment. It airsin Amharic, Oromiffa, Somali, Tigrigna, Afar, French, as well as English. Atpresent the national ETV transmits its programmes on 4 satellite stations.Ethiopian Television was established in April, 1964 with assistance from the British firm, Thomson. ETV was created to highlight the Organization of African Unity (OAU) meeting that took place in Addis Ababa that same year.
April 26, 1964: Emperor Haile-selassie I, inaugurated the CommunityTeacher Training School of Debre-Birhan.
Confederation of Ethiopian Labor Union (CELU), an umbrella organizationthat represented a number of labor unions and employee self-help associations in Ethiopia founded under Beyene Solomon mainly to restorefreedom of labour strikes and freedom of bargaining with employers.
June 5, 1964: Ethiopia's Emperor Haile Selassie I and Kenya's PremierJomo Kenyatta met at Nairobi Airport, discussed bilateral issues.

In June 1964: The Emperor has ordered a house arrest of the Somali subclan leader Fit-Awrari Dulani Rafle Gouled an ethnic-Somali nationalist tribal leader in remote Gojjam province accused him of collaboration withneighbouring enemy country. He had been kept under house arrest (Ghezot) by Imperial security plainclothes in the town of Debre Markos.
In July, 1964: The Emperor appointed Leul Ras Asrate-Medhin Kassa, Governor-General (Enderassie) of Eritrea Province. Ras Aserate Kass apreviously held several positions including Governor of Arsi, and of Shoaprovinces. He is the youngest son of HRH Ras Kassa Haile, member the nobility of the Ethiopian empire.
June 23, 1964: Emperor of Ethiopia met with Premier Julius KambarageNyerere of Tanganyika and made a bilateral discussion at a resort HotelManyara near Lake Tanganyika.

July 17, 1964: The Extra-ordinary summit of the Organization of Africannion heads of states and governments held in Cairo, Egypt adopts a charter as founding principles in respect of international borders existingon achievement of independence. The Cairo summit conference of the OAU in its resolution 16 (1) called on all member states to pledge "themselves to respect the borders existing on their achievement of national independence", but the newly independent state of Somalia rejects this resolution. "Respect of international borders existingon achievement of independence, and in the same category as others newly independent African nations from colonialism that formed the OAUafter their independence". The adopted charter being approved unanimously by then independent African member states with the exception of ex-Somali Republic, whose it had a border claim over the Ogadien region of Ethiopia, Djibouti and the National Frontier Districts (NFD) of Kenya.

October 4, 1964: Emperor visits US – meets the press, squashes the Skincolour arguement' Side note: His Majesty quoted as saying to the press, "I would say that, atthe Conference of Heads of African states, that was held last May ,in the capital city of Ethiopia, Addis Ababa, before the signing of the Charter, I have told, in the speech I have made to the distinguished heads of state, that people who were formerly under colonialist regime, and who have suffered a great deal, must have the girth, strength, of wanting to collaborate with their former masters for otherwise, through vengeance and remorse, co-existence would not be possible and this would be detrimental to the preservation of International peace. I MUST SAY THATthe BLACK AND WHITE, AS FORMS OF SPEECH, AND AS A MEANS OF JUDGING MANKIND, SHOULD BE ELIMINATED FROM HUMAN SOCIETY.
Human beings are precisely the same whatever colour, race, creed ornational origin they may be."
October 13, 1964: Negadras Tessema Eshete a poet, a wit, a painter, a sculptor, political appointee, explorer, developer and an accomplished photographer of his time passed away of natural sickness. In the year 1908, Tessema Eshete was among the first young Ethiopians selected byEmperor Menelik II and sent to Germany to be trained as the first Automobile driver/auto mechanic Side note: Negadras Tessema Eshete (27 July 1876 to 13 October 1964) was born in Minjar, Ethiopia, to his mother Woleteyes Habtu and his fatherEshete Gube. In the year 1908, Tessema was selected by Emperor Menelik and sent to Germany with German concessionaire Arnold Holtz to be trained as the first Ethiopian Automobile driver/auto mechanic. He accomplished his training, and also recorded Ethiopia's first music/songs on 17 double sided shellack disks. Tessema was known for his various trades. He was a poet, a wit, a painter, a sculptor, political appointee, explorer, developer and an accomplished photographer.

This obituary containing the true but brief history of Negadrass Tessema Eshete was written by his son Yidnekachew Tessema and published on Addis Zemen of Hidar 12 1957 Ethiopian Calendar. It's to mark the day hepassed away on 03 Tikimt 1957 EC (13 October 1964 GC)

ETHIOPIA BEAUTY CONTEST At the highest: The winner of the first Ethiopian Beauty Contest held in 1956. Wrt (Miss) Sophia Asfaw EthiopianBeauty Queen: Winner of the first national beauty contest in the history ofEthiopia. Sophia Asfaw niece of a minister in the Imperial Ethiopian government wears her Royal raiment. Shunning traditional bathing suits, the contestants wore skirts not more than four inches from flour.
October 21, 1964: Abebe Bikila Marathon runner of Ethiopia enteringTokyo stadium for the finish of the Olympic marathon.
October 21, 1964: German President Heinrich Luebke and his wife Wilhelmine Luebke welcomed by Emperor Haile Selassie at a state banquet in the Jubilee Palace. Meantime, Crown Prince Asfaw Wossen Haile Selassie of Ethiopia met Walter Scheel, the Federal Minister for Economic Cooperation at at the reception in the Jubilee Palace.

November 2, 1964: Affewerk Tekle, the famous Ethiopian artist becomesthe first winner of the Haile Sellassie I Prize for Fine Arts.

Side note: The citiation described him as a “versatile and disciplined artist”. And the prize was awarded “for his outstanding drawings, paintings, landscapes, and portraits which eloquently express his particular world environment, and for his contribution in being among the first to introduce contemporary techniques to Ethiopian subject matter and content.” Affeworq Tekle as his reputation spread abroad, Artist Affe- worq Tekle was invited to put on an exhibition in Moscow following which he toured the Soviet Union giving lectures. The American government responded with an invitation for him exhibitions in Washington and New York and a similar lecture tour of American universities. Additional international exhibitions followed in Senegal, Turkey, ex-Zaire, the UnitedArab Republic of Egypt, Bulgaria, Munich, Kenya, and Algeria. Maitre artistAffe-worq Tekle is one of Africa's celebrated artists particularly known for his paintings on African and Christian themes, he had designed and constructed stained glass-windows in Africa Hall of the United Nations Economic Commission for Africa (UNECA), in Addis Ababa. Ethiopian renowned painter, the Most Honorable Maitre Artiste World Laureate Afewerk Tekle made a special study of the Ethiopian illustrated manuscripts in the British Library, the Bibliothėque Nationale in Paris and the Vatican Library gaining a deeper knowledge of his own artistic heritage. Maitre Artiste world laureate Affewerk Tekle .. The Greatest artist of all times,received a memorial badge from the US Sailor of the Aurora cruiser.

October, 1964: The Marathon legend Abebe Biquila won the Tokyo summer Olympics maraton race in a new world record time of 2; 12; 11;

2. Abebe Biquila ran, won, broke and lowered his own record to

2.12.11.2 in Tokyo Summer Olympic Games. He was the first athlet in history to win in successive Olympic Games marathon. Far from being exhausted, Abebe Biquila celebrates his victory by going through a seriesof stretching excercises. He went then home to a hero's welcome even greater than that of four years ago.

November 2, 1964: Tsegaye Gebre-medhin at awarded the Haile SellassieI Prize for Amharic Literature. Poet Tsegaye Gebre-medhin became the youngest age twenty-nine recipient of the Haile Sellassie I Prize for Amharic Literature.

ETHIOPIA: Remembering Self-made Enterpreuners of their time’

Self-made and prominent businessmen those rose from a humble beginning to run on various i.e. commercial, transport, hotel, beverages and Alcohols, and import/ export businesses. What comes to mind when we think of them, are Ato Bekele Molla, the shining star of the hospitality business. His innovative Hotel businesses from Addis Ababa to Arba-Minchand Moyale were the pride of travelers in the beautiful South. So clean, fresh and staffed by well-trained professionals defined the new concept ofcustomer service. Ato Bekele Molla was truly an innovative and inspiring giant hotelier. He was the definition of by Ethiopia for Ethiopians. Ato Mamo Yenberberu known as Mammo Katcha, defined as “Rapid transporter”. A self-made entrepreneur, his innovative style of free enterprise pushed others to follow suit to catch up with him. His buses were clean, on time and affordable. The music blaring from the bus speakers on front were loud enough to wake up the slept and you know the bus was here miles before it reaches the little village. His enthusiasticbusiness style gave birth to others such as Awraris transporters, Mekonnen Negash and a host of others that followed his footsteps. Ato Molla Maru, that’s another rags to riches Ethiopian saga, he was a proud owner of an Ethiopian Liquor factory. To see a “Made in Ethiopia” Cognac,Ouzo, Pernod, Fernet, etc. in a clean bottle adorned in Amharic labels wassomething to behold. He was an entrepreneur par excellence that rose from a humble beginning to running a modern factory. Ato Teka Egeno a businessman of special caliber, self made visionaries. Kegnazmatch Kadir Ebba was into coffee since he was a product of Kaffa province and put ourcountry on the map and was able to keep stride with big Import/Export houses. And of course, the renowned Guebre-Selassie Odda, owner and manager of “Ethiopian Rubber Economy Share company Sc” known as locally today “Goma-quteba” Imperial Highway Authority, locally known as “Awra-Godana Bale-Siltan”founded.

Nobel Peace Prize Nominees For Year-1964

Out of the 44 candidates nominated for the Nobel Peace prize in 1964 theNobel Committee chose to carry out a more detailed assessment. The 13th Nominee is Emperor Haile Selassie.

Nation-building and modernization in post-Italian occupation came to it’s highest this time. The Imperial Highway Authority (Awra-Godana Balesiltan) was a name given to a body responsible for the administrationof motorways and summer roads in Ethiopia.

Side note;- The post-Italian occupation nation-building programme on a drive. The emperor has well managed then political rivals the patriots (Arbegnas), the pro-Italian group (Bandas) and the self-exiled intellectuals (Sidetegnas), he has achieved somehow in reconciling theserival groups, and he made efforts to promote equal education, unity and respect among Ethiopians. His International fame and importance helpedhim out-smart, out-maneuvered and out-wait who stood on his way.

According to analysts, the legitimacy of the monarchy soon began to fadeand shrink as the benefits of economic growth failed to materialize for peasant farmers and the urban working class. Feudal Ethiopian Landlord, Chisegna, and the Gebar-system which was implemented gradually in post-Italian occupation Ethiopia inflames desatisfaction among the educated elite and the University students chanting with a slogan of "Landto the tiller", the landlord system remains in severe crises. The emperor continued the same policy and turned the whole population into serfs thathad no right to leave the land and were considered property of the new horde of settlers they called “naftegnas”. Land tenants had always been forced to share their grain production with those unproductive segmentsof the society known as "landlords (yemeret kebertewoch)" without compensation.The emperor had also made a good portion of most fertile lands private property of his family that he called it as“Beta Rist”.

February 12, 1965: Queen Elizabeth II of The Great Britain and NorthernIreland In Ethiopia: Queen Elizabeth II of the Great Britain & Northern Ireland welcomed by Emperor Haile Selassie I in Addis Ababa during herroyal visit to Ethiopia. Children & Royal guards welcoming Queen Elizabeth & Prince Philip of Edinbrough during the Queen's State visit to Ethiopia.

Side note: Queen Elizabeth II of The Great Britain and Northern Ireland has made a royal viasit to Ethiopia. Queen Elizabeth II and Emperor HaileSelassie visiting the impressive Tississat Falls of the Blue Nile in northwestern Ethiopia, Duke of Edinburgh (Prince Philip) is also present. Queen, Duke and the Emperor watching tribal elders perform ceremony. The Queen visited large church, where men are in ornate robes and women wear white headdresses. Queen in Eritrea where crowds dance instreet and brass bands play. Queen drives through a city in open topped car.

Queen Elizabeth II of The Great Britain made a Horse rides during her royal visit to Ethiopia through the Imperial State Horserider Coach. At t astate dinner in her honor given in the great hall of the Imperial (Menelik) Palace. Queen Elizabeth II of The Great Britain and Northern Ireland giving a speech of thanks to Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia. The gold chain with medal and the breast star that the Queen is wearing is the Order of Solomon's Seal, The highest order of the Ethiopian Empire whichwas only rarely awarded, and usually only to royal heads of state.

March 22, 1965: Ethiopian Teachers’ Union (ETU) legalized as Ethiopian Teachers Association (ETA). ETA is affiliated with Education International(EI).
May 1965: Emperor Haile Selassie visiting the woolen blanket factory atDebrebirhan.

June 1965: Ethio-Japan Nylon Textiles Factory founded in the town of Modjo. Construction of the Ethio-Japanese Synthetic Textiles Mill began, with a budget of ETB 15 million . The Textiles Co. behind it was 49% Japanese and 51% Ethiopian owned, with a capital of 2.5 million Birr. Thecompany formally introduced its products to the market at the beginning of August 1966; the factory went into 24-hour operation in December 1966 and had 152 looms.
Ethiopian Highland Rally commenced 1965-1974:
Major Onni Niskanen who was one of the founders and organizer of theEthiopian High-Land Rally, which was organized during ten years and italso became an international competition.

July 2, 1965: The famous Haile Selassie I Theatre (the latter EthiopianNational Theatre) founded.
Side note: Haile Selassie I Theatre, in the latter called ‘Ethiopian NationalTheatre’ established: Meantime the national Library of Ethiopia known asWe-Mezekir headed by Ato Kebede Mikael, has been also responsible for the national archieves.

The previously Haile Selassie I Theatre is a national theatre group of Ethiopia, based in central Addis Ababa. Formerly known as the Haile Selassie I Theatre, the hall had begun to be built during the Italian occupation as the Cinema Marconi with some 350 seats. However, in 1955the building was completed for the celebrations of the Silver Jubilee and expanded to seat 1260 people. The theatre group was founded by the government in the late 1940s who had recruited a band with the main objective to play Ethiopian songs by soloists accompanied by a modern orchestra. The Austrian composer Franz Zelwecker became the first director of the National Theatre. The theatre is divided into two directorates, one for theatre and the other for music. The music directorate includes the Izra Folk Music and Dance Group, Yared Modern Orchestra, Dawit POP Orchestra and String Orchestra.
In July, 1965: Savings and Mortgage Corporation of Ethiopia Sc(SMC) established with allocated capital of ETD 3, 000, 000.

December 11, 1965: A memorandum of Understanding to found ALERT was signed by the representatives of the Ministry of Public Health, Haile Selassie I University (HSIU), the International Society for the Rehabilitation of the Disabled, The Leprosy Mission, and Dr. Eugene Kellersberger of the American Leprosy Mission, who had had the vision forestablishing such a multifaceted center and had been the main promoter of the project.

December 30, 1965: The United States Naval Medical Research Unit (US-NAMRU-5) opened it’s Addis Ababa Detachment.
Side note: US Naval Medical Research Unit Five (US NAMRU-5) was a research laboratory of the US Navy which was founded as a field facility ofNaval Medical Research Unit 3 in Addis Ababa Ethiopia with a collecting station in Gambella under an agreement between the US and Ethiopian governments. In 1974 NAMRU-5 was established as its own command andwas housed in the Ethiopian Health and Nutrition Research Institute(former Imperial Central Laboratory Research Institute). The mission of NAMRU-5 was to conduct research and development on infectious diseases of military importance in sub-Sahara Africa. Gambellabecame the focus of a major malaria control effort and studies on malaria immunology. Applied research focused on the general areas of insect repellents, insecticide resistance, insect attractants and louse control.

Members of the NAMRU-5 staff were also among the last Americans to ever see smallpox before its eradication. NAMRU-5 built collaborative research efforts with the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention;with local medical facilities, including the Haile Selassie University MedicalSchool and various hospitals in Addis Ababa; and with the London School of Tropical Medicine, the University of Washington, Case Western ReserveUniversity Department of Medicine and the University of Maryland School of Medicine. NAMRU-5 was disestablished in April of 1977 following the communist takeover of the government of Ethiopia which ordered all members out of the country in 4 days. Fields of study included:

March 28, 1966: Pepsi-Cola Refreshment Plant Inaugurated In AddisAbaba,

Selected Speech made by H.I.M' "... It always gives Us pleasure to see therapid establishment of industries in Ethiopia. Big or small, industries are vital instruments for the development and progress of a nation and for theimproved standard of living of its people. The services which industries render to a nation are not solely limited to producing various articles for the benefit of the people; th...ey also provide opportunities of gainful employment. The advent of modernization and progress entail new modesof life, and this new mode of life demands, to a certain extent, the establishment of industries for processing food products. The expansion offood processing plants should go hand in hand with those producing drinksand beverages. A shortage in the former would create an imbalance in theneeds of an improved standard of living. Therefore, We hope that more attention shall be given to the expansion of food processing industries, while setting up beverage plants. We extend Our thanks to all those who have contributed in the establishment of this factory. We are pleased to see Ethiopians participate as share-holders in such factories, and it is withpleasure that We open today this Pepsi-Cola factory."

April 18, 1966: Emperor Haile Selassie I attends a cornerstone ceremony for a new Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahdo Church in the Caribean city of Portof Spain, in Trinidad & Tobago.

April 21, 1966: His Imperial Majesty Haile Selassie I of Ethiopia visitsJamaica'

HIM Haile selassie I made an official visit in the Caribean island of Jamaica, in the city of Kingston. Approximately over one hundred thousand Jamaicans and the Rastafarian community from all over Jamaicadescended on the Palisadoes Airport in Kingston having heard that the man who regard his birth as the second coming itself, whom theyconsidered to be their Mesiah was coming to visit them.

Side note: His Imperial Majesty, Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia visitedJamaica to a tumultuous welcome, thrillingly captured in the film footage above. The Emperor might not have fully grasped what he meant to the Rastafarian community in Jamaica who regard his birth as the Second Coming itself.

Haile Selassie visited Jamaica on April 21, 1966, and approximately one hundred thousand Rastafari from all over Jamaica descended on Palisadoes Airport in Kingston, having heard that the man whom they considered to be their Messiah was coming to visit them.

Spliffs and chalices were openly smoked, causing "a haze of ganja smoke"to drift through the air. Haile Selassie arrived at the airport but was unable to come down the mobile steps of the airplane, as the crowd rushed the tarmac. He then returned into the plane, disappearing for several more minutes. Finally, Jamaican authorities were obliged to request Ras Mortimer Planno, a well-known Rasta leader, to climb the steps, enter the plane, and negotiate the Emperor's descent. Planno re- emerged and announced to the crowd: "The Emperor has instructed me totell you to be calm. Step back and let the Emperor land". This day is widely held by scholars to be a major turning point for the movement, andit is still commemorated by Rastafarians as Grounation Day, the anniversary of which is celebrated as the second holiest holiday after 2 November, the Emperor's Ethiopia's Coronation Day.

April 22, 1966:Emperor Haile Selassie I welcomed at the airport by Premier Errol Barrow & Governor Sir John Stow on his two hours visit toBarbados.

July 12, 1966: Ethiopian Shipping Lines (ESL), a state-run Shippingenterprise, commences it's operation with 3 resold vessels.

In July, 1966: HIM Haile Selassie I made an official visit to Federal Republic of Germany (FRG). As part of a bilateral agreement among thetwo countries, Voice of Germany (DeutchWelle) launches its Amharic Radio transmission to East Africa (Ethiopia) for the first time

"Kulumsa Irsha Serto-Masaya" locally meaning for "Agri-test field" a project of the Chilalo Agricultural Development Unit (CADU) established inKulumsa as part of economic assistance of Swedish International Development Authority (SIDA) in the former Arussi province.

In 1966: Muluken Melese began his musical career at the age of 12, singing at night clubs and in groups founded by night club owners, withhis first song to be performed on stage, "Enate Sitewoldgne Metche Amakerchign".

Side note: The renowned vocalist Muluken Melese was born in 1954 inGojjiam, a province in Northwestern Ethiopia. When he was six old, he moved to Addis Ababa with his uncle. He was a famous Ethiopian singer ofhis time and later a drummer who later abandoned his musical career to involve himself in the Pentecostal Church. His first song to be recorded onvinyl was Hedetch Alu, which was recorded in 1972 by Girma Bèyènè (piano and arrangements), Tesfa Mariam Kidane (tenor sax), Tekle Adhanonm (Hiwket) guitar, Fekade Amde Mesquel (bass), Tesfay Mekonnen (drums) and Muluken himself.

He recorded (in 1975) his second song, "Wetetie Mare and Ete Endenesh Gedawo", with 'Equator Band', and a year later in 1976 he recorded whatwas to be his last song, "Ney Ney Wodaje". While the remained of the band emigrated to the United States of America, Muluken Melese remainsto join the Pentecostal Church in the 1980s, having ended his musical career. Muluken nowadays resides in the United States.

On the traditional music and unique cultural folk dances section there were also renowned Ethiopian singers like Negatua Kelkay (vocalist), MaryArmde (the kirar legend and great lyricist and singer whom she being considered as Mariam Makeba of then South Africa), Kassa Tessema (the kirar legend), Derbabaw Abunu (Mesenqo legend), Ketema Makonnen (thekirar legend), Bahiru Kegne (Mesenqo legend), Abebe Tessema (folk music legend), Tesfaye Lemma (Washint legend), Wossenu Dido (folk music legend), are the very recognized ones of their time.

August 27, 1966: President Charl De Gaulle of France and Emperor HaileSelassie I saluting, Addis Ababa.

November, 1966: Tsegaye Guebre Medhin, at the age of only 29, was awarded his country's highest literary honour: the Haile Selassie I Prize for Amharic Literature – which earned him the title of Laureate, by whichhe has ever since been known. In later years he concerned himself increasingly with questions of peace, human rights and the dignity of humanity. He was honored and elected to the United Poets Laureate International, and received many international awards – the last of themfrom Norway. Tsegaye, was proud of Ethiopia's long history of independence and of her unique cultural heritage.
In June 1967: Emperor Haile Selassie I helped resolve the Nigerian-Biafran civil war.
Side note: The civil war in the duration of the 6th July, 1967 to 15th January 1970, was a political conflict caused by the attempted secessionof the southeastern provinces of Nigeria as self-proclaimed "Republic of Biafra" under then military governor of the southeast namely Colonel Odumegwu Ojukwu, nicknamed as “Emeka” The Biafran civil war finally ended with the Biafrans surrendered to the Federal Nigerian Army led under Colonel Yakubu Gowon on the 13th January, 1970, it has been estimated that upto three million people may have die due to the conflict,most from hunger and disease.
Unionist Dejazmatch Tedla Bairu Eritrea Federation With Ethiopia: formerchief executive and unionist leader of “Eritrea in federation with Ethiopia”whom the emperor appointed making him Senator at the Imperial Ethiopian senate, appointed him at last Ambassador plenipotentiary to Sweden, where he defects to the Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF) then headquartered in archpolitical rival Syria.
Ethiopian Road Transport Authority (RTA) founded to regulate thecountry’s public transport.
Side note: It was originally founded as the Road Transport Administration in 1967 by proclamation No 256/67 but restructured and became the Road Transport Authority (RTA) in 1976, following proclamation No 107/76. The RTA states that its mission is "to ensure the provision of a modern, integrated and safe Road transport services to meet the needs ofall the communities for strong and unitary economic and political system in Ethiopia." In doing so they attempt to promote an efficient road service,to coordinate and strengthen the road traffic safety and to develop the transport data base system to enhance research for the development of the sector. In 2005: The Ethiopian government reorganized the transport sector and although the previously independent Urban Transport Authority, the Railway Regulatory Authority, the Aviation Authority, the Airport Administration Authority and the Maritime Regulatory Authority merged into the Ethiopian Transport Authority, the Road Transport Authority remained independent.

The Swedish International Development Authority (SIDA) established “Chilalo Agricultural Development Unit (CADU” and “Walaita Agricultural Development Unit (WADU)”, as development assistance to the Agri sector.
As first comprehensive package projects established in Arsi Zone of Oromia Region and Walaita Sodo in the Southern Region to transform traditional peasant agriculture to the modern ones. The major componentsof the package programmes included fertilizers, improved seeds, farm credits, marketing facilities, better tools and implements, and improved storage facilities. Currently the project which was initiated by the CADU, later part of the Arsi Rural Development Unit (ARDU).

November 2,1967: His Majesty the Emperor in his 36th Coronation Day cornerstoned for the future building of St. Paulos Memorial Hospital ForThe Poor & the Destitute.

November 4, 1967: The U.S. Army Red Sea Rest Center, opened at portcity of Massawa and was maintained by TTU (Transportation Terminal Unit). Leult Hirut Desta Damtew is elevated by her grandfather His Majesty theemperor to the title of Princess with the dignity of Her Royal Highness upon her marriage to Major-General Nega Tegegne in public ceremony before she has moved to Gondar, the provincial capital of then Begemdre& Semien with her husband who was nominated as governor at the start of the Ethiopian February (Yekatit) Revolution, at the latter.
In January 1968: Ethiopia hosts for the second time the 6th African Cup ofNations in Addis Ababa, the Ethiopian national team at it's height this timeplay good football and be at their peak during matches lost the semi-final to then Congo Kinshasa national team which has taken up the African Cupwinning it's Ghanaian counterpart 1 to 0.
The main bridge over the Wabe-Shaballe River was constructed next toGodey city.
February 15, 1967: Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia is greeted by theNew York City Mayor John Lindsay at Gracie Mansion in New York, April, 1968: The Shah of Iran, His Majesty Mohammad Reza Shah Pahlavi,and his wife Empress Farah Diba Pahlavi made a royal visit to Ethiopia.

July 1968: Tha All Ethiopian Socialist Movement commonly known asMEISON founded by dissident Ethiopian students in West Germany.
July 26, 1968: Ethiopian Foreign Minister Ketema Yifru, called the Indian Prime Minister Indra Ghandi to discuss preparations for the summit conference of Non-Aligned countries proposed by President Josip Brozi Titoof Yugoslavia during his recent tour, when visited Cairo, Algiers, and the capitals of other Non-Aligned countries, he found widespread support for the calling of such a conference. A preparatory meeting to decide the date, venue and countries .. to be invited to the proposed meeting is scheduled for the end of September in Addis Ababa, the capital of Ethiopia. India has started it's support for a summit conference of Non- Aligned countries, provided adequate preparations are made and providedit sets out to achieve positive results.

August 1968: All Ethiopian Socialist Movement locally known as MEISONfounded by the most senior of the exiled radical Ethiopian students in former West Germany. MEISON was initially founded by Hagos Guebre Eyesus, Haile Fida, Daniel Adera, Negede Gobeze, Andargatchew Asegid,Fikre Merid, Worku Ferede, Sisay Takele, Teffera Wondie, Mitiku Belachew.
In October 1968: Lieutenant Mammo Wolde Degaga won the Mexicosummer Olympics marathon race in record time of 2; 20; 26. Side note;- Alas there Abebe Biquila suffered an injury to his right knee,which made him pull-out of the race at some 17 kilometres. At least Abebe Biquila had the satisfaction of seeing his colleague and Ethiopian compatriot Mammo Wolde takes the gold medal. Mamo Wolde stated to Sport's journalists at the time that "If Biquila had not been injured, he would surely have won the race". Mamo Wolde became the second Ethiopian to win the title in the marathon.
October-December 1968: Gojjam revolt, where the peasants successfullyresisted government efforts to survey their lands, believing that it would increase the taxes levied by local corrupt officials. The inhabitants of Motta, Bichena, and Qolla-Dega Damot districts of Gojjam province who rebelled against government land-tax policies, opposed an increament over land income-taxes, and expressed their desatisfaction to resentmentover ill-treatment of patriots. Then the imposed land-tax lifted, and the Governor Dejazmatch Tsehayou Inque-selassie was transfered.

January 18, 1969: Queen Juliana of the Netherlands made an official visit to Ethiopia & the Dutch Sugar Investment Wonji Sugar Plantation. The Queenof the Netherlands inaugurated workers Hospital at Wonji Sugar Estate.
Queen Juliana, Prince Bernhard, Princess Beatrice and Prince Clause all on state visit. The Royal family visited the sugar plantation. The crowd waiting for the Dutchguests.
March 1969: The Emperor of Ethiopia ordered a house arrest of a senior Police officer in the name of Brigadier- General Tadesse Birru, a well- known Oromo nationalist and co-founder of "Metcha-Tulema self-Help Association (METSHA)", for whom he called for a protest. He had been kept under house arrest (Ghezot) by Imperial security plainclothes in thetown of Bishoftu.
April 1969: Members of the so-called Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF) have hijacked an Ethiopian Airlines passenger plane enroute to Beirut, Lebanon.The Ethiopian Airlines Boeing 707 Flight No. ET-ACD which was singled outand attacked by then Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF) rebels led by Ali Said Abdalla opened a barrage of fire and threw grenade which failed to detonate while the aircraft was refueling to proceed to New Delhi. The Ethiopian Boeing 707 was pierced with fifty bullets and nearly burned to blow up later at the Karachi airport in Pakistan.The rebel ELF claims responsibility for the explosion.

July 8, 1969: US President Richard Nixon Toasts Emperor Haile Selassie I of Ethiopia; Citation: Richard Nixon: "Toasts of the President and EmperorHaile Selassie I of Ethiopia.,"

July 11, 1969: Emperor of Ethiopia rests Wreth of Flower on Dr. Mathin L.King's Grave.
Side note - Dr. Martin Luther King and the Ethiopia Connection! HIM HaileSelassie I laid a wreath of flower on Dr. Martin Luther King's grave up on his royal tour to the United States' "I found it quite necessary to lay a wreath of flower on Dr. King's grave so that we may remember his deedsand contributions to history, and his triumphs – and to honor his father and his wife.", the emperor told reporters during the ceremony. It's to bewell recognized Ethiopia was on the forefront and center in the fight against racial inequalities and colonial rules in the 21st century.

His Majesty The Emperor at the Kennedy Space Center In Florida. Ethiopian Emperor Haile Selassie speaks with astronaut Rocco Petrone, Director of Launch Operations at Kennedy Space Center in Florida, duringa space briefing before the launch of the Apollo 11 mission.

Emperor Menelik's unprecedented victory against the Italian forces in Adwa was an inspiration to black people and to all people under colonialrule. The victory at Adwa inspired the formation of the African National Congress in South Africa and the Garvey Movement in the Americas.
Similarly, Emperor Haile Sellassie's prophetic speech at the League of Nations and his subsequent victory against the Italian fascists inspired a generation of freedom fighters and the formation of the Pan-Africanist Movement. His Imperial Majesty Haile Sellassie I felt Ethiopia had the solemn obligation to support and encourage leaders such as Nelson Mandela and Dr. Martin Luther King who later became paragons of black freedom. Emperor Haile Sellassie supported freedom fighters even when itwas not popular to do so.

July 15, 1969: Emperor Haile Selassie Attends Apollo 11 Briefing Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia (with raised hand) asks a question of Rocco A. Petrone, director of launch operations at KSC. During a KennedySpace Center (KSC) briefing on the next days Apollo 11 launch, The firstmanned lunar launch occurred at 9:32 am on July 16, 1969. The crew included astronauts Neil A. Armstrong, commander; Michael Collins, Command Module (CM) pilot; and Edwin E. Aldrin Jr., Lunar Module (LM) pilot. After 21/2 hours of collecting samples on the lunar surface, the crewsafely splashed down into the Pacific Ocean on July 24, 1969. With the success of Apollo 11, the national objective to land men on the Moon and return them safely to Earth had been accomplished.

July 23, 1969: A Chihuahua named Lulu, the most obedient and diciplinedemperor Haile Selassie's pet is dead.

History of the Oromo Mecha & Tulema Association:-

MTA was co-founded by Oromo figures Colonel Alemu Kitesa, Obbo Haile Mariam Gemeda, Haji Adem Saddo, Obbo Zewge Boja, Obbo Ahmed Buna,Brigadier General Tadesse Birru, Obbo Seifu Tessema, Obbo Bekele Makonnen, Obbo Ejeta Feyissa, Haji Robele Tura of Arssi, Moga Frissa, Luba (priest) Gudina Tumsa, Dejazmach Kebede Bizunesh, Kegnazmach Makonnen Wosenu, Obbo Keneaa Guma, Capt. Mammo Mezemir, and laterjoined by others Majour-General Jagama Kello, Lieutenant Girma Wolde Giorgis, Dr. Negasso Gidada Solon, Obbo Aba-Biya Aba-Jobir, Obbo Galassa Dilbo, Obbo Lencho Latta, Obbo Baro Tumsa, Kegnazmach Abdulaziz Mohammed etc. A poorly organized peasantry rebellion led by inthe person of Waqo Gutu which at one point involved all of Bale province, were able to be contained by the Imperial Bodyguard and Special Police (Fetno-Derash) forces.

Side note: The Bale's province farmer movement was done by outsideconspirators and the Gojjam farmer's movements were insignificant.

Some say the resistance of the farmers were more exaggerated and usedby individuals whom they call themselves progressive. One can observe did not bother to research it, prefers to undermine and demonize such farmers protest. It is well known fact in both provinces the Emperor has imposed new land tax in 1967. Small or large farmers, ordinary peasant farmers alike rebelled against the new tax reform. Due to these farmers rebellion the Emperor was forced to halt the imposed land tax.

Documented studies by researchers under African Studies series publication (Ethiopia: Power and Protest, By Dr. Gebru Tareke) with greatdetail evidence readily available confirming that peasants resistance exist prior 1974 EC February Revolution. It is understandable that none of the peasant's movement was capable of changing the feudal system. This is due to the movements were isolated and they lack of organizational skill to be as insurgency. However, it is widely believed that the peasant movements contribute as one of the factor to the eruption of the February1974 Revolution.

Exactly a year after the Summer Olympic Games in Mexico City, the legendary Marathon runner Majour Abebe Biquila has suffered car crash,which left him paralyzed.

Ethiopian Pulp and Paper Company of Ethiopia (EPPSc) established inWonji by an American overseas investment.

November 17, 1969: THEORY: The question of "nations & nationalities" inEthiopia by University student theoretian in the name of Walelign Mekonen remains controversial.

Side note: What are the Ethiopian peoples composed of? I stress on the word peoples because sociologically speaking, at this stage, Ethiopia is notreally one nation. It is made up of a dozen nationalities with their own languages, ways of dressing, history, social organization and territorial entity.

And what else is a nation? It is not made of a people with a particular tongue, particular ways of dressing, partic...ular history, particular social and economic organization? Then, may I conclude that, inEthiopia, there is the Oromo Nation, the Tigrai Nation, the Amhara Nation,the Gurage Nation, the Sidama Nation, the Wellamo [Wolayta] Nation, the Adere [Harari] Nation, and however much you may not like it, the SomaliNation. This is the true picture of Ethiopia. There is, of course, the fake Ethiopian Nationalism advanced by the ruling class, and unwillingly accepted and even propagated by innocent fellow travelers.

November 22, 1969: Mzee Jomo Kenyatta, the nationalist leader fromKenya, has visited Emperor Haile Selassie in Ethiopia.

December 28, 1969: Tilahun Gizaw, a leading student movement activistassassinated by the Imperial government security plainclothes.
Side note: TILAHUN GIZAW Ethiopian university students association president whose oratory stirred nationwide student uprisings against the feudal regime of Emperor Haile-Sellassie in the 1960s. He was a son of a wealthy aristocrat Dejazmach Gizaw Abera with very close family ties to Emperor Haile-Sellassie. Tilahun was the first student to put the "Land to the Tiller" motto into practice by confiscating his father's vast farmlands among the tenants of Raya Azebo in Tigre province. Feared as a deadly threat to the Emperor’s absolute reign, Tilahun Gizaw was assassinated onDecember 28, 1969 by unknown gunmen believed to be government security plainclothes. A number of students were killed and many more injured in an ensuing violence between government forces and the radicaluniversity students over who would claim the remains of the slain body of Tilahun Gizaw.
January 11, 1970: The Secessionist ELF (Al-Wahda) rebel fighters in Eritrea province attacked a military barrack in the northern province ofEritrea, an army soldier is killed at the incidence.
The International Airport known as locally ‘Bole International Airport’ innagurated in the outskirts of Addis Ababa to serve the city. The Airportis located in the Bole area, 6 km south east of the city centre.

The establishment of Metahara Sugar processing plant. Metahara Sugar Plantation the third in Ethiopia managed by the Dutch Company of Handels Vereeningung Amsterdam (HVA-Metahara), established a Sugar factory at Metahara. The Dutch Handels Vereeningung Amsterdam (HVA- Metahara) reinvested on a third factory to process Sugar at Metahara, thethird for the country after the Dutch HVA had dismantled it’s factory from Indonesia to reinvest in Ethiopia. The Karayus in the area staged an armed demonstration in Metehara which destroyed fences and buildings atthe HVA Metahara Sugar estate.

FC Ethio-Cement left winger international striker Ismael Garle, an ethnic-Somali origin deserts the national football squad on his attendance at the7th African Cup of Nations matches held in Khartoum, Sudan, the footballleft winger’s disappearance recognized as the first event in Ethiopian football.

March 14, 1970: The so-called Eritrean Liberation Front attack mediaoutlet and journalists in the northern province of Eritrea.

April 10, 1970: The Emperor has authorized major military campaigns against secessionist rebel bandits in Eritrea province, which not only failedto defeat the insurgents but to resulted death of senior commanding armyofficer Colonel Teshome Irgetou ambushed on the road to Keren, and a Martial-law imposed in Eritrea.

ALERT Hospital & Medical facility founded in western supburb of Addis Ababa. ALERT is a medical facility on the edge of Addis Ababa, specializingin Hansen's disease, also known as "leprosy". It was originally the All Africa Leprosy Rehabilitation and Training Center (hence the acronym), but the official name is now expanded to include tuberculosis: All Africa Leprosy, Tuberculosis and Rehabilitation Training Centre.

ALERT is a medical facility on the edge of Addis Ababa, specializing in Hansen's disease, also known as "leprosy". It was originally the All AfricaLeprosy Rehabilitation and Training Center (hence the acronym), but theofficial name is now expanded to include tuberculosis: All Africa Leprosy,Tuberculosis and Rehabilitation Training Centre.

ALERT's activities focus on its hospital, rehabilitation of leprosy patients, training programs for leprosy personnel from around the world, and leprosy control (administration of the Ethiopian Ministry of Health's regional leprosy control program). From the beginning, ALERT provided leprosy training for medical students from Addis Ababa University. Also atALERT is the Armauer Hansen Research Institute, founded in 1970, specializing in leprosy research. There is currently a 240-bed teaching hospital, which includes dermatology, ophthalmology, and surgery departments, also an orthopedic workshop, and a rehabilitation program. ALERT is the continuation and expansion of the leprosy hospital originally built by Dr. Thomas Lambie in 1922, which waslater named the Princess Zänäbä Wärq Hospital.

Addis Ababa Hilton Hotel with an International standard (Five Stars) established in Addis Ababa. AAH is the first of it's kind to be inauguratedas Hotel & Recreation business through direct foreign investment.
June 4, 1970: Emperor Haile-selassie made a royal visit to France and metPressident Georges Pompidou, to discuss on bilateral issues, and the fate of the"Territory of France, Afars and Issas-TFAI" (now Djibouti), then French overseas territory, among other bilateral issues. Emperor Haileselassie talks to news reporters about Djibouti's possible return to Ethiopia.

Turkish President Mr. Cevedet Sunay, made a state visit to Ethiopia.
October 13, 1970: His Holiness Patriarch Abune Basilios, the first Patriarchand Catholicos of the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahido Church, passed away in natural sickness. His Holyness Abuna Basilios the first Ethiopian 'Abune'Amharic meaning for 'Archbishop', and later to become the first patriarch of the EOTC to assum the title in the presence of His Majesty the Emperor of Ethiopia at St. Marks Cathedral in Cairo, Egypt, died of natural sickness.Following a state funeral service at Holy Trinity Cathedral in Addis Ababa, attended by the Emperor, the entire Imperial family, members of the Imperial Court and the government of Ethiopia, as well as the diplomatic corps and represetatives of various other Churches, Abuna Basilios was buried at Debre Libanos Monastry. He was succeeded by Abuna Theophilosas Acting-Patriarch of Ethiopia.

November 9, 1970: Emperor Haile Selassie I made a royal visit to Italy and the Vatican as a guest of President Giuseppe Saragat and Pope Paul.The emperor during his vist made extensive discussion with PM Sandro Pertini and foreign affairs minister Signor Aldo Moro.

January 22, 1971: Bahar Dar Airport and the Airlines in the northwesternprovince of Bege-Midr & Semien attacked by rebels suspected to be fighters of the secessionist ELF rebel group.
April 7, 1971: Abune Tewophilos elevated to Interim Patriarch of theEthiopian Orthodox Church.
April 1971: HIM Haile Selassie I made an official weeklong visit to thePeoples Republic of China to discuss bilateral issues with Chinese Communist Party leader Chairman Mao Tse-Tung in Peking.

May 7, 1971:Abune Tewophilos was enthroned as the second Patriarch ofEthiopia. The Interim Patriarch Abuna-Theofilos officially consecrated by the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahdo Church (EOTC) Holy-synod at the presence of His Majesty the Emperor of Ethiopia in Addis Ababa.
Archbishop (Abuna). Theofilos succeeded His Holiness Abuna-Basilios asInterim Ethiopian patriarch after having assumed the role of Acting- patriarch upon his death in October, 1970.

June, 1971: Emperor Haile Selassie recalled Ras Asrate-Medhin Kassa,declares Martial-law in ex-province of Eritrea, and appoints Lt. GeneralDebebe Haile-Mariam as Emergency-governor of Eritrea province whenthe security situation worsens in Eritrea province.
July, 1971: Emperor Haile-selassie I selected Ras Asrate-Medhin Kassa"President of the Imperial Crown council" to rejuvenate that body and oversee an orderly transfer of power on the Emperor's death to his designated successor, the Crownprince Asfaw-wossen Haile-selassie.

Side note;- Ras Asrate-Medhin Kassa (30 April, 1922 – 22 November, 1974) GCVO was a member of the nobility of the Ethiopian Empire. He was the fourth son of Ras Kassa Haile Darge, and his wife Princess (Leu'ilt) Zuriash Mulugeta, daughter of the famous Ras Mulugeta Yeggazu.Meantime, "The Lion of Judah monument" that provoked Zeray Deres's fury, which remained in Rome for several decades, was finally returned tobe reinstalled in the square in front of Addis Ababa's train station after long negotiations between Ethiopia and Italy.
The golden coloured statue of the “Lion of Judah” in it's complete glory stands on a black granite pedestal which is decorated with relief portraits of Emperors Menelik II, Empress Zewditu, Haile Selassie I, as well as Ras Makonnen Wolde-Michael, a renowned warrior. It was erected in 1930 justbefore Emperor Haile Selassie's coronation, it was looted by the Italian occupiers in 1935 and taken to Rome, where it was erected next to the Italian king, Vittorio Emanuelle’s Monument. Meantime, the anti-fascist patriot Major Abdissa Aga promoted by the emperor to the rank of Lt.
Colonel for his paid sacrifices during the anti-fascist struggles in the Balkans, he served as elite sub-commander of the imperial bodyguarduntil his sudden death in the followed years.

August, 1971: A hijack attempt against Ethiopian Airlines passengers plane by members of student movement is foiled as all the hijackers havebeen killed on board a DC-3 passenger plane, which later made an emergency landing. The hijack attempt led by Walelign Mekonnen Kassa ,whos born in March 22, 1945 in Debresina, in former Wollo province, is regarded as one of the most yet celebrated names during the Ethiopia's students movement of the 1960s to 1970s that sought to address burningissues of the peasant.

A female university student in the name of Martha Mebrahtu, an Ethiopianof Eritrean origin, was the daughter of senior police officer at the rank of Brigadier General in the imperial government. Martha and her colleague Wallelign Mekeonnen and other students from the Haile Selassie University of Addis Ababa hijacked an Ethiopian Airlines commercial planeto demonstrate their disapproval of the Haile Selassie government. She was killed in a raid along with others by security forces.
Side note: Martha Mebrahtu, a female student and her colleague WallelignMakonnen, a controversial theoretitian, and other students from Haile Selassie I University hijacked an Ethiopian Airlines commercial plane to demonstrate their disapproval of the Imperial regime. Martha Mebrahtu along with Wallelign and others were killed by an anti-hijacking security raid on board. Martha Mebrahtu an Ethiopian with Eritrean origin, was theonly female attended as to hijack a plane was the daughter of a senior police officer still serving under the imperial regime in the rank of Brigadier General (Mebrahtu Fisseha) whos entered to Ethiopia as a four years child from the then Eritrea under Italian protectorate as he told in 2006 when met this diarist at an occasional meeting, he was governor- general (enderassie) of Gemugofa province until after the removal of theimperial regime (he briefly served under Duerg regime) until he retires.

September, 1971: Prince Makonnen Haile Selassie Memorial Hospital soonto be turned “Black Lion Hospital” inaugurated.
October 8, 1971: Chairman Mao Tsetung of the Peoples republic of China meets withEmperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia: This was the first time since Chairman Mao appeared in public after the Lin Piao Incident.
October 12, 1971: Memorial service: Empress Farah, Emperor Haile Selassie I and Queen Anne-Marie. It was the first day of ceremony as His Imperial Majesty, Aryamer, King of Kings Mohammad Reza Pahlavi with Her Imperial Majesty, Empress Farah Pahlavi, paid homage to King of Kings Cyrus the Great's mausoleum at Pasarguard. For next two days dignitaries and heads of state of other nations began to arrive at Shiraz's airport and were greeted with honour and respect by His Imperial Majesty,King of King Mohammad Reza Pahlavi or Her Imperial Majesty, Empress Farah Pahlavi and were guided to the ancient land of Persepolis.
October 1971: His Holiness Abune Tewophilos, at the invitation of the Eastern Orthodox Patriarchs of Constantinople and Alexandria, paid a two-week-long visit to Egypt, Greece and Turkey.
November, 1971: Majour Abdissa Aga, a hero patriot of Italo-Ethiopianwar of 1935 to 41 officially honored. He was an international acclaimedanti-Fascist icon.

HEROIC ADVENTURE: Remembering Major Abdissa Aga

Abdissa Aga was born in Welega. His father lost his temper and killed his own brother when Abdissa was about 12 years old. Though he went as faras Addis Ababa to appeal for the release of his father, he was executed.
Sad and embittered, he joined the Ethiopian Army around the age of 14 and fought against Fascist Italy in 1936 in Ethiopia. He was captured and imprisoned in a concentration... camp in the island of Sicily in Italy. Therehe met Captain Julio, a Yugoslav hero.
The two became friends and made a daring escape from the concentrationcamp taking with them a dozen prisoners to the woods. They returned to the camp a few days later, at night, led by young Abdissa who was terriblyfeared by the Italians. Abdissa choked and silenced the guards. He and Julio took off the uniforms of the guards. Two of the former prisoners wore the uniforms, held the guns of the dead soldiers, and stood at the gate of the camp pretending to be Fascist watchmen. Abdissa and Julio, followed by the other partisans Penetrated the camp, released all of the prisoners, fought with some of the Fascist officers, robbed them off their ammunitions and supplies, as well as trucks full of weapons, and drove back to the woods.

They continued to fight in that manner freeing prisoners and robbing concentration camps, banks, government warehouses, etc. until their number grew to an army, and until the Italian Government battled with them fiercely. The, France and Russia recognized Major Abdissa, Captain Julio and the rest of the partisans and began to supply them with arms and provisions. Major Abdissa Aga was chosen to lead the international army of partisans (former prisoners) which consisted of Americans, English, French, Ethiopians and other nationals. Captain Julio became the commander of the Yugoslav partisans. This way the partisans weakened Italy and contributed to their defeat. Major Abdissa Aga was the first hero who entered and captured the city of Rome sitting in a jeep, waving first and foremost the flag of Ethiopia, which was also tied around the arms of his international soldiers including Americans, French and English. When the armies of the allies reached Rome, they honored Major Abdissa Aga highly. The British made him the Commander of the British Military Police and sent him to Germany to fight against the German Army. He battled with the German Nazis in different cities, defeated them, controlled the cities and villages, and entered Berlin triumphantly again waving Ethiopianand British flags. He was in the spot light all over the world.

At the end of the war, the British, the Canadians and the Americans wanted him to join their armies promising him high ranks. He refused adamantly saying that though his motherland, Ethiopia, was poor, he would still return to her and see the face of his Emperor whom he had missed for so long. This incensed the Allies, and believe it or not, they accused him of ravaging the Italian Fascists when he was a partisan. TheFrench, the British, the Americans, even the Russians to some extent condemned him. Fortunately, a noble British general who had decorated him with medals previously fought for his release changing the prison sentence to financial fine, which was paid by Abdissa himself and the British Government.

The great Ethiopian hero finally returned to Ethiopia longing to see his country and Emperor. The Emperor welcomed him and sent him to Ras Abebe Aregai, the then Minister of Defense so that he would employ him.Ras Abebe and some of the most important patriots Ethiopia were scaredof Abdissa's valor and feared for their own positions. So, instead of promoting him to a general, Ras Abebe sent Major Abdissa to the Holeta Military Academy as a simple cadet. After several months of hardship in Holeta he graduated as a first lieutenant, to the surprise of the British officers whom Abdissa used to command when they were in Europe.

Abdissa was oppressed in the Ethiopian Army. He was sent to the Ogaden and fought against the Somali invaders displaying incredible courage and military tactics. In spite of what he did to raise the pride of Ethiopia and tosafeguard her territorial integrity, he didn't rise above the rank of a captain for many, many years until somebody (they say Captain Julio and Marshal Tito) drew the attention of the Emperor towards the end of the Emperor's life and regime. The Emperor raised his rank to colonel and made him his bodyguard. Colonel Abdissa Aga the great died a few yearsafter the 1974 atrocious acts. The Italian Government did all it could to catch Abdissa by force. As they failed to do so, they tried to cajole and allure him by promising him a big post and by begging him to stop fighting and join their ranks. If I recall correctly, Abdissa shot the Italianofficer who brought him the letter from the Italian Government.

Finally, the Second World War broke out. The Allied forces, Britain, the USA partisans chose Abdissa to be their leader and called him Major. The Italian Fascists were terrified since they knew how brave Ethiopians were recalling the Battle of Dogali, Ambalage, Adwa, Maichew and rememberingthe bravery of Zerai Deres, whom later, Abdissa tried in vain to see and hug. Taking advantage of the fear of the Italian people, Italian gangsters painted their faces black and started robbing banks and pillaging villages imposing as Abdissa and other Ethiopians who were also partisans together with him. Abdissa caught these awe-inspiring gangsters and executed them, since they were discrediting his name by their Abdissa Aga" (text taken from an article by Dr. Fikre Tolossa)

December 7, 1971: DIARIES: On Thursday of this year University StudentMartha Mebrahtu Fisseha wrote her diaries.

Side note: Martha's father Mebrahtu Fisseha was one of the senior Policeofficers in the title of “Brigadier General” under the imperial government, servs his country also as governor-general (enderassie) of former Gemugofa province, originated from former Eritrea province and her mother from Ethiopia.

Martha wrote "We, women of Ethiopia and Eritrea, have made our life ready to participate in a struggle, and we would like to explain the nature of our struggle to our sisters and brothers all over the world. Our struggledemands a bitter sacrifice in order to liberate our oppressed and exploitedpeople from the yokes of feudalism and imper...ialism. In this struggle wehave to be bold and merciless. Our enemies can only understand such a language. We, women of Ethiopia, are not only exploited as members of the working classes and peasants, we are also victims of gender inequality, treated as second class citizens. Therefore, our participation in this struggle must double the efforts of other oppressed groups; we must fight harder, we must be at the forefront. We must equally participate in the struggle for economic and social justice that our brothers have waged.We have a responsibility to become a formidable force in the revolutionary army.

The rights for freedom and equality are not flow from heaven. We, women, have to be organized and have to make ourselves ready for any armed struggle. This fight will need financial, material, and moral support of progressive international women’s associations. We reach out to our sisters in other parts of the world so you can help us achieve this goal; we hope your support will reach us as we need it. We affirm our full supportfor the oppressed people of the world who are struggling to free themselves from imperialism, colonialism, neo-colonialism, and racism! We stand by the freedom fighters in Vietnam, Palestine, Guinea-Bissau, and in other African and Latin American countries; we also champion the Civil Rights leaders in North America. Victory to the popularstruggle of the people! May the people's movement for freedom in Ethiopia live forever! My sisters and my brothers, let's keep on fighting!" (Text ends)

February 5, 1972: The United Nations Security Council (UNSC) has confered in Addis Ababa, the Ethiopian capital upon global issues in it's special session. Such UNSC session was the first of it's kind to be held onforeign and the African soil since the foundation of the UN organization in1945.
February 1972: His Holiness Abune Tewophilos consecrated six new bishops at the Holy Trinity Cathedral, the first of two consecrations thePatriarch carried out during his brief incumbency.

February, 1972: The war Sudan's first civil war brokered successfully by His Majesty the Emperor of Ethiopia, in Addis Ababa. The Addis Ababa Agreement, also known as the "Addis Ababa Accord", was a set of compromises that ended the first Sudanese Civil War held between 1955and 1972.
Side note;- The war Sudan's first civil war brokered successfully by the Imperial Ethiopian Government, in Addis Ababa. The "Anya-Anya Agreement I" between the Sudanese government and the Anya-Anya rebels in the south ended the 17-years old civil war that was existed in the south between 1955 and 1972. The followed "Anya-Anya AgreementII" grants self-governance to the South. But only to be cut shortly.
A Month In Ethiopian History
Wemezekir- Local Megabit 12 ,1964 (March 21, 1972): Derartu Tulu wholater became the first Ethiopian woman to win a medal in the Olympic Games and the first Black African woman to win an Olympic gold medal was born in Bekoji district of former Arussi governorate. She grew up tending cattle in the highlands of Arussi Province, the province where great athletes such as the latters Legendary Haile Guebre-Selassie, the sensational Kenenisa Bekele, and others came from. Derartu's cousins Ejegayehu Dibaba, Tirunesh Dibaba and Genzebe Dibaba are all successfulinternational long-distance runners, continuing the successful athletic history of the family and the nation. Dearatu was seventh child in a familyof 10 children. Even in elementary school, Derartu excelled in horse ridingcompetitions. Derartu's first significant win came in a 400 meter race in her school where she out-run the school's start male athlete. That along with a win in 800 meters race in her district convincingly put Derartu in apath of a successful career in Athletics. In 1988, Derartu represented theregion of Arsi and competed in a national 1500 meters race where she won a bronze medal.

When she was 17, Derartu was hired by the Ethiopian Police Force. In 1989, she competed in her first international race of 6 kilometer cross- country in Norway but was 23rd. In a year's time, though, she competed in the same race and won the Gold Medal. Derartu won international recognition and success in the 90's. Her record-setting win in the 10,000 meter race in Bulgaria and her win in the same distance race in Cairo, Egypt are worth mentioning. Derartu's win in the 10,000 meter race in the1992 Barcelona Olympics goes down in the History Books as the first gold-medal win ever by Black/African woman. She also won Gold at the 1995 IAAF World Cross Country Championships having arrived at the race only an hour before the start. In 1997 she won the world cross country title forthe second time but struggled on the 10,000 meters World Championship during the game and in competions before that. After giving birth, she came back to long distance competition and made history. She won the 10,000 metres Olympic gold for the second time at the Sydney Olympic Games, the only woman to have done this in the short history of the event. She repeated her Olympic victory at Sydney Olympics in 2000. Shealso became World Champion in 2001. She had also won the IAAF World Cross Country Championships title for the third time. Her transition to the marathon was rewarded with victories in London and Tokyo Marathons in 2001. In 2009, at the age of 37, she won the New York City Marathon.

Source: MediaEthiopia.com and Wikipedia.

WEMEZEKIR:

From what I recall about General Aman Michael Andom and "The Andoms"

The following is a write up by Orion Netsanet over the Andoms. Orion Nètsanèt is absolutely correct and your observation is based on knowledge and accurate Ethiopian family history.

1) General Amane Michael Andom was purely an Ethiopian by blood, by ideology and by background. His father was born in the Italian created and named "Eritrea" and his mother was from Tigrai Region of Ethiopia.

2) The Duerg did NOT "give" the Lt. General Aman M. Andom "nominal power" to "derail Eritrea's aspiration". He was the most qualified Ethiopian to take the position of leadership within their clique.

3) The Emperor Haile Selassie did NOT "quickly remove his military commander role and appoint him as a senator after his "friend General Numiery of Sudan took over power in the Sudan". The Lt General Aman Michael Andom was given strict orders by the Emperor Haile Selassie to not cross into Somalia and he defied his orders in April 1964. He was then removed from his military commanding roles and sent to the United States until 1965. He returned and was placed as a senator within Ethiopian Parliament. His “friend General Jafar Numiery” did not take control of Sudan until April1969 – that is 5 years after the Emperor Haile Selassie removed him from his position and not this outrageous narration made to mislead the mass into believing the Emperor was somehow worried when there was no connection.

Lt. General Aman Andom was a proud Ethiopian that believed in the core principles of Ethiopianism. His father was Ato Wolde-Mikael Andom from Hamassien (in today's central highland Eritrea) and his mother was W/ro Gidey Reda from Tigray, Ethiopia. His father was educated in the Lutheran school systems but fled to British controlled Sudan where he was an interpreter and an officer where he held different positions. W/ro Gidey Reda was a teacher who was also educated in the Lutheran School system. She fled with her husband to the Sudan where they gave birth to 6 children, named as follows. Ato Wolde-Mikael Andom of Hamassien named his 4 sons the following names:

Lt. General Aman Andom was born on July 21, 1924 in Khartoum, Sudan.

Meles Mikael Andom
Amanuel Mikael Andom
Yohannes Mikael Andom
Aman Mikael Andom

Ato Mikael Andom of Hamassien also named his 2 daughters the following names: Tsion Mikael Andom, and Ethiopia-Hagerey Mikael Andom

The name of his daughter “Ethiopia-Hagerey” is testimony about the sense of “Ethiopiawinet” in the Andom household.

Lt. General Aman Andom served in the Ethiopian Army and was sent to Korea under the rank of Lieutenant General in Command of the Third Division. In 1964, Somalia attacked Ethiopia in which he victoriously put an end to their aggression and was dubbed the "Desert Lion".

In the 1974 turmoil in Ethiopia, Lt. General Aman Andom went to Asmara and spoke at the “Nigist Saba” (Queen of Sheba) Stadium where 80,000 people were there to listen to his speech about “Ethiopia First”, peace and unity in Amharic, Tigrinya and Arabic.

Here is a snippet of his speech:

-“ኤርትራ የኢትዮጵያ ማህረት እንደሆነ ች የኢትዮጵያ ታሪክ ምስክር ነ ው። ኤርትራ ኢትዮጵያን እናቴ ብላ ያቀፈችውየ ኢትዮጵያ የ በኩር ልጅ በ ሚሆኗ ነ ው። ኤርትራ ከእና ት አገ ሯ ከኢትዮጵያ የ ተዋሐደችውበ ፈቃዷ

እንጂ ኃይልና ግዴታ አልነ በረባትም፡ የኤርትራ ልጆች ለኢትዮጵያ ታርክ ያደረጉት የተጋድሎ ፍጹምነ ት በወርቅ ቀለምየ ተጻፈ ነ ው፡ የኤርትራ ችግር የኢትዮጵያ ችግር ስለነ በረ የጦር ኃይሎችን ይበልጥ ያስሚረ ውችግር ሆኖ ቆይቷል። ይህ ምየ ወንድሞቻችን ጫሰቆል ለጦር ኃይሉ ለንቅናቄ ውኃይልና ብርታት ሰጠው፡ የ ጦር ኃይሎች ንቅናቄ እ ንዲነ ሣሣ ከአደረጉ ት ከባድ ምክ ንያ ቶችምአ ንዱ የ ኤ ርትራ ችግር ምፍትሔ አ ለ ማግ ኘ ት ነ በ ር።

-ሕዝቡ ፍ ር ድና ፍ ት ሕ አ ጥ ቶ፤ ደ ሀ ውወዝ አ ደ ሩ የ ሚ ሰ ማ ውጠ ፍ ቶ ማ ብ ቱ፤ አ ማጻ ኛ በ ሆ ኑ ት ባ ለ ሥ ልጣ ኖ ች በ ተ ለ ይ በ ማ ሳ ፍ ን ቱ ና በ ሚ ኳ ን ን ቱ ሜ ሬ ቱ ን ና እ ር ስ ቱ ን ተ ቀ ም ቶ፤ የ ደ ሃ ውወ ገ ን እ የ ተ ዳ ከ ሚ፤ ሀ ብ ታ ሙ እ የ ደ ረ ጀ ሲ ኖ ር ቆ ይ ቷ ል። ወ ዝ አ ደ ሩ ሥ ራ ና የ ዕ ለ ት ጉ ር ሱ ን አ ጥ ቶ እ የ ተ ን ከ ራ ተ ተ፤ በ ረ ን ዳ እ ያ ደ ረ፤ ሌ ላ ውባ ለ ጸ ጋ ማ ሳ ፍ ን ቱ ና ሚ ኳ ን ን ቱ ሌ ላ ሰ ውበ ሠ ራ ውሚ ና እ የ ተ ን ፈ ላ ሰ ሱ ድ ር ብ ፎ ቆ እ የ ሠ ሩ፤ በ ሐ ር ና በ አ ረ ግ ራ ጊ አ ል ጋ እ ን ቅ ል ፋ ቸ ውን እ የ ለ ጠ ጡ፤ ጭ ማ እ የ በ ሉ ጥ ጋ ቡ አ ላ ስ ች ል ብ ሏ ቸ ውታ ማ ኝ የ ሆ ነ ውን የ ኢ ት ዮ ጵ ያ ን ሕ ዝ ብ በ ጥ ጋ ብ ረ ገ ጡ ት።

-እ ኛ የ ጦ ር ኃ ይ ሎ ች ለ ኢ ት ዮ ጵ ያ ሕ ዝ ብ ስ ን ሰ ለ ፍ፤ የ ኢ ት ዮ ጵ ያ ታ ሪ ካ ች ን ን እ ን ገ ነ ባ ለ ን እ ን ጂ አ ና ፈ ር ስ ም፡ ች ግ ሩ ን የ ፈ ጡ ሩ ት በ ዳ ዮ ች ን ን ት ና የ ማ ሳ ፍ ን ት ወ ገ ኖ ች ቢ ሆ ኑ ም፤ የ ጦ ር ኃ ይ ሎ ች ከ ተ ራ ው ኢ ት ዮ ጵ ያ ዊ ወ ገ ን ና ክ ፍ ል በ ሚ ሆ ና ቸ ውኢ ት ዮ ጵ ያ ለ ደ ረ ሰ ባ ት ች ግ ር በ ፍ ጹ ምኢ ት ዮ ጵ ያ ዊ ነ ት መ ን ፈ ስ መ ፍ ት ሔ ውን እ ና ስ ገ ኝ ላ ታ ለ ን ብ ለ ን እ ና ምና ለ ን።”

-ሌ/ጄ ኔ ራ ል አ ማ ን አ ን ዶ ም አ ሥ ሙ ራ በ ሚ ኘ ውን ግ ሥ ተ ሳ ባ ስ ታ ዲ ዮ ም ለ ፲ሺ ህ ሕ ዝ ብ ያ ስ ተ ላ ለ ፈ ውን ግ ግ ር። (፤ ፱ ፲ ፷ ፤ ዓ ሞ ተ ምሕ ረ ት)

Although his actions in playing a role in the removal of Ethiopia's last rightful ruler was seen as unforgivable by some, Lt. General Aman Andom was a proud Ethiopian that believed in Ethiopia and it's monarchy. The mess brought on by the anti-Ethiopian force of Mengistu Haile-Mariam will always be remembered. With the death/murder of Aman Andom, this helped secure more supporters from the province of Eritrea to assist the newly formed EPLF and to a lesser degree the ELF.

Lt. General Aman Andom was 16 years old when he joined his father and the Ethiopian Patriots in Sudan where they crossed into Ethiopia (1941) with the forces of Emperor Haile Selassie to liberate it from the 5 year Italian occupation.

Lt. General Aman Andom had 1 son that he named “Mikael” after his father. He also had 3 daughters, one of which he named “Ethiopia” - after the country he so loved.

Wemezekir: just this day on March 23, 1529 - Muslim forces from theAdal Sultanate and led by Ahmed Ibn Ibrahim al Ghazi (Gragn Mohammed) had their first victory over Christian forces at Battle of Shimbira Kure.

Wemezekir: just this day n March 24th , 1559 Muslim warriors led by NurIbn Mujahid, the nephew of Gragn Mohammed killed King Gelawdeos and avenged the death of his uncle who was killed by Gelawdeos's forces 16 years ago.

March 25, 2012: This week in Ethiopian history March 24th to 31st, Wemezekir: just this day on March 24th, 1559: Muslim forces led by NurIbn Mujahid, the nephew of Gragn Mohammed killed Atse Gelawdeos andavenged the death of his uncle who was killed by Gelawdeos's forces 16 years ago.

Wemezekir: just this day March 27th, 1954: Colonel John C. Robinson also known as 'The Brown Condor' , the African American Aviator & Aviation instructor who was among Black professionals who offered theirservices to Ethiopia during the Italo-Ethiopian conflict died of injuries he suffered from a plane crash accident that happened two weeks earlier at the Addis Ababa Airport. He was buried the next day at Gulele cemetery ina large & massive ceremony attended by huge crowd among others Emperor Haile Selassie I himself, Prince Mekonnen Haile Selassie, The Duke of Harrar, Military Commanders, Cabinet Ministers and other government officials.

Wemezekir: just this day on March 30th, 1960: Brigadier General Mengistu Neway who was commander of the Imperial Bodyguard and whotogether with his younger brother Germame Neway, led an unsuccessful coup against Emperor Haile I Selassie was hanged in public market after two days Haile Selassie appointed Court ordered for him to be hanged. A documentary film provided sound recording of the court proceedings with General Mengistu's voice defending himself & arguing his case. The documentary is well done in terms of bringing personal recollections of those who knew General Mengistu & particularly his brother Germame Neway as well as providing analysis by scholars such as Professor Bahru Zewde why the coup attempt failed.

April 6, 1972: Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Party (EPRP) initiated by exiled pan-Ethiopian student groups in then West Germany. The EPRP(ኢህአፓ) was founded under the name of Ethiopian People's Liberation Organization (EPLO) in West Berlin, Germany, by exiled Ethiopian students and with the assistance of the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine. At this first congress, a Central Committee was elected that included Desta Tadesse, Kiflu Teferra, Kiflu Tadesse, TesfayeDebessay, Berhane Meskel Reda, Iyasu Alemayehu, and Zeru Kehishen, with the latter four elected to the EPLO Politburo and Berhane Meskel Reda elected the organization's general secretary.

April, 1972: Emperor Haile Selassie I visited Peoples Republic of China andwas the first foreign head of state to meet Chairman Mao Zedong following the death of Mao's designated successor Lin Piao earlier in the month with a plane crash in Mongolia.

April, 1972: A French geologist in the name of Maurice Taieb discovered the Hadar Formation in the Afar Triangle of Ethiopia. He then formed theInternational Afar Research Expedition (IARE), inviting three scientists from three countries to co-direct the research.
May 1972: Crownprince Reyes Don Juan Carlos and Princess Dona Sofia ofSpain made a royal visit to Ethiopia.
His Majesty The Emperor With Deutch/German Stern TV: Deutch/German Stern TV 1972 Documentary on the life and duties of Emperor Haile Selassie by Wolfgang Webber: Probably the only German documentary film made by Stern tv about His Majesty the Emperor of Ethiopia Haile Selassie I, King of Kings, Lion of Judah, Elect of Himself andLight of this World, Christ in His Kingly Character.
May 1972:ETHIO/SOMALIA: “Greater Somalia Expansionist Policy” -Agitation & Propaganda Reaches At It’s Peak’

Side note: The Soviets arms build up possesed by Somalia reaches at, 50 MIG 15s and 21s, IL28s 250, T34 and T35 Soviet tanks,10 artillery battalions, SAM 2 Missiles, 2 Skoryi class naval destroyers, 2 sub chasers,10 MTBs, over 300 armored personnel carriers and approximately 2, 000 ex-Soviet military advisors and technicians. According to sources, Egypt, the historic rival of Ethiopia, was expending millions of dollars a year in promoting the concept of "Greater Somalia (Soomaliwein)” to agitate from which it hoped to profit under it's own formula of the unity of the Nile- valley.

Meanwhile, when Majour General Mohammed Siad Barre seized power in Mogadishou in October, 1969, thwarted attempts at an understanding between Ethiopia and Somalia. He pledged to renew efforts to establish a"Greater Somalia" that would encompassing about one-third of Ethiopia'sterritory the Ogaden, most part of Djibouti, and National Frontier District(NFD) of Kenya. Encouraged by the breakdown of authority in Addis Ababa after the September, 1974 overthrow of emperor Haile Selassie, Somalia provided equipment, as well as moral and organizational supportto insurgent movements in the Ogaden and southern Ethiopia.

The WSLF initially was founded by a young captain called Yusuf Dheere Mohamed Sugaal (Yuusuf the tall man) who was educated and trained in Syria, after finishing high school in Hargeissa. Upon his return from Syria, Yusuf Dheere has created the "Ururka dhalinyara soomaali galbeed" or theWestern Somali Youth Organisation. Yusuf Dheere, who was well connected and from a noble family, met the Somali president Mohammed Siad Barre in 1973 after putting the Somali elders behind his new plan, and convinced the Somali president to do something about the Ogaden region. So Siad Barre gave Yusuf Dheere 2 years to give diplomacy a chance and to prepare the Somali National Army (SNA), for it was still unproven. In the meanwhile, Yusuf Dheere was told to recruit about 1500 volunteers and was permitted rations for only 1500 people; in the space ofa month, he recruited over 3000 soldiers, most of them were old fighters from all over the country.

Two years after the initial meeting, and after going through the UN and unsuccessful peace meeting with Emperor Haile Selassie, Yusuf Dheere was given the go ahead he wanted and was told to get control of at least60% of the Ogaden region before the Somali army would involve itself inthe fighting. The WSLF found its opportunity when the Duerg overthrew Haile Selassie in 1974, and switched from the American support to the Soviet Union. Two years later, when the WSLF had control of most of the Ogaden, the first time since the Second world war that all Somalia was united with the exception of the NFD region in Kenya. The WSLF was supported in its rebellion by the Somali Abo Liberation Front (SALF), whose sphere of operations was in the provinces of Bale, Sidamo, and Arussi, where it advocated union with Somalia or the creation of an independent state. Somalia equipped both groups with Soviet arms, andlater with the Somali army. Both groups also received aid and training from various Arab and socialist states, including Cuba.

September 4, 1972: Sergeant Mirutse Yifter Tekle Haimanot was made hisOlympic debut in the 1972 Munich Summer Olympics held in August 26 toSeptember 10 where he won a bronze medal in 10,000 metres. However, he arrived too late for the 5000 metres final.

September 10, 1972: Majour Mammo Wolde, a member of the ImperialBodyguard had won the Silver medal in the Marathon race in the 1972 Munich Olymypics summer games at the age of 40, winning bronze.

Became the second Ethiopian to win the title in the Marathon.

October, 1972: The Autobiography of Emperor Haile Selassie I entitled “Hiwotena Ye Ethiopia Irmija” (My Life and Ethiopia’s Progress 1892-1937(London, 1972), published. In this book, Emperor Haile Selassie praises Lorenzo’s diplomatic skill and the outstanding services he rendered to thenation. The Autobiography of Emperor Haile Selassie I, translated by Edward Ullendorff, Oxford University Press, 1976, pp.299-312.

November 7, 1972: Crownprince Baudouin and Princess Fabiola of Belgiumarrived for official visit to Ethiopia.

November 13, 1972: Lalibella Church visited by His Majesty King Beduinand Princess Fabiola of Belgium. King Baudouin I of Belgium arrived in Addis Ababa for an official visit in Ethiopia as royal guest of emperor Haile Selassie I.

November 24, 1972: Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Party (EPRP) - የኢትዮጵያ ሕዝባዊ አብዮታዊ ፓርቲ (ኢሕአፓ) founded as Birhane-Mesquel Reda it's General-secretary. Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Party (EPRP) whoseestablished by a founding congress that lasted from April 2 to 9, 1972 informer West Germany with the declared aim of fighting for feudalism, imperialism and bureaucratic capitalism to a forseeable formation of Maoist style state. The EPRP, since its formation has embraced the philosophy of Marxism-Leninism, which was increasingly popular amongmany nationalists and revolutionaries throughout Africa and much of theThird World at the time.

November 24, 1972: Ethiopia and Peoples Republic of China forgeddiplomatic ties, the two countries have maintained good relations.

January 18, 1973: French President Georges Pompidou is received by theEthiopian Emperor in his arrival at Bole Haile Selassie I Airport.
January 23, 1973: Secessionist Eritrean secessionist fighters made attackon civilian and military targets in the northern province of Eritrea.
Meantime, Dr. Minassie Haile, who had recently been appointed Imperial Minister of Foreign Affairs, undertook a serious of diplomatic tours throughNorth African Arab Maghreb states for the purpose of alligning some of thehostilities towards Ethiopia with regard both the scessionist war in Eritrea province and the expansionist concept of "Greater Somalia (Soomaliwein)"policies, a hostility which by this time had reached at its dangerous proportions.

In Memory of the great musician Seifu Yohannes:
The Soul Echoes Band in the 70s were the first independent band to be recorded in Ethiopia. When Mulatu Astatqe returned from the United States in 1968, the two bands he had an opportunity to work with were the Ras Band and The Soul Echoes. It was during this time that Mulatu introduced the Soul Echoes band to Amha Eshete. Amha Eshete was takenby the bands sound and agreed to record them in 1969. The Soul Echoes arranged and played the music to Seyfu Yohannes' popular songs, Tizita and Mela-Mela. The late singer Seifu Yohannes who died mysteriously at the age of 26, also emitated large number of songs, and recorded very little (just six songs vinyl). It would seem his performances made an especially striking expression: he was dubbed the Ethiopian James Brown.The same nickname was applied - rather more justifiably to Alemayehu Eshete who had also been called 'Elvis'. But there is no disputing the excellence a song like 'Mela Mela' which manages to render several popular Abyssinian tunes in all their pulsating thrill. Working closely with Mulatu Astaque and Teffera Makonnen. Seifu scored another syncretic hit with Ebo-la-la adapted from a Guraghe tune. (Text ends)
April, 1973: The Oromo Liberation Front known as in afan-Oromiffa 'AddaBilisummaa Oromoo', or OLF, established at the neigborhood of the el- Khobar prison in Khartoum Sudan. The OLF is an organization founded byOromo nationalists to promote self-determination for the Oromo people against what they call "Abyssinian colonial rule". The Oromo Liberation Front [OLF] known in afan-Oromo as "Adda bilisummaa oromoo (ABO)" isa political organization that is struggling for the realization of the nationalself-determination for the Oromo people and establishment of independent state of Oromia. It's logo Descrbes: A sycamore tree (odaa) is shown in the logo as a symbol of Oromo's egalitarian Gadaa system of governance, which is the guiding principle of this media outlet.

May, 25, 1973: The Organization of African Unity (OAU) conevened for its10th anniversary celebrations of its founding.

Side note: The neighboring Somalia president General Mohammed Siad Barre refused to attend, he sent instead VP Colonel Ismael Ali Abokor witha message to be read at the coference. In his message the Somali president stated that he was unable to participate on the conference because of "the very tense grave situation on his countrys border with Ethiopia and charged rival Ethiopia amassing troops to the common border in preparation for an attack on Somalia, but at the summit conference VP Ismael Abokor's blames were responded by the premier Aklilu Habte-Wold on the HIM presence. During the session the Libyan head of delegation led by Mr. Ali Abdalla Triki was also accused the Ethiopian government of hosting US military base at it's soil in Asmara, and requests for the removal of the OAU headquarters from Addis ababa to other African country, the Libyan delegation claims were faced by a strongly phrased response from Dr. Minassie Haile, the Foreign Minister ofEthiopia. At the conclusion of the 10h OAU summit conference of heads ofstates and governments, then chairman of the summit conference of heads of states and governments, the Nigerian head of state Majour- General Yakubu Gowon told reporters, "In fact the Libyan government hasthe right to claim for it, but as head of state of the Nigerian Federal Republic, we have not being convinced on the request, and we do not believe the headquarters of the OAU would move soon, and confidently speaking, the OAU headquarters will not move from Addis Ababa".

June 14, 1973: CINEMA: The Hollywood Goes Africa - SHAFT IN AFRICA Released In Ethiopia' John Guillermin's Shaft in Africa the third film in the blaxploitation trilogy of films, running time 112 minutes that starred actorRichard Roundtree as John Shaft included by Frank Finlay as Amafi, Vonetta McGee as Aleme,Neda Arneric as Jazar, and the Ethiopians stage and screen legends Debebe Eshetu as Waza, and Zenebetch Tadesse nicknamed "Chira Keresh" as … whos D. John Guillermin directed and Stirling Silliphant did the screenplay. Distributed by Metro Goldwin Meyer (MGM) Warner Bros. Shaft in Africa, the second sequel to 1971's Shaft. Assecond sequels go, Shaft in Africa proceeds to Ethiopia. Shaft in Africa presents an outsider's view of the continent. The total cost of the production went up to $2,142, 000.

September 12, 1973: Emperor Haile Selassie I the Ethiopian monarch returned to Germany for a second time visit almost 20 years later, on his arrival Chancellor Willy Brandt entertained his guest with a sumptuous state banquet, this time hundreds of thousands of Ethiopians in near northprovince of Wollo were in desperate need of food. A popular revolt was in the air; rumors of self-enrichment, corruption and nepotism at courts were circulating. Exactly one year after the meeting with Chancellor Willy Brandt, the emperor was ousted by the new military leaders in Addis Ababa and died a year later in a small palace room, aged 83, under circumstances that remain unclear to this day.

October, 1973: Just after the Yom-Kippur war of Egypt and Israel, it wasannounced that the United States and Ethiopia had agreed to close downthe “Kagnew Military Defense Instalation of 1953” in Asmara.

October 25, 1973: The Sport's legend Majour Abebe Biquila passed awaytwo years after being paralized of a severe injury from Car accident.

Side note;- The great Ethiopian Marathon runner Majour Abebe Bikila wasborn on August 7, 1932, in the village of Jato, located 25 kilometers outside the town of Mendida, Ethiopia. His father was a shepherd. Abebe decided to work for the Imperial Bodyguard to support his family, and walked over 20 kilometer to Addis Ababa where he started as a private bodyguard for the members of the royal family. Onni Niskanen, a Finnish-born Swede, was hired by the Ethiopian government to train potential athletes. He soon spotted Abebe Bikila. Athlete Abebe Bikila was a doubleOlympic marathon champion from Ethiopia, most famous for winning a marathon gold medal in the 1960 Summer Olympics while running barefoot. Majour Abebe Biquila died from a cerebral haemorrhage, relatedto the after-effects of the Car accident. The Imperial Ethiopian Government proclaimed a national day of mourning and, estimated 75, 000 mourners attended Abebe Biquila's funeral in Addis Ababa. A stadiumin Addis Ababa is named in his honor.

November 3, 1973: (Tikimt 23, 1966 E.C) The English translation of “MyLife and Ethiopia`s Progress” – Volume II published.

November 3, 1973: Senegalese president Leopold Sedar Senghor becamethe first winner of the Haile Sellassie I Foundation (HSIF) Prize for AfricanLiterature. The citiation described him as a “best African who wrote a number of books, essays and poems”. And the prize ETB 70, 000 was awarded “for his outstanding contribution to the African Literature”. But the president had sent the awrded sum of money and items to the Imperial government in the wake of a severe famine in near north province of Wollo this time.

November 1973: The veteran Radio/TV news caster Assaminew Guebre-Wold mysteriously found dead in a hotel room in southern Addis Ababa,widely believed assassinated by security plainclothes.

The Crownprince Asfaw-wossen Haile-selassie had suffered a massive stroke, his family accompanied him to Geneva, Switzerland where he wasundergoing treatment.
January 12, 1974: Rank-and-file soldiers of the Negele Borana garrison mutiny over bad food and lack of drinking water. They seize the Emperor'spersonal envoy, commander of the Ground Forces Lt. General Deresse Dubale, and force him to eat and drink as they did.
The 2nd Walia Infantry Division based in Eritrea province followed the suit,demanding nearly 23 administrative points and custodied... the provincial Governor, vice Governor, Commander -in-chief of the military, his Deputy and other senior officers of the 2nd Army division to show up support for the mutiniers in Negelle Borena. The personal envoy sent by the emperor from Addis Ababa to Asmara arrested, and the second army division demanded the ouster of Prime Minister Aklilu Habtawald cabinet throughit's controlled Radio Asmara.

In early February 1974, The secessionist Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF) known as “Jabhaa”, and the latter off-shot the Eritrean Peoples LiberationFront (EPLF) known as “Shaabia” this time, eventually agreed to combinetheir operations against the Imperial Defence Forces in the province, concentrating on the eastern lowlands and the coastal areas where there is an organized resistance.
In early February, 1974: British Journalist namely, Jonathan Dimblby whos widely admired internationally for his famously internationally TV coverage of “the hidden hunger” on the Ethiopian famine that occurred innear north province of Wollo.
February 10, 1974: Technicians and Non-commissioned officers at the Debre Zeit Air Force base mutiny, holding their officers hostage for threedays in a mess tent.
February 14, 1974: Students at Haile Selassie I University in the capital go on strike against a proposed reform in the educational system (SectorReview). High school teachers and college professors support the studentstrike.
February 15, 1974 The growing Somali threat and a low key insurgency inEritrea compelled the Emperor to claim for more military aid from the US. Side note: HIM Haile Selassie had met with US President Richard Nixon in Washington DC, discussed bilateral issues, the President has sought to puthis request for arms assistance off with the assurance that he had little to fear from the Soviets he (Nixon) and then Soviet leader Leonid Ilych Brezhnev had entered into secret agreements for maintaining the status quo in the Horn of Africa, and there was only the promise to study the emperors requests. The rejection by the one state that for four decades had commanded his unswerving attachment was fatal, and marked the effective end of the emperor’s reign, according to Horn of Africa analysts. The Imperial regime had faced several rebellions and outright challenges to its policies, and rampant but silent disagreements among officials of theHis Majesty’s administration. The Emperor was above the constitution in terming the king above all (Nigus Aykesesim or Aygesesim), which he saidhe granted the constitution to the people in his own free will. He breachedit in terms of devolution of power.
This breach led to a serious quarrel between the monarch and renowned, visionary, incorruptible dissidents whose sought political asylum in the west where some of them had to contend with several death threats on their life for their incessant and incisive criticism of the imperial regime. Failure to devolve power to the premier in accordance with the existing constitution Article 73 was the main cause of the irreversible split betweenthe principled personalities and the monarch that ruled in accordance with the precept of the divine right of the monarch.
Mid February, 1974,: Imperial Ministry of Defence (IMoD) command stand’
1, His Majesty the Emperor (Commander-in-chief of the Armed Forces) (inField Marshal title)
18 Ground Forces senior officers in the Lt. General title 29 Ground Forces senior officers in the Majour-General title 98 Ground Forces senior officers in the

Brigadier-General title
1 IEN senior officer Deputy commander-in-chief in Rear-Admiral title1 IEN senior officer in Commodore title second in stand
February 18, 1974: Teachers including the Haile Selassie I University ceased the learning/teaching process at schools throughout the country. Strike continues demanding for a better pay. On the same day, taxi drivers in Addis Ababa strike over a proposed 50% increase in gas prices.Labor strikes continue under CELU as workers and laborers discontinue their legal and regular labor relations with employers.
February 21, 1974: Teachers dis-contention: Ethiopian University and High school students and the general public as a whole went out to protestin various parts of the country.
Updates;- The nation's teachers came-out on a general strikes, their principal demand was an educational reform programme known as "Education Sector Review". The teachers have been supported by many secondary school students and some parents, perceived the review as detrimental to the interests of the urban poor and the peasantry and protested against it's imminent implementation. At the same time, Taxi-drivers came out on strikes demanding an increase in fares to the rise in the Petrol prices. The Taxi-drivers strikes had a helping hand from students and the unemployed urban youth. Of the same month, the cabinet under then prime minister Tsehafi-tizaz Aklilu Habtewald have requested the emperor to officially resign following a mutiny of soldiers forwages in Negelle-Borena, teachers were also protested of the sector-review education program, city-taxi drivers stood against fuel-prices increase to which that was unable to respond by the regime.
Instead, domestic pressures mounted the Imperial regime and soon taxi-drivers protest spread to other sectors of the society, paired with public protests along with popular uprising, taxi drivers strike helped rise-up theUniversity students intensifying slogans such as "Land to the Tiller" and quest for a "Republic now!" on which they were gaining momentum that was spreading among all high school students throughout the country.
The Emperor ordered to form cabinet Lij-Endalkachew Makonnen, a graduate of Oxford University, who served earlier as head of Ethiopian mission to the United Nations in New York, and later becomes minister of Postal & TeTe minister under premier Aklilu's cabinet, had been nominatedfor UN General-secretary post to replace the late Burmese Mr. U Thant, whose later the post taken by the Austrian citizen Dr. Kurt Waldheim, wasson of a nobleman whose father Bitwadad-Makonnen Endalkachew himselfhad been post- Italian occupation prime minister of Ethiopia, in May, 1941, to form a new government, but he too was unable to curb the counntry's domestic political crises.
February 23, 1974: Emperor Haile Selassie concedes to some of thestrikers' demands.
February 25, 1974: Mutiny of enlisted soldiers and NCOs of the SecondArmy Division in Asmara, Eritrea province.
February 28, 1974: Prime minister Aklilu Habte-Wold resigns. His resignation was not demanded by any of the rebellious groups, and isseen as a sign of panic and weakness by the palace which is later exploited by civilians and soldiers. He is replaced by Endelkachew Makonnen. Lij Endalkachew Makonnen, the newly appointed prime minister has promised to further investigate former corrupt imperial officials and his government on making political reforms.

Side note:The ministerial cabinet of premier Aklilu Habta-wald was forced to resign. Tsahafe-Tizzaz Aklilu Habta-Wold was served previously as foreign minister of Ethiopia from 1947 to 1958 and prime Minister from 1961 until his resign as head of government. Premier Aklilu Habte-Wold was the son of a rural Ethiopian Orthodox Church priest from the Bulga district of Shoa province. He and his brothers, Makonnen Habte-Wald and Akale-work Habte-Wald was the Emperor, who had them educated. Aklilu Habte-Wold attended the French lycee in Alexandria, then afterwards studied in France. Tsahafi-Tizaz Aklilu Habta-Wold who had served foreignminister of Ethiopia from 1947 to 1958, and a world class international lawjurist, an intellectual statesman and considered one of the architects of the unification of Eritrea and Ethiopia, later becomes Prime Minister of Ethiopia from 1961 until shortly before his resign as head of government, resigned as head of government as student protests, military mutinies andan economic downturn caused by the Arabs oil embargo erupted in October, 1973 into a popular uprising against the government, calls went out for Prime Minister Aklilu to be dismissed.

