Given the level of very little, if any, freedom of expression in the country, the protest is being met with great difficulty. The people have been well aware of the risk in assembling or staging a protest. The last time the people held a demonstration, in 2005 opposing the ruling party; more than 200 people got killed. Taking this experience into account, the Muslim community was forced to come up with a way to avoid any violentincidents from happening. To this effect, instead of holding a big mass demonstration in the cities' squares, the Muslim community have been holding the protests in separate mosques after the Friday (Jumah) prayer,where large congregation gather; and to avoid any circumstance that might give a chance for the police to turn the peaceful protest into chaos, the protesters come up with an innovative means to circumvent the challenges that are set and to get their messages across. The protesters used white and yellow placard and papers, and hold silent demonstration as a sign of peaceful intention, and as way of refuting the government's assertion of the protest as provocative. Even though holding a mass protest in a single location might have been effective in putting the spotlight on the issues the people raised and pressuring the government for a quick measure to deal with the grievance of the community, however, with the current political environment in the country it were deemed impractical. Besides, having the protest in separate smaller grouphas its own perks: one of which is the fact the protest have been able to continue for more than a year, which would have been unattainable as thecost of continuing the protests would have been impossible to bear and the movement would have been long suppressed or weakened shortly.

The most important thing for the community have been to keep the movement alive until their questions are being answered, fortunately enough for the community, the weekly Friday prayer offered convenient enough platform to attain this objective. The people were also able to overcome the challenge of weak communication infrastructure and managed to unify their voices. Most importantly of all, the protesters havebeen able to keep an impeccable record of staying peaceful, despite the provocation, depriving the government any opportunity to misconstrued the movement as a violent one and easily squash it.

Throughout the protest, the other main challenge the movement faced has been the apparent absence of free press, which left protesters to be avictim of smear campaign by the state media and no independent media outlet to have an independent investigation and coverage of events. Whilethe EPRDF government used the state media as a propaganda tool to portray the protest as violent, terrorist-related and orchestrated by the few, it has been as much invested in cracking down the few independent newspapers for covering the protest. Journalists who published article regarding the protest were imprisoned on charges of treason and incitement to violence; police, even, raided the printing company which published the newspapers. “Ethiopia has reached a high level of harassment of the press by attempting to censor coverage of the protests,” said CPJ (committee to protect journalists) East Africa Consultant Tom Rhodes.

International human rights and other related organization have been fast to condemn the government’s action and call for a rapid judicial process. While the idea of bringing those arrested swiftly to judicial authorities and have a due process is sound and reasonable, one important fact that is being overlooked is the apparent absence of the rule of law and independent judiciary in the country. In spite of what is stated in the constitution there is no practical distinction between the executive and judicial branch of government on the ground, making it impossible for the people to see the obscure line that differentiate being charged of a crime to that of being convicted of one.

One manifestation of this is the ‘documentary’ that aired on February 6, 2013 on the state controlled Ethiopian Television (ETV), which basically,’ investigated ‘ the allegation , ‘charged’ those suspected and ‘convicted’ them of a crime, all these while court hearing is far from being half way, and throwing the basic principle of ‘innocent till proven guilty’ to the side.While the mark the movement will have on the history of the country is something to be seen, the course the protest will take and the roll it will play in the sociopolitical sphere will largely depend on the level of sociopolitical consciousness the society possess, by which the people in general, stand to defend the common principles regardless of the groups being involved. This level of consciousness by which the general public iswell informed about their country’s affair and, as much importantly, are actively involved in dictating and further safeguarding the principles and values they want their country to be governed a complex development tobring given the current sociopolitical structure in the country. However, the unprecedented persistency and solidarity the people that have been exhibited by this movement for more than one year just might be an indication to the changing course. Text ends ..

March 5, 2013: Adwa Significant Victory Marked In the Hague,Netherlands'

The 117th commemorative anniversary of the Victory of Adwa, the first shining victory of an African army over European agressors, was marked by the Ethiopian community in The Hague, Netherlands. Former leader and one of the founders of TPLF, Dr. Aregawi Berhe and Dr. Assefa Negash shared their views with the participants in an open Q&A session. Meanwhile, Professor Getachew Metaferia and Ato Kidané Alemayehu addressed the gathering via Skype. Poetry and culture shows were part ofthe event that drew several participants from all walks of life.

March 6, 2013: Ethiopia Government Dismiss Reports of Oil Discovery'

News updates: The Ethiopian government and Tullow Oil Plc, have dismissed media reports that the UK company has discovered oil in Ethiopia's western South Omo area. The US-based website, Energy and Capital, and a number of news outlets last week reported that Tullow haddiscovered commercial-grade oil in the rift valley of Ethiopia near the border with Kenya. Other reports said the Kenya-Ethiopia Tertiary Rift, which stretches from southern Ethiopia to southwestern Kenya, was believed to have as much as 23 billion barrels of oil and gas resources.

The ministry said it was wrong and irresponsible for the media to come toits own conclusions while the project was still only in the early stages of exploration. The reports by the media were made on the basis of speculations for a similar result to the discoveries Tullow had made Ghana, Uganda and lately in Kenya. The spokesperson for Ethiopia's Ministry of Mines, Bacha Fuji, said the reports were baseless and based on"unfounded suspicions". There had been no oil findings though drilling work was progressing well. The London-based Tullow Oil Plc, which found oil in Kenya last year, is searching for a possible petroleum basin in Ethiopia's South Omo valley. It is carrying out exploration work along withthe Africa Oil Corporation and Marathon Oil Corporation and began drillingits first well (Sabisa1) in January. It intends to drill two more wells this year. The wells will be up to 2,600 meters deep and the company said that it has so far drilled about 1,500 meters at Sabisa 1. No oil has yet been found though the company remains "very optimistic" that it will eventually have a positive outcome. The company in a statement said therecent media reports were confusing, poorly written and misleading. It said Tullow Oil had not yet discovered any oil in South Omo zone of theSouthern Nation Nationality and Peoples' Region (SNNPR) of Ethiopia, adding that it would announce the first results from the well within the next two months. Source: ENA

March 6, 2013: Ethiopia Received Two of Its Newly Built CommercialVessels'

Ethiopia has received two of the nine vessels which are being constructed in China at a cost of US$300 million. Ato Ashebir Nota, Public Relations Head of the Maritime and Logistics Enterprise said the two vessels, named" Assosa " and Bahirdar", will go into operation soon. The construction of the remaining vessels will be completed within the current Ethiopian year.The Enterprise currently has signed agreements of agency with 31 Shipping agencies, and a fifty member delegation from these agencies has been visiting the Mojo and Gelan dry ports. Ato Ashebir emphasized that the new ships will go a long way to help the growing import and trade of the country. GoE

March 6, 2013: Ethiopia: Saudi Arabia Said Relations With EthiopiaExcellent'

Saudi Arabia's Minister of Foreign Affairs, Prince Saud Al-Faisal, has said relations between Ethiopia and Saudi Arabia are at an excellent level. In apress statement released by the Saudi's Foreign Ministry on March 4, the Foreign Minister "confirmed the deep-rooted and long standing relations between the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia and the Republic of Ethiopia". He said: "The first Hijra (migration) in Islam was to Abyssinia, and the ties between the people of the two countries have had a long standing and prestigious history". The Foreign Minister noted that there is a growing "development of relations with Abyssinia, which culminated right now to reach an excellent level of cooperation in various fields", including the significant widening of trade between the two countries and growing investment relations. Last week, Saudi Arabia's Minister of Finance, Dr.

Ibrahim bin Abdulaziz Al-Assaf, visited Addis Ababa for talks with Prime Minister Hailemariam and Minister of Finance and Economic Development,Ato Sufian Ahmed, and signed an agreement on double taxation. Prince Saud Al-Faisal also noted that Saudi Arabia and the Republic of Ethiopia were working closely to calm the situation in the Horn of Africa, and the two countries recently signed an agreement to cooperate on a whole range of issues. A recent statement by Saudi Arabia's Deputy Minister of Defense in Cairo that Ethiopia's Renaissance Dam had the potential to affect downstream countries adversely, led the government to ask for an explanation from the Ambassador of the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia in Addis Ababa. The Ambassador expressed his belief that the comments of the Deputy Minister would not be the views of the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia.

March 6, 2013: First women-initiated bank launched in Ethiopia'

Xinhua - Enat Bank', the first women's bank in Ethiopia, was launched onTuesday in Addis Ababa, the country's capital. Initiated by eleven Ethiopian women and with about 7400 shareholders, the bank has been set to serve all with focus on women. Meaza Ashenafi, Chairperson of Bank Board of Directors, told Xinhua that 64 percent of the shareholders are women. Meaza revealed that the Bank has been launched with initial capital of 120 million Ethiopian Birr (about 18.5 Ethiopia Birr equals 1 USdollar), to be raised to 500 million Ethiopian Birr in two years time. The Chairperson noted that it is women's initiative potentially to be one of thebiggest banks in Ethiopia. The bank launched its services with two branches in Bole and Bambis areas of Addis Ababa.

The Chairperson stated that they would expand the bank's services by opening other branches in different parts of the country and also by using mobile bank. "We have launched the bank, the first women's bank in the country; and potentially be one of the biggest banks in Ethiopia. It is women's initiative. It was promoted by eleven Ethiopian women and we have over 7,000 shareholders," she said. She said they wanted to use mobile bank as it has huge potential to reach all. Speaking at the launching ceremony, Mekonnen Manyazewal, Ethiopian's minister of trade,noted that the bank initiated by Ethiopian women would have its contribution to development activities in the country. The bank has said that it provides bank services uniquely in a manner it improves citizens' saving culture and loan services that promotes investment in the country.

March 6, 2013: Theory about the orgins of the Guraghes of Ethiopia'

The Gurage people came from Eritrea, from a region called Akele Guzay from the village of GURAE located approximately 31 kilometers South- Southeast from the capital Asmara. ..They later settled south of Ethiopia..The question is why did they leave their homeland? There is 2 theory's that scholars has presented about a possible reason why the Gurages came to settle in the south. 1,They where Axumites who came ina military colony 2,They where brought there by minilk.

Some people have said that it was the Gurages who introduced the "kitfo" meaning raw meat as a dish to Ethiopian culture, guess what?? Kitfo or ZEHLA is a food that originated among the Tigringa speakers and is usually served during Tezkar..If the Guraghes did not came from the northhow did they know about Zehla/kitfo ?? If you look at the facial features ofthe Gurages some do look very northern while some look very southern (Majority) which is understandable since they choose to settle among the Southern Ethiopians. Their original language and culture has changed and become a melting pot of the cultures of the south .. Even some linguistics have claimed that the Guraghe language has several vowels like the Kushitic which proves the point that their language adopted the language of the kushitic Southerners .. Saddest part is Guraghes became a baby producing machine for the South Ethiopians because of their fine featuresand also sold into Arab slavery as "Red Ethiopians" by the Shoans.

March 6, 2013: Ethiopia: 'No Oil Discovered' Says Ethiopia and UKCompany'

Updates: The Ethiopian government and Tullow Oil Plc, has dismissed media reports that the UK company has discovered oil along Ethiopia's western South Omo block. The London-based company, which found crude oil in Kenya last year, is searching for a possible petroleum basin in Ethiopia's South Omo valley as extension of the oil resources from neighbouring Kenya. Tullow, which is executing the exploration work alongwith the Africa Oil Corporation and Marathon Oil Corp. began drilling its first well (Sabisa1) last January and intends to drill two more this year.

The wells are drilled up to 2,600 meters deep and will cost the companyaround 50 million dollars for each exploration well. Tullow has so far drilled about 1,500 meters deep. No oil has been found but the companyremains very optimistic that it will eventually gain a positive outcome.

The US-based website, Energy and Capital, and a number of news outlets last week reported that Tullow has discovered commercial-grade oil in therift valley of Ethiopia near the border with Kenya. However, the spokesperson for Ethiopia's ministry of mines, Bacha Fuji, told Sudan Tribune that the reports on the websites were baseless. He said that therehad been no oil findings but added that drilling work was progressing well.The ministry said it was wrong and irresponsible for the media to come toits own conclusions, while the project is only in the early stage of exploration. The reports are based on "unfounded suspicions" reached by the media as Tullow has accomplished successful oil exploration activities in Ghana, Uganda and lately in Kenya, the ministry said. In a statement the company sent to the local newspaper, The Reporter, Tullow said the report is misleading. "Tullow Ethiopia wishes to clarify its position with regard to oil exploration in South Omo zone of the Southern Nation Nationality and Peoples' Region (SNNPR.) This follows a confusing and poorly written report on one website in the USA which suggested in its headline that Tullow had discovered oil in Ethiopia". The company said that first results from the well will be announced within the next two months. The Kenya-Ethiopia Tertiary Rift, which stretches from southern Ethiopia to southwestern Kenya, is believed to have as much as 23 billion barrels of oil and gas resources. (ST)

March 8, 2013: Corporate Greed in Africa'

Weekend Edition: OPINION - By Graham Peebles - Ancestral land that for generations has served as home and livelihood for hundreds of thousands of indigenous people in Ethiopia is being leased out, on 99-year renewablecontracts at nominal sums to foreign corporations. The land giveaway or agrarian reforms as the government would prefer to present them began in 2008 when the Ethiopian government, under the brutal suppressive Premiership of Meles Zenawi invited foreign countries/corporation to take up highly attractive deals and turn large areas of land over to industrial farming for the export of crops. India, China and Saudi Arabia were all courted and along with wealthy Ethiopians have eagerly grabbed large pieces of land at basement prices; rates vary from $1.10 to $6.05 per hectare (HA), comparable land in India would set you back $600 per ha. Atotal of 3,619,509 ha, the Oakland Institute (OI), a US based think tank, estimate has been leased out. Land made available by the forced re- location of hundreds of thousands of indigenous people under the government's universally condemned Villagization progamme, which aims to forcibly re-locate over 1.5 million people from their homes. India corporations have taken the lion's share, acquiring around 600,000 ha concentrated in Gambella and Afar, split between 10 investing companies.The term 'investing' implies benefits for Ethiopia, which is misleading; 'profiteering', or 'exploiting' sits closer to the truth of these land deals, as the OI make clear, "taking over land and natural resources from rural Ethiopians, is resulting in a massive destruction of livelihoods and making millions of locals [farmers and pastoralist communities] dependent on foodhandouts". With small scale farmers being evicted from their land, prices of staples such as Teff, used by millions throughout Ethiopia to make Injera (bread), has rocketed in price, according to Ethiotribune 22/5/2012, increasing four fold since 2008. Source:

Corporate expansionism: small change big profits: In line with its ambitions of diversity and world food dominance – Karuturi Global, the world's largest grower of roses, leads the Indian charge, leasing 311,700 ha in Gambella. Not satisfied with this, GRAIN (an international NGO, working to support small farmers) report Mr.Karuturi "wants to set up farming operations [throughout Eastern and Southern Africa] on more than 1 million [ha]" – too much never enough in corporate expansionism. Almost a quarter of Gambella's 25 million ha has been earmarked by the federal government for agricultural 'development'. Karuturi, whose profits"rose 55.13% to Rs 1.21 crore [10 million] in the quarter ended June 2012", took their chunk without even seeing it, paying only $1.10 per ha. For the Indian giant it is, John Vidal in 'Land Grab Ethiopia (LGE)' says, "the sale of the century". 'Green Gold' is how Mr. Karuturi in GRAIN ('Who's Behind the Land Deals'), describes his 300,000 ha of Ethiopian soil, "for which he pays $46 per ha per year including water and labour and expects at least $660 [per ha] in profit per year". (Ibid) In addition topaddy, Indian farmers are being sub-contracted to grow maize, cereals, palm oil and sugarcane amongst others. All of which are destined for export, either to India or Europe, where companies farming in Ethiopia (and other Sub-Saharan African nations), benefit from lower import dutiesapplied to developing countries, notwithstanding the fact that the land is leased to, and the crops produced and sold by, multi million-rupee rich companies.

Another major Indian company leasing land in Gambella is the decidedly green sounding BHO Bioproducts. Following the corporate rhetoric, BHO Chief Operating Officer Sunny Maker told Bloomberg in 2010 that, they have “plans to invest more than $120 million in rice and cotton production”, which, by 2017, should “generate about $135 million a year from sales divided equally between domestic [Indian] and international markets.” He added that the “incredibly rich fertile land”, will all be “cleared within the next three years”. Cleared yes, violently, indiscriminately and totally; villages, people, forests, woodland, all destroyed, burnt, relocated, displaced, desecrated. The governments promise to such prized investors is that the land is handed over stripped of everything and everyone. Dissent is not allowed and dealt with brutallyshould it occur, as Anuradha Mittal, Executive Director of OI makes clear. “The repression of social resistance to land investments is even stipulatedin land lease contracts, [it is the] state’s obligation to ‘deliver and hand over the vacant possession of leased land free of impediments’ and to provide free security ‘against any riot, disturbance or any turbulent time.”The ‘rich fertile land’, lovingly cultivated at the hands of the men and women who have farmed it for generations, is unlikely to be nurtured so carefully by Indian (or indeed Chinese or Saudi Arabian) corporations withtheir thirsty ‘GM seeds’ (Ibid). For as Oxfam in their detailed report ‘Land and Power’ diplomatically point out, “investors short time scales may tempt them into unsustainable cultivation, undermining agricultural production.”

The devolution of development: Land is a prime cut asset in the commercialisation of everything, everywhere, and the “rich fertile land” in Ethiopia is cheap, even by Sub-Saharan African standards. Along with long-term leases, the government offers a neat bundle of carrots, including tax incentives and unrestricted export clauses, incentives that the OI state “deny African countries economic benefits” from land deals that the Ethiopian regime wraps up neatly in its complete disregard for thehuman rights of the indigenous people. Government indifference encouraging corporate irresponsibility – and they need little encouragement. Businesses hardly seem to be grabbing the land, so muchas accepting it as a gift, parceled up and ready to be torn open. In exchange for such attractive deals, the Ethiopian government has been extended, the OI reports “a $640 million line of credit… over five years to boost sugar production in the country’s Lower Omo region”. Not a philanthropic gesture, more a sales trap by India’s EXIM (export and import) Bank, who stipulate, “Ethiopia must import 75% of the value of the credit line in the form of Indian goods and services.” The government-owned sugar plantations in the Lower Omo are themselves attracting a great deal of concern and criticism from human rights groups, who highlight the environmental and human damage being perpetrated.

Government acts of violence and abuse, in the various land deal regions,are justified under the overused and misleading title of ‘development’; aterm appropriated by the international monetary machine – the World Bank and International Monetary Fund (IMF) primarily – misunderstood and distorted by government development agencies, acting in line with foreign affairs policies by promoting national self interest and perverted bythe corrupt ideologically-blinkered governments of developing nations. An undeveloped ideological trinity whose actions have drained the 21st century sacred cow and its stable mate 'growth' – dry of any true and relevant meaning. Far from supporting human and or social development the "unfair terms and near give-away prices [of land deals]… are hinderingdevelopment…. Foreign corporations and the World Bank are pressuring African leaders to give them exemptions from taxes, import and export duties, and local labor laws – not to mention water and mineral rights thatcould be worth billions", the OI confirm. More concerned with sitting at thetop table and cultivating the right international allies than with doing their constitutional duty and serving the needs of the people, the Ethiopian government is in danger of giving away, and for peanuts, it's 'rich and fertile' land to overseas companies who have no interest in Ethiopia, it's environment, its culture and even less in its people.

Increasing hunger: Hunger and poverty stalk the land of both Ethiopia andIndia. 12 – 15 million people survive on food aid in Ethiopia, which ranks bottom of the World Hunger Index at 76. India, with the highest rate of malnourished children in the world, where 25% (around 270 million) of the world's hungry live, despite the fact that, according to the World Food Programme (WFP), "the country grows enough food for its people", it comes in 65th of the hungriest nations, below Niger and the Sudan – neither of which, to my knowledge, boast 61 billionaires and 200,000 dollar millionaires unlike India. And whereas "most countries have made consistent progress in reducing hunger, India has seen hunger rise over the last decade compared with the late 1990s."(Ibid) This so-called economic miracle nation refuses to feed it's own people. Food insecurity, the WFP makes clear is caused not by lack of produce, but by an unwillingness to share the Earths bounty equitably. The states in India with the greatest numbers suffering from hunger and malnutrition, WFP records "include Madhya Pradesh, Chhattisgarh, Bihar, Jharkhand, Orissa, Rajasthan and Uttar Pradesh"; these are the states where the poorest (Adivasi – indigenous and Dalit) people in the country and quite possibly in the World happen to live. The poor are dying of hunger not because India cannot feeed everyone, as the United Nations report on regional cooperation makes crystal clear, "the root cause of hunger across the sub-region and the world today is not a lack of food. It is the economic and social distribution of that food which leaves populations undernourished and hungry."

Men women and children living in dire poverty starve to death, in India, Ethiopia and throughout the world. They starve and die for want of the food that is rotting in warehouses, food served up to rats or destroyed by the Indian government, because it is cheaper to burn it than to distribute it to those in need. As Graziano da Silva, Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organisation of the United Nations (26/01/13) said, “globally, a third of all food produced is wasted, and… if one could avoid this waste itwould be possible to feed all the hungry people [in the world] and have food to spare.” Food to spare!Such is the inhumane ethos that underpins market fundamentalism, that allows men women and children, young and old to starve – simply because the do not have the financial means to feedthemselves. Shame on governments Indian and the rest, that allow such inhumane injustice to prevail, as a wise teacher said, “throughout the world there are men, women and little children who have not even the essentials to stay alive; they crowd the cities of many of the poorest countries in the world… My brothers, how can you watch these people die before your eyes and call yourselves men”. The commercialization of the countryside in India and Ethiopia, which is displacing large numbers of small-scale farmers and concentrating crop production in the hands of multi-nationals, is intensifying existing levels of hunger. Substantive agricultural reform and real development would see the army of skilled small scale producers, with generations of local knowledge and love of theland, supported with the needed capital and technology, given access to markets that corporations bring. Such an agrarian revolution, ethically founded, environmentally healthy and socially sustained, would build long-term food security and feed the hungry.

Soft targets easy profits: India as the WFP makes clear, has no domestic need for food produced by the overseas industrial farms that are causing such far-reaching damage, to the hundreds of thousands of displaced people of Ethiopia as well as the natural environment. The movement in Ethiopia mirrors what is taking place to a much greater degree in India. The government has shifted all support away from Indian farmers and is supporting the transfer of land from the rural poor to large companies – wealthy government benefactors, causing the displacement of millions (60million to date, according to Arundhati Roy) of indigenous people.

Corporations are targeting countries Oxfam 7/02/2013 makes clear, with“poor governance”, that “allow investors to secure land quickly and cheaply…. [They] “Seem to be cherry picking countries with weak rules and regulations”. Needy nations like hungry people make easy targets formulti-national man, whose pockets governments are desperate to nestle inside. The driving force behind such destructive land developments, undertaken by corporations obsessed by an insatiable desire for growth and world leading economic development, is, as Oxfam suggests, profit and profit alone. Graham Peebles is director of the Create Trust

Mrach 8, 2013: Ethiopia Cancels Foreign Investment Licences'

Ethiopia has cancelled 330 foreign investment licences, claiming the companies had failed to implement planned projects. The Ethiopian Investment Agency said the investors had failed to carry out various projects in different parts of the country after they were awarded licensesworth hundreds of millions of dollars. The foreign investors, including those from India, China, United Arab Emirates and neighbouring Sudan, have been affected by the move, which took effect this March. Ethiopia said most of the affected investors have had their licences lying dormant for more than three years after the permits were awarded. A large number of foreign companies are currently undertaking multi billion dollars investments in Ethiopia's agricultural and mining sectors. India andChina are among the country's top the investors, with each country counting over $4 billion in investments. In recent months, however, The Oakland Institute - a US-based research agency- has decried the relocation of thousands of Ethiopians from their traditional prime farmlands after 600,000 hectares of land were leased to 10 Indian companies on 99 year leases. They say the Horn of Africa country has leased lands the size of France to the Indian companies, doling out incentives that include generous tax breaks and some of the world's cheapest land leases to the detriment of the locals. The Oakland ResearchInstitute says Ethiopia has leased lands the size of France to 10 Indian companies.

March 8, 2013: Mass Town Dogs Poisoning Concerns Hit Addis Ababa'

Side note: Strewn carcasses and a terrible stench from dead dogs taint the picturesque Addis Ababa, Ethiopia's capital, as authorities are on a drive to cull stray canines that have for long been a hallmark of the city. With an estimated population of 300,000 dogs, two thirds of these being stray animals, Addis officials are under pressure to keep a tight leash on the growing numbers of cast away canines. Authorities announced they had killed 9,942 stray dogs after feeding them poisonous meat, but this figure could be seen as nothing more than a drop in the ocean. Zerihun Abegaz, an official at the Addis Ababa Agricultural Bureau told reporters that they were appealing for more funds from the Addis Ababa city administration to rid the city of more dogs. The amount they were initiallyallocated, $16,000, is hardly enough and the bureau needs more money to complete the culling exercise. Home to several international organisations, including the African Union headquarters, Addis Ababa is desperate to clean up its image for foreign visitors. But local residents arefar from pleased, claiming authorities are leaving dead dogs uncollected for days and they fear an outbreak of diseases. The residents complained of a suffocating odour, claiming carcasses were left to rot on the streets. "There are many dead dogs lying everywhere, there is a bad smell in many parts of the city," complained a resident, who requested anonymity.The residents accused the city officials of being lethargic to their plight, saying animal rights groups and environmental rights campaigners were also silent about the culling and the health hazards connected to uncollected carcasses. "Other healthy animals, like cats and birds could eat these contaminated carcasses" said Bekele Lemma, an Addis Ababa resident. "The authorities should stop and plan their action to limit the potential damage to the society and the environment".

Side note;- Ethiopian Ministry of Foreign Affairs (EMoFA) spokesman says the outgoing president of Yemen is in the east African country. The spokesman said that Ali Abdullah Saleh arrived in Ethiopia, and said he “doubts” Mr. Abdullah Saleh will fly on to Yemen. Yemen voted to replace Saleh with VP Abed Rabo Mansour Hadi, who is expected to be sworn-in to office. He took over after months of uncertainty over whether Saleh would step down in the face of popular protests that plunged Yemen into crisis. Before arriving in Ethiopia, Saleh spent more than three weeks in the U.S. for medical treatment from wounds sustained in a June, 2011 assassination attempt. The 69-year-old Abdullah Saleh, Yemen' s ruler for 33 years, has pledged to attend his successor' s inauguration. Aides to former President Ali Abdullah Saleh said that the ousted Yemeni president plans to go into exile in Ethiopia, as pressures mounted on him to depart the country for fear of sparking new cycles of violence. The news that the longtime Yemeni leader might leave to Ethiopia marks the latest twist in the meandering story of Saleh' s fall from grace. As rumors have circulated of Saleh seeking refuge in a myriad of countries including Oman, and the United Arab Emirates where some of his family is already setting up residence, the ousted president has lingered on in Yemen, much to the dismay of the man who replaced him, the international officials who facilitated the handover of power, and people on the street who want his head. The aides said that the former president will leave Yemen within two days along with some of his family members where he will reside in a villa in the suburb of Addis Ababa. A diplomat in Sanaa confirmed that arrangements had been made for Saleh' s departure for Ethiopia. Aides said that visas have been issued and Abdullah Saleh' s belongings already shipped to Ethiopia. All officials spoke on condition of anonymity because of the sensitivity of the issue.

The Africans withdrew, protesting against the refusal of the International Olympic Committee (IOC) to ban Newzealand from the Games because of it's sporting links with apartheid South Africa.

Side note ;- Ethiopia's main tourist destinations are located on the northern historic sites of Axum and Lalibela. The World-famous monolithic Stelaes of Axum mark the tombs of a ruling elite of a remarkable civilization that held power in the region until around 333 AD. The town, which is acknowledged as the cradle of Ethiopian culture, is where the Ark of the Covenant is said to reside, in a small chapel at the Church of St. Mary of Tsion. It is guarded by priests from the eyes of all corners, but reputed to be a pure gold container in which the stone tablets with Ten Commandments are kept. Further South is the Cluster of 11 majestic free standing and Rock-hewn Churches at Lalibela. Described as the "eighth wonder of the World", they probably date from the 12th century, and local legend has it they were built by the angels. The Axum and Lalibela may be the main attractions of the Northern route, but Bahir Dar on the exquisite Lake Tana (the source of the Blue-Nile), and Gondar with it's majical castles- as well as Emperor Fasilades bath house, a focus of the local New year celebrations. Timkhat- are equally compelling destinations. So too the Simien (Northern) escarpments, a mountain range intersected by more than 100 deep gorges, that lies between Axum, Gondar and Lalibela and is one of the 43 natural world heritage sites found in Ethiopia that are listed by UNESCO. Here, to the delight of wildlife enthusiasts, are found three species that exist nowhere else in the world: the Walia Ibex with it's Crescent-shaped horns: the Simien Qabaro (Northern Wolf) and the extremely rare Chelada baboon. Several emerging destinations in southern, western and eastern Ethiopia also provide a wide range of historic, cultural and natural attractions. To the east, close to the nearest airport at Dire Dawa (which, incidentally is also served by the Addis Ababa - Djibouti railway, the only railroute in Ethiopia) is the ancient, Muslim walled city of Harrar, home to 90 mosques and holy shrines and considered the fourth most sacred centre in the Islamic world after Mecca, the Medina and the Dome of the Rock in Jerusalem. It's recorded that when the prophet Mohammed fled to Meddina, many other Muslims crossed the Bahar Al-Habesh (Red sea) to seek sanctuary in Ethiopia. One such group that made the crossing included the prophet's daughter- Ruqayya, and his future wife Habiba. The slopes of the Chercher mountain range, just outside Harrar, are said to grow the finest Coffee ever in the world, the factor that probably drew Arthur Rimbaud, the rebellious 19th century French poet (who was, for a time, a Coffee trader) to live in the city of Harrar. Ethiopia believed to number about 88 million- the second largest population in Africa after Nigeria - Ethiopia is a complex composite of around 80 ethnic groups, the Oromos are about 40% of the population and live primarily in the southern half of the nation. The Amharas and the Tigreans that constitute 32% of the population, have traditionally lived to the north. A number of smaller groupings such as the Sidamas of the southern foothills and savanna regions account for just under 10% while the Shanquilas in Benishangul-Gumuz that live to the west make up about 6%. The ethnic Somali peoples (not to be confused with Somali nationals) represent around 6.2 % and the Afar 4%, settled mainly in the east and southeast respectively. Nilotic peoples live in the west and southwest along the Sudan border, principally the Guraghes that account for 2% of Ethiopia's population while the remaining 1% is made up of other groups. The "Falashas" or "Beta-Israel also known as "black jews" live in the Simien (northern) mountains although the majority have resettled in Israel. Historically there have been strong ties with the Arabian peninsula and one can find a strong contingent of Yemenis who are actively engaged in the local economy. The Beja of the northernmost region, the Agaw of the central plateaus, and the Sidamas of the southern foothills and the savanna regions are the remnants of the earliest known groups to have occupied Ethiopia, but migration flows have seen many other peoples enter Ethiopia's ethnic mix, such as Yemenis, Greeks, indians, and Turks. In recent years, a number of Afro-Caribbeans have followed the call of their leader Marcus Garvey's to "return to Africa".

In 2010 the US State Department in its 2010 report noted "…that the Meles Zenawi government is engaged in killings, tortures, arbitrary arrest, and restriction of freedom of movement, assembly and mistreatment of detainees.

On 17th December, the Human Rights Watch (HRW) in it's annual report stated "… the government of Ethiopia uses development aid for state repression by way of routinely discriminating against people viewed as political opposition supporters". The aid your government provides the Meles regime as such being used to suppress political dissent by conditioning access to essential services on support for the ruling party led by Mr. Meles Zenawi.

Side note,- The Israeli Foreign Ministry's appointment of the first Israeli-Ethiopian ambassador has been heralded as "a message of fighting discrimination". Belaynesh Zevadia's appointment as the new ambassador to Ethiopia is appropriate and worthy. At 43, she is relatively young to head one of Israel's major embassies in Africa. Her career up to now includes stints as a deputy-consul in Chicago and vice-consul in Houston, but having a native Amharic-speaking ambassador in Addis-Ababa is certainly an advantage. Israel's ambassadors in Washington, London and Moscow are all veteran immigrants who have returned to represent Zion in their countries of birth.

Side note;- Derba Group, an amalgam of three Ethiopian companies owned by the Ethio-Saudi billionaire Sheikh Mohammed al- Amoudi, said it plans to invest 59 billion birr ($3.4 billion) in seven industrial projects over the next five years. The company, formed last month, has already invested 12 billion birr of a planned 71 billion birr in agriculture and cement in the Horn of Africa country, Chief Executive Officer said. “The balance will be invested in the next five-year period,” said Haile. Derba’s cement, steel, agriculture and transport operations may generate annual revenue of 41 billion birr and create more than 370,000 jobs, he said.

March 9, 2013: Kenyan presidential candidate Uhuru Kenyatta, the son ofthe founder of modern Kenya, Jomo Kenyatta, has been provisionally declared victor in the March 4 Kenyan presidential race.
Side note: However, his main opponent, Raila Odinga, has refused toconcede. Odinga claims that fraud and voter intimidation occurred.
Kenyatta's margin is thin. According to the provisional tabulation, Kenyatta received just 8,000 votes more than he needed to avoid a run-off. Kenyatta remains under indictment by the International Criminal Court (ICC) for crimes against humanity allegedly committed during theaftermath of the 2007 election. Kenyatta's trial by a court in The Hague,Netherlands, is supposed to begin in July 2013. Kenyatta vehemently denies the charges. Kenya has had four presidents since independence. Kenyatta is the third member of the Kikuyu tribe to serve. The Kikuyus are the largest single tribe in Kenya, but they are only one of some 42 tribes. Odinga is a Luo. The ethnic distrust and razor-thin margin, however, has not yet resulted in major violence throughout the country.Leaders from all major political parties and tribes had vowed to avoid violence in 2013. So far so good.
March 9, 2013: Ethiopia In Frenzy Over Miss Israel - Bikya News' Side note: It has quickly become the talk of the city. As Miss Israel Yitayish "Titi" Aynaw became the first Ethiopian-born winner in Israel, Ethiopians have quickly taken to praising the woman and are prideful of her achievement, especially as controversy over Ethiopian immigrants in Israel continues to make headlines. Ethiopia's myriad newspapers, online sites, television and radio stations have taken up the story and have called it one of the best positive achievements for the country in recent years. The Israeli Embassy in Addis Ababa issued a press release about the beauty pageant and the precedent set by its winner. The Embassy is planning to use the win as part of a PR campaign for Israel, which will include posting Aynaw's pictures on billboards across Ethiopia. "It is really great and I am proud of her for what she has done," 17-year-old Nasseeba told Bikyanews.com as she watched a report on Aynaw on the national broadcaster. "She is an Ethiopian woman and she is special." The Embassy intends on inviting Aynaw to the traditional Independence Day reception as the guest of honor from Israel. The Embassy is also marketing the victory of Ethiopian athletes in the Jerusalem marathon – with another positive reference to Israel. Israeli Ambassador to Ethiopia Belaynesh Zevadia, who set a precedent herself by becoming the first Israeli ambassador of Ethiopian descent, said: "I welcome the selection of a beautiful girl of Ethiopian descent. "It's heartwarming to see Israel and the world exposed to the beauty of the Ethiopian community in Israel. It isa beautiful community in every sense of the word." It does, however, come on the heels of controversy surrounding the Israeli government's forced sterilization of Ethiopian immigrants in Israel, which has seen an investigation launched by the government to get behind what has been happening to women in the country. Ethiopian-born Yityish Aynaw hasbeen crowned Miss Israel. Bikya News by Mohammed Awad

BANKING: Enat (Mother) bank has finally been enaugurated’

FINANCE (March 9, 2013) After laboring for five years Enat bank has finally been delivered. Initiated in 2008 by eleven prominent Ethiopian women, including Meaza Ashenafi, who currently serves as the bank's board chairperson, the bank has opened its doors naming its main and branch offices after renowned women in Ethiopian history. The main branch, opening first in front of Yordanos Hotel, off Guinea Conakry Street, is named after Itegue Taitu, wife of Menelik II. The second branch,which is expected to open its doors in two weeks’ time in front of Bole Medhanealem Church, off Cameroon Street, is named Queen of Sheba Branch. The third branch office will be near Teklehaimanot Church in Mercato and is named after a woman who is still alive, the renownd humanitarian Abebech Gobena. With about 7,400 shareholders, Enat Bank, the first women's bank in Ethiopia, aims to focus on women. 64 percent of the shareholders are women. The bank was launched with an initial capital of 120 million birr,to be raised to 500 million birr in two years time. The bank will be presided by Fasika Kebede, an economics graduate from Addis Ababa University. Before joining Enat, she worked at the Commercial Bank of Ethiopia (CBE) for 24 years. She completed her postgraduate studies at the University of Wales in the UK. Married and a mother of one, she wasthe bank’s third choice after the National Bank of Ethiopia rejected the nomination of Birtukan Gebrezgi and Brutawit

March 9, 2013: Ethiopia, Saudi Arabia In Row Over Nile River DamProject'

Updates: Ethiopia has demanded that Saudi Arabia explain itself after a minister attacked the country over its massive Renaissance Nile River damproject, saying that the water rights of Sudan and Egypt would be threatened with its completion. “The Renaissance dam has its capacity of flood waters reaching more than 70 billion cubic meters of water, and is located at an altitude of 700 meters and if it collapsed then Khartoum will drown completely and the impact will even reach the Aswan Dam,” the Saudi Deputy Defense Minister, Khalid Bin Sultan said at the meetings of the Arab Water Council in Cairo last week. The $4.8 billion Renaissance Dam is currently under construction and is scheduled for completion in 2015. The Saudi official further accused Ethiopia of being keen on harmingArab nations. “There are fingers messing with water resources of Sudan and Egypt, which are rooted in the mind and body of Ethiopia. They do notforsake an opportunity to harm Arabs without taking advantage of it,” Prince Khalid said. “The establishment of the dam leads to the transfer of water supply from the front of Lake Nasser to the Ethiopian plateau, which means full Ethiopian control of every drop of water, as well as [causing] an environmental imbalance stirring seismic activity in the region as a result of the massive water weight laden with silt withheld in front of thedam, estimated by experts at more than 63 billion tonnes," he added.

Ethiopian foreign affairs ministry spokesperson, Ambassador Dina Mufti said the accusation was "unexpected and shocking." The dam project hasseen widespread concerns from Egypt and Sudan, who have echoed the Saudi official's sentiments over the project, which they see as an infringement on their historical rights to Nile water.

The dam could threaten the regional stability after the Egyptian government said it remained "concerned" over Ethiopia's actions along theNile River. The International Monetary Fund (IMF) has also called on AddisAbaba to push the dam project to the backburner in order to focus on other economic initiatives.

While Cairo has denied any intention of attacking the dam, as reported by whistleblower website Wikileaks, the country's Water Resources and Irrigation Minister Mohamed Bahaa el-Din said last month that his country was maintaining its concerns about the construction of the Renaissance Dam in Ethiopia. He did say that officials at the Ethiopia foreign ministry "assured Egypt and Sudan that in case there was any impact on their water quota to the dam, other projects will be carried out to collect lost water and cover shortages." It is the latest in the ongoing battle for the world's largest river's water, with Egypt and Sudan continuing to remain obstinate in amending any of the colonial treaties that guarantee their countries with alion's share of water from the Nile. Wikileaks released documents this month that revealed Egypt and Sudan had been planning to attack an Ethiopian dam project to "protect" their rights over Nile water based on colonial era treaties.

In documents revealed by Wikileaks, the Egyptian and Sudanese government appeared ready to develop a launching pad for an attack byEgypt against the dam. Wikileaks has leaked files allegedly from the Texas-based global intelligence company, Stratfor, which quote an anonymous "high-level Egyptian source," which reported that the Egyptianambassador to Lebanon said in 2010 that Egypt "would do anything to prevent the secession of South Sudan because of the political implications it will have for Egypt's access to the Nile." Ethiopia's massive dam project has seen much concern from Cairo and Khartoum, who fear the establishment of Africa's largest dam would affect previous colonial deals on Nile water-sharing. It is to be built some 40 kilometers upstream from Sudan on the Blue Nile.

But even before the official announcement of Ethiopia's prime minister's passing on August 20, Egyptian officials told Bikyanews.com that they believed a post-Meles region could bring forth new negotiations and compromise over Nile water. An Egyptian ministry of water and irrigation told Bikyanews.com last year, two weeks before Zenawi was pronounceddead, that with the combination of Egypt's new President Morsi and the potential of seeing a new leader in Ethiopia, they hoped the tension overNile River water could be resolved. "While this can in no way be official policy at this point, I believe that there would be more maneuvering witha new leadership in Ethiopia because there would be the ability to communicate and not be seen as antagonistic," the official said, adding that they were not authorized to speak to the media.

"Let us be frank about the situation between Egypt and other Nile countries," the official continued. "We in Egypt have not been the best at compromise so I think overall, there is so much that can be done to help bring countries together, and Ethiopia has been a leader in its criticism of Egypt so starting there would be good." With the Nile comes a new set of issues, and with Egypt holding onto a lion's share of water from the world's largest river, upstream countries such as Ethiopia have taken it ontheir own to begin building dams and other water related endeavors, much to the anger of Cairo. However, officials hope that solutions can be had in the new post-revolution Egypt that could see the growing tension between countries along the Nile reduce. "While Egypt never wants to mingle in another country's affairs, a new leadership in Ethiopia would go a long way to changing how things are run, just like it has in Egypt," the official added. BN

March 9, 2013: UNPO humanitarian crisis in Ogaden continues: Illegal TaxImposed On Ogaden Population' Since many Ogaden civilians have not much to pay for this illegal head tax, it is reported that the Tigrian militiasand their local Somali cahoots, masquerading as the Ethiopian military areforcing civilians to give up their precious livestock including their donkeys which they use as a valuable transportation vehicle when they are unable to pay the so-called head tax. Most locals interviewed by our reporters throughout the Ogaden agree that this so-called head tax is nothing morethan naked bandits wanting to enslave the local civilians by misappropriating what little possession of value the civilians have.

An elder in one of the towns articulated how this so-called head tax is imposed and then collected. He indicated that his family consists of eight children and he and his wife. He told our reporter that the militias counted everyone of them and then they estimated their share of the so-called head tax at $150 Ethiopian Birrs per individual regardless of age or gender. This is a fortune in the Ogaden for civilians who have very little to begin with. The elder continued his painful story with tears wetting his forlorn cheeks by confirming that his few goats, milking cows and even hisdonkey have already been taxed in form of them being sold to recoup the so-called head tax on the animals. With his hands up in the air, he wallowed: “How am I going to pay for this?” “How am I going feed my family now that I have lost what little animal possessions that I had?”

The reported re-imposition of the so-called head tax on the Ogaden civilians is yet another form of enslaving the Ogaden civilians by bankrupting them. Many civilians are now wondering what has made the Tigrian militias re-impose the so-called head tax even though the civiliansfuriously resisted paying it when they have imposed it on the civilian the first time in the early 1990s. In related news, Ethiopian soldiers and its associated militia demolished 150 Water Wells in the last few weeks. Also,it is reported that two men died and many more got sick in Wabi Yar village near Qabridahar town after drinking contaminated Water. The victims are said to be Ahmed Abdi Mohamed Dhuh and Faisal Abdirahman Barkhadle.

March 10, 2013: The January 21 take-over of Eritrea’s information ministry by Eritrean Army soldiers and their televised demand for reform continues to feed speculation that the government could face a coup. For several years Eritrean exile groups have claimed that disenchantment withpresident Isaias Afewerki is growing. There have been several major and very public defections. Recently 15 members of the national soccer team defected when they were visiting Uganda. A pair of air force officers commandeered the president’s personal jet when they defected. The biggest defection was the Information Minister, Ali Abdu Ahmed. He left the country in late January, after the armed take-over by the disgruntled soldiers.

March 10, 2013: China to revamp Ethiopia’s out-dated French railways'

ADDIS ABABA: China is looking to continue its infrastructure and development boost in Africa by helping to revamp a dilapidated French railway circuit in Ethiopia, government officials from both countries confirmed to Bikyanews.com on Sunday. It came after a report in the French wire agency AFP suggested that China would take control of the railways in an effort to increase transportation in the East African country.“The old French-built railway that connected Addis Ababa, the capital of landlocked Ethiopia, to the Red Sea port of Djibouti, is now being replacedby a Chinese-built electrified railway, a bold project that seeks to boost Ethiopia’s commercial exports,” reported AFP.

Chinese embassy officials in Addis Ababa told Bikyanews.com that they were “confident that the new restructuring of the rail would help increase production and make doing business easier” in Ethiopia. China has long been pushing into Africa, especially with Ethiopia, where the two countrieshave moved forward on a number of agriculture and business projects in recent years that aim to bolster the country’s economy. With China’s recent investments, Ethiopian officials are hopeful that it will help spur greater growth in the next decade, which they hope will help the country achieve middle-income status by 2025 as part of government plans on all economic sides, from agriculture to business and technology.
According toAFP, and confirmed by Ethiopian government officials, two Chinese companies have been contracted to build the $2.8 billion (2.15 billion euro) line connecting Addis Ababa to the Djiboutian border by 2016, and Turkish and Brazilian companies are slated to construct other segments ofthe nation-wide rail network. March 10, 2013: Ethiopia: Growth and Transformation Plan (GTP) Gauges'
Review: The sterilisation process, pursued by the Ethiopian government totame inflation during the second year of the Growth & Transformation Plan(GTP), has delayed the achievements of the government by excluding the private sector from fully participating in the economy; the second GTP progress report revealed. The draft progress report, which was launched on Wednesday, March 05, 2013, at the UNECA, brought Ethiopian government officials and development partners face to face, to review the plan for the second time since its implementation. Chaired by the Minister of Finance & Economic Development (MoFED), Sufian Ahmed, the meetingaimed to present the progress of the government to international development partners, including the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the World Bank.
"Although we would not make fundamental changes to the plan, the suggestion from the development partners will be valuable input," Ahmed Shide, state minister for MoFED told Fortune. Described by the World Bankas "ambitious", the general consumer price index was projected to grow ata single digit rate during the GTP period. In the past two GTP periods, however, the growth in price has been in the double digits, according to the 102 page report. The average annual price growth rate, recorded at 18pc in the 2010/11 fiscal year, increased to 33.7pc, during the 2011/12 fiscal year. To make matters worse, Ethiopia experienced the second highest inflation in the world in August 2011, when the year on year inflation rate stood at 41.3pc.
The once alarming rate of inflation, that had ballooned to 41.3pc in August2011, came down to 12.5pc in January 2013, in response to the various monetary policies that the central bank put in place. On top of the zero money printing policy, the central bank has embarked on a clean-up operation, dubbed sterilisation - selling foreign exchange to commercial banks. To this effect, the central bank sold foreign currency to commercialbanks aggressively, until June 2012, in order to tame inflation that was said to have been fuelled by the accumulation of forex at the National Bank of Ethiopia (NBE). The national reserve at the central bank, last fiscal year, was the highest reserve that the country has ever kept, peaking at 3.1 billion dollars in December 2011. The reserve high in 2009/10 had been 2.72 billion dollar. Source: Addis Fortune

March 10, 2013: New Book Proposes Ethiopia Was The First ChristianNation'

For centuries, historians have widely accepted the argument that Armeniawas the first Christian nation. Now, a new book entitled The Abyssinian Christianity: The First Christian Nation? (©2012), authored by Mario Alexis Portella and Abba Abraham Buruk Woldegaber, O. Cist., is challenging this argument, presenting the possibility that Ethiopia was thefirst Christian nation. Armenia's claim on this meaningful title is primarily based upon the celebrated 5th century work of Agathangelos' The Historyof the Armenians. In it, he says as an eyewitness that after the ArmenianKing Trdat III was baptised c. 301/314, he decreed Christianity was the state religion. While one cannot easily deny this baptism, Abyssinian Christianity presents studies revisiting this era in Armenian history. The Acts of the Apostles describes the baptism of an Ethiopian eunuch shortly after the death of Christ. Eusebius of Caesaria, the first church historian, in his Ecclesiastical History further tells of how the eunuch returned to hisland to diffuse the Christian teachings. Before the Ethiopian king Ezana embraced Christianity for himself and decreed it for his kingdom c. 330, his nation had already constituted a great number of Christians. Can a nation only become Christian if there is an official decree from its sovereign? If that were the case, then the Kingdom of Edessa would be the 1st Christian state in c. 218. As we see with Abyssinia, and Israel before it, a nation is not restricted to political boundaries.

March 10, 2013: Chinese railway in Ethiopia to replace historic French railline'

Updates: Camels rather than locomotives lumber over the railway tracks in this remote desert, famously traversed by storied French adventurers Arthur Rimbaud and Henry de Monfreid in the early 20th century. The oldFrench-built railway that connected Addis Ababa, the capital of landlockedEthiopia, to the Red Sea port of Djibouti, is now being replaced by a Chinese-built electrified railway, a bold project that seeks to boost Ethiopia's commercial exports. The new project also symbolises a shift in Ethiopia's international relations. "You see nowadays that the dice are thrown differently. Chinese, Indian (and) Turkish interests are now takingover... times have changed," said Hugues Fontaine, author of the recentlypublished book "Un Train en Afrique", or African Train, about the historic Ethiopian train. Indeed, Ethiopia is casting its dice eastward -- seeking investors to help it achieve its grandiose Growth and Transformation Plan (GTP), which seeks to boost economic growth and achieve middle income status by 2025. The construction of the railway is a key component of the GTP: a series of eight rail corridors totalling 4,744 kilometres (2,948 miles), creating a series of key trade routes to neighbouring Kenya, SouthSudan, Sudan and -- crucially -- to Djibouti's port. Two Chinese companies are contracted to build the $2.8 billion (2.15 billion euro) line connecting Addis Ababa to the Djiboutian border by 2016, and Turkish andBrazilian companies are slated to construct other segments of the nation- wide rail network.

"We are working day and night," said Zacharia Jemal, project manager working for the Ethiopian Railways Corporation. Zacharia said the project will create 5,000 local jobs, and allow Ethiopia to boost exports of key commodities such as coffee and sesame. It also offers the opportunity to get Ethiopian workers trained by engineers from the Chinese Civil Engineering Construction Corporation. The company is building the line from Mieso to the Djibouti border at a cost of $1.2 billion (923 million euros), of which 70 percent is financed by the Export-Import Bank of China and 30 percent by the Ethiopian government. Another Chinese company will build the Addis Ababa to Mieso segment. While the economicbenefits of the train -- which will be used for both freight and passenger transport, replacing slow and costly truck transport -- is widely recognised, some lament the seemingly inevitable death of the historic French-built diesel-powered train, which went out of service in 2008 after years of neglect. "In terms of the economy, the (new) train could be very profitable for Ethiopia, one machine could replace 10 trucks... and (maintenance) is easier and more cost-effective," said Josef Petros, who worked for the French railway company for more than 30 years. But he said that if the old train ceases to operate, it will be a great loss for Ethiopia and for Dire Dawa, the commercial town in northeastern Ethiopia where the main train station and workshops were headquartered. The newstation is slated to be built just outside Dire Dawa, a town renowned for its French atmosphere. "Dire Dawa will suffer," said Josef, who is now the director of the French cultural centre in the city. The train station -- knownlocally as "la gare" -- and the workshops still stand, unused for years.

Employees still arrive at work diligently just after dawn every day, only tosit among the abandoned train cars and imported French machinery, seemingly frozen in time.

They still receive a monthly stipend from the company, which is now run by the Ethiopian government. They hold out hope that the diesel train willbe revived one day, but the European Commission-funded project to rehabilitate the old railway at a cost of $55 million has stalled due to a contractual dispute. Nonetheless, the 750 employees -- down from 2,000

-- of the old line maintain a sense of pride at having worked for the Frenchcompany. Many speak French and retain an extraordinary technical knowledge of the ancient trains. "When you worked for the train, you were considered to be a very important person," said Josef. "If you had a son ora brother working for the railways, the whole family was very proud of this." It brought many employees a sense of pride -- in addition to a generous salary -- to work for the French on a train that was conceived byEthiopia's first modern patriarch, emperor Menelik, who pursued the ambitious rail project to introduce modernity in Ethiopia, boost economic productivity and show the world "that the Ethiopian state was something to be considered seriously", according to Fontaine. Similarly, the new electric train will launch Ethiopia into a modern era of rail transport. It willbe one of the first electric trains in East Africa, will run at a speed of 120 kilometres an hour and will be both easier and cheaper to maintain, as it will be mechanised and rely on locally-produced hydropower to run. It's also a source of pride for the workers involved in boosting development and contributing to Ethiopia's industrialising economy. "It is good to be involved in this nationalistic project, it's historic," said project manager Zacharia, driving to a building site for the new train where Chinese men inhard hats show Ethiopian workers how to use Chinese-imported excavators. But whether the legacy of the Chinese in Ethiopia will have as strong an imprint as the French remains to be seen. Unlike the French, Chinese workers will not settle in Ethiopia permanently, and the cultural exchanges are limited to simple greetings exchanged in Mandarin betweenChinese and Ethiopian workers. "This influence will stay on in history, but it will not be as significant," said Josef.

March 10, 2013: Ethiopian Somali peoples Democratic Party (ESPDP) saidit has fielded over 62,751 candidates from for the upcoming local election'The Ethiopian Somali People's Democratic Party (ESPDP) said it has fielded 62,751 candidates for the upcoming local election to be held in theSomali Regional State next month. ESPDP Chairperson, Mohammed Reshid Isac said the candidates, who have proven ethics and public acceptance, will contest for Kebele, woreda and urban administration councils. According to Mohammed, the candidates were recruited from thepastoral and business community, public servants, intellectuals and microand small scale enterprises, among other. Some 40 per cent of the candidates fielded with a view to attaining the Growth and TransformationPlan (GTP) and ensure benefits and rights of the residents are women andyouth, he said. Mohammed indicated that ESPDP has formed a joint council with other three political parties operating in the state so as to make the election fair, democratic and peaceful.

March 10, 2013: Ethiopia: Ethio-Telecom Upgrade to Improve Speed,Quality'

Side note: "Ethio-telecom is undertaking a technical evaluation of the proposals submitted by the two companies." Mesfin Belachew (PhD), government directorate director at the Ministry of Communications & Information Technology (MCIT), told Fortune. 3G LTE is a wireless broadband technology, designed to support roaming internet access using cell phones and handheld devices. Its structural design is based on an Internet Protocol (IP), and unlike many other cellular IPs, LTE supports browsing and downloading at 300 megabits a second. The two-year project is aimed at doubling the existing 20 million mobile users by the 2014/15 fiscal year, and alleviating the present network problems. In May2012, ethio-telecom announced that it was re-launching its 3G network toallow its clients to benefit from a more efficient service. However, the 3G technology, which was expected to provide users with quality network service, failed to materialise. "Network problems will greatly ease as soonas this new network becomes operational," said Mesfin. The current system creates poor quality service, since it does not have a smooth transition when a call transits from one vendor's infrastructure to another's. Those currently considered as vendors in Ethiopia, are: Ericsson, Nokia, Siemens and ZTE; each have set up networks for ethio- telecom. However, the new zoning system, that is to be applied, will only allow for one sole vendor to give a service, within any given circle. To date, there are around 16 circles, which cover limited areas and are occupied by a variety of vendorsFortune The new network is expected to be six times faster than the industry average 3G download speeds.

Source: Addis Ethio-telecom will upgrade the current telecommunications infrastructure to 3G LTE (long-term evolution) networks, from the current3G network. The upgrade is estimated to come at a cost of 1.5 billion dollars. The state-owned telecom monopoly announced plans to divide thecountry into 11 infrastructure zones, two months ago, in order to better manage each network. The zones are to be distributed between Huawei Technologies Co and ZTE Corporation, which are presently bidding for the network and upgrade expansion project.
March 11, 2013: South Sudan to restart pumping oil - African Union (AP)’
News tips: South Sudan will restart pumping oil in two weeks and will export it as soon as it's technically possible, the African Union said Tuesday, in a deal to restart an oil industry that has been hamstrung by lingering tensions between the two Sudans. The agreement was signed bySouth Sudan and Sudan on Tuesday, according to the African Union.
South Sudan, which broke away from Sudan in 2011, pumps its oil through pipelines that run through the north. In early 2012 South Sudan charged that Sudan was stealing its oil and then shut down its oil industry,a decision that crippled the government budgets of both countries. Since their 2011 division there has been fighting between the two countries, andthreats to resume hostilities. International mediators have been working to keep the peace and get the sides to agree on financial terms to restart the flow of oil.
South Sudan's Petroleum and Mining Minister Stephen Dhieu Dau told reporters in Juba after returning from Ethiopia on Tuesday that South Sudan's oil will reach the international market within four weeks.
Officials from the two Sudans on Tuesday set a timetable to implement several oil-related agreements, including one for resuming oil exports, the African Union said. Accordingly, in the next two weeks the South Sudanese government will instruct oil companies to resume oil production while Sudan readies the facilities to process and transport crude. The oil deal is the result of months of on-and-off negotiations between the north and the south under the mediation of former South African President Thabo Mbeki. Last September, in a deal that eased tensions, the presidents of Sudan and South Sudan agreed on multiple economic and security agreements, including demilitarizing the border andresuming South Sudan's oil exports. Subsequent talks to implement the deals remained unsuccessful for months until Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn brought the two leaders to the Ethiopian capital, Addis Ababa, in January and urged them to speedily resolve their disagreements. Defense ministers from Sudan and South Sudan last Friday agreed on a timetable to pull back their troops to pave way for the establishment of a demilitarized zone. Both sides are expected to complete their troops' withdrawal by March 15, although they are still at odds over disputed areas including the contested Abyei region. A senior South Sudanese military official said late Monday that South Sudan President Salva Kiir has ordered the army to start withdrawing from disputed border areas. Army spokesman Col. Philip Aguer said that within four days the South Sudanese army would "be able to pack all their equipment and prepare to start to the designated area." The South Sudanese army is expected to withdraw from positions in its Upper Nile, Northern Bahar al Ghazal and Unity states near the disputed border with Sudan. But Aguer warned the Sudanese military would defend the lives and property of South Sudanese if Sudan invades the country. South Sudan has frequently accused Sudan of incursions into its territory as wellas conducting aerial bombardments. Sudan has denied these accusations, saying it targets rebels who operate near the border with South Sudan. "In case of violation the SPLA will continue doing its usual role to protect the territory and integrity of South Sudan," Aguer said. "So it is not changing anything. It only gives more room for diplomacy."

March 11, 2013: Sudan and South Sudan agree on demilitarized borderzone'

News tips: ADDIS ABABA/JUBA – Sudan and South Sudan have agreed onimmediate and unconditional withdrawal of forces to their side within two weeks, to allow for establishment of a safe demilitarized border zone, the African Union High Level Implementation Panel (AUHIP) said Friday. The two countries, at the end of an extraordinary Joint Political and Security Mechanism (JPSM) meeting, held in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia also committed themselves to the deployment of the Joint Border Verification and Monitoring Mechanism (JBVMM) and the activation of all security related mechanisms from 10th March. Both Sudan and South Sudan, in September last year, signed a Cooperation Agreement, which covered oil and citizenship rights as well as security issues, among others. Since then,implementation of the deal have stalled over Khartoum’s insistence that Juba sever all ties with Sudanese rebel groups - an allegation that isdenied by South Sudan.

However, South Sudan, the AUHIP said in a communiqué, agreed to provide land at Gok Machar for Initial Operational Capability (IOC) the within 16 days while Sudan chose Kadugli, the South Kordofan state capital as the JBVMM and sector headquarters. “The JBVMM will operate immediately from Kadugli, within its capabilities. In Gok Machar, IOC will be operational within 30 days of provision of land,” partly reads the communiqué. The inclusion of ’Mile 14’ in the proposed border buffer zonecaused consternation in South Sudan’s Northern Bahr el Ghazal, despite the African Union and United Nations making clear that the location of thebuffer zone would have no bearing on any final border settlement. Sudan had initially proposed for the extension of the demilitarised area on the common border to include Blue Nile and South Kordofan, a proposal Juba declined to accept. The Sudanese army later claimed Juba refuses to pull out its troops from the disputed area of Mile 14. Source: Sudan Tribune
March 11, 2013: Ethiopia: Rumors of Water War on the Nile? Opinion: Dam War of Words: Saudi Arabia’s Deputy Defense Minister
Prince Khalid Bin Sultan fired a shot across the bow from the Arab Water Council in Cairo to let the regime in Ethiopia know that his country takes adim view of the "Grand Renaissance Dam" under “construction” on the Blue Nile (Abbay) a few miles from Sudan’s eastern border. According to Prince Khalid, “The [Grand] Renaissance dam has its capacity of flood waters reaching more than 70 billion cubic meters of water… [I]f it collapsed Khartoum will be drowned completely and the impact will even reach the Aswan Dam…” The Prince believes the Dam is being built close to the “Sudanese border for political plotting rather than for economic gainand constitutes a threat to Egyptian and Sudanese national security…” ThePrince raised the stakes by accusing the regime in Ethiopia of being hell- bent on harming Arab peoples. “There are fingers messing with water resources of Sudan and Egypt which are rooted in the mind and body of Ethiopia. They do not forsake an opportunity to harm Arabs without taking advantage of it…”
A spokesman for the regime in power in Ethiopia sought to minimize the importance of the Prince’s statement by suggesting that the Saudi Ambassador in Addis Ababa had disavowed the Prince’s statement as official policy or a position endorsed by the Saudi government. The allegeddisavowal of the statement of a member of the Saudi royal family and top defense official seems curiously disingenuous after the fact. But that is understandable since “an ambassador is an honest man sent to lie abroad for the good of his country.” The regime spokesman also insinuated in fuzzy diplomatese that such inflammatory statements could result in war between Arab countries and African countries in the Nile basin. The real possibility of a water war between countries of the upper Nile basin, and in particular Ethiopia, and Egypt and Sudan over the so-called Grand Renaissance Dam is the (white) elephant in the room that no one wants totalk about openly and earnestly at this stage. But in November, 2010, the late Prime Minister Meles Zenawi in an interview with Reuters seemed to defiantly relish the possibility of war with Egypt.

March 11, 2013: International Criminal Court (ICC) Indictee Set to Travelto Ethiopia'

Recent local media reports indicate that the current governor of South Kordofan, Ahmed Haroun, may head Sudan's delegation to the upcoming negotiations with rebels from Sudan People Liberation Movement North (SPLM-N). News of a governor of an important province heading a delegation would not normally be a headline, however, the governor is analleged war criminal in this case. Ahmed Haroun, also known as "The Butcher of Nuba", is subject to an arrest warrant by the International Criminal Court (ICC) for serious charges, including war crimes and crimesagainst humanity. He has served in senior official capacities in the Sudan for more than a decade.

Haroun, a lawyer by training, joined politics at a young age. He was the youngest Minister of State in the government. From 2003-2005, he was astate minister for the Interior and allegedly in charge of the managementof the "Darfur Security Desk", thereby coordinating the different government bodies involved in the counter-insurgency. It is highly likely that he must have been aware of the situation in Darfur during that difficult period. Later on, he was appointed Minister of State for Humanitarian Affairs, following his stint at the Ministry of the Interior.

Currently, he is the governor of South Kordofan, the province that lies to the west of Darfur and to the north of South Sudan, encompassing key border regions like Abyei whose status remains unresolved. Over these same regions, Haroun has allegedly recruited tribal militias to try ensure -through violent means- that Abyei and its oil-rich fields remain part of theSudan and do not effectively exercise a referendum under the Comprehensive Peace Agreement (CPA), which could result in it joining South Sudan. Alleged human rights violations occur in South Kordofan on a daily basis with total impunity for the perpetrators. Victims in the Nuba Mountains in South Kordofan remember Haroun all too well from the 1990s, when he was more commonly known as the "Butcher of the Nuba."

In 2007, the ICC judges issued an arrest warrant for Haroun for 42 countsfor war crimes and crimes against humanity. Since that period, he openly defied the ICC and its former Chief Prosecutor Moreno Ocampo, firing off false accusations at both the institution and the former Prosecutor.

Despite the charges leveled against him, he has not -- until this moment -

- set foot outside of the Sudan, allegedly fearing he could be apprehended. If he travels to Ethiopia to participate in talks at the AUsummit, it would be his first known trip outside the country since the issuance of an arrest warrant against him. Although Ethiopia is not a stateparty to the Rome Statute, it is a member state to the United Nations.

Therefore, it has the obligation to comply with Resolution 1593/2005 sincethis was a Chapter VII resolution, which is considered legally binding uponall member states. This resolution "advised all states and concerned regional & international organizations to cooperate fully with the court andprosecutor. " As noted in her latest presentation at the UN Security Council, the ICC Prosecutor Ms. Fatou Bensouda recalled that the Council referred the situation to the Court because of the firm belief "that the justice process is an essential component of any strategy aiming at truly stopping ongoing crimes and achieving peace in Darfur." This statement could not be more timely: How many more have to be killed in order to have Ethiopia and other members states of the UN comply with the UNSC 1593? Cooperation is needed at all fronts, first and foremost at the UN, especially when we are talking about massive human rights violations thataffected the lives of more than 2.5 million people. The UN needs to take tougher action on member states that deliberately disrespect their obligations. This will hopefully deter other suspects from Darfur, Sudan from visiting other member states of the UN.

March 11, 2013: Ethiopia: Not Just About Salvation or Religious Freedom'

OPINION: It has been suggested that of all the ideologies that sprang up during the 20th century (Communism, National Socialism and Islamic Fundamentalism), none are more toxic than Islamism. Islamism or RadicalIslam or otherwise also known as Islamic Fundamentalism, driven by Islamists, is an ideology designed to use religion as a means of acquiring state power and forcibly converting those in its path to accept Islam as their religion. Islamism is different from the ideologies of Communism and National Socialism in that in the later two, those intoxicated by the ideology are the elite and the leaders. The masses figure out pretty quickly that there is not much in it for them after a while. Under Islamism,or Radical Islam, those forced into an intoxicated state by the ideology arethe masses—the followers. The leaders simply wish to use religion as a tool to acquire power, and having accomplished that, they wish to rule their conquest by placing it under one law—Sha ria or Islamic Law. It is impossible to find the prevalence of democratic rights in those Moslem countries that are not declared secular societies. Much has been written and said about the weekly protests in Ethiopia by Muslim citizens. For its part, the government has arrested those that are allegedly the ring leaders of this ‘movement’ by claiming that laws have been broken, and ina country where every one is free to choose his or her version of any religion, the demands being voiced are simply an entre to something else.For their part, the leaders of the ‘movement’ and their Diaspora supporters claim that the cause of the unrest is the interference of the government in the religious affairs of Muslims through out the country.

And as a result, the government has violated the Constitution, and unlessit relents, the protests will continue as there is no force that can stop them. They cite the Arab Spring movements in Egypt, Tunisia, Libya andother places as an example of what can be accomplished when a determined public rises up against its oppressors and mobilizes its energies to control the outcome of events, and by definition, the future.

Let me acknowledge first, that Islam and its followers in Ethiopia have coexisted with Christians and Jews for centuries though there have been tensions between the religions from time to time. The one major exception of great consequence was the Muslim offensive and subsequent conquest of most of southern and western Ethiopia in the 15th and 16th century, notably during the merciless offensives of Gragne Mohammed (Mohammed the Left Handed). Secondly, one needs to be very careful notto confuse Islam and its followers with Islamists. The followers of Islam are peace-loving people just like the followers of Christianity. Islamists, onthe other hand, want to use religion as a tool of government—as a means of subjugating the conquered and forcing their will on the vanquished—all in the name of religion. They wish to dry out the roots of all other forms ofreligion including any form of spiritual life. Their aim is to conquer the world; abolish politics as such and run the world by men trained in Islamiclaw; and abolish national states. They wish to annihilate non-believers andnon-followers. They are, in short, genocidal. One need not look too far in the distant to see what sort of rule has emerged whenever and where ever Islamists have taken over state or governing power. Thirdly, to use the Arab Spring movements in Egypt, Tunisia and Libya as an example of movements for democracy is, at best, a misreading of events, and hence, a wrong interpretation of history. The Arab Spring has been less about democracy and freedom than about corruption, abuse and despotism. Thepeople of Tunisia did not revolt in the name of democracy. They revolted against a despotic regime that was squandering the wealth of the nation; they revolted against an uncaring regime that was bent on amassing family wealth rather than improving the lives of a relatively highly educated citizenry. The youth in Cairo, Egypt did not revolt in the name of democracy. Instead, they revolted against the despotic regime and the abusive treatment it meted out to its citizens. They revolted against a regime they perceived relegated the interests of their country to that of Western interests; they revolted against a regime that failed to look Southto its African brethren rather than just east to the center of the Middle- East in search of cash. The people of Libya, egged on by outsiders, revolted against a despotic regime that had lost its ways and had awfully squandered the wealth of the nation. They revolted against a regime that failed to find a pathway for the employment of the youth. As a result, these are hardly examples that should be cited to equate the situation of the Muslim concerns in Ethiopia.

I grew up in the center of a vast ‘awraja’ in Ethiopia whose inhabitants were about 90% followers of Islam. Many of the small towns in this part ofthe country had at best, one mosque and a church or two. Unlike the assertion by some, including the politically motivated functionaries of the government, the number of mosques or even churches was a function of finances rather than active prohibition by the state. True, the growth of Christianity was encouraged either directly through the provision of finances (endowments and gifts by the royal family) or indirectly through the encouragement of missionary settlements where such existed. What was very different then was the fact that there was no practical separationbetween religion and state even though there was an explicit declaration that 'religion is personal, country is for all'. In practice, however, the king not only had to have a bona fide bloodline, but must also be a Coptic Orthodox. The Ethiopia of today is much different than the one in which I grew up. The late Prime Minister, Meles Zenawi, had disavowed religion publicly, and current Prime Minister Haile Mariam Desalegn is reportedly aprotestant! Any one visiting Ethiopia today will witness the multitude of mosques all over the land. There are mosques in the cities, mosques in the countryside, mosques near deserted highways and hamlets, and mosques next to churches and schools. In 2000, the noises blaring out of loud speakers in the cities of Addis Ababa, Nazret (Adama), Dire Dawa, Mekele and Harrar was deafening, and if Ethiopia had the equivalent of anEPA (Environmental Protection Agency), it would have banned such practices. Today, the public loud speakers have been dialed down becauseof the noise pollution, but the number of mosques has multiplied even more. If this is not an illustration of the progress that has been made by our Muslim brothers and sisters, it could be cited as an example of the level and degree of tolerance exhibited by non-Muslims as well as by the government. As a matter of fact, one of the wisest concepts enshrined in the new Ethiopian Constitution is the separation of religion and state. It isforbidden by the Constitution to mix religion and political activity. While this by itself does not equate to religious freedom, it is an expression of both the intent and the willingness of the signatories to acknowledge the sensitive nature of the issue in Ethiopian society. So, why are Muslims in Addis Ababa protesting every Friday after prayers, and why has the government allegedly locked up some of the 'leaders' of the Islamic movement in Ethiopia?

Ethiopia, a landlocked country by choice, has a large population of Christians and Muslims. It is a country immediately surrounded by Muslimcountries: Somalia, Sudan (with the exception of South Sudan), Djibouti, and Somaliland. There is a sizeable Muslim population in Eritrea, Kenya, and Uganda as well. Ethiopia's traditional antagonists have been Egypt—astone throw away, and Saudi Arabia--across the Red Sea, and Yemen.

Although Yemen has had very close relationship with Ethiopia for centuries, the relationship between Ethiopia and Saudi Arabia can be said to be more utilitarian than close. There are other countries of import in the region that have had designs on Ethiopia not as an adversary but as acountry that could eventually be taken over by Islam. And indeed, for Islam and Islamists, Ethiopia could be viewed as the crown jewel of an Islamic conquest were it to become an Islamic country. A simple look at the regional map would support the point just made. As a result, there are a number of countries that wish to stir up trouble in Ethiopia. Many attempts have been made over hundreds of years to effectuate such conquest. The Ottoman Empire, the Egyptians and the Dervishes have all attempted to change the course of history in this part of the Horn of Africa. Egyptian attitude towards Ethiopia is driven by its unfounded fear of what might happen to the Nile should Ethiopia ever become an unfriendly source of the longest river and it's lifeline. What has changed, however, is that, today, the conquest is not to be effectuated by an invading army, but if possible, by the misguided, the disgruntled and the religiously intoxicated citizenry itself. That there is an unnecessary schismin the relationship between Ethiopia and Egypt is testimony to the colossalfailure of Egyptian vision and policy with regard to, and jingoistic attitude towards Ethiopia. Egypt should have strived to form the best of relationships with Ethiopia, and should have cultivated a policy of mutual cooperation and development instead of belittling Ethiopia's ambitions andaspirations. There could be no better ally to Egypt than Ethiopia. We drinkthe same water (our Um al Dunya), both have a long and proud tradition of early civilization and the people are closer to one another than their leaders admit. As the self-appointed keeper of the faith, Saudi Arabia has interest in expanding Islam where ever conditions permit and its vast resources allow. The recent outburst and unprecedented rebuke of Ethiopia by the Deputy Minister of Defense should be seen in that light. Bycracking down on the self-appointed 'leaders' of the Islamic movement, the government of Ethiopia is viewed has having frustrated the efforts of Saudi Arabia to achieve its goals surreptitiously. Earlier, and as a sign of their frustration, the religious police in Saudi Arabia had arrested 53 Ethiopians while they were praying in a private home. Yes, they have religious police in their country but wish to export religious fundamentalism to other lands!

After decades of civil war, the government and people of Ethiopia have a nation to re-build, and a huge as well as very diverse country to manage.Arguably, the government has allowed both for freedom of speech and freedom of religion although there is considerable debate if that had beenachieved in reality. The government is not blameless. It believes in the principle of group rights as opposed to individual rights, and courted the Muslim community by making concessions to it while it was consolidatingpower. Many argue that, in the past, the government had manipulated events, and some see more effort at manipulating public opinion here as well. Misguided but well-meaning friends of the protestors have labeled the recent public release of a film about Islamists and terrorism as a public disinformation campaign—a form of propaganda. Yet, none have condemned the sinister propaganda of the Islamist leaders themselves and their Jihad declaring friends in suit and tie. Even beyond that, and incredibly, none have come to view the issue within the context of the international contest for religious superiority. It takes a bit of mental exercise to recognize that terrorism and Islamic radicalism have to be fought precisely with the same weapons and instruments it chooses to wage its wars: propaganda with propaganda, and when it chooses to engage, regrettably, with massive engagement. Today, the tolerance of moderate dissent is an essential part of governing. But the religious and ideological dissent must not be allowed to go on forever and simmer. It is not a violation of religious freedom to prevent extremists from using religion as a cover for sedition and criminality. To combat radicalism in any religion or any form, governments have a duty to remove legitimate grievances and reduce or eliminate resentment where possible. But no one should expect this to succeed in an environment where the actors are more loyal to external influences, or where they hold entrenched positionsthat make compromise difficult. It seems to me that radical Islam has set out to make Ethiopians strangers to one another. Knowledge of each otherand respect for one another was what made us one family, one country.

Some of that has been lost now for a number of reasons. But tolerance forintolerant groups is very foolish. Indeed, it can be deadly! There are extremists in all religions and in all ways of life. This is due partly to ignorance, selfishness, or passion. At the very least, inordinate passion and ignorance lead to violence, and the most disturbing of all violence is the one that seems to justify itself in the name of peace and/or religion.

Radical Islam, just like radical Christianity, is less about salvation andreligious freedom. It is about control, conquest and subjugation. EP

March 12, 2013: Ethiopia and South Sudan ratified an agreement which will give South Sudan an alternative export route for its oil. South Sudan currently must ship its oil through Sudan. The Sudanese government (Khartoum) has its southern rival in an economic stranglehold. South Sudan has already negotiated a pipeline agreement with Kenya, but that is years away from completion. In the interim, South Sudan will use trucksto carry crude oil through Ethiopia to Djibouti's Red Sea port of Douraleh. The oil will then be shipped to international markets on oil tankers. The driving distance from South Sudan's capital of Juba to the seaport is around 1,500 kilometers. That is quite a distance, but South Sudan has concluded escaping the Sudanese blockade make the effort worth the cost. Ethiopia has several strategic interests at stake. The government hasknown for years that the nation must improve to its road network. The dilapidated (or in some cases, non-existent) transportation infrastructure exacts an economic price. Ethiopia is particularly interested in producing several high-value agricultural products (eg, exotic coffees). Though theseproducts could be shipped by air from Addis Ababa, they must first be brought to the capital city. The military benefits from improved roads as well. Ethiopia is the major power on the Horn of Africa and its ace card in Somalia has been its use of tanks, light armored vehicles and artillery. The oil trucking deals means Ethiopia will have to make extensive roadimprovements, at least on this trans-national route. The Ethiopian andSouth Sudanese legs of the oil truck route will have to be all weather roads. (Austin Bay)

March 12, 2013: Nathan Asfaw Eshete Has Won Over Immigration In OsloDistrict Court- AP'

JUSTICE: Nathan Asfaw Eshete, 7 defeated the UTLENDINGSNEMNDA(UNE) in court. This means that the family can stay in Norway.

Immigration has not decided whether to appeal the ruling. Nathans parents filed a lawsuit against UNE after the family received a final rejection of his application for asylum last year. Now Oslo District Court determined that UNE's decision is invalid. The verdict came Tuesday on the 12th of March, 2013 they wrote that the interests of the child are not properly considered. Oslo District Court also concludes that the family cannot be taken so far. If the ruling stands, the UNE take a new decision. It will probably be in line with the ruling of the Oslo District Court. Seven year old Nathan was born in Norway of Ethiopian parents. He speaks Norwegian and has Norwegian friends and according to the parents no close relationship with Ethiopia. The family has sought asylum in Norway,but in April, 2012 they received a final rejection of their application.

Witnessing the Court after this Nathans parents went to sue Utlendningsnemnda to overturn the decision. Now they are relieved that they were upheld. - I sit here and tears flowing. It's absolutely fantastic, says the spokesperson for the family, Aina Heldal Boe to VG. - The verdictis an indescribable relief for Nathan and his parents. Now I sincerely hope that this will cause others to get tested their case to the immigration authorities, she said. She has been responsible for the collection of 140,000 Kr to cover the legal costs. The money has come from primarily private donors. Now is the state in the Oslo District Court to cover the costs of 200,000 Kr. testified age of seven even in court when the case went to Oslo District Court. Then he told about his life in Bergen, and showed family photos of himself, his friends and his life there . - We have just received the verdict and our experts will consider it. It's too early to say anything about the appeal issue, says info Bjørn Lyster in UNE. symbolic This is the first of the cases of so-called asylum children brought to court after the Supreme Court in a large chamber ga (UNE) in favor of his practice. It is expected that decision will have implications for the cases of children who are in a similar situation. Around 600 children who have been refused asylum, has lived in Norway for longer than three years. Politicians cheering Several politicians cheering the decision. - Bergen victory in the Oslo District Court. I enjoy Nathan and everyone who has supported him @ SVpartifortsetter work for asylum children, writes Audun Lysbakken on Twitter. - Great for Nathan! The rule of law works. Know that UNE listens to the terms of the judgment in other matters, writes Eskil Pedersen . Liberal leader Trine Skeie'm glad that Nathan will be. - It is good that the court has now decided that Nathan can stay in Norway, says Trine Skei Grande . She believes the lawsuit should have been unnecessary. - I stated that the government will not change the rules so that children get the best heavy weight in immigrationcases, said Left leader.

Updates: Norwegian Immigration Appeals Board (UNE) was defeated in Oslo District Court following judges' decision against sending seven-year- old Nathan Eshete and parents Asfaw and Zinash back to Ethiopia' They will not be appealing. What has been a high-profile case due to extensive media and public attention started in early 2012 after the UNE turned down the Eshetes' asylum application once and for all. The father of now seven-year-old Nathan came to Norway some 12 years ago. The family was informed their application for asylum was refused last April for a finaltime. They lived under the threat of deportation. Nathan attends school inNorway, has Norwegian friends, and speaks the language. Asfaw Eshete decided to take the UNE to court over the decision, made some three months after Norway signed a return-come-forced-repatriation deal with Ethiopia. The case began towards the end of February this year. In their ruling, Oslo District Court judges stated they believe that the UNE had nottaken sufficient account of Nathan's strong association with Norway. The court concluded that the interests of the child were not properly considered and weighed against immigration control considerations in the decision by the UNE. UNE officials had argued that Nathan's association was to be considered to his parents, primarily and not to Norway. Officialsannounce this evening they will not be lodging an appeal. Tuesday's defeat came just over three months since Norway lost its deportation caseagainst siblings Abbas and Fozi Butt in Strasbourg's European Court of Human Rights. Source: the Foreigner

March 12, 2013: Afar residents blocked Ethiopia-Djibouti Motor Highway'

The main road that links Ethiopia to Djibouti (Port) has been blocked this afternoon by the Afar youth, Sources understood. According to sources, the main highway between Mille and Adayetu has been blocked and transportation to and from the region has been ceased. The Highway remained blocked when this report was being posted. Some parties are stating that the residents have blocked the road after they learnt that thegovernment was to "arrest a prominent Afar Muslim scholar, Sheik Mohammed Awol al Hitani". The Afar National Regional State is one of thenine regional states of Ethiopia, and is the homeland of the Afar people.

Its capital is Semera and lies on the paved Awash–Assab highway.

March 12, 2013: Global Alliance for Ethiopia: Global Protests in 30 CitiesAgainst Italian Fascist War Crimes In Ethiopia and the fascist Marshal’s Mausoleum' Meantime, young Ethiopians in Addis Ababa promote a protest rally against Marshal Rodolfo Graziani's erected statue in Italia'

News updates: International public protests in the form of peaceful demonstrations, meetings, and/or prayers took place in over 30 major cities during February 17-19, 2013 in remembrance of the 3-day Fascist massacre of 30,000 Ethiopians in Addis Ababa in February 1937, as well as all of the Italian Fascist war crimes that were perpetrated in Ethiopia, with the support of the Vatican, during 1935-41. The cities where the event took place include Addis Ababa, Washington, DC, New York, Dallas,Houston, Atlanta, Minneapolis, Seattle, Los Angeles, Denver, Aurora, Chicago, Boston, Tampa, Las Vegas, Miami, Cologne, Munich, Stockholm,Rome, Jerusalem, Tel Aviv, Amsterdam, The Hague, The Caribbean region, Sidney, Vancouver, London, and Dubai. In the Lazio Region of Italy where the Graziani monument was opened, a new governor, Nicola Zingaretti, was elected who has vowed to close the despicable park and mausoleum. In fact, unlike the Prime Minister and President of Italy, Mr. Zingarettivoiced his opposition to the Graziani monument in Affile early and unequivocally in public. For this act of courage and truth, he receivedover 53% of the vote in a three way election. The Prime Minister on the other hand who, to this day, has not released a public statement denouncing it, only received 9% of the vote and was resoundingly defeated. In Italy, many organizations and political movements have come to the side of Ethiopians to call for the Graziani Monument to be closed. These include the Democratic Party of Italy, the Ecology and Liberty Party of the Left, The Jewish Community of Rome, The Italian Women's Jewish Committee, The Ethiopian Community in Italy as well as The National Association of Partisans of World War II. On February 19, 2013 for the first time, Italians of Jewish and Ethiopian origins as well as Ethiopiansgatheredin Rome to remember the victims of the GrazianiMassacre in Addis Ababa and called on the Italian government to shut down the Graziani monument in Affile. The Global Alliance for Justice – The Ethiopian Cause hereby expresses its deepest appreciation and thanks to all those who joined in the protest throughout the world as wellas those organizations such as the Ethiopian Patriots Association in AddisAbaba; the Italian organizations mentioned in the above paragraph; Ethiopian community associations in Dallas, Atlanta, Seattle, the Netherlands, Israel, etc; “Little Ethiopia”; various churches, etc. and media institutions including ESAT (Ethiopian Satellite), VOA, Deutsche Welle(DW), and radio stations in several cities, which supported the Ethiopian cause.

The Italian Fascists War Crimes in Ethiopia: The Italian Fascist war crimesthat were committed in Ethiopia resulted in the massacre of one million Ethiopians, the destruction of 2,000 churches and 525,000 homes as wellas the perpetration of an environmental pollution including the killing of 14 million animals. As if to add insult to injury, the Italian Government has inaugurated a mausoleum and a park for the Fascist war criminal, Marshal Rodolfo Graziani, at Affile, south of Rome on August 11, 2012 inthe presence of a Vatican representative.

Vatican Support for the Fascists: Despite the availability of an abundant historical evidence as to the Vatican's Pope Pius XI andPopePius XII's fullcomplicity with the Fascist war crime in Ethiopia, no apology has been expressed yet to the Ethiopian people. 3,940 people residing in over 30 countries including Italy have signed an international petition on www. globalallianceforethiopia.org calling for a Vatican apology to the Ethiopianpeople.

Justice for Ethiopia: The justice demanded on behalf of the Ethiopian people for all the war crimes committed by the Fascists, with the complicitsupport of the Vatican, is: i) That the Vatican express its apology to the Ethiopian people; ii)That the Italian Government pay adequate reparationsto the Ethiopian people; iii) That the United Nations recognize the Fascist war crimes committed in Ethiopia; vi) That the Italian and Vatican Governments return the properties looted from Ethiopia; and That the Italian Government dismantle the Graziani monument inaugurated at Affile, south of Rome, in the presence of a Vatican representative. March 13, 2013: The UN has appointed another Ethiopian senior army officer as commander of the IN Interim Security Force for Abyei (UNISFA)peacekeeping operation in the disputed Abyei region, which lies between Sudan and South Sudan. Approximately 3,800 Ethiopian soldiers serve inAbyei.

March 15, 2013: South Sudan to Truck Oil Through Ethiopia, Djibouti forExport' - Bloomberg

News tip: South Sudan's government said it signed an agreement with Ethiopia and Djibouti that may enable the East African nation to export oilby truck from July, while a study on a pipeline linking the three countries is completed. An accord signed on March 12 in the Ethiopian capital, AddisAbaba, envisages crude being exported via Djibouti's Red Sea port of Douraleh, South Sudan Deputy Petroleum Minister Elizabeth James Bol said in an interview today. Douraleh is 1,469 kilometers (913 miles) northeast of Juba, the South Sudanese capital. "We need to wait for a technical assessment to be done first, but Ethiopia and Djibouti agreed forthe oil to be exported by trucks through their countries," Bol said.

March 16, 2013: Just as many Kenyans were slowly breathing a sigh of relief, opposition candidate Raila Odinga filed an official petition asking thenation's Supreme Court to declare the March 4 election result void. On March 9 Odinga's opponent, Uhuru Kenyatta, was provisionally declared the winner of the presidential election. After Odinga filed his petition, Kenyan police in Nairobi had to disperse one crowd using tear gas. Still, 12 days after the March 4 national election, there are no reports of majortribal and political violence. This is good news for the country in general, 1,100 people died in violence which erupted after the disputed 2007 election. This is also very good economic news, particularly for Kenya's tourist industry. Kenya has a very successful tourist industry based on itsgame preserves and national parks. It is also expanding its tourist industry on the Indian Ocean. The violence after the 2007 election damaged the industry.

March 17, 2013: Two prominent leaders desert OLF faction'

(OPride) — Taha Tuko and Amin Jundi storm out of OLF's General Galchu faction citing differences with the group's leader. The faction's most seniorand considered by many to be the backbone of the group, the duo not only resigned from their leadership posts but also rescinded their membership in the organization. "We hoped to resolve differences within the organizational framework,"Tuko told OPride by phone from Washington. "In the absence of respect for organizational structures, whatis left is personalized leadership." Tuko who has been an activist with the OLF for nearly 25 years was the faction's information officer until last week. Jundi was the Secretary General for the front since the organizationannounced alliance with the Ethiopian opposition, Ginbot 7.

A former Ethiopian General, Kamal Galchu broke with rival OLF faction in 2008. Two years ago, he purged his former comrades and announced changing the organization's political program. The move to align with Ginbot 7 was harshly criticized by Oromo activists. The news of Jundi and Tuko's withdrawal comes at a point when there is a flux in the Oromo camp. How and when the situation will coalesce into a clear shape is unknown. However, observers note that after two decades of dormancy, the Oromo camp is showing signs of revival. This is due in part of two recent developments. Many attribute the increased activism to the birth ofthe Oromo Dialogue Forum, a movement due to be launched by Lencho Lata, the former de facto leader of the OLF from its inception in the early 1970s to his dismissal from the organization in 1993. The other notable development is a recently announced merger between two other factions of the OLF, the Asmara based group led by Dawud Ibsa and Galasa Dilbo'sTransitional Authority. The group's spokesman in North America could notimmediately be reached by phone.

March 17, 2013: UNDP 2013 report ranked Ethiopia 173rd out of 187 countries in human developmet'

Revelation: Ethiopia will never prosper aslong as it is ruled by the West-bankrolled stupid dictators. UNDP's 2013 report is a case in point. The bogus economic growth rate cooked up by the Woyanne junta propagandists in collaboration with the World Bank and IMF cannot cover the stink of their crimes and lies. (VOA) The United Nations Development Program has released its 2013 Human Development

Index. Despite recent economic growth, Ethiopia is still near the bottom ofthe index. Ethiopia ranks 173 out of 187 countries in the Human Development Index 2013, unveiled by the United Nations Development Program, UNDP, on Friday. The Index is part of the Human Development Report that is presented annually and measures life expectancy, income and education in countries around the world. Since 2000, Ethiopia has registered greater gains than all but two other countries in the world - Afghanistan and Sierra Leone. But it still ranks close to the bottom of the Index.

However, Samuel Bwalya, an economic advisor for UNDP, says that not only the ranking is important. “I think what matters in the index is how you’re moving, your own human development progress within the country, so you’re moving from 0.275 to 0.378, that movement is what matters," said Bwalya. "It means that your country is making progress in human development. Now the ranking depends on how other countries are also faring.” This year's Human Development Report focuses on the major gains made since 2000 in most countries in the global South. UNDPbelieves sub-Saharan Africa can achieve higher levels of human development if it deepens its engagement with other regions of the South.But those countries must overcome many challenges, such as low life expectancy, high levels of inequality and the growing threat for environmental disasters that could halt or reverse the recent gains in human development.

Bwalya says that government policies are central to human development in Ethiopia: “The most important is to continuously commit to two policy arenas: the economic program in the country is robust and the government should have continuous commitment to development," he explained. "The second is that it should continue the social protection program that has been so important in reducing poverty.” While the Human Development Report and Index celebrate improvements across the developing world, a hard fact remains - 24 out of the 25 lowest ranked countries are on the African continent.

March 17, 2013: Former Nigeria's President briefs Ambassadors onsecurity situation in Africa'

Former Nigerian President, Olusegun Obasanjo recently briefed Ambassadors resident in Addis Ababa on the upcoming 2nd Tana High-Level Forum on Security in Africa which will be held from 20th to 21st April in Bahir Dar in northwestern Ethiopia.

The 2nd Tana High-Level Forum on Security in Africa which is themed: ‘Security and Organized Crime in Africa’ will be attended by Heads of State and Government, prominent scholars and civil society groups and leaders from the business community. The forum will offer a rare opportunity for open deliberations and debate on the peace and securitychallenges facing Africa. The main objective of the annual forum is to bring together leadership from all sectors to work for the African-led security agenda. Ethiopia's Premier, Mr. Hailemariam Desalegn has extended an officially personalized invitation letter to His Excellency Dr. Ernest Bai Koroma, President of the Republic of Sierra Leone to attend thisall important meeting.

The 2nd Tana High-Level Forum on Security is an initiative of the late Ethiopian Prime Minister, Meles Zenawi. The Ambassadorial briefing session which took place at the Hilton Hotel was attended by AmbassadorAndrew Bangali, Sierra Leone's envoy to the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia who also doubles as the Vice Dean of the ECOWAS Ambassadors and a battery of Ambassadors. Mr. Obasanjo spoke about expected outcomes of the meeting and this year's gathering will tackle security and organized crime in the continent. "The African continent continues to face several security challenges such as the border disputes between Sudan and North Sudan, the situation in Mali or the seemingly intractable conflict in Eastern Democratic Republic of Congo," he said. Theformer Nigerian Head of State said the conference will also examine security issues in the Continent with all its ramifications. Source: The Patriotic Vanguard

March 18, 2013: Samsung set to open assembly plant in Ethiopia'

The South Korean giant Samsung, announces that it has concluded an agreement with the Ethiopian government to establish a laptop and printer assembly plant in the country over the next few months. The announcement was made during the Fourth International Samsung Conference in Cape Town, South Africa. Samsung Electronics East Africa's Chief Operating Officer, Robert Ngeru said "We have finalized the agreement with officials from the Metal and Engineering Corporation and officials from other government bodies". According to Ngeru, Samsung has also finalized agreements to assemble television sets and refrigeratorsin the country. Additionally, by partnering with MultiChoice Ethiopia, Samsung plans to offer consumers purchasing Samsung Televisions an inbuilt decoder. Accordingly, Samsung customers will get a free decoder with every purchased television set, thereby enabling them to enjoy the benefits of digital TV immediately.

March 18, 2013: Ethiopia's new prime minister, Hailemariam Desalegn, continues to follow the policies of his predecessor and mentor, Meles Zenawi' It appears that Hailemariam is trying to create a cult of the personality around Meles. Government media continue to laud the deceased leader, who died in August 2012. Meles deserves great credit forimproving Ethiopia economically and socially, but he also ruled harshly and bullied and jailed his political opponents. However, keeping the memory of Meles front and center may be a very smart social and politicalmove by Hailemariam. In a country where regional origins play a prominent role, he comes from the Wolayta region and the ruling Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) party isdominated by people from Tigray.