March1, 1974: The Emperor appointed Lij Endalkatchew Makonnen, son ofa nobleman, an educated and reform minded diplomat, whose father was the late former prime minister Betwadad Makonnen Endalkatchew.

	Full Name	Rank	Highest known Position Held During The Duergregime	Ethnicity & Region withRemark
1	KebedeGuebre	Lt. General(Army)	Minister of Defense	Amhara from Shoa
2	Merid Mengesha	Lt. General	Minister of Defense	Amhara from Gojjam &Shoa
3	Eyasu Mengesha	Lt. General(Army)	Chief of Staff ofImperial Armed forces	Tigrai & Eritrea
4	Abieye Abebe	Lt. General(Army)	Minister of Defense	Amhara from Shoa
5	Esayas Guebre Selassie	Lt. General(Army)	Commander in Chief of Ground Forces	Eritrea

6	Haile Baykedagen	Lt. General(Army)	Chief Staff of theImperial Armed forces, Division Commander	Tigrai (Adwa) & Amharafrom Gojjam (Mixed)
7	Abebe Gemeda	Lt. General(Army)	Commander of Imperial Bodyguard	Oromo from Shoa
8	AssefaAyane	Lt. General (Army, Air force)	Chief of Staff of Imperial Armed Forces,Commander of the Air Force.	Amhara from Gondar(wolkait)
9	Wolde Selassie Bereka	Lt. General(Army)	Chief of Staff of the Imperial Armed forces,Commander in Chief ofGround forces	Guraghe
10	DeressieDubale	Lt. General(Army)	Commander in Chiefof Ground Forces	Guraghe &Amhara (Mixed)
11	MulugetaBulli	Majour- General (Army)	Chief of Staff of the Imperial Armed forces, later made civilian, a minister of Social affairs	Oromo from Wollega played leading role inorganizing the Armedforces after Fascist invasion
12	Assefa Demisse	Lt . General	Head of Protocol to the Emperor	Amhara & Oromo(Mixed)
13	Yilma Shibeshi	Lt. General(Police)	Commander of ImperialPolice Forces	Guraghe & Amhara(mixed)
14	BeleteAbebe	Lt. General	Chief of Staff , Territorial Army	Amhara from Shoa
15	TeshomeErgetu	Lt. General(Army)	Division Commander	Guraghe & Oromo (mixed) Killed by secessionist rebels in Eritrea before the revolution of February,1974
16	JagamaKello	Lt. General (Army)	Division Commander	Oromo from Shoa. Apatriot who led 3000 patriots and fought during the Fascist Italian invasion.

17	Nega Haile Selassie	Lt. General(Army)	Emperor's SpecialCabinet	Amhara from Shoa
18	DebebeHaile Mariam	Lt. General(Army)	Commander of ImperialBody guard, and later Emergency Governor- general of Eritrea province	Amhara from Shoa
19	Aman Mickael Andom	Lt. General(Army)	Division Commander	Eritrea - During the Duerg briefly Minister ofDefense. Then, briefly Military Head of State
20	AbebeWolde Meskel	Majour-General	Commander of Policeforce	Amhara
21	DegnehGusgsa	Majour-General (Army)	Division Commander	Oromo from Wollega
22	Shiferaw Tesema	Majour-General	Senior staff of Groundforces	Amhara
23	Yakob Guebre Leul	Majour-General	Senior Staff, GroundForces	Eritrea
24	TadesseMelke	Majour-General (Army)	Commander of Genet Millitary Training Center	Amhara from Gondar
25	Abera Wolde Mariam	Majour-General (Air force)	Commander of theImperial Air Force	Oromo & Amhara(Mixed)
26	TafesseLemma	Majour-General	Division Commanderand Palace protocol	Amhara & Guraghe(mixed)
27	Kebede Worku	Majour-General	Division commander	Amhara from Shoa
28	Wolde Tsadik GuebreMeskel	Majour-General	Deputy CommanderImperial Bodyguard	Guraghe
29	Tsige Gezmu	Majour-General	Budget and FinanceHead Imperial Ministry of	Amhara from Shoa

			Defense
30	GashawKebede	Majour-General	Police commander ofEritrea	Amhara
31	Abebe Wolde Mariam	Majour-General (Army)	Senior staff in Groundforces	Amhara
32	Bereket G. Medhin	Majour-General	Police Commander inKaffa	Tigrai and Eritrea
33	KelbesaBeka	Majour-General	Commander of police in Sidamo	Oromo from Wollega
34	Girma Mulat	Majour-General	Police Commander	Amhara
35	KebedeWagaye	Majour-General	Deputy CommanderImperial Bodyguard	Amhara from Gojjam
36	Abebe Wolde Selassie	Majour-General	Police commander inWollo	Amhara from Shoa
37	SiyuomGedle-Giorgis	Majour-General (Army)	Deputy Commander ofGround ForcesDivisionCommander	Amhara from Harrar
38	Moges Beyene	Majour General	Commander of Police inGamo Goffa	Amhara from Shoa
39	Gizaw Belayneh	Majour-General (Army)	Division Commander,	Amhara from Harrar
40	Merid Gizaw	Majour-General (Army)	Senior staff Ministry of Defense , Divisional Commander	Amhara from Shoa
41	TadesseGebre	Majour-General	Police Commander	Amhara
42	WakjiraSarda	Majour-General	Senior Staff , Minister of Defense, Division Commander	Oromo from Wollega
43	Nega Tegene	Majour-General (Army)	Division Commander	Amhara from Gondar
44	Tedla Mekonnen	Majour-General	Deputy CommanderGround Forces	Amhara from Shoa

45	BekeleWolde Giorgis	Majour-General	Crown Prince PalaceChief	Amhara

Side note: Early March, 1974: An implosion of a new dawn, unsolicited and unorganised, caught the nation utterly unawares, the catalis news ofdevastating famine in near north province of Wollo and the oil-shock of the 1973-74, which eventually quadrupled prices and triggered unprecedented inflationary pressures. A broad lawlessness engulfed the nation, threatning an out-break of anarchy, no civilian government was able to assert authority.

Tsehafi Te'ezaz Aklilu Habta-Wold was foreign minister of Ethiopia from 1947 to 1958 and Prime Minister from 1961 until shortly before his resignas head of government when student protests, intense military mutinies and an economic downturn caused by the Arabs Oil embargo erupted in October, 1973 into a popular uprising against the government, calls went out for Prime Minister Aklilu to be dismissed. The Emperor then to appointa nobleman to the position, and Lij Endelkachew Makonnen, son of the late former Prime Minister, was appointed.

Lij Endelkachew had previously served in a variety of diplomatic and political posts. He was Ethiopian Ambassador to Britain, and later Permanent Representative to the United Nations, and was one of the people under consideration for the post of UN Secretary General in 1972,before Kurt Waldheim was appointed. He had also served earlier as Minister for Postal, Telegraph & Telecommunications (PoTeTe), and had served as the International President of the Young Men's Christianity Association (YMCA). He would be the last Imperial prime minister appointed by the Emperor Haile Selassie I. Endalkachew Makonnen, whosfather Ras Betwadad Makonnen Endalkachew served as post-Italian occupation prime minister of Ethiopia in the 1950s.

The Oxford University graduated Endelkachew Makonnen served as Prime Minister from February 28 to late July (July 22, 1974) until he detained ..

During this period, the Imperial government was under assault by protesting students and striking workers who demanded investigation of corruption in the highest levels of government, reforms in land tenure, and political reforms as well. Endalkachew Makonnen attempted to address these demands by presenting reforms that began to change the very nature of the Ethiopian monarchy. The Emperor also agreed to some of these proposals, which included the drafting of a new constitution to replace the one adopted in 1955, and having the Prime Minister be responsible to the elected Lower House of Parliament (Chamber of Deputies) rather than to the Emperor. The new Premier attempted to address the many demands being put forward by the proponents of reform, and Ethiopia seemed to be on the verge of transforming itself into a democracy and a modern constitutional monarchy.

Members of ministerial cabinet formed under Lij Endalkatchew Makonnen,
Lt. General Abiye Abebe, Minister, Imperial Ministry of Defense (IMoD)
Dr. Dejazmatch Zawde Guebre Selassie, Minister, Imperial Ministry of Foreign Affaires (IMoFA)
Lij Mikael Imiru Haile Selassie, Minister, Imperial Ministry of Trade &Industry (IMoTI)
Dejazmatch Kebede Tessema, Minster, Imperial Ministry of Palace Affairs(IMoPA), known as "Ghibi"
Ato Belachew Asrat, Minister, Imperial Ministry of Justice (IMoJ)
Ato Tekalign gedamu, Minister, Imperial Ministry of Postal, Telecommunication & Telegraph
Ato Bulcha Demequesa, Minister, Imperial Ministry of AgricIture (IMoA)
Dr. Jamal Abdul Kadir, Minister, Imperial Ministry of Public Health (IMoPH)
Ato Ahadou Saboure, Minster, Imperial Ministry of Information (IMoI)
Ato Belete Guebre Tsadik, Imperial Minister of Land Reform (IMoLR)
Ato Milion Neqniq, Minister, Imperial Minister of Social Affairs (IMoSA)
Ato Tadesse Terefe, Minister, Imperial Ministry of Education & Fine Arts(IMoE&FA)
Ato Negash Desta, Minister, imperial Minstry of Finance (IMoF)
Ato Tekle Tsadiq Mekuria, Minister, Imperial Ministry of Culture (IMoC)
Ato Getachew Bekele, Minister, Imperial Ministry of Labour Affairs (IMoLA)
Ato Paulos Abraha, Commissioner, Commission for Planning & Development
Fitawrari Demmissie Shiferaw, vice State Minister in the PM office

March 5, 1974: Emperor Haile Selassie I announces that the 1955 Constitution would be revised to make the Prime Minister responsible tothe existing parliament. A Commission for national security affairs established as Colonel YalemZawd Tessema it's helm as to over 40 armed units under the Imperial Ministry of Defense lost all it's command chain to run up their own steering sub-committees led by mostly junior officers and NCOs.

However, a committee of low ranking officers, who had been empoweredto investigate corruption in the military, arrested the head of governmentTsehafi Taezaz Aklilu Habte Wold and most of the men who had served inhis cabinet, as well as the newly appointed Prime Minister Lij Endalkatchew Makonnen and his cabinet.

March 6, 1974: A commission to amend the constitution was set up under the leadership of the distinguished historian Ato Telke-Tsadik Mekuria.

The commission comprises of 30 members include, Ato Amanuel Amde-Mikael,Ato Yilma Deressa, Bitwadad Asfaha Wolde Mikael, Ato Abebe Reta, Ato Haddis Alemayehu, Dejazmatch Girmatchew

Tekle Hawariat, Affe-Negus Kitaw Yitatequ, w/t Yodit Imiru, Ato Assefa Liben, Dr. Aklilu Habte, Ato Teffera Deggfe, Haji Mohammed Sani Habib, Dr. Abraham Demoz, Ato Fissehatsion Tekie, Dr. Haile Wolde Mikael, Major Wondayen Mihretu, were among others included.

March 7 to 9, 1974: The Confederation of Ethiopian Labor Unions (CELU) led by Ato Beyene Solomon calls for a general labor strike throughout the nation.

March 23, 1974: Secessionist Eritrean Liberation Front (Al-Wahda) rebelfighters attacked civilian and government targets near Asmara, the provincial capital.

March 26, 1974: Secessionist rebel fighters under Eritrean Liberation Front attacked government targets in the northern province of Eritrea.

March 26, 1974: Inquiry Commission to investigate former imperialofficials set up

An Inquiry Commission to investigate former imperial officials set up under the leadership of Commander Lemma Gutema to further investigatemisconduct and misuse of power committed by former officials of Haile Selassie regime. The commission comprises of 11 members are as followed, Majour Mersha Admassu, Ato Hussein Ismael, Ato Baro Tumsa, Ato Mesfin Wolde Mariam, Dr. Bereket Habte Selassie, Majour Mitike Debele, Ato Hiruy Tibebu, Dr. Makonnen Wolde Mariam, Colonel Haile Mariam Aredo, Ato Mewaele Mebrahtu.

March 31, 1974: Lt. General Abiye Abebe, the new Chief of Staff of theImperial Armed Forces and then Minister of Defense, announces a plotagainst the government by Air Force mid-rank officers had been uncovered and foiled.

Updates: A group of Army and Police officers led by Colonel Ye-Alem ZawdTessema of the Ethiopian Airborne Corps playing a major role in organizing into a military steering Committee, which was officially disbanded five days later to be replaced by a 25-members Naional Security Commission under the command of then Defence Minister Lt.

General Abiye Abebe. During the following months, a second attempt was made to coordinate a military committee whose leading members includedwere Majour Taffara Tekle-Ab of the Military Engineering Corps, Majour Fisseha Desta of the elite-Imperial Bodyguard, Girma Fisseha of the Army aviation and Captain Sisay Habte of the Air force formed as the Duerg, as Majour Atnafu Abate it's acting chairman. Meantime, the imperial parliament approve a bill to set a 15-members inquiry commission under the chairmanship of Mesfin Wolde Mariam, a geography lecturer in the HSIU to further investigate misconducts and abuse of power committed byformer cabinet officials of Tsahafi-Tizaz Aklilu Habta-Wold. The inquiry commission who had been empowered to investigate corruption in the military then to arrest Tsehafi Taezaz Aklilu the former prime minister andmost of the men who had served in his cabinet.

Lij Endalkachew Makonnen (1927 – November 23, 1974) was an Ethiopianpolitician. Born in Addis Ababa, his father, Ras Betwoded Makonnen Endelkachew served as Prime Minister of Ethiopia in the 1950s.

Endalkachew Makonnen was a member of the aristocratic Addisge clan that were very influential in the later part of the Ethiopian monarchy. He would be the last Imperial Prime Minister appointed by Emperor Haile Selassie. Lij Endelkachew had previously served in a variety of diplomaticand political posts. He was Ethiopian Ambassador to Britain, and later Permanent Representative to the United Nations, and was one of the people under consideration for the post of UN Secretary General in 1972, before Kurt Waldheim was appointed. He had also served as Minister for Posts and Communications, and had served as the International Presidentof the Young Men's Christian Association (YMCA).

Updates: Lij Endalkachew Makonnen at his brief tenure took his own initiatives in suggesting the emperor to revive the "Land to the tiller Imperial Decree" known as usually the tenant/landlord affairs bill that was already under legislation in the chamber of deputies and well recognized he reforms his cabinet with progressive individuals. It' s to be recalled thathis late father had served as post-Italian occupation prime minister of Ethiopia in the 1950s. Lij Endelkachew had previously served in a variety of diplomatic and political posts. He was the Ethiopian Ambassador to Britain, and later Permanent Representative to the United Nations, and was one of the people under consideration for the post of UN Secretary General in 1972, before Kurt Waldheim was appointed. He had also servedas Minister for Posts and Communications, and had served as the International President of the Young Men's Christianity Association (YMCA). He would be the last Imperial prime minister appointed by the Emperor Haile Selassie I . The new premier has attempted to address the many demands being put forward by the proponents of reform, and Ethiopia seemed to be on the verge of transforming itself into a democracy and a modern constitutional monarchy. During this period, the Imperial government was under assault by protesting students and striking workers who demanded investigation of corruption in the highest levels of government, reforms in socio-politics land-tenure system as well.Endalkachew Makonnen attempted to address these demands by presenting reforms that began to change the very nature of the Ethiopian monarchy. The Emperor also agreed to some of these proposals, which included the drafting of a new constitution to replace the one adopted in 1955, and having the prime minister be responsible to the elected Lower House of Parliament rather than to the Emperor.

April 8, 1974: Secessionist rebels under Eritrean Liberation Front killed anarmy senior officer in Asmara, the provincial capital.

April 14, 1974: His Majesty the Emperor announces grandson Prince ZaraYacob Asfaw Wossen his designate successor.

April 16: 1974: PM Endalkatchew Makonnen creates a new position of "Relief and Rehabilitation Commission (RRC) to deal with the current drought occurred in near north province of Wollo as Shimeles

Adugna it’s helm into his newly formed cabinet. The ‘Relief and Rehabilitation Commission (RRC)’, is an Ethiopian government agency set up in Addis Ababa in the aftermath of the 1973 Wollo drought. The RRC played a central role in bringing the famine in Ethiopia to the public's attention, andhelped to distribute international aid to the areas in need of help.

April 17, 1974: The ongoing deadly famine in near north province of Wollodiscredited the emperor and the imperial regime. The ex-state Minister of Interior Lij, later Dejazmatch Leggese Bezu whos appointed at early months by the Emperor as vice-Governor-general of Wollo province, in a couple of months time of his new appointment as vice-Governor general ofWollo province, denies to local madia outlets saying, "all allegations on thehunger in the province "it's kind of mere speculation, the people of Wollo locality have a tradition of marching with local animals such as pets or dogs, firmly believes no hunger occured at all in the province" where at the same time the hunger victims appeared in the capital to complain for government authorities. Dejazmatch Leggese Bezu later to pay a political price for such publicly addressed mere false statement. And then that's signifies a core political reason to openly pave the way for possible of the former imperial government officials came to be under detention in the Fourth Army Division headquarter in Addis Ababa. However, an Inquiry Commission led by commander Lemma Gutema who had been empoweredto investigate corruption in the military, arrested Tsehafi Taezaz Aklilu andmost of the men who had served in his cabinet, as well as members of thenewly appointed Prime Minister Lij Endalkatchew Makonnen and his cabinet.

April 20, 1974: Moslems stage a demonstration in Addis Ababa demandingreligious equality and separation of church and the state.

Side note: In an emphatic call for social redress over 30, 000 Ethiopian Muslims and their Christian sympathisers came out to streets as peacefuldemonstration, chanting slogans for religious equality and for sake of more secularity by the government and it's off-influence to national observance of all Muslim holidays.

April 26, 1974: After weeks of agitation and intermittent strikes, thegovernment shuts down Haile Selassie I University.

April 27, 1974: The Coordinating Committee of the Armed Forces (underthe command of Colonel Alem Zewde Tessema of the Airborne Corps) issues their first statement, announcing that 19 ministers and former officials of the imperial regime have been arrested.

April 30, 1974: Prime Minister Endelkachew Makonnen announces the creation of a joint military-civilian National Security Commission under General Abiye Abebe to deal with growing lawlessness and the numerouswildcat strikes crippling the country. (The National Security Commission replaces the first Coordinating Committee of the Armed Forces.)

May 19, 1974: Mutinied Soldiers of the 3rd Lion Army Division based inHarrar town arrested Majour-General Wolde Selassie Bereka, the emperor’s envoy whos led other senior officers at arrival.

May 27, 1974: Rebel fighters of the secessionist Eritrean Liberation Front(Al-Wahda) attacked civilian and government targets in the northern province of Eritrea.
June 4, 1974: Emperor appointed Majour-General Aman Mikael Andom in the title of Lt. General, Minister of Defense and Chief of Staff of the ArmedForces pressured by the newly established, "Coordinating Committee of the Armed Forces."
June 22, 1974: Colonel Ye-Alem Zawd Tessema was an Ethiopian military figure who he was a commander of the elite Ethiopian Airborne Corps, Fourth Division. He was active at the beginning of the February Revolution, helping to create the "Coordinating Committee of the Armed Forces", which originally was intended to support Prime Minister Aklilu Habte-Wold which came under the control of Majours Atnafu Abate, Sisay Habte, and Taffara Tekleab, who turned it into the group later known as the Duerg, but Colonel Ye'Alem Zawd Tessema lost control of his own paratrooper battalion after its defeat at Debre Zeit airbase with radicals, and was forced to flee afterwards to his native region of Gojjam, where helater killed by government security agents.
June 24, 1974: The Fourth Army Division and it’s various army units based in Addis Ababa paraded in the streets of Addis Ababa to show support for public and civilian protests in Addis Ababa. Believed over fourty army units under the Ethiopian Armed forces were showed up support for measures taken by the Fourth Army Division, whos taken upthe initiative as steering and co-ordinating center.
June 25, 1974: The wives and relations of the arrested officials of the imperial regime (now 25 in number) petitioned that the prisoners be released pending an investigation. It is rejected by parliament, who seethis as an attempt to restore the status quo.
June 25, 1974: A group of junior officers led by Majours Atnafu Abate andTeffera Tekleab made a call to over 40 army units to regroup as military steering and co-ordination committee, later to be known as the Duerg as the Fourth Army Division it’s center.
June 27, 1974: In response to the general public’s call, the represented 107 junior rank officers and NCOs regrouped themselves to announce the“Armed Forces, Police and Territorial Army National Co-ordinating Committee”, later known as the Duerg at the 4th Army Division HQ in Addis Ababa.
June 28, 1974: State media outlets officially announced the formation ofthe regrouped “Armed Forces, Police and Territorial Army National Co- ordinating Committee”, later known as the Duerg.
Side note: The Duerg, the Coordinating Committee of the Armed Forces,Police, and Territorial Army, or the Duerg (Ge'ez "Committee"). It was officially announced by a group of military officers to maintain law and order due to the powerlessness of the civilian government following widespread mutiny in the armed forces of Ethiopia earlier that year.
Its members were not directly involved in those mutinies (as far as anyone presently knows), nor was this the first military committee organized to support the administration of Prime Minister Endelkachew Makonnen: Colonel Alem Zewde Tessema had established the Armed Forces Coordinated Committee on 23rd March. However, over the following months radicals in the Ethiopian military came to believe he was acting on behalf of the hated aristocracy, and when a group of notables petitioned for the release of a number of government ministers and officials who were under arrest for corruption and other crimes, three dayslater the Derg was announced.

The Duerg, which originally consisted of soldiers at the capital, broadenedits membership by including representatives from some 40 units of the Ethiopian Army, Air Force, Navy, Kebur Zabagna (Imperial Bodyguard), Territorial Army and Police Force: each unit was expected to send three representatives, who were supposed to be privates, NCOs and junior officers up to the rank of major. According to historians, "senior officers were deemed too compromised by close association to the regime." It is commonly stated that the Duerg consisted of 120 soldiers, a statement which has gained wide acceptance due to the habitual secretiveness of theDuerg in its early years; however a prominent historian notes that "in actual fact, their number was less than 110", and another historian mentions two different sources which record 109 persons as being members of the Duerg. No new members were ever admitted, and thenumber decreased, especially in the first few years, as some memberswere expelled or killed.

It was at this time to avert chaos, intervention by the army was only inevitable and necessary, and it came officially as some low-ranking officers had been organizing covertly and half-heartedly for weeks. About 109 representatives of the nation's 40 armed units, ranging from pvts to Majours, convened in Addis Ababa's fourth army division's barack and established the "Duerg" Amharic meaning for "committee or body" .To chair them, they opted for Majour Mengistu Haile-Mariam, then a 32-yearsold law ranking officer, whos one of the delegates from the Third Lion Division. Majour Mengistu Haile-Mariam, made a self-introductory speech which won him the support of the Duerg general assembly, indifference tothe primacy of the "3rd Lions' Division", then the nation's most powerful, which he represented. However, army mechanized Lieutenant prince Dawit Makonnen, usually known as “Makonnen Makonnen” who was then on active duty in the army at JigJiga barack, eastern Ethiopia fled to the neighboring Somalia.

June 28, 1974: Low rank and non-commissioned army officers regroupedas “Armed, Police Forces and the National army conscripts co-ordinating Committee, later known as “the Duerg”

Government media outlets announced the formation of the “Armed, PoliceForces and the National army conscripts co-ordinating Committee, later known as “the Duerg”. In such uncertainity the Armed, Police Forces and the National army conscripts co-ordinating Committee, later to be known as "the Duerg" formally launched on the 28th of June, have elected Majour Atnafu Abate, a representative of the 4th Army division which based in the capital, as it's acting-chairman first. The committee elected Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam as its chairman and Majour Atnafu Abate asits vice-chairman. The Duerg was initially supposed to study the grievances of various military units, and investigate abuses by senior officers and staff, and to root out corruption in the military. In the monthsfollowing its founding, the power of the Duerg steadily increased. In July the Duerg obtained key concessions from the Emperor, Haile Selassie I, which included the power to arrest not only military officers, but government officials at every level. Soon both former Prime Ministers Tsehafi Taezaz Aklilu Habte-Wold, and Endelkachew Makonnen, along withmost of their cabinets, most regional governors, many senior military officers and officials of the Imperial court found themselves imprisoned. InAugust, after a proposed constitution creating a constitutional monarchy was presented to the Emperor, the Duerg began a program of dismantlingthe imperial government in order to forestall further developments in that direction. The Duerg deposed and imprisoned the Emperor on September 12, 1974.

In response to the unsuccessful petition, the new Coordinating Committeeof the Armed Forces (which becomes the Duerg) seizes the radio station in Addis Ababa, and begin to arrest other aristocrats, imperial officials, andgenerals suspected of being behind the reactionary movement.

June 30,1974: National Security Comission which led by Colonel YeAlemZawd Tessema, commander of the elite Airborne Division formed in lateFebruary to arrest former imperial officials remains disfunctional by the coming "military steering and co-ordination committee."

June 30, 1974: The military steering and co-ordination committee, later tobe known as the Duerg has made a call for the release of all political prisoners in the country, but only very few prisoners to release.

July 1, 1974: The total number of active members of the military co- ordinating committee, known as the Duerg reaches at 107. The followedjunior rank officers appeared to be the most influential members at the beginning,

Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam (Army) – 1st & de-facto ChairmnMajour- Atnafu Abate (Army) – Vice Chairman

Majour- Guebreyes Wolde Hana (Army) – Acting secretary Majour-Tesfaye Guebre Kidan(Army) – In charge of DefenseMajour-Teka Tulu (Police) – In charge of Security

Capt. Alemayehu Haile (Police) – In charge of Administrative affairsMajour Sisay Habte (Airforce) – In charge of Foreign relations

Majour Asrat Desta (Army) – In charge of public relations & propagationMajour Birhanu Bayeh (Army) – in charge of Planning

Majour Moges Wolde Mikael (Airborne) – In charge of Economy, Landreform and Social affairs

Majour Daniel asfaw (Army) – In charge of detention matters of formerimperial officials.

Captain Yemane Guebre Negus * – In charge of Legal & Justice affairs Majour Kassaye Aragaw (Police) – In charge of prisoners for prison cells offormer officials.

July 5, 1974: The military steering and co-ordination committee, known asthe Duerg announces exiled citizens to join the popular movement.

July 5, 1974: Imperial Security and Intelligence branches, others such asthe Imperial Crown Court, and the Imperial Crown Council disabled.

July 5, 1974: Former Imperial officials are being under intense search to be arrested at the Fourth Army Division garrison while some others are onthe run.

July 9, 1974: The Military Steering & Co-ordination Committee, known asthe Duerg this time issues a statement demanding 13 points inquiries in public.

Mid-July, 1974: Dejazmatch Tsehayuo Inqu-Selassie former Governor- General (Enderassie) of Kaffa province rebelled along with his younger brother Fitawrari Worku Inque-Selassie against the rising military council'scall for former imperial officials to surrender peacefully.

July 22, 1974: Prime Minister Endelkachew Makonnen becomes underintense pressure to resign.

Side note: Despite his continued attempts to retain on power, Prime Minister Endalkachew Makonnen as well as members of the newly appointed Prime Minister Lij Endalkatchew Makonnen and most of his cabinet members were arrested by the military steering committee knownas ‘the Duerg’ this time. However, an Inquiry Commission led by commander Lemma Gutema who had been empowered to investigate corruption in the military, arrested earlier the former prime minister Tsehafi Taezaz Aklilu and most of the men who had served in his cabinet, as well as members of the newly appointed Prime Minister Lij Endalkatchew Makonnen and his cabinet. Prime Minister Endalkachew wasarrested, and the Duerg asked Lij Mikael Imru to assume the Prime Minister's office. The Oxford-educated Endelkachew served as Prime Minister from February 28 to July 22, 1974. During this period, the Imperial government was under assault by protesting students and striking workers who demanded investigation of corruption in the highest levels of government, reforms in land tenure, and political reforms as well.Endalkachew Makonnen attempted to address these demands by presenting reforms that began to change the very nature of the Ethiopian monarchy. The Emperor also agreed to some of these proposals, which included the drafting of a new constitution to replace the one adopted in 1955, and having the Prime Minister be responsible to the elected Lower House of Parliament rather than to the Emperor.

Over next months, events moved swiftly as the Duerg systematically dismantled the government and numerous public institutions. The critical event that doomed Endelkachew's administration occurred 26 June. On that day, a group of conservative members from the Chamber of Deputiespetitioned the Emperor for the release of some of the officials that had been imprisoned for corruption. Numerous writers agree with Keller's judgement that this act "was seen as a clear indication that ruling politicians had no intention of bringing these individuals to justice." The new military committee acted swiftly, arresting 50 more alleged culprits from the ruling classes on 30 June. Within the next two weeks, 150 more members of not only the former government, but the current government,the provincial administration, the nobility, and even the Imperial family including the grandson of the emperor Rear Admiral Eskinder Desta, Deputy Commander of the Imperial Ethiopian Navy.

Updates: Lij Endalkachew had previously served in a variety of diplomaticand political posts. He was Ethiopian Ambassador to Britain, and later Permanent Representative to the United Nations, and was one of the people under consideration for the post of UN Secretary General in 1972, before the Austrian Kurt Waldheim was appointed. He had also served as Minister for Postal, Telegraph, and Tele-communications, and had served as the International President of the World Young Men's Christian Association (YMCA). The critical event that doomed Endelkachew's administration occurred on the 26th June, 1974. On that day, a group of conservative members from the Ethiopian Chamber of Deputies petitioned the Emperor for the release of some of the officials that had been imprisoned for corruption. Numerous political observers agree with suchjudgement that this act "was seen as a clear indication that ruling politicians had no intention of bringing these individuals to justice." The new military steering committee acted swiftly, arresting 50 more allegedculprits from the ruling classes on 30 June. Over next coming weeks, events moved swiftly as the Duerg military steering committee systematically dismantled the government and numerous public institutions. As the February Revolution of 1974 approached, at first gradual but then increasingly sanguinary most of the former imperial government officials came to be under detention in the Fourth Army Division headquarter in Addis Ababa. 150 more members of not only theformer government, but the current government, the provincial administration, the nobility, were all arrested.

Member of the Imperial family, the Emperor's grandson and Deputy commander of the Imperial Ethiopian Navy (IEN), Prince Rear Admiral Eskinder Desta (Alex), who fled earlier with one of the Navy's tugboats tothe former Territory of France Afar & Issas (TFAI), now Djibouti, surrenders in his free will to the Duerg military steering committee to jointhe other detainees in the Fourth Army Division headquarter in Addis Ababa. Commodore Tassew Desta, the next naval senior officer in-stand appointed Acting commander of the Imperial Etiopian Navy (IEN).

July 25, 1974: With the resignation of prime minister Endalkatchew Makonnen and some members of his cabinet, the Military Steering Committee known as the Duerg requests Ato Haddis Alemayehu the literary intellectual to form a new government, but he refuses to acceptthe position of premier.

August 1, 1974: Lij Endelkachew Makonnen is custodied by the Coordinating Committee of the Armed Forces, Police, and TerritorialArmy).

August, 1974: The drafted constitution proposed by the constitutional commission led by the distiguished historian Ato Telketsadik Mekuria, creating a constitutional monarchy was presented to the emperor, but theDuerg began a program of it’s own, dismantling the imperial government in order to forestall further developments in that direction.

The Duerg asked Lij Mikael Imiru Haile Selassie Abayneh, a progressive aristocrat to assume the Prime Minister's office. Lij Michael Imiru Haile- selassie had been brought to the Emperor by the military steering council,known as "the Duerg" this time for an appointment as prime minister to succeed Lij Endalkatchew Makonnen. Lij Mikael Imiru Haile Selassie introduces new cabinet members comprises of 14 ministers, 1 State minister in the council of ministers, a national treasurer (Governor of the National Bank) and 3 Commisioners.

Mid-August, 1974: Ato Ammanuel Amde-Michael appointed ChiefAdministrator of then troubled Eritrea Administrative Region.

Mid-August, 1974: Leul-Ras Asrate-Medhin Kassa, president of the “Imperial Crowncouncil” this time, was arrested by the would be military coup leaders as he serves in an Orthodox Church on the day of Sunday. Side notes;- The Military steering Committee known as the Duerg this implemented its “creeping coup”, it began arresting high level officials of the imperial government. The arrests provided grist to the anti-imperial government propaganda mill and fueled the widespread dissatisfaction with the imperial government and its ineptitude in dealing with pressing demands for economic, social and political change. The Duerg arrested and detained hundreds of officials in the imperial government. It promisedto undertake a full investigation into their alleged official misconduct, wrongdoing and malfeasance.

Former prime ministers of the Imperial regime Lij Endalkachew Makonnen and his predecessor Tsehafi-tizaz Aklilu Habtewold including other ex- cabinet members, senior military commanders as well as ex parliamentarians were being searched to be arrested by the military coordinating-committee known as this time "the Duerg". An earth-shakingprotests were held throughout the country, however, had it not such popular movements hijacked by the military, large wave demonstrations and labour strikes were became so serious and bitterly developed especially by the HSI University students, the then launch-pad of organized student protests against the regime. In between, July/August former prime ministers of the Imperial Government Ethiopia, Lij Endalkachew Makonnen and his predecessor Tsehafi-tizaz Aklilu Habte- wold including ex-cabinet members, ex-senior military commanders as well as ex-parliamentarians were being searched to be arrested by the military coordinating-committee known as Duerg this time. Meantime, at exactly 13 years after the first foiled coup attempt of December, 1960, the so called, “Crippling-coup d'etat” of September, 1974, comes at it's maturity point to depose the famine-discredited Emperor to send him by aVolkswagon beetle, to an undisclosed place of detention.

Majour-General Nega Tegegn, renowned military strategist, grand son-in-law of the emperor, then chief administrator of Begiemidr & Semien province has escaped to neighboring Sudan to avoid a possible capture ofstate security agents.

The Sultanate of Aussa officially deestablished by the Duerg Militarycouncil.

Bitwadad Ali Mirah Hanfere slightly escapes capture of security plainclothes. The Aussa Sultanate, was a kingdom that existed in northeastern Ethiopia in the area bordering the former province of Eritreaand Djibouti until the fall of the Haile Selassie regime. The Ausa Sultanatealso known as the Afar Sultanate headed by Bitwadad Ali Mirah Hanfere was considered to be the leading monarchy of the Afar people, to whom the other Afar rulers nominally acknowledged primacy. Shortly, Bitwadad Ali Mirah Hamfere, the traditional ruler of Aussa, an Afarland of Ethiopia escapes capture of security plainclothes, he fled to the neighboring Djibouti. Bitwadad Alimirah Hanfare: the Sultan of Aussa considered a religious and traditional leader of the Afar people and was admired by many Ethiopians.

September 6, 1974: All-Ethiopian Socialist Movement now locally to beknown as “MEISON”, appears to be critical-supporter of the would be ruling military council known as Duerg.

EPRP on it’s self-introduction: Claims it stood in the way of a genuine Peoples Democracy’ Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Party (EPRP) claims it’s struggle is for democracy market oriented economy and the sovereignty of Ethiopia. Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Party (EPRP) thefirst ever modern multi-national party whose founded in early April, 1972,with some political arguements amplifies it’s political objectives to continue struggling burgoise, and the military dictatorship in Ethiopia. It has stayed steadfast and true to its objectives despite the brutal repression.

Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Party (EPRP) whose established by a founding congress that lasted from April 2 to 9, 1972 in former West Germany with the declared aim of fighting against feudalism, imperialism and bureaucratic capitalism to a forseeable formation of Maoist style stateis now on the launching pad.

The EPRP, since its formation has embraced the philosophy of Marxism- Leninism, which was increasingly popular among many nationalists and revolutionaries throughout Africa and much of the Third World at the time.After efforts have been made to implement democracy and the rule of lawin Ethiopia, -- the EPRP has been forced from the outset to struggle as a clandestine opposition party, EPRP claims that the rising Duerg military council had betrayed the February Revolution and the Ethiopian people as a whole. EPRP claims to struggle for democracy and the sovereignty of Ethiopia. Then conflict began to develop between EPRP and MEISON whenMEISON aligning itself with the ruling military council (Duerg).

ታሪካዊ መጽሔት፡የ "አደፍርስን" እና የ "ታይሌ ፊዳ"ን የፖለቲካ ፍጭት በ "ጎህ" መጽሔት፡

"GOHÈ" was a monthly magazine, which was very popular and influentialby the then young generation of the country especially in the 70s'. It wasreally a breath taking to read the deep political analysis of the two politically rival elites "Adefres" of the 'EPRP' & "Haile Fidda Kuma" of the 'MEISSON' in the later years.

EPRP originally founded and commanded by the late Birhanmeskel Reda in the early 70s in towns and Assimba, which was the principal base of the armed wing called as Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Army, known shortly EPRA.

The Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Party (EPRP)Executive Council comprise of,

1) Tesfaye Debesay (Executive chairman)
2) Zeru Kihshin
3) Kiflu Tadesse
4) Samuel Alemayehu
5) Tselote Hizkias
6) Yohannes Birhanne
7) Kiflu Teffera Araya

8) Birhane Mesquel Reda

9) Getachew Maru

10) Eyassu Alemayehu

11) Fikre Zergaw

12) Eskunder Demissie

13) Mezgebnesh Abiye

14) Aklilu Hiruy

15) Solomon Tessema

16) Abebech

17) Taeme Beyene

18) Awa

19)Tsegaye Guebre Medhin (Debteraw) have made a political decision tostay under clandestine struggle. The EPRP Marxists are most important political group in Ethiopia, and draws support from workers, peasants, civil servants as well as the military. Although it had gone underground. The Duerg low ranking military officers NCO's to come to short circuit the Yekatit Revolution infavour of their advantage and to assume power in September, 1974, theEPRP successfully led the people's peaceful struggle for the formation of abroad based provisional popular government. It has stayed steadfast and true to its objectives despite the brutal repression that has been its lot fornext decades.

September 11, 1974: State owned Ethiopian Television aires on the eve ofthe ethiopian new year, a documentary film entitled "Ethiopia the hidden hunger" which filmed secretly a year before in near north province of Wollo by the British famous journalist Jonathan Dimblby. The documentary film aired as the famine discredited emperor fed meat to lions as Ethiopians starved to death. The emperor who was still widely respected, ETV contrived to obtain a copy of The Unknown Famine which they intercut with images of Africa's grand old man presiding at a weddingfeast in the grounds of his palace. Retitled The Hidden Hunger, this film noir was shown round the clock on national television to coincide with the day that they finally summoned the nerve to seize the Emperor himself.

The famine and its image in the media undermined popular support of thegovernment, and Haile Selassie's once unassailable personal popularity fell.

The emperor was accused by the military ruling council for allocating budjet for his dogs was so big when hundred thousands died of hunger inthe near north province of Wello....in Korem and Alamata, small towns inthen Wello province, and an estimated 200, 000 people, among them were about 20, 000 children remained orphans, and were buried massively were in camp looking for help...The emperor is blamed that time he stashed in billions dollars in Switzerland banks in his secret account and did not want to return back the money to the Ethiopian government...and then the Duerg has accused him of ... according to harsh critics he got what he deserve since he had also pershed renownedpatriots…. to send them self-exile.

September 12, 1974: The Popular Revolution along with co-ordinated slowmilitary coup topples the monarchy in Ethiopia, and the Duerg replacing Emperor Haile Selassie in government. The new government officially atheist, but equality of religions was proclaimed, and the Ethiopian Churchceased to be the state church.

Updates:The Patriarch His Holiness Abune Thewophilos in his Ethiopian New Years message the evening before the Emperor was deposed had omitted the usual blessing of the Emperor and his family and instead prayed for the Duerg and it's official mission. Analysts would later say thiswas the way the church complied with the Duerg that it would not stand inits way. However the Patriarch became disillusioned with the Derg's ideology, and was horrified by the massacre of 60 ex-officials of the Emperor's government in November 1974. He was refused permission to receive the remains of Emperor Haile Selassie after his announced death in August 1975, and was warned not to conduct public memorial services in his name. With the disestablishment of the church and the severing of ties between church and state, the Patriarch believed that he was entitled to make all decisions concerning the church independent of the authorities, and appointed and consecrated three new bishops without consulting the Derg. These bishops were Abuna Paulos, (who would eventually become the fifth Patriarch of the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahido Church), Abune Basilios, and Abune Petros.

September 12, 1974: The Duerg had already arrested many of his top officials before dethroning the Emperor Haile Selassie I. Now The Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC), known as the Duerg comprises of the rebeled low ranking officers and soldiers overthrew the83-year old emperor ending his 43-year reign.
Updates: The pretext for the Duerg’s seizure of power included the purported need to control the civil arrest triggered by student protestsover economic hardships following the 1973 oil crises, the need to establish accountability for official neglect of widespread famine in northern Ethiopia and to address mutinous soldiers’ demand for pay increases and improvements in military service conditions.
Haile Selassie means ‘power of the trinity’. Actually, his full title is ‘His Majesty Emperor Haile Selassie I, Conquering Lion of the Tribe of Judah,King of Kings of Ethiopia, Elect of God,’ a title so often used by the Rastaffarians – a religion derived from Haile Selassie’s birth names, Ras Taffari Makonnen, nicknamed also internationally the ‘Spotlight of Africa’ dethroned by low ranking army officers and non-Commissioned officers. Emperor Haile Selassie I and the long standing Ethiopian monarch is deposed by the crippling coup masters of the military co-ordination councilknown this time as the ‘Duerg’. Emperor Haile Selassie was ousted in a slowing coup known as ‘the crippled coup of Ethiopia’. The new Ethiopian government, called the Duerg, was comprised of rebeled low ranking officers and soldiers is a military junta, which eventually came to be controlled by strongman Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam. With this change of government, Ethiopia came under the influence of the Socialist bloc.

Duerg or (Ge'ez: ዶርግ, meaning "committee" or "council") is the short name of the Coordinating Committee of the Armed Forces, Police, and Territorial Army (that ruled Ethiopia between 1974 to 1987). It took powerfollowing the ousting of Emperor Haile Selassie I. Soon after it was established, the committee was formally renamed the Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC), but continued to be known popularly as "the Duerg". At the latter, the ruling Duerg has embraced communism andremained in power until August, 1987, when it establishes People's Democratic Republic of Ethiopia (PDRE).

Updates: Exactly two and half months after it’s formation, the Duerg deposed Emperor Haile Selassie I, assumed power as the Marxist military junta called itself “Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC)” thatwould rule the country further, and the day marked as the National Day ofpost-monarchy “Provisional Military Government of Ethiopia”. The popular public uprising known as “the crippled coup” which usurped by the rising military council, usually known as "the Duerg" which at it’s point of maturity this time to depose the famine-discredited Emperor to send him by a Volkswagon beetle, to his undisclosed place of detention. The Duerg,known as Provisionary Military Administrative Council (PMAC) this time had custodied the entirety of the regime's civilian and military authorities promising "Change without bloodshed". The Duerg who deposed Emperor Haile Selassie I, known as the "spotlight of Africa" assumes power as a Marxist military junta that would rule the country for forseeable future. The 1974 revolution was brought about by the relentless struggle over several years by, among others, the opressed peasants. The military junta, headed by Majour Mengistu Haile-Mariam, usurped power and hijacked the revolution. Then a position of civilian prime minister abolished this time for the next 13 years (literally until the 10th September, 1987). Emperor Haile Selassie's regime had lost public confidence within Ethiopia, and discredited following a severe famine in near north province of Wollo whose the British journalist namely, JonathanDimblby famously exposed the hidden hunger in near north province of Wollo to the international community in early, 1973, when the Emperor was trying to handle the starvation with dignity, that led to the Ethiopian revolution b/n February to September, 1974. Many citizens especially the youth and the intellectual elite have paid sacrifices for this day to come, now one thing is certain the ruling-PMAC faces with such historic duty to by hook or by crook dismantle the feudo-burgoise capitalist system foronce and for all, as whether the PMAC would continue as political elite with no any alternative political group on the course.

On the day of the dethronment, the emperor was told by the would be new military rulers in a brief occassion why the dethronement is needed on the attendance of the honourable Ras Imru Haile-selassie, a longtime friend and relative of the emperor, before he had been taken to an unknown location. "Your Majesty, the Military, Police and the National Guard co-ordinating committee, "the Duerg" has deeply concerned about your Majesty's health, thus we have arranged a place appropriate for yourhealth and safety, so we sicerely beg you to go that place".

The Emperor replied "we have have generally listened to what you have said. When we became the king of kings of Ethiopia, it was not only a title,it's the people and the country organizing work during "peace & defence" when under attack, we do not suspect that this was well known among our military personnel, however, if changes in time bring something significant to the nation it's impossible to substitute the benefit of the nation with something else, and we have heard it what you have read, so we will stop over here".

Emperor HaileSelassie struggled to modernize the nation of Ethiopia: Emperor Haile Selassie, in addition to the modern education system, hecreated protective elites also and a national army undermining the traditional military structure of separate armies headed by Rases and provincial governors. Emperor Haile Selassie, despite the fact of his outstanding effort in the modernization of Ethiopia, contributed “inadvertently” to the political turmoil that caused his own downfall andthe overthrow of the aristocracy and the atrocities that followed.

The Emperor had a hugely positive sides. He truely sought to modernize feudal Ethiopia. Emperor Haile-Selassie I, founder and commander in-chiefof the Ethiopian Armed Forces, inaddition to that, had been the front runner to promote education as himself in-charge of the education in the imperial cabinet, priortized free education, first founded the University College of Addis Ababa, which later renamed Haile Selassie I University (HSIU) to be the honorary Chancellor of the University even if hardliners within his government such as Ras Kassa Haile and Ras Seyoum Mengesha Yohannes by sternly objecting the emperor’s move to promote education and modernization. In a deplomatic maneouvre, he determines the 1600-years old Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahdo Church (EOTC) got it's autonomy to choosing it's own Patriarchate without the Alexandria based Coptic Church, the emperor also known to be in the process of innovating a total of over 3,000 churches and nunneries, 2000 schools, i.e. 655 elementary schools, 277 junior highschools 67 secondary schools, 2 Universities, 10 professional and training colleges. Regarding primary healthcare, about 79 hospitals, 113 banking and financial sectors, about 136 factories, 267 manufacturings plants - He has introduced marine transport iwith 2 Commercial Shipping lanes (ex-ports of Assab & Massawa), and the aviation transport with over 41 landing terminals for about 238 airplanes, Agri-institutes and research centres, and construction of several thousand kms rural and urban road links through the famous "Awra-Godana", now the Rural Roads Authority (RRA) etc., were parts of the well done jobs in his reign. Then leading pan-African news magazine, AFRICA praised him as saying a "spotlight of Africa, whoshistory is more kinder to him than the present generation of Ethiopia".

Haile Selassie I has significantly played a role in bringing Africa together under one roof, and hence Addis Ababa as the venue of the former Organization of African Unity (OAU), which it's successor for the present African Union Commission (AUC), still based in Addis Ababa. Emperor Haile-selassie was the last emperor of the Solomonic order who ruled thenation for centuries.

September 13, 1974: All Royal-highnesses, princesses and princes ofEthiopian monarchy arrested’

Updates: With the overthrow of the Ethiopian monarchy, princesses and princes other royal-highnesses including prince Wossen-Seged Makonnen Haile Selassie the "Duke of Harrar" all members of the royal family, and other dignitaries who were at their presence with the exception of Crownprince Asfaw-wossen, who had been saved from a worse fate by hospitalisation in London after a severe stroke, and prince mechanized army Lt. Dawit Makonnen known as then "Makonnen Makonnen" and prince Taffari Makonnen who were under a study abroad, were all arrestedand placed under detention shortly before Emperor Haile-selassie was formally deposed.

The new military ruling council known as the Duerg, Amharic meaning for‘committee’ or ‘body’ is initially comprised of junior rank military officers and Non-commissioned soldiers renames itself PMAC, known later to be “The Duerg” has formally short circuited the Revolution successfully led the people’s peaceful struggle for the formation of a broad based provisional popular government, assumed state power permanently renaming itself "Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC)"

Lt. General Aman Michael Andom, the new military head of state signed adecree to release all political prisoners of the former Imperial regime whose were not estimated over thirty allover Ethiopia.

The one was Dejazmatch Haile Selassie Gugsa (1886 – 1975) , the great grandson of King Yohannes IV and an army commander and a member ofthe Royal family of the Ethiopian Empire. Haile Selassie Gugsa was the son of Leul Ras Gugsa Araya Selassie. Gugsa Araya Selassie was the Shum of eastern Tigre Province as well as the great grandson of EmperorYohannes IV. Dejazmatch Haile-selassie Gugsa Araya Selassie and few other political prisoners were released by the Provisional Military Adminstrative Council (PMAC) whos toppled the Ethiopian monarchy, Dejazmach Haile Sellasie Gugsa Araya Selassie (the grandson of former Emperor Yohannes IV) was the most Infamous collaborator of Italians during the second Ethio-Italian war and was surrendering himself and defecting to the Italians.

His legitimate imperial title was Dejazmatch. The King of Italy gave himthe title of “Ras” but it was not recognized so far by the Emperor and so he reverted to Dejazmatch when the occupation ended. The Ethiopian style titles granted by the King of Italy in Eritrea were all recognized bythe Emperor, but the ones given to Ethiopian collaborators were not.

Dejazmatch Haile Selassie Gugsa was the son of Ras Gugsa Araya Selassie, the first son of emperor Yohannes VI. Dejazmatch Haile Selassieremained under house arrest at Ambo, west of Addis Ababa from that point on although technically no longer a political prisoner. Dejazmatch Haile-selassie Gugsa died a year later.

The ruling PMAC & it's proclamation No. 1 was broadcasted to the suspension of the existing 1955 Constitution. Thecoordinating committee renamed itself the Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC) and took control of the government. The Duerg chose Lieutenant General Aman Andom, a very popular military leader and a Sandhurst graduate, to be its chairman and acting head-of- state until the Crown Prince Asfaw Wossen could return from his medical treatment in Europe, and assume the throne as a constitutional monarch.To ingratiate itself with the protesters and the public, the Duerg launcheda public relations campaign using the rallying cry, "Ethiopia Tikdem (First)". The Duerg later made a political platform out of the slogan to articulate its ideas about promoting equality and grassroots democracy, reforming the judicial, justice and land sectors and to pledge implementation of national health and other burning issues. The Duerg infused its populist propaganda with combative and militaristic rhetoric.

September 14, 1974: The so called Haile Selassie I Foundation which being administered under the Palace Affairs known as the Ghibi Ministryremain disfunctional.
September 15, 1974: The previously steering committee, commonly known as the Duerg, meaning for "body" "committee" or "council": is theshort name of the Coordinating Committee of the Armed Forces, Police, and Territorial Army that comes to rule Ethiopia. It took control of the government following the ousting of Emperor Haile Selassie I. Soon afterit was established, the committee was formally renamed the Provisional Military Administrative Council, but locally continued to be known popularly as "the Duerg".
The same day the Duerg announces Lt. General Aman Andom, a popular military leader and a Sandhurst graduate, who has been serving as military chief of staff of the Ethiopian armed forces to be its symbolic chairman and acting military head-of-state. But this was pending the return of the Crown Prince Asfaw Wossen Haile Selassie from medical treatment in Europe, when he would assume the throne as a constitutionalmonarch. The Coordinating Committee of the Armed Forces known as this time as Duerg meaning for 'body'or 'committee' renames itself 'ProvisionalMilitary Administrative Council - PMAC, after announcing the renowned senior army officer Lt. General Aman Mikael Andom it’s chairman explains the main reason the symbolic chairmanship of the ruling-PMAC goes to themore senior army officer, Lt. General Aman Michael Andom.

Majour Mengistu Haile-Mariam becomes first-vice chairman and Majour Atnafu Abate, second vice-chairman, from this time on, called as "the Duerg" which as a result political-power came into the hands of low ranking officers and enlisted soldiers, who's job was only to permanently guard the territory of Ethiopia, it’s to be recalled that the Duerg was founded as "The Armed, Police Forces, & the National army conscripts co- ordinating (steering) committee" whose was chaired first by Majour AtnafuAbate, when temporarily functioning in late June, 1974.

The Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC), known as the Duerg comprises of some 109 rebeled low ranking officers and soldiersoverthrew the 83-year old emperor ending his 43-year reign.
On the day of the dethronement, the emperor was told by the would be new military rulers in a brief occasion why the dethronement is needed onthe attendance in the honorable Ras Imru Haile-selassie, a longtime friendand relative of the emperor, before he had been taken to an unknown location. "Your Majesty, the Military, Police and the National Guard co- ordinating committee, "the Duerg" has deeply concerned about your Majesty's health, thus we have arranged a place appropriate for your health and safety, so we sincerely beg you to go that place".
The Emperor replied "we have generally listened to what you have said. When we became the king of kings of Ethiopia, it was not only a title, it'sthe people and the country organizing work during "peace & defence" when under attack, we do not suspect that this was well known among our military personnel, however, if changes in time bring something significant to the nation it's impossible to substitute the benefit of the nation with something else, and we have heard it what you have read, sowe will stop over here".
This group Low rank officers and NCOs appointed their chairman and Acting military head of state of Ethiopia. At the same time, this group ofsoldiers assumed the name "Provisional Military Administrative Council",better known as the Duerg.
Lt. General Aman Michael Andom, who nominated Acting military head ofstate signed a decree to release all political prisoners of the former Imperial regime whose were not estimated over thirty allover Ethiopia. The one was Dejazmatch Haile Selassie Gugsa (1886 – 1975) , the great grandson of King Yohannes IV and an army commander and a member ofthe Royal family of the Ethiopian Empire. Haile Selassie Gugsa was the son of Leul Ras Gugsa Araya Selassie. Gugsa Araya Selassie was the Shum of eastern Tigre Province as well as the great grandson of EmperorYohannes IV. Dejazmatch Haile-selassie Gugsa Araya Selassie and few other political prisoners were released by the Provisional MilitaryAdminstrative Council (PMAC) toppled the Ethiopian monarchy,

From the first day of his presidency, according to some notes, "the general found himself at odds with a majority of the Duerg's members over most major issues, including whether he was 'chairman' of the rulingmilitary body or simply its 'spokesman.'" Aman fought the majority of theDuerg over three central issues:

The size of the Duerg, which he felt was too large and unwieldy; the policyto be taken towards the Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF), then Jabhaa.
Over the punishment of the numerous aristocrats and former governmentofficials in the Duerg's custody.

And his refusal to sanction the execution of former high officials, includingtwo former prime ministers and several royal family members, noblemen and relatives, put his relations with the majority of the Duerg on an especially bitter footing.

As an Eritrean origin of Hamassien (Tsazega), General Aman found himself fiercely at odds with the majority of the Duerg. He wanted to negotiate a peaceful settlement; his opponents hoped to crush the ELF bymilitary force. Aman went as far as making two personal visits to Eritrea -the first 25 August to 6 September, the second in November—giving speeches stating that the end of the Imperial regime was also the end of old practices towards Eritrea, that a government dedicated to national unity and progress would restore peace and prosperity to Eritrea, and lastly that he would begin investigations concerning crimes that the armyhad perpetrated on Eritreans and punish the guilty.
However, at the same time the Duerg had begun the task of eliminating opponents within the military. The three significant units were the Imperial Bodyguard, the Air Force, and the Corp of Engineers; of the three, the most recalcitrant were the Engineers. So on 7 October soldiersloyal to the Duerg stormed the Engineers' camp, killing five, wounding several and detaining the rest. "With that, the illusion that the revolutionwould remain bloodless was exploded."
General Aman responded with a personal campaign to seek support outside the Duerg, amongst the rest of the army and the country where he was popular. On 15 November he sent a message to all military units that was highly critical of the Duerg. During a general assembly of the Duerg two days later, Mengistu Haile Mariam demanded that 5,000 men be dispatched to Eritrea and six imprisoned Imperial officials be executed;Aman Andom refused to sign, resigned his official posts and rested at his house where he secretly sent appeals to his supporters, especially those inthe Third Lions’ Division. But Mengistu managed to intercept these appeals. However, General Aman Andom who quarreled with the radical elements in the Duerg over the issue of a new military offense in Eritreaand the proposal to execute the high officials of the Emperor's former government. (Text ends)

Updates: on the 12th of the month, the newly comer Duerg deposed the Emperor Haile selasise, ending 57 years of rule and the Solomonic Dynasty. The Duerg filled the vacated throne, called it self "Provisional Military Administrative Council" and promised it would return to its barrackafter transferring power to the people, but no one believed it. After seven months of turmoil, the revolution, as many feared, was officially hijacked by the Ethiopian military.

In the immediate aftermath of the deposition of the Ethiopian emperor, the Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC) or known commonlyas “the Duerg”, with it's statement made that the Crownprince Asfaw Wossen Haile Selassie would be sworn in as "King designate" rather than Emperor, and the role of the monarch cut back to a purely symbolic role. But the Crownprince refused to recognize this proclamation, remains suspicious as an act that would later be rescinded by the Duerg, and the offer was never accepted by the Prince as legitimate, the royal couple continued to use the titles and dignity of "Crown Prince" and "Crown Princess", and they were the few members of the Imperial family not placed under detention this time. Ethiopia came under a military regime led by junior rank officers and non-commissioned soldiers led by the defacto Majour Mengistu Haile-Mariam who was not known by the public until a while. The Duerg only intended Lt. General Aman Michael Andom as a figurehead, while the real power still rested under Majour Mengistu Haile-Mariam. As John Spencer (1907–2005), a once political advisor to the imperial government recalls, the Emperor has made a lifelong commitments to "Collective Security Initiatives" in favor of competing regional solutions. The tragic family circumstances were a factor in causing the emperor to postpone his designation of the heir presumptive under the article 13 of the revised constitution of 1955. It was only in the last his dethronement months before that he named Prince Zara yacob Asfaw wossen, the eldest son of the crownprince, by that time the long delay in appointing the heir apparet to the throne had already irrtrievably compromised not only the position of imperial families, but also of the emperor.

Stand up and stride (Tenesa Teramed) - The February 1974 Revolution saw racism as detrimental to progress. For example, young men and women of the former Imperial Ethiopian Air Force produced the revolutionary song “Tenesa Teramed” “Stand up and stride” that was short-lived but a popular revolutionary song of it’s time; it was broadcasted all over Ethiopia with the enthusiastic approval of the Duergregime. (በአፍሪካ ቀንድ የኢትዮጵያ እስተራቴጂካዊ አቀማመጥ፣ መልካም የአየር ንብረቷ፣ ለም መሬቷ፣ አያሌ ወንዞቿ፣ የተዋበ መልክዓ ምድሯ፣ ወዘተ..አረብ ሀገሮችንና አፍርካን ለመቀራመት ለሚክለፈለፉ ቅኝ ገዢዎች የ ሚያስጎመዙ እሴቶቻችን ናቸው። “ተነሳ ተራመድ!” ለማስታወስ የሀል በዚያን ጊዜ የኢትዮጵያ አየር ሀይል ወጣቶች ለህዝብ ያበረከቱት) The rallying song: condemns differences based on race or creed; stresses the need for robust defense establishment; laments the wastage of rivers and natural resources without use for several hundred years; calls for rapid socio-economic development. It was taken off the airby the Duerg regime because it was too nationalistic to the influential ideologists of the time.

ተነሳ ተራመድ:አብዮታዊ መዝሙርና ሠረዊቱ የገባውቃል ኪዳንተነሳ ተራመድ

ክንድህን አበርታ፣

ለአገር ብልጽግና ለወገን መከታ፣ እንበል ሃሌ ሉያ ታላቅ የምሥራች፣ ከብዙ እስር ዘመን ኢትዮጵያ ተፈታች፣

ኢትዮጵያችን ተቅደም ብለን እንገሥግሥ፣ ለትውልድ እንዲደርስ የያዝነው ጥንስስ።

አዝማች፡-ሀሁ ኢትዮጵያ ትቅደም!(ሁለት ጊዜ)እንግዲህ ይበቃል እኔ ለኔ ማለት፣

እኛ ለኛ ብለን እንሥራ በህብረት፣

መሻሻል ሥራ እንጂ አይወድምስንፍና፣ ለናት ሀገራችን አይበጃትምና።

አዝማች ሙዚቃ አዝማች ወንዞች ይገደቡ ይዋሉ ለልማት፣

በከንቱ ፈሰዋል ለብዙ ሺ ዓመታት፣ ይውጡማዕድናት ላገራችን ጥቅም፣ ሕዝቧም ታጥቆ ይሥራ በተቻለውአቅም፣

አዝማች፡-ሀሁ ኢትዮጵያ ትቅደም!(ሁለት ጊዜ)አሸብርቃ ታይታ በተፈጥሮ ሀብት፣

ተብላ እንዳልነበር የአፍሪቃ እመቤት፣ ብለውእንዳልጠሯት የዳቦ ቅርጫት፣ እንዴት እናታችን ትባል እራባት።

አዝማች ሙዚቃ

ይቅር ማንቀላፋት ይበቃል መኝታ፣ ይጥፋ ካገራችን ድህነት በሽታ፣ ይነገር ይለፈፍ ይታወጅ በይፋ፣ አንድነት ሀይል ነውየርምጃችን ተስፋ።

አዝማች፡-ሀሁ ኢትዮጵያ ትቅደም!(ሁለት ጊዜ)የናት ያገራችን ጥቃቷን አንወድም፣

ሕዘቧ ተበድሎ ማየት አንፈልግም፣ ይላሉ ልጆችሽ ኢትዮጵያችን ተቅደም።

አዝማች፡-ሀሁ ኢትዮጵያ ትቅደም!(ሁለት ጊዜ)

In mid-September, 1974: Ras Mengesha Seyoum Governor-general offormer Tigre province has fled to the hills to rebel against the Duerg- military takeover.

Side note;- Leul Ras Mengesha Seyoum is a member of the imperial family of the Ethiopian Empire. He is the son of Leul-Ras Seyoum Mengesha, the son of Ras Mengesha Yohannes, and the great grandson of Emperor Johannes VI. King Yohannes VI was the only Emperor of the Tigrayan cadet branch of the Solomonic dynasty being descended in female lines from Emperors Yohannes I and Eyasu I. It’s well known that,the willy Menelik of Shoa state came to be coronated as Menelik II after the Battle of Metemma when Yohannes VI was killed by Dervish Mahdists and the male line of the Solomonic Dynasty was re-established on the Imperial throne. Leul-Ras Mengesha Seyoum was born in 1926 in Dengolat, a village in Enderta county, part of Tigrai province of Ethiopia.

He had served the imperial regime in various posts from Hagere-Hiwot(now Ambo) Awraja to Governor-general of ex-Sidamo and Arussi provinces before he appointed by HIM as Governor-general of former Tigre province.

In September, 1974, when the monarchy was abolished by a military junta, Ras Mengesha founded the Ethiopian Democratic Union (EDU) under his tutlage as hereditary prince of former Tigre province in Khartoum, Sudan and eventually turned to a pro-monarch rebel Front. The EDU professed mainly a conservative agenda, and was made up of various elements that included land-owners who were opposed the rulingDuerg military council and the nationalization of their land holdings.
Dr. Bereket Habte Selassie, who subsequently held numerous high-profile positions under imperial Ethiopia, serving as Attorney General, Associate Justice of Ethiopia's Supreme Court, Vice Minister of Interior, and the first Mayor of Harrar city left Ethiopia narrowly escaping a capture by the military regime security agents to join the armed guerrillas fighting for thesecession of Eritrea. Dr. Bereket Habta selassie who received his LL.B. andPh.D under imperial Ethiopia from the University of London had to be the highly waged civil jurist who claims desatisfaction on imperial policies toward the troubled northern province of Eritrea. Pan-Ethiopians accuse him as an opportunist, separatist, power thirsty person, and being withoutaffection for Ethiopia, a country well educates him of it's resources from the beginning. Habte Silassie, who originated from the northern province of Eritrea himself was most active in the Ethiopian student movement, was subsequently supported the re-arrangement of federation between Ethiopia and Eritrea.

September, 21, 1974: Lt. General Aman Mikael Andom's First Press Conference as Acting Head of State (ጄኔራል አማን አንዶም ደርግ ስልጣን እንደያዘ ለመጀመሪያጊዜ እንደሊቀመንበርነ ታቸው የሰጡት ጋዜጣዊ መግለጫ) Ethiopia's Military head of state Lt.
General Aman Mikael Andom has given his first press conference after overthrowing the King on September the 12th. The provisional military head of state who trained at the Royal Military Academy in Sandhurst, England, is born in Tsaazega of Hamassien in Eritrea province, but grownup in the Sudan. but grown up in the Sudan. He is the third child of the patriotic Quegnazmatch Andom Tesfatsion of the Tsaazega ofHammassien.

In late September, 1974: Ethiopian Democratic Union (EDU) founded in the aftermath of the revolution and the military coup that toppled EmperorHaile Selassie, the EDU professed a conservative agenda. Established under the tutelage of Ras Mangasha Seyum, the hereditary Prince of Tigray, the EDU was made up of various elements that included land owners who were opposed to the nationalization of their land holdings, monarchists, high-ranking military officers displaced by the mutineers whohad led the coup against the Emperor, and conservative and centrist opponents of the Marxist-Leninist Duerg.

October 4, 1974: Importation of luxury items such as vehicles, perfumes,and other related items for use suspended.

October 7, 1974: Army soldiers loyal to the ruling Duerg stormed the ‘Military Engineers Corps' camp, killing five, wounding several others anddetaining the rest’

"With that, the illusion that the revolution would remain bloodless was exploded." Armed mutineers from Arsenal & Engineering Corps consists of25 members charged with armed mutiny and tried at a Marshal court as Majour Goshu Wolde the court’s prosecutor. Many of the mutineers whoseprobably took the initiative to steer more on the foundation of the Duerg military council more than others, has been killed with others at a mutiny within the Army Engineering Corps unit.

October 17, 1974: The post-monarchial head of State Lt. General AmanMichael Andom:

This time he had proposed the general assembly of the ruling-Duerg a “partial restoration of the pre-1961 Eritrea’s federal Act, but that might have been rejected by the Duerg general assembly. However, General Aman Mikael Andom quarrels with the radical elements in the Duerg overthe issue of a new military offensive in Eritrea and their proposal to execute the high profile officials of Haile Selassie's former government.
Then he resigns in protest to security and military issues of the ruling Provisional Military Administrative Council (the Duerg). Lieutenant GeneralAman Mikael Andom (1924 to November 17, 1974) was the first post monarchy acting military head of state of Ethiopia ceased his duty to his outrage and rested at his home. Lt. General Aman Andom was originally from the village of Tsa'zega, Hamassien, in the province of Eritrea. He wasappointed to this position following the coup d'état that deposed Emperor Haile Selassie on 12th September 1974, and served until his death in a gun shootout with his former supporters at his residence in southwestern Addis Ababa. His official title was Chairman of the Provisional Military Administrative Council (better known as the Duerg), and he held the position of Military Head of State in an acting capacity as the military regime had officially proclaimed Crown Prince Asfaw Wossen as "King-designate".
Updates: Aman Mikael Andom (21 June 1924 – 23 November 1974) at therank of Lt. General in the Ethiopian army this time was the first post- imperial acting Head of State of Ethiopia. He was an Eritrean originally from the village of Tsa-azega in Hamassien sub-region in Eritrea province.He was appointed to the position of military head of state following the coup d'état that deposed Emperor Haile Selassie on 12th September 1974, and served until his death in a shootout with his former supporters.His official title was Chairman of the Provisional Military Administrative Council (better known as the Duerg), and he held the position of Military Head of State in an acting capacity as the military regime had officially proclaimed Crown Prince Asfaw Wossen as "King-designate" (an act that would later be rescinded by the Duerg, and which was never accepted by the Prince as legitimate).

October 17, 1974: The national campaign for “Development Through Co-operation” officially announced.

October 21, 1974: Ethiopian Premier League tournament is at it’s peak this time. On the ongoing premier championship, the EFF has cancelled the premiership champion’s title for the FC Asmara, known in its other name as “Hamassien”, and awarded the championship to “Imba Soyra”.The Premier League, the top association football division in Ethiopia is created in 1944. The event was regulated by the Ethiopian Football Federation (EFF) until this time.

Previous Winners

British Military Missioni-in Ethiopia BMME, (Addis Ababa)1945-47: no competition

1948 : Key-Baher (Asmara)

1949 : Mechal-Army (Addis Ababa 1950 : Saint-George SA (Addis Ababa)1951 : Mechal-Army (Addis Ababa) 1952 : Mechal-Army (Addis Ababa) 1953 : Mechal-Army (Addis Ababa) 1954 : Mechal-Army (Addis Ababa) 1955 : Hamassien (Asmara)

1956 : Mechal-Army (Addis Ababa)1957 : Hamassien FC (Asmara) 1958 : Akele-Guzay FC (Eritrea)

1959 : Tele SC (Asmara)

1960 : Cotton Company of Ethiopia FC (Dire Dawa)1961 : Ethio-Cement FC (Dire Dawa)

1962 : Cotton Company of Ethiopia FC (Dire Dawa)1963 : Cotton Company of Ethiopia FC (Dire Dawa)

1964 : Ethio-Cement FC (Dire Dawa)

1965 : Cotton Company of Ethiopia FC Dire Dawa)1966 : Saint-George SA (Addis Ababa)

1967 : Saint-George SA (Addis Ababa)

1968 : Saint-George SA (Addis Ababa)1969 : Tele SC (Asmara)

1970 : Tele SC (Asmara)

1971 : Saint-George SA (Addis Ababa)1972 : Asmara (Asmara)

1973 : Asmara (Asmara)

1974 : Imba-Soira (Akele-Guzay)* 1975 : Saint-George SA (Addis Ababa)1976 : Mechal (Addis Ababa)

1977 : Railway /Medr Babour) (DireDawa)

1978 : Ogaden Anbassa /3rd Lions Army Division/ (Harrar)1979 : Omedla /Police/ (Addis Ababa)

Note*: On the wake of a Cup bidding scandal b/n then FC EELPA and FC Asmara (Hamassien), the Ethiopian Football Federation (EFF) led by Lij Yidnekatchew Tessema have decisively acted against FC Asmara (Hamassien), and the 1974 League championship cup finally passed ontothe Emba-Soira football club of the Akele-Guzay, which is one of the premier teams in the country, based in Asmara.

The Armed forces soccer teams namely Metchal (Army), Neb (Airforce), and Oum-Idla (Police), Mekuria (Kibour-Zebegna) were re-organized andrejoined the civilian clubs under Ethiopian Premier League tournament after nearly ten years of absence.
The ruling PMAC removed the Lion symbol completely removed from the flag with the formal abolishment of the Monarchy by proclamation a few months later, and the image of the first Duerg era emblem began to be displayed in the middle of the flag as a government banner as the previous Ethiopian Flag colours, horizontal Green, Yellow, and Red stripesremained as it is.
November 3, 1974: A new cabinet portfolio “Ministry of National Resources Development (MoNRD)” introduced in the cabinet to effectivelymanage state owned post-Italian occupation buildings and other related resources along with then nationalized mechanized rural farmings.
November 11, 1974, the paleontologist Donald Johanson made adiscovery that led to the re-imagination of human origins.

Side note: On a dig in the Danakil, a lowland region of Ethiopia formed millions of years ago by the Red Sea, which extended far into what's now the African continent, Johanson unearthed portions of a fossilized skeletonthat appeared to be something between a human and an ape. A tape of the Beatles song "Lucy in the Sky with Diamonds" was playing, so the team named her Lucy.
The discovery of Lucy further affirmed Ethiopia's role in history, and todaythis remarkable specimen remains the most complete fossil of an early human ancestor. Scientists date Lucy at about 3.5 million years old. Otherteams have found older fossilized bones. But no find from so long ago in our evolutionary past is more complete. To call Lucy the ancestor of all humanity is an intriguing flight of fancy. But we do know one thing for certain about Ethiopia's seemingly infinite past: This is the land responsible for waking people up in the morning and keeping them up allnight.
Legend attributes the discovery of the palatable stimulant to Kaldi, a goat herder from Kaffa, circa 850 A.D., who noticed one day that his goats became frisky - dancing on their hind legs - when they ate the little red berries on a shrub in his field. Excited by his find, the goat herder took some of the beans to the local monks, who roasted them in a fire, crushedthem into a powder, and put them in water to create a new beverage, which gave them the energy to stay up all night in prayer.
The truth, alas, is far less fanciful. Some scholars believe that the coffee plant grows native only in Ethiopia, where the Oromo people may have been the first to use the bean. The Oromo ground the beans into a powderand then mixed it with animal fat to eat while traveling and to give them energy for the hunt or for battle. Other tribes also began to use the beansto make porridge or wine.
November 14, 1974: Lt. General Aman Mikael Andom protested to the general assembly of the Duerg whose only intended him as a figureheadwhile the real power still rested under his very more junior officers.

November 15, 1974: General Aman responded with a personal campaign to seek support outside the Duerg, amongst the rest of the army and the country where he was popular. The senior officer sent a message to all military units that was highly critical of the Duerg. During a general assembly of the Duerg two days later, Mengistu Haile Mariam demanded that 5,000 men be dispatched to Eritrea and six imprisoned Imperial officials be executed; Aman Andom refused to sign, resigned his official posts and retired to his house where he secretly sent appeals to his supporters, especially those in the Third Lions' Division. But Mengistu managed to intercept these appeals. However, General Aman Andom who quarreled with the radical elements in the Duerg over the issue of a new military offense in Eritrea and the proposal to execute the high officials ofthe Emperor's former government.

November 22, 1974: The proud Lt. General Aman Michael Andom haslearnt to his outrage'

The ruling Duerg council only intended him as a figurehead, while the real power still rested under Majour Mengistu Haile-Mariam, his very more junior. Then the Duerg, incenced and intimidated by Lt. General Aman's refusal to play along settles on showing to friends and foes alike, who really was in charge. And tragically, when nothing more than a simple dismissal of the senior General would have sufficed, as one of senior military officers, he posed no real dangers. The spirited quest of the senior officer for a peaceful resolution of the problem in Eritrea province abrupt end when he was silenced by armed units at his home. The charismatic Lt.General Aman Michael Andom, the post-monarchy head of state Ethiopia, and who had been in a struggle for power with the other members of the Duerg was killed in a shootout at his home.

On the evening a written order signed and stamp-sealed by Majour Mengistu Haile-Mariam reads as " A pit shall be dug at the Kerchelle main prison for 54 prisoners using a Dozer and the senior civilian and military officials listed from No 1 to No 54 shall be kept separately from the other prisoners by 8.00 pm". "We hereby notify you that they shall be transported by military vehicles to the main Kerchelle prison where they shall be shot to death at 08.00 pm/02.00 local time. Majour Mengistu Haile-Mariam and fellow Duerg members hastily and nervously authorizedthe extra-judicial killing of 61 senior officials of the Imperial government on the 23rd of November, 1974. The Duerg succumbs to inexplicable hysteria and opts for a massacre, perhaps foolishly, and with no apparentdue cause, reversing it's "Change without bloodshed" promises to the nation. It took a while to emerge that the Duerg had craftily added to thelist of victims dissident members from it's own ranks as well as leaders ofthe military units who had opposed it's assumption of political power.

Along with General Aman Michael Andom, his close associates as well as bodyguards, totally over 60 senior Haile-Selassie regime officials includingthe grandson of the emperor , royal-prince Rear Admiral Eskinder Desta, deputy commander of the Imperial Ethiopian Navy as well as two arrestedex-prime ministers of Ethiopia without having being brought to court werebrutally murdered and all buried in a mass-grave in the central prison of "Kerchelle", the nation was literally stunned into an outraged silence. Among the senior officials were two ex-prime ministers namely, Tsehafe T'ezaz Aklilu Habta-wold, and his successor Lij Endalkatchew Makonnen. Tsehafe T’ezaz Aklilu is known for making a debut in the field of foreign affairs representing Ethiopia's case in the United Nations debates on Eritrea in legal and political competence of the uncomparable who single handedly checkmated an army of Italian diplomats and pro-Arab lawyers at debates over Eritrea. And Lij Endelkachew Makonnen who had previously served in a variety of diplomatic and political posts, among were the Ethiopian Ambassador to Britain, Permanent Representative to the United Nations, and was one of the people under consideration for the post of UN Secretary General in 1972, before Kurt Waldheim was appointed. He had also served as Minister for TeTe, Posts and Communications, and had served as the International President of the Young Men's Christianity Association (YMCA). He would be the last Imperial prime minister appointed by the Emperor. Lij Endalkatchew has attempted to address the many demands being put forward by the proponents of reform, and Ethiopia seemed to be on the verge of transforming itself into a democracy and a modern constitutional monarchy. It's well known that his late father Bitwadad Makonnen Endalkatchew had served as post-Italian occupation prime minister of Ethiopia in the 1950s.

Updates: As commander of the Third Division, General Aman had been beating back the encroachments of the Somali army on the eastern borderwith a zeal and success that he was known as the "Desert Lion." However,in 1964 the Emperor dismissed General Aman Andom when he began to attack into Somalia in violation of an order from the Emperor, and Aman afterwards served in the Ethiopian Senate in a "political exile". There is some evidence that indicates he had contacts with the officers of the junta as early as February and March 1974, but by July he was appointed chief of staff to the military junta. Three days after the junta removed the Emperor from his palace to imprisonment at the headquarters of the Fourth Division, this group appointed him their chairman and president of Ethiopia. At the same time, this group of soldiers assumed the name "Provisional Military Administrative Council", better known as the Duerg. From the first day of his presidency, the Ottaways note, "the general found himself at odds with a majority of the Duerg's members over most major issues, including whether he was 'chairman' of the ruling military body or simply its 'spokesman.'" Aman fought the majority of the Duerg over three central issues: the size of the Duerg, which he felt was too large and unwieldy; the policy to be taken towards the Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF); and over the punishment of the numerous aristocrats and former government officials in the Duerg's custody. His refusal to sanctionthe execution of former high officials, including two former prime ministers and several royal family members and relatives, put his relations with the majority of the Derg on an especially bitter footing.

As an Eritrean origin, General Aman found himself fiercely at odds with the majority of the Duerg. He wanted to negotiate a peaceful settlement; his opponents hoped to crush the ELF by military force. Aman went as far as making two personal visits to Eritrea - the first 25 August to 6 September, the second in November—giving speeches stating that the endof the Imperial regime was also the end of old practices towards Eritrea, that a government dedicated to national unity and progress would restore peace and prosperity to Eritrea, and lastly that he would begin investigations concerning crimes that the army had perpetrated on Eritreans and punish the guilty.

However, at the same time the Duerg had begun the task of eliminating opponents within the military. The three significant units were the Imperial Bodyguard, the Air Force, and the Corp of Engineers; of the three, the most recalcitrant were the Engineers. So on 7 October soldiers loyal to the Duerg stormed the Engineers' camp, killing five, wounding several and detaining the rest. As Bahru Zewde observes, "With that, the illusion that the revolution would remain bloodless was exploded." General Aman responded with a personal campaign to seek support outside the Duerg, amongst the rest of the army and the country where he was popular. On 15 November he sent a message to all military units that was highly critical of the Duerg. During a general assembly of the Duerg two days later, Mengistu Haile Mariam demanded that 5,000 men be dispatched to Eritrea and six imprisoned Imperial officials be executed;

Aman Andom refused to sign, resigned his official posts and retired to his house where he secretly sent appeals to his supporters, especially those inthe Third Lions' Division. But Mengistu managed to intercept these appeals. However, General Aman Andom who quarreled with the radical elements in the Duerg over the issue of a new military offense in Eritrea and the proposal to execute the high officials of the Emperor's former government. The promised investigative process was stillborn. The events leading to the executions of the 60 high officials of the imperial government was diabolically conceived and staged by Majour Mengistu Hailemariam, a junior officer whos consumed by blind ambition. From the beginning, Mengistu's eye was fixed on the top job, the chairmanship of the Duerg council; but he had to consolidate his power. Mengistu cleverly orchestrated the massacre of the 60 former imperial officials as his ultimate power play game for the chairmanship. Mengistu first scapegoated Lt. Gen. Aman Michael Andom, the first titular chairman of the Duerg. Gen. Aman was not only a highly decorated military leader butalso widely respected and loved by the troops under the Eastern military command whos he led the Ethiopian troops during the Korean War and distinguished himself in the Ethiopian Somali border conflicts in April, 1964.

Majour Mengistu set in motion an elaborate intrigue to oust Gen. Aman Andom by fabricating a story that Gen. Aman was plotting to sabotage the"revolution" spearheaded by the Duerg. He accused Gen. Aman of being an appeaser of the rebels in Eritrea because Gen. Aman had proposed a negotiated settlement of that conflict. Gen. Aman had ethnic roots from Tsa-Azega in Eritrea and Mengistu sought to play on prevailing sentimentsof ethnic mistrust in the Duerg. He depicted Gen. Aman as a conspirator and rebel sympathizer and insisted that the Eritrean rebellion could and should be crushed militarily.

Lt. Gen. Aman actually had other fundamental disagreements with Mengistu and his faction in the Duerg. For instance, Gen. Aman Mikael Andom as chairman rejected Mengistu's demand for the summary execution of certain detained former imperial officials. Gen. Aman also didnot believe Ethiopia could be led by a gathering of callow and sophomoric NCO's and enlisted men. As a result of deep disagreements with Mengistu,Gen. Aman resigned.

Majour Mengistu, the de-facto leader of the Duerg sent troops to "arrest" Lt. Gen. Aman. In the ensuing battle, Gen. Aman Andom was killed. It was rumored that he committed suicide than be captured. It will never beknown whether Lt. Gen. Aman could have delivered a negotiated settlement of the conflict in Eritrea. But many believed that Lt. General Aman Michael Andom was died in a shootout with troops sent to arrest him.

The Fateful Evening of Black Saturday of November 23 1974 In Ethiopia, and 60 officials of the imperial regime. Lt. General Aman Michael Andom: After eliminating units loyal to him—the Engineers, the Imperial Bodyguard and the Air Force—the Duerg military removed General Aman Andom from power and executed him along with some supporters and 60 officials of the previous Imperial government. General Aman was died in abattle with troops sent to his home to arrest him. The actual cause of his death remains unclear, whether he was killed or committed suicide. That same night, the political prisoners that the Derg had marked for executionwere taken from Menelik prison, where they had been held, to the CentralPrison of Karchelle where they were executed and buried in a mass grave.

"It appears that the general had outlived his usefulness. Lt. General AmanMichael Andom dies in a shootout with troops sent to arrest him.

After eliminating units loyal to him—the Engineers, the Imperial Bodyguard and the Air Force—the Duerg military removed General Aman Andom from power and executed him along with some supporters and 60 officials of the previous Imperial government. General Aman was died in abattle with troops sent to his home to arrest him. The actual cause of his death remains unclear, whether he was killed or committed suicide. That same night, the political prisoners that the Derg had marked for executionwere taken from Menelik prison, where they had been held, to the CentralPrison of Karchelle where they were executed and buried in a mass grave."It appears that the general had outlived his usefulness.

The evening of November 23, 1974 was sometimes called as the "Bloody Saturday" in Ethiopia for that day's surprise purge of some three score politicians and soldiers by the ruling Duerg. It was barely ten weeks since the Duerg — an Amharic word meaning "committee", in this case a leftist military junta — had formally overthrown Emperor Haile Selassie. Below isthe list of 57 senior government officials, civil servants, decorated war veterans and elite army officers summarily executed by the ruling Duerg firing squad. That same night about important political prisoners held by the ruling Duerg are executed.

After eliminating units loyal to him—the Engineers, the Imperial Bodyguard and the Air Force—the Duerg military removed General Aman Andom from power and executed him along with some supporters and 60 officials of the previous Imperial government. General Aman was died in abattle with troops sent to his home to arrest him. The actual cause of his death remains unclear, whether he was killed or committed suicide. That same night, the political prisoners that the Derg had marked for executionwere taken from Menelik prison, where they had been held, to the CentralPrison of Karchelle where they were executed and buried in a mass grave."It appears that the general had outlived his usefulness.

The fate of Lt. General Aman Michael Andom, and the 60 Senior Imperialgovernment officials, civil servants, and senior military officers who weresummarily executed by the ruling military Duerg regime firing squads onthe fateful evening as disclosed by Assefa Yirgu, then PMAC official radiostatements caster were as followed,

However, after the Ethio-Somali war of April, 1964, the Emperor dismissed Aman Andom as army Colonel when he began to attack into Somalia in violation of an order from the Emperor, and Aman afterwardsserved in the Ethiopian Senate as a "political exile". There is some evidence that indicates he had contacts with the officers of the junta as early as February and March 1974, but by July he was appointed the lastimperial chief of staff of the Armed forces by the emperor as brought forappointment by the military steering committee (known later as the Duerg), in the rank of army Majour-General. November 23, 1974: The military junta led by Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam gathered and took a “simple vote” to summarily execute 60 high level government officials, civil servants, decorated war veterans and elitearmy officers and enlisted men of the imperial regime.

The 60 high profile officials of Emperor Haile selassie government gathered for murder by the military ruling junta Duerg in Addis Ababa,main Kerchelle prison.