March 18, 2013: World Bank: Investigate 'Development' Project AbusesRigorously Apply Social Safeguards in Ethiopia' Immediate Release (Washington, DC, March 18, 2013)
The World Bank's board should support an internal investigation into allegations of abuse linked to a World Bank project in Ethiopia, Human Rights Watch said today. The Inspection Panel, the World Bank's independent accountability mechanism, has recommended an investigation into whether it has violated its policies in a project linked tothe Ethiopian government's resettlement program, known as "villagization." Villagization involves the forced relocation of some 1.5 million Ethiopians, including indigenous and other marginalized peoples, and has been marred by violence. The board is scheduled to meet on March 19, 2013, to consider the Inspection Panel's recommendation.
"The World Bank's president and board need to let the Inspection Panel doits job and answer the critical questions that have been raised by Ethiopians affected by this project," said Jessica Evans senior internationalfinancial institutions advocate at Human Rights Watch. "If the World Bank doesn't support this investigation, its Ethiopia program will continue to be shadowed by controversy." On September 24, 2012, several Ethiopians brought a complaint to the Inspection Panel, pressing the World Bank to apply its safeguard policies in an Ethiopia project. The safeguard policies are designed to prevent and mitigate undue harm in World Bank projects, including protecting the rights of indigenous peoples and preventing abuses related to involuntary resettlement.
The World Bank went ahead and approved the project the next day and has not applied its safeguard policies to the project. The Inspection Panel,which reports directly to the World Bank's board of executive directors, subsequently found that the complaint warranted a full investigation. Thisrecommendation would have been endorsed by the board in February, butaction has been delayed because the executive director representing Ethiopia has requested a discussion of the panel's finding and recommendation.
Human Rights Watch research has found that many of the largely indigenous communities being moved in Gambella, one region where "villagization" is being carried out, have not been consulted about the resettlement process and that the government responded with violence and arbitrary detentions when people have not agreed to move.
A 20-year-old Ethiopian man who escaped to Kenya told Human Rights Watch, "Soldiers came and asked me why I refused to be relocated.… They started beating me until my hands were broken … I ran to tell [my father] what had happened, but the soldiers followed me. My father and Iran away.… I heard the sound of gunfire." He heard his father cry out, but he kept running and hid from the soldiers in the bushes as he was “full offear.” When he returned the next day, he learned that the soldiers had killed his father. Once forced into new villages, families have found that the promised government services often do not exist, giving them less access to services than before the relocation. The government has also failed to provide compensation. Dozens of farmers in Ethiopia’s Gambella region told Human Rights Watch they are being moved from fertile areas where they survive on subsistence farming, to dry, arid areas. Many villagers believe that the fertile land from which they have been removed is being leased to multinational companies for large-scale farms. The project in question is known as the Promotion of Basic Services (PBS) andis intended to improve education, health care, water and sanitation, agriculture, and rural roads. But, through this project, the World Bank is contributing to the salaries of local government staff who have been required to assist in implementing “villagization.”

Despite the human rights risks that “villagization” presents for the World Bank’s project, it has not applied its own safeguard policies. Its policy to protect indigenous people has not been applied in Ethiopia because the government does not agree that it should apply. Nor has the World Bank applied its policy on involuntary resettlement, which requires consultationand compensation when people are resettled. The Inspection Panel recommended that it undertake a full investigation after a preliminary assessment that included interviewing Ethiopian refugees who have fled “villagization” and meeting with the Ethiopian government and donors.
The Inspection Panel found the links between the World Bank’s basic services program and “villagization” to be plausible and to warrant investigation. “Ethiopia is in great need of development aid, and its peoplehave urgent social and economic needs that the World Bank should work to address,” Evans said. “But development by force is not development atall and Ethiopia should not be an exception to the World Bank’s commitment to upholding its own policies.”

March 18, 2013: News came out today that members of the 'Blue Party'and many more individuals have been arrested and jailed while trying to demonstrate infront of the Italian embassy in Addis Ababa in protest of Graziani's statue that was being erected in Italian town of Affile, in southof Rome. Meantime, the anti-Graziani statute protesters including the international law jurist Dr Yakob Hailemariam and several others who were detained on Sunday, the 17th of March, for attempting to stage a protest rally against the building of a statue for Fascist Marshal Rodolfo Graziani in Italy have been released on their own recognizance until theyappear in court again. Side note: Marshal Rodolfo Graziani is known for avenging his people's humiliation at the battle of Adwa. He came back with a purpose what exactly did he do to make sure Ethiopia will never rise again? A wanton killing was the one. Selective murder was another. The use of mustard gas, burning of villages and the Addis Ababa massacre are examples of wanton killings. The May 19th, 1936 massacre of 297 monks and 23 laymen of Debre-Libanos Monastery is a calculated act of terror to discredit Ethiopia's ancient religion. Furthermore the liquidation of the young Ethiopian intellectuals and their organization 'The Black Lion' was another assault on what is dear to all Ethiopians. Other than those that left the country with the Emperor and the lucky ones that found their wayto Sudan and Kenya all were executed. This will file filed under selective murder. 'The Duce will have Ethiopia, with or without the Ethiopians'. Rodolfo Graziani

March 19, 2013: Donors Assistance Group Co-Chair Reponds on the GTP'

News tip: Mr. Geert Geut co-chairperson of the Donor's Assistance Group(DAG), a consortium of donors, told reporters that DAG has appreciated the Ethiopian government's efforts to reduce poverty. Responding to questions on whether the Government's Growth and Transformation Plan(GTP) is overly ambitious, he responded in a diplomatic wording that, 'asEthiopia is one of the poorest countries in the world facing numerous challenges to its development, I always admires the government's effort to reduce poverty through such grand plan".

March 19, 2013: Ethiopia 'blocks' Aljazeera website'

Al Jazeera's English and Arabic websites are reported to have been blocked in Ethiopia, raising fresh fears that the government is continuing its efforts to silence the media. Though the authorities in Addis Ababa have refused to comment on the reported censorship, Google Analytics data accessed by Al Jazeera shows that traffic from Ethiopia to the Englishwebsite had plummeted from 50,000 hits in July 2012 to just 114 in September. Traffic data revealed a similar drop for the Arabic website, with visits to the site dropping to 2 in September from 5,371 in July. A blogger, who cannot be identified for his own safety, said Ethiopian censors had been targeting Al Jazeera since the Qatar-based network began airing coverage of ongoing protests against the way in which spiritual leaders are elected in the Horn of African nation. The steep decline in web traffic began on August 2 last year, the same day that Al Jazeera Mubasher aired a forum with guests denouncing the government's"interference" with Muslim religious affairs, and three days after Al JazeeraEnglish published an article detailing deadly ethnic clashes between two ofthe country's southern tribes. Attempts by Al Jazeera to get an official response from authorities failed.

Poor track record: Ethiopia is ranked 137 out of 179 surveyed nations on the latest Press Freedom Index of Reporters Without Borders (RSF), an international advocacy group for press rights. Both RSF and the Committee to Protect Journalists (CPJ) have tied Ethiopia's deteriorating media environment, in part, to a 2009 anti-terrorism law that has been used to sentence 11 journalists since its ratification. "The usage and practice of this law is illegal. It has a clause that makes whoever writes about so-called terrorist groups, which are mostly normal opposition groups, a terrorist," CPJ's East Africa Consultant Tom Rhodes told Al Jazeera. "Now it's got to the point that the law is being used to label thosein the Muslim community conducting peaceful protests to defend their right to choose their spiritual leaders as terrorists. It's a sad state of affairs." CPJ says Ethiopia is the second-highest jailer of journalists in Africa after neighbouring Eritrea, were seven journalists are currently detained. Both the RSF and CPJ have expressed concern over reports thatthe country has begun using much more sophisticated online censorship systems over the last year, including ones that can identify specific internet protocols and block them.Since Ethiopia's government owns the sole telecommunications provider in the country, Ethio Telecom, it allows authorities to tightly control internet freedom.

March 19, 2013: Somali Islamists Eye Possible Ethiopia Pull Out - AgenceFrance-Presse'

Somalia's Al-Qaeda linked insurgents, on the back foot after months of losses, are eyeing a potential withdrawal of arch-foe Ethiopia in the volatile southwest, raising security and humanitarian concerns. Heavily armed Shebab fighters swept into the town of Hudur, capital of Bakool region, just hours after Ethiopia's surprise withdrawal from the town on Sunday. Hot on the heels of the Ethiopians -- the strongest military powerin the southwest region ever since their November 2011 invasion -- fled allied Somali militia forces and a column of some 2,000 terrified civilians. Security sources say the withdrawal from Hudur could signal a wider pull out of Ethiopian forces including from the key city of Baidoa, warning thatif this happens, the 17,000-strong African Union mission (AMISOM) wouldbe hugely overstretched. "Everything suggests Ethiopia is determined to withdraw from Baidoa" in coming days, a security source told AFP. Ethiopia, which has repeatedly said it wishes to withdraw, is reportedly frustrated that its requests for AMISOM troops to take over its positions have been ignored. "The Ethiopians have been talking for quite a while of how much they want to leave...so far it was seen more as a posture," saida source close to AMISOM, adding they were frustrated at how much the military operation was costing.

Whether Ethiopia continues to withdraw also depends on the reaction of the international community and whether the Shebab reoccupy the areas they pull out from, the source added. The withdrawal from Hudur "is a reminder that what they do is of strategic importance and that the Shebabis not defeated," the source added. Relations between Addis Ababa and the Somali government are also tense, with a parliamentary delegation travelling to Baidoa on Sunday in a bid to persuade Ethiopia not to leave, a humanitarian source there said. Addis Ababa -- long seen as a traditional enemy of Somalia -- is a controversial presence in Somalia.

Ethiopia entered Somalia in a 2006 US-backed invasion, but was driven out three years later by a bitter insurgency. -- Major boost to Shebab morale -- But while Shebab forces are weak and unable to hold out against the heavy weaponry of Ethiopia or AMISOM troops, Hudur's capture marked a sharp turnaround and a major boost to their morale. Sources say that while their return to Hudur was expected, the speed withwhich they retook the town took many by surprise. "If Al-Shebab reoccupyall the places Ethiopia withdraws from, it would change things," the AMISOM source said, adding that Hudur's rapid capture "clearly shows that holding ground is not enough to win over an insurgency." AMISOM would struggle at its current capacity to take over Ethiopian positions, while Somali troops who worked closely with Ethiopian troops would not necessarily cooperate so well with other forces, sources said. Hudur's capture, the Shebab's most important territorial victory for over a year, prompted jubilant celebrations amongst the Islamists, who vowed to "wage jihad" until total victory in messages posted on its Twitter account.

Top Al-Shabab military commander Shekh Mukhtar Robow led thecelebrations in the town.

So far, Hudur is the only major town Ethiopians have pulled out of, but with troops packing kit in Baidoa in apparent preparation to leave, many are worried as to the impact of a retreat. Security sources say several thousand Ethiopian troops have dominated southwestern Somalia since their 2011 assault on Shebab bases in November 2011, shortly after Kenyan forces invaded Somalia from the far south. Kenyan troops have since joined AMISOM. Ethiopian forces have remained separate, although they collaborate with the mission. While AMISOM already have a significant force in Baidoa, reinforcements are battling to open up the final50 kilometre (30 mile) stretch of road connecting the city with Mogadishu,some 250 kilometres (155 miles) to the southeast. But given the large amount of Ethiopia's heavy equipment and weaponry based in Baidoa, troops would be unlikely to be able to stage a rapid pullout as they did in Hudur. "The behaviour of the Ethiopians is ambiguous," another security source said, asking whether they were "really leaving or pretending?"

March 19. 2013: Ethiopia Has to Reconsider Diplomatic Ties with KingdomSaudi Arabia - Awramba Times' VIEWS: Ethiopia and Saudi Arabia have had long standing relations for many centuries. When Prophet Mohamed told his family and followers to take refuge in Ethiopia while threatened bypersecution in Mecca. In return, the Prophet instructed his followers not toattack Abyssinians. However, the story is now vice versa. It is very common to hear the imprisonment and torture of Ethiopians in Saudi Arabia every day. In general Saudi is becoming a hell for Ethiopians thesedays while we offer thousands of hectares of fertile land for their investorsin Ethiopia. In September 2011, a senior Ethiopian official has estimated Saudi investments in Ethiopia at about $13.3 billion, most of it being in the agricultural sector. Rice and wheat seem to be a high priority.
According to the official Saudi investments in agriculture and animal husbandry are in keeping with the government’s strategic plan to reach food security. The fundamental question is, if both countries have enjoyedgood relations in recent years, why are Ethiopians being harassed in SaudiArabia?
March 20, 2013: Unconfirmed reports revealed that veteran leaders of theTPLF, namely Ambassador Seyoum Mesfin, Ambassador Berhane Guebre- kirstos, Sebhat Nega, Arkebe Equbay and Zeray Asgedom have been firedfrom the TPLF CC. And now they are looking for suitable jobs in the international organs.
March 21, 2013: Two top OLF leaders abandon organization' Updates: Amin Jundi, general secretary of the Oromo Liberation Front (OLF), and fellow OLF senior Taha Abdi Tuko said on they bid farewell to the organization for their own reasons. The two top leaders of OLF under the chair of Eritrea-based former Ethiopian Army Brigadier General KamalGalchu said in a press statement that they were not only withdrawing from leadership positions but also rescinding their membership. Amin Jundi has been a familiar face in North America as he had often wowed audiences with his charismatic features and oratorical skills focused on unifying the Ethiopian people for democracy and justice and against tyranny (watch video clip).

In 2008, some of the OLF members launched a renewal movement to what they called "remedying the maladies" that had severely restricted the growth of the organization and crippled the struggle. But with the passage of time, their expectations fell far short of the standards they set for themselves, and the struggle didn't help the struggle of the great Oromo people. "Under a circumstance in which our yearning to renew OLFis not materialized and in the absence of an enabling internal environment, finding that not only will our continuing with this faction not meet our own standards but also does not serve the interests of the Oromo struggle and unconvinced that our involvement with the faction would in anyway benefit the cause of the great Oromo people, we want tomake public our decision to willingly withdraw from the leadership as well as membership of the faction of OLF led by General Kamal Galchu effective March 15, 2013," they said in a press statement. However, they warned that their withdrawal from OLF shouldn't be miscontrued as givingup on the struggle of the Oromo people for freedom and justice. "We will persevere... and join a platform that we believe would advance the Oromopeople's legitimate struggle for freedom and justice," they said.

March 21, 2013: Hunger kills scores of children in Afar Region'

Scores of children have died in the Afar Region of Eastern Ethiopia due to hunger, some residents of the Region told ESAT. The extreme hunger and lack of water has been on for the last four months. Although the food and water scarcity has affected over 60% of Afar, the problem has been severe in Edaa Woreda, where six children have died in one month alone. The residents state that the figures could reach hundreds if the deaths within the whole district of Edaa Woreda were calculated. A resident of Edaa Woreda, who wanted to remain anonymous, told ESAT that the residents of the district have been buying a jerrycan of water for 60 birr ($3.2) and most have now fled to the former capital of the Region, Asaita,following the death of their goats and camels. Few have managed to reachAsaita alive while many perished on their way, the residents stated.

According to the residents, as they have not received any help from thegovernment so far, they fear that the death toll could be devastating.

Colonel Mohammad Ahmed, Chairman of Afar Gadile, a rebel movementactive in the region, also told ESAT that his Movement was aware of theproblem. He confirmed that Afar has been affected by severe hunger.

Reports indicate that drought has also affected Somali region and different areas of the Southern, Oromia and Amhara regions this year. Quoting theAddis Abeba based FM Radio Station, Sheger, ESAT had reported yesterday that students in Addis Abeba are finding it difficult to attend classes due to hunger and malnutrition. Although EPRDF's regime has been consistently claiming that it would make Ethiopia food self sufficientand has also achieved remarkably in the agriculture sector, hunger and malnutrition still continue to affect the population. March 21, 2013: Ethiopia: No Surprises, Couple of Changes At the TPLF'

Commentary: Concluding its ninth convention, the senior partner in the ruling coalition, TPLF has elevated for the first time since its formation, a woman to its political bureau, making two of the nine politbureau members women, Fortune learnt. Tirfu Kidanemariam, who was vice chairperson of the Tigray Women Association (TWA) in 2008, has now joined Azeb Mesfin in the TPLF's top political body. Azeb was elected to the political bureau in 2010, the first woman to ever make it that high in the TPLF. Tirfu is a spouse to the party's chairman and chief of the regional administration, Abay Woldu. She is head of TPLF's all too powerful organisational affairs bureau. She has been elected to the central committee of the TPLF since 1999, and has also served as head of the region's justice bureau.

As expected by those following the region's political development, TsegayeBerhe, a former chief of the regional state and current chairman of the National Security Council; and Abadi Zemo, Ethiopia's ambassador to Sudan, have left the political bureau, upon their request, according to sources. They are replaced by Alem G. Wahid and Gebrehawariya Woldu, both veteran political operatives of the regional administration, heading various administrations at zone levels, according to our sources. TPLF central committee, which has seen the departure of nine of its veteran members such as Seyoum Mesfin, Arkebe Oqubay, Brehane Gebrekirstos and Zeray Asgedom, has left its chairman and deputy intact. Abay Woldu and Debretsion Gebremikael will continue to lead the party as chairman and deputy. The three other parities in the coalition are holding their respective congresses, thus elections to their political bureaus is expected soon. Political pundits are expect hardly any change in the compositions oftheir senior leaders, however. Source: Addis Tribune

March 21, 2013: Most old guards of the ruling Front to continue' News tips: Congress meetings of the member parties of the Ethiopian

Peoples' Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) have elected most of the old guard while and succeeding dozen of its veterans with new comers.Accordingly, the Oromo Peoples' Democratic Organization's (OPDO) removed Addis Abeba's Mayor Kuma Demeksa, Speaker of Parliament Abadula Gemeda and Ambassador Girma Biru from the Organization's Executive Committee. Justice Minister Birhan Hailu and Ambassador Teshome Toga have not been included in the new Executive Committees of the Amhara National Democratic Movement (ANDM) and South Ethiopian Peoples' Democratic Movement (SEPDM) respectively. Hilawi Yosef, who was absent in the Congress due to health issues has been elected to represent ANDM in the Executive of EPRDF. Similarly, OPDO elected Aster Mamo and Workneh Gebeyehu, the Director of Federal PoliceCommission, to represent it in the Executive of the EPRDF. Sources with an insider knowledge of the ruling Front's practices say that the failure of the Parties to apply the long held plan of the Front's succession plan, reveals that the leadership has discarded "Meles' Vision" that it consistently vowed to implement. These sources also indicate that the continuation of senior politicians such as Addisu Legese, who has beenremoved from Governmental duties by the late prime minister two years ago and other figures such as Bereket Simon, Hilawi Yosef, Abay Woldu and many others, is an indication of the invalidity of the succession process. Presenting the health related resignation of some of the nine Executive members of the TPLF such as Ambassador Seyoum Mesfin, Ambassador Berhane Guebre-kirstos, Arkebe Equbay and Zeray Asgedom as a case of succession is a "caricature and propaganda", the sources added. They also stated that the filing of resignation letters by nine Executive Members of the TPLF concurrently could be a sign of the differences and divisions within the Front that began following the death of the Front's Chairman, Meles Zenawi. ESAT has not been able to reach the Front's leadership for comment.

TPLF has elected Abay Woldu (Dara), Dr. Debretsion Guebremichael, Dr. Tewodros Adhanom, Tewodros Hagos, Guebremeskel Tareke, Azeb Mesfin,Tirfu Kidanemariam, Beyene Mekru and Alem Guebrewahid as Executive Committee members of the Front. OPDO on its part elected Alemayehu Atomsa, Mukhtar Kedir, Aster Mamo, Workineh Gebeyehu, Sufian Ahmed, Diriba Kuma, Abdulaziz Mohammed, Oumer Hussein and Abera Hailu as Executive Committee members of the Ethiopian Peoples' Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF). Hailemariam Desalegn, Shiferaw Shigute, Redwan Hussien, Mekuria Haile, Siraj Fagessa, Dr. Shiferaw Teklemariam,Alemayehu Asefa, Dessie Dalkie and Tesfaye Beljigie were elected as the EPRDF Central Committee members from SEPDM. Demeke Mekonnen, Gedu Andargachew, Addisu Legese, Bereket Simon, Ayalew Gobeze, Alemnew Mekonnen, Kassa Tekleberhan, Tefera Deribew, Binalf Andualem, Melaku Fanta, Dr. Ambachew Mekonnen, Getachew Ambaye and Ahmed Abitew were elected Executive Committee members. The 9th Organizational Congress of the EPRDF which will be held from 23 to 26 March, 2013 in Bahir Dar City is expected to re-elect the current Chairmanof the Front Hailemariam Desalegn and Deputy Chairman Demeke Mekonen Hassan. A veteran combatant of the TPLF told sources that he would not expect any striking outcomes and changes from the upcoming Congress. Source: ESAT News

March 22-24, 2013: The Pain of the Ogaden Somali People' Human RightsWatch (HRW) Report In Collective Punishment'

OPINION - Hiding From the Truth - “Every night, they took all of us girls to[interrogations]. They would separate us and beat us. The second time they took me, they raped me… All three of the men raped me, consecutively”. Along with 15 other female students, this innocent 17 year-old Ogaden Somali girl, was held captive for three months in a “darkhole in the ground” and raped 13 times. This is just one of countless accounts of abuse, from within the Ogaden region of Ethiopia, where it is widely reported criminal acts like these are perpetrated by the Ethiopian military and paramilitary forces on a daily basis. Untold atrocities like this;past and present are awaiting investigation, amid what is a much-ignored,little known conflict in the Horn of Africa.

In an attempt to hide the facts from the rest of the world, in 2007 the Ethiopian government banned all international media, and expelled many humanitarian aid groups from the area. It is reputed that any Non-Governmental Organisations (NGO’s) allowed to stay do so on the condition that they sign a waiver document, agreeing not to report humanrights violations by the government. Ethiopia, Leslie Lefkow of HRW states, “is one of the most difficult places to work for human rights groupsor humanitarian agencies on the African continent”, and the Ogaden (a barren land, littered with military remnants from past conflicts), “is one ofthe most difficult places to work in Ethiopia.” There are “huge challenges to doing investigations on the ground because the security apparatus of the government is extremely extensive and permeates even the lowest levels, the grass roots, the village levels”, where regime spies and informers operate, reporting anything and anyone suspicious.

Information about life within the region comes from whispering sources onthe ground, and from those who have fled the violence, and are now livingoutside Ethiopia. Many are in refugee camps in Kenya and Yemen, from where they recount stories of horrific abuse. Mohammed, from the Dhadhaab (or Dadaab) camp in Kenya, described to Ogaden Online (OO) 1/12/2012 how he was captured by the Ethiopian military, accused of being a supporter of the Ogaden National Liberation Front (ONLF) and mercilessly tortured. “They hogtied me”, he said, “and then flogged me while pinned down.” Mohamed’s face “was disfigured to the point where he can’t be recognized”. Refugees support Amnesty International’s (AI) findings of “torture and extrajudicial executions of detainees in the region” – women tell of multiple gang rapes, their arms, feet and necks tied with wire, for which they bear the scars, men speak of barbaric torture techniques at the hands of the Ethiopian military and paramilitary – the notorious, semi legal, completely barbaric Liyu Police, who, Laetitia Baderof HRW says, “fit into this context of impunity where security forces can do more or less what they want”.

The ONLF is cast as the enemy of the state, and regarded, as all dissenting troublesome groups are, as terrorists. They in fact won 60% of seats and were democratically elected to the regional parliament in the only inclusive open elections to be held, back in 1992. Civilians suspected,however vaguely of supporting the so-called 'rebels', are forcibly re- located from their homes. The evacuated villages and settlements, emptied at gunpoint HRW (CP) record, "become no-go areas" and in a further act of state criminality, "civilians who remain behind risk being shot on sight, tortured, or raped if spotted by soldiers". Children, refugeesreport are hanged, villages and settlements razed to the ground and cattlestolen to feed soldiers: HRW record (CP), "water sources and wells have [also] been destroyed". Systematic, strategic methods of violence and intimidation employed by the Ethiopian regime, that has, Genocide Watch (GW) state, "initiated a genocidal campaign against the Ogaden Somali population".

Pervasive pernicious control: Spearheading the Governments campaign ofterror in the region is the Liyu (Special) Police. A force of 10,000-14,000 18-20 year olds, with little or no knowledge of criminal law or human Rights, David Mepham UK Director of HRW told The Guardian 15/01/2013,that "for years we have documented egregious human rights abuses committed by the Liyu police, including the March 2012 extra-judicial execution of 10 men in their custody and the killing of nine other villagers". Established initially in 2005, to replace a discredited military, the Liyu initiative was the brainchild of a group led by the current regionalPresident, Abdi Mohamoud Omar and was eagerly embraced by the late Prime Minister Meles Zenawi. His Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) regime was and remains, at war with the ONLF,who are seeking self-determination for the five million ethnic Somali's, in line with their constitutional rights under the governments Ethnic Federalism policy. The EPRDF is a highly controlling repressive regime, which has extended its pervasive reach in the nine districts of the Ogaden,to where, HRW (CP) records, "security committees, which exist at every administrative level [and]… include members of the armed forces, militaryintelligence, security officials." The local Ogaden administration "does nothing but carry out Ethiopian dictates and represents the interests of the present, centralised regime," the Ogaden Women's Relief Association (OWRA) record in their study, A Place to Call Home. Dictates' of government brutality and intimidation regimentally carried out by the Ethiopian military apparatus, fully equipped by their principle donor, America, who GW recommend, should "immediately cease all military assistance".

Terrifying tools of oppression and imprisonment: The current regime operates under the premiership of Hailemariam Desalegn, who, true to hisinaugural word, is following in predecessor Meles Zenawi's shoes – has expanded the EPRDF's repertoire of violence and control and, in addition to the range of violent measures employed, is imposing additional economic pressures, intimidation and extortion the name of the game. It is widely reported that In the midst of the current dry (or Jilaal) season, new taxes are being levied on water drawn from wells for livestock and domestic use. Sums of up to $150 are reportedly being charged to peopleliving in rural areas, already burdened by an economic and aid embargo, which is causing civilians great hardship. Additional tax demands are alsobeing made – OO (8/03/2013) carry the story that, "reliable reports…. confirm the imposition of what the locals term an illegal 'head tax', imposed on the civilian population as well as on their livestock". A local elder, whose "family consists of eight children and he and his wife" received an arbitrary charge of "150 Ethiopian Birrs ($8) per individual regardless of age or gender", a total of 1200 birr ($56) – far beyond his means.

Kidnapping, with subsequent ransom demands, is another applied tool of terror. Family members, abducted and imprisoned, are released upon receipt of ransom payments, made either by relatives inside Ethiopia or those living overseas. Levels of extortion vary, with those in the west paying anything from "$300 to $1,500"; the McGill Report found "in somecases those amounts were contributions to total collected ransoms of more than $10,000". This criminal practice is widespread: civilians are arrested and imprisoned, without regard to due process, often repeatedly as Ifraah, a 25 year-old Ogaden Somali woman, told the OWRA: "To be released, you have to pay the Ethiopian military from 1,000 ($56) to 2,000 birr ($112). And the price keeps going up. If they suspect that the family has money, they raise the price. Poor people often stay in prison much longer because they can't raise the ransom. It happened to me twice. The first time I wasn't yet married. I spent a couple of months in prison and had to pay 500 birr ($28); the second time, I had to pay 1,000." It's a business in human suffering, "arrests also benefit the military; it's a flourishing trade. Innocent people are captured and have tocome up with a lot of money to free themselves." This illegal income, it is widely believed, is being used to supplement the paramilitary soldiers salaries'. "There are women thrown into prison five times, and each time they have to pay to get out. But economic factors are not the only ones.

There's also torture and rape".

Civilians like Ifraah indiscriminately accused of supporting the ONLF are detained without charge. Leslie Lefkow of HRW makes clear that, "the waythe EPRDF targets people, is an enormous problem from a human rights point of view". HRW have been monitoring the situation in the region for the past five years, and have seen and documented a range of Human Rights abuses, including "arbitrary detaining [of] family members, often for long periods of time, sexual violence against women and girls, sometimes if they are viewed as being members of the ONLF or supporters or simply because they are family members [of ONLF supporters]. There is a kind of 'guilt by association' that is used to target the family members", punishable by "summary executions… wheresuspected ONLF supporters have been executed in cold blood."

Incarcerated in what are often makeshift prisons (e.g. deserted school buildings), prisoners held in appalling conditions, are tortured, abused andintimidated. Ina and Halima, two young women from the town of Saga, were, OO 21/01/2011 report, "suspended in the air by their ankles with their legs spread wide, while the soldiers poured water mixed with red chilli powder over them [and] applied [it] in and around the victims' genitalia, causing severe burns." In 'prison' there are no medical facilities and, Ifraah says, no food: "You get your food from relatives. If you don't have anyone nearby, your relatives send money to people who live there so they can buy you food"; or inmates share what little they have. Abdullahi, held amongst, others without trial for nine months, related to OWRA how their captors "locked us in an underground room" Young girlsare regarded as Liyu property, kidnapped, held captive and repeatedly raped, often falling pregnant in the process. "Little girls", record OWRA, "13 to 15-year-olds, in prison and suddenly pregnant….at night you hearthe girls screaming when soldiers take them from their cells" – their dignity and childhood stolen from them.

Government genocide: The government's so-called counter-insurgency policy in the Ogaden is, in truth, a form of genocide and is regarded as such by GW. Is it ethnic hatred, fear and loathing of the 'other', or simplygreed for the regions natural resources – the oil and natural gas that drives the government's violent, multi-pronged approach? An approach that HRW (CP) makes clear, aims "at cutting off economic resources, weakening the ONLF's civilian support base, and confining its geographic area of operation". In pursuing these duplicitous goals, the Ethiopian regime seems to exist on an island of impunity, hidden from the international community; as The Unrepresented Nations and Peoples Organization (UNPO) state, "there is a shocking lack of international attention directed at the situation" and, despite the "substantial documentation of the violations committed…published by human rights NGOs, governments and media outlets", nothing is being done. Let us be clear and state, unequivocally the findings of Human Rights groups: that the Ethiopian military and paramilitary is committing wide-ranging HumanRights violations in the Ogaden, which constitute war crimes and crimes against humanity. "The situation" should, as GW demand, be "referred bythe UN Security Council to the International Criminal Court (ICC)".

Such Human Rights violations are not confined to the Ogaden region. GW consider "Ethiopia to have already reached Stage 7 (of 8), genocide massacres, against many of its peoples, including the Anuak, Ogadeni, Oromo, and Omo tribes". The EPRDF, unsurprisingly, plead innocent to allsuch accusations of abuse and state criminality and dismiss allegations of human rights abuse substantiated by reports from international human rights group such as Human Rights Watch and Amnesty International. The Ogaden regional president claims, they “peddle lies and propaganda fromour enemies”. However, if the Ethiopian government has nothing to hide,why don’t they allow independent investigators and journalists access to the Ogaden region? The shocking accounts of violence and abuse are endless. The situation is clearly extremely critical and demands the immediate attention of Ethiopia’s main benefactors – America and sister donor nations, the European Union and Britain. To continue to ignore theevidence of state criminality and to blindly support the Ethiopian government in the face of such persecution, is to be complicit in the murder and violent abuse of the innocent people of the Ogaden region.

News tips: (Mekelle, ETHIOPIA) Four senior leaders of the Tigray PeoplesLiberation Front (TPLF), an influential party within the ruling coalition Ethiopian People’s Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF), have resigned. The leaders submitted their resignations during the 11th TPLF central committee meeting, which is being held in the northern regional capital of Mekelle city. The politicians to resign were: former Ethiopian foreign minister ambassador Seyoum Mesfin; the current deputy foreign minister ambassador Birhane Gebrekirstos; the former mayor of Addis Ababa Arkebe Equbay and Zeray Asgedom. Many participants burst into tears when Seyoum, who is currently Ethiopia’s ambassador to China, made his farewell speech. A total of nine departing veteran central committee members received certificates in recognition of their careers.

Officials told Sudan Tribune that the high ranking TPLF leaders had servedfor over two decades in various government positions and their resignation was part of a newly introduced succession plan to replace the old leadership with younger members. The EPRDF party launched the succession plan two years ago to allow the next generation to actively take part in national political decision-making processes. The meeting concluded the four-day session by electing Abay Woldu, the current Tigray regional president as TPLF chairman and Debrestion Gebremichael, who isthe current information and communication technology minister and deputy prime minister, as the new deputy chair of the party. The party has also named 45 members of the central committee, including 12 new members, with two women also elected to the nine-member politburo for the first time Three other affiliate parties within the ruling coalition have similarly wrapped up their regular session on Thursday by electing new party leaders and members of their central committees. March 22, 2013: Tender for key Kenya–Ethiopia transmission line finallyreleased'

Power Transmission: Kenya and Ethiopia are finally set to embark on the construction of a high- voltage transmission line that will facili-tate power trade between the two neighbours. This comes after the authorities published a tender for a contractor to undertake the design, supply, installation, testing and commissioning of the 1 045 km 500 kV transmission line. The project, dubbed the Eastern Electricity Highway Project, has a price tag of $1.2-billion and is intended to enable energy- deficient Kenya to import electricity from Ethiopia, which is investing heavily in electricity gen-eration plants. The line, which will run from Wolayita Sodo, in Ethiopia, to Suswa, in Kenya, will be administered by the Ethiopian Electric Power Corporation and the Kenya Electricity Transmission Company (Ketraco). “We have secured funding from development partners and now we want to bring a con- tractor on board and commence the imple-mentation of the project,” says John Mativo, head of technical services at Ketraco. The project has been subdivided into five lots. Lots 1 and 2 will be on the Ethiopian side and will cover a distance of 433 km, while lots 3, 4 and 5 will be on the Kenyan side and will cover a distance of 612 km. Implementation of the project is expectedto take 36 months. When completed, the line will enable Kenya to import 400 MW of electricity from Ethiopia from 2016. Already the two countries have finalised a deal that will see Kenya import the electricity at a cost of 0.0084c/kWh for a period of not less than 30 years. Kenya, East Africa’s biggest economy, decided to import electricity from Ethiopia to cover electricity shortfalls emanating from a huge disparity between supply and demand, which has presented serious obstacles to the implementation of the country’s long-term growth masterplan, Vision2030. “Energy shortages and supply disruptions, coupled with high costs,remain serious obstacles to economic activity,” states the coun- try’s recently developed National Energy Policy. For its part, Ethiopia is investing heavily in generation projects, with several hydro and wind projects currently being under con-struction. These include the Grand Renaissance dam, with capacity to generate 5 250 MW, the Gibe III dam,with a capacity of 1 800 MW, and the Ashegoda wind farm, which will generate 120 MW. The country hopes to become a net exporter of electricity to neighbouring nations. Besides Kenya, Ethiopia has also entered into agreements to supply 200 MW to Djibouti and 200 MW to Sudan. The Ethiopia–Kenya line is being financed by the World Bank
($684-million), the French Agency for Development ($273-million) and theAfrican Development Bank ($231-million). Source: Engineering News

March 22, 2013: Anwar Mosque under tight security after Friday prayers'

Anwar Mosque, which has been the center of the now regular Friday peaceful protests by Ethiopian Muslims, has today been under the tight surveillance of the Addis Abeba Police force and securities, ESAT’s reporterfrom Addis Abeba reported. The EPRDF regime deployed the large numberof police force fearing the usual peaceful Friday protests from the Muslim worshipers; however, unlike other weeks there were no protests today to the displeasure of antiriot police, who were watching the worshipers in close proximity. ESAT has also learnt that some police officers together with EPRDF's cadres have been soliciting, appeasing and at times intimidating Muslim youth to identify individuals that are suspected of taking orders from the arrested Muslim Arbitration Committee members and are covertly channeling orders about the protests. Some Muslim youthtold our reporters that they have been approached by cadres of the ruling Party and were pressurized to disclose the people they communicate with and those people that give them orders in exchange for benefits. The Muslim youth however, said that they told the cadres that they don't contact or take any order from any party. It is to be recalled that ESAT had reported that most Muslim members of the ruling party were completely discontented with measures and approaches EPRDF has been taking on the matter. March 22, 2013 - Efforts to rescue a family of four people who are being held hostage in Ethiopia are underway' Ethiopian herdsmen are demanding that animals stolen by raiders from Turkana County should be returned before the family is released. Kibish DC Erick Wanyanyi says theyare in talks with government officials in the neighboring country to secure the release of the family.

March 22, 2013: EPRDF lobbies over 700 street dwellers for upcominglocal elections'
The Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) has yesterday lobbied over 740 street dwellers that it gathered at the AddisAbeba Conference Center near Sidest Kilo to vote for EPRDF in the upcoming local and Addis Ababa City Council elections due to be held inApril this year. In addition to full day meal and refreshments, the Frontpaid 100 Birr as a per diem for each participant.
Representatives of the Front informed that street dwellers that EPRDF plans to shelter most street dwellers within a common area and if they vote for EPRDF all their problems would be solved. The street dwellers were heard complaining that they do not know when, how and who to vote for. Heads of the Front promised to train them on how and who to vote for. ESAT's reporter mentioned that some participants also asked how they could vote as they do not have a formal residence and an identity card.
The Chairman of the meeting and a representative from theAddis Abeba Police Commission on their part advised the street dwellers that as long as they manage to write their names correctly, they would begiven identity cards.
Thirty three parties had announced that they would boycott the upcominglocal and Addis Ababa City Council elections. "What is stunning is" says our reporter, "What is stunning is that the ruling party still lobbies street dwellers to vote, months after the deadline for issuing voting cards andregistration has passed". EPRDF spent over 52 million birr in the 2010 General election. Source: ESAT News

March 22, 2013: Police detain over 1000 in Southern Ethiopia'

Over one thousand people, who gathered to peacefully demand their rights in Kucha Wordea of Southern Ethiopia, have been detained by police for one day, residents of the area told ESAT. The residents came out in large numbers opposing the arrest of their seven representatives. The residents of Kucha Woreda have been voicing their demands for justice, good governance and rights in the Region for the past eight years.Daniel Seleshi, Southern Region representative and Council member of the Unity of Democracy and Justice (UDJ) party told ESAT that the main reason for what happened was the arrest of the "elders". Head of the Woreda Police station, Majour Anis said to ESAT that the representatives were arrested because the way they presented their complaints was "improper". The Police head also stated that police had forced back the demonstrators. Source: ESAT News

March 23, 2013: The ruling-EPRDF begins it's 9th Congress in Bahir Dar amid internal friction' The ruling-EPRDF started its 9th and possibly as commentators what could be its last congress with a pointless theme of –"The thoughts and deeds of Meles Zenawi".

Side note: The Ethiopian People Revolutionary Democracy Front's (EPRDF)Council 9th Congress has began today in Bahir Dar city, Northern Ethiopia under the theme of "With the thoughts of Meles, stronger Organization and Developmental forces for the Renaissance" amid an internal friction within member parties which has surfaced since the death of the late Chair of the Front, Meles Zenawi. With the aim of claiming the internal frictions, the Front presented a live stage show that narrated the struggle of EPRDF to depose the former military junta, Derg, the Front's sacrifices for ethnic equality and its efforts to dam Abay River, which was also transmitted live through the National TV Station.

A reliable source, who attended the meeting in Bahir Dar, said the message of the show was to let veterans of the Front look back at their journey and renew their loyalty to the Front while at the same time urgingjuniors to honor the sacrifices of their seniors. After Meles' death, every member of EPRDF has been told to reconcile differences and work towardsthe Front's unity. Unlike previous Congresses, messages such as "Let's save our Organization, let's protect our Organization" were echoed loudly which, according to our reporter, is "a sign of the crisis EPRDF is in". The fact that EPRDF did not disintegrate following the death of Meles Zenawi was noted as a success story doing the event. The Front's Chairman, Hailemariam Dessalegn has for the first time also admitted that the Organization has not been able to implement the decisions it passed during the last Congress. The agriculture sector has not still been free from being rain fed and programs to double its productivity within two years have also been unsuccessful. Hailemarim stated that small and micro enterprises have not been established and increased within the envisaged speed and quality. The agriculture sector may not lead the economy by taking over the agriculture sector, he added. The Chair also noted that the Congress will look for solutions to problems and lack of capital and capacity in the implementation of governmental projects in theinfrastructure development sector including railway, energy and telecom service as well as irrigation development. According to our reporter, the fact that the Chairperson of the Front has for the first time admitted the goals in the “agricultural and industry” sectors were not achieved, explainsthat the programs of Meles Zenawi, who is viewed as the spiritual leader of this Congress, cannot be implemented. Independent ESAT had reportedthat EPRDF has been unable to execute its programs due to failure to raisean adequate amount of funds. The Congress will elect the Chair and Deputy that will lead the Front for the coming five years, Hailemariam’s re-election is most probable. Senior members of the TPLF that have beenremoved recently, Ambassador Berhane G/kirstos and Arkebe Okubay, were also present in the Congress. In addition to invited guests and celebrities such as the Ethio-Saudi tycoon, Sheikh Mohammed Al Amoudi,representatives from the Chinese Communist Party, Eritrean opposition parties, South and South Sudan also attended the event.

March 23, 2013: Jawar Mohammed, a diaspora activist says, diaspora roleeffective when supporting, and not dictating, home-based struggles' The young activist and analyst Jawar Mohamed says the role of the Diaspora should be to support the home-based struggle. He said it is immoral to getthe job done through others who bear the direct brunt of the repression inEthiopia, and impractical because the struggle is best effected when one isback home, and not away in a safe, and home away from home.
March 24, 2013: Ethiopia: Unemployment - a Dose of Reality'
OPINION: Every single day of the week, weather permitting, a crowd of people stand out on the intersection, near the Addis Abeba City Municipality office, waiting for someone to employ them as menial labourers. Some of them are semi-skilled, in fields like; carpentry, masonry and plumbing. But, many of them are simple wage earners readyto work wherever they can be of some use. All they are after is earning their daily bread in a decent engagement. Many governments use facts and figures of unemployment as indicators of how the economy is faring ina given period of time. However, there are many other governments in developing countries shying away from revealing their unemployment statistics. For some reason they prefer to keep it to themselves.
A few decades back, employment opportunities were ample. If job seekershad an elementary educational background, they could have joined a one year teacher training centre at Holleta and come out decorated as a lieutenant officer. This could have carried someone as far up as deposingthe Emperor. But, with the passage of time, situations have changed. Today, the value of university graduates has been reduced. People used tolook down upon cobble stone layering as a degrading menial engagement.Growing claims that stone quarries of cobble stones have become causes for conflict between labourers, escalating to exchanges of slander and all out fights, suggest that many more are willing to partake in the trade today.

Many youngsters try to make ends meet and earn their daily bread the hard way, breaking the law and being arrested, in order to find free lodging behind bars. Sometimes they try to pick pockets, or better still, snatch mobile phones to sell in the market. Others try the decent way andfind themselves playing hardball with the police, or have the security officers set loose to chase them. These are boys that have a knack for business ventures. They manage to borrow some money and buy articles to sell on pavements. Vending in this way is high risk - a risk akin to a mouse frolicking in front of a starving cat. The hungry cat lurks, watching attentively. It looks to dislodge the mouse's attention. Source: Addis Fortune by Girma Feyissa

Ethiopia returnedto the top of Group A with seven points, two more than overnight leadersSouth Africa, who overcame Central African Republic 2-0 in Cape Town.

March 24, 2013: Ethiopia, China eye stronger ties'

ADDIS ABABA, March 24 (Xinhua) -- Ethiopia and China on Sunday expressed the hope to lift their cooperation and bilateral relations to a newlevel. The two sides exchanged views on the issue during a meeting between Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn and Chen Fengxiang, deputy head of the International Department of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China (CPC). Chen is here as the head of a CPC delegation attending the 9th Organizational Congress of theEthiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF), the ruling party in Ethiopia, held in the town of Bahir Dar, some 560 km north of Addis Ababa. "The meeting between the EPRDF leadership and the Chinese delegation is a strong testimony to the great importance the EPRDF attaches to its relations with the CPC," Chen told Xinhua after the Sunday meeting.

Calling the discussions "fruitful," the Chinese official said that both sides have spoken highly of the past cooperation and current relations betweenthe two countries as well as the two ruling parties, and are committed to further strengthening such cooperation and relations. "We reiterated our readiness to further develop and strengthen our relations with the EPRDF on the basis of the four principles governing party-to-party relations, namely independence, mutual respect, complete equality and no interference in each other's internal affairs," he noted. The Ethiopian leader also expressed his "willingness to further promote the developmentof the cooperation between the two countries and the two parties' friendlyrelations," Chen added. The ongoing EPRDF Organizational Congress has attracted the participation of representatives of political parties from morethan a dozen foreign countries.

March 24, 2013: Ethics: Federal High Court Hearing Ethiopian, NigerianAirlines Case'

Nigerian domestic flyer, Chanchangi Airlines, has failed to make paymentsto Ethiopian Airlines for maintenance services. The charge by Ethiopian Airlines against a Nigerian domestic flyer, Chanchangi Airlines, which failed to pay 14 million Br for maintenance services rendered to it, will be heard on April 1, 2013, at the Federal High Court. Chanchangi, one of seven domestic airlines in Nigeria, is located in Kaduna city, the capital ofKaduna region in north central Nigeria. Chanchangi had a deal with Ethiopian Airlines for 772, 346 dollars on February 9, 2004, for the maintenance of an aircraft and engine. However, Chanchangi did not pay the money. The two parties agreed on June 8, 2010, to verify the service provided by Ethiopian. Ethiopian provides maintenance services for MD11,B777, 757 and 737 aircraft. Source: Addis Fortune

March 25, 2013 Journalist Eskinder was arrested because he was a terrorist not his journalism: Ethiopian government to the MEPs' News tip:In a written response given to questions raised by the members of European Parliament (EP) regarding Ethiopian journalist Eskinder Nega, the Ethiopian government stated that Eskinder was sentenced not becausehe practiced his journalistic activities but because “he supported terrorist organizations”. The Official response also stated that Eskinder had a clandestine contact with the Eritrean government and Ginbot 7 Movement and also trained terrorists that sneaked in from Eritrea to Ethiopia. A popular Ethiopian journalist said on the matter to ESAT that the response the Ethiopian government gave to European parliamentarians was “hugely disgraceful”. Journalist Eskinder Nega won the 2012 PEN/Barbara Goldsmith Freedom to Write Award. He is now serving an 18-year sentence on terror charges. Eskinder’s wife, Journalist Serkalem Fasil had been arrested for one year and eight months in relation to the 2005 election and had also given birth to their sole child, Nafkot Eskinder while in prison. March 26, 2013: Fifty-nine people were killed when their Isuzu truck overturned, Ethiopian Satellite TV (ESAT) reported. News tip: BENISHANGUL-GUMUZ - Children and women were among the victims who perished when they were evicted from the Benishangul-Gumuz Region because they were ethnic Amhara, and couldn't live in the Benishangul-Gumuz region. Ethiopia has been a victim of a deliberate government policy that has fragmented the country - and hence the unityof the people - along ethnic lines. ESAT said 25,000 ethnic Amharas are on schedule to be uprooted from the Benishangul Areas into the Amhara region. Many rights groups consider the government actions as crimes against humanity. No medical help was rushed to the victims whose fate would have remained a mystery had it not been reported by a lone survivor. One of the poorest countries in the world, Ethiopia has the highest per capita rate of car fatalities in the world, with 190 deaths per 10,000 vehicles, according to a Newsweek report.

March 26, 2013: Bahir Dar - Ethiopia's ruling coalition completes transitionafter Meles - Reuters'

News tip: Ethiopia's ruling coalition re-elected Prime Minister HailemariamDesalegn as chairman on Tuesday, completing a smooth transition after the death last year of his predecessor Meles Zenawi who kept a tight gripon power for 21 years. Hailemariam, 47, was appointed premier in September, a month after the death of Meles, who was praised for steering economic growth into double figures but drew criticism from his opponents and rights groups for squeezing out dissent. Meles's death raised questions about whether his Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF), a coalition of four ethnic and regional based parties, would hold together or could come under strain as groups jostledfor influence. Opponents say there is infighting behind the scenes, but there was no indication of major rifts in the four-day meeting of the congress in the northern city of Bahir Dar. Some delegates questioned government policies before a 180-member coalition council voted behind closed doors for Hailemariam.

"The transition has gone smoothly - the first peaceful transition in the history of modern Ethiopia," said J. Peter Pham, director of the U.S.-basedMichael S. Ansari Africa Centre at the Atlantic Council think tank. "Whatever his faults, Meles gave Ethiopia a long period of stability and sustained economic growth," he said, adding there was no evidence of tensions that could break up the coalition. Meles's policies often involved aheavy role for the state and have delivered strong growth. The economy of east Africa's most populous country is expected to expand by 8.5 percent in the 2012/2013 financial year. "With the principles set forth by our late prime minister, we will carry on with our efforts to develop Ethiopia," Hailemariam told delegates, sporting a baseball cap emblazonedwith the coalition's emblems.

MELES' FOOTSTEPS: The post of chairman usually lasts about two or two and a half years, depending on when the congress is called. Hailemariam had been elected to serve out Meles' remaining months as chief of the EPRDF. Tuesday's re-election formalizes his position. The prime minister'spost runs for five years with the next election due in 2015. But the 547- seat parliament has only one seat held by an opposition politician and theEPRDF's opponents say they continue to be pushed to the sidelines of politics.

Four region-based parties make up the EPRDF - the Tigrayan People's Liberation Front (TPLF), the Oromo People's Democratic Movement (OPDM), the Amhara National Democratic Movement (ANDM) and the Southern Ethiopian People's Democratic Movement (SEPDM). Critics pointed to signs of discontent when it took a month after Meles's death toappoint Hailemariam, who also heads SEPDM. They also said his decision to appoint deputies from the three other parties was a ploy to ease ethnic rivalries. Ruling party members dismissed those accusations. "The EPRDF is a solid and cohesive party - cohesive in terms of leadership, cohesive interms of having very clear political and economic programs," said Abraham Tekeste, state minister at the Ministry of Finance and Economic Development. It has to be recalled that the 36 seat EPRDF Executive Council is elected by the Executive Committees of its four member parties flames of sectarian violence. Activist Tamagne Beyene has also addressedthe event.

March 27, 2013: Ethiopia: EPRDF Delegates Unhappy With Meles Eulogy'

Delegates of the ninth convention of the ruling EPRDF party have shown their dissatisfaction over a eulogy written for their late leader, Meles Zenawi, while some were critical of the quality of its writing and completeness of the content. Translated from Tigrigna, the eulogy was first presented to the congress of the TPLF, held in Meqelle two weeks ago, before it was presented to over 1,000 delegates at the conclusion of the ruling coalition's convention on Tuesday, held in Bahir Dar. The first tovoice such disappointment over the organisation of the eulogy and its content structure was Meles's widow. Elected to the political bureau of theTPLF for the second time and to the all too powerful Executive Committee of the EPRDF, Azeb Mesfin was displeased to see the eulogy incomplete.

Some of the points she argued as missed are Meles's place, role and the contributions he made as an Editor-in-Chief of the party's ideological organ, Addis Ra'ey. Azeb feels that the contributions Meles had made in originating the idea of forming a training facility for the rank and file, nowdirected by Addisu Legesse, and the manual he develop ought to be forcefully underlined. Azeb defended her late husband's legacy in relationsto how he had handled the conflict and the subsequent war with Eritrea.

Despite condemnations from his political opponents due to his heritage, Azeb told delegates that Meles had never negotiated on the national interests of Ethiopia. "Not even for a second," Azeb told delegates ratheremphatically.

Azeb described Meles's conduct during the war with Eritrea in the late 1990s as "extraordinary" in not showing what he had felt of the accusations, but focused on defending his beliefs and political positions regardless. She recalled her late husband as perhaps the only leader who had earned a little over 4,000 Br a month in net salary, but fought povertywith courage and resolve, while remaining selfless. "Meles didn't have a bank account," Azeb said. "He had neither an ID card nor a driving licence." These parts, Azeb argued, were not given their proper place in the eulogy, which was read by Hailemariam Desalegn, re-elected to chair the EPRDF twice since the death of Meles in August 2012. Hailemariam's re-election was fait accompli, although he was made to pass the test of contest to the office. His deputy, Demeke Mekonnen of ANDM, and Alemayehu Atomsa of OPDO, were nominated by their respective parties for the chairmanship, while leaders of the TPLF have declined to nominate their leaders, Fortune learnt. Hailemariam has won the chairmanship with a landslide, after bagging 176 votes of the 180 Council members of the ruling party, sources in the Council disclosed to Fortune.

Although the other two contenders have received two votes each against Hailemariam, Demeke too claimed the deputy chairmanship position with significant margin, claiming 146 votes against 25 given to his contender, Fortune learnt. Emerging as uncontested non-combatant leader of the Revolutionary Democrats since the party's formation in the late 1980s, Hailemariam was seen endorsing the conciliatory proposition made by Addisu, who remains one of the 13 political bureau members of the ANDMbut left out from the EPRDF's Executive Committee. Addisu has argued that the eulogy is filled with repetition, is not well organised, and suffers from losses in translation, while its structure is weak. Addisu urged delegates to let the EPRDF's Executive Committee rewrite the eulogy before it gets adopted as the party's official document, a proposition Hailemariam had secured its adoption by the Congress unanimously.

March 27, 2013: New Era of Political Leaders Emerges in Ethiopia - AP'
BAHIR DAR, Ethiopia: Ailing ruling party veteran officials in Ethiopia are leaving their posts to a group of younger leaders in the East African nationwhich enjoys close ties with Washington but is increasingly looking to China as a model. Newcomers dominated the ruling party's election of thepowerful 36-member executive and 180-member central committees. Theelection comes at the end of a four-day congress of the ruling Ethiopian Peoples' Revolutionary Democratic Front, or EPRDF, held at a regional town Bahir Dar. But the leadership change doesn't necessarily mean morepolitical space for the country's heavily prosecuted opposition which has only a single member in the 547 parliament seats. Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn on Monday called the opposition neo-liberal mouthpieces with zero contribution to a developmental state.
The ruling Ethiopian Peoples' Revolutionary Democratic Front, or EPRDF, in September clinched a first ever peaceful power transition for the country after late Prime Minister Meles Zenawi died on August 20. The sudden death of Meles had caused concern that the government he tightlyruled since 1991, and which remained a key ally for the U.S., would unravel in months. But Hailemariam, who had served as Meles' deputy since October 2010, was peacefully named the party chairman and later aprime minister in September. In a rare but frank reflection, Meles' long time senior aide and former Foreign Affairs Seyoum Mesfin on Monday admitted that the death of the late leader was a serious problem that tested the party. "I think we need to draw a lesson from the problem that was created after the martyrdom of our great leader Meles," Seyoum told 1,000 ruling party elites and their supporters that met for the party congress. He told his colleagues that the aging leaders need to retire and the lower officials be prepared to take the wheel. Seyoum and eight of hiscolleagues, all veteran members of Meles' Tigray People's Liberation Front (TPLF), have stepped down voluntarily. "I am really surprised by the pace,they are seriously implementing the leadership succession and most senior official are retiring," said Daniel Berhane, a political commentator and blogger who keeps a close watch on the ruling party's activities. "Withthe current pace of things as they say all veteran officials who led the armed struggle would vacate senior government and party posts by 2015." Daniel, however, stressed that not all parties are moving at the same pace. "The outgoing executive members of the Oromo Peoples' Democratic Organization (OPDO) will continue to participate in the executive committee with an "observer status"," he said.

And another competing party, the Amhara National Democratic Movement, did not retire most of its senior officials allowing for a possibleshift of power. Hailemariam and Deputy Prime Minister and Education Minister Demeke Mekonnen were re-elected on Tuesday as chair and deputy chair of the ruling party. Both in their late 40s, the two never tookpart in the armed struggle and are considered as part of the new generation of leaders. The four-day congress, despite the changes to the committees, however, did little to alter major government polices favoredby Meles. Hailemariam said the late leader's economic and social policies would remain in place. Meles favored tight political control while forging close ties with China to access loans to boost the country's infrastructure. Beijing is providing billions of dollars as loans for Ethiopia's fast expandingroad, telecom and now railway networks. The Ethiopian Investment Agency says over the last two decades, close to 920 Chinese companies came to Ethiopia to claim the largest share among foreign investors.

Ethiopia holds national elections in May 2015.

March 27, 2013: Two evictee children from Benishangul die ofasphyxiation'

Two children among a score of people of the Amhara ethnic origin, who have been evicted from the Benishangul Region and were being transported to Amhara Region, died due to asphyxiation today, a source told. Residents also said to ESAT that the mother of the deceased childrenwas unable to properly bury her children, “They were simply thrown into the desert” they stated. It was reported that another child was saved as she received prompt medical aid. According to our source that follows thesituation closely, around six ISUZU Lorries have each transported 70-80 people to the Amhara Region today. The source also stated that two evicted farmers have been found slaughtered. It is to be recalled that ESAT reported that fifty nine people had reportedly died after a lorry that was transporting 60 people of the Amhara ethnic origin and evicted from the BeniShangul Gumuz Region crashed into Jedesa River in Tekesha District of Ethiopia on March 24, 2013. It has been learnt that representatives from the Amhara Region have began talks with officials ofthe Benishangul Region about the matter. Source: ESAT News

March 27, 2013: A new era of political leadership emerges in Ethiopia, butdissent is still taboo - FoxNews' AP - BAHIR DAR, Ethiopia – Ailing ruling party veteran officials in Ethiopia are leaving their posts to a group of younger leaders in the East African nation which enjoys close ties with Washington but is increasingly looking to China as a model. The ruling party on Tuesday elected the powerful 36-member executive and 180- member central committees that are dominated by newcomers. The election comes at the end of a four-day congress of the ruling Ethiopian Peoples' Revolutionary Democratic Front. But the leadership change doesn't necessarily mean more political space for the country's heavily prosecuted opposition which has only a single member of parliament among the 547 seats. Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn on Monday wrote-off the opposition as neo-liberal mouthpieces with zero contributionto a developmental state.

March 27, 2013: Africa and its Politics of succession the Lessons thatcome with it'

Most African countries' constitutions specify that when a leader dies in office, his or her deputy or the head of the national assembly will step in until an election can be held. Some leaders, however, expect the designated "heir apparent" to display fawning personal loyalty. If he or she does not, political conflict can arise. Some African leaders have groomed relatives as successors. When President Omar Bongo Ondimba ofGabon died in 2009, the ruling party named his son, Ali Ben Bongo Ondima, who was foreign and defence minister, as the new president.

Presidents Faure Gnassingbé of Togo and Joseph Kabila of the DemocraticRepublic of the Congo succeeded their deceased fathers. Yet picking a relative can spark a revolt, as was the case of Egypt, where President Mohammed Hosni Mubarak's intention to install his son as his successor added to the opposition that erupted in the revolution of early 2011. In Burkina Faso, indications that President Blaise Compaoré may be grooming his younger brother, François, as a successor have stirred considerable controversy.

Nevertheless, while a strong democratic tradition can facilitate smoothsuccessions, considerations of political power may get in the way.

Following the death of Prime Minister Meles Zenawi in August, the succession process in Ethiopia was also successful despite initial hitches. There had been speculation that Mr. Meles' deputy, Hailemariam Desalegn, although a member of the ruling circle, could not be trusted with power because he did not belong to the Tigray People's Liberation Front (TPLF), a former militant group once led by the late Meles Zenawi and still a powerful faction within the ruling party. Ironically, the case for Mr. Hailemariam was made on the basis of ethnic considerations: to defuse tensions associated with the TPLF's domination over the years andto placate the Wolaytas, an ethnic minority that had never had a memberat the summit of power. Ultimately, Ethiopia's ruling group rallied aroundHailemariam Desalegn.

In the Eritrean example, it is difficult to predict what an eventually post-Issaias Affeworki Eritrea will look like: after and in spite of 21 years of forceful nation building, fault lines, especially of ethnicity, region and religion, are still there since the state lacks any institutional mechanismsfor peaceful transfer of power or even a clearly anointed successor, instability is to be expected, with the army the likely arbiter of who will rule next. As example President Issaias's disappearance from public viewfor several weeks in April 2012 amid rumours of his illness and death made evident the lack of further succession plan in Eritrea.

Some countries have handled succession better than others. Constitutionsshould be followed strictly when a president or prime minister dies, says Adewalo Banjo, an expert in African development. Without the rule of law,he argues, there can be "constitutional somersaults which bear all the hallmarks of what ridicules Africa before the world." The rule of law certainly prevailed in Ghana after President John Atta Mills died in July.

Unlike in Malawi, there was never any doubt as to who should take charge. Vice-President John Dramani Mahama took over the mantle of leadership in line with constitutional requirements and promptly rallied a distressed nation. Ghana's seamless transition reflected the strength of itsdemocratic system, in which ruling parties have twice handed over power to the opposition, after electoral defeats in 2000 and 2008. Nevertheless, while a strong democratic tradition can facilitate smooth successions, considerations of political power may get in the way.

March 27, 2013: EPRDF's succession politics in the Ethiopian context '

After the late dictator Meles Zenawi was rumored to have been sick, incapacitated or dead, Bereket Simon used the time cunningly to direct the course of the current Ethiopian political direction to suit his needs andthe needs of few of his close allies. In the past written that "the End of TPLF is here"; and current political developments in Ethiopia prove that indeed, has happened. TPLF revolution, Gedli Tigray is over, caput becauseBereket Simon is the undisputed victor for now.

Gedli Tigray died when the TPLF abandoned their number one agenda, Greater Tigray (Abay Tigray) after they decided to rule Ethiopia instead ofTigray. As Ambassador Herman Cohen stated, the minority hegemony in Ethiopia is unsustainable. However, and unfortunately for the people of Ethiopia, the minority regime was able to hold on to power using force, intimidation and by rigging elections. They managed for a while by dividing the nation along ethnic lines and with the blessing of Western donors that funded the dictatorship unreservedly in pursuit of their agendas and interests.

The disappearance of Meles Zenawi fueled speculations about successionand the country's future. The cloud of secrecy favored one person and that person is Bereket Simon head of Government Communication Affairs Office in the rank of Minister who used the time to plot Ethiopia's future political makeup and leadership. Bereket's agenda are based on his needfor his personal safety, since he has made many enemies from within thepolitical circles of TPLF. And to ensure that the successors are friendly to him as well as his allies.

Bereket also had a lot in his favor. He had the ears of Meles Zenawi throughout, hence he was privy to classified information, the process, contacts, the agendas, strategies and he understood the messages, the tone, and the methodology of the regime since he directed it. Therefore, itwas easy for Bereket to maintain the contacts and, importantly, to sell hissuccession agenda to the West particularly the US, which he was able to do rather easily. The US recognized the transition immediately. Firstly, Hillary Clinton met with Hailemariam Desalegn and soon thereafter a call from President Barack Obama was made acknowledging US support for PMHD. This was a major victory for Bereket since it meant the continuation of US support and that translated to continuity for the regime.

Ethiopia is going through another major transition. This transition willdetermine the long and short term future of the country for worse.

Because there is no way that the alliance between Azeb Mesfin and Bereket can indefinitely marginalize major ethnic, religious communities and political organizations of the nation. The transition signals a power shift in motion; fait accompli. The reason, the US will always opts for continuity and stability and Bereket Simon has sold that effectively to the US, a major financier of the regime and the Ethiopia's military. Hence, anychange that comes could only be expected from the people. Bereket Simon has done everything to ensure continuity and positioned himself asa major player. In fact, he is the undisputed key or main figure in Ethiopia.

March 28, 2013: Fantasy: Meles was a poor man who had no bankaccount - Azeb Mesfin says'

Side note: Azeb Mesfin, the widow of Meles Zenawi, said her husband's net salary was 4,000 Birr a month, too little money that he had no need for a bank account. The former first lady and widow of the late Ethiopian prime minister, Mrs. Azeb Mesfin, comments on the EPRDF party Convention in Bahir-Dar about her late husband's income was out of the meetings agenda context. She said that "Meles has came to this world with his mind, and he came up with an idea that would benefit the world and this country. He has never been selfish and never thought of himself and his family". She added "he was paid from EPRDF's contribution, whichwas only four thousand Birr (about US 250 dollar) something. We are proud that he could be to support his family with such a small income, andwe do not care about any rumors".

As analysts, Azeb becomes politically so mad that such an important fact was missing from the minds of those who write flawless tributes in honor of her late husband. Eulogy writers should heed her advice before she gets hold of them: First, she is a member of the powerful TPLF politburo; second, if money is power, Azeb is uber-rich, perched like an eagle's nest atop the mountain of gold called "EFFORT."

Delegates of the ninth EPRDF party convention have shown their dissatisfaction over a eulogy written for their late leader, Meles Zenawi. Translated from Tigrigna, the eulogy was first presented to the congress of the TPLF, held in Meqelle two weeks earlier, before it was presented to over 1,000 delegates at the conclusionof the ruling coalition's convention held in Bahir Dar. The first to voice such disappointment over the organisation of the eulogy while some werecritical of the quality of its writing and completeness of the content.

As a matter of fact, recently, the World Bank released its 448-page WorldBank (WB) report, “Diagnosing Corruption in Ethiopia” with evidence galore showing that Ethiopia under the absolute dictatorship of the MelesZenawi regime has become a full-fledged corruptocracy (a regime controlled and operated by a small clique of corrupt-to-the-core vampiric kleptocrats who cling to power to enrich themselves at public expense).

Perhaps the report’s findings should not come as surprise to anyone since“power corrupts and absolute power corrupts absolutely” Editor

March 28, 2013: Rebels destroy EPRDF-owned truck loaded with cotton'

WORETA, Northern Ethiopia - Rebels on March 28 burned down a ruling party truck that was parked at the town's bus terminal. Rebels of the Ethiopian Unity and Freedom Force (EUFF) set the truck that was loaded with tons of cotton on fire in this town that serves as a key distribution center for major cities like Gondar, Bahr Dar and Woldiya. The truck was ferrying the cotton to Bahr Dar city, a rebel spokesperson told Ethiomediaby phone on. Earlier this month, the rebels also burned down 22 cotton and sesame stores in Qucheet, a small transit town between Shehadee and Metema on the border with Sudan. All the stores were owned by security members of the ruling party EPRDF, EUFF said. Source: Ethiomedia

March 28, 2013: Gov’t and business people at loggerheads over Forex'

Ethiopian businesspeople have been unable to open Letter of Credit (LC) and import products due to severe shortage of dollars from the market. The government is only allowed to obtain hard currency for its mega developmental projects. This situation has recently led to tensions between the government and traders. Although the government recently issued a directive stating that all traders involved in import and export businesses can obtain hard currency, the practice did not please traders. The new directive, which is different from the previous one, requires traders seeking Forex to first deposit the amount in Birr to Banks. This means a trader, who requests for $100, 000 should deposit the money in Birr that is equivalent to the dollar requested. According to a businessmanESAT talked to, the government applied the new practice because it has face financial crisis. “If traders lodge the Birr in the banks and the banks fail to give us the dollars on time or at all, who would be responsible?” thetrader asks. The businessman says the distrust between the government and the business community has worsened. “I would not be surprised if the Regime falls short of finance. Imagine the expenditures since the late Prime Minister, Meles Zenawi’s death such as the over one hundred million birr spent for his funeral, 250 million birr to mark the “Day of Nations and Nationalities”, similar amount for “Defense Forces Week”, “EPRDF’s 9th Convention in Bahir-Dar” and now to mark the second anniversary of the start of the construction of the Grand Renaissance Dam, explain where themoney was constantly being drained off.” He added. The ruling Front in its9th Congress last week, admitted that it was faced with financial constraints.

March 28, 2013: Chinese president calls for closer cooperation withUganda, Mozambique, Ethiopia'

DURBAN, South Africa (Xinhua) -- Chinese President Xi Jinping said here Thursday that his country is ready to boost cooperation with Uganda, Mozambique and Ethiopia. Xi made the remarks during separate meetingswith Ugandan President Yoweri Museveni, Mozambican President ArmandoGuebuza and Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn. Calling Museveni a witness of China-Africa friendship and a trustworthy old friendof China, Xi said China attaches importance to the cooperation projects Uganda is interested in and stands ready to strengthenbilateral economic and trade cooperation on the basis of mutual benefit. China, he said, is willing to work with Uganda and other African countries to bring to fruit the proposed partnership regarding cross-border infrastructure construction on the continent. Yoweri Museveni, whose country now holdsthe rotating chairs of several African regional organizations, said Uganda cherishes the bilateral friendship and hopes for more Chinese support andassistance for the development of both Uganda and Africa.

March 28, 2013: Karuturi to Borrow From Sovereign Fund After FirstEthiopia Crop'

Karuturi Global Ltd. (KARG), the world’s largest rose grower, said it will borrow more than $100 million from a sovereign wealth fund to invest infarming in East Africa after selling its first produce from a plantation in Ethiopia. The company, based in Bangalore, India, produced 21,000 metric tons of corn in the last quarter of 2012 that sold for about $6.5 million in Ethiopia, Managing Director Sai Ramakrishna Karuturi said in aphone interview on March 27. The harvest, grown on its plantation in western Ethiopia, showed the project was “not a disaster” after floods destroyed a 60,000-ton corn crop in September 2011, he said.

Karuturi leased 100,000 hectares (247,105 acres) in the Gambella region from Ethiopia’s government in November 2010 for 2 million Ethiopian birr ($108,151) a year The deal with the unidentified fund comes after development banks declined to provide assistance because of “unfair”criticism of commercial farming by advocacy groups, Karaturi said.“Hundreds of millions” of dollars will be advanced to the company by the end of April and invested in Ethiopian projects as well as Kenyan flower farms, he said. Ethiopia’s land-commercialization drive has been attacked by groups including the California-based Oakland Institute, which says thefarms forcibly displace people and will increase poverty.

Horizon Plantations, majority owned by Saudi billionaire Mohamed al- Amoudi, leased a 20,000-hectare plot in the western Benishangul-Gumuz region in September to grow groundnuts to produce cooking oil. The benefits of commercial farming in lowland areas of the country include a boost to crop production to reduce hunger and more jobs and foreign earnings, according to Ethiopia's Agriculture Ministry. Since September 2009, the central government has leased 416,803 hectares to 34 domesticand foreign investors with an average plot size of 12,259 hectares, data from the ministry's website shows. The state identified 3.3 million hectares of land nationwide, an area about the size of Belgium, as suitablefor large-scale farming.

March 28, 2013: Over 3000 Ethnic-Amhara Evictees Remain Unsheltered'

Over 3000 people of the Amhara ethnic origin, who have been evicted from the Benishangul Region, have now been resettled into a land found in front of FenoteSelam City Administration of Western Gojjam Zone. The land is open air and all of the evictees are living unsheltered. According tothe residents of the City, the evictees are suffering from the scorching sunin the daytime and chill in the night. The majority of the homeless are mothers and children. The evictees are reportedly baking and eating the meager flour they brought along with them from Benishangul. No official has so far spoken to the evictees. It is to be recalled that sources reportedthat fifty nine people had reportedly died after a lorry that was transporting 60 people of the Amhara ethnic origin and evicted from the BeniShangul Gumz Region crashed into Jedesa River in Tekesha District ofEthiopia on March 24, 2013. Also reportedly that two children have died ofasphyxiation while being transported. According to commentators, history cannot condone those who are displacing poor farmers to satisfy their greed for land and corrupting the country by aligning with the tyrannical regime. They are collaborating with an internal enemy that is dismantling of the native people and driving them into abject poverty.

March 29, 2013: Ethiopians and Somalis in Yemen face racism,humiliation'

Many Africans from war-torn Somalia and Ethiopia seek their luck across the sea in Yemen. Luck they hardly find. Racism they do. The Ethiopian man on the bus, they pat him on the head and push him in the back. Theymake jokes about his pronunciation of the name of the market he is goingto. He sits still, waiting for the humiliation to pass. A Somali man gets beaten at the bus station because he allegedly stole something. He doesn't fight back, but cries. Passersby look the other way. One only has to use public transport in Sana'a, Yemen's capital city, for a day or two to realize that being black here is no joy. There are no official numbers, but Yemen is home to hundreds of thousands of African immigrants. Most come from Somalia, Ethiopia and Eritrea as refugees and non-refugeesboth.

According to Fouad Alalwi, head of the Sawa'a Organization for Anti- Discrimination, "It is a cultural thing in this region to treat non-citizens who are poor like this. People think that they bring criminality, although this has never been proven." "They see them as a burden for society, and for Ethiopians there is also a historical explanation," he adds. The history Alawi refers to goes back to Christianity's start, when the country was invaded a number of times by Ethiopians. They tried to Christianize the Yemeni population, but were eventually kicked out. Yemenis became one of the first Muslims, though a large group of Ethiopians stayed behind and became slaves - a practice that may influence how some Yemenis perceiveEthiopians today. March 29, 2013: Oromo struggle pioneers embrace Ethiopian struggle forjustice and democracy'

This came after a year long deliberations on the direction of the Oromo people's struggle in Ethiopia, a series of media interviews, and meetings across continents. In a statement released to the media, the Oromo Democratic Front (ODF) emphasized that the destiny of the Oromo peoplehas never been different from the destiny of the rest of the Ethiopian people. The ODF underscored that the interests of the Oromo people are equally shared by the rest of the people of Ethiopia. In a nutshell, the statement said.

Side note: The ODF in it's released statement called on to "the international community all other friends and various political organizations, including the ruling party EPRDF, others concerned with thesuffering of the Ethiopian people, to stand with us in implementing our vision and proposal of transforming the Ethiopian state to bringing peace and sustainable stability in Ethiopia and the Horn of Africa to join forces that would guarantee durable peace and stability in the country". ODF calls up on the ruling EPRDF "to reconsider its ultimately counterproductive policies of aspiring to indefinitely stay in power by fanning inter communal and interreligious suspicion and tension. Saying, "we call on the regime to join us in articulating and implanting policies that create sustainable stability". It has to be recalled that several Oromo political activists left the Eritrea-based Oromo Liberation Front and formeda new party called Oromo Democratic Front (ODF). Obo Leenco Lata, an inteelectual and co-founder of the Oromo Liberation Front (OLF), a rebel group formed in 1973 by Oromo nationalists to fight for the self-determination of the Oromo people was elected the Chairman of the new organization. The Oromo Liberation Front has fought a law-key guerilla warfare against last successive governments including the incumbent EPRDF led government. But it's influence waned in recent years as the organization battled numerous internal splits amid a dwindling supportfrom the Oromo diaspora. There are also many old OLF faces in the leadership of the new political party. For instance, all but three of the nine-members executive committee of the newly formed ODF were, at onepoint or another, former high ranking OLF figures, ODF vice chairman Dr. Dima Nagao Sarbo was among it's co-founders, and briefly, the first chairman of the Oromo Liberation Front (OLF).

Oromo Democratic Front (ODF): A Democratic Alternative For Ethiopia'

Updates: This came after a year long deliberations on the direction of the Oromo people's struggle in Ethiopia, a series of media interviews, and meetings across continents. Obo Leenco Lata, an intellectual and founder of the Oromo Liberation Front (OLF), a rebel group formed in 1973 by Oromo nationalists to fight for the self-determination of the Oromo people, was elected the chairman of the new organization. OLF has foughta low key guerrilla warfare against three successive Ethiopian regimes, including the current one. But its influence waned in recent years as the organization battled numerous internal splits amid a dwindling support from the Oromo diaspora.

There are many old OLF faces in the leadership of the new political party. For instance, all but three of the nine-member executive committee of theOromo Democratic Front (ODF) were, at one point or another, former highranking OLF officials. ODF Vice President Dr. Dima Noggo Sarbo was among its founders, and briefly, the first chairman of OLF. What is new, however, is perhaps their political program.ODF "advocates justice for theOromo and all persons and nations in Ethiopia," the party's declaration reads. "The founding of ODF ushers in a new phase in the Oromo nationalist struggle with the objective of working for the transformation ofthe Ethiopian Empire into a truly democratic multinational federation of allthe concerned nations."

The birth of ODF as an independent political party run by former OLF leaders and supporters is a clear break with the recent practice of forminga splinter of OLF which has nearly crippled the movement. The group's bold decision to depart from the usual business, whereby different factionscompete on who is more committed to the "original program" of forming an independent Oromo state than the other, is expected to force the Oromo nationals to look into the future. Nonetheless, ODF faces a crucial test in lifting the Oromo people's political struggle from its current dismal state. In addition, as has been evidenced over last year, a sizable numberof Oromo activists continue to insist on the formation of independent Oromia state as the only answer to the Oromo question in Ethiopia. It remains to be seen if ODF can win their endorsement.

The idea of Oromos having a democratic political force in Ethiopia was firstbrought to light by the ODF Chairman Lata in his speech in July 2000 at Oromo Studies Association in Toronto. His idea of democratizing Ethiopia has since divided the opinion of the vast Oromo diaspora. Some continue to be preoccupied with denunciation of Lata, albeit without a discernible alternative political agenda of their own. But the formation of ODF, in large part the realization of an idea he put forth in 2000 and two subsequent books he has written, is being hailed as the first bold move byarchitects of the mainstream Oromo nationalist camp in re-articulating thegoals of the Oromo movement crafted in OLF's program of 1976.

The news of the formation of the new political party for the Oromo people comes as Ethiopia is going through a set of leadership transitions since thedeath of Prime Minister Meles Zenawi last year. At its 9th congress, held inthe tourist city of Bahir Dar, the ruling party Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front formally elected Hailemariam Desalegn asits chairman and introduced a number of new faces to Ethiopia's political scene. It is not immediately clear if ODF is looking to make a leap toward participating in the 2015 general election in Ethiopia. But it's success is likely to be dependent on whether it would become another Diaspora- based outfit or one rooted inside the country.

March 29, 2013: Ethiopian Foreign Minister fled the scene on foot after a scuffle with opposition supporters in a South African Hotel' SOUTH AFRICA

- Ethiopian Foreign Minister Tewodros Adhanom's sprint to a waiting car after being separated from his body guards during scuffle with Ethiopian refugees today must have been the most embarrassing moment of his life.He lost his wallet, a note book and his glasses while being chased by a group of angry protesters. The foreign minister was in South Africa to meet with some 50 TPLF cadres and supporters at Hyatt Hotel in the suburb of Johannesburg when members of the Ethiopian community association stormed in. As the ruling TPLf continues to suffer total rejection by Ethiopians at home and abroad and as guerrilla activities flaring up in the northern part of the country, Tewodros Adhanom was trying to allay fears that the TPLF is collapsing when the sounds of "Freedom! Freedom! Let our voice be heard! Death to the TPLF!" began to reverberate inside and outside of the hall. Realizing the huge presence of the opposition, Tewodros panicked and sneaked out through the back doorand dashed towards the car with his driver sprinting after him but unable to catch up. Few refugees gave a mock chase amid laughter and excitement enjoyed by South African on lookers, hotel security guards andstaff members of the hotel. "Your foreign Minister is fit but a coward." A female hotel employee joked with the Horn Times reporter. The refreshments bought by the Ethiopian embassy for Tewodros and the TPLFmembers were consumed by the demonstrators and all TPLF flags and emblems including a huge picture of the dead Meles Zenawi were confiscated by the refugees. March 29, 2013: Ethiopia: Commercial Bank of Ethiopia Declares ForeignCurrency Is Sufficient'

The Commercial Bank of Ethiopia announced on Wednesday (March 27th) that there is amount of foreign currency needed for the national economy was "sufficient". The Bank's Business Development Director, Yesehak Mengesha, speaking to journalists said there should be no concern over a possible scarcity of foreign currency in the country. Any fear of this, he added, was created by a failure of proper utilization. He said "only 50 per cent of the total foreign currency provided by the bank has been utilized by customers" so the current rumors of any shortage are baseless. He said the Bank was supplying adequate amounts of foreign currency both inthe private and the public sectors, taking into consideration the country's overall developmental activities. The CBE's Vice-President, Mohammad Nuredin, added that the Bank monitors and predicts the inflow and outflowof foreign currency every fifteen days, taking customers' demands into consideration, it was able to meet the demands of its customers properly. He said the export sector and remittances were the major sources of foreign currency, and that the Bank was currently expanding its branch offices in different parts of the country with a view to increasing foreign currency inflow. March 30, 2013: Ethiopians in South Africa interrupt regime’s fundraisingsession'

Updates: Ethiopians residing in South Africa have interrupted a meeting called by the Regime to promote its policies among the immigrants livingthere. “Ethiopians, who heard that the Ethiopian government had organized a discrete meeting with invited Ethiopians, assembled within ashort notice and went to oppose the meeting. The meeting was also interrupted and officials that came from Ethiopia to lead meeting rushed to leave the Hall. We then conducted our own meeting in the same Hall.”Mulgeta Feleke, an Ethiopian residing in South Africa said. Mulugeta alsostated that there was no violence or confrontation during or after the protest. Meantime a group of pan-Ethiopians chased away government officials who were sent to Durban, to meet Ethiopians from in southern regions were treated in a similar manner.

March 30, 2013: Government officials are intimidating us - Evictees fromBenishangul-Gumuz'

Over 3000 people of the Amhara ethnic origin, who have been evicted from the Benishangul Region, now resettled in a large area found in frontof FenoteSelam City Administration of Western Gojjam Zone have said that they are being intimidated by the officials of the Region. “Although officials from the Region’s Capital, Bahir Dar and the Zone came to speakto us, their response was disheartening” said one of the evicted farmers. According to the farmers, they were told by the region's officials to immediately leave the town and move to their sub-districts. When we asked about our land and properities in Benishangual, the authorities said“we don’t know. Who told you to go there in the first place”, said another farmer. The homeless farmers fear epidemic diseases might kill their children and mothers due to the extreme lack of sanitation in the area.

The farmers are being provided food. It is not immediately clear if the government or Red Cross was providing them with food, however. A mother, who gave birth in the area, was ordered to leave the area, the farmers said. Other farmers, who are still in Kamashe Zone of BenishangulRegion and are about to be evicted, said the persecution and assassination on those, who have not left the region, is intensifying. One farmer was shot dead while two others have gone astray after groups tried to rob the properties of the evictees. Meanwhile, in its press release titled “The government is responsible for the death, eviction and exile of citizens! We seek the criminals to appear before court immediately”, the Unity of Democracy and Justice (UDJ) Party said “the language based ethnic federalism of the dictatorial EPRDF regime and its fervor to stay in power, is becoming a clear and present danger to the people of Ethiopia, who lived for centuries intermarried, interrelated and in tolerance”.

Denouncing the forced eviction of thousands of Ethiopians of the Amhara ethnic origin from the Benishangul Region and the death of 59 of these people, Unity Democracy and Justice Party (UDJP) stated that it believes the Regime should be taken responsible for these “inhuman acts”. The Party stated that it was paradoxical to allow foreign companies to buy andown land for cheaper rates while disallowing and evicting citizens. “We want the international community, human rights organizations and Ethiopians to be informed of this inhumanity” UDJP noted in its press release. UDJP urged that the forced eviction should stop immediately and those already evicted be given compensation. The Officials of the Amhara Regional State have not so far given any further explanation regarding theissue. ESAT News

March 30, 2013 Ethiopia imports $1 billion in fuel from Sudan via Djibouti'

(ADDIS ABABA) - The Ethiopian Petroleum Supplier Enterprise (EPSE) saidon Saturday that the nation has imported over 1 million metric tonnes of petroleum from neighbouring Sudan via the port of Djibouti. Officials said the stated fuel amount was imported at a cost $1.12 billion over the past six months. A similar amount of petroleum is expected to be imported over the next six months to meet the growing demand for energy in one of Africa’s emerging and fastest growing economies. The fuel imported during first half of the Ethiopian fiscal year was a rise of 21% in comparison to the same period last year. According to EPSE’s spokesperson, Alemayehu Tsegaye, the imported1,091,823 metric tonnes of fuel surpasses the initial planned target of

1,093, 073 metric tonnes. Ethiopia imports up to 85% of its annual oil consumption from neighbouring Sudan, largely due to its geographic proximity. The Horn of Africa nation saves at least $10 million in transit related costs per year by using Sudanese oil sources rather than importingfrom markets further afield, such as the Middle East. During the stated period of the budget year, Ethiopia has also imported over 125,000 metrictonnes of coal and spent over $20 million on maintaining sustainable energy supplies for manufacturing and industry. Over 50% of Ethiopia's imports are to meet the nation's fuel demand. As Ethiopia and Sudan link their power grids, the two East African countries are planning to offset the revenues earned from Ethiopia's sale of hydropower processed electricity to Sudan with the equivalent expenditure on Sudanese fuel. Under Ethiopia's five-year Growth and Transformation Plan (GTP) launched two- and-a-half years ago, the government is spending billions of US dollars onthe construction of several power plants, including the Ethiopian Great Renaissance Dam on the Blue Nile River, which will be Africa's largest once complete. Ethiopia's electricity generation capacity is set to increase to 10,000 MW by 2015 up from the current level of about 3,000 MW once the power projects are complete, making the country a regional power hub. Ethiopia hopes that power exports can provide a crucial bridge to its plans to develop the country's economy. (ST)

March 31, 2013: Birtukan Mideksa: The US must speak out for those prisoners of conscience in Ethiopia' So far, the government has failed to right a long history of wrongs. With prisoners of conscience still languishing in its prisons, Ethiopia must receive the clear message – especially from allies like the United States – that continued human rightsviolations will not be tolerated. Independent journalists in Ethiopia face grave threat of imprisonment if they criticise the state or its laws. "My journey to become a political prisoner in Ethiopia began as a federal judgefighting to uphold the rule of law. Despite institutional challenges and even death threats, I hoped to use constitutional principles to ensure respect for basic rights. But, having witnessed firsthand the government disregard for fundamental constitutional rules, I joined the opposition andbecame the first woman to hold a high-level position in an Ethiopian political party. Our party – the Coalition for Unity and Democracy – contested the 2005 elections with a multiethnic platform based on economic liberalism and respect for individual rights. As momentum gathered, many hoped change had finally arrived in Ethiopia. But after early reports showed our party ahead in the polls, the government dashedour optimism by throwing me and my colleagues behind bars and declaring a victory for the ruling party. When I emerged after 21 months in prison, our party was outlawed and the political landscape had grown increasingly repressive. But we forged ahead, forming the new Unity for Democracy and Justice Party and continuing to advocate for dialogue and non-violent political reform in Ethiopia. Authorities arrested me again in 2008, claiming that I had mischaracterised the circumstances of my release. But peaceful political activities are not the only way to become a prisoner of conscience in Ethiopia. Independent journalists face the very real threat of imprisonment in response to their work. Authorities have detained my friend Eskinder Nega eight times over his 20-year career as ajournalist and publisher." Mrs. Birtukan Mideksa is a fellow at Harvard University's WEB Du Bois Institute for African and African American Research and a former prisoner of conscience in Ethiopia.

March 31, 2013: Ethiopia: Ambassadors, Ministry Officials Visit theRenaissance Dam'

News tip: Ethiopian Ambassadors and Director General's of the Ministry ofForeign Affairs paid a visit to the construction site of the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam on Saturday (March 31st). The visit was arranged by the Ministry in connection with the celebration of the second anniversary of the start of the project. The visitors were welcomed by Engineer Simegenew Bekele upon arrival at the construction site. Engineer Simegenew briefed the ambassadors and officials about the project and the progress of the work. Responding to questions, he noted that 18% of the project had been completed and the work was progressing in accordance with the schedule. GoE (Addis Ababa)

March 31, 2013: UN finds imprisonment of Ethiopian journalist arbitrary under international law and calls for immediate release' WASHINGTON DC

- In an opinion released today by Freedom Now, the UN Working Group onArbitrary Detention found the Government of Ethiopia's continued detention of independent Ethiopian journalist and blogger Eskinder Nega aviolation of international law. The panel of five independent experts from four continents held that the government violated Mr. Nega's rights to freeexpression and due process. The UN Working Group called for his immediate release. Mr. Nega is serving an 18-year prison sentence on terror and treason charges in response to his online articles and public speeches about the Arab Spring and the possible impact of such movements on the political situation in Ethiopia. Arrested in September 2011, Mr. Nega was held without charge or access to an attorney for nearly two months before authorities charged him under Ethiopia's widely criticized anti-terror laws. This is the eighth time during his 20-year careeras an independent journalist and publisher that the Ethiopian government has detained Mr. Nega. His appeal has been repeatedly postponed, most recently on March 27, 2013.

March 31, 2013 (ADDIS ABABA) - Ethiopia using spyware to monitorpolitical activists: report'

Updates: A recently released report has indicated that the Ethiopian government is using a controversial spyware software called FinSpy to monitor the political activities of opposition groups in the country. The report by the Citizen Lab based at the Munk School of Global Affairs at theUniversity of Toronto said Ethiopia has used the surveillance technology to interfere with the political activities of Ginbot 7, an exiled opposition movement, designated as a terrorist entity by the Ethiopian government in 2011. The researchers found a version of FinSpy in Ethiopia that trickedusers into downloading FinSpy embedded photos and an image file of Ginbot 7. According to the report, the Internet Protocol (IP) address used in tracking the opposition's movements belonged to Ethiopia's state- owned telecommunications corporation, Ethio-Telecom. "The existence of a FinSpy sample that contains Ethiopia-specific imagery and that communicates with a still-active command and control server in Ethiopia strongly suggests that the Ethiopian government is using FinSpy," said Morgan Marquis-Boire, a security researcher and technical advisor at the Munk School and a security engineer at Google.

Ethiopian officials were unavailable on Sunday to respond to the allegations. However, in comments made to a local newspaper, an unnamed official from the ministry of communications and information technology (MoCIT) has dismissed the purchase and use of spyware technologies. The report revealed that more countries are using the spyware technology than previously thought. FinSpy was detected in 25 countries, including the United States, as well as several other countries with dubious human right records. The software is designed to secretly infiltrate targeted computers or mobile phones to monitor communicationsand siphon data, such as passwords and audio from Skype calls, which it then transmits back to a server.

FinSpy surveillance software is commonly used by law enforcement agencies to monitor criminals. However, the report shows it is also beingwidely used by a number of repressive regimes, namely to spy on dissidents, independent human rights groups and critical journalists. Thesoftware, which was developed in Germany and is available for purchase through a UK-based subsidiary of the Gamma Group, is "regularly sold tocountries where dissenting political activity and free speech is criminalised", researchers said in the report. The Citizen Lab conducts research in the fields of digital media, global security, and human rights,with the aim of analysing and impacting the exercise of political power in cyberspace. March 31, 2013: Ethiopia wants ancient heritage saved'

ADDIS ABABA: Ethiopia's Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the Heritage Authority has announced an ambitious project that aims to recover some3,000 ancient artifacts from the country that are currently housed at museums and private collections across the globe. Wolde Darsema, an official at the Heritage Authority, said that "thousands of historic items, ranging from the monumental to the miniscule, are to be found in museums or in private hands in France, Israel, Vatican, Germany, Italy, the UK and elsewhere." The Authority said in a press statement "that in addition to the more obvious and better known items in museums it is also working to bring back artifacts in the hands of individuals throughdiplomatic channels: it is also trying to purchase articles or persuade people to present them as a gift.”

Efforts so far have managed to recover the Axum Obelisk, the gold Lalibela cross and a handful of other historic items. Darsema said that thetask of recovering many of these items was “particularly difficult as manyare in private hands, and museums remain reluctant to part with items however obtained.” The Ministry of Foreign Affairs is cooperating with theHeritage Management Authority, and the MoFA Spokesperson, Ambassador Dina, says the Ministry is working to obtain the return of various artifacts through bilateral channels, they told Bikyanews.com on Sunday. March 31, 2013: Party Supporters from counties to vote local councilselection in Addis'

Alarmed by the under registration of voters in Addis Abeba, the Ethiopian government has brought potential voters from regional states, who would be casting their votes in the upcoming local and Addis Ababa City Council elections due to be held in April this year. The potential voters, imported from various regional states, were yesterday given training on how they could vote in various Woredas of Addis Abeba. In Netsanet School alone, found in Nifasilk Lafto Sub city, Addis Abeba, over 600 voters were trainedon technical issues and simulation, one of the participants and a member of the ruling Front that attended the training told ESAT. Over 5000 trainees that are also members of the ruling, Ethiopian People’s Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) took part in yesterday’s training. ESAT understands that many more voters are to be trained in successive rounds. ESAT had reported that in order to increase the smaller number ofregistered voters in Addis Abeba, EPRDF had also trained street dwellers to vote in local polling stations in Addis Abeba.

March 31, 2013: Ethiopia's Succession Surprse'

Opinion: By Daniel Berhane - The late Prime Minster Meles Zenawi was both present and absent at the bi-annual EPRDF Convention held last week in Bahir Dar, a few kilometres from the source of the Blue Nile. As usual, the Convention was preceded by the congresses of its four memberparties - Oromo People's Democratic Organisation (OPDO), Amhara National Democratic Movement (ANDM), Southern Ethiopia People's Democratic Movement (SEPDM) and Tigray People's Liberation Front (TPLF). Days earlier, they held their congresses and elected 250 of their members as voting members of the EPRDF congress. This is in addition toofficials of the EPRDF-led government who are automatically voting members of the Convention. Of course, several retiring veteran EPRDF leaders and prominent non-member officials, scholars and the like were also in attendance; although the seating arrangement and active participation of some did not squarely fit with that of a mere of observer. It was not only the remarks made and the t-shirts worn by over 1,200 participants that made Meles' presence strongly felt. The peak of the glorification of Meles was not even found in the hour-long eulogy read by Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn, which many participants found to be insufficient. Rather, it was the leader of the Harari National League, anEPRDF affiliate party, who stunned many and irked conservative Muslims by declaring, during his "solidarity message" at the beginning of the convention, that "as we say to religious leaders, I say peace and honour be upon Meles Zenawi."

However, Meles's absence was conspicuous halfway through the Convention when the debate shifted focus to the succession plan - the intergenerational leadership plan of the ruling party, adopted in June, 2009. Intended to replace the "old generation" of leaders with new ones, the succession plan was originally described as a three-phase process, which began at the 2010 Convention and was to be finalised over the nexttwo years. At the 2015 Convention, the last round of the old generation leaders, including the late Prime Minister, were to resign from high-level "executive roles" into mere "advisory roles". Indeed, the ruling party assured its members and observers, approximately two weeks after the funeral of Meles Zenawi, that the succession plan would remain in place and even pledged to complete the process during this Convention. But, it was difficult to count on that pledge, as discussion with EPRDF officials seemed to indicate that the plan was merely an outline. EPRDFs leadership has undergone a second round of changes, in particular with itsmember parties electing their representatives to the 36-seat executive committee. However, a few EPRDFites deemed the scale of the change unsatisfactory, especially at the level of the 180-seat EPRDF council. The composition of member parties' central committees have gone up from 45to 81 seats, including their 45 representatives to the EPRDF council, and the composition of each parties' executive committees has risen from nineto 13 members, including nine representatives to the EPRDF executive committee. The dissatisfaction on the implementation of the succession process, observed in group discussions and informal talks at the Convention, was not limited to the partly justifiable expectation that the "old generation" would be completely replaced during the current elections. Nor was it primarily attributable to a handful of controversial cases. Rather, the disquiet arose from a level of confusion, which emanated in the absence of any solid plan.

Indeed, the debate, as well as contradictions and inconclusiveness, amongveteran officials who "explained", criticised and forwarded recommendations, regarding the succession process, was confirmation of what I cautioned about last month, in my column, headlined - "Transition Plus Confusion", which stated: "No matter how the forthcoming EPRDF Convention handles the matter, what's more important is whether there will be a move to institutionalise the generational transition."

"Articulating

a clear definition of a leadership generation and setting an agreed collective mechanism, through which to select prospective successors by incumbents, should be on top of the agenda. Again, laying down a clear method of grooming successors that boosts the authority of the prospective successors themselves and, precluding unnecessary contest by their peers, goes a long way to ensure stability and efficiency." Indeed, not only the general confusion, but also the apparent disenchantment of some officials and the stern remarks from Seyoum Mesfin, who moved, in 2010, from the TPLF and EPRDF executive committees to the second tier of leadership, and from being a Foreign Minister to the Ambassador of Ethiopia to China, were alarming. Not only did Seyoum reiterate the need to apply my recommendations, but too, he was critical of the unscientific manner in which the process was being handled so far; the divergence of the implementation among member parties and, he even went as far as tocriticise some of them, specifically. I am not acquainted with Seyoum's speech style, nor to the debate style of EPRDF officials in their internal forums. That was suggested as the cause of my "unwarranted alarm" by ruling party veterans, who downplayed the scenario in corridor chats.