In justifying the summary executions, the Provisional Military Ruling Council locally known as the Duerg issued the following statement throughRadio broadcast: “The Military Ruling Council (Duerg) also found it necessary to execute former civilian and military officials on whose account repeated plots have been made that might engulf the country intoa bloodbath. This decision was imperative to save the lives of innocent people that had suffered for so long in the past. Hence the Council ordered the execution of those found guilty of mal-administration, hindering fair administration of justice, selling secret documents of the country to foreign agents and attempting to disrupt the present Ethiopian popular movement

State-owned media outlets announced, "All the mentioned 60 people including the post-monarchial head of state, Lt. General Aman Michael Andom have been executed in a politically decision made right after theevening of the 23rd November, 1974. And their funeral has taken place,so family members are not allowed to request for their coffins", state media outlets announced.
ለግድያ ከተጠሩት ውስጥ በድንጋጤ ተውጠው ከመሀላቸው ጠና ያሉት ራስ መስፍን ስለሺ

ተመልከት አንተ ወጣት ራሴን በሚመለከት ሙሉ ሀይወት ኖራአለሁ ምንም የሚቆጨኝ ነገር የለም። እኔ ይህን ቀንእጠብቀው ነበር ሞትን በእቅፌ እቀበለዋለሁ። ዕድሜውን ሁሉ ላግሩ ያገለገለ ሰው የመጨረሻ መጥፎ ነገር የሚደርስበት በስተርጅና ውርደትን መቀበል ነው። እኔ አሁን ፹፭ ዓመቴ ነውአገሬ ይህ ረብሻ ከተነሳ ጀምሮ የማስበውበአንድ ጥይት ጭንቅላቴን ተመትቼ ለዘላለም ማረፍ ነው። በመጨረሻም ይህን ቃል ስለሰጣችሁኝ ምስጋናዬን ታላቅ ነው። ነገር ግን ከሚሞት ሽማግሌ አንድ ምክር ልስጣችሁ። የተማሩትን ወጣቶች እንዳልካቸውን እና እስክንድርን ማሯቸው። አንድ ቀን ላገሪቷ ይጠቅማሉ። በኋላ ይፀጽታቸኋል። ቃሌን አትርሳ።

ጠ/ሚር አክሊሉ ሀ/ወልድ

እናንት ወታደሮች ለረጂም ዘመን ላገራችን የሰራነውበሙሉ በዕውነት ትክክል አይደለምባይ ናችሁ። ይህን ማመን አልችልምከሁሉምበላይ እናንተ ቢያንስ ለጋራ ጥሩ ነገር የሰራነውን እንኳን ትክዳላችሁ?እኔን የፈለጋችሁትን አድርጉኝ ላገሬ ግን ፈራሁላት።

ልጅ እንዳልካቸው መኮንን

እኔ ላይ ምንም ጥፋት አታገኙም፡፤ የተማርኩ ከመሆኔ በስተቀር። አገሬን በሚቻለኝ ለማገልገል ሞክራአለሁ፡፤ ነገር ግን አይገባችሁም። ለምን መግደል አስፈለገ?የሚወዱትን አገር ማገልገል ዕውነት እንዲህ አይደለም።

አበበ ረታ

እናንተ ወታደሮች እጅግ ተሳስታችኋል። ኢትዮጵያን እጅግ ውስብስብ አገር ነች። ለችግሯ መፍትሄ ያረጋችሁት በጣም ቀላል ነው። ይቺን አገር እንደዚህ መግዛት አትችሉም። በከባዱ መንገድ ትማሩ ይሆናል።

አሰፋ አያና

በዕውነት ማንን እንደምትገሉ ታውቃላችሁ ወይስ ተሳስታችሁ ነው?ስራዬ እንደ ወታደርም እንደ እኩል ደንብ (ሲቪል)የህዝብ አገልጋይም ግልጽ ነው። የንፁህ ሰውደም ማፍሰሳችሁን ዕወቁት። ይህ ቅጥ ያጣ ዕብደት ነው።

ሪር አድሚራል እስክንድር ደስታ

ምን እደሚመጣ አውቄ ነበር እናም ይህን አገር ጥዬ ልጠፋ ነበር። ለኔ ሞት ንጉሠ ነገሥቱን አወግዛለሁ። ምክንያቱም ያለፍቃዴ በግድ እንድመለስ ስላረጉኝ።

November 23 1974: The day that changed Ethiopia forever.

Just 1 year ago by early 1974, strikes, protests, and demonstrations against the imperial government were staged throughout the country by many different groups including students and wide range of Marxist groups, taxi drivers, labor unions, military units, etc..... During the initial transformation, the military ruling council known as the Duerg still honored the revolution's slogan " Ethiopia First without bloodshed," the overall transition was relatively peaceful and without casualties. However,power struggles within the ruling military council led to the rise of a de- facto man called, Mengistu Haile Mariam and the phrase " Ethiopia First without bloodshed " was soon forgotten. And soon ..... he executedthe 60 officials the imperial government, the day that changed Ethiopia forever, and the slogan “Ethiopia First without bloodshed” came to brokenpromises .

The list of 60 Senior Imperial Ethiopian government officials, civil servants, and senior military officers who were summarily executed by theDuerg regime firing squads on the the evening as disclosed by Assefa Yirgu, then PMAC official statements caster were as followed,

Aklilu Habtewold

(Tsehafe Tizaz, served as Premier of the Imprial Government of Ethiopi for13 years and in other high level positions previously for a total of 39 years).

HRH Ras Asrate Kassa

President of the Imperial Crown Council, previously Enderassie of Eritreaprovince; served in various high level positions for over 34 years). Leul Ras Asrate-Medhin Kassa -

Lij Endalkachew Mekonnen

(Last prime minister of Imperial Ethiopia; Ethiopian ambassador to theU.N., served in various high level positions for 23 years).

Ras Mesfin Seleshi

(war veteran, Enderassie Governor-general (Enderassie) of former ShoaProvince; served in various high level positions for over 54 years).

Ato Abebe Retta

Last President of the Imperial senate: member of the Imperial Crown Council, formerly served as Minister of Agriculture, diplomat, linguist, scholar in history and religion, particularly the Ethiopian Orthodox Church;served in various capacities for 47 years).

Lt. Col. Tamirat Yegezu

Former Enderassie, Crown Council member; served in various capacitiesfor 38 years).

Ato Akaleworq Habtewold

(Imperial Minister of Justice , ambassador, served in various capacities for39 years).

Dr. Tesfaye Guebre-Ezghy

(Last Imperial Minister of Information).

Ato Mulatu Debebe

(Last Imperial Minister of Public & Social affairs; served in variouscapacities for 22 years).

Dejazmach Solomon Abraha

Enderassie (Governor-General) of Wollo province; served in variouscapacities).

Lij (later Dejazmach) Legesse Bezu

(Vice- Governor-general (Mikitl Enderassie) of Wollo Provinceserved invarious capacities for a total of 29 years).

Dejazmach Sahlu Defaye

Enderassie (Governor-general) of Arussi Province: veteran; served invarious capacities for a total of 46 years)

Dejazmach Workneh Wolde Amanuel

Enderassie (Governor-general) of former Harrarghe province: (Minister, Senator, Enderassie; served in various capacities for a total of 30 years).

Dejazmach Kifle Ergetu

Imperial Minister of Interior(ambassador, diplomat, Senator).

Fitawrari Worku Enqoselassie

Awraja (sub-region) governor; served in various capacities for a total of26 years).

Dejazmach Aemeroselassie Abebe

Enderassie (Governer-general) of Gemu-Goffa province: civil servant;served in various capacities for 35 years).

Dejazmach Kebede Ali Wole

(Mikitl Enderassie) Vice Governor-general of Wollo Province: military commander served in various capacities for 34 years).

Ato Nebeye Leul Kifle

(Minister, Nobleman, member of the special cabinet under HIM: served fora total of 24 years).

Colonel Solomon Kedir

Head of Special Security and National Intelligence: previously served invarious capacities for 25 years).

Affe-Negus Abeje Debalq

Affe-Negus Abedje Debalk - Chief judge at the Imperial Supreme Court (served as Judge, Crown counsellor, imperial Senate; in various capacitiesfor 44 years).

Kegnazmatch Yilma Aboye

Kegnazmach Yilma Aboye – Nobleman(served as Palace courtier, servedin various capacities for 18 years).

Ato Tegegn Yeteshaworq

Vice Minister of Information: (served as editor-in-chief of The EthiopianHerald; served for 12 years).

Ato Solomon Gebremariam

(Minister & Nobleman served in various capacities for 31 years).

Ato Hailu Teklu

Nobleman (served as civil servant).

Blatta Admassu Retta

State Minister of Palace affairs known as “Ministry of Ghibi”; (served asPalace courtier).

Lij Hailu Desta

Director-general, at Imperial Ministry of Defense (IMoD); (served as previously served as Ethiopian Red Cross President, in various capacitiesfor 26 years).

Fitawrari Amede Abera

Nobleman and Rancher - served the Imperial government in variouscapacities

Fitawrari Demiss Alamerew

(Enderassie).

Fitawrari Tadesse Enquselassie

Previousely served as Enderassie (Governor-General) - Nobleman.

Lt. General Abiye Abebe

Last Imperial Minister of Defence (IMoD) previously served Minister,ambassador, Crown Rep under «Eritrea Federation with Ethiopia»,President of the Imperial Senate).

Lt. General Kebede Guebre

Imperial Minister of Defence (IMoD)

Lt. General Dressie Dubale

Commander-in-chief of the Ground Armed Forces

Lt. General Abebe Gemeda

Commander-in-chief of the Imperial Bodyguard (Kibour-Zebegna); servedin various capacities for a total of 40 years).

Lt. General Yilma Shibeshi

Commander of Imperial Ethiopian Police Forces (Police serawit); served invarious capacities for 34 years).

Lt. General Haile Baykedagn

Lt. General Haile Baykedagne - Imperial Armed forces, elite DivisionCommander previously served as chief of staff; served in various capacities for 32 years).

Lt. General Assefa Ayene

Commander-in-chief of the Imperial Ethiopian Air Force(Minister, chief ofstaff; served in various capacities for a total of 38 years).

Lt. General Belete Abebe

Chief of Staff of the Imperial Territorial Army (Biherawi Tor); served invarious capacities for a total of 40 years).

Lt. General Issayas Gebreselassie

Governor-general (Enderassie) of Sidamo Province: served as elite armycommander and later as Imperial senator).

Lt. General Assefa Demissie

Head of Protocol (wana Elfign Askelkay) ADC to the Emperor.

Lt. General Debebe Hailemariam

Military Emergency Governor of Eritrea Province(war veteran, palacecourtier, commander of ground forces; served a total of 33 years).

Maj. General Seyoum Gedle Giorgis

D/Commander of Ground Forces Division; (served in various capacities inthe military for a total of 31 years).

Maj. General Gashaw Kebede

Commander of Eritrea Police Force; served in the national police force andother capacities for a total of 33 years).

Maj. General Tafesse Lemma

Division Commander and Palace security (served Military attache, palacecourtier; for a total of 28 years).

Rear Admiral Iskinder Desta

Deputy Commander of the Imperial Ethiopian Navy (IEN); he's known tomodernize the navy).

Brigadier General Wondimu Abebe

Senior army officer at IMoD

Brig. General Mulugetta Woldeyohannes

(Chief of National Army Force; served as senior officer at IMoDserved invarious capacities for 31 years).

Brig. General Girma Yohannes

Senior officer at IMoD; served in the National Army Force for 28 years.

Col. Yalem Zewd Tessema

Commander of the elite Airborne Corps, Debre Zeit base

Col. Tassew Mojo

Aid de-camp (Angatch)

Col. Yigezu Yimene

Security officer

Major Berhanu Metcha
Security officer

Capt. Molla Wakene
Security officer

Capt. Demessie Shiferaw
Royal demining officer at the Imperial Bodyguard

Capt. Belay Tsegaye
Army aviation security officer; served as army aviation helicopter pilot;served a total of 31 years).

Capt. Woldeyohanes Zergaw
Army aviation officer

Corporal Teklu Hailu (18 year-old and member of the Army Engineers Corps; executed for opposing the idea of military government).

Pvt. Bekele Woldegiorgis
NCO (served 22 years).

Lieutenant. General Aman Michael Andom
Post-monarchial military head of state of the Provisional Military Government of Ethiopia.(Symbolic chairman of the Duerg military counciland the Council of Ministers, Defense Minister and Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces).

Lieutenant Tesfay Tekele
Junior army officer -(24 years-old Army aviation pilot)- Member of theDuerg council.

Junior Aircraftsman Yohannes Fitwi
Corporal Yohannes Fetoui – NCO Member of the Duerg Council.

The Duerg executions began with the 60 imperial officials in the eveningof November, 23, 1974. But in the ensuing years, the Duerg launched aRed Terror Campaign (Qey Shibr) of assassination and massacres of young people numbered in the tens of thousands further.
In justifying the summary executions, the ruling-Duerg issued the following statement: “The Council (Duerg) also found it necessary to execute former civilian and military officials on whose account repeated plots have been made that might engulf the country into a bloodbath. Thisdecision was imperative to save the lives of innocent people that had suffered for so long in the past. Hence the Council ordered the execution of those found guilty of mal-administration, hindering fair administration of justice, selling secret documents of the country to foreign agents and attempting to disrupt the present Ethiopian popular movement.” The 60 victims were all buried in a mass grave with their hands tied as evidence later proved following exhumation of their remains. The exhumation and reburial of the remains of the 60 victims.

Lt. General Abiye Abebe victim of horrible Massacre known as "BlackSaturday"

The last Imperial Minister of Defence Lt. General Abiye Abebe was one ofthe Aristocrats known for his book that wrote his account in an Amharic writing titled "Let's find ourselves at a consciously manner (Awquen Entarem)” based on his past and present life and experiences of his personal knowledge warned the decadent imperial officials and riches in the then Ethiopia (ጄኔራል ዐቢይ አበበ “አውቀን እንታረም” የሚል መጽሐፍ ደርሰውነበር። ጠንቃቃውጄኔራል “አውቀን ካልታረምን ሌላው ቀርቶ ሬሳችን የወደቀበት እንኳ አይታወቅም” ብለው እንደነበር ይታወቃል)

The devil visited Ethiopia at this dark day of history ” scholars quoted. The honorable Lt. General Abiye Abebe of who is seen in the image was among the victimsa of the November massacre at the then maximum security prison of Addis Abeba famously Known as Kerchelle (ከርቸሌ). Lt. General Abiye Abebe was world’s finest solider. A highly educated officer who has given all his shot to pull his country from backwardness toward civilization. So he should be remembered as Ethiopia ‘s priceless son with highest respect. Those unlawfully executed ministers have nothing to do with the famine of 1973. There is no way that will point out one single eraor leadership that came to pass without drought and famine in Ethiopia.

The following personalities believed were being arrested and executed in various times: Ato Seifu Mahteme Selassie-Imperial Minister of Education& Fine Arts* Tsehafi -T’ezaz Teffera-Worq Kidanewold then Impeial Minister of Palace affairs (known as Ghibi Ministry)* Dr. Haile Giorgis Workneh Mayor of Addis Ababa City* Pro-Unionist Dejazmatch Haregot Abbay-Mayor of Asmara City*

The September, 1974 military takeover of power in Ethiopia has been described alternatively as a “bloodless” and “creeping coup”. Unlike mostAfrican countries that experienced violent military coups in the post- colonial period, the junior officers in Ethiopia rushed their way into a power vacuum left by a decaying imperial regime whose leaders were in confusion and disarray over the burgeoning civil unrest at the time. The “creeping coup” began haltingly as a ragtag bunch of junior officers bungled their way into power. Their slogan was “Yaleminim Dem Ityopia Tikdem” (“Without shedding blood, Ethiopia First”) by re-organizing themselves in a self-styled “Ye-Tor Hailoch, Ye-Police ena Ye-Biherwi Tor Astebabari Duerg”, (Coordinating Committee of the Armed Forces, Police,and Territorial Army).

On this day in November, 1974 the Duerg executed without trial or even formal charges, 60 ex officials of the deposed Imperial government. This included the acting Duerg symbolic head of state Lt. General Aman Michael Andom, two ex-prime ministers, the Emperor's grandson who wasin the title of Rear Admiral in the navy, as well as numerous other civilianand military officials. This video includes pictures of many of them as wellas several others executed at a later date which included Patriarch Abune Theophilos.

It has been firmly believed that the ruling Military Administrative Council known as the ‘Duerg’ headed by it’s defacto leader Majour Mengistu HaileMariam purged about 11 top army officers (Lt. Generals) , 4 other seniorarmy officers (Majour-Generals), 1 naval senior officer (Rear Admiral), 3 senior army officers (Brigadier-Generals), including 5 mid-rank officers (Colonels) have been killed in and after the November massacre of Karchalle. Under* mark killed in separate times. Analysts commented, "if the General's Eritrea initiative was implemented,the secessionist rebels in Eritrea could have been in jeopardy. Surely, it would have collapsed eventually and Eritrea would probably not have separated from Ethiopia, even they would have found it hard to seize control of the central government thus a big chance was lost to stop Eritrea seceding from Ethiopia, the restoration of the Eritrean federation would have made it impossible for the scessionist forces, a guerrilla alliance whose finally to unite, attack, and oust the ruling Duerg regime successfully. Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam served as interim head of theDuerg until the Duerg appointed Taffari Banti to the position, Taffari Bantihad been served as field commander in the Second Army Division, which was stationed in Asmara, at the time of his appointment.

Such horrible act of massacre led to protests around the world, not onlyfrom Europe and the United States, but also from a number of African states who expressed their wishes and concerns for the wellbeing of thedeposed monarchial head, emperor Selassie. All these concerns were fallen to deaf ears of the dictatorial military Duerg regime officials, whowent on for the next 17 years turning the nation to the killing fields of Africa. May All Victimes Rest In Peace!

November 24, 1974: A human fossil the “Lucy” specimen a skeleton of anindividual "Ausralopithecus afarensis" was discovered at Hadar in the Awash valley of Ethiopia's Afar Depression.
Side note;- Lucy is the common name of AL 288-1, several hundred pieces of bone representing about 40% of the skeleton of an individualAustralopithecus afarensis. Lucy is estimated to have lived 3.2 million years ago.

Dejazmatch Dr. Zawdie Guebreselassie, the step son of Prince Asfaw Wossen Haile Selassie by Princess Lete-Israel Seyoum Mengesha, vice PMand Foreign Minister of Ethiopia this time addressed the UN General assembly on to the current situation in and the main moto of “Ethiopia Tikdem” when at the same time the miltary rulers in Addis Ababa massacred over 60 civilian and miltary officials of the imperial regime.

Two major bomb explosions at Wabe Shebelle Hotel and the MunicipalityHouse in a couple of minutes break rocked Addis Ababa, caused destruction, the incidence was the first of it’s kind in Ethiopia. The rebel Eritrean Liberation Front (Jabhaa) claimed responsibility.

November 29, 1974: Brigadier General Taffari Benti becomes both the new Chairman of the Duerg and military head of state, with Mengistu andAtnafu Abate as his two vice-Chairmen, both with the rank of Majours.

Updates: A week after the assassination of it's symbolic chairman, Lt. General Aman Michael Andom, the Duerg sought and found another naïve frontman by the name of Brigadier General Taffari Banti to replace Lt. General Aman Andom as chairman. The Duerg elected Brigadier General Taffari Banti to the symbolic chairmanship of the Provisional Military Government of Ethiopia (PMGE) and the Provisional Military AdministrativeCouncil (PMAC) known as usually "Duerg". Brigadier General Taffari Banti was born in Lagadady about 10 km north of Addis Ababa. He joined the Ethiopian army at the age of 20, graduated from the Holatta Military Acadamy and served in the 2nd, 3rd and 4th Army Divisions.

Updates: Brigadier General Taffari Banti was born (1921 – 1977) in Lagadady 10 km north of Addis Ababa. He joined the Ethiopian army at the age of 20, graduated from the Holatta Military Acadamy and served in the 2nd, 3rd and 4th Army Divisions.He was appointed Head of State of Ethiopia (28 November 1974 – 3 February 1977), and chairman of the ruling Duerg Military Council by the assembly of the Duerg. His official titlewas Chairman of the Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC), and head of state of the Provisional Military Government of Ethiopia (PMGE). It was widely believed by members of the Duerg that’s a well- deserved nomination. The ruling Provisional Military Administrative Council(PMAC), known as usually "Duerg" had screened his background as military mid-rank officer (Colonel at the time of nomination) and appointed in the rank of Brigadier General as symbolic chairman of the Duerg ruling council while Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam remains the de- facto man. The Duerg intends to use this gentleman as frontman again.

Brigadier General Taffari Banti told fellow Duerg attendants "Let God help us all in our daily task" during a break of time to congrajulate him onto hisnew post as chairman of the PMAC and head of state of the PMGE.
State owned media outlets announced “in an attempted revolt against thepopular revolution and the rising military steering council known as the Duerg this time, the two brothers, Merid and Mesfin Birru were killed by police and security forces,”. Merid and Mesfin, the sons of Ras Birru Wolde-Gabriel, one of Ethiopia's patriots, and governor and who owes large plot of lands slipped away from Addis Ababa to organize a rebellion among the peasantry in Menz & Gishe killed by security forces.

December 19, 1974: The ruling Duerg proclaims the establishment of"Ethiopian socialism", based on the declaration of 'Etiopia-Tikdem'.
Ethiopia officially entitled, ‘Provisional Military Government of SocialistEthiopia (የኅብረተሰብአዊት ኢትዮጵያ ጊዜያዊ ወታደራዊ መንግሥት)’
Side note;- Ethiopia declares itself "socialist state". The initially peacefulEthiopian Revolution turned bloody with the idea of the misplaced class struggle imported by groups oriented by Marxism-Leninism that converged in to Addis Ababa from the Diaspora; thought that communistideology would be panacea for all the political, economical and social problems perpetrated by then largely feudal order.
December 20, 1974: National Office For Development Under The Theme ofDevelopment Through Cooperation (Edget-Behibret Ye Iwketna Yesira Zemecha) officially launched at Jan-Meda to spearhead on anti-Illiteracy campaign nationwide. This campaign officially launched at Jan-Mada in theattendance of H.E. Brigadier General Taffari Banti, symbolic military head of state, Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam First vice chairman, and Majour Atnafu Abate vice chairman of the ruling military council known as this time "the Duerg".

11th and 12th grade students whom launched as first campaigners of the event under the theme of "Development Through Co-operation". It was one of public oriented campaigns the Duerg military regime had done for the benefit of the Ethiopian people even if it's political opponents of the time blamed the military regime of it's further ambitions to "remove high school students from major-towns". 11th and 12th grade students whom launched as first campaigners of the event under the theme of "Development Through Co-operation". It was really one of the nicest jobs the Duerg military regime had done for the benefit of the Ethiopian general public even if it's political opponents the time sharply criticized the military regime of it's ambitions to "remove high school students from major-towns".

Majour Kiros Alemayehu, senior member of the ruling Duerg council fromthe Ethiopian Air Borne Corps Battalion appointed to administer the Central Coordinating Office. The Provisional Military Government of Ethiopia mobilized more than 60,000 University and Senior highschool students under the theme of "Development Through Cooperation", to organize peasants into associations. The students were comprised of the national University and senior high schools of which it's main goal was toiliminate illiteracy in rural areas and coordinate co-operative farms in thepeasantry.

A Canberra bomber plane was flown by a defecting pilot to Somalia.
Flight Captain Affeworki .. an Ethiopian air force mid-rank flight officer hasdefected along with an air navigator on board while he was under a territorial patrol mission to the eastern territories holding a British made combat aircraft, marked as “Canberra B.52 (B.2)” to the neighboring Somalia, the event was the first of it’s kind. Thought the defecting Captainbeing suspected to have link with then secessionist rebels in Eritrea province. But the flight attendant, who refused to request asylum in Somalia had returned home.
December 21, 1974: Proclamation for freedom of Worship & Religiousfaiths got recognized.
December 22, 1974: Proclamation for freedom of speech got recognized.
The Eritrean Liberation Front known as Jabhaa under Osman Salah Sabbeh Sultan initially sought a limited scope of restoration of the defunctfederal arrangement that had been dissolved in September, 1961. During this time the escalation of hostilities had pushed the ELF rebels into the agenda of independence. Then the Eritrean problem came to be posed notas a constitutional issue, but also a colonial.

The image of the “Lion of Judah” and statues of the Emperor Haile Selassie I, were removed from city centres and public squares during thelate year.

January 1, 1975: Proclamation to nationalize private Banks and Insurancecompanies.

January 7, 1975: The ruling Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC) commonly known as the Duerg released some of government employees who were detained after proven innocent of corruption duringtheir years of service.

January 10, 1975: National Campaign of “Development Through Co- operation”, commonly as “Idget Behibret Yelimat Zemetcha” launchednationwide. About 60, 000 volunteers comprised of Ethiopian senior highschools and Universities dispatched to the rural areas.

January, 1975: The All Ethiopian Socialist Movement, locally known as MEISON which founded earlier in April, 1968 in former West Germany, came back to Ethiopia under the leadership of Haile Fida to join the ruling Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC), known as the Duerg this time, on its way as critical supporter to the military regime. The senior MEISON membership includes, Hagos Guebre Eyesus, Daniel Adera,Negede Gobezie, Andargatchew Asegid, Fikre Merid, Worku Ferede, Sisay Takele, Teffera Wondie, Mitiku Belachew, Desalegn Rahmato, Elihu Feleke,Kebede Mengesha, Abdullahi Yousuf, Kedir Mohammed, Yayehyirad Kitaw,Assefa Guebre Selassie, Girma Beshah, and Meles Ayalew.

February 3, 1975: Proclamation to nationalize manufacturing, domesticdistribution, and services (Hotel businesses)'
The Dutch corporation HandelsVereeningung Amsterdam (HVA-Ethiopia),which established a factory to process sugar at Wonji Shoa, Metehara, after it had pull out from Indonesia in 1954, the military government announced that the HVA Sugar plantation all under the Dutch investments, would be fully nationalised.
Formerly Agro-Industrial Development Bank abbreviated as AID Bank reestablished as Development Bank of Ethiopia (DBE) under the Banking &Insurance proclamation to promote efficient financial services for the national development.

February 3 1975: A proclamation broadcasted that the Cotton Company ofEthiopia based in Dire Dawa was among the 14 textile enterprises to be fully nationalized. The Dire Dawa Cement factory was also laternationalized.

February 19, 1975: Tigrai Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) launched it's armed struggle against the ruling-Duerg military regime claiming a greater autonomy for the northern province of Tigrai. Historically, the TPLF traced the origin of it's struggle back to the popular uprising of (1942-43) called usually the First-Woyane, commonly known as 'quedamay Weyane' that was crushed by the forces of the imperial regimebacked by the British airpower although at that time the demand was 'legitimate regional autonomy' which may be regarded as one form of "self-determination". On February of same year, the Tigrai Peoples Liberation front (TPLF) formally launches very small scale attacks.

March 4, 1975: The Rural Land to the Tiller!
One of the root causes of the Ethiopian Yekatit (February) 1974 Revolution was the issue of the archaic feudal land tenure system that made the majority of rural landless peasants in their own country. Despite the tragedies of the revolution that turned bloody under the military regime, the question of land was addressed in a significant way.

The Duerg fulfilled its main slogan of "Land to the Tiller" by announcing asystem of land reform that "was unequivocally radical, even in Soviet andChinese terms; it nationalized all rural land, abolished tenancy, and put peasants in charge of enforcing the whole scheme."

Land Proclamation of the Duerg recognized that land belonged to the people. It was a great victory for the popular revolution. But it was soon reversed and later amended to read that "Land belonged to the State".

Side note: Ethiopia's potential surplus for food and industrialization relies in earnings from its agricultural sector. Thus, the first task of the transition to socialist rural cooperative farming system is to abolish tenancy in Ethiopia's subsistence agriculture. Thus, the ruling PMAC passed a decree to radically reform a new rural land implementation programme, as the nation had a complex land tenure system. The March, 1975 Land Proclamation recognized that land belongs to the people. The Ethiopian Revolution, with it's main slogan of "Land to the tiller" ended theSerfdom (Gebbar). It was a great victory for the popular revolution.

Articles 8 and 10 of the March, 1975 Land Reform Proclamation required that peasants be organized into a hierarchy of peasants associations that would facilitate the implementation of rural development programs and policies. The government encouraged farmers to form cooperatives societies. Each association covered an area of 800 hectares, and membersincluded tenants, landless laborers, and landowners holding fewer than ten hectares. But it was soon reversed and later amended to read that "Land belongs to the State".

The formerly Haile Selassie I University (HSIU) renamed Addis AbabaUniversity (AAU).

In April 6, 1975: Patriots day celebrated for the first time replacing the previous date, 4th of May. The Duerg regime changed the date of Victory

Day to the day of 4th April that General Cunningham and his British,South African and Nigerian troops actually entered the city.

April 7, 1975: Proclamation proposed to confisicate excessive Urbanlandplots and housing'

May 1, 1975: Labour day, known as usually MayDay celebrated colourfullyfor the first time.

May 19, 1975: National Commission for Science & Technology set up. May 21, 1975: The Ethiopian monarchy was formally abolished by the ruling Supreme military council known as the Duerg. The 109-members Duerg proclaimed its allegiance to communism and renamed itself the "Provisional Military Government of Ethiopia". Despite the official change in name, most people continued to refer to the military junta as "Duerg". July, 1975: Melotti Brewery the first brewery to be established in Eritrea province of Ethiopia nationalised. Melotti brewery was founded in 1939 bySignor Luigi Melotti, an Italian investor. The factory exports up to 40% ofits production, with the remainder being domestically consumed.

July 14, 1975: Gunmen suspected to be rebels of the secessionist EritreanLiberation Front (Al-Wahda) in the province of Eritrea abducted 6 civilians.The gunmen suspected to be rebel fighters of the ELF abducted two Americans and four Ethiopians from Kagnew Communications Station. TheAmericans, Steve Campbell and Jim Harrel, worked for Collins International Service Company (CISCO), a US government contractor.

Brigadier General Tefferi Banti, the Ethiopian military head of state, in his public speech at a rally on the Revolution (Mesquel) square made an overtures to the civilian left—groups which included the Ethiopian People'sRevolutionary Party (EPRP) and All-Ethiopian Socialist Movement (MEISON) proposing a united front "of all the forces that rejected the ancient regime, built from the base, that is from the mass organizations born of the great reforms". He repeated same message in a speech on thefirst anniversary of the deposition of Emperor Haile Selassie I in September of the same year.

July 27, 1975: Urban landplots, and excessive houses nationalized underthe proclamation No 47/1975, and the proclamation came into force.

Followed by the proclamation, Lower level administrations known as “Kebeles”, and Highers known as “Keftegnas” coordinated and connectedwith the State security in ex-Soviet style form to work effectively in conjunction with the national intelligence Service.

In 1975: Formerly Agro-Industrial Development Bank abbreviated as "AIDBank" nationalized to be restructured as financial institution under the proclamation No. 60/1975 with objectives to promote efficient utilization of both financial and material resources in the sector.

Formerly Mortgage Bank Sc nationalized to be restructured as "Housingand Saving Bank (HSB)" under the proclamation No. 60/1975 with objectives to promote efficient utilization of both material and financial resources in the sector.

Mid-August 1975: The two liberation movements in Eritrea province wereinvolved in various manoeuvres aimed at reconciling their differences.

Thereafter in various times negotiations had taken place in the wake of the ruling-Provisional Military Government of Ethiopia's extending a nine- point peace-plan, drawn-up as "Eritrea-Autonomous Region in Ethiopia", ahome grown peace initiative to settle the internal conflict peacefully, whichit was to firmly rejected by then Eritrean scessionist group, mainly the Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF).

Mid-August, 1975: Princess Ijigayehu Asfaw Wossen eldest daughter ofPrince Asfaw Wossen Haile Selassie by Leul't Lete-Mariam Seyoum Mengesha had passed under detention.

August 22, 1975: Emperor Haile Selassie died while his personal physicianwas absent. Nearly a year after he was deposed and held in detention, Emperor Haile Selassie was reported dead by the Derg military regime .

The overwhelming body of evidence shows the Emperor was murdered bythe Derg. His remains were discovered buried “ later to be found under a palace toilet in 1992.”

This was widely believed by the public that Major Mengistu Haile Mariam himself killed the emperor, either orders it done or by his own hand. The ex-emperor who had been under intensive nursing due to urinary bladderinfection at undisclosed location, dies at age of eighty four in failing health, state media-outlets announced. The ex-emperor who had been custodied for nearly a year has died in unknown location, and his mysterious death remained controversial.

A news broadcast on state media announced that the ex-emperor had passed away during a prostate cancer operation. His personal Physician Dr. Asrat Woldeyes has announced that the news was mere false. But many speculated, the ex-emperor had mysteriously died in the Grand- palace custody, and wild-rumors circulated in town largely that, Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam himself smoothered the ex-emperor, using a pillowcase who had been himself at death's door, and to bury him in a shallow- grave under the Grand-palace. The late emperor is known for his policy ofpeaceful co-existence among various peoples resolving security issues without abusing peoples rights, and collective security principles. His concerns were also the respect of property rights and guaranteed propertyrights, due to age he lacks to manage things, and were slowly changing tothe bad, confisicating and redistributing land held by the Orthodox Churchto poor farmers were among his plans.

In the case of Emperor Haile Selassie, whom Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam the Duerg’s de-facto leader is suspected to have murdered the ex-emperor with his bare hands by personally pushing a pillow on his face until he dies. Then has the corpse interned in the lavatory of Mengistu’s office in the grand palace where he was depositing his excrement on the Emperor’s body. Meantime, large number of Ethiopians were still strongly questioning why the emperor did not allow establishment of political parties, of course it was a real concern, but even if were allowed to form political parties, were the people of Ethiopia itself ready to have it? Whereare Ethiopians now after almost forty years? And How someone say, the emperor did not do this and that? What had the followed leaders done onthat? Of course, Africa in the sixties and the seventies was highly pressured by military coups, which Ethiopia could not escape that event.
Someone can say a lot about Haile Selassie I, he was good for some and bad for others. And for some, he is a Messiah and Almighty, and for someothers he had been good father - pride of the nation and all the black people - Pioneer of Ethiopia's modernization - a great leader who had strengthened unity and prosperity among Ethiopians more than ever.
Africans call him as "peace maker", and a "spotlight for Africa" commenting "history is kinder to him than the present generation of Ethiopia". However, inadditon to Zara-yakob Amha-selassie, there are rival claimants for the throne in the form of Girma Yohannes Eyassu thegrandson of emperor Eyassu V, Mengesha Seyoum Mengesha, the greatgrandson of emperor Yohannes VI.

September 12, 1975: The Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF) raided the USfacility at Asmara, kidnapping further eight people, including two Americans.
September 28, 1975: All Public and private schools turned under directsupervision of the Ministry of Education.

October, 1975: Ethiopian Telecommunication Service (ETS) was originallya division of the former Ministry of Post, Telephone and Telegraph, what would become the ETS later was established under the Imperial Board of Telecommunications of Ethiopia (IBTE) by proclamation No. 131/52 of 1952. The Provisional Military Government of Ethiopia (PMGoE) reorganized it as Ethiopian Telecommunication Service (ETS).
Two members of the ruling Duerg council, namely PT officer Michael Asgedom and sergeant Yemane Guebre-Negus both reps from the Ethiopian Navy and the 2nd Army Division based in Eritrea province havefled to the hills to join the Eritrean rebel groups based in the Eritrean lowlands.

October, 1975: Government security forces were able to finally track- down the two brothers Merid and Mesfin, the sons of the late aristocrat Ras Birru Wolde Gabriel, and killed them in Menz & Gishe administrativedistrict of northern Shoa as they sleeped away against the regime.

October 27, 1975: FINANCIAL TIMES: The Eritrean Liberation Front tookwestern hostages, as bargaining tools against Ethiopia. The US servicemen Tom Bowidoicz and David Strickland held hostages by the Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF). They were encountered by British journalist Gywynne Roberts a few days after they had been kidnapped from an American communications base near Asmara, the provincial capital. Most, including these two Americans were well treated andreleased in January 1976.
December 3, 1975: The Provisional Government of Ethiopia proclaimed anew Labour Law.
December 27, 1975: Proclamation to set up and develop co-operativefarming in rural Ethiopia.
February 3, 1976: The Provisional Military Government of Ethiopia who had replaced the imperial regime, publicized a decree concerning the nationalization of over 70-odd Companies, both native and foreign, and the take-over of the share majority in over 29 others, of which three wereNorwegian: Mosvold Furniture Factory, Per Thomas Tellefsen's Plastics Factory, and the latter's new Furniture Factory. However, the Paint Factory of National Chemical Industry which established by Alf R. Bjerke and now belonging to the Jotun Group, and Mosvold's Department Store inAddis Ababa were not included. The Decree stated that Compensation would be made. It was evident, however that it would come late if it cameat all. Mosvold's investments in Ethiopia totaled about NoK 6 million. The Share capital of 800, 000 Kroner has always been in the family's possession. Thomas Tellefsen's Company was founded 20 years back, andthe 75 employees (all non-Norwegians) now have many shares.

The Provisional Military Government of Ethiopia (PMGoE) reorganized theformer Imperial Board of Telecommunications of Ethiopia IBTE as Ethiopian Telecommu nication Service and later on (in 1981) restructuredit as Ethiopian Telecommunications Authority (ETA).

February 12, 1976: Ethiopia for the third time hosts the 10th African Cupof Nations, Moroccan national team has taken up the Cup winning the Guinean counterpart 1 to 0.
Oromo Liberation Front (OLF) opened foreign liaison ofiice after a group ofOromo elites met to discuss the formation of Oromo Liberation Front (OLF)near the Al Khobar prison in Khartoum, Sudan.
February 12, 1976: A meeting at the White House Situation Room took place discussing on the critical situation Kagnew Station faces. Lt. GeneralSmith stated, "Right now fleet operations are dependent on Kagnew. The Navy has a strong interest in keeping it. They have reaffirmed to me that if they don't have Kagnew they would need a similar site elsewhere." At one point in the discussion, Mr. Noyes said, "Yes. If we didn't have Kagnew there would be communications delays 25% of the time. By the end of the year the only critical function appeared to be Mystic Star. In the same memorandum, DOD stated, "it recommends closing Kagnew by September 1977 if Mystic Star can be relocated."
February 17, 1976: His Holiness Abune Theophilos Patriarch of The Ethiopian Orthodox Church was placed in confinement in rooms formerly reserved for the use of Rear Admiral Prince Iskinder Desta, the Emperor'sgrandson who had been executed with the 60 Imperial ex-officials in November 1974.

Updates: One afternoon of uncertain date Abune Theophilos managed to escape from the Palace disguised as a layman while soldiers guarding thepalace were distracted by a broadcast soccer match. The Patriarch later told fellow-prisoners that he had thought to head to the Greek Embassy, but then decided to make his way to the Asebot monastery in his former diocese of Harrar in the east of the country. He made his way to the GofaSt. Gabriel's Church to hide and prepare for his journey to Asebot, counting on the loyalty of the clergy at this church, but his location was reported to the Duerg by someone at the church, and he was taken backinto custody. He was escorted barefoot to the Imperial (Menelik II Ghibi)Palace and chained to his bed, his hands and feet cuffed. Four days later,he was taken to join Ward 1 of the Menelik Palace prison where the highest ranking surviving officials of the Imperial government were beingheld.

The Patriarch is believed to have entered into a severe fast (essentially anhunger strike) for 40 days and only broke it on Easter Monday after two imprisoned elder noblemen, Bitwoded Zewde Gebre-Hiwot (former mayor of Addis Ababa and President of the Imperial Senate) and Dejazmach Haregot Abay (former Mayor of Asmara city, nobleman, Imperial Crown Councilor, from Eritrea) pleaded with him on their knees. Abune Theophilos was subjected to numerous indignities while imprisoned. The gold handcross he had been given by the Emperor upon his enthronementwas taken from him, along with an icon of the crucifixion that he kept by his bed. He was also ordered to sign papers as "Abba Meliktu" his pre- episcopal name, which he steadfastly refused to do, signing his name always as "Abune Theophilos". He asked repeatedly that he be imprisonedin a monastery such as Asebot or elsewhere, but was refused. The Patriarch conducted prayer services for his fellow prisoners twice daily andsaid the Holy Liturgy of the Mass every Sunday, assisted by the imprisoned Nebre-Id Ermias of Axum. In July 1979, the Duerg ordered theimmediate execution of several more high officials of the Emperor's government.

February 18, 1976: Tigrai National Organization (TNO) was transformed into the Tigrai Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF), establishing it's first military base at "Dedebit", in western Tigrai region conducted political andmilitary preparations, designed the "the greater Tigrai manifesto".
The TPLF Manifesto of February 1976 The Republic of Greater Tigray:
The Republic of Greater Tigray: “A) A Tigrayan is defined as anybody thatspeaks the language of Tigrigna including those who live outside Tigray, the Kunamas, the Sahos, the Afars, and the Taltal, the Agews, and theWolkaits.
B) The Geographic boundaries extends to the borders of the Sudan including the lands of Humera and Wolkait from the region of Begemidr in Ethiopia, the land defined by Alewuha which extends down to the regimes of Wollo and including Alamata, Ashenge, and Kobo, and Eritrean Kunama,the Saho, and Afar lands including Assab.
C) The final goal of the TPLF is to secede from Ethiopia as an independent“Republic of Greater Tigray” by liberating the lands and peoples of Tigray.
D) Redefinition of Ethiopian boundaries through relocating nationalities,acquiring Humera, Begemidr,wollo’s Raya, Zalanbessa …..” (condensedfrom the TPLF Manifesto, February, 1976)
Two low rank officers (army Lieutenants) members of the ruling council Provisional Military Administrative Council, shortly known as “the Duerg”namely, Sileshi Beyene and Be-Iwquetu Kassa fled to the rural areas of Gojjam, both executed by state security agents termed as counter- revolutionaries.

March 1976: The All Ethiopian Socialist Movement known as locallyMEISON reintroduced.

March 1976: In an expansionist dream of the "Greater-Somalia (Somli- wein)” Somali regime claims giving support to their islamic Oromo brothers in Ethiopia under the patronage of the Somali National Army (SNA), and the WSLF reorganized to infiltrate into the Ethiopian territoryof the Ethiopian Somaliland, usually known as the Ogadien.

March 22, 1976: Cuban leader Fidel castro Ruz arrives in Addis Ababa formediation effort after his three days official visit in Mogadishou, Somalia.
April, 1976: Five players of the Ethiopian FC Metchal (Army) attended forAfrican clubs championship match in Cairo, Egypt went to their disappearance right after the qualifying match with their Egyptian counterpart FC Zamalek.

April 17, 1976: The provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC),known as the Duerg establishes a national committee to negotiate withtwo of the Eritrean secessionist rebel groups.

April 20, 1976: Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam first chairman of the rulingPMAC proclaims the 'Program for the National Democratic Revolution' in anational Radio/TV speech.

Side note: It's widely recognised this time that the Duerg embracesSocialit ideology more under it's newly drafted National Democratic Revolution Program (ye biherawi demcraciawi Abiot program) as an ideology of the state. The political document consisted of seventeen chapters and 119 articles. The preamble traced Ethiopia's origins back to antiquity, proclaimed the historical heroism of its people, praised the country's substantial natural and human resources, and pledged to continue the struggle against imperialism poverty, and hunger. The government's primary concern was proclaimed to be the country's development through the implementation of the Program for the National Democratic Revolution, which Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam himself had proclaimed in a Radio/TV speech. In the process, it was assumed that the material and technical bases necessary for establishing socialism would becreated.

April, 1976: Abune Takla-Haymanot was consecrated the third Patriarch ofthe Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahido Church. Under orders from the ruling- PMAC (Duerg military council), the Holy-synod of the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahdo Church (EOTC) was to elect a new Patriarch instead of the deceased Abuna Theofilos, the Patriarch-Abuna Tekle-Haimanot from Wolaita administrative region was elected to lead the Church as it was notcanonical and it was done by the government interference, and not by theHoly-synod of the Orthodox Church. Abune Tekle-Haimanot enthroned following the forcible removal from the Patriarchal throne of the previous Patriarch, Abuna Theophilos (aka Abuna Tewophilos) by the Marxist Duergregime in 1977.
Meantime, following Abune Theophilos' arrest, the Duerg ordered that an assembly of clergy and laity of the church along with the Holy Synod electa new Patriarch to replace the arrested Abuna Tewophilos. All Archbishopswere disqualified from being elected for having been too close to the recently deposed Ethiopian monarchy. The church assembly of the Churchwas made to elect a hermit bahitawi by the name of Melaku as the new Patriarch of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church. The new Patriarch-elect of the Orthodox Church was elevated from the rank of unordained monk to deacon, to priest, to bishop in one day and then enthroned as Patriarch the following day. With little formal education, and little exposure to temporal affairs, Abba Melaku had spent the bulk of his life as a hermit praying in a cave, and preaching to the people of Wollayta district.

April 21, 1976: The ruling PMAC (Duerg) officially embraces Marxism-Leninism as an ideology of the state. The Provisional Office for Mass Organizational Affairs (Ye Hizb Dirjit Guday Gizeyawi Tsifet Bet) established.

Side note: The Provisional Office for Mass Organizational Affairs, abbreviated as POMOA was functioned between April, 1976 and 1979 as aforum to involve different Marxist-Leninist organizations in the revolutionary process and to politicize and organize the masses. POMOA was set up through a decree of the Duerg military junta in December 1975. The existence of POMOA was publicly revealed on April 21, 1976 following the announcement of the National Democratic Revolution Programme. The first elected civilians to reorganize the POMOA were, Dr.Alemu Abebe, Dr. Senay Likue, Ato Haile Fida, Dr. Assefa Medhane, Dr.

Meles Tekle, Dr. Negede Gobeze, Ato Shewandagn Belete, Ato Yewondwossen Hailu, Dr. Bezabih Maru, Ato Fiqre Merid, Ato Baro Tumsa.Initially POMOA was known as the People's Organizing Provisional Office, the organization was conceptualized not as a political party, but as a "popular revolutionary front". The Yekatit '66 Political School, an institution under the supervision of POMOA, trained political cadres. POMOA functioned as a government department, and received allocationsfrom the state treasury. Through POMOA the Duerg military regime received political support (in the face of opposition from the EPRP), especially through the building of organizational structures in the provinces. According to Kiflu Tadesse, POMOA had an annual budget of 7 million Birr.

April, 1976: Relations b/n historical rivals Ethiopia & Somalia deterioratedfurther after talks to end the row. A joint diplomatic effort by Cuban leader Fidel Castro Ruz and his South Yemeni counterpart President Abdul-Fatah Ismail to cease the ongoing Ethio-Somali conflict in the Hornof Africa failed as a last mediation attempt.

May 1976: His Holiness Abune Theophilos arrested by the ruling Duerg government along with the three newly consecrated bishops. The Synod ofthe Ethiopian Orthodox Church was ordered by the Duerg to elect a new leader, and later Patriarch Abuna Tekle Haimanot was elected to lead the Church. The Coptic Patriarchate in Egypt, however, denounced the imprisonment of Abuna Theophilos, and refused to recognize the election and enthronment of the new Patriarch Abune Tekle Haimanot. The Coptic Church of Alexandria argued that the removal of Abuna Theophilos was not canonical as it was done by the government and not by the Synod of the Orthodox Church, nor had Patriarch Abune Theophilos abdicated. As a result, ties between the Coptic and Ethiopian Orthodox Churches were severed although they remained in communion.

May 16, 1976: Special Commission For Eritrea Affairs Established’

Side note: The Provisional Military Government's extending a nine-point policy declaration known as "Eritrea-Autonomous Region in Ethiopia", but such initiative was firmly rejected by then Eritrean scessionist movementsmainly the Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF). Political negotiations between the Provisional Military Government of Ethiopia (PMGoE) and the scessionist rebel group known as the Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF) factions had unsuccessfully made in the ex-GDR, ex-Soviet Union, Cuba and the ex-South Yemen in various occasions. Although the Eritrean Liberation Front (Jabhaa) who initially seeks a limited scope of restorationof the pre-September, 1962 federal act that had terminated by the imperial regime, but the escalation of hostilities among the two had pushed the rebels into the agenda of independence. Then the Eritrean problem came to be posed not as a constitutional issue but turned as colonial question.

May 29, 1976: The Provisioal Military Government of Ethiopia (PMGoE) appointed Brigadier-General Getachew Nadew – former commander of theelite 9th Mechanized Brigade of the Lions 3rd Army Division in Harrarghe, Military Commander& Administrator of Eritrea Administrative Region.

In July 1976: Ethiopia boycotted the Montreal Summer Olympic Gamesmulti-sport event in protest with the participation of New Zealand, whohad sports contact with the racist regime of South Africa.

July 15, 1976: Proclamation to set up and develop Urban co-operationsocieties known as Kebeles/Keftegnas, and city councils.

In mid-July, 1976: Majour Sisay Habte, an air force mid-rank officer, andsenior member of the ruling-Provisional Military Adminstrative Council (PMAC) and head of the Duerg’s foreign relations sub-committee, MajourKiros Alemayehu head of the national office for “Development through Cooperation” and others including Brigadier General Getachew Nadew, military commander and administrator of Eritrea region brutally killed termed as counter-revolutionaries.

In late July, 1976: Captain Mogus Wolde Mikael, head of the Duerg’s Economic standing sub-committee held cordial talks with Soviet officials inMoscow.

Ethiopian Insurance Corporation (EIC) was established by proclamation No.68/1975. The EIC came into existence by taking overall assets and liabilities of the thirteen nationalized private insurance companies in Ethiopia, with Eth. Birr 11 million (USD 1.29 million) paid up capital aiming the following objectives, engage in all classes of insurance business in Ethiopia, ensure the insurance services reach the broad mass of the people.

In August 1976: The entire leadership of the local branch of the EthiopianTeachers Assocition (ETA) in Dire Dawa was sacked for alleged anti- revolutionary activities.

August 19, 1976: The Provisional Military Government of Ethiopia(PMGoE) appointed Ato Fikrou

Wolde-Tinsae - Chief of Eritrea Administrative Region in Ethiopia.
In September, 1976: The EPRP's efforts to discredit and undermine the Duerg and its MEISON collaborators fomented. EPRP targeted especially pro-regime figures and other symbols of State authority for bombings andassassinated numerous counter-revolutionaries as well as public officials at all levels. The Duerg, which countered with its own counter-terrorism campaign, labeled the EPRP's tactics the "White Terror".
September 20, 1976: Proclamation to restructure the Central Bank ofEthiopia, known as the National Bank of Ethiopia (NBE).
September 23, 1976: A joint operation of the EPRP and the EPLF to assassinate the Duerg military council's de-facto leader, Majour MengistuHaile-Mariam failed.
Side note: Shortly after, Goitom Lebassi Abraha, the main architect of theoperation, and an operative called Surafel Kaba arrested. Majour Mengistu Haile-Mariam First Vice Chairman of the ruling Duerg council undergone minor surgery after an injury in the referal Black-Lion hospital. The alleged plotters namely Goitom Lebassi Abraha and Surafel Kabba were accused of failed assassination plot, and later executed for plotting the assassination. According to then government media outlets, several joint assassination plots were carried out earlier by the Ethiopian RevolutionaryParty (EPRP), the rebels Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF) & Eritrean PeoplesLiberation Front (EPLF), against Majour Mengisu Haile-Mariam then first vice charman and defacto leader of the Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC).
September 26, 1976: EPRP unleashed a campaign of assassinations against POMOA senior cadres' The first prominent victim of the EPRP assassination spree was Fikre Merid (MEISON leader and a POMOA Committee member), who was shot in his car in Addis Abeba. The campaign of Red Terror (Netsa-Irmija) began in March 1977, as POMOAkebele militia squads and the army attacked the EPRP.
October 9, 1976: National Proclamation to form City councils, Urban co-operatives, and Low level (Kebele) administrative councils.
October, 1976: As part of restructuring and reorganisation Ethiopian Football League, St. George Football Club and others remained within theleague for over twenty-five years, all the existing football leagues and clubs were shut down by the ruling-Duerg regime. St. George Football Club was back with a name change, renamed after the company's new name "Addis Ababa Brewery".
December 11, 1976: The restructure of the Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC), shortly known as the Duerg approved bythe Standing Committee.
December 26, 1976: The ruling PMAC issued a proclamation No 108/1976.The proclamation dissolves the Supreme Organizing Committee and brought POMOA under direct supervision of the PMAC (Duerg) Standing Committee. And a proclamation issued in in the latter retained these provisions.
December 27, 1976: The restructure of the Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC), shortly known as the Duerg announced byNegarit Gazette it's now under implementation.

December 29, 1976: Brigadier General Taffari Banti delivered a speech, announcing that the Duerg would be restructured without consolidation ofpower in the hands of Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam.

Side note: The reorganization limits Mengistu's powers and sent his supporters out of the capital to positions in the countryside; on the other hand, two of the key architects of this reform, Captain Mogus and CaptainAlemayehu Haile, were appointed to powerful positions. His arch enemies had thought they had clipped Mengistu's wings and had removed him as athreat. Over the following months, the Duerg was split over irreconcilable objectives and difference in "how could the authority of the Committee bestrengthened while avoiding the dangers of authoritarianism, and how could the principles of collegiality be maintained while gaining maximum benefit from a concentration of power?". And behind this split was a concern at Majour Mengistu's growing power. To end this split, the Duerg set up a committee chaired by Captain Moges Woldemichael of the Ethiopian Airborne Corps, to reform the Duerg's structure. It was "a vital strategy which Mengistu Haile Mariam and his supporters opposed and would continue to oppose more and more resolutely". But the reformers continued restructuring with a smug sense of confidence.

January 8, 1977: The All-Ethiopian Trade Union (AETU) under TewodrosBekele founded.

The United States informed the Ethiopian Government that it intended toclose Kagnew Station by the coming September 30. Meantime, U.S. relations with the Duerg regime were worsening.

Internal party squabble within the rebel Tigrai Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF). TPLF launches low key attack against the central government as arebel opposition force in near north province of Tigray.

January 29, 1977: Brigadier General Taffari Banti, the military head of state anounced for Public gathering in Addis Ababa that the EPRP should energize the popular Revoluttion. The Military head of state Brigadier General Taffari Banti, addressed a public rally in the afternoon of the sameday at the Revolution Square. He stresses the gathered rally that Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Party (EPRP) should not be labeled as counter-revolutionary, but a progressive force.

Side note: On the Day of Tir 22, 1969 local calendar, the military head ofstate stresses the very importance of all revolutionary groups including the EPRP, the clandestine political activist group and other pan-Ethiopianparties to work together for the well-being of the nation leaving their differences behind, this time the chairman of the Duerg was backed by senior members of the Duerg, whos were more instrumental in restructuring the Duerg council and curbing Majour Mengistu's increasingpower-grabb and influence within the Duerg by clear contextual erterpretation guidlines. One such hint was when in a public speech he made overtures to the civilian left—groups which included the Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary party (EPRP) and All Ethiopian Socialist Movementknown as MEISON - proposing a united front "of all the forces that rejected the ancient regime, built from the base, that is from the mass organizations born of the great reforms".

After nine weeks of "strenuous internal negotiations on to restructuring the Duerg", a meeting of the standing committee of the Duerg found all the wanted persons assembled them in one room, among them were Brigadier General Taffari Banti, the symbolic chairman of the PMAC and other senior members of the council. Majour Mengistu Haile-Mariam angrily left out of the middle of a Duerg sub-committee meeting reasoninghe has a telephone call from Gondar, but to order a group of loyal-soldiersled by Majour Getachew Shibshi and Lt. Colonel Daniel Asfaw including other hitmen were readily picked-up when they came-out into the hallwayand summarily execute them including the head of state Brigadier GeneralTaffari Banti nicknamed "Azawntu" Amharic meaning for "elderman or the pacifier". According to observers, the fellout Duerg members were clearly underestimated Mengistu's capacity to hit back, they left untouched the security branch of the Duerg, which was headed by his right hand man Lt.Colonel Daniel Asfaw, Mengistu's Holatta-staff college course in-mate and now his hit-man. Brigadier General Taffari Banti had a descent back ground with moderate political attitude, he was also too calm in his personality among the Duerg members whom most of them considered him as "middleman", during his term as head of state.

Majour Alemayehu Haile who was a member of the Ethiopian Police Force and senior member of the ruling-Duerg, the military council that ruled Ethiopia after the Ethiopian Revolution was chairman of the committee for administrative affairs who masterminds the new plan to restructure the ruling PMAC commonly known as the Duerg. After the reorganization of the Duerg designed in late December, 1976 Majour Almayahu became its Secretary-General, a post with such ill-defined limits that it could confer vast powers. In short, Majour Almayahu Haile appeared at this point to bethe most powerful senior member of the Duerg, more powerful even than his rival Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam. The reorganization limited Majour Mengistu's powers and sent his supporters out of the capital to positions in the countryside; on the other hand, two of the key architects of this reform, Majours Mogus Wolde Mikael (head of economic standing committee) and Almayahu Haile (head of administrative affairs standing committee), were appointed to powerful positions. The head of state Brigadier General Taffari Banti went even further and, flanked by Majours Mogus and Almayahu, criticized the lack of a vanguard party in words which termed it as "the bloody war between MEISON and the EPRP to be politically unjustifiable, and that it should in any case remain limited to thecivilian Left without the army intervening in any way".

February 3, 1977 (Tir 26, 1969 local calendar): After serious internal conflicts that resulted afterward, Brigadier General Taffari Banti and several of his supporters including Majour Alemayehu Haile who was a member of the Ethiopian Police Force and general secretary of the ruling-Duerg have been summarily killed, Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam and hissupporters gained undisputed leadership of the Duerg.

Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam, known to be a very ambitious young officer did not emerge as a leader of the ruling Duerg until after the 3rd ofFebruary The Grand Palace shootout was occured when gunfire erupted during a meeting of the Standing Committee of the Duerg. This meeting ended with the deaths of not only Taffari Banti (the military head of state)and the two captains, Alemayehu Haile (head of the Duerg's administrative affairs) and Moges Wolde-Michael (head of the Duerg's economic affairs) but four other senior Duerg members who had been opposed to Majour Mengistu's move, Lt. Colonel Asrat Desta (head of the Duerg's public relations affairs standing committee), Lt. Colonel Heruy Haile Selassie, Captain Teffera Deneke, Majour Yohannes Miseker and Corporal Haile Belay were summarly killed during the Grand palace shootouts as well as Duerg's chief of the security branch Lt. Colonel Daniel asfaw, and a civilian intellect in the name of Dr. Senay Likue (senior political orator) whose supports Mengistu were killed in the event. The coup gave upper hand for Majour Mengistu Haile-Mariam to replace hastlythe military head of state Brigadier General Taffari Banti, and his leftist allies the complete freedom to launch a full-scale offensive known as usually the "Red-Terror" against it's cladestine rival, the EPRP.

Lt . Colonel Atnafu Abate, vice chairmn of the ruling PMAC avoided suchDuerg meeting where a number of Duerg senior members, including it'ssymbolic chairman Brigadier General Taffari Banti, were killed in an ambush orchestrated by Majour Mengistu himself. Majour Atnafu havingleft the capital to personally present a flag to a militia unit that had completed its training in Wollega administrative region. This coup left Majour Atnafu the sole remaining Duerg member with a measure of independence from Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam.

It has to be recognised that Brigadier General Taffari Banti nominated to the symbolic chairmanship a week after the assassination of the post monarchial military head of state, Lt. General Aman Michael Andom. The ruling Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC), commonly known as "the Duerg" had screened his background as military mid-rank officer (Colonel at the time of nomination) and appointed in the rank of Brigadier General as symbolic chairman of the Duerg council while Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam remains the de-facto man. The ruling Duerg whosesought and found this mid-rank officer to serve as the symbolic chairman for the Provisional Military Government of Ethiopia (PMGoE) and the rulingProvisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC) commonly known as "the Duerg". As a disciplined mid-rank officer and his humble background,it was widely believed by the ruling Duerg members that his nomination tothe symbolic position was a well-deserved. The Duerg intends to use this gentleman as frontman once again, the newly appointed head of state toldfellow Duerg attending members during inaugural speech "I would not likeyou to congratulate me so far, but to pray God help me onto my new postas chairman of the PMAC and head of state of the PMGoE." Brigadier General Taffari Banti was born in Lagadady about 10 km north of Addis Ababa. He joined the Ethiopian army at the age of 20, graduated from theHolatta Military Acadamy and served as division commander in the 2nd, 3rd and 4th Army Divisions. He had served as military head of State of Ethiopia (from 28 November 1974 – 3 February 1977), and chairman of the ruling Duerg Military Council nominated by the assembly of the Duerg.February 4, 1977: (Tir 27, 1969 local calendar): Majour Mengistu afterwards broadcast through the national Radio that Almayahu Haile and his dead compatriots had attempted a "fascist coup d'etat in the capital identical to what had taken place in Chile, South America", and labeling them "fifth columnists" of the Ethiopian Democratic Union (EDU) and the Ethiopian People'sRevolutionary Party (EPRP) those who he termed them as counter-revolutionaries. And announces the Ethiopian revolution turns to the offensive position. In a campaign of murder (the brutal campaign called the Red Terror) against the rival EPRP members all over the country. The military regime, aided and backed by the Soviet bloc, launched the notorious Red Terror campaign against the EPRP and it's supporters. The violence caused the brutal deaths of no less than 250,000people, most of them supporters and members of the EPRP. The EPRP in retaliation killed several hundred pro-Duerg MEISON cadres and supporters.

February 11, 1977: (Yekatit 4, 1969 local calendar): The ruling military council (Duerg), announced that Majour Mengisu Haile-Mariam becomeschairman of the Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC) and head of the Provisional Military Government of Ethiopia (PMGoE), considered a kind of sign that order had been restored among the Duergmilitary council. However, the country remained in chaos as the militaryruling council had further attempts to suppress its civilian opponents.

The PMAC, known as the Duerg after the internal shockdown:The new PMAC standing committee members as followed, Chairman: Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam

Secretary-General: Lt. Fikre Selassie Wogderess Deputy Secretary-General: Majour Fisseha Desta

Military Affairs: Lt. Colonel Tesfaye Guebre KidanEconomic Affairs: Majour Addis Tedla

Security Affairs: Majour Teka Tulu Legal Affairs: Majour Birhanu Bayeh Social Affairs: Majour Endale Tessema

Press & Public Relations: PT officer Tamirat Ferede

Other Members

Majour Kassahun TaffeseMajour Wubshet Dessie

Master Tech. Gesesse Wolde KidanSt. Legesse Asfaw

Side note;- After internal conflicts, that resulted in the deaths of BrigadierGeneral Taffari Banti and several of his supporters, Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam has gained undisputed leadership of the Duerg. Resistance againstthe Duerg ensued in main towns, led primarily by the Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Party (EPRP), who's moved underground to ignite it's struggle against the Duerg regime, and the Ethiopian Democratic Union (EDU) a pan-Ethiopian group at this time, the Duerg cracked down onto the EPRP and others revolutionary student organizations, by executing fascistic atrocities against the youth and reactionary groups in praise of communism, what would become known as the "Red terror", which countless are the youth and intellectual-elites that perished as a result of the brutality of the Duerg regime, numerous educated people who's training had cost Ethiopia a fortune, had to stay away overseas on politicalasylums or flee from that unfortunate land to serve other nations, demanded "the death of thousand anarchists, meaning that, the EPRP members for every life of a revolutionary, many suspected EPRP members, dragged-out of jail, and taken to the firing squad and most of the time they went unreported, and any news of them was purposely muffled, would eliminate or send onto battle fronts to see them dead or grab their property, many Ethiopians were economically despossesed, when their landscaping businesses nationalised, even their real estates and small businesses were captured by members of the Duerg and their relatives by announcing the owners had sold-out to them and moved away. Of course, some of the Duerg members were later came along with their beautiful mistresses. And subsequently the clandestine EPRP itself turned against the socialist student movement known as the MEISON, a major critical supporter of the Duerg regime against the EPRP, in what would be called later the "White-Terror". The "Red-Terror" of which the events and trauma were yet fresh in many Ethiopians' mind, it's widely believed that these atrocitious crimes were largely committed by the elite in both sides. During this tragic and horrible period of Ethiopian history, intellectual-elites killed eachother characterised by irreconciliable ideological differences. The few Intellectual-elites in the community are guilty of feeding the fire of ignorance that plagued the nation apart.After most of them, having gone through western education, of course, Ethiopiahave produced sizable number of technocrats, who they did not contributean iota to the betterment of the life of the toiling masses, few scientists from whom the nation did not benefit much, philosophers who were ignorants of the existence of Ethiopian philosophers too, economists, who did not have any impact on the economy of the country, or revolutionarieswho did not know the culture, tradition, history and even mentality of the people in whose name they were dying, or killing for, political scientists, psychologists, sociologists and anthropologists, who did not know a lot onto the politics and the psychology of their people. In addition, specialists and experts in various fields, whose their expertise had served no purpose to the Ethiopian realities. The concept of "Red-Terror" was imported from the early days of the Russian Revolution, which had resulted in a civil war, both sides in that war - Red Communists and white non-Communists embraced violence as vital political weapon, calculating that it would be indespensable to an eventual victory over the rival one.

Leader of the white-Terror "Lavar Kornilov, for example instructed his army "set fire to half of the country and shed the blood of three-fourth of all Russians", he even ordered the death of "All workers". The communists were no less apocaliptic, explaining the "Red-Terror" in a newspaper article in 1918, they said "Do not look in the file of incriminating evidenceto see whether or not the accused rose up against the Soviets with arms and words, ask him instead what class he belongs to, what is his background and his education or his profession, these are the questions that will determine the fate of the accused.

That's all learnt, the meaning and essence of the "Red Terror" and the "White-Terror". At least ten million of Russia's then hundred million people must be "anihilated" proclaimed the communists openly. In Ethiopia, the ruling-Duerg and it's civilian allies, clearly inspired by the precedent set in Revolutionary Russia, publicly vowed "To avenge the lost-life of one revolutionary with the lives of a thousand anarchists, said to then EPRP members. Following up on their threat, thousands of officials of Kebele administrators and Revolutionary guards through-out the country were armed and bolstered with a government issued "Licence to kill" meaning in Amharic "Netsa- Irmja" edict. The Kebele cadres were torturing and killing EPRP suspect youngsters by pouring-out boiling water and oil on them, by muffling theirmouths with rags and were beating them mercilessly, and forcing their parents to sing songs of joy over their dead bodies, the parents of the deads were demanded to pay money for wasted bullets in exchange for having the bodies of their beloved ones, of course, many rud political behaviour toward the public have been committed during the reign of Duerg. The one example, under the communist dictator's rule, citizen's were afraid what would happen if the security police knew about holding or reading western magazines or having American-citizens relatives. In fact many to remember, people who had lived up through the "Ethiopian Revolution" would forget some of the details when we talk about some remarkable phenomena after years had gone by, because they experienced wave after wave of rapid events which overwhelmed them.

The real victims have chosen to be in a state of amnesia to forgetdeliberately those painful and agonizing moments.

February, 1977: The United States decided to cut off military grant aid toEthiopia, as part of a protest over the treatment of political dissidents bythe ruling Duerg.

March, 1977: In the wake of a foiled coup, Majour Mengistu Hailemariamnow the Ethiopian military head of state at his political immaturity broke five bottles filled with red ink (symbolizing blood) by throwing on to the ground at a rally organized at Mesquel square condemning among othersthe American imperialism and demonstrate the left leaning policy of his government. A US diplomat in Addis Ababa this time made a protest demanding whether what Mengisu Haile Mariam did was a declaration of war.

March 7, 1977: The PMAC usually known as the Duerg had waged a "RedTerror Campaign" against the EPRP infiltrates, and other counter revolutionary groups what the Duerg termed them 5th rows.

Many stories can be told by various sections of Ethiopians who experienced Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam’s brutal regime (September,1974 to the fall of the Duerg regime in May, 1991). "Torture against political opponents during detention as a means of extracting confession isdeeply entrenched in the culture of security forces in many countries across Africa, including in Ethiopia

The Duerg had a communist ideology and was heavily armed by the former Soviet Union, GDR, Jugoslavia, KPDR and other communist countries. It is believed that about one million Ethiopians were killed orinjured during the Duerg regime. Thousands of intellectuals, including teachers, labourers, students, and other skilled professionals, were gunned down, tortured, and imprisoned. A generation of educated Ethiopians was lost in a span of a few years between 1974 to 1978.

Meantime, the massacre did not end there. Government officials confiscated the properties of countless city dwellers, including businesses and rental houses of suspected opposition members. Hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of Ethiopians were displaced from their homes, becoming refugees in the neighboring countries of Sudan, Kenya, Djibouti,and elsewhere. The lives of nearly all Ethiopians were negatively affected by the Duerg regime, in one way or another. The Duerg regime is considered without a doubt one of the harshest regimes ever in human history. The Yekatit (February) Ethiopian Revolution that deposed the monarchial head Emperor Haile Selassie I in September, 1974, followed by the Duerg regime's order of horrible massacres in the name of 'Netsa- Irmja' to kill massively as many as quarter a million population by it's regular army and peoples militia units.

In a campaign of retaliarion murder, Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Party (EPRP) killed several hundred pro-government-MEISON cadres and supporters. The brutal campaign called the "Red Terror Campaign" againstthe EPRP opposition members launched all over the country. The military regime, aided and backed by the Soviet bloc, launched the notorious Red Terror campaign against the party because it was defeated politically all over the country. The violence caused the brutal deaths of no less than 250,000 people, most of them supporters and members of the EPRP. Meantime, many of the groups that splintered from the ELF joined together in 1977 and formed the EPLF. By the late 1970s, the EPLF had become the dominant armed Eritrean group fighting against the Ethiopian government. The leader of the umbrella organization was Secretary- General of the EPLF Ramadan Mohammed Nur, while the Assistant Secretary-General was Issaias Affeworki. Much of the equipment used to combat Ethiopia was captured from the Ethiopian Army.

The Eritrean War of Independence (September 1, 1961 – May 29, 1991): was a conflict fought between the Ethiopian government and Eritrean separatist groups, both before and during the Ethiopian Civil War. The warstarted when Eritrea's autonomy within Ethiopia, where troops were already stationed, was unilaterally revoked. Eritrea had become part of Ethiopia after World War II, when both territories were liberated from Italian occupation. Ethiopia claimed that Eritrea was part of Ethiopia.

Following the Marxist-Leninist coup in Ethiopia in 1974 which toppled itsancient monarchy, the Ethiopians enjoyed the ex-Soviet Union support until the end of the 1980s, when glasnost and perestroika started to impact Moscow's foreign policies, resulting in a withdrawal of help. The war went on for 30 years until 1991 when the Eritrean People's LiberationFront (EPLF), having defeated the Ethiopian forces in Eritrea, took controlof the country. In April 1993, in a referendum supported by Ethiopia, the Eritrean people voted almost unanimously in favor of independence.

Formal international recognition of an independent and sovereign Eritreafollowed later the same year. The two main rebel groups, the Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF) and the Eritrean People's Liberation Front (EPLF) fought two Eritrean civil wars during the war of liberation.

By 1977, the EPLF was poised to drive the Ethiopians out of Eritrea, by utilizing a predetermined, simultaneous invasion from the east by Somaliato siphon off Ethiopian military resources. But in a dramatic turnaround, the Derg managed to repulse the Somalian incursion, thanks mainly to a massive airlift of Soviet arms. After that, using the considerable manpower and military hardware available from the Somali campaign, theEthiopian Army regained the initiative and forced the EPLF to retreat to the bush. This was most notable in the Battle of Barentu and the Battle ofMassawa. Between 1978 and 1986, the Derg launched eight major offensives against the independence movements, and all failed to crush the guerrilla movement. In 1988, with the Battle of Afabet, the EPLF captured Afabet and its surroundings, then headquarters of the Ethiopian Army in northeastern Eritrea, prompting the Ethiopian Army to withdraw from its garrisons in Eritrea's western lowlands. EPLF fighters then movedinto position around Keren, Eritrea's second-largest city. Meanwhile, otherdissident movements were making headway throughout Ethiopia.

Throughout the conflict Ethiopia used "anti-personnel gas", napalm, and other incendiary devices. At the end of the 1980s, the Soviet Union informed Mengistu that it would not be renewing its defense and cooperation agreement. With the cessation of Soviet support and supplies,the Ethiopian Army's morale plummeted, and the EPLF, along with other Ethiopian rebel forces, began to advance on Ethiopian positions.

March 11, 1977: Red Terror (Kay Shibir ena Netsa Ermja) Campeign In Ethiopia. In 1977 to 78, the Marxist military rulers unleash their “Red Terror”, leaving 100,000 young people dead in the carnage. With “the revolution eating Ethiopia’s children at an alarming rate”. Political tensionincreased between the ruling-Duerg and the All-Ethiopian Socialist Movement (MEISON) when in a ministerial reshuffle failed to acquire anypositions off-MEISON.

Side note: A power struggle between the ruling-Duerg military council andAll-Ethiopian Socialist Movement usually known as MEISON and others on the rise. Organizational captions comprised of the following five leftist entities working with the Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC), usually known as "the Duerg". As their names clearly tell all the five groups below are national political entities inclusive of all ethnic- groups that opt to become members: All Ethiopia Socialist Movement led by Dr. Haile Fida was the leader of this Movement commonly known by its acronym MEISON; Ethiopian Oppressed People’s Revolutionary Struggle, known as locally (ECHAAT) led by Baro Tumsa; Abiyotwi-Sedede (Revolutionary-conflagration) led by Lt. Colonel Mengistu Hailemariam himself was the leader of this group which finally devoured all the rest. Revolution was reputed to be a collection of Ethiopian Marxist-Leninist Revolutionary Organizations Union (EMLROU) whos name of it's leader undisclosed; and the Woz-League under the leadership of Dr. Senai Lekiewas a close ally of Mengistu's the Abiyotawi-Sedede, but the alliance fell apart shortly after the death of Dr. Senai Lekie in the 3rd February, 1977Grandpalace shootout resulting in the annihilation of thousands of educated members of the Woz-League by Abiyotawi-Sedede whose members were mainly ethnic-Oromos. The leftists engaged in a fierce fight for grabbing state-power - one group running to the USSR and the other to Communist China for support. The USA responded to Mengistu'sharsh criticism in public and reduced its Embassy staff in Addis Ababa.

Interestingly, the defunct USSR welcomed the peaceful bloodless change and advised that all democratic forces supporting it should be included in a broad-based government that would transform the Ethiopian feudal society. The Duerg called the USSR revisionist. Communist China did not give much material support to the radical Maoists behind the Duerg for tactical reasons. The bloodshed and carnage took place among the Marxist-Leninists, better still between Stalinist-Maoists, locked in competition to show supremacy in ideological purity and to that end usingchildren of poor peasants and workers as their foot soldiers.Readers haveto note well the Ethiopian previous leaders including Majour Mengistu Haile-Mariam who himself also spoke of his Oromo ancestry through his father were mainly members of the ethnic-Oromos, after which the de-facto head of the ruling- Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC)usually known as the Duerg began to systematically replaces them in the government by his supporters or to finally eliminates the others.

March 12, 1977: Lt. Fikre-Selassie Wagdares, the coup of February, 1977had elevated him from relative obscurity to the post of General-secretaryof the ruling Duerg.

Majour Mengistu Haile-Mariam, who quickly moves to fill the vacant post,restructured the standing committee of the ruling Duerg council, which had been designed to act as the chief executive organ of the ruling council, was filled-up with his supporters or members who did not dare tochallenge him, only one thing remained now to make Mengistu's domination of the Duerg absolute.

March 13, 1977: Resistance against the ruling Duerg regime ensued led primarily by the Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Party (EPRP), EthiopianDemocratic Union (EDU), and others in various parts of the country.

Side note: Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile-Mariam known as locally "Graziano"as to refer him to the Governor-general Marshal Rodolfo Graziani under the ex-Italian occupation, cracked down against the EPRP and other revolutionary student organizations termed as "Fifth rows" in what wouldbecome called the "Kai-Shibir" i.e. "Red Terror".

Ethiopian mothers lose their children via brutal killings first by the ruling military regime, known as the Duerg dictatorship eversince September, 1975. And so Ethiopian mothers suffered a lot by losing their beloved children through killings, incarceration, exile and nonsensical wars that waged especially in the northern battle grounds such as Tigray and Eritreafor the mere purpose of keeping their tormentors in power. They also losefathers of their beloved children in the same way. How many citizens are aware that mothers in Ethiopia were all unhappy being in a miserable period in 1977.
The Ethiopian youth have murdered massively inorderto prevail social justice and equality in their beloved country, of course, some have faded,and some have been missed in action during the revolutionary campaign of the late 70s, and of course, some have continued to struggle in the jungles of northwestern Ethiopia. It's widely believed that from mid-1977to mid-1978 "the Duerg" especially Majour Mengistu Haile-Mariam was responsible for the 7th worst genocide in world history which that roughlyestimated 1 million Ethiopians were victimized.

March, 1977: Cuba's leader Fidel Castro Ruz, and Commander- in-chief ofCuba Revolutionary Armed Forces met with PMAC, locally known as Duergofficials to discuss a number of issues including the prospects of military aid to Ethiopia after a policy shift from Somalia.

March 1977: Brigadier General Tadesse Birru and Colonel Hailu Regassa shotdead by a firing squad labeling as counter-revolutionaries after being captured in the woodlands of western Shoa region along with the alledgedly detained Meles Tekle whos mastered the twin bomb explosions that rocked the Wabe Shaballe Hotel and the Municipality building in AddisAbaba.

March 20, 1977: A training facility for the national peoples' militia at "SigaMeda" enaugurated. Facilities for National Peoples Militia Training established at Siga Meda, northwest of addis Ababa. The location 'Siga Meda' is named for it's slaughtered animals for raw meat to feed the soldiers of HRH Ras Taffari before the war brokeout between troops of RasTaffari and Ras Ali Mikael of Wollo at Sagalle Meda.

March 23, 1977: Dr.Tesfai Debesay (c.born 1941) polit-bureu member ofthe Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Party (EPRP), commits suicide by falling down off a building in downtown Addis Ababa before a capture of government security's forces.
April 11, 1977: A national call to defend the motherland: A training siteknown as Siga-Meda selected to train the future territorial defending peoples militia.

April 12, 1977: A national call for the people of Ethiopia by the military head of state to defend territorial sovereignty of the motherland. በሚያዚያ 4ቀን 1969ዓ.ም.ኮሎኔል መንግስቱ ኃይለማሪያም የኢትዮጵያን በሱማሌ መወረር በማስመልከት የእናት አገር ጥሪአደረጉ። በኢትዮጵያ ተሌቪዝን የሚከተለውን ጥሪ አስተላለፉ። "...ታፍራ እና ተከብራ የኖረችውኢትዮጵያ ተደፍራለች። ባሁኑ ሰዓት የአብ...ዮታዊት እናት ሃገራችን ዳር ድንበርና የማይገሰሰው አንድነታችን በውጭኃይልእየተደፈረ ነው። በአብዮታችንና በአንድነታችን በጠቅላላው በብሄራዊ ህልውናችን ላይ የሚደረገው ወረራና ድፍረት እጅግ አሳሳቢ ሁኔታ ላይ ደርሷል...ለብዙ ሺህ ዘመናት አስከብሮን የኖረው አኩሪ ታሪካችን በዚህ አብዮታዊ አዲስትውልድ ጊዜ መጉደፍ የለበትም። አገር ወዳድ ኢትዮጵያውያን እና ኢትዮጵያዊት! የኢትዮጵያ ህዝብ!ክብርህንና ነፃነትህን ለመድፈር፣ አገርህን ለመቁረስ...የተጀመረውን ጣልቃ ገብነትና ወረራ ከመለዮ ለባሹ ጋር ተሰልፈህ ለመደምሰስ የምትዘጋጅበት ጊዜ አሁን ነው። ተነስ!ታጠቅ!ተዋጋ!እናሸንፋለን!!"

Mid-April, 1977: Bejrond Tekle-Hawariat Tekle-Mariam (a.k.a Piotr Sergeivitch Molchanov) (c1884-1977), an Ethiopian elite politician of histime, and was the primary re-writer of Ethiopia's July, 1931 constitutionpassed away of natural sickness.

Remembering Bejrond Tekle Hawariat elite politician

Tekle Hawariat’s birth date is still contested but the most accurate estimate of his birth date is June 1884. According to official records he was born in the Shoa (Shewa) Province of Abyssinia and educated in a church school in its capital of Adids Ababa before eventually being adoptedby Molchanov and being sent to Russia to complete his education in late 1896 at the age of twelve. Fitawrari Tekle Hawariat Tekle Mariyam adopted name in Russia: Piotr Sergeievitch Tekle-Hawariate (Molchanov) / Петр Сергеевич Тэкле-Хавариате (Молчанов) (c1884- 1977). His birth in Shoa was important for a number of reasons not the least that it was alos the birthplace of Emperor Menelik II (born Sahle Maryam) the grandson of Sahle Selassie of Shewa (Shoa). The Kings of Shewa expanded their territory over the course of the 19th century and Menelik II’s arrival on the throne and the consolidation of lands under hisrule made Shewa the geographical center of Ethiopia.

He was brought up in Ukrain, during Tsarist Russia, by a family whom he cherished a lot. Tekle studied on his grandmother’s estate of Voronki and by the time he reached the age of 18, the government archives reveal some of the challenges that Tekle’s family faced in getting him into a military academy. The young Tekle Hawariat Tekle Mariyam (in French and Italian he is referred to as Tecle Hawriate or Havariate) who was known affectionately by his Russian family and friends as Piotr or Petia theAbyssinian /Петя Абиссинский . Russians are traditionally a xenophobic people who are not known for their openness to other races, and yet thanks to the pioneering efforts of General Hannibal in Peter’s time and Alexander Pushkin less than a hundred years before, Russians were in aweof the Abyssinian factor.

His farm in Hirna in modern day Harrarghe province to which he would return from exile from Madagascar in 1955 after reconciling with Emperor Haile Selassie I was a showcase for different farming techniques. It was from his farm in Hirna, that Tekle Hawariat and his young family would flee following the Italian invasion of Ethiopia in October 1935. Denied permission to remain in Djibouti, the family moved to France. Fitawrari Tekle Hawariyat is known for an Italian army general during the occupation period occupied his home, and would take with him his extensive library which contained many books in Russian, French, Amharicand English. (Text ends)
April 23, 1977: Ethiopia ordered the closure of the U.S. Embassy in Addis Ababa along with other US agencies i.e. US Information Service, US NAMRU, and the US MAAG mission (Kagnew) in Ethiopia. On United StatesInformation Service (USIS): USIS founded under The United States Information Agency (USIA) also known as Propaganda Agency of the United States, which existed from August, 1953 until October 1, 1999, was a United States agency devoted to "public diplomacy". In 1999, USIA's broadcasting functions were moved to the newly created Broadcasting Board of Governors, and its exchange and non-broadcasting information functions were given to the newly created Under Secretary of State for Public Affairs and Public Diplomacy at the U.S. Department of State. President Dwight D. Eisenhower established the United States Information Agency in 1953. The USIA's mission was "to understand, inform and influence foreign publics in promotion of the national interest, and to broaden the dialogue between Americans and U.S. institutions, andtheir counterparts abroad.
The United States Information Agency (USIA) was the largest full-servicepublic relations organization in the world, spending over $2 billion per year to highlight America’s view, while diminishing the Soviet’s side through about 150 different countries.
Its stated goals were:
To explain and advocate U.S. policies in terms that are credible and meaningful in foreign cultures; To provide information about the official policies of the United States, and about the people, values and institutionswhich influence those policies;To bring the benefits of international engagement to American citizens and institutions by helping them build strong long-term relationships with their counterparts overseas;
To advise the President and U.S. government policy-makers on the ways in which foreign attitudes will have a direct bearing on the effectiveness of U.S. policies. It has to be recalled that propaganda played a large role inhow the United States was viewed by the world during the Cold War.
Broadcasting functions, including Voice of America (VoA), Radio and TV Marti as well as other U.S. government-supported broadcasting, such as Radio Free Europe (in the former communist Eastern Europe) and Radio Liberty (in the former Soviet Union), were consolidated as an independententity under the Broadcasting Board of Governors (BBG), which continuesindependently (as a separate entity from the State Department) today.

Side note:The United States government, a former ally of Ethiopia ceased arms sales to new military rulers of Ethiopia. President Jimmy Carter in foreign policy matters drove Ethiopia to the armpit of the ex-Soviet Union by refusing to supply military equipment for which Ethiopia had paid; this refusal took place exactly at the period of impending Somali invasion. TheCarter Administration also later refused to deliver critically needed militaryequipment and accessories for which Ethiopia had paid, thus forcing the Military regime of Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam to solicit for arms from the former USSR to fight for the Somali aggression; Then the US government was quick and the first to give recognition to the Eritrean secessionist groups, and to the souring of Ethiopia's relations with the Carter, Ronald Reagan, George Bush sr administrations subsequently. Theruling Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC), usually known as"the Duerg" terminated the Mutual Defence Assistance Agreement program and the lease for "Kagnew station" based in Asmara when relations b/n the two sides became strained. The PMAC has closed-down four others US government assistance programmes namely, the United States Military Assistance Advisory Group (US-MAAG), the United States Naval Medical Research Unit (US-NAMRU), the US peace-corps programme, and the United States Information Service (USIS), US Army communication unit, known as "Kagnew communication Center" which based in Asmara, in the ex-Eritrea province, left as the last Americans in Ethiopia. Believed it was a laudable wise move for that time of rival ideological cold-war era, given that the Jimmy Carter administration had fully abandoned.

April 28, 1977: After the Ethiopian Revolution, the bilateral relationship began to cool due to the Duerg's linking with international communism. The United States rebuffed Ethiopia's request for increased military assistance to intensify its fight against the Eritrean secessionist movementand to repel the latter Somali invasion. The United States government announced this time a delivery of nearly $100 million dollars already appropriated military equipment for Ethiopia would be stopped.

April 29, 1977: The Provisional Government of Ethiopia closed the United States military installations and gave Military Assistance Advisory Group (MAAG) personnel a week's notice to leave the country. A large store of equipment remained behind in the rapid American departure. Ethiopia then abrogated the 1953 United States-Ethiopian Mutual Defense Assistance Agreement and terminated the lease on Kagnew station, and the last Americans left Kagnew Station. In earlier weeks, Majour MengistuHaile Mariam, the military head of state abrogated the 1953 US-Ethiopia mutual defense treaty and ordered a reduction of the U.S. personnel in Ethiopia, including the closure of Kagnew Communications Center and the consulate in Asmara. Not included in the report are the circumstances ofthe closing of Kagnew Station.

May, 1977: The central government's war with rebel scessionist ELF-EPLFgroups in Eritrea came to at it’s peak.

May, 1977: A wide rumor in town gossips that MEISON would be attackedby rival pro-government groups in recent times, all MEISON elites consider a tactical retreat.
The Somali troops in the disguise of Western Somali Liberation Front(WSLF) infiltrated into the Ethiopian territories.
May, 1977: The military head of State courts USSR officials on topic ofcontinued military aid’
Side note:Meantime In a notable illustration of the nature of the Cold war alliances, Soviet Union switched from supplying aid to Somalia to supporting Ethiopia, which had previously been backed by the United States, prompting the U.S. to start supporting Somalia. The security in theOgadien region this time badly deteriorated. And the pro-Somali Western Somali Liberation Front (WSLF), spurred by Mukhtal Dahir who was using guerilla tactics to resist the Ethiopian rule in the region, then a mechanized war in the Ogadien have continued as to fully control over thisvast region. The mechanized war in the ethnic-Somali region, known as usually the "Ogadien War" was a conventional conflict between ex-Somaliaand Ethiopia in 1977 to 1978 over the Ogadien region of Ethiopia. Ex- Soviet military aid and advisors shifted positions to Ethiopia along with around 15,000 Cuban combat troops. Other communist countries offered assistance in an international solidarity to the ruling military junta: the ex-South Yemen offered military assistance and North Korea helped train a "people's militia"; the former East Germany likewise offered training, engineering and support troops. As the scale of communist assistance became clear in November 1977, Somalia broke diplomatic relations with the ex-USSR and expelled all Soviet citizens from the country. In addition to previous ex-Soviet funding and arms support to Somalia, Egypt, kingdom of Saudi Arabia and the kingdom of Iran under Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi in their part had sent millions of dollars in arms support to Somalia, established military training and sent experts to Somalia in support of Egypt's longstanding policy of securing the Nile river flow. Evenas Somalia gained military strength, Ethiopia grew weaker. The regional balance of power now decisively favoured Somalia. Meantime, the Ethiopian military head of State Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam courts the Soviet officials on the topic of continued military aid. He met with President Nicolai Podgorny, Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko in Moscow.
The ex-USSR, finding itself supplying both sides in the war, attempted to mediate a ceasefire, when it's efforts failed, Soviet Union abandoned Somalia. All aid to Mohammed Siad Barre's regime was halted, while armsshipments to Ethiopia were increased.