This is an in-house discussion, where everyone speaks his mind until a decision is reached - the point from which onwards the principle of "democratic centralism" applies, I was reminded. Reassuringly, they claimed, strong expressions are meant to emphasise their points. The debate would have been hotter if Meles was presiding, as he would have directed it towards weaknesses and differences. It may or may not be true, although it does seem likely, that Meles would have precluded the sense of confusion, either through prior preparations or personal charm. What was more alarming, was not the absence of consensus or a dominant figure to assures an eventual convergence of mind, but rather the absence of an official with an articulated idea of progression. AlthoughBereket Simon and Abay Tsehaye left the impression that they have a reasonable grasp - and were bent on leading the process - their remarks were more a defense of the path traveled, and less informative on what was to come. Indeed, keeping a political plan of the nature of succession amorphous, may be deemed useful, both for flexibility and manoeuvre, bysome. However, if last week's Convention is to be instructional, it shows that the door for speculation and disagreement is still very much open.

Such an uncertainty undermines the cohesive image that the succession process was supposed to reinforce about the leadership of the EPRDF and,by extension, the nation. Source: Addis Fortune

March 31, 2013: Addis to have a new palace'

The Ethiopian People’s Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) is to builda new Palace the premises of the Addis Abeba Conference Center, Sidest Kilo, Addis Abeba.According to ESAT’s Reporter in Addis Abeba, the regime wants to leave the historical Menelik Palace in Arat Kilo and move to a new one. The Center was also selected because it is isolated from the City center and is easy to secure. Shanty and organizations found near theConference Center will soon be cleared in the pretext of development, our Reporter added. The government has also ordered people who were preparing to construct buildings, to stop the construction. It is to be recalled that the widow of the late Ethiopian Prime Minster, Meles Zenawi, Azeb Mesfin, was building a new mansion in Menelik Palace worth over 60 million birr.

April 1, 2013: Forcefully evicted Ethiopians say are helpless'

Over 3000 people of the Amhara ethnic origin, who have been forcefully evicted from the Benishangul Region of Ethiopia, now deported into a landfound in front of FenoteSelam City Administration of Western Gojjam Zoneand Bahir Dar City, say they are in dire situation as the Federal Government has been unable to offer them any solution. Over three thousand of the displaced have reportedly now been collected from FinoteSelam Town and moved into woodland in a rural village called Bakel,a farmer in the village said. The father of three also laments that children,pregnant women and ailing people, who have become homeless, are suffering from the scorching sun and chilly weather every day. An evictee,who was deported during the first round of eviction process and now lives in Bahir Dar City, said that he was told by the Region's officials that the problem does not concern Region three but six. Discouraged by the responses of the Amhara Region officials, the evictee's attempt to return back to Benishangul and find help was also unsuccessful, he added. "If wecannot move and work in other regions, then the Amhara Region should give us a land. We also plead Ethiopians to follow our situation attentively"he said. The forced eviction of Ethiopians of the Amhara ethnic origin is being denounced by various political parties. The Ethiopian National Transitional Council (ENTC) stated that every Ethiopian has the right to live and work in any region and vowed to struggle until this was respected. Moresh Wogene Amhara Organization said on its press release stated that this is "part of the genocide against the Amhara people".

Ginbot 7 Movement on its part stated that the plot against the Amhara people was part of the plot against the Ethiopian people. Ginbot 7 said that the eviction and attack against Amhara people in Ethiopia is a racist crime that is punishable under the Ethiopian and international law. Effortsto speak to Ethiopian officials on the issue were unsuccessful. ESAT News

April 2, 2013: Ethiopia: Muslim Protesters Face Unfair Trial - Open Hearings to Family, Independent Monitors, Media – HRW (Nairobi) – Despite controversial trials that international rights groups have labeled "unfair" in calling on the Ethiopia government to put at end to legal actionagainst Muslim protesters,the prosecution of 29 Muslim protest leaders and others charged under Ethiopia's deeply flawed anti-terrorism law raises serious fair trial concerns. The trial is scheduled to resume in AddisAbaba on April 2, 2013, after a 40-day postponement. The case has already had major due process problems. Some defendants have alleged ill-treatment in pre-trial detention. The government has provided defendants limited access to legal counsel and has taken actions that undermined their presumption of innocence. Since January 22 the High Court has closed the hearings to the public, including the media, diplomats, and family members of defendants. “There seems to be no limit to the Ethiopian government’s use of its anti-terrorism law and unfairtrials to stop peaceful dissent,” said Leslie Lefkow, deputy Africa director. “The government’s treatment of these Muslim leaders bears the hallmarksof a politically motivated prosecution.

April 2, 2013: Finding gay rights in anti-LGBT Ethiopia'

News Analysis: We reported over the past year or so a great deal on the battle for gay rights in Ethiopia and the murder-like reaction that talking about being gay brings about in the country. We have spoken to gay men,lesbians and numerous others who remain in hiding, anonymous to their families, and often their friends. What was surprising to me, as a reporter,was the virulent and violent nature of the comments that arose from reporting on a few peoples’ efforts to live a normal, equal life in a country that supposedly prides itself on its peaceful nature. A number of comments and angry emails have been flowing in that call for the death ofEthiopia’s small lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender (LGBT) community. “kill them all these rubbish people ,the country never allowed this kind of community,” one comment at the end of the article stated. In yet another, a user linked anti-LGBT sentiment to the Bible in claiming that Ethiopia’s LGBT community should leave the country or face reprisals.“No the same sex marriage in Ethiopia because that is the historical and Christianity country so that is the better thing …in the bible also not allow to be same sex marriage it is a big sin ..sorry for you guys who is the gay ppls …shame on you …also,” it read.

The article detailed a young man who was hopeful that Ethiopians were becoming more accepting and open to the gay community, but the comments show that there remains a staunch anti-LGBT sentiment in the East African country. “Sometimes you just can get around those types of people,” David Emete, the man featured in the article, told Bikyanews.comafter seeing the comments. “If they don’t understand or meet gay people, they won’t know better.” This highlighted for me a personal issue about whether or not we should be reporting on such a contentious issue that could see the death of a source if their identity went public. It is a strugglethat many reporters face across Africa, where the death penalty and otherjail terms are on the books for homosexual activity. In the end, we believethat by reporting on these very real issues that affect more than a handfulof Ethiopians we can educate the world on the happenings in the LGBT community in Ethiopia and across Africa. It is our duty as newsmakers to tell stories as accurately as possible. It is frustrating to see the calls for death to fellow citizens, my citizens, but hopefully by writing about these issues, more and more Ethiopians will begin to see that being gay is notsomething to be afraid of. Source: Bikya News by Mohammed Awad

April 3, 2013: An int'l lawyer and jurist says forced eviction of Amhars isan "ethnic cleansing" by itself'

News tip: Dr. Yacob Hailemariam, a former UN prosecutor in the Rwanda genocide trial in Tanzania, said to ESAT that the current forced eviction of Ethiopians of the Amahra ethnic origin from Benishangul Region and also last year from Gurafarda, South Ethiopia, is "an ethnic cleansing crime". Dr. Yacob said though the crime is not "genocide", it is an "ethnic cleansing" which could be instigated anytime and is punishable according to Ethiopian or international laws. The scholar advised Ethiopian officials to think about the issue twice. "If Ethiopians inside and outside the Country present tangible evidences to the United Nations Security Council,the perpetrators of this act could be accused" Yacob added. The acts coulddestabilize the Region's stability, He said. Recalling the statements of the late Ethiopian Prime Minister Meles Zenawi, who once stated that the evictions of Amharas was not because of their ethnicity but because they cleared forests and illegally settled, Yacob said "even if they cleared the forests, they should be accused for deforestation but not be deported backto their native regions". Asking every Ethiopian to denounce this act, the Scholar also said that all Ethiopian officials are responsible for this crime and the arguments being presented by the Government are "completely unacceptable". He said he was personally disturbed by the acts.

April 3, 2013: Water interruptions continue to plague the entire Addis'

Water supply has been interrupted in a large part of Addis Ababa, particularly neighborhoods at the outer areas of the city, for over a week now, according to Ethiopian Review sources. Many of the newly built condos also do not have running water, causing health risks to residents. It is becoming impossible to live in some of those condos because of the awful smell that is caused by clogged pipes. Supplying citizens with clean water is the most basic service that a government must provide. In Ethiopia, however, the so-called government is busy spending hundreds ofmillions of dollars on weapons and to spy on dissidents, while it is unable to provide residents of the capital city with tap water. Such things happenin countries that are ruled by idiots.

April 3, 2013: Scholar accuses Ethiopian authorities of "ethnic cleansing"

News updates: Ethiopian authorities could be charged with the crimes of"ethnic cleansing" at anytime in their life, a leading law professor said.

Yacob Hailemariam, a prominent opposition leader who previously was a senior UN Prosecutor at the Rwanda Genocide Trials, told the Ethiopian Satellite TV (ESAT) the recent forceful eviction of members of the Amharafrom Benishangul-Gumuz area was an obvious case of ethnic cleansing which is a serious crime for which Rwandan officials were sentenced to life in prison. Last week about 59 Ethiopians targetted as 'Amhara' were killedwhen their truck overturned as they were being forcefully removed from the Benishangul-Gumuz region. The crime is not 'genocide' but it is a crime of'ethnic cleansing' for which the current authorities could be prosecuted according to both Ethiopian and international laws, the business law professor warned. If Ethiopians at home and abroad collect evidences for the UN Security Council, the officials could be brought before the court of an international law, Yacob warned. Scholars generally agree and define ethnic cleansing as the "the systematic and violent removal of undesired ethnic groups from a given territory."Yacob said ethnic cleansing is an international crime and the perpetrators of the crime could be prosecuted at an international criminal court. "The forceful deportation of people because they speak a certain language could destabilize a region, and if reported with tangible evidences, the UN Security Council could order the International Criminal Court to begin to examine the crimes," Yacob said. "At the Rwanda Tribunal, individuals who were charged with ethnic cleansing were sentenced to life in prison," Professor Yacob said of the event for which he was a Senior UN prosecutor. Benishangul officials as well as the late dictator Meles Zenawi at one time had said those being removed were for destroying forests andnot for being Amhara. Commenting on this remark, Yacob said people accused of cutting down trees may face legal action but to condemn them to ethnic cleansing is to commit a very serious crime that the perpetratorscould face justice irrespective of the passage of time - even 30 or 40 years later. Ethiopian authorities should be duly reminded that their actions of removing citizens from any part of their country is a criminal offense prosecutable as per Ethiopian and international humanitarian laws,Professor Yacob Hailemariam warned. Ethiopia is signatory to several conventions, including Universal Declaration of Human Rights, International Convention on Civil and Political Rights, Africa Human and Peoples Rights Charter, which, among others, state in clear terms that anycitizen of a certain country has the right to work and live in any part of hisor her country. Therefore, Yacob warned, there cannot be any excuse like a resettlement program etc. to violate such laws and commit the serious crimes of 'ethnic cleansing.' Source: Ethiomedia- WASHINGTON, DC

April 3, 2013: Officials of Amhara (Finote-selam) sub-district say evicteeshave been sheltered'

Food Sufficiency and Security Section Heads of the Finote Selam Town, Western Gojjam Zone said the thousands people of the Amhara ethnic origin, who have been forcefully evicted from the Benishangul Region ofEthiopia, have been provided with shelter, food, and medical services intheir Town. One of the officials, Gezachew Belay said to ESAT that the deportees are now settled in premises previously used for Cobblestone production in the Town. “The deportees will remain in the premises untilthe discussion between the two Regional States is completed and the people are returned back” Gezachew said. However, he also said that he cannot be sure if the deportees will return back to Benishangul Region asit all depends on the outcomes of the discussions between the two Regional States. ESAT has also learnt that the deportees are receiving protection by the Federal Police. Ashebir, Head of the FinoteSelam Town Security Section, said that there has been no security problem since the evictees reached in the Town.

It is to be recalled that ESAT had reported that the evictees had said theywere left unsheltered last week.

April 3, 2013: TPLF veteran Sebhat Nega calls Ethio-Eritreans to a “peopleto people” meeting'

Sebhat Nega, the Executive Director of the Ethiopian International Institute for Peace and Development (EIIPD), an Institute that is under the Ethiopian Ministry of Foreign Affairs, has called Ethiopians and Eritreans for a “people to people” meeting due to be held this coming Saturday April 6, 2013 in Addis Abeba Hilton Hotel. The meeting is the first of its kind to be called by a governmental body since the former friends, the Shabia led Eritrean regime and EPRDF, had clashed 15 years ago. It is to be recalled that the new Prime Minister Hailemaraim Dessalgnhad said in an interview with Aljazeera that he was willing to go to Asmera, Eritrea and speak to President Issyas Afeworki. It is not immediately clear if this “people to people” meeting was a corollary of thePrime Minister’s remark. After Meles lost his legal battle in The Hague against Eritrea, he invited all Eritreans that he had deported when the warbegan to return back, get back their assets and restart their lives in Ethiopia. Moreover, the late Prime Minster had confessed that Eritreans that come through the borders to Ethiopia have been allowed to receive special assistance and get free education in Ethiopian universities. Meles was often criticized for failing to help Ethiopians whose properties were impounded in Eritrean ports. ESAT’s source says that the meeting that Sebhat called is aimed at assisting the few Eritrean opposition parties thatare supported by the Ethiopian government. According to reports, most Eritrean opposition parties have become weak due to internal rivalries anddisagreement.

April 3, 2013: Ethiopia Drafting Law to Regulate Internet, Radio and TV'

Ethiopia is preparing a draft law to regulate Internet, radio and TV. The draft is being prepared by a steering committee constituting the EthiopianBroadcasting Authority, Ethiopian Ministry of Communications & Information Technology and Information Network Security Agency. The Ethiopia Radio & Television Agency (ERTA) is also participating in the drafting process of the new law. The draft bill is expected to be finalized and forwarded to the Council of Ministers before the end of the current Ethiopian Fiscal Year, according to Leul Gebru, deputy director general of Ethiopian Broadcast Authority. The bill is required to regulate Internet, television and radio broadcasts, once the current analogue infrastructure is transformed to a digital system. “The law is needed, in order to preparefor the management complexities that will follow digitization,” Leul said. Afederal agency will also be established to administer the broadcasting network and radio waves, with Ethiopian Broadcast Authority controlling the content transmitted on different channels, according to Leul. Under the new bill, additional licenses are expected to be issued, including mobile TV broadcasting license, Bedlu Weldemariam, mass media registration & license director, at the Ethiopian Broadcast Authority, told Fortune. The International Telecommunications Union (ITU) agreed in 2006, to change all broadcasting frequencies to digital by 2015, with extended period until 2018 for Ethiopia and most African countries. The change to digital will not only require the import of digital televisions, but also 74 additional transmitters, necessary to transmit the extra channels, according to Leul. Source: Fortune

April 3, 2013: Hope for Ethiopia’s Muslim population'

News Analysis: ADDIS ABABA - Despite controversial trials that international rights groups have labeled “unfair” in calling on the Ethiopia government to put at end to legal action against Muslim protesters, thereis hope in the country that attitudes toward faith are beginning to changeat a grassroots level. Leading that charge are young people, who have been able to come together and work together for what they say is the common goal of “making Ethiopia better.” Early last month, a “jihadist” film that was shown on television sparked anger from both Muslims and non-Muslims, who lashed out saying that the film does not represent theirviews and Islam is not a terrorist organization or faith. The film, titled “Boko Haram in Ethiopia” denounced the Islamic leaders of the now year-long protest movement for greater rights, but also attempted to link the militant activities of the Nigeria group to a new wave of Islamic revival in the East African country, which has led to rifts in the Ethiopian Muslim community. Many of those same leaders are now standing trial for their participation in protests against the intervention of the Ethiopian government in internal Islamic affairs in the East African country.

Since last October, a group of concerned students have repeatedly told Bikyanews.com that the ongoing tension between the government and Muslims should be ended and they called on the government here in AddisAbaba to do more to ensure that violence does not erupt again. “We believe that the government is creating this tension and fear of sectarian conflict in the country by not allowing the Muslim population to have their will in their own affairs,” said the group meeting at a cafe. They added that the youth of the country should be consulted more “because we haveconnections with one another that goes beyond religious lines.” “We have for so long been a fragmented country in many ways, with Muslims and Christians battling for their power,” said Teresa, a 21-year-old marketing student and Christian. “Now, as we have the opportunity to really make a change in how the country is run, we have to move quickly or face thesame dictatorship that tore us apart for decades," she told Bikyanews.com, referring to the iron grip of late PM Meles Zenawi.

Her Muslim counterparts agree that the time is now for change, but how that will happen is anyone's guess. They remain skeptically optimistic thatthe country can gather around what Hassan Mahammad said was the country's most important resource, "the people." He argued that "Ethiopiais a large country and we are a diverse people, but that is what makes usspecial. We can debate and create a new foundation for all people, Muslim, Christian and other for the bettering of our society." For these young people, who represent their respective youth communities, they believe that togetherness is the only solution to creating a new Ethiopia with solid foundation in understanding and forward-thinking. Earlier this month, leading Ethiopian political thinker and professor Alemayehu G. Mariam said the time is now for Ethiopia to have "radical improvements" in its social and political climate following the death of Prime Minister Meles Zenawi.

"I say today is the perfect time for all Ethiopians to bury the hatchet of ethnic division, religious sectarianism, regional conflict and human rights violations," Mariam wrote in an opinion article. "It is the perfect time to shake hands, embrace each other and get our noses to the grindstone to build a new democratic Ethiopia where the rule of law is upheld and human rights and democratic institutions respected." He argued that the situation facing Ethiopia does not need to be a painful process of change and that the new leadership should learn from the past two decades and its impact on the people. "Today, not tomorrow, is the best time to put anend to historic hatreds and resentments and open a new chapter in Ethiopia's history. Today is the best time to unchain ourselves from the burdens of the past, close the wounds that have festered for generations and declare to future generations that we will no longer be prisoners of resentments of the past," the professor argued. There is a tentative hope that democracy and human rights can be part of the transition away from authoritarian rule. Still, many experts have pointed to the reality that Ethiopia is unlikely to see democracy or a change in the status quo, despite the two decades rule of Zenawi coming to an end. For the university student group made up of Christians and Muslims, they are hopeful that the change can be made for the better. "We have long face this kind of attack from the government if we speak out, so we really wantto see democratic change in Ethiopia because it will mean a better countryfor all," the group told Bikyanews.com. "Ethiopia deserves a country that is not ruled by one person, but a place where citizens and the people havea say in our future." Source: BN

April 3, 2013: Thousands of Ethiopians and Eritreans stranded in northernYemen'

(UN Radio) - The voluntary repatriation of thousands of undocumented migrants from Yemen is likely to stall in the next six months due to lack ofadequate funding, according to the International Organization for Migration (IOM). About 3,000 migrants from Ethiopia, Eritrea and Somaliaare stranded in the northern Yemen town of Haradh, where living conditions are said to be deteriorating on a daily basis. IOM says it can only distribute about 300 meals per day mainly to the most vulnerable women, the elderly and unaccompanied minors. Jumbe Omari Jumbe fromIOM says the stranded migrants are extremely vulnerable to human traffickers and criminal gangs dealing in human organs. "Shelter capacity and medical referrals have also been also reduced, resulting in increased hardship and illnesses among the migrants. Currently, the Haradh hospitalmortuary is filled with the unclaimed bodies of migrants. In addition, IOM has suspended its voluntary repatriation programme because of the lack of funds. The last IOM-sponsored flight to carry migrants from Yemen wasin September 2012, when 210 migrants were voluntarily repatriated to Ethiopia. In Haradh town, thousands of migrants roam the streets and sleep rough in the open with no money for food or medicine.They include single women, unaccompanied minors, the elderly and the sick – most of whom are desperate to return home." The number of migrants entering Yemen has more than doubled over the last two years from 53,000 in 2010 to over 107,000 last year.

April 3, 2013:Ethiopia: The Five-Day Meeting of Ethiopian SeniorDiplomats Continues'

The five-day meeting of Ethiopian Ambassadors, heads of all Ethiopian missions abroad and Director Generals at the Ethiopian Ministry of ForeignAffairs continued on Tuesday (April 2nd) with discussions focused on implementation of the Ministry's business and economic diplomacy. State Minister Nega, underlining that business and economic diplomacy was thebasis of the country's diplomatic practices, noted the establishment of theEthiopian Business Consortium Forum to coordinate different Government stakeholders, manage any possible bottlenecks in the country's business and economic diplomacy engagements and ensure the widest possible benefits.

He stressed this should be used more effectively. He also noted the implementation in the Ministry of the Business Process Re-engineering (BPR), a Balanced Score Card (BSC) and other relevant management toolsto improve the Ministry's efficiency and effectiveness, ensure speedy service and promotion of the country's business opportunities and define the Ministry's interactions with its missions, government stakeholders and other partners. All this, he said, had enabled a better trend of market intelligence for trade, recruitment of investors, technology transfer and technical assistance. A regular monthly ministerial meeting, chaired by thePrime Minister, helped to manage investors' concerns including the question over the availability of foreign currency.

The promotion of feasible projects contributed to better development assistance and FDI inflows. Proper follow-up and support mechanisms during pre- and post - investment phases and trade partnerships should be encouraged, as well as broadening relevant inputs and effective promotion of measures taken by the Government to encourage more investment and trade and tourism. Also necessary were continuous performance assessments, expedition of establishment of industrial zones;encouragement of quality, standards and affordable pricing of tourist destinations; and the process of one-stop-shop service provisions.

Strengthening coordination with regional bodies to address investment challenges was also emphasized. In his concluding remarks, Foreign Minister Dr. Tedros underlined the need to further consolidate implementation in these areas, emphasizing the importance of being prepared to react positively to Government directives and encourage the attitudinal changes to provide the basis to pull Ethiopia and its people outof poverty. April 3, 2013: Ethiopia - Building a Better Somali Region'

News Analysis: Jijiga - For over two decades Somali Region, in eastern Ethiopia, has been devastated by a grueling insurgency. Trapped in a timewarp, it has been forgotten and underdeveloped. But in the last few years,thanks to the increased security here, a five-star hotel, eco-tourism ventures and even a large abattoir are being built by the former diaspora community. This comes after the regional government encouraged people to return and support development in this Horn of Africa nation through global campaigns conducted in countries like the United States and the United Kingdom. "For years, I just thought it was too dangerous to return," Zahara Wale Abas, who had settled in Denmark, told IPS. "When the region's vice president came and showed us the development going on, I was really surprised and wanted to return and check it out for myself." For many who remember Jijiga as a forgotten, war-torn region, photos of new hospitals, roads, schools and bridges - though still very fewin number - have inspired many to take what they felt to be a brave step:to return home to see the development for themselves. In the last two years, over 300 people have returned, part- and full-time, to work on various projects. In 2011, Abas came to Jijiga and ended up building an eco-tourist hotel, which she hopes will attract the diaspora and tourists. "It might still be just a few people who have returned but considering the insecurity the region endured for so long, this is a huge step for our people." According to Axmed Maxamad Shugri, head of the government's Regional Diaspora Office, which assists those returning, the main reason for so many staying away from the region for so long is the misinformation spread by the Ogaden National Liberation Front or ONLF.

"The ONLF tell the diaspora that Somali Region is a war zone," he told IPS. "For years no one even thought about coming back, so it really is significant that people are starting to. It is just the beginning and we need everyone to come back to help the region develop." "For a while I did not think I could even coAffairsme here myself, but ... I discovered there was a chance to do something and I have been very encouraged by our progress so far," surgeon Dr. Mahad Musse, who grew up and studied in Finland. The ONLF is largely made up of Ogaden people, a Somali clan that has fought for an independent state here since the May 1991 fall frompower of Ethiopian dictator Mengistu Haile Mariam. The ONLF is now in peace talks with the Ethiopian government. But after it took up arms, what followed was nearly two decades of a bloody insurgency, with civilians often being targeted by both sides. As a result, various aid agencies were restricted from working in the region, where the residents endured several devastating droughts.

Many of the five million people whoinhabit the region live simple pastoralist lives, and the lack of peace and water severely disrupted their fragile existence. But a regional police forceor state militia, the Liyu Police, which is made up of soldiers from the localcommunities, has managed to severely decrease the ONLF's strength in recent years, according to the regional government. In the face of criticism by activists for human rights abuses, Liyu leaders told IPS they are making efforts to reform the force.
Ahmed Haybe Mohamoud, a businessman who lived in Frankfurt, Germany for the last 30 years and moved back recently, told IPS: "For years the insurgency was too strong (for me) to even consider coming back and living in peace. But now the major cities are protected and I feel it is the right time to invest in the region and help my people." Mohamoud has pooled together investment from his extended family, who have sought asylum across the world, and is building Jijiga's first five-star hotel. The same sentiment was shared by another recently-returned investor, Jamal Arab. He and his family sought asylum in the state of Minnesota in the United States, where he worked in a manufacturing company until recently.
In Fafan, a village 30 kilometres away from Jijiga, Arab and four other investors are building a huge abattoir. "This will bring a decent income tomany people in the region," Arab told IPS. "As well as increasing the amount of meat being bought and exported from the region, we will alsobe hiring a huge number of staff." Arab added that nothing would have been possible without the new road which runs through the village, connecting it with Jijiga and major cities close to Ethiopia's capital.
Through the centre of Jijiga runs a wide modern highway, fitted with tall efficient streetlights. Building projects are dotted all the way along it, through the length of the city. Shopping centres, five-star hotels, and newrestaurants are being planned, with construction having started on many. The city now has a new hospital and a university, and regional government officials say it is a new beginning for the region.
"Now you can see we are booming, the region is safe, it is time for everyone to come back, invest in their home, and help their people," Abdullahi Yusuf Werar, the region's vice president, told IPS. It's not only investors who aremoving back. A number of people have returned to begin setting up NGOs, or to bring other skills to the region, which they acquired abroad.

Dr. Mahad Musse, who grew up and studied surgery in Finland, has comeback to set up a surgery clinic in Jijiga.

"This, and one other hospital in Addis, will be the only two places offering this quality of surgery," Musse told IPS. "For a while I did not think I couldeven come here myself, but after speaking to many people who had recently come back, I discovered there was a chance to do something andI have been very encouraged by our progress so far." The region, however, remains impoverished. Drought is expected again this year, which would have lasting effects for people in the region. While most of the recent developments might benefit those in the cities, the vast majority of the five million people who populate the region still live far from water sources, and have no electricity. The rebels may have been pushed out of the cities and now operate in smaller numbers, but they remain present throughout the region. The momentum of development will depend on the dedication of the regional government, the skills of the diaspora, and the willingness of the ONLF and the Ethiopian government to find peace before the region can really develop in a way that will benefit all. One local professor, who did not wish to be named, told IPS: "There is still a long way to go, but just to have the diaspora coming backis a huge boost for the region's residents who have long felt forgotten." April 4, 2013: Ethiopia: MIDROC Takes On Agriculture Enterprises'

MIDROC is set to increase production with an eye on competing in global fruit export market. The long awaited transfer of three agricultural enterprises to MIDROC, and an affiliate, has finally been sealed with the signing of a contract between Mohammed Ali Al Amoudi (Sheikh) and Beyene Gebremeskel, director general of the Privatisation & Public Enterprises Supervising Agency (PPESA), on Thursday, April 4, 2013, at the Sheraton Addis Hotel. MIDROC acquired Upper Awash Agro-Industry for 860 million Br, 35pc of which it has paid in advance. HORIZON Plantations, its affiliate, also purchased Coffee Processing & Warehouse Enterprise and Gojeb Farm for 228.2 million Br and 35.1 million Br, respectively, paying 50pc in advance for both. It took a year to finalise theprocess, with both companies having learned that their offers had been selected a year ago, in March 2012. MIDROC Ethiopia will invest an additional 432 million Br into Upper Awash and, in doing so, double its production, according to Jemal Ahmed, deputy general manager of HORIZON Plantations.

Upper Awash Agro Industry Enterprise was established, in 1979, with a farm at Merti-Jiju, located on the border of the Afar and Oromia regions. Ithas a branch in Addis Abeba, which produces fresh and processed fruit and vegetables, as well as; cereals, cut flowers, seeds and fibre crops.

The company is also well known for its oranges, mandarins, mangos, grapefruits, tomatoes and strawberries. "The upgrading work will start in the coming year, to expand the farm's capacity, which currently contributes 50pc to the country's total orange produce," Jemal said. Horizon Ethiopia also intends to invest 15 million Br on Gojeb Farm to grow bananas on 500ha of land, for the export market. This farm, HorizonPlantations said in a press statement, would enable Ethiopia to compete with India, the Philippines and Ecuador in the international banana market. HORIZON's own study indicates that it could have a yearly incomeof 20 million dollars from the banana farm. The company will also invest

84.9 million Br for a fruit farm at Gojeb, according to a press statement. These fruits will also be export oriented. HORIZON says that it will also invest an additional 80.5 million Br on the Coffee Processing & WarehouseEnterprise, located on 50,683sqm of land at the Saris, in Nefas Silk Lafto District, Addis Abeba. The Enterprise was established in 1994 to improve washed coffee export. It started exporting green coffee beans in 2009. The Enterprise's net profit after tax, during the 2011/12 fiscal year, was 5,968,604 Br. "MIDROC's companies outside Ethiopia will help us in our venture, by assisting in the international coffee market," said Jemal. "Farming is a tough and interesting job," said Al Amoudi. "Now I am becoming a farmer." He said he wanted to expand modern farming in Ethiopia to increase productivity and job creation. Beyene appreciated MIDROC for investing in every sector of the Ethiopian economy. Source: Addis Fortune

April 4, 2013: Ethiopia: Saudi Arabia's Foreign Ministry Rebuffs Statements Made Against the Renaissance Dam' Saudi Arabia's Foreign Ministry Undersecretary for Bilateral Affairs, Ambassador Dr. Khalid Bin Ibrahim Al-Jandan has dismissed statements made criticizing the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam (GERD). In a discussion with Ethiopian diplomats in Riyadh, Dr. Khalid said statements made against the GERD were not the policy of his government. Citing the historic relations of the two countries, going back to the First Hijira when Ethiopia gave refuge to the family of the Prophet and his followers, Dr. Khalid denied recent mediareports suggesting statements made against Ethiopia and the GERD mightaffect relations between the two countries. The Saudi Arabian Ministry of Foreign Affairs on April 1st issued a statement on its website which strongly affirmed Saudi Arabia's close relationship with Ethiopia. The statement emphasized relations with Ethiopia are based on mutual respect and non-interference in internal affairs and work to promote common interests in the service of both governments and their peoples. The Ministry said any statements suggesting the contrary do not reflect the official stance of the Government of the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia. In his discussions, Dr. Khalid also emphasized that the ministerial statement reflected the high regard Saudi Arabia accorded to its bilateral relations with Ethiopia. These, he noted, are based on the principles of mutual cooperation for the mutual benefit of the peoples of the two countries. Thestatement of Dr. Khalid bin Ibrahim Al Jandan was carried by the Saudi Arabian News Agency and in the Al Medina newspaper. It is to be recalled that Saudi Arabia's Deputy Defense Minister, Prince Bin Khalid, made a comment in a Water Ministers' summit in Cairo that GERD might be detrimental to downstream countries, suggesting Ethiopia's legitimate development efforts were a political machination intended to harm Sudanand Egypt. The Ethiopian government strongly rejected the comment andasked for an official explanation from the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia. GoE

April 5, 2013: Eskinder Nega jailing violates international law - UN panel'

By Tom Rhodes/CPJ East Africa Consultant - Authorities in Ethiopia describe Eskinder Nega, a prominent columnist and government critic jailed since September 2011 on vague terrorism charges, as a dangerousindividual bent onviolent revolution. However, in an opinion handed downin 2012–publicized only this week by Washington, D.C.-based legal advocacy group Freedom Now–a United Nations panel of five independentexperts ruled that Eskinder's imprisonment came "as a result of his peaceful exercise of the right to freedom of expression."

The opinion from the U.N. Working Group on Arbitrary Detention was issued after a judge in Addis Ababa sentenced Eskinder to 18 years in prison in July 2012, accusing him of writing "articles that incited the publicto bring the North African and Arab uprisings to Ethiopia." In the opinion, the experts detailed several breaches of Eskinder's rights, from his arrest without warrant and allegations of mistreatment in pre-trial detention, to a flawed prosecution and trial that fell short of international standards of fairness. "It is our sincere hope that the government will look closely at the opinion and come to the same conclusion as the Working Group," Patrick Griffith, an attorney with Freedom Now, told me. "The opinion hereis especially well-reasoned and clearly explains why the continued detention of Eskinder is a violation of international law; it is now up to thegovernment to do the right thing and release him." The opinion, however,is not binding, and Ethiopian authorities have a notoriously tough hide when it comes to international criticism of their human rights record– despite being major recipients of Western aid.

Griffith is still optimistic, saying: "Pressure can have an impact on the ground; the release of political prisoners in 2007 (following mass arrests in 2005) and the release of the Swedish journalists last year came after considerable international attention–so there is hope."

Griffith says Freedom Now will urge governments, especially that of the United States, to more forcefully insist on Eskinder's release. Griffith also hopes that by vigorously pursuing Eskinder's case, the group can train more global attention on other Ethiopian journalists in prison. There are currently six journalists behind bars, some without charge. Prior to his arrest, Eskinder had criticized authorities for carrying out such practices, claiming that the government used a sweeping anti-terror law to scare critics of the ruling party into silence. "In the well-publicized applications of the dreaded anti-terrorism law lies the perfect means to stretch fear toits furthest limit. Raw fear is in the air. And journalists have been affected the most," Eskinder wrote in a July 2011 column entitled "SOS: Dissent and terrorism in Ethiopia." As a member of the U.N. Human Rights Council, Ethiopia should comply with international law and release Eskinder immediately and unconditionally.Tom Rhodes is CPJ's East Africaconsultant, based in Nairobi. April 5, 2013: ADDIS ABABA - Ethiopia cancels $1 billion fuel imports fromSudan'

News updates: The Ethiopian Petroleum Supplier Enterprise (EPSE) has retracted its statement last month that reported that the country had imported over $1 billion of fuel from neighbouring Sudan via Djibouti, as reported by Sudan Tribune on March 31. The EPSE Sunday reported that the 1,091,823 metric tonnes of oil had in fact been imported from other sources, the EPSE's spokesperson, Alemayehu Tsegaye declined to name.Without disclosing the reasons behind the decision the spokesperson toldSudan Tribune that Ethiopia stopped importing fuel from Sudan last year after it terminated its contract with Khartoum. Ethiopia used to import upto 85% of its annual oil consumption from neighbouring Sudan, largely due to its geographic proximity. (ST)

April 6, 2013: Government of Ethiopia organizes a congress that foundedthe MZF’

News tip: According to WIC, “The Foundation would serve as a living center of ideas and programs to further advance the works and legacy of the great leader Meles Zenawi”. The Meles Zenawi Foundation was officially established at ceremony held here at the African Union (AU) Hall.The event was launched with a moment of silence in memory of the late PM Meles Zenawi. Present on the occasion were representatives of Nationsand Nationalities of Ethiopia, senior government officials, African leaders, families of the late Meles Zenawi and invited guests, among others. The Foundation would serve as a living center of ideas and programs to furtheradvance the works and legacy of the great leader Meles Zenawi. It would also serve as his final resting place and a site for scholarship. The foundation is set to establish a library, a research center, a fellowshipprogramme, and a public park, and will also recognize great achievements. Present at the occasion were Meles family; senior government officials; Presidents of the Sudan, Uganda, and Djibouti; former President of Nigeria Olusegun Obasanjo; Commissioner of the African Union (AU) Commission Nkosazana Dlamini-Zuma; and other invited guests. It has to be recalled that the Meles Zenawi Foundation(MZF) is established under government proclamation number of 781/2013'

According to a citiation read on the occasion, "from his early age until his premature demise without a single day of rest, Meles has accomplished tremendous achievements," Prime Minister Hailemariam Dessalegn said onthe occasion. Meles led and fought alongside millions against tyranny, designed strategies that were instrumental in extracting the country and its people out of the quagmire of poverty and lack of democratic governance, he said. "As a Prime Minister, Meles saved his country from the brink of disintegration and put it on a solid basis of democracy and development; as a true son of Africa, he championed the cause of Ethiopiaand indeed Africa in international fora," he said. "In a word, Meles is a treasure trove for those who are interested in an in-depth research and study on his life." The former First Lady Azeb Mesfin on her part thanked Ethiopians whose live have changed for the better and those who saw a light at the end of the tunnel thanks to PM Meles' exceptional leadership for the support they have given for her.

Regarding the foundation, she said it is instrumental in strengthening unity of Ethiopians, promoting education and research and ensuring the sustainability of the development activities launched by Meles Zenawi. Chairperson of the African Union Commission, Dr. Nkosazana Dlamini Zuma, President of Sudan, Omar al-Bashir, President of Djibouti, Ismail Omar Guelleh, President of Uganda, Yoweri Museveni, Prime Minister of Somalia Abdi Farah Shirdon and former President of Nigeria, Olusegun Obasanjo made a memorable speech. The foundation would allow Africanleaders to contribute for the legacy of Meles- the true son and leader of Africa as well as a man who lifted Ethiopia from hunger to the fastest growing economy in Africa and the world, they said. On the occasion, Sudan pledged to provide 2 million US dollars, South Sudan 1 million US dollars, Djibouti 500,000 US dollars, and Uganda 300, 000 US dollars forthe foundation. Source: WIC

April 7, 2013: Ethiopia: Negotiations for Ethiopian Airlines HotelUnderway'

Financial offers are being evaluated, Ethiopian can select a company within two weeks. Ethiopian Airlines is conducting fresh negotiations withinternational companies for the design, construction, vendor finance andmanagement of the four star hotel it intends to develop. "Ethiopian could settle on a company within 15 days, if all requested documents are submitted by the bidding companies," an official from the facility planning section, under the Alliances & Corporate Strategic Planning Department, told Fortune. "We have been given the direction to expedite the process assoon as possible." Around 10 companies, from China, South Africa and theUnited States were selectively invited in December 2012. Ethiopian opened bid offers for the project on February 28, 2013. The airline declined to disclose the number and names of companies that it is currently negotiating with, but Fortune has learnt from reliable external sources that at least two Chinese companies are involved in current negotiations. Ethiopian has been attempting to find a partner to build and manage the international standard hotel it plans to erect on 40,000sqm of land across from the Millennium Hall, on the newly revamped African Avenue, since 2009. During that year, it held negotiations with the China-Africa Development (CD) Fund and HNA Hotels & Resorts Group (HNA Group), and signed a 60 million dollar joint venture agreement, whereby Ethiopianwould have a 53pc share in the business. The three-way agreement did not pan out, as the other parties did not reply in a timely manner to the deal, according to representatives from the Public Relations office of Ethiopian Airlines. Another closed invitation was sent out in March 2012, but it was dropped because there were not enough responses, according to the representatives from the public relation office. Ethiopian will evaluate the current batch of offers using three criteria. "They have to bring an offer for the design, a firm loan offer from banks and a hotel management company as a partner, for which costs are included within the offer," an official from Ethiopian Airlines said. Since they are required to bring a firm offer or guarantee from banks, participating companies arenot requested to offer bid bonds for the project, according to the official. Abid committee of four people is evaluating the offers currently. It has already opened the technical evaluations and will negotiate on the financial offers, according to the official Fortune talked to. Source: Addis Fortune

April 7, 2013: Ethiopia: Construction Awards Honour Greats'

Nigussie Tebege honoured for outstanding lifetime achievement, whilst Mugher Cement recognised for contribution to industry. The Ethiopian Chapter of the American Concrete Institute (ACI) has honoured NigussieTebege, professor emeritus, for his outstanding lifetime achievements in the Ethiopian construction industry, at a ceremony held at the Addis HiltonHotel. Concluding its third annual event on March 4, 2013, the Institute also selected Mugher Cement Enterprise, the nation's first industrial cement manufacturer, for the contributions it has made to the industry, since its founding in the early 1980s. A practicing structural engineer, Nigussie, 71, is the founder and manager of ACME Consulting Company, as well as being the founder of Africa Networks of Scientific Technological Institutions(ANSTI) and Zede journal - a journal of the Ethiopian Society of Engineers & Architects (EAEA). He came on Thursday, adorning a rare suit, and wearing a tie spotted with the current logos of Addis Abeba University, where he taught structural engineering for over a generation.

He was chair of the committee within the University, as head of the technology department, when the logo, which was designed by Alefelge Selam, a prominent Ethiopian painter, was selected, back in the late 1990s. Close to 200 engineers, architects and students from the Addis Ababa Institute of Technology (AAiT) honoured him with a standing ovation, at the grand ballroom at the Hilton. "I've never seen people moved in recognition of the contribution someone makes in his long career," Abebe Dinku (Prof), president of the ACI-Ethiopia Chapter, told Fortune. The ACI-Ethiopia Chapter is a member of ACI International, which is based in the United States. It is the first chapter in sub-SaharanAfrica and the third in continental Africa, next to Algeria and Egypt. The Chapter began recognising individuals and companies with notable contributions to the industry from last year. It was Varnero Construction that was selected last year, in recognition of its services in building manyof the landmark structures in Addis Abeba over the past 40 years.

Examples of which include; the Addis Abeba Municipality and the circular built headquarters of the Commercial Bank of Ethiopia (CBE). "We chose them based on what they have contributed to society, in the construction industry," said Ephraim Senbetta (PhD), founder and executive committeemember of the Chapter. "But, there is no monetary reward for such awardees. It is just to show our respect for them." ACI-Ethiopia honouredNigussie for his contributions in the design and construction of concrete structures in Ethiopia. Born in Debretabor, Gonder, and trained in the United States, Nigussie has received his doctoral degree from Lehigh University. He is hailed for his role in revising the nation's building code, in 2012\13.

He has his hands all over the design and supervision works of structures, such as; the AAiT library, Dashen Bank in Adama, Getu Commercial Centre, Meaza, Johny and Afework buildings, and the headquarters for Awash bank and insurance. But, he is more known for crisscrossing the country, supervising the constructions of bridges over the rivers of Kechin,Angereb, Serde and Tekeze. In the capital, his fingerprints are engrained on the constructions of roundabouts on roads in Sarbet, Olympia and Wollo Sefer roundabouts, as well as the Rwanda flyover and Meshualikia railway line. Nigussie has also redesigned, in order to reinforce, bridges on the Abay and Gilgel Gibe II sites, which now allow vehicles up to 213tnweight, up from 146tn, to pass through. "I'm surprised," Nigussie, a father of four, told Fortune. "I didn't expect this." Another unexpected receiver of recognition was Mugher Cement Enterprise, a state owned plant erected in 1984, near Mugher River, located 90Km west of Addis Abeba. Known for its records for good corporate social responsibility, Mugher has succeeded in increasing its production capacity amost five-foldlast year, from half a million tonnes a decade ago. Employing close to 20,000 workers, the state owned cement plant has a cement grinder in the Tatek area, at the outskirts of Addis. It is in the final stage of launching the production of a variety of cement constructions on Gilgel Gibe III and the Great Renaissance dams, according to Mekonen Zergaw, Chief Executive Officer of Mugher.Source: Addis Fortune

April 7, 2013: African leaders honour the late Meles Zenawi'

President Yoweri Museveni of Uganda has said that Africa needs to address the issue of electricity shortage as one of the means to enhance and enable its development efforts. He made the comments on Sunday at the African Union Headquarters, in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia where he gave an address during a congress to launch the Meles Zenawi Foundation. The foundation is aimed at serving as a forum to highlight the ideals and visionof Prime Minister Zenawi and chart the way forward to keep his legacy alive. The Meles Zenawi Foundation will be entrusted with ensuring that the late Prime Minister's dedication and commitment to improving the lives of the Ethiopian people and his contribution to championing the cause of Africa will continue to inspire future generations. Uganda pledgeda contribution of US $ 300.000, while Djibouti pledged a contribution of US $ 500,000, South Sudan pledged US $ 1,000,000 and Sudan pledged US $ 2,000,000. Museveni who was on a one day working visit to Addis Ababa stressed that electricity on the continent is a big problem. "Unless itcan be scientifically proved that Africans don't need electricity. Some members of the international community are speaking about promoting homosexuality instead of addressing serious issues. Don't homosexuals need electricity?" Museveni noted that the late Meles Zenawi increased electricity generation in Ethiopia from 300 megawatts when he came to power to 2200 megawatts today and was impressed with the construction of a new hydro power station in the country. The President described Zenawi as one of the new breed of African leaders who comprised a team of independent minds, courageous, patriotic Pan Africanists who transversed their countries in search of development and scorned sectarianism, adding that `the memory of his contribution will be our Motto.'

He said that there is need to create strong structures with particular emphasis on infrastructure development adding that where parastatals donot work well the continent must rely on the private sector. President Yoweri Museveni noted that Africa has suffered with a population of uneducated people without skills, adding that they could not promote social transformation without human resource development. He said thereare two new kings on the continent, namely the consumer who provides amarket for the various products and the entrepreneurs who invest and that these need to be respected and facilitated. The President revealed that the African continent has had a setback by exporting raw materials and failing to export finished goods. Citing the example of coffee, he said that Uganda has been a donor to the U.K. since it has continued to sell itsunprocessed coffee at only US $ 3 as compared to US $ 15 per kilogramme in the UK earned from the processed one. He assured the congress that Uganda was determined to stop the export of unprocessed coffee.

Yoweri Museveni hailed the late Zenawi for modernizing agriculture by providing irrigation and other essential facilities which boosted the agro sector. The host, Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn said they would continue the development process, work and the vision of Zenawi and described him as a person of great discipline. He said that he was economical and eager to see things moving forward. He added that he saw challenges and problems before they occurred and managed to bring the country back from the brink of disappearance. The Somalia Prime Minister, Abdu Fayi said that the Foundation is to keep Zenawi's legacy alive for the future generations. He hailed the late leader for working for peace and stability in Africa. President Ismael Galleh of Djibouti said that Zenawi was a man of action who visualized a bright future for his country.He added that he was eager to provide for those who had little. "We will work hard to fulfill the dreams of Djibouti and Ethiopia," he said. PresidentOmar Bashir of Sudan said that the deceased had become Africa;s strong voice at the international scene. The Widow and former First Lady, Mrs.

Azeb Mesfin Zenawi revealed that the Foundation has the goal to continueand complete the successes of their leader who worked without rest. She revealed that there are many young men and women who are going to follow his example of exemplary work. She revealed that his vision was tobuild the biggest part of the population, the farmers. "This foundation willhelp to take our country out of poverty and should be a forum to promotethe development of Ethiopia and Africa at large," she said. Source: New Vision

April 7, 2013: Ethiopia's Meles Foundation leaves activists angry'

News Article: ADDIS ABABA - The launching of a new foundation in Ethiopia in honor of late Prime Minister Meles Zenawi has left many activists in the country questioning the future of the country, arguing thatdictators should not be given foundations in their name. "This is horrible,"said Yussif Mohammad, a Muslim activist who was detained during Meles crackdown last year before he passed away. "I think this would be kind oflike if Egypt would have a foundation for Hosni Mubarak. It would be unthinkable." In his opening address last month in launching the foundation, Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn remembered the late PMas “exemplary leader in his unique leadership skills and flawless performance as chief of the executive” and added that “the establishment of the Foundation is deemed necessary as a thorough study of his life and his works and their implementation thus far is important to ensure the continuity of the renaissance of Ethiopia.”

Former First Lady, Azeb Mesfin, on the occasion noted that the Foundationwill assist researchers interested to study Meles’s academic works throughscholarships to ensure the continuity of the implementation of his vision.
The Meles Foundation aims to serve as a memorial of the prime minister’s great contribution in socio - economic issues, climate change negotiations and for his efforts aimed at ensuring peace and security of the continent among other things. But activists like Mohammad told Bikyanews.com thatthis foundation continues the status quo and authoritarian nature of the Ethiopian government. “We have fought for our rights over and over again, but now the foundation as a remembrance to a man who killed his own people and stifled freedom of speech is existing. It says a lot about where we are as a country.” Bikya News

April 8, 2013: REFILE-Ethiopian driller seeks place in oil history'
LONDON (Reuters) - Company holds large exploration acreage in Ethiopia.Thinks Ethiopia is next in East Africa's oil surge. Tewedros Ashenafi hopeshis Ethiopian exploration outfit will become the first indigenous company to make a basin-opening discovery in sub-Saharan Africa's 21st Century oil and gas boom. His privately-held SouthWest Energy holds 46,000 square kilometres of exploration acreage amounting to almost 4 percent of the vast, land-locked east African country.
SouthWest Energy - Ethiopian oil plays could contain billions of barrels,but challenges abound’ Updates: Ethiopia, one of the fabled locations of the biblical Ark of the Covenant, may have another treasure buried in its depths. A study commissioned by an Ethiopian company that hopes to be the first to bringoil to market there suggests two basins hold more than two billion barrelsof oil. But getting at that crude could be as challenging as getting a look at the Hebrew religious relic, which Ethiopian Orthodox Christians believe is in one of their churches. And as with the Ark, the location and even the existence of marketable Ethiopian oil are elusive. Tewodros Ashenafi, CEOof SouthWest Energy, headquartered near the capital of Addis Ababa, seespromise in the Gambella and Jijiga basins. In a study for SouthWest, British consulting firm Senergy estimated the the regions could hold 1.6 billion to 2.9 billion barrels of oil. “Anywhere there are camels, there is oil,” said Ashenafi, noting that East African neighbors including Egypt and Kenya already have profited from bountiful underground resources. “We are at the frontier in Ethiopia — the industry is still in the early stages.”

Offshore: Tullow drills for Ethiopia’s first oil in Kenyan extension

SouthWest Energy, established in 2005, has mineral rights for 46,000 acres and plans to drill three exploration wells in the Jijiga basin this year and in 2014. Both Ashenafi and other executive team members, as well asits board of trustees – all of whom have international business resumes – have staked their own money in the project, in addition to other private and corporate investors. The company has raised $50 million for its initial efforts and hopes to secure $100 million more from private equity, as it aims to be the first to bring oil to market in Ethiopia, seeking investors in several international oil centers, including Houston. But competition for investors is fierce, and even if a company finds oil it will have to figure outa way to get it to market since Ethiopia has no pipelines. One of the challenges in proposals like SouthWest’s is persuading would-be investors that the project will be economic, said Robert Hamill, a partner with MayerBrown specializing in international corporate finance. “We have seen exciting discoveries in the middle of Africa, but one has to think about the logistics of selling the oil into the international market,” Hamill said. Oil was discovered in Ethiopia in the late 1800s, but never has been producedin commercial quantities. Only two of 50 exploration wells have struck oil. “The report confirms what we have always believed; our blocks have strong oil potential,” Ashenafi said. “Our work now turns to the next phaseof exploration, to further refine the seismic data set and look towards our well program, which we hope to commence later this year.” While Ethiopiadoes not have pipeline infrastructure to bring oil to Djibouti, the closest port, its dense population of 90 million inhabitants create a domestic demand of 50,000 barrels a day, Ashenafi said. He also suggested that oil could be shipped by rail, and that pipelines to Djibouti could be established as the industry matures in Ethiopia. Hamill said it will most likely be the small companies like SouthWest that will begin the search forEthiopian oil in earnest, because venture capitalists tend to be more tolerant of the higher risk involved than the international oil companies.

Big deals: Houston firms benefit as West Africa deep water heats up“It is a familiar pattern that the high impact explorers are the first entrants in these countries,” Hamill said, explaining that specialist funds and venture capitalist tend to be more tolerant of the higher risk involvedthan the international oil companies. But while the risks and potential rewards are upfront for operators, Ethiopia's ability to manage the new industry will be key to ensuring that it will benefit its citizens. "Africa is anexciting place to operate," Hamill said. "What you want as an objective observer is that Ethiopia has the political wisdom to develop it resources responsibly and to use them for the benefit of the country, so that it is a resource blessing not a resource curse. "

April 8, 2013: ODF - Commitment for a democratic Ethiopia'

OPINION: By Obang Metho - On 30th March, 2013, I had the privilege of watching history in progress while attending the first meeting of the newlyformed Oromo Democratic Front (ODF) as an observer. Those involved included most of the founding leaders of the Oromo Liberation Front (OLF). As they announced their new vision, direction and organization to more than 500 people attending the meeting in St. Paul, Minnesota, I wasdeeply struck with the vastly different message I was hearing that day— calling Oromo to work together for one Ethiopia—from what I had heard attheir 2006 OLF meeting where their secessionist goals and strictly Oromo agenda dominated every aim. I can only think that this transformation hasbeen brought about by a renewed hope among its leadership that the great people of Oromiacan contribute to the creation of an Ethiopia for all itsprecious people. I believe the ODF, and its new vision, could be part of the answer to the serious division among the Ethiopian opposition groups. This is a good beginning and worth applauding. During the meeting, ODF leadership clearly explained their objectives as advocates not only for the Oromo, but also for the "freedom and justice for all individuals and nations." They explained that the change in focus was "motivated by the universal principle that struggling for justice for oneself alone without advocating justice for all could ultimately prove futile because'"injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere."' The hope for a better future is within each of us. With God's help, he can transform us and use us as tools to transform our country. It is a matter of putting these hopes and dreams into action. May God help us to find a way to also embrace them, not excluding them either for they are a product of past mistakes and thinking. If they change, we need to accept them as well for no one is freeuntil we all are free. Mr. Obang Metho is Executive Director of the Solidarity Movement for New Ethiopia (SMNE).

April 08, 2013: Anger rises as Ethiopia delays journalist, opposition leadertrial'

News Analysis: ADDIS ABABA - Anger is rising once again towards the government from journalists and activists who are demanding answers over the continued detention of journalist and blogger Eskinder Naga and opposition leader Andualem Arage. Both figures were jailed last year afterbeing charged with terrorism-related accusations. Activists and journalistsalike have told Bikyanews.com that these charges are "trumped up" and an effort to silence the opposition and free press in the East Africa country. One editor at a local newspaper told Bikyanews.com that he believes the future of Ethiopia's media "hinges on the outcome of this trial. "We are all watching this very closely and it is unfortunate how the government is playing with peoples' lives and the media in this regard. Wewant an end to the attacks on media workers simply doing their jobs," he said, asking that his name not be revealed due to the sensitivity of the situation. Eskinder and Andualem were among 24 people jailed in July 2012. Activist and university student Hassan M. told Bikyanews.com that "we will organize protests if we have to in order to force the government to free innocent people from wrongful detention. We are not scared any longer." The United Nations has even chimed in, calling earlier this month for the release of Naga. Freedom Now, the UN Working Group on Arbitrary Detention found the Government of Ethiopia's continued detention of independent Ethiopian journalist and blogger Eskinder Naga a violation of international law. The panel of five independent experts from four continents held that the government violated Mr. Naga's rights to free expression and due process.The UN Working Group called for his immediate release. Naga is serving an 18-year prison sentence on terror and treason charges in response to his online articles and public speeches about the Arab Spring and the possible impact of such movements on the political situation in Ethiopia.

Arrested in September 2011, Mr. Naga was held without charge or access to an attorney for nearly two months before authorities charged him underEthiopia's widely criticized anti-terror laws. This is the eighth time during his 20-year career as an independent journalist and publisher that the Ethiopian government has detained Mr. Naga. His appeal has been repeatedly postponed, most recently on March 27, 2013.

In the attached opinion, released in conjunction with an op-ed by the renowned Ethiopian opposition leader and former prisoner of conscience Birtukan Mideksa, the UN Working Group found that the application of overly broad anti-terror laws against Mr. Naga constituted an "unjustified restriction" on his right to freedom of expression. The UN Working Group'sopinion also recognized "several breaches of Mr. Naga's fair trial rights," further rendering his continued detention arbitrary under international law. "The Ethiopian government cannot continue to use anti-terrorism legislation to muzzle the work of independent journalists, even when it does not like what is being reported," said Freedom Now Executive Director Maran Turner. "The targeting of journalists by resorting to overly broad anti-terror laws, just like the use of anti-state charges in the pre- 9/11 era, is a violation of the internationally protected right to free expression and undermines international efforts to address real security threats. Freedom Now represents Mr. Naga as his international pro bono counsel. Bikya News

April 8, 2013: Government-uprooted families begin to return tosettlements in Benishangul'

News tip: FENOTE SELAM, Ethiopia - Over 3,500 Ethiopians who were removed from Benishangul-Gumuz region recently and were being temporarily sheltered in this town were once again being transported backto their settlements, the Ethiopian Satellite TV (ESAT) reported. The Ethiopian farmers who were removed from the region for being Amhara were once again in tears as police cordoned off their area suddenly, and ordered them to board buses. Targeting members of the Amhara ethnic group has been the preoccupation of the regime for a long time, and the forceful eviction of the farmers from that part of their country had sent shockwaves across Ethiopian communities around the globe. The eviction sparked anger and condemnation across the Ethiopian Diaspora while opposition parties both at home and overseas denounced the governmentaction as inhuman and criminal. The prominent opposition figure, Yacob Hailemariam, on his part equated the crime with 'ethnic cleansing,' and warned those party and government authorities linked to the mass deportation of citizens within their own country could be taken to the International Criminal Court. He cited a similar case in Rwanda in the '90sfor which he was a UN Senior Attorney and said those responsible for "ethnic cleansing" were sentenced to life in prison. "No matter how much time will go by, those responsible for ethnic cleansing in Ethiopai will face justice and suffer life in prison like their Rwandan counterparts" the former business law proressor said. The uprooted who talked to ESAT were expressing their fear and concern that they may be condemned to severe government reprisals once they are taken to their settlements in the Gumuz wilderness."We have no guarantee that we will be safe but we have no choice either to disobey their orders," independent ESAT quoted one farmer as saying.

April 9, 2013: World Bank Must End its Support for Human Rights Abusesin Ethiopia: David Pred’

Washington DC: A multi-billion dollar aid program administered by the World Bank is underwriting systematic human rights abuses in Ethiopia. Last September, Ethiopian victims submitted a complaint about the program to the World Bank Inspection Panel, which is tasked with investigating whether or not the Bank complies with its own policies to prevent social and environmental harm. A meeting of the Bank’s board ofdirectors to discuss the Panel’s preliminary findings was postponed on March 19th due to objections from the Ethiopian government.

Article by David Pred - A multi-billion dollar aid program administered by the World Bank is underwriting systematic human rights abuses in Ethiopia. Last September, Ethiopian victims submitted a complaint about the program to the World Bank Inspection Panel, which is tasked with investigating whether or not the Bank complies with its own policies to prevent social and environmental harm. A meeting of the Bank's board ofdirectors to discuss the Panel's preliminary findings was postponed on March 19th due to objections from the Ethiopian government. Ethiopia is one the largest aid recipients in the world, receiving approximately US$3 billion annually from external donors. The largest aid program, financed by the World Bank, the UK, the European Commission and other Western governments, is called Promotion of Basic Services (PBS). It aims to expand access to services in five sectors: education, health, agriculture, water supply and sanitation, and rural roads. The PBS program objectivesare indisputably laudable and aim to meet a number of dire needs of the Ethiopian population. There is evidence, however, that it is contributing toa government campaign to forcibly resettle an estimated 1.5 million people.

In the lowland region of Gambella, the government's principle means of delivering basic services is through the implementation of the "Villagization Program". The government claims that "villagization" is a voluntary process, which aims to "bring socioeconomic and cultural transformation of the people" through the resettlement of "scattered" families into new villages. The services and facilities supported by PBS areprecisely the services and facilities that are supposed to be provided at new settlement sites under the Villagization Program. The Inspection Panel was established as an independent body that people harmed by World Bank lending practices can access in order to hold the Bank to account. Bank managers and member states are not supposed to interferein the process. The Bank's president, Jim Yong Kim, should stand up for accountability and tell the Board to let the Panel do its job. The truth that will come out of this investigation may be inconvenient for the Bank and an important client government, but it will be a rare measure of justice forthe Ethiopian people.

April 9, 2013: Ethiopia: Southwest Energy (SWE) Releases a Report On ItsOil Prospects'

SouthWest Energy has announced the results of a Competent Persons Report by an independent consultant company, Senergy (GB) Limited intoestimates for SouthWest Energy's Gambella basin block and its blocks 9A,

9 and 13 in the Jijiga basin, part of the Ogaden basin. According to the Chairman of SouthWest Energy, Ato Tewodros Ashenafi the report concluded the potential of the Gambella and Jijiga basins have best estimate of prospective oil resources of 1.56 billion barrels and a high of
2.9 billion. He said this confirmed what the company had always believed;that is blocks had strong oil potential. The company, which has total concessions of 46,000 sq kms, would now proceed to the next stages, refining its seismic data set and starting a well programme. It plans to drill three initial exploration wells in the Jijiga basin during the course of 2013/14. The Minister of Mines, Sinkinesh Ejigu, welcomed the report which she described as an important step in the quest to find onshore oil in Ethiopia. GoE

April 10, 2013: EPRDF feels the heat; scrambles to reverse deportation ofthe Amharas'

Updates: PM Hailemariam Dessalegn and party secretary Redwan Husseinadmittedly told parliament recently to questions related to the inhuman eviction of the Amharas from Benishangul Gumuz. Both officials explainedthat some "anti-people elements at law level administratons forcefully evicted citizens and that is against the victims' Constitutional right to work and live everywhere in Ethiopia. The ruling coalition appears to be buckling under international pressure: it is backpedaling the racist and criminal deportation of the Amharas from the Benishangul-Gumuz regionalstate. Media outlets such as the Voice of America and Diaspora Ethiopians have been exposing this diabolical act. Ato Ahmed Nasser, the president of the so-called Benishangul-Gumuz regional state, has apparently been ordered to issue a hastily-drafted letter blaming the deportation on low- level administrators.

April 10, 2013: How Could a Lasting Peace between Ethiopia and Eritreabe Achieved?

Article by Saleh Nur: After more than a decade of low-level hostilities and sour relations, there are signs Eritrea and Ethiopia could be ready to talk again. It has been over a decade since talks regarding the demarcation of Eritrea-Ethiopia border stalled, and relations between the two long- standing nemeses deteriorated into an effective cold war. Although the Eritrea-Ethiopia war officially ended with signing of the Algiers Agreement in 2000, relations are still marked by recrimination, sabre-rattling, and efforts at mutual destabilisation. Although each claims to be against another war, the risk of escalation remains high along their heavily- militarised border. Both sides continue to undermine each other's stability,from allegedly supporting armed opposition groups to waging a proxy warin Somalia. At the heart of this crisis is the ruling by the Boundary Commission which was established under the Algiers Agreement, a peace treaty marking the end of two years of hostilities. The Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission was tasked with defining the contested border, andboth sides agreed to accept its decision. However, having initially welcomed the ruling in April 2002, Ethiopia reversed its position a few months later, displeased that Badme, the flashpoint of the war, had been awarded to Eritrea. Eritrea refused to agree to a new commission and negotiations came to a standstill. Tensions remained high and relations remained sour. Since then, Ethiopia's position has softened slightly from its claim that the border judgment was "unjust and illegal"; in 2005, for example, Ethiopia's foreign minister wrote a letter to the UN Security Council in which he repeated Ethiopia's earlier acceptance of the decision "in principle" and added that this "does not mean going back to the drawing board". Eritrea meanwhile has continued to insist that dialogue cannot recommence until Ethiopia unconditionally accepts the border ruling. This environment of mistrust and stagnation has defined the statusquo for the last decade, with prospects of genuine peace seeming far away. Recently, however, there have been hopeful signs that this could beslowly changing with each side expressing greater readiness for talks. If negotiations do restart, how could a lasting peace between these arch- enemies be achieved?

The flawed Algiers peace process: The first step in answering this questionis to examine why the Algiers Agreement failed. On the one hand, there is some truth to the argument that neither Ethiopia nor Eritrea had any real interest in the process to begin with. But at the same time, there was alsoa multitude of real and complex issues which hindered any possible reconciliation. First, the Algiers process foundered because it failed to address the root causes of the war. The conflict arose due to myriad historical, political and economic issues, but the peace process treated theconflict as a mere border dispute. By focusing on just the immediate cause of the war, it eschewed the deep political and economic controversies central to the war. This undermined chances of a durable solution from the outset. Second, this narrow approach was exacerbated by a flawed arbitration process which focussed in on legal matters rather than political disagreements. Legal methods are inherently conservative and inflexible, and the clause of Algiers Agreement which said the boundary decision would be "final and binding" left no leeway for cooperation – instead, it propelled both parties into a zero-sum game. Thearbitration process was also weakened by contradictory rulings by different bodies. Initially, mediation initiatives concurred with Ethiopia's stance that Eritrea had crossed the international boundary and should withdraw, but the Boundary Commission's ruling, which awarded Badme to Eritrea, suggested Eritrea had not advanced beyond its borders. This was again complicated by the later ruling by the Claim's Commission that found Eritrea responsible for igniting the war.

What are the prospects for peace? Recently, there seem to have been improved prospects for peaceful resolution. The death in August 2012 of Ethiopia's long-time leader Meles Zenawi – whose personal rivalry with Eritrea's president Isaias Afewerki stoked hostilities – has raised hopes of a return to the negotiating table. After taking office, Meles' successor, Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn, expressed a willingness to travel to Eritrea to talk with Afewerki without preconditions. And in December, Afewerki reportedly requested mediation by Qatar, which previously brokered an agreement to resolve a border dispute between Eritrea and Djibouti in June 2010. Several other issues could also push both parties toend the low-level conflict. After the Algiers Agreement, both governments sought to settle unfinished scores. In the protracted cold war, however, there was a clear winner and loser. Ethiopia managed to seize the status of regional hegemon, leave Eritrea diplomatically isolated, win the supportof major powers such as the US, and get UN sanctions imposed on Eritrea.Eritrea, meanwhile, suffered economically, lost the upper-hand in the legalborder battle, and came to be seen as a pariah state, accused of sponsoring regional instability and terrorism. The regime in Asmara is nowin a struggle for its own survival. Its military capability is checked, external pressure remains high, its economic situation is dire, and there appears to be simmering domestic dissent as exhibited by several high- level defections and an army mutiny on 21 January, 2013. This could suggest that Eritrea is more likely to agree to talks, but this is not necessarily the case and there are still many hurdles remaining. Firstly, there is baggage of the past, contrasting political and national interests, and the ongoing rivalry. Secondly, Ethiopia's strong position could make itless willing to compromise. Thirdly, peace efforts may not even be in Afewerki's interests. Afewerki's regime has been subjecting Eritrea to political repression and economic hardships all in the name of defending against Ethiopian annexation. Reconciliation with Ethiopia would undermine this strategy and confront the regime with an array of challenges such as demobilisation, a return to constitutionalism, and a move to democracy – all so far postponed given the alleged existential threats facing the country. For Afewerki, a 'no war no peace' status quo might well be preferable to a peace that could cost him his power.

How peace could be achieved? Firstly, any initiative should uphold the terms and achievements of the Algiers agreement. Although its legal andpolitical instruments have expired, the accord has not been abrogated.

Eritrea in particular seems committed to the treaty and upholds its integrity. The agreement continues to provide a framework within which Ethiopia and Eritrea can settle their differences. Secondly, any peace initiative should go beyond previous negotiations in seeking a comprehensive settlement of the root causes of the conflict – both economic and political. One major contention is land-locked Ethiopia's claim of a "right of access to sea" either through incorporation of some Eritrean territory along the coast or guaranteed lease of the port of Assab.Previous fears that Ethiopia could claim access to the sea by military forcemake Eritrea's insistence that Ethiopia unconditionally respect Eritrea's territorial sovereignty all the more salient. The lease of Assab to Ethiopia would likely be in Eritrea's economic interest, but a history of Ethiopian (previously Abyssinian) attempts to annex the country mean mistrust is high. Any peace effort must come up with an intelligent way to address this and other complex issues. Finally, a sustainable peace process shouldemphasise long-term reconciliation and cultivate the right environment forthe normalisation of relations and possible future cooperation. Alongside formal negotiations, informal channels could also be important in this.

Non-official Track II diplomacy involving civil society, community elders, religious leaders and others could provide an effective peace-making mechanism. It has the advantage, amongst other things, of laying the foundation for a more durable peace through broad social reconciliation bydealing with historical-political grievances and the deeper roots of inter- communal conflicts. Unlike more adversarial formal proceedings, it could help thaw hostilities between two governments locked in the pride and prejudice of their kin communities. THINK AFRICA PRESS

April 10, 2013: Ethiopian housemaid ends life in bathroom'

News tip: An Ethiopian housemaid went into the bathroom at her employer's house in Saudi Arabia, left the shower running, tied a rope to her neck and hanged herself, a newspaper in the Gulf Kingdom reported on Wednesday. The Saudi family, suspecting there is something wrong after the maid's long stay inside, broke the bathroom's door and found her hanging. Newspapers said the family in the southern town of Barak reported the incident to the police, who said it was a clear suicide case.

April 10, 2013: Ethiopia: "Kenenisa Bekele is the greatest distance runnerin history" says Alberto Salazar American coach believes Kenenisa Bekele is the No.1 distance runner in history due to his huge number of global titles and “awfully fast” world records. Alberto Salazar says Kenenisa Bekele of Ethiopia is the greatest distance runner in history and Mo Farah has a massive challenge if he wants to break Bekele’s “incredible” world records for 5000m and 10,000m. In December the BBC quoted Salazar as saying he thought Farah was the greatest distance runner of all time. But in an interview in the latest issue of Athletics Weekly, the American coach says his words were taken slightly out of context. Speaking to David Cox for AW, Salazarexplained: “I was asked about how I thought he compared to others in history and I said that I thought what he did (in London) is as good as what anybody else has done. Because other people have won those events (the 5000m and 10,000m at the Olympics), but Mo has done it in an era where it’s much more competitive to 20 or 30 years ago.” Source:Athletics weekly

April 11, 2013: Two adopted Ethiopian children and their Ausie parents diein plane crash'

AUSTRALIA (ABC News) – Three bodies recovered from a plane that crashed with four family members on board in the Northern Territory last week have been formally identified. The Coroner says they are the bodiesof Stuart Sceney, 45, and two of his daughters, Mekdes and Kal-kidan, aged 12 and 15. The body of their mother, Carmelita (Karmi) Sceney, 53,has not been recovered but the Coroner says evidence indicates she has died. The family members died when their light aircraft crashed in bad weather after leaving the remote Bullo River cattle station en route to Darwin last Monday. The deaths are the subject of police and coronial investigations being done in conjunction with the Australian Transport Safety Bureau.

April 12, 2013: Ethiopian National Transitional Council (ENTC) is demanding an investigation on the legitimacy of the Nile dam bond salesin the US. ENTC has sent a letter to the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) demanding an investigation on the legality of the Nile dam bond sales that are being conducted in the US. The letter challenges the commission that the sales are in violation of the US trade laws and theEthiopian Embassy in the US has no legal ground to do such business.

April 12th, 2013: Ethiopian Muslims staged protest rallies in several citiesthroughout Ethiopia’

News tip: Carrying posters and placards that read “Fiteh” (justice), tens ofthousands of Ethiopian Muslims staged peaceful protests in several cities across Ethiopia today. Some of the cities where protests took place include Addis Ababa at Anwar Mosque, Dessie, Awassa, Dire Dawa, Bahir Dar, Jimma, and Gondar. The protesters demanded the regime to release their leaders and stop interfering in their religion.

April 12, 2013: Swden Activists condemn ethnic cleansing in Ethiopia'

News tip: STOCKHOLM - Activists condemned state-sponsored ethnic cleansing in Ethiopia. Protesters were anxious to describe the current conditions in Ethiopia under a government led by minorities. According to the protesters, they refered the Geneva convention to be respected by theEthiopian authorities as Ethiopia is a signatory. Here the article of part of the Geneva convention reads as followed, “ (እ.ኤ.አ በ1951 ዓ.ም በ130 አገሮች የጸደቀውየተባበሩት መንግስታት ኮንቬንሽን አንቀጽ 2) defines genocide as: “any of the following acts committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such: (a) Killing members of the group; (b) Causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group; (c) Deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part; (d) Imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group; (e) Forcibly transferring children of the group to another group”. Among the slogans held by the demonstrators, "freedom of all sorts must be guaranteed before damming Abay" "politically-motivated arrests, killings, and persecutions must be dammed first" et cetera,. In sum, the Abay project turns to be a controversy because of the lack of democratic governance at all levels of government and not it is because Meles Zenawiinitiated it. Many need the government to understand that they are much more precious species than mega-hydroelectric dams. If injustices of all sorts are dammed first, all Ethiopians then would join hands and embarkon incredible projects. The US State Dept's 2012 Report on human rightsviolations detailed the Ethiopian government suppression of journalists and bloggers and the alarming incidences of imprisonment and torture.

There is no independent press in Ethiopia and dissenting political views are often treated as “terrorism.” The protesters also called for the releaseof all political prisoners and prisoners of conscience kept behind bars under trumped-up charges.

April 15, 2013: Behind Ethnic Cleansing in Benishangul-Gumuz - Evicteesreturn with mixed emotions'

News tip: The despicable and barbaric action of targeting, evicting and deporting ethnic Amaharas from the Benishangul-Gumuz Regional State inwestern Ethiopia is a horrific crime and a crime against humanity by any measure and the outrage of Ethiopians across the world is justified. The stories heared from the victims themselves and the witnesses who saw it are heart wrenching. Farmers, who have been evicted from the Kemashi Zone of Benishangul Gmuz Region, have told that they were in “mixed emotions” as they were being returned back to the Region and their homes. One of the farmers preferring to remain anonymous said “lost properties can be earned back. We would like to thank all those that helped us to be back alive”. Another farmer said that the cooperation of allthose that have been with them was still dearly needed as the situation has not been fully solved yet. He also pleaded that his properties be returned.

Similarly, Ethiopians in Addis Abeba and other regions are condemning thepersecution being committed against Ethiopians of the Amhara ethnic origin. A caller from Addis Abeba, who goes by the name, Eskedar said that Ethiopians should say “Stop” to this dictatorial regime and all should rise up. Another caller from Addis Abeba also said that Ethiopians should take to the streets. A resident of Arsi Zone, Oromia Region on his part said that he was bewildered why everyone was sitting and watching while all this abuse was taking place and advised that something should be done.

It was understood that there are still over 2000 Ethiopians of the Amhara ethnic origin who have not yet been resettled back in Benishangul Gumuz Region yet. Similarly, hundreds of Ethiopians of the Amhara ethnic origin, who have been residing in the Minit Wereda of Southern Ethiopia, have been evicted from the Region. Seven of these evictees have reportedly been killed. Last year, 20,000 Ethiopians of the Amhara ethnic origin havebeen evicted from the Grura Farda area of southern Ethiopia. Although the regime has been stating that the evictees were resettled in their respective regions, it has not yet disclosed where and when they have been resettled.

April 15, 2013: The Land-grab issue in Africa - Discussion with Advocates& Policymakers'

A SHORT DOCUMENTARY ON LAND GRABBING WILL BE SCREENED: Land grabbing is becoming the single most combative issue in Africa. It involveslarge-scale land acquisitions by foreign countries and corporations for farming, biofuels, logging and minerals. Unlike land acquisitions in the United States and Europe where purchasers pay the fair market values forland, in Africa unscrupulous deals are displacing thousands of farmers off their ancestral lands and leaving local communities in abject poverty, while government officials benefit from land sales and leases.

PANALISTS: BINTA TERRIER: Ms. Terrier is Co-Founder and Executive Director of Partnership League for Africa's Development (PLAD). PLAD wascreated to focus on education, health, land-rights and agriculture as the cornerstone to address the human rights problem in Africa. News tip: An attempt by Ethiopian ambassador to US Girma Biru to sell Nile bond was disrupted by pan-Ethiopians carrying and chanting slogans:Freedom! Stop Ethnic Cleansing! Stop Genocide! Many of the protesters entered the meeting hall and shouted: 'Freedom!' 'Freedom!', a slogan that sends shake slightly. The regime and its embassy in Washington DC are selling bonds in the United States in violation of the Securities and Exchange Commission's (SEC) rules, according to a recent statement by the Ethiopian National Transitional Council (ENTC), the Ethiopian embassyin the US is not authorized to sell stocks and bonds in the U.S.
April 15, 2013: Victory, tragedy - Ethiopia's Lelissa Desisa, Kenya's RitaJeptoo Win Boston Marathon'

(AP) 3 Dead 143 injured in two explosions at the Boston Marathon event:Police’

Two hours after Lelissa Desisa of Ethiopia, and Rita Jeptoo of Kenya, crossed the finish line to win the men's and women's races, respectively, two bombs exploded there, killing three and leaving more than 130 injured. With thousands of entrants still on the 26.2-mile course, race volunteers and public officials rushed to the aid of wounded spectators, and the medical tent set up to care for fatigued runners quickly transformed into a trauma clinic. The explosion sent some runners tumbling to the pavement, while others, already unsteady from the grueling run, were knocked down by those rushing toward the scene. A Rhode Island state trooper who ran in the race estimated he saw at least two dozen people who had lost limbs in the explosion. Runners and spectators cried as they fled the billowing gray smoke rising from a running-gear store overlooking the end of the course; organizers mobilized to usher the runners still on the course to safety. The race day started with 26 seconds of silence in honor of the victims of the Sandy Hook Elementary School shooting in December. A little more than two hours later, the lead runners passed the Mile 26 marker, which was decorated with the Newtown, Conn., seal and dedicated to the memory of those killed there. After another two hours, tragedy and death again befella New England community. The stunning event shattered the euphoria of what had been an uneventful 117th edition of the world's oldest and most prestigious annualmarathon. Runners still on the course were diverted to the Boston Common; race officials said 4,496 runners had crossed the checkpoint at more than 24 miles but did not reach the finish line. The Kenyans finally face a challenge to their dominance of the Boston Marathon, and it's from their East African neighbors. Ethiopia's Lelisa Desisa took the title in the 117th edition of the world's oldest marathon, winning a three-way sprint down Boylston Street to finish in 2 hours, 10 minutes, 22 seconds and snap a string of three consecutive Kenyan victories. "Here we have a relative newcomer," said Ethiopia's Guebregziabher Guebremariam, who finished third. "Everything changes." In just his second race at the 26.2- mile distance, Desisa finished 5 seconds ahead of Kenya's Micah Kogo to earn $150,000 and the traditional olive wreath. American Jason Hartmannfinished fourth for the second year in a row. "It was more of a tactical race, the Ethiopian versus the Kenyans. That fight played out very well," defending champion Wesley Korir, a Kenyan citizen and U.S. resident, saidafter finishing fifth. "The Ethiopians run very good tactical races. One thing I always say is, 'Whenever you see more than five Ethiopians in a race, you ought to be very careful.' As Kenyans, we ought to go back to the drawing board and see if we can get our teamwork back." Rita Jeptoo averted the Keynan shutout by winning the women's race for the second time. Jeptoo, who also won in 2006, finished in 2:26:25 for her first victory in a major race since taking two years off after having a baby.(Text ends)

April 15, 2013: (News updates) Lelisa Desisa the winner of the men's raceat the Boston Marathon says he is returning his winner's medal to honor the city and those killed and injured in the terrorist bombings near the finish line of one of the world's top running events. Lelisa says sport should be a pleasure and never a battlefield. He made the announcement Sunday at a ceremony with U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry. Kerry alsohonored the woman's runner-up and the men's third place finisher. All three athletes are from Ethiopia. The Boston Marathon bombing was a terrorist attack, followed by subsequent related shootings, that occurred when two pressure cooker bombs exploded during the Boston Marathon.

The bombs exploded about 12 seconds and 210 yards (190 m) apart at 2:49 pm EDT, near the marathon's finish line on Boylston Street The April15 explosions killed three people and injured more than 260 others.

April 15, 2013: US FAA Orders Inspection Of Boeing 737s'

(NPR) By Scott Neuman - Federal aviation officials have ordered that morethan 1,000 Boeing 737s be examined to see if a key part on the plane's tail section needs to be replaced, The Wall Street Journal reported Monday. The Federal Aviation Administration issued the airworthiness directive for a pin that holds the 737's horizontal stabilizer to the rest of the tail, to see if it is in danger of failing prematurely. The horizontal stabilizer — also known as the tail plane — enables the pilot to control theaircraft's pitch. The FAA said the inspection was "prompted by reports of an incorrect procedure used to apply the wear and corrosion protective surface coating to attach pins of the horizontal stabilizer rear spar."

The agency says the directive affects 1,050 planes flown by U.S. carriers and could cost nearly $10,000 per aircraft. The WSJ reports that newer versions of the 737, which is the world's most widely used passenger aircraft, are most at risk for the defect. So far, the potentially defective part has not caused any accidents, the paper says. Airlines have until lateMay before the inspections begin, and have various compliance times based on the age of the aircraft and other factors, the newspaper says.

April 15, 2013: The Egyptian claims that Eritrea supports Egypt’s claim toits historic (traditional) Nile River water rights. The Eritrean position is nosurprise. Ethiopia is Eritrea’s bitterest enemy and Egypt and Ethiopia are involved in a complicated dispute over the Nile water.

April 15, 2013: Ruling Front gets unexpected election outcomes'

ESAT News: In the local and City Administration Elections held in Ethiopiain the presence of a few opposition parties yesterday, the ruling EthiopianPeople’s Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) has garnered unexpected outcomes. “Although EPRDF was eyeing a 99 to 100 percent election win, the messages that voters put on the voting Cards was what it did not expect." An observer said. In some areas, Kebele and Woreda officials were seen appeasing election observers and vote counters to be silent of what they saw. According to witnesses, in Woldeya, Northern Wello Zone, over half of the papers and cards found ballot boxes were blank while the rest contained messages that urged the ruling party to leave, called freedom of religion and arrested religious leaders to be freed.In another election station in Northern Shewa, the majority of the voters did cast blank papers into the ballot boxes. Election stations in Addis Abeba like Waliya School Election Station in Kirkos Sub city were "hit with voters' dearth". In some regions where vote counting has already started,the ruling Front has won the election with 99 to 100 percent. Observers state that this election result would not only beat EPRDF's own 99.6 percent election results of 2010 but would remain the only in the election history of Ethiopia.

April 16, 2013: Jailed journalist wins UNESCO-Guillermo Cano World PressFreedom Prize'

Press Release: Paris - Imprisoned Ethiopian journalist Reeyot Alemu is thewinner of the 2013 UNESCO-Guillermo Cano World Press Freedom Prize.

Ms Alemu was recommended by an independent international jury of media professionals in recognition of her "exceptional courage, resistance and commitment to freedom of expression." The Jury took note of Reeyot Alemu's contribution to numerous and independent publications. She wrote critically about political and social issues, focusing on the root causes of poverty and gender equality. She worked for several independent media. In 2010 she founded her own publishing house and a monthly magazine called Change, both of which were subsequently closed. In June 2011, while working as a regular columnist for Feteh, a national weekly newspaper, Ms Alemu was arrested. She is currently serving a five year sentence in Kality prison. The UNESCO Guillermo CanoWorld Press Freedom Prize was created in 1997 by UNESCO's Executive Board. It is awarded annually during the celebration of World Press Freedom Day on 3 May, which will take place this year in Costa Rica. The Prize honours the work of an individual or an organization which has madea notable contribution to the defence and /or promotion of freedom of expression anywhere in the world, especially if risks have been involved.

April 16, 2013: The US House sub-committee on Africa discusses'

The House sub-committee on Africa health, global human rights and international organizations held an illuminating hearing on democracy in Africa. The hearing focused on U.S. support for elections in Kenya, but many of the issues discussed are applicable to Ethiopia. A representativeof the National Democratic Institute discussed the importance of creatinga democratic ecosystem and warned against believing that the act of voting defines democracy. He said: " Ultimately, it is the people of a country who determine the credibility of their elections and the country's democratic development. Additionally, while elections are a key ingredientof democracy, it should be understood that they are not synonymous with democracy." The message for Ethiopia is clear. Democracy and democraticinstitutions must exist 365 days a year, not just on voting day. For example, it is ridiculous to think Ethiopia or any other country can have fair, free elections in the absence of access to a free press, in the context of harassment and violence against opposition politicians, and when there is no freedom of assembly. In his opening statement, Representative ChrisSmith (R-N.J.) noted the upcoming election in Ethiopia. "Ethiopia's next election will replace the late Prime Minister Meles Zenawi and also will determine whether the political opposition will have more space to operatethan in previous elections." Hopefully Smith, the U.S. Congress, the State Department and media will investigate the human rights abuses that are endemic in Ethiopia. Pressure from the outside world can help bring about change in Ethiopia, and the first step toward creating that pressure is create awareness of the situation.

April 16, 2013: High cost of living frustrates Ethiopians'

ESAT News: The hope that many Ethiopians had that the high cost of living would improve and prices would decrease, has been dashed by theever increasing cost of living and inflation in Ethiopia, information collected by ESAT from various regions of Ethiopia revealed. According toreports sent by ESAT's reporters from five major regions of Ethiopia, the high cost of living is "blazing" citizens who are on the middle and lower income levels. In one of the most affected regions, Eastern Ethiopia and cities such as Dire Dawa, Harar and its environs, a quintal of Ethiopia's staple food, Teff is being sold up to 2000 Birr ($107). Some residents in the Oromia Region of Ethiopia that our reporter spoke to also said that they were losing hope in life due to the high cost of living.

Governmental employees and other self employed people in Southern Ethiopia also said that they were unable to find sugar and edible oil in themarket and that the high cost of living has put them in a "critical" situation. Most farmers in fertilizer debt also stated that they are finding themselves in trouble. Civil servants in the Amhara Region on their part said that they were unable to manage their families with their monthly salaries. Compared with the inflation of same period last year, the inflation of the last 12 months, the inflation this year has showed an increase of 18 percent, a March 2013 report by the Central Statistics Agency showed. The food item inflation on March 2013 showed a 20 percent increase. Observers state that the government has failed to contain the spiraling inflation. The government argues that the reason for the inflation was the betterment of the living conditions of Ethiopians andthe resulting increase in consumption.

April 16, 2013: Former TPLF combatant criticizes late PM's widow'

ESAT News: Aregash Adane, a veteran combatant of the Tigrean People'sLiberation Front (TPLF) has criticized Azeb Mesfin's, the widow of the late Ethiopian Prime Minister, Meles Zenawi, recent remark about the salary and living condition of their family. In her interview with the Amharic weekly, Ethio Mihdar, Aregash said that the statement that Azeb made last month during the ruling Front's 9th Congress about her late husband'sincome was "inconsiderate of peoples' conscience and rationalization".

Azeb last month said that Meles was the only Prime Minister in the worldwho was paid and lived on a meager 6500birr ($250) monthly payroll. "The Ethiopian people have a good level conscience and rationality.

However, Azeb's statement negates this. The people of Ethiopia know the truth all too well." She said. Aregash further said "Meles had lived in the main Palace. The Palace is a big institution with its own administration whose budget spending is unknown. People living and working in the Palace live on this budget. Whenever they travel abroad, they had all theircosts covered and were also paid at an international rate. This has alwaysbeen the case. Thus, it is easy to assume how much money they would have amassed". Aregash said Meles and Azeb sent their children to schools that charged the highest tuition fees. She said that she knew firsthand that they paid 35,000 Birr per annum for their son's school fee some 12 years ago. Similarly, they must have paid over 100,000 Birr per year for three of their children. "This is not possible with a monthly salary of 6500Birr" Aregash added. Noting that the giant Ethiopian business endowment, the Endowment Fund for Rehabilitation of Tigray (EFFORT) iscontrolled by Azeb Mesfin, Aregash rebutted Azeb's 6500 Birr per month claims.

April 17, 2013: Fights between the Afars and Issas kill people'

An armed attack by the Issa ethnic community on Afar people in Gewane and Buliwelaye two Woredas of Afar Region four days ago has killed few people. Two have been taken to Nazreth Hospital for special treatment. Ina similar attack before two days ago, one Afari was killed while seven were injured. After the incumbent came to power, Issa people had appliedfor a special administrative Woreda which was strongly opposed by Afar.

In a related report, over 15,000 Tigreans living in Zone 2 of Afar Region,have once again applied for a special administrative Woreda. Many Afar people are opposing the request fearing that the permission of special administrative Worda for one would mean the other would also get the same status. The Afar people say that Tigray Region is trying to annex Afar Region by using Tigreans living in Afar as a pretext. Our efforts to speak to Ethiopian government officials on the issue were unproductive. Source: ESAT News

April 17, 2013: What is the Eritrean foreign minister begging from Egypt’sMohammed Morsi this time?

Views: President Mohamed Morsi held a meeting with Eritrean PresidentialAdvisor Yemane Guebreab and Foreign Minister Osman Saleh on means ofpromoting bilateral ties. The meeting tackled the file of Nile water along with discussing regional and international issues of mutual concern, said astatement released by the Presidency. Mr. Morsi praised the Eritrean stance that supports the Egyptian historic rights in Nile water. Morsi said he is looking forward to holding a meeting with Eritrean President Issaias Affewerki as soon as possible. Meanwhile, Foreign Minister Mohamed Kamel Amr received Eritrean Foreign Minister Osman Saleh and Eritrean Presidential Advisor Yemane Guebreab. Foreign Ministry Spokesman Amr Roshdi said that Eritrean Foreign Minister Osman Saleh conveyed a message to President Mohamed Morsi from Eritrean President Issaias Affewerki. Roshdi noted that the two sides took up means of boosting bilateral relations between Egypt and Eritrea as well as coordinating stances toward a host of international issues. He added that Amr stressedEgypt's keenness on promoting trade with Eritrea. Source: Daily News Egypt

April 18, 2013: Ethiopian Airlines readies grounded 787 for flight'

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia -- The chief executive of Ethiopian Airlines says itis seeking approval from America's Federal Aviation Administration (FAA)and from Boeing to put its grounded Boeing 787s back into service.

Ethiopian Airlines chief executive officer Tewolde Gebremariam told The Associated Press that the company expects FAA approval within a few days. The Boeing 787 Dreamliners has been grounded since January because of a risk of fire from the plane's lithium batteries. United Airlines earlier this month put its grounded Boeing 787s back in its flight schedule.United has a 787 scheduled to fly starting May 31. Boeing Co. has proposed a fix for the 787's batteries, but it needs approval from the FAA.Morgan Stanley says profit and revenue dipped in the first quarter. Resultsbeat Wall Street's expectations, but the stock still dipped in pre-market trading.

United Health Group's first-quarter net income dropped 14 percent, as thenation's largest health insurer paid out more for medical claims and booked a smaller gain due to leftover insurance claims. April 19, 2013: US Secretary of State John Kerry to visit Ethiopia'

News tip: US Secretary of State John Kerry on Thursday revealed he will attend an African Union summit in Ethiopia next month, and said Washington had be more engaged with Africa. The May 19-27 summit in Addis Ababa will mark the 50th anniversary of the founding of the Organization of African Unity, the predecessor to the AU. Kerry told US lawmakers he was concerned by China's growing influence in Africa, and viewed a recent tour of three African nations by Iranian leader Mahmoud Ahmadinejad as a "negative development." "China is now out-investing the United States significantly in Africa," Kerry told his former colleagues on the Senate foreign relations committee. Although China was principally focused on resources which did not pose direct competition to the United States, Kerry said he was worried about possible negative consequences. "Between Iran, China, other countries… they're having an impact on the business practices and on the choices… some of the governments there are facing. And it's not been a positive one in some regards." Source: CapitalFm

April 19-21, 2013: State Criminality: Under Darkness in the Somali Regionof Ethiopia'

Weekend Edition: Article by GRAHAM PEEBLES - No matter how tightly truth is tied down, confined and suffocated, she slowly escapes. Seeping out through cracks and openings large and small, illuminating all, revealing the grime and shame, that cowers in the shadows. The arid Somali (or Ogaden) region of Ethiopia, home to some 5 million ethnic Somalis has been isolated from the world since 2005, when the government imposed a ban on all international media and most humanitarian groups from operating in the area. Human Rights Watch (HRW), report that the government, "has tried to stem the flow of information from the region. Some foreign journalists who have attemptedto conduct independent investigations have been arrested and residents and witnesses have been threatened and detained in order to prevent them from speaking out". Aid workers with the United Nations (UN), Medecines Sans Frontiers (MSF) and the International Committee of The Red Cross, plus journalists from a range of western papers, including The New York Times have all had staff expelled and/or detained, by the Ethiopian regime, which speaks of democracy yet does act not in accordance with its own liberal constitution and consistently violates international law, with total impunity.

Under the cover of media darkness together with donor country indifference, the Ethiopian government according to a host of human rights organisations, is committing wide-ranging human rights abuses that amount to war crimes and crimes against humanity. Serious accusations based on accounts relayed by refugees and interviews with Ogaden Somalis on the ground, thatgive, one fears, a hint only of the level of state criminality taking place in the troubled, largely ignored region. HRW,make clear the seriousness of the situation, stating that, “tens of thousands of ethnic Somali civilians living in eastern Ethiopia’s Somali Regional State are experiencing serious abuses… Ethiopian troops have forcibly displaced entire rural communities, ordering villagers to leave their homes within a few days or witness their houses being burnt down and possessions destroyed—and risk death.”

The African Rights Monitor (ARM) in their detailed study, conservatively titled ‘Concerns Over the Ogaden Territory’, found, “that the Ethiopian government has systematically and repeatedly arbitrarily detained, tortured and inhumanly degraded the Ogaden people.” Women and children they report, “are raped, sexually assaulted, and killed”. The rulingEthiopian People’s Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) they found, “systematically attacks the women and children as they are the weakest ina civil society” and are unable to defend themselves. Documenting a series of specific cases of violence, HRW (28/05/2012) report, “an Ethiopian government-backed paramilitary force [the Liyuu Police] summarily executed 10 men during a March 2012 operation”, HRW “interviewed witnesses and relatives of the victims who described witnessing at least 10 summary executions…. The actual number may be higher.” Such accounts as these clearly warrant investigation by independent agencies, and yet they are resolutely ignored. Supporters of the regime know well what is occurring throughout the Ogaden, and yet they remain silent. America – the single biggest donor to the country, withmilitary bases inside Ethiopia from where their deadly drones are launchedinto Somalia and Yemen – and Britain are close allies – of the Ethiopian government it seems, but not of the Ethiopian people it seems.

A Regime of Abuse: Page after page could be filled with detailed accountsof abuse from refugees who have fled the region, human rights groups and members of the Ogaden diaspora. Atrocities meted out to innocent civilians suspected of supporting the ONLF, which Genocide Watch (GW) find, amount to “war crimes and crimes against humanity”. Beaten to death, hanged from a tree, tied with wire and held over burning chilies, raped, repeatedly and falsely imprisoned; brutal, unjustifiable acts, justified by the government as part of a ‘counter insurgency operation’, against the Ogaden National Liberation Front (ONLF), predictably brandedterrorists.

Documented reports of human rights violations amounting to state terrorism are dismissed by the EPRDF government, a regime with a notoriously dismal human rights record – who suggest that such accountsare reports of military personnel simply carrying out their duty to safeguard the Ethiopian people by routing out terrorist gangs. A scripted rhetoric of righteousness drafted in Washington after 9/11, translated worldwide distorted and espoused by totalitarian governments East andWest, North and South to legitimise methods of control and acts of aggression.

Given the media restrictions, we cannot vouchsafe the governments view, but "if the Ethiopian government doesn't have anything to hide, why don'tthey allow independent investigators and journalists into the region", Leslie Lefkow, HRW deputy director of Africa, poses the question on the tipof our tongues that cannot be asked too often. There is, she says with understatement, " a lot of concern about the human rights situation on the Ogaden". GW are more blunt, claiming unequivocally that Ethiopia is committing genocide in the Somali region, as well as to the "Anuak, Oromo and Omo" ethnic groups (or tribes). And they call on the EPRDF regime to "cease all attacks on the Ogaden Somali" people and "immediately release all prisoners", urging them to "adhere to it's own constitution and allow its provinces the legal autonomy they are guaranteed."

A Captains Story: In 2005, delivery of the Ethiopian government's violent policy of suppression in the Ogaden shifted from the Military to the newly-formed paramilitary group, the Liyuu Police. Not a recognisable police force at all, as Faysal Mohamoud Abdi Wali a defected 38-year-old former Captain in the Intelligence unit of the Liyuu makes clear, but "an extension of the military", which operates under a cloak of impunity, lacking all accountability. Faysal Mohammoud served in the Liyuu from its inception eight years ago, when it was called the 'Liyuu Xayi' until he defected in 2012. His testimony is of particular interest, especially given the media ban. The former Liyuu officer from regiment nine "stationed in the Duhun districy", was interviewd by Swedish journalists, Amnesty International and myself. He related how young men are forced to join theforce and arrested should they refuse. Confirming findings by HRW that forced recruitment takes place amongst tribal groups, who are ordered Faysal says tribal elders are ordered "to bring at least 80 fighters for every single tribe. If any of these [recruited fighters] escaped from the Militia they seek and capture [them, the truant is] then forced to kill one of his relatives or kinship".

He recounts mass killing, in "Hamaro, Sagag, and Dhuhun of Fiq provinces", where he says "large number of civilians accused of being ONLF sympathizers" where massacred. "These people are mostly killed by hanging from trees and girls are gang-raped and then murdered." He goeson to say "the youth in Dhuhun, the young men and the young women in Hamaro, the young men slaughtered in Degeh-bur and teens summarily executed [in] Denan and Dakhato". Extra judicial executions, intimidation and "forceful methods; strangling and rape of females aged 15 – 25," are used as weapons of terror, "based on the advice we received from the regional president Abdi Mohamud Omar who said 'indoctrinate the women with the male phallus and the men with guns'. Omar was largely responsible for the creation of the Liyuu, which evolved out of the Ethiopian army, and was embraced by the former Prime Minister MelesZenawi. The Captain states he was an "eye-witness for unaccountable massacres"by Liyuu Police who, after killing villagers "burned the entire village to theground". They forcefully remove them [villagers] from the land and slaughter their livestock. In remote villages, they sometimes massacre them all. For example, they forcefully removed many villagers from Gudhis, massacring 125 members from that village and burned the village, in 2007." Soldiers are rewarded he says, for killing civilians, for the "good job they have done". Nomads who have the misfortune to see the Liyuu on operations, are killed, "in order to make sure that their information is not received by the ONLF rebels". Summary executions, hereports are commonplace, as "in Dakhato in June 2010… {Where] 43 nomads were killed". Faysal Mohammedd estimates the number of civilians murdered by the Liyuu since 2005 "to be in excess of 30, 000 people".

Urgent Action Required: The Somali region, poor and desolate, is potentially the richest part of Ethiopia. Natural Gas and oil have been discovered to be lying under the harsh surface and various contracts for exploration have been granted to international companies, (without consultation with local, indigenous people, needless to say). The current round of violence is to many people linked to the discovery of these natural treasures: GW relay how, "immediately after oil and gas were discovered in the Ogaden, Ethiopian government forces evicted large numbers of Ogaden Somalis from their ancestral grazing lands". Accordingto Faysal Mohamoud the federal government "has strategic economic and land acquisition aim in the Ogaden region, intended to exploit the natural resources of the region." These are strategic aims that they are seeking torealise through the silencing of the indigenous local people.
Whilst some numbers, dates and locations from these and other accounts may be debated, the weight of claims of human rights violations and statecriminality, is, it would appear beyond dispute – to the extent that GW have, "called upon the United Nations Security Council to refer the situation in Ethiopia to the International Criminal Court". This required measure together with a range of others (including; the immediate releaseof all so called political prisoners, the correct distribution of all humanitarian aid to the needy, journalists granted open and unrestricted access, and a thorough investigation by independent observers) would be the right and proper course of action in the region. Action that should be undertaken, at the insistence of Ethiopia's main donors – America, Britain and the European Union and with all due urgency. Graham Peebles is director of the Create Trust.

April 19, 2013: Arbitrary arrests, torture & killings common in Ethiopia:US State Dept. 2012 report'
“The most significant human rights problems included restrictions on freedom of expression and association through politically motivated trialsand convictions of opposition political figures, activists, journalists, and bloggers, as well as increased restrictions on print media. In July securityforces used force against and arrested Muslims who protested against alleged government interference in religious affairs. The government continued restrictions on civil society and nongovernmental organization (NGO) activities imposed by the Charities and Societies Proclamation (CSO).
April 19, 2013: Benishangul Region returnee Amharas suffering fromdiscrimination'
Around 8000 Ethiopians of the Amhara ethnic origin, who have been evicted from BenishangulRegion and deported in FinoteSelam and Chagni cities, have said that they are suffering from organized discrimination as they return back to Benishangul Region though the pressures by Ethiopians across the globe. Natives and other residents of the Region have refused to employ the returnees in any kind of job. Some of the returnee farmers that ESAT spoke to said that the Zonal and Woreda officials ofBenishangul Region have lobbied the people not to employ any returnee. Similarly, expired and contaminated flour that the government gave them to for food has affected many children, mothers and families. Most returnees are now affected by diarrhea and contaminable diseases. To go to the nearest health centre, according to the affected farmers, onehas to walk four hours on foot. Some of the farmers said to ESAT that they would prefer to return to where they were deported if they did not tofind job. The farmers state that as they have lost most of their properties already they would not be able to pay for their own transportation this time if they were to go back to their native regions. Hundreds of children are also out of school, it has been learnt. ESAT’s efforts to speak to Federal government officials were unsuccessful. Deputy Minister of the Ethiopia Foreign Affairs, Ambassador Birhane Gebrekirstos said in a recent interview with the Amharic Service of the Deutsche Welle (DW) Radio thatthe citizens were evicted because they “invaded the land illegally”. The State Minister also responded saying that he had no information if the evictees were again made to return when the journalist mentioned that the Benishangul Regional Government had already admitted that the evictions were “blunders on their side” and allowed them to come back, ina follow up question. April 19, 2013: AEUP calls for “genocide on Amharas and Afars” to stop'
ESAT News: All Ethiopian Unity Party (AEUP) in a presser given today saidthat Ethiopians of the Amhara ethnic origin, who have sacrificed their bones for the sovereignty of Ethiopia together with other ethnic groups, are being “thrown out, attacked and killed like dogs” in a Country which stipulates that all Ethiopians are equal before the law under Article 25 of its Constitution. Similarly the Party said that the people of Afar are also being evicted from their land and their land was being given to the officials of the incumbent and investors in their cliques. AEUP said that thepeople of Afar have been forced to resettle in an arid and inhospitable area by snatching their land. The evicted people and their cattle are now suffering from hunger. Regarding the eviction of Amhara peopele from Benishangul Region, the Party said “since March 2013, 2000 people of theAmahra ethnic origin have been evicted from Bambis Woreda of Asosa Zone, over 8000 were also evicted from Yaso Wereda of Kemashi Zone and over 5000 people have been evicted from Bulen Woreda”.

AEUP states that the Regional President of Benishangul Region, Ahmed Nasir and TPLF officials responsible for the forced eviction. The Party said that the regime would never cease cleansing Amhara people. The RegionalAdministration allowed the evictees to return only to cool down and distract the pressure that is coming from Ethiopians across the globe.

AEUP called for a legal protection to be given to the returnees, proper compensation for the moral and physical abuse they suffered, the perpetrators of the crime to be indicted, hate and division mongers to stoptheir acts and the Regime’s attempt to stay in power by dividing people based on their religion and ethnicity to be stopped immediately. Member of the ruling coalition that claims to represent Amhara people, the AmharaNational Democratic Movement (ANDM) has not said anything regarding the evictions so far. Although ESAT endlessly attempted to speak to ANDMofficials, it has been unable due to repeated reasons given such as the officials being in a “meeting, on a lunch break, and with guests”. Unlike other countries where leaders would cease their international trips when their own citizens are in problem, most Ethiopians have been annoyed at the new Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Dessalgn, who ignored the anguish thousands of evicted Ethiopians and started an international tour.

April 20, 2013: Government Officials Reject Findings of US Report onHuman Rights Violations'

Ethiopian government officials have spoken out against a recent report bythe American State Department that criticized the East African country’s human rights record, saying that the findings are “unwarranted.” “We have been pushing toward a more democratic society and we believe Ethiopia is a leader on human rights issues across Africa,” a foreign ministry official told Bikyanews.com on Saturday on condition of anonymity as he was not authorized to speak to the media. “If we want tocondemn human rights violations, how about the US and their continued use of terror tactics, drones against civilians in the world. That is a crime and should be condemned,” the official continued. The US government onFriday commended activists, netizens, and journalists for their courage in advocating for universal human rights and expressed concern over the heightened crackdown on civil liberties, rebuking several countries for shrinking the space for journalists and activists. In its 36th annual reportof human rights practices around the world, the State Department criticized the increased suppression of freedoms of expression, assembly,association and religion. The report said governments continued to repress or attack the means by which individuals organize and “demand better performance from their rulers” by instituting new impending laws throughout 2012. The State Department report stated that Ethiopia has used “counter terrorism or extremism as a pretext for suppressing freedom of expression.

April 20, 2013: Ethiopians protest World Bank’s support for land grab’

WASHINGTON, DC - Ethiopians in their numbers Saturday morning stormed the 17th Street Office complex of the World Bank in WashingtonDC, protesting the bank’s alleged support for land grab and ethnic cleansing by President Girma Wolde-Giorgis. Displaying placards with various inscriptions like “World Bank stop financing Human rights violations,” “USA say no to ethnic cleansing of the Amharas in Ethiopia” and what will it take to end poverty? Empower people not dictators” among others, they claimed that they decided to protest to the headquarters of the bank against forceful eviction of poor farmers by alleged corrupt tycoons and foreign corporations to enrich themselves.

According to the protesters, “in Gambella more than three million hectaresof Annuak land was sold to foreigners to produce food for their own people. Saudi Arabia and other Gulf nations claim securing land to feed their people for the future. More than 70,000 Annuaks have already been forced from their land and another 150,000 will be displaced in the comingfew years.

They alleged that these evictions and ethnic cleansing is financed by the World Bank as they claim the Ethiopian government cannot do them without support from the World Bank and financing by the International Monetary Fund, (IMF). “The World Bank and IMF are financing it at all levels including paying salaries for those who are killing the poor people. Annuaks are now an endangered species so are the Mursi people who were chased away from the South Omo Valley hunting ground to clear theland for the regime’s sugar company. They said that if the World Bank could deny loan to Cambodia in 2011 when that government was displacing its farmers, there is no reason why the Ethiopian case should be different demanding the Bank to come clean and distance itself from the alleged crimes being committed by the present administration in that country. “We endorse the demand of the Human Rights Watch on its recent press release on Ethiopia for the World Bank to do its own internal investigation on the land eviction issue in Ethiopia and make it public.

Thousands of Ethiopians were and are evicted; many children, women andelderly are dying as a result of this. The World Bank either has to condone or condemn this human rights violation and crime against humanity" theyadded. Source: Daily Independent by Efe Ebelo,

April 20, 2013: Blue (Semayawi) Party officials arrested in Benishangul-Gumuz'

Blue Party officials Ato Yilkal Getnet, Chairman; Ato Sileshi Feyssa, DeputyChairman; Ato Yidenekachew Kebede, Head of Legal Affairs; and Bekalu Adane, Eastern Gojjam Coordinator have been arrested for trying to visit displaced Amharas in western Ethiopian region of Benishangul-Gumuz. Meantime, after a brief arrest, the freed Blue Party officials ordered to leave Benishangul: Following ESAT's breaking News report earlier that three officials of the opposition Semayawi (Blue) Party, who travelled to the Metekel Zone of Benishangul Region to investigate the eviction of Amhara people from the Region, have been arrested, it was learnt they have all been freed from Prison the same night. The freed officials of the Party are Engineer Yilkal Getnet, Chairman of the Party, Sileshi Feyssa, Deputy Chairman of the Party and Bekalu Adane, Chair of the Eastern Gojjam regional coordination committee. The Chairman said that they were arrested because they did not bring letters from the Federal government, Regional and Zonal administrations permitting them to enterthe Region and talk to the people. He said they were pardoned and were on their way to the Capital. Asked if it was necessary to carry such a letter and that they were leaders of a political party, Yilekal said "We were told that in such trips as ours, letters from the above three bodies was necessary and not having the letters was considered as contempt to the self determination rights of nationalities. The Chairman said they had the necessary letters but were arrested because authorities feared that their visit would publicize their wrongdoing. Yilekal also said that a video recording that they produced speaking to some people were deleted by the Regional authorities, “however, what we have seen and heard has given us sufficient information about the problem” he added. The government is attempting to cover up the crimes being committed againstAmhara people. Dr. Yacob Hailemariam, an international lawyer and juristrecently told that the government could appear before an international court for an “ethnic cleansing” crime.

April 21, 2013: Ethiopia: Washington Post Updates'

Washington DC: Over 1,000 Ethiopians and Ethiopian-Americans demonstrated in front of the White House last week to protest the Ethiopian government's human rights abuses to Amhara Ethiopians. The protests demanded a stop to the forced displacement of Ethiopians.

Protestors asked the Obama administration to investigate human rights abuses in Ethiopia. Organizers of the demonstration are planning a similarevent in front of the World Bank's Washington headquarters on April 20that 8am. Although U.S. State Department officials publicly claim that the U.S. government is promoting democracy and human rights throughout the world, human rights groups say the U.S. is giving a "free pass" to dictators who help U.S. anti-terrorism efforts. A recent Washington Post article cited the example of Ethiopia, quoting human rights groups accusing "the U.S. government of holding its tongue about political repression in Ethiopia." The article added: "The countries that cooperate with us get at least a free pass,” acknowledged a senior U.S. official who specializes in Africa but spoke on condition of anonymity to avoid retribution. “Whereas other countries that don’t cooperate, we ream themas best we can.” Johnnie Carson, who recently resigned as the State Department's top official responsible for Africa, made the customary comments in response to questions from the Washington Post. “These security relationships do not provide an excuse for us not to engage fully with the leaders of all of these countries on the very fundamental principles that are at the heart of our policy: strengthening democratic institutions.” Carson did not, however, provide any concrete examples of the U.S. taking on African dictators who support the war on terrorism. April 21, 2013: Ethiopia faces uncertain future in Ethiopian Somali regionof Ogaden’

Bikya News Analysis: ADDIS ABABA: The ongoing violence in the Eastern Ogaden region near the Somalia border has many in Ethiopia worried overthe future of the rebellious area. Activists close to the area say the government and military continue to use violence to subjugate the population in the area, and numerous reports have emerged in recent months of widespread human rights violence perpetuated by the Ethiopianmilitary. Human Rights Watch (HRW) has reported that the government “has tried to stem the flow of information from the region. Some foreign journalists who have attempted to conduct independent investigations have been arrested and residents and witnesses have been threatened and detained in order to prevent them from speaking out." Aid workers with the United Nations (UN), Medecines Sans Frontiers (MSF) and the International Committee of The Red Cross, plus journalists from a range ofwestern papers, including The New York Times have all had staff expelled and/or detained, by the Ethiopian regime, which speaks of democracy yet does act not in accordance with its own liberal constitution and consistently violates international law, with total impunity. Last year, An independent news website covering Ethiopia's Ogaden region, Ogadentoday, has called for a global investigation into what they termed the "Ogaden Genocide."

The call came in response to videos posted by Swedish National Television(SVT) concerning and detailing human rights abuses in Ethiopia's eastern region near the Somalia border. "The latest video is about the Mal-Qaqa massacre that took place in June 10, 2010 after when Ethiopian Paramilitary Liyu Police attacked the village and has executed an entirely population in the area," the statement said, adding that a SVT fixer had recently visited the area. "We, Ogadentoday Press an Information websiteand advocates promoting human right and freedom of media are calling for the International Community to take an urgent action about the ongoing genocide," the statement continued. It also called on the Ethiopian government to investigate the reports of widespread human rights abuses in the Ogaden region. Earlier this month, the Ogaden National Liberation Force (ONLF) and the government announced they were entering peace negotiations to end the armed conflict that has seen thousands of citizens killed in nearly three decades of fighting. 10 members from both sides Ethiopia and ONLF held the meeting and the meeting took place, on September 6 and September 7 in Nairobi, according to an ONLF statement. According to the ONLF statement, "there are the general principles agreedupon" that would be the basis for resolving the conflict. It is unclear how far the government is willing to move in dealing with the ONLF, but one government official told Bikyanews.com on condition of anonymity that "there is hope across both sides that we can compromise and begin to endthe violence." Despite the optimism surrounding the Kenya negotiations, violations of human rights has apparently continued in the Eastern region.Two Ethiopian women have accused the country's military of sexually abusing and raping them while they were detained after a crackdown in the Eastern Ogaden state near the Somalia border. Abdikarim Rabi, a human rights reporter with SVT, sent Bikyanews.com a short interview hehad conducted with Rokia Muhammad, who said she and other women were repeatedly raped. "They have raped me and many other women," she told Rabi. According to Muhammad, she is emotionally traumatized aswell as having physical "traces of the treatment in prison." In an interviewwith SVT, she showed her head, which had areas of hair ripped out as shesaid she was dragged, naked, in the Ogaden jail. Another woman, who asked not to be named, had escaped to Addis Ababa where she is receiving treatment for her injuries suffered in an Ogaden jail at the handsof the military.

“They would take me from my cell at least once or twice a day and rape me. The soldiers would take turns on me and other women. It was the worst experience of my life and I just want to forget and move on,” she told Bikyanews.com. It comes on the heels of increased reports of militaryabuse and violence against civilians in the Ogaden territory in recent weeks. According to one eyewitness, civilians were arrested in the Ogadentowns of Kebridahar, Shilaabo, Fiiq, Galaalshe and Dhagaxbuur Zone in the latest crackdown on the troubled region this month. “The civilians are accused of supporting the ONLF, Ogaden National Liberation Front, a nationalist movement fighting for the independence of Ogaden Region,” the report stated. The source added “that 36 individuals are arrested in different locations; some are taken to Police stations while others are taken to military camps, while still the operation is continuing.” The arrests come after the ONLF accused the military of carrying out a massacre of civilians in Ogaden last week. The ONLF accused the Ethiopian military of committing a massacre against predominantly womenand children in the Wardher region on September 6. At least 13 people have been confirmed dead. The ONLF said in a statement that the killings targeted family members of ONLF rebels, including the Guuleed family.

“All the victims were collected from different parts of the region including Danood, Qorile and other areas in Wardher region, and brought to Miir- denbas and summarily executed,” Ogaden Online reported. The ONLF statement said that one of the victims was critically wounded by the military and left on the ground to die. Another 15 civilians are reportedly missing. One eyewitness told Bikyanews. com that family members of the victims are currently holed up in their homes for fear that they will also beattacked and killed. “The situation here is extremely tense and people are both angry and sad at the violence against us,” the witness said. Panic hastaken hold of the area, the news report said. “For the last two years, the Ethiopian Army and its surrogates militias has increased this exemplary killings, causing fear and destruction of the lives of innocent civilians in Ogaden,” the ONLF statement read. “Since 2007 when a UN found gross violations of Human Rights by the Ethiopian army in Ogaden and recommended a UN investigation on the violation of Human Rights, the Ethiopian Army continued their transgressions with impunity.” The reportsof the massacre come as the ONLF and the Ethiopian government met in Kenya to discuss parameters for peace negotiations to end decades of violence in the Eastern Ogaden state near the Somalia border.

The ONLF was formed in 1984 and has carried out numerous attacks against the government over what it says is neglect and human rightsabuses. “It is not the first time that the Ethiopian Army in Ogaden engaged in similar activities at times of dialogue between ONLF and Ethiopia," the ONLF continued. "For the last two months, the intentional killing of the civilian people had increased remarkably. In 1998, when an attempt to negotiate started, the Ethiopian Army killed three of delegatesof the negotiation team, while returned from a rendezvous with the Ethiopian counterparts." They have called on the international communityto hold the Ethiopia government responsible for the continued violence perpetrated in the state. For now, it remains a tense situation in Ogaden,but without media able to move freely in the area, it is difficult to deliver adequate reporting for an area struggling to find hope through the prism of chaos and violence.

April 21, 2013: An Ethiopian gov't sponsored meeting in Norwaydisbanded '

A meeting called by Ethiopian government representatives in Tasta bydelshus, in Stavanger has been disbanded after Ethiopians that were in the auditorium protested and police intervened. The meeting was called tocollect money for the building of the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam (GERD). The protesters entered the session they were met with diplomats from Ethiopian embassy in Stockholm before the meeting being dispersed by Norwegian police which the meeting had been publicized as open to all Ethiopians. "We have freedom here in this country, but our families have no such freedom," was repeatedly chanted by men and women holding pan-Ethiopian flags. Meantime the Ethiopians in Stavanger replace the displayed current flag with the pan-Ethiopian one. It was also learnt that the protesters continued their own meeting in the same auditorium after police stopped the meeting that the Ethiopian regime officials paid for. Theprotesters first presented a list of crimes that the ruling Ethiopian People'sRevolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) committed since it took power tothe organizers. One of the attendants of the protest, Gedion Dessalgn saidthat although the protesters sought the meeting be started with a one minute silence for those killed by the current government in the past 21 years, the organizers of the meeting refused to do so which has sparked further louder protests. April 21, 2013: Ethiopia: Nile Basin Framework Set'

The Ethiopian House of People's Representatives (HoPR) discussed the draft proclamation that would ratify the Nile Basin Cooperation FrameworkAgreement, on Thursday, April 2013. The House then referred the draft proclamation to the Natural Resource and Environmental Protection Standing Committee of the Parliament for further assessment. The agreement was signed by Ethiopia, Kenya,Uganda, Rwanda and Tanzania in May 2010 and by Burundi a year later. The signing of the agreement was kept open for an additional year in order to give time to the Sudan and Egypt. According to the agreement, ratification by six countries will allow an equitable utilization of Nile River between all the riparian states. The 1959 agreement between the Sudan and Egypt allocated the entire average annual flow of the Nile to be shared between the Sudan and Egypt at 18.5 and 55.5 billion cubic meters respectively, but ignored the rights to water of the remaining eight Nile countries.Ethiopia contributes 80pc of the total flow of the Nile, but according to the 1959 agreement, isentitled to none of its resources. The agreement enables the establishment of the Nile Basin Commission (NBC) through which memberStates will act jointly to manage and develop the resources of the famed river. Source: Addis Fortune

April 21, 2013: Ethiopia: Cracks in Investment Law Begin to Show'

A possible amendment is in sight for the newly ratified Investment Proclamation, following a study tabled to the Ethiopian Investment Agency's (EIA) board, three weeks ago. The change comes only eight months into the ratification of the new investment law. This new Proclamation replaced the previous law which had been in effect since 1992 in September, 2012. It made several significant changes to the incentive and tax holidays given to investors and also gathered the services it provides under a one-stop-shop arrangement. Despite functioning for only a short time, the current law had been getting complaints from stakeholders. Many of the grievances focus on the limit ofduty free privileges while importing capital goods to companies that have not yet started operation. Those that are undergoing expansion also complain about the constraints of the new proclamation.

The previous law only reserved such limitations for tax holidays, and did not affect the import of duty-free capital goods. The limits to the duty freeincentive were included in order to prevent abuse by investors who had this incentive indefinitely. "Some of the items that investors imported as capital goods ended up in the Merkato market," a mid-level official from the EIA told Fortune. In addition to placing a limitation on duty free imports of capital goods, the proclamation also tightens the criteria for business expansion. Unless a business has upgraded by increasing production volume by 50pc or introducing a new production variety, it cannot be considered as undergoing expansion, according to the new proclamation. Previously, a 25pc upgrade would have been sufficient to betermed an expansion. However, for some companies that conduct business in phases, this limitation had proved to be difficult. This is especially true for the agricultural sector. Large scale farms that have acquired land in the hundreds of hectares are especially affected, according to the complaints of some stakeholders when the new proclamation came into effect. Such farms develop their land in phases, asit would require a lot of money to develop a large piece of land at once.

However, once they start farming even a fraction of the land they cannot import equipments duty free, unless they increase their production by half. "We have also observed the challenges that they are facing," FetsumArega, newly appointed director to the EIA, told Fortune. This issue was raised to the EIA's board, three months ago. The board, chaired by Mekonen Manyazewal, minister of Industry, asked the Agency to conduct a study and come up with suggestions. "We have spoken to several stakeholders since, including the Ethiopian Horticulture Producer and Exporters Association, the Ministry of Trade (MoT) and the Ethiopian Chamber of Commerce and Sectoral Association (ECCSA)" he told Fortune.

"We found that the complaints are justified particularly for those involvedin the production and export of agricultural goods." The study recommended an amendment to the duty free restriction. Fetsum, however, did not make it clear whether they would be replaced. "Laws should not be changed too frequently, so we will amend it in a manner that will make as little change to the proclamation as possible," he said. Indeed, the biggest complaint against an amendment came from officials within the legal department of the Agency, according to a source within the EIA who is close to the issue. Instead they suggest exceptions be made for those in the agricultural sector, without changing the law, as they think a quick change would portray the new proclamation in a negative light. "Exceptions are already being made for exporters facing challenges, without changing the law" the source divulged. Though a government official close to the issue and two business individuals have informed Fortune, that a draft amendment has already been tabled to theCouncil of Ministers, this was denied by Fetsum. "The study tabled is yet to be debated by the board," Fetsum said. "But it will eventually head to the Council of Ministers." The old investment proclamation was amended four times before being replaced by the current one. Source: Addis Fortune

April 21, 2013: Saudi King sacks minister who made anti-Ethiopia damremarks'

ADDIS ABABA - Saudi Arabia on Saturday removed the Kingdom’s deputydefense minister who recently made hostile remarks over Ethiopia’s massive dam project being built on the Blue Nile River only 30km upstream from Sudan. Speaking at a session of the Arab Water Council held in Cairo late in February, the Saudi deputy defense minister, Khalid Bin Sultan, firmly opposed Ethiopia’s right to use the Nile waters saying the construction of the $4.8 billion hydro power dam project poses a security threat to Sudan and Egypt. His remarks led to tensions between the horn of Africa nation and the Saudi Kingdom. The minister said at the time that the Ethiopian Renaissance dam is intended for political plotting rather than for economic gain. He went on to saying that Ethiopia is keen to harm the down stream Arab countries and further suggested that military action was an option to the ongoing dispute over the amount of water Nile basin countries are allowed use. “There are fingers messing with water resources of Sudan and Egypt which are rooted in the mind and body of Ethiopia. They do not forsake an opportunity to harm Arabs without taking advantage of it”, he added. Addis Ababa responded fiercelysaying that the statement by the minister could negatively affect diplomatic ties between Arab nations and other Nile basin countries and requested an urgent explanation from the Saudi government. Earlier this month, the government of Saudi has officially rebuffed the defence minister's statements saying his remarks "do not reflect the official stanceof the Government of the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia". According to Saudi news outlets, a royal decree has replaced Khalid Bin Sultan with retired army general, Prince Fahd Bin Abdullah Bin Muhammad. However, it is notclear whether the move is related to Sultan's comments on the Nile water issue. (Sudan Tribune)

April 22, 2013: 19 Ethiopian University Delegates Visit Texas Tech To Discuss Potential Partnership' News Analysis: "We are trying to be a part of this Texas Tech University," Belayneh Beyene, vice president of academics and research at Dilla University, said. "I am very glad to be a part of this collaboration. This will offer a student exchange and a professor exchange. If everything goes according to plan and we stay on the right track, the students will really benefit from this partnership." In attendance were Mengash Admassu, University of Axum president; DawudMohammed, Ali Samara University director of international and public relations; Seid Mohammed Ali, Jigjiga University vice president of academics and research; Gima Amente, University of Haromaya president; Beyene; and Yohannes Birhanu, senior cultural affairs specialistat the U.S. Embassy in Addis Ababa; and Girma Birru, ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of Ethiopia.

Bayile Damte, University of Baher Dar president, also was in attendance along with Kindeya Gebreiwot, University of Mekelle acting president; Alyce Hill, English language officer; Gezahgen Kebede, member of the Ethiopian Consulate in Houston; Fekadu Beyene Kenee, Haramaya University vice president of administration and student affairs; Fikre Lemessa, University of Gimma president; Getahun Abdisa Lencha, Assosa University vice president of administration and development; Yosef Mammo, University of Hawassa president; Demeke Mekonnen, deputy prime minister and minister of education; Mebrahtom Mesfin, University ofAxum president; Zaid Negash, University of Adigrat president and Alem Mebrahtu Tesfamariam, Adigrat University vice president of academic research and community services.

Chancellor Kent Hance gave a speech to welcome the international guests, who then mingled and discussed the pending partnerships. According to a news release from Tibor Nagy, Tech vice president for international affairs, Ethiopia is interested in partnering with Tech.

The country has a population of about 91 million and spends more than 25percent of its national budget on education, making this one of the largesteducation budgets in the world. In the past 10 years, the country has expanded its university system from three to 21 institutions. Many of the country's university faculty and researchers have bachelor's degrees, but have not pursued graduate degrees. The nation is seeking partners to help in upgrading their undergraduate degrees to master's and doctoral degrees. "We hope to help their professors, since most of their professorsonly have a bachelor's degree," Nagy said. "The better educated their professors are, the better opportunities they can present to their students." Guebrehiwot said he is looking forward to the different opportunities that Tech will offer to the students of Mekelle University, where is the acting president. "Texas has a good reputation," he said, "especially with agriculture and technology. This partnership would offer more opportunities in the study abroad programs. We want to send students from Texas Tech to Ethiopia and we want to send Ethiopian students here to Texas Tech. "

April 22, 2013- CPJ: Ethiopia transfers journalist Woubshet Taye toremote prison'

New York: The Committee to Protect Journalists (CPJ) protests Ethiopian authorities' transfer of independent newspaper editor Woubshet Taye to a remote prison several hours away from his family's home. Woubshet has been imprisoned since June 2011 on vague terrorism charges that CPJ hasdetermined to be unsubstantiated. "Moving detainees to prisons far from their families is a tactic long used by governments that wish to not only further penalize the individuals but to punish their loved ones as well," said CPJ Africa Advocacy Coordinator Mohamed Keita. "Woubshet Taye should not be in prison at all, never mind held in one so far from his family. We call on Ethiopian authorities to return him to a facility closer tohis home, and to reconsider the unjust conviction that put him behind bars in the first place."

April 22, 2013: Prominent economist stresses on participation of thepublic'

News tip: Professor Seid Hassan of the Murray State University in KY,
U.S.A. told that the Ethiopian government should build a participatory system in order to triumph the high cost of living and solve the ailments of the economy. The Professor said that it was impossible the Country's economic problem as long as the economy was controlled by investors with direct links with the ruling party. He said the high cost of living and inflation was caused due to problems and shortage on the supply side of the economy. Seid said the only growth so far has been in the service sector with the agriculture and industry sectors showing no progress. There has been no increase in agricultural production because of issues related to land ownership, size of land and knowledge. The infrastructural developments in Ethiopia are conducted by remittances from Ethiopians inthe Diaspora and donations of aid organizations, he added. Stating that there was an immediate need for policy change in Ethiopia, Seid said unless the widespread corruption in the Country is managed, it would be athreat to the sovereignty of Ethiopia. People in Ethiopia have repeatedly been expressing their frustration with ever increasing cost of living.

April 22, 2013: NEBE Chairperson said local elections were heldsuccessfully’

The Chairperson of the National Electoral Board of Ethiopia, Merga Beqana, told local woreda council elections were conducted in Addis Ababaand Southern Regional State in "a peaceful and democratic manner." The final round of the local and city elections was held on Sunday (April 21st) with the election of woreda council members for Addis Ababa City and the Southern Nation, Nationalities and Peoples kebeles completed successfully. Officials at polling stations in Addis Ababa and election observers said the election process had been conducted in "a peaceful anddemocratic manner." Vote counting took place in the presence of representatives of candidates, election executives and public observers.

Preliminary results of the election will be public at polling stations from Monday. Sunday's voting was for Addis Ababa woreda councils and for theSouthern Nation, Nationalities and Peoples kebele councils. The voting for woreda, kebele and city administrations in Afar, Amhara, Benishangul Gumuz, Gambella, Harari, Oromia, Somali, and South Ethiopia Peoples' and Tigray Regional States (and for the city and kebele administrations of Addis Ababa and Dire Dawa) was held on April 14th. He told after the voting last week that the election had been conducted in a fair, peaceful and democratic manner and he commended the efforts of the public, political parties, employees of the electoral board, the media and election observers for its success. The final overall results will be announced by theNational Electoral Board at national level on May 10th. GoE

April 25, 2013: Federal government admits wrong doings on the eviction of ethnic Amharas from Benishangul' News tips: After a long silence, the Federal government has for the first time officially announces its position on the forcefully evicted ethnic Amharas from Benishangul Region via PMHD. The Prime Minister while addressing the Parliament stated that theeviction of Amharas was executed by corrupt officials of the Benishangul regional state. He also said that his government will conduct further investigation into the eviction and will soon take appropriate measures.

The Premier said “evictions are anti-developmental, anti-people and destructive, the government will not tolerate any eviction in any region”. Unlike the statements by regional officials on the intervention of the Federal government in such cases, Hailemaraim said the Federal government has the responsibility to intervene when such types of humanrights abuses are committed in any region. Hailemarim’s answer was completely different from what the late Prime Minister or other incumbentofficials have said. This has forced many people to question if this was a new position by the government or an attempt to calm down the tension or if the officials are at all on the same scene. The late Prime Minister Meles had told parliament that people were evicted because they have illegally cleared the forest while the Benishangul Region’s President, Ahmed Nasir, in an interview with a Discussion Forum had said that the displacement was executed based on the agreement reached between regional states and the Federal government. The Deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs, Birhane Guebre-kirstos had on his part told Deutsche Welle Radio that the eviction was carried out because the people were illegal settlers. There are also people like pro government journalist and owner of Zami FM Radio MiMi Sebhatou openly support the displacement.Following the Prime Minister's statement, some have expressed their appreciation to ESAT news coverage for exposing the forced evictions of the Amharas.

April 23, 2013: Eritrea grounds its air force fighter planes after a series ofdefections'

The Eritrean government has grounded its small air force after a series of defections by senior pilots over the past year. A reliable source at Asmaraair port told that all aircraft, including small planes and helicopters ownedby the Eritrean Air Force, are being prevented from taking off. Recently, two Eritrean pilots had landed the president's plane in to Saudi Arabia andrequested political asylum. Just a few days ago, another female pilot, whowas sent by President Issaias Affewerki to bring back his plane also defected. Saudi newspapers reported that the female pilot seeks political asylum.

April 23, 2013: Ethiopia hopes to reap benefits from eco-friendly railprojects'

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (Thomson Reuters Foundation) - Taking advantage of its expanding hydropower and other renewable energy capacity, Ethiopia is building an extensive system of electric railways to ease urban traffic congestion and reduce carbon emissions and pollution, officials say. The country is constructing nearly 2,400 km (1,500 miles) of national electric railways, plus 34 km (21 miles) of light rail in Addis Ababa as part of a five-year "Growth and Transformation" effort that endsin 2015. Ethiopia has been slow to embrace railway transport in recent decades. The diesel-powered Addis Ababa-Djibouti City Railway, built by the French in the first two decades of the last century, is now barely functional. But the government now plans to rejuvenate moribund railway infrastructure to reduce road traffic as well as air and noise pollution that afflict the capital and, increasingly, major regional cities as well. Work on the Addis Ababa Light Rail Project has been started by a Chinese firm, China Rail Engineering Corporation, which is also building the first phase of the new Addis Ababa-Djibouti railway, which will have a total length of 327 km (204 miles). The second section of the railway, from Mieso to Dawale at the Djibouti border, is currently under construction by China Civil Engineering Construction Corporation. The two projects combined areexpected to cost close to $2.8 billion, a sum that will be covered by the Ethiopian government and a loan from the Export-Import Bank of China. ATurkish firm, Yapi Merkezi, has been awarded a $1.7 billion contract for a railway from the eastern town of Awash to the northern city of Woldiya, with a total length of 389 km (243 miles). The firm is preparing to beginconstruction.

EMISSIONS REDUCTIONS: The government says that without the new railways, overall carbon dioxide emissions from transport would grow by 800 percent to 40 tonnes a year by 2030. But according to Kifle, the country's new rail capacity will reduce road traffic enough to cut expected annual greenhouse gas emissions from transport to just under 9 tonnes by2030. The government's investment in the rail sector is part of Ethiopia's Climate Resilient Green Economy Strategy (CRGE), launched in 2011, by which the government plans to achieve middle-income status for Ethiopia by 2025 while building a climate-resilient economy. Kifle said that the government chose to use electricity rather than coal or diesel for the new railways because of its reliability, durability and the relatively small investment costs over the long term.

The business community is eager to see the benefits of the new transportinfrastructure. According to a 2009 study by the Addis Ababa Chamber ofCommerce and Sectoral Association, the competitiveness of Ethiopia's exports is of critical importance to the country's economy but that competitiveness is vulnerable to high transport costs, while public passenger transport is currently unable to meet the increasing demand.

For both these reasons, investments in the rail sector are needed, the study said. Nevertheless, Elias Kassa, head of the SWETH railway consultancy firm in Stockholm, Sweden, sounded a note of caution about overestimating the benefits of rail technology. "Rail technology may be a cleaner and faster transportation mode for big cities like Addis Ababa," theEthiopian-born Kassa said, "but in order to succeed it has to be integratedwith other transportation modes such as electric buses, normal buses and taxis."

Kassa also warned that although railways help avoid traffic congestion andprovide a high-quality means of transportation, the experience of European countries and China show that they are not necessarily cheaper,unless there is a huge subsidy from the government. "It's clear rail transportation provides improved comfort, which necessitates that you pay a higher fee," said Kassa. He added that the energy and fuel saved transporting freight by rail, as well as time saved with passenger trains, may compensate significantly for high ticket prices. E.G. April 23, 2013: Ethiopia to Establish Institutes to Aid IndustrialDevelopment'

The Ethiopian government is proposing to establish two more institutes during the next fiscal year to strengthen and regulate various industries.The Food, Beverage & Pharmaceuticals Industry Development Institute, which will be merged with the Meat and Dairy Technology Development Institute, currently under the Ministry of Agriculture, and the Chemicals & Construction Materials Development Institute are expected to become operational this coming year once the Council of Ministers has approved them. The development is part of the government's plans to transform themanufacturing sector. The Leather and Leather Products Technology Institute (LLPTI), the Textile Industry Development Institute (TIDI), and the Ethiopian Metal Industries Development Institute (EMIDI), have already been established to help development and competitiveness in these sectors. April 23, 2013: University students in Woldia Town arrested'

In connection with nationwide peaceful protests of Ethiopian Muslims, ten Muslim students of Woldia Universityin North Wollo of Amhara Region, have been arrested last sources in the town told. Similarly, a high school English language teacher known as Abdela and another procurement officer in a different school, Medersa, have been detained today. Accordingto some people in the area, police is also preparing to arrest more students. The students are now reportedly locked in Woldia Prison. In an attempt to quell the Muslim protests, the Ethiopian government has been on an arrest spree of those suspected of organizing and leading the protests since last year. Efforts to talk to the Zonal officials for comments was unsuccessful.

April 23, 2013: Federal police detaining youth suspected of links withGinbot-7 Popular Force'

ESAT News: Federal police officers have travelled from the Capital to a town in Northern Ethiopia, Merawi, 35 KM far from Bahir Dar city, to arrestseveral University students whom they suspected of having links with the newly formed Ginbot Seven Popular Forces (GPF). It has been confirmed that one student was severely beaten when the officers were kidnapping the students. The youth have been taken to Addis Abeba. In a related report, sources has learnt that Majour Mesafint Tigabu, who has been an Intelligence Official of one of the member parties of the ruling Front and also of the Ethiopian Defense Forces has joined GPF. Major Mesafint has conducted an interview with regarding the nepotism within the Defense Forces, grievances within the Amhara National Democratic Movement (ANDM) and related issues.

April 23, 2013; A US-backed Egypt Military to "Control Nile" - Egypt'sMilitary Gears For Water War'

Egypt's military, financed by the United States, has been preparing for what could be a war for control of the Nile. Western intelligence sources said the military command has urged President Mohammed Morsi for a buildup meant to block any attempt to divert the Nile. They said the military envisioned a crisis with Ethiopia that could threaten water supplies to Egypt and Sudan. "For the Egyptian military and government, this is perhaps the most burning security issue today," a source said. The sources said Morsi has sought to form a military alliance with Sudan to prevent Ethiopia from constructing a dam along the Nile. The Renaissance Dam was meant to draw 84 billion cubic meters of water from the Nile, sufficient for hydroelectric power. "The military has been preparing for theprospect that air strikes would be ordered to stop construction or simply destroy the Ethiopian dam," the source said. Egypt, which receives 60 percent of the river's water, has insisted on preferential rights to the Nile. The sources said the Morsi regime was expected to issue a stark warning to Addis Ababa during its next session of the Egyptian-Sudanese-Ethiopiantechnical committee in late May 2013. The Nile is shared by 10 countries. "Certain measures have to be followed to make sure that Ethiopia gets thewater necessary for storage in the dam in line with Egypt's consent and needs," an Egyptian official told the state-owned Al-Ahram daily on April 18. The sources said Egyptian military planning was based on the deliveryof the new F-16 Block 52 multi-role fighter from the United States. They said the Egyptian Air Force, expected to receive 20 such aircraft in 2013, has determined that the latest F-16 variant, which included extended fueltanks, would enable an attack on the Ethiopian dam. Egypt has determined that the Renaissance Dam would comprise a loss of between eight and 18 million cubic meters per year. The sources said Cairo has repeatedly warned the United States of the danger of the Ethiopian project. "The U.S. input here is crucial, because its aircraft would be usedfor any military operation against Ethiopia," the source said.

April 23, 2013: SOMALIA: Ethiopia says preparing to pull troops out ofSomalia – Reuters'

Ethiopia will withdraw its troops from Somalia soon, its prime minister said, voicing frustration with the Mogadishu government and African Unionpeacekeeping forces that are also battling Islamist militants there. After waging an ill-fated war in Somalia in 2006-2009, Ethiopia in 2011 once again rolled troops into Somalia to fight al Qaeda-allied al Shabaab, opening a third front alongside Kenyan troops and an African Union mission. At the time Ethiopia pledged to stay in the war-ravaged country until Somali government could ratify a new constitution and its ragtag military was able to fend off the Islamist threat on its own.

However, last month Ethiopian troops unexpectedly withdrew from Hudur,the capital of Bakool province near the Ethiopian border, enabling al Shabaab to retake the dusty town. Hailemariam Desalegn, who replaced Ethiopia's long-serving Prime Minister Meles Zenawi in September, stopped short of announcing a full withdrawal but voiced concern with the pace of progress in Somalia, recovering from two decades of civil war. "It has taken them (African peacekeepers and Somalia) a year already and they repeatedly assure us each month but fail to deliver so we pulled out,"said Hailemariam, referring to pledges by African Union's AMISOM force toreplace Ethiopian troops.

“The main issue now is to accelerate our complete withdrawal towards ourborder. This is what we are fulfilling,” he told Ethiopia’s parliament.

Hailemariam said Addis Ababa was paying for its military mission in Somalia from its own coffers and Western diplomats say financial issues are one of the main reasons behind Ethiopia’s discontent, along with strained relations with Mogadishu and AMISOM. African countries which sent troops into Somalia under the AMISOM banner are compensated by the African Union but Ethiopian troops do not operate within that framework. Al Shabaab has been greatly weakened since late September when Kenyan troops forced it to withdraw from the port of Kismayu, its last major urban stronghold. But analysts say they doubt Ethiopia is set for a full withdrawal and Hailemariam suggested Ethiopia could continue its fight against al Shabaab, but in other parts of Somalia. “Somalia is oneof Ethiopia’s main security interest zones, so I don’t think they would change policy drastically,” said one Nairobi-based Western diplomat. “It’s in Ethiopia’s own interest that Somalia stays intact and that gains achieved are not lost once again.”

April 24, 2013: Zambia court ordered stiff penalties against 50 Ethiopianrefugees'

(PostZambia) – A Zambian court has fined 50 Ethiopians KR400.00 each or in default serve a one and half year imprisonment with hard labor for failing to report to an immigration officer. Appearing before magistrate Shadreck Chanda for judgment on Friday were Sisay Asefa and 49 others aged between 11 to 37 who stood charged with one count of failing to report to an Immigration officer at Nakonde Border Post contrary to section 12(1) and 51(1) of the immigration and deportation Act number 18 of the Laws of Zambia. It was alleged that on March 29 this year, 50 immigrants jointly and whilst acting together, being persons entering Zambia through Nakonde border, failed to report to the Immigration officer as required by law. The court found the 50 prohibited immigrants guilty upon their own admission of guilty and convicted them accordingly. Passing judgment, magistrate Chanda said the court took note of what the50 had said in their mitigation, adding that he would have only deported them to their country of origin but that the offence committed was seriousas it borders on national security. He said the illegal immigrants knew very well that entering any country without legal documentation and failing to report to an Immigration officer is an offence saying he was therefore ordering them to pay a fine of KR400.00 each or in default servean 18 months imprisonment with hard labour. Magistrate Chanda said the government of Zambia would not allow or tolerate people entering the country without proper papers and warned the 50 prohibited immigrants that if they repeat the same offence, the court would not be lenient towards them. In mitigation, the 50 asked the court to exercise maximumlenience on them saying they were wrong to have entered Zambia withoutfirst reporting to an Immigration officer at the border post. They told the court that they have suffered a lot and that they wanted to go back to their country to be reunited with their families.

April 24, 2013: Ethiopia: PMHD Says "Too Early" to Conclude Oil Discoveryin Ethiopia’

Addis Ababa — Ethiopian Prime Minister, Hailemariam Desalegn, said thatrecent reports alleging oil discovery in the horn of Africa's nation are misleading. Addressing a parliament session, Prime Minister Hailemariamtold lawmakers that the drilling work is in its early stage and any conclusions of oil discovery are only based on unfounded suspicions. He further said that the uncertain claims of oil discovery disseminated byoil companies are only intended to secure loans. "We don't have to be confused that these companies always rush to the media whenever they get a sign of oil discovery in order to get loan -meaning for the sake of securing loan for them [run the project]", he said. Hailemariam was referring to the London-based oil exploration company (Tullow Oil) whichfound crude oil in Kenya last year and currently engaged in petroleum exploration in Ethiopia's South Omo valley to find out if there is an oil basin extended from resources in neighbouring Kenya. He said although the oil company alleged that it found a sign of oil discovery that howeverdoesn't necessarily mean that it is economically feasible for the companyto start oil production. "It needs further and additional analysis to reach conclusion that it is economically feasible for production," he stressed. However the premier partially admitted the presence of some signs that indicate oil deposit along Ethiopia's western South Omo block. "Discovery can be certain after six or seven months of thorough drilling of the test well. The norm of these companies is clear globally. Drilling one test well requires 50 million US dollars." The Prime Minister accused the company of spreading false reports so as secure $ 50 million loan grant it needs to drill further 2,600 meters. He further said only 800 meters are drilled so far and reaching conclusions at this depth is misleading and confusing. It is to be recalled that Tullow Oil has recently dismissed reports by the US- based website, Energy and Capital, and a number of news outlet claims that the oil company had discovered commercial-grade oil in the Rift Valley of Ethiopia near the border with Kenya. The Kenya-Ethiopia TertiaryRift, which stretches from southern Ethiopia to south-western Kenya, is believed to have as much as 23 billion barrels of oil and gas resources.

April 24, 2013: Mysterious Saline ‘Lake Beseqa’ Threatens Ethiopian SugarAmbitions'

(Bloomberg) -- A saline lake in Ethiopia that’s baffled scientists by its 15-fold growth threatens to spill into the nation’s longest river and damage plans by Africa’s biggest coffee grower to become a commodities powerhouse. Lake Beseka in the Rift Valley has grown to its largest size ever amid irrigation runoff and seismic shifts in past years. Should salt waters contaminate the Awash River, they would risk Ethiopia’s oldest state-owned sugar estate and an India-funded project downstream that’skey to the government’s $5 billion plan to turn the country into a top sugar exporter. “The fear is for the river,” Water and Energy Ministry groundwater chief Tesfaye Tadesse said. “If it discharges by itself withoutany control, the river is going to be contaminated forever.” River basins including the Blue Nile and rugged highlands bless Ethiopia with plentiful hydropower and the continent's second-largest water resources. The government is counting on Indian financing, a Saudi billionaire and Chinese loans to grow sugar, rice, bananas and oranges for export to expand the fastest-growing African economy without oil reserves. It's crucial that efforts be made to stop a possible overflow before the seasonal rains start in June, said Endashew Tadesse, a technical specialistat the Upper Awash River Basin Authority. A spill by the lake east of the capital Addis Ababa may flood towns and drive nomadic herdsmen from the area. Beseka, fed by hot springs at 954 meters (3,130 feet), has swollen from a 3-square-kilometer pond in the 1960s to 45 square kilometers, causing the diversion of a road from Addis Ababa to Djibouti'sport, a main trade route in landlocked Ethiopia.

Frustrated Efforts: Over the past 14 years, the government has unsuccessfully installed pumps and built canals to try to keep Beseka atbay. Irrigation projects are increasing the flow of water into the lake through the hot springs that feed it, said Assistant Professor of Civil Engineering Megersa Olumana Dinka from Haramaya University in Ethiopia, who wrote papers on the phenomenon in 2009 and last year. Seismic activity may also be a factor, Megersa said in an e-mail.

Authorities have attributed Beseka's growth to irrigation runoff in the Metahara area. That includes the Upper Awash Agro Industry Enterprise company bought this year from the government by Horizon Plantations, aventure majority owned by Mohamed al- Amoudi, the largest single investor in Ethiopia. Studies haven't proven Upper Awash Agro to be a source of the lake's growth, Horizon General Manager Jemal Ahmed said in a phone interview. If it has any environmental impact, "we will investigate and cooperate with the government," he said.

Saudi Investment: Al-Amoudi has moved into agriculture with plans to export rice, bananas and processed coffee from Ethiopia. Horizon is seeking to double orange production to 50,000 tons a year by investing 432 million birr ($23 million) in Upper Awash Agro. The Tendaho sugar factory 380 kilometers northeast of Addis Ababa that's financed with a $640 million line of credit from the Export-Import Bank of India could suffer if the Awash becomes saline. India is the world's largest sugar consumer and second-biggest producer. Metahara and Addis Ketema, towns with more than 30,000 residents, the sugar estate at Metahara eastof the capital as well as Tendaho's sugar facility in the arid Afar region areat risk should the lake continue its mysterious growth. Sugar is important to Ethiopia's growth plans as raw sugar futures at 18 U.S. cents a pound on ICE Future U.S. in New York are 50 percent higher than at the end of 2008. They've dropped almost 9 percent this year after falling 16 percent in 2012. Sugar, Cotton Of importance too to Ethiopia, whose longtime leader Meles Zenawi died last year, in its drive to transform a nation of 90million residents into a middle-income country are the cotton farms supplying a growing textiles industry. Cotton plantations in the Middle Awash area run by the Amibara Business Group would also suffer from a salty river. The former state farms have already lost over 2,000 hectares to salt water since 1984, according to the International Water Management Institute. Amibara's Middle Awash Agricultural Development Enterprise is "concerned" at the growth of the lake before the rains, Deputy General Manager Wubshet Yilma said. "If it goes into the Awash now, the problem will be much bigger" for Amibara's cotton farms, he saidin a phone interview.

School Submerged: Any saline spill also jeopardizes Ethiopia government plans to develop the Afar area including building a sugar crusher at Tendaho, whose plantation will use water from a dam on the Awash to produce as much as 600,000 tons of cane a year. "If it rains, it's over," Endashew said in an interview at an office near a school submerged two years ago by the lake. Its pace of growth has increased since the regionalgovernment began constructing the Fantalle canal for a 467 million-birr irrigation project in 2008 following a drought, said Engida Zemedagegnehu, a hydrogeology manager at the Ethiopian Water Works Design & Supervision Enterprise. Even with runoff from farms a probable cause of the lake's increasing rate of growth, "our efforts to pump more water didn't reduce the expansion," Tesfaye said. The river contains 4 percent lake water and any more could be ruinous, he said. Whatever thereason for the swelling, "the lake has potential to flow to Awash River anddevastate Metahara Sugar Estate in the next few years," professor Megersa said. "It would then also negatively impact all downstream irrigation developments in the Awash basin, including Tendaho."

Thorn Trees Beyond: Tendaho, state-owned Sugar Corporation is building 10 refineries, including six for the Kuraz Sugar Project in the South Omo region near Kenya. It's working too in the Awash area with China National Complete Plant Import & Export Corp., or Complant, on the Kessem sugar project. The $150 million Kessem is funded by state-owned Development Bank of China. Sugar Corp. managers didn't respond to e-mails and phonecalls to spokesman Yilma Tibebu seeking comment since March 16. From Metahara, the 1,200-kilometer Awash, which originates in Ethiopia's highlands, flows northeast into Afar before drying near Djibouti. The area is studded with thorn trees and hot rocky outcrops inhabited by about 1.5 million people. The Afar, primarily nomadic herders that carry long, curveddaggers in sheaves on their hips, drink the river water, as do livestock.

The effect of contamination on those that use the river would be "terrible,"Megersa said. A group of experts and officials are studying the lake and will advise on how to deal with its growth, Tesfaye said. "For the time being, we don't have a very good direction on what action we should take," he said.

April 25, 2013: US Under Secretary Tara Sonenshine To Travel to Ethiopia'

U.S. Department of State - Washington DC: Under Secretary for Public Diplomacy and Public Affairs Tara D. Sonenshine will travel to Ethiopia to meet with government officials, local media, students, and activists to advance shared goals in the areas of press freedom, education, youth development, and conservation April 27-30. In Addis Ababa, Under Secretary Sonenshine will meet with officials from the Federal DemocraticRepublic of Ethiopia and the African Union; join a discussion on press freedom at a roundtable with the Association of Private Publishers; and mark Global Youth Service Day and Earth Day by participating in a tree- planting event with Ethiopian National Green Service Volunteers. April 30,Under Secretary Sonenshine will travel to Ethiopia’s second largest city, Dire Dawa, where she will speak to students at Dire Dawa University, one of Ethiopia’s newly established universities.

April 25, 2013: Ethiopia said it intends to withdraw its military forces fromSomalia as soon as possible. However, after Ethiopian forces withdrew from the town of Hudur (Somalia) in early March, Al Shabaab fighters re- occupied the town. Ethiopia has assured the Somali national government that it will only withdraw its forces when African Union peacekeepers in AMISOM are able to secure Ethiopian positions.

April 25, 2013: Ethiopia: Dr. Tewodros Adhanom Speaks to GERD sub-Committee in New York'

News tip: Dr. Tewodros briefed executive members of the Grand EthiopianRenaissance Dam sub-committee in New York about the current status of construction at the site. He continued by encouraging them to visit the site and see the progress for themselves. He also commended Ethiopians living abroad for their participation and contribution thus far to Ethiopia's development activities, while underlining that more could still be done. Headvised the executive members to make use of the existing mechanisms in their respective areas to reach out to more Ethiopians in an effort to mobilize further support for the dam. On their part, the executive members asked the government to promote and disseminate more information about the day-to-day status of the dam and the associated advantages of its construction to the country and region at large. April 26, 2013: Ethiopia, Somalia and some gentle diplomatic blackmail'

Somaliland Sun Article - Ethiopia doesn't really want to keep its troops in Somalia much longer. It's an expensive business, and they've got other engagements to deal with. But who will replace them, and make sure thatthose hard-won conquests don't fall back into Al-Shabaab hands? No one's particularly keen, which is why Ethiopia has had to resort to an empty threat. The problem with being an occupying army, almost by definition, isthat at some point you're going to want to pack up and go home, leaving your hard-won conquests behind.America learned this lesson in Vietnam, where all the enemy really had to do was wait until the GIs were recalled. Vietnam is still communist, let's not forget. They're learning it again in Afghanistan, where, in some areas, territory changes hands every day as the Taliban creeps back into villages just as soon as it's dark and American patrols have gone to sleep.

It's not just the Americans. In Mali, France is desperate to withdraw its troops, who were only meant to be there for a few short weeks, but they're stuck until they can figure out a way for either the Malian army or an African peace-keeping force to take over from them. And in Somalia, where there has been significant progress over the last six months in appointing a new government and starting the immense (and immensely daunting) reform process, it's obvious that the influence of the government is only as strong as its foreign muscle – the coalition of African armies which ousted the militant group Al-Shabaab from its major strongholds and has the power to enforce the government's writ. This is, obviously, a long-term issue. A government that can't secure its own buildings, never mind cities and borders, is not much of a government at all. And it raises questions of legitimacy: would a truly representative government need foreign soldiers to protect it? There is, however, a more urgent problem. Ethiopia, one of the countries that did the most to unseatAl-Shabaab and has been integral in securing parts of eastern Somalia, has announced that it is preparing to withdraw its troops from the areas itcontrols. Essentially, Ethiopia's patience has run out – and you can't reallyblame it. Unlike the other African forces involved in Somalia, Ethiopia is not part of the African Union Mission in Somalia (Amisom), the multilateralforce sanctioned by the African Union and supported by the international community. In practice, what this means is that no one's paying for Ethiopia to be in Somalia – and it's not exactly cheap (it should be noted that Kenya is also bankrolling its own presence in Somalia. Kenya's case isdifferent, however, because its inclusion in Amisom means it should be at least partially compensated). So ever since the war against Al-Shabaab swung against the militants, Ethiopia has been waiting for someone – specifically Amisom troops or forces aligned with the Mogadishu government – to take over its duties. This hasn't happened. "It has taken them a year already and they repeatedly assure us each month but fail to deliver so we pulled out," said Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn, in a speech to his parliament. "The main issue now is to accelerate our complete withdrawal towards our border. This is what we are fulfilling."

Ethiopia's motivations for speeding up its withdrawal now may be connected with another military engagement – this time in Sudan. Ethiopia has promised to send troops, under an international mandate, to help secure border crossings between Sudan and South Sudan and in general act as guarantor of the new cooperation agreements signed by thetwo Sudanese presidents. It's not clear how large a contingent Ethiopia is sending, but it's likely to be a significant number of troops. So what wouldthe impact of an Ethiopian withdrawal be on Somalia? Not good, if this example cited by Reuters is anything to go by: "Last month Ethiopian troops unexpectedly withdrew from Hudur, the capital of Bakool province near the Ethiopian border, enabling Al-Shabaab to retake the dusty town."But maybe we shouldn't panic just yet, and instead ask ourselves why Ethiopia was involved in Somalia in the first place; and whether it can afford to withdraw, destabilising consequences be damned. The short answer is: not really. Ethiopia's not part of Amisom for a reason, and that reason is that its incursion into Somalia was unilateral rather than multilateral. As it has done before, Ethiopia was looking to prevent instability spilling over from Somalia into Ethiopia. It was protecting its own self-interest. To abandon the territory it is occupying now to Al-Shabaab – the region's destabilisers-in-chief – would essentially nullify all the security gains that Ethiopia has made in the area. It wouldn't make any sense. More likely, Ethiopia is using the threat of a sudden withdrawalto spur Amisom and Mogadishu into action. It is a little bit of diplomatic blackmail designed to hasten the replacement of its troops with troops from elsewhere, thereby maintaining the region's stability without Ethiopiahaving to actually do the work – or pay the bill. But with international attention, and funding, shifted for the most part to Mali, it seems unlikely that the replacements Ethiopia is looking for will be on their way anytime soon. And even if they do come, chances are it can only happen if Amisom soldiers are withdrawn from some other part of Somalia – not exactly a win-win situation. dailymaverick

April 27, 2013: Ethiopia retracts remarks on urgent Somalia pull-out - AFP (ADDIS ABABA) The Ethiopian ministry of foreign affairs said that remarksmade by the country’s prime minister over the pull-out of troops from Somalia was misunderstood. The ministry has refuted a report by Reuterssaying that Ethiopia is urgently withdrawing its troops from war-torn Somalia. While addressing parliament on Ethiopian prime minister Hailemariam Desalegn said the country is under preparing to fully withdraw its forces soon. The premier blamed the African Union force in Somalia (AMISOM) over Ethiopia’s delayed withdrawal, accusing it of failing to keep its promise to replace Ethiopian forces. He said it was almost a year since AMISOM pledge to replace Ethiopian troops. Last month, Ethiopian troops made a sudden pull-out from Hudur, the capital of Bakool province in protest over AMISOM’s delay to replace the Ethiopian forces in parts of the country now under AU control. As a result of the withdrawal al-Shabaab fighters were subsequently able to retake control of the town. Clarifying the premier’s remarks, foreign ministry spokesman Dina Mufti denied Ethiopia is immediately pulling out from Somalia. “[The prime minister] said [the] Ethiopian defence force has to be transferred to those areas where there is need for more stability. Hehas never said we are going to withdraw", Mufti said.

The ministry said Ethiopia is anxious to end its military intervention in Somalia as soon as Somalian forces and AMISOM take over from Ethiopianforces. It further said the main issue for Ethiopia is "to accelerate our complete withdrawal towards our border". Speaking to VoA, AMISOM spokesperson Eloi Yao, said that the mission has not received any formal statement from Ethiopia regarding its withdrawal. Addis Ababa has called on Somalia and AMISOM to speed up their replacement of Ethiopian forces. Ethiopia re-entered its forces into Somalia in 2011 to assist the weak Somalian government and AU forces in their battle against al- Qaeda-allied militants from al-Shabaab, which had been in control in many parts of the country. Following the deployment of Ethiopian troops in Somalia many key towns were liberated from al-Shabaab with the East African nation seeing improved peace and stability.

April 27, 2013: Over 30,000 Horn refugees cross risky sea to Yemen thisyear - UNHCR News Release'

Geneva — The UN refugee agency announced on Friday that its staff in Yemen have recorded the arrival by sea from the Horn of Africa of more than 30,000 refugees and migrants since the start of the year. This compares to 33,634 arrivals over the same time period in 2012. UNHCR spokesman Adrian Edwards told journalists in Geneva that most of this year's arrivals were Ethiopian nationals, with the rest coming from Somalia and a very small number from other African countries. "In total, and since 2006 when UNHCR began gathering data, close to half a millionpeople (477,000) have arrived in Yemen by taking the perilous boat journey from the Horn of Africa," he noted. Recorded arrivals in Yemen ofrefugees, asylum-seekers and migrants have been rising in each of the past six years. Last year, 107,500 people made the journey. Somalis arriving in Yemen are automatically recognized as refugees by the authorities, while UNHCR conducts refugee status determination for othernationals. Yemen is frequently used as a transit point by Ethiopians looking to travel to the Gulf States and beyond. Few Ethiopians decide to seek asylum. There are many reports of mistreatment, abuse, or torture among people who make the journey by smugglers boats. Hundreds havedied over the years. Conflict and instability in Yemen have limited the ability of the authorities to address trafficking, particularly along the Red Sea coast where Yemeni smugglers and traffickers are often waiting to receive new arrivals from the Horn of Africa. However, recently the government has been active in detecting smuggler hideouts and taking action.

April 27, 2013: Diaspora based Holy-Synod denounces the eviction ofEthiopians'

ESAT News: The Diaspora based Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahdo Church HolySynod, which is led by His Eminence Abune Merkorios, has said that since the current Regime of the EPRDF took power through the barrel of the gun, it has put the unity of Ethiopia at peril. The Synod in its statement said a genocide campaign of different colors is taking place in various parts of the country such as in Borena, Araba-Gugu, Gambella, Ogaden, and recently in Afar, Southern Ethiopia and Benishangul Gumuz. It said “As this genocide campaign puts the unity of Ethiopia in danger and is aimed at elongating the power of the few over the majority, the Holy Church calls everyone to be the voice for the voiceless and those in agony.”

“During the Easter Holy Week and Easter Holyday when our Christian brothers and sisters are evicted from their villages and monks and hermitsare expelled from monasteries, we call followers of different religions bothinside and outside of Ethiopia to stand in unison in the name of God and urge the ruling party to stop its criminal acts, dividing people in language and ethnicity and harassing monks” the press release added. The Holy Synod said members of the security and the Defense Forces should recognize that they serve the people not the government and should stand with the people. Political and human rights organizations fighting forgood governance in Ethiopia should narrow their differences, come together and consult each other to reach for the Country and its people.

At this time when the unity of all is badly needed, the Holy Synod said, allthose that have fallen out due to different reasons such as group, private,family and organizational issues should forgive each other at this Holy Easter Week.

April 27, 2013: Boeing 787 Dreamliner returns to service in Ethiopia flight

- BBC'

An Ethiopian Airlines 787 Dreamliner has flown from Addis Ababa to Nairobi, the first commercial flight by the Boeing aircraft since all 787s were grounded in January. The 50 planes around the world were groundeddue to battery malfunctions that saw one 787 catch fire in the US. Over the past week teams of Boeing engineers have been fitting new batteries to the aircraft. This was after aviation authorities approved the revamped battery design. The Ethiopian Airlines plane took off at 09:45 local time (07:45 GMT) and landed in Nairobi, Kenya, some two hours later.

Engineering team Each 787 has two of the lithium-ion batteries which caused problems. In addition to new versions of the batteries which run ata much cooler temperature, the batteries are now enclosed in stainless steel boxes. These boxes have a ventilation pipe that goes directly to the outside of the plane. Boeing says this means than in the unlikely event of any future fire or smoke, it would not affect the rest of the aircraft.

The US Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) issued a formal "air worthiness" directive allowing revamped 787s to fly. Japanese airlines, which have been the biggest customers for the new-generation aircraft, are expected to begin test flights soon. A total of 300 Boeing engineers, pooled into 10 teams, have in the past week been fitting the new batteriesand their containment systems around the world. Boeing is expected to complete repairs on all 50 of the grounded Dreamliners by the middle of May. In addition to the Dreamliners in service with airlines, Boeing has upgraded the 787s it has continued to make at its factory in Seattle since January. The Dreamliner entered service in 2011. Half of the plane is made from lightweight composite materials, making it more fuel efficient than other planes of the same size. The two lithium-ion batteries are not used when the 787 is in flight. They are operational when the plane is on the ground and its engines are not turned on, and are used to power the aircraft's brakes and lights.

April 27, 2013: Army Generals involved in Tantalum smuggling' The discovery of 2500 ons of pure Tantalum in Shakiso and Ansora Woredas, Guji Zone, Oromia Region few years ago by a governmental organization called Kentica Borena Ethiopia Mines Development Share Company, had attracted the attention of many media then. The export of this strategic and expensive mineral had been suspended after experts of the field unstintingly complained to the late Prime Minister Meles Zenawi saying that the export by the company was hurting the country. The government had then said the reason for putting the restriction was to establish a new mechanism of handling the mineral as the radioactive raysfound in the Uranium have health risks and also to gain better profit by developing the mineral in a modern way. It was also mentioned then that the restriction would be in place until the government builds its own Tantalum Refining Plant.

Ethiopia’s tantalum production took 20% of the world market with a big influence on the world tantalum price. As the Dodd-Frank Act states that companies should make sure that they do not buy conflict minerals and asthe largest exporter of tantalum in the world is the war torn country of Democratic Republic of Congo, Ethiopia’s ban had put an immense pressure on the world tantalum market. Tantalum is a non renewable precious mineral used in mobile phones, wires, computers, televisions, chemical and pharmaceutical products, aerospace, energy and ballistic products. According to sources working in the company, although the Ethiopian government put the ban on this precious and non- renewable mineral for the above stated reasons, military generals that are members of the Tigrean People’s Liberation Front (TPLF) conspiring with Chinese experts skilled on the extraction of tantalum, have been illegally exportingthe mineral via Somaliland using vehicles of the Ethiopian Defense Forces.They have been conducting the smuggling claiming that what was in the vehicles was sand. The Generals amassed millions through this illegal export. Vehicles of the company of the Defense Forces, which is constructing roads in the region, are being used to smuggle the mineral instead of constructing the roads, sources within the Company said.

Recently, as the government is facing severe financial shortage and following the lifting of the ban, these Generals have started exporting tantalum via Djibouti by forming a share company with a Chinese company. “Tantalum is a strategic mineral. It is being depleted. If the country runs out of the mineral now, Ethiopia will face bigger problems inthe future” the employees said. The sources said the Generals are conducting the illegal trade in collaboration with Zone officials. Although ESAT did not confirm, several people living near the extraction sites have died due to the radioactive rays of the mineral. Before the ban, the government sold over 80% of the tantalum in China. ESAT’s efforts to speak to Ethiopian authorities on the issue were unsuccessful. Backed up by evidence, it had reported by ESAT that Ethiopian generals own modernbuildings and business companies in various parts of the Country.

April 28, 2013: A group of Ethiopians protested in connection Norway visitof the Ethiopian ambassador in Stockholm - (AP)’ Police come out with great force to gain control of a demonstration against the Ethiopian authorities outside the Radisson Blu Scandinavia Hotel, Oslo. Sunday afternoon promoted major police forces out to stop a group of Ethiopians to take into Radisson Blu Scandinavia Hotel, Oslo. Oslo Police said the demonstration was illegal and eleven people were arrested for public nuisance. The pressure on the door was intense. It was originally announced a lawful demonstration outside Galleri Oslo, where the Ethiopian ambassador in Stockholm to participate in a meeting. At last, the meeting was canceled while the demonstration held outside the hotel,says operations manager Sven-Martin Ege VG. The protesters had first told to pull themselves away from the hotel across the street. They stood pressed against the doors of the hotel and we gave them permission to withdraw, said Ege. The police came out with twelve police cars and dogs to keep track of the demonstrators. Around 16 o’clock eleven people werearrested and demo station dissolved.

April 28, 2013: Ethiopia: PM Lauds Inflation Downturn, While DebtIncreases'

News Analysis: Reporting to the Parliament about his administration's ninemonth performance report, Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn pointed out that inflation has been tamed to single digits. The Prime Minister told MPs the government focus in the future will be to maintain the economic stability.

Despite concerns over the country's outstanding debt burden, and a derailed business climate, Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn declared last week that his administration has achieved a "stable and healthy macroeconomic environment." Hailemariam pointed out that inflation has been tamed to single digits. This is an accomplishment, considering the persistently higher rates observed since 2005. Foreign exchange stock has been beefed up to pay for 2.2-months of imports; an improvement over the previous amount of one and half months. The birr has also remained stable against major currencies recently.

The Prime Minister's address to Parliament came one month after the Central Statistics Agency (CSA), announced that the economy has witnessed an impressive drop in inflation. For the first time since September 2010, the year-on year inflation rate dropped to 7.6pc in March 2013, down from 10.9pc a month before. It took the government almost three years to bring inflation down to its target under the administration's flagship program, the Growth & Transformation Plan (GTP). "It's about time," said a senior macroeconomic advisor to the PrimeMinister, speaking to Fortune on conditions of anonymity. For the past three years, the administration has been implementing a fiscal policy manoeuvring to tame inflation, Hailemariam told the 352 MPs present last Tuesday, April 23, 2013. A notable absence was Girma Seifu (MP-Medrek),who was on a visit to theUnited States. It was Hailemariam's third appearance since he was installed to succeed the late Meles Zenawi, the House's ubiquitous figure for three terms, in September 2012; and the first since his consolidation of power after being re-elected to lead the ruling EPRDF last March, in Bahir Dar.

Reporting to Parliament about his administration's nine-month performance, Hailemariam appeared to be assertive which was different that many pundits observed about him previously which they attributed tohis being under the shadow of his predecessor. their usual selves as they appeared to take pledges made by Abadula Gemeda, speaker of the House, to hold the executive accountable, seriously. MPs were seen demanding explanations for issues in a rather forceful tone. From an MP ofthe ruling party who wondered how the EPRDF created a "demanding" andan "aspiring" society only to trudge, to another MP who questioned where the finance to pay for the mega public projects is sourced, and still another MP demanded the administration play tough on regional authorities who cause conflict among ethnic communities alongside state'sborders. This could be a sign that the otherwise timid and passive Parliament may soon be a thing of the past. Nor was the Prime Minister the same as his predecessor. He was candid in admitting wrongs committed by regional authorities as he was forthcoming in accepting failures in performance in domestic revenue mobilization, meeting export revenue targets and attracting Foreign Direct Investment. "I believe he found his own voice," an aide told Fortune. Yet, it was a voice as reassuring as it was forward looking. "Finally, we have succeeded in achieving our goals," Hailemariam told MPs, although some of his assertions about achievements in rural road and railway construction are contradictory to what the ministries in chargehave said lately. The Prime Minister reiterated the goal in the ambitious five-year plan, launched in 2010, to transform the structures of the economy from agrarian to industrial. It is a plan the administration hopes will put the country on a competitive trajectory, through an export oriented economy and would address the historical crunch in foreign exchange stock. The administration says Ethiopia's monetary policy objectives will continue to focus on the stability of the exchange rate regime, which will not exceed a six percent annual average growth threshold. The administration has managed to keep the annual average exchange rate increase close to 5.7pc, Hailemariam explained in responseto Asheber W. Giorgis (DD), a lone independent MP, who raised a questionabout the effectiveness of government policies.

In order to reverse the shortage of foreign currency the country experienced back in 2008/09, when its reserves went down to 112 milliondollars, enough only to pay for about three weeks of imports, the government started to implement a monetary policy in 2010. One such measure was narrowing the trade deficit through a 20pc devaluation of the Birr against a basket of major currencies. The devaluation was aimed at making exports competitive while holding on imports, particularly consumer goods. Due to successive devaluations, the value of the Birr hasdeclined by at least 45pc since 2008. In October 2008 the Birr devalued by at least 10pc, and a further 9.9pc in July 2009. The administration claims it was such policy intervention that led the nation to boost its foreign currency reserve to 2.7 billion dollars in the 2010/11 fiscal year, showing a 700 million dollar increase from the previous year. Imports fell slightly, a mere 0.2pc, during the same period, and the trade deficit was down to 5.5 billion dollars. Even better,Ethiopia's foreign currency reservehad reached a historic peak of 3.2 billion dollars in December 2011. Such a huge reserve caused the central bank to call all commercial banks to buy foreign currency.

However, the sterilization process badly impacted the nation's forex reserve. The country now has foreign currency reserve enough to cover 10weeks of import bills, Hailemariam assured MPs. "This is much better thanwhat we had six months ago, which was only enough for six weeks of imports," said Hailemariam.
The Prime Minister told MPs his focus in the future is to keep the momentum and ensure achievements in the macroeconomic front are sustained. "Our current achievement does not guarantee our future success," said Hailemariam, "We'll continue to implement the fiscal and monetary policies for some time. We need to strengthen our efforts to achieve the target outlined in the GTP to maintain the stability, especially in the export sector."
However one thing the Prime Minister did not mention when he spoke about a "healthier and stable" macroeconomic environment was the derailed business activities that marginalized the private sector and at theexpense of shrunken economy. The Prime Minister missed one big component while talking about macroeconomic stability, which is the levelof the national debt, says a macroeconomist, who has been teaching at the Addis Abeba University (AAU), for the last 16 years. Hailemariam, whobelieves macroeconomic stability will be maintained regardless of the influence of the crisis coming from abroad, failed to mention a single wordabout the current status of the outstanding public debt in his address to Parliament. Calling the current macroeconomic situation "temporary", macroeconomists fear that the existing stability might be reversed if the government keep ignoring debt in the equation. What is more alarming tothem is that the administration is still borrowing from abroad, although they are off-budget and through state enterprises, said the macroeconomist.
The federal government plans to spend 1.2 trillion Br during the GTP period, 509.2 billion of which will be off-budget. Among mega projects notincluded in the budgetary spending are the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam (GERD), the railway networks, 10 sugar factories, and a fertiliser factory. The GERD is expected to take 80 billionBr.The 104.6 billion Br loan for the railway networks and other loans for the other mega projects can be added to the current outstanding loan figure of 158.9 billion Br reported by (MoFED). "There is no limit to government borrowing to coverits deficit in an off-budget system," said another noted economist Fortunetalked to. "This is because of the intractability of the off-budget financing scheme. Most of the time, only the government knows how much it has borrowed from abroad." Indeed, Hailemariam reassured MPs last week that his administration is not worried about sourcing finance as it is with in-house capacity to manage and implement public projects. "The issue isn't money," the Prime Minister told Parliament. "The Chinese are willing to help." The economist, who lectures at AAU, sees a number of downsideeffects to a borrowing spree in the long-run. "The government has to spend more hard currency each year in debt interest payments to lenders,which ultimately leads to a foreign currency shortage," he said. The borrowing will affect the reserves, according to this economist, since it hasto save to pay the debts, which again will ignite inflation.

Macroeconomic stability is measured by four variables, including low and stable inflation, a stable foreign exchange regime, enough foreign wealth and low national debt relative to the economy, according to the International Monetary Fund (IMF). The total outstanding public debt of the country is estimated to be around 158.9 billion Br, which was 21.5pc of the gross domestic product (GDP) at the end of the 2011/12 fiscal year,according to public sector debt statistical bulletin published by the Ministryof Finance & Economic Development (MoFED), in October 2012. The largest chunk of this, which is 97.4 billion Br, was borrowed by the centralgovernment. It is this huge federal debt overlooked in the Prime Minister's report, according to this macroeconomist. High government debt harboursinflationary risks if current government liability (debt) does not match the net present value of future surpluses, argued experts. The annual averageeconomic rate of return for infrastructural projects implemented in Sub- Saharan African counties is close to four percent, according to the World Bank. However, the outstanding debt of the government has been increasing at 11.5pc on average for the last five years. Although public debt is one method of financing government operations, it can result in hyperinflation if not used cautiously, said the expert. "This will return the government back to square one," said the macroeconomic lecturer.

One instrument countries use to bridge their national debt is enhancing revenues from exports. Export performances, inEthiopia, habitually fall short of their targets. In the 2011/12 fiscal year, 3.2 billion dollars was earned, about 20pc lower than targeted. During the first nine months of the current fiscal year, the performance showed a marginal six percent increment compared to the same period the previous year, while it fell by close to 23pc of its target. The failure was attributed by Hailemariam to declining global demand, which led to low international prices for commodities such as coffee - despite growth in volume by 54pc - gold, and flowers, the latter declined by eight percent. The situation is far gloomier in the manufacturing sector. In 2011/12 fiscal year, export revenues of textiles registered the lowest export figures at 49.4pc, bringing in 84.6 million dollars, while leather and leather products brought112 million dollars, achieving 54.5pc of the plan, according to the export performance report published by the Ministry of Trade (MoT).

Hailemariam puts his administration on trial for the poor export performance in the manufacturing sector. Domestic investors have not positioned themselves to have a place in the industrial economy, due to poor provision of finance, and foreign direct investment not coming in sufficient volume, he admitted. It was a sobering admission for an administration to accept blame for failing to fix the port and logistics problems caused by its own doing. What the administration has not donethough is to use monetary policy instruments in raising national savings, according to a macroeconomist now working for an international organization. Despite recent growth in national savings of up 40pc, the Prime Minister has admitted that it has not reached a level where it pays for mega projects on its own. Reviewing interest rate for treasury bills from its current less than one per cent to be competitive in the market, and making the trading system modernized and computerized could helpthe administration travel a long way in mobilizing domestic savings, according to this macroeconomist. Such could be an issue of interest for increasingly vocal MPs to raise next time the Prime Minister appears before them for question time. Source: Addis Fortune (Addis Ababa)

April 29, 2013: Oslo protesters force cancellation of fundraising event'

News updates: Government delegates were humiliated in Oslo, after policecancelled their fundraising event in recognition of the anger of protesting Ethiopians. Patriotic Ethiopians in Norway caused delegates another humiliating defeat by blocking and stopping them from having a fund raising event. Some of the Ethiopians were arrested during the confrontation, but forced the organisers to change the venue. The Ethiopians then followed them to the new location they blocked them there also. According to a blogger, Nile Dam Fundraising Event failed for the 2nd time in Oslo, following a disruption of the event in the city of Stavanger on 20th April 2013.

April 29, 2013: Ethiopians made a human chain in Norway to stop the saleof Nile bonds'

News updates: In Norway’s capital Oslo, the police turned out in large numbers as requested by the Woyanne ambassador. But that didn’t stopbrave Ethiopians from stopping the ambassador’s attempt to sell illegal bonds and defraud Ethiopians. The Ethiopians made a human chain and blocked the entrance to the hotel, forcing the management to cancel theevent. Eleven Ethiopians were temporarily detained as the police tried tobreak the human chain, but during the whole protest, no one was physically hurt. The only thing that is damaged are two of Woyanne’s pillars of support: 1) it’s propaganda campaign to hoodwink the people, and 2) one of its sources of income. This is what we call civil resistance:Patriotic Ethiopians every where taking their own initiative to fight for their freedom. Source: ER

April 29, 2013: Gov’t faces stiff opposition protest'

ESAT News: A fund raising meeting for the construction of the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam (GERD) by the Ethiopian government has been interrupted for the second time in Norway. A similar meeting calledin San Diego, California has been stopped after Ethiopians living there protested the meeting. In a related development, Ethiopians living in theNetherlands have denounced the forced eviction of Ethiopians of the ethnic Amahra origins. Association of Ethiopians in Holland in a meeting called in Amsterdam city yesterday stated that it organized a protest at the seat of European Union, Brussels, Belgium. The protest is aimed at informing European governments about the cruelty committed by the ruling TPLF/EPRDF regime against Ethiopians of the Amhara ethnic originsin Benishangul Region state and other parts of the country, the mistreatment of several prisoners of conscience and the human rights abuses committed against Ethiopian Muslims and Christians. In related news, a meeting called by the Ethiopian National Transitional Council (ENTC) has been held in Germany.

April 30, 2013: Smien Mountains National Park ablazed'

ESAT News: Sources in the Debark area of Norther Ethiopia told ESAT thatattempts by the people of Debark area to extinguish the wild fire that has been blazing the Simien Mountains National Park, North Gonder Zone of the Amhara Region for the past three days, has been unsuccessful. A resident of Debark area that the reporter has talked to said that the National Park that is endowed with endemic plants, animals and birds is ata danger of complete destruction unless regional and federal fire fighters immediately intervene. As the fire is burning endemic animals and plants that are found only in Ethiopia such as Gelada Baboon, Walia, Red Fox, birds and plants especially on the Park's side located in the Sankaber area, the resident called all stakeholders to do their part. In addition to UNESCO registered rare birds, plants and animals, the Park's territory covers the 17 mountains including Ras Dashen, the highest point in Ethiopia.

April 30 2013: ADDIS ABABA – Ethiopia affirms readiness for dialoguewith Eritrea'

News tip: The Ethiopian government has reiterated its readiness to holdpeace talks with Eritrea to resolve their decades-long border dispute.

United Nations Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon (right) meets with Ethiopian foreign minister Tedros Adhanom Guebr Eyesus at UN headquarters in New York. During his meeting with the United Nations Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon in New York, the Ethiopian Minister of foreign Affairs Tedros Adhanom accused the Eritrean government of refusing to engage in peace talks. Adhanom said his country is ready to sitdown for direct negotiations with Eritrea without any preconditions regarding to level, time or venue. But the Ethiopian top diplomat stressed "the belligerent party opposed to these talks has always been the Eritreanside". According to the ministry of foreign Affairs, Tedros expressed solidarity with the people of Eritrea whom he said are continuously suffering due the regime's "brutality and obstinacy to peace". Ethiopia andEritrea fought a border war in 1998-2000 that has killed an estimated 70,000 people. The two East African adversaries remain at loggerheads since the disputed key town of Badme had been awarded to Eritrea by an international border commission. Ethiopia's current leader Hailemariam

Desalegn, who assumed power shortly after longtime ruler Meles Zenawidied in August said last year that he was willing to hold face-to-face talkswith Eritrean president Isaias Afwerki, even if he had to travel to the Asmara. However, the Eritrean government has yet to respond to the offer. Asmara has in the past said that Ethiopia should first withdraw its troops from the flashpoint border town of Badme before resuming to peace talks. (ST)

April 30, 2013: New Amhara people evicted from Southern Ethiopia'

ESAT News: Less than a week since the new Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Dessalgn warned that there would not be any kind of forced eviction during his Parliamentary session, over 90 families of the Amhara ethnic origin have been evicted from the Bench Maji Zone, Gura Farda Woreda of Southern Ethiopia. The residents of the area say Ethiopians of the Amhara ethnic origin are being forcefully evicted from the region through systematic campaign. The whereabouts of those evicted includingfamily members is not known. According to one farmer, the systematic eviction of Amhara people will continue. Prime Minister Hailemariam had said few days ago that those that would evict people in any part of the Country would be made legally responsible. In a recent interview with ESAT, international lawyer and scholar Dr. Yacob Hailemariam said that the government could be charged with “ethnic cleansing” for the forced eviction of Ethiopians of the Amhara ethnic origin.

May 1, 2013: Gov’t to start new campaign to arrest “Let our Voice beHeard” campaigners’

News tip: Instead of solving the tension and ongoing peaceful protests ofEthiopian Muslims that has become a threat to the regime, the Ethiopian government is going to arrest high and mid level organizers of the protests from each locality. It is also planning to sue them on alleged linkwith terrorist organizations, reliable information to ESAT from high level government official states. Loyal cadres of the regime will soon start taking part in a training that will be held in Tolay and Birshelko training centers for this same purpose. These trainees, who will be composed of community members, Kebele and Party members, will identify suspects behind the movement and pass their details to officials.

The government’s focus is on university and high school teachers, business people, and students of local Islamic schools. Our sources alsostated that identified leaders of the “Let our Voice be Heard” Movement are already under surveillance by the government. Those that would bearrested are reportedly going to be charged of putting the constitutionalorder in danger and of being “agents of the Ginbot 7 Movement”. Thosethat are found in Oromia Region will be charged of being “agents of theOLF and various extremists”.

Although the government arrested Abubaker Ahmed, the leader of the “Let our Voice be Heard” Movement with the hope of quelling the Movement, the protests have not stopped so far. Thus, it is set to once again arrest those that are suspected of leading the Movement from each locality. The Official said that top leaders of the ruling Front have been worried of the Movement of Ethiopian Muslims that the religious protests might change into broader political struggle. The complexity of the issue isalso in that most Muslim officials and members of the ruling Front sympatize with the “Let our Voice be Heard” Movement. Source: ESAT News

May 1, 2013: Union of 33 Opposition Parties calls Ethiopians to struggle’

News tip: Union of 33 Opposition Parties in Ethiopia said in its press release yesterday that the only solution to remove the government that has forcefully taken power without any competitors is to struggle with “perseverance and commitment”. The Ad hoc Committee of the Parties stated that in order to free our country and people from the mess and agony, eradicating the prevailing fear and fighting this dictatorial regime, standing together is necessary. For the struggle that they hope to pursue together with the people, the Parties have called people inside the countryto support them with finance, time and resources and stand with them.

They also called Ethiopians abroad to be voice for the voiceless and continue in solidarity. The Statement also stated that in such a time whenpeople are in a “life and death” situation due to the high cost of living, thegovernment scoffs at the people saying “this was due to our economic growth and it is because of the increase in the number of people eating Teff”. Organized struggle is the only way to be free from such a contemptuous regime, the Statement added. The Statement has also called the international community and countries to be aware of the abuseand suffering of the Ethiopian under the hands of the government and stand with the people and the struggle.

May 1, 2013: The Auditor-General spotted unjustified expenditure of ETB

5.2 bn in 84 at various levels of federal government offices.

Side note: According to the report by the Auditor General, Gemechu Dubisso, the army and the intelligence services account for the lion’s share of the 3.5 billion birrs of unjustified expenditure spotted. The Auditor-General of the Federal Government presented his Report and there was an open discussion in Parliament. In watching the House debates as reported on ETV, it is the first time, many felt the presence ofa real government wherein the executive is being put to task by parliamentary reps. The House Representatives were confronting head long the many Ministries that have not properly accounted for budgetary millions of birr, which included such powerful Ministries such as the Ministry of Defense, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs et cetera. The Speakerof the House of Representatives, Aba-Dula Gemeda, expressed that the outcome of such failure of proper accounting will result in none approvalof budgetary allocations of funds to those Ministries that failed to make proper accounting.

May 2, 2013: A Western Evangelical Group Pushing Ethiopia to ImposeDeath Penalty for Gays'

Will Ethiopia consider imposing the death penalty for homosexuality? An anti-gay organisation has expressed hopes that the death penalty for homosexuals will soon be introduced in Ethiopia, and held a conference todiscuss the "disastrous" effects of homosexuality in the country. The anti-gay organization that held a recent workshop on lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender (LGBT) issues in Ethiopia is reporting that the death penalty against gay people in Ethiopia may be on the horizon. The workshop reportedly looked with the social 'evils' and 'disastrous' effects of homosexuality in Ethiopia, and was led by United for Life Ethiopia, a Western Evangelical Christian organization with local representation. Government officials, religious leaders, leading heath professionals, charities and members of the public attended the event at the Bethel Teaching Hospital in Addis Ababa, last week. In the workshop police alleged 'homosexual family members and neighbors' have sexually abused117 boys last year. It comes on the heels of much antagonism toward theLGBT community in Ethiopia. At the conclusion of the workshop, the EICAH representative stated that the council is 'making progress' in convincing the government to be stricter on homosexuality and introduce the death penalty to punish 'such acts' The ECIAH representative added that prospects for capital punishment being legislated against gays 'seems promising'. The United for Life Ethiopia (ULE), led by Dr Seyoum Antonios,sponsored the event as well as ECIAH. ULE is a Western Evangelical organization that receives funding in the UK and US and offers to 'cure' gayness as well as campaigning aggressively against LGBT people in the country. May 2, 2013: Ethiopia: Farewell Archbishop Abune Petros'

News tip: The statue of Abune Petros, which erected in 1941 in memory ofthe archbishop of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church, moved to its temporary location on May 2, 2013. The decision to relocate the statue came after the Ethiopian Railway Corporation (ERC) began the construction of the 34Km Addis Light Rail Transit (LRT) project. The LRT project runs in two directions. In the north-south direction, the project begins from Adwa Square, a few hundred meters from where the statue currently stands andpasses through it in an underground tunnel. After the relocation, the contractor, China Railway Group Limited (CREC), will commence digging up the area and construct concrete walls for future underpass of the city's first ever electric rail transit.

May 2, 2013: Ethiopia should denounce the Algiers agreement and thedecision of the Eritrea-Ethiopia' Boundary Commission (EEBC).

In-depth Analysis: Tigrai online - The Ethiopian foreign Minister Dr. TedrosAdhanom reiterated that Ethiopia is willing to settle the border conflict with Eritrea if Eritrea agrees for dialogue. The Ethiopian foreign Minister blamed the Eritrean government for refusing to resolve the border disputesaying "the belligerent party opposed to these talks has always been the Eritrean side". Ethiopia and Eritrea fought a bitter two year war after Eritrea invaded Ethiopian Northern Tigrai State territories in 1998. The Eritrean invasion of Ethiopian sovereign land was part of the tiny nations aggressive expansionist policy to increase it's influence in the Horn of Africa.

The Algiers agreement and the subsequent decision by the Eritrea- Ethiopia Boundary Commission on April 13, 2002 have been rejected by the Ethiopian people in general and the Tigrai people in particular. The Tigraians are threatening to go to all out war to maintain their land if theyhave to. The Ethiopian government should declare the whole deal null andvoid on the grounds that Eritrea violated so many of the agreements including throwing out the European origin members of United Nations Mission in Ethiopia and Eritrea (UNMEE) and sponsoring terrorists against Ethiopia. Before the humiliating defeat at the hands of the Ethiopian defense forces, Eritrea has fought with Sudan and Yemen and after that with Djibouti. 13 years after the crashing defeat by Ethiopia, Eritrea is in no mood to face the much larger neighbor for a second round. Instead theEritrean regime is facing multiple internal and external problems and it has resorted to supporting Ethiopian and Somalia terrorists. We don't think the outlawed regime in Eritrea is going to agree to discuss the border dispute with Ethiopia because it has to answer to the people why the invaded Ethiopia in the first place. The only choice the gang in Asmarahave is to start war with Ethiopia and try to unite the Eritrean people to save itself. The bad news is the Eritrean people are tired of war, the Eritrean army is defecting in the hundreds and the Eritrean economy is crumbling. What do you think the Ethiopian government should do? Keep the no war no peace policy. Remove the regime in Asmara. Try to resolve the border dispute and normalize relationship with Eritrea.

May 3, 2013: Ethiopian court ruling against Eskinder Nega drawsinternational outrage' (freedom-now.org) Today, Freedom Now, Amnesty International, CIVICUS: World Alliance for Citizen Participation, the Committee to Free Eskinder Nega, the East and Horn of Africa Human Rights Defenders Project, the Electronic Frontier Foundation, English PEN, the InternationalPress Institute, the International Women's Media Foundation, Media LegalDefence Initiative, the National Press Club, PEN American Center, PEN Canada, and the World Association of Newspapers and News Publishers, condemned the decision by the Ethiopian Supreme Court upholding the18-year sentence imposed against independent journalist and blogger Eskinder Nega. "By upholding the sentence, the Ethiopian government hasmissed yet another opportunity to respect its freely undertaken obligations under international law," the groups said. "This failure is particularly striking in light of today's World Press Freedom Day celebrations."

"By misusing anti-terror legislation to stifle the peaceful work of journalists like Mr. Nega and his colleagues Reeyot Alemu and Woubshet Taye, the government has, unfortunately, demonstrated that it is willing to disregard the legitimate rights of the Ethiopian people and undermine the credibility of international efforts to address real security threats in theregion, all in an attempt to silence critical voices in the country. It is time for the international community to make it clear to the government in Addis Ababa that such violations will no longer be tolerated." The decision upholding the verdict came yesterday after the Supreme Court postponed the appeal proceedings on seven separate occasions. Mr. Nega, who has been detained by the government eight times because of his journalism, was arrested on September 14, 2011 after he authored a series of articlesand spoke publicly about the possible implications of the Middle East and North African-style popular uprising spreading to Ethiopia. Authorities heldMr. Nega without access to family for nearly one month and without access to an attorney for nearly two months. The Ethiopian court ruling against journalist Eskinder Nega trivializes the serious crime of terrorism releases a statement earlier. In response to a ruling by Ethiopia's Supreme Court to uphold an 18-year prison sentence imposed on award- winning journalist Eskinder Nega and reject his appeal, the Committee to Protect Journalists (CPJ) issued a statement:
May 3, 2013: US slams Ethiopia's 'political persecution' of critics'
By AFP – US State Department slammed "harsh" sentences handed down to an Ethiopian blogger and an opposition leader, voicing concerns about the "politicized prosecution" of government critics. An Ethiopian court dismissed the appeals of blogger Eskinder Nega and opposition leader Andualem Arage, jailed last year for terror-related offenses. Eskinder was given an 18-year sentence, while Andualem was jailed for life. The US was"deeply disappointed" that Ethiopia's federal supreme court upheld the men's "conviction and harsh sentencing," acting deputy State Departmentspokesman Patrick Ventrell said. "Today's decision further reinforces our serious concern about Ethiopia's politicized prosecution of those critical of the government and ruling party,including under the anti-terrorism proclamation." Ventrell stressed the Universal Declaration of Human Rights gives everyone "a right to freedomof opinion and expression, and that this right includes the freedom to holdopinions without interference." Upholding such freedoms "is essential if Ethiopia is to realize its stated goal of being a democratic state," he added. However, he could not say if the court's decision would impact a planned trip to Ethiopia by US Secretary of State John Kerry at the end ofMay. Although no dates have been announced, Kerry told US lawmakers last month that he planned to attend celebrations to mark the African Union's 50th anniversary in Addis Ababa. "We travel, and we continue ourrelationship with countries... where we have human rights concern," Ventrell said.