The Marxist military junta was set up by men-in-uniform and hijacked therevolution to turn it to its own greedy interest, It soon turned to be military dictator and stood against all the youth who demanded for people’s gov’t. The pro-Soviet military junta was dressed with M-Leninist cover and was confronted by underground leftist organization called EPRP(Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Party). EPRP, in so amateurish style launched urban guerilla against the military gov't which was later brandedas "White Terror" by its cadres. The response was so brutal and indiscriminate killing of all youth that may be suspect of EPRP members.

Tens of thousands of lives were lost in short span of time in the name ofthe infamous "red terror" between 1976 and 1978.

The Duerg regime subsequently turned against the All Ethiopian Socialist Movement AESM usually known as MEISON a critical supporter against theEPRP, in what would be termed as "Kegn-Mengedegna" meaning for "Ultrarightists".

June 27, 1977: The Peoples Militia Force whose trained equipped at Siga-Meda, where it's training base located in northwestern addis Ababa paraded to the Revolution square through the streets of Addis Ababa.

July 13, 1977: The Ogaden War brokeout as Somalia committed to invadeEthiopia.

Updates: After the Duerg acquired power United States President Jimmy Carter cut off all military aid to Ethiopia. Somalia, encouraged by the breakdown of authority in Addis Ababa after the September, 1974 overthrow of emperor Haile Selassie, Somalia provided equipment, as wellas moral and organizational support to insurgent movements in the Ogaden and southern Ethiopia. At local calendar (5th Hamle, 1969) at 03, 00 hours: Under the guise of Western Somalia Liberation Front (WSLF) theSomali National Army (SNA) escalated into the Ogadien region of Ethiopia,as the WSLF terms the Ogadien as "occupied teritorries". Despite considerable evidence to the contrary, President Mohammed Siad Barre strongly denied these allegations, saying Somali National Army (SNA) "volunteers" were being allowed to help the WSLF.

Somalia declares war to invade the Ethiopian Somali inhabited vast regionusually known as the Ogadien at 03.00 hours with the help of the Soviet Union arms, attempted to seize territories in south and souheastern regions of Ethiopia, Somalia was deployed about five infantry mechanizeddivision to invade the Ogadien region and was successful at first, capturing most of the southeastern territories of Ethiopia, escalating 700 km into Ethiopia.

During the first weeks of the Ethio-Somali War of 1977 through 1978, oneof the F-5E pilots captured was Legesse Teferra, credited with six Somali MIG kills. His F-5E was shot down while overflying an area thought to be in control by Ethiopian forces. He was captured by the local Somali population and was turned over to then Somali army commander of the region, Colonel Abdullahi Yusuf Ahmed.

In a notable illustration of the nature of Cold war alliances, the Duerg regime turned to the Soviets for help. The Soviet Union, which was providing assistance to Somalia, switched sides and agreed to provide substantial economic and military aid to Ethiopia. The Soviet Union whose switched position from supplying aid to Somalia to supporting Ethiopia,which had previously been backed by the United States, prompting the

U.S. to start supporting Somalia, when war was brokeout when the Somaligovernment sought to incorporate various Somali-inhabited territories of the region into a Greater Somalia (Soomaaliwein) expansionist policy. In addition to previous ex-Soviet funding and arms support to Somalia, Egypt in it's part had sent millions of dollars in arms to Somalia, established military training and sent experts to Somalia in support of Egypt's longstanding policy of securing the Nile waters flow by destabilising Ethiopia. Even as Somalia gained military strength, Ethiopia grew weaker. The regional balance of power now favoured Somalia. Although a former ally of Somali President Mohammed Siad Barre, the Cuban leader Fidel Castro Ruz had warned him against such action, and Cuba sided with Ethiopias Marxist military government. President Fidel Castro Ruz sent troops under the command of General Arnaldo Ochoa to aid the Ethiopian army.
July 14, 1977: The ruling PMAC (Duerg) issued a proclamation calling for POMOA to be put more strictly under its control. This move signaled a divide between the Duerg and MEISON. In essence, the July proclamationserved as a final warning to MEISON. As POMOA was reorganized, the membership of the Politburo was reduced from 15 to five.
July 19, 1977: An EAF combat aircraft pilot in the name of Legesse Teffera, captured as Prisoner of War by the Somali national armed forces when his F5E interceptor was shotdown at the southern battle front at theescalation of the war.
Side note: According to military analysts, at early days of the war, the invading Somali forces out-numbered the Ethiopian armies, estimated 70,000 troops, 40 fighter planes, 250 tanks, 350 armoured personnel carriers, and 600 artillery pieces, which would have meant practically the whole Somalian Army. By the end of the month 60% of the Ogadien had been taken by the so called Western Somali Liberation Front (WSLF) whichwere militarily assisted by the Somali National Army (SNA) forces, including Gode, on the Shabelle River. The attacking forces did suffer some early setbacks; Ethiopian defenders at Dire Dawa and Jijiga inflicted heavy casualties on assaulting forces. The Ethiopian Air Force (EAF) also began to establish air superiority using its Northrop F-5s, despite being initially out-numbered by Somali MiG-21s. However, Somalia was easily overpowering Ethiopian military hardware and technology capability due to massive American military support to the Somali government this time, which amounted to "hundreds of millions of dollars of arms". Eritrean secessionist guerrillas whose encouraged by the imperial regime's collapseand the invasion of the Somali National Army, and due to attendant confusion, extended their control over the whole region by July/August of 1977. Ethiopian armed forces were largely confined to urban centers and controlled the major roads only by day.
July 23, 1977: The invading Somali troops captured the eastern town ofJigjiga.
Identified as Somali regular armed troops committed to invade the Ogadien region of Ethiopia, and in with territorial claim escalated about700 km in the eastern and southeastern fronts.

Side note;- The Somali National Army (SNA) claimed the southeastern part of the country namely, the Ogadien, escalating inside Ethiopia. As theSomali invasion reached at it's steep, with Soviet union's political shift of support, followed by almost the entire communist countries siding with Ethiopia, by increasing military armaments and training to the Ethiopian army. According to Ethiopian documents the invaders numbered about 70,000 troops, 40 fighter planes, 250 tanks, 350 armoured personnel carriers, and 600 artillery, which would have meant practically the whole Somalian Army. By the end of the month 60% of the Ogaden region had been taken by the joint SNA-WSLF force, including Gode, on the Shabelle River. The attacking forces did suffer some early setbacks; Ethiopian defenders at Dire Dawa and Jigjiga inflicted heavy casualties on assaultingforces. The Ethiopian Air Force (EAF) also began to establish air superiority using its Northrop F-5s, despite being initially outnumbered bySomali MiG-21s. However, Somalia was easily overpowering Ethiopian military hardware and technology capability.
July 23, 1977: Somali National Army under the guise of Western SomaliLiberation Front (WSLF) captures the eastern town of Jigjiga.
Side note;- The concept of “Greater Somalia” (Soomaliwein) expansionist concept came to its peak. Somali National Army troops infiltrated into the Ethiopian territories of Ogaden under the guise of Western Somali Liberation Front (WSLF). Majour-General Mohammed Siad Barre's regime trained, educated and financed large number of ethnic-Somali Ethiopians in Mogadishou to fight back, as he terms the Ethiopian occupation of the Ogadien region. The regime instructed such collaborative groups to fight back which describes as the “Ethiopian military presence in the Ogadien” and merge the 5th Somali Region known as the Ogadien into “The GreaterSomalia”, in order to demarcate an internationally recognized Somali- Ethiopian border. The Ethiopian head of state Majour Mengistu Haile- Mariam accused the Somli government of infiltrating the Somali National Army (SNA) soldiers into the ethnic-Somali region to fight in the name of the "Western Somali Liberation Front (WSLF) known as in Af-Somal "xorriya doonka Soomali Galbeed Biiya Aboo". Despite considerable evidence to the contrary, President Mohammed Siad Barre strongly deniedthese allegations, saying Somali National Army "volunteers" were being allowed to help the WSLF.
July 25, 1977: The strategic town of Godey was captured by the regularSomali National Army (SNA) forces.
July 29, 1977: Tigray Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) at a launching stagethis time introduced it’s leadership for armed struggle, among the electedwere, Aregawi Berhe, Zeru Gessese, Ghidey Zaratsion, Gessesew Ayele, Abay Tsehaye, Seyoum Mesfin, Alemseged Mengesha, Asfha Hagos.
In early August, 1977: The Soviet Union finds itself supplying both sidesof a war, attempted to mediate a ceasefire. When their efforts failed, theSoviets abandoned Somalia. All aid to Siad Barre's regime was halted,while arms shipments to Ethiopia were increased. Soviet military aid andadvisors shifted positions to Ethiopia along with around 15,000 Cuban combat troops. Other communist countries offered assistance: the ex- South Yemen offered military assistance and North Korea helped train a "people's militia"; the former East Germany likewise offered training, engineering and support troops. As the scale of communist assistance became clear in November 1977, Somalia broke diplomatic relations withthe ex-USSR and expelled all Soviet military advisors from the country.

The head of POMOA in Hararghe and prominent MEISON cadre, Abdullahi Yusuf, was killed during a visit in Addis Ababa. As regional POMOA chief, he had disarmed Shoan Christian settlers and implemented land reform inHarrarghe.
The Duerg ally MEISON withdrew its support to the ruling Duerg'
The Provisional Office for Mass Organizational Affairs (POMOA) continued to exist after the departure of MEISON, but was now under military control. A Seded senior cadre, Lieutenant Desta Tadesse, became the newgeneral secretary of POMOA. Military personnels and mid-rank officers began occupying key positions in several regional units of POMOA. Seded cadres also took over the Yekatit '66 Political School. One after one, POMOA member organizations were purged.

August 17-18, 1977: Elements of the Somali army had reached the outskirts of the strategic city of Dire Dawa’ Not only was the country's second largest military airbase located here, as well as Ethiopia's cross-roads into the Ogaden, but Ethiopia's rail lifeline to the Red Sea ran through this city, and if the Somalis held Dire Dawa, Ethiopia would be unable to export all its exportable items or bring in equipments needed tocontinue the fight. Though, the Ethiopian army secured Dire Dawa againstthe Somali invading troops and was decisively to win at latter.
Side note: Not only was the country's second largest military airbase located here, as well as Ethiopia's cross-roads into the Ogaden, but Ethiopia's rail lifeline to the Red Sea ran through this city, and if the Somalis held Dire Dawa, Ethiopia would be unable to export all its exportable items or bring in equipments needed to continue the fight, but the Somalis were defeated thanks to the Soviet and Cuban backing for Ethiopia, which had late turned Marxist-Leninist. The war was ended whenthe Somali armed forces retreated back across the border and a truce wasdeclared. Somalia had a longtime border dispute with Ethiopia and fought wars in April, 1964 with it's larger neighbour Ethiopia without success overthe arid tract of land known as the Ogadien, a sparsely populated region, inhabited by ethnic-Somalis, since Ethiopia has controlled it in late 19th century. In March, 1978, Somali troops were ultimately driven out of the Ethiopian territory of Ogadien. Indeed, in April 1978, an Army Colonel Abdullahi Yusuf Ahmed, made unsuccessful coup attempt to overthrow General Mohammed Siad Barre, when failed to achieve he ran to Ethiopia and he regrouped an armed opposition "Somali Salvation Dimocratic Front(SSDF)" or locally known as "Kulmis", but in late times he fellout with the Ethiopian head of State, Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile mariam later to put him in jail until he was freed by the Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Democratic Force (EPRDF) seizing forces who defeated the Ethiopian armies. Generally speaking, the Ogaden War was a conventional conflict between Somalia and Ethiopia over the Ogadien region of Ethiopia between July, 1977 to March , 1978. Majour-General Siad Barre, nicknamed locally "Affe-wein" meaning for "big mouth", or as his countrymen fearfully called him "Jalee Madaxwayne" it's Somali meaning for "Comrade President", and the ruling party the "Somali Supreme Revolutionary Council (SSRC) locally known as "Xusbiga Kacaanka Soomaaliyeed" soon to become the ruling "Somali Revolutionary SocialistParty (SRSP)", whose chairman was President Mohammed Siad Barre himself, assisted by four deputy presidents namely, Lt. General Mohammed Ali Samatar in charge of Defence, Lt. General Hussein Kulmiyeh Afrah in charge of Social and Economic affairs , Lt. Colonel Ismail Ali Abokor in charge of foreign relations, and Ahmed Suleiman Abdalla (Dafle) in charge the national army and internal security whos it'sreign lasted till 26th January, 1991.

August 19, 1977: The leading figures of All-Ethiopian Socialist Movementknown as MEISON and some 500 senior cadres and members were goneunderground.
August 22, 1977: The MEISON under the leadership of Haile Fida have fledout of Addis Ababa in three directions.

Updates: During the first stages of the Red Terror, MEISON remained closely allied with the Duerg and assisted in combatting suspected EPRP supporters. But later in 1977, the Duerg turned on to MEISON, fearing its membership was more loyal to the party than it was to the Duerg. Most ofMEISON's domestic leadership including its chairman Haile Fida, quickly went underground and Haile attempted to flee Addis Ababa to his home province of Welega, but all were arrested and later executed. All other high-ranking MEISON members were removed from their government posts, and the Derg soon launched a bloody campaign against rural MEISON supporters. Most of MEISON's domestic leadership including its chairman Haile Fida, quickly went underground and Haile attempted to flee Addis Ababa to his home province of Welega, but all were arrested and later executed. All other high-ranking MEISON members were removed from their government posts, and the Duerg soon launched a bloody campaign against rural MEISON supporters.
Peasants, factory-workers, public officials, and even students thought to be loyal to the Duerg regime were equipped with arms to accomplish thistask. Lt. Col. Mengistu Haile-Mariam has given dramatic send-offs to his campaign of terror, through his public speeches, he shouted "Death to counter-revolutionaries", "Death to the EPRP mercenaries" and then he produced three bottles of what appeared to be Human blood or Red- coloured liquer and smashed them to the ground to show what the Ethiopian revolution would do the same to it's enemies. In the followed months, thousands of young men and women turned up dead in the streets of the capital and other cities for the next two years. They were systematically murdered mainly by militias attached to the Revolutionary committees of Kebeles & Kefetegnas, and Zonal a neighborhood guards and watchers known as usually "Abiot Tebaqis" those served during the Duerg's reign as the lowest level local government and security surveillance units. Families had to pay the Kebeles a fee known as "for thewasted bullet" to obtain the bodies of their loved ones.

Meanwhile, the Ethiopian Democratic Union (EDU) was operating along theEthiopian-Sudanese border with some support from the Sudanese government under auscipious of the Eritrea Popular Liberation Front. Also within the country itself, there was the White and Red Terrorist squads who roamed the surrounding towns and countryside eliminating citizens who had remained loyal to the regime within Addis Ababa. The acute rise in the price of fuel added inflationary pressures in the cities and urban areas. Meanwhile, in parts of the highlands, above all in the provinces of Wollo and Tigre, a murderous drought consumed the countryside. Becauseof this drought oxen and cattle died. There was no grain harvest. There was no food. The people started dying in tens, and eventually in the thousands.

August 23, 1977: MEISON leadership decides a tactical retreat fromsupporting the ruling Duerg regime, as political partner.

August 24, 1977: Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile-Mariam denounced the All-Ethiopian Socialist Movement (MEISON) in his official speech.

Side note;- A number of other MEISON leaders were killed eitther on the spot or in subsequent shoot-outs, was only Dr. Negede Gobezie, a MEISON leading politician has to get-out of the country, to have assylum in Yemen. It’s to be recalled that a group of people were imprisoned, tortured and killed between 1977 and 1979 because of communist militaryrulers.

August 26, 1977: Dr. Haile Fida, head of MEISON, and several otherleading figures of All-Ethiopian Socialist Movement (MEISON) were captured on their escape to north of Addis Ababa.

August 28, 1977: The main thrust of Somalia columns were headingwestwards towards Jijiga and Harrar militarily strategic towns.

September 7, 1977: Dr. Haile Fida Kuma, the recently custodied lead MEISON Ideologist who suffers severe interrogation under the notorious Duerg Investigation Department in the Grand palace custody in unbrokensequence until his death in the grand palce custody of intensive persecution.

September 16, 1977: The strategic town of Jig-jiga captured by SomaliNational Army (SNA).

September 17, 1977: All Ethiopia Peasants Union (AEPU) formed at afounding conference held in Addis Ababa as Abdalla Sonesa from Iloubabour at it’s helm.
October, 1977: The ruling-Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC) known as the Duerg under Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam asserted that all progressives and revolutionary forces were given "freedom of action", usually known as "Netsa-Irmija" in eliminating the revolution's enemies, and his wrath was particularly directed toward theEPRP's structure.

Mengistu Haile Mariam the dictator, his iron rule, the ViolentConflict, and The Red Terror Campaign in Ethiopia:
The Red Terror or "Qey Shibir", was a violent political campaign that tookplace against Ethiopian's after Mengistu Haile Mariam achieved control of the Derg. Amnesty International estimates that the death toll could be ashigh as 500,000 during the almost 2 year murdering campaign conductedby Mengistu Haile-Mariam and the Derg Mengistu Haile Mariam achieves control of the Duerg in February 1977. Hesoon begins a violent campaign of repression against his opponents, calledthe 'Red Terror'. This is his response to the 'White Terror' of competing civilian groups who also want control of the country. Mengistu has many of them arrested and executed, and may be responsible for the deaths of several thousand other Ethiopians at this time (a precise figure is con...tested).

Somalia launches an offensive into Ethiopia in July 1977 over the disputedOgaden region. Known either as the Ogaden War or the Ethio-Somali War,little is achieved in the conflict other than the USSR and the USA switchingtheir support of either faction as part of their own greater game of politicalchess.

Ideological differences eventually erupted into violent conflict that peakedin late 1977, with clashes between EPRP and MEISON supporters and EPRP attacks against public buildings and high-ranking Duerg officials. In response to this instability, Mengistu implemented a program of Red Terror Campaign (1977-78), designed to eliminate all EPRP opposition.
During the first stages of the Red Terror, MEISON remained closely allied with the Duerg and assisted in combatting suspected EPRP supporters. Butlater in 1977, the Duerg turned on MEISON, fearing its membership was more loyal to the party than it was to the Duerg.
November 3, 1977. A high level delegation from Revolutionary Ethiopia arrived in the GDR capital. A delegation of the Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC) arrived for a week long visit to the GDR. The delegation is headed by the member of the PMAC Standing committeeand Chairman of the Committee for Administrative Affairs Major Fisseha Desta at the Berlin-Schönefeld airport welcomed by Hermann Axen, a member of the Politburo and secretary of the Central Committee of the SED. This was one of the high level visits of the Duerg officials seeking fora huge political, diplomatic as well as military support from the Communist block to equip the poorly equipped Ethiopian army on the ongoing Ethio-Somali war in the Ogaden.

Ambo Agricultural Research Institute initiated, hosts research in protectingmajor crops in Ethiopia.

November 13, 1977: Lt. Colonel Atnafu Abate vice-Chairman of the ruling-PMAC (Duerg), is murdered without a trial in direct order that came from Majour Mengistu Haile-Mariam, on his marking of Majour Mengistu's arrogance in consolidating political power.

Side note: Lt. Colonel Atnafu Abate was born near Bichena in Gojjam, andwas educated at Holetta Military Academy. At the time of the Ethiopian Revolution, he was serving as a major in the Fourth Army Division, stationed in Addis Ababa. By April 1974 he had joined the group of army and police officers led by Colonel Ye-Alem Zewde Tessema of the AirborneCorps, playing a major role in organizing them into a co-ordinating committee on 24 April, which was officially disbanded five days later to bereplaced by the 25-member National Security Commission under the command of the Minister of Defense Abiye Abebe. At some point during the following month a second coordinating committee emerged, whose leading members included, besides Majour Atnafu, Majour Taffara Teklaebof the Army Engineering Corps, Majour Fisseha Desta of the elite Imperial Bodyguard (Kebur Zabangna), Girma Fisseha of the Army Aviation, and Majour Sisay Habte of the Air Force. This second committee is better known under its later name, the Duerg. Within a month Majour Tafara Teklaeb, whome stated he was "probably more than any other the founderof the Duerg", was imprisoned then executed, leaving Majour Atnafu to chair the first meetings of the Duerg. It was at this point that one of the delegates from the Third Lions Army Division, Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam, made a speech which won him the support of the members of theDuerg. Colonel Alem Zewde fell from power at this time, losing control of his paratrooper battalion after its defeat in a battle with radicals on 22 June and afterwards fleeing to Gojjam.

Meantime, the vice chairman of the Duerg, Lt. Colonel Atnafu Abate ((He became a Lt. Colonel after April 1976.), a moderate and an advocate of mixed-Economy, although with some support at this time, clashed with Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam marking his consolidation of power & over the issue of handling the war in Eritrea, after a week period of visit to the troubled province, was executed following a session of the Duerg congressin which he had been provoked deliberately by pro-Mengistu cronies into a rash challenge to a number of their actions and basic assumptions, clearing the way for Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam to become the complete master of the situation, then he assumed power as head of state, and of course, consolidated his position with execution of his close associates and potential rivals at his way killed on the 13th of November,1977 for allegedly having, "placed the interests of Ethiopia above the interests of socialism, and other counter-revolutionary" activities. The removal of the vice-Chairman of the PMAC more of an encumbrance thana challenge, he nonetheless was a source of some dis-comfort for Majour Mengistu Haile-Mariam, the more so as he had expressed his dis-pleasureat the way Majour Mengistu had disposed of his opponents in early February, 1977.

November 14, 1977: The Ethiopians launched a major counter offensive operations in the northern front, starting with probing attacks around theJijiga area. The counter offensive operations were supported by the Cubans and the Russians, who had been flown into Ethiopia prior to the invasion. In fact, Russia's Army- General Vasily Petrov, at that time FirstDeputy Commander of the Soviet Ground Forces, is reported to have planned and directed the operations.

November 22, 1977: Ethiopian National Defence Forces (ENDF) on the offensive position against the invading Somali National Army (SNA). Theinvading Somali armies were successfully driven out of the Ethiopian territories with military advice and logistical support of the Soviet Union and Cuba swiftly switched to Ethiopia.

In January 1978: The Provisional Military Administrative Council known asthe Duerg announced the ‘National Revolutionary Development Campaign’to mobilize human and material resources to transform the economy, which later led to a Ten Year Plan (1984/85-1993/94) to expand agricultural and industrial outputs, forecasting a 6.5% growth in GDP and a 3.6% rise in per-capita income; instead, per-capita income declined 0.8% over this period.

March 1978: The “National Campaign Against Illiteracy” introduced withits motto of “Let the educated teach, and the uneducated learn”. The national campaign won the United Nations Educational Science and Cultural Organizations (UNESCO) prestigious Award. The UNESCO Recognised National Literacy Campaign, increased literacy rates to between 37% (unofficial) and 63% (official) by 1984.

March 9, 1978: The war in the Ogadien region of Ethiopia is going to end up as the Somali troops were retreated back across the border and a trucewas officially declared.

የኢትዮጵያ አየር ኃይል በኦጋዴኑ ጦርነት

WINGS OVER OGADEN በሚል ርእስ በ TOM COOPER የተፃፈውን እንደ ኢትዮጵያ አቆጣጠር ከ 1969 እስከ 1970 የተደረገውን የኢትዮጵያና የሶማሊያን ወረራ ጦርነት አስመክክቶ በጦር መሣሪያም ሆነ በሠራዊት ብዛት ብልጫ የነበረውየሶማሊያ ሠራዊት ነበር እንደ መፅሀፉ ዘገባ፦

የጎዴ ጦርነት

ሐምሌ 6 1969 በወታደራዊ ሰዓት አቆጣጠር 15፡ 00 GMT (ከሰዓት በኋላ 9 ሰአት) 2 የሶማሊያ እግረኛ ብርጌድ እና 3 ሜካናይዝድ ብርጌድ በኮሎኔል አብዱላህ አስካር በደቡብ ምሥራቅ አጋዴን አቅጣጫ ወደ ጎዴ አመራ። ከጥቂት ሰአታት ቆይታ በኋላ የሶማሊያ ቦምብ ጣይ ተዋጊ አይሮፕላንና እግረኛ ሠራዊት የኢትዮጵያን ሠራዊት ክፉኛ ማጥቃት ጀመረ፡ ነገርግን የኢትዮጵያ ጦር ሠራዊት 5ኛ ብርጌድ የተቃጣበትን የማጥቃት እርምጃ

ጠንክሮ በመዋጋት ለ 2ቀናት ከተማዋን የሶማሊያ ጦር እንዳይዛት ተከላከለ። የኢትዮጵያ አየር ኃይል በዚያ በተደረገው ውጊያ ወቅት የአየር ውጊያ ድጋፍ እርዳታ ሊያደርግ አልቻለም።

ሆኖም ግን ሐምሌ 7 1969 3 F-5A የኢትዮጵያ አየር ኃይል ተዋጊ ጄት አይሮፕላኖች ከደብረዘይት ወደ ድሬዳዋ አየር ኃይል መደብ ተመደቡ። የኢትዮጵያ ምድር ጦር 24ኛ ብርጌድ የአይሮፕላን ድብደባ እርዳታ ያስፈልገኛል የሬድዮ መገናኛ ጥሪ ለዘመቻ መምሪያ አቀረበ። ለዘመቻው የተመደቡት የ F-5A ተዋጊ ጄት ስኳድሮንአዛዥ አብራሪው የሻለቃ ብርሀኑ የአይሮፕላኑ መገናኛ ሬድዮ ችግር ነበረበትና በቴክኒሺያኖች ጥገና ለማድረግ ጊዜ አልነበረምና በአጠገባቸው WINGMAN ሆነ ው በሌላኛው F5-A ተዋጊ አይሮፕላን ለሚያበሩት ለሻምበል አስማረ ጌታሁን የ Formation Leader እንዲሆኑ ታዘዘ፤ 3ኛው WINGMAN ፓይለት ሻምበል ልዑል ገብረመድህን ነበሩ። ከሌሎች የጦር ጓዶቻ ጋር ለመገናኘት አስቸጋሪ ሁኔታ ተከስቶ ነበር። የጎዴ አየር ኃይል ሜዳ በሶማሊያ ከባድ መድፍ ድብደባ ወድሟል። ሻለቃ ብርሀኑ ከበደ በጠላት ላይ ጥቃት በማድረግ ሁኔታ ላይ ብቻ አተኮሩ። የሶማሊያ ጦር SA-7 የሚባለውን ፀረ አይሮፕላን ሚሳይል በሻለቃ ብርሀኑ ከበደ F-5 ተዋጊ ጄት ላይ ተኮሱ፤ ሻለቃ ብርሀኑ የሬዲዮ መገናኛቸው ስለማይሠራ ትኩረታቸው ሁሉ ማጥቃቱ ላይ ብቻ ስለነበር በአይሮፕላናቸው ግራ ሞተር መመታታቸውን አላስተዋሉም፡ ሚሳይሉ መታ እንጂ አልፈነዳም። ከዚያም ከአይሮፕላናቸው በፓራሹት ዘለው ከከተማው በስተደቡብ ከጦር ሜዳው ራቅ ባለ ሥፍራ እንደወደቁ ብዙ ከተጓዙ በኋላ የ ምድር ጦር ሄሊኮፕተር ሞጥታ አ ንስ ታቸውወደ ድሬዳዋ ተወሰዱ።

ከሁሉምነገር በፊት የኢትዮጵያ አየር ኃይል ፓይለቶች ያላወቁትነገር የሶማሊያ መከላከያ ኃይል ምን ያህል ከባድ እንደሆነና እንደሚታመነ ው ከምእራብ ሶማሊያ ነፃ አውጪነን ከሚሉትም ጋር የተቀናጀ ማጥቃት እንዳለና እንዲሁምከ SA-7 ፀረ አይሮፕላን ሚሳይል አደገኛ ጥቃት ለመከላከል ጥንቃቄ አላደረጉም። ጎዴ ላይ የሶማሊያ ሠራዊት በሚያደርገው ድብደባ የኢትዮጵያ ጦር ሠራዊት 5ኛ ብርጌድ በጣም እየተጠቃ ሳለ የ 79ነኛ ሚሊሺያ ብርጌድ ረዳት ጦር ሲጨመርለት የሶማሊያ ጦር ጉዳት ደረሰበት። እንደዚያም ሆኖ የኢትዮጵያ ጦር የሶማሊያ ጦር የያዘውን ወታደራዊ መሬት ማስለቀቅ አልቻለም።

ሰኞ ሐምሌ 18 1969 ዓም ጥዋት ጎዴ በሶማሊያው ጦር መሪ በኮሎኔል አስካሪ በሚመራው ጦር ተያዘች። በሐረር ያለውም ሁኔታ አስከፊ ነበር፡ የሶማሊያን ጦር ግስጋሴ ለማስቆም ባለመቻሉና ሌላ አመቺ ቦታ ባለመያዙየኢትዮጵያ መከላከያ 9ነ ኛ ብርጌድ ተበታተነ ።
ሐምሌ 14 1969 የሶማሊያ ሚግ 21 ተዋጊ ጄቶች የሐረር አይሮፕላን ማረፊያ አጥቅተው በቦታው መሬት ላይ የነበረውን የኢትዮጵያ አየር መንገድን የሲቪል DC-3 አይሮፕላን አቃጠሉ። 11ኛ ብርጌድ የኢትዮጵያ ጦር ሠራዊትየአየር ኃይል ድጋፍ ተደርጎለት ወደ ጅጅጋ እንዲያፈገፍጉ እስከሚነገረው በፅናት ተዋጋ።
ነሐሴ 2 1969 የሶማሊያ ጦር ዶሎ፤ ፊልቱ እና ኢልከሬን ተቆጣጠረ።
የኢትዮጵያ አየር ኃይል በኦጋዴኑ ጦርነት የበላይነት ነበረው
የሐረር ጦርነት ላይ እግረኛው የኢትዮጵያ መደበኛው ሠራዊት የሚሊሺያው ሰራዊት ተጨምሮም በጣም ተጎድቷል፤ ተስፋቢስነት መንፈስም ታይቷል ፤ በዚያ ጦርነት ሁኔታው ከቁጥጥር ውጭሆኗል።

በዛ ያለ የጦር መሣሪያ በቅናሽ ዋጋ ለማግኘት የሀገሪቱ አቅም አይችልም፤ ከሶማሊያ ሠራዊት የሚቃጣውን የጦር ኃይል ምት መቋቋምና ውጤታማ መሆን አልተቻለም። --ከደቡብ የመን ጥቂት የጦር ኃይል እርዳታ ለኢትዮጵያ ጦርሠራዊት እርዳታ ማለትም የ 2ባታሊዮን እግረኛ ጦር ከ T-34ታንኮች ጋር ደረሰ፡ ነገርግን ይህ ጥቂት ኃይል ሐረርን ለመከላከል በቂ አይደለም። ምክንያቱም ሐረር ከተማ በ 3አቅጣጫ ተከባለች።

በከተማዋ 48,000ሕዝብ ይኖርባታል፤ የሐገሪቱም የጦር አካዳሚና 3ኛ እግረኛ ክፍለጦር፤ ልዩ ልዩ የጦር ክፍሎችን ማለትም 75ኛ ሜካናይዝድ ብርጌድ፤ 76ኛና 96ኛ ብርጌድ ፤ 2ኛ ታንክ ባታሊዮን ፤፤ 219ኛ ነበልባልባታሊዮን እና 4ኛ አየር መከላከያ ባትሪ እና ሌሎችም ናቸው። ሆኖምግን ትጥቃቸው ኋላቀር ነበር። --በሌላውአቅጣጫም የሶማሊያ የጦር ኃይል በግምባሩ ላይ የነበረው 5ኛ ሞተራይዝድና እግረኛ ብርጌድ ሙሉ ኃይልና ትጥቅ ባለውየታንከኛ ብርጌድና ልዩ የከባድ መድፈኛ ብርጌድ፤ የሶማሊ አቦ ነፃነት ግምባር ተዋጊ ነን ባዮች እና 1የኮማንዶ ብርጌድ ናቸው።

የሶማሊያ ጦር በመስከረምና ጥቅምት 1970ዓ ም ተደጋጋሚ የማጥቃት ሙከራና

የሥነ ልቦና ትኩረት የማስቀየሻ ዘዴ በመጠቀም ውጊያውን የማስፋት በደቡብ ምሥራቅ ሐረር አቅጣጫ ወደ ቆሬ መስመር ሞካክረዋል።

ጥቅምት 13 ቀን 1970 ዓም የመጨረሻው የሶማሊያ ጦር የማጥቃት ዘመቻ ተጀመረ፡- ከሐረር ሰሜን ምእራብ አቅጣጫ 35 ኪሎ ሜትር ርቀት ላይ ባለው በጃርሶ በኩል ጀመሩ። የኢትዮጵያ ጦር ኃይል በፍጥነት ቃኘው ብርጌድንና ከ 3ኛ መድፈኛ ብርጌድ አሠለፈና በሁለቱም ወገኖች ብዙ እልቂት ሆነ። እንደገና የሶማሊያ ጦር በፈጂስ በኩል ሌላ የማጥቃት ግምባር ከፈተ፡ የኢትዮጵያ ሀገር መከላከያ 2የፓራኮማንዶ ባታሊዮን እና 501ኛ የሚሊሺያ ብርጌድን ከመድፈኛ ባታሊዮን ጋር በ M-41ታንክ ታግዘው ለቀናት ያህል ጥቃቱን በመከላከል ተቋቋሙት።

ጥቅምት 25 1970 ሐረር ከተማ በሶማሊያ ጦር ቁጥጥር ሥር ልትወድቅ አስጊ ሁኔታ ላይ ሳለች 2ኛ ፓራኮማንዶ ብርጌድ ደርሶ አድኗታል። ሶማሊዎች ቁስለኞችና የተበታተነውን አስተካክለው እንደገና በጃርሶ በኩል ሌላ ማጥቃትበከባድ መድፎች፤ በ BM-21ሮኬት ወንጨፊ በመረዳት ሐረር አካባቢ ባለው ወደ ኮምቦልቻ ሰብረውገቡ። ተደናግጠው የነበሩ ሁሉ ከተማውን ለቀው ወጡ። የኢትዮጵያ 1ኛ ፓራኮማንዶ ብርጌድ ደርሶ ሁኔታውን በመግታት የሶማሊያን ማጥቃት አስቆመው። የኢትዮጵያ አየር ኃይልምአየርወለድ በማሰለፍ ድጋፍ በመርዳቱ የተሳካ እንዲሆንአስተዋፅኦ አድርጓል።

ረቡእ ኅዳር 7ቀን 1970ዓም በተቀናጀ የኢትዮጵያ አየር ኃይል አሰላለፍ 2 F5-E፤ 2 F-5A እና 2ቦምብጣይ ካምቤራ አይሮፕላኖች የሶማሊያ ቀዳሚመምሪያ በምሥራቅ ድሬዳዋ ጀልዴሳ ላይ አጠቁ፡- የኢትዮጵያ ሀገር መከላከያ ያላወቁት ነገር እዚያ አካባቢ የጥይት ማከማቻ ዴፖ መኖሩንና ብዛት ባለውየፀረ አውሮፕላን መሳሪያዎችየተጠመዱበት ቦታ መሆኑ ለኢትዮጵያ አየር ኃይል በጣምአደገኛ ቦታ ነበር።
የኢትዮጵያ አየር ኃይል በዘመቻውላይ ያሰማራቸው ፓይለቶች፡-
ሻለቃ ብርሀኑ ከበደ፤ ሻለቃ ተስፋ ደስታና ሌሎችምናቸው። ሁለቱ ፓይለቶች በዙሪያቸው ያደረጉት የቦምብ መጣል ድብደባ ከ 6,000 ሜትርከፍታ ላይ ዳይቭ በማድረግ የቦምብ መጣል ድብደባ አካሄዱ። በቀጣይ ዞረውበድጋሚሲደበድቡ የሻለቃ ብርሀኑ ከበደ F-5Aበፀረ አይሮፕላን ጥይት በግራ ሞተሩ ላይ ተመታ። ምቱ በግራ በኩል ያለውን ሞተር ከጥቅም ውጭአደረገው። ሻለቃ ብርሀኑ ትኩረታቸውን ሁሉ አይሮፕላኑን በታቻለ መጠን በመቆጣጠር ወደ ድሬዳዋ ደርሰውለማሳረፍ መብረር ቀጠሉ ፤ሁሉምነገር ለበረራውጥሩ ሁኔታ ላይ ቢሆኑምለማረፍ ግን በግራ በኩል ያለው በጥይት የተመታው ሞተር ስለማይሰራ ሊሳካላቸውአልቻለም። የማይሆን ነገር ሲሆንባቸውሻለቃ ብርሀኑ ከበደ በፓራሹት ዘለውከወደቁበት ሥፍራ 1ደቂቃ ባልሞላ ጊዜ በሄሊኮፕተር ተወስደዋል።

በዚህ ዘመቻ ወቅት የኢትዮጵያ አየር ኃይል አንድ F5A ከጥቅም ውጭ ሆኖ ቢያጣም በነዚህ ፓይለቶች የተደረገውየቦምብ ድብደባ ማጥቃት የነበረውን የጥይት ዴፖ ማከማቻ ድምጥማጡን አጥፍቶ ስላፈነዳዳውየሶማሊያን ጦር የማጥቃት ፍጥነት ከነጭራሹ ያስቆመ፤ የሞቃዲሾ መንግስትን ሐረርን ለመያዝ የነበረውን ተስፋ ያጨለመ፤ ያስቆመዘመቻ ነበር።

March 10, 1978: Ethiopian troops had reached the Ethiopia-Djibouti- Somlia border, the Somali occupied defensive position across the border. (WEMEZEKIR) Facts & Stats About the Ethio-Somali War of July 1977: TIMELINE: The Ethio-Somali War shortly known as 'the Ogaden War', wasa conventional conflict between Somalia and Ethiopia between July, 1977and March, 1978 over the Ogaden region of Ethiopia.

In a notable illustration of the nature of Cold War alliances, the Soviet Union switched from supplying aid to Somalia to supporting Ethiopia, which had previously been backed by the United States, prompting the U.S. to start supporting Somalia. The war ended when Somali forcesretreated back across the border and a truce was declared.

Western Somali Liberation Front (WSLF) was a Secessionist rebel groupfighting with the invading Somali troops in eastern Ethiopia to create anindependent Ogadenia state. WSLF was founded by Makhtal Dahir (dejazmatch) a local clan leader during the imperial rule.

WSLF played a major role in the Ogaden War of July 1977 to March 1978 assisting the invading Somali Army. Since the end of the war, the WSLF was almost totally incorporated into the Western Somali Democratic Party(WSDP).

Note well: The term Secession: (derived from the Latin term secessio is the act of withdrawing from an organization, union, or especially a politicalentity. Threats of secession can also be a strategy for achieving more limited political goals.

The joint Somali National Army (SNA) under the disguise of Western Somalia Liberation Front (WSLF) attempted to capture the city of Harrar inAugust, 1977 until January 1978, where 40,000 Ethiopians had regroupedand rearmed with former Soviet Union supplied artillery and armor; backed by 1500 Soviet "advisors" and 11,000 Cuban soldiers, they engaged the attackers in vicious fighting. Though the Somali forces reached the city outskirts by November, they were too exhausted to take the city and eventually had to withdraw to await the Ethiopian counter attack.

The greatest single victory of the SNA-WSLF was a second assault on Jigjiga in mid-September (the Battle of Jigjiga), in which the demoralizedEthiopian troops withdrew from the town. The local defenders were no match for the assaulting Somalis and the Ethiopian military was forced towithdraw past the strategic strongpoint of the Marda Pass, halfway between Jigjiga and Harrar.
By September Ethiopia was forced to admit that it controlled only about 10% of the Ogaden and that the Ethiopian defenders had been pushed back into the non-Somali areas of Harrarghe, Bale, and Sidamo. However,the Somalis were unable to press their advantage because of the high attrition on its tank battalions, constant Ethiopian air attacks on their supply lines, and the onset of the rainy season which made the dirt roads unusable. During that time, the Ethiopian government managed to raise and train a giant 100,000 strong peoples militia force at Siga Meda later known as 'Tatek' and integrated it into the regular fighting force. Also, since the Ethiopian army was a client of U.S weapons, hasty acclimatization to the new Warsaw Pact bloc weaponry took place.
The expected Ethiopian-Cuban attack occurred in early February, 1978; however, it was accompanied by a second attack that the Somalis did notexpect. A column of Ethiopian and Cuban troops crossed northeast into the highlands between Jigjiga and the border with Somalia, bypassing theSNA-WSLF joint force defending the Marda Pass. Mil Mi-6 helicopters airlifted Cuban BMD-1 and ASU-57 armored vehicles behind enemy lines. The attackers were thus able to assault from two directions in a "pincer" action, allowing the re-capture of Jigjiga in only two days while killing 3,000 defenders. The Somali defense collapsed and every major Ethiopiantown was recaptured in the following weeks. Recognizing that his positionwas untenable, President Mohammed Siad Barre ordered the SNA to retreat back into Somalia on the 9 March 1978, although the Somalis, having foreseen the inevitable, had already withdrawn their heavy weapons.

The Somali National Army (SNA) never recovered from its defeat in the Ogaden War. The battles to retake and then defend the Ogaden stripped the Somali armed forces of many troops, much of their equipment, and their Soviet patron. For the next decade, the SNA sought unsuccessfully toimprove its capability by relying on a variety of foreign sources, including the United States. The Ogaden War therefore remains the best example ofthe SNA's ability to mount and sustain conventional military operations.

Before the Ogaden War, the most striking feature of the 23,000-man SNAhad been its large armored force, which was equipped with about 250 T- 34 and T-54/T-55 Soviet-built medium tanks and more than 300 armoredpersonnel carriers. This equipment gave the SNA a tank force more than three times as large as Ethiopia's. The prewar Somali Air Force (SAF) alsowas larger than Ethiopia's air force.

In 1976 the SAF had fifty-two combat aircraft, twenty-four of which were Soviet-built supersonic MiG21s . Facing them was an Ethiopian Air Force (EAF) of thirty-five to forty aircraft. Ethiopia also was in the process of acquiring several United States-built Northrop F-5 fighters from Iran. At the outbreak of fighting, Ethiopia had approximately sixteen F5A /Es. As chaos spread throughout Ethiopia after Haile Selassie's downfall, Mogadishu increased its support to several pro-Somali liberation groups inthe Ogaden, the strongest of which was the Western Somali Liberation Front (WSLF) armed and backed by the SNA.

By late 1975, the WSLF had attacked many Ethiopian outposts in the Ogaden. In June 1977, Addis Ababa accused Mogadishu of committing SNA units to the fighting. Despite considerable evidence to the contrary, Somalia denied this charge and insisted that only "volunteers" had been given leave from the SNA to fight with the WSLF. By late 1977, the combined WSLF-SNA strength in the Ogaden probably approached 50,000,of which 15,000 appeared to be irregulars. After the Somali government committed the SNA to the Ogaden, the conflict ceased to be a guerrilla action and assumed the form of a conventional war in which armor, mechanized infantry, and air power played decisive roles. The SNA quicklyadapted its organization to battlefield realities.

The centralized Somali logistics system controlled supplies at battalionlevel (600- to 1,000-man units) from Mogadishu, an unwieldy arrangement given Somalia's limited transportation and communications network. To facilitate operations, the logistics center and headquarters forforces fighting in the northern Ogaden moved to Hargeysa, the SNA's northern sector headquarters. Before the war, all Somali ground forces had been organized into battalions. After the conflict started, however, thestandard infantry and mechanized infantry unit became the brigade, composed of two to four battalions and having a total strength of 1,200 to2,000 personnel.

During the summer of 1977, the SNA-WSLF force achieved several victories but also endured some significant defeats. In July 1977, it captured Gode, on the Shabeelle River about 550 kilometers inside Ethiopia, and won control of 60 percent of the Ogaden. By mid-September1977, Ethiopia conceded that 90 percent of the Ogaden was in Somali hands. The SNA suffered two setbacks in August when it tried to capture Dire Dawa and Jigjiga. The Ethiopian army inflicted heavy losses on the SNA at Dire Dawa after a Somali attack by one tank battalion and a mechanized infantry brigade supported by artillery units. At Jigjiga the Somalis lost more than half of their attacking force of three tank battalions, each of which included more than thirty tanks.

Somalia's greatest victory occurred in mid-September 1977 in the second attempt to take Jigjiga, when three tank battalions overwhelmed the Ethiopian garrison. After inflicting some heavy losses on Somali armor, Ethiopian troops mutinied and withdrew from the town, leaving its defenseto the militia, which was incapable of slowing the Somali advance. The Ethiopians retreated beyond the strategic Marda Pass, the strongest defensive position between Jigjiga and Harrar, leaving the SNA in a commanding position within the region. Despite this success, several factors prevented a Somali victory. Somali tank losses had been heavy in the battles around Dire Dawa and Jigjiga. Moreover, because the EAF had established air superiority over the SAF, it could harass overextended Somali supply lines with impunity. The onset of the rainy season hampered such air attacks; however, the bad weather also bogged down Somali reinforcements on the dirt roads.

The Soviet Union's decision to abandon Somalia in favor of Ethiopia eventually turned the tide of battle in the Ogaden. From October 1977 through January 1978, about 20,000 WSLF guerrillas and SNA forces pressed attacks on Harrar, where nearly 50,000 Ethiopians had regrouped, backed by Soviet-supplied armor and artillery and gradually reinforced by 11,000 Cubans and 1,500 Soviet advisers. Although it fought its way into Harer in November 1977, the SNA lacked the suppliesand manpower to capture the city. Subsequently, the Somalis regroupedoutside Harer and awaited an Ethiopian counterattack.

As expected, in early February 1978 Ethiopian and Cuban forces launcheda two-stage counterattack toward Jigjiga. Unexpectedly, however, a column of Cubans and Ethiopians moving north and east crossed the highlands between Jijiga and the Somali border, bypassing Somali troopsdug in around the Marda Pass. Thus, the attacking force was able to assault the Somalis from two sides and recapture Jijiga after two days offighting in which 3,000 Somali troops lost their lives. Within a week, Ethiopia had retaken all of the Ogaden's major towns.

March 9, 1978: A truce is declared after the Somali army retreat back across theborder.

Side note: President Mohammed Siad Barre called the Somali National Army to retreat from Ethiopian territories. After the SNA withdrawal, theWSLF reverted to guerrilla tactics. By May 1980, the rebels had established control over a significant portion of the Ogaden. Eventually, Ethiopia defeated the WSLF and the few small SNA three-quarters of its armored units that remained in the region after the Somali troops total pullout.

In late 1981, however, reports indicated that the WSLF continued toconduct occasional hit-and- run attacks against Ethiopian targets.
Furthermore, in the mid-1974 Ethiopia's imperial government was headedtoward collapse. In September of that year a group of military officers deposed Haile Selassie. Conflict ensued among those responsible for his overthrow, and several insurgent groups sought to secede from the erstwhile empire. Somalia's military buildup, coincident with the turmoil inEthiopia, temporarily altered the balance of power between the two countries.

In 1976-77 Somalia attempted to take advantage of the situation by supporting a guerrilla campaign by the Western Somali Liberation Front(WSLF) founded by an Ethiopian Somali Dahir Makhtal in the title of Dejazmatch in the Imperial Ethiopia whos turned himself as pro-Somaliliberation group in the Ogaden, to secede the Ogaden from Ethiopia.
By the late summer of 1977, Somali armored forces and mechanized infantry supported by aircraft had invaded the Ogaden, capturing 60 percent of the disputed territory within several weeks. Meanwhile, the Soviet Union had started supporting the Marxist-Leninist regime that hademerged in Ethiopia while simultaneously attempting to maintain Somaliaas a client state. After its attempts at mediation failed, the Soviet Union decided to abandon Somalia.
In August 1977, the Soviet Union suspended arms shipments to PresidentSiad Barre's regime and accelerated military deliveries to Ethiopia. Three months later, Somalia renounced the Treaty of Friendship and Cooperation, expelled all Soviet advisers, broke diplomatic relations with Cuba, and ejected all Soviet personnel from Somalia. Following Moscow's decision to support Addis Ababa, Ethiopia received massive amounts of Soviet arms. Along with Soviet military advisors, about 15,000 Cuban combat troops also arrived. By early 1978, this aid had turned the tide of war in Ethiopia's favor. By March 9, 1978, when Siad Barre announced thewithdrawal of the Somali armed forces from the Ogaden, the Somali military had lost 8,000 men--one-third of the SNA, three-quarters of its armored units, and half of the Somali Air Force (SAF). For all intents and purposes, Ethiopia's victory during the Ogaden War ended Mogadishu's dream of recreating 'Greater Somalia' (Somaliwein in Somali terming), the expansionist policy of the regime. Even before the setback in the Ogaden, Siad Barre had relinquished his claim to Djibouti after 95 percent of the voters in that country indicated a preference for independence over incorporation into Somalia. In 1981 Somali-Kenyan relations improved after Siad Barre visited Nairobi and indicated that his government no longer had any claim to Kenyan territory. In December 1984, Somalia and Kenya signed a pact that pledged both governments tocease hostilities along their common frontier. Subsequently, the level of insurgent activity along the border was minimal. However, the activities ofSomali shiftas, or bandits and ivory poachers and the periodic influx of Somali refugees into Kenya continued to strain relations between Mogadishu and Nairobi.

War in the Ogaden: In Addis Ababa, meanwhile, civilian opposition to the military government erupted in urban civil war. On February 11, 1977, Mengistu Haile Mariam was named head of state and chairman of the ruling military council, and throughout 1977 anarchy reigned in the country as the military suppressed its civilian opponents. During this trauma the Somali chose to attack. The Somalian president, Mohammed Siad Barre, was able to muster 35,000 regulars and 15,000 fighters of theWestern Somali Liberation Front (WSLF). His forces began infiltrating into the Ogaden in May to June 1977, and overt warfare began in mid-July.

September 1977 Mogadishu controlled 90 percent of the Ogaden and hadfollowed retreating Ethiopian forces into non-Somali regions of Harrarghe,Bale, and Sidamo.

After watching Ethiopian events in 1975-76, the Soviet Union concluded that the revolution would lead to the establishment of an authentic Marxist-Leninist state and that, for geopolitical purposes, it was wise to transfer Soviet interests to the Ethiopians side. To this end, Moscow secretly promised the Derg military aid on condition that it renounce the alliance with the United States. Majour Mengistu, the de-facto leader believing that the Soviet Union's revolutionary history of national reconstruction was in keeping with Ethiopia's political goals, closed down the U.S. Military Assistance Advisory Group shortly known as (US-MAAG) mission and the Kagnew communications centre based in Asmarra in April,1977.

In early September 1977, Soviet Union suspended all military aid to the aggressor Somalia, began openly to deliver weapons to Addis Ababa, andreassigned military advisers from Somalia to Ethiopia. This Soviet volte- face also gained Ethiopia important support from Peoples Democratic Republic of Korea (PDRK), which trained the People's Militia, and from Cuba, German democratic republic (GDR) and the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen (PDRY), which provided infantry, pilots, and armouredunits.

March 1978, Ethiopia and its allies regained control over the Ogaden. Duerg's government was unable to resolve the Eritrean problem, however,and expended large amounts of wealth and manpower on the conflict while rebellion spread to other parts of Ethiopia. Similarly, Siyaad proved unable to return the Ogaden to Somalian rule, and the people grew restive; in northern Somalia, rebels destroyed administrative centres and took over major towns. Both Ethiopia and Somalia had followed ruinous socialist policies of economic development, and they were unable to surmount droughts and famines that afflicted the Horn during the 1980s. By March 15, 1978: All Somali troops had crossed back into Somalia having left pockets of Western Somalia Liberation Front to harass the Ethiopians. A truce was reached, apparently with the pressure from the super powers. Ethiopians were told not to cross the border in pursuit of the retreating enemy and indeed the Ethiopians were very unhappy. The Somali Defense Forces severely collapsed and every major Ethiopian townwas recaptured in the following weeks. Recognizing that his position was untenable, Somali president Majour-General Mohammed Siad Barre ordered the Somali national armies to retreat back into Somalia. Since thenational boundaries were drawn by colonial powers without regard to geographical and ethnographical considerations, the Horn of Africa will continue to experience boundary disputes. The Ogaden War is an exampleof wars or skirmishes to be expected in the future.

By May 1980, the rebels, with the assistance of a small number of SNAsoldiers who continued to help the guerilla war, controlled a substantialregion of the Ogaden.

However by 1981 the insurgents were reduced to sporadic hit-and-run attacks and were finally defeated. The war weakened the Somali military. Almost one-third of the regular SNA soldiers, three-eighths of the armoredunits and half of the Somali Air Force (SAF) were lost. The weakness of the Barre regime led it to effectively abandon the dream of a unified Greater Somalia. The failure of the war aggravated discontent with the Barre regime; the first organized opposition group, the Somali Salvation Democratic Front (SSDF) , was formed by junior army officers in April 1979. The United States adopted Somalia as a Cold War ally from the late 1970s to 1988 in exchange for use of Somali military bases, and a way to exert influence upon the region. A second armed clash in 1988 was resolved when the two countries agreed to withdraw their militaries from the border.

Later in 1988 President Siad Barre and the Ethiopian Military head of stateMajour Mengistu Haile Mariam have agreed to withdraw their armies frompossible confrontation in the Ogaden at an IGAD conference held in Djibouti. Effects of the war: Following the withdrawal of the Somali National Army, the Western Somali Liberation Front (WSLF) continued their insurgency until the collapse of the former Somali last regime. (Text ends)

Mid- March, 1978: Ato Kifle Wodajo who served as the 18th Foreign Minister of Ethiopia (!975 to 1977) has deserts his position at his attendance for a working visit in the west African state of Liberia. It's widely known that this time over hundred diplomats were deserted theirpositiitions from overseas Ethiopian embassies and heads of missions.

March 15, 1978: The last significant armed units of the Somali National Army (SNA) in the southern fronts of Bale and Sidamo were driven out ofGodey and Negelle areas (but some say a it was a systematcally withdrawal), marking the end of the Ethio-Somali war on the Ogadien.

The war between Ethiopia and Somalia known as "the Ogadien war" whichstarted on the 23th July, 1977 ended after a successful counter-attack have been operated, and the Somali National Army (SNA) driven out of Ogadien, infavour of the Ethiopian Armed Forces. After forcing back the Somali troops, the military government then ordered the Ethiopian troopsto suppress the scessionist Eritrean People's Liberation Front (EPLF) in thefar north of the country.

Archeologists found in northern Kenya the pillars that the Oromos used inthe invention of their calendar system, dated at 300 BC.

EPRP suffers internal and external betrayals as it's top leadership cameinto severe crises, many of its members and supporters to have suffer arrests, disappearances and massive killings in Addis Ababa and elsewhere in regional towns.

EPRP claims it surmounts all and continues the noble struggle that manyhad sacrificed their lives for, and to wage a bush war against the ruling-Duerg regime and continues its noble struggle that many had sacrificed their lives for it's objectives.

April 1978: The ruling PMAC issued a series of proclamations and directives (b/n 1978 and 1981), outlining procedures for the formation of service cooperatives and producers' cooperatives, All Ethiopian Peasants Association (AEPU) Revolutionary Ethiopia Youth Assocation (REYA), Revolutioary Women's Association (REWA), All Ethiopian Trade Union (AETU) Service cooperatives provided basic services, such as the sale of farm inputs and consumer items that were often rationed, the provision ofloans, the education of peasant association members in socialist philosophy, and the promotion of cottage industries. The producers' cooperatives alleviated shortages of inputs (because farmers could pool resources) and problems associated with the fragmentation of landholdings. The government ordered the creation of these cooperatives because of its belief that small farmers were inefficient and were unable totake advantage of economies of scale.

April 8, 1978: The "Red Terror campaign" in Ethiopia killed thousands b/n1976 and 1978. The undergoing Red Terror Campaign against the rival Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Party (EPRP) ceased on this day. ማጋቢት

30፣ 1970 ጀምሮ ቀይ ሽብርም ሆነ ነፃ እርምጃ ቆሞ። ኮ/ል መንግሥቱ ይህንን ማድረግ የቻሉት በኢማሌዲህ ሥራ አስፈጻሚ ሰብሳቢነታቸውእንዲሁም በርዕስ መንግሥትና የርዕሰ ብሔር ሥልጣናቸው ተጠቅመውነው።

The military/communist regime of Mengistu Haile Mariam is believed tohave killed or injured hundreds of thousands of people between September, 1974 to May, 1991. Thousands of intellectuals, including teachers, students, and other professionals, were gunned down, tortured,and imprisoned. A generation of educated Ethiopians was lost in a span ofa few years. The destruction did not end there. Government officials confiscated the properties of countless city dwellers, including businessesand houses. Hundreds of thousands if not millions, of Ethiopians were displaced from their homes, becoming refugees in the neighboring countries of Sudan, Kenya, Djibouti, and elsewhere. The lives of nearly allEthiopians were negatively affected by the Duerg regime, in one way or another. The military regime was without a doubt one of the harshest in human history.

Between 1976 and 1978, a Marxist government in Ethiopia killed as many as 500,000 of the country's citizens in a bloodbath called the Red Terror. The terror grew out of a relatively peaceful movement to end the reign of Emperor Haile Selassie. A political vacuum was created when the emperorwas deposed by a military junta in 1974 and a council of military membersknown as the Duerg took over. The Marxist government abolished the parliament, suspended the constitution and arrested the emperor, who died in custody. The Duerg nationalized all land using the slogan "land to the tiller of the soil."

In 1976, the Duerg began rounding up and killing those suspected of being members of a resistance movement. According to a website that memorializes victims of Africa's human rights atrocities, arbitrary arrests, torture and sexual assault became the norm. Prisoners were burned, flogged, hung by the arms, according to eyewitnesses and victims. Peoplehad fingernails ripped out, and men had their testicles crushed. Kiflu Ketema, who was imprisoned at Kefetegna 15, a makeshift prison in AddisAbaba, said he saw guards attach newspapers to fellow prisoners' backs and set them on fire. He saw others whipped, and he often heard gunshots ring out as executions were conducted outside the makeshift cells, the website said. Bodies were dumped on the street outside the prison, Ketema said. Children became targets, and in 1978 Save the Children protested that kids, many under 13, were being killed. By the end of the 1980s, the regime was losing financial and military support from the Soviet Union. Long-standing liberation movements consolidated forces, forming the Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front, according to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. In May 1991, the EPRDF entered Addis Ababa and took control of the country.
In April, 1978: Islamic Front for the Liberation of Oromia (IFLO) foundedin the Gara-Muleta lowlands of Harrarghe administrative region under a person known as “Jarra Bilissa” in his real name Abdul-Kareem Ibrahim Hameed assisted by colleagues Yusuf Golleh and Berento Challa ascommanders.

Who Is Baro Tumsa?

Baro Tumsa (1938–1978) was a pharmacist, lawyer and Oromo nationalist and political activist. He was the younger brother of the famed Reverend Gudina Tumsaand was one of the Founding Congress of the Oromo Liberation Front and leader ofEchaat widely believed goes to the eastern Harrarghe jungles to his final disappearance.

Dr. Haile Fida an Ethiopian politician and a leader of All-Ethiopian SocialistMovement (MEISON) who had acquired a Marxist Ideology in Sorbon University of France whose also most significantly accomplished in draftingthe program for the National Democratic Revolution on behalf of the ruling-Duerg council was languished in prison along with the detained Birhane-Mesquel Reda, underground leader of the EPRP faction, Negist Adane and several other leading figures of All-Ethiopian Socialist Movement (MEISON) were for some time until at last were executed in theinfamous “Ras Kassa Ghibi”, a then security interrogation prison cell.

October 26, 1978: Secessionist Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF) rebel fighters attacked a military barack near Asmara, the provincial capital. April 12, 1979: Secessionist Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF) rebel fightersattack an airport in the town of Keren, in Eitrea province.

May 2, 1979: Tigray Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) rebel fighters attacked private businesses and property at the village of Worq-Amba inAxum, in northern region of Tigray.

June 20, 1979: Birhane-Mesquel Redda the rebeled and the clandestine leader of the EPRP was caught-up with his three months pregnant wife, namely Tadelech Haile Michael by the region's security forces in remote jungles of Wara-Ilou in western Wollo. The head of state Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam who heared the news of his capture in Dire Dawa detained him at the grand palace custody to be languished and executed amonth later with others opposition figures by the direct order of the head of state

July 10, 1979: Nobleman and the Emperor's close aide, Tsehafi Taezaz Teferrawork, and former minister of Education & Fine Arts Seifu MahtemeSelassie were summoned and removed from the Palace prison and did notreturn.

July 12, 1979: Former ministers Yohannes Kidane Mariam, Abebe Kebedeand Assefa Defaye were similarly taken away from prison. It became obvious to the other prisoners that the men had been executed, and in preparation many of them approached imprisoned clergy for absolution oftheir sins.

July 14, 1979: Abuna-Theofilos the 2nd patriarch of the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahdo Church /EOTC/ who imprisoned couple of years ago,was brutally executed.

In the case of the former Patriarch Abune Theofilos. The Duerg imprisonedhim for over a year and then strangled him by a rope and buried him in the security prison compound commonly known as "Ras Kassa Ghibbi".
on the feast day of the Holy Trinity,

Meantime, Lij Kassa Wolde Mariam and Brigadier General Samuel were among the summoned ones for execution. Lij Kassa Wolde Mariam, heir tothe old Oromo Kingdom of Leqa Qellam, former President of Haile SelassieI University, and grandson-in-law to Emperor Haile Selassie, was on his knees before the Patriarch Abune Tewophilos receiving his final absolutionbefore going to his death, when Abune Tewophilos himself was called. ThePatriarch turned and asked Nebre-Id Ermias to absolve him, and he left the prison together with Dejazmatch Kassa. The patriarch and his fellow prisoners were taken to the former home of Leul Tas Kassa and were executed and buried there. It is believed that Patriarch Abune Theophilos was killed by being strangled by electrical wire, and buried face-down in adeep trench grave. His remains would later be identified by long black clerical robes and monk's cap. Following the fall of the Derg regime, his remains were disinterred from the grounds of the home of Leul Ras Kassaand reburied in full ceremonial state at the Gofa St. Gabriel church which he himself had built in southern Addis Ababa.

Ato Seifu Mahteme-selassie, ex- minister of Imperial Education & Fine Arts, Pastor Gudina Tumsa, one of the important personality in the Ethiopian Evangelical Church Mekane Yesus (EECMY) also called as the Mekane-Yesus Church, who was it's General-secretary and others Dejazmatch Haregot Abay, Lij Kassa Woldemariam, Ato Abebe Kebede (director- general of the defunct HSIF) for several years up until his arrest, murder and disappearance as of numerous other former nobles and ex-government officials. The murder includes the recently detainedHaile Fida, chief of MEISON, and Birhane Mesquel Reda, the general secretary of EPRP.

OBITUARY: His Holiness Abune Theophilos

The late His Holiness Abune Theophilos, the second Orthodox Patriarch of Ethiopia was born to be as Meliktu Jembere in 1909 in the parish of DebreElias of Debre Markos town in Gojjam Province. In 1942, not long after theEmperor’s return from exile, Abba Meliktu was made Memher of the Mekane Selassie ("House of the Trinity") Monastery in Addis Ababa. Later,with the completion of the Cathedral at this monastery, he was made Dean of the new Holy Trinity Cathedral with the title... of Lique Siltanat ("Arch-hierarch").

In 1947, Lique Siltanat Abba Meliktu traveled to Cairo with other high clerics to be made bishops by the Coptic Pope Yusab II, Patriarch of the Coptic Church of Alexandria at the same time that Abuna Basilios becameEthiopia's first native born Metropolitan Archbishop. Abba Meliktu was anointed as bishop of the Diosis of Harrarghe with the name Abune Theophilos. He was also appointed as the personal representative of PopeYusab II to the new Synod of the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Church. After Abune Basilios was made the first Patriarch of Ethiopia by the CopticPope Kyrillos VI, Patriarch of the Coptic Church of Alexandria, Abune Theophilos was elevated by the new Patriarch of to the Archbishop of Harrarghe.

Between 1951 and 1970, Abune Tewophilos served as regent and deputy for the ailing Patriarch Abune Basilios, and towards the end of this period was performing in the role of acting Patriarch. After the death of Abune Basilios in 1970, Abune Tewophilos was elected on the 7th April 1971 andenthroned in Addis Ababa on May 9, 1971 as the second Patriarch of Ethiopia. However he was seized by Duerg security forces at his Patriarchal residence on 17th February 1976. The Duerg regime declared him deposed and ordered that the church select a new Patriarch, Abune Tekle Haimanot. Abune Theophilos, second Patriarch was interrogated, executed and buried at the former residence of Leul Ras Kassa on 12th July 1979. It is widely believed that he was strangled with electrical cablesecurity plainclothes. (Text ends)

Abune Theophilos, second Patriarch was executed and buried at the former palace of Leul Ras Kassa on July 12, 1979. It is believed that hewas strangled with an electrical wire.

September 12 ,1978: President Fidal Castro Ruth the Revolutionary Leader and the commander-in-chief of the Revolutionary Armed Forces ofCuba attended the 4th year celebration of the Ethiopian Revolution at theRevolution square (abeyot adebabay), and made a official state visit in Ethiopia.

September 1978: Sate delegation from Socialist Ethiopia headed by the military head of state Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam arrived in Moscowas part of months' long official visit. The main objectives of his friendly visits is to a symbolic thanking to the Soviet bloc states for their huge political, military, and diplomatic support showed up during the Ethio- Somali war in the Ogaden region that recently ended in favor of the Ethiopian Armed Forces.

April 3, 1979: A ceremonial welcome to Comrade Alexei Nikolayevich Kosygin the CPSU CC Politburo member, Chairman of the USSR Council ofministers arriving at Addis-Ababa airport on his official visit to Revolutionary Ethiopia. Comrade Alexei Kosygin, CPSU Politburo member,Chairman of the USSR Council of ministers lays a wreath flower at a ceremony at on the Victory Monument in Addis Ababa in memory of themartyred heroes.

September 15, 1979: Ziway Childrens Village (ሕፃ ና ት አ ምጣ) inaugurated by the military head of state Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile-Mariam for Ethio- Somali War Orphans in Ziway, 75 miles southeast of the capital. The Ethiopian government sent thousands of Ethiopian war orphaned childrento Cuba to be educated.

September 23, 1979: Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Party (EPRP) claimsresponsibility on attacks of government positions at the town of Debre Zeit.

September 23, 1979: War Vets Village (Jegnoch Amba) inaugurated bythe military head of state Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile-Mariam for war veterans fought with secessionist rebel groups in Eritrea and the Ethio-Somali war in Ogaden.

November 13, 1979: THE KARL MARX MONUMENT IN ADDIS ABABA: The foundation stone laid in the attendance the East German leader ComradeErik Honecker. Karl Marx statue would be the first monument to be erected in the African continent, in the Ethiopian capital.

December 1979: The so-called Tigray Peoples Liberation Front known locally this time as ‘te.ha.ht’ disbanded the Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Army (EPRA), the armed wing of the EPRP in fierce fightingin Agame district of eastern Tigray..

December, 1979: The Provisional Office for Mass Organizational Affairs abbreviated as POMOA was officially dissolved as the Commission for Organizing the Party of the Working People of Ethiopia (COPWE) was formed. Out of the 15 members of the original POMOA politburo, only twosenior political cadres namely called Shewandagn Belete and Fasika Sidelilremained in active politics as of 1984.

December 1979: Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile-Mariam de-facto chairman of the ruling PMAC, known as the Duerg officially announces the creation of ‘Commission for Organizing the Party of the Working People of Ethiopia (COPWE)’, all the previous PMAC Standing Committee members served under the Provisional Military Administrative Council (the Duerg) turned tobecome the new ‘Commission for Organizing the Party of the Working People of Ethiopia (COPWE) Executive Council:

December 1979: Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC), known as the Duerg Standing Committee Members to become COPWEExecutive Council Members of in civilian status as followed, Comrade Mengistu Haile Mariam WoldeComrade Fikre-Selassie Wagderes

Comrade Fisseha Desta Comrade Tesfaye Guebre KidanComrade Birhanu Bayeh Comrade Addis Tedla Comrade Legesse Asfaw

The scessionist Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF) known as usually “Jabhaa” this time being politically and diplomatically assisted by radical Arab statesin the region'

Side note: Political influence on fractures within itself and a bitter strugglefor supermacy have been waged with the other rival Eritrean Peoples Liberation Front (EPLF) whose political mass base is in the highlands of Eritrea, the early years of the revolution in Ethiopia had found the Eritreanliberation movements internally devided. Then an armed conflict between the ELF, known as ‘Jaabha’ and its off-shot, the Eritrean Peoples Liberation Front EPLF, known as ‘Shaabia’, both fought for independence of Eritrea, have been made a potentially catastrophic fights among themselves. The EPLF have been engaged in bloody confrontation with theveteran Eritrean Lberation Front (Jabhaa) to come up with victory over theother.

January 1980: Noah A. Samara: An Ethiopian by origin becomes founder,chairman and chief executive officer of the internationally known WorldSpace Corporation, the world's first to launch satellite radio system at the age of 34. He also played a pivotal role in the foundation of XM Satellite Radio. He claimed what motivated him to found WorldSpace is togive millions of people in Asia and Africa access to information. Noah Samara's effort to launch a third satellite over Latin America got him embroiled in a bitter fight with the U.S. Department of Defense and Boeing, which use the L-band for communication during flight tests. NoahSamara was born in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia to a Sudanese father and an Ethiopian mother. He left his home country and went to the United Statesat the age of 17 in search of better education. Samara received his bachelor’s degree in English from East Stroudsburg University of Pennsylvania in 1978, and a master’s degree in international business from the Georgetown University School of Foreign Service and a doctor ofjurisprudence from Georgetown University Law School. He is an attorney that has specialized in international communications satellite laws.

Abe Gubegna (1932 - 1980): A renowned novelist and writer passed awayof an unspecified sickness at age of 48. Place of Birth: - Western Gojjam district of Achefer (1925-1972 E.C)

The US government passed a bill formally establishing criteria for admitting asylum seekers. Emigration from Ethiopia to the United States subsequently increased, prompted by political unrest during the Ethiopian Civil War. The majority of Ethiopian immigrants arrived later in the 1990s.Ethiopian Americans have since established ethnic enclaves in various places around the country, particularly in the Washington D.C. and Minneapolis areas. Fairfax Avenue in Los Angeles, California has also cometo be known as Little Ethiopia, owing to its many Ethiopian businesses and restaurants, as well as a significant concentration of residents of Ethiopianancestry. Ethiopian Americans are Americans of Ethiopian descent as well as those of American and Ethiopian ancestry.

June 1980: Air Police Sergeant Mirutse Yifter won two gold medals in 5, 000 and 10, 000 mtrs track running race titles at Moscow summer Olympic Games, in the Soviet Union. Mirutse Yifter (ምሩጽ ይፍጠር) was thefirst Ethiopian and African to win the two titles in such summer Olympicsmulti-sport event. He born in Adigrat in the Tigray region of Ethiopia, hisdate of birth is often given as 15th May, 1944
July 1980: The U.S. Ambassador to Ethiopia was recalled at the request ofthe Ethiopian Government, and the U.S. Embassy in Ethiopia and the Ethiopian Embassy in the United States were headed by Charges d'Affairesthis time.

August 15, 1980: His Royal Highness Ras Imiru Haile-selassie Abayneh, he was also a cousin of Emperor Haile-selassie I, leader of the Tikur Anbassa (Black Lion) Resistance against the Italian occupation, a distinguished diplomat also called in nickname as the "Red-Ras of Ethiopia" by the public for his progressive outlooks, passed away at age of88.

November 18, 1980: Ethiopian Peoples Democratic Movement (EPDM) wasfounded’

Ethiopian Peoples Democratic Movemet (EPDM) was founded in November,1980 before it renamed as the ‘Amhara National Democratic Movement (ANDM) later at a place known as Tikurwuha.
Army units led by Colonel Demissie Bulto, commander of then first Revolutionary Army recovered the city of Godey as part of "operation Lash", and used the city of Godey as one of it's three bases to successfullyclear the remnants of foreign Somali troops the rest of eastern Ethiopia bythe 3rd December of the same year.

January, 1981: Provional Military Government of Ethiopia (PMGoE) restructured the former Ethiopian Telecommunication Service (ETS) underthe Imperial Board of Telecommunications of Ethiopia (IBTE) which was inturn reorganized as the Ethiopian Telecommunications Authority (ETA).
In Eritrea bloody battles were ensued among the moslems and the christian highlanders, calling them "Kaffirs" meaning for faithless by the leaders of the Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF) known as "Jaabha" as pursuing it's Jihad. The rebel EPLF leader Issaias Affeworki, an engineeringstudy dropout of the former Haile Selassie I University (HSIU), rose to be commander of the EPLF-Shaabia forces between 1981-91, who finally felt sufficiently strong to launch a campaign to liquidate it's rival the Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF) usually known as “Jabhaa” an objective that it was able to accomplish fully in 1981, come-up to realise Eritrean independence, the EPLF had dominates the previous ELF as the main rebel group. And the Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF), is badly struck to weaken,remained with no more political at present Eritrea.

Mary Armide: the queen of Kirar (traditional guitar) passed away at age of58’
Who was Mary Armdie?
Traditional vocalist & The Kirar legend Mary Armide, some times called “the queen of Kirar” born in Yeju in the former Wollo province (1923- 1981) is also one of the long forgotten and the none acknowledged marvels artist of her time, her mesmerizing deep voice, her ability to playKerar and to compose poems right away while she sings is a matchless talent. On the other hand her tireless contribution is unlisted plus the truestory of her life and time has been recorded based on assumption. Do we know more about her? According to noted Diaries, There are several websites over the internet posting her songs but none of them seemed to be sure of exactly what Artist Mary has meant to our society. Source enlightened that in her last days, the late queen of Kirar has lived around Gedam sefer, bedridden, unnoticed, left behind by the whole worldthat she once entertained and inspired the public, then she died lonely shortly there after. Who was Mary Armedy? Now here we are remembering her name as loud as we can but not just for acknowledgment, rather to remind you that no one deserves to be forgotten. The music legend, beauty, blend of culture, names of historical prominence etc, have been attracting to this place already for some time. August, 1981: The Provisional Military Government of Ethiopia (PMGE) appointed Brigadier-General Merid Negussie - Military Commander/Administrator of Eritrea Administrative Region.
In August 1981: Ras Andargatchew Messai, the third husband of Leult Tenagne-worq, eldest child of the ex-emperor Haile-selassie, ex-ImperialVice-Roy of in Eritrea who had been outside Ethiopia when the monarchyfell, died a few years later after a long illness in London, UK.
In November, 1981: Tele-Sattelite earth station at Sululta owned by Ethiopian Telecommunication Authority (ETA), transmits and receives to both Indian Ocean and the Atlantic Ocean satellites, innaugurated by thehead of state.
In January, 1982: Seven members of the national football squad attendedin Conakry, Guinea for the 13th African Cup of Nations football match went on to their disappearance on a transit to Abidjan, Ivory Coast (Cote D' Ivoire) on their way back home.

HRH Princess Yeshash-Worq Yilma Makonnen the Emperor's niece, daughter of Dajazmatch Yilma Makonnen, the governor of Harrar, suffering from poor health has passed away a few months after her release from central prison.
February 15, 1982: An All-out military combat operation known as the "Red Star Campaign", to drive the Eritrean Peoples Liberation Front (EPLF), and it’s affiliates at a battle field for once and for all off-the Eritrean lowlands by the government armies and security units have failed to achieve due to military and civilian bureaucratic hurdles.

The Marxist-Leninist League of Tigrai (MLLT) of the rebel Tigrai Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) in the line of the Albanian party of Labour founded.
Institute of the Study of Ethiopian Nationalities founded as Ashagre Yigletuon it's helm.
Kombolchia Textile Factory (KTF), the biggest in it’s kind constructed bythe state run Ethiopian Building Constructin Authority (EBCA), and launched production the next year.
April 20, 1983: Tigray Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) rebel combatantsattacked relief agencies at the town of Kuorom, in north Wollo administrative region.

June 6, 1983: The Libyan leader Muammar al-Quadhafi arrived in Addis Ababa flanked by his women bodyguards with their pistols in a holster standing by his limousines in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia while he was attending a meeting with other African leaders to prepare the opening ofthe 19th OAU summit conference.

July 1983: Ethiopian Peoples Democratic Movemet (EPDM) renamed ‘Amhara National Democratic Movement (ANDM). ANDM was founded in November, 1980 as EPDM before it renamed at the latter at a place known as Tikurwuha. ኢህዴን የ ሚለ ው ስ ም ተ ለ ውጦ ብአ ዴ ን (ብሄ ረ -አ ማራ ዲ ሞክ ራ ሲ ያ ዊ ን ቅ ና ቄ)ተ ብሎ ተ ሰ የ ሙ። በ ህ ወ ሓ ት የ ተ ረ ቀ ቀ ው ን ፕ ሮ ግ ራ ም አ ምነ ን ተ ወ ያ ይ ተ ን ገ ምቢ ፖ ሊ ሲ ው ን ተ ቀ ብ ለ ና ል ያ ሉ ት ፣ ሙ ሉ አ ለ ም አ በ በ (አ ማ ራ)፣ ሃ ይ ለ ጥ ላ ሁ ን (ት ግ ራ ይ እ ድ ገ ቱ ጎ ጃ ም)፣ ታ ምራ ት ላ ይ ኔ -Chairman (ከ ን ባ ታ)፣ በ ረ ከ ት ስ ም ኦ ን ፣ Vice Chairman (ኤ ር ት ራ)፣ አ ዲ ሱ ለ ገ ሰ (ሂ ር ና ሃ ረ ር)፣ ህ ላ ዊ ዮ ሴ ፍ Public Relation (ኤ ር ት ራ)፣ ተ ፈ ራ ዋ ል ዋ Propagation (ሲ ዳ ማ)፣ ታ ደ ሰ ካ ሳ (አ ገ ው)፣ መ ለ ሰ ጥ ላ ሁ ን (አ ማ ራ -ት ግ ራ ይ)፣ ሲ ሳ ይ አ ሰ ፋ (ት ግ ራ ይ)፣ ኢ ያ ሱ በ ላ ቸ ው (ት ግ ራ ይ ፣ አ ማ ራ) The ANDM leadership was made up of various ethnic groups, but ‘Amharas’. They were then and are now actually predominantly Tigrigna speaking disguised Amharas from parts ofnorthern Gondar. All the ethnic based organisations, except the TPLF itselfwere formed using the same formula as EPDM. Their extensions in the Diaspora are called "development associations" followed by the appropriate suffixes. The "associations" are kind of support groups for their ethnic agendas. Many say, the mission of EPDM was to covert the mission of Tigray Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF), the renamed ANDM from EPDM was the TPLF most favoured puppet organization. It’s objectives all about to weaken the Amhara domination in the country.
August 3, 1983: Tigray Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) rebel combatantsattacked a relief agency at Jari, in the northwestern district of Wollo.
In August, 1983: The Provisional Military Government of Ethiopia (PMGoE)appointed Lieutenant Dawit

Wolde-Giorgis – Chief Administrator & WPE

Regional party secretary for Eritrea Admiistrative Region.

August 29, 1983: Western Somalia Liberation Front (WSLF), an affiliate ofthe Somali National Army attacked a police station in the remote Ogadienregion of Ethiopia, and killed a policeman on duty.

Ethiopian public widely convinced that Ba'alu Girma, a prominent Ethiopian writer disappeared after few months of suspension from his job as ‘State minister of Information’ by security plainclothes to probably a mysteriously murder by the ruling military turned civilian Duerg regime forhis fictional work entitled "Oromai". It is generally believed that his disappearance was linked to the publishing of the book "Oromai" an Eritrean Tigrigna word meaning for 'it's pointless', borrowed from the Italian oramai is an Amharic-language novel, was written by the late BaaluGirma. The novel presents a cynical account on the "Red Star Campaign" of the Duerg military regime in the former Eritrea administrative region.
The book was published by the state owned, "Kuraz Publishing Agency" inAddis Ababa.
September 10, 1983: The ruling Provisional Military Administrative Council(PMAC) released 716 former imperial government mid-rank and junior civilian and military officials in amnesty whose were under detention for nearly eight years after the deposition of the Ethiopian monarch. They were finally released with all the other government employees who were proven innocent of corruption during their years of service.
Ogadien National Liberation Front (ONLF) founded as to launch a guerilla warfare for eastern Ethiopia’s Somali Region, whose major part constitutes the Ogaden, is the site of a long-running, low-intensity armed conflict between the Ethiopian government and many of the ONLF's members had supported by Somalia in the Ogaden War with Ethiopia overthe region since the 1970s. The group's aims have varied over time from independence to joining a "greater Somalia expantionist concept" or obtaining greater autonomy within Ethiopia.
Side note;- The ONLF, claims that Ethiopia is an occupying force seeking for an independence of the remote southeastern Ogadien region, populated mainly by ethnic-Somali, which the rebels say has been marginalised by the Ethiopian central governme. Meantime, the Ethiopian government considers the region under the newly arranged federal system. However, the Ethiopian government claims, the Ogadien people are represented in the Ethiopian Federal parliament by a number of groups, including the opposition Somali Peoples Democratic Party (SPDP).The ONLF is believed composed mainly of members of the Ogadieni clan, especially "the Rer- Abdalle sub-clan of the Mohammed Zubeir". The Ethiopian Somali region of the Ogadien resistance to occupation stretches over a century and the region was and is a battle field between successiveEthiopian governments and national liberation forces. The region has been treated by the Ethiopian successive governments over the years as a buffer zone and its citizens as strangers that have no right in Ethiopia.A series of famines hit Ethiopia that affected around 8 million people, leaving 1 million dead. Ethiopia suffers famine once again because themilitary government was engaged with internal war with rebels in the north of Ethiopia. Armed insurrections against Communist rule sprang upparticularly in the northern regions of Tigrai and Eritrea. The country plagued by a host of both man-made and natural disasters that included war and famine. The entire world took notice of the ordinary Ethiopian's plight in the most traumatic manner when famous muscians came together for the purpose of raising money to feed the hungry.

Side note: Hundreds of thousands were killed as a result of the forced deportations, and ressettlements, or from the use of hunger as a weapon under Duerg's rule. The Duerg continued its attempts to end the rebellionswith military force. They initiated several campaigns against both internal rebels and the Eritrean People's Liberation Front (EPLF) the most important ones being Operation Shiraro, Operation Lash, Operation Red Star, and Operation Adwa which led to its decisive defeat in the Battle of Shire 15–19 February 1989.

Meantime, the ruling Duerg was celebrating the formation of Commission to Organise the Party of the Workers Party of Ethiopia (COPWE) in the Grand Palace Hall. And did not come up to rescue of it's own people. The famines that struck Ethiopia in particular the one of 1983–5, were in largepart created by government policies, specifically the set of counter- insurgency strategies employed and so-called 'social transformation' in non-insurgent areas. Ethiopia widely observed is one of the few countries this time which bars private ownership of agricultural land, and it is one ofthe few places in the world where famines recur with terrible consistency, it has a long history of food crises, is shrouded in myths and political intrigue, during the country's biggest famine that killed hundreds of thousands of people and left millions destitute, food shortages were more common in the much drier north of the country than in the relatively fertile south. As concerned the international community rushes to donate food aid to millions of famine victimes in the Horn of African nation at thistime.

The Duerg, the brutal Marxist junta running Ethiopia at the time, contributed factors to the famine by forcing farmers to sell crops to the state at lower prices,for this reason, many farmers instead consumed much of what they grew. The traditions of Ethiopians in areas with surplusfood selling it to those in famine-striken areas was thus disrupted. The Duerg who had come to power in September, 1974, after a famine discredited Emperor Haile Selassie I, further exacerbated the country's hunger problems with a military campaign-against rebels from the Tigreanregion in the north, that deliberately targeted food production and trade, which a government official said at a time "Food aid is a major element in our strategy against the secessionist rebels".

Then the Duerg forced people to resettle in the southern lowlands fromthe parched northern highlands, partly in an effort to undermine the recruiting efforts of the Tigrean rebels, one instrument of coercion is the relief supplies sent by well-meaning foreign agencies. The Duerg regime denied food and medicine to anyone who refused to resettle, the refugeesarriving in the lowlands found unfamiliar deseases & unsanitary conditions, it took until May, 1991.

In any case, the celebrities and humanitarians who rushed to the aid ofstarving Ethiopians in the mid-1980s unwittingly supported the very people most responsible for those grim days. Cities Dire Dawa and Kombolcha (Wollo) were used as emergency food dispatch bases by theUnited Nations World Relief Transport Operation in Ethiopia (UN-WTOE)and other humanitarian groups during the famine.

February 14, 1984: Ba'alu Girma, the renowned novelist, State Minister ofInformation at his current government position, the most acclaimed journalist and influential novelist in Ethiopia known by his written book entitled Oromay ("The End") who has been under intense security scrutinydisappeared. Ba'alu Girma born from an Indian father and an Ethiopian mother in 1938 in Illubabor , this novelist rose to prominence and a place among the finest Ethiopian authors ever.

March 2, 1984: The renowned author, and State Minister of Information Baalu Girma (born in former Iloubabour province in September 1938), then was formally fired from ministerial position as State Minister of Information to his disappearance, just two weeks earlier (February 14). It's well believed that his disappearance was linked to the publishing of hisbook entitled as "Oromay".

Side note;- The Red Star Campaign had been declared by the Ethiopian head of state Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam all along with policy speeches in Asmara palace, in Eritrea administrative region. In his speech Mengistu called for the crushing of 'secessionist bandits', of the EPLF guerillas in Eritrea, and the TPLF in Tigrai and the EPRP and EDU in Gondar adminstrative region. The campaign was supposed to focus both on military means as well as supporting reconstruction in the affected areas. The Commission for Organizing the Party of the Working People of Ethiopia (COPWE) was assigned the task of leading the military campaign.The government sent some 120,000 troops to participate in the campaign,making it the largest military offensive of the Duerg era in the war with Eritrean secessionist groups.