May 3, 2013: Ethiopia: Terrorism Law Decimates the Media'

Ethiopia's journalists shouldn't be spending World Press Freedom Day injail on trumped-up terrorism charges. Freeing these journalists would bean important step toward improving Ethiopia's deteriorating record on press freedom - Leslie Lefkow, deputy Africa director. Since Ethiopia's anti-terrorism law was adopted in 2009, the independent media have been decimated by politically motivated prosecutions under the law. Thegovernment has systematically thwarted attempts by journalists to establish new publications. Blogs and Internet pages critical of the government are regularly blocked, and in 2012 printing houses came under threat for printing publications that criticized the authorities.

Mastewal Birhanu, the manager of Mastewal Publishing, for example, wascharged under the criminal code for printing the editions of Feteh that were the basis for the charges against Feteh Editor Temesgen Desalegn. Human Rights Watch has repeatedly raised concerns about the anti- terrorism law's overly broad definition of "terrorist acts." The law's provisions on support for terrorism contain a vague prohibition on "moralsupport" under which only journalists have been convicted.

May 3, 2013: Ethiopia Courts BRICS for Rail Projects to Spur EconomicGrowth'

Ethiopia is negotiating with Brazil, Russia and India to finance and buildrail links after agreeing terms last year with Chinese and Turkish companies for other routes, the head of the state rail company said. Russia's government may fund a 587-kilometer (365-mile) southern line that will eventually connect with a proposed port at Lamu on Kenya's northeastern coast, Ethiopian Railways Corp. General Manager Getachew Betru said in an April 26 interview. Brazilian companies could build a 439-kilometer section of a route to oil-rich South Sudan and India is considering export financing for a line to a port in Djibouti, he said. "Theywant to come and invest in Ethiopia and get their return," Getachew said in the capital, Addis Ababa. Ethiopia, Africa's second-most populous nation, is building 4,744 kilometers of electrified railway lines at a cost of 110.8 billion birr ($5.9 billion) as it seeks to reduce road-transport costs constraining the continent's fastest growing non-oil producing economy over the past decade. Growth may slow to 6.5 percent this year and next,compared with average growth of 8.7 percent over the past five years, according to International Monetary Fund data. Ethiopian Railways plansto lay more than 2,000 kilometers of standard-gauge track during a five-year national growth plan that runs until mid-2015. China Civil Engineering Construction Corp. and China Railway Group Ltd. (390) are working on sections costing more than $1 billion each along Ethiopia’s main 656- kilometer trade route from Addis Ababa to Djibouti.

May 5, 2013: Ethiopian peacekeeper killed, two wounded in Sudaneseclash’

(Reuters) - One Ethiopian peacekeeper was killed and two others woundedwhen a U.N. convoy was caught up in a tribal clash in the Abyei border region claimed by both Sudan and South Sudan, the United Nations said on Sunday. Sudan and South Sudan in March agreed to resume cross- border oil flows and defuse tensions which have plagued them since the South seceded in 2011 after an independence vote. But they were unable to decide on the ownership of Abyei, which both the Dinka tribe allied to South Sudan and the Arab Misseriya tribe allied to Sudan call their home. Kuwal Deng Mayok, the top Dinka leader in Abyei, was travelling with a U.N. convoy when he was killed by members of the Misseriya in a clash onSaturday that risked fuelling new tensions in the flashpoint area. An Ethiopian peacekeeper was also killed and two others seriously wounded by a Misseriya tribesman, U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon's office said.

May 7, 2013: Ethiopian Airlines seeks compensation for 787 grounding'

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia -- The chief executive of Ethiopian Airlines said Tuesday that his company will seek compensation from Boeing for the grounding of its 787 Dreamliner planes. Tewolde Gebremariam told The Associated Press that his company will soon start discussions with Boeing over compensation. A Boeing spokesman, Daniel Mosely, said the company has been in close communication with its customers regarding compensation since January, when Dreamliners around the world were grounded because of overheating lithium batteries. Mosely said details of the conversations are confidential. Ethiopian Airlines began flying the 787sagain last month after the battery problem was fixed. Gebremariam said his company's focus had been on getting the Dreamliners back into service. Now that they are flying again, the company's next step is to startcompensation discussions with Boeing. The 50 Dreamliner jets in service worldwide were grounded in mid-January after incidents with smoldering batteries occurred aboard two different planes, leading to hundreds of cancelled flights and revenue losses. Japan's two biggest carriers have the most 787s - All Nippon Airways owns 17 of the jets, while Japan Airlineshas seven. The U.S. carrier United has six. Source: AP

May 7, 2013: Ethiopia freed 74 members of the Benshangul Peoples Liberation Movement (BPLM).

News tip: The release of prisoners was part of a peace deal with the BPLM. The agreement, signed in August 2012, ended a 17 year-long insurgency. Ethiopia’s Benishangul region (Benishangul-Gumuz) borders on northern Sudan. BPLM guerrillas operated from camps in Sudan, though Sudan denied it supported the BPLM. Nile River water politics played a role in the peace deal. The BPLM had threatened to attack Ethiopia’s Grand Renaissance Dam project on theBlue Nile River. The dam site is in Benishangul-Gumuz. After the peace deal was signed, a BPLM faction claimed that it rejected the peace agreement. The Benishangul people are also called the Berta and about 180,000 live in Ethiopia.

May 9, 2013: Tullow looks for partners to develop wells in Kenya andEthiopia'

News tip: TULLOW Oil said it plans to secure partners to develop fields in African nations as discoveries prove that future crude exports are viable. Dublin-listed Tullow together with partner Africa Oil plans to drill about 10wells in Kenya and Ethiopia this year to explore the Turkana Rift Basin that stretches between the two countries. Tullow plans to sell part of its stake in five licences in Kenya, chief executive Aidan Heavey said. "It's never been our intention to stick with 50pc all the way through," Heavey said in London. "It's too much for any company, even a major company."

Local roads: If local roads were improved, Tullow could start producing from Kenya now, possibly trucking crude to the refinery in Mombasa, he said. Irish-led Tullow has drilled three wells in Kenya with the first oil discovery at the Ngamia well and the first commercial flow from the Twigawell in the South Lokichar Basin. The nation may export its first crude at the same time as Uganda, where Tullow is working with Total and Cnoco to develop the Lake Albert fields, Mr Heavey told reporters. "A few more wells may actually prove it to be a major development" the CEO said. "If that's the case, then the pipeline from Uganda could quite easily go through Lokichar, pick up the oil there" for exports through an Indian Ocean port. "What we are trying to do is to bring in the right type of partners and get them to come up with financing."

Pipeline: Unlike landlocked Uganda, Kenya doesn't require running an export pipeline across other countries, he said. Tullow will bring a fourth rig to the region to accelerate drilling later this year and will increase the Ngamia well resource estimate "quite significantly" following "encouraging" tests. In West Africa, the company is looking for partners tosell part of its largest stakes in exploration licences in deep waters off Mauritania, Heavey said. Tullow global oil and gas producing projects generate enough cash to spend about $1bn (€750m) a year on exploration. "We are focused on building the biggest exploration businessaround," Heavey said. Shares in the company rose 1.3pc to 1,022 pence in London. The shares are down almost a third in the last year. (Bloomberg) Source: Irish Independent

May 9, 2013: Ethiopia's skeleton 'Lucy' is back home’

Ethiopia welcomed the return home of a 3.2 million year old skeleton nicknamed ‘Lucy’ from a tour of USA. Lucy, discovered in November, 1974, is believed to be one of the most ancient and important fossil discoveries to help advance understanding of human evolution. Lucy isseen as the evolutionary pre-cursor to humanity and Ethiopia is very happy to have LUCY back on home ground.

May 11, 2013: Ethiopia arrests minister, 11 others over corruption’

Ethiopian law enforcement officers arrested 12 people in what media described as the country’s most high-profile corruption case in ten years.One of the individuals arrested is a senior government official who is the minister in charge of the Ethiopian Revenue and Customs Authority (ERCA). His deputy was also arrested. A prominent businessman was among the other 11 arrested.

Side note: Ethiopian police have arrested a minister and 11 other people on corruption charges, an official and state media said, in the country's most high-profile swoop against graft for more than a decade. Businessesin the region regularly complain of corruption as an obstacle to their work.Transparency International ranked Ethiopia 113 out of 176 nations worldwide in its 2012 perception of corruption index, where No. 1 is considered least corrupt.

That ranking puts Ethiopia above most nations in the Horn of Africa and east Africa regions, although Rwanda is ranked 50. Melaku Fenta, a seniorruling party member and Director-general of the Revenue and Customs Authority with the rank of minister, was arrested on alongside two other officials from the authority, government spokesman Shimeles Kemal said."They were under investigation on suspicion of corrupt practices," Shimeles told Reuters, without giving details.

The spokesman said there were further arrests as well but did not give a total. The state news agency reported 12 arrests overall. Independently, newspapers said the arrests included a prominent businessman and customs employees outside the capital. Global Financial Integrity last yearsaid Ethiopia lost $11.7 billion in outflows of illegal funds in the past decade. Melaku is the most high profile suspect to be arrested on corruption charges since Siye Abraha, a former defense minister who was released in 2007 after six years behind bars. However, he was already outof government when arrested.

May 12, 2013: President Girma calls for the erection of a statue forEmperor Haile-Selassie I'
President Girma Woldegiorgis in a letter sent to Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn asked for a statue to be erected in honour of the late Emperor of Ethiopia, Haile-Selassie I. “A statue must be erected to commemorate the Emperor … he was the first leader of Africa and I thinkhe deserves a statue,” the president said during the interview. Accordingto the president, the Ethiopian government is making good progress on the matter and hopes that it will materialize. It is to be recalled that Kwame Nkrumah’s statue, which was unveiled at the African Union (AU) headquarters, has sparked anger amongst prominent Ethiopian scholars,historians and politicians, who feel Haile-Selassie deserves the honor.
Back then, Members of Parliament have also been drawn into the debate and raised the issue with former prime minister, the late Meles Zenawi. Meles downplayed the request and defended the decision to honor KwameNkrumah, the former Ghanaian leader, whom he described as a pan- African. What has further angered locals was that, with the AU headquarters being in Addis Ababa, many expected a statue of Emperor Haile-Selassie to be erected. Ethiopian historians said they also remembered Haile Selassie for his leading role in the creation of the Organization of African Union, the predecessor of the African Union (AU). HIM Emperor Haile Selassie’s leadership, commitment and dedication to the establishment of the OAU/AU, and to the freedom and independence of Africa and African peoples are unmatched by any other World leader.
Let us work together for a common purpose and see to it that the late Emperor Haile Selassie receives his rightful place center front of the African Union building. However, the late Meles Zenawi and his administration has often criticized Haile-Selassie’s track record. To date there are still many Ethiopian as well as large number of Africans who appreciated the former Emperor, for his role in Africa’s independence andunity. Emperor Haile Selassie was known for his historic remark for

"Agerna tarik aymotum; yetarikinim kibir yemeetebiqew tewlid new!" Meaning that, "A Nation and its history shall not be perished; for this reason it's up to each generation to preserve and respect the sanctity andhonor of history" Editor

May 13, 2013: The rebel-EUFF claims gundown 12 ruling party officials in the resort town of Bahir Dar'

BAHIR DAR, Northwestern Ethiopia – Updates: Twelve ruling party officials were killed and two wounded here inthis resort city on the shores of Lake Tana on Sunday when rebels stormed a wedding and opened fire, a rebel spokesperson told Ethiomediaby phone. The Ethiopian Unity and Freedom Force (EUFF), a rebel group that has been targetting the ruling EPRDF party officials and their businesses, claimed responsibility for the deadly attack. EUFF said the names of the officials killed and wounded would be released soon. The news has not been verified by any other independent source. All those killed were members of Amhara National Democratic Movement (ANDM), one of the four parties that make up the ruling EPRDF, in power since May, 1991. The government has never acknowledged the existence of EUFF, despite suffering mortal blows. Bahir Dar city, which is located about 580 km northwest of Addis Ababa, is known for its palm-lined avenues and is the leading tourist attraction in Ethiopia. Ethiopian Airlinesmaintains a daily flight to Bahir Dar, which boasts of the magnificient BlueNile Falls and treasure-trove monasteries on the islands of Lake Tana.

May 14, 2013: PMHD outraged over the slaughter of civilians in Bahir Dar'

A rogue Federal police trooper killed dozens of civilians including Children,women and elders in the northwestern city of Bahir Dar, where located a few kilometers away from the source of Nile. The shooter is said to be member of a Federal Police unit stationed in the vicinity of Bahir Dar city. Sources claim the shooter was intoxicated, while others indicate he was motivated due to problems with his personal love affair.

The rogue police trooper opened fire at random in the city, around the vicinity called Abay Mado – Kebele eleven, in an evening between 8-9 pm,according to the Police Commissioner of Amhara state. Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalgne issued a prompt press statement calling the massacre “cruel, outrageous and unacceptable”. He claimed that his government is probing the matters in collaboration with elected officials and security services of the region. Similarly, Ayalew Gobeze, President ofAmhara state pledged to do “all necessary” to help the victims’ family. Healso claimed that an inquiry is launched to probe the matter.

The Region’s President Ayalew Gobeze said that he will hold into account ifconcerned officials are found of responsible of “creating conducive environment” for the massacre and for not halting it in time. The shooter has managed to jump into Blue Nile river from a bridge at a specific location called Chore-Chora. Though some presume he can’t make it alive,the Federal police and local militia launched a high-profile man-hunt in case the man is still alive. The bodies of the 12 victims has been put to rest at Debre-Abay, St. Gabriel Church, in the presence of Ato Ayalew Gobeze. Source: ETV

May 13, 2013: Over 60 people arrested in Gondar, northwestern Ethiopia'

(ESAT News) – Over 40 civilians have been arrested in the Bona Woreda of North Gondar on May 8, 2013, after residents staged a protest. Eight people have been injured due to beatings by the police and para-troopers.The protest began after the residents learnt that an investor in the area nicknamed Bedele was planning to fence a water stream that the people of the area use as drinking water and turn it into a pond for his cattle breeding. As people started to protest, the investor called armed soldiers from the Sereba area barrack to take action against the protesters. The investor who is also said to be a government official has reportedly invitedsome members of the army to share lunch with him. Bona is a town located 40 Kms from Gondar city. Efforts to talk to officials of the town was unsuccessful.

May 14, 2013: Bahir Dar Rebel Attack Death Toll Rises to 14'

BAHIR DAR - An Ethiopian policeman murdered 14 people in the town of Bahirdar (northwestern Ethiopia, near Lake Tana). Security officers chasedthe murderer and he committed suicide by jumping off a bridge into the Blue Nile River. The government called the incident a massacre. Police said the incident is under investigation and they have not determined the motive for the murder spree.

News updates: The death toll from the Sunday night rebel attack in BahirDar city rose to 14 on Tuesday after two more officials died in hospital, a rebel EUFF spokesperson has told Ethiomedia by phone. The insurgent who was wearing a federal police officer uniform carried out the attack atDashen House in Kebele 11, a highly protected area where officials hold weddings and other private parties. The headquarters of the ruling Amhara National Democratic Movement (ANDM) is also located there. A senior ANDM official identified by his first name Tadesse was also killed atANDM HQs the same night, the source added. Tension has remained highas security men keep an eye on the movement of individuals in the idylliccity on the shores of Lake Tana.

May 14, 2013: Massive number of government troops pour into Addis Ababa in preparation for AU meeting' The government is always fearful and nervous because they know that there might be public discontent anytime, but this year the government is taking it's fear to extreme security steps. They are amassing tanks and heavily armed troops nearand inside the capital Addis Ababa in preparation for next weeks AfricanUnion meeting and the protest demonstration called by an opposition party. Analysts say all these were show of force to intimidate peaceful protests? Sources in Addis Ababa are also reporting that police and para-troopers are conducting a house-to-house search in several parts of the city.

Semayawi (Blue) party calls up on to the people to wear black cloths between 23 and 25 of of May and for public demonstration at the HQ of the African Union on the 25th of May.. The theme of the public demonstration are said to be: 1) To draw the attention of the internationalcommunity to the sufferings of the innocent journalists and all other political prisoners who are languishing in prisons in different parts of the country for the simple reason they tried to exercise their basic human andpolitical rights.

2) To express a very disturbing and dangerously politically motivated measure that forces the people to be refugees in their own homeland based on their nationality and the language they speak. And as this is becoming the issue of ethnic cleansing, the call by the party underlines the need to bring those who are responsible for this very terrible crime tojustice.

3) To express the serious concerns of the people to the international community that the dangerous political intervention in religious affairs including arresting, intimidating and torturing those who made their voicespeacefully heard should be the grave concern of the international community . The call strongly condemns the very ridiculous actions by theruling party against innocent citizens under the cover of anti-terrorism law. 4) To express the very worrisome socio-economic impoverishment onthe one hand, and the very rampant corruption going on in the country in which the higher officials of the government and the ruling party are playing a leading role.

May 15, 2013: Somali Region's President says members being forced topay membership fees'

News tip: In one of the few secret video clips of Abdi Muhammad Omar, President of the Somali Regional State, that ESAT got a hand on, the President is heard saying that members of the Somali People's DemocraticParty (SPDP), a member part of the ruling EPRDF, are being forced to pay membership fees. "The government gives money with one hand and it takes it from civil servants with the other hand" Abdi said.

He also said that the reports which state that the SPDP has 40,000 members were false. "If we had 40,000 Party members, how come there are many anti peace elements? Those few people are members whose money is being taken by the government and they all are not paying the fee happily". Abdi said that he only considered people who contributed money willingly as members but not those who were forced to pay by the Regime. In recent video clips that were released by ESAT, the President of the Somali Region was heard saying that the reports they submit to the Government as if the Region had developed were full of lies only aimed atpassing evaluations.

In another video clip, Abdi says to the clan chiefs of the Region “Tigreans don’t want Amhara to come to power. They want to arm us and lead the Country with us but we considered them as Amharas and began firing at them. Amara and Tigre, Amara and Oromo will never reconcile and cooperate thus we need to stand with Tigreans and stop lumping the Tigres, Oromos and Amharas together as Amhara.” Although ESAT phonedthe President of the Region, we were unable to speak to him as his Secretary said he was in a meeting.

Efforts to speak to the University administration were unsuccessful.

May 15, 2013: Potato may help feed Ethiopia in era of climate change'

Revelation: With unpredictable annual rainfall and drought once every fiveyears, climate change presents challenges to feeding Ethiopia. Adapting toa warming world, the potato is becoming a more important crop there – with the potential to feed much of Africa. Semagn-Asredie Kolech, a Cornell doctoral candidate in the field of horticulture, studies the potato and bridges the tradition of Ethiopian farming with the modernity of agricultural science. He shuttles between Ethiopia and Ithaca to examine and research efficient agricultural practices in the shadow of climate change. "The potato is a good strategy crop for global warming. It has a short growing season, it offers higher yields, it's less susceptible to hail damage, and you can grow 40 tons per hectare. With wheat and corn, you don't get more than 10 tons a hectare," Kolech says. Ethiopia sits on the brink of thriving financial and gross domestic product forecasts, as its government formally merges green economics with climate-change resilient policies. But the country's agricultural economy suffers from poorcultivation practices and frequent drought. However, new efforts – including Kolech's research – are beginning to fortify the country's agricultural resilience, reducing the threat of starvation and bringing on the rising possibility of exporting potatoes to other African countries.

Annually, Ethiopian farmers plant potatoes in the spring and late summer.Yet, they still search for optimum planting dates and vie for vibrant drought-tolerant varieties if planted in the short-rain season, and sidestepping late blight, if planted in the longer rainy season. At an Atkinson Center for a Sustainable Future forum in March, Kolech presented preliminary research gathered last summer. He surveyed Ethiopian farmers in potato-growing regions to understand their varietal inventory and crop practices. Farmers tried new varieties, but they often reverted back to using their traditional cultivars, he said. For example, in the Shashemene district (southern Ethiopia) about 47 percent of farmers used new varieties before 2012. That percentage dropped to 17 percent willing to use new varieties in 2012. Further, he found that in the Yilmanadistrict, the use of new varieties dropped to 15 percent last season, downfrom 35 percent prior to 2012.

Kolech said that he found that the usage drop-off is due mostly to poor storage quality. New varieties have good attributes, such as high yield andlate blight resistance, but in northwestern Ethiopia where more than 40 percent of potatoes are grown, the potato color and taste changes in storage earlier than the local varieties. To hedge bets on drought or late blight, Kolech found the farmers revert to traditional varieties in the Shashemene district to alleviate food shortage. This summer, he will continue to survey farmers and collect the local cultivars for genetic diversity analysis, and then test these varieties for drought-stress tolerance. In 1970 Ethiopian farmers planted less than 30,000 hectares ofpotatoes. Today, more than 160,000 hectares are planted. With a population of 93 million and a land size almost double that of Texas, Ethiopia can accommodate growing 3 million hectares of potatoes, Kolech says.

May 15, 2013: Ethiopia: Editor Questioned Over Story On Meles' Widow'

CPJ PR (New York) — Ethiopian police in Addis Ababa questioned an editorfor several hours today in connection with a story published in October about the widow of the late Ethiopian leader Meles Zenawi, according to news reports. Officers in the Ethiopian Federal Police Crime Investigation Department interrogated Ferew Abebe, the former editor-in-chief of the private Amharic-language weekly Sendek, about his sources for the October 10, 2012, story that said Azeb Mesfin, Meles' widow, had refused to leave the Ethiopian national place nearly two months after the prime minister's death, local journalists said. The story, which was widely covered in local and international press, cited government sources as saying that Meles' successor, Hailemarian Desalegn, was unable to live in the palace. Ferew refused to identify his sources and cited Ethiopian laws that guaranteed the rights of a journalist to keep sources confidential, local journalists said. According to the Ethiopian penal code, a court can compel journalists to reveal their sources if a crime has been committed against the constitutional order, national defense force, or security of the state, which constitutes clear and imminent danger. Police released Ferewon a bond of 5,000 birrs (US$265) pending further investigation, according to the same sources. Police also summoned a deputy editor for 'Sendeq' to question him about the same story, local journalists said. He was released without charge.

May 15, 2013: Ethiopia Refuses to Cooperate With World-Bank-FundingProbe’

Ethiopia’s government said it won’t cooperate with a probe into whether the World Bank violated its own policies by funding a program in which thousands of people were allegedly relocated to make way for agriculture investors. Ethnic Anuak people in Ethiopia’s southwestern Gambella regionand rights groups including Human Rights Watch last year accused the Washington-based lender of funding a program overseen by soldiers to forcibly resettle 45,000 households. The Inspection Panel of the World Bank, an independent complaints mechanism, began an investigation in October into the allegations, which donors and the government have denied. "We are not going to cooperate with the Inspection Panel," Getachew Reda, a spokesman for Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn, said in a phone interview (on May 22). "To an extent that there’s a need for cooperation, it’s not going to be with the Inspection Panel, but with the World Bank" Ethiopia, Africa’s most-populous nation after Nigeria, has made 3.3 million hectares (8.2 million acres) of land available to agriculture companies. Investors include Karuturi Global Ltd. (KARG) of India, the world’s largest rose grower, and companies owned by Saudi billionaire Mohamed al-Amoudi.

May 17th, 2013: Millions of dollars found at the residence of late MelesZenawi’s confidant'

News tip: Police seized millions of dollars from the private residence of Guebrewahid Woldegiorgis, a close friend and confidant of the late dictatorMeles Zenawi. If Guebrewahid has kept this much money in his residence,one can imagine how much money he has transferred out of the country, and how much his late boss Meles Zenawi and wife Azeb Mesfin have stolen. Guebrewahid is the latest guy who fellout in the ongoing power struggle inside the ruling party. According to analysts, he is no more corrupt than any of the other TPLF officials who have been sucking the blood of Ethiopia during the pasttwo decades. According to sources in Addis Ababa, the recent purges are being orchestrated by the deputy chiefof security Issaias Woldegiorgis and close ally Bereket Simon, who is headof government communication affairs office.

May 17, 2013: The UN said that the human rights situation in Eritrea isunacceptable and must be closely monitored. The UN accused Eritrea ofblatant disrespect for human rights and said the country must undergo fundamental reform. The UN statement followed recent allegations thatover 10,000 Eritreans are political prisoners. Many of the prisoners are incarcerated in poorly ventilated underground prison cells and shipping containers. Earlier this year the UN estimated that around 36,000 Eritreans fled the country in 2012.

May 17, 2013 - President Asks PM to Erect Statue for EmperorHaileselassie'

President Girma Woldegiorgis in a letter sent to Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn asked for a statue to be erected in honour of the late Emperor of Ethiopia, Haile-Selassie I, according to the Reporter. "A statue must be erected to commemorate the Emperor…he was the first leader of Africa and I think he deserves a statue," the president said during the interview. According to the president, the Ethiopian government is making good progress on the matter and hopes that it willmaterialize. It is to be recalled that Kwame Nkrumah's statue, which wasunveiled at the African Union (AU) headquarters, has sparked anger amongst Ethiopian scholars, historians and politicians, who feel Haile- Selassie deserved the honor. Back then, Members of Parliament have also been drawn into the debate and raised the issue with former prime minister, the late Meles Zenawi, hedownplayed the request and defended the decision to honor Kwame Nkrumah, the former Ghanaian leader, whom he described as a pan- African. What has further angered locals was that, with the AU headquarters being in Addis Ababa, many expected a statue of late Emperor Haile-Selassie to be erected. Ethiopian historians said they also remembered Selassie for his leading role in the creation of the OAU.

May 17, 2013: Preparations underway by the General secretariat of the AUC in Addis Ababa, the Ethiopian capital to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), the predecessor ofthe African Union (AU) and to comemrate the "AFRICA WEEK" in all member states.

May 17, 2013: Ethiopia's Booming Hotel Industry'

VENTURES AFRICA – The Sheraton Hotel is doing another good day of business on a Monday morning. The hotel, run by Sheik Mohammed Ali Al-Amoud, is Ethiopia's most recognized hotel. It fills with business travelers from London and diplomats from all over Africa. It also offers similar services and accommodations expected from any major hotel in America or Europe. And for those who find the prices of the bigger international brands too expensive, Jupiter International Hotels, run by a young Ethiopian expat Benyam Bisrat, offers a quality local alternative. The central parts—Kazanchis and Bole—of Addis Ababa resemble a construction site. New malls and hotels are being erected throughout these areas. These new constructions are mostly locally funded. Jupiter Hotels, as one of those locally funded constructions, has only been running for 5 years. In that time, the company has boosted occupancy rates above 80 percent to match international brands in the market. Until recently, schmoozing with businessmen of all stripes and African diplomats involved sitting by the bar in the Hilton or lingering around the Sheraton lounge area. During the last African Union meeting, the lobby of the Jupiter Hotel in Kazanchis jammed softly with local Ethiopian jazz crowded out by Africa's numerous local languages and the usual assortment of romance languages spoken on the continent. This type of growth is usually the result of growing demand and stalled supply. But thesupply of hotel beds in Addis has tripled in the last three years to around 6,000 hotel beds. Competition in this market could potentially push the number over 10,000 hotel beds in the next few years. Jupiter International Hotels will actively expand during this time to more than 1,000 hotel beds to capture approximately ten percent of the market, saysMr. Bisrat, who is also vice president of the Hotel Association of Ethiopia.

International brands, including the Marriot, will also help the local hotel industry to reach that number. Hotel groups are expanding in this capitalbecause the amount of diplomats and corporate clients are growing.

Yearly tourism, at approximately 500,000 tourists in Ethiopia, still has a ways to go before it matches other emerging African economies. The Ministry of Culture and Tourism has stated its aspirations to make Ethiopiaa top five tourist destination in Africa by 2020. During this rapid growth phase, quality service-oriented business will win out at the end of the day,say Mr. Bisrat, or customers will walk out. He believes Jupiter International Hotels is positioned as top competitor in this space, especially as it plans to develop a value hotel chain. A hot shower, good mattress, and strong internet goes a long way to make a quality value hotel. But Jupiter International Hotels plans to also add a yoga studio, art gallery, and technological add-ons, including iPod docking stations and quality data and voice streaming capabilities in the rooms. So many foreigners are coming now and more and more are not Ethiopian Diaspora, says Dawit, a local Ethiopian tourist operator. A sense of changehas descended upon the country. Gone are filmmakers for aid videos on famine. Rather conference facilities and lobbies bustle with the growing presence of investors and government officials. Hotel groups, says Mr.

Bisrat, still have a long way to go to meet the needs of a growing business and diplomatic hub. As Ethiopian Airlines expands its routes to meet thegeographically diversifying clientele of the Ethiopia, expect the hotel industry to do the same.

May 17, 2013: Three killed along Kenya-Ethiopia border in attack linked tomilitiamen'

MANDERA, KENYA: Three people were killed after militiamen believed to be from Ethiopia attacked a village at the main border. Officials said tension was high along the Kenya-Ethiopia border after the militiamen killed three women in Malkamau area and escaped back to their country. Sources said all the killed women were Degodia and link the attack to the ongoing inter clan attacks in the area. There has been an inter clan fighting between Degodia and Gabre over control of resources in the larger Mandera County in the past month along leaving at least eight people dead now. Police say the attack happened when a gang armed withguns crossed over and struck the village before returning back and there are fears of retaliations. More police have been deployed to the area in efforts to address insecurity that has been on the rise. A section of Mandera residents have so far surrendered 10 guns and more than 500 bullets following an ultimatum that was issued to them to surrender their illegally held weapons or face forceful disarmament. The assorted weapons were handed over by residents to various chiefs in the area on Monday and Tuesday as part of the ultimatum that was issued by Inspector General of Police David Kimaiyo. But local police bosses said theweapons are not enough and urged the locals to continue surrendering them. “These are not enough because we know there are many others in hundreds in the wrong hands there. We continue to urge them to surrender the weapons,” said North Eastern police boss Charlton Murithi.

It is not clear if the planned gun mop up will continue given not all havebeen surrendered.

May 17, 2013: Ethiopia: Amazing images of Salt harvest in the Danakil Depression in an Inhospitable climate’ The National Geographic calls Ethiopia's Danakil Depression "the cruelest place on Earth' It's a desert wasteland, where temperatures can push past 120 F, where ancient and current lava flows impede movement, and where water is so scarce that that people build rock domes over the top of volcanic vents to trap and condense steam. It's also a place where Ethiopian men and boys regularlytravel in order to cut slabs of salt off of the surface of the Earth and haul them back to civilization. Salt flats like this occur when entire bodies of water totally evaporate. In the Danakil Depression, you'll also find salt towers and other formations caused by evaporation off of volcanic geysersand hot springs. Baking temperatures, wastelands of salt—it's hard to imagine a more brutal landscape than Africa's Danakil Desert. But for the Afar people this is a home to die for.

May 19, 2013: Ethiopia detained 22 officers for Bahirdar killing spree"
Federal Police detained fifteen of its officers include at Shaleqa (Majours)level, it has been learnt. The list of detainee include another seven “security officers”. The detainees are presumed responsible for the security vacuum that enabled the killings in Bahirdar. It is to be recalled that a rogue Federal police officer killed twelve people in the city, arounda vicinity called Abay Mado Kebele eleven, last Sunday evening around 9pm.
Residents and officials concur that the killing spree could have been haltedin time as there were several officers guarding government offices in the vicinity. The killer, named Constable Fekadu Nasha and said to be from Oromiya region, escaped police pursuit and jumped into Blue Nile – Abay river shortly after the killings. His body was found on Tuesday morning after a high-profile search by the Federal police and local militia. Chief of the Federal Police, Commissioner Colonel Workneh Gebeyehu, held meetings with local elders in Bahir-dar and pledged to help the victims’ family. It has been reported earlier in this blog that Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalgne issued a prompt press statement on Monday callingthe killing spree “cruel, outrageous and unacceptable”. May 21, 2013: Boating accident kills five on Lake-Tana' (ADDIS ABABA) – At least five people died when a boat carrying 110 passengers overturned on Lake Tana in Ethiopia’s north western region of Amhara on Monday, police told Sudan Tribune. The boat was travelling to attend a religious event at an island monastery in the Derji area of Lake Tana, which is the source of the Blue Nile River. Local residents helped therescue operation. “The boat overturned when it was only 20 meters away from reaching the port" Amhara's regional police commission information officer, Solomon Mohamed, told Sudan Tribune. The cause of the accidentis yet to be announced, however initial reports blame bad weather conditions. "There was heavy rain that led into sudden strong wave whichis believed to be cause to the accident'' the police spokesperson added.

Reached by phone, a survivor said that the boat which belongs to the government owned Tana Transport Enterprise (TTE), was overcrowded. The captain of the boat survived and is reported to have told accident investigators that the boat may have overturned after passengers moved suddenly to one side of the boat. No arrests were made in connection withthe accident. Lake Tana which covers an area of 2,156 sq km has 37 islands among them some 20 have churches and monasteries that have ancient religious relics and historic treasures. Every year thousands of tourists visit Lake Tana's historic churches and monasteries. With the flowof tourists to Lake Tana increasing by over 45% in 2012 compared to the previous year the religious sites are a valuable source of income for Ethiopia. (ST)

May 22, 2013: The cause for Boat's capsizing still unknown'

ESAT News: The North Gondar Zone Police Department and another HeadTana Late Transport have said that the cause of the accident that took thelives of five people, when a boat capsized in Lake Tana two days ago, hasstill not been established. The boat named, Fasiledes was heading from Kunzela to Delgi with 102 people onboard. The accident happened when the boat was 150 to 170 meters away from its destination. Belete Fente, official at Tana Haiq Transport said that many people have been rescued through the cooperation of the local people. Belete said that the cause of the capsizing has not been known and will be announced once the investigation was completed. He said the boat had no mechanical fault and there was no tide when it capsized. Zemene, the Zonal Police Commander told State media, however, that according to the captain of the boat, the boat went down when passengers were loaded on one side of the boat as they were preparing to disembark. The Commander said that the search for survivors was continuing. Government sources are saying that the number of deceased was less than five and the search for the remaining 56 was ongoing. Sources said on a breaking News yesterday that around ten people had died.

May 22, 2013: People in Dessie utter frustration'

ESAT News: People in Dessie, North Central Ethiopia have boldly expressed their feelings and frustrations at meeting held in Rukia Hall in the city. Although it was a closed meeting, ESAT together with the city's youth managed to record it. Prominent personalities and investors of the city have expressed their complaints regarding the lack of good governance and problems in trade in the city while others praised it. Mostof the speakers have complained about the city's police force too.

Mengistu Zegeye, Deputy President of the Amhara Region Lawyer's Association said "Police have insulted us by naming our mothers justbecause we legally represented citizens".
Another speaker named Fekadu Alene said that people were being robbedin daylights as it is often done in Kenyan and Nigerian cities and also called police officials to clean themselves. Tewodros Tadese, a resident ofthe City said "It has been long since the police and the people have interacted. The police structure from the top Head to the detectives is fullof problems. We have no protection for our wealth and possessions." Residents have also stated that they have been unable to safely walk during the nights. Guebremariam, a resident of the city, criticized the police stating that recently a murderer was released within 7 days from prison while another person detained for misdemeanor was arrested for two months just because he was poor. Business people also listed the problems they have been facing.

May 25, 2013: IMF sees Ethiopia's economy slowing as private sectorstruggles’

ADDIS ABABA (Reuters) - Ethiopia's huge public spending has created oneof Africa's fastest-growing economies, but volatile inflation, balance of payments pressures and a stifled private sector raise questions over its sustainability, the International Monetary Fund said. Ethiopia's 85 million- strong population, making it Africa's second-most populous nation, offers an attractive market with cheap labour for foreign investors. Across the capital, mushrooming construction sites, glass-clad office towers and giantbillboards showcasing hi-tech electronics point to Ethiopia's emerging middle class. But idle youths loitering on streets and impoverished slums underscore some of the challenges facing the government. Economic growth will slow to an estimated 6.5 percent this fiscal year from 8.5 percent in 2011/12, Jan Mikkelsen, the IMF's country representative in Ethiopia, said in an interview on Thursday. Massive energy, transport, IT and manufacturing projects require financing equivalent to roughly 15 percent of Ethiopia's estimated $33 billion annual national output. About half had to be domestically funded, Mikkelsen said. "The amount of financing that those projects absorb is so large that it is crowding out activity in the private sector," said Mikkelsen, whose office overlooks a new superhighway running through central Addis Ababa.

News tip: Semayawi (Blue) party's peaceful demonstration to be held on May 25th has been postponed’ to Sunday, the 2nd of June 2013. The demonstration day is changed after Semayawi (Blue) party has received awritten demonstration permit from the office of Addis Ababa City Administration. The demonstration will be held at Mesquel (Holy Cross) Square on Sunday June 2, 2013 from 10 am to 2 pm. It's the first of it’s kind kind after the late PM Meles Zenawi officially declares off- demonstrations after May 2005 election. In support of the anti-regime demonstration, Ethiopians around the globe will continue their support to the opposition. All the concerns and issues raised by the Semayawi (Blue)party are the silenced voice of the Ethiopian public. This is the time to show the incumbent regime solidarity and support for Semayawi (Blue) party.

May 26, 2013: 14 suspected of organizing protest in Gondar detained'

ESAT News: Residents of Kebele 6 and 7 of Gondar City, Northern Ethiopiahad staged a peaceful protest in the city calling for immediate solutions tothe problems of water, unemployment and good governance last week.

Sources now learnt from reps of the area that 14 youth suspected of organizing the protest have been detained in Zero 1 and Zero 2 Stations. The representatives said “the suspects have been hunted from their houses”. It is unknown if they appeared before Court or not. Mulat Fiseha,Organizer and member of the Council of the Unity for Democracy and Justice Party (UDJ), had said last week that the youth took to the streets in mass to voice their frustrations.

May 26, 2013: Officials fall out results in border death in Central Ethiopia'

ESAT News: Instigated by government officials, boundary violence between Amhara and Afar ethnic groups in the Kewet Woreda of NorthernShewa Zone resulted in the death of 15 injuring many. Cattle have also been looted. A man has reportedly been savagely killed while another is ina critical condition after a fight that once again was instigated last Thursday. The fight was started by armed people from Afar Region but as residents of Kewet attempted to defend themselves, many were killed from both sides. Although the Federal police force has controlled the area,many people are leaving the area.

Ayele Gefaw, Chairman of Geltbret and Kebica areas, told that the clash started when officials of Hmurobe Gelealo area of the Afar region, who were sacked from their positions, armed their people and ordered them toattack. The Chairman said that the people and the officials of the Region were angered by the failure of the government to solve the issue. Asked why the government was unable to resolve the problem, the Chairman said “This has been a puzzle to us too. If the government viewed all ethnicgroups equally and gave the appropriate leadership, it would have been resolved”. Dr. Shiferaw Teklemariam, Minister of Federal Affairs, said in his recent report to the Parliament that the conflicts between regions havebeen decreasing. Reports that has been verified, however, show that ethnic conflicts have been increasing in most parts of the Country.

The Commission's Deputy Chairperson, Erastus Mwencha, elaborated that peace and security as wellas social, economic and human development combined account for 55 percent of the budget; while institutional capacity building and communication account for 25 percent. Contributions by member-states are used by the pan-African bloc to fund its activities.

May 27, 2013: Ethiopia announced that the African Union (AU) will create an interim military rapid reaction force. The rapid reaction force would be available to respond to coups, large-scale human rights violations, rebellions and other crises. At the moment the AU is calling the force the African Capacity for Immediate Response to Crises force. The interim forcewill serve until the AU's African Standby Force becomes operational. SouthAfrica, Uganda and Ethiopia have agreed to provide military units to servein the force. This is actually an old idea. Since the 1960s there have been calls for a pan-African rapid response force. The recent trouble in the Central African Republic (CAR) spurred creation of the interim force.

Meantime, the African Union indicated that it will ask the International Criminal Court (ICC) to let Kenya prosecute the ICC cases against its newpresident, Uhuru Kenyatta, and his deputy, William Ruto. The ICC has charged both men with crimes against humanity. The crimes were committed in the bloody aftermath of Kenya's 2007 national election. Thisyear Kenyatta was elected president.

May 28, 2013: Grenade explosion injures many in Central Ethiopia'

ESAT News: Six people were injured when a grenade exploded in Sora Cafeteria, Gundomeskel town, Dera Woreda of Northern Shoa, Ethiopia. Sources in the town told ESAT that three of the victims have been critically injured and are being treated in Fiche Hospital while another oneis receiving treatment in a local health center. One of the injured is a policeman; another is a businessman while the other two are farmers.

Mesfin, the Head of the Wordea Security, said the cause of the explosion was personal disagreement between those involved. Meanwhile, after ESAT reported few months ago that an official of the same Woreda had forced his wife to perform humiliating acts on her husband's genitals and had also mischarged after being beaten by the butt of a riffle, governmentowned media have recently travelled to the area and also reported the incident by speaking with the victim. ESAT has learnt that the residents of the area and the victim had explained in detail what happened to the government journalists. However, the journalists that have been sent to the location under the order of the Minister of Government Communications, Bereket Simon, have not revealed their reports so far.

Security Head of the Woreda said that all the evidences on the suspect have been gathered and they are waiting for the court's verdict. The Headsaid the suspect committed the acts due to personal reasons. The suspectcommitted the acts after refusing to hand over his weapon. The victim hasbeen in hospital and is currently said to be in a stable condition.

May 29, 2013: The East African Inter-governmental Authority on Development (IGAD) recently decided to support the Somalia national government's denial of special autonomy for Jubaland in southern Somalia. However, the local Jubaland administration in Kismayo has takenthe position that if Somalia does not give it a special autonomous status, it may "cut ties" with the national government in Mogadishu and form a separate Jubaland state. As of May 15, the Jubaland administration has a president. His official title is president of the Jubaland State of Somalia.

The background story here is Kenya. Kenya has been working closely withthe tribes in Jubaland. Though the Kenyan government supports Somalia'snational government (Somali Federal Government), it appears that Kenyan security officials believe southern Somalia will be much more stable if granted autonomy. Critics of Kenya's intervention are now saying that all along the Kenyan government wanted to carve out an independent buffer state between Somalia and Kenya. The claim that Kenya wants an independent state is areach. Besides, Ethiopia does not like the idea of an independent state.

The claim that Kenya was a buffer zone is no news at all. There is even aname for it: the Jubaland project. The Kenyan government has said that its objective in southern Somalia is to stabilize the area. Kenya wants a peaceful border and that means it wants a stable, reliable neighbor. The Kenyan government wants to stop attacks by Somali Islamist extremists

(al Shabaab) in Kenya because the tribes flee across the border into Kenyan refugee camps. The southern Somalis want a high degree of localauthority (autonomy). Kenya wants the southern tribes to be able to police their own region, so Kenya wants the tribes to be satisfied with whatever post-Somali war political settlement is agreed to. That is one reason the Kenya Defense Forces (KDF, Kenyan Army) in Somalia have asked the African Union's AMISOM peacekeeping mission in Somalia to provide a political support unit to help settle disputes between the Jubaland administration and the Somali government in Mogadishu. Jubaland is also referred to as "the Jubba" and Azania. It has three sub- regions, Gedo, Middle Juba and Lower Juba. Jubaland is basically the areaalong the Somalia-Kenya border. It includes the port of Kismayo, Somaliasouth of the Juba River and a slice of the land just north and east of the Juba River. The Juba River flows south from the Ethiopian border; it enters the Indian Ocean near Kismayo. (Austin Bay)

In May, 2013: Ethiopia diverted the Blue Nile to begin building its largest dam project to date, the 6,000 MW Grand Ethiopia Renaissance Dam (GERD) – a move that angered Egypt, which fears its water supply will shrink over the many years it will take to fill the huge reservoir. "Ethiopia has reportedly neglected to formally consult with downstream Sudan and Egypt on the scheme, a decision which could further strain relations between the countries" Besides the tensions this huge project is causing politically, there is growing concern that the dam will not produce nearly as much power as it has been designed to." "While there are no known studies about the dam's impacts on the river's flow, filling such a huge reservoir (it will hold up to 67 billion cubic meters of water, and could takeup to seven years to reach capacity) will certainly impact Egypt, which relies almost totally on the Nile for its water supply. Development Today magazine reports that the Nile flow into Egypt could be cut by 25% duringthe filling period. Many fear the project could set off a water war in the region, and indeed, in mid-2013, tensions flared dramatically. Climate change could increase the project's many risks. The potential for conflict is probably the main reason international funders have shown no interest in supporting the project."

Two Chinese companies will build the rail line and the first segment is already under construction.

May 30, 2013: New Ethiopian party leaders have to carve their way'

At the ruling party congress in Bahir Dar in March no-one questioned the succession plan devised by Meles a decade before, but differences rumble under the surface. Any lingering fears that Ethiopia would suffer a bumpy period fol- lowing the death last August of Premier Meles Zenawi were putto rest during the ruling party congress in the Amhara Region's lakeside capital of Bahir Dar in late March. With more than 1,000 delegates in attendance, Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn was elected chairman ofthe Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF). But in an organisation known for its rigid culture of discipline and secrecy, the avalanche of criticism from the party's rank and file came as a surprise.

Inside and outside the $27m conference hall, delegates, retired EPRDF leaders and prominent businesspeople took the party hierarchy to task ona number of problems, the most serious of which, they said, was the leadership's lack of accountability.

Larger than life: Such criticism was virtually unknown during the 21-year reign of strongman Meles. Whether it is a sign of an impending political opening is, however, an entirely separate question. The party has pasted photoshopped images of Meles on the backs of buses and taxis, while state television and radio routinely adulate the late leader, taking the cult of personality to larger-than-life proportions. Back in Addis Ababa 10 daysafter the Bahir Dar meeting, the adulation was again officially endorsed bythe unveiling of the Meles Zenawi Foundation. Within the ruling party, the scramble to own Meles's legacy is being played out between senior apparatchiks and Meles's widow Azeb Mesfin. For now, the fierce sense of fidelity to the late premier's ambitions both for the party and for Ethiopia'sdevelopment path works well for the new leadership. Prime Minister Hailemariam is now seeking to consolidate his position. With two years to go before the next party convention and elections, Hailemariam has muchto do to shrug off any suggestions that he is an outsider to the establishment, a front for a party leadership led by a Tigrean elite that continues to dominate almost every sector of public life. It was notable that the EPRDF implemented its succession plan to the letter. Meles devised it a decade ago to allow civilian politicians to replace the combatants of the struggle against the Duerg.

In the cabinet and the party's executive committee, only a few of the warveterans who came to power in May 1991 remain. Observers are quick tonote, however, that this longer transition means that the incoming civilianpolitical elite is faced with carving out a space for itself away from the legacy of the struggle. For Hailemariam, the perception of his outsider status is enhanced by his ethnic and religious background. "Hailemariam is not from the northern Highlands, is not an Orthodox Christian, is in fact Pentecostalist, outside the mainstream of the Ethiopian ruling elite and is indeed the first leader in Ethiopian history, modern and ancient, not to have emerged from the Highlands," says a Western observer and long- time resident of Ethiopia. However, it seems fairly certain that Hailemariam, a former governor of the Southern Nations Nationalities and

People's Region, perhaps the country's most ethnically diverse state, will be unchallenged at the EPRDF's next congress in 2015. Source: The AfricaReport

May 31, 2013: Egyptian Protestors Attack Ethiopian Embassy in Cairo'

Dozens of Egyptians gathered outside the Ethiopian embassy in Cairo, in protest at the start of the construction of the Renaissance Dam, demanding the expulsion of the Ethiopian ambassador from Egypt. The demonstrators chanted slogans calling for the expulsion of the Ethiopian ambassador to their country, in protest at the start of the Ethiopian government to build a dam Renaissance, and begun converting the courseof the Blue Nile, also chanted slogans demanding the drop “rule wizard” inreference to the leader of the Muslim Brotherhood, which represents the ruling regime. The protestors chanted, “We are the source of the Nile Basin.” “After Ethiopia’s surprising decision, bilateral relations have now been put to the test,” “Any agreement between President Mohamed Morsi’s government and its Ethiopian counterpart will not be recognized, since Morsi has lost all legitimacy before the Egyptian people.” According to sources, Ethiopian Ambassador to Egypt, Mohammed Drirr, was not in the Embassy compound during the protest. The embassy staff prevented the protesters from burning the Ethiopian flag after one demonstrator attempted to down the flag. In a sudden press conference late afternoon tday, Ethiopian officials say the diversion of Abay to make way for construction of the dam in the river bed doesn’t in any way reduce the amount of water flowing to Egypt. Chief Executive Officer of Ethiopian electric power agency, Mihret Debebe explained those who claim the diversion has negative effect on the water flow of the river into downstream countries don’t have any scientific bases to prove their claim.Sources: Al jazeera, Ahram online and walta

The 135-year-old ABA is America’s most prominent legal association with over 400,000 members. The ABA will coordinate its activities with the Solidarity Movement for a New Ethiopia (SMNE).

May 31, 2013: An estimated 12,000 South Sudanese fled recent fighting in South Sudan’s Jonglei state and taken refuge in Ethiopia. Another 5,000have fled to Kenya. Meantime, the UN has raised the authorized strength (by 1,126 troops, roughly a battalion task force) of the UN Interim Security Force for Abyei (UNISFA) peacekeeping operation to 5,326 soldiers. The original authorized figure was 4,200 soldiers, 3,973 are currently in Abyei. A 227-man Ethiopian aviation unit is scheduled to arrive later this summer, which would bring the total to 4,200. The Ethiopian Army provides the combat soldiers for UNISFA and an Ethiopian Army general officer commands the peacekeeping operation. The additional 1,126 soldiers are expected to come from Ethiopia. Sudan and South Sudan both claim Abyei. The region is large, about 10,000 square kilometers, and it has oil reserves. The UN authorized the increase because tribal tensions are rising in the region. On May 4 Misseriya tribesmen murdered the paramount chief of the Dinka Ngok. The Dinka chief was traveling in a convoy under the protection of UNISFA peacekeepers. The Misseriya are an Arabized, semi-nomadic tribe and are pro-Sudan (northern Sudan, Khartoum government). Until forced to flee during the long civil war, the Dinka Ngok were the dominant tribe in the area. The Dinka Ngok favors South Sudan. Two Ethiopian soldiers were also killed in the May 4 incident. The peacekeepers killed 17 Misseriya gunmen. Several Dinka Ngok organizations have criticized UNISFA's failure to protect civilians. One group has even called for the withdrawal ofthe peacekeeping force.

May 31, 2013: Nineteen police officers from Dangela area, Northern Central Ethiopia, have disappeared carrying their weapons, a nine month evaluation report by the Amhara Region police showed. Puzzled by the disappearance of the officers, the government has started an evaluation inthe Zone. It was reported that the government has been planning to remove officials of the Region that it considers are supportive of armed opposition groups. According to inside sources, the police officers have joined a new underground armed force that is active in the Jawi Desert of Awi Zone. The armed group, broadening its activities, has been attacking government targets. Officials of the Zone were unavailable to comment ofthe reports.

May 31, 2013: Citizens say "frustrated by cost of living"

Data and reports gathered by ESAT's reporters from various regions of Ethiopia such as Addis Abeba, Southern Ethiopia, and Oromia regions, indicate that Ethiopians living at the lower income level are living in and suffering from extreme poverty. An elderly man, engaged in embroidery,in the Gediyo Zone of Southern Ethiopia, has said to ESAT "we live a subsistence life. It is a very difficult time" and his wife said "We are onlyunder the care of the Lord".

A housewife engaged in the business of Cabbage trade in Arsi Zone, Oromia Region sarcastically said "It is sufficient with God" when asked about the cost of living in the Country. Similarly, a father of nine childrenhas said that he has allotted all his land for his children and that the fateof the family has become "poverty". Another middle aged man said that he has moved to the city hoping to find job but ended up living in the streets. ESATs' reporters said that most Ethiopians were hesitant or afraidto speak on the record; however, it was possible to tell about their life from their looks. Source: ESAT News

June 1, 2013: Ethiopia to sign mobile network deals with ZTE, Huawei'

ADDIS ABABA (Reuters) - Ethiopia will sign agreements with China's ZTE Corp and Huawei Technologies Co Ltd in a "few weeks" to expand its mobile phone infrastructure and double subscribers to 40 million, a seniorEthiopian official said. ZTE Corp, China's second-largest telecoms equipment maker, has already been involved in developing phone and internet services in the Horn of Africa nation for several years. Africa's rapidly expanding telecoms industry has come to symbolize the continent's economic growth, with subscribers across the continent totaling almost 650 million last year, up from just 25 million in 2001, according to the World Bank. Mobile banking is expected to grow into a $22 billion industry across Africa by 2015 on the back of the soaring useof cellphones and growing demand for financial services, according to consultancy Juniper Research.

June 2, 2013: 10,000 Ethiopian political demonstrators marched in the capital, Addis Ababa. Most of the demonstrators were from opposition political parties. The demonstrators demanded that the government respect the constitution. They also demanded that the government releasepolitical prisoners. Authorities said it was the largest anti-government demonstration held in the country since the 2005 election. Street violencein that disputed election left over 200 people dead. The demonstrators accused the government of suppressing dissent. Ethiopia's parliament has 547 members. Only one current member of parliament represents an opposition party.

News updates: Thousands hold demonstration for the release of politicaldetainees'

Associated Press: ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia — Thousands of Ethiopian demonstrators took to the streets of the capital demanding the immediaterelease of jailed journalists and activists in a rare show of public opposition to the ruling party which maintains strict control over the East African nation. Protesters marched Sunday along major streets in the capital, Addis Ababa, shouting "We need freedom," and "We need justice."The peaceful rally was the first major demonstration since 2005 post- election unrest when security forces killed hundreds of protesters.

Sunday's protest is the first show of disapproval against Prime MinisterHailemariam Desalegn's government. Hailemariam succeeded former Prime Minister Meles Zenawi who died August 20, 2012.

In response to this opportunity, an astounding number of Ethiopians cameout—estimated at hundred of thousands—all to show their support for change. No one expected such a response, even the leaders of the rally;

but it serves as an important revelation to all to the deep thirst for freedom, justice, peace and opportunity that is within the hearts and minds of Ethiopians. That same thirst has united Ethiopians of different ethnicities, religions, genders, regions, socio-economic levels and politicalalliances in their call for change. It was highly commended the ruling party for allowing the rally to proceed without interference. Even though freedom of assembly is allowed under the Ethiopian Constitution; since May 2005, Ethiopians have been denied this right. For the first time in eight years, after some negotiation with the Semayawi (Blue) party's leadership to change the date, the ruling-EPRDF government agreed to provide the permit that allowed the Ethiopian people the right to express their beliefs without arrests, brutality or death. June 3, 2013: Minister told AFP up to 4,000 people joined Sunday'sdemonstration'

According to AFP, Bereket Simon told to the reporter there were only 4,000 people on Sunday's demonstration. Read full report of AFP as follows. AFP – Ethiopia opposition activists vowed Monday to press ahead with demonstrations calling for government reforms and the release of political prisoners, a day after thousands took part in a rare display of public protest. Peaceful demonstrations were organised by the newly- formed Blue Party opposition group, which called on the government to release journalists and politicians jailed under a controversial terrorism law and urged broad government reform. "We called the demonstration toask for the reform of policy issues for the high cost of living, high rate of youth unemployment and systematic corruption," Semayawi (Blue) Party leader Yilkal Getnet told AFP.

The Semayawi (Blue) Party has asked the government to respond to its demands within three months and has pledged to hold further demonstrations if its calls are not answered. "If the government does notgive a satisfactory answer for these questions, we will continue our protest peacefully in the coming months," Yilkal added. He said the groupalso called for "release of political prisoners… and journalists, the government should respect the right to expression". Journalists, opposition members and religious leaders have been jailed under Ethiopia's 2009 anti-terrorism legislation, which rights groups say is usedby the government to stifle peaceful dissent. Yilkal said demonstrators were also protesting at what they called the forced displacement of ethnicgroups for large scale farming projects in the country.

Ethiopia has been accused by US-based watchdog Human Rights Watch offorcibly relocating communities in order to free up land for foreign investment, a charge the government denies. Sunday's protests were the largest in the country since post-election violence in 2005, in which 200 people were killed and hundreds more arrested. They were the first time major protests have been held in the country since Ethiopia's former prime minister Meles Zenawi died in August 2012. Government spokesman Bereket Simon said up to 4,000 people joined Sunday's demonstration, while some observers put the number at 10,000. Bereket called the protests "peaceful" and said no arrests had been made. The Blue (Semayawi) Party was formed in January 2012 and claims to have a20,000-strong membership. Opposition politics remain limited in Ethiopia.Only one chair of Ethiopia's 547-seat parliament is occupied by an opposition member, while the ruling Ethiopian People's Revolution Democratic Front party holds all other seats. June 3, 2013: The Kenyan military will acquire unmanned aerial aircraft (UAVs) for use in surveillance missions. The military said that it has sought advice and assistance from both the U.S. and Japan. The military will use the drones to support military missions, but the government will also employ them in a variety of paramilitary security missions. One of thekey UAV missions is monitoring light weapons smuggling. The national police also need help in monitoring tribal raiders who cross Kenya's northern border from South Sudan, Ethiopia, and Somalia. Cattle raids continue to be a major problem in northern Kenya. The UAVs can also be used for game preserve protection, to monitor wild animal herds and to look for poachers.

June 3, 2013: TPLF accuses Blue Party on Day One'

"What is funny about TPLF's tactic is that after allowing the demonstrationto be held so that it would deceptively make them look "democratic," theycome back and accuse the opposition of all sorts of crimes. The ruling party knows what kind of slogans the protesters would chant. Obviously, itis about political repression. The regime knows that protesters would call for the release of political prisoners and for the regime to stop interfering in religious affairs. And here we go: The regime said on its own TV that the Blue Party is guilty of: Calling for the release of political prisoners which, it said, are accused of terrorism and their case is still pending courtdecisions. Defaming the regime as if the regime is interfering in the religious affairs.

Such charges were, no matter how funny they look, made by Communications Minister Shimelis Kemal who appeared on the same day on ETV, the mouthpiece of the regime. Shimelis said the government had taken corrective measures against evictions of farmers before the protesters took to the streets and shouted about it. He said this was nothing else but defaming his government. But it is widely known the forceful eviction is still continuing in different parts of Ethiopia. Much to itscredit, however, ETV reported one fact: The Blue Party has promised to return to the streets within three months. If they people rise up for their rights, TPLF knows it is the end of its brutal rule, and hence Shimelis Kemal's warning via ETV. Thanks to technology, pictures and video clips ofthe protest rally were instantly beamed across Social Media networks and websites, despite TPLF's huge appetite to hide and bury the truth. TPLF cannot arrest the power of technology and the Ethiopian people's quest fordemocracy and justice. It is simply impossible. Source: EM

June 3, 2013: NEWS/ECONOMY Metec to buy 10 industries from Asia.

Metal and Engineering Corporation (MetEc), a state-owned enterprise is inthe process of acquiring ten metal and metal-related industries from Asia.The corporation, which is involved in several mega governmental projects,is establishing large metal industries in the country, developing a range ofplants in the mechanical sector, to help boost the country's development. Sources at the corporation told Capital that MetEc is scheduled to establish several metal industries that shall feed major metal projects the corporation is engaged in. The corporation is currently in the process of purchasing 10 metal and metal-related industries already set up abroad and will arrange for their transfer to Ethiopia in order to set them up in the different regions in the country. According to these sources, corporation officials have been negotiating and making deals for nearly a year to buy up the above-mentioned industries in Asia for relocation. And even though the deals haven't been finalised yet, it was indicated that MetEc plans to buy and relocate ten industries from China and India.

According to experts, while these industries have been manufacturing products for the past several years in their respective countries, the corporation made the decision to purchase and transfer them here, because it would be less costly than establishing similar new industries. Our sources explained that the metal factories included in the purchase shall mainly be engaged in the production of metal spare parts, bolts and nuts and the likes. MetEc is scheduled to undertake crucial projects in the coming years as part of the five-year Growth and Transformation Plan (GTP) and has secured a huge budget to expand its capacity in terms of quality and quantity of production. The corporation has hence become oneof the major government corporations spending billions of birr on differentnew and expansion projects.

Defense's MetEC gives delicious 1st class contract to MIDROC, Ethiopia's tyre monopoly 26 June. When the newly-invigorated parliament after the death of Meles Zenawi pointed out the weaknesses and bad practices of the Ethiopian Investments and Privatization Agency, its Director-General Beyene Gebremeskel, whose agency has been known as MIDORC's buddy,was the first to protest, as reported by the Reporter. Whose interests should the country serve, some powerful politicians or that of corporate suck up? It is time Ethiopia stopped to carefully think how it should best serve its interests as a nation and the interests of its people! It is time to shake off corrupt senior officials facilitating from within corrupt practices that with every passing year is pulling down Ethiopia into becoming a failed state! Signed market and technical assistance agreement with MetEC Horizon Addis Tyre is to produce 22 different sizes tyres for the various vehicles the Metal and Engineering Corporation (MetEC) produces.Horizon Addis, the sole manufacturer of tyres in the country, hasbeen supplying a limited amount of tyres for the market and has not beenable to cope with the public's demand in the last 40 years. This company has today a new market and will also receive technical assistance from its latest customer, according to the cooperation agreement it signed with MetEC on June 18. …Horizon is planning to produce tyres in 22 different sizes in the current fiscal year. June 3, 2013: The ruling-EPRDF going bankrupt due to few readerships:Document'

The ruling Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) has said that it was going bankrupt due to lack of readership of its Party Organ newspapers and magazines. Although the Front attempted to change the contents of its Abiyotawi Democracy newspaper and Addis Raeye magazine, both the leadership and members are not willing to read.Abiyotawi Democracy (Revolutionary Democracy organ) is mainly produced for farmers and those with primary education while Addis Raeye is prepared for members with advanced education. This was revealed in a document that ANDM, member party of the EPRDF, prepared for its seniorand mid level leadership titled "the evaluations of the 10th Organizational Congress: Decisions and Future Directions". The 43 page document explains the problems that both ANDM and EPRDF have faced.

The document states that many members join the ruling party with the aim of finding jobs and other benefits but as they fail to succeed in that, they leave the party. Although many members have been recruited in therural areas, they are only good at helping themselves than leading, supporting and empowering others. In cities, the document states, very few people working in small and micro business, the civil service and educational institutions have been recruited and those few have many limitations in their allegiances.

It stated that although Abiyotawi Democracy (Revolutionary Democracyorgan) offers analytical articles few members pay attention to it, feel unhappy to purchase copies and deliberate on them. Similarly, the report said little attention has been given to the biannual magazine, Addis Raeye.The main problem, the report said, is within “the leadership”. Problems in distribution, participation and quality were mentioned as the shortcomingsof the magazine. The document said that the leadership and members of the Front seriously lack theoretical, reading culture, political and ideological knowledge. According to the report, poor leadership is the basic cause of poverty, bad governance and social problems in the Amhara region particularly.

June 4, 2013: Ethiopia - Opposition threatens more protests’

Semayawi (Blue) Party an Ethiopian opposition party has said it will continue protesting unless its demands are met. The statement came a day after thousands answered Blue Party leader Yilkal Getnet's call to taketo the streets in Addis Ababa. Sunday’s demonstration was the largest in Ethiopia since the election of May, 2005. Was it a success?

Updates - Public pleased with Blue Party’s protest event': Ethiopians insideand outside of the Country are expressing their delight at the successful opposition protest organized by Semayawi (Blue) Party last Sunday on June 2, 2013 in Addis Abeba. ESAT’s audiences have been calling from different parts of the world regarding Sunday’s opposition rally to express their pleasure. A commentator told ESAT “The Party organized a brief protest that showed us a glimmer of hope”. A woman caller said that she had felt democracy was coming “bit by bit”. Another audience said the protest was very successful and said the date has “broken the fear”.

In a related development, officials of Blue Party and legal experts have expressed their disproval of the warnings of government officials that came after the protest. Redwan Hussien, EPRDF’s Head of Secretariat andShimeles Kemal, Deputy Minister of Government Communication Affairs accused the Party of interfering and mixing religion and politics and violating the Constitution. Speaking to ESAT, Engineer Yilkal Getent, Chairman of Blue Party, Dr. Yacob Hailemariam, lawyer and legal scholar,and Temam Ababulgu, lawyer of the Muslim Arbitration Committee, refuted the statements of the government officials and explained that there has been no legal or constitutional breach.

June 4, 2013: A senior aide of Egypt’s President Mohamed Morsi has apologized for one of the most public diplomatic and political mistakes committed by anyone in recent years. The aide neglected to tell politiciansmeeting with President Mohammed Morsi to discuss Ethiopia’s Blue Nile River dam projects that the meeting was being broadcast live on state television. At the meeting several participants, unaware that the world was watching and listening, openly suggested ways for Egypt to sabotage Ethiopia’s dams, in particular the $4.2 billion Grand Ethiopian RenaissanceDam (GERD). The GERD is about 15 kilometers from the Ethiopia-Sudan border. The president and the politicians were discussing a report by thetripartite Egypt-Sudan-Ethiopia commission analyzing the impact of Ethiopia's dam project and its decision to divert the Blue Nile River. Ethiopia has already partially diverted the Blue Nile at the site of the GERD. One political leader, Yunis Makhyun, a member of the Islamist fundamentalist Nur Party, called the GERD a strategic threat to Egypt. He thought the Egyptian government should consider supporting an Ethiopianrebel group, in order to pressure the Ethiopian government. Ayman Nour, a member of the liberal-secular Ghad Party, suggested Egypt buy or circulate rumors that it will buy new military aircraft (implying striker aircraft that could hit the dam). He speculated that this would put politicalpressure on Ethiopia. He also said that Egyptian political, military, and intelligence personnel might be sent to Ethiopia to “intervene” in Ethiopiandomestic politics. Egypt claims 87 percent of the Nile River’s water. The legal basis of this claim is a 1929 colonial-era agreement. In 1959 the Gamal Abdel Nasser government reiterated this claim. Egypt claims the right to veto upstream river projects. Ethiopia says it was not a party to the 1929 agreement. Since the public vetting of these belligerent options, the Egyptian government has stated that none of the recommendations, suggestions, or speculations by the political leaders at the meeting are Egyptian government policy. June 5, 2013: After opposition protest, Gov’t evaluates party officials'

ESAT News: Following Blue Party’s successful opposition protest against the government on June 2, 2013, the EPRDF government has gathered itsmiddle ranking officials and propaganda officers to begin an evaluation.

Members of the Front have been accused for being lured by the propaganda of “anti peace elements” and not giving full attention to the Front’s ideologies, which are weakening the Front internally. Most leaders of the Front were asked to self criticize. The evaluation is being conductedin Regional cities. “Let alone to idle talk, EPRDF won’t bow down to arms”the officials said, warning the middle level officials to detach themselves from the “propagandas of anti-peace elements”.

One of the participants of the evaluation told ESAT “I have never seen such an evaluation in the history of our Front. EPRDF has been in a mess since the opposition protest held on Sunday. Our leaders are very angeredand are giving us a hard time”. Meanwhile, a team led by the veteran of the Front, Addisu Legese, is gathering public opinion from Southern Ethiopia. Addisu met with over 160 people in Decha Woreda to speak about good governance and other issues. Some youth, who requested to attend the meeting, have reportedly been denied entry.

June 5, 2013" Ethiopian official labels Egyptian attack proposals over newNile River dam ‘day dreaming’

AP - ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia — Updates - Egyptian officials tried to cool tensions with Ethiopia Wednesday over the new Nile River dam project by highlighting its “neighborliness” as the Ethiopian prime minister’s spokesman insisted that nothing would stop the dam from being completed upstream from Egypt, which is wholly dependent on Nile River water. Egypt fears a diminished flow from Africa’s largest dam and hydropower station but Egyptian President Mohammed Morsi said Egypt respects Ethiopia and will not engage in any aggressive acts against the East African nation. Egyptian politicians had suggested the country shouldsabotage the project in a meeting with the president Monday. Getachew Reda, a spokesman for Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn, said late Tuesday that Egyptian leaders in the past have unsuccessfully tried to destabilize Ethiopia. Ethiopia a week ago started diverting the flowof the Nile toward the $4.2 billion hydroelectric plant dubbed the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam. The project is about 20 percent complete. “The Renaissance Dam is here to stay. It is advisable for all actors of the political establishment in Egypt to come to terms with this reality,” Getachew said in an interview. Since Ethiopia announced it was going to build the dam in March 2011, it has insisted the water flow to Sudan and Egypt will not be affected. It has initiated a tripartite Egypt-Sudan- Ethiopia experts panel to study the impact of the dam.

The 10-man panel, which includes four international experts, submitted itsreport to the countries last weekend. Ethiopia’s Ministry of Water and Energy said the report concluded the dam “will not significantly affect” either Sudan or Egypt. Egyptian political leaders on Monday met Morsi to discuss the report. Apparently unaware their discussion was being televised live, some of them proposed hostile acts including aiding rebels inside Ethiopia and destroying the dam itself. Ethiopian officials long have accused Egypt of backing anti-government rebels in Ethiopia. More than a dozen rebel groups exist in the East African nation, some wanting more autonomy, others a separate state. “There are on the one hand people who still think that they can turn the clock back on Ethiopia’s developmentendeavors including of course the construction of the Renaissance Dam,” said Getachew. “Second you have people like President Mohammed Morsi,who according to the reports, said to have stressed that there is no point in trying to force Ethiopians, but the best solution would be to engage to Ethiopians.” Experts estimate that already water-starved Egypt could lose as much as 20 percent of its water in the three to five years that it would take to fill the massive reservoir. Ethiopia diverted the course of the Blue Nile to make way for ongoing dam construction. The Blue Nile has its source in the Ethiopian mountains and is responsible for 85 percent of thewater that reaches Egypt. The live transmission of the politicians’ comments has kicked off an uproar in Egypt’s independent media, with many government critics saying that carrying the meeting live on TV has shown the extent of Morsi’s mismanagement of a national security issue.

June 5, 2013: Ethiopia: Free to protest - The Economist'

Commentary: political protest graced the streets of Ethiopia's otherwise regimented capital, Addis Ababa, on June 2nd. Demonstrators marched peacefully through the city, many carrying pictures of imprisoned loved ones. Later they gathered on Churchill Avenue, the capital's main thoroughfare, where they were told that a new struggle had begun. YilekalGetnet, the chairmant of the opposition Semayawi (Blue) party, demanded the release of political prisoners and railed against unemployment, inflation and corruption. Activists claim that as many as 10,000 people attended; government officials say the number was nearer 4,000. Whatever the true figure, it was the biggest demonstration in Ethiopia since 2005, when protests amid claims of election rigging were violently suppressed, leaving nearly 200 unarmed protesters dead and thousands arrested.

Over subsequent years the political opposition was eviscerated. Its leaderswere jailed or went into exile, the media were muzzled and the ruling Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) acquired millions of new members. At the next election, in 2010, the party officiallygot more than 99% of the seats in parliament. By the time he died last year, Meles Zenawi, who had been prime minister since 1995, had createda single-party state in all but name. Little suggests that his system of "authoritarian development", which got the economy to grow faster at theexpense of individual freedom, is now about to unravel.

Opposition numbers at the protest were swollen by Ethiopian Muslims whoaccuse the government of meddling in religious affairs, but were still modest compared with the million-strong crowds of eight years ago. That may explain the government's muted reaction. It granted protesters permission to march, but with a week's delay to ensure they did not embarrass the new prime minister, Hailemariam Desalegn, as he played host to the African Union summit. The police did not harass demonstrators. Fears that the post-Meles transition would presage instability have so far not been borne out. But any suggestion that the protest marks a sea-change in the country's politics may be premature.

June 6, 2013: Four of those detained in relation to the Bahir Darmassacre, released'

ESAT News: Four of the 22 members of the Federal Police Force detained in relation to the massacre of 17 civilians by a member of the Force called Constable Fekadu Nasha in Bahir Dar city last month, have been released while five were fired from the Force. Two other officers are under strict monitoring while nine are under investigation at Hidar 11 Police Station. The four have been released after a police officer testified that she had deployed the four to another location on the date that the massacre took place. Residents of the City are accusing the government of not taking proper measures. Previously, the residents attempted to stage protest butwere cut short due to interference by the police.

June 6, 2013: Egypt ups the status quo-ante on Nile dispute with Ethiopia'

CAIRO, June 6 (UPI) -- Egypt's dispute with Ethiopia over the Nile River has gotten sharper with calls by political leaders for direct action to stop Addis Ababa from building a massive dam Cairo says will cut off water onwhich the Land of the Pharaohs depends for survival. An independent panel of experts reported Ethiopia's $4.7 billion Grand Renaissance Dam on the Blue Nile will not significantly affect Egypt and neighboring Sudan.

June 6, 2013: Ethiopian gov't tortures 15 suspected of links with rebels'

Tegene Sisay, Chairman of the Tach Armacheh, Northern Gonder Branch of the opposition Unity for Democracy and Justice (UDJ) and 15 other people have been detained and tortured by Ethiopian authorities on suspicion of links with rebel groups active in the region. According to the sister of the Head, Yenegusie Sisay, her brother was left hanging upside down for hours; irons have been inserted between his fingers, and due to severe beating his fingers and legs were paralyzed. When he was weakened, the police took him to hospital. Although he had an appointment last week, he did not appear in court as he did not recover from his wounds. Deputy Inspector Woretaw Alem, the Chief of the Woreda Police, said to ESAT "Negusie was not tortured. You can come andconfirm this. I cannot tell you more than this." Mulat Fiseha, UDJ's Northern Gonder Chair, said that although the Head was detained with eight other people on suspicion of links with armed groups, the Party believes that he is only a member of UDJ. Similarly, ESAT has learnt that 7 people have been taken to an undisclosed location from the Soreka City,Kafora Wordea of Northern Gonder last week.

June 7, 2013: Ethiopia summons Egypt's ambassador over Nile damattack proposals'

Ethiopia's Ministry of Foreign Affairs said it is demanding an official explanation from Egypt after comments from politicians suggesting Egyptattack or sabotage a Nile River dam Ethiopia is building. Dina Mufti, a spokesman for the ministry, said that Egypt's ambassador to Ethiopia hasbeen summoned to explain the "hostile remarks." The spokesman said Ethiopia is awaiting a response.

June 7, 2013: Ethiopia says it won't bow to Egyptian pressure over Niledam'

By Aaron Maasho - ADDIS ABABA (Reuters) - Updates - Ethiopia's construction of a dam on a tributary of the Nile is not open to negotiation, the Addis Ababa government said on Friday, as a confrontation with Egyptover the project escalated. The Cairo government said this week it would demand the project be halted, after its southern neighbor began diverting a stretch of the river to make way for the $4.7 billion dam that will become Africa's biggest hydropower plant. Ethiopia said it had summoned Egypt's ambassador to explain comments by politicians in Cairo advising Egyptian President Mohamed Mursi to take hostile action to halt the building of the dam. A spokesman for Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn said Cairo's position on the dam was unclear and its concerns were often not based on science. "In any case, demanding a halt is simply a non-starter. It's not subject to negotiation," spokesman Getachew Reda told Reuters. Countries that share the Nile have argued over the use of its waters for decades, repeatedly raising fears that the disputes could eventually boil over into war. Ethiopia has set out plans to invest more than $12 billion in harnessing the rivers that run through its rugged highlands and to become Africa's leading power exporter. Now 21 percent complete, the Grand Renaissance Dam will eventually have a 6000 megawatt (MW) capacity and is central to Ethiopia's plans to becomeAfrica's leading exporter of power.

Cairo argues that Ethiopia has not properly considered the dam's impact on the river, saying that a report put together by experts from Egypt, Sudan and Ethiopia is inadequate. The Cairo government suffered embarrassment on Monday when senior Egyptian politicians called in to discuss the crisis were apparently unaware their meeting was being broadcast live on television. One suggested spreading false rumors that Egypt was building up its air power. Another, Younis Makhyoun, leader ofa Salafi Islamist party, was filmed saying Egypt should back rebels in Ethiopia or, as a last resort, destroy the dam. "Whether sabotage will be on menu, that remains to be seen," Getachew said, adding that past attempts by Egypt under former president Hosni Mubarak to destabilize Ethiopia through support to insurgents had failed. "Destabilizing Ethiopianever worked even when we were at our weakest position in the past," Getachew said. "We are in a far better position to avoid any negative impacts that may come from Egypt or any another country." Even so, Getachew rejected the possibility of conflict and said he hoped Mursi would "be on the side of reason". (Editing by Richard Lough and Andrew Roche)

Updates: Ethiopia rejected Egyptian demands that it cease construction ofits Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam (GERD) project on the Blue Nile River. The government said that Egypt’s complaints about the dam were not based on scientific evidence. Ethiopia also contended that Egypt lacks a coherent policy regarding Nile River water rights. A government spokesman accused the former Egyptian government led by Hosni Mubarak of supporting Ethiopian rebel groups and claimed that Mubarak'sattempts to destabilize Ethiopia had failed.

June 7, 2013: Private medical students on strike'

ESAT News - Over 5000 students of 14 private medical colleges have continued their strike and decided to continue their protest until the government gives them a solution. Although the student's representative, Iyasu Kumisa, has been in discussion with officials of the government, no agreement has been reached and the students have decided to continue with their strike. The officials from the Ministry of education have admittedthat the problem was caused form their side but advised the students to continue with their studies instead of attempting to "come to blows with a big wall". It was reported that the government's new regulation on ClinicalNursing students, which would charge them much, has been opposed by many students. Our efforts to speak to government officials on the matterhave been unsuccessful.

June 7, 2013: Ogaden Refugees Fleeing Government Persecution: VoicesFrom Dadaab'

By Graham Peebles - The Ethiopian military and paramilitary forces, operating in the Ogaden region of Ethiopia, are, it is alleged, carrying out extra judicial killings and gang rapes; falsely arresting and torturing innocent civilians; looting and destroying villages and crops in a systematic attempt to terrify the people. This is the consistent message coming out of the region and from those who have fled persecution and are now in the world's largest refugee camp, in Dadaab, Kenya. It is a message of government brutality and collective suffering taking place not only in the Ogaden but in a number of areas of Ethiopia, including the Amhara region, Gambella, Oromia and the Omo valley. Regime brutality that Genocide Watch (GW) consider "to have already reached Stage 7 (of 8), genocide massacres, against many of its peoples, including the Anuak,Ogadeni, Oromo, and Omo tribes". They call on the EPRDF regime to "adhere to it's own constitution and allow its provinces the legal autonomythey are guaranteed."

Around five million people live in the Ogaden or Somali region of Ethiopia. Predominantly ethnic Somali's, mostly pastoralists, they live inwhat is one of the least developed corners of the world. Ravaged by drought and famine, the region has been the battleground for violent disputes between Ethiopia and Somalia for generations. The Ogaden

National Liberation Front (ONLF), claim the people of the region want self-determination from Ethiopia, a right they have been fighting for since theirformation in 1984. A right enshrined in the 19th Century agreement (enacted in 1948) with Britain, when sovereignty and control of the region was passed to Ethiopia. A crucial proviso, successive Ethiopian governments have conveniently ignored. With the international media banned by the Ethiopian government since 2007 and with an economic and aid embargo being enforced the region is totally isolated, making gathering information about the situation within the five affected districts difficult. I recently spent a week in Dadaab where I met dozens of refugees from the Ogaden; men, women and children who repeatedly relayed accounts of murder, rape, torture and intimidation at the hands ofgovernment forces. Accounts that if true, – and we have no reason to doubt them, confirm reports from, among others – Human Rights Watch, Amnesty International and Genocide Watch – who make clear their view, that the Ethiopian government has "initiated a genocidal campaign againstthe Ogaden Somali population", constituting "war crimes and crimes against humanity".

State terrorism

The people, victims of terrible abuse, carry with them the scars, often physical, always psychological, of their horrific ordeal. Listening to their stories and the testimonies of former Liyuu personnel, a clear picture of the systematic approach being employed by the Ethiopian military and Liyuu Police operating within the Ogaden emerges. Arbitrary killings, rape,torture, and destruction of property are the unimaginative preferred tools of terror, 'use the penis as a weapon against the women' the men are told, burn villagers homes and steal their cattle, confiscate humanitarian aid-including food, and create an intolerable fear ridden environment. Menjoining the Ethiopian military and Liyuu Police, like 25 year old Abdi who arrived in Dadaab in January 2013 and like many was forcibly recruited, are told, "there is no court that can control you, that we were free from the law, enjoy your freedom, they told us." The methodology of occupation, including extra judicial killing, is made clear, "we were told to rape the young women… When we went into the rural areas, we were 300men. When we saw a young mother with children aged from one years oldto five years old, we would rape her."

Soldiers that commit many rapes, murders and robberies, Abdi tells us, are "rewarded and praised. They were given bonuses of around 5000 ETB($250), in addition to the salary that was 2000 ($100) ETB a month." Women, like 27-year-old Rohar, tell of arbitrary arrests and torture.

Imprisoned with her husband when she was "in the ninth month of pregnancy. We were made to walk for three days and three nights before a bus collected us and drove us for one more day/night to Jijiga." Detained for two years without charge in Jail Ogaden in Jijiga, Rohar, as most detainees are, was accused of supporting the ONLF and "repeatedly tortured from the very beginning even though I was pregnant. They wouldtie a rope around the branch of a tree and a noose around my neck, then they would pull on the rope to strangle me. The evidence is still on my body – (she shows me a terrible burn scar on her neck)."

time she reports being “raped by groups of soldiers. It used to happen around midnight. I can only remember the first three men who raped me.They would take me out and leave the child/baby in the room with the other women, and bring me back in the early morning.” Rohar was released when she was no more use to the soldiers after becoming unwellwith abdominal pains, caused, she believes, by the repeated rapes. This account, from beginning to end is typical of many women’s experiences.

A divisional commander, now in Dadaab, related how during their three- month training in the Liyuu they were shown demonstrations in “how to rape a woman, and how to break a virgin”. They are carrying out atrocities in the region in order, “to make the people afraid and to place them under the control of the Ethiopian military, and fundamentally “because there is oil in the region and the government wants the oil for themselves. The military is there to make the people fearful so they won’t support the ONLF.” Back in the late 19th century, when the region was under British control, oil was suspected to be present in the region, in 1936 under the Italian occupation geological mapping of the Ogaden Basinbegan by the Italian oil company AGIP. Their records were later used by other companies in early studies of the region and in the early 1940’s oil exploration in the Ogaden basin began.

In 1972 the American company Tenneco drilled a series of wells and foundoil and gas. These discoveries mean the region, now desperately poor, is potentially the richest area of the country. In 1975 in the wake of the Ethiopian revolution, the company stopped operations and the military junta expelled all foreign companies. In the past fifty years or so it is estimated that 46 wells have been drilled searching for the black gold. It would appear the Ethiopian government sees the natural resources of the Ogaden as another party asset to add to its burgeoning portfolio. People living within 100 km of oil exploration sites have been displaced, some GWtell us are herded into internally displaced camps, whilst others are simplymade homeless. Sharing the view of the Liyuu recruit, the ONLF believes the Ethiopian military intends to secure the resources for the government and exclude local people. The Africa Faith and Justice Network confirms this view, saying: “With the discovery of petroleum leading to exploration missions by foreign companies, the government’s motives [in the region] are questionable.”

Donor neglect and self-interest

Why, In the face of such blatant state criminality, do donor countries – America, Britain and the European Union, who provide between a third and a half of Ethiopia’s federal budget, remain silent, this the common- sense question, repeatedly asked by victims of abuse. Ethiopia is of coursea key strategic ally of America and the west in their fight against extreme Islamic groups, the US has military bases in Ethiopia from where it launches its unmanned drones into Somalia and Yemen. Add to this the potential oil bonanza in the Ogaden, and indeed elsewhere in the country,and a toxic cocktail of mixed motives and self-interest starts to ferment. The EPRDF government, under the premiership of Mr. Hailemariam Desalegn, when confronted with accounts of military criminality issues blanket denials and accuses groups, such as HRW, of political bias and misinformation. Duplicitous and disingenuous, the regime, which owns most of the media in Ethiopia, seeks to control the flow of information within and without the country, and hide the atrocities being committed by the military and Liyuu to innocent civilians in the Ogaden and indeed elsewhere. If the government has nothing to hide Mr. Desalegn then openup the region to humanitarian aid groups and allow journalists unrestricted access. Peace is the number one priority in the Ogaden and for humanity more broadly, and all measures to remove the obstacles to its realization should be made by those working for the people of the region. Discussions held in Nairobi in September 2012 broke down when the ONLF refused to accept the condition of constitutional recognition asked of them by the government team. This was unfortunate and to my mind ill judged, what should be insisted upon however, is that both the military/Liyuu and the ONLF lay down their arms and agree an unconditional ceasefire. It is hard to see how one can negotiate a long term solution whilst innocent men are being tortured, women raped, children terrified and homes destroyed. (Source Eurasiareview.com)

June 7, 2013: Blue Party urges gov't to responded to its demands within 3months'

ESAT News - Semayawi (Blue) Party, on a press release sent out to the media and the public on June 6, 2013, urged the government to respond to the four main demands of the Party than present baseless accusations.The Party said the representative of the ruling who said "Blue Party, whose agenda has been religious extremism, has been exposed in today'smarch" is a baseless accusation. The officials of the ruling party have not mentioned anything that links the programs or activities of our Party with "terrorism". "It is a legally registered Party and has called the rally using its legally guaranteed rights. Therefore, labeling the Party as such is far from the aims and spirits of the rally" the statement said. Blue Party said the ruling Party did deem the rights questions of Ethiopian Muslims negatively and is categorizing all those that ask for their rights as "terrorists". The Party said that it considers "the ruling EPRDF does not take Ethiopian Muslims as Ethiopians". Urging the ruling party and the government to recognize that Ethiopian Muslims do have the constitutional right to demand their rights together with their compatriots,Blue Party said that it will not be detracted from its peaceful journey but vowed to continue its struggle unless the government responds to the demands of the public within three months.

June 8, 2013: Residents of the Somali seaport of Kismayo reported that amajor firefight occurred between the Ras Kamboni militia and a local militia. The Ras Kamboni militia is an ally of the Kenyan Defense Forces (Kenya Army) which are still the primary peacekeeping force in Kismayo.The Ras Kamboni are loyal to Ahmed Madobe who recently declared himself president of southern Jubaland. The Somali government is concerned that Madobe will turn Jubaland into a semi-autonomous state.

June 9, 2013: Egypt rejected Ethiopia's rejection of the Egyptian demandthat Ethiopia cease construction of its major Blue Nile dam projects. The government of Egypt said that Egypt will never give up a single drop of Nile River water. The Egyptian government declared that it has a plan of action. However, Egypt is willing to talk with Ethiopia.

June 9, 2013: EOTC admitted to be in a serious Admin crisis'

ESAT News: Some clerics of the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Church (EOTC), who are also members of the ruling party, are affecting the Church, some religious scholars have alleged. Various clerics that ESAT spoke with said that the double agency and political role of some these religious leaders, makes them responsible for the administrative crisis in the Church. "These religious leaders are preaching that killing is a sin while they are holding a gun on one hand and a Cross on the other. They are serving the ruling party as cadres. The problem has come due to the administrative corruption within the Church" a cleric told ESAT preferring to remain anonymous. He said the main problems of the Church at this moment are tribalism and corruption. He also allegorically said the sacred teachings of the Church have now been changed by money. Another clericsaid due to the administrative corruption, economic crisis and nepotism within the Church, many scholars, who have no relative in the administration, are being unemployed. The cleric said the government wasworking hard to destroy the history of the Church and weaken it.

June 9, 2013: Remembering the "Martyrs of June 8/2005"

ESAT News: The martyrs of June 8, 2005, who were massacred in a daylight government securities who protested saying "Return the votes of our parents" during fraudulent 2005 general election, have been remembered though various programs. Ordered by the late Ethiopian Prime Minister, Meles Zenawi, the Agazi Special Forces had slain over 100 Ethiopians in 2005. Except Meles, who passed away due to natural causes,all the other officials, who participated in the massacre, have not faced justice so far. Unity for Democracy and Justice (UDJ), All Ethiopians Unity Party (AEUP) and families of the victims have marked the date through various programs. The victims of the June 8 massacre are often dubbed "Patriots of Democracy" by pro democracy forces and those who struggle for a democratic system in Ethiopia.

June 9, 2014 –NEWS/ECONOMY - ADDIS ABABA Military Metal and Engineering Corporation (MMetEc) has signed a memorandum of understanding with the Addis Ababa city administration and the Ethiopian

As part of its expansion, the Corporation has also agreed to replace the electric meters operated by the Ethiopian Electric Power Corporation. The project is valued at nine billion birr and is expected to replace electric meters with new 'smart' meters. The new 'smart' digital meters are expected to automatically register electric consumption and report back toused. However, MetEC has failed to deliver the commitment it owes to EEPCo. As a result, the latter had to make an urgent and alternative deal with an Indian company. This also cost EEPCo more than USD 27 million foreign exchange. Hence, critics claim that these transformers could have been done by other local companies if MetEC hadn't muscled them down.
It is to be remembered that the Ethiopian Electric Power Corporation is requiring all factories in Ethiopia to install devices that guarantee efficient use of power. EEPCo without requiring manual reading like the analog meters currently being used. The Metal and Engineering Corporation has snatched the responsibility to produce the devices known as power factor correctors. The efficiency devices will be made available to all factories eventually on a one-year interest-free credit arrangement, according to EEPCo Officials. The efficiency devices are expected to adjust the difference between real power and apparent power in the use of electricityto a ratio of one. However, still, private companies face sort of a setback from the device being manufactured by MetEC, which forces them to pay the electric bill, including the power leakage due to inefficient power meter. The increasingly fragile Ethio-Djibouti railway line has temporarily halted the service stretching from Dire Dawa to Djibouti.
MetEc has also signed an agreement last week with the Canadian company that provides the technology for generating electric power from waste. MetEc is expected to begin operation next month once it finalized the agreement with the Canadian company. The waste power generators will be located at the Akaki-Kaliti and Bole-Arabsa solid waste sites. The project's 75% power will be generated from Addis Ababa's solid waste andthe remaining 25% is known to be from the city's liquid waste. MetEc is preparing to receive fourteen hectares of land for the project. The finance source for the project will be provided by the Canadian company. The amount of electric power generated depends on the amount of waste available. Once the project is finalized and when power generation is started, Ethiopian Electric Power Service will issue the payment for the project through MetEc. It is remembered that a British company named Harvard had began operation to generate electric power from the waste located at the Repi area of Addis. Source: The Reporter
June 10, 2013: Egyptian president Mohamed Morsi said that he does notwant to go to war with Ethiopia but unless Ethiopia suspends its dam construction projects Egypt will consider "all options." The Ethiopian government issued an immediate reply and said that Ethiopia is preparedto defend the new Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam.

June 11, 2013: The Ethiopian government refused to stop work on any ofits new dam projects. Ethiopia accused Egypt of making irresponsible threats.

June 12, 2013: A senior Egyptian defense official stated that the escalating disagreement between his country and Ethiopia over Nile Riverwater flow “is not a military issue at this stage.”

June 12, 2013: Ethiopia travels: rock-hewn churches, volcanic craters andsociable monkeys’

Everything felt raw, imposing and beautiful, says CNN senior editor Brice Laine of his recent trip to Ethiopia. Looking down into the Erta Ale volcaniccrater was, he says, "like witnessing the birth of Earth." Located in the Danakil Depression and known as "the gateway to hell" among local Afar people, it's the world's oldest active lava lake.

June 12, 2013: Soccer: South Africa face Ethiopia in key match on nextSunday'

South Africa midfielder Oupa Manyisa has challenged Ethiopia to back-up their claims that they will walk all over Bafana Bafana on Sunday. With two rounds of 2014 World Cup qualifiers remaining, Bafana's trip to Addis Ababa at the weekend for their clash with Group A leaders, The Walia Antelopes, is a must-win encounter. The Ethiopians are the front-runners in the race to book a ticket to Brazil, with Sewnet Bishaw's men at the summit and two points ahead of the South Africans. The two teams playedto a 1-1 draw in their first-leg encounter last year in Rustenburg, with Katlego Mphela's 77th-minute strike having cancelled out Saladin Said's first-half opener.

June 12, 2013: Betty’s sex act on 'Big Brother Africa' continues to causebacklash'

Sierra Leon’s Bolt and Ethiopia’s Betty became the second couple to engage in a “sex act” in the history of Big Brother Africa, since BBA Housemates Keagan and Talia’s romping during The Stargame. Hailing from Ethiopia, one of the oldest Christian communities in the world and where the majority of the population are Orthodox Christians; Betty, 26, atranslator and teacher from Addis Ababa has definitely ruffled some conservative feathers. Social media and bloggers were set afire, including prominent radio presenters in Betty’s home country, Ethiopia. Facebook pages like “Betty Didn’t Represent Ethiopia on Big Brother Africa” have sprouted, condemning Betty’s very-open “hook up” on live television.

Fans from the Ethiopian disaspora have also shown mixed support with some feeling ashamed and worried about their reputations as “loose” people. Some comments even go as far as comparing Betty to a prostitute. Many Ethiopians online have voiced their varying levels of disapproval, citing that Betty was representing Ethiopia on Big Brother Africa, and should have been more considerate to her culture. Betty supporters continue to defend her sex act. In Betty’s latest Diary (June 11/Day 16), she revealed that if Bolt were ever to be evicted, she would have to go on: “People nominated should be proud because they obviouslyare a threat. Bolt being nominated; I would be sad if he is evicted but its agame so I’ll still have to go on… Loyalty is very important so I’m trying mybest to be loyal. Apart from Bolt, I’m loyal to everyone and the game.” Source: EMF

June 13, 2013: Ethiopian embassy officials in Washington DC beinginvestigated by the IRS and SEC'

The United States Internal Revenue Service and Security & Exchange Commission have launched an investigation of Ethiopian diplomats who have been selling bonds illegally in the U.S. Since the investigation is continuing, no further details on the matter, but it was learnt that law enforcement officials have interviewed several individuals in connection with the selling of Nile dam bonds without permit. Two months ago, Ethiopian National Transitional Council (ENTC) lodged a complaint with theSEC regarding the illegal sale of bonds by government officials. Ethiopiansaround the world also protested against the bond sales. Shortly after that,the regime suspended its illegal activity and the foreign affairs minister went on a radio show to lambast ENTC.