Meantime, the previously state minister of Information, Baalu Girma (Author), who had been invited by Lt. Colonel Mengistu to work as propaganda chief in the "Red Star Campaign". He had assumed the position believing in the goals of the campaign. However, he came to feelthat the ideals of the campaign had been corrupted by militaristic mindsets. Once the campaign had been abruptly called off, Baalu Girma began writing "Oromay" based on the events of the campaign. Whilst theofficial propaganda lauded the Red Star Campaign as a success, Baalu Girma considered it a failure. He stayed behind in Eritrea during this period. "Oromay" is a love story set in Asmara in the midst of the conflict. However, just 24 hours after its release the government banned the novel. All copies were removed from book shops. Confiscated copies of thebook were turned into pulp at the Wonji Pulp & Paper Mill. Possession of the Oromay became dangerous, as owners were subjected to government harassment. The book was published in 1983 by the Kuraz Publishing Agency in Addis Ababa. In spite of a government ban on the book, it became widely read and famous. According to readers the book presents 'an accurate and compelling account of the events surrounding the failure of "Red Star Campaign". Baalu Girma was fired from his job. Some months later he 'disappeared'. It is generally believed that his disappearance was linked to the publishing of his book “Oromay”. But some 500 copies had already been sold before the ban had been issued and the book continued to be copied through machines. Many citizens whoread Amharic literature could attest to the fact that author Baalu Girma is the finest in the field of Literature, which is why every new volume of his books are eagerly awaited.

In the latter times daughter Meskerem Ba’alu quoted as saying, “Tesfaye W/Selassie lied when he said Baalu came to his office to plead with him. The truth was, Tesfaye sent his secretary to our house instead. Baalu asked Tesfaye’s secretary, what did I do to your boss that he is upset andcomplaining?” The secretary said, “Oh Ato Baalu, you are really harsh on us…” She visited for about 30 min and left. This lady used to work as covert secretary at the Ministry of Information as one of Baalu’s clerks.

Later she got transferred to become Colonel Tesfay’e secretary… my father never visited the guy, nor spoken with him after they banned thebook “Oromay”. These are a bunch of liars; reading what they had said about my father or anyone else made me sick to my stomach.

If you would like, you can also immagine how security agents were following him wherever he goes. They used to follow him all the way to our apartment compound and turned around and leave once he steps out of his car. It became such a normal routine that one of the town kids in the area, was able to capture the vehicle plate number of the plainclothes and gave it to author Baalu and wife Almaz. Yes it may be over 30 years now but that kid is now a small business owner and should be able to tell the whole story in his own words…” At times they made me hate that whyI was born from such pathetic place. How could people stand themselves?How could they sleep at night? It takes a generation to heal what happened but unfortunately the saga continues”, Meskerem told about herdisappeared father tearfully. (Text ends)

July 13, 1984:The baby daughter who’s a starving three-year-old becamethe face of Live Aid Footage of Birhan Woldu as a starving child was seen around the world and after recovering she joined Sir Bob Geldof on stageat Live 8 concert. The baby daughter who as a starving three-year-old became the face of Live Aid has said the campaign has done “nothing” forher, and the celebrity that came with it has forced her to live a life underground. (የዛሬ 30ዓመት ገደማነበር ኢትዮጵያ በድርቅና በርሃብ የተመታችውያኔ ዓለምን ያናወጠና ዓለም በተለያዩ አለማቀፋዊ ሙዚቀኞች ኢትዮጵያንና ህዝቧን ከርሃብ ለመታደግ ከቀረበላት ድርቁን የሚገልጽ ፎቶ የዝች ኢትዮጵያዊት ፎቶ ነበር ። ያኔ የሶስት ዓመት ህጻን ልጅ ነበረች ዛሬ የ34ዓመት ወጣት ስሟም ብርሀን ወልዱነ ው ። ሰፋ ያለውን ዘገባ ዘጋርድያ እንደሚከተለው አቅርቦታል)

Side note: The original vinyl recorded in 1984 of “Do They Know It’s Christmas?”—a single produced by music celebrities including Bono and Paul McCartney to raise relief funds for the Ethiopian famine. The song becomes the best-selling single in U.K. chart history, a record it kept for many years afterward. (The biggest hit from a complementary pop star collective was “We Are the World,” the first single in U.S. recording historyto be certified multiplatinum. The celebrity efforts culminated in the 1985 Live Aid concert.)

The original “We” in “We Are the World” and “Do They Know It’s Christmas?” did not include “They” Africans. How about including Africans in the “we” of another, much better song suggestion? When we let freedom ring, will be able to speed up that day when all of God’s children,black men and white men, will be able to join hand in hand and sing: Freeat last, free at last, Thank God Almighty, we are free at last. It’ has to be estimated about 1 of every 345 Africans is affected by famine. (Text ends)The Ethiopian Armed Forces restructured in need to defend territorial sovereignty under the theme of “Revolutionary Armed Forces of Ethiopia (RAFoE)’

PDRE President - Commander-in-chief of the Revolutionary Armed Forcesof Ethiopia

Ministry of DefenseMinister

Vice Minister

Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces:

Political Department of the Armed Forces (Chief Political Commisar)Ground Forces (Ye-Midr Tor)

Commander (Wana Azazh) of the Groud Forces (Army - Serawit – Hail) V/Commander (Mikitl Azazh) of the Groud Forces (Army – Serawit – Hail)Political Commisar of the Groud Forces (Army – Serawit – Hail)

Army Command (YeTor Eze) Commander (Ye Eze Wana Azazh) V/Commander (Ye Eze Mikitl Azazh) Ye Eze Political Commisar

Army Core (Kore)

Commander (Wana Azazh) of Army Core (Kore) V/Commander (Mikitl Azazh) of Army Core (Kore) Political Commisar of Army Core (Kore)

Army Division (Kifle-Tor)

Commander (Wana Azazh) of Army Division (Kifle-Tor) V/Commander (Mikitl Azazh) of Army Division (Kifle-Tor)Political Commisar of Army Division (Kifle-Tor)

Army Infantry Brigade

Commander (Wana Azazh) of Army Infantry Brigade

V/Commander (Mikitl Azazh) of Army Infantry BrigadePolitical Commisar of Army Infantry Brigade

Army Infantry battalion(Shallequa Tor)
Commander (Wana Azazh) of Army infantry battalion V/Commander (Mikitl-Azazh) of Army infantry battalionPolitical Commisar of Army infantry battalion
Army organization affairs at all level:
Memria Mekonnen 1 – Administrative officer Memria Mekonnen 2 – Military intelligence officer
Memria Mekonnen 3 – Training & Combat operations officer
Memria Mekonnen 4 – Logistics, material services and maintenance officerSide Note: Direction of the Armed Forces is carried out through the Ministry of Defense, which oversees the Ground forces, Air force, the Navyas well as the Defense Industry Sector.

In May, 1984: Four members of the Ethiopian national football team sought political asylum at Port-Louis UNHCR country representative officein their attendance for the African Cup of Nations match in the Indian ocean state of Mauritius.

In mid-1984: Australian Catholic Relief cargo shipment of food-aid donated by Australian NGOs which was registered under Panama flag destined for the Eritrean Relief Association (ERA) of the EPLF, and Relief Society of Tigrai (REST) of the TPLF, obligely discharged at port of Assabby State security agents, and the ruling-Duerg's military government to further close-down the Australian Embassy in Addis Ababa.
In 1984-85, at the height of the catastrophic famine in Northern Ethiopia, nearly a quarter of a billion dollars were raised internationally for famine relief. That famine was extreme and unprecedented in its severity. MichaelBuerek of the BBC who visited the Tigrai region in 1984 described the situation as “a biblical famine in the 20th Century” and “the closest thing to hell on Earth”.

ROHA BAND to Ethiopia means what “The Beatles” were to Great Britain.

Roha Band has influenced the Ethiopian music industry as no other private music band has succeeded in. Perhaps one can safely say that.

The establishment of “The Roha Band” draws upon heavily or has a strong relation with the fall outs from the wind down and disintegration of the Ibex and Dahlak bands. Members of these two bands recollect that the reasons for the dissolution of the two bands have to do with the emigration of band members to the Sudan and the US leaving a serious vacuum of skill in the bands.

The Roha Band took it’s name from the historic town of Lalibela. The founding members of the band were Giovanni Rico (Bass guitar), Selam Seyoum (Lead guitar), Fekade Amde Meskel (Tenor Sax), all these three hail from Ibex Band and those who joined the Roha Band after the disintegration of the Dahlak Band were Dawit Yifru (Key board and music arranger), Levon Fondachi (vocalist), Tekle Tesfazgi (drummer and vocalist) joined the Roha Band leaving their private activities. After the band begun its work, it soon realized that it needed an additional skill and resources. This resulted in the second wave of outsourcing which brought Yonas Degefe (saxophone) and Elias Bekele, Berhanu Yoseph and Ashenafi Awel (both drummers) as well as Yared Teferra (saxophone) in to the fold of the band.

The startup was difficult specially in terms of capital and musical instruments. Thus, the former Ibex Band members brought the musical instruments they got upon the dissolution of the band to use them in their new band assignments. The band also secured a loan of Birr 40,000.00 from Ato Abeselom Yihdego for the purchase of additional instruments. This well known philanthropist thereby left a deep sense of gratitude in the memory of the band member's to date. In fact, the man is known for a helping hand he extends from time to time to those engaged in the activities of music and sports.

The image part with relationship ID rId12 was not found in the file.

The image part with relationship ID rId4 was not found in the file.

The image part with relationship ID rId4 was not found in the file.

Roha Band reunion

The beginnings of the Roha Band were pretty humble and it remains a relative unknown for some time. It was affiliated to the Hilton and Ghion hotels, not a great way to reach the wider public other than the small number of customers of these hotels.

The band's introduction to the public rather came through its involvement in the recording industry where it accompanied and engaged in music arrangement. It benefited nearly all of the best known vocalists of the country both veteran and emerging talents. With this the fame of the band sky rocketed. The skill of the members was phenomenal, their rythems and arrangements were electrifying. The name Roha Band became synonymous with an paralled musical talent and it was the number one preference for a singer who contemplates an album release.

Its excellence is such that music lovers never mind to buy cassettes even those released complete stranger if it is accompanied by the Roha Band and produced by the Ambassel Recordings. The two brands offer a guarantee through quality. The legacy of the Roha Band has influenced the music industry in some other ways. For instance, usually it is the singer or the vocalist that takes the lion's share of the admiration and fame after a successful release. The public never asks about the band accompanying the singer. There is no doubt the Roha Band's influence changed this in drawing the attention of the public to the bands behind the fame and glory of singers.

Among the focalists in whose releases the Roha Band took part (both in accompanying and music arrangement) were Mahmoud Ahmed, Teshome Wolde, Muluken Melesse, Alemayehu Eshete, Melkamu Tebeje, Kuku Sebsbie, Hamelmal Abate, Neway Debebe, Tsehaye Yohannes and many many others.

Besides its regular engagement at the Hilton and Ghion hotels, the band also took part in several musical tours with the vocalists it accompanied. It's tours took it to towns like Asmara, Assab, Massawa, Mekele, Bahar Dar, Jimma, Dire Dawa, Awassa, Nazareth e.t.c.The instrumental it released was an instant hit and exhibited the individual and collective skills of the band members. The cassette is still highly sought after, a limited release as it was.

In the cassette Aster Aweke's "Hode Mela", Mahmoud Ahmed's "Shegule ya lelawo", Tekle Tesfazgi's "Fikerey telemeni" went instrumental showing how best the band can play both fast and slow music. Among the several music tours the band did the one that requires a special mention was the band's tour to the areas of Metekel and Gambella where students and instructors of higher education institutions were on duty of building houses for a grand resettlement programme. The band toured these remote border areas and gave live shows free of charge. It has to be noted here that the government sent the band to these areas at the request of the students. The shows it gave were successful both in entertaining the tens of thousands of students who were in hostile and most basic of conditions in securing a good reputation to the band.

The Roha Band further developed its resources and brought better musical instruments some of which were new to the domestic music industry. Having strengthened itself, the band toured even further, this time to voluntaries in Africa, the Middle East, Europe and several states in America.

The fact that the band members were, besides their musical talent, versed in various individual skills and had different trainings, gave the band the opportunity of making use of this resource and be able to have a very good financial administration and resource management. For instance, the band's music arranger and key board player Dawit Yifru is a professional accountant, Giovanni Rico studied management. In fact the band was a well managed one.

In a band setting, working together for 13 years is a rare thing. The Roha Band did this until it finally dissolved in 1993.

Factors such as members desire to earn a living by engagements and businesses other than music, the hardship the entertainment industry faced with and the unfavorable and a business centered competition from second rate bands offering their service cheap e.t.c. all pushed the Roha Band out of the lime light and into oblivion. Out of the band members Dawit Yifru, Yonas Degefe (Simon Libanos), Yared Teferra and Ashenefi Awel are still in the music industry. The other band members gave up music for good and are leading their lives in other engagements. Apart from Tekle Tesfazghi who died in a car accident in mid August 1987, the others are not only alive but also had a serious plan in mind. Following an overwhelming request from the public in a recent radio programme on one of the FMs, the band members confirmed that they have a well thought over plan to regroup once again and give a show as a fare well bid to their fans whether or not an age factor on musical talent is something to be seen.

Roha Band - 01 - Ambassel - Instrumental (6:24)
Roha Band - 02 - Kememot Aldenem (6:48)
Roha Band - 03 - Fikrey Telemeni [Tegrigna] (4:58)
Roha Band - 04 - Haderegna (4:36)
Roha Band - 05 - Endegena, Yeshi Haregitu, Merekan Bito (4:36)
Roha Band - 06 - Hode Mela Mela (5:36)
Roha Band - 07 - Akale (4:21)
Roha Band - 08 - Lale Lale [Guragegna] (4:42)
Roha Band - 09 - Negeia Jiredu [Oromegna] (3:05)
Roha Band - 10 - Enetarek (5:08)
Roha Band - 11 - Tizita Garedew (8:09)
Roha Band - 12 - Eyekorekoregn (5:56)

Acknowledgement: Mr. Dawit Yifru the current president of Ethiopian Musicians Association.

In 1984-85, normal delivery of emergency humanitarian aid to the Tigrai region and other famine-stricken areas in Northern Ethiopia was virtually impossible because of rebel activity and bombardment by the Derg military junta. The roads normally used to deliver aid supplies to the Tigrairegion from the capital had become unusable because of intense rebel military activity. The various international famine relief non-governmental organizations (NGOs) had to find alternate routes to quickly deliver relief aid to famine victims in rebel-controlled areas.

As an alternative, many of the NGOs set up shop in Eastern Sudan close to the Tigrai border to expedite food delivery to famine victims. The largeconcentration of NGOs on the Sudanese border and the publicity surrounding the enormous fundraising efforts by various internatio celebrities for Ethiopian famine victims caught the attention of the TPLF leaders who saw a lucrative business opportunity for themselves and theirrebel army. They proffered themselves to the NGOs as effective conduits for relief aid delivery in the areas they controlled.

According a former treasurer and TPLF co-founder Dr. Aregawi Berhe, top TPLF leaders including the late Meles Zenawi, implemented an elaborate scam to swindle millions of dollars from international famine relief organizations earmarked for famine relief. Gebremedhin and Aregawi stated Meles and his top cadres hatched out and successfully executed a fraudulent scheme to use a front “humanitarian relief” organization called “Relief Society of Tigrai” (REST) for aid delivery. The TPLF leaders managed to “convince” the various NGOs operating out of the Sudan that REST is a genuine charity organization completely separate from the TPLF,the military wing. In fact, REST was the other face of the TPLF coin. (Text ends)

In 1984: Facilitated by the Israeli government, several hundred familiescouples and their children are going on aliyah from Ethiopia. The Israeligovernment has mounted riscue operations most notably within the context of Israeli's national mission to gather Diaspora jews and bring them to the jewish homeland.

Side note: The "Beta-Israel Ethiopian Jews" also known as "the falashas",most of them were concentrated in the area around Lake-Tana and northof it, in the Tigrai, Gondar and Wollo regions, and among the Semien, Wolqait, Dembia, Segelt, Lasta, Quarra, Belessa, and in some parts of Gojjam were rescued by the Israeli intelligence.

The evacuation of Ethiopian Jews rescued by Mossad, the Israeli Intelligence unit also assisted in Operations, Moses (1984), Sheeba (1985) and Solomon (1991). The Mossad is responsible for intelligence collection and covert operations which are suspected to include targetedkillings and paramilitary activities beyond Israel's borders, bringing Jewsto Israel from countries where official Aliyah agencies are forbidden, andprotecting Jewish communities worldwide. Believed there is a mismatch between the Master Narrative of the Jewish Homeland and the Beta- Israel's alya to Israel. The circumstance of the Beta Israel migration to Israel sets them apart from other Jews. While most Jews left Europe andNorthern Africa for the Promised Land because of persecution, the Beta Israel migration does not fit the master narrative—a Jew who fled his country for the Promised Land due to anti-Semitism. From the start, the Beta Israel’s alya was shrouded in controversy. This is despite the existence of thousands of Ethiopians who safeguarded their Jewish faith for centuries against all odds.
The reluctance to recognize these Ethiopians continued in spite of the many documented reports of 19th and 20th century Euro-American travelers, adventurers and diplomats who set foot in Ethiopia and attested to the existence of people who practice Judaism. However, the Israeli government and the rabbis continued to reject recognition of the Beta Israel as Jews. It was only in the 1970s after the late Rabbi Ovadia Yosef attested to the fact that the Beta Israel were members of one of the lost tribes, the Dan, that Israel began extending the alya privilege to the BetaIsrael. Even then, because of the amicable relations that Israel had with Haile Selassie I, King of Kings of Ethiopia and the Conquering Lion of the Tribe of Judah, there was not a meaningful migration of the Beta Israel tothe Promised Land until after the monarch was overthrown.

OLYMPIC: Ethiopia boycotted the Los Angeles Summer Olympics multi- sport event in the United States in protest with the participation in the games of New Zealand, who had sports contact with the racist regime ofSouth Africa.

Ethiopian Sports Federation in North America (ESFNA) founded in the theme of 'Bringing Ethiopians Together'. ESFNA is a non-profit organization dedicated to promote the rich Ethiopian culture and heritage as well as building positive environments within Ethiopian-American communities in North America. Its mission is Bringing Ethiopians Togetherto network, support the business community, by empowering the young by providing scholarships and mentoring program, primarily using soccer tournaments, other sports activities and cultural events as vehicles.
To centralize the Coffe marketing & exportation, pillar of the central economy, “Ethiopian Coffee Marketing Corporation (ECMC)” established inAddis Ababa.
September 12, 1984: Workers' Party of Ethiopia (WPE) was finally established to mark the tenth anniversary of the revolution as MengistuHaile Mariam it's General-secretary.
Side note: The State controlled ETV commences Color television broadcastin commemoration of the founding of Workers' Party of Ethiopia (WPE).
ETV broadcast transmission covers up over 75% of the country this time. The COPWE this time dissolved and the WPE took its place. The Central Committee was expanded to 183 members, with party congressesevery five years. As civilian Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam became general secretary. The WPE's Politburo, which replaced the COPWE's Executive Committee as Ethiopia's chief decision making body, had elevenmembers, seven of whom were drawn from the Duerg and the remaining four being civilian ideologues and technocrats. Generally, Mengistu Haile Mariam's wishes prevailed over any opposition. Understood nepotism involved in the selection of Politburo members meant that opposition to Mengistu's rule was usually marginal anyway, making the entire council more of a mouthpiece for Mengistu's wishes than a legitimate governmentbody. The founding congress of the Workers' Party of Ethiopia (WPE) emphasized the need for a coordinated strategy based on socialist principles to accelerate agricultural development. To implement this strategy, the government relied on peasant associations and rural development, cooperatives and state farms, resettlement and villagization, increased food production, and a new marketing policy. In September, 1984, the Voice of America (VoA) launches it's Amharictransmission to Ethiopia.

October 19, 1984: Tigray Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) rebel fightersattacked private citizens and properties in Lalibela.

January 28, 1985:The Making of "We Are the World" - USA for Africa -1985. One ofthe few BEST songs ever recorded in history to donate for famine striken Ethiopia.

Side note: Thousands from the drought striken and infertile regions of Wollo and Tigrai started a forcible resettlement programme known as "Villagization" in the western and southwestern part of the country. The new relocation program is known as "Sefera" locally. The objectives of theprogram, which grouped scattered farming communities throughout the country into small village clusters, were to promote rational land use; conserve resources; provide access to clean water and to health and education services; and strengthen security. Government guidelines stipulated that villages were to house 200 to 300 households.

May 27, 1985: Alemaya (Haromaya) University was promoted from a college within Addis Ababa University to an independent University. For many years the university had been limited to only an agricultural curriculum, but in mid-1990s the university was given permission to openother faculties and departments.

July 15, 1985: Aregawi Berhe (Berihu) and Ghidey Zara-Tsion (Fantahun)co-founders of the TPLF were sacked off the battle field to went on self- exile by the leadership, and to the disappearance of Teklu Hawaz, head ofthen notorious 06 (Halewa).

In late August, 1985: In commemoration of the 10th anniversary of the deposition of the Imperial regime, the Provisional Military Government ofEthiopia (PMGoE) unveiled the V.I Lenin and Victory (Dilachin) memorial monuments on the eve (12th, September) of celebration of the EthiopianRevolution.
August 7, 1985: (August, 7 to November 10, 1985): EMoD designed armycombat operation against the rebels in Eritrea to capture the town of Barentu to clear the way to the Nakfa peak.
In October, 1985 Majour-General Taye Tilahun ex- commander of the Ethiopian airorce as well as ex-Minister of Interior, later the Ethiopian Ambassador plenipotentiary to the Scandinavian countries this time, sought asylum. He tearfully told newsreporters in a Stockholm Grand Hotel, "I would have to stop here serving such a government whos takingthe nation to a turmoil".

In 1985: I CREATED AIDS to DELIBERATELY DEPOPULATE HUMANITY, said Dr Robert Gallo Litton Bionetics Contract co-Directed by Robert Galloto Develop AIDS like viruses to create the new Leukemia-Lymphoma- Sarcoma cancers we now call it AIDS.

In late 1985: Food donation strengthens the rebels of Tigrai Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) and the Eritrean Peoples Liberation Front (EPLF), more than 95% of the aid-money was delivered by the Relief Society of Tigrai (REST) and the Eritrea Relief Association (ERA), then covert relief organs of the TPLF and the EPLF with full knowledge and collaboration of most of the relief and aid agencies. One rebel leader estimated that $95m(£63m) from Western governments and charities, including Band Aid, was diverted. The CIA also alleged aid money was being misused. A 1985 report from the crime agency concluded: Some funds that insurgent organizations are raising for relief operations, as a result of increased world publicity, are almost certainly being diverted for military purposes. In early 1986: Mugher Cement Factory, a mega cement plant in eastern Africa was built at a cost of ETB 600 million as government enterprise in the construction sector.

In February 1986: Harrar Brewery founded in the outskirts of the Harrarcity.

In February, 1986: Bedele Brewery, the fourth in it’s kind beingestablished in Bedele town of western Ethiopia.

In February, 1986: The rebel-Tigrai Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) who fought the ruling-PMAC regime released 1, 800 political prisoners by raiding Mekelle prison in a daring military action. The operation was named "Agazi" after one of the founder-fighters of the TPLF who had beenkilled earlier.
In 1986: Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam chairman of the PMAC met with the Somali president Majour-General Mohammed Siad Barre at theIGAAD conference in Djibouti discuss bilateral issues and, normalizing deteriorated relations, and possible exchange of PoWs.
In 1986: The All Ethiopian Trade Union (AETU) changed it's name to theEthiopian Trade Union (ETU).
In July 1986,: Having relationship with the opposite sex was a deadly sinamong the Tigrai Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF), allowed this time.
In March 1986: About 4.6 million people in Shoa, Arsi, and Harrarge hadbeen relocated into more than 4,500 villages. Although the government had villagized about 13 million people by 1989, international criticism, deteriorating security conditions, and lack of resources doomed the planto failure.
July 20, 1986: Emahoye (Nun) Gelanesh Addis (April, 1889 to July,1986),the renowned EOTC female intellect “teacher of Quene” who was born in Debre-Tselalo of Yilma and Densa district of western Gojjam passed away in natural cause and buried at her birthplace of Debre-Tselalo Ammanuelmonastery.

In October, 1986: Colonel Goshu Wolde the Minister of Foreign Affairs defects in Stockholm, Sweden while he was away for a working visit. Hetold newsreporters, "I would not like to continue serving such a government whos taking the nation to a state of great uncertainty".
Arba Minch University (AMU), a research University where located in Arba Minch about 500 km south of Addis Ababa, is one of the top widely recognized universities in Ethiopia established. Side note;- Before it's inauguration as a University, it was known as "Arba Minch Water Technology Institute (AWTI) offering a qualified course in water resources,management, planning, design and development. AWTI was established with the objective of creating a skilled and qualified manpower vital for the effective utilization and exploitation of water resources for various aspects of national development.
December 27, 1986: Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Party armed combatants attacked over 40 civilian and military targets at the TanaBeles Project in north Gonderzonal administration.
Dejazmatch Girmachew Tekle Hawaryat , the distinguished diplomat, writer, and later Minister of Information passed away. Dejazmatch Girmachew Tekle Hawariyat, who educated in Switzerland served as Minister of Information after Haile Selassie's restoration in May, 1941 who’s intellectual works include the novel "Araya" and a play based on thelife of the 19th century Ethiopian emperor Thewodros.
February 22, 1987: The third Ethiopian constitution which dissolves the Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC) went into effect after areferendum on 1st February of the same year. Its adoption inaugurated People's Democratic Republic of Ethiopia (PDRE). Side note;- The February, 1987 constitution which approved by a popular referendum, gave the Workers Party of Ethiopia (WPE) party more political power thanthe government itself, with local party leaders given almost free rein provided their policies did not conflict with the central government.
According to the Ethiopan Ethnologue, there are about 90 individual languages of Ethiopia. Most belong to the Afro-Asiatic language family Semitic Cushitic and Omotic, with Nilo-Saharan languages also spoken by the nation's Nilotic ethnic minorities. English is the most widely spoken foreign language and is the medium of instruction in secondary schools and universities. Amharic was the language of primary school instruction, but has been replaced in many areas by local languages such as Oromiffa and Tigrigna. After the fall of the Duerg regime in 1991, the new constitution of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia granted all ethnic groups the right to develop their languages and to establish mothertongue primary education systems. This is a marked change to the language policies of previous governments in Ethiopia. The document consisted of seventeen chapters and 119 articles. The preamble traced Ethiopia's origins back to antiquity, proclaimed the historical heroism of itspeople, praised the country's substantial natural and human resources, and pledged to continue the struggle against imperialism poverty, and hunger. The government's primary concern was proclaimed to be the country's development through the implementation of the Program for theNational Democratic Revolution, which Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam himself had proclaimed in a speech on the 20th April, 1976. In theprocess, it was assumed that the material and technical bases necessary for establishing socialism would be created.

August, 1987: Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam formally dissolved theProvisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC) known as the Duerg,established the country as the People's Democratic Republic of Ethiopia(PDRE) under a new constitution ratified four months earlier.

August, 1987: Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam formally dissolved theProvisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC) known as the Duerg,established the country as the People's Democratic Republic of Ethiopia(PDRE) under a new constitution ratified four months earlier.

Side note: The Duerg was formally dissolved and the country became the People's Democratic Republic of Ethiopia (PDRE) under a new constitution.Many of the Duerg members remained in key government posts, and remained as the members of the Central Committee and the Politburo of the Workers' Party of Ethiopia (WPE), which became Ethiopia's civilian version of the Eastern bloc Communist parties. Mengistu became Secretary General of the WPE, President of the PDRE, while remaining Commander in Chief of the Revolutionary Armed Forces. Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile-Mariam elected post-monarchial republic's president of "Peoples Democratic Republic of Ethiopia (PDRE)" under the newly ratified constitution by then unicameral national assembly, known as "Shengo".

Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile-Mariam who headed the Provisional Military Government of Ethiopia (PMGE), and the ruling-military council, Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC) was confirmed by then national assembly (Shengo) as Ethiopia’s post-monarchy republic's president in August 1987. The well-fitted mid-rank officer in profession, but powerful and authoritarian, who headed the Provisinal Military Administrative Council (PMAC) as well as the Provisional Military Government of Ethiopia (PMGoE) until a new constitution adopted earlier, came as sole candidate of the ruling WPE, claimed 98.4%, to be confirmedby then 837 seats national assembly (Shengo), president of the republic that existed b/n September, 1987 and May, 1991, officially titled "Peoples Democratic Republic of Ethiopia (PDRE)" most of whom fellow Duerg officials over again granted senior ranks both in the ruling party "Workers Party of Ethiopia (WPE)", and the government PDRE, after a general congress being held. Generally speaking, during his tenure as a leader, has sown no rays of democracy in the country, and his final years were marked by an absolute power in his hand, created a more unique and repressive system of government, hanging out his oversized portraits at public squares, governmental and enterprises in fascinating with style of the late Kim Il-Sung of North Korea and Fidel Castro Ruz of Cuba, including their wearings to develop his personality cult. Unlike the monarch, sat at the helm of centralised power before it, the Duerg regimeas form of peoples democracy would remain an explicitly anti-intellectual and ultimately, a destructive institution to the very end. He has held responsible further for mis-guided political decisions, unpractical agricultural policies that did not improve the lives of the Ethiopian farmers an iota, as well as wrong ex-Soviet style tripple-chain military-command, consisted of the Marxist political-indoctrination, the Military-intelligence, and the Officer-corps of the army, which that later to destroy "spirit de corps" among the army units, and caused severe rifts and conflicts b/n lower-ranking, semi-literate, political commissars and the highly-trained senior military officers resulting in the breaking of the chain of command and contributing to the defeat of the Ethiopian army by rebel fighters at the end. However, government's military positions were grajually weakened in a humilating defeats, subsequent military combat operationsin Tigrai region of Shire and Mekelle fronts, and a crushing-defeats of the army followed in Aphabet & Massawa fronts of ex-Eritrean region in 1989,suffers decisive defeats in northern battle fronts.

Brigadier-General Guebre-Kiristos Bulli - Head of Duerg's National MilitaryCampaign Department, subsumed and oversaw functions of the Defense Ministry operations, a department parallel but more powerful structureoversighted by the Chairman of the ruling-Duerg himself until 1984, who was in a trial to escape through Djibouti captured to his disgrace by border patrols.

August 17, 1987: Singer & vocalist Tekle Tesfa-Izghy, a leading Tigrignalove singer dies in a Car collision at his 42. Tekle Tesfazghy had sung somany love songs in the 80s accompanied by the “Roha Band”.

August 19, 1987: The PDRE President appointed Brigadier-General Affeworki Wolde-Mikael commander of the Militia Force, and the youngerbrother of unionist Bitwadad Asfaha Wolde-Mikael, chief administrator ofEritrea Administrative Region.

August 20, 1987: Yidnekachew Tessema died of long illness. Yidnekatchew Tessema Eshete, a veteran footballer, a pioneer of modernsports administration in Ethiopia passed away after a long illness at age 64. The VP and President of the Confederation of African Footbal (CAF) from it’s foundation in 1957 to the day he passed away on August 20, 1987. He was a member of the FIFA executive council from 1966 to74. Tessema worked and fought hard to make sure that Sport brought peace and understanding between people. He was strongly opposed to acceptingSport Clubs based on race and religion. He was also opposed to commercial Ads to tobacco and alcohol companies in Stadiums and Sport events. Yidnekachew’s contribution for the anti-Apartheid movement by preventing the then South African racist regime from participating in Africa and the World sport events is legendary.In his long career as sport leader Yidnekachew was awrded numerous medals and awards by the Ethiopian and foreign governments. Side note: Yidnekachew Tessema (September 1921 - August 1987) became "the father of sport in Africa" and wrote a biography of his fatherNegadras Tessema Eshete. Ato Yidnekechew called the "Father of ModernSport in Ethiopia" but also the "Father of Sport in Africa". Yidnekachew isan extraordinary man with extraordinary contribution to the development and popularization of sport, particularly football promoting to a high level in Ethiopia and the rest of the African continent. The son of an elite businessman (Negadras), Yidnekachew, a legendary literary figure was born in the city of Jimma in Southern Ethiopia while the entire family wereunder political motivated house arrest (Ghizot) at the residencial compound of Jimma Aba Jiffar on Ethiopia's day of New Year, Meskerem 1,1914 (September 11, 1921). When he was four years old, the family moved back to Addis Ababa where young Yidnekachew attended school at the Tefferi Makonnen school. At school, Yidnekachew excelled in sports, particularly, soccer. Later in 1935, Yidnekachew joined the first Ethiopian soccer team-the St. George football club. He also qualified to play in the then national team. In 1943, Yidnekachew opened the first local sport federation with his colleague Amde Mikael Desalegn. Once the government recognized the importance of support for sport, Yidnekachew served his country and people in the capacities of secretary of the soccer and sport federation, president of the national Olympics committee and commissioner for Sports & Physical Training . Yidnekachew's contribution to sport to the African continent started with his pioneering efforts and subsequent success in establishing the African Soccer Federation (CAF) in 1964. He served CAF as the deputy president between 1964-1972 and as the President between 1972 and 1987. He was also member of the AfricanSport Council, International Olympics Committee (IOC), FIFA and President of the African Olympic Committees Assocition.

The veteran footballer, co-founder of the con-Federation of African Football (CAF), elected president of the Confederation of African Football (CAF) in Camerron in 1972 and reelected to serve CAF. Member of executive councils of both the African Olympic Committees Association and the African Sports Supreme Council, until his death of natural sickness in mid-August, 1987 to effectively preside over the continental football body. A FIFA best awarded along with the Brazilian veteran Pele for his immense contribution to football. Became member of the executivecouncil of the International Olympic Committee (IOC). Remembered one of the "listed in honour of the best five" at hallways of the Grand Azatek Stadium of Mexico City. Yidnekatchew Tessema honoured in the kingdom of Morocco in comemorial with "Yidnekatchew Challenge Cup U21".
Yidnekachew worked and fought hard to make sure that sport brought peace and understanding among people. He was strongly opposed to accepting sport clubs based on race and religion. He was also opposed to commercial advertisements by tobacco and alcohol companies in stadiumsand sport events. Yidnekachew's contribution for the anti-Apartheid movement by preventing the then South African regime from participatingin African and world sport events is legendary. In his long career, Yidnekachew was awarded numerous medals and awards by the Ethiopiangovernment and foreign governments. Yidnekachew died on August 20, 1987 after a long illness. His funeral was attended by then VP Fisseha Desta of the Peoples Democratic Republic of Ethiopia (PDRE), senior government officials, and several thousand sports fans in Addis Ababa at the Ketchene Holy-saviour church. The late Tessema Eshete was remembered of being honoured posthumously Life president of the Confederation African Football (CAF). He is survived by his children andwife.

Late August, 1987: The current structure and goals of Ethiopian Televisionwere reestablished with Proclamation number 114/87. ETV began a fully colour system in commemoration of the 10th anniversary of the EthiopianRevolution. Ethiopian Television is the only one in Ethiopia due to the government's ban of private media.

September 10, 1987: Captain Fikre-Selassie Wag-Deres who had beenGeneral-secretary of the PMAC appointed prime minister of the post- monarchy "Peoples Democratic Republic of Ethiopia (PDRE)".

Upon the proclamaiton of the Peoples Democratic Republic of Ethiopia (PDRE), a new complicated official coat of arms was placed at the centerof the national flag. It depicted the Axum obelisk surmounted by a five point star on a blue field,with a cog wheel at the base, flanked by olive branches. Above appear the words in Ge-ez alphabet, "Hizbawi Democrasiawi Repooblic Ityopia" (Peoples Democratic Republic of Ethiopia). This can be refered to as the second Duerg era flag.

Brigadier General Guebre-Kiristos Bulli, a non-member of the ruling Duergwho he was among a handful of officers the Duerg promoted to a rank of Brigadier General for the first time who he was also the most influential military officer directly can report to the chairman of the ruling Duerg, andhaving parallel positions with the Defence Ministry's Military Operations Main Deparment. He was presumed killed after attempting to escape via- Djibouti and having fallen out of grace with Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile-Mariam as a result of a first fight with then Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces Majour-General Merid Nigussie. Means those who were members ofthe Duerg but got to their position following the professional track and stayed in the military unlike their colleagues who were transferred from civilian life to military at a later period. The ruling- Duerg members who were promoted to the rank of General and Admiral after more than a decade of life as civilian officials, the Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC) and the Workers Party of Ethiopia (WPE) representatives, and ministers with their initial ranks as majours, colonels, ex- naval Lt, Commanders etc when they became Duerg members in pre-September 1974. Almost all of them were transferred and promoted to the military after the aborted coup of May, 1989. Those who were not Duerg membersbut were deemed loyal and also capable enough to fill the vacant space that created after the failed coup of May,1989. All those without any asterisk marks are carreer professionals who made it to the military hierarchy step by step based on their merit, time of service, education andtraining, and military exploits in the east, south, and northern battle fronts. Their training and education was not only in country at Holleta , Harrar Academy, etc. but training in the best military schools in the US, Europe, Israel etc,.

November 16, 1987: Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Party (EPRP) claimsresponsibility for an armed assault on private businesses at Lake Tana of South Gondar region.

December 21, 1987: Why are Ethiopians starving of hunger again? Time Magazine on its cover page featured a downcast and crestfallen young Ethiopian mother as a symbol of famine victims in that country' Time asked two timeless questions: “Why are Ethiopians starving again? What should the world do and not do?” Time Magazine in its analysis, Time wrote something that should strikes us all as déjà vu today. Three years ago [1984], a famine began to strike Ethiopia with apocalyptic force. Westerners watched in horror as the images of death filled their TV screens: the rows of fly-haunted corpses, the skeletal orphans crouched inpain…

Late 1987: It was recognised that there were about 20,367 peasant associations with a membership of 5.7 million farmers in rural Ethiopia. February 18, 1988: Tigray Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) rebel fighters attacked private citizens, property and NGO’s in the northern province ofTigray.

March 4, 1988: The head of state Mengistu Haile Mariam ordered the killing of the renowned army officer in the name of Brigadier General Tariku Aine during a visit to northern battle field in the northern region ofEritrea.

According to the ‘Djibouti IGAD conference of heads of states in 1986’ adoption and the followed political consultations, Ethiopia signed a peacetreaty with Somalia to exchange Prisoners of War (PoWs).

March 20, 1988: The Battle of Afabet In Eritrea; The Demise of Nadew Command: March 17 through March 20, 1988 was a turning point feat for Ethiopian troops fighting in Eritrea. The victory over the Nadew Command is considered by the historians to be the most significant victoryfor any liberation movement since the Vietnamese victory at Dien Bien Phu. It has also been described as the largest battle in Africa since the battle of El Alamein in WWII in Egypt.

In May, 1988: Abuna Takla-Haymanot the 3rd Patriarch of the EthiopianOrthodox Tewahedo Church died of natural sickness.

Side note: The Ethiopian government ordered a full scale state funeral for Patriarch Abune Takla-Haymanot, complete with military escort, gun salutes and flags at half staff throughout Ethiopia. The open casket was carried from St. Mary's church in the Patriarchate, to Holy Trinity Cathedral, on the same carriage that was once used by the fallen Imperialregime for royal funerals. The Patriarch lay in his coffin wearing a Patriarchal crown and in his robes of office, draped with the Ethiopian flag.Tens of thousands of weeping faithful packed the streets to see the body pass on the way to the Cathedral. He was buried at the Cathedral after lying in state for three days. His burial was attended by the entire diplomatic corps in Addis Ababa as well as most of the high-ranking members of the government and the WPE. Abune Takla Haymanot was succeeded by Interim Patriarch Abuna Merkorios.

May 14, 1988: Lt. General Tesfaye Guebre-kidan senior member of the ruling-PMAC, and the longtime Minister of Defence was appointed military emergency governor and commander-in-chief of the ground armed troopsin Eritrea.

June 22, 1988: Ethiopian head of State Mengestu Haile Mariam met withChairman of the Chinese military commission Deng Xiaoping at the greatHall of the people in Bejing, Peoples republic of China.

June 22, 1988: The rebel Tigrai Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) held the ruling Duerg turned civilian regime accountable for a massacre committedat an open market in the remote town of Hawzien, in Tigray Autonomous Region, where over 2, 500 people were massacred horribly by combat Helicopters in the sub-district of at an open market place, such horrible and inhuman act remains controversial among the ruling WPE and the rebel Tigray Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF).

Side note: የሃውዜን እልቂት፤ በትግራይ ውስጥ በህዝበዊ ወያኔና በኢትዮጵያ ሰራዊት መካከል ብዙ ውግያ ተካሂዳል፤ በመጸሀፍትም ውስጥ በሰፊው ታትቷል። ነገር ግን በ፲፱፻፹፯ ዓ.ም ሰኔ ወር በሃወዜን ከተማ በጦር አውርፕላኖችና በሄልኮፕተር የታገዘ የቦንብ ድብደባ በመንግስት ወታደሮች አንደተፈጸመና ብዙ ስዎች እንደተገደሉ፤ ህዝበዊ ወያኔ ደግሞ ድርጊቱ ኢንዲፈጸም ራሱ የተጫወታቸው ሚናዎች እንደነበሩ ለህዝብ ግልጽ ያልሆነ መራጃ ሲናፈስ ዓመታት ተከጥረዋል።

June 27, 1988: Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Party (EPRP) claimsresponsibility for the recent ‘Beles Valley Project’ attacks.
September 9, 1988: Abuna Merkorios consecrated the Fourth Patriarchand Catholicos of the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Church after the death of his predecessor Abuna Takla Haymanot.
Side note: Abune Merkorios remained Patriarch for three years until July, 1991, when the Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) triumphed over the Communist military junta known as Duerg inAddis Ababa. Known before his elevation to the episcopacy as Abba (Father) Ze-Libanos Fanta, he was born into the minor nobility of Beghemidir Province. He was considered something of a liturgical expert, and served for many years at Holy Trinity Cathedral in Addis Ababa. AbbaZe-Libanos was raised to the rank of Bishop by Patriarch Abuna Takla Haymanot in 1976 over his home province of Beghemidir (then known asGondar Province), taking the name Merkorios. Abuna Merkorios served as Archbishop of Gondar until he became Patriarch of Ethiopia in 1988.
Abune Merkorios' tenure of Archbishop of Gondar included the period known as the "Red Terror" in Ethiopia, and which was carried out with particular brutality in the town and province of Gondar under the governorship of Melaku Teferra, a particularly notorious member of the Duerg. Abuna Merkorios would later face accusations of not only having kept silent during the horrors of the "Red Terror" in Gondar, but of havinga particularly close relationship with Administrator Majour Melaku Teffera .In a sign of the favor of the Duerg regime, in 1987 Abune Merkorios was appointed as one of a very small and select group of clergy to serve as a member of the national assembly (Shengo) comprised of 837 members, a national parliament set up by the Duerg when it proclaimed the People's Democratic Republic of Ethiopia that year. He remained a member of the parliament until his enthronement as Patriarch. These allegations of closeness to the Communist Duerg regime helped undermine the Patriarch, when the Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) came to power. Abuna Merkorios was dethroned under circumstances that remain under dispute. The flight and exile of the 4th Patriarch, His Holiness Abune Merkorios raised grave concern among Orthodox Church worshippers. He was followed on the throne of the Ethiopian Church by Abune Paulos, the fifth official patriarch of the church,although many Ethiopian churches in the diaspora, continue to recognize Abuna Merkorios as patriarch and spiritual leader claiming that he was forced to leave his position. A Synod in exile was set up in support of Patriarch Merkorios. Problems with the Synod inside Ethiopia escalated when the exile Synod annointed a number of new bishops in 2007, resulting in mutual excommunications being issued by the two synods.

September, 1988: Ethiopia boycotted the Seoul Summer Olympics multi-sport event in South Korea in protest. Believed Ethiopia had quitted the Seoul Olympic event in South Korea as an ex-Soviet satellite state whos the Soviets armies were sternly blamed for invading then Afghanistan.

September 15, 1988: Ethiopian Airlines Flight-604 Boeng-737 crashes on take-off after suffering multiple birds-strikes 35 of 98 passengers died. Allthe six crew survived.

In November, 1988: Ethiopian military turned civilian ruling elites, whichwas just begining to saviour the institutionalisation of the socialist doctrine, the turn of events came too more bitterly.

Side note; However, reluctantly, the regime, had reaffirmed it's commitment once again to the building of Socialism, had made some concessions to a private investment, by raising the roof capital in joint venture, small-scale industries and hotel services. But these measures clearly proved inadequate in the face of the fundamental transformations giving on to the global arena. In the twin policies of Perestroika & Glasnost spearheaded by Mr. Mikael Gorbachiey of ex-Soviet Union, were changing the nature of both the ex-Soviet Union and the global balance ofpower. Cold war era of the two super powers, both represented their country as a heaven and the other as a hell on earth. In a bid to give Communism a human face, the ex-Soviet leader was unwittingly surrenders to the west, terminating the role of his country as a superpower.

Mid-February, 1989: Mr. Herman Cohen, the US under secretary of state for African affairs made a tripartite political consultation in Khartoum, Sudan with representatives of Eritrean Peoples Liberation Front (EPLF) andTigrai Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) as to reinforce the rebel groups against the communist Duerg military regime.

February 19, 1989: The Battle of Shire that led to the Duerg's military decisive defeat at the military sphere, came to an end. The government defence forces suffered another major debacle in Shire Inda-Selassie ofTigrai region, when the TPLF forces gained a major victory.

Side note: Mekelle was occupied by the Tigrai Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) forces. But Government troops claimed tactical retreatment to Dessie of the North wollo region. Army Captain Legesse Asfaw the militarycommander and administrator of Tigrai region called back to Addis Ababa.And the region of Tigrai fully contolled by the Tigrai Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) fighters. The seventeen years old Duerg regime coming under attack by joint operation of the two rebel groups namely, the Eritrean Peoples Liberation Front (EPLF), a separatist group which foundedin early 1960s, which fought for Eritrea's independence, and the TPLF, which fought for a greater autonomy for the region of Tigrai. By contrast, government forces were beset by poor-military command and the inherentdisadvantage of operating in allion territory, where the insurgents had upper hands and whole-hearted support of the local population.

April 8, 1989 ex-Crownprince Asfaw-wossen Haile-Selassie proclaimed in- exile, "HIM Amha-Selassie I of Ethiopia" "Elect of God, "Conquering Lion ofthe Tribe of Judah and king of kings of Ethiopia". Prince Asfaw Wossen Haile-selassie assumed the title "Emperor in-exile" with the name "HIM Amha Selassie I", he bestowed the title of Empress upon Leul't Medferiashwork.

In April, 1989: seven members of the Ethiopian national youth soccer squad attended for a football match in Cairo, Egypt have sought asylum atthe UNHCR country representative office.

DEFENCE STAND & STRUCTURE- Post-Imperial Ethiopian GovernmentDefence Commanders at their origins relative seniority.

Army Lt. General Aman Mikael Andom origin former Eritrea province(Hazega)

ሌ/ጄኔራል አማን አንዶም የትውልድ ቦታ ኤርትራ (ሃዘጋ)

Army Brigadier-General Taffari Banti origin former Shoa province(Legedadi)

ብ/ጄኔራል ተፈሪ በንቲ የትውልድ ቦታ (ለገዳዲ)

Army Lt. General Tesfaye Guebre Kidan origin former Harrarghe province(Harrar)

ሌ/ጄኔራል ተስፋዬ ገብረኪዳን የትውልድ ቦታ (ሃረር)

Army Majour-General Demissie Bulto origin former Shoa province (Adaa)

ጄ/ጄኔራል ደምሴ ቡልቶ የትውልድ ቦታ (አድአ)

Army Majour-General Merid Nigussie - Origin former Shoa (Menagesha)

ጄ/ጄኔራል መርእድ ንጉሴ የትውልድ ቦታ ሸዋ (መናገሻ)

Air Majour-General Fanta Belay origin former Bege-Midr (Gondar)

ጄ/ጄኔራል ፋንታ በላይ የትውልድ ቦታ ጎንደር (ጎንደር)

Army Majour-General Hailu Guebre Mikael origin former Shoaprovince (Ambo)

ጄ/ጄኔራል ሃይሉ ገ/ሚካኤል የትውልድ ቦታ (አምቦ)

Police Majour-General Worku Zawde origin former Harrargheprovince (Harrar)

ጄ/ጄኔራል ወርቁ ዘውዴ የትውልድ ቦታ (ሃረር)

Air Majour-General Amha Desta Mitike origin former Shoa province (AddisAbaba)

ጜ/ጀኔራል አምሃ ደስታ የትውልድ ቦታ (አዲስ አበባ)

Army Majour-General Alemayehu Desta origin former Shoa province(Tegulet)

ጜ/ጀኔራል አለማየሁ ደስታ የትውልድ ቦታ (ተጉለት)

Army Majour-General Zawde Gabrayas origin former Sidamo provinceArero (Suryo)

ጜ/ጀኔራል ዘውዴ ገብረየስ የትውልድ ቦታ ቦረና አውራጃ አሬሮ ወረዳ (ሱርዮ)

Air Colonel Solomon Begashaw origin former Shoa province (Addis Ababa)

ብ/ጀኔራል ሰለሞን በጋሻው የትውልድ ቦታ (አዲስ አበባ)

Air Colonel Tesfu Desta origin former Shoa province (Addis Ababa)

ብ/ጀኔራል ተስፋ ደስታ የትውልድ ቦታ (አዲስ አበባ)

Army Brigadier-General Engida Wolde Amlak origin former Shoa province(Addis Ababa)

ብ/ጀኔራል እንግዳ ወ/አምላክ የትውልድ ቦታ (አዲስ አበባ)

Army Brigadier General Erqyihun Bayissa origin former Sidamo province(Wenago)

ብ/ጀኔራል እርቅይሁን ባይሣ የትውልድ ቦታ ሲዳማክ/ሃገር ወናጎ ወረዳ

Army Brigadier-General Negash Woldayas former Shoa province (DebreBirhan)

ብ/ጀኔራል ነጋሽ ወልደየስ የትውልድ ቦታ (ደብረብርሃን)

Army Brigadier-General Genanaw Mengistu origin former Shoa province(Dur bete)

(ብ/ጀኔራል ገናናው መንግስቱ ጎጃምክ/ሃገር (ዱር ቤቴ)

Army Brigadier-General Tesfaye Tirfe origin former Shoa province (AddisAbaba)

ብ/ጀኔራል ተስፋዬ ትርፌ የትውልድ ቦታ (አዲስ አበባ) (Text ends)

May 16, 1989: Ethiopian head of State Lt. Colonel Mengistu Halie-Mariamhas left with a plane heading for a state visit to Berlin, capital of German Democratic Republic (GDR).

A Andargachew Tsige is a former member of the ruling Ethiopian People’s Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) party and was Deputy Mayor of Addis Ababa from 1991 to 1994, when he resigned on account of differences with the government.Andargachew Tsige is a former member of the ruling Ethiopian People’s Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) party and was Deputy Mayor of Addis Ababa from 1991 to 1994, when he resigned on account of differences with the government.Coup to topple Lt.Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam,and the civilian turned government:

In a couple of hours time the top Ethiopian military brass confered in the Armed Forces headquarter to overthrow him in his departure to the GDR accusing him of inefficiency, this was done right after the decisive defeatsby the TPLF rebels to Ethiopian combat troops in Shire Inda-selassie of Tigrai, and the fall of the strategic northwestern town of Afabet in the hands of Secessionist rebels in Eritrea region.

Diaries updates: On May 16, 1989 (local time Tuesday Ginbot 8, 1981):

High ranking military officers have attmpted a coup d'etat to remove the military turned civilian government led by Lt. Colonel Mengistu Hailemariam. The coup attempt was unsuccessful and close to 30 generalsexcuted, which had a deeletrious effect on the moral of the fighting army in northern battle fron i.e. in Tigray and Eritrea. However, after the president had left for a state visit to East German (GDR) on Tuesday at 13.30, in couple of hours time desatisfied high-ranking military officers were confered in the Defence ministry general HQ on how to topple the departing president on his way to the GDR but the coup attempt had failed as the minister of defence was killed in the event. The Chief-of-staffof the Armed Forces, Majour-General Merid Nigussie including commanderof the Ethiopian Airforce were committed suicide leaving confession notes behind in the Armed Forces general headquarter after the unsuccessful military coup was foiled. The coup plotters were all rounded up, by loyal troops to the president. Meantime, in Eritrea all the rebeled high ranking military officers including Majour-General Demissie Bulto, military commander of the 2nd revolutionary armed troops then senior military- turned civilian chief administrator of Eritrea namely Brigadier General
Affe-worki Wolde-Michael including other were rounded up to brutally killed by loyal soldiers. However, president Mengistu has returned to AddisAbaba after 36 hours terminating his GDR visit.

Brigadier General Affeworki Wolde-Michael, whos originally from Eritrea region was known to be a half-brother of the unionist Dejazmatch Asfaha Wolde-Michael, former Chief Executive of the defunct "Eritrea Federation with Ethiopia" from 1955 to 1967. During the coup event, the rebel Eritrean Peoples Liberation Front (EPLF) was able to announce a unilateral14-days ceasefire to encourage the coup plotters oust the brutal Duerg turned civilian regime availing themselves for further negotiation.
Intelligence sources at the time revealed that the May-coup had foiled by the GDR "Staatssicherheit", commonly known as "Stasi", literally meaning"State Security", was the official state security service of German Democratic Republic (GDR).

May 18, 1989: The coup was decisively crushed by loyal soldiers to the President Mengistu Haile-Mariam. Mengistu Hailemariam's military rule, which received considerable technical and logistical support from former GDR's Stasi to enhance its security and surveillance structure. This included the training of professional "interrogators," i.e. torturers and "field workers", who kept constant watch on citizens. The Police and government security apparatus' main mission and responsibility is to keepthe people of Ethiopia under East Germany's Stasi style draconian surveillance and submission. (በ፤ ፱ ፮ ፹ ፩ ዓ.ም የ ደ ር ግ ኢ ሠ ፓ መ ን ግ ስ ት ን ለ መ ገ ል በ ጥ የ ተ ደ ረ ገ የ መ ፈ ን ቅ ለ መ ን ግ ስ ት ሙ ከ ራ እ ን ደ ሚ ታ ወ ቀ ው በ መ ፈ ን ቅ ለ መ ን ግ ስ ቱ ሙ ከ ራ የ ተ ሳ ተ ፉ ት ግ ለ ሰ ቦ ች የ ጠ ለ ቀ የ ፖ ለ ቲ ካ ን የ ውት ድ ር ና ን ና ጸ ጥ ታ ን የ መ ቆ ጣ ጠ ር ል ምዶ ች እ ያ ላ ቸ ው እ ን ዴ ት ሙ ከ ራ ው ሊ ከ ሽ ፍ እ ን ደ ቻ ለ ለ ብ ዙ ስ ዎ ች እ ን ቆ ቅ ል ሽ ነ በ ረ ።)

Sidenote: All defendant senior officers connected with the event had beentried at a Special Military Tribunal, which ruled out the charge of “nationaltreason and connecting with traiting forces” against the defendants but most of them were killed without death warrant from the so called MilitaryTribunal in a written order from the head of state, Mengistu Haile Mariam.Lt. General Tesfaye Guebre-Kidan, who headed the military tribunal at first, soon to way-back to the battle fronts due to emergency situations in Eritrea. Such suicidal exclusion of senior military officers mostly explain his blunders and cataclysmic end, he has said in time and again that the reason why he could not forgive the senior military officers, had punishedthem so severely was that he would not compromise his principle when comes to the Ethiopian sovereignty and suzerainty.

June 1, 1989: Assab becomes an autonomous administrative region in thesouthern tip of the Red Sea, remains the major commercial port city for Ethiopia’s import-export items.

Mid-June, 1989: In the wake of failed military coup, Lt.General Tesfaye Guebre-kidan was called back from Eritrea to head the Military Tribunal Court which tried the high-ranking officers whos were tried to overthrowthe Duerg regime in 16th May, 1989.

Side note;- After late 1987, some non-members of the ruling Duerg whomthey were among handful of officers the Duerg promoted to a rank of General for the first time whom they also most influential military officers directly can report to the chairman of the ruling Duerg, and having parallelpositions with the Defence Ministry's Military Operations Main Deparment. As example Gabre-Kirstos Bulli was presumed killed after attempting to escape via-Djibouti and having fallen out of grace with Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile-Mariam as a result of a first fight with then Chief of Staff Majour-General Merid Nigussie. Means those who were members of the Duerg but got to their position following the professional track and stayed in the military unlike their colleagues who were transferred from civilian life to military at a later period. Duerg members who were promoted to the rank of General and Admiral after more than a decade of life as civilianofficials , Duerg and WPE reps, and ministers with their initial ranks as majors, colonels, Lt, Commanders etc when they became Duerg members in 1974. Almost all of them were transferred and promoted to the military after the aborted coup of 1989. Those who were not Duerg members but were deemed loyal and also capable enough to fill the vacuum created after the coup of 1989. All those without any asterisk marks are carrier professionals who made it to the military hierarchy step by step based on their merit, time of service, education and training, and military exploits inthe east, south, and northern fronts. Their training and education was not only in country at Holatta , Harrar Academy, etc. but training in the best military schools in US, Europe, Israel etc. The Ethiopian Military, the strongest in sub-Saharan Africa, this time shaked with promotions, sidelines and demotions followed by the aborted coup of May, 1989.

July, 1989: In the wake of the foiled military coup of May, 1989 political dissidents organized under Ethiopian Peoples Democratic Alliance (EPDA), launched an anti-government radio programme with Dereje Deressa at it'shelm from it’s unknown location in east Africa.

August 7, 1989: An Ethiopian Twin Otter Relief and Rehabilitation Commission Aviation plane which boarded by US Congressman Senator Micky Leyland, nicknamed as “a man for all” and other local relief officialson board crashed in Gambella remote jungles. (ሚኪሊላንድን ጨምሮ 9አሜሪካውያንና 7ሃበሾችን የያዘች አውሮፕላን በኢትዮጵያ ምድር ትሰውራለች። ሚኪሊላንድ በአገራችን ረሃብ ሲከሰት ፈጥኖ በመድረስ ትልቅ ሰብዓዊነት የፈፀመ ሰውነው። በየአቅጣጫው ፍለጋ ቀጠለ። ከደርግ መንግስት ጋር በመደራደር ለፍለጋ አገር ቤት የገባውየአሜሪካ ልዩ የፍለጋ ቡድን ለ7ቀናት የተሰውረን አውሮፕላን ቢፈልግም ፍንጭእንኳማግኘት አልቻለም።)

Side note: Some claimed, apparently based on a solid information, that the plane might be taken to a secret location out of sight of a radar detection. A week later, a rescue team led by Congressman Senator GaryAckerman equipped with C-5 Galaxy US Army aviation airplane arrived tohelp search the crashed plane that disappeared for seven days before it's wreckage was found with all its passengers and crew members dead bodyamong whom the American Senator Mickey Leyland.

Not well known who was behind such tragic crash but following Congressman Mickey Leland’s death the US went to intervene in Ethiopianterritory with all its rescuing resources and scoured the whole country withits intelligence survellance cameras. After that it started to channel support in all forms to then northern rebel guerilla armed groups of TPLF/EPLF. According to some writers, who forgets how the coffin of Senator Mickey Leland was used to move the then Majour-General Kumilachew Dejene, (one among the many senior army officers who tried an aborted coup against the Ethiopian head of state President Mengistu Haile Mariam) out of the country. (Text ends)

Mid-August 1989: After a long and harsh imprisonment, female membersof the imperial family were released by the regime from prison, just two years before the regime’s downfall and the men were released a year later. Several members were then allowed to leave the country by mid 1990, and the rest left in 1991 upon the fall of the Duerg regime.

August 19, 1989: In the wake of the military situation in Eritrea, the process of the trial of the high-ranking officers whos were tried to overthrow the regime ceased by the PDRE President. The President ordered head of the Military Tribunal Lt.General Tesfaye Guebre-kidan toflee back to Eritrea to head as Military Commander & Emergency Administrator of the region.

September 6, 1989: Ethiopian government signed a deal to further proceed a peace negotiation with the rebel Eritrean Peoples LiberationFront (EPLF) in Atlanta, Georgia.

Side note: The peace talks between the Ethiopian government and Eritrean Peoples Liberation Front (EPLF) hosted by the Carter PresidentialCenter started in Atlanta, Georgia. The meeting among the ruling Duerg regime and the scessionist rebel group known as the Eritrean Peoples Liberation Front (EPLF) to continue in proceedural matters in Nairobi,Kenya.

September 8, 1989: The TPLF rebels increase rapidity to non-Tigray regions of Ethiopia under the desguise of Ethiopian Peoples RevolutionaryDemocratic Front (EPRDF).
November 8, 1989: Colonel Hailu Yimenu appointed Acting-prime ministerof the People's Democratic Republic of Ethiopia (PDRE).
November 11, 1989: The Soviet leader Mikael Gorbachev underscored that he signed a peace agreement with the US President George Bush Sr.in Reikjavik, Iceland ending the Cold War era.
Ethiopian delegation led by Ashagre Yigletu had a peace talks with theTigrai Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) in Rome, Italy.
Lt. Colonel Gebrayas Wolde-Hanna, a provincial party secretary, Majour- General Birhanu Jembere, commander of the eastern army command known as “Misraq-Ize”, Colonel Quejella Guemeda, chief of the region's Police department, Colonel Yimam and other junior security officials in theregion were died of mysterious Helicopter crash at Dengogo cliffs near Dire Dawa. The incidence was widely believed to be an intelligence felloutamong senior security officials.
November 19, 1989: Tigrai Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) combatant forces claimed to have captured the northeastern town of Kombolcha inSouth Wollo region.
However, the highway from Kombolcha to the port of Assab was not fully brought under TPLF control until the Duerg regime was fully expelled fromTigrai later that year.
ETHIOPIA Facts & Stats: Ethiopian Military command stand as of lateNovember, 1989.
The military turned civilian regime under Mengistu Haile Mariam commanded as many as half a million regular soldiers and militiamen. Ithad a communist ideology and was heavily armed by the former Soviet Union and other communist countries.
Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam – PDRE President, Commander-in-chiefof the Revolutionary Armed Forces.
Army Lt. General Tesfaye Guebre-Kidan – Member of the PMAC Standingcommittee & WPE Politbureau member, one of the most powerful figuresin the system. And Acting-president for one week, after 21st May, 1991 until he surrenders to the Italian embassy in Addis Ababa.
Army Majour-General Haile-Giorgis Habte-Mariam - Chief of Staff Under Lt. Gen. Tesfaye Guebre Kidan, who took over as Minster of Defense later,killed by the plotters during the foiled coup.
Army Majour-General Merid Negussie – Served in various positions in thearmy, and as civilian, later Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces, committedsuicide during the 1989 aborted coup.
Army Brigadier-General Guebre-Kiristos Bulli - Head of Duerg's National Military Campaign Department, (Biherawi Abiotawi Zemecha Memria headquartered in the Duerg’s office) subsumed and oversaw functions ofthe Defense Ministry operations department, parallel but more powerful structure under the Chairman of the PMAC himself until 1984.
Army Lt. General Haddis Tedla - Member of PMAC’s Standing Committee &WPE politburo member, promoted to Chief-of-Staff of the Armed Forces atLt. General title after the aborted coup of May, 1989 from a rank of a Majour and long time life as civilian top official. He served until May, 1991Army Majour-General Mesfin Guebrequal - Son of a renowned unionist originated from Eritrea who father was fought the Italians during the fascist invasion, previously held various positions in the Ministry of Defense, promoted to Deputy Chief of Staff for combat operations after the aborted coup until May, 1991.

Rear Admiral Yehuawalashet Girma – Last Commander of the Ethiopian Navy, Duerg & WPE CC member, promoted after the aborted coup of May,1989 from a long life as a civilian minster and a naval PT officer to Rear Admiral level, held until May,1991.
Army Majour-General Hailu Guebre-Michael - Commander of the GroundForces, executed after the aborted coup of May, 1989.
Rear Admiral Tesfaye Birhanu - Commander of the Ethiopian Navy who later imprisoned after the aborted coup of May,1989 aborted coup. Whosto be replaced by Commodore Belege Belete.
Air Majour-General (Flt.) Fanta Belay - Former commander of the Ethiopian Air Force and later promoted to serve as Civilian Minister ofIndustry killed after the aborted coup of May, 1989.
Army Majour-General Demmisie Bulto - Commander of the 2nd Revolutionary Army in Eritrea horribly executed after the aborted coup ofMay,1989 in Asmara.
Air Majour-General (Flt.) Amaha Desta Mitikie - Commander of the Ethiopian Air Force, committed suicide after the aborted coup of May,1989.
Air Colonel Solomon Begashaw (Flt.) – Air Chief of Staff of the EthiopianAir Force, killed after the aborted coup of May, 1989.
Air Colonel Tesfu Desta (Flt.) - Chief of air combat operations of theEthiopian Air Force, killed after the aborted coup of May, 1989.
Army Majour-General Seyoum Makonnen – Vice chief of staff, promotedas Deputy chief of staff after the aborted coup of May, 1989. Held the position until May, 1991.
Army Majour-General Abebe Wolde-Mariam - D/Minister of Defence forlogistics, from early years to 1983.
Army Majour-General Alemayehu Agonafir - Commander of the Air Force,promoted to head the Defense Industry Commission after the aborted coup of May, 1989.
Army Colonel Embibel Ayele – Army turned civilian former head of the office of WPE as civilian, but promoted to the rank of Majour-General, Commander of the Ground Forces, rightly promoted after the May, 1989and held the position until May,1991.
Army Majour-General Birhanu Jembere - Commander of the 1st Revolutionary Army, promoted from a Majour and a civilian official, died ofHelicopter crash in November, 1989.
Army Majour-General Wubishet Dessie – Member of PMAC’s Standing Committee, a majour who was a long time civilian, promoted after the May, 1989 coup, appointed Commander of the 2nd Revolutionary Army inEritrea.

Army Majour-General Kefelegn Yibza - Commander of the CentralCommand, Commander of Ground Forces.
Army Brigadier-General Tilahun Argaw - Core-Commander, Commander ofAssab Special Command, post, he served until, May, 1991.
Army Majour-General Regassa Jimma - Commander of the 2nd Revolutionary Army, he held various high positions in the military as a commander and commandant of the Holeta Military Academy, until May,199.
Army Majour-General Getachew Gedammu - Deputy Commander of 1st Revolutinary Army (Harrar), he held various high level positions until May,1991.
Army Majour-General Kinfe-Gabriel Dinku - Deputy Commander of 1st Revolutinary Army (Harrar) he held various high positions until May, 1991.Army Majour-General Hussein Ahmed - Deputy Commander of 2nd Revolutionary Army in Eritrea, he held the position before and after May, 1989 coup until he fled to Saudi Araba with some other senior officers in Eritrea in May,1991.
Army Majour-General Alemayehu Ayele - Deputy Commander for Logisticsof the Ground Forces, until May, 1991.
Army Majour-General Bedlu Duki - Head of Logistics in the Ministry ofDefense until May, 1991.
Army Majour-General Wagayehu Gashaw - Deputy Commander of the 2ndRevolutionary Army, he held various positions until May, 1991.
Army Majour-General Mardassa Lelissa - Core commander, Commander ofTewodros Task force 1991, he held various positions until May, 1991.
Army Majour-General Aberra Abebe – Chief of Military Operations in theMinistry of Defense, killed after the aborted coup of May,1989.
Army Majour-General Abdullahi Umer - Head of Logistics Minister ofDefense, imprisoned after the aborted coup of May, 1989, but laterrealeased.
Army Brigadier-General Mulatu Negash - Commander of the third Revolutionary Army, imprisoned after the army's' defeat in Tigrai untilMay,1991.
Army Majour-General Kumleachew Dejene - Deputy Commander of the 2nd Revolutionary Army in Eritrea, fled to exile after the aborted coup ofMay, 1989.
Majour-General Worqu Zewdie - Chief of the Ethiopian Police Force,executed after the aborted coup of May, 1989.
Army Majour-General Zawdie Gabrayas - Core Commander, executedafter the aborted coup of May, 1989.
Army Brigadier-General Gennanaw Mengistu - Commander of the AirDefence Division.
Army Majour-General Alemayehu Desta - Deputy Commander of GroundForces, executed after the aborted coup of May, 1989.

Army Majour-General Gabrayas Wolde-Hanna - PMAC & WPE CC member,Chief of Political Department of the Revolutionary Armed Forces, assigned as head of military cadres from early days, and later Eastern Harrarghe regional WPE secretary, who killed in a Helicopter crash accident couple ofyears before the May, 1991 rebel takeover i.e. November, 1989.
Majour-General Negussie Wolde Michael – Chief of Harrarghe Police pre-1986, later transferred as a civilian Minister in the Council of State.
Majour-Girma Neway, promoted to Majour-General - Chief of EthiopianPolice Forces after the May, 1989 aborted coup. (Text ends)
December, 1989: A coalition of rebel-opposition groups, led by the TPLF announced, came together to form an umbrella organization, the guise of EPRDF, the coalition which worked alongside the EPLF, mounting a sustained rural insurgency that eventually collapses the Duerg regime andended it's brutal rule.
Side note;- The Tigrai Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) formed an alliance with the Ethiopian People's Democratic Movement (EPDM) and formed the Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF), which claimedto fight for the rights of all oppressed nationalities, civil rights, and a genuine people's government. In 1991, the EPRDF succeeded in overthrowing the Menigstu regime, and took control of the Ethiopian government. A split developed within the TPLF in the early 1990's, based on debates between "moderate" and "hard-line" members of the group.
Party leader and Prime Minister Meles Zenawi was a moderate and favoredthe adoption of market-based economic principles and privatization.
Opposition from hard-line communists in the group led to an attempted,yet unsuccessful coup in March 2001. The TPLF-dominated EPRDF continues to hold power in Ethiopia.
Wegayehu Negatu /ወጋየሁ ንጋቱ/ (1944 – 1989), the narrator of love unto crypt (ፍቅር እስከ ጫብር): was one of Ethiopia’s most celebrated figures in the creative arts & theater industry, died of natural sickness.Rest in eternal peace !
In late December, 1989 : The last time the Ethiopian head of State Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile-Mariam visited the ex-Soviet Union, China and North Korea. The beleaguered head of State was unsuccessfully in Moscow, Beijing and Pyongyang to plead for military armament to bitterlyfight back the rebels in the north of the country until a last bullet.
Meanwhile he hardly complains against "International imperialists", theirsabotaging of the "Ethiopian Revolution", but the real advice from his masters, "You may negotiate with your opponents and make peace!".
Concurrently the Soviet Union began to retreat from building world communism under Mikhail Gorbachev's glasnost and perestroika policies,marking a dramatic reduction in aid to Ethiopia from Socialist Bloc countries. This resulted in even more economic hardship and the collapseof the military in the face of determined onslaughts by guerrilla forces in the north. The collapse of communism in general, and in Eastern Europe during the Revolutions of 1989, coincided with the Soviet Union stoppingaid to Ethiopia altogether in 1990. The strategic outlook for Mengistu quickly deteriorated.

Late December, 1989, Graham Hancock wrote “The Lords of Poverty” scrutinizing the international aid “industry” including the UN agencies, USAID, the World Bank and the IMF. His withering criticism infuriated many in the “international aid bureaucracies”. But his incisive analysis could not be easily dismissed. His basic argument is that international aid “has financed the creation of monstrous projects that, at vast expense, have devastated the environment and ruined lives; it has supported and legitimised brutal tyrannies; it has facilitated the emergence of fantastical and Byzantine bureaucracies staffed by legions of self-serving hypocrites…” It is a “a waste of time and money” and harmful to poor recipient countries (USD 60 billion in 1989 alone)." Aid is not bad because it is sometimes misused, corrupt, or crass; rather, it is inherently bad, badto the bone, and utterly beyond reform…. It is possibly the most formidable obstacle to the productive endeavors of the poor. It is also a denial of their potential, and a patronising insult to their unique, unrecognised abilities.” Hancock views “international aid” as an elaborate “game” in which “public money levied in taxes from the poor of the rich countries is transferred in the form of ‘foreign aid’ to the rich in the poor countries; the rich in the poor countries then hand it back for safe-keepingto the rich in the rich countries.” He debunks the myth that “international aid works” and “must not be stopped because the poor could not survive without it.” He argues that “if the statement that ‘aid works’ is true, then presumably the poor should be in a much better shape than they were before they first began to receive it half a century ago. If so, then aid’s job should by now be nearly over and it ought to be possible to begin a gradual withdrawal without hurting anyone.”

February 11, 1990: The port city of Massawa captured by the EPLFfighters after a week long heavy fighting.

February, 1990 Tigrai Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) along with otherethnic movements renamed itself Ethiopian Peoples Rivolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF).

February 23, 1990 the rebel-EPRDF fighters announced the recapture of astrategic town of Debre-Tabour, in southern Gondar.

March 10, 1990 The rebel Tigrai Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) proposedtransitional economic and political document to House sub-committee on Ethiopia in respect of Market economy, Democracy, Free press and Humanrights in post-Duerg Ethiopia.

March, 1990: Ethiopian Navy's ships had begun to use ports in Djibouti, Saudi Arabia, and Yemen because of the danger of returning to their homebases. In late May 1991, the EPLF captured Asmara and surrounded Assab, where its ground fire sank seven Ethiopian Navy ships in port.

March, 1990: The collapse of the Communist bloc influences the rulingWPE in Ethiopia.

The eleventh plenum of the Central Committee of the Workers Party of Ethiopia (WPE) resolved to introduce a policy of mixed-economy, effectively, renouncing it's longstanding commitment to Socialist principles. In the political realm, too, it provided for a new political party embracing different shades of opinion, but such a policy shift proved to be too little and too late, by then the military balance of power in the northern regions Tigrai and Eritrea, had shifted decisively in favour of theopposition armed insurgents against the Dueg regime.

April 1990: Ethiopian delegation under deputy prime minister Ashagre Yigletu in peace talks with the Tigrai Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) againin Rome, Italy.

April 1990: Mr. Paul B. Henze, a former CIA and National Security Councilspecialist in psychological operations made a lengthy conversation with the rebel leader Meles Zenawi at a rebel headquarter. Mr. Paul B. Henze was a former CIA station chief in Turkey and Ethiopia during the 1960s and ’70s served in the Carter administration as a deputy to National Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski.

The ruling Workers Party of Ethiopia (WPE) initiated a peace talks withsecessionist rebel force, the Eritrean Peoples Liberation Front (EPLF) &Tigrai Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) in third country without any precondition.

EXCHANGE OF PRISONERS OF WAR b/n Ethiopia and Somalia: Estimated 11, 000 PoWs being detained in Somalia for the last decade have been arrived in Dire Dawa and Addis Ababa, prisoners of war from Somalia were also been released through the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) in exchange with Somali PoWs detained in Ethiopia.this time.

May 26, 1990: The Ethiopian head of state Mengistu Haile Mariam orderedin a written letter the killing of about twelve senior army officers whose were on the helm of the Ethiopian military accusing them of being connected with the failed coup of May, 1989. They were being executed after a year long detention while the other two namely, Commodore Tesfaye Birhanu, commander of the Ethiopian Navy and army Majour- general Abdullahi Oumer, llogistics officer at the MoD sentenced to 20 years imprisonment.

July 8, 1990: Mr. Nelson Mandela, the anti-apartheid freedom fighter whohas been freed recently from a 28 years prison sentence in the Roben Island arrived in the Ethiopian capital, Addis Ababa, he was greeted by Ethiopian head of state Mengistu Haile Mariam at his arrival in Bole airportwhere he will be enthusiastically welcomed at the 26th Organization of African Unity (OAU) annual conference of heads of states and government.

The late Prince Makonnen Haile-selassie's sons were also released from their imprisonment, unfortunately, just a week before their release, the ex-Army Tank Lieutenant prince Dawit Makonnen known as in his other name "Makonnen Makonnen", was found dead at his home in Switzerland.February 11, 1991: The port city of Massawa finally seized by the EPLF rebel forces following a bitter fighting with government armed forces resulted to the destruction of the Ethiopian Naval base, this time the Ethiopian Air force fighter planes were bombarded heavily the port city in retaliation.

Side note: The seizure of the port city of Massawa by the EPLF combatantshad shifted the military balance of power decisively in favor of the opposition armed insurgents in northern regions of Tigrai and Eritrea. The Ethiopian Navy, a branch of the Ethiopian National Defence Force, destablished after bitter fight being carried out between the central government defence forces and the rebel Eritrean Peoples Liberation Front(EPLF) combatants. Following the capture of the Naval base in Massawa, it's commander, Rear Admiral Yehualashet Girma gave-up, and fled to Djibouti, all Ethiopian naval ships fled to Yemen and Saudi Arabia, then the Ethiopian Navy never operated again and in effect was dissolved upon Eritrea's de-jure independence. The port city of Massawa in Eritrea and in some parts of Tigrai region were wantonly bombed by the Ethiopian Air force, despite the absence of a compelling military targets on the ground. However, no amount of violence,was able to prevent the downfall of the tyrant Duerg regime, the end came after seventeen years of brutal rule.

February 23, 1991: Bahr-Dar, one of the leading tourist destinaions in thecountry fell in the hands of the Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Democratic Front combatant forces.

February, 1991: Right after the collapse of the ex-Somali regime, the Ogadien National Liberation Front (ONLF) joined as chairman by the ex-Somali naval senior officer namely Admiral Mohammed Osman Mohammed whos originally from the Ogadien region of Ethiopia.

March, 1991: The eleventh plenum of the central committee of the WPE resolved to introduce a policy of mixed-economy, effectively, renouncing it's longstanding commitment to Socialist principles. In the political realm,too, it provided for a new political party embracing different shades of opinion, but according to political commentators such policy shifting proved to be too little and too late, by then the military balance of power in the northern regions of Tigrai and Eritrea, had shifted decisively in favorof the opposition armed insurgents.

Side note;- In the twin policies of Perestroika & Glasnost spearheaded by Mr. Mikael Gorbachiey of ex-Soviet Union, were changing the nature of both the ex-Soviet Union and the global balance of power. Cold war era ofthe two super powers, both represented their country as a heaven and theother as a hell on earth. In a bid to give Communism a humanface, the ex-Soviet leader was unwittingly surrendering to the west, effectively terminating the role of his country as a super-power. To the Ethiopian ruling elites, which was just begining to saviour the institutionalsation of the socialist doctrine, the turn of events came as more bitterly. But, however reluctantly, it had to be swallowed, already in November, 1988 the regime, while reaffirming it's commitment to the building of Socialism,had made some concessions to a private investment, by raising the roof capital in joint venture understandings, small-scale industries and hotel services. But these measures clearly proved inadequate in the face of the fundamental transformations giving on globally.

March, 1991: Gondar was captured by the Ethiopian PeoplesRevolutionary Democratic Front combatant forces.

March 1991: Talks between the Eritrean Peoples Liberation Front (EPLF), the Oromo Liberation Front (OLF) and the Ethiopian Peoples RevolutionaryDemocratic Front (EPRDF) began to talk secretly on post-Duerg transition in the port city of Massawa, despite failing.

March, 1991: The Ethiopian delegation under Deputy PM Ashagre Yigletuat Peace talks in the Carter Presidential Centre with the Eritrean PeoplesLiberation Front (EPLF) in Washington DC.

March, 1991: Gondar was captured by the Ethiopian PeoplesRevolutionary Democratic Front combatant forces.

Late March, 1991: Ato Hassan Obeid, member of the Ethiopian parliamentknown as then “Shengo”, and a history lecturer at the Ethiopian Naval College in Asmara assassinated by the Eritrean Peoples Liberation Front (EPLF) squads carrying his child at his residence doorsteps in Asmara. It has to be well recognized that the government military, civilian and security structures infiltrated by the rebel groups EPLF, and TPLF

In April 1991: EPRDF forces were on the marches to the capital as an political alliance of four ethnically based political movements- the TigraiPeoples Liberation Front (TPLF), based in the Tigrai Region; the Oromo Peoples Democratic Organization (OPDO), based in the Oromia Region; the Ethiopian Peoples Democratic Movement (EPDM) based in the Amharaland; and the Southern Ethiopian Peoples Democratic Movement(SEPDM), based in the Southern land.

April, 1991: A task force was established by the rebel leader Issaias Affeworki under Bereket Habte Selassie which included the TPLF’s Meles Zenawi and OLF’s Lencho Latta to draft a transitional Charter and to fullyagree upon the emerging Ethiopia between EPLF, OLF, and TPLF in the lowland Eritrean town of Teseney. (የ ኢትዮጵያ ሕገ -መንግስ መሰረትት የ ሆነ ውቻርተር በኤርትራዊዉ በረከት ሃብተ ስላሴ በ ሚመራ ኮ ሚሽን እ ንደተዘ ጋጀ ተገ ለጸ በኋላ እ ንደ ኢትዮጵያ ሕገ -መንግስት የ ተወሰ ደውይሄ ቻርተር፣ በአዲስ አበባዉ ኮ ንፍራ ንስ በኢትዮጵያዉያኖች እ ንደጸደ ቀ ቢነ ገ ርም፣ በ ተሰነ ይ/ኤርትራ፣ በአቶ ኢሳ ያስ አ ፈወ ርቂ፣ አቶ መለስ ዜ ና ዊ ና አ ቶ ሌ ን ጮ ለ ታ በ ተ ቋ ቋ ሙ ውእ ና ኤ ር ትራ ዊ ዉ ዶ ር በ ረ ከ ት ሃ ብ ተ ስ ላ ሴ በ ሚ ሙ ሩ ት ግ ብ ረ -ኃ ይ ል አ ስ ቀ ድ ሞ የ ተ ዘ ጋ ጀ እ ን ደ ሆ ነ ይ ታ ወ ቃ ል፣)

In April, 1991: The Military Tribunal headed by Majour General Asrat Birrupassed 10 to 15 years sentence to the defendants accused of a plot to overthrow the government. The head of state Mengistu Haile-Mariam showed no mercy for those 14 arrested high-ranking officers, connected with the coup event who were detained for nearly a year. The head of state was ordered the judge Majour-General Asrat Birru in a written letterto execute the death penalty against those 12 officers while the remainingtwo, Rear admiral Tesfaye Birhanu, commander of the Ethiopian Navy, and Majour-General Abdullahi Umer, a senior logistics officer at the EMoD were sentenced to 20 years imprisonment each. Estimated 29 senior officers were killed on the coup event, 3 senior officers committed suicide,and 1 senior (the minister of defence) was killed by the plotters, about 432 mid-rank officers were arrested in the event. Military analysts say, not more than five senior officers were died in combat operations in the previous years. Believed the Duerg regime had killed over 47 high rankingofficers in it's seventeen years rule alone.

April 25, 1991: Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF)combatant forces have captured Ambo after fierce fighting.
April 27, 1991: The Ethiopian head of state Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam has ordered Prime minister Fikre Selassie Wag-Deres removed, having criticized him in a last meeting prior to his government's collapse. Side note;- In a last meeting of the Polit-bureau of the ruling Workers Party of Ethiopia, (WPE) Colonel Mengistu states "there is no one quite likeFikre-Selassie, who sits idly and quietly. One time, he sat here reading a Magazine .... He is not anti-revolutionary or a criminal, nor is he conspiratorial ... But he is unstable and even rude .. For this reason he has been expelled in disciplinary reasons also". And the outspoken Lt.
Colonel Dabala Dinsa, who also sacked from his position as VP of the StateCouncil of the PDRE mentioning for a medical reason, Lt. Colonel Dabala told of his sacking "I am healthy, and not know well of my sickness"
May 5, 1991: The post Duerg regime of EPRDF turned the patriots day to5th of May.
May 9, 1991: Meantime, President Mengistu Haile Mariam appoints AtoTesfaye Dinqua prime minister to form a new government. Ato TesfayeDinqua serves under 20 days as the last prime minister of the PDRE.
May 18, 1991: Meantime, Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) combatant forces took permanent control over the town ofDessie, north Wollo region. EPRDF forces advanced on Addis Ababa and the ex-Soviet Union did not intervene to save the regime.
May 21,1991: Lt. Colonel Mengistu fled the country to asylum inZimbabwe, where he intends to reside.
Side note: Failures in political leadership & consequences: Exactly a week before the EPRDF seizure of Addis Ababa, the ex-Ethiopian head of State Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile-Mariam had suddenly decided to leave Addis Ababa leaving his colleagues behind as rebel forces approached the capital, making Lt. General Tesfaye Gebre kidan acting head of state of the PDRE. The dictator Mengistu Hailemariam has unashamedly shifted the blame of his failure in leadership to his close confidants and subordinates. His incompetence as Commander-in-Chief of the Ethiopian Armed Force led to the disintegration of one of the largest fighting force inAfrica. This coward spent time building his personality cult and finally fled the country leaving the territorial army in the lurch and the door wide open for invasion by the TPLF under the guise of EPRDF. He must be held accountable for high treason. In all fairness, however, he neither falsified the history of Ethiopia nor compromised the unity and territorial integrity of the country which could have constituted a more treasonous crime.
Acting head of state Lt. General Tesfaye Gebre-Kidan who had some military successes in the war against the Somali invasion of the Ogadien inJuly, 1977, and as commander of the ground forces in the northern regionof Eritrea in the late 1980s. EPRDF combatant forces approaching Addis Ababa enforced the head of State, Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam to flee the country. The 17 years old Duerg regime collapsed as it's army in Eritrea province was defeated by the EPLF, a separatist group that fought for nearly 30-years for the secession of Eritrea, and of course the Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF), an umbrella ofarmed groups made up of multi-ethnic political movements as Tigrai Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) it's central component. Lt. General Tesfaye signed a decree to release about 383 civilian and military political prisoners.

May 22, 1991: Captain Legesse Asfaw Polit-Bureau member of the rulingWorkers Party of Ethiopia (WPE), one of Mengistu's protégés fled to southern part, but to be arrested unsuccessfully on the run by state security plainclothes.

May 23, 1991: The second Revolutionary Army units under Majour- General Hussein Ahmed surrendred to the Eritrean Peoples Liberation Front rebel forces in Eritrea, and the commander the armed troops had fled to Saudi Arabia, seeking refuge.

May 23,1991: The statue of Lenin errected infront of the United Nations Economc Commssion for Africa (UNECA) in Addis Ababa being demolishedby the discontented public, in the appearance of EPRDF combatant forcesat doorsteps of Addis Ababa making the fall of Duerg regime real.

May 24, 1991: Eritrea liberated in de-facto, and establishes it's own provisional government pending "Referendum on Independence"withintwo years.

Side note: When the Eritrean Peoples Liberation Front (EPLF) seized control of the whole Eritrea, quickly undertook ethnic cleansing as to revenge tens of thousands of Ethiopians living in Eritrea as civilian and military personnel by expelling and confiscating their properties and to dismantle any pro-Ethiopian sentiments eg. statues, monuments, street names etc. The callousness of the way they were expelled was a shockingact to say the least. The EPLF thugs response when was confronted aboutthe tragedy was: "they were thieves, robbers or liars etc". The EPLF had taken precautions to conceal this deadly act from international human rights organizations and the news media. Today, many Ethiopians are unable to recover from the EPLF's nightmare. The ruling-EPRDF administration neither officially complained nor retaliated this sadening ethnic cleansing and inhuman atrocity.