June 13, 2013: AU tells Egypt and Ethiopia to negotiate on Nile'

ESAT News: The African Union asked Egypt and Ethiopia to come togetherfor talks on the Nile River through its Commissioner, Nkosazana Dlamini- Zuma. ‘There should be discussions around these issues aimed at having awin-win situation,’ she said. Talks between the two countries should focus on finding a solution “in a new context, not in the context of the colonial powers,” Dlamini-Zuma said. Following Egyptian President’s warning that “all options are open”, the Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Dessalgn said unless Egyptian leaders have gone mad they won’t take the war option. “‘When they say ‘all options’, it means including war. I don’t think they will take that option unless they go mad,” Hailemariam said in his interview with the State Television. The war of words between Ethiopia and Egypt has been intensifying.

June 13, 2013: President Yoweri Museveni of Uganda sternly warnedEgypt over the Nile'

President Yoweri Museveni has sternly warned the Egyptian “governmentand other groups” against making “chauvinist and irrational statements” in the wake of Ethiopia's decision to construct a multi-billion dollar electricity dam, Chimp Corps report.

"I have seen in the print media statements coming out of Egypt regarding the commendable work of the Government of Ethiopia of building dams for electricity in that country," said Museveni. "This is what the whole of Africa needs to do. That is onereason the economy of Ethiopia has been growing in double digits. It is, therefore, advisable that the new Government of Egypt and some chauvinistic groups inside Egypt should not repeat the mistakes of the past Egyptian Governments," he added.
Museveni said leaders of Egypt should not be victims of the "misguided policies of past leaders." He further stressed that threat of the Nile is not the construction of dams but the "lack of electricity and underdevelopmentin the tropics." "The biggest threat to the Nile is continued under- development in the tropics i.e. lack of electricity and lack of industrialization. On account of these two, peasants cut the bio-mass for fuel (firewood – enku) and invade the forests to expand primitive agriculture. Here in Uganda, the peasants destroy 40 billion cubic metres of wood per annum for firewood. They also invade the wetlands (ebisaalu, ebitoogo, entobazi, ebifuunjo, ebisharara) to grow rice," he noted.
"This interferes with the transpiration that is crucial for rain formation. Our experts have told me that 40 percent of our rain comes from local moisture – meaning from our lakes and wetlands," said Museveni, adding,"That is why, for instance, West Nile and West Acholi have got more rain than Karamoja being on the same latitude notwithstanding. It is, apparently, on account of the huge wetlands in South Sudan, the forest inCongo and the wetlands in Uganda." Ironically, said Museveni, the Egyptians wanted to drain the wetlands in South Sudan through the Jonglei canal. "It was one of the causes for the people of South Sudan to wage war against Khartoum, which was collaborating with the Egyptian Government's misguided and dangerous policies of that time," he added. June 13, 2013: The Ethiopian parliament approved a new Nile Water rights agreement which reduces Egypt's traditional allotment if Nile River water. Six upstream Nile River basin countries support the agreement. Ofcourse Egypt is not a party to the new agreement. Ethiopia's parliament was really mocking the Egyptian government's threats to retaliate againstEthiopia's new dams. Ethiopian diplomats pointed out that for over ten years Ethiopia has been asking Egypt to participate in Nile River water discussions and Egypt has refused.
June 14, 2013: Over 400 names of traders, officials, whose accounts werefrozen, made public'
ESAT News: The Ethiopian Federal High Court on a letter written on May21, 2013, number 134048, has ordered that the bank accounts, monies and cars of 429 government officials, businesspeople and their family members be frozen and impounded. The 429 people include suspects of corruption who are currently imprisoned and their family members. One ofthe frozen accounts is of investor Nega Guebregziabher and his families, Ephrem Nega Guebregziabher, Henok Nega Guebregziabher, Yetbarek Nega Guebregziabher, Selam Nega Guebregziabher, and Rahel Nega Guebregziabher. The bank accounts of Markneh Alemayehu, Chief Prosecutor of the Ethiopian Revenue and Customs Authority (ERCA), and his family members such as Yonatan Markneh Alemayehu, Elshadaye Markneh Alemayehu, Balgeti Alemayehu Wedano, Bafne Alemayehu Wedabo, Ayele Alemayehu Wedabo, Berhanu Alemayehu Wedabo, Abera Alemayehu Wedabo and Tigrest Alemayehu Wedabo, have also been frozen. Similarly, the bank account of Siye Abraha, the incumbent's former military chief and now an opposition, and the accounts of his brothers and sisters; Heluf Abraha Hagos, Asmelash Abraha Hagos, Asefa Abraha Hagos, Woldeselasie Abraha Hagos and Temnit Abraha Hagos, have all been frozen.

June 14, 2013: Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam (GERD) makes waves'

CAIRO/ADDIS ABABA: The start of work to divert the water from the BlueNile at the end of May, to prepare for the construction of the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam (GERD) was seen as a declaration of war by Egypt, which takes almost all its water from the Nile, 85% of it from Ethiopia.

June 14, 2013: Egypt FM to visit Ethiopia for talks over dam'

Ahram Online, MENA: Foreign Minister Mohamed Amr to visit Ethiopia nextweek for talks with Addis Ababa and Khartoum over Renaissance Dam.

Egypt wants Ethiopia to conduct more studies and provide additional information about the impact of the Renaissance Dam and sign a tripartiteagreement. The agreement states the dam should not reduce Egypt and Sudan's share of the Nile's water, and limits the amount of water stored inthe dam to considerably less than 75 billion cubic metres. The agreement also says Ethiopia should take into consideration the danger of earthquakes and soft ground before building the dam. In addition, the agreement says cutting down forests to build the dam should not affect the quality of water reaching Egypt. Ethiopia needs funding from international institutions like the World Bank to build the dam. According to international agreements Egypt and Sudan must agree to the building of the dam. Ethiopia's parliament on ratified an accord that replaces colonial-era deals that awarded Egypt and Sudan the majority of the Nile'swater.

June 14, 2013: Ethiopia to host 2013 AGOA Forum'

Washington D.C. – The Government of Ethiopia in collaboration with the US Government will host the 2013 US-sub-Saharan Africa Trade and Economic Cooperation Forum, also known as the AGOA Forum, August 12-13, 2013 here in Addis. A joint statement from representatives of the two governments said the theme of this year's AGOA Forum is: "Sustainable Transformation through Trade and Technology." The Ministerial-level event will include a high level dialogue on the future of US -Africa trade and economic cooperation. The Forum will be preceded by private sector and civil society programmes as well as African Women's EntrepreneurshipProgramme (AWEP) to be held in Ethiopia August 10-11,2013. The Corporate Council on Africa (CCA) in collaboration with the Ethiopian Chamber of Commerce and Sectoral Associations (ECCSA) will also organize a US -sub-Saharan Africa Trade Exhibition concurrently with the Forum events. The African Growth and Opportunity Act (AGOA) is the U.S. Government's signature trade initiative with sub-Saharan Africa, with the aim of expanding trade and investment between the US and sub-Saharan Africa. June 15, 2013: Unity for Democracy and Justice Party (UDJP) urges Ethiopia/Egypt to cease bellicosity'

ESAT News: The Ethiopian opposition political party, Unity for Democracy and Justice Party (UDJP), has releaseda press release titled "A Party committed to use everything for political consumption, endangers a country's sovereignty". The Party's presser urged Ethiopia and Egypt to cease making bellicose statements, stop spreading propaganda that could harm the people to people relations of the two countries and work for a diplomatic relation and focus on round table discussions. UDJP said Ethiopia has a natural right to use Abay River. It added both countries should stop using the Dam and the river as a means of calming down internal political tensions. It also called for the immediate start of a "national consensus". UDJP also accused the Ethiopian government of using the damming of the River for political propaganda. The Party said, the government did not do enough diplomaticpreparation before starting the Dam on Abay (Nile) River, failed to conduct enough and reliable discussions and agreements with the Nile riparian countries and the government didn't make enough military preparation to defend the country if it was faced with a military aggression. UDJP blamed the ruling party, EPRDF, for repressing the people in the name of development, labeling politicians and journalists as "terrorists", interfering in religious affairs and in such a critical time, for failing to talk with local opposition parties that have national agendas.

The Party asks how this big project could succeed without a national understanding. It said, while the Egyptian President speaks together with the opposition and Sudan releases political prisoners, the Ethiopian government endangered the national consensus by stubbornly continuingto arrest and label citizens. On the other hand, Bereket Simon, Minister ofthe Government Communication Affairs Office, said the government was not using the Dam project for political purposes and also refuted the accusations that EPRDF was making the Dam “its private property”. Bereket said that his government does not believe Egypt will resort to warbut thinks that it may attempt to arm Ethiopian oppositions, use its intelligence and cause local havoc and insecurity. He also admitted that there was “no military preparation” if the bellicosity developed into war.

Meanwhile, the Ethiopian House of People’s Representative unanimously ratified the Nile Cooperative Framework Agreement (CFA) on June 13th, 2013. Egypt, Democratic Congo and the Sudan did not sign the Cooperative Framework Agreement (CFA) led by the Nile Basin Initiative, but six other riparian countries have signed and are enacting it in their respective parliaments. The ratification of the Agreement by the Ethiopianparliament is feared to intensify the tension with Egypt further.

June 15, 2013: Ethiopia/South Africa: Bafana Bafana Arrived in AddisAbaba'

Bafana Bafana last night safely arrived in Addis Ababa, the capital city of Ethiopia for their Brazil 2014 FIFA World Cup match against the host nation. The two countries face off on Sunday, 16 June 2013 at the National Stadium at 16h00 (15h00 SA time). Bafana Bafana were receivedwith song and dance from a small group of South Africans, most of them working at the South African embassy in Ethiopia. They were waving flagsand one was blowing a vuvuzela, putting smiles on the players. There wasalso a large group of Ethiopians who also came to greet the team and takepictures of the players.

June 15, 2013: UN chief asks Egypt, Ethiopia to dialogue on dam row'

MENA, Ahram Online: UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-Moon personally requests Egyptian president Morsi and Ethiopian Prime Minister Desalegn to dialogue to resolve grievances over the disputed Renaissance dam. UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-Moon had phoned Egyptian president Mohamed Morsi as well as his Ethiopian premier Hailemariam Desalegn on Thursday and Friday respectively, a spokesman for Ki-Moon announced, to recommend the two governments to hold talks over the disputed Renaissance dam project. The UN chief "spoke with both leaders about theproposed dam project on the Nile River and expressed his desire that theyengage in dialogue to resolve differences on that matter," Ki-Moon's spokesman Martin Nesirky added. Ethiopia began diverting Blue Nile wateron 28 May, paving the way for the construction of the $4.2 billion (3.2 billion euro) Grand Renaissance Dam, set to become Africa's biggest hydroelectric dam when completed. Ethiopian plans have raised concerns in Egypt and Sudan, both dependent on the world's longest river for their water supply.

Earlier in June, Egypt summoned Ethiopian Ambassador Mahmoud Dardir to express his country's displeasure with Ethiopia's diversion of part of theBlue Nile as part of the preparations for the dam's construction. The dressing down came amid harsh Egyptian criticisms of Ethiopia's decision to go ahead with the project without taking the technical committee's recommendations into account. The Blue Nile provides Egypt with the lion's share of its annual allotment of 55 billion cubic metres of river water. Ethiopian officials, meanwhile, have attempted to dispel fears regarding the dam's potential impact, stressing the project would ultimately benefit all the riparian states. Egyptian Foreign Minister Mohamed Amr will visit Ethiopia on Sunday or Monday for talks with AddisAbaba and Khartoum over Nile water issues and the Renaissance Dam, diplomatic sources told state news agency MENA.

June 15, 2013: Exim Bank of India approves $300 million loan to Ethiopia'

The Export-Import Bank of India has approved a $300 million worth of lineof credit to Ethiopia, paving the way for construction of a railway line linking this landlocked country in the Horn of Africa to a port city in neighbouring Djibouti. An agreement in this regard was signed between T.C.A. Ranganathan, chairman and managing director of Exim Bank, and Ahmed Shide Mehamed, Ethiopian State Minister of Finance and EconomicDevelopment (MoFED), in New Delhi. "Ethiopia being a landlocked nation,the railway link to a port city will provide impetus to its growth, particularly in the northern region of the country," the minister said. The railway line is the first part of a larger regional project to improve railwayconnectivity in Ethiopia and other east African countries, he added. The loan approval had been under discussion since the visit of Prime Minister Manmohan Singh to Ethiopia in 2010 under the African Union Region Development Scheme, which was initiated by India. The proposed railwaylink will connect the city of Asaita, some 670 km of the Ethiopian capital Addis Ababa, to the port city of Tajourah in neighbouring Djibouti.

The link is expected to improve regional connectivity and boost growth in the east African country, according to Debo Tunka, deputy chief executiveofficer and head of infrastructure development at the Ethiopian Railway Corporation (ERC). "India as always is playing a great role in the development of Ethiopian infrastructure by keeping its promises," Tunka told IANS. The railway link will initially be utilised for transporting goods but later it will be opened for passenger traffic. About 50 km of the 210 km line will be in Djibouti, while the rest will be in northern Ethiopia. "Thenew line will be very important for Ethiopia because it will give us an access to a second port and boost economic activities in the country," Tunka said.

Founded in 1982 under the Export-Import Bank of India Act 1981, Exim Bank is the first export finance institution of the country. The bank provides other credit lines to the Ethiopian government in the sugar and rural development sectors. The detailed project report, being prepared bythe Rail India Technical and Economic Service (RITES), is expected to be finalised within two months. Established in 1974 by the Indian government, RITES provides services in rail transport management to operators in India and abroad. After financial closure, the Ethiopian government is expected to invite bids from Indian companies. Both public and private sector companies can participate in the bidding process. The credit line would entail concessional funds at an interest rate of 1.75 percent.

CAF World Cup 2014 Qualifiers: Ethiopia 2 – South Africa 1

News tip: Ethiopia beat South Africa on Sunday in a fight for the top spot in Group A . With Central Africa Republic and Botswana already eliminatedfrom qualified, South Africa and Ethiopia have a chance to decide which team will qualify for the third round. The group winner will take on another African group winner in a two-legged playoff for a chance to earn a berth at the World Cup finals in Brazil next summer. Ethiopia currently holds the lead in the group with 10 points in four matches. South Africa trails them but just two points with eight points in their first four games. IfEthiopia defeats Bafana Bafana, they will clinch their spot in the third round as Africa would trail them by five points with one game to go. A losswould give South Africa the group lead while a draw would preserve the current two point difference. The two teams faced off in their opening match of the campaign on June 2, 2012; they battled to a 1-1 draw. Sincethen Ethiopia has managed three straight wins while South Africa has wontwice and drawn once. South Africa is coming off two straight victories against Central African Republic by a combined score 5-0; they have only scored two goals against the other two teams in the group. Meanwhile Ethiopia has managed to score six times in four games. Both sides have only conceded twice.

June 16, 2013: Security around GERD tightened'

ESAT News: Security sources told ESAT that Ethiopia has tightened its security around the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam (GRED) by placing expensive Chinese and Russian made radars. In addition to planting the radars, the government has deployed some members of the special commando, Agazi Force, around the Dam in order to defend sudden air attack or infiltration. The government has also decided to put the 44 Western Command of the Dalol Birgade 4th Regiment, which is led by Major Abera Woretaw, in Benishangul Gumuz region. Similarly, a team ledby Lieutenant General, the Head of the Ethiopian Defense Training Department, has travelled to South Sudan to give a capacity training on “Revolutionary Democracy and Military Leadership” to the Ethiopian soldiers in the Abyei Area. ESAT sources have decided not to disclose all the military information that it has obtained for the sake of national security. Although Bereket Simon, the Minister of Government Communication, has recently said that Ethiopia was not making any special preparation, ESAT has learnt that it has stepped up its security to defend the Dam from being attacked. On a related report, Egypt has reportedly asked the Ethiopian government to make changes on the size of the Dam. Egypt asked the height of the Dam to be reduced from 145m to 100m and the size of the lake to be reduced from 74 million meter cubeto 32-40 million meter cubes of water. Egypt has also reportedly asked forthe power generation to be reduced to 3000MW.

June 17, 2013: For several decades the Kenyan military (Kenyan Defense Forces, KDF) has relied on the British Army Training Unit in Kenya (BATUK) for assistance in training. The British training cadre maintains a training facility in the town of Nanyuki. BATUK has also served as a liaisonunit to facilitate training exercises with British forces and the KDF. Recently the KDF acknowledged that the training cadre had helped prepare Kenyan forces for their operation in Somalia. Implicit in the statement was that the training was high quality and it produced good results in the field. Kenya is not the first former British colony to recognizethe benefit of British military training methods. Pakistan, India, Bangladesh, and South Africa are all former British colonies and all rank high on the UN's list of quality forces for peacekeeping missions.

June 17th, 2013: SOCCER: FIFA investigation puts Ethiopia progress indoubt'

Ethiopia's progress to the final round of African World Cup qualifying is in doubt after FIFA opened disciplinary proceedings against them on Sunday.

June 20, 2013: Congressional sub-committee hearing on Ethiopia'

An OPEN hearing of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to be held by the US congressional subcommittee on Africa, Global Health, Global Human Rights, and International Organizations. The panel added witnesses to discus on a subject entitled "Ethiopia After Meles: The Future of Democracy and Human Rights" in Room 2172 of the Rayburn House OfficeBuilding in Washington DC. Congressional hearing on Ethiopian to be webcast live, starting at 10 AM, Washington Times. Subcommittee on Africa, Global Health, Global Human Rights, and International Organizations - Christopher H. Smith (R-NJ), Chairman.

June 20, 2013: The U.S. State Department reported that so far Ethiopia has managed a successful transfer of power following the August 2012, death of long-serving leader Meles Zenawi. Ethiopia's economy has averaged a ten percent increase in GDP every year for the last five years. The U.S. and Ethiopia cooperate in numerous areas, to include supportingseveral on-going African Union security operations in Africa. At the moment the one serious problem in the Ethiopia-U.S. bilateral relationshipis what the State Department called Ethiopia's "weak human rights record." Very bad human rights record is more accurate but diplomats must be diplomatic.

June 21, 2013: The head of Egypt's National Water Research Centre claimed that Ethiopia could reduce the flow of the Nile river water to Egyptby ten billion kilo-liters a year. He also claimed that every one billion kilo- liter reduction will take around 200,000 acres of farm land out of production. According to Egyptian figures, Egypt already suffers from a water deficit of around ten billion kilo-liters a year. The research center recently reported that Ethiopia's dams could lower the river level and make upstream water ferry travel more difficult. Ethiopia rejects these claims as inaccurate and simply more Egyptian propaganda.

June 21, 2013: U.S. Congress holds discussion on human rights inEthiopia; Bill to be reintroduced'

ESAT News: A subcommittee open hearing titled "Ethiopia After Meles: The Future of Democracy and Human Rights," was held on June 20, 2013by Chairman Chris Smith (NJ-04) of the Subcommittee on Africa, Global Health, Global Human Rights, and International Organizations at the U.S.Congress in Washington DC. Donald Y. Yamamoto, Acting Assistant Secretary of State; Earl Gast, Asst. Administrator of U.S. Agency for International Development; Dr. Berhanu Nega, Ph.D., of Bucknell University; Dr. J. Peter Pham, Ph.D., Director of the Michael S. Ansari Africa Center; Obang Metho, of Solidarity Movement for a New Ethiopia; and Adotei Akwei of Amnesty International testified during the hearing.

Amb. Yamamoto and Dr. Berhanu stated that Ethiopia was at a crossroad.

Ambassador Yamamoto and Gast stated that the EPRDF government was making economic progress while on the other hand; they said the human rights abuses have endangered the future of the Country. Dr. Berhanu Nega, Obang Metho, and Adotei Akwei have also explained the human rights situation in Ethiopia in detail to the Congress. Dr. Berhnau said "Following the death of Meles Zenawi, many hoped that there would be anopportunity for an opening in the political space. However the current regime continues to flout international standards. Indeed, the climate postthe much anticipated National Elections of 2005, widely acknowledged as the most contested election in Ethiopian history, culminating in bloodshed and vote rigging, has produced severe government clampdown on basic freedoms, particularly freedom of expression and association, increased police monitoring of peaceful and lawful activities, arbitrary arrest of human rights defenders, opposition leaders and attacks on civil society".

Dr. Berhanu further said the ruling elites have committed too many human rights crimes (in the Ogaden, in Addis Ababa, Oromia…etc.) and have accumulated too much wealth through rampant corruption. Indeed, they have antagonized the population too much to feel that they can continue to enjoy a peaceful life after relinquishing power–which would beinevitable if there was to be a truly free and fair election.

Dr. Berhanu saidthat Ethiopian rebel groups that fight to oust the government through an armed struggle were getting organized and thus urged the U.S.

government to think about its policy on Ethiopia before the Country entersinto an unnecessary conflict. Ato Obang Metho, Executive Director Solidarity Movement for a New Ethiopia (SMNE) testifies before US congressional Subcommittee on Africa “Ethiopia After Meles: The Future ofDemocracy and Human Rights” said on his part, that Ethiopians do not expect the U.S. to free them but will secure their own freedom. He asked the U.S. government to reconsider its links with the racist dictatorship of the TPLF government. Chris Smith, Chair of the hearing, also presented the human rights situation in Ethiopia at the opening of the session.

Before the hearing was concluded, he announced that the “Ethiopian Human Rights Act” would be reintroduced with “very serious benchmarks”.Ethiopia After Meles: The Future of Democracy and Human Rights “Ethiopia is a vital American ally in Africa, but its human rights and democracy policies fall short of the basic rights that Ethiopians deserve.

Our hearing will look at the policies of the current Ethiopian government inhopes that it will better accommodate political opposition and civil society,and respect the rights of all Ethiopians. We also need to consider how the U.S. Government can support ways to improve the rights—and lives—ofthe Ethiopian people.

June 22, 2013: International Ethiopian Professionals Support for Abay(Nile) IEPSA formed'

Ethiopians composed of experts from different disciplines across different continents established an international organization called International Ethiopian Professionals Support for Abay (IEPSA). IEPSA’s main objective is to mobilize Ethiopian professionals across the world to provide support in their professional capacity for the successful completion of the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam (GERD); and for ensuring the continuous utilization of Abay (Nile) River by Ethiopia based on fair, equitable and internationally acceptable principles. The major factors for the establishment of the IEPSA are: firstly, there is no other non- governmental body to deliver researched and organized information to the international community about GERD which is currently under construction. Secondly, the majority of the Egyptian people know only what they are told by their politicians and have no information about the significance and importance of the GERD for upstream countries.

Furthermore, the people of Egypt do not understand the rights of other riparian states on the Nile and as a result their attitude to upstream waterdevelopment projects is very biased and negative. . Thirdly, there are alsoquestions raised by Ethiopians about the size and location of the GERD- which needs clear answers. Fourthly, there is no formal arrangement made to bring the professionals of other riparian states so that they can play a constructive role regarding the GERD. And fifthly, there has not been any platform or mechanism to bring Ethiopians across different countries together so they could professionally support the efforts of Ethiopia on water and related projects. The post liberation period dedicated to re-establish the state on modern foundations had also its own problems, it required a radical transformation of thought and behavior of the leadership. Although the reconstruction and modernizationof the governing system was successfully achieved.

June 23, 2013: Ethiopia said that Egypt's claims of a dooms-day reductionin the flow of the Nile River due to the GERD are absurd allegations.

Ethiopia has consistently stated that filling the reservoir behind the Grande Ethiopian Renaissance Dam will take five to six years. Ethiopian government engineers contend that during this process the flow rate of the Nile River not be reduced to any degree that Egyptians will even notice it. The Ethiopian reservoir will hold 74 million cubic meters of water. One of the diplomatic options for resolving the row between Ethiopia and Egypt is for Ethiopia to agree to take 10 or 11 years to fill thereservoir. (Austin Bay)

June 23, 2013: MPs refuse to accept new Amhara population figures'

ESAT News: The Population and Housing Census Commission of the Ethiopian Central Statistical Agency had released a national population census report in 2007/08 which showed a significant decrease in the population of people in the Amhara Region. Some of members of the parliament had then complained about the significant decrease and soughtfor further investigation. The Commission conducted newer inter-census survey and results were presented to the parliament last week. There were parliamentarians who still did not accept the new findings on the Amhara population. Demeke Makonnen, Deputy Prime Minister, Minister ofEducation and Chairman of ANDM said during the presentation of the report that the population of Amhara people is now numbered at 19.6 million. The 2007 report had it at 17.2 million. Demeke said the previous report that said the population growth rate of the Amahra people was 1.72% per annum was wrong and according to the latest studies it grew by 2.4% per annum. He said previous studies did not also include the people that were evicted or resettled.

Both Demeke and Samiya Zekaria, Director General of Central StatisticalAgency, have argued that the problem in the previous findings was in "forecasting". One of the MPs, Ato Muchie, said he does not accept the new report. The MP said "In the previous reports you said the reason for the decrease of the population of the Amhara people was HIV/AIDS. Thatwas wrong. The cause of the decrease could be an epidemic or war but there is no use arguing about it at this moment. You simply concluded that the reason for the decrease was death. You committed grave mistakes by saying that and you have to apologize to the people" he asked.

The MP further said "The Amhara people have not been singled out and injected the HIV virus. You should not have concluded like that. You alsostated that the population of Amhara people was growing by 1.7% and this figure was not even observed in Scandinavian countries where the population growth rate is said to be decreasing. Thus, if you are saying that the accurate growth rate was 2.4 % instead of 1.7%, then this meansover 969 thousand Amhara people were forced to live without any budget for the past six years. These people have not got bread from the country or were forced not to eat. You have to apologize”. Another MP said “based on the report you just presented the total numberof the Amhara people becomes 22million instead of 19 million. Therefore, this new report is not still correct, so I would not accept it”. The sole opposition MP in the Ethiopian Parliament, Girma Seifu, on his part refused to accept the new figures of Addis Abeba City which has put the total number at 2,991,999. According to the report, the total population ofEthiopia in May reached 82,642,486 while the total population of Amhara people increased from 17.1 million to 19.2 million and Addis Abeba’s increased from 2.6 to 2.9 million people.

June 24, 2013: SOCCER - Ethiopia sack senior official over World Cupgaffe'

(Reuters)Ethiopia sack senior official over World Cup gaffe'ADDIS ABABA, June 24 (Reuters) - The Ethiopian Football Federation sacked its general secretary on Monday after the African nation admitted fielding an ineligibleplayer in a World Cup qualifier, a gaffe likely to cost the team three points. In a raucous meeting, Ethiopian soccer's governing body voted to sack Ashenafi Ejigu but rejected the resignation offer by vice president Berhanu Kebede, who had previously been blamed by the body for the mix-up. Some members of the football association and journalists at the meeting called for the whole management to be sacked. Sahilu Guebremariam, the federation's president, said he was likely to submit hisown resignation in an upcoming election for seats in the body's executive committee. "This was a massive blunder so we all should have resigned," he told Reuters. "But we have responsibilities ahead so we voted to stay until September." Ethiopia's 2-1 win over South Africa in Addis Ababa on June 16 had given them an unassailable five-point lead in their group and place in the final phase of African qualifiers for the 2014 World Cup in Brazil. But hours later, world governing body FIFA said it was investigating allegations Ethiopia had played suspended midfielder Minyahile Beyene against Botswana on June 8. Minyahile had been booked twice in previous matches and World Cup rules state a player who receives two cautions in the qualifying campaign must serve an automatic one-match ban. He wasshown a yellow card in the 1-1 draw with South Africa a year ago and again in a 1-0 win over Botswana in March. Ethiopia, who have never qualified for the World Cup finals, are expected to be docked three pointsmeaning a place in the final qualifying round will be up for grabs in Group

A. If the points are redistributed, Ethiopia will have 10, South Africa will be on eight and Botswana on seven with each team having one match leftto play in round two. Officials said they mistakenly fielded the midfielder. Vice-president Berhanu, also team leader during the match against Botswana, said he had lost a letter from FIFA that notified the Ethiopian body of Minyahile's bookings. "I never use pens and papers during matches, let alone keep records of cautions," said team coach Sewnet Bishaw. "I only focus on ways to win the match." Ethiopia play the CentralAfrican Republic on Sept. 6, while South Africa lock horns with Botswana.

JERUSALEM - Ethiopian-Israelis accorded human rights activist Obang Metho a hero's welcome. The activists were waving Ethiopian and Israeliflags when they welcomed Obang to their fold. Obang flew to Israel aftertestifying before a June 20 US Congressional session and about the human rights violations in Ethiopia. Fellow patriots in Israel used the popular song "Abet!" as a background music during their welcoming ceremony. Many other Ethiopian communities are expected to adopt "Abet" as a motive for social movement for a better Ethiopia!

June 25, 2013: Obama's Africa visit should stress "Media Freedoms"

JOHANNESBURG – US President Barack Obama should use his visit to Senegal, South Africa, and Tanzania, beginning June 26, 2013, to support besieged media outlets and independent groups across the African continent, Human Rights Watch said today. Independent media and nongovernmental organizations in much of Africa are increasingly under threat from government crackdowns, Human Rights Watch said. In his 2009 speech in Accra, Ghana, President Obama spoke about the importance of civil society and independent journalism to democratic societies. While Senegal, South Africa, and Tanzania generally allow mediaand non-governmental groups to operate freely, other African governments severely limit them. “President Obama should recognize the courage of African journalists and activists who speak the truth in the faceof threats and reprisals, and call on his African allies to do the same,” saidDaniel Bekele, Africa director at Human Rights Watch. “He should make clear to African leaders that the media and activist groups are critical for development, and should be embraced.”

June 25, 2013: Ethiopia among failed states - FP'

This year's Foreign Policy Magazine's Failed States Index has listed Ethiopia among world's 20 failed states. Ethiopia is the 19th failed state. The Failed States Index looked at 12 primary social, economic and politicalindicators such as demographic pressures, human flight and brain drain, state legitimacy, poverty and economic decline, human rights, security apparatus and foreign intervention as criteria of measurement.

Somalia is the most dangerously unstable country in the world followed bythe Democratic Republic of Congo, Sudan, South Sudan, Chad, Yemen, Afghanistan, Haiti, Central Africa, Zimbabwe, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Pakistan, Guinea Bissau, Niger, Ethiopia and Burundi. In the second category 20 other less failed countries were listed which are Syria, Uganda, Liberia, North Korea, Eritrea, Myanmar, Cameroon, Seri Lanka, Bangladesh, Nepal, Mauritania, East Timor, Serra Leone, Egypt, Burkina Faso, Congo, Iran, Mali and Malawi. The Ethiopian government often states that Ethiopia has been on a better economic, security and political condition.

The report by FP, however, shows that Ethiopia has not showed any improvement in ranking in the past successive years. Similarly, Ethiopia'snorthern neighbor, Eritrea was ranked a less failed state than Ethiopia while Kenya, Sudan and Nigeria were ranked as more failed states than Ethiopia.

June 26, 2013: Man slaughtered near PM's Office'

ESAT News: Eyewitnesses told ESAT that a man has been slaughtered outside the office of the Ethiopian Prime Minister, Hailemariam Dessalgn, in Addis Abeba. He was found dead 150-200 meters far from the second door of the PM's office. The witnesses said the deceased was a bald man who is approximately between the ages of 45 to 53 years. The head of thedeceased was found in a rubbish bin near Be'ata Clinic. Police took the body for autopsy to Menelik Hospital. The residents of the area told ESAT that the area is monitored by surveillance Camera 24 hours and such a heinous crime could only be committed by the guards of the Palace.

Sources have been calling the Addis Ababa Police Commission for the pastdays and Menelik II Hospital to get their sides of the story. Although Menelik II Hospital agreed for an interview, it later said "you could only get the autopsy reports from the Police Commission". Addis Ababa Police Commission's PR and Criminal Investigation bureaus did not respond repeated calls. A resident of the area said the spot where the body was found is calm during the night time and this killing could only be perpetrated by the securities of the Palace and if that was not the case, the government should publicize the information to the public.

June 27, 2013: Ethiopian security agents to be immune of all acts at duty'

ESAT News: As Ethiopian legislators prepare a draft proclamation to reestablish the 'National Intelligence and Security Service (NISS)' as a Ministry, the spies working for the Ministry are going to be immune from all forms of impeachments for any kind of the actions they take while on duty. The Addis Ababa based Amharic bi-weekly, Reporter, said the NISS, established under the 1995 proclamation, has to change with the changingregional, environmental, continental and international circumstances, which have an impact on Ethiopia's security. The Organization is also entitled to refuse to disclose its financial and other reports from the Federal Auditor and other bodies. However, its reports could be evaluated by an Internal Auditor and the Prime Minister, the Draft states. The new proclamation will also allow the entry and sending of intelligence materialsand instruments to overseas without being checked or inspected by the Customs and Revenue Authority. The Draft also proposes the wealth, assets and identity of the staff of the Ministry to be kept secret. The Ministry is also given the powers of issuing national identity cards, leadingthe Aviation Security, issuing of qualification certificates to private securityorganizations. The draft states that the officers of the Ministry will not be impeached both by the criminal and civil laws for any of the actions they take during operations. They are also required to keep all the secrets theyknew while at work at all times with them and anybody interrogated or interviewed by the Ministry is also expected to keep the interview secret or risk criminal charges. The draft has been referred to the Legal and Justice Administration Standing Committee for further discussion.

June 27, 2013: Eritrea Provides Ethiopian "Terrorist" Organisation WithU.S. $500,000'

Addis Ababa — The Eritrean government has offered $500,000 to Ginbot7, an exiled Ethiopian opposition political organisation designated by Ethiopia as terrorist entity, according to a report on a US-based Ethiopiaopposition media outlet. In an audio recording of an interview with the group's chairman, leaked to Awrambatimes.com, Berhanu Nega admits that he received the funds.

Nega has since accused the ruling party the Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) of trying divert the attention ofthe public from the problems facing the country. In the 2005 general elections Nega was elected as mayor of Addis Ababa after the but was sentenced to death, in absentia, along with four others after Ethiopian government revoked his pardon request. In the audio Nega says that $200,000 of the total funds will be used for military and intelligence activities. Ginbot 7 has established its new military wing known as "Ginbot7 popular force", which is based in Eritrea for cross border attacks againstEthiopia. Ethiopia and Eritrea who fought a border war between 1998 and 2000 trade accusations of supporting and harbouring respective rebels to destabilise one the other. Ethiopia is a crucial US ally in the war against terror in the East African region.

Ethiopian politicians say although the United States is the front runner in the battle against terrorism, the country however is sheltering "terrorists" like Nega. The Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD), a regional body, has previously approved Ethiopia's request that Ginbot 7 beclassified as a terrorist group. In the leaked recording, Nega also said that $100,000 will be used to finance what he said was to a peaceful struggle and diplomacy activities. However it is not clear how the group is going to execute a peaceful struggle inside Ethiopia, where it is a banned organisation. Ginbot 7 often use Eritrean media as well Amsterdam-based opposition channel, Ethiopian Satellite Television (EAST) to broadcast anti-regime campaigns. Source: ST

June 28, 2013: Ethiopia's Plan to Dam the Nile Has Egypt Fuming - TIMEWorld'
By William Lloyd George/Addis Ababa The heat is stifling but the construction workers and red-hatted engineers don't let up. Mechanized excavators batter into the mighty, arid peaks on either side of the site of Ethiopia's Grand Renaissance dam, set to be the largest in Africa. The foundations are growing. The dark brown waters of the Nile River flow through the site. But the punishing sun and tough terrain aren't the only challenges facing the dam's progress. Downstream, Egypt is furious — andsome politicians there have talked in private of war. Ethiopia is defiant. "There is nothing that will stop Ethiopia now from realizing our country's dream," says Bereket Simon, an Ethiopian government spokesman, as he walked around the site on a recent morning.
The Ethiopian government believes that the dam, which is due to start generating electricity next year and will be paid for from the proceeds of government bond sales, will become an image of national pride and a symbol of the country's recent development. Egypt, a country whose identity and economy are already inseparable from the Nile, feels deeply threatened by the project. Egypt's President Mohammed Morsi said in a speech in Cairo on June 10, "We will defend each drop of the Nile with ourblood," but he has also said that dialogue is the best means of solving thecrisis. Not all of Egypt's politicians have been so diplomatic; during a cabinet meeting on June 3, which was being broadcast by Egyptian state TV without the knowledge of the political figures attending, several told Morsi that he must destroy the dam through any means available.
No Glimmers of Hope:
Two Years After Egypt's Revolution, an Economic Crisis Looms
On June 18 tempers seemed to calm a little when the Ethiopian foreign minister met his Egyptian counterpart in Addis Ababa, afterwards saying relations remained "brotherly" and that the two men had agreed to conduct further studies to ascertain the likely future impact of the dam onall countries through which the river flows. But the specter of a regional conflict remains. In February, Saudi Arabia's deputy defense minister washarshly critical of the dam project. "The Dam is being built close to the Sudanese border for political plotting rather than for economic gain and constitutes a threat to Egyptian and Sudanese national security," said Prince Khaled bin Sultan, the deputy minister. "Ethiopia is hell-bent on harming Arab peoples." (Bin Sultan was dismissed by the Saudi king in April; it is unclear whether there is any connection between his dismissaland his comments about the dam). On Ethiopia's side, both South Sudanand Uganda recently said Egypt should not undermine Ethiopia's right tothe Nile.

The challenge Ethiopia faces is to persuade not just the Egyptian government but a whole nation that appears convinced right now that Ethiopia is about to plug the Nile. There is no geographical feature of Egypt more important to its people. As the Greek historian, Herodotus, put it in 50 B.C., Egypt is the "gift of the Nile." Extremely arid and lackingin rainfall, Egypt has always relied heavily on the Nile for its freshwater.

Following Sudan's independence, Egypt negotiated with Sudan in 1959 that it would have rights to over 14,500 billion gallons per year of the Nile's flow, leaving over 488 billion gallons for Sudan, and less for the upstream states — Ethiopia, Uganda, Rwanda, Kenya, Tanzania and Burundi. Ethiopia was not party to these talks, and many Egyptians now see the new dam as a way for Ethiopia to bypass the agreement, control the Nile, and gain leverage over Cairo. For Ethiopia and Egypt, whose populations are predicted to grow steeply in the coming years, the water of the Nile and how they use it could determine whether they can cater forthe demands of their fast growing populations.

Experts differ on whether the dam will, in fact, negatively impact the Nile.According to Dia El-Quosy, the former chairman of Egypt's National WaterResearch Centre, the dam will reduce water flow anywhere from 1,300 billion gallons to 6,600 billion gallons per year. El-Quosy also argues that the reduction in water flow would increase pollution in the river and harm the fisheries in Egypt, as well as making it difficult for ferries and other boats to navigate the river. Another serious concern, el-Quosy says, is the possible reduction in fertility for farmland along the banks of the river thatcould be caused by the dam holding back nutrient-rich salts. He claims that every 260 billion gallon reduction in water flow created by the dam will mean half a million farmers lose their farms. "So if we lose 30bn kilolitres (8,000 billion gallons) in water flow, that would mean losing 25%of Egypt's cultivated land," he says.

Ethiopia faces dangers but also opportunities in Meles succession:

Not all experts, though, agree that the dam necessarily spells disaster forthe downstream states of Sudan and Egypt. According to Professor Dale Whittington, an expert on the Nile's hydropower potential, hydropower dams do not generally consume water. "After the reservoir behind the Grand Renaissance Dam is filled, the dam will not reduce the total water supply available to Egypt and Sudan," he says. Whittington also says, however, that Ethiopia needs to recognize that Egypt has legitimate concerns about how Ethiopia will operate the Grand Renaissance Dam. If Ethiopia attempted to fill the dam's reservoir during years of drought and at a time when there was little water stored in Egypt's Aswan High Dam Reservoir, for example, this would seriously reduce Egypt's water suppliesat a crucial time. "Similarly, during a multi-year drought in the Nile basin,Egypt needs guarantees that Ethiopia will not act strategically to withhold water, but instead will coordinate the operation of the Grand RenaissanceDam with Egypt's Aswan High Dam in order to minimize the costs of the drought on all the" countries through which the Nile flows, said Whittington.

Although the Egyptian government has been highly vocal in its opposition to the dam, Sudan appears to support the project. "Our government is mostly positive about the dam," says Alhajj Hamad, a Khartoum-based political analyst. "There is a small minority of Islamists who feel they should back their Islamist brothers in Cairo but mostly our government is being pragmatic and sees the benefits." Experts have noted that the dam could reduce sediment flows down the Nile, which would increase the lifespan of hydropower dams in Sudan, of which there are six, mostly builtduring colonial times. It would also reduce the fertility of Sudan's farmlands, however. "No one is sure quite yet," said one Sudanese water official.

Although Egypt also has two dams on the Nile, which could coordinate with Ethiopia's dam to efficiently regulate water flow, it is the size of Ethiopia's dam that is irking Egypt — and the perceived secrecy by which the dam is being built.

In spite of the uncertainty surrounding the dam project — and its potentialto create friction in the region – it could ultimately turn out to bring greater harmony to the countries through which the Nile flows. "If transparency is increased then this dam can be a great opportunity for theregion to work together," says Cleo Paskal, a specialist in water and food security at London's Chatham House think tank. "Ethiopia will now be a stakeholder of the Nile and it will be in all the countries' interests to increase dialogue and to protect the river in a way that benefits all."

June 28, 2013: U.S. diplomats are trying to ease tensions b/n Ethiopiaand Egypt'

Egyptian politicians were caught on live microphones discussing ways to stop Ethiopia's Nile River dam projects. The options discussed included covert military attacks and supporting rebel groups –in other words, the Egyptians were vetting war options. The U.S. has proposed that Ethiopia and Egypt establish a joint working group to examine the impact of the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam (GERD). The U.S. has urged Ethiopia tominimize the impact of the dam on downstream nations. The Egyptian leaders were initially embarrassed but they discovered that the Egyptian people rally around the Nile. Despite its own numerous internal troubles, the Egyptian government has continued to threaten Ethiopia should Ethiopia fail to suspend dam construction. Egypt has diplomatic and political power. However, threatening Ethiopia with covert attack invites retaliation by Ethiopia, and at the moment Egypt is far less stable than Ethiopia. Egypt lacks the logistical capacity and long-range strike weaponsto conduct a sustained military operation. Conceivably they could use the Nile River as a supply line, but barges on the river would be very susceptible to interdiction by air attack, mines, or other forms of interdiction. (Austin Bay)

June 30, 2013: Ethiopia said that it wants to peacefully end the Nile Riverwater distribution dispute with Egypt' Ethiopian foreign ministry officials said that Ethiopia prefers direct talks but international mediation was an option if direct talks failed. Though the Egyptian government is confronting large-scale domestic demonstrations, senior Egyptian leaderscontinue to rattle sabers over Ethiopia's Blue Nile dam projects, particularly the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam (GERD). The GERD is scheduled for completion in 2017. The Blue Nile River provides from 75 to85 percent of the Nile's annual flow.

Side note: Ethiopian Foreign Minister Tedros Adhanom has expressed his willingness to negotiate with Egypt to resolve the dispute over the Nile. Adhanom made his remarks on Sunday, during a trip to Algeria, saying, "There is no reason that we cannot reach an agreement that benefits all Nile countries." Ethiopian foreign minister, in a joint press conference withhis Algerian counterpart Mourad Medelci, emphasized on Ethiopia's commitment to tackle the problem through dialogue. He went on to say that the "international mediation" would not be ruled out if the talks fail. The row erupted last month, when Ethiopia said it had begun diverting the flow of the Blue Nile for the construction of the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance dam - a USD 4.2-billion hydroelectric plant. The issue of Ethiopian dam sparked outrage in Egypt with fears that the Nile dam would cause serious water shortage in the country. On June 11, Egyptian President Mohammed Morsi warned Ethiopian leaders that "all options are open on the table" if the dam over Nile jeopardizes the country's water security. Adhanom said he is to hold talks with Egyptian Foreign Minister Mohamed Kamel Amr in Cairo in the near future, following a round of negotiations held earlier this month in Ethiopian capital of Addis Ababa. On June 13, Ethiopia's parliament approved a measure to push ahead with its Nile River dam project, while changing a colonial-era deal that gave Egypt and Sudan majority stake in the longest river in the world. Ethiopia's 547-member parliament unanimously agreed to ratify NBI's Cooperative Framework Agreement (CFA), which states thata committee must be established to oversee Nile projects, including the controversial hydroelectric dam in Ethiopia. The agreement was previouslyendorsed by five other riparian states -- Rwanda, Tanzania, Uganda, Kenya and Burundi. The Nile, located in the northeast Africa, supplies water to Egypt and Sudan. It is formed from two rivers: the Blue Nile that starts in Ethiopia and the White Nile, which starts in Uganda. Egypt isdependent on the Blue Nile, a tributary of the river. MM/PR

The court ruled that Ruto acquired the land through fraud. Ruto must pay anindemnity and return the farm to the farmer. The International CriminalCourt has charged both Ruto and Kenyan pr

Court has charged both Ruto and Kenyan president Uhuru Kenyatta with crimes against humanity. The ICC has stuck by the charges, despite Ruto's and Kenyatta's political power, because it argues that Kenyan courts would not prosecute them to the full extent of the law. Several Kenyan officials are now arguing that this civil verdict which ruled againstRuto indicates that Kenyan courts would fairly try Ruto and Kenyatta.

July 4, 2013: Ethiopia: PMHD announces a Govt reshuffle' In an anticipated ministerial reshuffle the House of Peoples

Representatives today (July 4th) approved the appointment of ten ministers nominated by Prime Minister Hailemariam, including a number of new appointments as well as several shifts of office. Among them is a Commissioner for the newly established National Planning Commission and a minister for the new Ministry of Environment Protection and Forestry. Earlier, Office of the Prime Minister announced that the Prime Minister had appointed Bereket Simon and Kuma Demeksa as Policy Studyand Research Advisor Ministers in the Prime Minister's Office. Ato Bereket had been Head of the Government Communication Affairs Office with the rank of Minister, and Kuma Demeksa, whose tenure ends this week, was the Mayor of the Addis Ababa City Administration.

The Prime Minister told the House of Representatives that Deputy Prime Minister Demeke Makonnen was dropping his additional post as Minister ofEducation in which he would be replaced by Shiferaw Shigute, previously the Chief Administrator of Southern Nations, Nationalities and Peoples' Region. Redwan Hussien, previously Public Mobilization and Participation Advisor minister to the Prime Minister and Head of EPRDF Secretariat, hasreplaced Bereket Simon as Minister of Government Communications Affairs Office. Workneh Gebeyehu, Commissioner of the Federal Police Commission, is appointed Minister of Transport, replacing Diriba Kuma.

Makonnen Manyazewal, previously Minister of Industry, has been replacedby Ahmed Abetew, Deputy Chief Administrator of the Amhara Regional State and Head of the Amhara Regional State's Trade and Industry Bureau. Ato Makonnen is appointed Commissioner of the newly established National Planning Commission. Roman Guebre Sellasie, Member of Parliament and Government Whip has been appointed Chief Government Whip in the House of People's Representatives, replacing Aster Mamo. July 7, 2013: Ethiopia moves anti-aircraft missiles near the GERD' Hydro politics: The Ethiopian regime has moved several surface-to-air-missiles (SAMs) 5km (3 miles) near the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam(GERD), in what is a clear sign of military escalation with arch-foe Egypt. The placing of SAMs near the GERD comes amid Egyptian opposition leaders, who now make up the majority in the new Transitional Government after the ouster of Morsi, suggested in sabotaging the dam on live television.

"I think by placing these weapons near the dam, the regime is signaling toEgypt that it's in no mood to compromise and will continue with its unilateral policies", said a professor in Addis Ababa University who declined to be named for fear of reprisals. He added, "The danger with TPLF's latest bravado is it's forcing Egypt into a corner, making them morelikely to utilize their air and ground superiority; especially since their country's existence is at stake."

Recently, reports surfaced that Addis Ababa was in negotiating for the possible delivery of 18 Su-30K fighter jets to Ethiopia, in what many observers see is a knee-jerk reaction to Egypt's threats of military action.Meanwhile, Air Marshal Reda Mahmoud Hafez Mohamed, the Commanderof Egyptian Air Force, is reportedly preparing his forces for possible air strikes against Ethiopia sometime by September 11, sources familiar withthe situation have disclosed.

Over 50 industries in the industrial city of Gelan, a town in the suburb ofAddis Abeba have been nonoperational due to lack of electric power.

Mulgeta Kebede, Mayor of the town told the Addis Abeba based Reporter Newspaper that the problem of electricity has reached a critical level. He said lack of power is discouraging and demoralizing investors who have invested much into their businesses. An investor engaged in marble tradesaid recurrent power outage is affecting the manufacturing process and costing him more. Another businessman said he had to make over 200 employees redundant due to problems caused by power outages.

July 10, 2013: Ethiopian Army units located in Somalia's Bay region (southern Somalia) have begun to pull out of several villages and small bases. The Ethiopians left two military posts in the town of Baidoa as wellas garrisons in Bardale and Qansahdheere. Pro-Somali government forces(TNG, Transitional National Government) have replaced the departing Ethiopian units.

July 11, 2013: The UN reported that its observers believe a refugee crisisis emerging in southern Somalia. Fighting between rival militias in the Kismayo area has forced several thousand people to flee. Kenyan militaryforces are still the largest African Union peacekeeping (AMISOM) contingent in and around Kismayo. A contingent of troops form Sierra Leone is also deployed in Kismayo.

July 12, 2013: During an extended presidential visit to Africa, U.S. President Barack Obama deplored sub-Saharan Africa's lack of electrical generation capacity. Obama strictly focused on the problem and what African nations could do to improve their distribution grids and create newelectrical generation capacity. This is not a new American policy. For several decades the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) has provided sub-Saharan African nations with advice on how to improve their electrical power generation systems. USAID has also assisted in numerous electrical production and distribution construction projects. The U.S. has pushed for increases in electrical production for many reasons. Refrigeration improves diets. Reliable lighting extends the school day so children can do homework. The bottom line is that U.S. support for increasing sub-Saharan electrical production is not new. In fact, the U.S. sees its advocacy as humanitarian and rather apolitical. However, that is not how Ethiopians and Egyptians hear it. In both countries the American leader's comments are read as supportive of Ethiopia's position in the on- going Ethiopia-Egypt dispute over Ethiopia's Nile River dam projects. Egyptians also note that President Obama's father was a Kenyan and Kenya and Ethiopia are close allies. The Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam(GERD) on the Blue Nile will create a reservoir with almost 75 billion cubicmeters of water. The Ethiopian government has promised Egypt that it willfill the reservoir very slowly and it will not affect the amount of water which reaches Egypt. Ethiopia has also reiterated its offer to sell Egypt part-ownership in the dam and guarantee Egypt a share of the electricity generated by the dam. (Austin Bay)

Ethiopian Airlines says it is to continue operating its fleet of Boeing 787 Dreamliners after one caught fire at London’s Heathrow airport on Friday. Investigators are trying to find the cause of the blaze, which took place months after the aircraft wasgrounded worldwide over a battery problem. Heathrow’s runways were closed for 90 minutes on Friday, and some evening flights delayed by more than six hours. Ethiopian Airlines took delivery of four Dreamliners in 2012.

July 16, 2013: World Bank Board approves investigation into allegations ofbankrolling human rights abuses in Ethiopia - IDI' The World Bank's Boardof Executive Directors has approved a full investigation into whether the Bank has breached its policies in Ethiopia and contributed to a government program of forced population transfers known as 'villagization.' The Bank's move follows the resolution of a five-month standoff with the Ethiopian government, which had publicly threatened in May not to cooperate with the investigation. A preliminary report issued by the Bank's internal watchdog, the Inspection Panel, recommended the investigation in February after receiving a complaint submitted by indigenous people from Ethiopia's Gambella region. The complaint alleges that the Anuak people have suffered grave harm as a result of the World Bank-financed Promoting Basic Services Project (PBS), which has provided 1.4 billion USD in budget support for the provision of basic services to theEthiopian Government since 2006. The Bank approved an additional $600million for the next phase of the project on September 25th – one day after the complaint was filed. A legal submission accompanying the complaint, prepared by Inclusive Development International (IDI), presents evidence that the PBS project is directly and substantially contributing to the Ethiopian Government's Villagization Program, which has been taking place in Gambella and other regions of Ethiopia since 2010 and involves the relocation of approximately 1.5 million people.

According to the Villagization Action Plan of the Gambella regional government, villagization is a voluntary process, which aims to increase access to basic services, improve food security, and "bring socioeconomic and cultural transformation of the people." The services and facilities supported through PBS are precisely the services and facilities that are supposed to be provided at new settlement sites under the Villagization Program. The complainants, on the other hand, describe a process of intimidation, beatings, arbitrary arrest and detention, torture in military custody, rape and killing. Dispossessed of their fertile, ancestral lands anddisplaced from their livelihoods, Gambellans have been forced into new villages with few of the promised basic services and little access to food orland suitable for farming, which has in some cases led to starvation. They believe that many of the areas where people have been forcibly removed have been awarded to domestic and foreign investors. In its official response to the complaint, the Bank's management denies any connectionbetween PBS and villagization. The Inspection Panel, however, found that this not a "tenable position." The Panel notes that, "the two programs depend on each other, and may mutually influence the results of the other." It found that there is a "plausible link" between the two programs but needs to engage in further fact-finding to make definitive findings.

The report also noted that the Bank is required under its policies to ensurethat the proceeds of any loan are used for the purposes for which the loanwas granted, and that it must assess project risks and report to the Boardon actions taken to address those risks. The Panel reports that the case “raises issues of potential serious non-compliance with Bank policy.” It recommends a full investigation in order to determine conclusively whether or not the Bank complied with its policies and procedures, including those intended to protect the rights of indigenous peoples and those subjected to involuntary resettlement. David Pred, IDI Managing Associate, welcomed the decision of the World Bank Board of Directors. “The next step is to ensure that the Inspection Panel has free and unfettered access to Gambella, without putting local people at risk of reprisals,” he stated. “I’m not sure if that is possible given the level of repression that exists today in Ethiopia, but I am sure the Panel will do itsbest under the circumstances to confirm the facts and keep people safe.”

July 18, 2013: EU urges Ethiopia to release journalists, revise terror law'

ADDIS ABABA (Reuters) - A European Union parliamentary delegation urged Ethiopia to release journalists and opposition politicians jailed underan anti-terror law, and revise the legislation that critics say is used to stifle dissent. Ethiopian opposition parties routinely accuse the government of harassment and say their candidates are often intimidated in polls. All but two of the 547 seats in the legislature are held by the ruling party. Critics point to a 2009 anti-terrorism law that makes anyone caught publishing information that could induce readers to commits acts of terrorism liable to jail terms of 10-to-20 years. Last year, an Ethiopian court handed sentences of eight years to life to 20 journalists and opposition figures on charges of conspiring with rebels to topple the government. "We note flaws in the impartiality of the judicial system," said Barbara Lochbihler, who led the delegation to the Horn of Africa country. "Therefore we also call on the Ethiopian authorities to release all journalists, members of the opposition and others arbitrarily detained or imprisoned for exercising their legitimate right to freedom of expression, freedom of association, as well as freedom of religion and belief." Government officials were not immediately available for comment, but they often dismiss claims that they are cracking down on dissent. They say the law is needed to fight separatist rebels and armed groups they sayare backed by arch-foe Eritrea.

The delegation's visit came after thousands staged an anti-government procession in June in the first large-scale protest since the disputed May- 2005 election ended in street violence that killed 200 people. A smaller protest in the northern towns of Gondar and Dessie followed over the weekend, and opposition officials said dozens have since been detained ever since. The delegation said they were denied access to a prison wheresome of the journalists and politicians were being held. "We acknowledge and recognize the highly volatile situation of Ethiopia's immediate neighborhood," Lochbihler said. "However, when we look at the anti- terrorism legislation in this country, you think (about) how this legislationis implemented and being understood and being interpreted. This leads toa lot of arrests." Analysts say the opposition may have found renewed vigor since the death last year of Prime Minister Meles Zenawi, who was praised abroad for delivering strong economic growth but criticized for keeping a tight grip on power for 21 years.

July 18, 2012: RUMOUR: Berhane GuebreKristos becomes the de factochief of TPLF’

The top leadership of the ruling Tigray Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) ishonoring, for now, Meles Zenawi’s wish to select Berhane GuebreKristosas the next party chief and prime minister, sources reported today.

However, the appointment of Berhane, who is a close personal friend of Meles and currently Foreign Minister of State, is expected to face seriouschallenges from the other TPLF leaders once Meles is out for good, our sources added. Despite Woyanne propaganda chief Bereket Simon’s blatant lie, Meles is currently in Brussels at St. Luc University Hospital’s Intensive Care Unit (ICU) on the second floor, an eyewitness told Ethiopian Review. Even if he feels better enough to return to Ethiopia, he is done as a leader. There is also a strong suspicion that Meles in fact hasbeen dead since Sunday, and that the TPLF regime is not announcing his death because they want to buy time until there is an agreement on a new leader. Meanwhile, yesterday, Meles Zenawi’s wife Azeb Mesfin has obtained an Italian visa, ER source in the Italian embassy informed. WhileBereket Simon, Berhane GuebreKristos, Teodros Adhanom and other friends are at Meles’s bedside, why is his wife Azeb traveling to Italy?

July 18, 2013: Ethiopian troops 'begin pullout' from key Somalian city'

ADDIS ABABA (AFP) – Ethiopian troops who entered Somalia in November2011 to help fight Al-Qaeda linked Shabab insurgents have begun their withdrawal from the key central city of Baidoa, the foreign ministry said Thursday. "Ethiopia's troops are pulling out of Baidoa and AMISOM will betaking over," foreign affairs ministry spokesman Dina Mufti told AFP, referring to the African Union force in Somalia. Ethiopia has for several months said it plans to hand over control of the city to AMISOM, whose 17,700-strong force is backing Mogadishu's weak central government.

Ethiopian troops captured Baidoa from the extremists last year, and AU troops later joined them. "There is a firm schedule for Ethiopian troops to gradually withdraw from all of its operations this year on the basis that Shebab will not come back and take over. This requires strategy and coordination to ensure a smooth transition," said Dina. In mid-March, Ethiopia pulled its troops from the southern town of Hudur without warning, leading to the Shebab immediately taking back the town, their first real military success since they were chased out of Mogadishu in August 2011. The surprise and unexplained withdrawal from Hudur sparked fears that Ethiopia's pullout would lead to a security void and a possible return of the Shebab. There are also doubts that AMISOM has theresources to take over the crucial role played by the Ethiopians.

A contingent of Kenyan troops which entered Somalia in October 2011 hassince been integrated into AMISOM, but Ethiopia's forces -- estimated between 3,000 and 8,000 troops -- remained independent, with Addis Ababa footing the bill. Despite recent infighting inside the Shebab -- including the recent killing of top leaders in a bloody purge -- analysts warn the extremist group is far from defeated. The Shebab have lost a string of towns to the AU force, which fights alongside government soldiers. However, key Shebab strongholds remain, including rural southern and central Somalia, while another faction has dug into remote and rugged mountains in the northern, semi-autonomous Puntland region.Last month Shebab suicide commandos carried out a brazen daylight attack on a fortified United Nations compound, while a series of bombings by insurgents a week ago left five dead in the capital. Somalia has been ravaged by conflict since January, 1991 but a new UN-backed governmenttook power last year, ending eight years of transitional rule by a corruption-riddled administration.

July 20, 2013: 'We will take action to guarantee our water security' -Egyptian FM'

Bloomberg (Cairo) – Egypt will try reach a solution for its conflict with Ethiopia about a dam on the Nile river, Egyptian Foreign Minister Nabil Fahmy said. "We will take action to guarantee the water security of Egypt and preserve our rights in the waters of the Nile," he told a televised pressconference in Cairo today. "We call on the Ethiopian side to respond." Ethiopia this year decided to proceed with the construction of the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam, planned as Africa's largest hydro power plant. Mohammed Mursi, the Egyptian president who was ousted in an army coup this month, had been accused by his opponents of having no plan fordealing with the Ethiopian dam project.

Side note: The interim government of Egypt has asked Ethiopia to participate in a new series of talks about dam projects on the Nile River.The Egyptian government indicated that it hopes to reach an agreementwith Ethiopia on Nile water rights. Egypt wants Ethiopia to come to Cairoto discuss the consequences of Ethiopia's dam projects. The Egyptian diplomatic position is quite different from the previous government's threats of war.

July 20, 2012: Azeb Mesfin arrives in Rome; Sebhat Nega back on theTPLF saddle'

Reliable sources told that Ethiopian dictator Meles Zenawi's wife, Azeb Mesfin, went to Rome, Italy, last night. Two days ago, had been reported that she receives an Italian visa. It is believed that Azeb left the country to escape from Sebhat Nega whom she forced out of the ruling party's topleadership in 2009. She also kicked him out of his chairmanship of the multibillion-dollar conglomerate entitled 'Endowment Fund for the Rehabilitation of Tigray (EFFORT)' around the same time. Ever since MelesZenawi's absence in the past two weeks, Sebhat Nega has been trying to come back as the TPLF kingmaker. It was Sebhat who engineered Meles Zenawi's rise to power and he was the second most powerful figure in the ruling party until he was humiliated and kicked out by Azeb. Sebhat is saidto have the support of key TPLF leaders, including Tsegaye Berhe, Abay Woldu, General Sa'are Mekonnen, and Getachew Assefa, among others.

Sebhat Nega has no interest to replace Meles Zenawi, according to observers, but he wants to restore his honor and reclaim his status as thekingmaker. Although Meles's choice as the next TPLF chief is Berhane Gebrekiristos, Sebhat is vehemently against it, our sources said. In the midst of all this power struggle inside the ruling party, the regime currently has no leader. The so-called “deputy prime minister,” Hailemariam Desallegn, is a puppet with no power. He is currently in China to attend some meeting. That could be an excuse for him NOT to get caught in the middle of a potentially bloody power struggle among hisTPLF masters.

July 21, 2013: The Kenyan government and the East African Inter- Governmental Authority on Development (IGAD) of which Ethiopia is a member, had used a new economic analytic method to evaluate the economic impact of pastoral tribes and livestock raising in East Africa. Statisticians argued that traditional metrics use inputs and outputs based on farming and business-type livestock operations. African pastoralists usedifferent methods. The pastoralists are very entrepreneurial and do not rely on the government to support their markets. Pastoralists in neighboring countries operate trading networks – in other words, agricultural export businesses. They use cattle-raising methods which maximize the returns of marginal lands. In plain language, they can raise cattle and make money in dry conditions. The old metrics often failed to account for pastoralist adaptability. The government employed the new metrics (“total economic valuation” is the buzz phrase) and the new metrics indicated that pastoralist cattle-raising contributes over twice as much to the Kenyan economy than official estimates which relied on the traditional methodology. Many argue that several African countries have under-valued pastoralists; urban elites regard them as backward.

Governments, as a result, develop policies that encourage pastoralist tribes to adopt other socio-economic life-styles. This can backfire. Onecommentator noted, with irony, that pastoralists have turned the new African urban areas into markets for their meat and dairy products.

Pastoralists are vulnerable to raiders and cattle rustlers. Security officials in Kenya, Uganda and Ethiopia devote a great deal of time and money to providing police protection and security surveillance in their respective pastoralist regions. Media coverage tends to focus on the vulnerabilities and security costs. The new economic analyses suggest that rural securityoperations in pastoralist regions are well worth the money. (Austin Bay)

WASHINGTON D.C. -- On the one-year anniversary of the crackdown on Muslim protestors for peacefully advocating for their religious freedom rights, the U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom (USCIRF) calls on the Ethiopian government to release 29 individuals who have beendetained and put on trial.

July 25, 2012: TPLF leadership holds meetings under extremely tightsecurity’

While the state propaganda machine is sending out conflicting informationabout dictator Meles Zenawi's condition, there has been a series of meetings in Addis Ababa at Arat Kilo over the past five days involving Central Committee members of the ruling Tigrean People Liberation Front(TPLF). Bereket Simon, Hailemariam Desalegn and other non-Tigrean members of the Woyanne junta have not been participating in any of the meetings, which are being held under extremely tight security. Azeb Mesfin is also absent, even though she is a central committee member, our sources added. Tension is running high as some of the TPLF old- guards such as Sebhat Nega are being bullied by Meles Zenawi's personal recruits who are controlling the meetings, including the security. The meetings are co-chaired by Berhane Gebrekristos and Getachew Assefa, according to Ethiopian Review sources. It is all Tigrean affairs. The other puppet groups such as OPDO and ANDM are excluded from the discussionon the future of the Woyanne tribal junta… stay tune for more update Meanwhile, The Reporter, whose editor is close to the ruling party, reported today that Meles is in a foreign country getting rest. He didn't disclose the name of the country for "security" reason. It seems Amare Aregawi is once again "circling the wagon" to protect his beloved TPLF.

July 27, 2013: Ethiopia Offers Electricity in Exchange for Dialogue:Minister Osman Saleh'

TN: Eritrea's Foreign Minister, Osman Saleh disclosed that his country politely declined. Ethiopia's latest ploy to seduce Eritrea into negotiation with a 250MW free electric power offer. In a seminar he conducted last week at the annual festival of Eritrean community members in London, Minister Saleh explained that Ethiopia tried very hard to sell the proposal through Russia, Qatar and Turkey. Minister Osman, however, clarified thatEritrea's one and only one condition to enter into dialogue or normalize relation is for Ethiopia willingly vacate its troops out of sovereign Eritrean territory including the town of Badme.

As President Affewerki made it clear through its envoy at the African Union on the January 28th AU summit, normalization of relation can startin the afternoon as long as Ethiopia withdrew from Eritrean territories including Badme in the morning hours. Minister Saleh further underlined that the problem with Ethiopia has nothing to do with the issue of "political will" or "dialogue" and cannot be characterized as a deadlock asthe border dispute between the two countries has been resolved throughFinal and Binding arbitration ten years ago. What is left now is to see theend of Ethiopia's occupation of sovereign Eritrean territories as it cannot be justified legally or politically. The minister finally concludes that the various ploys played by Ethiopia and its handlers to frustrate Eritrea intosubmission with sanctions and threats of sanctions has been futile in thepast and won't do so in the future.

August 1, 2013: Tensions high between the Borena Community and Gov't'

ESAT News: The efforts of the government including Prime Minister Hailemariam Dessalgn to resolve its conflict with the Borena elders have been unsuccessful. The problem started after the government began to resettle Geri Communities of the Somali region and the residents of Borena Zone, South Ethiopia, have refused to cooperate with the government on any matter including the resettlement program. Just before the recent conflict of the two communities that took the lives of over 50 people from both communities, the Administrator of the Zone Kanu Jilo had told the residents of the Zone that the government had planned to resettle the Geri in Boerna Zone. The government went on withplan and made some administrative changes in the Zone by replacing officials of the Zone with new officials that came from the Oromia region. As the Bornea community refused to accept the new appointments, the government stalled its resettlement plan and in the mean time, the two communities have mediated and resolved their differences by themselves. The government that did not seem to be pleased with what has happened, arrested over 18 top officials of the Zone including the Zonal Administrator and Police Head for “inciting clan conflicts”. In the middle of the openings and disagreements, the Oromo Liberation Front (OLF) got the opportunity to come back in the Zone and carry out attacks. The Zone has been wrecked with conflicts. Last week, the Aba Geda of the Borena Community, Guya Geba and 10 other elders met with different officials of the government in Addis Abeba including thePrime Minister. They urged the government that the detained officials should be released first for proper negotiations to kick off. The government began to soften its position. The government last week promised the elders that it will first release the main officials of the Zone and the rest will be released within 14 days once the Court process is completed. The Borena communities refused to accept the government’s new conditions and urged that they all be released together. The elders have held another discussion with the Justice Minister. The outcomes of the discussion are not yet known. ESAT’s efforts to speak with the officialsof the Zone were unsuccessful.

August 2, 2013: Anti-Corruption Commission amending laws'

ESAT News: The Ethiopian Federal Ethics and Anti-corruption Commissionis amending three specific legislations, it has learnt. The new laws would take legal action on individuals that are suspected of fleeing the country after embezzling public’s money. The draft legislations to be amended include the new Anti-corruption Special and Information Law Proclamation, the reestablishment of the Federal Ethics and Anti- corruption Commission, and ratification of new corruption crimes. The Draft legislation has been presented to the pertinent governmental body and will soon be submitted to the Ministers’ Council before the Parliament enacts it next year. According to sources the articles that probe the private sector are included within the draft on the reestablishment of the Federal Ethics and Anti-corruption Commission (FEAC). The corruption law issued a decade ago did not allow FEAC to handle private sector's corruption crimes. It was limited to corruption occurring in government organisations, and was concerned with the private sector only when thereis involvement on state level corruption cases. According to the draft regulation, business enterprises managing finances mobilised from the public will be concerned by the new law as well as share companies involved in manufacturing, agriculture, trade, construction, transport, finance and others. Observers state that legislations alone are not enoughto fight corruption. The Commission has not shown further acts of fightingCorruption since it recently arrested and charged senior officials of the Ethiopian Customs and Revenue Authority (ECRA).

August 3, 2013: Insecurity in Addis Ababa, towns'

ESAT News: The presence and stationing of a vast number of Federal Police Force in Addis Abeba and other towns has caused anxiety among the populace, reporters have said. It is to be recalled that the Federal Police Force warned on Thursday that it would take actions if Ethiopian Muslims hold protests after Friday prayers. The organizers of the protest,Demtascehn Yesema (Let our voices be heard), have cancelled their protest overnight subsequent to the Police statement. Federal Police harassed and detained a few Muslim youth near Filweha, in Addis Abeba yesterday.

It has been learnt that the government will conduct mass arrest of those itsuspects are behind the protests before the end of the Ramadan fasting season. The nationwide anti government demonstrations and meetings called by the Unity for Democracy and Justice Party (UDJ) in Mekele, BahirDar, Jinka and Araba Minch cities on Sunday August 4, 2013 have also played a part in increasing the tensions. The cadres of the ruling party have continued bullying the residents of the towns not to take part in the protests and harass members of UDJ engaged in promotional works.

Members of the UDJ that have been detained in Mekelle have reportedly been released although those that in Bahir Dar have been told that they cannot promote Sunday's rally unless they show a "permission letter fromthe Bahir Dar Communication Bureau". Sources have learnt that UDJ has distributed flyers in Bahir Dar city that call the residents to take part on apeaceful rally.

Ethiopian government forces open fire on unarmed demonstrators throughout the country, killing 25 and injuring dozens more, according to Ethiopian activists who took part in the demonstrations. One witness saysat least one child was among the dead. He also stated government security forces arrested over 1,500 protesters on Friday. For over a year, Ethiopian Muslims have been holding peaceful protests and mosque sit-ins over the regime's human rights abuses against their community andinterference in their religion.

August 3, 2013: British firm Tullow Oil drills for Ethiopia’s first oil’Washington Post-Bloomberg News - By Eduard Gismatullin

Tullow Oil, the British explorer that found Kenya's first crude a year ago, is about to find out whether the resources extend into neighboring Ethiopia, a nation dependent on agriculture that's yet to discover any petroleum. Tullow, Africa Oil Corp. and Marathon Oil Corp. plan to complete their Sabisa well in western Ethiopia's South Omo Block this quarter. "The first discovery would be big news," said Martin Mbogo, Tullow's manager for Kenya, where its Ngamia well struck oil in March. "That would be historical for Ethiopia." Tullow, a London-based explorer, istargeting East Africa's Tertiary Rift, a geological fault that's yielded oil in Uganda as well as Kenya. For the company, an Ethiopian find may prove anew oil province. For the country, evidence of crude could help the government curb energy imports and diversify an economy that relied on coffee for about a quarter of export earnings in 2011. "We are importing every drop of oil and gas," Ethiopian Mines Minister Sinknesh Ejigu said last week. "We want to change this game."

Licenses won by Tullow and Africa Oil in Kenya and Ethiopia cover an areaalmost as large as the North Sea. Only 11 wells have been drilled there sofar, compared with more than 2,400 wells in the sea. While gas has been found in eastern Ethiopia, the partners are focusing on the western Omo region in the hope it will prove the extension of the petroleum system from Kenya. "The structure is almost identical to what we see at Ngamia,"Africa Oil Vice President of Business Development James Phillips said in aninterview in Addis Ababa. "This is a huge well for Ethiopia. This is really a key well."

The country needs energy to support economic growth. The East African nation still ranks 211th in terms of gross domestic product per capita, behind Mozambique and ahead of Togo, according to Central Intelligence Agency data. "A hit at the well would effectively bookend the string- of- pearls play from Ngamia to Sabisa," Brian Gallagher, a London-based analyst at Investec Bank, wrote in a report this month. "Sabisa representsa trigger well with the potential to open up a new basin." The governmenthas a right to 10 per cent of the South Omo Block should the companies discover oil, Gallagher said. The Sabisa well is targeting about 140 millionbarrels of oil resources, he said, citing Tullow estimates. Africa Oil's Phillips, who served as chief operating officer until September 9, declined to comment on the progress of the well, citing disclosure regulations. The Omo region is a "strange" area, he said. "A place like Omo is frankly the end of the Earth. It hasn't had any attention from oil and gas exploration ever."

The project partners are in talks with Kenya and Ethiopia to allow their contractor, China's BGP Inc., to conduct seismic studies in the border areacovering the Omo River wetlands. The border is currently closed and it takes days to transport equipment on dirt roads to cross at the nearest checkpoint. "It could be one of most prospective, interesting areas," Phillips said. "It's going to be a tricky area to work," which is similar to theMississippi River delta in Louisiana. The Kenya-Ethiopia frontier basin mayhold as much as 10 billion barrels of oil and gas resources, Nomura Holdings Inc. said in a January note. Tullow and Africa Oil plan to drill about 11 wells in the area this year, of which three will be in Ethiopia. Thearea is "10 times bigger than Tullow's Uganda acreage," Nomura said. TheSouth Omo block is "one of the golden blocks of the Tertiary Rift," the brokerage said.

August 5, 2013: Ethiopia sees Muslim anti-government violence during holy period; threats of protests on Eid' AP: ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia – Anti-government Muslims in Ethiopia are calling for mass demonstrations to be held on the religious day of Eid al-Fitr later this week to protest the arrests of 28 people on terror charges. The calls follow a weekend of violence in which three people were killed when security forces clashed with what police labeled Muslim "extremists." Hundreds of people held rallies near mosques in the capital, Addis Ababa, and some regional townson Friday and Saturday. Police in the Oromia region said some protesters fired guns at police. The state news agency said all three killed were policeofficers and that 11 people were injured during the hours-long unrest.

Muslim leaders, however, said that police stormed a peaceful protest andkilled about a dozen people.

August 7, 2013: WikiLeaks Docs - US embassy cables: US urges Ethiopia to back the Copenhagen climate accord' LONDON - On 2 February 2009, acable from Addis Ababa reports a meeting between the US undersecretaryof state Maria Otero and the Ethiopian prime minister, Meles Zenawi, wholeads the African Union's climate change negotiations. The confidential cable records a blunt US threat to Zenawi: sign the accord or discussion ends now. Zenawi responds that Ethiopia will support the accord, but has a concern of his own: that a personal assurance from Barack Obama on delivering the promised aid finance is not being honoured.

The failed Copenhagen climate change summit produced only a non- binding Accord, but the agreement suits US interests as it presents more chance of forcing China to act. US diplomats campaign hard around the world for support for the Accord. Here, the US bluntly urges Ethiopia, whose Prime Minister leads the African Union's climate negotiations. By November 2010, 140 nations have backed the Accord, at the upper end ofthe US target.(Source: Damian Carrington; The Guardian)

August 8, 2013: Ethiopia: widespread arrests reported after Eid protests'

(OPride) – Hundreds arrested, beaten, and tear gassed Thursday morningfollowing nationwide Eid el-fitr day protests, Muslim rights activists said.

Police began rounding up peaceful protesters returning home near the Ministry of Justice in Addis Ababa shortly after the Eid prayers concluded at the national stadium, according to eyewitness reports on Twitter. Thosedetained were ordered to sit on the ground inside the Ministry's compound, the reports said.

The state-run Ethiopian Television (ETV) cut its live coverage of the Eid ceremony abruptly as the prayers ended at Addis Ababa Stadium in the capital. At the conclusion of the prayer, activists can be heard chanting "Allah Akbar" in the background – forcing ETV to switch its feeds back toheadquarters for hourly news. In similar protests, police in the northern city of Dessie fired machine guns and tear gas, indiscriminately beating the protesters, according to a Facebook post by activist group, 'Let our voice be heared' (Dimtsachin Yisema). During and after Eid prayers, thegroup posted live updates in Amharic, including photos, from various locations around the country.

Most of the updates touted the success of a nationwide anti-government demonstration focused on a call for the removal of Ethiopian Islamic Affairs Supreme Council leaders, the Mejlis. "As of today, the illegally elected Mejlis leaders are dismissed by the public," one banner posted bythe group read.

Widespread crackdown and arrests were also reported inAwaday town, Eastern Oromia, and Illou-Abba Bora zone, in western Oromia. Thursday's arrests of Muslim community members in Ethiopia come less than a week after police gunned down some 16 civilians and arrested hundreds in Koffele district, south-central Oromia.

CNN News: An Ethiopian military cargo plane crashed at an airport in theSomali capital of Mogadishu early Friday, killing four crew members, African Union peacekeepers said. The plane "burst into flames immediately on crashing" at the international airport, according to the African Union Mission to Somalia. It was carrying arms to the African Union forces in Somalia when it crashed as it landed just before 8 a.m. local time, airport staff said. AMISOM expressed condolences to the government and people of Ethiopia. Established in 2007, the peacekeepingforce AMISOM has more than 17,000 personnel from across Africa helping the Somali government battle Islamist militants in the nation. Backed by the United Nations, its role is to help maintain peace and support Somalia's federal government, as the African nation struggles to emerge from more than two decades of conflict.

August 10, 2013: Ethiopia’s Ibrahim Jeilan Wins IAAF’s Silver in Men10,000 Race'

ERTA - Addis Ababa, Ethiopia: Ethiopian runner Ibrahim Jeilan came second in the men 10,000 meters long distance run of Moscow World Championships 2013. The winner of the race was, as was much anticipated earlier, Mo Farah of Britain. He won gold a time of 27min 21sec. Ibrahim Jeilan, the Ethiopian long distance runner, took the silverwhile Kenya's Paul Tanui finished third to win the bronze. The race beganat an easy pace over the first 2,000m after which the speed of the race appeared to have increased. The Kenyan Moses Tanui led the field for several laps. As the bell sounded, Farah stretched his legs forward, but Ethiopia's Ibrahim Jeilan did the same with strong pace. Yet at last Farahwon the race and add another championships gold to his name.

August 10, 2013: Kenya, Ethiopia Security Teams to Meet Amid AnxietyOn Lake Turkana'

By Mathews Ndanyi: Kenya and Ethiopia will hold a joint security peace meeting to restore calm along the border between the two countries following the killing of four police reservists on Lake Turkana. Police havealso been deployed on the Lake to flush out armed raiders who are still occupying three Islands of Lake Turkana after killings last week. Turkana North DC Erick Wanyonyi says security teams have been deployed to flushout the Merille militiamen from the Islands which are key fishing areas on the lake.

A series of border security meetings have been planned at Todonyang along the border. Senior police officers led by Director of Operations PhillipNdolo also visited areas around the lake to asses the security situation. "Its like the case of Migingo Islands on Lake Victoria because they have camped on the three deltas and displaced our fishermen,"said Wanyonyi who was speaking on phone. He said the three Islands were breeding areas for fish and they were located within Kenyan territory and far away from the border with Ethiopia but the heavily militiamen were living there illegally "We will now use force to flush them out of the islands and we have already warned the Ethiopian authorities to have them withdrawn or we will act,"said Wanyonyi. Wanyonyi said calm had returned to the areasnear the Lake and at Todonyang border point after the government deployed more than 150 GSU personnel to help quell tensions in the region. Four police reservists were abducted on Lake Turkana and shot dead by raiders from Ethiopia last week. Wanyonyi said marine police are using boats to patrol Lake Turkana where tension is still high following thekillings. "The government will in the next few days bring in more boats foruse by the police and we have also asked to have more officers to help us secure all areas on the lake,"said Wanyonyi. Wanyonyi said other security officers have been deployed along the border near Todonyang to prevent militia from Ethiopia from crossing into the country. Ethiopian authorities have promised to arrest those involved in the killings of the reservists, who were attacked while fishing on the lake. Several families have fled from their homes following the killings. The reservists were fishing on Lake Turkana when they went missing and their bodies were later found at Todonyang near the border. August 11, 2013: 40 Ethiopian trainee professionals seek asylum in SouthKorea'

About 40 young Ethiopian trainee professionals some of whom are the children and grand children of the Ethiopian war veterans who took part inthe 1950-53 war, have requested for a political asylum and their host country has handled their request without a hitch. The young professionals have been training in three fields: Mechanics, Electricity andWelding. A total of 40 Ethiopians, 10 of whom are females, have decided not to return to a repressive life in Ethiopia. They have also vowed to join democratic forces to expedite the downfall of the incumbent regime whichhas been in power since May, 1991. It has to be recalled that when SouthKorea came under communist invasion in 1950-3, Ethiopia was part of a UN multinational force that sided with South Korea and fought against thenorthern invaders. Almost 65 years later today, an affluent South Korea remembers the camaraderie, and pays tribute with a solemn gesture.

August 12, 2013: Tirunesh Dibaba makes it treble gold with 10,000mvictory at world athletics'

AFP Moscow (AFP): Ethiopian Tirunesh Dibaba produced an effortless masterclass in middle-distance running to win a third world 10,000m title at the World Athletics Championships on Sunday. Dibaba clocked 30min 43.37sec, with Gladys Cherono of Kenya taking silver (30:45.17), and Ethiopia's Belaynesh Oljira claiming bronze (30:46.98). Dibaba can rightlybe lauded as queen of the 10km event, having also won two Olympic golds over the distance. The 27-year-old missed the Daegu worlds in 2011 because of injury but has never lost in her 10 outings over 25 laps of the track. The self-proclaimed "baby-faced destroyer", a nickname she professes to adore, comes in the mould of male compatriots Haile Guebrselassie and Kenenisa Bekele. Four world golds (5,000m in 2003 and 2005, 10,000m in 2005 and 2007), three Olympic golds (the double in 2008 and 10,000m gold in 2012) as well as two 5,000m Olympic bronzes (2004 and 2012) is testimony to her dominance. She also has four golds and two silvers from the world cross-country championships.

The race itself played directly into Dibaba's hands, American Shalane Flanagan taking up the early running, followed by Japan's Hitomi Niiya, with Oljira and Dibaba close on their tails. The Kenyan trio did not featurethe 2011 world champion Vivian Cheruiyot, who is on maternity leave from the sport, but Emily Chebet, Cherono and Sally Chepyego were a powerful threesome on the track all the same. After five laps, a 10-strongpack had developed with the field strung out, lightning flashes and peels of thunder ripping over the Luzhniki Stadium. Flanagan, the 2008 Olympicbronze medallist, took them through the 3km mark in 9:20.85 as the rain began to fall before Niiya hit out on her own. She was soon reeled in by the pack, the 32-year-old Flanagan falling off the pace and Dibaba sitting on the Japanese runner's shoulder through the halfway marker. Although the pace was anything but electrifying, the pack was now cut to Niiya leading Dibaba and Oljira, the Kenyan trio and Bahrain's Ethiopian-born Shitaye Eshete. Chepyego and Eshete were next to fall off the Japanese's pace-setting, Dibaba looking completely untroubled. The rain eased off as the storm worked its way around the stadium and with two laps to go Niiya still had the lead. At 600 metres, Dibaba and Oljira briefly communicated and on the bell, the former bolted. She was chased down the back stretch by Cherono, the 2012 African champion over both 5000m and 10,000m making her debut at a global championship at the age of 30,but to no avail as the Ethiopian held out for a very comfortable win.

August 13, 2013: Mohammed Aman delivers first 800m medal for Ethiopiawith gold'

MOSCOW (AFP) – Mohammed Aman was outmuscled and jostled, but belied his diminutive size to produce a devastating sprint and claim a first-ever medal of any colour for Ethiopia in the world 800m by winning gold on Tuesday. The two-lap event had sadly been shorn of the sublime talents of the injured David Rudisha, the Kenyan who broke the world record in winning the Olympic title last year.But, in his absence, Mohammed Aman, the 19-year-old world indoor champion who has twice got the better of Rudisha, stepped into the void with some style. The race was bunched for all but the final 200 metres, fancied American Duane Solomon bossing his way into the front as Frenchman Pierre-Ambroise Bosse almost sideswiped Aman coming out of the first corner run in lanes.At the bell, American Nick Symmonds came racing through, Aman again muscled out of the way and then boxed in behind the leading American duo. The field spread with 200m to go in the run-in to the home strait.

Symmonds went wide around Solomon, but Aman worked to go wider andoutsprinted the American to the line for victory in 1min 43.31sec.

Symmonds held on for silver in 1:43.55, with a fast-advancing AyanlehSouleiman claiming bronze in 1:43.76, a first medal for Djibouti since Ahmed Salah won silver in the marathon in the 1991 Tokyo worlds.

Solomon, who finished fourth in the London Olympic final in a time that inall previous finals would have seen him win a medal, faded to sixth behindPoland's Marcin Lewandowski and fifth-place Briton Andrew Osagie.

August 14, 2013: Steeplechaser Sofia Assefa Follows in Olympian EshetuTura’s Footsteps'

MOSCOW IAAF-2013 – History was made in Russia’s Luzhniki Stadium as an Ethiopian made the podium in the steeplechase at a global championships for the first time ever on July 31, 1980, when Eshetu Tura took the bronze medal at the Moscow Olympic Games. Thirty-three years later, history repeated itself when one of his athletes, Sofia Assefa, also took steeplechase bronze in the same stadium at the 2013 athletics world championships on Tuesday night, becoming the first Ethiopian — male or female — to medal in that race at the biennial event. “Repeating Eshetu Tura’s achievement places me in the history books,” said Sofia, who also followed in his footsteps last year in London, when she became the first female steeplechaser from her nation to medal at the Olympics, earning bronze. “I’m very happy, praise God.” Sofia’s accomplishment in Moscow was made all the more dramatic after she fell at a jump during the race and recovered to finish in 9:12.84 behind Kenya’s African champion MilcahChemos and national champion Lydia Chepkurui, who ran 9:11.65 and 9:12.84.

August 15, 2013: Ethiopia: EU Parliament Identifies Wahabi and SalafiRoots of Global Terrorism - ERTA'

Ethiopia Radio and Television Agency - ADDIS ABABA by Zeryhun Kassa: It is not merely the faith or oil that flows out of Saudi Arabia. The oil-rich Arab state and its neighbors are busy financing Wahabi and Salafi militants across the globe. A recent report by the European Parliament reveals how Wahabi and Salafi groups based out of the Middle East are involved in the "support and supply of arms to rebel groups around the world." The report, released in June 2013, was commissioned by EuropeanParliament's Directorate General for External Policies. The report warns about the Wahabi/Salafi organisations and claims that "no country in the Muslim world is safe from their operations ... as they always aim to terrorise their opponents and arouse the admiration of their supporters." The nexus between Arab charities promoting Wahabi and Salafi traditions and the extremist Islamic movements has emerged as one of the major threats to people and governments across the globe. From Syria, Mali, Afghanistan and Pakistan to Indonesia in the East, a network of charities is funding militancy and mayhem to coerce Muslims of diverse traditions to conform to the Salafi and Wahabi traditions. The same networks have been equally destructive as they branch out of Muslim countries and attack targets in Europe and North America. Despite the overt threats emerging from the oil-rich Arab states, governments across the globe continue to ignore the security imperative and instead are busy exploiting the oil-, and at times blood-soaked riches. The European Parliament's report though is a rare exception to the rule where in the past the western governments have let the oil executives influence their foreign offices. From the United States to Great Britain, western states have gone to great lengths to ignore the Arab charities financing the radical groups, some of whom have even targeted the West with deadly consequences. While the recent report by the European Parliament documents the financial details connecting the Arab charities with extremists elsewhere, it is certainly not the first exposition of its kind.A 2006 report by the US Department of State titled, International Narcotics Control Strategy Report - Money Laundering and Financial Crimes, reported that "Saudi donors and unregulated charities have been a major source of financing to extremist and terrorist groups over the past25 years." One of the WikiLeaks documents, a cable from the US Consulate in Lahore also stated that "financial support estimated at nearly100 million USD annually was making its way to Deobandi and Ahl-e- Hadith clerics in the region from 'missionary' and 'Islamic charitable' organisations in Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates ostensibly withthe direct support of those governments."

The European Parliament's report estimates that Saudi Arabia alone hasspent over $10 billion to promote Wahabism through Saudi charitable foundations. The tiny, but very rich, state of Qatar is the new entrant to the game supporting militant franchises from Libya to Syria. The linkage between Saudi-based charitable organisations and militants began in the late 70s in Pakistan. A network of charitable organisations was setup in Pakistan to provide the front for channeling billions of dollars to fight the Soviets in Afghanistan. Since then the militant networks have spread globally, emerging as a major threat to international security. Charlie Wilson's War, a book by George Crile that was made into a movie, details the Saudi-militancy nexus as well as Ahmed Rashid's Taliban. While ordinary citizens in Afghanistan, Pakistan, and other countries have suffered the deadly consequences of militancy supported by the Wahabi and Salafi charitable organisations, the Saudi government had remained largely dormant. This changed in 2003 when militants attacked targets in Riyadh. Since then, the Saudi government has kept a close watch on the domestic affairs of charities, making it illegal to sponsor militancy, but thegovernment has done precious little to curtail activities by Saudi charities abroad. In fact, evidence, as per the European Parliament's report, suggests that Saudi and Qatar-based charities have been actively financing militants in Egypt, Syria, Libya, Mali, and Indonesia. Pakistan has suffered tremendously over the past three decades from domestic andforeign inspired militancy. The Soviet invasion in Afghanistan and the US- backed Afghan militancy forced Pakistan into a civil war that has continued to date. The faltering Pakistani economy did not help.

Successive governments have rushed to Saudi monarchs asking for loansand free oil in times of need. However, Saudi money comes bundled withSaudi propaganda and a license to convert Pakistanis to a more 'puritan',read Wahabi, version of Islam.

In late the 70s, Iranians also intensified their influence in Pakistan.While hardline Sunnis were being radicalised by the Wahabi influences from Saudi Arabia, Iranian influence on Pakistani Shias was also increasing. Andwhereas Pakistan did not need any further radicalization of its people, the Saudi-Iranian tussle spilled into the streets of Pakistan with devastating consequences for religious minorities and liberal streams of Sunni Islam.

At the same time, the economic collapse in Pakistan forced many to find jobs abroad. Millions of Pakistanis left for the Middle East, especially SaudiArabia. While the remittances kept their families and the Pakistani government afloat, the migrant workers returned to Pakistan after being radicalised during their stay in Saudi. They became the brand ambassadors for the Saudi-inspired Wahabi flavours of Islam, thus expediting the pace of radicalisation in Pakistan. Pakistan was equally vulnerable to foreign influences after the devastating earthquake in 2005 and floods in 2010 and 2011. The European Parliament's report revealed that these disasters provided Saudi and other Arab charities to channel millions of dollars in aid, of which an unknown amount was used to fund militant organisations who have broadened their reach in Pakistan resulting in over 45,000 violent deaths in the past few years alone.

Pakistanis have a very strong spiritual link with Saudi Arabia. However, they are suffering for the unbound devotion to the oil-rich state, which has done a poor job of curbing the financial support for militancy in Pakistan.Seeing the plight of violence stricken Pakistanis, one hopes that Saudi charities could be more charitable.

August 15, 2013: Aanolee Martyrs memorial monument and culturalcenter innaugurated’

Statue Type: Physical memorial

Statue Location: Hitosa District of Arsi ZoneRegion: Oromiya

Country: Ethiopia

News reports from the construction of the Aanolee Martyrs memorial monument and cultural center, which at that point has been brought to a standstill because of lack of building materials and funding. The statue of a hand holding a breast purportedly symbolize the suffering of women that were mutilated by the Ethiopian army during King Menelik’s territorialexpansion. An Oromo nationalist quotes as saying, the ‘Harma Muraa’ (breast cutting) and ‘Harka Mura’ (arms chopping) at Aanolee in Arsi region of Oromia epitomize the cruelty and barbarity of Menilik’s army, while it also captures the greatest human tragedy that Empire builder hadcarried out in expanding their empire. Today, in Oromia region, monuments are being built in memory of millions of innocent civilians murdered by Menilik II and his Army.” An article written by Yilma Bekele which is very critical of the monument, places it in Arsi Zone of Hitosa District in Oromia regional state.

August 17, 2013: Speculation: Junedin Sado, former governor of Oromia,was killed by the security' Unconfirmed reports told Ato Junedin Sado, anEthiopian politician and former governor of the state of Oromia was killedby under cover agents in Robbii, Shewa when he secretly returned to the country from Kenya. Junedin Sado was thrown out of the EPRDF EC and it's government due to his disagreement with certain policies that the ruling government imposed on the governing system and alleged accusation of involvement through his wife, Habiba Mohammed's plot of islamist extremism in the country. Sources haven't confirmed his death but eye witnesses are saying, he was killed in Robbii , Shewa when he secretly returned back to the country in July, 2013 after fleeing to Nairobi,Kenya with 8 other colleagues. Junadin was president of the Oromia region from 28 October 2001 until 6 October 2005 when he was replaced by Abadula Gemeda.
During his government, he was a share holder in killing and arresting, thousands of Oromo students in many parts of the region. The Oromo diaspora community had repeatedly warned him to stop working with thisgovernment, but he refused and continued his atrocities against his own people, but at the end, he lost his life at the very hands of the people, heserved for so many years. Junadin subsequently was appointed Transportand Communication Minister, which is the office he was holding when Prime Minister Meles Zenawi moved him to the Science and Technology Ministry October 2008. Following the 2010 general election, Junedin was appointed Minister of Civil Service. Ethiopian government eliminated him from the position of ministers when he subsequently rose his disagreement with the government. We show condolence to the families who lost their son, and tell the families who lost their children during his administration that one way or another, justice has reached your house. August 18, 2013: Ethiopia's Meseret Defar and Almaz Ayana at Moscow IAAF 5000 meters - Defar added yet another gold to her wins' MOSCOW IAAF-2013 - Meseret Defar added yet another global 5,000 metres gold toher bulging collection when she won the world title with a textbook performance on Saturday, aided by her Ethiopian team mates. Defar, twice Olympic champion and now double world champion, also has a worldsilver and three global bronzes in the event after an extraordinarily consistent run over the past nine years and she was never threatened in her latest assault. A pedestrian first half of the race briefly suggested some of the fast-finishers might be able to make a fight of it but with fourlaps to go Defar's team mate Almaz Ayana put her foot down and immediately spread the field. Poland's Dominika Nowakowska set the early pace in this race, when she completed the first 1000m split in 3:10.78 minutes. The Pole consolidated that early lead at the 2000m split.However, the balance of power in the race started to shift after that.