May 24, 1991: Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF)combatants bypassed the capital Addis Ababa and captured the airbase inDebre-zeit, EPRDF forces advanced on Addis Ababa and the Soviet Union did notintervene to save the government side. Mengistu fled the country toasylum in Zimbabwe, where he still resides.

It's well recognized that the EPRDF is a set comprising four elements: TPLF (Tigray Peoples Liberation Front), OPDO (Oromo People's DemocraticOrganization), ANDM (Amhara National Democratic Movement), and SEPDM (Southern Ethiopian People's Democratic Movement). TPLF has liberated Tigray a year ago and has since become the central component of EPRDF to date; of the three others two are ‘Democratic Movements’ and one is an Organization still under the dominant mercy of the TPLF in orderto determine their future.

May 25, 1991: The London peace negotiation mediated by under US Senator Rudy Boschwitz and his deputy top diplomat on african affairs under George H.W Bush has said the aim for the London peace negotiation is to far form a transitional process involved by the warring parties the Eritrean Peoples Liberation Front (EPLF), the Ethiopian PeoplesRevolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF), the Oromo Liberation Front (OLF), and the Workers Party of Ethiopia (WPE), but the shrinking Duerg-regime delegation under prime minister Tesfaye Dinqua which was intended to broker an end to the Ethiopian civil war, unsuccessfully withdrew when the deputy mediator Mr. Herman Jay Cohen blesses the EPRDF combatant forces to softly land in Addis Ababa. And the Red Sea coast and many peripheral territories were blessed to new Eritrea. This has not only angered the Ethiopian people, but has surprised the global community at large.

A Transitional draft Charter which was drafted earlier month, presented atthe “London peace conference” from which All Ethiopian Socialist Movement (MEISON), Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Party (EPRP) and the Workers Party of Ethiopia (WPE) were excluded. But there were other organizations who participated on the conference.

Side note; Mr. Herman Cohen was the top US diplomat, who facilitated therebel EPRDF takeover as well as a referendum for the break-away region of Eritrea during peace talks in London. The conference was supposed to explore ways to set-up a transitional government in Ethiopia, but it's proceedings were soon overtaken by changing evnts. The talks in London hardly gotten underway when Mr. Herman Cohen received a message thatthe Ethiopian acting-president Tesfaye Gebre-kidan informed Mr. Herman Cohen, the mediator, the US assistant secretary of state for African affairsat the time, that he could no longer control the situation. Lt. General Tesfaye Gebre kidan found his government falling apart when soldiers shoot eachother in towns, and had lost control of the government's remaining armed units and the city of Addis Ababa was threatened with a complete breakdown of law and order as the EPRDF combatants were marching to seize Addis Ababa. To prevent uncontrolled destruction and looting, the mediator recommended that the marching EPRDF combatant forces immediately move into Addis Ababa to softly land. The Duerg's delegation under prime minister Tesfaye Dinqua strenously objected the move speaking from a weak postion, and could not prevail. He eventually walked out of the meeting, and the London conference continued the next day in his absence. However, he reportedly told journalists on the conclusion that he facilitated the rebel EPRDF takeover as well as a referendum for the break-away region of Eritrea during peace talks in the London negotition, saying that he was acting in the interests of restoring stability in the sub-region, but warned Ethiopia's new leaders should not expect international co-operation without democracy and rule of law, he “feels no regret for what he commits". According to western diplomats, Mr. Herman Cohen is “rightly hanged on the passing train".

May 25, 1991: The 14 Ethiopian Navy ships capable of putting to sea fledAssab, ten of steaming them to Yemen and the others to Saudi Arabia, leaving behind seven ships and a variety of small craft. Assab fell to the EPLF soon after.
May 25, 1991: After announcing a unilateral cease-fire, General Tesfaye Guebre-Kidan fled for his safety into the Italian embassy of Addis Ababa,remained as virtual prisoner until he died in a quarrel with fellow Duerg official.
May 26, 1991: Brigadier General Getachew Shibeshi, commander of theSouthern Revolutionary Army command one of Colonel Mengistu's righthand men committed suicide, somewhere in the ex-Sidamo administrative region in southern Ethiopia.
May 26, 1991: Colonel Hailu Yimenu, the former acting prime minister of Peoples Democratic Republic of Ethiopia (PDRE) from 8th November, 1989to late May-1991 who shortly after succeeded by Tesfaye Dinqua, after hearing of Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam's fall from power, he fled to the Italian embassy in Addis Ababa, along with Lieutenant General Tesfaye Guebre Kidan, Foreign Minister Berhanu Bayeh and Addis Tedla, Chief of General Staff, Hailu committed suicide after only a short time in the embassy compound while the other two remained at the embassy for years.
May 28, 1991: The Dawnfall of the Duerg regime & the rebel EPRDFcomes to power.
Side note: The Duerg regime under the disguise of PDRE was overthrown by a combined force of rebels led by the Ethiopian Peoples' Revolutionary Front (EPRDF) following 17 years bloody struggle.The struggle was necessary not least because of the terror that the military junta unleashedon the people, but also because of the repressive policies that deepened the age old underdevelopment and poverty. By its infamous “Red Terror Campaign” the military junta killed thousands, mainly students and workers, triggering massive exodus of the survivors. Moreover, its socialist economic policies that did not allow private investment led to economic stagnation and shortages of all consumers goods.
May 29, 1991: 27 hours after the seizure of the capital, the EPRDF combatant forces had brutally killed about nine youngsters whose were rushed out to demonstrate infront of the United States embassy in AddisAbaba.

May 31, 1991: Dire Dawa was occupied by the EPRDF combatant forces.There were reports of about 100 people killed resisting the EPRDF takeover of the city.

In the following weeks the EPRDF combatant forces subsequently pushed deep into central, eastern and southern parts of the country, and assumedfull control of the capital, Addis Ababa. The rebel forces have dismantled all the Duerg military aparatus except the civilian structures.
Editor’s Diaries: The military Duerg regime turned PDRE under the Workers Party of Ethiopia (WPE) whos Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam it’s general secretary, was finally toppled by a coalition of forces under theumbrella of the Ethiopian Peoples' Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF). The EPRDF combatant forces have controlled Addis Ababa and the national Radio station when the fighting continues in other parts of thecountry, but not say to claim outright deposition of the Duerg regime as told.

It has to be recalled that, the Duerg, (basically a military ruling council), led by Major Mengistu Haile Mariam, came to power after ousting the last Solomonic dynasty monarchial head, Emperor Haile Selassie I. The formeremperor Haile Selassie I reigned Ethiopia from November, 1930 to September, 1974. Between 1974 and 1991, the country was plagued by ahost of both man-made and natural disasters that included war and famine. In the mid-1980s, the world took notice of the ordinary Ethiopian's plight in the most traumatic manner when famous muscians came together for the purpose of raising money to wage the hungry.

June 2, 1991: The eastern Ethiopian city of Dire Dawa which had been under government control, para-troops were surrendered to the EPRDFcombatant forces.

The rebel turned leader Meles Zenawi in his first appearance as rebel turned leader addressed a nationwide televised speech from “Queen of Sheeba Hall” of the Ghion Hotel, and this time he made his first news conference to the nation waiting anxiously for freedom of expression. Meles in his first and openly interview with reporters told he comes to power to set free Ethiopian nations and nationalities from the pseudo bondage of Amhara rule. The rebel-turned leader repeatedly defended his policy of the Eritrean independence by asserting that a “military option” was not a realistic solution after 30 years of struggle by Eritrean Peoples Liberation Front (EPLF). It has to be recalled that Mr. Zenawi addressed a number of press conferences later on declaring that war with Eritrea wouldcarry too high a political and economic risk for the nation. Meantime, the rebel turned leader Meles Zenawi soon addressed the nation through national Radio/TV quoted as saying, "our fellow countrymen the era of thebrutal military regime is over, now is the begining of a new chapter. It's an era of unfettered freedom, our 17-years long armed struggle has completely destroyed tyranny, which will never come-back to terrorise and haunt you again, “never .. never", the then provisional Ethiopian president announced, the EPRDF provisional government issued a transition period to democracy was launched in earnest that would transform Ethiopia for the better. The promise was undoutedly too good tobe true, then at first the EPRDF-led government allowed a degree of pressfreedom, a multi-party democracy, and of course to a privatisation of some State-owned enterprises. But as rigged elections and mass arrests of journalists, after twenty years now have now continued once again, as fascinating story in Ethiopia since the fall of the Duerg regime in May- 1991, freedom democracy, equality and justice were loudly expressed by the new rulers when they appeared in towns as rebel fighters.

However as a matter of speculation and debate, Mr. Meles Zenawi, a former guerilla in a rebel TPLF, was born in Eritrea and became to Adwa district of Ethiopia as a fourth grade schoolchild, and lived as an student inGeneral Wingate School-campus in Addis Ababa, but after brief hiatus in Eritrea, he joined the TPLF, but was not in the leadership of the TPLF on the 18th of February, 1975, when the Front formally launched the armed struggle, but he was befriended with those who became members of the CC in the first year and became one of the protagonists who could influence the aims and activities of the Front, before he was officially being a member of the CC, then he got rid of his actual and potential contenders within the CC and the Polit-Bureau, and began a quick politicalrise within the Front. The absolute of Meles Zenawi in the Polit-Bureau of the TPLF led automatically to his absolute power in the TPLF-EPRDF, in Tigrai and then in the whole Ethiopia.

June 4, 1991: The eastern Ethiopian town of Harrar captured by EPRDFcombatant forces after government troops have been surrendered to EPRDF combatant forces.

Meanwhile, four government held locations namely, Habro, Webera, Gursum, and Gara-Muletta became under control of the rebelled Oromo Liberation Front (OLF) Government troops stationed in various localities ofBale Administrative region had effectively controlled over the area until the 2nd June until a peaceful transfer of the area have been made.
The rebel Oromo Liberation Front (OLF) combatants were seized the Wabelocalities of Bale region before the EPRDF forces fully control the area.

June 4, 1991:Explosion of Munition Depots In metro Addis Ababa Ammunition depots in various corners of Addis Ababa, namely at Gotteraand Sheik Hojelle-Meda, and Dukham (Dalotta) main armament depots were all being imploded at the same time, it’s well recognized that was done by the attacking joint EPRDF/EPLF forces.

June 6, 1991: EPRDF is made up of ethnic movements, all those craftedskillfully in the mirror of the divine master, the TPLF, which is still the central component of the ruling-EPRDF.
The marching EPRDF joined by several other ethnic-oriented political groups to change it's name to a coalition of multi-ethnic Front. Tamirat Laine as leader of the Ethiopian Peoples Democratic Movement (EPDM), asgeneral-secretary of EPDM, a member organization of the EPRDF-coalition,appointed acting-prime minister of the "provisional-EPRDF government".
June 8, 1991: The Ogaden Somali region of Ethiopia, and the former Sidamo province were fully at the hands of government troops until thedate..The areas were fully controlled after government para-troops voluntarily surrendered to EPRDF combatants.

Qabridahare located at the centre of Ogadien, became capital of the newEthiopian Somali Regional State during which time the Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) combatant forces liberated thecountry, Stunned by a defeat that was never supposed to happen, the Duerg officials, whose larger than life reputations had become part of the public legend, stood humbly in line to give-up themselves to the victors. No sight, before or since, amazed the Ethiopian public more, only the one of the 109 members of the Duerg, namely General Haile Meles, who now lives in New Zealand, defied the new regime of the EPRDF, by melting intohis home-region of North-Gondar and trying to organise an armed resistance, but that's with lack of external support, and he was doomed almost from the start. And for the past twenty years top Duerg members have remained in prison, reflecting on their past and the terrible consequences of their reign, with Eritrea minus Ethiopia too. Their controversial delay of trial and charge of genocide, the trial lasted more than fifteen years, culminating in the death sentences of eighteen of them.

Mid-June, 1991: Mulu Alem Abebe, a rebel fighter turned “24th Interim-Mayor of Addis Ababa”, assassinated with a bomb blast in his Bahar-Darresidence, the motives for his death remain unexplained, but as many suspected, it was a result of a foul play within the ruling-EPRDF.

Colonel Mengistu’s ignominious flight to the Zimbabwean capital, Harare,many members of the Imperial family have since returned to live in Ethiopia.

Cargo Ship Messers Vessel “Queen of Sheeba”, boarded with over 15sailors, sought for political asylum at the Norwegian port city of Kristiansand.

A high-level U.S. delegation was arrived in Addis Ababa at the eve of the July 1 to 5 to attend a transitional conference that established transitionalprocess in Ethiopia.

July 2, 1991: A multi-party and multi-ethnic conference kicked to far-forma broader transitional coalition “Transitional Government of Ethiopia (TGE)”. at the Africa Hall in Addis Ababa.

Side note: In Ethiopia, a transitional government came into power in July,1991 which until then EPRDF led a one month Provisional Government in the wake of a protracted and destructive civil war. After the pro-Soviet Duerg regime of Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam was unseated . The new Transitional Government of Ethiopia (TGE), led by the Ethiopian People’s Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) – presided by the rebel turned leader Meles Zenawi largely formed from the Tigrean People’s Liberation Front (TPLF) – had committed itself to far-reaching “free market reforms”, despite its leaders’ Marxist leanings. United States soontagged Ethiopia alongside Uganda as Africa’s post Cold War free market showpiece.

Having defeated the Ethiopian armed forces deployed in the former Ethiopian province of Eritrea, the so called Eritrean Peoples Liberation Front (EPLF) attended at an observer level and held talks with the new Transitional Government of Ethiopia regarding Eritrea's future relationshipwith Ethiopia. The outcome of those talks was an agreement in which the Ethiopians recognized the right of the Eritreans to hold a popular referendum on their independence. The TPLF led regime was catapulted topower armed to the teeth with modern weapons of war provided by the Libyan leader Colonel Muammar Al-Quadhaffi coupled with supply of intelligence about the military movements of the Duerg regime, which thewestern powers wanted to revenge for its ideological leaning to the left and its anti-USA stance – all due to the political immaturity of the Ethiopian head of state Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam who had brokenat a public rally bundle of bottles filled with liquids of red ink condemning the American imperialism. The US and UK governments in revenge to Mengistu's bluff kept the TPLF & EPLF warlords in power by direct financial and intelligence support.

During the transitional conference it was then rumored about and read on newspaper articles here and there on the support of the Americans to the former dictator Mengistu Hailemariam as helping hand to send him out of the country but did not realise the extent to which they were involved in setting up the transitional government: "the Americans had a heavy hand in the drafting of the transitional Charter. Herman Cohen, Irvin Hicks (wholater becomes America's ambassador to Ethiopia) and some uniformed military personnel, were in the conference in the African Hall overseeing the entire proceedings to ensure that everything was being executed according to the proposed London peace plan… In the Conference, the Americans were intensely following the discussions, sometimes nodding when the Chairman made a remark which corresponded to the agreementreached with U.S. negotiators in London."

During the July, 1991 Charter Conference it was observed that and somehow assesed: "Meles Zenawi appeared on the stage from behind thecurtain and said…'May I have nomination for the chairmanship of this conference…There was a moments of silence. The Silence continued for afew more moments….. Bulcha Demeksa an exiled politician who attendedthe session raised his hand and the Provisional President Meles Zenawi recognized him. Bulcha proposed that the Secretary-General of the TPLF and Provisional President of Ethiopia could be the Chairman of such Conference. Meles did wait for other nominations, but there was none….. Asked by reporters in later times whether 'he nominated him to be the Transitional President of Ethiopia." Bulcha replied actually he did not.
Bulcha has claimed and felt sad that Ethiopia has been landlocked becauseof "TPLF/EPRDF" refusal to stand for it.
"The rebel EPLF leader Issaias Affeworki also wanted the conference to recognize the right that the Port of Assab belongs to Eritrea, but Ethiopia could have the right to refuse. This dramatically changed during the latterEthio-Eritrean War of 1998. At this point, it was clear thally t the Americans wanted the issue of Assab separately. Logically the issue of Assab might have not the subject to be openly discussed separately. In other words, they wanted Ethiopians to make their case to, at least, have the right to the use of Assab. But unfortunately, at the moment, there wasno strong representative of Ethiopia to fight for the right to use port of Assab. Of course, the TPLF were all for Eritrea taking Assab without any condition attached to it. Ethiopia could have negotiated an internationally binding agreement to use the port of Assab. Ethiopia had no representative government at the Conference." Some of the Conference participants who were supposed to support Ethiopia's interest on the issueof Assab port had declined to defend it. "When the agenda item of Assab came up for debate, the Ethiopian voice was remained weak. Dr.Asrat Woldeyes the renowned surgeon who represented the AAU academic community, abstains from voting the proposed Referendum process for Ethiopia's former province of Eritrea, and he spoke and defended the rightof Ethiopia to use the port of Assab

The July Peace Conference deliberated and decided on several important issues. The following were the main resolutions of the conference: a) adoption of a Transitional Charter, b) Establishment of a Transitional Government on the bases of the Transitional Charter, c) The Charter provided that the Right to Self-Determination of the different Nations, Nationalities in Ethiopia including g and up establishing independent statesof their own is guaranteed d) a referendum to ask the Eritrean people if they want independence or want to remain n united with Ethiopia e) the Ethiopian state should be decentralized and power should devolve, and forthis the state should be restructured into new administrative regions depicting the ethnic territories f) guarantee for the respect of human anddemocratic rights g) guarantee for equitable resource sharing h) guarantee that the languages and cultures of the different ethnic groups are respected and I) that the transitional government establishes a Constitution Drafting Commission to draft a constitution which should be adopted as quickly as possible and that a provides for the establishment of a democratic and united Ethiopia but which respects the right to self- determination.

Soon after the Conference, the Transitional Government of Ethiopia (TGE)was established on August 15th, 1991. The government established a House of Peoples' Representatives in which most of the representatives ofthe organizations which participated on the July Peace. Conference were delegated. The Chairman of the TPLF, Meles Zenawi became the speaker of the House and Head of State while Tamrat Layne, Chairman of EPDM became the Prime Minister. A Council of Ministers was established under the leadership of the Prime Minister. The EPRDF army became the National Defense Force, headed by Seeye Abraha of the TPLF, the chief ofthe EPRDF army. The achievements of the TGE were 1) carrying out of election to establish the new regional administrations 2) see to it that theEritrean referendum takes place and Eritrea becomes independent 3) the establishment of the Constitution Drafting Commission, carry out electionfor the Constituent Assembly and adoption of the Constitution of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia in end of 1994. 4) Carry out election for the establishment of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia in August 1995 in accordance with the new constitution.

At the last day of the session, Transitional Government of Ethiopia (TGoE)composed of 87-member Council of Representatives and guided by a national charter that functioned as a transitional constitution, was set up.The Oromo Liberation Front (OLF), which had fought the Duerg regime independently, and others joined it. And a House of People's Representatives (HoPR) with 87 seats formed under the rebel turned leader Meles Zenawi, as it's president.

Meantime, a new Somali Regional state known as “Gobolka-Soomaalida” was created in the eastern most of Ethiopia under the newly arranged Ethnic-Federalism. Ethiopian Somali regional state is one of the nine ethnic divisions of Ethiopia, coincided with the collapse of “Somalia” duringthe civil war in early 1991, exactly one month after the liberation of Ethiopia. The neighbouring Somalia and Ethiopian are historical rivals, andhave been fighting each other on and off for centuries, with Somali zealots, inspired by Islam, periodically launching raids on predominantly Christian Ethiopia- or so the Ethiopians have long complained. Many Somalis resent Ethiopia’s sovereignty over the ethnic-Somali region of the Ogaden. The vain theory of "Soomaliwein" meaning for "Greater Somalia” was adopted in “Somalia” by ethnic-Marahaan administration in Mogadishou led by the corrupted Mohammed Siad Barre’s SSRC regime.

This theory is based on territory expansion policy, where Ethiopia andKenya must give up parts of their lands that has inhabited by Somali ethnic groups, the 5th Region of Ethiopia & Northern Frontier District (NFD) of Kenya. According to the theory "Soomaliwein" meaning for “Greater Somalia”, Djibouti, Somaliland, “Somalia”, 5th Region of Ethiopia and National Frontier District (NFD) of Kenya must unite under one administration with Mogadishou as its official capital. An attack on Ethiopia in July, 1977 by Somali National Forces (SNF) ended disastrously; an Ethiopian counter- offensive backed by Cuban ex-South Yemen troops wrecked Somalia’s army for once and for all and led to it's final collapse in January,1991 of the last Somali regime to control the whole country. Somali (Af-Soomali):is a member of the East Kushetic branch of the Afro-Asiatic language family. It's nearest related languages are Afari and Oromiffa languages ofEthiopia. Somal is known for it's bestly documented in Cushetic languageswith academic studies beginning before 1900. It's widely spoken in Somalia Ethiopia, Kenya, Djibouti, and somehow in Yemen.

The Genesis of Article 39: Article 2 of the July 1991 Transitional Charter In reality, article 39 refines article 2 of the 1991 transition charter, a charter in effect co-authored by the OLF, EPLF, and TPLF. Under the rubric of “democratic rights”, article 2 of the charter states that: “The right of nations, nationalities and peoples to self-determination is affirmed. To thisend, each nation, nationality and people is guaranteed…. To exercise its right to self-determination or independence, when the concerned nation/nationality and people is convinced that the above rights are denied, abridged or abrogated.” More importantly, people familiar with theissue indicate that the EPLF’s constitutional experts were instrumental in drafting the constitution for Ethiopia, “…the three distinct groups – the EPLF, TPLF, and the OLF worked very hard to put together a covenant” “According to the OLF sources, the EPLF was also heavily involved in the process which resulted in the draft document, and the three organizationsspent some time, hammering out the details” (በስተሃላ ላይ እንደ ኢትዮጵያ ሕግ መንግስት የተወሰደውይሄ ቻርተር፣ በአዲስ አበባ ኮንፍራንስ በኢትዮጵያ ዉያኖች እንደጸደቀ ቢነገርም፣ በተሰነይ/ኤርትራ፣ በአቶ ኢሳያስ አፈወርቂ፣ አቶ መለስ ዜናዊና አቶ ሌንጮለታ በተቋቋመውእና ኤርትራዊዉ ዶር በረከት ሃብተስላሴ በሚመሩት ግብረ ኃይል አስቀድሞ የተዘጋጀ እንደሆነ ይታወሳል፣ የሕገ መንግስት አርቃቂ ኮሚሽን፣ በቻርተሩ የተቀመጠዉን ፌዴራል አወቃቀርና የመገንጠል መብትን እንዳለ በሕገ መንስግቱ ዉስጥ እንዲካተት በማድረግ ፣ ቻርተሩ “የኢ.ፌ.ዲ.ሪ ሕገ መንግስት” የሚል ሽፋን ተሰጥቶት፣ ኢ-ዴሞክራሲያዊና ኢ-ፍትሃዊ በሆነ መንገድ በስተሃላ ላይ የአገሪቷ ሕግ እንዲሆን ተደረገ።) (Text ends)

July 13, 1991: Abba Zena-Markos elected as Interim Patriarch entitled as“Abune Zena-Markos Patriarch (Aquabe-Menber) of EOTC”.

Mid-July, 1991: The TPLF led Transitional government starts to dismantle state structure and state machinery of previous regime. This is a typical Marxist-Leninist theory translated into practice. It was a radical and fundamental transformation of the society. According to Marxist teaching social revolutions to be successful there should be a transfer of state power from one class to another. In Ethiopian case, a complete transfer ofpower took place from one dominant ethnic group to another emerging dominant ethnic group. A radical transfer of state power took place from then ruling Amhara elites to Tigrean elites. A Tigrean ethnic group emerged as undisputed dominant ruling ethnic group in Ethiopian politics.The Ethiopian state structure and state machinery of previous regime were completely smashed and Ethiopia divide into 9 ethnic based regionalstates (Killils), 1 City Administration (Addis Ababa) and 1 city Administratve council (Dire Dawa). Killil 1: Tigrai National Regional State – capital Mequelle, Killil 2: Afar Regional State – capital Semera, Killil 3: Amhara National Regional State – capital Bahir Dar, Killil 4: Oromia National Regional State – capital (Finfine/Adama), Killil 5: Ethiopia-SomaliRegional State (ESRS) – capital Kabridhare, Gode, and later JigJiga, Southern Nations Nationalities Peoples Regional State (SNNPRS): consistsof 5 regions (regions 7, 8, 9, 10, 11) and about 47 Nations & Nationalities

- It’s capital Hawassa, Killil 6: Benishngul Gumuz Regional State – capital Assosa, Killil 13: Harrari Regional State – capital Harrar, Killil 12: Gambella Regional State – capital Gambella, killil 14: Addis Ababa, Chartered City Administration: Dire Dawa, Special Administrative Council Mid-July, 1991: The renowned Surgeon Professor Asrat Woldeyes becomes an active critic of the EPRDF government, particularly of Meles Zenawi’s formation of new autonomous regions in Ethiopia after the multi-party and multi-ethnic conference of 2nd July. After the fall of the Duerg it has also been an overt policy of the regime and its allies. Evictions, killings, ethnic cleansing in some parts of the country in the guise of population control, depravation and derogatory actions against the Amhara has been carried out indiscriminately. As recent example, SebhatNega a leading TPLF cadre has boasted as saying “we have broken the back of the Amharas and the Ethiopian Orthodox Church”.

Side note;- Professor Asrat Woldeyes In the followed year formed his ownpolitical party, “All Amhara Peoples Organization (AAPO)”, with a central tenet of restoring Ethiopian unity. He was then jailed by the Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) by the TGE. Dr. Asrat Woldeyes was successive Ethiopia's most distinguished surgeon, physician, and former professor of medicine at Addis Ababa University, prior to that he had served as the late emperor’s personal physician until the former emperor’s death of August, 1975. After the death of the formeremperor he was jailed by the Duerg regime, but later continues teaching and practicing medicine throughout successive rules.

In mid-July 1991: "Moa Anbessa", Amharic meaning for "The ConqueringLion", refers to a political party made up of Ethiopians who support a constitutional monarchy. The party was created by exiled titular emperorAmha Selassie I to operate as the political wing of the crown. Moa- Anbessa (The conquering Lion), a political party made-up of a group of sympathisers for constitutional monarchy, but many grieve it’s not moreactive these days as it once was.

In August, 1991: Ethiopia remains certainly "landlocked nation", and theRed Sea port of Assab, the much closer to the Ethiopian hinterland was given away to the newly separated "State of Eritrea".

Side note;- The EPRDF with the TPLF, at its core, assume control of the other parts of Ethiopia, monopolistically controlled state-power in Ethiopia,a multi-party and multi-ethnic convention had held in July 1991, then a transitional government was formed in August, 1991 under the headship of Mr. Meles Zenawi, then 36 years old person, chose the colonial way of power-sharing with it's subservient puppets, ethnic liberation movements,those TPLF organized and created them in it's own image. Ruling parties the Tigrai People’s Liberation Front (TPLF) and the Eritrean People’s Liberation Front (EPLF), operating in a close alliance, launching a coordinated political and military operation against the Duerg regime in Addis Ababa. When the civil war came to an abrupt conclusion as a result EPLF declared Eritrea’s independence from Ethiopia while the TPLF abandoned its program of secession from Ethiopia, preferring to form a central government ruling the entire country instead of just one province of Tigray. The port of Assab became unworthy due to it's inactivity the issue of outlet to the Sea remains controversial among Ethiopians despite the government's refusal to deal with the matter. The TPLF-led coalition disbanded the defeated government armed aparatus who had perhaps been the strongest ever in sub-Saharan Africa. And then crafted an ethnic-based federalism, to the disitegration of the once poweful nation,setting a way for call of transformation of the northern region of Tigrai into an independent country through an expansionist policy designed as the "Greater Tigrai Manifesto" in February, 1976. For Greater-Tigrai to become a reality, Meles Zenawi and his comrades decided that they haveto "de-legitimize the Duerg" and take control of the central government and is now being systematically dis-integrated the once strong nation in the region. TPLF appropriated lands from neighbouring regions of Gondarand Wollo for Tigrai.

September 6th 1991: EOTC officially announced that His Holiness Abuna Markorios, Patriarch of EOTC removed in health reason. The removal of hisHoliness Abuna Markorios, remains disputable and uncannonical.

In October, 1991: It has to be recalled that the 60 former imperial officials, victims of the Duerg regime were all buried in a mass grave with their hands tied as evidence later proved following exhumation of their remains. The exhumation and reburial of the remains of the 60 victims ceremoniousely held. In Addis Ababa. Remains of the late former Mayor ofAsmara city under the Imperial regime, the honorable Dejazmatch Haregot Abbay have been sent back to Asmara, his native birthplace for reburial.

Side note;- Dejazmatch Haregot Abbay KCVO (Knight Commander of the Victorian Order) (1909-1979) was an Eritrean businessman and politician.He was member of political party known as “Mahber Fikre Hager” (Societyfor Love of Country) in Eritrea in the late 1940s. In 1952, following the Federation of Eritrea with Ethiopia, he was elected as a member of the newly created Eritrean Assembly. During the early days of the Federation (1952–55) he served in the positions of Director of Interior, Secretary of Justice and Secretary of Economy. In 1963, a year after the Federation ended and Eritrea was annexed by Ethiopia, he was appointed as the Mayor of Asmara (then the second largest city in Ethiopia) 1963 to 1974. In 1974 with the onset of military dictatorship Duerg in Ethiopia he was imprisoned in Addis Abeba along with most of former Imperial officials of Emperor Haile Selassie I, most of them regional governors, many senior military officers and other dignitaries here in 1979, he was killed by the military dictatorship in Ethiopia.

December 1991: UN ARCHIEVES: The Eritrea Case at the UN & The Forceof The Unionists.

Analytical comment by Aleme Eshete: EPRDF's so-called "National Conference" of July, 1991, attended by hand-picked individuals who hadno popular mandate, approved the separation of Eritrea from Ethiopia. EPLF's Secretary General Issayas Afeworki, who had attended the meetingas an observer, had accepted to hold a "referendum" in Eritrea within two years. But what kind of a referendum is this? A referendum presupposes the existence of divergent views and opinions on important public issues. Existing differences of views and opinions are expected to be debated freely among the public and representative organizations before voting onthe issue. EPLF's Issayas Afeworki denies these essential attributes of referendum. Issayas and other EPLF leaders proclaim that everybody in Eritrea wants independence. Why call for a referendum where there is no opposition? EPLF has a monopoly on power for two years leading to the referendum. No other party or political organization will be allowed inside

Eritrea in preparation for the referendum. Why fear other political parties if all Eritreans favor independence? What is the sense of a "referendum" inthe absence of freedom of opinion, of organization and a free press? Whatis the meaning of a referendum in a one-party dictatorial system?
Referenda are incompatible with dictatorships. A referendum under a dictatorship does not express the wishes of the people but the orders of the dictator. Unionists both inside Eritrea and in the rest of Ethiopia shouldbe able to engage in free political activity and to express their deep sentiments regarding the free union of the people of Eritrea with the rest of Ethiopia. Both Ato Meles Zenawi and Ato Issayas Afeworki have attempted at the July 1991 Conference to undermine the aspirations of the Unionists in Eritrea. Ato Issayas Afeworki claims to have a mysterious document which will prove that the majority of Eritreans wanted independence and not federation with Ethiopia: We have hard facts, historical facts... The fact that the population was not consulted on its right and destiny and the findings which prove that all the political groups within the Independence Bloc represented more than 75 percent of the population prove that their rights were trampled upon. These historical truths are recorded in historical archives and could be consulted..."
The historical documents on the federation of Ethiopia and Eritrea tell a different story. They show Mahbere Fekri Hager, (Association of Love of Country) the Eritrean Unionist movement which championed union with Ethiopia, later named Ye-Ertrana Ye-Ethiopia Andinet Mahber (Associationof Union of Eritrea with Ethiopia) established as early as 1941, was by farthe earliest political movement in Eritrean history. The Unionist Association had its headquarters in Asmera and a number of branch offices in different parts of Eritrea. Further, Mahbere Fekri Hager had its own newspaper called "The Voice of Eritrea" published in Tigrigna and circulated throughout Eritrea. According to one authoritative source:
By 1942 every [Orthodox Christian] priest [in Eritrea] had become a propagandist in the Ethiopian cause; every village Church had become a center of Ethiopian nationalism, and popular religious feast days such as "Maskal" (the feast of the Cross) had become occasions for open displaysof Ethiopian patriotism. The Cathedral, monasteries, and village churcheswould be festooned with Ethiopian flags, and the sermons and prayers would be delivered in unequivocal political language...
British Military Administration In Eritrea (BMAE 1941 to 1952) ARCHIEVES: Mussolini decided to join the war on the side of Hitler on June10, 1940. British Somaliland had always been concerned by the establishment and military expansion of Fascist Italian imperialism in the Horn of Africa since 1935. Hence the attack by British forces (joined by Ethiopian patriots including Eritreans) against Fascist Italian troops in Eritrea in 1941. The British had won the war and occupied Asmera on April1, 1941. This ended 50 years of Italian colonial rule in Eritrea. The British military administration of Eritrea lasted until 1952. The British had severalprojects for Eritrea in order to advance their own colonial schemes in East Africa. Whatever Issayas and Meles may say, the British were not pro- Ethiopia or pro-Unionist. Following British occupation Eritrea and a good part of Ethiopia, there were serious clashes that lasted several years between the restored Emperor's government at Addis Abeba and the British. The clashes occurred in Eritrea, Ogaden, Harrar and Tigrai. IndeedBritish colonial circles coveted Ethiopian independence and wanted to treatthe Emperor a puppet protege thus creating bitter resistance and friction. John H. Spencer, who was the Foreign Affairs adviser of the Ethiopian Government during those crucial years and who had personally participated at the negotiations with the Big Four in London, Paris, and later at the United Nations and whose book, Ethiopia at Bay (1987) deals mainly with this subject, has written: "The Military Administration in Eritrea was by no means sympathetic to the Unionist movement there." Documents supporting similar arguments are found in the British Foreign Office archives at the Public Records Office of Kew Gardens (London).

The Four Powers Commission:

ARCHIEVES: On September 3, 1943 Italy pulled out of the Second WorldWar by signing an armistice with the Four Big Powers. Article 23 of the peace treaty contained three important provisions:

1) Italy agreed to renounce its rights in all her former colonies in Africa,including Eritrea;

2) The fate the former Italian colonies will be taken by the US, France, Great Britain and the Soviet Union within a year of the coming into forceof the peace treaty; and

3) If the Four Powers were unable to agree the matter will be taken by theUnited Nations.

Eventually, a Four Powers Commission of Investigation was established inorder to visit Eritrea and ascertain the political wishes of the people regarding the future of Eritrea. The principal procedures the commission adopted to assess the wishes of the Eritreans were to invite organizationsand individuals to present written declarations about the future of Eritrea and then conduct interviews with the principal organizations and individuals including representatives of the political parties which then numbered five --the Unionist Party, the Muslim League, the Progressive Liberal Party, the Pro-Italian Party, the National Moslem Party of Massawa). The procedures also included interview with leaders of social, religious and professional organizations; and visits to villages and industrial plants to interview the populations directly in order to ascertain declarations made by leaders or representatives. The Commission and later the United Nations Commission for Eritrea have observed the poor level of political consciousness of Eritrea's peasant society which had beensubjected to centuries of feudal oppressive obscurantism and then fifty years of an equally oppressive and racist colonial regime. This was the first time in the whole history of the region that a people had ever been asked to participate democratically in shaping their own future without ever having had any previous experience at democratic processes.

This pioneering process had its short-comings. It would not have been much different if the Four Power Commission or that the United Nations called their investigation a "referendum," as Meles Zenawi and Issayas arenow pointing out. Under the circumstances and with all their shortcomings the investigations of the Four Power Commission and later of the United Nations Commission were certainly much freer and much more democratic, with so varied political and social organizations allowed to air their opinions freely, than the present so called "referendum" conducted inthe absence of elementary liberties of expression and of organization. TheFour Powers disagreed on the interpretation of the voluminous material collected in the process of investigation. There were differences between the West and the USSR. The Soviet Union's position regarding the disposalof Eritrea has not always been pro-independence. Trevaskis wrote: “The Russians were cynically opportunists. At first they proposed quite simply that the spoils of the war should be divided between the victors. They demanded a trusteeship of Tripolitania for themselves, and suggested thatthe US and Britain should have trusteeships in other territories... The French opposed the Unionists. This had nothing to do with Eritrea but withFrench opposition to Ethiopia having its own sea ports following union withEritrea. Whereas even the Soviets accepted Ethiopia's right of access to the Red Sea, the French who in their colony of Djibouti controlled the Ethiopian import-export trade through the Addis Abeba-Djibouti railway.

They wanted to see Ethiopia remain land- locked and dependent onDjibouti.”
The UN Commission for Eritrea (1950-1952):
ARCHIVES: Following the failure of the Four Powers Commission to reachagreement on the Eritrean issue, the U.N. took up the issue. Bringing theEritrean issue to the United Nations meant introducing new elements, particularly Italy, but also the Muslim-Arab countries. To the disappointment of the Ethiopian delegation, the Fourth Session of the General Assembly of the United Nations (Autumn 1949) was unable to reach agreement on the basis of the findings of the Four Powers Commission, mainly due to Italian opposition. Italian colonial interest hadbeen revived since the Peace Treaty of 1947 (article 23) by which it had accepted "to renounce all rights and titles to all her former colonies in Africa."
Italy was now fighting for a return of Libya, Somalia, and possibly to Eritrea in one form or another. The so called Bevin-Sforza agreement between Ernest Bevin, the British Foreign Minister and Count Sforza, theItalian Foreign Minister had been adopted by a U.N. Committee in May 1949. According to that proposal Italy was to be granted trusteeships inSomalia and Tripolitania (part of Libya); that Cyrenaica (the remaining part of Libya) should become independent after a period of British trusteeship. Eritrea was to be partitioned between Ethiopia and Sudan.
The western Moslem lowlands were to go to Sudan and the Eritrean highlands as well as the eastern maritime coastal plains were to merge incomplete union with Ethiopia as demanded by the Unionists. An anti- Italian riot in Tripolitania buried the Bevin-Sforza plan at the U.N. Italy now concentrated its attention on Somalia and Eritrea. And although it was not even a member of the United Nations, Italy was canvassing largesupport particularly among the Latin American countries. Through such lobby Italy had finally been allowed to return to Somaliland as a U.N.trustee.

In spite of the activities of the Pro-Italy Party formed just in time for interviews with the Four Power Commission, the Italo-Eritrean Association(largely made up of half-castes) and the Veterans Association of former banda or soldiers who had enrolled within the Italian Fascist army, the dimension of anti-Italian sentiments in Eritrea were so obvious that Italy had to abandon any idea of return as a trustee power. Italy had therefore to find a formula which would win international favor as well as attract support in Eritrea, against the Unionists and Ethiopia. And that is how the Italian government, supported by the colonial circles and the press both inItaly as well as in Eritrea started to fight for the immediate "independence" of Eritrea, with the idea, as Trevaskis wrote, of a nominally "independent" Eritrea dependent on Italian political control.

With this in mind the Italian government had been instrumental in arranging for the Moslem League, the Pro-Italy Party (later named New Eritrea Party) the Italo- Eritrean Association and the Veterans Associationto meet in New York during the U.N. sessions in the Spring of 1949 to form the "Independence Bloc." It was only upon their return to Eritrea that the Liberal Progressive Party and two new parties, the Independent Eritrea Party and the Intellectual Association of Eritreans, joined the Blocin order to fight the Unionists and union of Eritrea and Ethiopia.

Subsequently, the United Nations established a Commission of Investigation. The Ethiopian delegation at the United Nations felt that the UN should have decided the issue on the basis of the findings of the Four Powers Commission. It opposed the constitution of another commission ofinvestigation which it felt, according to John H. Spencer, was a "brazen attempt to gain time for creating a demand to reinstall Italy in Eritrea under the guise of independence." The Ethiopian delegation was also opposed to the selection of the delegates that made up the Commission ofInvestigation because four out of the five members (Pakistan, Guatemala,Burma and South Africa) had opposed Eritrea's union with Ethiopia at the United Nations. The Unionists were disillusioned by the U.N. in 1949. But they were not discouraged. The United Nations Commission of Investigation stayed in Eritrea between February 14 and April 10, 1950. Its method of investigation followed practically the same method as the Four Power Commission. The contest was normally going to be between the Unionist Party and the "Independence Bloc." But no sooner had the delegates of the United Nations Commission arrived in Eritrea than the Bloc started to break into its component parts. The force that had contributed to its birth, Italian hegemony, was also the fear that brought about its collapse. As Trevaskis wrote: “Within a few days of the Commission's arrival it [the Independence Bloc] was disrupted, losing more than half of its member as a result of a serious splits in the Moslem League of Eritrea and the Liberal Progressive Party... The cause of dissension was the severe distaste with which the anti-Italian wings in each party... With the break-up of the Independence Bloc the Unionist party was by far the strongest organization during the investigation of the United Nations Commission in Eritrea. So where is the 75 percent vote which the United Nations Commission, according to Issayas Afeworki, chose to disregard? The Independence Bloc had practically evaporated bythe time the U.N. Commission of Investigation had arrived in Eritrea!”

At the end of its investigation in Eritrea, the Commission was unable to accept one common report. The delegates from Burma and South Africa submitted a report recommending federation of an autonomous Eritrea with Ethiopia of Emperor Haile Selassie. The delegate from Norway, who was opposed to the idea of federation, recommended the immediate unionof Eritrea with Ethiopia. The Guatemala and Pakistani delegates opposed the union of Eritrea with Ethiopia. The U.N. General Assembly had, on December 14, 1950, voted in favor of the so called "compromise" Resolution 390 -- the Federation with Ethiopia of an autonomous Eritrea with its own democratic constitution, elected parliament and government under the sovereignty of the Ethiopian Crown, by a vote of 46 to 10. The UN Resolution 390 provided that all home affairs were to be the responsibility of the Eritrean government while the powers of the Federal government with its seat in Addis Abeba will be over foreign affairs, currency and finance, internal and foreign trade, external and interstate communications, including ports, as well as defense. The Eritrean government had power to establish a home police force, to raise taxes and establish its own budget. Customs and duties on goods entering or leaving Eritrea were to be paid to Eritrea itself. Once accepted by the contracting parties, the Resolution of the United Nations was therefore a legal, binding and valid decision to all parties concerned, and remains so. The compromise "resolution" did not please any party in Eritrea, not even the Unionists or the Government of Ethiopia both of which sought "union" and not "federation" of an autonomous Eritrea. To the Ethiopian Government of the Emperor, according to John H. Spencer, federation appeared ... to have been a concession to the dictates of pre-war Fascism.It was a Fascist formula which, at all costs, must be undone... " And it wasundone. But neither this nor the crimes of the Derg, nor the dictates of the EPLF-TPLF today in power, could invalidate the strong bond of union which bind the peoples of Ethiopia and Eritrea. Aleme Eshete, Ph.D., has been Associate Professor at Addis Abeba University. He currently resides in Italy.

February 1992: Remains of the former emperor excavated deep inside from the grand palace toilet, and over 60 remains of former imperial officials also excavated from the main Karchalle prison plots, after beingmassacred in the fateful evening of November 23, 1974. It has to be recalled that the 60 former imperial officials, victims of the ruling Duerg regime were all buried in a mass grave with their hands tied as evidencelater proved following exhumation of their remains. The exhumation andreburial of the remains of the 60 victims ceremoniousely held..

March, 1992: A National Electoral Board of Ethiopia (NEBE) founded as alabour jurist Assefa Birru Zawde at the helm.

Mid-April, 1992: Over 300 people mostly peasants and farmers were killedin Arba-Gugu and Ticho of Arsi zone, Bedeno, Chercher, and Gara-Muletta districts of former western Harrarghe region of Oromiain a politically motivated massacre . This time around the former prime minister TamiratLaine openly called for the Ethiopian Somalilanders to revenge against theAmharas within the region.

April 18, 1992: Ethiopia agrees to devalue ETB’

REUTERS: Minister for Foreign Economic Relations Abdul-Mejid Hussein said on April 16 that Ethiopia has accepted a World Bank recommendationto devalue the birr. He told Reuter the details and timing of the devaluation, the first in more than two decades, is yet to be decided. “Theprinciple has been accepted. We are committed to devalue, the birr.” The birr has been fixed at 2.07 to the U.S. dollar for more than two decades. The government has been reluctant to seek more realistic valuations fearing major economic and social problem. Abdul-Mejid added that transitional Ethiopian President Meles Zenawi had assured World Bank Vice President Edward Jaycox that the government now fully accepts the principle of a devaluated birr as part of a wider assistance package. Otherimportant elements of the World Bank and International Monetary Fund assistance package include adoption of conservative fiscal policies and a timetable for eliminating subsidies. Abdul-Mejid said he hoped negotiations on the Structural Adjustment Program (SAP) would be concluded by the end of June. In other African countries where SAPs havebeen implemented, two-tier systems valuation has resulted. Accordingly, individuals and private businesses use a rate more in line with the black market rate while official agencies use the established rate. The current black market rate is around six birr to the dollar. Official rates will gradually conform with the market rate. “On the other hand, it may betterto go to the whole way at once. Either way, the social dimensions of adjustment and the cost of it have to be agreed,” Abdul-Mejid said. He said the transitional government has calculated a “safety net” of around 1.7 billion birr ($825 million) to alleviate the effects of devaluation. April, 1992: Remains of the ex-emperor Haile Selassie were discovered.

The former emperor was assassinated and buried beneath a grand palacetoilet.

Side note: Haile Selassie's remains discovered on the attendance of western diplomats under grand palace toilet! The ex-emperor Haile Selassie's remains and skulls which discovered under Grand-palace toilet room, firmely believed that was done by the last military head of State Lt.Colonel Mengistu Hailemariam. It was dug out from palace underground toilet tunnel as western diplomats witnessed it, and was given a christian burial in the Addis Ababa Trinity Cathedral in an Orthodox faith.

May 6, 1992: Arba-Minch Textiles Mill was officially inaugurated to produce Polyester mixed with Cotton grey fabrics with an alloted budjet ofETB 193 million.

June 2, 1992: The Oromo Liberation Front (OLF) withdrew from theTransitional Government of Ethiopia. The Oromo Liberation Front withdrew from the government; in next March1993, members of the Southern Ethiopia Peoples' Democratic Coalition also left the government. Shortly, Dr. Negasso Gidada CC member of the coalition partner the Oromo People's Democratic Organisation (OPDO), has been appointed Minister of Information of the Transitional governmentreplacing Obo Dimma Nagao of the OLF.

The Oromo Liberation Front (OLF), which had fought the Duerg regime independently, briefly joined the TGE but withdrew the coalition accusing the ruling-EPRDF of trying to isolate the Oromos from the transitional process. A year into it's reign EPRDF chased the Oromo Liberation Front (OLF), a party that have spoken for Ethiopia's largest ethnic-community, the Oromos, out into the bushs when it knew that it's battle earned victory was about to be snatched in the ballots. This was followed by a year of brutal massacres bordering to genocide in Arba-Gugu and Asebot districts of Oromia. Leenco Latta, in his real name, Yohannes Latta, an outspoken Oromo veteran politician at the center of Oromo Liberation Front (OLF) known as in local Afan-Oromoo “aadda billisumma oroomo (abo)” was known in the events leading up to the formation of the Transitional Government of Ethiopia (TGE) in July, 1991. Leenco Latta, theex-leader of the OLF, has authored several books, and remains a very influential and controversial figure for his role in the Oromo Liberation Front (OLF) joining and leaving of the Transitional Government of Ethiopia, many called him “Obbo”, the Oromo equal word for “Sir”.

June 4, 1992: A political agitations in parts of Oromia by the ruling partner Oromo Peoples Democratic Organization (OPDO) members andelites flares up ethnic cleansing against the Amharas.

June 6, 1992: Paulos Gnogno or Mammo (1933-1992), the renowned historian, columnist, and Journalist, dies under hospital treatment in AddisAbaba. The legendary historian and journalist who was born in November 19, 1933 in Dire Dawa, former Harrarghe province passed away of naturalsickness at age of 56. Paulos Gno Gno who usually acknowledges that his formal education is limited to only 4th grade, remembered for his sharp social criticism, literary articles, and essays as editor-in-chief of the Amharic daily, “Addis Zemen”, a government organ.

June 9, 1992: Amhara Peoples Organization (AAPO) led by the renownedSurgeon Professor Asrat Woldeyes wrote a letter to the House of PeoplesRepresentatives (HoPR), western diplomats, and press agencies residing in Addis Ababa, denouncing such an act of ethnic cleansing against the Amharas living in Arba Gugu and Ticho sub-regions of Arsi administrativezone of Oromia Regional State by the ruling coalition partner, Oromo Peoples Democratic Organization (OPDO).

July, 1992: Meles Zenawi the transitional president of Ethiopia told reporters, "Assab is like a haircut, so we can buy a port-service at itsavailability at any direction of the country like any other cheap commodity".

Side note;- Large number of pan-Ethiopians still considered Eritrea and the entire coastline as continuous and legitimate part of their country, thesecession of Eritrea is still a fresh-wound for many Ethiopians and commonly seen as a national defeat, and many still optimistics and believe that peoples of the two sides will find to get eachother and probably unite under the right circumstances by exploring their social-commonalties, as of course, both sides have many in comm.

In 1992, along with the rival warring factions, Somalia's major famine wasdevastated the Somali nation, and was not caused by drought, an estimated 300,000 innocent Somali people starved to death because of sectarian politics in the region. The epicentre of that famine was in Bay, one of the country's most productive agricultural regions, and starvation was induced by Somali warlords who used food as a weapon against farmers and pastoralists.
One year after the seizure of power by the EPRDF combatant forces, the Libyan leader Col. Muammar Al-Quadhafi recalls pre- May 28, 1991 transitional president Meles Zenawi had told him personally as a rebel leader in Tripoli when he met him to discuss future bilateral issues, "I am Yemeni. I know myself to be a Yemeni. We are Yemenis. Apart from the royal family, Ethiopians are all Arabs.", Al-Quadhafi quoted Zenawi as toldhim. By the way, the name Zenawi plenty as individual name in the Arab state of Yemen.
July 13, 1992: Aba Guebre-Medhin a pro-government diasporan clericcandidated for Patriarch of the EOTC.
In July, 1992: The ruling-EPRDF secret document reveals the TPLF guisedEPRDF agenda of winning the first and succeeding elections, widely discredited the ruling-elites, such a decision played havoc with democraticprinciples and meaningful elections in Ethiopia eversince.
In August, 1992: Athlete Derartu Tulu won the only gold medal in 10, 000mtrs track running in Barcelona Summer Olympic Games. Meantime, she is the first African woman to win a gold medal at the event.
In August, 1992: Special Prosecutors Office (SPO), a pre-judicial body with overwhelming evidences at hand against the Duerg officials, first of its kind in Africa, was established and mandated with prosecutoral powersover human rights abuses committed during the seventeen years reign ofthe Duerg regime.
Side note;- And with the stated intention to prosecute the entire leadership of the regime for human rights abuses before a national court, a precedent, to much acclaim, was set in Africa. The former Army Lieutenant Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam was a head of the Marxist rulingmilitary junta known as, the Duerg which ruled Ethiopia from September, 1974 to May, 1991 after the ouster of famine-discredited Emperor Haile Selassie I. And believed as many as 100, 000 people were brutally killed during the campaign as Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam sought to transform the country into an ex-Soviet Union style workers' state, the regime, then battling a number of insurgencies throughout the country, used several tactics to scare it's opponents of the time, one of which was leaving dead bodies on streets as a warning for others. According to genocide groups, he is charged with his henchmen guilty minimum on six majour counts leaving the petty ones aside, 1- He approved and signed the death of 62 of Atse Haile Selassie's officials, as well as officers and soldiers who demanded his return to the baracks, without their being proven guilty in a court law. 2- He rejected General Aman Michael Andom's plan for the troubled region of Eritrea and caused his untimely death contributing to the latter secession of Eritrea. 3- He turned down General Tefferi Banti's call for national reconciliation, killed him together with others and assumed absolute power by himself resulting in his decreeof the "Red Terror" which wiped-out countless Ethiopians from all camps. 4- He refused to return to his baracks in an act of defiance with the desireto seize power illegally when the very soldiers that had mandated him to represent them called him back. 5- He lets hell loose on the people of Ethiopia when he allowed his henchmen to torture, imprison and kill his political opponents and even innocent individuals, an independent team ofresearchers from Argentina identified such sites of mass-graves in parts ofthe capital, Addis Ababa, and parts of southern regions of the country. 6- He showed no mercy and clemency to spare the lives of the coup-makers of 17th May, 1989, those were under his custody, of course this was demoralised the rank and files of the armed forces, caused desertions andthe gradual defeat of the Ethiopian Army. In his details of a speech he made to his party /WPE/, in which he spoke proudly how he bayonated the butts of high ranking officers, ripped off their "Stars", stripped off theirranks and humiliated them before the soldiers they commanded. It's perhaps a very best example, when soldiers whos job was only to guard the territory of the nation, deviate from their training and duty, and try to lead a nation politically, as example of Ethiopia, the result is often catastrophic. It was because they understood this fact that some senior officers of the Duerg council as well as some other duty-bounded soldiers early demanded that the Duerg should relinquish power to a civilian rule and go back to it's barack, instead of heeding to their good advice, he condemned them to die. Indeed, Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam, nicknamed "Graziano", refering him to Marshal Rodolfo Graziani an ex- fascist Italian Governor of Ethiopia, under the occupation of 1935 to 1941 for his cruelty. Ethiopia's Supreme Court has sentenced the brutal dictatorto death in absentia along with seventeen of his henchmen following a decade long trial in addis Ababa in 2008, the judje said he had passed the death sentence as the defendants had tortured and executed thousands ofinnocent people, which amounted to genocide. Genocide is one of the world's most recognised and widely understood word, cutting across civilisations, languages and cultures. While the legal and scholastic definition is still a work in progress, the layman's conception of genocide isastoundingly astute, wholesale murder of a people due to their ethnic or racial identities. This is surprisingly close to the most widely known explanation of genocide, as articulated by the UN Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (CPPCG). Any of the following acts committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnic, racial or religious group, as such killing members of the group, causing serious body or mental harm to members of the group, deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life, calculated to bring about it's physical destruction in whole or in part, imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group, and forcibly transferingchildren of the group to another group.

September 9, 1992: Abba Guebre-Medhin, a diasporan priest, elected in support of the government and officially named “Patriarch Abuna-Paulos of the EOTC” to head the Holy-synod as 5th patriarch. EOTC worshippershave much grieved on the process and complained the government's interference into "religious faith" in uncanonical manner. It was not canonical and it was done by the government’s interference, and not by the Holy-synod of the Orthodox Church, it was widely observed the government openly interfered into religious faith.

The Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Church (Amharic: የኢትዮጵያ ኦርቶዶክስ ተዋሕዶ ቤተ ክርስቲያን; Transliterated Amharic: Yäityop'ya ortodoks täwahedo bétäkrestyan) is the predominant Oriental Orthodox Christian church in Ethiopia. The Ethiopian Church was administratively part of the Coptic Orthodox Church until 1959, when it was granted its own Patriarch by Coptic Orthodox Pope of Alexandria and Patriarch of All Africa, Cyril VI. It should not be confused with the Ethiopian Catholic Church, which is a Chalcedonian church. One of the few pre-colonial Christian churches of Sub-Saharan Africa, the Ethiopian Church has a membership of between 40 and 45 million, the majority of whom live in Ethiopia, and is thus the largest of all Oriental Orthodox churches. The Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Church is a founding member of the World Council of Churches Tewahedo (Te-wa-hido) (Ge'ez ተዋሕዶ tawāhidō, modern pronunciation tewāhidō) is a Ge'ez word meaning "being made one" or "unified". This word refers to the Oriental Orthodox belief in the one single unified Natureof Christ

It was this time the renowned Orthodox Baptist Aba (Father) Wolde- Tinsae of Wallisso who had relieved several thousand paitients of Ethiopian Orthodox Church worshippers through baptisation process, forover quarter a century has passed away at age 77.

Godey was a city in former Hararghe province, with the downfall of the Duerg regime it became capital of the Ethiopian Somali regional state asex-Somali Airforce flight captain Hassan Jire it’s administrator.

October 1, 1992: Ethiopian Ministry of External Economic Co-operation,(then shortly known as MEEC) under it’s minister Abdulmajid Hussein negotiated and later devaluated the Eth. Birr from its nominal level of 2.07 Eth. Birr per US dollar to 5.13 Birr per US dollar depreciation byabout 142 per-cent’

January, 1993: An act of government harassment started when the Ethiopian government created a splinter group with close ties to itself, known as the "New ETA", and began to redirect it in February, 1993 theETA’s union dues to it in June, 1993.

Side note: The ICFTU reports ongoing difficulties and harassment of tradeunion members by government security forces, and specifically notes the ETA. Dr. Taye Woldesemayat, president of the ETA, was sentenced to 15 years' imprisonment in 1996, but was released from prison in May 2002 after 6 years. In 2005, security forces occupied the ETA headquarters in Addis Ababa for two weeks, taking vital documents and equipment, and detained six members. Since then, ETA members have been under persistent attack, with more than 20 teachers dismissed for allegedly supporting opposition political parties. The original group fought this act incourt, twice succeeding in getting the High Court to overturn the government's act in 2006, although these judgments were never enforced. However in a ruling announced 21 June 2007, the Federal High Court ruled against the original ETA, and ordered the ETA to hand over property, other assets, and its name; the Ethiopian Supreme High Court denied an appeal 7 February 2008, effectively ending the legal struggle.

However, harassment of current and former members by the government reportedly continues. Tilahun Ayalew, chairman of the Dangila chapter of the ETA and coordinator of the program "Education for All", was detained by police from December 2007 to March 2008. He reported that he was imprisoned and tortured at Bahir Dar for three to four days before being transferred to a police station in Addis Ababa, where police again tortured him. The Federal First Instance Court then released him on a Havius- Corpus petition, citing the lack of formal charges. However, shortly after seeing his family upon release, Tilahun disappeared and his whereabouts remained unknown at the end of 2008. Another victim was Anteneh Getnet, chairman of the original ETA in Addis Ababa and an ETA coordinator, who was arrested in 2006 on charges of being a member of the Ethiopian Patriotic Front an outlawed, allegedly armed group operatingin the Amhara Region. The Federal High Court denied his release, but the Federal Supreme Court released him on bail. After a few additional trial appearances, he disappeared in March, and his whereabouts remained unknown at year's end. Anteneh was first detained in 2006 for over two months on charges of instigating violence in the 2005 elections, and alleged that he was tortured during that incarceration.

In 1993: The Imperial Crown Council of Ethiopia created under former Imperial Prince-Ermias Sahle-selassie Haile-selassie, the grandson of the ex-emperor to claim that the title of Emperor of Ethiopia still in existence and the Crown-council is the legal claimant head of Ethiopia. The ImperialCrown-council of Ethiopia was the constitutional body which advises the reigning emperors of Ethiopia and acted on behalf of the Crown.

Early April, 1993: The TPLF controlled ‘Endowment Fund for the Rehabilitation of Tigrai (EFFORT)’, claimes that it belongs to the people of Tigrai, Adigrat Pharmaceuticals, Almeda Textiles which employs thousandsof workers, Messobo cement factory one of the leading cement plants in the country, start to be established in Tigrai as war ravaged region.

Side note;- as a result their brothers and sisters of other regions think, they Tigreans are rich and benefited, enjoy higher standard of living, benefiting a lot from the so called EFFORT, but most parts of the region ofTigrai are still dirt-poor and have yet to receive the dividends for TPLF's political power, despite the enormous wealth only Meles Zenawi and his wife Azeb Mesfin, control the never audited, tightly-controlled multi-billiondollars conglomerate. EFFORT, are the largest owners of the major industries in Ethiopia including, Banking, Construction, Agri-businesses, Mining, Import-exportation, Insurance, and other pillars of the economy that are vitals to the well-being and economic development of the nation. Small extremist Tigrean nationalist elements may continue to boast of military gains of the TPLF over the previous regime of the Duerg and the regime in Asmara even in the future, but undoubtedly the future will belong to those who stand for unity and well-being of Ethiopians, i.e. respect for human and democratic rights, the rule of law and the prevalence of justice. Many say, the victory of the Front has been hijackedand therefore the real TPLF does not exist anymore.

April 7, 1993: All former Ethiopian Navy ships, including the formerEthiopian Navy training Ship HMS-Ethiopia were sold in Yemen as scrapping metal to businessmen at the port of Djibouti.

April 13, 1993, The Addis Ababa Agreement, a peace accord among theSomali warring rivals signed.

April 23 to 25, 1993: Eritrea becomes independent in de-jure following aUN sponsored referendum.

Side note: Independence was overwhelmingly approved by a referendum under a United Nations created technical mandatory team known as, the UN Observer Mission to Verify the Eritrean Referendum (UNOVER), headedby the Lebanese career diplomat Mr. Samir Sambar, the UN technical mandatory mission have confirmed the Eritrean referendum as to declare it's nationhood in de-jure in April, 1993. The referendum was supported by Ethiopia, but pan –Ethiopian groups have sharply criticized the United Nations Observer Mission to Verify the Eritrean Referendum (UNOVER) theway it handles the popular referendum in Eritrea. Meantime, Adei AlemashGebre-Leul, mother of the Ethiopian transitional president is widely believed to have Eritrean ethnicity, has vote-casted infavor of the Eritrean independence. Meles Zenawi's citizenship issue still remains controversial. His mother told a monthly “Aser” magazine published in Eritrea, "I wish him all the best for him, I wish-not him faces ill-political fate like his predecessors". Eritreans then voted almost unanimously for independence, leaving Ethiopia landlocked.

Meantime, while the UN has an obligation to do everything in it's power tomake unity under Ethiopia is more attractive, it is also bound to respect the right of self-determination to Eritrea as per the petitioning by the headof the Transitional Government of Ethiopia to the UN to dismember his own country. Well, anyone can imagine if a leader of Ethiopia, in the past or in the future, tells that Eritrea have been colonized by Ethiopia, and accepts it's international borders as adopted by the ex-OAU summit of heads of states in Cairo, Egypt in July 1964, in the same category as others newly independent African nations from colonialism that formed theOAU after their independence, writes a letter-petitioning to the United Nation to recognize part of it's territory as an independent nation thereby land-locking the rest of the country, or diabolical ethnic, religious and political divide constructed by creating feuding ethnic and religious groups, or add what have you over the last twenty years, but for the national good, and settles the problem with Eritrea to avoid a land-locked Ethiopia by restoring it's natural access to the Red sea. A referendum onthe future of Eritrea, the Eritrean people were given an option of a vote under the banner of Freedom vs. Other if they remained with Ethiopia.

From the onset, it was not difficult to decipher the intent of the present day autocrat when he wrote draft manuscript entitled, “The Struggle of the Eritrean People from Where to Where? (in Tigrigna). This reflected his political goal and intent of siding with Eritrea rather than the Ethiopian people in general and the Tigreans in particular. In his book, he attemptedto undermine Ethiopia's thousands of years of history as a "fairy tale". In his book, with his twisted logic, he declared: "The fact is that at the very moment i.e. 1890 Ethiopia emerged as a state, Eritrea, which was not part of Ethiopia, was also created as a state by Italian colonialism." The EPLF's acclaimed success of defeating Ethiopia by the sacrifices' of Tigrean Ethiopians. History would remember the TPLF leadership dug in trenches in a desperate attempt to defend its Sahel base during the Duerg's Red Star Campaign. Tigrean-Ethiopians rothers and sisters paid their own livesto Eritrean independence under the leadership of Meles Zenawi's TPLF. Onquestions of Ethiopias legal rights for access to the Red sea, particularly since the secession of Eritrea in April, 1993 and the latter Ethio-Eritrean border war of 1998 to 2000. The African Union (AU), whose constitutive Act enshrines as a founding principle "respect of borders existing on achievement of independence" now finds itself in the some what contradictory position, and of course now series of political concerns have been raised after almost two decades of Eritrean seccession from Ethiopia,regarding onto similarity of the cause of the southern Sudan referendum due to hold on January, 2011. If torn and divisions among African memberstates in response to the prospect of southern Sudan referendum, the result could be disastrous, the political equation the United Nations or the African Union on the making will be important not just for the cause of Sudan but for the well beingness of other African states, according to analysts.

In April, 1993 the Sport's legend Majour Mamo Wolde was arrested inaccusation with participation in the infamous "Red Terror" execution campaign during of the Duerg-regime in the late 1970s.

In April, 1993 following the UN-sponsored Referendum, Eritrea declaresindependence in de-jure from Ethiopia.

The UN sponsored "Referendum in Eritrea" believed has been inappropriately managed the Eritrean referendum rather than finding a wayout resolutions such as "Federal", "Con-Federal" or "Unity under the Ethiopian sovereignty" leaving only "Independence OR Any other" for theEritrean public as options that only resulted to a fake 98.7 % poll. Many say such process undermines and neglects Ethiopia's previous roles as chartered member of the United Nations.

In May 1993, In due to de-jure independence of Eritrea, Eritrean OrthodoxTewahdo Church (ErOTC) splits from Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahdo Church (EOTC) and reverted back to having it's Patriarch from Church of Alexandria, Egypt. In May, 1993 the ruling-EPRDF proposed a draft strategy document to it's party-congress known as "Revolutionary Democracy - our revolutionary democratic goals and the next step" essentially crafted from Marxist- Leninist ideology program the Tigrai Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) cadres were in 1989, involving top-to-down decision-making, regular sessions of "Gimgama", it's Amharic meaning for "self-criticism" and a single party rule for generations to come. "Revolutionary Democracy" would be introduced through the gradual EPRDF's takeover as TPLF it's central component of all it's organs of "propaganda" including schools, thecivil service, the press, and even religious institutions, as Meles Zenawi the party boss rewrote.

May 26, 1993: The UN adopted witout vote the admission of Eritrea to theUnited Nations.
June 1993: The new Mining and Mining Income Tax Proclamations wereissued.
Side note: Since 1991, the Government of Ethiopia has instituted policies designed to improve the political, social and economic sectors of the country. One of the most important parts of the new economic policy is that it permits the full participation of the private investment in the miningsector. The government has enacted a very competitive legal and fiscal regime that attracted international mining to participate in the development of Ethiopia's mineral resources. Also, the government has been making progressive amendments to the Mining Laws in order to make it more competitive.
The Mining Regulations came into effect in April 1994. The Mining Proclamation No. 52/1993 and the Mining Income Tax Proclamation No. 53/1993 were amended in favour of investors in 1996. The following are highlights of the laws: invite private investment in all kinds of mineral operation; provide one year exclusive prospecting license; provide three year exclusive exploration license with two renewal of one year each; provide exclusive mining license for twenty years with unlimited renewals;require adequate health, safety and environmental protection; provide for inclusion of minerals which were not originally specified in the license as they are discovered; guarantee the licensee's right to sell the minerals locally or abroad; provide for exemptions from custom duties and taxes onequipment, machinery, vehicles and spare parts necessary for mineral operations; guarantee the opening and operation of a foreign currency account in a bank in Ethiopia; retention of a portion of foreign currency earning; and remittances of profits, dividends, principal and interest on foreign loans etc. out of Ethiopia; provide for 2% government free equity in mining operations; require environmental impact study; and provide fordispute settlement through negotiation and international arbitration.
The Mining Income Tax Proclamation 53/1993 and Mining Income Tax (Amendment) Proclamation No. 23/1996 provide for: generous deductionsand calculations of expenditure; ten year loss carry forward; write-off of investment within four consecutive years; 35% tax on taxable income generated from mining operation; 10% dividend tax; 2% optional statefree equity; and up to 5% royalty on an ad valorem basis.
(Text ends)

July 1, 1993: The Nile Accord of 1993 titled “Framework for General Co- operation between the Arab Republic of Egypt and Ethiopia” was signed inCairo, Egypt by President Mohammed Hosni Mubarak representing the Arab Republic of Egypt and Ato Meles Zenawi representing the TransitionalGovernment of Ethiopia in his capacity as President during which there was no a national parliament. The text of the Accord was made “in two originals in Arabic and English texts only, both texts being equally authentic.” As then Ethiopian public figures complain, there goes the mother of all lies and insults for neither of the two languages. Amharic is known to be an official language of Ethiopia.

July 4, 1993: Veterans Association of the former Ethiopian Airforce in-exilefounded in Washington D.C.
October, 1993: About 10 members of the Ethiopian national football squadwent to their disappeared at their attendance in Rome airport on their wayto Rabat, Morocco, before their qualifying match with their counterpart.
October 30, 1993: Kiros Almayehu the renowned Tigrigna vocalist passedaway at 42 years of age in an unknown circumstances.
December, 1993; Dissidents and self-exiled politicians arrived for peace and reconciliation conference at Addis Ababa Ghion Hotel, all were arrested by security agents during their arrival at Bole Airport, among those detained were conference participants Fitawrari Makonnen Dori andAbera Yemane-Ab.
December, 1993: Addis Ababa University students were protested against the United Nations role toward the Eritrean Referendum, during the UnitedNations Secretary-general Boutros Boutros Ghali's attendance in Addis Ababa, which resulted in the death of about 11 peaceful demonstrators followed by the sacking of 42 high profile academicians, and the arrest of Addis Ababa University's president.
Mekelle University including the Mekelle Institute of Technology was established, becoming one of the leading higher institutions in Ethiopia. December, 1993: Yemen finally expelled the idled Ethiopian naval ships; by then some had deteriorated too much to be seaworthy, and the Ethiopians left them behind in Yemen. 'Ethiopia' had become a hulk after arriving in Yemen in 1991 and was sold for scrap in 1993; other Ethiopianships were also scrapped or scuttled.
January 14, 1994: Ato Ketema Yifru ((12 December 1929 - 14 January1994), the former top diplomat and politician who served in various positions under the Imperial government (between 1961 and 1970) passed away of pancreatic cancer at age of 55.
In 1994: Over 69 people were killed in a politically motivated massacre atan open market in Areka town of Wallayita zone of the Southern Nations and Nationalities Peoples Regional State.

In 1994: Dr. Asrat Woldeyes, a distinguished surgeon, and President of the All Amhara Peoples Organizaion (AAPO) was sentenced to two years inprison for "planning violence against the state".

In 1994: Ethiopian Insurance Company (EIC) was reestablished as public enterprise under proclamation number 201/1994 with Birr 61 million (USD 7.13 million) paid up capital.

Side note: The EIC operated the business for about nineteen years under protected monopolistic system as state owned-sole insurer. The demise ofthe Marxist Duerg regime in mid-1991 a fundamental change has taken place and there was a shift in political, economic and social orientation from totalitarianism to that of liberalism. The new law covers the followingnew objectives to the Corporation, engage in the businesses of rendering insurance services, engage in any other related activities conducive to the attainment of it's purposes.

April 5, 1994: Ethiopia and Djibouti signed an extradition agreement totransfer a suspected or convicted criminal to another country.
In 1994: The formerly "Housing and Saving Bank" restructured as "Construction and Business Bank (CBB)" under the proclamation of 1994 as to promote efficient utilization of both material and financial resources.Side note;- Construction and Business Bank (CBB) is a wholly governmentowned public enterprise and the successor of Housing and Saving Bank which was established by the merger of two financial institutions, the Savings and Mortgage Corporation of Ethiopia Sc (SMC) and the Imperial Savings and Home ownerships Public Association (ISHOPA), which were nationalized in 1975 at the onset of the Ethiopian Revolution. The Construction and Business Bank (CBB) renders international Banking services efficiently. It also plays a consulting role to assist it's customers involved in this area.

Kiros Alemayehu, the legendary tigrigna vocalist died of intestinalcomplications at age of 46'

Side note: The renowned Kiros Alemayehu was born to his father Girazmach Alemayehu Meles and Mrs. Qeleb Guebremesquel in the eastern part of Tigray region, in a village known as Saesi Tsaedaemba in 1948 (1940 EC). He went to school in the nearby city of Wukro and thenjoined Atse Yohannes High School in Mekelle. Kiros was a prolific song writer and singer. He popularized Tigrigna songs through his albums to the non-Tigrigna speaking Ethiopians. Before joining Ras Theatre in 1975
E.C (circa 1982-1983) where he published his first Album, Kiros had worked as assistant trainer of Tigray Musical Troupe (ትግራይ ኪነ ት). Some of his songs include "Anguay fisis", "Fililiy","Selam Hawa", "Suwur Fikri" "Adey Mekele". Kiros along with other musicians had played in Libya and other middle eastern countries. A memorial library is under construction inWukro near his birthplace.
May 24, 1994: Adei Alemash Guebre-Leul, mother of the Ethiopian primeminister who is Eritrean by origin has casted her vote in favor of the Eritrean independence in de-jure.
Side note;- The Ethiopian premier has later to congrajulates the presidentand the people of Eritrea on his guest appearance in Asmara on the first anniversary celebration of Eritrean independence. He has made a speeh on his guest appearance full of deception, deceit, and a moral bankruptcydistorting the truth, quotes as saying "Now Ethiopia's Amhara- expansionist regimes dream is ended". Indeed, there are many Eritreans by blood till this date that they have never abrogated their Ethiopian nationality and identity.
Mid-1994: Mohammed International Development Research Organizations Company created the MIDROC-Ethiopia legally to largely operate substantial investments allover Ethiopia. The sheikh was born in Ethiopia to an Ethiopian mother and a Saudi father. He later moved to Saudi Arabiaand made a fortune in construction and real estate before buying oil refineries in Sweden and Morocco.

In 1994: Dashen Brewery established in the northwestern Ethiopian town of Gondar. Dashen is the name of one of the highest mountains in Ethiopiaand Africa, part of the Semien (northern) mountains.

Mid-1994 Ethiopia joined the International Montary Fund (IMF) as memberstate.

Mid-1994: Proclamation No. 83/1994 came into force. The new proclamation issued to reorganize the National Bank of Ethiopia (NBE)according to the market-based economic policy so that it could foster monetary stability, a sound financial system and such other credit andexchange conditions as are conducive to the balanced growth of the economy of the country.
July 2, 1994: It was announced by government media outlets that nine members of the opposition All-Amhara People's Organization (AAPO) werekilled and other eleven were captured in an exchange of fire with securityforces in Asagirt district of northern Shoa administrative region.
In 1994: The formerly "Agro-Industrial Development Bank" usually knownas "AID Bank" reestablished as "Development Bank of Ethiopia (DBE)2 under the Banking & Insurance proclamation No. --- /1994 with objectivesto promote efficient financial and material resources in the sector.
The company offers current accounts, time deposits, safety deposits anddemand deposits. It's loan portfolio comprises agricultural, industrial, fertilizer and other business loans. The company also offers medium and long term loans for investment projects which are engaged in agriculture,agro-processing and manufacturing industries. It operates approximately32 branches in Ethiopia.
December 1994: UN General Assembly resolution number 43/52 "Convention on the Law of the Non-navigational Uses of InternationalWatercourses ratified' Side note: The UN Convention states, “Watercourse States shall in their respective territories utilize an international watercourse in an equitable and reasonable manner. In particular, an international watercourse shall be used and developed by watercourse States with a view to attaining optimal and sustainable utilization thereof and benefits there from, taking into account the interests of the watercourse States concerned, consistent with adequate protection of the watercourse.” “ወንዞችን በጋራ ፈሰስ የሚጋሩ አገሮች ሁሉውሃውን አግባብ፤ ፍትሃዊ፤ ለሁሉም ጠቃሚ በሆነ መንገድ የመጠቀም መብትና ግዴታ አለባቸው። ይህን ሲያደርጉ በተቻለ መጠን ለጋራ ጥቅም በመመካከርና አንዱ ሌላውን ሳይጎዳ፤ ውሃውንና አካባቢውን ዘላቂነት ባለው መንገድ በመንከባከብ ይሆናል። ” December 1994: New Federal constitution divides Ethiopia into ethnically-based regions. The Federal constitution was adopted and passed by a constitutional council enshrined "Article 39", refering to a clause in the constitution which grants the right to secession to Nations and Nationalities of Ethiopia. Tigrai Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) forms the core of the Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) coalition, which ushered in a constitution that divided Ethiopia into nine ethnically based federal regions and two autonomous cities. Besides the TPLF, the Oromo and Amhara communities and a grouping of smaller ethnic communities from the country's south each have parties in the coalition. Several insurgent groups operate in Ethiopia, including the banned Oromo Liberation Front (OLF), which withdrew from the government in June 1992, and the Ogadien National Liberation Front (ONLF) that fights for more autonomy for the ethnic-Somali Ogadieni people.

Article 39 of the 1995 Ethiopian federal constitution has caused a lot of confusions, and feared it has the potential to create dangerous divisions in the unity of the Ethiopian state", say experts. The present Constitutionof Ethiopia vests land ownership exclusively "in the State and the people of Ethiopia". And shall not be subjected to sale or to other means of exchange. It has to be recalled that four years of delicate transitional period, and national elections for Council of Peoples Representatives (CPR)for 548 members and a Federal Council (FC) for 98 members were held successfully in 1994.

Early January, 1995: Government think tank "Ethiopian Institute for International Peace and Development (EIIPD) under the patronage of theEthiopian Ministry of Foreign Affaires (EMoFA) established.

In January, 1995: Transitional President Meles Zenawi told to a gatheringof Ethiopians in the United States, of the singular purpose of his leadership - that all Ethiopians could eat three meals a day.

January, 1995: Former Ethiopian head of State Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile-Mariam, known by many as "the Butcher of Addis Ababa" in his absence and some 46 other former senior Duerg officials were brought physically to face trial on charges of genocide and murders committed during their 17-years rule.

Side note: Tens of thousands of people were killed during a period of Colonel Mengistu's 17-year rule known as the "Red Terror". Two of Mengistu's political associates who were sentenced to death live in the Italian embassy compound in the capital, addis Ababa, where they soughtrefuge after Mengistu fled. But the 16 other defendants are in jail, in the capital. Former dictator Lt. Colonel Mengistu has lived in exile in Zimbabwe since his overthrow in May, 1991, his escape to Zimbabwe wasapparently facilitated with some help from western countries to avoid possible bloodshed in the east African nation. However, it has to be noted that, firstly, ignoring past crimes against humanity merely emboldens newand future ones to be perpetrated with impunity and, secondly, that thereis no reason why more than one struggles may not be undertaken concurrently. Two of Mengistu's political associates who were sentenced todeath live in the Italian embassy compound in the capital, addis Ababa, where they sought refuge after Colonel Mengistu has fled, but 16 other defendants are in jail, in the capital.

February 22, 1995: A protest by muslims against government's interference into their affaires in the Addis Ababa Anwar Mosque erupted,about 10 people were killed in the incidence.

In May, 1995: The first multi-party election took place in which MelesZenawi was elected the Prime Minister and Dr. Negasso Gidada was elected ceremonial President.

The Politics of Federalism in Africa:The Case of Ethiopia

The new constitution written in mid-1994 that creates a bicameral legislature and a judicial system came into force. Elections for Council of Peoples Representatives /CoPR/, (the upper house) 548 seats, and the Federal Council /FC/, (the lower house) 112 seats, were held successfullyafter four years of transitional period in which the EPRDF grabed all parliamentary seats.

The July Peace Conference deliberated and decided on several important issues. The following were the main resolutions of the conference: a) adoption of a Transitional Charter, b) Establishment of a Transitional Government on the bases of the Transitional Charter, c) The Charter provided that the Right to Self-Determination of the different Nations, Nationalities in Ethiopia including g and up establishing independent statesof their own is guaranteed d) a referendum to ask the Eritrean people if they want independence or want to remain n united with Ethiopia e) the Ethiopian state should be decentralized and power should devolve, and for this the state should be restructured into new administrative regions depicting the ethnic territories f) guarantee for the respect of human anddemocratic rights g) guarantee for equitable resource sharing h) guarantee that the languages and cultures of the different ethnic groups are respected and I) that the transitional government establishes a Constitution Drafting Commission to draft a constitution which should be adopted as quickly as possible and that a provides for the establishment of a democratic and united Ethiopia but which respects the right to self- determination.

Soon after the Conference, the Transitional Government of Ethiopia (TGE)was established on August 15th, 1991. The government established a House of Peoples' Representatives in which most of the representatives ofthe organizations which participated on the July Peace. Conference were delegated. The Chairman of the TPLF, Meles Zenawi became the speaker of the House and Head of State while Tamrat Layne, Chairman of EPDM became the Prime Minister. A Council of Ministers was established under the leadership of the Prime Minister. The EPRDF army became the National Defense Force, headed by Seeye Abraha of the TPLF, the chief ofthe EPRDF army. The achievements of the TGE were 1) carrying out of election to establish the new regional administrations 2) see to it that theEritrean referendum takes place and Eritrea becomes independent 3) the establishment of the Constitution Drafting Commission, carry out electionfor the Constituent Assembly and adoption of the Constitution of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia in end of 1994. 4) Carry out election for the establishment of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia in August 1995 in accordance with the new constitution.

The making of the constitution went through several steps. The first step was the establishment of the Drafting Commission in August 1992. This was accomplished by first inviting political organizations (there were morethan 100 organizations which were not members of the HOR which were born after May 1991) outside of the HOR through print and electronic Media to register at the HOR if they are interested to be members of the Drafting Commission. Seven legally registered political organizations werechosen by the HOR from the many organizations which applied for membership. ((South Ethiopian Democratic Front (SEDF); Ethiopian National Unity Party (ENUP); Forum 84 organization (Forum 84); Ethiopian Muslims Movement (EMM); South Ethiopian Peoples' Coalition (SEPC); and Ethiopian Democratic Movement League (EDML)). The same procedure was followed concerning professional associations and 15 such organizations were chosen by the HOR. These were Ethiopian Workers Association (3), Ethiopian Teachers Association (2), Ethiopian Chamber ofCommerce (3), Ethiopian Legal Professionals Association (2), Ethiopian Health Professionals Association (2), and from different Women's Associations (3). Another seven representatives of political organizations in the HOR were added. These included the Ethiopian Democratic Union (EDU, an organization of the old aristocrats and royalists who were in resistance during Mengistu's reign), Harari National League, the Ethiopian Peoples' Democratic Movement (EPDM), Kafa National Democratic Organization, Ethiopian National Democratic Organization (ENDO), OromoPeople's Democratic Organization (OPDO) and Isa /Gurgura Liberation Front. Only Ato Dawit Yohannes from EPDM and I from OPDO representedthe EPRDF. The OLF and other Oromo organizations had withdrawn from the Transition before the establishment of the Commission and was at warwith TGE. The palace of the son of Emperor Haile Selassie, Prince Makonen, was made the center of the Commission. The assembly hall andthe offices of the secretariat of the Commission were in the building (adjacent to the Embassy of the U.S.A.

The Commission elected Ato Kifle Wodajo (a Liberal and longtime officialin the Ministry of Foreign Affairs under the military regime) of ENDO as chairman and Ato Dawit Yohannes (a Revolutionary Democrat and long time in exile in the U.S.A.). The Commission decided on the procedure ofpreparing the Draft Constitution. Members agreed that concepts of constitution on which members unanimously agreed upon should be forwarded for public discussion and approval. But issues on which there was disagreement among members should be left for the decision of thepublic. Consequently, a document containing seven chapters with neutrally formulated (non-partisan) basic concepts of a constitution. Forms (ballot forms) were also prepared on the basic concepts (73 basic constitutional concepts with diverse constitutional attitudes and alternative constitutional concepts) for the public, political organizations, professional associations, mass organizations, education institutions to collect different stands of the society on basic constitutional issues. Thendocuments were prepared in different Ethiopian languages and deliberations forums for local residents were organized in then 23,320 Kabales, the lowest administrative units (now more, 45,000?) and for workers in different institutions, for women, elders, religious leaders, anddifferent political organizations. Special forums were organized for the Ethiopians residing abroad and their views and stands were collected.
Local discussions took three days and four to seven hours a day. According to the Commission's report on the procedure of the constitutionmaking it is said “seen in general, the number of the public (participants) was few the first day, became more on the following meetings and had the tendency of decreasing on the last day.” One can also imagine that members and supporters of WPE, EPRP, AESM, and OLF boycotted the meetings and their number may be very high.

The main reason why Federalism was adopted was to create an administrative system in which self-determination, short of secession, of the ethnic groups would be practiced. Thus, among the 73 constitutional concepts forwarded to the public two were concerning the right to self- determination, up to and including secession (point number 39 and Federalism 46.) On the concept of self-determination only the participantsof the discussion in Tigray, Afar, Oromia, Dire Dawa and Harari supported the right to unconditional self-determination by more than 90%. In Amhara Benishangul and Ethiopian Somali the point was supported by 72% to 89%. Addis Ababa supported it by 67% and Gambella by only 59%. 72% to 97% of the participants in Afar (97%), Harari (72%), Oromia (95%), Tigray (92%) and Amhara (92%) were or Federal System.84% in Gambella, 65% in Ethiopian Somali and 60% supported the idea. Whatever the case, the majority of those who participated on the deliberation were for the Federalism but at the same time for unconditional self-determination. It would have been interesting to present the final draft for referendum to see what the people would have said on these articles of the constitution or would be more interesting to see through referendum today, after 20 years, what the verdict of citizenscould be.

The results of the discussions were collected and were formulated into constitutional articles by experts stationed at the office of the Commission. In the meantime constitutional experts from abroad were invited from abroad to hold lectures on the question of self-determination,on federalism and experiences of other countries on these issues. The experts at the office presented their work to the meeting of the Commission for debate. Heated debate took place between members with different positions. Votes were given on each article and almost all articlespassed through majority votes. Only on few articles there were no compromises and minority positions were not discarded. In such cases two opposed stands or positions were formulated and put into the draft constitution to be presented to the House of Representatives. Examples were articles 39 (on the right to self-determination) and article 40 (right to property). The final draft with 72 articles was presented to the HOR at the end of March 1994. A Constituent Assembly included 545 (These wererepresentatives who were elected from the then existing Woredas (=districts). There are 547 of them today). The election took place in May 1994 and the assembly met for six weeks from the end of November to the 8th of December 1994. As for regional representation, 37 Harari, 23 from Addis Ababa and 2 from Dire Dawa. The finally approved Constitution had 106 articles. Concerning the voting on the two articles which contained minority and majority positions in the drafts of the drafting Commission and the HOR, there were 515 members present when article 39 was debated upon. 508 voted for while 5 were against and 2

abstained. On article 40, only 3 abstained, 0 were against and 496 supported it. When it came to Federalism, 507 were presented when it was deliberated upon. 500 were for Federal structure, 5 were against and2 abstained. Interestingly 24 of the present were against having Independent Judiciary, 494 were for it while 9 abstained. Any way after the Constitution was approved by the Constituent Assembly preparations were underway for establishing the Federal Democratic Republic in accordance with the Constitution. Election for the new two chambered parliament, House of Peoples' Representatives and the House of Federation took place in May 1995 and the Houses met in August 1995, endorsed the approved Constitution as the supreme law of the country,and established the new government and elected the President who signed on the law the same day.