Ethiopia's Ayana took the initiative and secured the lead at the 3000m mark. Ayana, clearly running a tactical race for the East African team, wasstill in the lead at the 4000m. Defar exploited the platform which had been created by her compatriot and sealed what was ultimately an impressive win. By the bell it was just the two Ethiopians and Kenya's Mercy Cherono and Ayana played her role of domestique to perfection, towing Defar to the 200m mark when the favourite blasted clear to win with ease in 14 minutes 50.19 seconds Cherono came on to take silver in 14.51.22 ahead of Ayana (14.51.33). Ethiopia's Tirunesh Dibaba won the10,000 metres earlier in the week.

August 25, 2013: Egyptian Senior Army General Warns Ethiopia of MilitaryAction Over GERD'
General Abdel Fattah el-Sisi, Commander-in-Chief of the Egyptian Armed Forces and the Egyptian Ministry of Defense, has warned the Ethiopian regime of military action if they continue to build the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam, according to local Ethiopian newspapers. In a brief telephone call made on Saturday, General Sisi reiterated his country can not afford to lose even one drop of Nile water and warned Ethiopian officials that his military is prepared to use force if they did not abandon their plans for the controversial dam. Egypt, which receives the fewest annual rainfall in Africa, is concerned that the dam project would damageits ability to deliver drinking water to its over 85 million population. But Ethiopian officials have cemented their position of late and refuse to consider Egypt's dire water shortages. "The Renaissance Dam is here to stay. It is advisable for all actors of the political establishment in Egypt tocome to terms with this reality," said Getachew Reda, a spokesman for Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn. Adding more sense of urgency for Egypt, Ethiopia announced a few weeks ago that it had begunthe process of diverting the course of the Blue Nile River to its dam, raising fears over Egypt's long term water security and stability.

August 26th, 2013: Ethiopia - 14 victims of the Kofele massacre identified'
Local news: "Wolahi, Wolahi…" swears 85 year old Totolamo village barleyfarmer and cattle herder Hajji Abdinur Shifa when a reporter asked him if he know any terrorist hiding in his village. His face looks like a paint of sorrow and grief. His wife affectionately called by the villagers, Adiyo, wastoo fragile to talk about the August 3, 2013 blood bath that turned their agriculture and livestock rich village into an inferno. "My son took three bullets and died a day later at Sashemene general hospital. The body thatwas weakening by fasting could not respond well to treatment and he succumbed to his wounds without saying goodbye. His killers (federal police commandos) did not allow us entry to the hospital. My son Abdulkarim is dead but he will live in my heart until I join him in paradise…," the respected elder said wiping his tears with a piece of garment. On that fateful day, 3 August 2013, Abdulkarim Abdinur Shifa, 39, was at Erob Gebeya mosque loading onto his van sacks of barley, corn, and potato donated by farmers to be distributed among the needy inthe city of Sashemene for Eid-al-fitr celebration.

When he was about to leave, bullets started raining down and the scream of women and children filled the salubrious air of Totolamo. Tigre people Liberation Front gunmen in police uniform massacred eleven people including an elderly imam and an infant. The tragedy touched every household from Totolamo to Kofele in southwest oromyya. In the land famed for its sylvan beauty, despite the aroma of ripe corn, the stench of death still hangs in the air. The approach of the delightful month of September did not lift the gloom of the August blood bath. According to our sources from Sashemene general hospital, currently the death toll stands at sixteen- all Muslims and close relatives. August 26, 2013: Ethiopia's economy to grow 7 pct, could be faster: WB’

ADDIS ABABA (Reuters) - Ethiopia's economy is likely to grow 7 percent ayear over the next three to five years, below its average of the last decade, and to push that rate higher, the government needs to change policy to encourage private investment, the World Bank said. While 7 percent GDP growth would be the envy of finance ministers in Western economies, it would fall short of an average rate of 10.6 percent that Ethiopia said it achieved in the last 10 years with its state-interventionist policies. It would also be insufficient to meet Ethiopia's target of reaching middle-income status by 2025. The bank says that goal is still within reach, however, if the government shifts the balance from public to more private investment. "We still think growth could be robust - in the order of7 percent in the medium term would not be unexpected," said Lars Christian Moller, the bank's lead economist in Ethiopia, in an interview on Monday. The World Bank estimates Ethiopia's economy grew 7 percent in the fiscal year July 8, 2012 to July 7, 2013, below the government's 10 percent estimate. Moller said Ethiopia's $43 billion economy would need torepeat its performance of the last decade to become a middle income country - defined by the bank as one with a gross national income (GNI) per capita of around $1,430 - in 12 years. The World Bank put Ethiopia's GNI at $410 in 2012.

August 27, 2013: China Builds Wind Power Facility in Ethiopia’

Ethiopian Radio and Television Agency (Addis Ababa) Chinese manufacturer Dongfang Electric is tipped to build a 120MW wind power Grid at Aysha, in western Ethiopia, with funding from the China Exim Bank. It Bank support, in partnership with Ethiopia's state-owned Metal and Engineering Corporation. This is in addition to the 51MW already turning at Adama I with Gold wind turbines and 153MW under construction at Adama II, powered by Sany. Both projects were awardedto HydroChina International Engineering Company in a joint-venture withChinese construction group CGCOC and backed by the Exim Bank.

HydroChina also helped draw up Ethiopia's wind and solar energy master plan in 2012. By contrast, the sole European initiative is the 120MW Ashegoda facility, which French manufacturer Vergnet is currently completing using Vergnet and Alstom turbines, with funding from France. The European Investment Bank has also expressed interest in backing another 120MW at Aysha. The project would then be open to internationaltender. Source: Wind Power Monthly

August 28, 2013: PMHD warns opposition once again’

News tips: Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn has once again warnedEthiopian opposition parties during a speech he made in the government coordinated conference under the theme ‘to promotion of religious culture of tolerance, respect of the constitution and coexistence’opened on at the African Union Conference Hall in Addis Ababa. PM Hailemariam said “if some opposition do not stop supporting the activitiesof some extremists and terrorists, the government will take measures according to the constitution". PMHD warned that his government will take measures on all that make anti-peace activitiesand crushing the activities of"forces of destruction" will also continue.

Addressing the Conference, the new Patriarch of the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Church (EOTC), Abune Mathias, said that all anti-peace activities need to be condemned. President of the Ethiopian Islamic AffairsSupreme Council, Sheik Kiyar Mohammed, has on his part said the cultureof tolerance has to be passed down to generations. It was reported that the speech of the Prime Minister revealed the government has not regretted its violent actions on Muslim protesters and is even ready to take more forceful actions. He also told that the option of talking to the imprisoned leaders of the "Let our Voice be Heard Movement" or settling itpeacefully has not been raised during the Conference. The government's aim of the conference is to gain support from both religious leaders for thejustification of it's violently taken actions and that will be taken. Various other government officials and guests spoke during the event.

August 30, 2013: Lalibela, the UNESCO World Heritage site preservationproject launched'
ER: On the edge of the Ethiopian highlands, craftspeople are preserving the rock-hewn churches of Lalibela. The Lalibela rock hewn church designated UNESCO World Heritage site in 1978, the 11 monolithic churches date back to the late 12th century and remain a place of pilgrimage for Ethiopian Orthodox christians. But many parts of the churches are in poor condition, suffering from structural weaknesses and surface deterioration. In 2012, recognizing the need to preserve these structures for future generations, the U.S. Ambassadors Fund for Cultural Preservation awarded the World Monuments Fund (WMF) a $675,000 grant for a 30-month preservation project. Through projects at two of the 11 churches, WMF is training craftspeople in historic preservation techniques and producing a conservation manual with technical guidelines.WMF is working to establish a permanent team of conservation specialists dedicated to the ongoing maintenance and preservation of Ethiopia's stonesanctuaries.

Ethiopia arrests top security officialal Woldeselassie Woldemichael, the Director of the domestic intelligence department of the National Intelligence and Security Agency (NISS) has been arrested on "suspicion of corruption". The Federal Ethics and Anti-corruption Commission of Ethiopia (FEACC) arrested Woldeselassie for possessing a "wealth with anunknown source, corruption and abusing and misusing his power".
Although local media reported he was detained on suspicion of corruption,there have been reports that Woldeselassie was at loggerheads with the head of NISS, Getachew Assefa. NISS is has the Internal/domestic and External/international branches. On a recent meeting of the TPLF held in Mekelle, there was a heated argument between the two when Woldeselassie accused Getachew of being a "servant of the business tycoon, Shekih Mohammed Al Amoudi". As a result, Getachew Assefa had Woldeselassie removed from his post accusing him of corruption. Months after his suspension, Woldeselassie has been detained on suspicion of corruption last Friday. The detainee was remanded for 14 days in custody as the FEACC has not finished its investigation. Local media outlets have reported that Ayechew Tefeta, who was the Internal Department Head of NISS before Woldeselassie was detained and charged of corruption last year. Woldeselassie is a member of the TPLF and is board member of the Tigray Development Association (TDA). Observers believe FEACC has beenused as a tool of attacking internal dissenters and opposition figures. It's now widely speculated that Wolde Selassie's arrest may be a prelude to the arrest of former First Lady Azeb Mesfin, usually known "The Mother of Corruption"

September 2, 2013: Ethiopia police block rally, beat activists'
(AP) An opposition leader in Ethiopia says police have prevented his groupfrom staging a rally to demand the release of jailed activists. Yilkal

Getnet, who heads the opposition Blue party, said Sunday that police raided their headquarters in the capital, Addis Ababa, on Saturday night and beat up some party senior members. He said police also seized banners and equipment that would have been used during a street proteston Sunday. Yilkal says the rally was meant to highlight the continued detention of some journalists and Muslim activists. Ethiopia has charged atleast 28 Muslims activists with terrorism. But those activists say they havebeen unfairly targeted by the government, which they accuse of harassment. A spokesman for Ethiopian police was not immediately available for comment.

September 5, 2013: Addis Ababa University's expansion project faces ahurdle'

ESAT News: Started in 2008, the Addis Abeba University Expansion Project has been underway by CDS Consultancy and 15 other contractors with a budget of 859,514,332 birr allocated by the Ethiopian government. The project was set to be completed within a minimum of 2 months and 15 days and a maximum of 49 months. According to insiders, out of the 15 different constructions underway the physical phase of two buildings has been stooped on the first week of January 2013 after it reached 43-45% of completion. This has led the University to lose 445 million birr in hard cash. AAU is now preparing to open a new tender for the construction. This new tender has not been in the budgets and plans of the University and will cost it an additional of 500million birr. Several other projects that the University started have not also been completed. Arecent study by the General Auditor has found that huge sum of money is lost in most universities of the Country due to low quality tenders for expansion projects. Sources say corruption has been rife in AAU in relationto expansion projects. Efforts to learn if the Federal Ethics & Anti-Corruption Commission has launched an investigation on the issue andalso get the views of government officials have been unsuccessful.

September 5, 2013: International Water Experts Say, "Ethiopia's BiggestDam Oversized".

(IRN) International Rivers Network (IRN) has published a leaked report bythe international panel of experts charged with reviewing project documents for the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam (GERD). The summary of their report describes a number of outstanding concerns raised by the non-binding panel, including the inadequacy of the hydrological-impacts study (a key document for understanding how the dam will affect people and ecosystems downstream).

Is that a Proxy Campaign against Ethiopia and the GERD?

According to the GERD National Panel of Experts (NPoE) denounces the International River Network (IRN) Experts "psychologized" Ethiopia's decision to build the GERD thus: "Egypt has long held the majority rightsto the Nile – a situation that especially angers Ethiopia, which is the source of 85% of the river's waters."

Is it only in Ethiopia? Prior to 1950s large scale dams worldwide did not number more than 5000. By 2000 large scale dams were more than 40,000. As of 2006, they stood at over 50,000. International River Networks' campaigns notwithstanding, big dams are there to grow, especially in the developing world. So, given these trends what is IRN talking about, except to single out a single country, Ethiopia, and treat it as pariah and discourage its progress? Ethiopia never forgets the pains it had to bear due to its geography. Ethiopia has endured centuries of invasions and subversions by powers from far and close that aspired to control the headwaters of the Nile. Ethiopia has been prevented physicallyfrom accessing its water resources by keeping it busy with wars, direct orproxy wars.

September 6, 2013: A Farmer from Ethiopia may be the WORLD OLDESTliving person'

The world's oldest man found in Ethiopia, a local reporter claims – BBCNews'

Local news: At an estimated 160 years of age, Dhaqabo Ebba, a retired farmer and well-known community elder from the Oromia region in Ethiopia, could be the oldest living person ever. An Ethiopian reporter claims to have discovered the world's oldest living man. Retired farmer Dhaqabo Ebba claims to have clear memories of Italy's 1895 invasion of the country. In an interview with regional Oromiya TV, he provided so much detail on the changes of power in his local area that reporter Mohammed Ademo has become convinced that Dhaqabo must be at least 160 - 46 years older than the oldest ever recorded man in the world. 'When Italy invaded Ethiopia I had two wives, and my son was old enoughto herd cattle,' he said at home near Dodola. During the 30-minute interview, Ebba recalls life under previous Ethiopian rulers — and notes a relative improvement for his community under EPRDF, particularly in areas of road transportation and telecommunication. He says in his generation it took about eight days on horseback to visit Addis Ababa, Ethiopia's capital, some 240 kms away from his village. There is no way ofverifying Ebba Dhaqabo's age, but Mohammed Ademo notes that in an oral society like the Oromos, "every time an elder dies, a library is lost.

Obbo Ebba Dhaqabo is one such library from whom so much can still bepreserved".

September 6, 2013 More than a million people live off begging in Ethiopia’

ESAT News: A study conducted for the Ministry Social and Labour Affairs of Ethiopia titled ‘Maligners of Social Life’ found that begging is putting a dark shadow on the country and is also becoming a security concern for locals and tourists. In the ending Ethiopian fiscal year alone; over 300 thousand people in Amhara region and 200 thousand in Tigray region are engaged in begging sheltered in Churches and religious houses while in Southern Region and Harar numerous people are engaged in begging. In Addis Abeba also tens of thousands of people live off begging. In Ethiopia,there are three million people that need emergency food aid while 8 million people are under the Safety Net and food for work program.

September 6, 2013: People in Gondar disgruntled at the Administration’

Residents of Gondar city and its environs have expressed their disgruntlement at the Administration during a meeting chaired by BereketSimon, ex-Communication Minister and current Advisor of Prime Minister Hailemariam Dessalgn. One of the participants said 50 per-cent of peoplein Gondar have no residence and live under poverty thus the public wouldnot understand the meaning of development. He also said when we quest for our rights; we are labelled members of opposition and detained. Another speaker said leaderships are not punished but when they abusepower they are transferred into other Kebeles and other adminstrative levels instead. He said there is so much corruption in Gondar where nepotism and ethnicity are the rules of the thumb. “Stop grouping; a country cannot be lead by networks” said the participant. Several other participants complained that they have been facing in the town such as lack of roads which forced women to give birth in the streets, excessivetaxation, ban of protests and demonstrations. Bereket Simon has been travelling to different towns of the Amhara region to speak with the people. In some areas of Gondar, the people have expressed their frustration at the system and that complain the ruling-EPRDF have betrayed them.

September 6, 2013: Blue Party postpones rally again’

ESAT News: Yidnekachew Kebede, the Legal and Demonstration Section Coordinator of the Semayawi (Blue) Party told that the Party has been forced by the government to again postpone its opposition rally. The government argued that the date (September 07, 2013) was the eve of the Ethiopian New Year and was a busy business week, so it should be transferred to September 22, 2013. The Party chose September 22 because the Unity for Democracy and Justice (UDJ) Party has also called another demonstration on September 15, 2013. On a related report, the consortium of the 33 parties has stated that it decided to support and jointhe rally called by UDJ on September 15. The first round of UDJ’s three month Popular Movement will be completed on rally in Addis Abeba on thesame date. UDJ said, although the rallies of the past three months cost the Party a lot, they were successful. The Party is also attempting to get the permit to conduct its rally campaign in Adama from the Woreda officials. UDJ’s rally promoters have been detained and released in Adamayesterday.

September 7, 2013: Immigration helping oppositions: Addis Raeye, EPRDForgan'

ESAT News: The voice of the Ethiopian People’s Revolutionary DemocraticFront (EPRDF), Addis Raeye, stated in its recent publication that illegal imigrants are joining forces that oppose the government’s programs and are posing a threat by standing along with anti-people elements. Addis Raeye said it should be understood that illegal emigration of citizens opens doors for politicization “forces that hate our efforts of building democracy and economic prosperity are using it to fawn immigration through mass media. Thus, focus should be given on the recruitment of illegal emigrants for anti people activities in addition to the safety and human rights concerns of emigration”. The publication reported that the percentage of women that leave their marriage and flee abroad has gone over 90% and this causes a population inbalance and societal problems in the Country. It recommended strict border checking and control in addition to teaching the people. In addition to students, teachers havebeen illegally migrating from North Wollo and Southern regions of Ethiopia, reports indicate.

September 7, 2013: FOOTBALL/AFRICA - Ethiopia defeat CAR 2-1 on wayto final qualifying round for WCup' Ethiopia are through to the playoff stages of the 2014 World Cup qualifiers after coming from a goal down tobeat Central Africa Republic (CAR) 2-1 in their final Group A clash played in Brazzaville on Saturday. Menyahel Teshome was the hero for the WaliaAntelopes firing in the winner to seal an historic moment for the East African nation. It was a special moment for the midfielder as it was his fielding against Botswana that saw the side docked three points by Fifa ashe was ineligible to play. Following the win, Ethiopia top Group A with 13 points, two ahead of South Africa who beat Botswana 4-1 in Durban. Needing a win to stay to seal progress, Ethiopia suffered a blow before kick off after striker Getaneh Kebede failed to shake off a knock with Omod Okwury Omod taking his place. The nerves were evident early on asEthiopia struggled to settle against a lively CAR side. They then found themselves a goal down after 20 minutes when Salif Keita scored from close range to stun the group leaders. Coach Sewnet Bishaw made a change at halftime withdrawing the off colour Okwury and introducing Behailu Assefa. The equaliser came three minutes after the restart through playmaker Salhadin Said who found the back of the net to bring the visitors level off an Adane Girma assist. Ethiopia now had their tails upwith Girma playing a major role. The veteran went close on 59 minutes but CAR keeper Prince Samolah made a fine save. They went ahead on the hour mark and once again it was Girma who created the goal setting up Teshome who rifled the ball home. Ethiopia is now in line to be seeded when soccer's ruling body FIFA conducts in a week time for the five playoff matches that will determine which African countries go to next year's World Cup in Brazil. The playoffs will be played over two legs in October and November of 2013.

September 7, 2013: Football/Africa - WCup: Ethiopia on a probable trip toBrazil-2014'

East Africa News JOHANNESBURG, SOUTH AFRICA (AFP) Updates– Ethiopia'S 'Walias Antelopes' eliminated South Africa from the World CupAfrica zone qualifying competition Saturday by defeating Central African Republic 2-1 in Congo. The 'Walias Antelopes' topped Group A with 13 points, two more than 2010 World Cup hosts South Africa, whose 4-1 home win over Botswana in Durban proved futile. Ethiopia, the bottom seeds in a mini-league expected to be dominated by South Africa, join Algeria, Egypt, Ghana and Ivory Coast in the two-leg play-offs. Another four group winners will emerge later Saturday with Congo Brazzaville needing an away win and Nigeria, Senegal and Tunisia home draws to ensure progression. Cameroon host Libya Sunday and a win for either country would take them through to the final round with the draw scheduled for September 16 in Cairo. Minyahel Teshome was an ironic match-winner for Ethiopia just past the hour mark in a match switched from Bangui to Brazzaville because of post-CAR coup security concerns.

Teshome played in an away win over Botswana when suspended, resultingin Ethiopia being docked three points and having their qualification put on hold. Central African Republic, out of the reckoning after four losses in a row, took the lead midway through the opening half in the Congolese capital when Salif Keita scored. After both goalkeepers made outstanding late first-half saves, Salahdin Ahmed levelled three minutes into the second half and Teshome struck on 61 minutes. South Africa outplayed Botswana for long periods and deserved to lead by more than 2-0 at half- time with Botswana goalkeeper Kabelo Dambe making several excellent saves. Kermit Erasmus put Bafana Bafana (The Boys) in front on 28 minutes with a far-post header and Dean Furman added a second with a close-range shot in stoppage time. A powerful Jerome Ramatlhakwane header 18 minutes from time offered Botswana hope only for Bernard Parker to bag a late brace, with one goal coming off a penalty.

September 8, 2013: TPLF luminaries defect to the US; infighting appearsto intensify – Who's next? ER: Arkebe Equbay, a one-time rising star of the Tigrai Peoples Liberation Front and former mayor of Addis Ababa, hasfled to the United States seeking asylum, according to reliable sources.

Also defecting is Getachew Equbay, Arkebe's brother and former executiveof Mesfin Engineering. The brothers are said to have escaped along with their families. According to Wikileaks-2008, the majority of TPLF leadership had voted for Arkebe Equbay to lead the politburo. Arkebe is said to have deliberately chosen not to antagonize Meles. Arkebe was nevertheless unceremoniously purged from the politburo by the vindictive former prime minister two years later. Just last year, Arkebe was thought to be the heir apparent to the premiership following the demise of former Prime Minister Meles Zenawi. Unconfirmed reports are also circulating about the defection of many frightened TPLF biggies refused to return home after traveling to the US. Analysts say Arkebe Equbay's defection indicates the crack within the TPLF.

September 9, 2013: Ethiopia among 10 countries with the worst literacyrate in the world'

Barely anyone — one to two percent of the population — could read in ancient Rome and nobody thought more people should. Now we recognizethat literacy is a human right; that being able to read and write is personally empowering and, in a world that relies more and more on technology, simply necessary. Nonetheless, millions of children, the majority of whom are girls, still never learn to read and write today. This Sunday, September 8, is International Literacy Day, an event that Unescohas been observing for more than 40 years to highlight how essential literacy is to learning and also “for eradicating poverty, reducing child mortality, curbing population growth, achieving gender equality and ensuring sustainable development, peace and democracy.” 774 million people aged 15 and older are illiterate, an infographic from Unesco details.52 percent (pdf) live in south and west Asia and 22 percent in sub- Saharan Africa. The latter region is where most of the countries with the lowest literacy rates in the world are located, according to data from the C.I.A.:

BURKINAFASO: 21.8 percent of the adults in this West African country areliterate.

SOUTH SUDAN: This country in east Africa, which became an independentstate in July, 2011, has a literary rate of 27 percent.

AFGHANISTAN: 28.1 percent of this country’s population are literate with a far higher percentage of men (43.1 percent) than women (12.6 percent)able to read.

NIGER: The ratio of men to women in this landlocked western African country is also lopsided: the literacy rate is 42.9 percent for men, 15.1percent for women and 28.7 percent overall.

MALI: Niger’s neighbor on the west, the literacy rate in Mali is 33.4 percent. 43.1 percent of the adult male population can read and 24.6percent of the country’s women.

CHAD: This west African country is Niger’s neighbor on its eastern border;

34.5 percent of its population is literate.

SOMALIA: Long beset by civil war and famine, 37.8 of Somalia’s population is literate. 49.7 percent of the adult male population is literatebut only 25.8 percent of adult females.

ETHIOPIA: Somalia’s neighbor to the north, the literacy rate in Ethiopia is39 percent.

GUINEA: 41 percent of this west African country’s population is literate.More than half (52 percent) of adult males are literature and only 30 percent of women.

BENIN: 42.4 percent of Benin in West Africa are literate.

Around the world, two-thirds of adults who are illiterate are female, meaning that there are 493 women unable to read and write. 54 of the 76million illiterate young women come from nine countries, most in south and west Asia and Sub-Saharan Africa and not necessarily those with highrates of adult illiteracy: India (where almost 30 million young women are illiterate), Pakistan, Nigeria, Ethiopia, Bangladesh, the Democratic Republic of Congo, the United Republic of Tanzania, Egypt and BurkinaFaso.

Why Literacy Is a Human Right? Those who cannot read and write are “destined to be on the social and economic margins of our world,” Unesco reminds us. Being able to read and write has profound benefits not only on a person’s educational opportunities but also for their health, economicprospects and their children. My late grandmother, who emigrated from southern China to Oakland in the early 20th century, never learned to read or write anything beyond her first and last name. She relied completely on her children or grandchildren to read the instructions on a bottle of medicine, to open her mail and pay her bills. Once when she wasin her 90s and still living alone in Oakland Chinatown, a strange man knocked on her door, showed her some official-looking documents and insisted that he had to enter her house. She shut the door in his face and immediately called my dad. Had my grandmother been able to read the papers the man had in his hand, she could have known what he was up to. As a girl in rural China at the start of the previous century, no one gave a thought to teaching her to read or write. She worked for most of her life (she was still sewing piecework for clothing manufacturers into her90s). Like many older adults, she simply never had time to devote her energies to learn to read and write.

In 2010, the literacy rate was higher for young people (89.6 percent) thanfor adults (84.1 percent), according to a report from Unesco (pdf). It’s essential that as many children as possible go to school, learn to read andwrite and acquire the numeracy skills necessary to thrive in our technology-drive world. This year’s International Literacy Day is specifically dedicated to “literacies for the 21st century,” in recognition that we not only need to need to provide “basic literacy skills for all” but also “equip everyone with more advanced literacy skills as part of lifelong learning.” Last year’s assassination attempt of Pakistani teenage educational activist Malala Yousafzai highlighted the immense challenges faced by young women in parts of Asia to acquire an education. It is all the more imperative to get behind efforts like Unesco’s Education For All movement, which strives to provide a quality basic education for all children, youth and adults and, therefore, to give as many as possible thebest possible foundation for their future.

September 10, 2013: U.S. couple adoptive parents convicted ofdaughter’s death’

MOUNT VERNON, Washington (AP) — A couple was convicted of manslaughter in the malnutrition-and-hypothermia death of a teenage girlthey adopted from Ethiopia. A jury found Larry Williams guilty of first- degree manslaughter and wife Carri Williams guilty of homicide by abuse as well as manslaughter. The jury also convicted them both of assault.

The jury couldn’t reach a decision on the homicide by abuse charge for Larry Williams, and the judge declared a mistrial on that count. Larry and Carri Williams face a maximum life sentence, the local Skagit Valley Herald newspaper reported. Hana Williams died in the backyard of the family’s home in May 2011. Prosecutors said she was starved, beaten and forced outside as punishment. Defense lawyers argued that questionable parenting practices don’t necessarily amount to a crime. Hana is believed to have been 13, but no documentation of her birth in Ethiopia was available. The trial was postponed several times and her body was exhumed in January. Tests on her teeth and bones gave varying estimatesand experts were unable to agree on her age. Her age was significant because the homicide by abuse charge applies only if the victim was younger than 16. Hana Williams was taken to be adopted in 2008.

September 10, 2013: ETV amasses money from regional states'

ESAT News: The state owned, Ethiopian Television Station (ETV) is charging over 5 million birr from each regional state of Ethiopia that transmit their programs for one hour a day on Channel one and two. ETV amasses 55 million birr from regions per year. Although regional states have applied to rent satellites and transmit directly, the Federal Communications Office has not been willing. The Office has ordered the Somali and Oromia Television Stations to leave the satellites that they have independently begun to use for transmission. The government has also impeded the attempts of the lavish Amhara Mass Media Agency built with over 200 million birr from transmitting its programs in its own channel. The Benishangul Gumz Television Production pays 25 million birr to the ruling Front owned Agency, Walta Information Centre, for program production in addition to the 5 million birr it pays ETV for transmission every year. Similarly, other “developing regions” also pay Walta in millionsevery year to produce their programs and reports. ETV has collected over 43,420, 000 birr from advertising and sale of air time in the just ended fiscal year excluding the money it makes from regional states.

September 10, 2013: Opposition parties that deny the existence of extremism in Ethiopia are “destructors and betrayers” – PMHD’ ADDIS ABABA: Prime Minister Hailemariam Dessalegn, in an interview with the government owned Daily, ‘Addis Zemen’, said “if opposition political parties have democracy, good governance, development and peace as their agendas, then they should condemn extremism and terrorism standing with the government”. Hailemariam also said “if these people (the opposition) think that there is no extremism and terrorism in Ethiopia, then these people are not living in Ethiopia. Not only in Ethiopia, they do not even know what is going on around the world. Thus, they do not the responsibility and the capacity to lead the people and practice politics. If they think they have the capacity, and if they keep on denyingthe fact that extremism and terrorism are growing in Ethiopia and is affecting the people, then the aim of these forces are not ready tocompete and win in a peaceful, legal political system".

He also advised all to impede the activities, to compete and in a peaceful,legal system and when they fail to win, if they say "if I lose it, the Nation should burn", then they are destructors. Hailemariam said in the protest, which was co-organised with the government, over 600,000 people took part showing that "extremist forces have been alienated from the people".It has been reported that the "anti-extremism" themed protest held in Addis Abeba last week has been directly led by the government and local district officials have been forcing citizens to put their signatures to affirmthat they were taking part in the demonstration.

September 11, 2013: Marking the beginning of the Ethiopian New Year'

Julian Calendar - Ethiopia Celebrates the New Year-2006. Ethiopians on Wednesday ushered in the new year of 2006. The Ethiopian calendar, contrary to other universally recognized calendars, indicates that there are13 months, meaning that 12 months of 30 days and a thirteenth month offive or six days in leap year. Citizens wish eachother a happy new year stating that he or she hoped the new year would bring with it peace and prosperity.

September 12, 2013: Ethiopia to Continue Land Grabbing and ForcedResettlement'

(ADDIS ABABA) Millions of acres of Ethiopia's most fertile lands are beingoffered to foreign investors, often in long-term leases and at bargain prices. At the same time, through its 'villagization' program, the Ethiopiangovernment is forcibly displacing hundreds of thousands of Indigenous Peoples in order to free up their land so the transnational agro-industry can move in and grow foodstuffs and bio-fuels for export. It is a process of dispossession in which Indigenous Peoples are being forced to become dependent on aid handouts having lost their land and their ability to produce their own food. For over a year, the Anuak and other Indigenous Peoples of the Gambella region of Southwest Ethiopia have been forced into government created villages which seldom contain the amenities promised to them. There is little access to food, arable land, water or electricity.

September 13, 2013: IGAD leaders call for sanctions on Eritrea's miningsector'

The leaders who met in Ethiopia's capital Addis Ababa for a summit of theEast African bloc over the weekend said in a communique that Eritrea's mining sector is believed to be used for support of extremist groups in theHorn of Africa. East Africa's Inter Government Authority for Development,also known as IGAD, called on the UN Security Council to 'take all appropriate measures to ensure the regime in Asmara desists from its destabilising activities' The IGAD leaders also urged the AU and UN to fullyimplement existing sanctions and impose additional sanctions to target Eritrea's economic sectors, particularly its mining. Eritrea, which borders Sudan, Ethiopia and Djibouti, has a population of about 5.8 million people.

September 13, 2013: The World Bank (WB) approved a new Country Partnership Strategy that takes little account of the human rights or goodgovernance principles that it and other development agencies say are essential for sustainable development. It also approved a third phase of the Protection of Basic Services program (PBS III) without triggering safeguards on involuntary resettlement and indigenous peoples.

September 13, 2013: Police refuses to release elders disregarding a Courtorder'

ESAT News: Disregarding the orders given by Court on July 28 and August5, 2013, police has refused to release elders that were suspected of leading and organizing the recent protests in Kucha Woreda of the Gamo Gofa Zone, Southern Ethiopia. The court ordered their release citing the lack of sufficient evidences. Local residents are concerned by the completedisregard and disrespect of police to the Court and its new preparations todetain even more people. Few weeks ago, over 60 elders from the Kucha Woreda had travelled to meet Prime Minister Hailemariam Dessalgn in Addis Abeba to seek the immediate release of those detained and the harassment to stop on the people to be stopped however they have not found any concrete response so far. Residents of the area warn that the actions and repressions of government securities could recommence the conflict once again.

September 13, 2013: Could political demonstrations in Ethiopia heraldgreater freedom?

(The Economist) – A rare flicker of political protest graced the streets ofEthiopia’s otherwise regimented capital, Addis Ababa, on June 2nd.

Demonstrators marched peacefully through the city, many carrying pictures of imprisoned loved ones. Later they gathered on Churchill Avenue, the capital’s main thoroughfare, where they were told that a newstruggle had begun. Yilekal Getnet, chairman of the opposition Semayawi(Blue) party, demanded the release of political prisoners and railed against unemployment and corruption. Campaigners claim that as many as 10,000 people attended; government officials say the number was nearer 4,000. Whatever the true figure, it was the biggest demonstration in Ethiopia since 2005, when protests amid claims of election rigging wereviolently suppressed, leaving nearly 200 unarmed protesters dead and thousands arrested. Since then the political opposition has been eviscerated. Its leaders have been jailed or have gone into exile, the media have been muzzled and the ruling Ethiopian People’s RevolutionaryDemocratic Front (EPRDF) has acquired millions of new members. At the last election, in 2010, the party managed to get 99% of the seats in parliament. By the time he died last year, Meles Zenawi, who had been prime minister since August, 1995, had created a single-party state in allbut name. Little suggests that his system of “authoritarian development”,which got the economy to grow faster at the expense of individual freedom, is now about to unravel.

September 13, 2013: EPRDF dirty trick alert: an all-out campaign pressuring witnesses to change testimony in WB investigation' Reports areemerging about the ruling ERPDF efforts to suppress testimony in World Bank’s investigation regarding the misuse of WB funds in the forced displacement of Anuaks and related land grabs in Ethiopia’s Gambella Regional State.

September 14 2013: Ethiopian jailed female journalist on a 4th day ofhunger strike'

ADDIS ABABA - Reeyot Alemu, Ethiopia's award-winning journalist servingtime in Kaliti Prison, has been on a hunger strike since Wednesday the 11th, a sister of the political prisoner has confirmed. Ethiopia journalist Reeyot Alemu, a recipient of international awards for courage, is on her 4th day of hunger strike today. Reyot went on hunger strike after the regime prevented her visits by friends and family, and to also protest the inhumane treatment she is subjected to in prison. Last April, Reeyot was awarded the 2013 UNESCO-Guillermo Cano World Press Freedom Prize in recognition of her “exceptional courage, resistance and commitment to freedom of expression.”

September 14, 2013: China donates money for the building of MelesFoundation'

ESAT News: The leader of the group of the Chinese Communist Party(CCP) representatives that came to Ethiopia said that CCP will donate $50,000 to go to the building of the Meles Foundation. The government and the Foundation are in a process of building a Foundation. The representatives have expressed their gratitude to the late Prime Minister Meles Zenawi “for strengthening the relationships between China and Ethiopia”. The team leader of the representatives, Jiao, also affirmed thatChina would support the government’s Growth and Transformation Plan (GTP).

September 15, 2013: The King is back to the track! Kenenisa beats Mo Farah in Great North Run' BBC Sport: Mo Farah beaten by Kenenisa Bekele in Great North Run thriller. Ethiopia’s Kenenisa Bekele saw off double world and Olympic champion Mo Farah’s late surge to win the Great North Run in a thrilling sprint finish. Farah chased down Bekele in the final 400m to set up a nail-biting finale but the Briton had to settle forsecond.Another Ethiopian, Haile Gerselassie, was a distant third after falling behind in the last of the 13.1 miles. Earlier, MO FARAH has been warned he faces a record-breaking war to be regarded as the best distance runner of all time. There has been a lot of windbagging about a “Renaissance Dam” over the Blue Nile. Our ears nearly fell off listening tothe endless gab about an “economic renaissance” with “11 percent” plus annual growth. There has also been much talk of a political and social renaissance complete with slogans of “ethnic federalism”, multiculturalism, pluralism and other “isms” (excluding neoliberalism). Ofcourse, all of it is talk

September 16, 2013: Ethiopian Lion kills keeper at Addis Ababa zoo'

BBC News: A lion has mauled to death a keeper at a zoo in Ethiopia's capital, Addis Ababa, after he forgot to close the door to the inner cage where the animal sleeps, officials say. Mr Abera was attacked as he was cleaning the lion's cage. The lion, named Kenenisa after the famous Ethiopian athlete Kenenisa Bekele, bit Abera Sisay, 51, in the neck, they said. The zoo is home to 15 endangered Abyssinian Lions, which are foundin Ethiopia. Guards tried to scare off the lion by firing shots into the air, but to no avail. The attack is said to have lasted for 15-20 minutes. The lions are kept in enclosed cages, but city officials plan to move the zoo to a larger, grassier enclosure in the next 13 months. This is the second timea zookeeper has been killed by a lion at the centre in the past 17 years, AFP reports. The zoo will increase training for keepers after the attack, thedirector general says. The zoo was opened in 1948 for the pet lions of former emperor Haile Selassie.

September 2013: REVELATION: The EPRDF led Foreign StrategyDocument Leaked.

The recently revealed ruling party’s Strategy Document that leaked out of the regime’s foreign office two years ago, reveals that TPLF has completedthe gathering of information and readies to launch it based on the information contained. According to this Support group in Australia, the Diaspora is still not well aware of TPLF’s spying and its disruptions among Diaspora activists and organizations. Hence, the need to post this two years old information yet again so that the Diaspora takes it seriously to abort TPLF’s strategy.

September 16, 2013: Ethiopia face Nigeria for World Cup place'

JOHANNESBURG (AFP) – Giantkillers Ethiopia were drawn against Nigeria Monday in the 2014 World Cup Africa zone play-offs. The two-leg showdowns are set for October and November and the winners qualify forthe World Cup in Brazil next June and July. Ethiopia were the only side to upset the seeding in the mini-league previous stage, finishing two points ahead of top-ranked South Africa. But they will face much tougher opponents in Nigeria, who beat Ethiopia 2-0 en route to winning the AfricaCup of Nations in South Africa last February.

September 17, 2013: Embezzlers of over 700million birr walk free'

Information obtained from the Ethiopian Federal Ethics and Anti Corruption Commission (FEACC) reveals that public officials that embezzled over 734,600,000 birr, although charged with clear evidences, walk without being convicted. It has also been indicated that various othercorruption crimes that have been charged with plenty of clear evidences since 2012 have not yet been convicted. In the Benishangul Gumz region,a top government official has been charged for embezzling 94,300 birr from the higher education constriction fund but has not so far been given proper verdict. An illegal compensation payment of over 6million birr has been made by the rehabilitation project of the Arada Sub City in Addis Abeba. Three files of investigation have been completed and they have been charged in 2012 although no decision has been made so far.

Similarly, 12 and 34 million birr in the Ethiopian Commercial Bank (ECB), 14 million birr in the former Ethiopian Telecommunication Corporation, 65,300,000 birr from Sheba Steel Mills of the Tigray region, over 100million birr in a private steel factory in the Oromia region have been embezzled and lost through corruption respectively. The unnecessary purchase of 2470 transformers by the Ethiopian Electric Corporation worth 248,900,000birr has been investigated and proven although no legal action has so far been taken. Silver and bronze medals worth 4,700,000birr have been lost from the Metals and Engineering Corporation(METEC) and nothing has been done so far regarding it. Likewise, a charge has been filed on the Kolfe Keranio Sub City for the giveaway of land area of 30,332 meters without lease. Staff members of the Ethiopian National Bank and traders have been charged for embezzling over 63million birr during the purchase of Reserve Bank’s Gold.

September 18, 2013: In Ethiopia, State Controls Hold Back Waking Giant -Reuters'

(ADDIS ABABA) — When global drinks giant Diageo bought a brewery inEthiopia, it paid a premium for a stake in a barely tapped African marketthat in the 1980s had spectacularly failed to feed its own population.

Diageo paid $225 million for state-owned Meta Abo, joining a list of firms seeking a foothold in Africa's second most populous nation that was once run by communists and now has an emerging middle class after a decade of double-digit growth. “We paid a premium of course and that was a deliberate decision ... We knew the value of what we were buying,” Francis Agbonlahor, Diageo's managing director at Meta Abo Brewery, toldReuters in a capital that boasts smart highways and new office blocks.

Ethiopia is now sub-Saharan Africa's fifth biggest economy, leap-frogging next door Kenya and wooing investors from Sweden, Britain and China, asother emerging markets lose some of their shine.

September 19, 2013: EPRDF's senior, mid-rank leaders in evaluation,training'

ESAT News: The top and middle level leaders of the member parties of theruling Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF), OPDO, ANDM, TPLF and SEPDF, have been sitting for an evaluation and training since Sunday September 15, 2013. In the training which continues for 10 consecutive days, top leaders will evaluate each other and also discuss theorganisation of development armies, the implementation of the one-to- five structure, extremism and rent seeking and the general election next year. Similar trainings and evaluations are being provided to members of the EPRDF in other cities and rural areas. Participants of the training said, although EPRDF is confident that it will win next year's election, it plans tooffer successive trainings fearing that incidents of the 2005 election could be repeated. After training on the one-to-five structure was provided to university presidents and leaders last month, now, principals of secondaryschools are being given various types of trainings on the education systemand politics. It has been learnt from the participants that the Front is concerned by the fact that Ethiopian youth have been disgruntled by the leadership of EPRDF. The government has budgeted a large sum of moneywith the aim of getting hold of the youth. EPRDF has also planned to conduct evaluation and training with organisations that it considers are correlated with the youth and workforce of various organisations.

September 19, 2013: Authorities admit imposing new restrictions against jailed female journalist' (ADDIS ABABA) – The Ethiopian government on Thursday admitted imposing new visitor restrictions against journalist Reeyot Alemu, who remains in prison on terrorism-related offenses. "Reeyot Alemu has repeatedly violated prison laws, she is abusive and ill- reputed. As a result prison officials, according to the law, have taken disciplinary measures", government spokesperson, Shimels Kemal told Sudan Tribune. Kemal said the latest restrictions were only imposed on her regular visitors and not her relatives. However, the official warned that if Alemu continues to violate prison laws and regulations, authorities have the right to even restrict her from having any visitors. Press freedomgroup, the Committee to Protect Journalists (CPJ), said the new restrictions were in retaliation against a hunger strike she began on Wednesday in protest against orders by prison authorities to turn in a list of her visitors. Alemu, who has been a columnist for the banned private weekly Fitih, was detained in June 2011 after she was found guilty of terrorism related charges. Her original 14-year sentence was reduced to five years last August after an appeal lodged at the Federal Supreme Court.

September 19, 2013: Four EAF Combat Aircraft Pilots Defect to Eritrea'

EAN - Four Ethiopian Air Force Captains defected and joined Ginbot 7, an exiled opposition group based in neighboring Eritrea, according to the Ethiopian Satellite Television (ESAT) in its nightly broadcast. The Amesterdam-based news network says the four pilots had recently completed missions in Darfur under UN peace keeping mission and had previously played a major role in the 2006 Ethiopian invasion of Somalia. The names of these senior captains who abandoned the TPLF regime in Addis Ababa are Captain Aklilu Mezene, Captain Tilahun Tufa, Captain Getu Worku and Captain Biniam Gizaw. More alarming for the regime, thedefecting pilots are said to have taken at least two SU-27 jet fighters, costing US$30 million each, to Eritrea, according to a source in Addis Ababa, who declined to be named for fear of reprisals. Ethiopia is no stranger to high profile military defections. In the aftermath of May-2005 elections, eight Ethiopian air force pilots, who were training in Israel, defected and claimed asylum at an Eritrean embassy in Israel. Similarly, in 2006, over 300 Ethiopian troops, including a senior army officer Kemal Gelchu who had been at the rank of Brigadier General, along with his loyalsoldiers defected to Eritrea.

September 20, 2013: Bird strike forces to land Ethipian Boeing in Malta’ di-ve News: An Ethiopian Airlines Boeing 757-200 was forced to land in Malta yesterday following a bird strike while enroute to its destination in Ethiopia. The Boeing with registration ET-ALZ, which left Rome Fiumicino Airport, in Italy, and was on its way to Addis Ababa in Ethiopia, had 135 people on board. The crew decided to shut down the right engine when 140 nautical miles from Malta and decided to divert to Malta InternationalAirport and requested emergency services to be on stand-by. Following repairs on the ground, flight ET-703 departed towards Addis Ababa reaching its destination with a delay of more than 10 hours.

September 20, 2013: Nigeria coach Stephen Keshi wary of Ethiopia threat’

BBC Sport updates: Nigeria coach Stephen Keshi says he will not underestimate Ethiopia when the sides meet in their 2014 World Cup play-off next month. Ethiopia are the lowest-ranked side in the final round on the road to Brazil. But Keshi told BBC Sport: "They didn't get to this stage by mistake, that says a lot about Ethiopia as a team. "Ethiopia have an unpredictable style which makes it difficult for any opponent. We are going to play both legs like a cup final." The sides last met in a Africa Cup of Nations group game in Rustenburg in January, which the Super Eagles won 2-0 on their way to being crowned champions. However, Keshi does not think that result will have any bearing come October as he tries to steer Nigeria to their fifth World Cup finals "You don't talk about the past when it comes to African football, January is a long time ago," explained Keshi, who played at the 1994 World Cup. "They almost stopped us from progressing to the quarter-final stage, so you cannot underrate them. "In African football we don't have underdogs. They have the same opportunity to play at the World Cup so we are both starting on a clean slate. "We have to fight hard to get the ticket to Brazil, it won't be easy and my players clearly understand that." Meanwhile, the Nigeria Football Federation (NFF) has announced the date for the sides' return leg but thevenue has yet to be decided. The Super Eagles have played all their games in Calabar since 2012, but the refurbished Abuja National Stadiumis also ready to host the game. "A venue has not been decided, but the return leg game will take place on Saturday, 16 November 16. 00 local time," NFF spokesman Ademola Olajire told BBC Sport. "The NFF will announce a venue before Friday deadline."

September 20, 2013: EAF being incapacitated says defecting pilot'

ESAT News: Captain Aklilu Mezene, one of the four pilots of the EthiopianAir Force that recently joined the opposition armed group Ginbot-7 Movement, said in an interview with ESAT today that the once admired Ethiopian Air Force is no longer same but in "an embarrassing condition".Captain Aklilu, who recently served the country on peace missions in neighboring Sudan and Somalia, has been a flight instructor and commander at the Ethiopian Air Force. Aklilu said he heroically served hiscountry and now decided to join freedom forces to work for the people ofhis country. He confirmed that the Ethiopian Air Force would be rebuilt once again when justice prevails in Ethiopia.

September 21, 2013: Ethiopia's government joins Kenya's campaignagainst ICC'

ADDIS ABABA — Ethiopia, which currently chairs the African Union, says itsupports the push by Kenya for African countries to jointly withdraw from the International Criminal Court. The ICC has put Kenyan Deputy President William Ruto on trial for alleged crimes against humanity, while President Uhuru Kenyatta is scheduled to go on trial in November.

Ethiopia says it will support Kenya's campaign to find a continent-wide stance on possibly pulling out of the ICC. The issue is likely to be discussed at the African Union summit next month in Addis Ababa. The government spokesman says Ethiopia feels that the ICC singles out African leaders. "We never appreciated what the ICC has been doing, particularly when it comes African leaders, and its belittling and it's disparaging the African leadership. So we stand by the Kenyan people andwe stand by the Kenyan government," said spokesman Redwan Hussein. All official investigations of the ICC since it was established in 2002 have been in African countries. That fact has prompted some African officials torefer to the court as a tool of Western powers. Ethiopia's Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn accused the ICC earlier this year of race hunting.

September 26, 2013: OI submits a report to the UN HRC UniversalPeriodic Review'

OAKLAND CA- In a report submitted to the UN Human Rights Council's Universal Periodic Review (UPR) on September 15, 2013, the Oakland Institute and the Housing and Land Rights Network outlined the human rights and international law violations perpetrated by the government of Ethiopia in the name of country's development strategy.Drawing clear links between recorded testimonies on the ground and breaches of specificinternational covenants and articles in Ethiopia's constitution, the joint submission to the UN Human Rights Council also responds to Ethiopia's draft National Human Rights Action Plan for 2013-2015. "Rather than working to build a development strategy grounded in human rights, the Ethiopian government is attempting to hoodwink its human rights record, leaving unmentioned its villagization program and the Anti-Terrorism Proclamation-both used by the government as significant justifications for forced resettlement, arbitrary detentions, and politically motivated arrests," said Anuradha Mittal, Executive Director of the Oakland Institute.As previous Oakland Institute reports have chronicled, the Ethiopian government's efforts to clear land for large-scale foreign investment has entailed widespread violations of human, social, economic, and political rights. Violations of citizen's rights to self-determination, housing, land forsubsistence production, and free political association–enshrined in the Ethiopian constitution, the Rural Land Administration and Land Use Proclamation, and in United Nations international covenants–are carried out in the name of development. The joint UPR submission suggests that the ruling party's ability to implement country's unpopular villagization program rests in its monopoly on force and dominance over the allocationof humanitarian assistance. "Authoritarian governance and the methods used in implementing development projects have combined to violate human rights to livelihood and culture for land-based peoples, especially in the peripheral regions," said Joseph Schechla, Coordinator of the Housing and Land Rights Network. "Involuntary resettlement, a form of forced evictions, accompanies deprivation of the right to food, including the right to feed oneself, particularly for agropastoralists. On the other hand, the ability to control information and stifle dissent has enabled the ruling party to present a positive face to the international community, which has dubbed Ethiopia a nation in "renaissance", he continued.

September 26, 2014 Ethiopia: MetEC to Assemble Polish Tractors – Based on a knocked-down export agreement concluded between Ethiopian Metals and Engineering Corporation (MetEC) and Ursus SA, Polish agriculture equipment producer, MetEC is prepared to take delivery of the first 1,500 tractors from the latter. The Ethiopian Metals and Engineering Corporation (MetEC) is prepared to receive the delivery of the first of 1500polish tractors produced by the oldest polish agricultural equipment brand,Ursus SA, based on a knocked-down export contract worth USD 90 millionsigned exactly a year ago. "The Metal and Engineering Corporation (MetEc) is going to sell back the two vessels, 'Abay Wonz' and 'Abyot', that it bought last year to use as scrap metal from the Ethiopian Shipping and Logistics Service Enterprise (ESLSE). Brigadier General Kinfe Dagnew,Director General of MetEc, told Capital that the corporation changed its plans after experts confirmed that the vessels are still operable. "Now we are planning to sell the vessels after repairing them," he said. Kinfe said that the corporation has sent the two vessels to Dubai, UAE for repair works. "Repair on one of the two vessels have already been completed," the general said. He also indicated that local and international crew have already been hired to operate the vessels. MetEc initially planned to use the vessels to transport its own cargo before using them as scrap metal.

These plans had to be abandoned, as Ethiopian law does not allow any other ship operator as the ESLSE is the sole entity that can own and operate ships. MetEc, which is involved in anumber of large government projects, is also busy establishing ten metal factories around the country,which it is in the process of relocating the factories it bought from Asia."

September 26, 2013: Ethiopian senior military officers ask for pay rise'

ESAT News: Senior officers of the Ethiopian Defense Forces have been sitting for the past eight days and one of the main agendas has been salary increment. All senior officers below the rank of General are holdingthe meeting following the completion of the meeting of Army Generals which was held last month. The issue of salary increment was raised during the meeting of the Generals last month however it was put down by Defense officials who argued saying “the Forces do get a salary that is sufficient to live with”. General Se’are Mekonen, who was displeased with the answer, had walked out of the meeting. There were attempts to calm down the angered General, ESAT learnt. Se’are is one of the Army officialswho say the salary of Defense officers should be increased. “We cannot feed our families but you even teach your children abroad with the moneythat you have amassed through corruption” some officers located in the Eastern Command have bravely said to the Defense Officials, Insiders toldESAT. Officials that chaired the meeting were unable to answer the questions of the officers. When the meeting of the officers finishes, the meeting with the rank and file soldiers will continue. It is anticipated that the soldiers will also raise similar questions. Meanwhile, ESAT has learnt that a military Captain has burned up his own child. Fikadu Bedada, located in the Eastern Command, has sprayed petrol on his own son before burning him up who died instantly. The father is in hospital receiving treatments for injuries. It has not been clear so far why the father has taken such an action on his son.

September 26, 2013: Somalia's Al-Shabaab Poses No Threat to Ethiopia'sSecurity’

GoE (Addis Ababa): Ethiopian Foreign Ministry Spokesperson, AmbassadorDina Mufti, said on Wednesday (September 25) that Al-Shabaab poses no "imminent threat to the country's national security." He said that althoughAl-Shabaab was a threat to peace and the level of threat it posed could vary, nevertheless "our defense force and intelligence are capable enoughto defend their country; there is no reason for the public should be worried." He dismissed concerns by some opposition groups that Ethiopia could be Al-Shabaab's next terror target. He also reaffirmed that Ethiopia will continue to keep its troops in Somalia until Al-Shabaab is weakened and sustainable peace and security can be maintained in Somalia.

Ambassador Dina stressed the need for member states of the Inter- Governmental Authority on Development to work jointly to curb terrorist attacks. Foreign Minister, Dr. Tedros Adhanom, who extended his deepestcondolences to the people and Government of Kenya over the killings at the Westgate Mall, noted that Ethiopia, as the current Chair of the AfricanUnion, was "committed to play a leading role in coordinating other Africancountries in the fight against terrorism." Ethiopia has offered to support the Kenyan government in hunting down perpetrators of the attack.

"The TPLF/EPRDF government must stop killing, detention and intimidation of mass demonstrators and the Muslim Protestors”

(PR) Gambella: The Gambella Nilotes United Movement/Army (GNUM/A) strongly condemns the killings, detention, harassment and intimidation acts as being carried out by the TPLF/EPRDF government against the massdemonstrators including Muslim protestors in Ethiopia. The demonstrators are simply demanding from the government, among others, the respect tothe constitution, the exercise of rule of law, and the release of the politicalprisoners including the Muslim leaders held in detention in many parts of the country. These peaceful demonstrations are the indicators towards thebeginning of popular democratization process anticipated to relief the longentrenched historical injustices in the country. However, as the demonstrators were exercising their rights through peaceful means, surprisingly they were met with unprecedented killings, imprisonment, harassment and some were even forced to exile. This clearly demonstrates that the TPLF/EPRDF government is not yet prepared to admit its flaws, and begins responding to the demand made by the majority Ethiopians who feel oppressed in the system of the minority rule from the north as represented by the TPLF. Obviously, the TPLF/EPRDF government is contradicting its own constitution for the benefit of its minority people it represents. Freedom of religion, belief and opinion as enshrined in the constitution are constitutional rights of the Ethiopians.

The Muslim protestors demands this religious right as demonstrated in Afar, Ogaden, Oromia, and other parts of the country. The TPLF government has no constitutional rights to commit atrocities against demonstrators in killings, intimidation, imprisonment, and forced others tolive in exile.

Ironically, these mass demonstrations throughout the country must be known as signs to converge all the oppression parties inside and outside the country to unite and join hands together to fight the repressive TPLF/EPRDF regime for their freedom. It is clear that the TPLF/EPRDF government seized its power through militancy, not through peaceful means in which it repeatedly opposes, and tends to maintain this power over its subjects throughout the country at gun point not on ballots. It should be understood from the government stance point that peaceful means will never make any meaningful impact as an option to resolve thechronic historical injustices in Ethiopia. All opposition parties or the entireoppressed majority Ethiopians must join hands together to bring meaningful challenge to this dictator and corrupt regime, to an end.

GNUM/A would therefore, call upon all the oppressed groups including Oromos, Ogadenians, Sidamas, Beneshangul/Gumuz Nilotes, Afar, Gambella Nilotes, Southwestern Nilotic Omotic Nations, and all other oppressed Ethiopians everywhere in the country to work together to end this unpopular government. It is our core belief as GNUM/A that “where unity prevails there will be always success.” GNUM/A as a political party established through convergent of different Gambella political parties, maintains a symbol of unity for peoples of Gambella, and continue to extend this unity message to all Southwestern Nilotic Omotic peoples, andall the opposition parties inside and outside the country, to embrace the vision of unity for the emancipation of all the oppressed peoples of Ethiopia.

We should know that the TPLF/EPRDF government plays divide and rule politics to maintain and prolong its power; and as unity will remain a core ingredient factor to prevail for all the opposition parties operating on different lines, it should be embraced by all the opposition parties to enhance solidarity and promote it. Our freedom will only be achieved when all opposition political forces put aside their differences and join resources together to fight the oppressive regime, in order to bring meaningful challenge to the repressive TPLF/EPRDF government. Currentlythe people of Gambella and all the Southwestern indigenous peoples understand that they are discriminated against their colours, race, cultures and traditions, and denied of their fundamental human rights to security, freedom, prosperity, and popular political representation in Ethiopian politics. Their common sufferings speak loudly to unity and solidarity. Being aware then of our common plights we have collectively agreed and joined hands together under the SENPIM vision as one politicalentity to fight our historical oppressors and injustices.

September 28, 2013: Reykjavik Geothermal Agrees to Build 1,000 MW inEthiopia'

Bloomberg News: Reykjavik Geothermal, the Icelandic company that's helped build power plants in more than 30 countries, agreed to develop asmuch as 1,000 megawatts of projects in Ethiopia over the next 10 years. The company expects to spend a total of $4 billion and will begin drilling test wells early next year, Chairman Michael Philipp said in an interview today in New York. About 10 megawatts will be in operation by 2015, witha total of 500 megawatts by 2018. A second phase may include as much as 500 additional megawatts of capacity. Ethiopian Electric Power Corp. has agreed to buy all the electricity under a 25-year contract. "This is the kind of commitment you need to get the financial backing to finalize the development phase," Philipp said. About one-fourth to one-third of the project will be financed with equity.

The Great Rift Valley in East Africa, which spans eight countries, may haveas much as 20 gigawatts of potential geothermal energy, according to data compiled by Bloomberg. The agreement between Reykjavik Geothermal and Ethiopia may be the first of many on the continent, said Mark Taylor, a Bloomberg New Energy Finance analyst. "This could be the thing that cracks open the market -- for this company and for others to develop more projects there," Taylor said. "It could widen the base for geothermal development in the region." The project planned in Ethiopia's Corbetti Caldera region will be Africa's largest geothermal power plant, and is part of President Barack Obama's $7 billion plan to double electricity access in Ethiopia, Ghana, Kenya, Liberia, Nigeria and Tanzania."My vision is that over 30 years we will harness the 80,000 megawatts of renewables that we have," including hydroelectric, wind and solar, Ethiopia's Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn said today. "Aid is not a solution. Trade and investment is a solution. Trade and investment have alasting impact."

September 28, 2013: Ethiopians in Norway vowed to stand beside Ginbot7 popular force'

DCESON News: A successful fundraising was conducted for Ginbot-7 Popular Force (G7pf), whose recently established and struggles against the ruling corrupt regime. The fundraising event, staged 16:00pm to 24:00 p.m. local time, was coordinated by a taskforce established by Democratic Change in Ethiopia Support Organization in Norway (DCESON). The event was able to attract many participants from all overNorway and other parts of Europe. The event was one of the success stories in the history of fundraising in terms of both participation and fundraising. The official announcement of the founding of the Ginbot-7 popular force has been a positive development and was welcomed by most Ethiopians residing in Norway. Ginbot-7 popular force has added a momentum to the armed struggle and elevated the moral, hope, and aspirations of Ethiopians for Freedom and Democracy. The formation of this force marks a new and decisive phase in the struggle against the ethno-racist rule exists in Ethiopia. The successful staging of the event was made possible through the cooperation and contributions of the participants as a whole. This event demonstrated what Ethiopians in thediaspora can achieve through cooperation and working together for a common goal.

September 29, 2013: Grand Andinet Rally Ends with Calls for Release ofPolitical Prisoners'

EM News updates: ADDIS ABABA - Tens of thousands of city residents marched through the streets of the Ethiopian capital on Sunday in an Andinet-organized rally for democracy and justice. Police were trying to block many people from joining the rally. Andinet rally organizers were taking cautious measures as undercover agents of the regime tried to pit police against demonstrators so that the rally would be disrupted. Activistschanted, among calls for the release of political prisoners, that the "police belong to the people," in a clear message that the pro-democracy camp abhors violence as opposed to the regime, which has been in power since May, 1991 against the will of the Ethiopian people.

September 30, 2013: Ethiopia opposition stage anti-government demo'

(AFP News updates) Addis Ababa – A leading Ethiopian opposition group gathered Sunday to protest against the country's anti-terrorism legislation, the head of the group said. "We want the government to abrogate the law and to release all political and prisoners of conscience immediately," Negasso Gidada, the leader of the opposition Unity for Democratic Justice (UDJ), told AFP. Several opposition members and journalists, including dissident blogger Eskinder Nega, have been jailed under the 2009 legislation. The government accused the group of "glorifying" convicted criminals and said the threat of terrorism in Ethiopianeeded to be taken seriously. "These people are downplaying the danger that this country has been facing... its not a potential threat, it's already there," said government spokesman Redwan Hussein. Negasso said he was briefly arrested ahead of the protests along with the single member of parliament from an opposition party, Girma Seifu, and 60 other people. Redwan said he did "not know of anybody" who had beendetained. The demonstration is part of a three-month campaign launched by UDJ, which has held protests in several cities across the country.

Negasso estimated the crowd at 80,000 people, while Redwan said only a few hundred had gathered. The group, led by five people dressed in prisonuniforms, chanted slogans demanding freedom and the release of prisoners, including UDJ member Andualem Arage who is serving a life sentence after he was convicted under the law. Rights groups have accused Ethiopia's anti-terrorism legislation of being vague and used to stifle peaceful dissent. Last year, two Swedish journalists jailed on terror-related offences were released after serving 13 months of their 11-year sentence.

September 30, 2013: Ethiopia is challenging Norwegian aid politics.

(CMI Commentary) Ethiopia has been a constant source of headache for Norwegian aid politics for the last few years, due to the authorities' decreasing respect for human rights and political opponents. Ethiopian authorities have also earned a reputation for exerting strong control over aid money, using aid to keep political control. In addition, Norwegian- Ethiopian relations took a severe blow in 1998 when the war between Ethiopia and Eritrea caused Norwegian authorities to temporarily stop signing new agreements with Ethiopia. The relationship reached a freezingpoint after Norway in 2000 decided to shift the focus from bilateral agreements to stability, peace and reconciliation in the region. So why have not Norwegian authorities put an end to the troublesome relationship?

A fading star: Ethiopia has had a central role as an ambassador for Africandevelopment led by Africans. The late prime minister Menes Zelawi was a charismatic spokesperson for African independence. Donors traditionally value initiatives from recipient countries, so Ethiopia has been considered a valuable aid partner. Now, Ethiopia's role as a leader on the African continent is changing. The current prime minister Hailemariam Desalegn lacks Meles Zenawi's charisma and authority. He has not managed to promote African values and independence like his predecessor, and has not gained the same international reputation. Yet, Ethiopia has several aces up their sleeve. The country might be a fading star on the African skies, but the capital Addis Abeba is still the main seat of the African Union and the country remains a crucial Western ally in the conflict riddenHorn of Africa. And it has a thriving economy. Ethiopia is now the second biggest country in Africa in terms of population size. The potential for reducing poverty, and hence get closer to one of the most prominent Millennium Development Goals, is enormous. Norway's chances of contributing to achieve the MDGs are inextricably linked to countries like Ethiopia, says Lovise Aalen, senior researcher at the Chr. Michelsen Institute.

Will human rights tip the scale? The country has seen unprecedented economic growth for the past few years; 10,1 percent since 2010. Many Ethiopians have escaped poverty. Ethiopian authorities insist that this is aresult of measures taken by the government, rather than a result of aid interventions. From a financial point of view, Ethiopia is a success story. From a human rights point of view, the tale is completely different. In 2010, Human Rights Watch published a report concluding that aid is beingused as a means of political control and oppression. The Ethiopian regimehas established comprehensive networks for control on a local level, in which they use local and regional administration officials to enroll Ethiopians in the regime's doctrine and to report those who are not loyal. Money from aid is fed into this system, says Aalen. As a result of accusations of human rights violations, Sweden is no longer providing direct budgetary support to the Ethiopian government. According to SIDA,direct support to rural areas in Ethiopia is now complemented to an even greater extent by cooperation with civil society groups and the private sector. In 2013, Ethiopian authorities will receive an all-time high of 600 million NOK. The increase in Norwegian aid to Ethiopia reflects an international trend in aid, with an increasing focus on socio-economic development in practice, and less focus on governance, and political and civil rights. Seen from this perspective, the Norwegian increase is not surprising. Yet, the grave human rights violations may tip the scale for the newly elected Norwegian government. The Norwegian Conservative Party has been harsh critics of the Ethiopian regime and has questioned Norwegian aid to the Ethiopian regime, says Aalen. For the past few years, Norwegian aid to Ethiopia has revolved around climate, energy andsocio-economic factors. According to Aalen, the narrow focus may backfire. –This perspective might turn out to be too short term. How will Ethiopians get an accountable and transparent government if political opposition continuous to be oppressed? Aid to Ethiopia must be considered in a long term perspective, and in this perspective, human rights are a crucial factor, says Aalen. (Text ends)

October 1, 2013: Ginbot-7 forms a network within the Defense Forces,said Andargachew'

(ESAT News) Andargachew Tsige, Secretary General of the opposition Ginbot-7 Movement said that they are forming their own network within the Ethiopian Defense Forces. He said this after a successful fund raising event held in Norway over the weekend. Andargachew said the fund raising, on the one hand, motivates the members of the Ginbot 7 Popular Forces and also reminds us that we have a huge public responsibility. He said the four defecting Air Force pilots that joined the Movement were in agood condition and his Movement has been instituting lines within the Army, the Air Force, and the Intelligence on a conduct that the securities cannot trace. He also stressed that there should not be any fund raising event in the name of the Popular Force or individuals until the Force makes its own fund raising programs public in the future. Similarly, Andargachew also gave a visual and textual explanation of the aims, missions and visions of the Popular Force up until its present condition to a crowed in Stockholm, Sweden. During the event he said the Force was not hierarchical but horizontally structured where everyone was treated equally. It is also a Force founded by Ethiopians that hailed from all parts of the world leaving their families, children and life aside, Andargachew added. According to him, the aim of Ginbot 7 is not only establishing a democratic system but it is also returning the values that Ethiopians havebeen stripped of for the past 22 years.

October 2, 2013: More Arrests in High Profile Corruption Case'

Updates: Unlike other arrested parties, on this occasion the businessmanin question, Guebreselassie Hailemariam, was indicted immediately.

Gebreselassie Hailemariam, a.k.a Aleqa Gebreselassie owns the COMET Building in the 22 Mazoria area in Bole District. Guebreselassie Hailemariam, a.k.a Aleqa Guebreselassie – owner of the COMET Building in the Hayahulet Mazoria area in Bole District, and father of Yemane Guebreselassie, who owns the new Capital Hotel & Spa on Haile Gebreselassie Avenue- was arrested three weeks ago, in connection with the current high profile corruption crackdown on the tax sector by the Federal Ethics & Anti Corruption Commission (FEACC). He has already been indicted and has joined other high profile officials in prison, Fortune confirmed from investigators. He joins the ranks of other high profile businessmen arrested over the last four months. It started with Nega Guebre Egziabeher, shareholder in Netsa Trading Plc; Simachew Kebede, part-owner of the Intercontinental Hotel, and Ketema Kebede, shareholderin K.K Plc, all of whom were arrested in May. These businessmen were also joined by high ranking government officials from the Ethiopian Revenues & Customs Authority (ERCA), including – Melaku Fenta, former director general; Guebrewahed Wolde Giorgis, Melaku’s deputy at the ERCA; Markneh Alemayehu, deputy head of the ERCA Legal directorate, and Tewoldebisrat Guebremedhin, customs investigator. The other detainees were under police custody for three and a half months before charges were filed in the last week of August. At this point, they were then transferred to Kality prison. Guebreselassie, however, was immediately indicted and placed in prison. Specific details about his alleged crime were unavailable in court, as charge files were sealed until the next court appointment on October 14 and 18, 2013, when the other cases will also be heard. However, Fortune was able to confirm from investigators overseeing the case that he was arrested in connection to Guebrewahed et al’s file. This is one of the seven investigation files the Commission submitted to court after making the initial arrests. Allegationsin this file include – the import of cement using the prohibited Franco Valuta method, passing goods through customs uninspected without paying the appropriate duties, money laundering and bribing ERCA officials. People in this file include – Guebrewahed, his wife Haimanot Tesfaye (Col), Nega Guebre-Egziabher and Meheretab Abraha, brother of the former TPLF top level executive Seye Abraha. The Federal Ethics & Anti Corruption Commission (FEAC) has arrested over 60 officials and businessmen in its current corruption crackdown, which began in May, 2013. It sought several continuances in order to conduct its investigationson each file. After almost four months, the Commission finally filed charges on close to 44 suspects. These are grouped into eight separate documents. During the lengthy investigation period, suspects remained incustody without bail, except for those the Commission released itself during the investigation period. Most of the detainees have been kept at the Akaki Kaliti prison including Melaku and Guebrewahed and the near byKilinto prison facilities.

October 2, 2013: Azeb Mesfin's business partner arrested on corruptioncharges'

Addis Fortune: Guebreselassie Hailemariam, a close friend of former first lady Azeb Mesfin, now in a custody, according to some sources. Azeb's confidantes and business associates like Woldeselassie and Guebrewahd are behind bars on corruption charges. Guebreselassie Hailemariam, known as a.k.a Aleqa Guebreselassie – owner of the COMET Building in the Hayahulet Mazoria area in Bole sub-district, and father of Yemane Guebreselassie, who owns the new Capital Hotel & Spa on Haile Guebreselassie Avenue was also arrested three weeks ago, in connection with the current high profile corruption crackdown on the tax sector by theFederal Ethics & Anti Corruption Commission (FEACC). He has already been indicted and has joined other high profile officials in prison, Fortune confirmed from investigators. October 2, 2013: Federal Anti-Corruption Commission (FEAC) reveals over1 billion birr lost from EEPCo’ Local News: A recent study conducted by the Ethiopian Federal Anti-Corruption Commission (FEAC) has found out that over one billion birr has been lost from the Ethiopian Electric Power Corporation (EEPCo). The Commission said it found the corruption and misuse of resources within the Addis Abeba Electric Power Corporation's equipment administration system. The first problem, the study finds, has to do with the purchase of items. The warehouse departments do not receive copies of documents about the materials that are purchased. The study has also found out that materials are placed in inappropriate places and materials that have quality problems have been purchased. The findings show that over 150million birr has been lost due to fraudulent documents. Similarly, over 1.9billion birr has been lost in two budget years due to corrupt practices in relation to purchasing, product specification, store and proof of purchase. It was also indicated that over 45 faulty products were purchased. The Commission stated that 45 thousand pins that have defects have been left for over five years unused.Other materials were being repainted to make them look brand new.

Serious problems were also found with regards to the purchase of spare parts. The Commission also stated that although problems were found interms of performance, it finds it difficult to get individuals responsible. Itis to be recalled that the Ethiopian government had decided that the Corporation should be managed by Indians for the next two years.

October 3, 2013: Low income families thrown into the streets of Bahir Dar'

Top News - Very low income families that have been given housing in Public Houses since the times of the previous regime are currently being evicted from their houses and thrown into the streets, residents and the victims in Bahir Dar city said to ESAT. The government officials have luredthe people promising them that they will be given replacement houses butinstead bought the places themselves through lease or sold them to investors. Although they have appealed various government agencies for solution, they have been given deaf ears, the evictees said. Some have lived for over five years in the streets. They also state that they have been given neither compensation nor another house in return. Reports indicate that there are numerous people who have been evicted from theirplaces and now live in the streets.

October 3, 2013: Waste of resources: corruption in the Addis Ababa Water& Sewage Authority'

ESAT News: Lack of proper resource administration and officials' corruption has been rampant within the Addis Ababa Water and SewerageAuthority (AAWSA), the Federal Anti-Corruption Commission (FEAC) has said. While materials such as DCI and DN used for water pipelines are purchased with proper sample measurements other inputs were purchased without any measurement leading to quality problems. Over 92million birr has been lost due to the purchase of water cliché and submersible pumps which were later deemed unnecessary for the work being done. The Commission has confirmed that there are still materials under the Authority’s store whose 90% payment has already been made but their quality standard has not been approved. It has also found out that the Authority’s store still contains so many unused items including over 4000 water meters. Over 300 thousand ABC cables that were purchased in the year 2003 and over 100 thousand pin bolted, wires and water meters purchased in the following years are still left unused in the store. The other shortcoming found within the Authority was that materials have been stolen, wasted or burned up due to shortcomings in resource administration. The report has listed several cases of resource abuse and corruption and due to shortcomings in resource monitoring andadministration, resources worth 1billion 900million birr have been lost.

October 3, 2013: LAMPEDUSA, Italy - At least 200 Eritreans, Somalis deadin boat wreck off Italy’

UPI - At least 200 people are confirmed dead after a boat carrying asylumseekers from Africa wrecked near the Italian island of Lampedusa, officialssaid. About 150 people from Somalia and Eritrea have been rescued from the capsized boat off the coast of Lampedusa, Italian news agency ANSA reported. The boat was carrying more than 500 migrants most of whom were Eritreans. The boat caught fire and sank after someone onboard set a blanket on fire to try to signal nearby fishing boats but inadvertently ignited leaking fuel, the report said. "We started jumping into the water when the flames got too high," a survivor said. "The fishing boats didn't come and get us." A fishing boat crew member said no one in the fleet saw the signal. A rescue operation did not get under way until an Italian navy helicopter crew spotted someone in the water, ANSA said. Italian President Giorgio Napolitano referred to the accident as the "massacres ofinnocents" and called for nations to come together to fight human trafficking. Many migrants die each year as they attempt to make what Napolitano called "journeys of despairs" from north Africa to Lampedusa, the closest European island to the African coast Italian news agency ANSAreported. According to the Geneva based UNHCR, most of the died ones, and those had been rescued from the capsized boat off the coast of Lampedusa, were from Eritrea and Somalia.

October 3, 2013: SOCCER - Ethiopia declines Egypt’s friendly matchrequest’

Supersport: Ethiopia has declined a request by Egypt to play a friendly match in Cairo. Supersport reveals that Egypt sent a request to have the match played at home but on the other hand Ethiopia requested if the same game could be played in Addis leading to a deadlock. A source at the federation who sought anonymity told supersport.com, "I can confirmEgypt requested Ethiopia for a friendly but due to the insecurity and uncertainty in the country we could not accept the offer but when we requested if the same friendly could be played in Addis they were not also ready to travel." "We have to take care of the safety of our players that is why we could not accept the offer though this does not mean we don't respect Egypt," the source told Supersport.com. Ethiopia had been seeking to play both Ghana and Cameroon in friendlies but neither has notmaterialised with only 11 days before they clash with Nigeria in a World Cup play offs in Addis Ababa. Meantime FIFA names Ethiopia/Nigeria match officials. FIFA has named the officials to handle the much anticipated World Cup playoff match between Ethiopia and Nigeria on October 13 at the National Stadium, Addis Ababa. FIFA have also confirmed that the match will kick off at 4pm unlike earlier reports which had indicated the match was to commence at 2 pm. Alioum Neant will be the referee while Evarist Menkouande and Yanoussa Moussa wil be the first and second assistants. The fourth official will be Kalla Henry Duvalier. Also named are Match commissioner Wilfred Mukuna from Zimbabwe, Security officer Nicholas Musonye from Kenya and FIFA observer Walter Gagg from Switzerland.

Local News: The dean of Arbaminch University in southwestern Ethiopia has expelled hundreds of students who complained about lack of preparation to take an exam before starting their 4th year. Instead of sitting down and hearing the students’ grievances, the dean, Dr. Feleke Woldeyes, suspected member of the ruling party, ordered them to pack their belongings and leave. The students were escorted out of the campusby the notorious federal police.

October 4, 2013: DPM shoots the first criticism against the late PM’

ESAT News: Deputy Prime Minister Demeke Mekonen has said that the former Prime Minister Meles Zenawi had a lot of workload and thus there were inadequacies in implementation which made improvements necessary. In his interview with the State Daily, Addis Zemen, Demeke admitted that there were inadequacies in performance in certain areas. Hesaid the former Prime Minister focused on major development works whichtheir evaluations showed that some ministerial organisations and development sectors were not sufficiently planned, evaluated and supported. Answering to the question on the needs of a cluster of deputy prime ministers, Demeke said although Meles is not replaceable, continuing the renaissance journey through a cooperative leadership has been important. Demeke said the creation of the prime ministerial clustersis not a sign of mistrust but was to build more capacity and carry challenges.

October 5, 2013: Nigerian President to disburse funds to transport fans forEthiopia WCQ playoffs'
StarAfrica: President of the Federal Republic of Nigeria, Goodluck Jonathan, has okayed funding that will permit massive deployment of fans to cheer on Nigeria during the first leg of the World Cup qualifiers playoffs in Ethiopia on October 13. Sports Minister, Bolaji Abdullahi, who disclosed the news, has said that it was imperative for the Eagles to have many supporters in order to neutralize the deafening effectof Ethiopian fans. "I am delighted to say that Mr President has given us his full support. He has approved funds for the NFA to ensure that large contingents of Nigerian fans are taken to Ethiopia for the game," Abdullahisaid. "Everyone who witnessed Afcon 2013 knows how vociferous Ethiopian fans could be. So, we are responding appropriately to ensure that large contingents of Nigerian supporters are represented," Abdullahi said. Meanwhile, the president of the Nigerian Football Federation, Aminu Maigari, had said that a victory in Ethiopia will be synonymous to a qualification for the Super Eagles.
October 5, 2013: Ethiopia not planning to withdraw from Somalia: PMHD'
PRESS TV: Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Deslaegn says his country is not planning to withdraw its troops from Somalia. Hailemariamsaid on Friday that Ethiopia will do whatever within its power to fight al- Shabab. However, he did not say how many Ethiopian troops are stationed in Somalia. The al-Shabab group is an off-shoot of the Islamic Courts Union (ICU) in Somalia and fights against the foreign forces in country. The Ethiopian premier made the comments after al-Shabab claimed responsibility for an attack on the partly Israeli-owned Westgate shopping mall in Kenya's capital Nairobi on September 21 in protest against the presence of Kenyan troops in Somalia."The Christian government of Kenya invaded our country in October 2011 killing many innocent civilians with their military jets," al-Shabab spokesman Sheik AliMohamud Rage said. Kenya has more than 4,000 army soldiers in southern Somalia, where they have been battling the al-Shabab fighters since 2011. The Kenyan troops are part of the African Union Mission in Somalia (AMISOM) that gets training and equipment from the United States. Ethiopian troops also invaded Somalia in November 2011 to fight against al-Shabab militants.
October 6, 2013: Ethiopian Ph.D. student wins a NASA Fellowship award'
The Collegian: This year, two determined SDSU Ph.D. students WoubetAlemu and Christopher Moran won the international NASA Earth and Space Science Fellowship award. This award grants the students each a $30,000 sum to help further their aspiring research plans for the future. The grant also allows the students to utilize NASA's research recourses that are typically unavailable to the public such as satellites, telescopes and planes. Moran is out west studying fuel treatments that deal with forest fires. Alemu, is well on his way to organizing multiple data collection systems for agriculture production in East Africa. Winning these fellowships has opened many new doors for the students in terms of completing their Ph.D.'s, and help them to be a part of solving larger, worldwide problems. "Woubet and I met in 2009 when we first went to Ethiopia (Woubet's home country) for a project under the National Institutes of Health," said Alemu's Ph.D. advisor Dr. Geoffrey Henebry. "Since 2011, I have advised him by checking research progress alongsidehim as his graduate research assistant."

Alemu's research deals indirectly with the future prediction of grain production in Ethiopia, South Sudan and Tanzania. The extremities of these countries climate variables, along with their "very incomplete infrastructure," make crop production nearly unpredictable and difficult to maintain. Alemu uses passive microwave data from special sensors (2003-2011) onboard NASA's Aqua satellite to measure air temperature, surface moisture, and vegetation optical depth through clouds at night. While these specific data points are not commonly used, they are important variables for exactly what Alemu plans to do with his research. "For the first year [of research] we do crop vegetation modeming for land surface phenology. For the second year, we will use this data to predict crop productivity in these countries," Alemu said. "We will use this type of data for the research as a whole in the future." If Alemu's research goes the way he plans it to, this process will gradually narrow down exactly how to effectively increase the grain production in East Africa.

Africa TopSports: If Nigeria wholeheartedly believes to kick out the WaliyaAntelopes of Ethiopia during their upcoming World Cup Brazil playoffs' firstleg game on October 13 in Addis Ababa, the latter also vows to overthrow the Super Eagles' supremacy.This is restated by Coach Sewnet Bishaw of Ethiopia. "We are ready to face Nigeria in the qualifier, we are preparing hard and I believe we have a team that can beat Nigeria to the world cup ticket," he boasted. Both Ethiopia and Nigeria last met during 2013 AFCON and Nigeria triumphed 2-0, courtesy Victor Moses brace from the penalty spot.

October 7, 2013: PMHD made some remarks in a Press Conference thatwill resonate for years and make or break his political future, as well asthe future of Ethiopian partisan politics. What is the most incredulous statement by the Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn so far, he announced that he will welcome the participation of Egypt and Sudan inthe construction of the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam (GERD) and that his government and he consider the Dam to be “jointly owned” byEthiopia, Sudan, and Egypt.

October 7, 2013: Refugee Camps in Ethiopia struck by Lampedusa Boat Sinking, 3 Eritreans Killed’ RSS feed: By Gianluca Mezzofiore - A prominent human rights activist claims three Eritrean refugees have died and many more have been injured at refugee camps in northern Ethiopia after a memorial vigil dedicated to the victims of the Lampedusa boat sinking turned violent. Meron Estefanos, also a radio presenter in Swedenfor Radio Erena, exclusively told IBTimes UK that a riot erupted in the MaiAyni refugee camp after Eritrean refugees started expressing their frustration at authorities. Police opened fire to disperse the riot and four children were wounded as a result. The unrest spread to other refugee camps such as the Adi Harish and three people were killed. "Refugees, who contacted Eritrean independent Radio Erena, disclosed that the initialobjective of the gatherings was to remember those who perished in the Lampedusa disaster, but quickly turned into a protest over what refugeesconsidered corruption in the refugee resettlement process as well as issues over camp security," Estefanos said.
A spokesperson at the UN Refugee Agency (UNHCR) confirmed to IBTimesUK that riots took place in the refugee camps but was unable to confirm the fatalities, adding that the situation was calming down. Over 65,000 Eritrean refugees live in Ethiopia, spread across four refugee camps. "Therefugees believe that many of those who are making the perilous journey via Libya and the Sahara Desert do so because the resettlement program in Ethiopian refugee camps is corrupt with many Ethiopians being given bogus refugee statuses that qualify them for resettlement opportunities and often they are prioritised over genuine refugees," Estefanos said.
Refugees stressed that the protest was mainly peaceful but other reportssay that angry migrants started throwing stones at local authorities.
The UNHCR estimates that up to 3,000 refugees escape from Eritrea everymonth and the majority of those are currently in refugee camps in Sudan and Ethiopia. Around 500 people were aboard the refugee boat when it capsized and sank half a mile from Lampedusa. So far 211 people have been confirmed dead, but it is feared that at least 300 people have perished. The UNHCR reported that 8,400 migrants landed in Italy and Malta in the first six months of 2013. The majority of them, following a well-worn path from northern Africa and the Middle East, continue their journey to northern Italy, Germany, France or the UK. After leaving Eritrea for Sudan and south Egypt, Eritrean migrants travel to Libya wherethe majority are usually arrested.

October 7, 2013: Ethiopia parliament elects Mulatu Teshome as newpresident'

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia by Agence France-Presse (news updates) - Ethiopia's parliament elected Mulatu Teshome to be the country's new president Monday, for a six-year term in a largely symbolic and ceremonial post. "Following the opening of the new parliament, a joint session of the House of Representatives (HPR) and House of Federation(HoF) elected Ambassador Dr. Mulatu Teshome as the third President ofEthiopia," the foreign ministry said in it's statement.

While officially head of state, real power rests in the hands of the Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn. Mulatu, 57, who was Ethiopia's ambassador to Turkey until his appointment, replaces the 88-year old Girma Wolde Giorgis, who first took the post in 2001 and was reelected in2007. "I feel honoured to be the president of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia," Mulatu said after taking the oath of office, and vowing to fulfil "the country's development strategies."

Mulatu, who like all Ethiopia is known by his first name, comes from the Oromo people, the country's largest ethnic group. He has also served as Ethiopia's ambassador to China and Japan as well as Ethiopia's Minister ofAgriculture. Ethiopia's parliament is dominated by the ruling party, with only one opposition member. Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn himself took office in September 2012, a month after the death of long- time ruler Meles Zenawi.

October 8, 2013: PMHD links armed opposition leaders to a potentialterrorism'

EAN: Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn says his governmenthas proof that some opposition leaders who organized anti-government protests last month are linked to terrorist groups operating in the country.This statement comes only a week after a leading opposition group – Unity for Democratic Justice (UDJ) – protested against the country’s anti- terrorism law which was adopted in 2009. This was the second anti- government protest in the month of September. A week earlier, members of the Blue Party had demonstrated in the streets of Addis Ababa demanding changes in the government’s political, social and economic policies.

The opposition claimed the government was using the controversial law totarget journalists and political leaders. In mid 2011, three political partieswere classified as terrorist groups under the country’s anti-terrorism legislation. The three — Ginbot 7, the Ogaden National Liberation Front, and Oromo Liberation Front — were also accused of planning attacks against the African Union. Desalegn has denied the allegations saying thathis government has utmost respect for all 99 opposition political parties inthe country. The government will, however, not take any chances with thecountry's security, especially now that they have acquired evidence linkingthose demanding democracy to terrorists, he explained. It is only a matterof time before the suspects are caught red handed with explosives and taken to court, he added. The Prime Minister proceeded to defend the anti-terrorism legislation saying that it was drafted in accordance with internationally accepted standards and therefore would not be withdrawn.

October 8, 2013: University students being forced to take training onextremism & terrorism'

ESAT News: As part of its plans to train all Ethiopian students about extremism, terrorism and anti-peace elements, the government has beganits first training scheme with university students. Two weeks ago, civil servants who took part in similar training had asked the government for such a training not to be offered to children under the age of 15. Studentsof the Addis Abeba University Technology faculty have been ordered to go to the main campus in Sidest Kilo for training as they headed for registration last weekend. When they students asked why they should attend it, the university officials responded by saying that it was an order that came from the government and they cannot do anything about it. The students were then ordered not to leave the campus before they were transported by buses to the training halls. The government labels opposition groups Ginbot-7, OLF, ONLF, those it fears as potential threats to its power, along with the international terrorist group known as Al- Quaida as "terrorists".

October 8, 2013: Election of executives in Afar Regional State being heldin a military training camp'

ESAT News: Despite the increasingly rampant bad governance and eviction of people in the past three years in Afar, a meeting is being held in Awash-Araba to elect the region's officials inside tank operators trainingcentre. There are reportedly two camps of those who support the election of the current regional president Ismael Alisero, who is supported by the TPLF, and those that oppose him. However, president Ismael and his supporters are conducting the election by acting both as candidates and voters themselves. Ismael Ali Sero, who has not completed his elementarystudies, has been leading the region for a long time now. He is attempting to control the election results by queuing people like Seyoum Awol, Muhammed Ambeta, and Awol Wotika along with him. It had been reported there was a power struggle in the Afar region. If President IsmaelAli Sero wins again, he will be the first regional president to stay in power for a long time.

October 9, 2013: Ethiopia calls an urgent meet re ICC'

ESAT News: African countries have been called to an urgent meeting in Addis Abeba which is aimed at opposing the International Criminal Court(ICC). The lead organiser of the meeting is the Ethiopian government.

Ethiopian Premier Hailemariam Dessalegn had recently appeared before the U.N. General Assembly and criticised the Court. Following Assembly, the current Chairman of the African Union (AU), Hailemariam, has called the leaders to attend the Union's meeting scheduled for this Saturday in Addis Abeba. Kenya's President Uhuru Kenyatta and the Deputy President William Ruto and Sudanese President Omar H. al-Bashir are serving government officials that are indicted by the ICC. Kenyatta has applied to attend the proceedings through a video link but the judges have not yet ruled on the request. Source in Addis Abeba said, although Ethiopia is not a signatory of the ICC, the ruling Front, EPRDF, has recently been engaged in condemning the Court and this could mean that the government is really concerned about something serious, according to analysts. It has to be recalled that EPRDF's government had killed over 200 innocent citizens in the May-2005 election and has also tortured and killed thousands of people in the Ogaden, Gambella, Oromia and SouthernEthiopian regions although no government official has been impeached forthe crimes so far. The decisions of the member countries of the AU are notexpected to have any influence on the international Court.

October 10, 2013: Ethiopian Government Choking Muslim Unrest'

ADDIS ABABA, (IPS) – The refusal by the Ethiopian government to redressgrievances harboured by the Muslim community here, which comprises about 34 percent of the country's 91 million people makes this Horn of African nation vulnerable to extremism. “If legitimate grievances are not met there is a risk that extremist violent elements will exploit those grievances to further their own aim,” Mehari Taddele Maru, head of the African Conflict Prevention Programme at the Pretoria-based Institute for Security Studies, told IPS. Ethiopia’s Muslim community has been taking part in major demonstrations over the last two years against the country’sruling regime for alleged interference in its religious affairs. The majority of Ethiopians are Christian. The mass protests have been non-violent but the Sep. 21 terror attack by the Somali extremist group Al-Shabaab on Kenya’s Westgate Shopping Mall raises questions about the spread of Islamic extremism here, as there are growing concerns that radicalists could exploit grievances if they are not well addressed.

In the third round, the 10 group winners play off over two legs todetermine who will travel to Brazil.

Ethiopia ready for Nigeria in World Cup qualifier: AhramOnline Sports: (updates) “We are ready for Nigeria, we are very ready. We learned a lesson from the mistakes we made last time”, says Ethiopia's Menyahil Teshome. Teshome told his team, regarded as underdogs among powerfulAfrican national football teams like Ghana and Ivory Coast, is bolstered bya strong sense of nationalism and a refusal to be intimidated. Ethiopia – acountry better known for their renowned runners than their footballers – have amazed supporters by making it this far in the qualifiers.

Nigerian president disburses funds to transport fans for Ethiopia WCQplayoffs’

LEADERSHIP, Abuja (updates) President of the Federal Republic of Nigeria,Goodluck Jonathan, has okayed funding that will permit massive deployment of fans to cheer on Nigeria during the first leg of the World Cup qualifiers playoffs in Ethiopia on October 13. Sports Minister, Bolaji Abdullahi, who disclosed the news, has said that it was imperative for the Eagles to have many supporters in order to neutralize the deafening effectof Ethiopian fans. “I am delighted to say that Mr President has given us his full support. He has approved funds for the NFA to ensure that large contingents of Nigerian fans are taken to Ethiopia for the game,” Abdullahisaid. “Everyone who witnessed Afcon 2013 knows how vociferous Ethiopian fans could be. So, we are responding appropriately to ensure that large contingents of Nigerian supporters are represented,” Abdullahi said. Meanwhile, the president of the Nigerian Football Federation, Aminu Maigari, had said that a victory in Ethiopia will be synonymous to a qualification for the Super Eagles.

The Battle of Addis Ababa b/n the Eagles and the Antelopes’

PREMIUM TIMES OPINION (updates) – Does an expert review of Sunday's World Cup playoff between the Super Eagles of Nigeria and the Antelopes of Ethiopia, concluding that Sunday's match will be a difficult assignment for the Eagles. Were this to be a marathon race, we would have called it in favour of the Ethiopians whose sons and daughters have shown repeatedly that when it comes to long distance races they are a veritable force to be reckoned with. This is football. And if not for its unpredictability we would also have called the game against Ethiopia in favour of Nigeria. Nigeria has proven time and time again that it is a blessed and gifted country when it comes to the round leather game. The likes of Thunder Balogun, Segun Odegbami, Kanu Nwakwo, Austin J.J Okocha, Daniel Amokachie, Tarila Okorowanta, Samson Siasia, Late Muda Lawal, Peter Rufai and even the Eagles current head coach, Stephen Keshihad through the years established Nigeria as a leading light in the game offootball. The country also has many laurels to show for its accomplishments. Three African Cup of Nations trophies, One Olympic Football Gold medal, three Under 17 world cup and countless diadems at the regional sub regional and ladies tournaments and championship. Yet we cannot say it's a done deal. For one the Ethiopians are going to give their all to the game and they may have the psychological edge because they are approaching the game with all the seriousness it deserves. I also foresee some psychological war against the Eagles in Addis Ababa. The Ethiopians game plan is to win on home soil and frustrate Nigeria during the return leg. One of the people who should know that the task at hand is a difficult one is the mercurial Kanu Nwakwo whose exploits with the round leather game remains a tale of legend. He said the game in Addis Ababa will be tough and that Nigeria needs luck and prayers.

Nigeria/Ethiopia: Updates: We Are Ready for Any Hostility in Ethiopia –Coach Stephen Keshi’
LEADERSHIP, Abuja : (updates) Super Eagles head coach, stephen Keshi has described Sunday's first leg 2014 World Cup qualifier playoff between his team and Walyas Antelope of Ethiopia in Addis Ababa as a do or die affair, adding that they are ready for any antics and hostility the host would deploy in the tie. Speaking yesterday at the media parley with member of sports writers, the former Super Eagles skipper said he is not astranger to the antics and hostility of African nations in frustrating visiting teams to win.
"We are ready for any hostility. We have passed through it as players and now as a coach. So, it is no longer a new thing for us. It is one of the things to expect in an away game in Africa.
"We know the continent and we are ready for any form of challenges because we need good result in Ethiopia," he said. While a lot of Nigeriansare adamant that Super Eagles got the easiest draw and expect the reigning African champions to sail through easily, Keshi insisted that the game will be very tough. "It is going to be tough in Ethiopia and I have a lot of respect for them. All we need to do is to be focused, concentrate in the whole 90 minutes and pray for good result." Nigeria faces Ethiopia in the first leg of a two-legged double headers at the Ydnekachew Tesema Stadium, Addis Ababa on Sunday before the return leg in Calabar next month, November 16. Keshi had led the Super Eagles in 31 internationals since taking the reins from Samson Siasia in 2011. He has yet to lose a competitive fixture to African opposition, but that record would be put totest on Sunday afternoon.

Football Preview: Ethiopia, Egypt, Burkina Faso threaten African WCregulars’

Ahram Online Sport: (updates) Egypt, Ethiopia and Burkina Faso are Africa's surprise challengers for a place at the World Cup when the final playoffs begin this weekend. Among the more traditional favorites to makeit to Brazil next year are Ivory Coast, continental champion Nigeria and 2010 quarterfinalist Ghana. However, they still have to come through tricky final tests at the end of a two-year qualifying competition, when thecontinent's five berths will ultimately be decided by 10 home-and-away ties.