Federalism in Ethiopia was introduced by the Constitution based on the principles of self- determination, shared rule and self of peoples of Ethiopia. It is actually the peoples who formed the federation as it says in the Preamble "We, the nations, nationalities and peoples of Ethiopia…Havetherefore ratified, on 8 December 1994 this constitution…" According to the Constitution "All sovereign power resides in the nations, nationalities, and peoples of Ethiopia" (art. 8/1). Rights of the Ethiopian Nations, Nationalities and Peoples are listed in Article 39 and read as follows: "1.
Every Nation, Nationalities, and People in Ethiopia has an unconditional right to self-determination, including the right to secession. 2. Every nation, nationality and people in Ethiopia has the right to speak, to writeand to develop its own language; to express and to promote its culture;and to preserve its history. 3. Every nation, nationality and people in Ethiopia has the right to a full means of self-government which includes the right to establish institutions of government in the territory that it inhabits and equitable representation in the regional and national government.

Article 47 determined the member states of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia, and these are 1. Tigray; 2. Afar; 3. Amhara; 4.
Oromia; 5. Somali; 6. Benishangul/Gumuz; 7. Southern Nations, Nationalities and Peoples; 8. Gambela Peoples; 9. Harari. In addition two city states, Addis Ababa and Dire Dawa were latter formed. They have fullmeasures of self-government but their administrations shall be responsible to the Federal Government, although the residents shall be represented in the Council of Peoples' Representatives (Article 49/2-3). According to article 47/2 Nations, Nationalities and Peoples within the states listed above have the right to establish, at any time, their own States. Article 47/4 states that member States of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia have equal powers. The Federal State and the Statesshall have legislative, executive and judicial powers (50/2). The State Council has the power of legislation on matters falling under State jurisdiction and thus may draft, ratify and amend a state constitution (50/5).

Federal and State powers are defined by the Constitution. States shall respect the powers of the Federal State (50/8). Each nation, nationality and people is represented in the House of Federation by at least one member. Each nation or nationality shall be represented by one additionalrepresentative for each one million of its population (Article 61/2). The House of Federation, among other things, has the power to interpret the Constitution (62/1) and shall determine the division of revenues derived from joint Federal and State tax sources and subsidies that the Federal Government may provide to the States (62/7). The States collect tax in their jurisdiction and use it for their own administration and development.Through this revenue system, the Federal Government has been extending roads connecting the States with the Federal capital, States andStates, Zones within the States and big irrigation dams. Electric power and telecommunication is also being extend by the Federal Government which is also helping the States with capacity building to construct small roads (connecting districts with their zones and administrative capitals), small irrigation dams, and social infrastructures. Administrative structuresare decentralized and devaluated. Communes and districts have their councils and decide on their own social and economic activities and security. (Militia working with district and regional police). Thus, one can say that the Ethiopian Federal System has, in general, Ethiopia has not disintegrated as many feared when the idea of Self-determination and Federalism was introduced. There is no major armed conflict going on. As challenges to Ethiopian Federalism some points can be mentioned. The first one is the question of representation and participation of the nations,nationalities and peoples in the House of Peoples Representatives, the House of Federation, the States Councils and District Councils.

It seems that the Constitution is not fully respected in this case. The second challenge is that fair resource distribution is not yet in place. Ideological disagreements such as the question as to which rights, individual or group, should have priority. Should land be collectively be owned ort individually? Whether we should continue to have federal system or go back to the old central system is still matter of controversy.There is also argument against ethnic and linguistic based federalism.
There are many who are opposed to the present language policy. Interethnic conflicts erupt often caused by disputes on land, water, grassand on settlements by mass of people from one State inn another. Expansion of Addis Ababa to the surrounding districts of Oromia was cause to grave clashes between Oromo (students, farmers and residents of towns) and the Police two years ago has subsided for the time being but permanent solution to the problem has not yet been found. Expansionof modern agricultural projects, industry, infrastructures and cities are sometimes causes contention. Historical grudges have not yet completely died out and manifest themselves through some the conflict mentioned above. The non-development of democracy and multiparty system contribute much in aggravating problems. (Text ends)

In late May, 1995: Egyptian President Mohammed Hosni Mubarak survivedan assassination attempt by the Egyptian sect of the Islamic Brotherhood (Ahwan Muslimeen) when he appeared as guest of Organization of AfricanUnity (OAU) in the Ethiopian capital, Addis Ababa.

Side note: On one of the last occasions an Egyptian president visited Addis Ababa, he got no further than the road from the airport: In 1995 the motorcade of President Hosni Mubarak came under fire from Egyptianjihadists. Meantime, after the failed-attempt to kill him the Egyptian president then U-turned to Cairo, Egypt, and the Addis Ababansin flattery, renamed his turning point as "Mubarak-Mazoria", meaning for "Mubarak U-turning point". Mr. Mubarak was saved by his bulletproof car,his driver's skill and Ethiopian sharpshooters.

June 28, 1995: The football legend Getachew Abdo Mohammed who performs for FC St. George and the Ethiopian national team between 1965to 1976 has passed away of natural sickness. The legendary Getachew Abdo Mohammed would always be remembered for his technical football skill. It's to be remembered that the late Getachew Abdo Mohammed was nominated for the African selected team of 1972.

In August, 1995: The former Relief and Rehabilitation Commission (RRC)renamed as the Disaster Prevention and Preparedness Commission (DPPC).
Side note: It has to be recalled that the RRC, which founded in Mrch, 1974to deal with the drought occurred in near north province of Wollo, played a central role in bringing the 1973, and 1984 - 1985 famine in Ethiopia to the public's attention, and helped to distribute international aid to the areas in need of help. The Commission continued to function during the Transitional Government of Ethiopia.
August 22, 1995: Dr. Negasso Gidada becomes ceremonial president ofEthiopia; Meles Zenawi assumes the post of prime minister.
Side note: Dr. Negasso Gidada the son of Gidada Solon, one of the first local ministers of the Protestant Church in the Dembidolo area of Western Wellega zone of Oromia region in western Ethiopia. He was elected unanimously by the House of Peoples Representatives (HoPR) to become president of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia (FDRE). Ato Meles Zenawi and Dr. Negasso Gidada were elected head of government and head of state respectively as political power rests at the hands of the premier. The Federal parliament created with the adoption of the 4th Ethiopian constitution, the Federal Parliament replaced the "PDRE Shengo"as the legislative branch of the Ethiopian government. The Ethiopian Federal Parliament consists of two chambers:The House of Federation (Upper Chamber) & The House of People's Representatives (Lower Chamber). Ceremonial president, Dr. Negasso Gidada and the premier Mr.Meles Zenawi were elected in a joint session of the two councils with political power left in the hands of the head of government. Mr. Meles Zenawi Asres who stayed in office as transitional president from 28th May,1991 to 22nd August, 1995 turned to premier, it's during this time the ruling-EPRDF promoted divisive policies by encouraging ethnic-based federalism, and has disintegrated the once strong nation along with ethniclines locally known as "Kililloch" to fragment and weaken the nation of nations. The new federal constitution divides Ethiopia into ethnically based federal government presiding over 9-Administrative regions, each definedby a dominant ethnic-group. The ceremonial president constitutionally compelled to stay out of politics, after retirement.

August 23, 1995: The current Ministry of Foreign Affairs (MoFa) (Amharic: የ ኢ ት ዮ ጵ ያ የ ውጭ ጉ ዳ ይ ሚ ኒ ስ ቴ ር) is the Ethiopian government ministry which oversees the foreign relations of Ethiopia was reestablished with thepassing of Proclamation (Negarit) Number 4/1995, which also established the other 14 original ministries.

Its organizational structure includes: a Minister, two State Ministers, eightCabinet of the Minister, 13 General Directorate, and 42 Diplomatic Missions abroad.

List of Serving Foreign Ministers of Ethiopia

Negadras Haile Giyorgis Wolde Mikael (Later on Bitwoded) - 1907-1910Negadras Yiggezu Behabte - 1910-1911

Fitawrari Habte Giyorgis Dinagde - 1912 (acting)Dejazmach Beyene Yimer - 1912-1916

Ras Mulugeta Yiggezu - 1916-1917

Tsehafe-Tizaz Wolde Meskel Tariku - 1917 (for few months)HRH Taffari Makonnen - 1917-1930

Blatten-Geta Heruy Wolde Sellasie - 1930-1937Blatten-Geta Lorenzo Taezaz Mebrahtu – 1941

Blatten-Geta Ephraim Tewelde Medhin - 1942-1943 (Vice Minister ofForeign Affairs)

Tsehafe Tizaz Aklilu Habte-Wold - 1943-1949 Vice Minister of ForeignAffairs; 1949-1957 Minister of Foreign Affairs

Ato Yilma Deressa – 1958

Tsehafe Taezaz Aklilu Habte-Wold - 1959-1961 vice-Prime Minister andMinister of Foreign Affairs

Lij Mikael Imru Haile Selassie - 1961 (for few months)Ato Ketema Yifru - 1961-1966; 1966-1970

Dr. Minassie Haile - 1972 to 1974

Dr. Dejazmach Zawde Guebre Selassie - 1974 for few months (defected)Ato Kifle Wodajo - 1975-1977 (defected)

Colonel Dr. Feleke Gedle-Giorgis - 1977-1983Colonel Goshu Wolde - 1983-1986 (defected)Lt. Colonel Birhanu Bayeh - 1986-1989

Ato Tesfaye Dinka - 1989-1991

Ato Tesfaye Tadesse - 1991 (for one month)Ato Seyoum Mesfin - 1991-2010

Ato Haile Mariam Desalegn - 2010-2012

Ato Berhane Guebre-Kristos (acting) – 2012

Dr. Tedros Adhanom Guebre-Eyesus - 2012-present.
Note: The current Minister of Foreign Affairs receives his portfoliofollowing the death of PM Meles Zenawi.
Mid-September, 1995: Upon the fall of the Communist Duerg regime andthe proclamation of the new Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia (FDRE), yet another emblem featuring a yellow pentagram on a blue circular field has replaced the Lion at the center of the national tricolor flag. This is the flag presently used by the Federal Democratic Republic ofEthiopia (FDRE).

In early 1995: JigJiga was a city in former Hararghe province, but with theadoption of the 1995 Ethiopian constitution it became the capital of the Ethiopian-Somali Region.
Side note,- Due to political considerations, the capital of Ethiopian SomaliRegional state was moved to Jig-Jiga, which had a better infrastructure and access to communications facilities.

In November, 1995: Ethiopian National Defence Forces (ENDF) consists of two separate branches: the Ground Forces and Ethiopian Air Force effectively restructured. Being a landlocked country, Ethiopia today has nonavy. Ethiopia had acquired a coastline on the Red Sea in the 1950s and created the Ethiopian Navy in 1955. The navy operated until Eritrea's independence, in 1991, left Ethiopia landlocked again. Ethiopia has severaldefence industri organizations that produce and overhaul different weapons systems. Most of these were built under the Duerg regime which had plans for a large military industrial complex. Ethiopian armed forces rely on voluntary military service of people above 18 years of age.
Although there is no compulsory military service, armed forces mayconduct call-ups when necessary and compliance is compulsory.

November, 1995: Yemen was provoked by the newly breakaway State ofEritrea claiming that Hannish islets on the Red Sea belonged to it.

Ethiopian Navy's headquarters in Addis Ababa destablished, and theEthiopian Navy ceased to exist.

February 14, 1996; Majour General Hayelom Araya, the former member ofthe Tigrai Liberation Front (TPLF), which is the leading member of the Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF), an umbrella political coalition, shotdead in a Bar/Restaurant quarrel at an evening by an Eritrean origin in the name of Jamil Yassin.

Side note; Firmly believed in a complex murder plot mapped out by the security forces of both sides, the motives for his death remain unexplained. Majour-General Hayelom Araya was the most prominent army commander who had led armies through fierce battles. Major General Hadush "Hayelom"Araya was born in addi nebreid in Tigray, oneof his most darinh act was the "Agazi operation" on the early evening of 5th February 1985 as he led a squad of TPLF fighters in attacking themain prison in Mekelle, and freed over a thousand prisoners.

April 19, 1996: Following the conclusion of the Ethiopian Civil war and theend of the PDRE, Prime Minister Fikre Selassie was one of 46 former leaders of the PDRE who were tried in person beginning the 19 April 1996for murdering individuals, genocide and crimes against humanity by the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia; 22 more individuals, including former dictator Mengistu Haile Mariam were charged in absentia at the same trial. The trial ended on 26 May 2008, the former prime minister Fikre Selassie Wogderess and othercolleagues were sentenced to death.

May 9, 1996: Educationist and Ethiopian Teachers Association lead activistAssefa Maru is killed by government security plainclothes in broad daylight.

In July, 1996: Fatuma Roba won the Sydney Olympic women's Marathonrace with a record time of 2, 26.05. It was considered the first win in theWomen's Marathon title for Ethiopia.

September 16, 1996: All surviving former Ethiopian Naval ships were put-up for auction sale at port of Djibouti, as idled for so long time.

October 24, 1996: October 24, 1996: Ato Tamirat Layne Deputy PM and Minister of Defense arrested from power accused of corruption and embezzlement. Mr. Tamrat Layne was the leader of a rebel group known as EPDM (Ethiopian Peoples' Democratic Movement) which later molded itself to representing one of the largest ethnic-Amhara groups in Ethiopia,as ANDM (Amhara National Democratic Movement). ANDM is a member inthe EPRDF coalition which toppled the Duerg regime in May 1991 occupying state power since then.

Side note: Mr. Tamrat Layne was on the upper echelon of a rebel turnedgroup that was governing Ethiopia. He was second in command of a front/party that still rules the country. It means that he is responsible atleast for the most outstanding atrocities or crimes against humanity theregime has committed against it's own citizens during his premiership.

There are a whole lot of questions people would like to ask such as the fate of Prof. Asrat Woldeyes, the infamous Bedeno incident in which close to 200 innocent ethnic-Amharas Ethiopians were brutally murdered and thrown into a cliff sporadic and extra-judicial killings of political opponentsin various parts of the country, etc. and many more.

Tamirat Layne who was born in 1955 is an Ethiopian former politician anda converted born-again Christian. During the 1980s, he was a leader of the Ethiopian People's Democratic Movement, the forerunner of the Amhara National Democratic Movement (ANDM), one of the groups that fought against the Ethiopian dictator Lt. Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam inthe Ethiopian Civil War. When Mengistu

Haile Mariam was overthrown in May 1991, Tamirat Layne becomes one of the three-man TPLF-EPDM in the EPRDF coalition ruling the country and then in the democratically elected government, the other members being Meles Zenawi (transitionalpresident) and Siye Abraha (transitional minister of Defence) of TFG. His position was Prime Minister of the Transitional Government, in which capacity he served from June 6, 1991 until August 22, 1995, when transitional president Meles Zenawi succeeded him as Prime Minister.Tamirat Layne becomes deputy prime minister until he arrested in corruption scandal on October 1996.

After the fall of the military dictatorial regime of Duerg, Mr. Layne, withoutthe required competence or capacity to run a large country like Ethiopia, was immediately installed as Prime Minister. It was a joke for a lot of observers but for most Ethiopians it was rather saddening. Starting at the top, the new rebel regime proceeded to fill important political/public posts with rebels most of them without high school certificates. Requirements such as academic achievement, professional experience or competence, etc. clearly had no considerations. It was indeed embarrassing to the Ethiopian public which, to a certain extent, had matured to measuring public/political figures in terms of such important values. To this day, of course, performance (be it academic or professional), talent, excellence, or merit of any kind are not pre-requisites at all. Allegiance to the regime and its ideology and most important of all ethnic affiliations are the two most important criteria. Anybody satisfying these criteria can become a minister, an army general, an ambassador, a mayor etc. etc.

Layne's premiership lasted till 1995. Those four years witnessed a numberof developments albeit negative. Following the fake referendum of April, 1993, Ethiopia lost Eritrea and its sole access to the sea. Gross human rights violations where rampant all over the country. Ethnic cleansing andat times mass killings targeting specific ethnic groups have taken place in a number of places. Mr. Layne has never uttered a word against such grave human rights offences but rather have even been noted making public commentaries that would only exacerbate the problems. On his website, today, Mr. Layne claims to have been a "popular" Prime Minister which simply is not true.

Towards the end of his puppet like premiership, Mr. Layne began to ran against his own party's stringent disciplines due to his excessive indulgence into city luxuries. Only couple of years into his office, rumors began to circulate in the public about his appearances in certain late nightoccasions, often accompanied by women. Particularly his indecent extramarital affairs quickly and extensively diffused. The rumors were further strengthened by Mr. Layne's own swift self-transformation from rebel look alike to modern metropolitan while his colleagues did not yet properly shaven. He was also an impeccable dresser. All these, in my owneyes, must have triggered some jealousy from old friends. Therefore, it became increasingly evident that it was only a question of time before he lands in the jaws of his own comrades. It's on the 10th month of June, 1996 at which time he had already been demoted to the post of Vice Prime Minister and Defense Minister. On one of the plenary sessions of the then rubber stamping Parliament,

Mr. Laynewas placed on his seat, a seat he rarely used. Member of this assembly ofdummies myself, I was only four seats away from him. Personally, like many others, I felt pity for him while at the same time I was also angry athis violations of the law of the land and the party's ethical rules he himselfhas codified. I thought that if indeed, as Prime Minister, he has committed what was being said (as we have earlier been briefed), he deserved whatothers under similar circumstances have had. If however the case is purely political he definitely must challenge, I believed. Of course many members honestly expected he would, cost what cost, stand to fight because he was a fighter. Mr. Layne, however, did not go to fight for his name or his innocence either. Sitting almost next to me trembling and breathless he virtually looked lifeless. More precisely he resembled a death row prisoner on the last hour to his execution. Following came strong allegations by the then Prime Minister, the late Mr. Meles Zenawi. The allegations were mostly wrapped in what seemed an overall disciplinary problem and definitely not one stemming from political differences. According to the Prime Minister, Layne's multi-disciplinary failures combined with abuse of power has made it impossible for him to keep him in his cabinet anymore and therefore proceeded to declare his removal from all posts in his government. Zenawi's speech was short andbrief and the words seemed to have been carefully chosen. Finally, he concluded 'Tamrat is defeated not by fire but by sugar'.

Shortly thereafter Mr. Layne managed to gather himself to respond to the accusations. Not only to the surprise of anyone in the hall but also of the nation at large, Mr. Layne confirmed the correctness of what his boss, the Prime Minister, described. He thoroughly confessed that he had virtually been undisciplined and that he had violated his party's ethical rules and therefore he is incompetent to serve either the party or the country in his present capacity as Vice Prime Minister & Defense Minister. Amazing of all,he further admitted that he had repeatedly been advised on his behavior by the Prime Minister himself but has, time and again, failed to get corrected. At this time screams of women members were heard here and there with many others silently weeping and wiping tears. In the followingdays I have observed some members who knew Mr. Layne as commanderin chief and who had high regard for his performances in the field plunginginto real depression. His attack, though for the time being, seemed to have far reaching implications. At the end of the session he was hurriedly escorted by security guards towards one of the vehicles lined up at the backyard of the Parliament building. Within minutes he was driven away from the premises of the Parliament. No one knew where he was taken to nor dare ask as to what would happen to him. So came the end of a political life of a man who, as later reported, was brought up by a single parent (his mother) under uneasy living conditions in Addis Ababa. The coming weeks witnessed a number of publications in the media reporting on this bizarre political development. Most newspapers tried to examine the situation in the context of historical Amhara-Tigrian political rivalry while others saw it simply as a plot by the TPLF particularly by Meles Zenawi himself to avoid possible future problems. If I can correctly remember The Reporter published pieces of Mr. Layne's beautiful poems followed by comments from readers some adoring his charm and his talent in poetry.

A couple of months later he was officially charged with corruption, embezzlement, abuse of power, etc. before the federal court in the capital. Unlawful cash solicitation amounting to 16 million USD from Ethio-Saudi billionaire, Sheik Al Amoudi, stood central in the corruption charges.After lengthy judicial process he was found guilty on all counts and was sentenced to 18 years of imprisonment. As was true with very many othercases at the time, the fairness of the process and the impartiality of the judges were of course questionable. Released in 2008, after serving 12 of the 18-year sentence, he immediately rushed to a church in Addis Ababa to announce his conversion and his newly born identity. While in prison, he had, years earlier, been converted to Christianity. With his tears flooding like pipe water he preached about the importance of love to solveEthiopia's countless problems. He did his very best, presumably, to convince at least the Addis Ababans that he is a different person, not Tamrat of the early 1990s to whom a lot of people contained solid grudges. A year later I saw him in America as a guest for one of the most popular Christian TV shows answering questions on his revelations particularly on his miraculous encounters with Jesus Christ himself in his prison cell.
I am personally comfortable with his conversion and honestly believe thatit is true. Above all we all aspire to find the true path of our Lord Jesus Christ and ultimately an eternal life through him. I have been listening toMr. Layne's interviews and preaches since then and have found most of them to be sincere and touchy. But to make his conversion from atheism to Christianity as complete as possible, Mr. Layne must answer some questions and need to come clean.
Content written by former member of ANDM, and later Member ofParliament (Text ends)
October, 1996: Ethiopian Telecommunication Authority (ETA) replacedwith Ethiopian Telecommunications Corporation (ETC).
October 30, 1996: An EAF aircraft crashed into the marketplace, killing 8people and injuring 94. About 50 residential and commercial houses weredestroyed by fire.
November 1996: Ethiopian Telecommunication Authority (ETA) replaced with Ethiopian Telecommunications Corporation (ETC). Ethiopian Telecommunications Authority became ETC by Council of Ministers regulation No. 10/1996. The subsequent Proclamation 49/1996 expanded the ETC's duties and responsibilities. For its international traffic links and communication services, ETC mainly uses its earth station at Sululta whichtransmits and receives to both Indian Ocean and the Atlantic Ocean satellites.
November 23, 1996: A Boeng-767-260 ER passengers plane en-routefrom Addis Ababa to Nairobi was hijacked by three Ethiopians seekingpolitical asylum in Australia.
Side note;- The Boeng 767 passenger plane crash-landed in the Indian islands of the Grande Comores due to fuel starvation, killing 125 of the 175 passengers and crew on board along with the hijackers. The other 50passengers were survived with injuries.

January 17, 1997: "Emperor Amha-selassie I in-exile" died in the Washington DC area of the United States- at the Fair Oax Hospital, inFairfax, Virginia at age of 80.
Dr. Aklilu Lemma an Ethiopian physician who was previously awarded the"Right Livelihood Award-1989", jointly with Legesse Wolde-Yohannes for their effort and discoveries on how to prevent the parasitic disease bilharzia, passed away.
February 2, 1997: "Emperor in-exile Amha-selassie I" who passed away atage 80 in Virginia, USA, body was flown to Addis Ababa for a private funeral and, despite the lack of official publicity surrounding the event, theemperor's body return to his native land resulted in a massive show of public sympathy. He was buried next to his two brothers, Makonnen and Sahle-selassie at the Holy Trinity Cathedral in Addis Ababa. He was survived by daughters Princesses Maryam Senna, Sehin Azebe, Sifrash- Bizu, and son prince Zaraa-Yaacob.
Side Note: The Wedding of Crown Prince, Merid Azmatch Asfaw Wossen Haile Selassie the Duke of Wollo Province and heir apparent to the thronemarries Princess Lete Israel Seyoum of Tigre, the great-granddaughter ofEmperor Yohannes IV earlier. The Emperor-in-exileAmha Selassie and Empress Medferiashwork Abebe of Ethiopia is his second wife since the death of Princess Lete Israel Seyoum of Tigre.
June 1997: Ethiopia began to import refined petroleum products rather than rely on the Assab refinery. It has to be recalled that since the overthrow of the Duerg regime, Ethiopia had obtained much of its refined petroleum from an antiquated Eritrean refinery in Assab. Eritrea asked Ethiopia to increase the share it obtained from the refinery and demandedadditional payment in hard currency. But Ethiopia rejects at this arrangement.
July 1997: Eritrea created its own official currency, Nakfa, to replace itsuse of Ethiopian Birr'
In an interview with an Eritrean publication Prime Minister Meles Zenawisaid it is "necessary" that Eritrea have its own currency and issuance of the Nakfa "will not affect the relationship of the two countries."
In October 1997: A protocol agreement was reached between Eritrea andEthiopia to shut-down the Assab refinery for an economic reason. Once Ethiopia terminated use of the Assab refinery, the facility became uneconomical and Eritrea dismantled it. This also forced Eritrea to importits fuel needs in hard currency and at higher cost.
Eritrea announced that the Nakfa and the Birr would circulate on both sides of the border and it would retain its stock of Birr for use as it desired. Ethiopia saw this arrangement as unfair, announced a trade policy based on hard currency and letters of credit (LC), and immediatelyissued new Birr so that Eritrea's Birr holdings would be worthless. But thehandling of this issue did become one of many reasons for the breakdownin trust between Addis Ababa and Asmara. Ethiopia also shifted more of its imports to Djibouti.

In January, 1998: Dire Dawa was separated from Oromia Region to become a chartered city’ The ongoing violence and the fear of protracted ethnic-conflict caused the city of Dire Dawa to be designated federally administered city. Dire Dawa was separated from the Oromia Region to become a chartered city. Both the Issas and the Oromos claimed the cityof Dire Dawa; as a result, there were numerous clashes between the twogroups from 1991 until 1993. This ongoing violence and the fear of protracted ethnic conflict caused the city to be designated federally administered city Dire Dawa was separated from Oromia around 1998 tobecome a chartered city.

In January 1998: Through the government's privatization program, Lega-Dembi gold mine was acquired by MIDROC-Ethiopia Technology Group’ Side note: MIDROC has announced that the deposits at Lega Dembi are almost exhausted. Two of the major mines of Ethiopia are located near Shakiso: the Lega Dembi gold and the Kenticha tantalum mines.

Environmentalists who protested at Lege-Dembi gold mining charged witha terror plot and faced trial at the latter in Shahamane first instance court.February 7, 1998: Exactly one week before his second year in prison, a court ruled out a death sentence against Jamil Yassin, the assassin of Majour-General Hayalom Araya.

In early May-1998: Ethiopian-Eritrean border disputes erupts into armed clashes. The Ethio-Eritrean border clashes turned into a full-scale war overa portion of territory, which included the town of "Badme" that had been administered as part of Tigrai.

On mid-May, 1998: Eritrean origins residing in Addis Ababa banned from founding "Horn Bank Sc Under Formation", according to the new banking and insurance proclamation of 1994. The established Horn Bank founder and main shareholders were expelled from Ethiopia, the Horn Bank closeddown on the start of it’s operation.

In March, 1998: The "Ethiopian Peoples Democratic Movement (EPDM)"who's member organization of the ruling-EPRDF, renamed the "AmharaNational Democratic Movement (ANDM)".

In April, 1998: Assab port facilities which was greatly expanded in the early 1990s, with the construction of new terminals, the port is drasticallydeclines since trade with Ethiopia was terminated as a consequence of theEthio-Eritrea War.

Side note: The port of Assab has declined since trade with Eritrea was terminated as a consequence of the Ethio-Eritrean war. Assab or Aseb, (Ge'ez ዓሳብ ʿAsab’) is a port city in the Southern Red Sea Region of presentEritrea on the west coast of the Red Sea. Assab possesses an oil refinery, which was shut down later for economic reasons. The two countries Eritrea and Ethiopia hardly became good neighbours, with the issues of Ethiopian access to the Eritrean ports of Massawa and Assab and unequal trade terms souring relations. Due to change of currencies (Eth.Birr & Er. Nakfa) in both countries at the same time, Ethiopia and Eritrea needed to use a third currency as common marketing currency to effectively managebilateral cross-border trades, but unequal trade terms soures the relation among the two. In 1989, Assab as an Ethiopian administrative region had a population of about 39,600 population but inhabitants were fully left thetown in the late 1990s.

The ongoing violence and the fear of protracted ethnic-conflict caused thecity of Dire Dawa to be designated federally administered city. Dire Dawawas separated from the Oromia Region to become a Chartered city.

April 6, 1998: Eritrean troops captured the surrounding hills of Badmecrossing the Gash-setit (Mereb) river followed by the seizure of Adiabokilling border patrols, in northern region of Tigrai.

April 8, 1998: OBITUARY: Commander Lemma Gutema Debel, former VP of the PDRE State Council, who was born in former Arussi province in August 1940, passed away of natural sickness while under a detention cellin the central prison. Commander Lemma Gutema lived in a life of naval seamanship in the former Imperial Ethiopian Navy, was also fortunate enough to serve under the Duerg regime in highest capacities as, Jurist, diplomat, regional administrator, and VP of the state council of the formerPDRE. Rest In Peace!

May 12, 1998: Eritrea invaded Badme sub-district of Tigray in Ethiopia,which had been administered by Ethiopian successive regimes with an outnumbering military force.

Ethiopian- Eritrean border clashes turn into a full-scale war. The border dispute with Eritrea led to the Eritrean–Ethiopian War, which lasted untilJune 2000 and cost both countries an estimated $1 million a day. Eritreaemerged from its long war of independence in April, 1993 only to plungeonce again into military conflict, first with Yemen and then, more devastatingly, with its old adversary, Ethiopia.

The tiny bordertown"Badme" located in northern region of Tigrai was captured by the Eritrean invading troops. There were several small borderincidents preceding the May 12, 1998 conflict that were never made a major public issue by either Ethiopia or Eritrea. The most serious one occurred in July 1997 at Adi Murug in the Bada area of Eritrea. Eritrea claimed publicly after the outbreak of conflict in May, 1998 that two battalions of the Ethiopian army came to Adi Murug, declared it Ethiopian territory and appointed an Ethiopian administrative committee. Ethiopia claimed that it only briefly entered Eritrea in hot pursuit of remnants of the Afar opposition and then returned to Ethiopia.

Ethiopian government media outlets officially admitted that Ethiopian- Eritrean border disputes erupts into armed clashes, the Ethio-Eritrean border clashes turned into a full-scale war over a portion of territory, which included the town of "Badme" that had been administered as part ofTigrai. Eritrean troops invaded Badme and it's environs. Thus, the two began a conventional type war on 12 May in which an estimated 100,000 soldiers on both sides perished in the next two years. Despite the two people were remained akeen and bound together by history, language, culture and demography, the two regimes in Addis Ababa and Asmara are going to plangue back into war for sake of political power. Both sides soon to expel Ethiopians and Eritrean origins from each side.

In May, 1998: Ethiopian-Eritrean border disputes erupts into an armed clashes, the Ethio-Eritrean border clashes turned into a full-scale war over a portion of territory, which included the town of "Badme" that had beenadministered as part of Tigrai previously.

In mid-May 1998: Ethiopian government has been sharply criticised for it's Eritrean origins-expulsion campaign. Many Ethiopians convinced that Eritreans are pillars of the Ethiopian economy scattering throughout Ethiopia pre-1998. As a matter of similarity, most Ethiopians are unable todistinguish the two Tigrigna-speaking population of the Tigrigna-speaking Ethiopian origins and the Tigrigna-speaking Eritrean highlanders known asusually "Kabassa" in terms of culture, religion, demographic and linguistic attachment b/n the two sides. It did not happen as feared when the TPLF-under the disguise of EPRDF pushed-out Eritrean origin friends and colleagues from their place of birth in Ethiopia and wanted the rest of Ethiopians to celebrate with them, but the people were crying following the buses taking their brothers and sisters away from their homes. No place for hatred in Ethiopia, that was what happened in Ethiopia in late 1990s.
May 31, 1998: Eritrean troops fully controlled Adi-Irob in the northernregion of Tigrai.
June 1,1998: A statement from Addis Ababa Police said Jamil Yassin, anEritrean origin was executed by firing squads after a court trial in February, 1997 found him guilty of murder.
Side note;- Believed the statement was more for propaganda consumptionthat the execution was carried out with such flattery sense for "rule of law". The families of the victim Majour-General Hayelom Araya and the assassin Jamil Yassin were summoned to the Central prison, then security officials brought to the families not a living assassin Jamil but his dead body in a box. Many believe executing the assassin after nearly three years of silence was for political expediency to quash the public anger over Eritrea's then fresh war against Ethiopia in May-1998, and there werewell-documented public fears that Eritrea was preparing to raid onto bordertowns.

Someone cannot forget sentimental common bondage, and similarity in allphases of the two people as it was evident when EPRDF led regime forced out Eritreans a month ago and their Ethiopian neighbors tried to hide them when they could or sent them with gifts and tears in their eyes whenthey could not. When EPLF kicked out thousands of Ethiopians from Eritrea it was not in consultation or upon the demand of the people. EPLF did this while the war was raging and the people could not be expected to do anything about it.
June 5, 1998: The Eritrean Air Force bombarded the Ayder Junior high school in Mek'ele during the Eritrean-Ethiopian war killing 12, about 168badly injured in the incident.
Side note: The newly separated state of Eritrean Air Force bombarded theAyder school in Mekelle during the Ethio-Eritrean war. The "Greater-Tigraiagenda" faced a set-back when the TPLF-led government went war with Eritrea. It's genesis lies in the Tigrean national organization, that established by the Addis Ababa University students, a protest launch-pad in the early 1970s, almost all of members of the Tigrean national organization, who formally launched the TPLF and it's armed struggle on February, 1975, in Dedebit, 900 kms north of Addis Ababa, the seat of thegovernment.

September 10, 1998: United Bank Share company Sc established by 2,600 shareholders with a registered capital of ETB 1, 000, 000.

November 12, 1998: OBITUARY: The honorable Dr. Kebede Michael, thedistinguished writer and novelist at the age of 82' No other Ethiopian in the country's history so far has been able to write as extensively on a wide variety of disciplines as did Kebede Michael. His contributions are enormous to the development of education and literature in Ethiopia.

Remembering the Writer & Novelist Dr. Kebede Michael:

His Place of Birth: Debre Birhan Germo Gabriel (1909-1991 EC). Dr. Kebede Michael was one of the great thinkers in the field of education andliterature in Ethiopia. He wrote a total of 26 books including a wide range of translations from various languages. From 1940 to 1970, he wrote Amharic school textbooks in which he provided generations of Ethiopian students with literature filled with knowledge and information about a wide range of issues and disciplines. His writings are in both prose and poetry and his poems follow rhyming and writing styles of his own.

He translated, among many others, Romeo and Juliet and Macbeth of William Shakespeare. Kebede Michael's literary works reflect on the manyshades of character and behaviour of the Ethiopian society. The contents of many of his books are on history, education, development, philosophy,religion, science and so on.

He worked as an inspector in the Ministry of Education, as Deputy Directorin the Ministry of Foreign Affairs (1942), as Director of the National Library(1944), Director-General of the Ministry of Education, and as a Cabinet Minister in the Imperial Palace. He was a regular Ethiopian delegate to many international conferences at the United Nations in New York. He received the first Prize for Literature from the late Emperor Haile Selassie

I. He also received awards from governments of France, Germany, Italy, USSR and Mexico. In 1990, he received an Honorary Doctorate Degree from Addis Ababa University for his unparalleled excellence in literature aswell as for inspiring generations of Ethiopian authors and writers. December 25, 1998: Dr. Asrat Woldeyes, the distinguished surgeon, and President of the All-Amhara Peoples Organization (AAPO) who had been jailed for over a year by the Ethiopian Peopes Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) led government, authorities finally yielded to international pressure, granting him a compassionate release and allowing him treatment in Houston, Texas. Though his treatment was at first successful,Asrat died five months later of his heart ailment at the University of Pennsylvania hospital in Philadelphia..

January, 1999: Ethiopian- Eritrean border clashes turn into a full-scalewar

January 29, 1999: The United Nations security council (UNSC) in it's Resolution number 1226 urges Eritrea to accept settlement on war withEthiopia.

March 27, 1999: 18 out of 30 TPLF CC members, and 4 of 5 TPLF Executive Council members were sacked by the ruling party chairman andhead of government.
April 7, 1999: Football legend Getachew Abebe nicknamed “Dulla”, who had performed as goalkeeper for FC St. George and the Ethiopian nationalteam between 1964 and 1976, passed away in natural sickness.
The late Getachew Abebe (Dulla) was remembered for his seniority and performance in football with a total of 114 matches for the national squadthan any other soccer players of his time.
May 14 , 1999: Dr. Asrat Woldeyes (June 20, 1928 – May 14, 1999) therenowned Ethiopian surgeon passed away’
Obituary: Dr Asrat Woldeyas was a Professor of Medicine at Addis AbabaUniversity and the founder and leader of the All-Amhara People's Organization (AAPO), as well as a political figure who was jailed by the Duerg and later by the ruling- Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) has died at age of 70 while he was under a hospital treatment in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Professor Asrat was thefounder member of the Ethiopian Medical Association (EMA).
May 26, 1999 (Ginbot 19, 1991 EC): Historical Incident: Mobile Phonesoperation commenced in Ethiopia.
July 8, 1999: Dr. Abdul-Majid Hussein, Ethiopian Minister of Transport andCommunication (EMoTAC) survives an assassination plot with six bullets athis ministry’s doorsteps in Addis Ababa. A bystander non-connected with the event has been killed. The rebel Ogadien National Liberation Front (ONLF) has claimed responsibility.
Side note: Dr. Abdul Majid Hussein who passed away in a natural sicknesslater on the 29th March, 2004 who was repeatedly accused of being a traitor by the rebel ONLF, was chairman of the Somali Peoples DemocraticParty (SPDP), partner of the ruling Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF), a four parties coalition which has ruled the country since the fall of Mengistu Haile Mariam eight years ago and was headed by the rebel turned politician Meles Zenawi Asres. The late Dr. Abdul Majid Hussein was an influential minister within the government , he has served in various posts from Minister of Transitional External Economic Cooperation (MEEC) to Permanent Representative of Ethiopia tothe United Nations.
September 11, 1999: Explosion inside Tigray Hotel which is located incentral Addis Ababa. No group claims responsibility.
September 11, 1999; The US Administration initiates Terrorism to create‘Potential Terrorist’s to Overthrow legitimate governments' The US secretly planned to overthrow seven countries after 9/11: Iraq, Syria, Lebanon, Libya, Somalia, Sudan, and Iran. The US caused the “war on terror” as a policy choice; The 9/11 was pretense and not the cause.

Indeed, war law and two UN Security Council Resolutions provided international cooperation for factual discovery of the 9/11 terrorists,arrests, and trial for lawful justice all nations supported.
In November, 1999: Flt. Colonel Bezabih Petros, an EAF aircraft pilot captured by Eritrean security forces for second time since he released inearly years as PoW when his MIG-21 fighter interceptor was shotdown during the Ethio-Eritrean war.
In November 1999, Ethiopia makes a two year boarder war with it's newlybreakaway state of Eritrea. The border war intensified.
Side note;- Many of the war victims died during the war used as "human mine sweepers" that fought mainly in WW I trench-style war, it was neverpredicted, as military analysts called it "senseless" or "Bulls' fight". It was reported over 98 thousand people, and over 36 thousand donkies and other domestic animals were died when the Ethiopian army used them as animal shield (deminers) during the Ethio-Eritrean war, according to international animals rights activists. Indeed, it's to be recalled that Eritrea used to be a part of Ethiopia and fought a 30 year war for it's independence. TPLF and EPLF were two sides of a coin despite the two armed groups appearance that they are on permanent war-footing, following the fall of the Duerg control of Ethiopia, Eritrea was encouraged by Ethiopia to declare it's independence from Ethiopia in de-jure in April,1993. It did so, taking not only the historical geographic area of Eritrea, but also the coastal part of Ethiopia adjacent to Djibouti, and containing the Ethiopian port of Assab, which had never been part of traditional Eritrea, but had been part of the administration zone of Eritrea under the Ethiopian rule. The result was that Ethiopia lost it's access to the Red sea, with it's geographical and ethnic ties with Eritrea, had an anticipated a friendly trading path through new Eritrea to the sea, because of the friendly separation of the territories. In terms of their economies, and culture, with each easily being the other's largest trade partner, this was not to be, and Eritrea began making unacceptable demands on Ethiopia, acquiring the wealth of Ethiopia through illegal means, such as buying cash-crops in local currency and re-exporting it in hard currency, or get-involved in currency speculation and money-laundering, forgery, misappropriation of Ethiopian government properties were some of the intolerable acts of the regime in Asmara, which ultimately led to war and to the inability of Ethiopia to use the ports of modern day Eritrea. Eritrea had deliberately challenged it's bigger neighbour on territorial issues that Ethiopia considers it as claims for the flashpoint of Badme. The result is that Eritrea is now economically destitute, and the Eritrean president, a once mentor of his counterpart, Meles Zenawi, is under increasing pressure to see the Ethiopian government fail.
In December, 1999: As part of diplomatic effort to mediate mediate therift, a “Moratorium” was signed before the two foes were turned to a bloddy war again.
Side note;- Relations between the two sides have been bitterly since, theborder war that broke out to guzzle thousands lives of young soldiers of both countries, many in brutal WW I style trench warfare, which political analysts called "senseless war" or on the other say "Bulls' fight" as believed, the border issue was not the real issue, it is which Ethiopia said that the Eritrean regime is no longer welcome to be such reliant onto Ethiopia, that the Eritrean soldiers marched into the Ethiopian territory which their guns and tanks in their control, the independent EEBC awarded the flashpoint town of Badme to Eritrea in April of the next year. But it's a non-secret that it was Meles Zenawi the PM himself who has provided the boundary commission with a map as proof evidence that shows Badme inside Eritrea. For that matter the "Ethiopian" delegation headed by Yemane Kidane, nicknamed "Jamaica", who's an Eritrean by origin closer-cousin for the Eritrean president, then a boss behind the scene i.e. Director-General of MoFA, therefore, the game over border demarcation was meant b/n Eritrean counterparts, critics have complaining on the start. Ethiopia still occupies the disputed territory, finaldemarcation of the Ethiopia-Eritrea Boundary Commission (EEBC) on the ground is currently on hold because of the Ethiopian objections to an international commission's finding requiring it to surrender territory considered more sensitive and inflammatory to Ethiopia. The price-cost paid-up for a territorial integerity with over seventy thousand or so lives and millions of dollars wasted weapons and munitions from North Korea and East Europe, "after having given-up the elephantsize, the ruling-elite scream on a smaller, Badme ?", as both legitimate parts of Ethiopia, pan- Ethiopian groups refering the seceded Eritrea and the flashpoint town of Badme. In general, it's very essential to know that, border delineation have been defined usually by politics while diplomacy defines borders, now history, race, ethnicity, religion as well as culture. Many had been tooimpatient, speculated exactly what's really going on between Asmara and Addis Ababa, however, have a lot of unresolved issues.

In December, 1999, A 300 MW Tekeze hydro-power was initiated, and was scheduled to be completed in 2008, the end cost of the dam was about USD 360 million. The Tekeze is a double-curvature arch dam in theTigrai region of northern Ethiopia on the Tekezé River. The Hydro Electricproject aims to construct the highest double curve arch dam in Africa, topping the current highest, Lesotho. The contractors behind the project are CWGS and completion is scheduled to occur in February, 2009.

In December,1999: The Addis Ababa Stadium was renovated for theConfederation of African Football (CAF) Youth Championship held in Ethiopia.

In December, 1999: The Ethiopian premier waited for a few days the stronger Ethiopian army to advance in all fronts in Eritrea, the Eritreanpresident Issaias Affe-worki and his families and associates could have been in Saudi Arabia or elsewhere in the Gulf Arab states to their permanent home by now as refugees.

Side note;- Military analysts praised the Ethiopian premier and commander in-chief of the Ethiopian Defence forces Mr. Meles Zenawi, themighty savor of Shaabia (PFDJ) and the territories it claims-control as Eritrea nowadays. "If blood is indeed thicker than water", then Eritrean authorities may not have forgot the last of their chance to survive!

April 24, 2000: Debebe Seifu a self-made writer, and essayist passed away of neural sickness after eight years of acute suffering, considereddeath of one of greatest literary sons .

A new legislation No 373/2000 to strengthen the National Electoral Boardof Ethiopia (NEBE) came into force.

Ato Tekle-Tsadik Mekuria (1914 - 2000), the distinguished historian passed away in natural cause at age of 86 in Addis Ababa. Place of Birth: -Teguletina Bulga Awraja (1906-1992 E.C).

Dr. Arshavir Turzian, a renowned micro-biologist and physician died at ageof 84 in Addis Ababa.

On 12th May, 2000 the UNSC through its Resolution Number 1297demands end to conflict between Eritrea and Ethiopia.

May 17, 2000: The United Nations Security Council (UNSC) in it's Resolution Number 1298 imposes arms embargo on Eritrea and Ethiopia.In June, 2000: Ethiopia and Eritrea sign a cessation of hostilities agreement which provides for a UN observer force to monitor the truce and supervise the withdrawal of Ethiopian troops from Eritrean territory.Ethiopia, Eritrea accept a new common border, drawn-up by an independent Ethiopi-Eritrea Boundary Commission (EEBC), though both sides they lay claim to the town of "Badme".

Side note: The border disputes around the town of Badme erupted into open hostilities. This conflict ended with a peace deal, but not before leaving both sides with tens of thousands of soldiers dead.

Meantime, Ethiopia and Eritrea signed a ceasefire agreement in the Algerian capital ofAlgiers which provides a UN deployment forces, known as the United Nations Mission for Ethiopia and Eritrea (UNMEE) to monitor the truce and supervise the withdrawal of Ethiopian troops from Eritrean territory.

A security zone separates the two countries. The UN patrolled the zone at one time but pulled out later, unable to fulfil its mandate.

In July 2000: Derartu Tulu a female track runner won the Sydney Olympic10, 000 mtrs track running race for the second time with a record time of 30.17.49. Derartu Tulu remains celebrated female track runner, she also remembered for her speed and her 60.3 second-last lap at the end of the 10,000 metres at the Sydney Olympics was a sprint of note. She is knownto have a total of 6 world and two Olympic gold medals.

In July 2000: Athlete Million Wolde has won 5, 000 mtrs Olympic games track running race in Sydney Olympic games in Australia at a record timeof 13.35.49.

In July 2000: Athlete Gezahegne Abera won the Sydney summer Olympicmarathon race with a record time of 2; 10; 11.

November 5, 2000: His Holiness Abune Paulos, Patriarch of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church, their Eminences the Archbishops, their Graces the Bishops, and various clergy, members of the Imperial Family, members ofthe Veterans Association, and members of the Organizing Committee attended the funeral mass at the Monastery Church of St. Mary Ba'ita.

The reburial ceremonies of the late emperor Haile Selassie I attended by His Royal Highness Prince Zera-Yacob Asfaw Wossen, whos symbolic representative of the Imperial family of Ethiopia, the Patriarch of Abune Paulos, the Ethiopian Orthodox Archbishop of Jerusalem Abune Mathias, the Greek Orthodox Archbishop of Axum Metropolitan Petros, theArchbishop of Wellega Abune MaKarios. This was taken at the St. Trinity Cathedral church in Addis Ababa where the Emperor's remains had been kept in the Royal coffin tombs after they had been recovered under the Menelik II palace under a toilet room. This was during the ceremonies after the funeral mass celebrated there before the funeral procession to Maskal Square and then to Holy Trinity Cathedral for the reburial there.

Ethiopia

The Emperor's remains were placed in the mausoleum at the Ba'eta Le Mariam Monastery until the time that an agreement could be reached to hold his funeral and final burial at the Holy Trinity Cathedral. No agreement could be reached with the state authorities, so the Ethiopian Orthodox Church, the Haile Selassie I Memorial Foundation, and the War Veterans Association of Ethiopia, in agreement with the Imperial family, held a non-State Imperial Funeral for the late Emperor. Her Royal Highness, Princess Tenagnework Haile Selassie is the only child of the Emperor who survives. Remains of the ex-emperor Haile Selassie properlylaid in a tomb alongside that of his late wife empress Mennen Asfaw at Addis Ababa’s Holy Trinity Cathedral. It has to be recalled that the formeremperor was died mysteriously and buried beneath a palace toilet

...where his remains were discovered in April, 1992.

LEGACY: Something handed down by the late former emperor:

He was born in July, 1892 in the eastern town Ejersa Goru, 525 km fromthe capital Addis Ababa near the city of Harrar, crowned as emperor in November, 1930, but lived in exile during the brutal Italian occupation ofEthiopia from 1935 to 1941 – some of it staying in the Abbey Hotel in Malvern, Worcestershire, while his grand daughters attended Clarendon School in North Malvern.

Emperor Haile Selassie I took this name as the ruler of what may be described as the world’s original country (the country in which human ancestors developed, and which we first walked out of), but his originalname was Taffari, and “Ras” means “head” or leader.

Ethiopian emperor Haile Selassie to the United Nations General Assemblyin June 1963.

Emperor Haile Selassie I – some of the words from that speech to the UNin 1963, used in Marley’s song . . . . . until there are no longer first-classand second-class citizens of any nation; that until the colour of a man’s skin is of no more significance than the colour of his eyes; that until the basic human rights are equally guaranteed to all, without regard to race;that until that day, the dream of lasting peace and world citizenship and the rule of international morality will remain but fleeting illusions, to be pursued but never attained . . . until bigotry and prejudice and maliciousand inhuman self-interest have been replaced by understanding and tolerance and goodwill; until all Africans stand and speak as free beings, equal in the eyes of all men, as they are in the eyes of Heaven; until thatday, the African continent will not know peace.

When Haile Selassie reinstated as emperor of Ethiopia in April, 1941, heset about modernising the nation. Many members of the Rastafarians in Jamaica believe that Haile Selassie was God incarnate, or the reincarnation of Jesus Christ. Indeed, in her book No Woman, No Cry, Marley's wife Rita, also a Rastafarian, claimed she had seen a stigmata onthe palm of Haile Selassie's hand, resembling the marks left by Christ being nailed to the cross, as Selassie waved to crowds during his visit to Jamaica in 1966. Other Rastafarians might just see him as God's chosen king on Earth. In using his words, Marley furthers the two aspects of the emperor – as head of State and as the living God of Rastafarian belief.
Political opposition, fuel crisis, rising unemployment and famine are seenas contributing to him being ousted in September, 1974 by a military junta known as the Duerg led by an junior officer called Majour MengistuHaile Mariam which, it is believed, finally killed him. (Text ends) December 7, 2000: Ethiopia declares the ongoing war with it's neighbourEritrea at it's final.
December 10, 2000: Ethiopia and Eritrea signed a ceasefire, known as the'Algiers Agreement" in the Algerian capital, Algiers. Meles Zenawi, the Ethiopian prime minister signed the controversial UN peace treaty that was seen to have much favored Eritrea. This decision angered many Ethiopians and caused an internal division inside the Ethiopian ruling party. The faction critical of Meles, led by the Defense Minister Siye Abraha, and Gebru Asrat, the then influential governor of Tigray disagreedwith those aligned with Meles over "key issues of ideology", accused their supporters of corruption and Meles of failing to act quickly or decisively enough over the crisis with Eritrea.
Side note;- Ethiopia and Eritrea sign a peace agreement in Algerian capitalAlgiers, ending the two years of conflict. The agreement establishes commissions to delineate the disputed border and provides for the exchange of prisoners and the return of displaced people. During the war with Eritrea in 1998, the Ethiopian Prime Minister was sabotaged Ethiopia's war against the Eritrean unprovoked invasion from the beginning to the end when the war was called off abruptly with Ethiopian troops progressing ahead and ready to capture Asmara, the Eritrean capital. The war with Eritrea from the beginning caused a split within the top TPLF leadership, after Meles Zenawi signed the controversial UN sponsored Algiers peace agreement that was seen much of it, favored Eritrea, the aggressing party to handover undisputed sovereign territories without the consent of the Ethiopian people. The agreement establishes commissions to delineate the disputed border and provides for the exchange of PoWs and the return of displaced people. But on the questionof Ethiopia's right for access to the Sea is not well defined, particularly since the secession of Eritrea in April, 1993 and the Ethio-Eritrea border war of 1998 to 2000. The Algiers agreement that accepted as valid the defunct Italian colonial treaties played a crucial role in deciding the fate ofEthiopia's access to the Red Sea. During and following the Ethio-Eritrean Algiers agreement of December, 2000, Ethiopians across the world expressed their conern with protest marches, diplomatic lobbying, and formal appeals to the United Nations, the African Union, the Ethiopian Federal parliament, International organs, and anyone who would act. Of course, all of this public appeals came to naught because the Ethiopian government had already made it's decision to recognize the entire Red Sea coast as integr al part of the newly independent State of Eritrea without any acknowledgement of fundamental citizenship rights of the people of the Afar-coast and the question of Ethiopia's access to the Red Sea, paricularly access to port of Assab remained controversial. As it has the consequence of destroying UNs moral authority, it's hard to imagine that Ethiopia, a country of over 85 million population, is the only country in the world that is denied access to the Sea, only about 60 km, yet has no access to it. Consequently, eversince the loss of Assab port, Ethiopia has fallen at mercy of the tiny Djibouti and has been under intense searching for alternative outlets through port-Sudan (Sudan), Berbera (Somaliland) and Mombassa (Kenya), all at great costs and economic burden on the economic, political, diplomatic and security wellbeing of thenation.

The Oromia Regional State moved its regional capital from Addis Ababa toAdama, then the city of "Nazareth" officially reverted to its original Oromiffa name "Adama", but the name "Nazareth" is still widely used by the public.

The HoPR legislated a bill No 573/2000 to enable National Electoral Boardof Ethiopia (NEBE) tighten it’s control over nationally and regionally registered rival opposition political parties.

The National Bank of Ethiopia abbreviated as NBE, under the new proclamation No. 592/2000 empowered to supervise and monitor financialinstitutions in Ethiopia.

Side note;- The National Bank of Ethiopia prior to the proclamation the Bank used to carry out dual activities, i.e. commercial banking and centralbanking. Proclamation No. 592/2000 raised the NBE's capital to ETB 10.0 million and granted broad administrative autonomy and judicial personality. Following the proclamation, the National Bank of Ethiopia (NBE) was entrusted with the following responsibilities, To regulate the supply, availability and cost of money and credit. To manage and administer the country's international reserves. To license and supervise banks and hold commercial banks reserves and lend them money. To supervise loans of commercial banks and regulate interest rates. To issue paper money and coins. To act as an agent of the Government. And To fixand control the foreign exchange rates.

December, 2000: By the end of the Gregorian century, it’s well understood that there were over 20,000 students admitted in Addis AbabaUniversity (AAU) campuses.

In January 2001: Estimated 80, 000 Ethiopians have sacrificed their lives for motherland and repelled the Eritrean troops, but the ruling-party blamed with delivery of potential evidences that "Badme and it’s environs"to the same defeated Eritrean regime instead of upholding the disputed area through a "status-quo ante".

In January, 2001: CAF African Youth Championship held in Ethiopia. Inthis championship, the Ethiopian National Youth team came fourth.

Ethiopian youth team thereby qualified for the first time for the 2001 FIFAWorld Youth Championship that took place in Argentina.

Side note;-This was the qualification tournament for the World Youth Championship held between all the participating countries in Africa. Ethiopian youth team thereby qualified for the first time for the 2001 FIFAWorld Youth Championship that took place in Argentina. Ethiopia, one of Africa's earliest champions, have been far from recreating that kind of achievement for many decades. Ethiopia, one of the four founding members of the Confederation of African Football (CAF), have hosted the Nations Cup three times in 1962, 1968 and 1976 but their last appearanceat the finals was in February, 1982 in Libya. Victory in that tie saw only in the 1962 continental cup qualifer for the group stage.

February 2001: The TPLF inernal crisis, its most serious ever led to the expulsion of its "leftist" wing led by the party elite Tewolde Wolde Mariam,that retains sole power for Meles Zenawi and an economic U-turn supposed to bring Ethiopia into the global market. The political fallout among the ruling coalition partner Tigrai Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) party veterans followed by the sacking of 6 TPLF polit bureau members, 13 CC members 5 senior army officers, TPLF war veterans, and other mid-rank officers in the army.

February 19, 2001: Over 30 disgruntled TPLF war veterans fled to junglesto form the latter Tigray Peoples Democratic Movement (TPDM) as to unseat the current TPLF led government in Addis Ababa. Several other TPLF war veterans have either been sidelined or kicked out by the head ofgovernment using the State security apparatus as a tool.

February 24, 2001: Ethiopia says it has completed its troop withdrawalfrom Eritrea in accordance with UN-sponsored agreement.

In March 2001: As an international arbitration on the Ethio-Eritrea conflictunderway in the Hague, the Netherlands, an infight among the veteran members of the Tigrai Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) which is a member of Ethiopia's five-party ruling coalition EPRDF led by Meles Zenawi eruptedas a result of their sacking from the TPLF Central Committee as well as the Polit-Bureau.

Side note;- The sacking includes the ideologue and TPLF de-facto man AtoTewelde Wolde-Mariam, Ato Alemseged Guebre-Amlak, a party Ideologue and former rebel commander Seeye Abraha Hagos, were some of the leaders of the Tigrean People's Liberation Front (TPLF), and later senior members of the Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) coalition led government. Ato Seeye Abraha, the former rebel commander, who has served as defense minister of Ethiopia from 1991 to1995 was among others, he was one of 12 influential figures purged from the TPLF leadership after criticizing Meles Zenawi perceived weaknesses inhis handling of a two-year border war with Eritrea that ended in 2000 thatcosts the nation about 80, 000 lives. Relations between Ethiopia and Eritrea have been extremely tense since a costly border war which they waged between 1998 and 2000. After the TPLF led rebel groups defeated the Duerg military regime in the Ethiopian Civil War, Seeye Abraha was served in the post-Duerg government of Ethiopia as Minister of Defence, and was Chairman of the Board and CEO of the EFFORT from its foundingin 1995 until 2000. Ato Seeye Abraha Minister at the beginning of the Eritro-Ethiopian war, many credit him as the architect of the 1998-2000 war whose battle successes had brought Ethiopian forces closer to storming the Eritrean capital of Asmara. Despite Ethiopian successes, theTPLF divided into two groups.

Side note;- One group, which included Seeye, believed that the leadershipwas about to surrender the party to foreign "imperialist" interests. And accused Meles Zenawi of being too soft on the Eritrean government, in addition to accusations of his handling of the post-war events, he had swingging against his critics for his pre-war that ignored Eritrean incurssions and delayed Ethiopian response to the invasion, critics and rivals disingenuously charge him of "national treason". The other group which included premier Meles Zenawi argued that the TPLF was sinking into decadence, involving itself in Bonapartism and accusing their opponents of extensive corruption. Believed the division among the veterans was part of some previous intrigues interfered by western intelligence agencies to save their man Meles Zenawi Asres, and later to severely divide the ruling-EPRDF member organs.

April 10 to 14, 2001: Addis Ababa University students uprising followed bylooting and killings.

Side note: Following the AAU's riot within its compound, public discontention brokeout against the ruling-party's arrogant policies, massmedia outlets quoted 41 peoples were shot dead, an "Inquiry Commission" established by the government to further investigate thealleged killings.

May 12, 2001: Kinfe Guebre Medhin, the chief of intelligence assassinatedby a junior army officer at the army senior officers club in western Addis Ababa. Kinfe Guebre-Medhin, chief of the security and Immigration Authority was murdered by fellow junior army officer, which resulted in one of the most high-profile criminal act in recent history. Post-morten forensics result show that Ato Kinfe has been gunshot with six bullet at hisback and head skull at the presence of the Chief of general staff of the Armed Forces General Samora Yonus and other senior officer General Wadi-Medhin. The assassin in the name of Majour Tsehaye Wolde selassie is arrested on the spot. It's widely believed the assassinationconsidered political foul play.

The Ethiopian Prime Minister pushed through a draft anti-corruption lawthat avoids bailing for suspects on charges of corruption.

May 23, 2001: A Corruption watchdog, "The Federal Ethics & Anti- Corruption Commission" established under Federal Proclamation (Negarit)Gazette of No /2001.

June 23, 2001: Federal President Dr. Negasso Gidada withdrew from theEC of the Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Democratic Front, shortly known as EPRDF in confrontation with the head of government Meles Zenawi.

October 8, 2001: Dr. Negasso Gidada Solon, the FDRE President left officewhen his term expired. Before the end of his term, he was expelled from both the Oromo Peoples Democratic Organization (OPDO) and the rulingcoalition Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) on 22nd June, 2001.

Side note: Dr. Negasso Gidada Solon is an esteemed statesman and scholar who has served as president of Ethiopia (1995–2001), member ofthe House of People's Representatives /HoPR/ (2005–2010), and most recently, as chair of the United for Democracy and Justice Party (UDJP), one of Ethiopia's main opposition parties (2012–2013). A life-long proponent of human rights, ethnic inclusion, and democracy, he participated in the student movement of the 1960s, led the Aira School demonstrations against the Wallaga feudal system in the 1970s, and advocated for the rights of the Oromo people, Ethiopia's largest ethnic group. While living in Germany, Dr. Gidada Solon worked to unite the Oromo community, both internally and with other Ethiopian groups, in their struggle against military rule. Returning to his homeland in May 1991, he helped to draft a new constitution, chaired the 1994 Constitutional Assembly, and ratified the constitution in January 1995 as first president of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia (FDRE).
During his fellowship, Dr. Solon is writing an article addressing the role ofdemocracy in settling controversies around the Ethiopian ethnic federalistsystem. Dr. Negasso Solon will focus on the need for a constitution that mirrors Ethiopia's ethnic diversity and that lends itself to developing a truly democratic multinational state. As former president of Ethiopia, he reflect on his experiences drafting the country's 1995 constitution and offer recommendations for public confidence-building around future amendments.
(Text ends)
October 8, 2001: Liutenant Girma Wolde-Giorgis a former aviationist unanimously elected president in a joint session of the parliament. The presidency is largely a symbolic with little power as most of the politicalpower is vested on the Head of government.
In 2001: In his previous campaigns to unseat prime minister Meles Zenawi, Colonel Berhe Guebre-Igziabher nicknamed as Berhe Shaabia, anelite army officer was killed with his wife in an evening at his residence.
Believed it's a foul play.
In 2001: After a grave internal crisis that puts all the OLF members andit's supporters in a severe split, and to a weakening OLF position, the Oromo Liberation Front has once again declares a 2001-2005 establishment of an Interim Arrangement of the Oromo Liberation Front(IA-OLF).
In 2001: Commercial Bank of Ethiopia (CBE) high profile bankers includingthe President Ato Tilahun Abay were imprisoned accused of making illegal loans to businessmen. They had to wait about 7 years in jail before they were freed by the court's verdict.
February 14, 2002: Bitwoded Zewde Guebre Hiwot died at age of ninty' OBITUARY: Bitwoded Zewde Guebre Hiwot known usually as 'Kantiba' meaning for "Mayor" is died at the age of ninty. Bitwoded Zewde formerPresident of the Imperial Parliament of Ethiopia, served the Ethiopian Empire in a variety of positions. He served as a soldier in the resistance against the Italians, as an administrator, a diplomat, and a minister in theImperial government. He is probably best remembered however as a former Lord Mayor of Addis Ababa, and was often refered to as "Kentiba Zewde". He was President of the House of Deputies, the lower house in the Imperial Parliament at the time of the 1974 revolution, and spent many years in exile in the United States during Communist rule. BetwodedZewde returned to Ethiopia upon the fall of the Duerg regime, and becameactive in the Haile Selassie I Memorial Foundation and headed the committee that organized the long overdue funeral of the Emperor held in November of 2000.

The Sport's legend Majour Mammo Wolde was convicted to six years of imprisonment for his active participation in the infamous "Red Terror" campaign which that carried out under the Duerg-regime during the late1970s, but released because he had spent nine years in custody alreadywaiting for his trial.

March 10, 2002: Over 200 people were killed by government securityforces in Majenger and Shekicho zone of SNNPRS.

In April, 2002: Ethiopia, Eritrea accept a new common border, drawn upby an independent commission, though both sides then lay claim to the town of Badme.

May 24, 2002: As a result of their peaceful demonstration over 100 peaceful protesters of whome mostly peasants were indescriminately shot-killed in the Sidama zone of Loque in the Southern Nations and Nationalities Peoples Regional State (SNNPRS) and security forces have dragged their dead bodies in the streets of Awassa, it’s widely understood the massacre was carried-out by government Police & security forces.

Side note;- Known as “Loqqe Massacre of the Sidama Civilians of May 24,2002”, the Sidama people of all walks of life staged a peaceful, nonviolentand unarmed demonstration claiming their unconditional rights for regional autonomy that was accorded to the federal constitution. Despite their peaceful demand for regional autonomy, the demonstrators were met with live ammunitions from the army and the police forces that were assigned to monitor the protest. According to reports, the regime’s political leadership from Sidama Zone of Southern Nations and Nationalities and People’s Regional State (SNNPRS) up to the federal government carefully planned and managed the massacre. Up to 100 Sidama demonstrators from all walks of life were killed for which neither the killers nor those who ordered the massacre were held accountable fortheir hideous crimes against humanity. The Ethiopian government continues to grossly violate fundamental rights of its own citizens disregarding its own constitution that unequivocally guarantees these rights. The basic human rights and freedom of expression and assembly are not respected. There is no separation of powers, checks and balances within the state apparatus. The legislative, the executive and the judiciarybranches of government do not function independently. The defense and police forces solely serve the interest of the regime. People are incriminated for their political views, opinions, and their affiliation and for being members of certain ethnic or national groups To this date,other years of crimes against humanity in the Afar, Benishangul-Gumuz andOromia regions, and what many termed as an ongoing genocide in theEthiopian Somali region of the Ogadien that continues today being recorded by human rights groups.

May 26, 2002: OBITUARY - Majour Mamo Wolde, the legendary athlete has passed away of an undisclosed ilness a few months after his release from jail. (Mamo Wolde -June 12, 1932 – May 26, 2002) was an Ethiopianlong distance track and road running athlete. He was also the winner of the marathon at the 1968 Summer Olympics.

Born to be Degaga Wolde Mammo Wolde was born in Diri Jille to an Oromo famil. In 1951, he moved to Addis Ababa and joined the Imperial Bodyguard. Wolde later served as a peacekeeper in Korea from 1953 to 1955. At his first Olympic appearance in 1956, Wolde competed in the 800m, 1,500 m and the 4x400 relay. He didn't compete in the 1960 Summer Olympics at which Abebe Bikila became the first Ethiopian to win a gold medal. Wolde claimed his absence was due to the government's desire to send him on a peacekeeping mission to the Congo during the Congo Crisis. According to him, in the government's ensuing conflict with the Ethiopian Olympic Committee, who wanted him to compete, he didn't get sent to either event. However, athlete Said Moussa Osman, who represented Ethiopia in the 800 m at the 1960 Olympics, stated that Wolde lost at the trials and didn't make it on the team.

Beginning in the 1960s, Wolde's focus changed from middle distance racesto long distances. He placed fourth in the 10,000 m at the 1964 Summer Olympics. After Abebe Bikila had won the 1964 Olympic marathon, four years later at the 1968 Summer Olympics, Wolde became the second Ethiopian to win the title in the marathon. Earlier in the same Olympics, Wolde had already won the silver medal in the 10,000 m. In 1972, Wolde won a third Olympic medal at the age of 40, winning bronze in the marathon. He blamed his third place showing on ill-fitting shoes forced on him by Ethiopian officials. Nonetheless, he became only the second personin Olympic history (Bikila was the first) to medal in successive Olympic marathons. He won the marathon race of 1973 All-Africa Games.

In 1993, Wolde was arrested on the accusation that he participated in a Red Terror execution during the regime of the dictator Mengistu Haile Mariam. He argued that although he was present at the killing, he was nota direct participant. The IOC pressured the Ethiopian government to release him. In early 2002 he was convicted to six years of imprisonment,but released because he had spent nine years in detention already waitingfor his trial. Mamo Wolde died of liver cancer at age 69 a few months afterhis release. He had been married twice and had three children; a son withhis first wife, Samuel, and two children, Addis Alem and Tabor, with his second wife.

Remembering the Marathon legend Degaga Wolde:

The Olympic legend, Major Mammo Wolde, dies at the age of 70 at his home in Addis Ababa on May 26, 2002. Mammo Wolde had been sufferingfrom various liver and bronchial ailments. Born to be Degaga Wolde to anOromo farming family, Mammo was orphaned at a very young age. He joined the Ethiopian army, and from there, was recruited into the elite Imperial Guard of Emperor Haile Selassie. While a member of the guard, he started to train for international athletics events along with other young guards including the legendary Abebe Bekila who was his training partner. Mammo Wolde competed at the 1956 Melbourne Olympics, in the800m and 1500m, but finished last in the heats. In 1960, his friend and hero, Abebe Bekila won the gold medal for the 1960 Rome Olympic marathon while running barefoot which greatly encouraged Mammo. He joined Abebe Bekila in running the marathon at the 1964 Tokyo Olympics,which Abebe Bekila won, and also ran the 10,000 as well, but he remainedwithout a medal. Then in th 1968 Olympics in Mexico city, Abebe Bekila and Mammo Wolde ran together again. This time, Abebe Bekila was nursing an injured leg, and soon after the race started, he was forced to drop into a walk. Mammo Wolde took the lead early and maintained it, winning the race in 2hrs, 20min, and 26.4secs. He had completed his victory lap around the Olympic stadium before the silver medalist from Japan entered the stadium. When asked how it felt to finally win gold and come out from Abebe Bekila's shadow by reporters following his victory, Mammo Wolde modestly replied "Oh the only reason I won was because Abebe was hurt, I would never have won otherwise." At these same Olympics, Mammo Wolde won a silver medal in the 10,000m while the gold passes on to Kenyan Naftali Teemu, and would go on to win a bronzemedal at the the 1972 Munich Olympics Marathon when the gold medal goes to the American runner Frank Shorter. Upon the revolution of February 1974 and the fall of the Emperor, the Imperial Bodyguard was disbanded, and Sergeant Mammo Wolde was re-assigned back into the Army. Thus he was in the Army when in 1977, the Red Terror was unleashed by the Communist Dergue dictatorship on it's political opponents. In this capacity, Mammo Wolde was involved in an incident that ended with the execution of a young teenager for counter- revolutionary activities. Upon the fall of the Dergue regime in 1991, the new Transitional government of the EPRDF arrested Mammo Wolde for involvement in the Red Terror attrocities of the fallen regime, and the particular murder of this youth. Mammo Wolde was accused of personally executing this boy, but he maintained his innocence saying that he had been ordered to the scene as a military officer, and had witnessed the execution, but had not fired the gun or known what the reason for the summary execution was. After remaining in custody for 9 years, the courts sentenced him to 6 years in prison, which meant that he was immediately released because he had served more time than his sentence. The sentence indicates that the court had concluded that Mammo Wolde had played a lesser role in the events than had been originally charged. The details of the events which caused his imprisonment remain murky and unclear, and seriously stained his once golden image. While in prison, he suffered bronchitis and complained of liver ailments, which worsened after his release. He continued to maintainhis innocence, but also stated that he bore no bitterness over his imprisonment. Mammo Wolde was buried at Addis Ababa's St. Joseph cemetary, next to his freind and hero, Abebe Bekila. His coffin was escorted by Ethiopia's elite track-and-field stars, including Olympian medalists such as Haile Gebre Selassie, and Derartu Tulu, all wearing theirOlympic uniforms. Crowds of thousands thronged the cemetary to pay their respects. Our condolences to the widow and family of the late great Olympic medalist.

June 24, 2002: OLF Attack on Railway Transportation at Dire Dawa' A small explosive was detonated at the headquarters of the EthiopianRailway station in Dire Dawa. The Oromo Liberation Front (OLF) afterwards claimed responsibility for this attack in retaliation "for the continuing harassment of Oromo students, merchants, and farmers by theEthiopian government." Although blamed for other isolated incidents, this was the latest bombing inside Ethiopia for which the OLF claimed responsibility.

November 11, 2002:FARMING: Bad weather, bad government -The Economist. Ethiopia faces a famine worse than the catastrophe of 1984, according to the country's prime minister. Bad weather is partly to blame.But, as elsewhere in Africa, so too is bad government

From the print edition: On November 11th, Ethiopia's prime minister Mele Zenawi, said that his country faces a famine even more destructive that the disaster of 1984 which so appalled western television viewers. Some 15m Ethiopians, he said, will need food aid by early next year, out of a population of about 65m. He appealed for help, pleading that "we cannot cope on our own". Africa faces two separate food crises. Until now, the consensus has been that the shortage in southern Africa was more seriousthan the one in Ethiopia, situated in the north-east. Foreign donors have not delivered enough to feed all the hungry in either region, but they haveshown more willing to help out in the south—hence the prime minister's unusually blunt appeal.

Both food crises have complex causes, among them bad weather. In muchof Ethiopia, the rains have failed, withering crops, killing cows and even camels, and forcing millions of peasants to run down their meagre stores or beg for maize from neighbours or relief agencies. In southern African countries such as Zimbabwe, Zambia, Malawi, Lesotho and Swaziland, a drought of exceptional severity has had the same effect. But bad weather is rarely enough, on its own, to kill large numbers of people. Famine usually requires bad government, too. In southern Africa, AIDS is another factor, weakening millions and making it harder for them to cope with hunger. There is nothing that can be done about the weather, at least in the short term, and those who are already infected with the HIV virus thatcauses AIDS cannot be cured. So the best hope, for now, lies in better policies, more competently implemented.

In Ethiopia, the food crisis has been aggravated by the legacy of a senseless border war with neighbouring Eritrea between 1998 and 2000. This killed tens of thousands, forced 350,000 to flee their homes, blasted both countries' infrastructure and prompted foreign donors to freeze a lot of aid. In all, it cost Ethiopia an estimated $2.9 billion—almost a whole year's output for every farmer in a country where 80% of the population live on farms. Such a monumental man-made disaster has made it harderfor the country to cope with a natural one. On the plus side, the current Ethiopian government is not indifferent to its people's suffering, unlike theMarxist military regime that presided over the famine of 1984, refusing to allow foreign aid in until, for multitudes of Ethiopians, it was too late. Thatregime was overthrown in 1991, and since then food production has steadily increased. But half the population remains desperately poor, a plight made harder to escape by insecure land tenure and the government's failure to abolish the old feudal system of extracting heavy taxes from peasants.

In southern Africa, too, it is notable that well-governed countries, such asSouth Africa and Botswana, have not suffered food shortages, despite thedrought. The hungriest countries are all, to varying degrees, misruled.
Swaziland's absolute monarch tried to spend more than the food-aid budget on a private jet. (His advisers stopped him, but not before he hadmade the first down-payment.) Senior members of Malawi's government sold off the country's entire emergency grain reserve, and appear to havepocketed the cash. They then tried to blame the International Monetary Fund, which had advised them to sell some of the grain reserve, but had not suggested that they should pinch the money. Zambia has also had trouble with officials stealing from the food-aid budget, and has rejected food aid from America that may be genetically modified, on the ground that although it is good enough for Americans, it is not safe enough for starving Zambians. Warehouses full of American maize sit locked and undistributed in some of the worst-hit areas of Zambia.

But by far the most egregious case of state-induced hunger is in Zimbabwe, where cereal production has fallen by two-thirds over the pasttwo years, largely because the government of President Robert Mugabe is waging war on the most productive farmers. He wishes to crush white commercial farmers, in part because they helped to fund the opposition inan election he stole in March. Mr Mugabe's henchmen have tried to controlthe distribution of food aid, to make sure that his supporters are fed and his opponents are not. His cronies do not even trouble to disguise what they are doing: a deputy minister said that “the [ruling] party will start feeding its children before turning to those of the [opposition]”.
Aid agencies insist that they will not allow their supplies to be abused in this way, but they have failed to stop this sort of behaviour in the past in Sudan, Somalia, Angola and elsewhere. And Mr Mugabe's government hasa legal monopoly on grain sales within Zimbabwe. It has used this as an excuse to confiscate private stocks of food, which, if large, are clearly “intended for sale” and can therefore be legally taken. As always, donorswishing to stave off famine in Africa will have to deal with some awful politicians in the countries that need help. But what choice have they, when the alternative is to turn away while people starve? (Text ends)
In November, 2002: The independent Ethiopian Free Journalists Association (EFJA) officially banned, and it's leaders went exile. In December 2002: An Oromo student severely beaten at MekelleUniversity, and went back to his native region.

December 29, 2002 Riot broke-out between the Ethiopian Orthodox andAdventist i.e. Pentecostal worshipers, Police intervened to break-up theriots, which resulted in five dead and three others seriously injured.

January 7, 2003: Dr. Sergew Hable Selassie, who was among the foremost Ethiopian historians of his time dies. Dr. Sergew Hable Selassiedied suddenly in Munich Germany.

Side note: Born in 1929 to his father Merigueta (an Ethiopian ecclesiasticaltitle of learning) Hable Selassie Zewdie and his wife Woizero Zewditu Desta. After recieving a traditional ecclesiastic education as a child at the Lideta Mariam Church (Church of the Birth of the Virgin), he went on to study at Holy Trinity Cathedral School from where he was sent to study in Greece for his secondary education. He earned a Bachelors in Theology from Athens University in 1957, and a Phd. in Ancient History from the University of Bonn in Germany in 1960. Dr. Sergew became a founding member of he faculty of the Department of History at Haile Selassie I University in 1961 (today's Addis Ababa University).

April 6, 2003: Her Royal Highness (Leult) Tenagne-Worq Haile-selassie, the eldest child of Emperor Haile-selassie by Empress Mennen Asfaw has died at age of 91. She was buried on Sunday April 13th in the Imperial Vault at Holy Trinity Cathedral. The funeral mass for the princess was led by the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahdo Church (EOTC) patriarch. Much of theold Ethiopian nobility and many members of the general public were attended at the Holy Trinity Cathedral, near the graves of her family in Addis Ababa.

Side note: Princess Tenagne-worq was born in former Harrarghe provinceon the 29th January, 1912 in the city of Harrar. Princess Tenagnework received her title upon her father's succession to the imperial throne in November 1930. Princess Tenagnework was born in 1912 in the city of Harrar, to her parents, Dejazmatch Taffari Makonnen, then governor of Harrarge Province, and Woizero Menen Asfaw his wife. She was the first child of their marriage(Both had children from previous marriages). In 1917, soon after the birth of her younger brother Prince Asfaw Wossen, her father became the Regent and Heir-Apparent of the Ethiopian throne as Ras Taffari Makonnen, Crown Prince of Ethiopia. Subsequently, more children were born into the family. By the time Ras Tafari ascended the Throne of Solomon as Emperor Haile Selassie in November, 1930, he hadthree more children. They were Princesses Tsehai and Zenebework, and Prince Makonnen, Duke of Harrar. A year after their coronation, the Emperor and Empress Menen had their last child, Prince Sahle Selassie Haile Selassie.
At a young age, Her Royal Highness Princess Tenagnework was married toRas Desta Damtew, a member of the prominent aristocratic Addisge clan of the Shoa dynasty. Ras Desta Damtew and Princess Tenagnework Haile Selassie were the parents of two sons, the lates Princes Amha and Iskinder Desta (naval Rear Admiral, Deputy commander-in-chief of the Imperial Ethiopian Navy)), and four daughters, princesses Aida Desta, Seble Desta, Hirut Desta, Sophia Desta. Ras Desta Damtew was appointedto serve as Governor-General, first of Kaffa and Limu, and then of Sidamo. In 1935, following the invasion of Ethiopia by Italy, the imperial family was forced to flee into exile in Bath, England. However, Ras Desta Damtew remained behind to command the imperial forces fighting in the south of the country. Ras Desta Damtew was captured and hanged by thefascist Italian forces. While in exile, Princess Tenagnework gave birth to Emebet Tsige Mariam (Mary) from Ato Abebe Retta during a brief union.

Ato Abebe Retta who later served in ambassadorial and other positions in the post-war imperial government, would eventually becomes president ofthe Chamber of Senate after their separation.Ato Abebe Retta came to be under detention during the early months of Ethiopian revolution in the Fourth Army Division headquarter in Addis Ababa when former imperial government officials were came to be under detention in the Fourth Army Division headquarter in Addis Ababa. Princess (Leui'lt) Tenagne-worq had been known for her arch opposition to constitutional and land-tenure reforms in Ethiopia. Her own last years were spent in Ethiopia and were made comfortable by the devoted care of her daughters, family relatives, and ex-servants. Rear Admiral Eskinder Desta was killed in the evening ofNovember 23, 1974, together with 60 other notables, by the brutal Duergregime. It has to be recalled that his late father Dejazmatch Desta Damtew himself had been a victim of the Italo-Ethiopian war and was executed at at an open market place by by the Italians in 1937. While in exile, Leult Tenagnework gave birth to another daughter, Emebet Tsige Mariam (Mary) Abebe, during a brief union with Ato Abebe Retta, who later served in ambassadorial and other roles in the post-war Imperial government, and would eventually become president of the Imperial Senate after their separation, but Woizaro Mary Abebe has been perished during her imprisonment under the communist Duerg rule. The late Princess Tenagnework survived by her four daughters, Princesses Aida, Seble, Sophia and Hirut, whom she's the widow of General Nega Tegegn, a former military strategist and who was governor of the provinces of Begiemder and Semien province before his defection to the Sudan.

Princess Tenagnework would eventually marry Betwoded (later Ras) Andargatchew Messai, who had formerly served as "Affe-Mesfin" and representative for the underage Prince Makonnen Haile Selassie in his Duchy of Harrar. They were married at the Miskaea-Hezunan Medhane Alem Church (Church of the Savior of the World, Consoler of the Bereaved) in September 1944. Bitwoded Andargatchew was then appointed Governor-General of Beghemidir and Simien Province, and the couple were based in Gondar. During the years following the restoration ofthe Emperor and the victory over the Italians, a campaign was undertakento re-unite the former Italian colony of Eritrea with her motherland Ethiopia from whom Italy had snatched the territory in late 1800's. (Text ends)

As part of expansion, The New Bole International Airport Track and Passengers Terminal Project, considered one of the largest Air Terminals in the continent upgraded through a loan obtained from a Kuwaiti financialfund.

The U.S. House of Representatives' Foreign Affairs Committee passed HR2003 Bill passed with unanimous vote with all members voting in favor.

April 13, 2003: Independent boundary commission rules that the disputedtown of Badme lies in Eritrea, and much of these areas were awarded to Eritrea. Ethiopia says the ruling is unacceptable.
Side note;- After the border war, the Hague-based Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission ruled that the flashpoint town of Badme belongedto Eritrea but the village remains in the hands of its neighbour, which is calling for negotiations to implement the ruling.
April 24, 2003: A Tigrean student was stabbed to death and two otherswere injured in a clash between the Oromo and Tigraian students in theAmbo Agricultural College.
May 4, 2003: Prominent Ethiopian Artist ESkonder Boghossian Dies' The death of prominent Ethiopian artist, Eskunder Boghossian dies in Washington DC at the age of 66. Eskunder Boghossian left an indeliblemark on modern art in Ethiopia, and in the art world outside as well.
Eskunder (Alexander) Boghossian was born in Addis Ababa in 1937 to anEthiopian mother and an Armenian father. At age 17 he was awarded an Imperial Scholarship to study at the St. Martin School of Art in London England. He went on to study and later teach at the Paris Académie de laGrande Chaumière and at the Ecole Superieure des Beaux Arts. In 1963 he was the first Ethiopian artist to sell works to the Musee d'Art Moderne.His associates in his Paris years included such luminaries as Gerard Sokoto of South Africa and Cuban surrealist Wilfredo Lam. Boghossian returned to Ethiopia in 1966 and remained only briefly till 1969. During this short 3 year stay, Eskunder Boghossian made a profound impact on Ethiopian modern art, attracting a growing number of admirers of his work, and influencing the work of many up and coming young artists. In 1969, he accepted an offer to become artist in residence at Atlanta University, as well as resident instructor in sculpting, painting and Africandesign at the Atlanta Center for Black Art, and departed for the United States. In 1974, Eskunder Boghossian was invited to teach full time at Howard University in Washington DC. which he did until he returned to painting full time in 2000. Eskunder Boghossian was one of several Ethiopian artists whose works were featured in a special exhibition of Ethiopian artists at the Smithsonian institute in Washington DC, that opened in late April 2003. Freinds who had stopped by his home to congradulate him on this show discovered him unconscious, and he was later declared dead at Howard University Hospital.
June 2, 2003: Mr Peter William Hay who established Ethiopia's first national park, the Awash National Park is passed away. Mr Hay was 70 years old, and died in Inverness, Scotland. Mr Hay came to Africa at the age of 21 as an employee of British Locust Patrol. In 1968, he was employeed by the Imperial government of Ethiopia and established the Awash National Park. Mr. Hay wrote the book "One Long Safari" which wasinspired by his experiences in Africa. He died after a long battle with cancer. Peter William Hay is survived by his widow Lorna, and his sons Douglas, Angus and Colin.

June 28, 2003: The National Eye Bank of Ethiopia opened in Addis Ababa' National Eye Bank of Ethiopia, the first eye bank in the country's history, opened on June 28, in partnership with the International Federation of Eyeand Tissue Banks (IFETB), the Federal Ministry of Health, the Addis AbabaCity Administration Health Bureau, the Menelik II Hospital, and the Department of Ophthalmology of the Medical Faculty of Addis Ababa University. The eye bank was developed by ORBIS, a non-profit humanitarian organization dedicated to saving sight and avoiding blindness worldwide. Menelik II Hospital is home to the National Eye Bank.According to a report by the Eye Bank of Ethiopia, 6,000 Ethiopians, including the country's current President Girma Wolde-Giorgis, have so farpledged to donate their corneas.

August, 2003: Mohammed Ousman, a football legend nicknamed as MIG who performs for FC Dire Dawa Textiles and the national squad passed away in natural sickness. Mohammed Ousman (MIG) is best remembered for his an outstanding goal scoring in an injury time when the winning goal was badly needed by the host team against the guest team to qualifyfor the 13th African Cup of Nations final to be hosted by Libya Arab Jamahiriya in February, 1982.

OBITUARY: His Eminence, Abune Mattiwos ex-EOC Archbishop ofJerusalem passed away'

The Imperial Ethiopia Homepages announce with deep sadness, the deathof His Eminence the former Ethiopian Archbishop of Jerusalem, Abune Mattiwos. His Eminence was among the first Bishops consecrated by Ethiopia's first native Patriarch Abune Baslios in 1953. Previous to becoming a Bishop, Abune Mattiwos served as Liqe Liqawint of Ba'eta Le Mariam Monastery in Addis Ababa, as well as several other prominent church postings. His Eminence began his clerical journey at the Monasteryof Debre Libanos. In 1974, when the Dergue regime removed Emperor Haile Selassie I from his throne, and the Orthodox Church accepted this act, Abune Mattiwos from his diocese in Jerusalem issued a statement denouncing the coup, and accusing the members of the Holy Synod of violating their oaths of loyalty to the Emperor. He was recalled to Addis Ababa and confined to the Debre Libanos Monastery, as the Patriarch Abune Tewophilos and other Bishops were imprisoned. Abune Tewophilos was executed in 1977, and Abune Mattiwos remained in detention until the mid 1980's when he was released from his monastic detention. AbuneMattiwos served as the special advisor to the Patriarch Abune Tekle Haimanot until the Patriarch's death in 1988, and was suspected by the Communist Duerg regime of having steered the Patriarch into an increasingly adversarial relationship with their regime. Upon the election of Abune Merkorios as Patriarch in 1988, Abune Mattiwos found himself once more in disfavor, and he was ordered restricted to the role of presiding at the Church of the Savior (Medhane-Alem) known as Miskaea-

Hezunan, and endured many hardships in the later days of Communist rule in Ethiopia. Following the fall of the Dergue regime and the removal of Abune Merkorios as EOC Patriarch, Abune Mattiwos was returned as Archbishop of Jerusalem by Patriarch Abune Paoulos in 1993, and served until 1998 when he returned to Ethiopia and retired due to his advancing age and deteriorating health. He was assigned the Ba'eta Le-Mariam Monastery Church as his altar in Addis Ababa, and as such was the assisting cleric at the Funeral Mass of Emperor Haile Selassie I led by Abune Paulos when the Emperor's remains was re-buried on November 5th, 2000. His Eminence Abune Mattiwos was buried at the Debre Libanos Monastery. (Text ends)

December 6, 2003: OBITUARY - Ethiopian Literary Giant, Dr. HadisAlemayehu Dies'

The distinguished Novelist Ato Haddis Alemayehu the grandest of Ethiopian novelists of yester years, passed away at his 93 years of age. Ato Haddis Alemayehu (October15, 1910 - December 6, 2003), was a former foreign minister of Ethiopia and a novelist. His Amharic novel "Faquer-eska-Maqaber" (Love to the Grave, 1968) is considered a classicof modern Ethiopian literature. He was born in the Endor Kidane-Miheret section of the city of Debre-Marqos, the son of an Orthodox priest, Abba Alemayehu Solomon. As a boy, he began his education within the systemof the Ethiopian Orthodox Church, studying at the monasteries of Debre-Elias, Debre-Warq, and Dima-Giorgis. Later, he moved to Addis Ababa where he enrolled at the Swedish Mission and later at the Taffari Makonnen School for further education of the secular sort.

The death of a great Ethiopian man of letters, Dr. Hadis Alemayehu on December 6th, 2003. He was 94 years old. Hadis Alemayehu was born in1909, in the Endor Kidane Miheret district of Debre Markos, Gojjam. He was the son of an Orthodox priest, Abba (father) Alemayehu Solomon, and his wife Woizero Desta Alemu. Young Hadis embarked on an ecclesiastic education from a very early age. He studied liturgical and spiritual subjects at the Gojjam monasteries of Debre Elias, Debre Worq,and Dima, after which he moved to Addis Ababa and enrolled at the Swedish Mission and later at the Ras Taffari Makonnen school for further secular studies. Ato Hadis was active in the resistance against the Italians. Following the liberation in 1941, Ato Hadis studied at Oxford University through the patronage of the Emperor, and then served in a number of official posts, most notably as Minister of Education. Hadis Alemayehu became a prominent author of many great Amharic works, but his most famous is the novel Fikir Iske Mekabir (Love to the Grave) which is about love accross the social class devide of Imperial Ethiopia, and is seen as a veiled criticism of it. He also wrote Wenjelegnaw Dagna (The Guilty Judge)and numerous other works, both published and unpublished. Ato Hadis Alemayehu was awarded the Haile Selassie Trust Prize Medal, and the Gold Mercury Medal for his contribution to literature. He was eventually awarded an honorary doctorate by Addis Ababa University (AAU). His funeral was held at Holy Trinity Cathedral, and was attended by the Patriarch of the Orthodox Church, Abune Paulos, and numerous mourners.December 11, 2003: OBITUARY - Archbishop Paulos Cardinal Tzadua died at the age of 82’

His Eminence, Cardinal Paulos Tzadua Cardinal Archbishop Emeritus of Addis Ababa Primate of the Roman Catholic Church in Ethiopia and Eritrea.Paulos Cardinal Tzadua, the first Cardinal of the Catholic Church in Ethiopia dies at the age of 82. Paulos Tzadua was born in the district of Addi Fini, outside of Asmara, in the then Italian colony of Eritrea in 1921. As a young man, Paulos Tzadua followed many other pro-Ethiopian Eritreans and traveled to Ethiopia to further his education there. He decided to attend the Lazarist seminary set up in Chercher, in the Harrar provincial governorate . However, in 1936, he fled abroad when the Italians invaded and occupied Ethiopia. He returned to Ethiopia in May, 1941 following the liberation, and then returned to his native Eritrea and was ordained a priest in Asmara in 1944. As a priest, he joined the RomanCatholic mission in the Gurage territories of Ethiopia between 1946 and 1949. He then returned to Eritrea once more, and taught English while studying at the Liceo Ferdinando Martini in Asmara where he completed his studies in 1953. He then traveled to Milan on a scholarship to attend Sacred Heart University and majored in Political Science and Social Science. He went on to earn a doctorate of law at the same university. OnMarch 1st, 1973, Pope Paul VI appointed Paulos Tzadua as Auxilary Bishopof Addis Ababa, and titular Bishop of Abila of Palistina. Then on the 24th of February 1977, Paulos Tzadua became Archbishop of Addis Ababa, in the midst of the horrors of the Red Terror. His fatherly leadership of Ethiopia's Catholic Church earned him the notice of Pope John Paul II, who named him a Cardinal on the 25th of May, 1985. Paulos Cardinal Tzadua became the primate of the Ge'ez Rite and Latin Rite Catholics of Ethiopia (and after 1991 of the newly Independent Eritrea as well). He was the very first and only Cardinal of the Church in Ethiopia. Paulos Cardinal Tzadua retired in 1998 and became Archbishop Emeritus of Addis Ababa.

He was succeeded in his seat by Archbishop Berhane-Yesus Demerew Souraphel. His Eminence Cardinal Tzadua died on December 11th, 2003 atthe age of 82 at his residence in the Vatican. Pope John Paul II, celebrated a funeral mass at St. Peter's Basilica on December 16th, for Paulos Cardinal Tzadua, which was attended by Ge'ez Rite and Latin Rite Catholicheirarchs from Ethiopia and Eritrea as well as much of the Vatican officialdom and diplomatic community. May he rests in peace! (Text ends)December 13, 2003: Ethiopia - The same regime another Genocide?

Nearly 420 killed in ethnic clashes in isolated western region of Gambella. Tens of thousands flee area. More than 420 ethnic-Annuaks were killed in the isolated western region of Gambella in an ethnic-clashes with highlander militias supported by the army and tens of thousands were fleethe area. Members of the special unit of the Ethiopian military entered thetown of Gambella in south western Ethiopia, and over the course of the next three days, the special force unit tortured and killed 424 ethnic Anuaks and burned their houses to ashes. The Ethiopian Human Rights Council and Dr. Gregory H. Stanton, founder and President of Genocide Watch, alerted the international community about the Gambella genocide.The world gave a deaf ear to the horror in Gambella, and as a result, the Ethiopian military continued its crime against humanity killing more than 2000 ethnic Anuaks and causing over 50,000 to flee their ancestral home land. Evidences on the massacre have surfaced by the US based "Genocide Watch" that this massacre had been planned by the central government. The Ethiopian premier, then Minister of Federal Affairs, and the comander of the army unit in Gambella region held responsible for thekillings in Gambella. Genocide Watch said, "no one is indispensable and regarded above the law and should not escape prosecution at home or abroad and go unpunished". The regime has taken a decision in various times to shoot at it's own people as it's police and security forces were blamed to commit horrible crimes in various times. Political commentatorssay, the ruling EPRDF party had to resign after failing to protect it's own people.

Brook Hailu Beshah, whos many call him as the regime's stooge serves invarious positions as Ethiopia's Deputy Chief of Mission in Washington, andActing Ambassador in the US (2001 to 2004), before that he serves as Permanent Deputy Delegate to the UNSECO in Paris, France, and a political science lecturer at the AAU, ceased his service as diplomat.

Currently Brook Beshah is a professor of Security Policy Studies at GeorgeWashington University.

In March, 2004: Start of resettlement programme to move more than twomillion people away from parched, and over-worked highlands.

April 28, 2004: Ato Kifle Wodajo (30 October 1936 - 28 April 2004) theformer Ethiopian minister of foreign affairs died of cancer sickness.

Side note: Ato Kifle Wodajo was the 18th Ethiopian Minister of Foreign Affairs (1974–1977) and the provisional Secretary-General of the Organization of African States during it's formation from 25th May 1963 –21st July 1964) as well as the 18th ex-Ethiopian minister of foreign affairsfrom 1974 to 1977.

The death of Ato Kifle Wodajo former Foriegn Minister of Ethiopia, whileunder medical care in South Africa at the age of 69 announced on Thursday the 29th of March, 2004. Kifle Wodajo was born in 1935 to his parents Negadras Wodajo Haile, and Woizero Mentewab Kifle in Addis Ababa. After attending the Ras Tafari Makonnen School and the UniversityCollege of Addis Ababa (later Haile Selassie University and now Addis Ababa University), Ato Kifle traveled to the United States on an Imperial Scholarship to attend Wisconsin University. He recieved an MSE and later an MA in Law there. Ato Kifle returned to Ethiopia where he began a long and illustrous diplomatic carrer. He represented Ethiopia at the United Nations, and attended many and various International Conferences representing his country. When the Organization of African Unity was firstset up and headquartered in Addis Ababa, Ato Kifle was installed as the Organization's Acting Secretary General until the first Secretary General was elected. Ato Kifle went on to serve as Ambassador to the United States, and a brief Foriegn Minister of Ethiopia. Ato Kifle Wodajo went intoexile in the United States during the Durg era.

Kifle Wodajo went into exile (between 1977 and 1991) in the United States when he was on a working visit to the west African state of Liberia during the Duerg era. After his return, Kifle joined Teshome Hailemariam and Dereje Deressa to found the Ethiopian National Democratic Organization (ENDO).

Kifle became a member of the House of People's Representatives (HoPR) and served as chairman of commission which drafted the 1995 Federal Constitution. He returned to his country upon thefall of the Duerg regime and was appointed as Chairman of the Constitutional Drafting Commission which proposes the present Constitution of the Federal Republic of Ethiopia. (Text ends)

Ethiopian Ministry of Health (EMoH) officially banned the production and distribution of " DDT (Dichloro Diphenyl Trichloroethane) spray" as to theStockholm Convention, which took effect the same year.

Side note: DDT was subsequently banned for agricultural use worldwide under the 2004 Stockholm Convention, but its limited use in disease vector control continues to this day. DDT's insecticidal properties were notdiscovered until 1939, and it was used with great success in the second half of World War II to control malaria and typhus among civilians and troops.

June 4, 2004: Former Ethiopian acting-president Lt. General Tesfaye Guebre-Kidan passed away in a personal quarrel with fellow official Lt. Colonel Birhanu Bayeh who had accompanied him into the Italian embassychancery, Addis Ababa since the fall of the Duerg regime in May, 1991.

Side note;- It has to be recalled that both victims were senior members ofthe former ruling Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC) usually known as the Duerg, and later senior government officials of the "Peoples Democratic Republic of Ethiopia (PDRE)". Following the death of General Tesfaye Guebre-kidan thirteen years later rumors began to circulate caused by the embassy's lack of detail on the death of both General Tesfaye Guebre kidan and Hailu Yimenu's earlier suicide. The Ethiopian government demanded Italian records on the incidents during that month.

In June, 2004: Arba Minch University, a research university located inArba Minch, Ethiopia, about 500 km south of Addis Ababa officially inaugurated. It is one of the top widely recognized universities in Ethiopia.Arba Minch University (AMU) which during this time comprised of four faculties, one Institute and one School. It's expected that with the ongoingexpansion a number of faculties and programs will be opened and the enrollment capacity would increase to over 10, 000 by 2012.

August, 2004: Kenenisa Bekele has won 10, 000 mtrs Olympic gamestrack running in Athens, Greece with a record time of 27.05.10.

August, 2004: Meseret Defar, a female runner has won 5, 000 mtrs. women's track race in Athens Summer Olympic Games in Greece in arecord time of 14.52.39.

Mid-September, 2004: Four parties agreed to create a conceptual understanding on the need to have an Umbrella organization known as "Coalition for Unity and Democracy (CUD)" whose main objective is to mobilize and lead popular struggle that enables the Ethiopian electorate toexert consorted pressure to bring an end to the highly repressive and authoritarian system that reduced the lives of its citizens under its deceitful tactics of 'Divide-And-Rule', and to support the genuine democratic process with care and sensitivity.

Ethiopia says it would accept "in priniciple" the EEBC’s ruling on its borderwith Eritrea. But a protracted stalemate over the disputed town of Badmecontinues.

November, 2004: Ethiopia proposed a five points peace Memo to Eritreato boost a bilateral negotiation among the two.

January 16, 2005: Alebatchew Teka Ethiopia's best known contemporaryand renowned artist and comedian died at age of 44 of a car accident while travelling to the southern Ethiopia town of Jimma.

January to February, 2005: Well understood the average per-capita landholding in Ethiopia, fell from a quarter of a hectar to less than a tenth of a hectar between 1970s to 2000, and the per-capita food production fellby nearly half.

Late January, 2005: Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahdo Church (EOTC) Buildings & Apartments Development and Administration announced all the EOTC's buildings and housing apartments which were nationalized bythe ex-Duerg-regime in the mid-1970s returned.

Side note;- It has to be recalled that during the May-2005 election debates with rival opposition parties, the ruling-party elite Taffara Waalwahad labeled the EOTC as an "hideout for Amhara conservatives".

February 5, 2005: Ethiopia -- with some international prodding, primarilyby the US-- is bringing court cases against the "instigators "of the ethnic-based violence that occurred in its Gambella region (west Ethiopia highlands) in late 2003 and early 2004. There were some reports of violence at the time, but the extent of the violence was not at all clear.

The first reports put the Anyuak ethnic group at the center of the violence.Subsequent reports said the fighting had spread to other tribes. It appearsthat the final death toll was in the 500 to 600 range, and the fighting produced several thousand refugees. The biggest crime was the murder of196 workers at a gold mine. Blood feuds keep tribal conflicts simmering, and these lead to tribal warfare. Ethiopia is trying to use "the rule of law" to forestall further fighting. Of course this isn't a new idea, but it is toughto implement. There will also be arguments about "justice imposed by Addis Ababa."

February 20, 2005: UN peace monitors are reporting troop movements and troop reinforcements in the disputed Ethiopian-Eritrean border regionaround the town of Badme. On February 17 a UN Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea (UNMEE) report called the situation "fragile." A spokesman said that the massing of troops "threatened stability." That's diplo-speak for walking to the brink of war. A subsequent report said that Ethiopia had positioned its reinforcements 20 to 40 kilometers from the border.

Ethiopia stated that is troop movements were defensive. As of February 18 there had been no "counter build-up" by Eritrea-- or at least none detected. The Ethiopian build-up was triggered by an incident that occurred February 1-- or at least an alleged incident. Ethiopia claimed it killed two Eritrean soldiers and captured five near the town of Manda, some 20 kilometers from the border. Eritrea called the Ethiopian charge an "attempt to defame Eritrea." The Ethiopian-Eritrean War sputtered onand off from May 1998 to December 2000. An estimated 70,000 people died in the fighting. In 2003 Eritrea said that it had lost 19,000 soldiers during the 2 1/2 years of fighting.

March 16, 2005:- Earlier this month, Eritrea ordered all veterans to reportfor two weeks of refresher training. Eritrea thinks Ethiopia is up to something, and perhaps the UN also thinks so. Some Eritreans believe that Ethiopia has massed 100,000 troops near Badme-- which is a huge increase over the 35,000 troops Eritrea said Ethiopia deployed in late 2004. Last month the European Union noted increasing military activity onthe Eritrean-Ethiopian border. On March 11 Eritrea asked the UN Security Council to "press" Ethiopia to accept the border settlement. On March 11 the UN asked Ethiopia to redeploy its troops away from the border area.

The UN noted that there had been a steady increase in Ethiopian forces along the border, which is not helping the cause of peace. Meanwhile, on March 13, Ethiopia and Kenya signed a military cooperation agreement. Ethiopia and Kenya have been cooperating on a number of common security concerns -- most of them dealing with Somalia. However, Eritreacould read this agreement as Ethiopia "securing its southern border" -- inanticipation of further escalation at Badme. With tensions running high, it's easy for Eritrea and Ethiopia to misread the other. As part of the deal that ended the 1998-2000 border war, Ethiopia agreed to live by the independent border commission's "binding decision." In 2002 Ethiopia rejected the decision of the independent commission which gave the townof Badme to Eritrea.

US-based Human Rights Watch (HRW) accuses the army of "widespreadmurder, rape and torture" against Gambella region's ethnic Anuak population. Ethiopian Military angrily rejects charge.

In March, 2005: Ethiopia expelled the International Republican Institute(IRI), the National Democratic Institute (NDI), and the International Foundation for Electoral Systems (IFES) effectively eliminating the United States Government programming onpolitical participation. IRI, NDI, and IFES have not been allowed.

March 20, 2005: The UN says Ethiopia has moved over 30,000 troops upto the Eritrean border, most of them near the disputed town of Badme.

This breaks down to approximately six new divisions. Ethiopian infantry divisions have roughly 5000 troops each. Ethiopia now has 90,000 troops in the area. This UN report follows a series of reports from mid-December 2004, that Ethiopia was reinforcing units on its side of the Temporary Security Zone (TSZ) created by UNMEE (United Nations Mission in Ethiopiaand Eritrea). Other sources indicate Ethiopia is also sending new military units to the Somali-Ethiopian border. Ethiopia has indicated it will offer troops to any new Somalia peacekeeping effort, either under the auspices of the UN or the African Union. Many Somali clams, however, have long- standing disputes with Ethiopia and claim that Ethiopia has been meddlingin Somali affairs. This could get interesting.

April 7, 2005: Over 1 million pro-EPRDF supporters rushedout at the city’sMesquel square, prime minister Meles Zenawi, chief of the ruling-EPRDF lambasted against the rival opposition, his ruling-EPRDF would not have torig the mid-May election to win in landslide.

In April, 2005: First section of Axum obelisk, looted by Italy in 1937, isreturned to Ethiopia from Rome.
April 16, 2005: For the moment all's quiet on the Badme front -- the trigger point in a war between Ethiopia and Eritrea. However, on April 14 a UN spokesman said that UNMEE (UN Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea) wasnow investigating "allegations of sexual abuse" by UN peacekeepers against Eritrean women. This comes after similar allegations, prosecutions, and a few convictions against UN peacekeepers in the Congo. The UN spokesman added that there were two alleged incidents under investigation.
April 24, 2005: Ethiopia claims that its troops tracked and engaged a forceof at least 300 guerrillas belonging to the Ogaden National Liberation Front (ONLF). The Ethiopian statement said the ONLF fighters entered Ethiopia from Somalia in the vicinity of the town of Shilabo (1,500 kilometers east of Addis Ababa). On April 18, a battle left 32 guerrillas were killed. The Ethiopians also claimed 30 guerrillas were captured. It is believed that the ONLF group was actually supported by Eritrea. Ethiopia claims that Eritrea airlifted the armed group to Dusamarbeer town inside Somalia on Monday and they were then told to cross into Ethiopia with instructions to create havoc and disrupt next month's national election.
Ethiopia has elections scheduled for May. Eritrea is quite capable of conducting a covert operation in Ogaden, though this action is anythingbut covert -- 300 fighters is a big operation in the Ogaden. Somalis saythe Ogaden is a "missing" Somali province. Ethiopia's former Marxist government (the Mengistu regime) fought Ogaden rebels (most of the groups allegedly supplied from Somalia). The ONLF has began a "new" low-level war in the mid-1990s. From Eritrea's perspective, engaging Ethiopia on "the Somali front" may distract the Ethiopian military and reduce pressure around Badme (the contested town along the Eritrean-Ethiopian border).
May 9, 2005: Estimated 2-3 million Ethiopians rallied at the city’s Mesquelsquare in support of major opposition forces – notably Coalition for Unity and Democracy (CUD) and the United Ethiopian Democratic Forces (UEDF)- when the overwhelmed crowd engulfed the city, the state security agency has taken necessary precautionary measures by taking the premier out of the city along with his family to await him in an airbase, about 26 miles southeast of Addis Ababa.
Over 3 million Ethiopians came out at the mammoth peaceful demonstration to demand change and peaceful transfer of power by means of election, all these people wield collectively when they decide to act together for radical change, dignity and freedom. Western diplomats were convinced on process of previously held televised debates on politicaland economic policies, generally they praised the course and balance of the electoral heat. This was one week before the election of 15th May, 2005 that ended in crushing defeat for the ruling EPRDF party.There is no reason that the same kind of sea of humanity should not turnout again to demand the dethronement of the ruling class.
May 11, 2005: Members of Somalia's parliament claimed that Ethiopia is continuing to support Somali rebels. The alleged Ethiopian support includes occasional forays by Ethiopian troops into Somali territory. The Somali officials claimed Ethiopian troops crossed into Somalia on May 10.Ethiopia denied the allegation. However, Ethiopia has claimed that Eritreahas ties with some Somali factions. As for the Ethiopia-Eritrea situation, American diplomats fear that Ethiopia and Eritrea could miscalculate in their current border confrontation and resume fighting.The US wants to deny Al Qaeda bases in the Horn of Africa region. An Ethiopia-Eritrea warwould destabilize the area and frustrate US counter-terror efforts. So keeping the peace here is a crucial effort in the war n terror.

May 15, 2005: Ethiopia held a third multiparty election, which was highlydisputed, with some opposition groups claiming fraud. Though the CarterCenter approved the pre-election conditions, it expressed its dissatisfaction with post-election matters. European Union election observers continued to accuse the ruling party of vote rigging. The opposition parties gained more than 200 parliamentary seats, compared with just 12 in the 2000 elections.

Ethiopia - Review Of Election May-2005’

In the election the opposition CUDP won in landslide the capital, Addis Ababa. It has to be recalled that elections for both, parliamentary and woreda councils were held in various times since the EPRDF tookover power in May-1991, amongst the 1992, 1995 and the 2000 credible local and national elections were the main ones. That in mind, March to April of2005 the two major opposition coalitions, the CUDP and the UEDF fiercely competed against the ruling-EPRDF across the most populous regions. The EPRDF, perhaps over confident in it's mass support, particularly in the rural areas and anticipating an overwhelming victory, had tolerated an unprecedented expansion of politial space candidates campaigned across the country and state owned media broadcast live debates on publicpolicies. The main opposition CUDP held a rally of over 2 million supporters at Mesquel Square in Addis Ababa just a week before the election day.

May 16, 2005: Rival opposition CUDP party announces it won in sweepingthe 23 seats for Federal parliament, in the capital, Addis Ababa. The UEDFwon 52 seats and the CUDP which had officially won 109 seats, was debating whether they would challenge the rulig-party over the results in court. Repeat-elections were scheduled for 21st August, 2005 in 31st electorates where either irregularities were reported or results were challenged.

May 16, 2005: Main opposition rivals consisted of the Coalition for Unity and Democracy Party (CUDP) and the United Ethiopian Democratic Forces (UEDF) claimed they are on the half-way towards winning a majority seatsin the federal parliament.

May 16, 2005: Voting fraud alleged in Ethiopia’

The country’s pro-democracy party, the Coalition for Unity and Democracy(CUD), has achieved a sweeping victory in the capital of Addis Ababa. But,when the results were overturned and protests broke out amid allegationsof fraud, the ruling party quickly began cracking down on the opposition. (Updates) --

Ethiopian Prime Minister Meles Zenawi banned all demonstrations in and around Addis Ababa as allegations of national voting fraud emerged. In a televised address, Meles said the ban would last one month and he was personally assuming direct control of police and other security forces as Sunday's ballots were counted and accusations were investigated. More than 90 percent of the country's 26 million registered voters cast their ballots in only the second election sincethe advent of multiparty politics and the first to be watched by foreign observers, The Times of London said Monday. Among them were 150 observers from the European Union and 50 from the U.S.-based Carter Center, led by former President Jimmy Carter, Voice of America said.

Throughout Sunday, the main opposition group, Coalition for Unity and Democracy, and other opposition leaders complained officials and supporters of the ruling Ethiopian People's Democratic Front were riggingvotes and interfering at some of the country's 35,000 polling stations.

May 17, 2005: The ruling-EPRDF announced that it had won more than324 seats out of 547 seats.

May 27, 2005: The official preliminary report from the NEBE released that the rulig-EPRDF had won 209 seats in the Federal Parliament and affiliatedparties 12 more. The report indicated that the opposition had won 142 seats as said by the National Electoral Board of Ethiopia, the results are provisional, and these results could change as it's looking into complaints by some of the parties.

May 29, 2005: Ethiopia signed a deal with Somaliland. Somaliland is theseparatist statelet in the northern corner of Somalia and is centered on the port of Berbera. Somaliland "withdrew" from the rest of Somalia in 1991. Ethiopia is looking for an alternative route to the sea-- an alternative to Eritrea. Berbera provides that alternative. Dealing directly with Somalilland is also a slap at Somalia. Ethiopia has accused Somalia ofaiding Eritrea. On the other hand, Somalia points out that Ethiopia has supplied various Somali rebel groups. The new trade agreement Ethiopia and Somaliland signed goes into effect in July 2005. A Somaliland government spokesman pointed out that Ethiopia and Somlaliand reacheda trade agreement in 2003 that included customs agreements and an agreement to improve roads connecting the countries.

May 30, 2005: The government won 274 seats in the 547-seat parliamentin the recent elections, holding on to power despite unpopular policies.

Opposition parties gained many seats because of poor economic conditions, and the governments willingness to risk more war withneighboring Eritrea.

June 1, 2005: Dr. Negasso Gidada Solon was elected in general electionsto the Ethiopian House of People's Representatives (HoPR) as an independent candidate from Dembidolo electoral constituency of WesternWelega zone of Oromia region.

June 8, 2005: was a massacre committed by loyal federal police units trained for snipper shotting, to quell mass uprising after a grinding defeatby opposition parties, actually it was a massacre on law abiding innocent Ethiopians and a massacre on democracy itself, it should be rememberedperpetually for the sake of victims families, and for the sake of democracy. A 16 years old young girl namely Shiberre Dessalegn were among shot dead while many others were arrested in protest to rigged election at Kotobe locality, in eastern part of Addis Ababa.

June 9, 2005: White House calls for calm in Ethiopia’

Top News: COLUMBUS, Ohio, (UPI) -- The White House appealed for calmin Ethiopia Thursday and an end to election-related violence that has claimed at least two dozen lives. "The violence is unacceptable, the threatof violence is unacceptable," White House spokesman Scott McClellan said. "Any concerns relating to alleged electoral irregularities need to be addressed through the electoral commission and the legal process." Violence erupted Wednesday when security forces clashed with stone- throwing demonstrators in Addis Ababa, the Ethiopian capital. The demonstrators were angry over the ruling political party of Prime MinisterMeles Zenawi declaring itself the winner of the May 15 elections. Opposition parties and their supporters allege incidents of intimidation andfraud in the balloting. "All parties need to exercise restraint and maintain an atmosphere of calm," McClellan said. McClellan said the call for restraint was also aimed at Ethiopian security forces and that they should "act in a way that is in accordance with international standards on human rights." Topics: Meles Zenawi, Scott McClellan. Meanwhile, according to official results, the combined opposition increasedit's number of seats by winning 31% or more of the total seats in the Federal parliament, the disputed multi-party elections lead to violent protests continue over the month. In August to September of 2005, election re-runs in more than 30 seats; and the ruling-EPRDF say it gains enough seats to form a government. The main opposition CUDP, however,refused to accept the result and claimed that massive fraud had denied them an outright victory. The CUDP leadership in various occassions haveannounced it's unwilling to accept the results of the May-2005 election, then they were unwilling to join the Federal parliament unless the ruling- EPRDF makes significant concessions, and that the party had a great dealof support at rallies in areas in and around Addis Ababa. Furthermore, theruling-party altered parliamentary endorsements to limit the opposition's power, reinforcing the conclusion that the ruling party would never let theopposition operate openly.

Meantime, election observers from the European Union led by MEP AnnaGomes reported extensive human-rights violations in the months that followed, including nearly two hundred demonstrators killed by security forces and tens of thousands more imprisoned.

June 10, 2005: Coalition partner of the ruling-EPRDF, the Oromo PeoplesDemocratic Organization (OPDO) announced plans for move the regionalcapital back to "Finfine", the Oromiffa name for "Addis Ababa”.

June 13, 2005: U.S. blasts Ethiopia violence’

Top News: WASHINGTON, (UPI) -- The U.S. State Department Monday condemned election-related violence in Ethiopia and urged the government to respect the rule of law. Ethiopian police shot and killed at least 11 people and beat hundreds of others last week for protesting the May 4 election in which the ruling political party of Prime Minister Meles Zenawi declared itself the winner. Opposition parties and their supporters alleged incidents of intimidation and fraud in the balloting. "We urge the government to respect the rule of law, international principles of human rights, and due process with regard to those arrested or detained," the State Department said in a statement. "The United States looks to the opposition parties to abide by the rule of law, to respect their commitmentto end the violence, and to ask their followers to remain calm." The statement said it expected all parties to resolve electoral complaints through established mechanisms. "The elections have immutably changedEthiopia's political landscape and broadened that country's democratic horizon," the statement said.

August 9, 2005:National Electoral Board of Ethiopia (NEBE) has released official results, acknowledging that the ruling-EPRDF had won 296 seats ofthe total 524 excluding the 23 seats for Addis Ababa which was won by the CUDP, meaning about 56% of the total 547 seats enabling it to form agovernment, while it's affiliated parties won 22 seats. The latest batch of constituency results announced by the National Electoral Board of Ethiopia(NEBE) gave the EPRDF 56% of total parliamentary seats, past the 274 it needs for a majority. The two main opposition coalitions, other opposition parties and independent candidates now have 176 out of 547 seats, far more than the 20 they had in the last parliament. The main opposition Coalition for Unity and Democracy Party (CUDP) has said the electoral board was biased toward the ruling party. It and the United Ethiopian Democratic Forces (UEDF) opposition party were to hold a news conference to outline how they would challenge the result.

August 10, 2005: The ruling-Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary DemocraticFront (EPRDF) said it would form a new government, despite the opposition’s refusal to accept the results of the May elections it says werefraudulent. The African Union appealed to political parties in the Horn of Africa country to settle any disputes through the courts and dialogue.

Opposition parties are due to announce on Thursday how they intend to challenge the election results. The latest in a slow trickle of results from the May 15 parliamentary poll confirmed Meles on Tuesday as winner of asecond term in Africa’s top coffee grower. Claims of fraud in what was considered Ethiopia’s most democratic poll sparked protests and a militaryclampdown that left at least 36 people dead. The ruling Ethiopian People’sRevolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) said in a statement that the opposition was calling for the formation of a national reconciliation government through power-sharing but that this was not acceptable. “Thequestion of sharing power through negotiation will not be acceptable,” EPRDF said. “According to the national constitution, only the party which wins a majority vote can form the government. Any anti-constitutional move will not be accepted to just quench the thirst of power of the opposition.” The opposition parties were not immediately available for comment. In what appeared to be an endorsement of the process, the Addis Ababa-based African Union (AU) praised Ethiopians’ participation and the nation’s “democratisation” in general. “The African Union appeals to all political parties to work together in the national interest and if need be, pursue any outstanding issues through due processes of the law and agreed mechanisms including dialogue," it said in a statement. "The African Union wishes to congratulate the people of Ethiopia for having freely expressed their will," it said.

August 19, 2005: Ethiopians in Norway Push for Cancellation of Yara PrizeTo PM Meles Zenawi and urged his regime must be sanctioned'
Side note: Ethiopians from different parts of Norway and many Norwegians demonstrated in Oslo against the Yara AS award to PM MelesZenawi. The demonstration started from the center of the city to the Yara headquarters, the Ministry of Trade and Industry (main share holder of the Yara AS) and the Norwegian parliament (Stortinget).
August 26, 2005: The Anti-Yara 2005 Award Committee whos mobilised all concerned individuals from Norway and around the globe prepared a document which encloses economic and political facts of Ethiopia that counters the Yara AS claim and reasons for awarding the Ethiopian PrimeMinister Meles Zenawi.
Side note: The committee gave interview to various newspapers and mobilised Norwegians to stand by Ethiopians side in stopping the award. Alobby taskforce of the committee had a three-hour-long discussion with the YARA AS leadership. During the discussion the taskforce challenged the Yara leadership with documented facts that show economic growth in Ethiopia far below the figure indicated in the press release of Yara, and human rights records of Ethiopia as being one of the worst, according to the report of international human right institutions. And finally the taskforce expressed its view that this award is nothing but a bribe to a business partner Meles Zenawi to pave the way for a wider fertilizer market in Ethiopia. Meantime, during the discussion, Mr. Arne Cartridge, representing Yara, tried to defend the decision, but finally explained that the decision was made by the board members of the Yara Foundation andnot by Yara AS, and that his colleagues at the headquarters had no influence on the process of nomination. Furthermore, he promised to convey the minutes of the discussion to the board.The taskforce has also conducted a fruitful discussion with the representative of the Norwegian Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Mr. Gunar, and the discussion was concluded with a common understanding. According to one reliable source, the Ministry had written a letter of complaint to Yara AS about the decision made to award Meles Zenawi. The anti-Yara Award Committee in additionaddressed the issue to different Norwegian political parties. The responsewas very positive. Many of them have sent their reaction to Yara AS on the prize award to the prime minister.
Late August 2005: Neutral observers ,the Carter presidential center, localNGOs and observers mainly comprised of Civic society groups have released their election report in irrespct of the government action againstpeaceful demonstrators following the contested general election of mid- May-2005.
Side note;- The mid-May-2005 election ended up with dispute followed by an incarceration of all elected CUDP-opposition leadership such in a trumped-up charges, ranging from national treason to attempted genocideagainst it's leaders by massacring and seriously wounding unarmed peaceful demonstrators including massive arrest of opposition supporters by government police & security forces took place as the ruling-EPRDF hasclaimed victory earlier, before the disclosure of the official polls result by the National Electoral Board of Ethiopia (NEBE). Mrs. Anna Maria Gomes, aPortuguese MP of the European parliament has been refused entry visa bythe Ethiopian authorities to release the EOMs observation report on the Ethiopian election, the regime has arrested most top CUD leaders along with over 40, 000 amassed opposition supporters, of them only the 131 accused with trumped-up charges. After a long trial, it was difficult find evidence that supports the government's charge of devastation caused by the June and November of 2005 and attempted genocide and anti-Tigreanrhetoric employed by the CUDP leaders during the election campaign. The international observers continue to attend all trial sessions. In addition to United States representative, the European Union, United Nations have representatives present nearly everyday, as well as a rotation of representatives from various western donor countries embassies. But western diplomats say, "while showing public criticism of the government's economic policies, in none of the evidence presented thus far has there been any call for violence or genocide by CUDP leadership.

September 3, 2005: Over a thousand people, many with backgrounds in Ethiopia and surrounding countries, demonstrated against the awarding ofthe Yara award to PM Meles Zanawi. This demonstration is intended to putpressure on to the Ethiopian tyrant Meles Zenawi to respect the people's voice and abide by the newly released EU Election Observers Report.

Meles Zenawi has held power in Ethiopia as a rebel leader since late May1991, and during his tenure opposition forces have been turned down.

September 5, 2005: National Electoral Board of Ethiopia (NEBE) releasedit's final results.

The NEBE released it’s final electoral report in which the ruling-party retained it's control of the government with 328 seats in the Federal Parliament or 59 % of the vote. The opposition coalition parties won totally 174 seats in the Federal parliament or 32% of the vote. The CUDPalone won 20% of the vote.

September 21, 2005: Eritrea told the UN that it had "the right, to defend and preserve its territorial integrity by any means." If this sounds like saber-rattling, that's because it is. Though the independent boundary commission awarded the Badme area to Eritrea in April 2002, Ethiopia stillrefuses to accept the decision. The December 2000 ceasefire accord supposedly committed both Eritrea and Ethiopia to accept the commission's ruling.

September 24, 2005: Coalition for Unity & Democracy (CUD) to become aunitary party’

Side note: The newly transformed Coalition for Unity and Democracy Party(CUDP) elected it top leaders today. The chairman and vice chairman positions, as expected, were filled by Ato Hailu Shawel and Ato Lidetu Ayalew, respectively. The two other positions, however, were big surprises. Wzt. Birtukan Mideksa, who was elected today as the 1st vice chairman, is a young lawyer who also had briefly served as a judge. The secretary, Ato Muluneh Eyuel, is known to be a bright young economist.

The party’s 20-member executive committee and 60-member central committee also took over their responsibilities from the 16-member council. As of today, CUD has been transformed from a coalition of four parties into a unitary party. The following are members of the newly formed CUD Executive Committee: Chairman: Ato Hailu Shawel, 1st Vice Chairman: Woizeritrt Birtukan Mideksa, Vice Chairman: Ato Lidetu Ayalew,Secretary: Ato Muluneh Eyuel. The EC members include: Ato Abayneh Birhanu, Ato Abdurahman Ahmedin, Ato Akalu Gergrie, Dr. Alemayehu Reda, Dr. Befikadu Degifie, Ato Dibaba Amensisa, Ato Elala Tezera, MajourGetachew Mengiste, Eng. Gizachew Shiferaw, Wro Leniesil Asfaw, Ato Mesfin Ayalew, Dr. Mulalem Tarekegn, Ato Mushie Semu, Ato Seleshi Tena, Dr. Shimelis Tekletsadik Mekuria, Dr. Yacob Hailemariam.

September 26, 2005: UN's Special Envoy to Ethiopia and Eritrea said thatthe political and diplomatic "stalemate" between Eritrea and Ethiopia hadto be resolved. One possible diplomatic initiative would be to bring representatives from the African Union (AU), the European Union (EU), and the US to the region. The AU, EU, and the United States helped sponsor the ceasefire talks in 2000.

September 27, 2005: Ethiopia arrested 80 people and seized some weapons in the Islamic Oromia region. Ethiopia has been, for over a thousand years, an empire with a Christian core in the highlands, and minority Moslem populations surrounding the core. The Moslems comprisethe bulk of the opposition, with many Moslems wanting more autonomy for the Moslem provinces.

October 1, 2005: Ethiopia cannot accept the UN commission decision to give the tiny border area of Badme to Eritrea, even though the ruling party retained control in the recent elections. "Giving up" Badme would most likely cause a loss of control during the next round of elections. In Eritrea, the ruling group have not allowed free elections, because they know they would get voted out of a job. Getting Badme from Ethiopia willhelp the Eritrean dictator, but not enough to satisfy the majority of Eritreans.

October 4, 2005: Ato Omot Obang Olom, considered one of the primarymasterminds and executors of the Annuak Genocide, appointed new governor of Gambella region. Believed it was a reward for Ato Obang Olom for his loyalty to the ruling-EPRDF.

October 10, 2005: Ethiopian Prime Minister Meles Zenawi attended in Oslo, Norway to receive the Yara AS award. Mr. Meles Zenawi has received the controversial prize from the Yara International AS, which is amajor supplier of fertilizer to Ethiopia. Mr. Thorleif Enger has personally handed over the Yara-Prize to Meles Zenawi.

October 12, 2005: Ethiopia's population is estimated now 77 million and isgrowing at 2.4 percent a year. The country cannot sustain a population that large, meaning that in a growing violence as people battle over land and other resources.

October 15, 2005: In southeastern Ethiopian part of the Ogaden rebelsclaim they have killed two dozen soldiers in several attacks so far this month.

October 28, 2005: The United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea (UNMEE) peacekeepers will temporarily vacate 18 positions located withinthe Temporary Security Zone (TSZ) separating Ethiopian and Eritrean forces. Earlier this month Eritrea announced it had "banned" helicopter support flights into the TSZ. Eritrea has also restricted the UN's ground movements. Indian and Jordanian troops man most of the 18 posts being evacuated. The UN has also suspended de-mining in the TSZ. The UN saidthat at the moment the situation remains "militarily stable" -- code wordsthat mean there are no immediate indications that either side is preparingfor combat operations. Eritrea's actions are further indications that the political situation is deteriorating.

October 31, 2005: In southeastern Ethiopia, Ogaden rebels continue theirattacks, killed another six police and civilians in several attack.

Former Army Major-General Nega Tegegne Dies in London, UK’

General Nega Tegegn, a former military strategist and who was appointedchief administrator of of Begiemder and Semien province by PrimministerLij Endalkachew Makonnen before his defection to the Sudan dies. He wasthe husband of HRH Princess Hirut Desta, the daughter of HRH Princess Tenagnework, and granddaughter of Emperor Haile Selassie I. Nega Tegegne recieved his military training at the Imperial Guard Acadamy at Holeta, later served with the Ethiopian troops that joined the United Nations Forces in Korea during the Korean war of 1951 to 1953. He took further military training at the Wellington Staff College in India, and then took part in the command of the Ethiopian troops under General Wolde Yohannis Shita and later General Kebede Gebre in the Congo in 1960- 1963. In 1963, during the first Ogaden war with Somalia, the then ColonelNega Tegegne served as military administrator of the southern Ogaden district. He then served as a military representative to the Organization ofAfrican working in Angola, and then represented the O.A.U. again when the United Nations investigated charges of atrocities commited in the Biafran war in Nigeria in 1967. He went on for advanced military studies at the Royal College of Defence Studies in Britain between 1969 and 1971when he returned to Ethiopia to take up command of the 3rd Army division in southern Ethiopia as Major General.

In 1974, the new government of Prime Minister Endalkatchew Makonnen appointed him Governor-general of the Province of Beghemidir and Simien(known today as Gondar Province). In late July 1974, during the period of upheaval shortly before the fall of the monarchy in Ethiopia, Major- General Nega Tegegn then administrator of BegeMidr administrative region was survived a capture and fled to the Sudan. Following the fall of Emperor Haile Selassie, General Nega helped to found the Ethiopian Democratic Union (E.D.U.)which was the first resistance movement to take up arms against the Dergue regime. His wife Princess Hirut (Ruth) was imprissoned by the Duerg regime for 14 years, and was only releasedin 1988. He commanded E.D.U. forces from the Sudan that came close to capturing the city of Gondar in 1976-77 with the aim of restoring a constitutional monarchy in Ethiopia. However, disagreements among the leadership of the E.D.U. caused the party to fracture and weaken, and ultimately retreat militarily, and General Nega left the party. General Negawas very active in the emigre community in London, aggitating for freedom in Ethiopia for decades. He was an active campaigner for Ethiopian unity, voicing opposition to the separation of Eritrea from Ethiopia, and condemning the ethnic policies of the EPRDF government following the fall of the Duerg regime in May, 1991. (Text ends) November 1, 2005: Fighting broke out in Ethiopia's capital as demonstrators protested Ethiopia's May 15 disputed elections. Eight people reportedly died.

The Right Honorable Bitwadad Assfaha Wolde-Michael former Chief Executive of Eritrea federal administration and member of the Imperial Crown council passed away at age of 91 in Addis Ababa. Unionist Bitwadad Assfaha was an Eritrean by origin. He was later member of the political party known as “Mahber Fikri-Hager” (Society for Love of Country) in Eritrea in the late 1940s. In 1952, following the Federation of Eritrea with Ethiopia, he was elected Chief Executive of the newly created Eritrean Assembly. During the early days of the Federation (1952–55) he served various positions in the former Eritrean Assembly . In 1963, a yearafter the Federation ended and Eritrea was annexed by Ethiopia, he was appointed to head the Imperial Crowncouncil in Addis Ababa. In 1974 withthe onset of military dictatorship of Duerg in Ethiopia, Bitwadad Assfaha was survived and got imprisoned briefly.

November 2, 2005: On November 2 at least 33 people died in the fightingbetween protestors and police in the Ethiopian capital, while another 150 were wounded. Several opposition parties claimed the Ethiopian government rigged the May 15 elections, though election results showed opposition groups picked up support in the elections. At the moment Ethiopia's ruling Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Democratic Front and itsallies control about 60 percent of the seats in parliament.

November 3, 2005: With UN peacekeepers removed from the border, there are reports of troops, from both sides, moving to the Ethiopian- Eritrean border. Half of Ethiopia's tank force is believed to be at the border, and Eritrean troops have been spotted inside the demilitarized zone. Meanwhile, the deadly riots in the Ethiopian capital have stopped. November 8, 2005: A week of protests against government vote manipulation last May left at least fifty dead, hundreds injured and over 5,000 arrested. The government won't admit that it cheated, and the opposition parties will settle for nothing less than a new, and clean, vote.This puts the current government in a bad position, because if they admittheir guilt, they could be prosecuted and punished. Which goes to show you how hard it is to establish democratic government.

November 10, 2005: Ethiopia released 2,400 people that had been arrested during demonstrations against government manipulation of last May's vote. However, 24 journalists and opposition leaders are being heldon treason charges, and another 40 were just arrested on the same charges.

November 11, 2005: The UN believes that Eritrea and Ethiopia are edgingtoward "devastating hostilities." While Eritrea is at fault for denying UNMEE (UN Mission to Ethiopia and Eritrea) helicopters flight rights in theTempoaray Security Zone (TSZ), it was Ethiopia's refusal to accept the international boundary commission's decision to give the town of Badme to Eritrea that is the cause of current friction. In addition, most UNMEE night time ground patrols had been halted because of Eritrea's ban on movement.

November 12, 2005: Ato Kebede Michael, the renowned novelist andwriter died of natural sickness.

Side note: Ato Kebede Mikael was one of the great thinkers in the field of education and literature in Ethiopia. He wrote a total of 26 books includinga wide range of translations from various languages. From 1940 to 1970, he wrote Amharic school textbooks in which he provided generations of Ethiopian students with literature filled with knowledge and information about a wide range of issues and disciplines. His writings are in both proseand poetry and his poems follow rhyming and writing styles of his own.
He translated, among many others, Romeo and Juliet and Macbeth of William Shakespeare. Kebede Michael's literary works reflect on the manyshades of character and behaviour of the Ethiopian society. The contents of many of his books are on history, education, development, philosophy,religion, science and so on. He worked as an inspector in the Ministry of Education, as Deputy Directorin the Ministry of Foreign Affairs (1942), as Director of the National Library(1944), Director-General of the Ministry of Education, and as a Cabinet Minister in the Imperial Palace. He was a regular Ethiopian delegate to many international conferences at the United Nations in New York. He received the first Prize for Literature from the late Emperor Haileselassie. He also received awards from the governments of France, Germany, Italy,USSR and Mexico. In 1990, he received an Honorary Doctorate Degree from Addis Ababa University for his unparalleled excellence in literature aswell as for inspiring generations of Ethiopian authors and writers. Dr.
Kebede Michael died on 12 November 1998 at the age of 82. No other Ethiopian in the country's history so far has been able to write as extensively on a wide variety of disciplines as did Kebede Michael. His contributions are enormous to the development of education and literaturein Ethiopia. Rest In Peace!
November 13 to 15, 2005: In separate times between June and November(b/n June 8 to 1-9 November, and 13 to 15 November), demonstrators were poured into the streets to protest the results, the Police and para- military forces under the direct personal command and control of PM Meles Zenawi, massacred unarmed protesters and wounded about 763 others, during the riot claimed seven policemen on duty were shotdead, reported over 193 killings in Addis Ababa, estimated 750 unreported killings in various regions of the country. Security plainclothes were locked-up over 43, 000 opposition supporters to remote concentration camps.
Side note;- In various times of June and November, 2005, in the aftermath of the election that claimed the lives of nearly 200 civilians, theex-US top diplomat had told the Voice of America (VOA) that Prime Minister Meles Zenawi has proved to be a failure. "Mr. Meles and his TPLFparty fought to overthrow a very dictatorial and tyrannical regime.
Everything that Prime Minister Meles said at that time indicated that he was a true believer in the democratic process. But over 10 to 12 years, hehas proved to be a disappointment. They are condemned to rule the country as a minority and that is very dangerous for stability," he said.
He pointed out that US diplomatic efforts in May-1991 were primarily focused on saving Addis Ababa from destruction. "The TPLF was at the gates of Addis Ababa, we wanted to make sure that the war ended with what we called a "soft landing in Addis" and there should be no destruction .."we didn't say takeover the government", we said only "takeover Addis Ababa", he said. It has to be remembered that the retired ex- US top diplomat, played a key role in Ethiopia's transition from the Duergmilitary rule to a minority rule of TPLF in May-1991.

November 15, 2005: Parliament agreed to an independent inquiry into theviolence surrounding the recent voting demonstrations. The government has agreed that too much force was used, and said it would buy water cannon and other non-lethal anti-riot weapons.

November 16, 2005: Ethiopia has "hardened" the town of Zalambessa (near the Eritrean border). This may not be new news, as reports of trench and bunker building in the area have been circulating since this past Spring. Zalambessa is east of the town of Badme, which is at the center of the Ethiopian-Eritrean disputes. Ethiopia may be letting outsiderssee the defensive preparations in Zalambessa since it demonstrates "the will to fight." A western reporter said he noticed few troops in Zalambessabut the defensive works were extensive. It is feared that the Ethiopian government will welcome another round of war with Eritrea, to distract people from domestic problems with vote rigging.

November 17, 2005: Lack of cooperation has resulted in UN peace monitors to only be able to cover 40 percent of the Ethiopian-Eritreanborder

November 20, 2005: All senior members of the opposition CUD were arrested. All the private press were shut down. More than 130 people, including journalists and many opposition leaders, are charged with treason and genocide over November's deadly clashes. Ethiopian police are arresting or harassing journalists who report on problems with taintedelections. While technically a democracy, many Ethiopian officials still seem to think they are running a dictatorship.

Ethiopian civic and political groups, media, activists, scholars, and artists announce that November becomes "Ethiopian Election Massacre" commemoration month around the world. In preparation to commemoratethe Ethiopian Election Massacre, a worldwide task force has been formed. The task force organizes various activities and a worldwide conference.

The 2005 election massacre was one of the darkest moments in thehistory of Ethiopia.

It has to be recalled that May 15, 2005, over 26 million Ethiopians voted peacefully to elect their leaders. As the results started to come in, showing a landslide victory for the opposition party, Meles Zenawi went onTV and declared a state of emergency. He also ordered re-votes in severaldistricts where members of his party went down in defeat, banned politicalrallies, and unleashed his killers against peaceful citizens who protested his attempt to steal the election. When the Addis Ababa Police showed restraint, Meles ordered all of them to be disarmed, and gave the Federal Police and his personal army, the Agaazi, a shoot-to-kill order. The Agaaziand Federal Police snipers from roof tops and military trucks gunned down young, hundreds of unarmed protesters with 50 caliber rifles. Over 50000 students and other individuals were rounded up and sent to concentration camps in remote parts of the country.

November 22, 2005: The ONLF (Ogaden National Liberation Front, Somalis Ethiopian separatists in eastern Somalia, an area called the Ogaden) accused government troops of killing at least 30 prisoners and civilians. The government denies it, and says the deaths are related to ajail break, but the war in the Ogaden has been nasty in the past.

November 23, 2005: The UN is threatening Ethiopia and Eritrea with economic sanctions if they do not settle their border dispute peacefully.Eritrea has the moral high ground here, as an independent commission awarded the disputed area to Eritrea, but Ethiopia has refused to give itup. Eritrea has made matters worse by hindering the operations of UN peacekeeper monitors along the thousand kilometer border.

November 24, 2005: The UN said that 20 Ethiopian troops moved into theeastern portion of the TSZ (Temporary Security Zone) on November 19-
23. The TSZ is the buffer zone separating Ethiopia and Eritrea. This occupation would be a technical violation of the peace agreement, thoughthe UN monitors indicated the Ethiopian troops were occupying an observation post vacated by UN troops.

November 25, 2005: The UN has threatened Eritrea with economic sanctions if Eritrea does not allow UNMEE monitors to operate in Eritrean territory. The UN also objects to Eritrea's denial of air space to UN helicopters flying recon and support missions along the Ethiopia-Eritrea border. Eritrea rejected the UN resolution, dubbing the resolution an example of "the narrow interests of major powers." In the past Eritrea hasdemonstrated a willingness to ignore international pressure. The international commission which ruled on the Ethiopia-Eritrea border dispute decided in Eritrea's favor. Ethiopia originally agreed to accept the commission's decision but now rejects it. Eritrean spokesman make the point that the UN does not condemn Ethiopia for reneging on the border commission deal.

November, 2005: Birhanu Nega, an academic and a businessman, was one of many politicians from the opposition CUDP, elected mayor of the capital, Addis Ababa, whose part, the CUDP achieved just under under 20% of the vote in the May-2005 national election, but did not take officeand was jailed as part of the government's crackdown on post-election demonstrations, charged with trying to overthrow the EPRDF-led government and other constitutional offences.

Side note ;- When the opposition won the capital, Addis Ababa, and claimed to have won nationally, the government arrested its leaders and tried them for treason. Some were imprisoned, others fled into exile. The ruling EPRDF quashed the CUDP, a highly popular party dominated by mostly academicians, trumped-up charges were leveled against CUDP leaders and civic organs heads in the aftermath of the May elections where they were accused of planning a Rwanda-style genocide as the rulingEPRDF reached nadir of it's arrogance, by conveying a distorted message that the multi-ethnic Ethiopian organizations have to be associated with the Duerg, chauvinism and Interhamwe. Birhanu Nega designate-Mayor of Addis Ababa fled to the US, where he heads Ginbot-7,a group dedicated to overthrowing prime minister Meles Zenawi's EPRDF-led government. Ginbot-7 Movement is named for the Ethiopian calendar date of the disputed May-2005 election. The group is outlawed under the anti-terrorism legislation. Birhanu Nega was convicted in another terrorism case a year earlier, and received a death sentence in absentia. About eight Ethiopian Air force aircraft pilots found in Ukraine for Air- combat training have condemned the ruling-party and requested for political asylum in what they termed as the "May-2005 rigged election".

Geo-Scientists have revealed that the Afar Desert, also known as the "Danakhil Depression", a volcanic region in Ethiopia's northern Afar regionwhich lies below sea level and is known for it's intense heat, the "Erta-Alevolcano" that spouts lava pools, and picturesque salt flats, a continuous sequence of earthquakes, fissures hundreds of meters long and deep appearing in the ground and the valley floor sinking as much as 100 meters.

Side note ;- According to the Geo-scientists prediction, in nearly 70,000 to10 million of years, that the whole 6,000 km length of the East African great rift will be submerged, forming a new Sea as large as perhaps the Red Sea is now, and Africa will have lost parts of it's Horn, and that wouldfloat on the Indian ocean, creates a major island. Ethiopia’s Danakhil Depression is the most horrible, fascinating place on Earth. Most visitors' primal fear is having ever felt washed over as stared looking into the mouth of a live volcano. The lava was close to the surface, boiling about two storeys down.

November 28, 2005: Speculation: Is there any question about who is taking the money out of the country? Meles crime family or One-familyruling party'

1. Meles Zenawi – Tigray People’s Liberation Front (TPLF) chairman, TPLFPolitburo chairman, Marxist-Leninist League of Tigray chairman, Ethiopian Peoples’Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) chairman, and PM
2. Azeb Mesfin – (Meles Zenawi’s wife) – former head of Mega Enterprises(she ran the company into the ground), currently a member of parliament andchairperson of the Social Affairs Committee
3. Sebhat Nega – TPLF Politburo member, Meles Zenawi’s personaladvisor, behind the scene controls the Endowment Fund For Rehabilitation of Tigray (EFFORT), anNGO in name, but a TPLF business conglomerate in realty, controlling some of the largestindustries in the country
4. Kidusan Nega (Sebhat Nega’s younger sister) – Mekele Mayor and TPLFCentral Committee member
5. Tsegay Berhe (Kidusan Nega’s husband) – Tigray Killil president andTPLF Politburo member
6. Aberash Nega (Sebhat’s youngest sister) she unsuccessfully ran aselectee for AA City with two of her cousins.

7. Sebhat Nega's youger sister is said to be Eritrea's defense ministerSebhat Ephrem's wife
8. Arkebe Okubay (whose sister is the wife of TPLF Central Committeemember Adis Alem Balema) – a member of the TPLF Politburo, an advisor to Meles Zenawi,and former Mayor of Addis Ababa
9. Berhane Guebre Kristos (brother of Arkebe Okubay's wife Nigist GuebreKristos) – TPLF Central Committee member, former Ethiopian ambassador to USAand current ambassador to Brussels, Belgium.
10. Tirfu Kidane Mariam (Abay Woldu's wife) – Meles Zenawi's justice andsecurity chief, and TPLF Central Committee member.
11. Abay Woldu (Tirfu Kidane Mariam's husband) – Chief of the TPLF, andPolitburo member
12. Mulugeta Alemseged – Meles Zenawi's nearest family member, MelesZenawi's closest man, currently serves as ambassador in Italy.
13. General Berhane Negash – Meles Zenawi's palace security chief andthe Godfather of Meles Zenawi's son.

December 11, 2005: Despite the sword rattling and increase in rhetorical bluster, reports from the Ethiopia-Eritrea border indicate there is little likelihood of war. Ethiopia is largely responsible for the current situation. The UN boundary commission decided the key border issue, the area around Badme, in Eritrea's favor. The decision was supposed to be binding, but Ethiopia has rejected it. However, Eritrea's diplomacy has been a failure. The UN Security Council unanimously agreed to threaten Eritrea with economic and political sanctions if Eritrea does not let UNMEEobservers operate unhindered. Eritrea has stopped UN support and inspection helicopter flights in several parts of the Temporary Security Zone (TSZ). Still, observers reported that in October and November Ethiopia moved two infantry divisions to an area near the TSZ. Eritrea then put 1500 light infantry close to the TSZ. After the Security Council demanded troop pullbacks, Ethiopia agreed to re-deploy seven divisions away from the TSZ. This past week Eritrea issued an order expelling Americans, Western Europeans, and Russians from the UN observer force.This order could affect approximately 150 of the 3300 observers. It also makes Ethiopia look more cooperative, even though Ethiopia is violating the "binding agreement."

December 19, 2005: International commission, based in The Hague, Netherlands rules that Eritrea broke international law when it attacked Ethiopia in 1998. Meantime, the Eritrea-Ethiopia Claims Commission (EECC) at the Permanent Court of Arbitration in The Hague, has found Ethiopia guilty of destroying Eritrean property along the border. Ethiopianclaims against Eritrea were dismissed.

December 23, 2005: Ethiopian and Eritrean troops pulled away from theborder. The Ethiopian "pull back" was termed "significant." Each side is believed to have about 100,000 troops (8-10 divisions) at the border.

There have been reported of two or more Ethiopian moving back from theborder. Meanwhile, both countries are becoming unstable, and their governments are cracking down on dissent. In Ethiopia, 40,000 people were arrested after recent political demonstrations. Most were soon released, but about 3,000 are still held, and 131 politicians, journalists and other activists are being tried on criminal charges. Eritrea is turning into a police state, with the government using the threat of attack byEthiopia as the reason for such authoritarian measures.

December 24, 2005: The UN observer force along the Ethiopia-Eritrea border is apparently discounting reports that Ethiopia and Eritrea are "onthe verge of war." Those reports have been cropping up for the last two weeks. However, the UN missions says that the border area remains "tense." The UN Security Council threatened economic and political sanctions against Ethiopia and Eritrea. Ethiopia had to let the boundary commission begin marking the new border. Eritrea had to permit UN helicopter recon and support flights. The deadline for compliance was December 23, but as with most UN deadlines, there's wriggle room. UN observers have until the first week of January to assess compliance. Thatgives Ethiopia and Eritrea time to claim they have stood up to international pressure (domestic politics) and yet substantially meet the UN's requirements (international politics).

January 11, 2006: Since the beginning of the year, Ethiopia has movedmost of its recent reinforcements away from the Eritrean border. Therehave been far fewer incidents along the border (usually patrols firing ateach other).

January 13, 2006:Kitaw Ejigu (February 25, 1948 - January 13, 2006) wasan Ethio-American scientist who worked for NASA as Chief of Spacecraft and Satellite Systems engineer. Kitaw Ijigu was born in Bonga, Kaffa, Ethiopia. He attended the Miazia 27th High School in Jimma. He then attended Bahir Dar Polytechnic Institute, and in 1966, graduated as the top student in his class. He received his diploma in mechanical engineering with specialization in agricultural technology. After graduation, Kitaw worked at the Ethiopian Automotive Services and Sales Company (EASSCO) as chief technical advisor and assistant manager for two years.

Ijigu won a scholarship from the Japanese Overseas Technical Associationand traveled to Japan in 1972. There, Kitaw studied automotive engineering at Hiroshima University as well as language and economics atOsaka University. He later moved to the United States, where he began intensive research and training and earned his MBA in 1979. He then completed his doctorate in space vehicle systems engineering from Northrop University in California. He was later served also as nationalist political leader. Kitaw Ejigu died at the age of 58 in the United States; prior to his death, he was planning to work with the founder of Africa Needs Community Development Corporation. His primary goal was to implement his valuable knowledge for the people of Africa and the native country to see.

Followed the aftermath of the disputed May-2005 election, an estimated of over 43,000 suspected opposition CUDP members mainly the youth supporters were arrested in remote detention camps. The electorate whohad voted the opposition were facing administrative discrimination and desertion in the form of food-aid, partiality on Agri-inputs distribution or infavoring in infrastructural development.

January 23, 2006: Eritrea told a visiting UN representative that new negotiations were unnecessary because (quoting the Eritrean spokesman)"the Eritrea-Ethiopia issue involves no debatable matter..." Neither Ethopia nor Eritrea believe there is anything to talk about. The boundary commission decided in Eritrea's favor regarding the key area around the town of Badme. Ethiopia now refuses to recognize the "binding" decision. Diplomacy has hit a wall-- an armed wall.
January 25, 2006: African Human Rights Commission report has criticisedthe continent's worst rights offenders, including Sudan and Zimbabwe, in a report analysts say marks a "coming of age" for the organization.
Side note;- The African Union's commission issued candid reviews of Ethiopia, Eritrea, Sudan, Zimbabwe, Uganda and the Democratic Republic of Congo in the report, obtained by Reuters. Those countries said they wanted a chance to reply before the report became public, ensuring it remained confidential. "If the African Union is to have a strong voice it hasto foster constructive criticism, not bury it," said the New York-based Human Rights Watch.
February 8, 2006; The UN Security Council gave the United States anotherthirty days to see if a new diplomatic initiative can help resolve the Ethiopia-Eritrea border issue. The mandate for the UN Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea (UNMEE) ends in March. The UN Security Council is considering several options, including a redeployment of the 3300 peacekeepers in the force. Since October 2005, Eritrea has restricted UN peacekeeping and observer helicopter flights in the border zone. UN observers say their ability to monitor the border situation has been greatlyreduced. African and western press sources report that both Ethiopia and Eritrea have increased their military capabilities in the border zone. The UN accused Eritrea of helping Libya and Chad supply arms to rebel groupsin Sudan's western Darfur region. Eritrea denied the charge.
February 9, 2006; During the past week, UNMEE conducted 746 groundpatrols along the Temporary Security Zone (TSZ--the border area).
Meanwhile, Eritrea reported that four Ethiopian soldiers had crossed the border and defected. There is obviously increased activity in the border area. However, with the US diplomatic initiative in play, it is unlikely that a full-scale war will erupt. The situation, however, is volatile. The UN observers are supposed to provide a degree of "transparency" so neither side gets jumpy. With observers withdrawn or denied access to area, the possibility of small firefights erupting increases. The US is regarded as oneof the few nations both Eritrea and Ethiopia will listen to. However, neitherside shows any willingness to discuss the border issues.
February 25, 2006: Laureate Tsegaye Guebre-Medhin the versatile playwright, novelist, Poet-Laureate and anthropologist of Ethiopia as well as a poet playright, essayist, and art director passed away. Poet Laureate Tsegaye died in Manhattan, where he had moved in 1998 to receive treatment for kidney disease.

His funeral was carried out in Addis Ababa inthe St. Trinity Cathedral.The funeral service for Poet Laureate Tsegaye was attended by several thousand admirers.

February 28, 2006: Eritrea said that it would not participate in any new discussions regarding its border dispute with Ethiopia. The Boundary Commission gave Eritrea the town of Badme. Ethiopia originally agreed toaccept the Boundary Commission's decision as binding, Ethiopia now rejects that decision.

March 3, 2006: An Indian Army soldier serving with the UN peacekeepingand monitoring mission along the Ethiopia-Eritrea border died while awaiting medical evacuation. It took much longer than necessary to evacuate the soldier because Eritrea still will not let UN helicopters fly in Eritrea's border area. The UN Security Council demanded that Eritrea lift the flight restrictions. The UN Boundary Commission will ask Ethiopia andEritrea to attend a meeting in April to discuss the continuing dispute.

March 5, 2006: No good news here. Ethiopia is still mired in ethnic and political disputes that cannot be settled peacefully. Neighboring Eritrea has become a police state, and is demanding that Ethiopia back off in a border dispute. Neither nation can afford another round of warfare over the disputed border town of Badme. But the governments in both countries have pledged their political futures to getting Badme. Someoneis eventually going to lose.

March 7, 2006: Several bombs went off in the Ethiopian capital, woundingfour people. The government blamed OLF (Oromo Liberation Front) rebelsand agents from Eritrea. Chances are, the culprits were the former, not the latter. The cause appears to be vote rigging in last May's elections, which has generated violence that, so far, has left nearly a hundred dead.March 13, 2006: Ethiopia and Eritrea, after two days of talks in Britain, have agreed to argue some more over who owns a piece of desert wilderness on their common border. This delays another round of war between the two countries. As a result of this, the UN decided to keep their observer force on the Ethiopian/Eritrean border until April 15th.

March 16, 2006: Federal Police arrested six members of the OLF (OromoLiberation Front, and seized weapons. The so called "Federal Police Anti-terrorism Task Force" announced arrests of several members of the outlawed Oromo Liberation Front (OLF) connected with terror plots.

March 17, 2006: Ethiopian government continues to arrest and prosecutemembers of opposition parties, and the media. Eritrea is not much different in the way it treats opposition.

March 18, 2006: Since Eritrea gained its independence from Ethiopia in 1993, there has been no agreement on exactly where the thousand kilometer border is. One major war was fought over this in 1998-2000. Another one threatens to break out. The leadership in both countries see backing down on the border issue as an issue that could threaten their hold on power. The governments of both countries have not paid attentionto pressing economic and social issues, resulting in declining living conditions throughout the region.

March 31, 2006: Eritrea issued a statement that said the primary missionof UNMEE (UN Mission in Eritrea and Ethiopia) is border demarcation.

Eritrea argues that UNMEE has no mandate beyond aiding the Eritrea- Ethiopia Boundary Commission (EEBC). At this point Eritrea wants to block any move by the UN and other international negotiators to force newnegotiations regarding the border.

April 1, 2006: Ethiopia and the eight other nations agreed to create The Nile River Basin Commission. The eight other nations are Burundi, the Democratic Republic of the Congo DRC), Kenya, Egypt, Rwanda, Republicof Congo (Brazzaville), Tanzania, and Sudan. Eritrea was the only Nile "riparian nation" not part of the agreement. Ethiopia is bigger and more politically powerful than Eritrea, and the exclusion reflects Ethiopia's regional political advantage over Eritrea. The Nile River Basin Commission will have its headquarters in Kampala, Uganda. The Commission will address water use issues.

April 2, 2006: Eritrea's increasingly unstable president, Isaias Afewerke, isnow seeking to limit non-governmental organizations' (NGOs) ability to operate in Eritrea and along the Eritrea-Ethiopia border. Eritrea has already limited UN access to the Eritrea-Ethiopia border zone. Since mid- 2005 Eritrea has ordered approximately two-dozen NGOs to leave the country. Two recent examples are Concern and Mercy Corps (both are anti-poverty organizations.). The South Africa-based NGO Accord (African Centre for the Constructive Resolution of Disputes) has also received criticism. The common denominator in Eritrea's moves to expel the NGOs:

Eritrea claims the NGOs "favor Ethiopia in the on-going territorial dispute."The Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission (EEBC) actually ruled in Eritrea's favor on the key town of Badme. Afewerke's seems to think that tossing out international organizations will somehow force "the international community" to compel Ethiopia to comply with the boundary commission decision. All it does is increase Eritrea's alienation and make Ethiopia seem more reasonable - even though it is Ethiopia who violated the agreement to abide by the EEBC's decision.

April 5, 2006: Ethiopia announced that it will build three new hydroelectricdams. The power will be sold to Sudan, Djibouti and Kenya. These three nations are also Ethiopia's "favored neighbors." Ethiopia uses its water and power resources as a diplomatic tools.

April 7, 2006: Ethiopia and Kenya reached a new security agreement designed to stop Oromo rebels from moving across the Kenya-Ethiopian border. Kenya reported that ten people were killed in an attack on a Drukana tribal village in north Kenya. Cattle were also stolen in the incident. Ethiopia believes the attack was made by rebels in the Oromo Liberation Front (OLF). Ethiopia claims that the OLF guerrillas sometimeswear stolen Ethiopian Army uniforms.

April 15, 2006: The UN Security Council decided to extend the current mandate for the UN Missions in Ethiopia and Eritrea (UNMEE) beyond itsApril 15 expiration date. The mandate was extended for a month, until May 15.

April 16, 2006: Over the weekend, there were three incidents in eastern and western Ethiopia where grenades were thrown into two bars and a Protestant church. These attacks left six dead and two dozen wounded. Noone took credit. The Ethiopian government accused the Oromo Liberation Front (OLF) of conducting attacks along the Ethiopia-Kenya border. Thealleged attacks occurred in the border area near Marsabit.

April 18, 2006: Eritrea refused to lift its restrictions on UN peacekeepersand observers in its border zone.
April 20, 2006: The UN Security Council has deferred until mid-May a finaldecision on reducing the UN operation along the Eritrean-Ethiopian border.The UN is urging Eritrea and Ethiopia to resolve their border dispute (ie, accept the boundary commission decisions). However, if Eritrea and Ethiopia have not made progress by mid-May the Security Council will consider reducing forces in the region and "downgrading" the mission from a peacekeeping mission to an observer mission. This would increase the possibility of armed conflict. Eritrea's ban on UN helicopter flights in itsarea has greatly restricted the UN's ability to monitor troops levels in the border zone. Some 3,300 troops serve with the UN monitoring force.
April 21, 2006: The regional drought is causing more tribal bloodshed overever more scarce water supplies. A particularly nasty situation has developed on the Sudan border, where Nuer tribesmen, from both sides ofthe border, attack each other for control of water. In the last week, raids by Sudanese Nuer have left at least twenty dead.
May 15, 2006: A report for the European Parliament and member statesof the European Union indicates the massacres of June and November of2005.
The Report on the June-2005 massacre reveals: There is the list of 62 killed innocent civilians. Government reported that 26 were killed. EHRCOreported that 42 were killed International HRO (AI) reported that 36 werekilled. More than 100 were wounded. At least 5,000 were detained for a week without a court warrant and remain in detention without a day in court. Hundreds were abducted and for some their whereabouts are still not known Hundreds were beaten and tortured.
The Report on the November-2005 massacre reveals: There is the list of70 killed innocent civilians. Government reported that 35 were killed. Ethiopian Human Rights Congress (EHRCO) reported that 34 were killed. International Human Rights Organs (Amnesty International) reported that 42 were killed. At least 200 were shot and wounded. At least 10,000 were detained for amonth without a court warrant and released without a day in court.
Thousands are still in various dentention camps like Shewa-Robit, Ziway,Tateq, Sendafa, Kality, Dedesa and other places. Tens of thousands wereabducted and for some of them their whereabouts are still not known.
Hundreds were beaten and tortured. Mass Killing of Prisoners at Kality Central Prison (November 2005): There is the list of 60 killed prisoners at Kaliti Prison on November 2nd 2005. These prisoners were shot dead by police force. Government has reported that seven (7) prisoners were killedwhile they were trying to escape.

In May 2006: Six opposition political parties and armed groups form an opposition alliance, the Alliance for Freedom and Democracy (AFD), at a meeting in the Netherlands. Several bomb blasts hit Addis Ababa thistime. No organisation claims responsibility.

May 22, 2006: Eritrea announced that it will create a "new Free Port Zone" at its port in Massawa. This proposal has been under discussion foryears. The port proposal makes sense from several angles. The tax-free shipping point will increase traffic for Eritrea. It also pleases several East African countries, particularly ganda and Sudan. Eritrea is buying allies with its port facilities, the same way Ethiopia uses its control of Nile waters to influence its neighbors.

May 23, 2006: Ethiopia's ruling party, Ethiopian Revolutionary DemocraticFront (EPRDF) reached an agreement with two key opposition parties, theOromo Federalist Democratic Movement and the United Ethiopian Democratic Forces. Essentially all three agreed to avoid any groups who would use violent means to "demolish" Ethiopia.

May 23, 2006: The United States once again said that the UN Security Council should begin cutting back on the UNMEE operation if there is "no progress" in resolving the Ethiopia-Eritrea boundary dispute by the end ofMay. On May 15 the UN SEcurity Council passed a resolution stating that Ethiopia and Eritrea had until the end of May to accept the boundary commission's border. The UN also demanded that Eritrea give UN observers full access to the TSZ.

May 24, 2006: An Imagined Event?

Eritrea's 15th anniversary of independence from colonialist Ethiopiacelebrated.

May 25, 2006: Eritrea is detaining ten local UN staff members. The Eritrean government released one UN staffer earlier this week. "Detaining"(ie, arresting and/or threatening) UN staffers is part of Eritrea's policy of badgering the United Nations. Eritrea continues to deny UNMEE observers helicopter flight rights in part of the Temporary Security Zone (TSZ).

May 28, 2006: The Eritrean government said that it will host peace talks between the Sudan government and the Eastern Front Beja rebel groups. The negotiations will begin on June 13 and be held in the Eritrean capital of Asmara. Eritrea confirmed that Sudan and the Eastern Front had signedan initial agreement this week in preliminary discussions held in Asmara. The Eastern Front is am umbrella resistance organization comprising several Sudanese rebel groups.

May 29, 2006: Bombs wounded 42 people in the eastern Ethiopian town ofJijiga. Hotels and cafes were targeted. As yet no group has taken responsibility for the terror bombings. This is the 12th bombing attack since January in Ethiopian cities. Ethiopia has accused Eritrea of supporting the "mystery" bombing campaign.

May 31, 2006: Eritrea and Ethiopia continue refusing to negotiate a settlement to their border dispute. Not much hope that this potential cause of war will be defused any time soon. Both countries have too many internal problems to distract them.

June 2, 2006: Eritrea called the UN decision to reduce peacekeepers andobservers in UNMEE "unjust." On May 31 the UN decided to reduce the number of troops from 3300 to 2300.

June 12, 2006: The president of Sudan Umer Hassan Ahmed Al-Bashir met with the president of Eritrea, a sign that relations between the two East African states have improved. Eritrea has been acting as a "go between" for talks between the Sudan's Eastern Front Beja rebels and theSudanese government.

June 13, 2006: Eritrea continues to enforce its ban on UNMEE helicopter flights. Some ground patrols to observe the border area are also inhibitedin TSZ Sector Center and Sector West.

June 14, 2006: UNMEE (UN Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea) reported that the military situation in the Temporary Security Zone (TSZ) remains "stable but tense." This usually means that UN observers are not seeing any troops build-ups in and around the border area. In the past week the UN reported UNMEE ran 645 ground patrols. De-mining operations also continue. A Bangladeshi engineer unit and deminers from Kenya have been conducting demining in the UN operational area. A UN spokesman confirmed a report that one person died and one person was killed on May22 when an anti-tank mine detonated in Sector West. The individuals werenot named nor described but the briefer said the victims were "tampering"with the mine.

June 15, 2006: Ethiopia once again accused Eritrea of "showing no interest" in ending their border dispute. That's a bit of a stretch on Ethiopia's part. Ethiopia has rejected the "binding" boundary commission'sdecision. Eritrea says it will not re-enter negotiations unless Ethiopia agrees (again) to abide by the terms of the April 2002 boundary commission decision.

June 16, 2006: Ethiopia moved several thousand troops to the Somali border, as Islamic militants on the Somali side took control of the border area. Ethiopia feared that the Islamic militants might cross the border andstill up the ethnic Somalis living on the Ethiopian side.

June 17, 2006: Tribal warfare in southern Ethiopia (400 kilometers southof the capital), between Guji and Borena tribesmen, has forced over 20,000 people to flee their homes. The causes of the strife are economic,mostly about control of land. The fighting has been going on for over a month, and has left nearly 200 dead. Unlike the border dispute with Eritrea, the tribal battles in southern Ethiopia are over productive land.

June 17, 2006: Ethiopia denied press reports that it had sent troops into Somalia. The government said that it had "massed" military units near theborder in order to monitor" events inside Somalia. An ICU spokesman claimed that 300 Ethiopian troops were in the border town of Dolow (Ethiopia-Somalia border).

June 20, 2006: The Eritrean government condemned new US diplomaticefforts intended to resolve the Ethiopia-Eritrea border dispute. Eritrea referred to the US initiative as a "scheme." Eritrea seems to believe theUS is attempting to re-start talks which will ultimately favor Ethiopia.

Ethiopia agreed to accept the boundary commissions decision, then rejected parts of the decision which gave Eritrea the region around theborder town of Badme.

June 28, 2006: Ethiopian government said that the leadership of the Somali Islamic Courts Union (ICU) was a "grave threat" to Ethiopia. June 30, 2006: Ethiopia said that, during June, its force had killed 111 rebels who had tried to enter Ethiopia on behalf of Eritrea. The government also claimed it have captured 107 rebels. The governmentclaims were not substantiated by other sources.

June 30, 2006: According to the charity Oxfam UK, in land clashes between the rival Guji and Borena Oromo sub-clans left about 100 people dead in and around the towns of Shakiso, Arero and Yabelo, all within about 100 kilometers (60 miles) of each other south of Addis Ababa, they said. The deadly inter-clan violence has forced nearly 90,000 people in southern Ethiopia to flee their homes in the past three weeks, governmentofficials and aid workers said.. In Arero, about 450 kilometers (280 miles)south of the capital, between 27,000 and 29,000 people have been displaced since early June, regional administrator Jaatanni Taadhii said. InYabello, about 500 kilometers (310 miles) south of the capital, the figure is between 37,000 and 39,000 people, according to an aid worker in the area, who spoke on condition of anonymity. The British charity Oxfam, meanwhile, said that more than 20,000 people had been displaced in Shakiso, about 380 kilometers (235 miles) south of Addis Ababa, since June 16. "With the Ethiopian Red Cross, we have started distributing blankets, jerrycans and teapots to help the displaced," said Oxfam spokeswoman Liz Lucas. Inter-clan violence in Ethiopia’s semi-arid and drought-prone southern Borena region runs high and there are frequent clashes over water, land and cattle.

July 2, 2006: Eritrea refused to participate in a scheduled meeting of theInternational Boundary Commission.

July 2, 2006: The Ethiopian government insists that it has not sent troopsinto Somalia. News reports claim that Ethiopia had troops inside Somalia near the town of Baidoa (where Somalia's Transitional Government is currently located). Despite Ethiopia's denials, the sheer number of reportsindicate otherwise. Ethiopian troops were reported near the town of Berdale (between Baidoa and the Ethiopia-Somalia border). Ethiopia doesback the Transitional Government . In a showdown between the Transitional Government and resurgent Islamist faction now controlling Mogadishu, the Islamic Courts Union (ICU), it's a good bet Ethiopia wouldact against the Muslim radicals.

July 5, 2006: Eritrea denied a Sudanese government claim that Eritrea issupporting a Darfur rebel group. The group in question is the National Redemption Front-- which is a collection of Darfur rebel factions that refused to sign the May 5 Darfur peace agreement. Sudan claimed that the rebels had met in Eritrea to form a political front.

July 7, 2006: The UN once again described conditions along the Eritrean-Ethiopian border in the Temporary Security Zone (TSZ) as "stable but tense."

July 12, 2006: Eritrean government said that Eritrea and Yemen had agreed to play a "positive role" in Somalia. Eritrea said it wants to see a"united and sovereign" Somalia. Eritrea is playing a diplomatic game at the expense of its chief rival, Ethiopia, since Somalia claims part of Ethiopia's Ogaden region (which has many ethnic Somali inhabitants). Further Eritrean statements made that clear when Eritrea accused Ethiopia"in collusion with the CIA" of planning action in Somalia.

July 13, 2006: Kenya and Ethiopia are both "beefing up" police and security forces along their mutual border. The problem? Cattle rustlers. Cattle rustlers moving across the Kenyan-Ethiopian border (as well as in Sudan and Uganda) have been a long term problem. The agreement to improve security followed a very serious report on July 9, 2006 when the Kenyan government said that "raiders" from Ethiopia entered Kenya and killed 19 people, including six police officers. The raiders were involved in stealing cattle. Kenyan police said they had recovered 300 stolen cattle. July 15, 2006: It's a collision of international organizations inside Somalia,with Ethiopia a key player. The African Union (AU) and the UN are trying to work through Somalia's Transitional Federal Government (TFG) to create stability in Somalia. Not so the Arab League. The Arab League wants the TFG to negotiate directly with the Islamic Courts Union (ICU).

Meanwhile, several sources report that Ethiopia-- an ally of the TFG-- has added to its forces along the Somalia-Ethiopia border. Ethiopia is positioning "several mechanized divisions" near the border. Ethiopia can easily send battalion-sized contingents into Somalia for brief periods of time. Divisions --and especially "several divisions"-- are something else entirely. Logistics is not a strong point for East African armies. Ethiopia is eight or more weeks away from being able to launch a sustained offensiveforce. Ethiopia could enter Somalia as an African Union peacekeeper. The question is, would Ethiopian action on behalf of the TFG benefit the TFG politically, or hurt it? The ICU would paint Ethiopia as an invader.

July 29, 2006: Eritrea released one UN staff member it had detained earlier this year. Eritrea has been harassing UNMEE (UN Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea) workers. Nine UN workers (most of them a nativeEritrean) remain in Eritrean custody.

July 29, 2006: Ethiopian government claimed the Islamic Courts Union (ICU) in Somalia is being supported by Ethiopia's archrival, Eritrea. An Ethiopian spokesman also warned the ICU to stay inside Somalia. The spokesman said a "redline" exists and said that the ICU must not cross the border into Ethiopia. Ethiopia claims the terror group Al-Itahid has setoff bombs in Ethiopia, and that Al-Itahid has ties to the ICU.

July 29, 2006: US warned both Ethiopia and Eritrea to avoid "escalating the crisis" in Somalia. Ethiopia publicly backs Somalia's transitional government and there are numerous reports of Ethiopian troops operatingin Somalia. The s ubtext of the US warning, however, is interesting.

Eritrea (which is not an Islamist government) is suspected of backing the Islamic Courts. Supporting the Islamic Courts keeps Eritrea's main enemy,Ethiopia, engaged. Eritrea is continually looking for leverage over Ethiopia,to force Ethiopia to honor the international border commission's "binding" decision to give Eritrea the disputed Badme-region along the Ethiopian- Eritrean border. Supporting the Islamic Courts (and creating trouble for Ethiopia in Somalia) is a form of leverage. Eritrea has repeatedly denied it is helping the Islamic Courts. Of course, this is a scenario for a "proxy war" of sorts in Somalia. Somalia already suffers from a proxy war between the US and Al Qaeda. Ethiopia puts an interesting spin on the accusation that Eritrea is supporting the Islamic Courts. Ethiopia accusesEritrea of "supporting Al Qaeda."

July 29, 2006: Eritrea released one UN staff member it had detained earlier this year. Eritrea has been harassing UNMEE (UN Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea) workers. Nine UN workers (most of them a nativeEritrean) remain in Eritrean custody.
August 1, 2006: Three small bombs went off in the Ethiopian town of DireDawa (east Ethiopia). No injuries were reported. However, Ethiopia has been plagued this year by a number of small terrorist bombings that havecaused few casualties. The small bombs are typically set off near transportation infrastructure or a water or electrical utility.
August 4, 2006: India confirmed it will rotate a battalion now currently assigned to the UN force along the Ethiopia-Eritrea border. The 3rd Battalion, Grenadier Regiment, will replace the 13th Battalion, Jammu andKashmir Rifles. The Indian Army battalions assigned to UNMEE (UN Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea) are task forces with infantry supported by engineers, signal, and medical units.
August 5, 2006: There has been an increase in the number of Somali refugees crossing the borders. Kenya said the refugee flow began to increase in May (at the time the fighting accelerated between the Islamic Courts and US-backed "war lords" supporting the transitional government). There were no figures on the number of refugees in Kenyaand Ethiopia. However, the UN said that the refugee camp in Dadaab, Kenya now has a refugee population of 135,000, which is an increase of 18,000 in the last year.
August 6, 2006: Ethiopia said that it was continuing "political talks" withSomalia's transitional government. Ethiopian representatives met separately with the prime minister and president of the transitional government. The transitional president and prime minister disagree overhow to deal with a negotiating offer by the Islamic Courts, the Islamist organization which now controls Mogadishu and a significant chunk of south Somalia. Somali's president, Abdullah Yusuf Ahmed, apparently favors discussions with the Islamic Courts. Prime Minister Alie MohamedGedi is described as "hesitant." Ethiopia supports the Somali transitionalgovernment and is now their key ally.
August 7, 2006: Ethiopian diplomats helped the Somali transitional government reorganize itself, and repair a spilt that had seen about a third of the government support split off. But Ethiopian troops are now inside Somalia, and poised to join the fight against the Islamic Courts fighters.
August 11, 2006: Ethiopian troops killed 13 rebel fighters after they crossed the Somalia-Ethiopia border. The rebels belonged to the Ogaden National Liberation Front (ONLF). Ethiopia said it had also captured other rebels. The captured rebels reportedly said they were "armed and trained"by both Somali Islamist organizations and the government of Eritrea.

"Somali Islamist" organizations is no doubt a code word of the Islamic Courts Union, which now controls Mogadishu and surrounding areas. Meanwhile, an Ethiopian general who is en ethnic Oromo defected to Eritrea. The general was identified as Brigadier Kemal Gelchu. He was interviewed in Asmara, Ethiopia. Gelchu defected on August 8 and brought150 soldiers with him. said Gelchu commanded the Ethiopian Army's 18th Division. Gelchu said he opposes the current Ethiopian government. The government is dominated by members of the Tigrayan ethnic group.

Tigrayan's make up approximately ten percent of Ethiopia's population. August 12, 2006: Kenya announced that its troops had captured 45 rebelsbelonging to the Oromo Liberation Front (OLF). The OLF is an Ethiopian separatist group. Kenyan security forces began arresting the OLF members August 6. The arrests were made in Kenya's northern Moyale and Marsabit districts. The Kenyan drive was also directed against local thieves.

In mid-August 2006: In August 2006: The city of Dire Dawa hitted with flash of flood when the Dechatu River overflowed its banks. About 200 people were reported dead, thousands were displaced and there was extensive damage to homes and markets. Several hundred people are feared to have died and thousands are left homeless as floods hits the north, south and east. Floods are fairly common during the June– September rainy season; over 200 people in the region had been killed byflooding in 2005 that also did millions of dollars in damage.