Ethiopia/Nigeria: We'll Unleash Spain On Eagles’

VANGUARD - (updates) Coach Sewnet Bishaw says his players passing game is going to give them victory over the Super Eagles in this weekend's 2014 World Cup first leg playoff match in Addis Ababa. "I feel confident that our passing game would make the difference when we play the Nigerians. It will be tough but our great passing game, which is like that of the world champions, Spain, will give us the needed victory", Bishaw said. Ethiopia captured the hearts of fans at the 2013 Africa Cup ofNations in South Africa, with their great passing game, which reminded allof the tiki-taka style adopted by Spain in the lat four years. Spain's style was so effective in their 3-0 spanking of Eagles in Brazil and as Ethiopia battle Nigeria on Sunday, Bishaw expects his troops to toe a similar line against their more illustrious opponents at the Addis Ababa Stadium. "We can do what Spain did against the Nigerians. We showed glimpses of that when we met them at the Africa Cup of Nations", Bisha told Ethiopian Herald. In the meantime, football fans in Ethiopia are ecstatic about their team's achievements. Throughout the capital's streets, giant portraits of the team are hang on high-rise buildings while state-owned channels air adverts in between regular programming, promoting the eagerly-awaited ties as "180 minutes before history is made". Bishaw is satisfied with the state of the game in Ethiopia. Recent success has meant more sponsors inthe domestic league and higher salaries for the players. "Ethiopian footballwill continue to grow," he said.

October 10, 2013: African Union summit opens with attack on the ICC’

AFP News - Addis Ababa: (updates) - Several nations in the 54-memberAU have accused the ICC of singling out Africans for prosecution, and have specifically demanded that the court drop the proceedings againstKenya’s leadership. The African Union (AU) gathered in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia to formally withdraw from the Rome Statute in supremely dramatic form. The world for the first time will witness a choreographed denunciation (announcement of termination) of an international treaty by an entire continent. Several nations in the 54-member AU, whose rotatingpresidency is currently held by Ethiopia, have accused the ICC of singling out Africans for prosecution, and have specifically demanded that the court drop the proceedings against Kenya’s leadership. The special summitcomes amid mounting tensions between The Hague-based court and Kenya, whose president and vice-president have been charged with committing crimes against humanity during election-related violence in 2007-2008.

October 10, 2013: Ethiopian premier says the Hague court has 'doublestandards'

(Reuters) - The International Criminal Court has shown "double standards" by pursuing only Africans so far and should defer trials of Kenya's leaders or take other steps so they can fulfill their elected offices, Ethiopia's prime minister said on Thursday. Hailemariam Desalegn was speaking before an African Union summit in Addis Ababa that will discuss relations with the court which has convicted only one man, an African warlord. The only others charged are also Africans. In an interview with Reuters, Hailemariam also said al Shabaab militants in neighboring Somalia were weakened despite their attack on a Kenyan shopping mall last month, but Western states and others needed to do more to crush theIslamist group. Ethiopia, which hosts the African Union headquarters, alsocurrently chairs the 54-nation body. Of its members, 34 states have signed the statute that set up the war crimes court in The Hague, which has drawn increasingly strong African criticism.

October 13, 2013: Bombing Kills 2 in Ethiopian Capital'

VoA News Africa: Ethiopian state media have reported that a bomb blast in the capital city Addis Ababa has killed at least two people. The attack took place Sunday in the city's Bole district, which is home to a large Somali population. There was no immediate claim of responsibility for the bombing, but Ethiopia says it has thwarted plots of attacks in the past twoyears and blames rebel groups based in the south and southeast, as well as Somalia's al-Shabab insurgents. Ethiopian troops have been fighting al-Qaida-linked al-Shabab militants in Somalia since 2011, alongside African Union forces from Uganda, Burundi and Kenya.

October 13, 2013: Bomb blast kills two in Addis Ababa'

ADDIS ABABA (Reuters) – A bomb blast in the Ethiopian capital Addis Ababa killed two people on Sunday, state radio said. There was no immediate claim of responsibility for the bombing, but Ethiopia says it hasthwarted plots of attacks in the past two years and blames rebel groups based in the south and southeast, as well as Somalia's al Shabaab insurgents.

"A bomb blast occurred at a residential house in the Bole district and killedtwo unidentified individuals," a report on national radio said, quoting the National Security and Intelligence Service. The explosion occurred in the city’s upscale Bole district, about 5 km (3 miles) from a soccer stadium where thousands of fans were queuing for tickets to a World Cup qualifier against Nigeria and gathering at squares in the capital to watch the matchon giant screens. The radio did not mention any suspected link to the match. It quoted the security service as saying it was investigating the incident and gave no more details.

October 13, 2013: World Cup 2014: Nigeria beat Ethiopia 2-1, return leg

November 16’

BBC Sport: Nigeria survived a scare in Addis Ababa as the African champions rallied to beat Ethiopia 2-1 in the opening leg of their World Cup play-off. The hosts were the superior team for the first hour and led after 56 minutes as Nigerian goalkeeper Vincent Enyeama misjudged a cross from Behailu Assefa. Nigeria, who were not at their best, equalised through Emmanuel Emenike's ferocious drive after 67 minutes. Emenike then won and scored a penalty late on to secure the win. The match was in the 90th minute when Aynalem Hailu needlessly brought the Nigerian down, allowing the Turkey-based striker to coolly slot home a decisive goal. After four minutes of added time, referee Alioum calls for an end to the game. Nigeria survive the battle of Addis Ababa. The make mince meat of the altitude."Ethiopia's play scared us in the first half but we showed why we are the African champions in the second half - that's whatmakes the difference," assistant coach Daniel Amokachi told BBC Sport.

October 14, 2013: Good governance - Mo Ibrahim African leaders prizeunclaimed again’

ADDIS ABABA: The world's most valuable individual prize - the Mo Ibrahim prize for good governance in Africa - has gone unclaimed yet again. The $5m (£3.2m) prize is supposed to be awarded each year to an elected leader who governed well, raised living standards and then left office. This is the fourth time in five years there has been no winner. A committee member said the group looked "for excellence in governance but in leadership also". Kenya's Mwai Kibaki met at least one of the criteria, after he stepped down as president earlier this year. However, his2007 re-election was tarnished by disputes which turned violent, leading to the deaths of some 1,200 people. His opponent, Raila Odinga, said the poll had been rigged in favour of Mr Kibaki, who denied any wrongdoing.

Three people have won in the seven years since the prize was launched:Cape Verde's Pedro Verona Pires; Festus Mogae from Botswana and Mozambique's Joaquim Chissano. Sudan-born telecoms entrepreneur Mr Ibrahim launched the prize in an attempt to encourage African leaders toleave power peacefully. The $5m prize is spread over 10 years and is followed by $200,000 a year for life.

October 14, 2013: Sole opposition MEP says Ethiopia bottling up strife'

(Reuters) – Girma Seifu Maru, Ethiopia's sole opposition politician in a 547-seat parliament, says the authorities risk provoking social unrest if they do not offer more political space to critical voices. The 47-year-old economist and consultant said his party, Unity for Democracy and Justice (UDJ), is pushing for greater openness with a petition against an anti- terror law that critics say is used to stifle dissent, and by a campaign of protests. But it is an uphill struggle for opponents of the ruling coalition ina nation that Girma said was following China's model in a bid to drag swathes of its 90 million people, many still subsistence farmers, out of poverty by 2025.

October 14, 2013: Football: SuperEagles squad stoned in Addis'

LAGOS, Nigeria (Agencies) - The Nigeria Football Federation (NFF) will lodge an official complaint to World Football governing body, FIFA over what it says was the ill treatment meted to the Super Eagles during the team's two-day stay in Ethiopia. In a release made available to SuperSport.com by the media department of the Nigeria national team, it was alleged that "on arrival (in Ethiopia), the Eagles were given a bus infested with cockroaches but the team took it in its stride." The release further stated that "when it was time for training, the police team attached to the (Super Eagles) deliberately took routes that are traffic- jammed, yet the team refused to be intimidated". The NFF is also accusingthe Ethiopians of met out ill treatment to the Nigerian supporters at the stadium on match day. "Matters came to a head on match day, when all manner of soft drink bottles were hauled at Nigerian players and supporters when the Ethiopians thought that they had scored an opener inthe first half," the release further read.

The NFF will also highlight the incidents they claimed occurred after the game when Ethiopian fans were said to have "laid ambush and started stoning the (Nigerian) team's bus". "One of the heavy stones shattered the rear windscreen of the bus, sending all inside the bus scampering for safety. "With all taking cover. Real Betis star, Nosa Igiebor was the unlucky one as the stone slashed his right palm leading to profuse bleeding that was immediately attended to by team doctor, Ibrahim Gyaran," the release read. The NFF has however insisted that the Ethiopians will not be maltreated when they visit Calabar for the return legin November.

October 15, 2013: Election dispute leads to violence outside Ethiopianchurch in UK'

Guardian.co.uk: Violence erupted at the re-consecration of a church as a long-running rift between rival worshippers saw a protest turn ugly. Policearrested five people as the protest, which had begun on Saturday escalated to all out combat on Sunday outside the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Church, in St Philip Street, Battersea. It is believed the dispute,ongoing for 10 months, is over the election of trustees to run the church. The church closed in April this year to clear the air and was reconsecratedon the weekend by two bishops who flew over from Ethiopia. Police brought in extra offices and instructed Transport for London (TfL) to closepart of the road during the protest, but fighting broke out behind the building following a peaceful ceremony attended by 200 worshippers.

Tewodros Gebru was charged with assault and intent of robbery, Dawrit Girmay was charged with affray and assaulting a police officer and Ammanuel Kidane for affray and assaulting a police officer. Another man has been arrested for affray, while a fifth arrest was made for immigrationoffences. Chief Inspector Steve McSorley said: "At some point, as people were leaving, a dispute started between members of the factions away from the church. Chief Inspector Steve McSorley said: "At some point, as people were leaving, a dispute started between members of the factions away from the church.

October 15, 2013: Possible Muslim protests on the day of Eid al-Adha’

The “Let our voices be heard” protests that had been stopped for a while are set to be held nationwide once again when Ethiopian Muslims celebrate the 1434th year Eid al-Adha religious celebration on Tuesday October 15, 2013. The tentative programs of the protest show that the protesters plan to loudly protest the speeches of the Majlis leaders. If government or Majlis officials are going to speak during the celebration in Addis Abeba, there will be continuous protest until they break off their speeches. Federal police also announced that it has made all the necessary preparations to “protect peace and security”. Meanwhile, government officials have been passing best wishes and holiday messagesfrom Mosques in Woldia, Dessie, North Central Ethiopia. Worshipers said that this was the first time in Ethiopian history that the microphones of Mosques, often used for prayer and making calls, were used for such messages.

October 15, 2013: Hydropolitics on Nile river basin: Egypt, Ethiopia,Sudan Discuss GERD’

State Information Service (Cairo): An Ethiopian official told that officials from Ethiopia, Sudan and Egypt are expected to meet this month to hold discussions on means of implementing the recommendation of the international experts committee, tasked to assess the potential impacts ofEthiopia's massive dam GERD project on downstream countries of Sudan and Egypt. Director of the Boundary and Trans-boundary Rivers Affairs Directorate at the Ethiopian Ministry of Water and Energy Fekahmed Negash said that this meeting is expected to be held in Khartoum, Sudan on 22 October. Negash said that the experts recommended conducting more studies to analyze the impacts that the Ethiopian dam would pose toEgypt and Sudan.

October 15, 2013: Africa’s journalists honor the jailed Ethiopian editor’

(CPJ Blog) – Journalists and media owners across Africa gave Ethiopianjournalist Woubshet Taye a standing ovation in Cape Town on Saturday night at the CNN MultiChoice African Journalist Awards 2013, buthe wasn’t there to see it. Instead his wife and son accepted the Free PressAward on his behalf. Presenting the award to Berhane Tesfaye and the couple’s not-quite-five-year-old son, who were dressed in matching white and blue outfits, chair of the judging panel and editor-in-chief of the SouthAfrican weekly City Press Ferial Haffajee said it was disappointing that “once again there were too many cases” for the judges to consider in this category, which recognizes “excellence and provides support to African journalists who report at continuing risk to their lives and safety.

Woubshet, deputy editor of the Awramba Times, has been in jail for morethan two years. He was detained in June 2011and held incommunicado before being convicted on terrorism charges and sentenced to 14 years imprisonment in January 2012. After Woubshet's arrest, the paper stopped publishing in Ethiopia and the editor fled into exile. Accepting theaward on his behalf, Berhane Tesfaye said her husband was grateful for the solidarity and received the award in the name of all journalists who were affected.

October 15, 2013: Ethiopa's lone opposition MP warns of backlash againstauthoritarianism’ MP Girma Seifu Maru says government could face violentstruggle if it fails to open up to critical voices.

(The Guardian UK) - Girma Seifu Maru has possibly the loneliest job in African politics. Five hundred and forty-six members of the Ethiopian parliament are loyal to the ruling party. He alone is not. But the country'ssole opposition MP has warned that unless the government opens up to critical voices and guarantees human rights, it faces a potentially "violentstruggle".

In a rare interview with the Reuters news agency in Addis Ababa, Girma argued that Ethiopia's impressive economic growth of 10.6% over the pastdecade was based on Chinese-style authoritarianism and must go hand in hand with political freedoms. "The Chinese model is that economic development is the primary issue; don't ask about human rights issues, don't ask about your freedom, keeping silent on people's rights so that a few politicians get the economic benefits," said the 47-year-old economist.The government risked a popular backlash if it did not change direction, he said. "That will be a seed they are just giving water to at this time if they don't change their route and give hope to peaceful activities." To the outside world, a construction boom in Addis Ababa appears to symbolise how far the country has come since the infamous famine of the 1980s. Butfrustration at autocratic rule is intensifying. In June, witnesses said, thousands of Ethiopians staged the country's biggest anti-government demonstration since 2005.

Last month Amnesty International warned that basic rights were under attack after two opposition parties reported the arrests of many membersattempting to hold peaceful protests. Hopes of change via the ballot box seem remote. The disputed 2005 election ended in violence and the deaths of 200 people. Opposition candidates won 174 seats but many didnot take them up, alleging that the vote was rigged. Girma was the only opponent to win a seat in 2010. He claims that the ruling Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) and its allies used stateinstitutions to keep out most rivals.
The Reuters interview noted: "Dressed in a tracksuit and sipping a local StGeorge beer, he brushed off with a smile the idea he was lonely in parliament. 'I am one and they are one,' he said." The next parliamentary elections will be held 2015. Girma says his party, Unity for Democracy andJustice (UDJ), is committed to reform by peaceful means and pushing for greater openness with a "millions of voices for change" campaign and demonstrations for freedom around the country. Girma said his party activists had also launched a petition to repeal the 2009 anti-terrorism law, which rights groups say has been used to lock up opponents. Human Rights Watch says 13 journalists have been convicted since 2011, including Eskinder Nega Fenta, a journalist and blogger who received the 2012 PEN Freedom to Write award. "A spirit of fear is very dangerous," Girma said. "So if individuals can become free of this fear, they can bring change."
Amnesty said last month: "As eyes begin to turn towards the parliamentary elections due to be held in 2015, the Ethiopian government must release its stranglehold on political participation. The authorities must allow political opposition parties to function without harassment, andallow all persons, including peaceful protest groups, to exercise their rights to freedom of expression, assembly and association." But the government brushes off such criticism. Hailemariam Desalegn, who became prime minister following the death of Meles Zenawi in 2012, said last week that it could not be blamed for the opposition's weak showing. "Shall we say to the people: elect this guy or that guy?" he asked Reuters."It is the people who decide." (Text ends)
October 15, 2013: Slow but Sustained: Ethiopian Muslims' Struggle forRights Continues’ THINK AFRICA PRESS - Muslims to hold demonstrations in Addis Ababaand other cities. Muslims in Ethiopia have been protesting against government interference in religious affairs for more than twenty months.But eversince the violent crackdown by Ethiopian security forces on peaceful protestors during the Eid al-Fitr celebrations in Arsi last month, the Muslim community has been wary of organising new rallies. Whereas some observers believe that the movement has lost its momentum, activists engaged in the protests vow to continue their peaceful resistanceuntil their demands are met.

October 15, 2013: Health - New Hope For Malaria Patients'

Revelation: Scientists discover new vaccine that could be a new hope for malaria patients. According to the research group the new vaccine could be effective in preventing no less than one hundred million cases of malaria per annum. It is also likely to save over two hundred thousand lives that are lost due to malaria. According to the announcement made by GSK, the new vaccine can make children immune from malaria for 18 months from the date of vaccination with it. Impact of such vaccine could be massive, especially in Sub-Saharan Africa according to Professor Riley of London School of Hygiene. GSK is now trying to obtain regulatory authentication and it may take around two years to achieve it. "Results show that the malaria vaccine RTS,S/AS01 continues to protect vaccinatedchildren during an 18 month follow-up period", said Professor Brian Gilley,one of the researchers. To arrive at this conclusion the researchers experimented with the vaccine to numerous malaria patients in the age group of 5-17 months. Positive results inspired the researchers to publicize their theory.

October 15, 2014: Prof. Mesfin Woldemariam to receive LifetimeAchievement Award.

(Debirhan News) The prominent Ethiopian human rights activist and scholar, Professor Mesfin Woldemariam, is to receive a lifetime achievement award from an Ethiopian organisation in Australia, Democracy for Ethiopia Support Group. He is expected to arrive in Melbourne today. The Group based in Australia also extended the invitation to the Professor to also hold discussion with Ethiopians located in various cities of Australia. October 16, 2013: Int'l lawyers to sue Ethiopian officials in the ICC'

ESAT News: Following the broadcast of a documentary film about war crimes and human rights abuses in the Ogaden region of Ethiopia on a Swedish Television Station yesterday, international lawyers have started activities to bring Ethiopian officials before the International Criminal Court (ICC). The producer, Abdulahi Hussein, originally from the Region now living in Sweden said, after the transmission on the Tv, various mediaoutlets also reported about the documentary. Stellan Garde of the International Commission of Jurists (ICJ) said on the radio that he willput the case before Court. The Court of the Swedish War Crime Commission also set an appointment with Abdulahi to investigate the evidences and take them to Court. The lawyers said that they would take the case to the ICC together with the Geneva based ICJ and other humanrights organisations. He said the documentary contained more video clipsthat were not shown during his previous interview with ESAT. The clips show the genocides committed by the Ogaden region Leyou (Special) Police, the labelling of a lady that criticised the Region's president as a member of the opposition ONLF, and the speeches by police officers admitting that they have raped women in prison who also gave birth in prison. The feature is titled "The Dictators' Prisoners". ICJ's Swedish Commissioner Stellan Garde said to ESAT that they would do everything possible to bring the perpetrators of the crime to face justice. Stellan saidalthough Ethiopia is not a signatory of the ICC, it is possible to bring the case to the Court via the Committee Against Torture (CAT), which it is a signatory of, and by starting an investigation through the Swedish police.They will also try to make these evidences available to the UN Human Rights Committee. The video will be translated into various languages and will be transmitted via international media.The Ethiopian government has not given any response so far regarding the reports.

October 17, 2013: Ethiopia - A new study shows up to 680,000 people arelocally enslaved'

Global Slavery Index-2013 - A new study released by Walk Free Foundation has disclosed that up to 680,000 people are living in slave-likeconditions in Ethiopia. The Global Slavery Index provides a ranking of 162countries, reflecting a combined measure of three factors: estimated prevalence of modern slavery by population, a measure of child marriage,and a measure of human trafficking in and out of a country. The followingten countries ten countries account for 76% of the total estimate of 29.8 million enslaved people: India, China, Pakistan, Nigeria, Ethiopia, Russia, Thailand, Congo, Myanmar, Bangladesh.

October 17, 2013: Water war: Ethiopia's new dam could mean a crisis forEgypt'

Pittsburgh Post-Gazette - A sharpening dispute between Egypt and Ethiopia about Nile River water reminds the world how much does not change across the centuries in international politics and conflict. The plot of "Aida," the Giuseppe Verdi opera currently being presented by the Pittsburgh Opera, is set in ancient Egypt and turns on a war between Egypt and Ethiopia. Today the two countries don't even have a commonborder, but the crux of a serious problem lies in the fact that the Nile River rises in part in Ethiopia. That country has already completed 30 percent of the work on a dam that, according to the Egyptians, will drawheavily on water that feeds the Nile.

Egypt's population of 84 million draws an estimated 95 percent of its water from the Nile. It is generally agreed that without the Nile, there isno Egypt, dependent as its agriculture and general life are on the river. Egypt's claim to Nile water comes, first, from a 1959 treaty which recognizes its "natural and historic rights" to it; second, from Egypt's centuries-old pre-eminence; and, third, from its massive dependence onthe river. Ethiopia, an underdeveloped country, with Burundi, Kenya, Rwanda, South Sudan, Sudan, Tanzania and Uganda also serving as thewatershed of the Nile, claims that it, too, has a right to the water and particularly to its hydroelectric capacity. On that basis Ethiopia is constructing a $4.3 billion plant called the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam, which is scheduled to come online in 2017.

Ethiopia and the other headwater countries have also cooked up a new Nile River Framework treaty, which Ethiopia is putting forward to take theplace of the 1959 accord. The Egyptians are not only worried but also livid. Given the domestic political turmoil in the country, they are ill- equipped to take any military action to defend their position. Given the general vulnerability of their Aswan High Dam, they are not in a position to take military action against any country that has military aircraft. Talksbetween Egypt, Ethiopia and Sudan are scheduled for next week in Khartoum, the Sudanese capital. These countries need to find agreement on Nile water-sharing to improve life and maintain peace in the northeast corner of Africa. It won't be easy. It never has been.

October 18, 2013: Ethiopia: Police Abuse Journalists, Opponents toExtract Confessions – HRW'

NAIROBI – Ethiopian authorities have subjected political detainees to torture and other ill-treatment at the main detention center in Addis Ababa, Human Rights Watch said in a report released today. The Ethiopiangovernment should take urgent steps to curb illegal practices in the Federal Police Crime Investigation Sector, known as Maekelawi (central investigation), impartially investigate allegations of abuse, and hold those responsible to account. The 70-page report, "'They Want a Confession': Torture and Ill-Treatment in Ethiopia's Maekelawi Police Station," documents serious human rights abuses, unlawful interrogation tactics, and poor detention conditions in Maekelawi since 2010. Those detained in Maekelawi include scores of opposition politicians, journalists, protest organizers, and alleged supporters of ethnic insurgencies. "They tied my legs with my hands and put something between them. Then we left room 37 and they took me to a room near the cafeteria. In the room there is water. It's all ready. They opened water on my back. I could not shout or talk. They said if you want to answer the questions, make a sign with yourfinger, they opened water, beat me on the feet as my feet are up in the air and my head was on the ground. I hated myself. The water was pouring and I was thinking, I am going to die. I showed a sign, just to be able to get some air, then the men stopped the water. I said to them, I felt like I am going to die. I think I stayed approximately 20 minutes, when they finished that punishment they took me to my cell" page 38.

Human Rights Watch interviewed more than 35 former Maekelawi detainees and their relatives who described how officials had denied their basic needs, tortured, and otherwise mistreated them to extract information and confessions, and refused them access to legal counsel andtheir relatives. "Ethiopian authorities right in the heart of the capital regularly use abuse to gather information," said Leslie Lefkow, deputy Africa director at Human Rights Watch. "Beatings, torture, and coerced confessions are no way to deal with journalists or the political opposition."Since the disputed elections of 2005, Ethiopia has intensified its clampdown on peaceful dissent, Human Rights Watch said. Arbitrary arrest and political prosecutions, including under the country's restrictive anti-terrorism law, have frequently been used against perceived opponents of the government who have been detained and interrogated atMaekelawi.

October 18, 2013: PMHD says to opposition "Do not fool yourself saying the government is scared"

ESAT News: Responding to questions posed by the members of the Parliament during his official address yesterday, PrimeMinister Hailemariam Dessalgn said that the government has reached a stage where it can talk with those forces that think about "street violence". Hailemariam asked oppositions to stop "extreme labelling and hate politics" and those that think of organising "street violence" to refrainfrom their plans. "When we say we have tangible information that there are plans (by forces) of organising street violence, they think the government is afraid and has started spreading fears" he said. "This government does not get scared. Its own history and behaviours do not show that" Hailemariam added and said "do not fool yourself thinking thatthis government is scared. It is the peoples' government and the ball is in your hands".

October 18, 2013: Ethiopia: Distinguished Purdue Prof. Gebisa Ejeta appointed to U.N. advisory board'

Journal & Courier: A distinguished Purdue University agronomy professor and World Food Prize laureate hasachieved another international honor. Gebisa Ejeta was appointed to the U.N. secretary-general's new Scientific Advisory Board, which will give advice on science, technology and innovation regarding sustainable development to United Nations organizations. The board, which is comprised of 26 members representing natural, social, human and agricultural sciences, aims to make sure that scientific findings are reflected in policy decisions made throughout the U.N. Ejeta is the agricultural scientist on the board, according to Purdue. "It is a great honor and responsibility to have the chance to work at the highest level ofglobal science policy and diplomacy," Ejeta said. "I will try to be a good ambassador of agricultural sciences to uphold the indispensability of food and agriculture, and to impart that feeding humanity sustainably in the foreseeable and unforeseeable future is the ultimate responsibility of all nations. I hope to make a difference. Ethiopian-American Distinguished Professor Gebisa Ejeta is the 2009 World Food Prize Laureate.

October 19, 2013: UK aid funds 'Gestapo style' regime in Ethiopia'

THE TIMES - Ethiopia, the single largest recipient of British aid, is torturing prisoners in a Gestapo-style prison, according to human rights activists. Opposition politicians, protest leaders and journalists are amongscores of victims who are denied access to food, water, light, lawyers or relatives as part of a brutal strategy to extract confessions, Human RightsWatch said.

October 19, 2013: WEALTH - The gap b/n the haves and the have nots - 10 Richest Ethiopians of 2013'

News Analysis: Despite Ethiopia is among the top ten poorest countries in the world, the primary reason for Ethiopia's abject poverty is the vampire political leadership that is lootingthe resources of the country. One of the signs that Ethiopian politicians are some of the most corrupt in the world is the kind of wealth they haveamassed while on government salary. Their crime of theft comes out in the open whenever they become entangled in an internal power struggle.A few months ago, for example, the state media that is controlled by theruling party exposed how two of the country's top customs officials have stolen tens of millions of dollars. These two officials, Melaku Fanta, Director General of the Ethiopian Revenues and Customs Authority (ERCA)with the rank of Minister, and his deputy, Guebrewahid Woldegiorgis, wereclose confidantes of the late PM Meles Zenawi and his wife Azeb Mesfin. If these two underlings of Meles Zenawi and Azeb Mesfin can steal tens of millions of dollars, as reported by ETV, one can imagine how much lootingis going on by their file and rank of the government and the ruling party.

Thus, it is not surprising that more than half in this year's list of the 10 richest Ethiopians are members of the ruling party. Here below 10 RichestEthiopians of 2013, Sheikh Mohammed Hussein Al Amoudi – Controls gold mines and massivetracts of fertile farmlands that were handed to him by the late PM Meles Zenawi, after their owners were kicked out and displaced. Estimated net worth: $13 billion.

Azeb Mesfin – Widow of the late Meles Zenawi, commonly known as the"mother of corruption," has ownership interests in many of the biggest companies in Ethiopia. Estimated net worth: $4 billion.

Birhane Guebrekiristos – Senior member of the TPLF, and close confdante of the late Meles Zenawi and Azeb Mesfin; he launders their loot out of thecountry. Estimated net worth: $2 billion.

Sebhat Nega – A TPLF veteran leader: His fortune has been declining afterhe was kicked out of the TPLF politburo and the Endowment Fund for the Rehabilitation of Tigray (EFFORT) by Meles Zenawi and Azeb Mesfin; he iscurrently rebounding. Estimated net worth $2 billion.

Seyoum Mesfin – A senior member of the TPLF party, former foreign affairs minister, current top diplomat (Ethiopian ambassador to China), used his board chairmanship of the Ethiopian Airlines and now as current top diplomat smuggles illegal drugs enroute to Africa from Asia; he seemsto be a drug dealer using his diplomatic status. Estimated net worth: $1.8billion.

Samuel Taffese – One of Azeb Mesfin's business partners; their relationship has gone sour over the past couple of years, negatively affecting his construction business. Estimated net worth: $1.6 billion.

Abay Tsehaye – A senior member of the TPLF party, has blind partnerships with many of the big companies in Ethiopia. Net worth: $1.5billion

Omer Ali Shifaw – Owner of Nejat International, whose wealth has been declining after TPLF started to compete with his coffee exporting business.Estimated net worth: $500 million Eyob Mamo Katcha – Son of the former owner of Public Inter-city Rapid Transporter Mammo Yinberberu (Mammo Katcha) – Is CEO and Chairmanof Capitol Petroleum Group, Washington DC. Estimated worth: $500 million.

Suhura Ismail Khan – She has become the biggest khat (stimoulant plant leaf) dealer in East Africa by establishing partnerships with TPLF officials and forging a close friendship with the late dictator Meles Zenawi. The TPLF-occupied Ethiopian embassies around the world are her main khat export routes to the Diaspora. Estimated net worth: $200 million. Source:ER

October 20, 2013: Obang Metho has some to say on Human Trafficking'

Top News: Abuse by minority regime forcing Ethiopians to turn to human traffickers. "As Europe struggles to respond to the growing number of African migrants, root causes should not be ignored. In the case of Ethiopia, one of the largest refugee-sending countries in Africa, what are the conditions that compel Ethiopians to take such life-threatening risks? Are there humane and sustainable solutions for receiving countries beyondsimply coping? Is it time to examine how one's own policies may either deter or contribute to root problems?", stresses to the recent Geneva conference on human trafficking.

October 21, 2013: IMF Says Ethiopian Economic Growth May Slow WithoutPolicy Shift'

Bloomberg: The Washington-based lender said, Ethiopia's economic expansion may continue through next year before "tapering off" from 2015-16 because of funding gaps for public projects and foreign exchangeshortages, the International Monetary Fund said. Gross domestic product is forecast to rise to 7.5 percent in the 12 months through July 7 and 2014-15, and then ease "slightly in subsequent years under current policies." It has to be recalled that the World Bank approved a new Country Partnership Strategy in September that takes little account of thehuman rights or good governance principles that it and other developmentagencies say are essential for sustainable development. It also approved athird phase of the Protection of Basic Services program (PBS III) without triggering safeguards on involuntary resettlement and indigenous peoples.

October 22, 2013: Satellite photos indicate that Ethiopia has apparently received at least 16 more T-72 tanks from Ukraine. The tanks were shipped in via Djibouti. IHS Jane's Defense Weekly said, Ethiopia receives16 combat tanks from Ukraine, a combination of Astrium satellite imageryand IHS Maritime shipping data reveals that a consignment of tanks was almost certainly transported from the Ukrainian port of Oktyabrsk to Ethiopia in September. Astrium imagery taken on 24 August shows 16 main battle tanks (MBTs) and other military equipment waiting to be loaded at Otkyabrsk: a specialist terminal that is used for Russian and Ukrainian arms exports. Analysis of ship movements strongly suggests thetanks were loaded on to the roll-on/roll-off (Ro-Ro) cargo ship Ocean Power (IMO: 9179842), which arrived two days later, left on 7 Septemberand headed to the port of Djibouti without making further port calls.

Ogadentoday Press - A high level delegation led by Deputy Prime Minister of Ethiopia, Demeke Mekonnen Hassan has visited the conflict-ravaged region in Eastern Ethiopia, Ogaden Region Zone of Godey. The Somali Ogaden Regional Chief, Abdi Mahamoud Omer Illey (Koronto) has receivedthe delegation at the Godey Airport. The delegation are among, the Ethiopian Federation house speaker and senior members of ruling party, domestic and foreign business investors interesting to invest the agricultural sector in Ogaden, the sources said. According to Ethiopian government, The domestic investors are interesting to invest the agricultural sector in Ogaden. The delegation has met with local elders organized by the Head of Gode Zone, Abdi Sonkor and there are no detailsabout their meeting. Despite there is growing interest for investors into Ogaden region but there is security concerns. Ogaden National Liberation Front, a secessionist group fighting for the independence of Ogaden warnsthe foreign oil companies in Ogaden, and in 2007 attacked Chinese oil field in Ogaden. According to the source, ONLF are watching closely the visit and Pro- ONLF high alert. According to our source in Ogaden, the security assessment team includes the delegation. Godey Zone has agricultural sector since The Shebelle River which goes into Somalia passes through. Many believe in investing Ogaden region is matter depending on the political stability of the region and see conflict solution between, ONLF, Ogaden National Liberation Front and Ethiopia federal government must be first organized. Ethiopia are accused of Human right abuses in Ogaden currently and the Swedish journalist arrested in Ogadenpresented last week in Sweden a filmed evidence of Human right abuses in Ogaden, the Swedish lawyers said to Sweden Radio that they are takingthe case to high court of Europe.

On an attack launched against the delegation ofthe Deputy Prime Minister of Ethiopia Demeke Mekonnen, nine regional leaders, domestic and foreign investors, who were visiting Ogaden Region last week, the Ogaden National Liberation Front (ONLF) said it has killed several Ethiopian troops at the airport and destroyed two vehicles. HassanAbdualhi, Spokesperson of the Front, said to ESAT that the attack was launched as soon as delegates landed in Kebridahar town Airport last week. “We were already informed that the officials were coming to the Region so we were already prepared to execute the attacks” Hassan said.The Ethiopian government has not commented on the reports so far. It isto be recalled that artists and journalists had been sent to the Ogaden region to visit the “peace and developmental activities” there.

October 22, 2013: ‘No protection, leave power’, said UDJ’

Top News: In a press release that came after Prime Minister Hailemariam Dessalgn said last week in the Parliament that the government may ban peaceful demonstrations as it cannot provide protection, the Unity for Democracy and Justice (UDJ) said yesterday a government that cannot provide protection to citizens should step down. UDJ said such a government should not deny the people their right but apologise and give the power to the people. The Party said that it will continue to fight for therespect of political, social, economic and all other questions of the people and the government’s interference in religious affairs to stop unchallengedby the government’s intimidations. UDJ has also criticised the positions of some African countries including Ethiopia on the International Criminal Court (ICC). It said "there is no immunity committing genocide".

According to UDJ, African leaders should not meet to say "ICC should not sue us" but they should instead meet to cleanse the tears of their citizens.All those that abuse and torture their citizens, should appear before justice, said the Party.

Asgede said Tigary region is has lost sleep, it is under darkness. Migration, unemployment, lack of justice and corruption are rampant, he added.

October 23, 2013: Religious leaders comment on the recent sternstatements of EOTC'

Top News: Asked what the reasons for the unprecedented opposition andbrave statements of the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Church (EOTC) priests were last week, a religious leader said it could have to do with thechange of the Patriarch. The difference so far had to do with the leader.

The Patriarch himself was a supporter of the popes himself, the religiousscholar said. Similarly, asked to what extent the Church and religious leaders will go to solve the problems, he said that he fears that the government could interfere and divert it. On the other hand, Aba Ameha Eyesus, one of the few priests who had been severly persecuted under thehands of the government, said the statements of the priests have come very late and are spoken out of anxiety. “After the Country has been destroyed, the national Flag has been disgraced and the physical and spiritual life of Ethiopians has been disturbed, they now have got the gut to speak just for the sake of feeling free from their fears” said Aba AmehaEyesus.

October 23, 2013: Ethiopia signs $4 billion geothermal deal’

AFP: Ethiopia signed a $4 billion deal Wednesday with American-Icelandic company Reykjavik Geothermal to develop a 1000-megawatt geothermal farm, officials said. When completed, the project to provide energy for both local consumption and export will be the largest source of foreign direct investment in Ethiopia. "This is an epic moment for all of us... bringing Ethiopia to the forefront of geothermal development," said Reykjavik chief executive officer Gudmundur Thoroddsson. Three-quartersof the project is funded by Reykjavik Geothermal, backed by private investors, while 25 percent will be borrowed. Thoroddsson said $40 million(29 million euro) of investment has already been secured. The geothermalfarm -- located 200 kilometres (124 miles) south of the capital Addis Ababa -- will be built in two phases, with the first 500 MW phase to be completed in 2018. The second phase is expected to be finished in 2021.

October 24, 2013: Stock of weapons found in the houses of 2 former TPLFofficials’

ESAT News: According to Ethiopian law, an individual is permitted to holda single licensed weapon. However, it is to be recalled that the government had in recent times been collecting weapons from all licensedand unlicensed gun holders in the name of weapon searches. During the 2005 election, the government had armed a certain ethnic group for self defence purposes, it was reported. This week, in the charges of the high profile corruption case of former Customs Director, Melaku Fenta et al.,

the prosecutor general said that it has found two Kalashnikovs, 2 pistolsand one star pistol in total 9 weapons in the house of former Customs Deputy Director and official of the TPLF, Guebrewahed Woldegiorgis.

Similarly in the house of the other defendant, member of the TPLF and former top official of the National Intelligence, Woldeselassie W/Michael, two submachine guns, one Uzi submachine gun, one star pistol, one smoke bomb and different types of bullets were seized. It has been widelyreported that Woldeselassie had a close relationship with Azeb Mesfin, thewidow of the late Prime Minister, but was in grudge and fallouts with the Head of Ethiopian Intel, Getachew Assefa. Similarly, local newspapers have reported that the Court heard new accusations of adultery against Melaku Fenta. Melaku has been accused of using his governmental power to lure a married woman who came to his office seeking official assistanceon taxation, to leave her husband and her three children and marry him. The prosecutors of the Federal Corruption Commission said Melaku abusedhis power to personally help Mekdes Lema and use public resources to adulterate her. The Commission's prosecutors have also found that SheikhMohammed Hussein Al Amloudi's MIDROC and the state owned Metal & Engineering Corp. (MetEC), which is headed by General Kinfe Dagnew, were involved in corrupt practices including the import of untaxed goods. However, both companies and heads of the companies have not been sued.

October 24, 2013: Ethiopian Government bans citizens from travellingabroad for work'

(BBC News) Ethiopia's government has temporarily banned its citizens from travelling abroad to look for work, the state-run Erta news agency reports. The foreign ministry was quoted as saying countless Ethiopians had lost their lives or undergone untold physical and psychological traumabecause of illegal human trafficking. The decision was meant to "safeguard the well-being of citizens", it added. The travel ban will remainin place until a "lasting solution" is found. The ministry said the government had taken various measures to limit the suffering of its citizens, including setting up a national council and a taskforce to educate them. But those measures had not been able to address the problem sufficiently, it added. Employment agencies will also be barred from facilitating travel abroad. The scarcity of work opportunities is a major factor fuelling emigration from Ethiopia, which has Africa's second largest population. Youth unemployment is officially estimated at more than 50%.Human rights activists also say a significant number of those classified as economic migrants flee the country because of political and economic oppression or ethnic discrimination by the state. Many Ethiopians try to reach Saudi Arabia, travelling via Yemen by sea and entering the kingdomillegally. Thousands of others head for South Africa, Israel and Europe.

They often end up being smuggled, trafficked or subjected to mental andphysical torture. And once they reach their destinations, many require humanitarian assistance or face a wide range of abuses from employers.

October 25, 2013: Real wildcatters go to Ethiopia to hunt for oil’

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia, (UPI) -- Amid East Africa's oil and gas boom, the more adventurous oilmen are starting to gravitate toward the vast Ogadendesert region of Ethiopia, where drilling activity has been sparse since rebels attacked an exploration team in 2007, killing nine Chinese and 65 Ethiopians. Oilmen believe Ethiopia lies on the same oil-bearing strata as the massive discovery in Kenya by British-based Tullow Oil in early 2012. Initial estimates are that Ethiopia has oil reserves of around 2.7 billion barrels. That's a modest enough total in global terms, but it's a potential bonanza for an impoverished state like Ethiopia, which has been land- locked since Eritrea broke away to form an independent state on the Red Sea in 1991 after a 30-year separatist war. The Horn of Africa country hasnot produced any oil in commercial quantities since its first oil seep was reported in 1860. There was some exploration 1915, which continued fitfully until the 1940s without any serious finds. Gas was discovered in 1972, but the wars and insurgencies prevented development until the recent strikes in Kenya, Tanzania and Mozambique to the south. Tullow is currently drilling in western Ethiopia on what is considered an extension ofits Kenya concessions, deemed to be part of East Africa's Tertiary Rift thatalso embraces Uganda and its rich Lake Albert field. Other companies are gearing up to follow Tullow and its partner, the Africa Oil Corp., based in Canada, into the Ogaden, a Cold War battleground that remains contested between Ethiopia and troubled neighbor Somalia.

"Exploration in the Ogaden Basin, as well as newer activity in the Omo and Gambella basins, will continue to face challenges due to relatively remote operating environments these areas represent," Oxford Analytica observed. Unlike in most countries where oilmen go exploring, the government in Addis Ababa is not keen at all on promoting expectations ofvast oil and gas wealth, for now anyway. It's downplayed reports that Tullow, a trailblazer across East Africa, has struck oil in the southwestern Omo Basin -- apparently to avoid stirring political unrest and aggravate territorial disputes, both internally and with its neighbors. Ethiopia's longtime strongman, Prime Minister Meles Zenawi, who died in 2012, "was famously skeptical of the benefits of hydrocarbons, a policy stance which -
- rhetorically at least -- his successor, Hailemariam Desalegn has maintained," Oxford Analytics noted. Major oil or gas discoveries couldtransform the country's economy, which is totally reliant on energy imports.

Tullow too has been circumspect about its Ogaden operations because of exaggerated expectations triggered by the major strikes elsewhere in EastAfrica, particularly the large gas fields found in the Indian Ocean off Tanzania and Mozambique. The Omo region, says James Phillips, Africa Oilvice president for business development, "is frankly the end of the Earth. It hasn't had any attention from oil and gas exploration ever." The Ogadenis a rough neighborhood, and has been a battleground in several conflicts, including Eritreans' war of independence against Ethiopian rule that endedin Eritrea breaking away, cutting Ethiopia off from the Red Sea. Between May 1998 and June 2000, the two states, among the world's poorest countries, fought a brutal but inconclusive border war in which, by conservative count, 70,000 people were killed. The disputed border remains tense. In early 2013, rebels of the Ogaden National Liberation Front -- which took up arms in 1994 and was responsible for the April 2007 massacre that eventually drove out Malaysia's Petronas -- warned Africa Oil Corp. to halt exploration.

The ONLF has warned the company not to pay "blood money" to Addis Ababa and declared "the Ogaden is a battle zone that is not safe for an oil company to operate in." Africa Oil went on drilling and signed a new agreement with Addis Ababa that gives it exploration rights over 35,000 square miles in the Ogaden and Omo regions. SouthWest Energy, an Ethiopian exploration outfit, has rights on 17,600 square miles of the JijigaBasin on Ethiopia's eastern border with Somalia. It estimates that region, where the 2007 massacre occurred, holds 1.5 billion-3 billion barrels of oil. The prospects likely extend to Eritrea, which lies at the southern end of the Red Sea. It has the geological characteristics of a major hydrocarbon bonanza, particularly offshore.

October 25, 2013: Agency say political interference affecting'

ESAT News: An official of the Privatisation and Government’s DevelopmentOrganisations Inspection Agency of Ethiopia said to ESAT’s reporter that although the Agency was given the responsibility of selling governmental agencies for the public’s use, it has not so far been able to do so. So far, the Awash Agro Industry Tibila Farm, the Middle Awash Farm Development, Omorate Farm Development have been sold and due to the pressure of government officials, millions of Birr was lost. Most of the agreements in the sale of these firms have not been transparent. Insiders say the sale of Omorate Farm Development was conducted in a manner that could be called a ‘donation price’. Vehicles and other materials that have been purchased for development purposes worth 32 million birr havebeen sold on a much lesser price than the market. The Privatisation and Government’s Development Organisations Inspection Agency have been complaining about the government’s interference that has been affecting their work. Although the Country’s law urges that the rights and insurances of workers’ should be respected when governmental organisations are privatised, it has not been applied. As a result of which, many families have been forced to endure social, psychological and material loss and deprivation. Shebele Transport, Combolcha and Woyria have been transferred to third parties only through orders given by government officials. Over 397 employees of Shebele Madee have been made redundant without any compensation or job guarantees. Similarly, 41 employees have been made redundant when Yerer Flour Factory was closed. The Ministry of Finance, for instance, has recently ordered the tender for three companies, two of which are Bale and Arsi Farm Development Organisations and the Construction and Coffee Technology Development Institute, to be stopped and be transferred to Oromia BetterSeeds Organisation and the Basic Metals Engineering Corporation respectively. Wondafrash Asefa, the Agency's Corporate Communication Director, said out of the four new companies that were up for sale, the Board of the Agency had ordered the bid for the sale of Batu Constructionto be stopped and transferred it to be administered by another governmental organisation. Out of the 287 companies that it should sell, the Agency got 236 enterprises privatised until the end of 2011 with 51 yet unsold. In these corruption exposed sales, millions of birr have been stolen from the tax payers' wealth.

October 25, 2013: North Korean diplomat resides in Ethiopia defects toSouth Korea'

SEOUL, (Yonhap) — A North Korean diplomat based in Ethiopia defected to Seoul in August after seeking asylum at the South Korean Embassy in the African country, multiple sources said. The North Korean man, whose identity is unknown, stormed into the South Korean embassy in Addis Ababa, asking for help for his defection to the South, they said. "At that time, he worked for the North Korean office of the trade representative in Ethiopia … I've learned that he is not a senior official, though," one sourcesaid without elaborating further. The North Korean Embassy later learned of the defection and strongly protested, the source said, adding that details of the man's defection, including his motive, have not been known,

. South Korea's foreign ministry refused to confirm the defection. Each year, hundreds of North Koreans defect to the South Korea via China andother countries. Currently, South Korea is home to more than 25,000 North Korean escapees. Defections by North Korean diplomats are not uncommon. In 2010, a North Korean embassy official in Ethiopia defectedto Republic of Korea.

Aljazeera: The $290m Ashegoda Wind Farm is expected to generate 120MW of electricity, easing Ethiopia's dependence on hydropower. Ashegoda Africa's biggest wind farm has begun production in Ethiopia, aiding efforts to diversify electricity generation from hydropower plants and help the country become a major regional exporter of energy. Africa's second most populous country - plagued by frequent blackouts - plans toboost generating capacity from 2,000 MW to 10,000 MW within the next three to five years.

October 27, 2013: Ethiopia: Meeting on to comment the new Customs Billpushed back'

ADDIS FORTUNE (Addis Ababa): Feeling that revision of the country's customs law needs careful scrutiny, businesspeople invited to give their comments on a new customs bill have made tax officials push the consultation meeting, originally scheduled for Thursday, October 24, 2013to November 9, 2013. The consultation meetings arranged by the Ethiopian Revenues & Customs Authority (ERCA) are the result of an orderby Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn. He made the decision after viewing the new customs bill a month ago as it was presented to the Council of Ministers, and determined that more discussions on it with the private sector was necessary before it could be presented to the Parliament. The bill was then directed back to the drafters - legal officials at the ERCA and the Ministry of Finance & Economic Development (MoFED).This bill has been in the making for over a year and aims to modernise the country's customs system, currently governed by a law lastamended in 2009. It adds 60 additional articles to the currently existing 115 and amends most of the other articles. It will completely repeal the 2009 proclamation when ratified. The first draft of the bill has been amended more than three times, and nearly half of the content in the finaldraft was different from the original as a result, according to Wasihun Abate, legal affairs director at MoFED"That was the reason why it was redirected back for consultations," he said. Complying with this order, ERCA called a consultative meeting with different sectoral associations at the National Lottery Administration on Dejazmach Jote Street, Arada District, this past Thursday. Though several sectoral associations with over100 members were invited, including the Ethiopian Chamber of Commerceand Sectoral Association (ECCSSA), Addis Abeba Chamber of Commerce &Sectoral Associations (AACCSSA), Employer's Federation, Addis Abeba Traders Forum (AATF), transport associations and leather and textile industry associations, only a few representatives appeared at the meeting.The four-day notice given to them was not enough to mobilise members and collect their thoughts, according to representatives from the dry goods associations, the textile industry associations and AATF.

October 28, 2013: Ethiopia - Renown artist Ali Birra to celebrate GoldenJubilee'

EPA: The famous Oromifa singer, Ali Mohammed Birra, is scheduled to celebrate his Golden Jubilee in the month of December in Ethiopia, honoring his 50-year music career. The theme of the Golden Jubilee willbe ”Barnootaa Ammas Barnootaa,” translated as “self-education, again self-education.” Taken from one of Ali Birra’s prominent songs, it emphasizes and encourages everyone in the society more to educate. Ali'ssongs have been about his ambitions of a good future for the Ethiopian people. The celebration of his Golden Jubilee will be accompanied by testimonies and presentations about his life as well as his music career.

His companions, government officials, family members and media professionals are expected to be present at the event. An exhibition and amusic concert will also take place in Addis Ababa, Adama, Dire Dawa and other Oromia towns. Similar events will take place in Europe, other Africancountries, Middle East and Australia. Ali Birra acknowledged the efforts of the organizing committee who have been working tirelessly for the last four months to make sure the celebration of the Golden Jubilee goes smoothly. According to available documents, Ali started his music career when he was 13 with a cultural group known as "Afran Qallo" meaning for 'the four youngsters', which at the time helped to promote Oromo music and culture. The first song he performed on stage was called "Birraan Bari'e", after which his fans adopted the name 'Birra' to mean "the Spring".

October 29, 2013: Debre Markos University says, other forces behindstudents' protest'

Top News: The administration of Debre MarkosUniversity has admitted that students of the University have been on a hunger strike. The protestbegan after students refused to accept the government's new "regulationon dressing, dinning, and worship". The students complain that they havebeen forced to stop practicing their faith and cut their religious strings from their necks. In his discussion with the officials of the region, DeputyPresident of the University, Dr. Negusie Miteku, said that although there have been attempts to apply the regulation in the previous academic year; it has not been effected as the students have refused to accept it.

The students also complain that the daily food allowance approved by the Council of Ministers is 12 birr, 'which does not even buy a loaf of bread and tea in Debre Markos town.' The Deputy President confirms that the students' question has been correct and the students' food budget is meagre. He said they have gone beyond the government's allowance to subsidise the budget. Negusie admitted that there has also been a decrease in the gram of bread from 80 to 45 per the evaluations and criticisms of the government. However, when students got the loaf of bread weighed they were found to be weighing between 25 to 30 grams. Information found within the Ministry of Health indicates that at least 32 students have been sick due to lack of food during the start of the academic year. The Deputy President argues "looking at the timing of ESAT's reporting of the protests, it is possible to tell that the students' protest is not just in relation to the new regulations but that of the ESAT and other forces are behind the protest". The windows of six buildings have been fully damaged and three ambulances have been destroyed due to the students' protest. Federal police officers have beaten many students. The University officials accused the local residents for supporting the protesters. Residents told ESAT's reporter that they have seen students lying on the ground due to hunger. The residents say, the actionsof the students, who have not received any response to their queries, have been insightful.

November 1, 2013: The number of Ethio-Eritreans crossing PFDJ administration area is on the rise'

PERSPECTIVE By Seyoum Workneh: Ethiopia is one of the oldest and independent countries in Africa. As far as most Ethiopians agreed Eritrea is part of Ethiopia even though the EPRDF and Shabiya ruling members divided the Eritrean state based on their desert agreement without the consent of the Ethiopian people. Eritreans were forced to give their vote based on the wrong perceptions of "freedomor slavery". Reference to making a choice between slavery and freedom was found in two sources. The first was in a story published in The Observer on 28 March 1993. The author reports: The local radio in Asmara describes the referendum choice simply as: 'Do you choose freedom or slavery?' Because of the high level of illiteracy, the ballot papers are coloured. Blue is for YES, red is for NO. Or, as the local radio helpfully puts it, 'Red is for blood.' (Observer 28 March 1993). In an Addis Tribune opinion piece, Dr. Yacob Haile-Mariam wrote: When Eritreans voted in favor of the bizarre referendum question 'do you want to be free?' as if anybody in his right mind would want to be a slave, they voted for a concept known as Eritrea and not for a definite geographic entity (Addis Tribune 3 Dec. 1999). At the end of the day, Eritrean People Libration Front (EPLF), later to be known as Peoples Front for Demcracy and Justice (PFDJ) led by Issaias Affewerki with the support of the Tigray People Liberation Front-TPLF (Hizbawi Woyane) led by the late Prime Minister Meles Zenawi isolated the Eritrean state and its people from Ethiopia which somehow creates hatred among the two people whos some one canclearly understand the drama of the two ruling parties. Finally this createschaos in the two sides in the pretext of border conflict which lasts for overtwo years that costs more than 80,000 lives in the two sides.

Having said I want to go back to the main agenda of this paper title. Currently the number of ethio-eritrean crossing the Shabia administration area is more than doubled over the past two years. As per Liya Nuru sources and according to Nur-Hussein Mohammed, Program Coordination Office for Northern Eritrean Office head, the number of Eritreans crossing the border into Ethiopia daily has more than doubled over the past two years taking the total number of Eritrean refugees in Ethiopia to over 82 thousand. A fourth and new camp has been opened at a place called 'Hitsats' in an effort to accommodate the influx. More than five thousand Eritrean refugees have already been received since the opening of the camp some five months back. Of the Eritrean refugees in Ethiopia, over 80percent are youngsters; 40 percent are ex-soldiers; the remaining are civilservants who have completed national military service. Mandatory national military service, human rights violations and high cost of living are the major factors forcing Eritreans to migrate, some of the refugees have said. With the same token all Ethiopian people are prisoner of conscience since the weyanna/EPRDF administration came to power more than ever. This shows there is a need of cooperation between the Ethiopian and Eritrean to free ourselves from those cruel regimes and bring a democratic Ethiopia. Don’t forget the number of peoples who lost and lose their life when they try to evacuate from these dictatorship in thehope of getting a better future and freedom. We are in prison in the free world. We need to stand in unison to free ourselves. “We are in prison in the free world"

November 4, 2013: Saudi police gunned down an Ethiopian immigrant’

Top News: Saudi Arabia is currently rounding up Ethiopian immigrants who do not have permits to stay in the country or whose permits have expired. Those who try to escape from the police are brutally attacked. Nobody is asking any more why Ethiopians leave their beautiful, fertile country and go to a barren, miserable, ugly country named Saudi Arabia. The answer is that Ethiopia is currently ruled by an evil gang of thugs, more evil than those Saudi police who savagely beat up and gun down poor Ethiopian immigrants such as the young man. What do we feel when we see an innocent poor Ethiopian immigrant seeking only job beinggunned down in a country where Ethiopia has its consular office?

Does Ethiopia really has a responsible government? What does TPLF and the foot soldiers of TPLF living in Norway say to this? How long shall we shoulder this type of humiliation as an Ethiopian? Is that not underminingevery one of us? My feeling is so disturbed and hate myself for living peacefully as if every thing is fine! November 4, 2013: Stiff evaluations put OPDO under turmoil'

Top News: The Oromo Peoples' Democratic Organization (OPDO), memberparty of the ruling, Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF), is conducting an internal evaluation at all levels. The evaluation is being conducted within infighting and enmeshes. One of the officials of the Organisation said to ESAT that the life of OPDO is in danger. The official said corruptions, nepotism, groupings, lack of respect to chain of commands were some of the problems mentioned in the meeting. According to the official, the evaluation is being held for the sakeof conducting it otherwise the whole leadership of OPDO is involved in corruption and does not have the moral ground to evaluate the lower strata members. "OPDO is in its weakest point in time and the leadership gap it resulted in is putting pressure on the people" the official added. Themembers have discussed on how they can fully win the next general election fully. However, the division within the OPDO is feared to cost EPRDF the next election. The official said the problems are not only within the OPDO but also within other member parties of the EPRDF such as TPLFand ANDM.

November 5, 2013: Ethiopia/Egypt - Nile talks end on sour note'

Al-Monitor News: KHARTOUM, Sudan — Disputes and disagreements erupted again between Egypt and Ethiopia concerning the Nile River dam construction, after both countries failed to reach an agreement governing the Ethiopian Renaissance Dam in their initial negotiating session. The attempt at dialogue quickly ended, while the crisis of trust between the two countries resurfaced as their fears that the other might appropriate the Nile's waters became evident. Egyptian, Ethiopian and Sudanese ministers of water resources met in the Sudanese capital Khartoum on Sunday, Nov. 4, to begin the first round of negotiating sessions set to dealwith the Renaissance Dam, as well as to consult with each other on the mechanisms needed to complete it, and how to implement the recommendations of an international committee of technical experts. The latter concluded its activities on May 27 after studying the effects of the dam on the water security of Egypt and Sudan. Attitudes quickly changed,however, once the closed sessions began and disagreements mounted, the Al-Monitor reporter says. As a result, the meetings were suspended and a new date for negotiations was set for Dec. 8. “We were taken abackby Ethiopia’s attempts to impose its agenda on us during the meetings, while it outright failed to recognize the international committee’s recommendations pertaining to the dam. Disagreements revolved around how to establish a committee or body through which the three countries would work to implement those recommendations,” an Egyptian diplomatic source who participated in the meetings told Al-Monitor.

ST (ADDIS ABABA) Ukraine’s state-controlled arms exporter, Ukrspecexport SC, has begun delivering the upgraded T-72 main battle tanks and related parts to the Ethiopian military. According to local sources gathered by Sudan Tribune, the Ethiopian military has taken delivery of a first group of 16 T-72 Tanks which recently arrived at Djibouti port. The delivery is said to be part of the 2011 deal signed between Ethiopia’s defence ministry and the Ukrainian arms firm to purchase 200 T-72 tanks at a cost of $100 million. Officials at the ministryof defence declined to comment on Tuesday over the matter despite repeated attempts by Sudan Tribune.The components of the T-72 tanks were upgraded with modern guided weapons, new and powerful engines, reactive armour as well as updated sighting systems and countermeasures. Ethiopia, Africa’s second most populace nation, is one of the continent’s top military spenders. According to the Global Firepowermilitary power ranking report for 2013, the horn of Africa nation was ranked second on the African continent after Egypt and placed 28th globally. The Ethiopian military is made up of an army and an air force. In2012, Ethiopia had an estimated 150,000 personnel in their ground forcesand 3,000 air force personnel. Ethiopia engaged in border war with Eritreaduring 1998-2000 which killed over 70,000 people from both sides. With its border disputes with Eritrea still unresolved and Addis Ababa committed to the African Union’s force in neighbouring Somalia, Ethiopia has beefed up its military strength in the past ten years. Ethiopia is also among the top ten countries that contribute to peacekeeping mission worldwide. It currently has over 4,000 peacekeeping troops deployed in the contested Abyei region, which is claimed by both Sudan and South Sudan.

remember that journalists are languishing in Ethiopia's prisons on trumped-up terrorism charges for doing their jobs," said Sue Valentine,CPJ's Africa Program Coordinator. "The delegates should use the opportunity provided by this conference to highlight the plight of these persecuted journalists and to acknowledge media freedom is a cornerstone of Africa's development."

November 5, 2013:New Defence Proclamation makes no change on itsnepotistic structure'

News Analysis: The new Defense Proclamation that was tabled for discussion for the members of the External Defence Security, Legal, Justice and Administration Standing Committees of the Ethiopian Parliament would make no change on the current nepotistic leadership structure of the Defense where 98% of the army officials come from a single ethnic group, it has been learnt. Officials of the Ethiopian Defense Forces on the other hand say the proclamation annuls the previous laws and promotes the Defense Force. Although the members of the Standing Committees had asked for changes regarding rank promotion, accommodation, the execution of death sentences, none of them had dared to question the complete dominance of the TPLF in the military structure, it was reported. Sources say the new Proclamation makes the Force a servant of one Party and contains nothing new that helps soldiers"who suffer in the desert and foreign lands". Samora Yonus, the Chief of Staff of the Ethiopian National Defence Forces, Brigadier General Zewdu, Head of the 44th Dalol Section of the Western Command, Lt.Colonel Azezew Makonnen, Head of the 44th Brigade 2nd Regiment, Lt. General Yohannes G/Meskel, Head of the UN Peacekeeping Force in the Sudan, Lt.General Se'are Makonen, Head of the Northern Command, Lt. General Abebaw Tadese, Majour-General Mola Haile mariam and the security advisor Tsegaye Berhe have all discussed the Draft proclamation and expressed their support. The articles of the proclamation were reportedly adopted from Chinese and Israeli's proclamations. However, it was adopted on a manner that it cannot affect the current military leadership structure. The new law governing the defence ministry, which was approved in parliament this week, attributed a little more power to the Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn. The new defence proclamation would make no change on the current nepotistic leadership structure of the Defense where 98% of the army top brass comes from a single ethnic group, it has been learnt.

November 6, 2013: Ethiopia on high alert for attacks by Somali militants'

ADDIS ABABA (Reuters) - Ethiopia has put its police and security forces onheightened alert after receiving strong evidence that Somalia's Islamist al Shabaab group is planning attacks in the country, officials said on Tuesday. The move came three weeks after officials said two Somali suicide bombers accidentally blew themselves up while preparing to kill soccer fans during Ethiopia's World Cup qualifying match against Nigeria.

Al Shabaab has vowed to exact revenge on Ethiopia for sending troops to Somalia to fight the al Qaeda-linked militants, alongside African Union forces from Uganda, Burundi and Kenya. "There is strong evidence that indicates Al Shabaab and terrorist groups backed by Eritrea are preparing to carry out attacks in Addis Ababa and other areas of the country soon," the National Intelligence and Security Service (NISS) and the federal police said in a joint statement. Addis Ababa often accuses the government in neighbouring Eritrea of supporting rebels, which Asmara staunchly denies. The statement, read on state television, said security forces were already on heightened alert and called on the public to inform police if they encountered "suspicious" activity. Hotel staff and private landlords should verify the identity of visitors, the statement said. It urgedsoldiers to remain vigilant at checkpoints along the country's borders.

In September, al Shabaab gunmen raided an upmarket shopping mall in Nairobi, killing at least 67 people in a four-day siege. Ethiopia says it has thwarted several attacks over the past two years which it blamed on domestic rebel groups as well as Somali insurgents. However, it has so farbeen spared the sorts of assaults seen in nearby countries - such as the Nairobi mall siege and an attack that killed 74 soccer fans in Uganda as they watched the 2010 World Cup final on television.

November 6, 2013: Four killed in bomb blast in northwestern Ethiopia'

(Reuters) – Four people were killed when a bomb blast tore through a minibus in western Ethiopia late on Tuesday, at about the same time that the government warned of imminent attacks by militants, an official said. The official, speaking to Reuters on Wednesday, said nobody had claimed responsibility for the blast. Addis Ababa put its security forces on heightened alert on Tuesday night after receiving strong evidence that Somalia's Islamist al Shabaab group was plotting assaults. It was not clearwhether the blast occurred before or after that warning. "The bomb exploded on Tuesday inside a minibus travelling in Segno Gebeya (Mondayopen market)," government spokesman Shimeles Kemal said, referring to a region bordering Sudan. "No one has claimed responsibility yet. The case is under investigation." The warning came three weeks after officials said two Somali suicide bombers accidentally blew themselves up while preparing for an attack on football fans during Ethiopia's World Cup qualifying match against Nigeria. Al Shabaab has warned Ethiopia of revenge attacks for deploying troops inside Somalia to fight the al Qaeda-linked militants, alongside African Union forces from Uganda, Burundi andKenya. The National Intelligence and Security Service (NISS) also urged the public on Tuesday to inform police if they encountered "suspicious" activity, and urged hotel staff and private landlords to verify the identity of visitors. Al Shabaab gunmen killed at least 67 people in September when they raided a mall in the neighboring Kenyan capital of Nairobi.

Addis Ababa says it has foiled several attacks in the past few years planned by domestic rebel groups and Somali insurgents. There have alsobeen sporadic explosions in recent years. Thirteen people were wounded when an explosive device ripped through a bus in the north in 2010, whilea bomb explosion near a court in the capital injured two in 2011.

November 6, 2013: Ethiopia accuses Eritrea over links to the al-Shabaab'

World Bulletin/News Desk: Ethiopia has accused Eritrea of supporting Somali al-Shabaab fighters. Ethiopia has accused Eritrea for supporting al-Shabaab, planning to conduct attacks in the country. "Ethiopia has reached the information that al-Shabaab will conduct a terrorist attack in the country with the support of Eritrea," it was stated on an Ethiopian television channel. All security units were asked to report any suspicious acts and to declare high level alert status in the country's entrances, check points and crowded areas. Ethiopia has the "power to fight against terrorism," Foreign Ministry Spokesman of Ethiopia, Dina Mufti said.

Ethiopian security forces are ready for the attack of al-Shabaab which represents al-Qaeda in Horn of Africa, containing the countries of Djibouti,Somalia, Eritrea, Yemen, Mufti also said. Mufti stated that Ethiopia is cooperating with Kenya and Uganda against Al-Qaeda. Also these three countries are sharing information as a part of military training exercise against Al-Shabab, Mufti added.

November 6, 2013: Ethiopia: Counter-Terrorism Taskforce Issues Terror Alert Warning in Ethiopia'

ERTA (ADDIS ABABA): The National Intelligenceand Security Service and the Federal Police Joint Counter-terrorism Taskforce says it has reliable evidence indicating the terrorist Alshbaab and terror groups assisted by the Eritrean regime are preparing to carryout terror attack in various parts of Ethiopia. The Taskforce called upon the public and security forces to be alert and cooperate with police andsecurity forces. The Taskforce disclosed that it has got reliable evidence that there is preparation for terror attack in Addis Ababa and other regional towns in two directions.The statement from the Taskforce said the plotters of the terror preparation are the terrorist group Alshabaab and other terrorists deployed by the Eritrean regime. The terrorists aim atdestabilizing the country and hindering its development progress, it said. The Taskforce called upon the public and all security forces to cooperate and remain watchful in the effort being undertaken to foil the terror attackbefore it materializes. It urged citizens working in public recreation areas to inform police and security forces in case of any unusual situations and individual activities subject to suspicion. Organizations and individuals whogive rental services of houses, rooms and cars should also make proper registration of their clients' documents, the statement said. Regarding the foiled terror attack on 13 October 2013 in Bole Sub city, the Taskforce said it has found evidences that the thwarted terror attack targeted football fans watching the match between Ethiopia and Nigeria. It said the Taskforce has continued further investigation on the issue. According to the Taskforce, the two would-be bombers who died in their foiled terror attack on 13 October 2013 were Somali citizens. According to critics, Ethiopia's anti-terrorist statute of January, 2009 is a close cousin of the South Africa's Terrorism Act of 1967, which was just as all-encompassing; even the mildest opponents of apartheid became "terrorists" under this Act. Just as in South Africa, Ethiopia's anti-terrorism law has become an instrument of terror itself."

November 6, 2013: Residents of Jigjiga in SRS complain about hassles in relation to Nationalities' Day'

Top News: The ruling Front is preparing to celebrate the upcoming Nationalities' Day in Jijiga, Somali Regional State.Artists and journalists often dubbed "Developmental artists and journalists", have already visited the area and gave their appreciation.

Following recent reports about the Region, visitors and residents of the area are also giving their concerns. A dweller from the Capital city, who travelled to visit her relatives in the region said that she desperately wanted to run away from the area after she landed in the city. She says doing a safe shopping in Jigjiga is a miracle; there is rampant racism, checking, and attack that has infuriated the local population. She claims tohave been beaten by the Leeyu (Special) Police in the city. They are now labelling those whose ethnic origin is Guraghe as to refer Berhanu Nega, Chairman of the Ginbot 7 Movement, and those that hail from the Oromo ethnic group as OLFs and put them in prison, she added. According to the source, they even have started calling all those that identify themselves as Habesha, "dirty". Another resident of Jigjiga city said that there was a heightened tension in the City and the Leeyu (Special) police that have been camped in the jungle have come back to the City center. He ridiculesthe Nationalities' Day program and celebration as "a joke". Residents of the City are being ordered to paint their fences with colours and those that do not paint are being penalized.

November 7, 2013: Ethiopia: PM Halemariam Urges Africa to Establish Own Media Network' ERTA (Addis Ababa): In a keynote address to the forum, Hailemariam said Africa can only be heard if it speaks with one voice, highlighting the role of the continent's media in this regard. He saidAfrican media leaders and journalists have a key role in building the continent's image and changing it for the better.The continent's media should strive to portray it as the world's emerging union of states determined to push ahead along the path of democracy and development,he said. To this end, he stressed the need to have a continental media network run by independent professionals to portray Africa in a favorable light on a global scale.

Side note: Responsible Media Professionals have some to say on PMHD'scall:

How many journalists were wrongfully acused and jailed in Ethiopia? If you are expecting journalists to change the image of African continent forthe better, then you have to release those jailed journalists and the political leaders been detained under your authority?

The general idea is, to call the Afriacn journalists attention on free mediasso that, the so called African leaders in their various countries can easily control the journalist and jail them before bringing out their diabolical schems like the way Ethiopia is doing now.

Mr Hailemariam did mentioned DEMOCRACY, that is wonderful, a demacracy as you are talking about something diffirent? The democracy ofa one party rule is winning fake landslide victory of 99. 6% ? A democracywhereby the other polical parties leaders are being brutalize and jail? Is a democratic government in power ordering his men to fire on peaceful protesters?.

Again you mentioned on DEVELOPMENT. Is a development whereby thegovernment is turning the rich to be more poor and the poor more outmigrate of the country?

How can Africa be in a favorable light on a global scale in terms of mediaswhen you and your colleagues in the government are continuously jailing journalists? Your politically foolishness is not so matured to fool others.

November 7, 2013: A draft proclamation that makes Defense to beimmuned at the HoPR'

Top news: A draft proclamation that makes Defense immune from being audited has been proposed in the House of Peoples Representatives (HoPR). According to Sendeq, a local Amharic Newspaper based in Addis Abeba, a new proclamation has been drafted that keeps all the finance books of the Ethiopian National Defense Force (ENDF) secret and immunefrom being investigated either by the General Auditor or any other body. ENDF has been criticised for spending of an unexplained expenditure of 3.2 billion birr by the General Auditor in the 2011 fiscal year. The new ENDF Draft Proclamation Article number 72 Sub article 3 gives the Force the authority of not revealing files and secrets such as human resource profile, finance documents and payment documents to any organ. According to Article 71 sub article 2, the Force is permitted to import any material that is used for Defense purposes tax free. It will also be immune of getting the imported materials and the files from being checked. All theincomes that the Force gets will be audited by either the Auditor-General or auditors that the Force itself assigns at end of each year. Observers saythe new Draft shows that limitless thievery within the Force. The Federal Anti-Corruption Commission has not dared to investigate the Force so far. It's well known that most officials of the Ethiopian Defense have been involved in corrupt activities including the import of goods tax free.

November 7, 2013: Ethiopia - SMNE Calls: Time to hold corrupt leadersaccountable'

News tip: The Solidarity Movement for a New Ethiopia (SMNE) calls for strong measures from the International community, donors and international investors in confronting official corruption in Ethiopia. The Government of Ethiopia is broadly soliciting for development aid, foreign- based business partnerships and financial investors; yet, the unpopular ruling party has been accused of abuse of state power, misuse of donor funds, widespread party-run business monopolies, illicit financial practicesand endemic corruption. It is time to demand accountability from all involved and concerned. "The Government of Ethiopia is broadly solicitingfor development aid, foreign-based business partnerships and financial investors; yet, the unpopular ruling party has been accused of abuse of state power, misuse of donor funds, widespread party-run business monopolies, illicit financial practices and endemic corruption. It is time to demand accountability from all involved and concerned. The SMNE believes a more open, transparent and competitive market economy, supported by viable institutions and reasonable protections, which provides equal opportunity, will result in greater prosperity to the people rather than keeping it in the hands of a few political elites. In light of this,the SMNE urges the international community, donor nations, charitable organizations, and the international financial and business community to make demands on the Government of Ethiopia (GoE) for compliance with national and international laws. This must include holding companies affiliated or owned by members of the ruling party, including those businesses associated with their business conglomerate, Endowment Fundfor the Rehabilitation of Tigray (EFFORT), accountable.

November 8, 2013: US companies awarded 300MW PV project in Ethiopia'

PVTECH: Three solar power stations totalling 300MW will be built and operated in Ethiopia by two US companies, Global Trade and DevelopmentConsulting (GTDC) and Energy Ventures. The Ethiopian Ministry of Water and Energy and directors at the Ethiopian Electric Power Corporation awarded the two Maryland companies the contracts for the three photovoltaic (PV) plants, each 100MW capacity in size. The three projects in Ethiopia, located in the eastern region of the country, were site selectedand due diligence performed before receiving technical and financial approval from the two Ethiopian government bodies. The thee 100MW facilities, referred to collectively as the 300MW Solar Project, will create around 2,000 construction jobs. According to Energy Ventures, the projectwill inject “several million dollars into the Ethiopian economy”. The company claims that ongoing operations will also contribute several hundred jobs. GTDC, which describes its company objectives as helping to“integrate the emerging and frontier markets to the global economy by promoting trade, creating relationships and transferring knowledge”, appointed Energy Ventures as project development partner. In addition toits US headquarters, GTDC has offices in Italy, Ethiopia, Saudi Arabia, South Africa and South Sudan. Similarly, Energy Ventures was created to “specifically address the utility-scale energy needs of developing nations around the world”. Along with megawatt scale solar projects, Energy Ventures is also involved with areas including utility microgrids and advanced biofuels. Ethiopian water and energy minister Alemayehu Tegenu said: "This project represents a significant advance in our Ethiopian energy initiative and is now part of our comprehensive Energy Plan. Given Ethiopia's large hydro-electric generation capacity and now wind and geothermal power generation coming on-line, large scale solar fits nicely into our energy portfolio and will provide significant power generation capacity much faster than the other renewable technologies.

We welcome this project with open arms." Included in US president Barack Obama’s ‘Power Africa’ initiative to improve access to electricity in sub-Saharan Africa, renewable energy generation capacity installed in the east African country has to date mostly consisted of hydro-electric, wind and geothermal power. In January of this year Ethiopia celebrated the firstever solar panels to be made in the country.
November 8, 2013: Ethiopian migrant killed in Saudi crackdown’
Aljazeera: An Ethiopian migrant has been killed by Saudi police after he tried to flee arrest during a round-up of thousands of foreigners suspectedof working illegally in the kingdom. A statement on Wednesday by Riyadh police chief Nasser el-Qahtani said security forces killed the African migrant worker in el-Manhoufa a day earlier when he and others tried to resist arrest. The security sweep comes after seven months of warnings by Saudi Arabia's government, which has created a task force of 1,200 Labour Ministry officials who are combing shops, construction sites, restaurants and businesses in search of foreign workers employed withoutproper permits. More than 16,000 people have already been rounded up, according to authorities.
November 8, 2013: Ethiopia: Local Airlines Welcomes First B777-300ER’ ERTA (Addis Ababa) Ethiopian Airlines on Friday welcomed its first B777- 300ER at Bole international Airport, providing Ethiopian flag-carrier with additional capacity on key routes. The 777-300ER is now the largest airplane in the Ethiopian flag-carrier's fleet and will provide it with increased capacity and improved operating economics on key routes from its base in the Ethiopian capital, Addis Ababa. B777-300ER was welcomed by Minister of Transport Workneh Gebeyehu CEO of Ethiopian Tewolde Guebregzabher and other officials on its arrival at Bole International Airport in Addis Ababa. "The introduction of the B777-300 ER into our fleetis a major milestone, as it will be our biggest aircraft with a 400 seat capacity. Ethiopian B777-300 ER will give our passengers the best possible travel experience with its spacious cabin interior, high ceiling, advanced in-flight entertainment system, increased stowage capability and additional cargo uplift flexibility. The aircraft will be deployed on our long haul non-stop routes to the US and China and will give us exceptionalrange capability and fuel efficiency," said Mesfin Tassew, Chief Operation Officer of Ethiopian Airlines, who took delivery of the aircraft at Seattle.

Ethiopian's first 777-300ER will seat nearly 400 passengers in a two-class configuration and perfectly complements its existing fleet of six 777- 200LR (Longer Range) airplanes by providing additional capacity and flexibility on popular routes, such as Guangzhou, Washington, D.C. and Dubai. In future months, an additional three 777-300ERs will join Ethiopian's continuously expanding fleet, providing the Addis Ababa basedcarrier with more options on new and existing routes across Africa and beyond. "For more than half a century, Ethiopian has been at the forefrontof providing its passengers with the most innovative products. The 777- 300ER continues this tradition and represents another significant milestone in the long history between both our companies," said Van Rex Gallard, vice president of Sales for Africa, Latin America and the Caribbean, Boeing Commercial Airplanes. "Without doubt, the 777-300ER will be a key player in the continued success of Ethiopian, offering more capacity, increased flexibility and exceptional comfort on its operations worldwide." The 777-300ER can fly up to 7,825 nautical miles (14,490 kilometers) and is equipped with GE90-115B engines, the world's most powerful commercial jet engine. Ethiopian's 777-300ER also features the Boeing Signature Interior that offers wider seats, wider aisles, more headroom and more seating flexibility. Ethiopian currently serves 76 destinations across five continents and was recently awarded African Business of the Year at the annual African Business Awards. The carrier's partnership with Boeing stretches back over six decades, with a current fleet of nearly 50 Boeing airplanes that includes Next-Generation 737s, 757s, 767s, 777s, and 787 Dreamliners and a cargo fleet that includes 757s, an MD11 and 777 Freighters.

November 9, 2013: Ethiopian Troops to Join African Union Mission in Somalia (AMISOM) – PMHD’ (CAPITAL FM) Addis Ababa — Ethiopian troops will join the African Union Mission in Somalia (AMISOM) as part of renewed efforts to combat terrorism in the Horn of Africa region. EthiopianPrime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn has said Ethiopian troops will join Kenya and Ugandan troops that are part of AMISOM fighting Al Shabaab insurgents inside Somalia. Speaking when he hosted Deputy President William Ruto at his office in Addis Ababa Ethiopia, the premier said his country's security chiefs were already engaged in strategy talks with their Kenyan counterparts on the joint operation. Desalegn said there was a renewed terror threat in Ethiopia and this called for a joint security operation to eliminate the threat. "The threat is real and the war against terror should continue in all fronts," said Desalegn.

Deputy President Ruto said Kenya had borne the brunt of terrorism and welcomed Ethiopia's decision to join AMISOM in order to fight terrorism. "Recently, we had a terror attack that left several people dead and many others injured, and we welcome every effort to fight terror," he said citingthe recent terror attack at the Westgate mall. The Deputy President said as part of a campaign to eliminate the threat of terror, an estimated one million Somali refugees would be repatriated under an agreement to be signed in Nairobi on Sunday. "The refugees in Kenya continue to pose a security threat to us in Kenya and we hope to eliminate that threat through repatriation," Ruto said.The repatriation programme is being undertaken by the Kenya and Somalia government together with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees - UNHCR. The two leadersalso discussed border security that they said continued to undermine development along the Kenya/Ethiopia border. The two agreed that there was need to engage communities living along the border in other economic activities such as agriculture in order to minimize perennial border conflict.

It's against this background that the Ethiopia Prime Minister said his government was keen to partner with Kenya in creating an economic zonein Moyale under the Lamu Port and South Sudan Ethiopia Transport corridor project - LAPSSET. The Ethiopian PM described the LAPSSET project as a land mark that could turn the economic fortunes of millions ofpeople in the region. "There is a lot for us in Ethiopia to gain from this project," he said. Ruto said works on the project were underway with bidsfor supply of power to the project already invited. On the ICC, the DeputyPresident said Kenya was grateful to the Ethiopian government and the Prime Minister in particular for its stand on the matter under the African Union. Ethiopia is spearheading a campaign to have the ICC cases againstPresident Uhuru Kenyatta and Ruto deferred for at least one year. An African Union resolution on the deferment is pending at the United Nation's Security Council. "We are not taking your support for granted.

The people of Kenya are indeed very grateful," said Ruto. The Ethiopia premier said the AU position on the ICC was not just about Kenya but Africa. He said Kenyan leaders should be allowed to discharge their responsibilities to the people who elected them without interference. "Weare telling the international community that Africa will no longer accept tobe influenced by forces outside the continent," Desalegn said. The DeputyPresident was accompanied MPs Vincent Musyoka of Mwala constituency, Moyale's Roba Duba, Mathias Robi of Kuria West and Migori Governor Zacharia Okoth.

November 9, 2013: Plot to assassinate armed opposition G-7PF's leadersfoiled'

Top News: An assassination plot to kill Andargachew Tsige, the SecretaryGeneral of Ginbot-7 Movement and the leaders of Ginbot-7 Popular Force(G-7PF) has been foiled. The operation was masterminded by Getachew Assefa, Head of Ethiopia's National Intelligence and Security Service (NISS) and Tsegaye Berhe, the Prime Minister's Security Advisor.

According to the Ginbot-7 Popular Force, Muluken Mesfen, who has been sent with a mission of killing the selected individuals has been under the surveillance of the Force since he came to join the Force. The IntelligenceSection of the G-7PF has been recording all the telephone conversations that Muluken was having with the Ethiopian government's spy chiefs.

According to the retrieved phone conversations, the assassination operation named 'Woyane-O-Millennium' was set to be executed on November 9, 2013. The selection of the date was made in connection withthe graduation event that the Force was set to hold for its new members. The Operation to kill leaders of the Force and officials of the Eritrean government was thwarted when the assassin, Muluken Mesfin, was taken into custody by the Force.

November 10, 2013: Ethiopia summons Saudi Ambassador over killing and abuse – Sudan Tribune'

(ADDIS ABABA) – Ethiopia's foreign ministry has summoned Saudi Arabia's ambassador to Addis Ababa demanding explanation over the killing and ill-treatment of Ethiopian citizens in the gulf nation. An Ethiopian national was killed this week by Saudi police in Riyadh as the Kingdom conducts a nationwide crackdown against illegal expatriates who most are from Africa and Asia. Ethiopia has condemned the tough actions taken by the Saudi police. "Ethiopia would like to express its respect for the decision of the Saudi Authorities and the policy of deporting illegal migrants. At the same time, it condemned the killing ofan Ethiopian and mistreatment of its citizens residing in Saudi Arabia" saidthe ministry of foreign affairs in a statement it released on Saturday.

Following the incident, Ethiopia summoned the Saudi diplomat,

Muhammed Ibrahim Alshugairan as a formal protest over the killing of its citizen who allegdly was killed for resisting arrest and trying to grab a police man's gun. Officials of the Ethiopia's Ministry of Foreign Affairs haveheld discussions with the Saudi diplomat, Muhammed Ibrahim Alshugairan, over the issue and on ways how to jointly handle the situation with regard to Ethiopian migrants in Saudi. Following the discussions, Alshugairan affirmed that he would address the issue to the Saudi government and promised to come up with an explanation soon.

Foreign ministry spokesman, Dina Mufti, said on Sunday that the Ethiopian government in collaboration with Ethiopian Embassy in Riyadh isworking to safely repatriate thousands of its citizens who had failed to legalise their refugee status under the deadline of a seven-month amnesty. Addis Ababa said the government is closely following the condition of Ethiopian nationals in Saudi Arabia who are under strong pressure for deportation. "The Ministry of Foreign Affairs has deployed extra staff to help in the legal work required by the Saudi Authorities and provide support for Ethiopian workers residing in Saudi Arabia with no work permits as well as assist Ethiopian migrants where required" said thespokesperson's office. Since Saudi Arabia began the crackdown against undocumented migrants on 4 November thousands are said to have been arrested. Currently there are an estimated 40,000 Ethiopian immigrants in the Saudi Kingdom who lack the proper visas and work permits.

November 10, 2013: Ethiopian government plans to bring home illegalmigrants in Saudi Arabia'

Addis Ababa (AFP) - The Ethiopian government is repatriating its citizens living in Saudi Arabia illegally, after reports that an Ethiopian was killed bySaudi police, officials said Saturday. Last April, the Saudi government issued an amnesty period giving illegal immigrants seven months to gain legal status or leave the country. "The ones who failed are the ones who are being repatriated," the spokesman for the Ethiopian foreign ministry, Dina Mufti, told AFP.

November 13, 2013: The first group of Ethiopians arrived at Bole International Airport safely this afternoon' Saudi News: The Ethiopian Ambassador in Riyadh announced Tuesday (November 12) that a number of Ethiopian workers without documentation had now handed themselves over to the Riyadh police. The Saudi authorities are now arranging for their repatriation. The Ambassador, Mohammed Hassan said that as manyillegal workers were unsure about how to proceed when the amnesty ended, the Ethiopian Embassy has held discussions with the Saudi authorities and made arrangements to enable such citizens to hand themselves in. Under the agreement, the workers would be kept at various holding centers until they could get exit visas.
November 13, 2013: Ethiopia: First Group of Ethiopians Arrived AddisAbaba' GoE News updates (Addis Ababa) Embassy had assisted 38,199 workers to correct their employment status during the amnesty period which ended on November 4. The Ambassador said embassy officials and volunteers, together with various Saudi government agencies, were working to get travel documents for the workers. He said Ethiopia had been one of the first countries to request an extension of the initial amnesty so that citizens would benefit and correct their status, but wherethis was not possible the embassy began preparations for them to return home. The Ambassador, who sent his condolences to the relatives of thosewho lost their lives on Saturday, said the weekend clashes had occurred because illegal workers had been frustrated because they had no way to surrender to the police. They had taken to the streets to voice their concern and this had led to clashes with some youths in the neighborhood. Such confrontations and clashes were "unacceptable," he said, adding that "the safety and human rights of all people should be respected."

Ethiopian Diaspora took the streets of major cities worldwide to condemnSaudi Arabia's act of crimes against humanity – Gov't says violence against Ethiopian immigrants in KSA cooling'

ESAT News: Although the Public Relations Head of the Ethiopian Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Dina Mufti, has said the crackdown and violence againstEthiopian immigrants in the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia (KSA) is calming down, various Ethiopians that ESAT spoke with say "it has escalated". Thesituation in female's camps is worse, said some women concentrated in these camps. Samira, one of the prisoners in one of these camps, said "we are being forced to spend the day under the scorching sun and the nights through cold. Children and mothers are suffering from lack of food and wave of diseases". She says some Ethiopian mothers have given birthin the last four days and no one knows where these women and their babies were taken to by the police. Another Ethiopian immigrant who goesby the name Habtam said that she saw children inside rubbish garbage and the Ethiopian government has not been able to provide them with solutions so far. Another witness said Saudi youth are now targeting Ethiopians. Similar problems are being reported inside the males' prisons. They are given a small amount of food around 4pm and 7pm each evening. They say no Ethiopian government official has come to visit themso far. And that they have no information when they will leave the Country.

November 15, 2015: Ethiopia determined to construct Renaissance Dam:ambassador'

Al-Masry Al-Youm News: Ambassador of Ethiopia to Egypt, Mahmoud Dreer Ghedi said in a statement to Al-Arabiya news channel Thursday thatEthiopia is determined to continue the construction of the Grand Renaissance Dam. Ghedi added that Egyptian media portrays Ethiopia badly. He called on media to stop distorting the image of Ethiopia and conveying incorrect information. Ghedi denied that Israel is funding the dam. Ghedi added Ethiopia has the right to build dams on its territory as long as it does not harm the interests of other people. He said his countrywould abide by the recommendations of the tripartite committee formed to study the effect of the dam on Egypt and Sudan. Ghedi denied that Ethiopia took advantage of political instability in Egypt to divert the Blue Nile path. He continued: "There is a serious media campaign from severalparties used to wrong Ethiopia, but quietly we respond saying it is not a shame not to recognize Egypt's share of the Nile waters determined by colonizers." "We do not want to reduce the relationship between Egypt and Ethiopia in the Nile water file, and there are ongoing contacts between the foreign ministers of Egypt and Ethiopia to bring close the views," Ghedi said.

November 8, 2013: Former Mayor of AA breaks the record in a century oldAcademic Institution'

AIGAFORUM: This week Arkebe Oqubay the former Mayor of Addis Ababa was recognized as an outstanding Scholar in the Academic circles of London. He broke the academic record of doctoral school in the university of London (School of Oriental and African Studies) for the first time by finishing the four year program within 23 months withhigh honor and great distinction. In this century old institution (established in 1916), the doctoral program is set for four years maximumto defend and finish the doctoral thesis. Most of the candidates defend andfinished with difficulties and hardship (if they are lucky and extraordinary). Arkebe has finished within 23 months and surprised the department of Development Studies, the university professors and students altogether. Never heard of such great achievements in such short period of time, what a person!!

The school's Directorate of External Relations spent almost three weeks digging through its records trying to verify the identity of the phenomenalscholar "whose name and his country's name" were said to have entered the "history books", just to borrow the words of the amateur reporter.

After careful and lengthy investigation, Vesna Siljanovska, SOAS's communication officer, verified that Arkebe Oqubay Metiku had indeed completed his doctoral studies at SOAS in October 2013. While trying to avoid some of the most awkward questions about the newmint scholar, she disclosed that his dissertation focused on the "industrial policy of Ethiopia". Siljanovska also indicated that the school never heard of the "scholar's" record-breaking feats. SOAS communication officers also triedto explain that the so-called record-breaking achievement is common notonly at SOAS but also in other UK universities."
Like many other UK universities, a PhD is usually at least three years in length but candidates can apply to submit after two years of full - time enrolment subject to the approval of the Supervisory Committee and the Associate Dean (Research) of the relevant Faculty. While the majority of candidates studying for a PhD in the UK complete within three years, there are a number of students who complete in a longer or shorter time period," SOAS said in a carefully crafted statement. Professor Christopher Cramer, who teaches in the Department of Development Studies at SOAS,also declined to discuss details about Arkebe's miracles due to the university's privacy policy. But Cramer wrote in an email that Arkebe achieved nothing extraordinary or unprecedented as claimed in the Aigaforum story. Professor Cramer was clearly amused by the claim the first "no corrections thesis," but he declared that the pompous claim was "completely untrue". Asked what Arkebe's new research finding could be on "industrial policy in Ethiopia" that he and his TPLF clique formulated and imposed on the poor nation that they have lotted resources for over two decades, Professor Cramer, who was apparently the good doctor's adviser, also declined to comment further on the matter.

November 16, 2013: 57 held after Chadian-Ethiopian clash'

Arab News: Saudi Police arrested 57 Chadian and Ethiopian expatriates late Sunday night following a clash between the two communities in Jeddah's Aziziah district. Lt. Nawaf Al-Bouq, Jeddah Police spokesman, said trouble erupted when a group of Ethiopians picked up a quarrel with some Chadians and a stone fight ensued. He said police intervened before the situation spiraled out of control. "No one was injured in the rioting but 14 cars were damaged in the stone-throwing fight," Al-Bouq said. "Severalteams of police patrols rushed to the spot and brought the situation undercontrol; 57 miscreants were arrested," he said, adding that the arrested illegals were shifted to the northern police office for further investigations.Al-Bouq said that the campaign against illegal workers would continue as scheduled. "We are getting excellent cooperation from citizens in our operation against illegals," he said. The officer also warned people againstgathering in locations where inspection campaigns are in progress. People gathering in such places would be exposing themselves to unpleasant situations, he said. He reminded the public to give way to and not hinder security officers who are performing their duties.

November 18, 2013: SOCCER - Ethiopia soccer coach slams referee afterNigeria loss’

Calabar, Nigeria (AFP) - Ethiopia coach Sewnet Bishaw has blamed the Gambian referee Bakary Papa Gassama for robbing his team of a chance of a making the World Cup finals for the first time. Sewnet's side went down 2-0 to Nigeria on Saturday, giving the SuperEagles a 4-1 aggregate victory over the two legs, to send them to the finals for the fifth time. Butthe coach said: "The referee won the game for Nigeria. He denied us two penalties and gave them a soft penalty. These were not fair decisions by the referee." Liverpool striker Victor Moses tucked away the penalty after Aynalem Hailu handled inside the penalty area then Victor Obinna fired home a free-kick to kill off the game. Sewnet said the two teams were notevenly matched in terms of experience, with Nigeria featuring more European-based players used to football at the highest level. "My players are young and most of them play locally but Nigeria have professionals who play in Europe and so they are ahead of us," he added. "But we will continue to work hard so as to be one of the best teams in Africa."

CHANGCHUN, (Xinhua) -- China CNR Corporation Limited (CNR), one of the country's biggest train makers, announced that it will produce 30 train coaches for Ethiopia, a step to grasp a share in the booming African market. Changchun Railway Vehicles Co. Ltd. of CNR has signed contractswith Ethiopian authorities to produce 30 25G coaches, including 20 hard- seat, four hard-sleeper, four soft-sleeper and two dinning carriages with adesigned speed of 120 km per hour, according to the company. The Ethiopia-Djibouti Railway, which was built in 1917 by France and is the only trunk railway line in Ethiopia. The east African country relies on the Djibouti port to trade goods. The Ethiopian government is building new railway lines to replace the 96-year-old railway, which is outdated and hasbeen suspended from operation. Ethiopia plans to expand its length of railway to 2,600 km by 2015, which poses great market prospects.

November 21, 2013: Protests opposing the violence on Ethiopians in SaudiArabia continue'

ESAT News: Ethiopians living in different countries have continued protesting the human rights violations and violence against their compatriots in Saudi Arabia. Ethiopians residing in Bern, Switzerland havestaged an 'emotional protest' on November 20, 2013. The protesters wereshouting outside the Saudi Embassy in Switzerland by holding slogans that denounced the Ethiopian and Saudi Arabian governments. The protesters also passed the police lines. Activist Petros Ashenafi and other participants said the protest, held within heavy police presence, was successful.

The Ethiopian government has said that so far 8000 Ethiopians have beenrepatriated from Saudi Arabia. Although ESAT reporter phoned, Dr.

Tewodros Adhanom, the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Ethiopia, to get his responses regarding the numbers and the situations, he had said that he was in a meeting and the information was available on the State Television, ETV. Although there are over 20,000 Ethiopians in Saudi Arabiawho are voluntarily waiting to be deported, Saudi Arabia's King Abdullah's new orders for the intensification of the crackdown on migrant workers, is feared to cause another predicament on Ethiopian migrant workers living in different cities.

Information received from the Ethiopian Ministry of Foreign Affairs (MoFA)states that there are at least 180 thousand undocumented Ethiopian immigrants living in Saudi Arabia. ESAT has learnt that protests opposing the actions of the Saudi securities and people on Ethiopian immigrants and calling for the perpetrators to be taken accountable will continue in the coming days.

BBC Africa's Kasim Kayira went to the one in London. There's been growing anger among Ethiopians in and outside the country, about the way that some of their compatriots have been treated in Saudi Arabia. Things came to a head following an ultimatum for illegal migrant workers to leave the country. And there were clashes in Riyadh which led toseveral deaths last week.

On Monday, there have been demonstrations at Saudi embassies around the world. In a latest development, protests against mistreatment of Ethiopians in Saudi Arabia underway in San Francisco, Atlanta, London, Beirut, Washington DC, Oslo, Stockoholm, Rome, Las Vegas, Los Angeles,Munich, Toronto, Ottawa, Edmonton, Winnipeg, Seoul, Helsinki, Seatle, Bern, Brisbane, Geneva, Tel Aviv, Vienna, Dublin, Vancouver, Calgary, Berlin and several other cities around the world will hold protest demonstration to denounce such brutal acts against Ethiopian migrant workers.
November 23, 2013: Backdates 39 years - A fateful evening for formerimperial officials'
At the fateful evening of Saturday, November 23rd 1974, meaning dateback 39 years, over 60 imperial government ministers, noblemen andhigh ranking military officials of Emperor Haile Selassie regime were horribly executed by a firing squad of the ruling military junta without facing justice …
Side note: On that fateful day, an urgent meeting of the ruling Duerg was called. The Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC) commonly known as the Duerg made a decisive meeting on the fate of former Imperial officials on November 23, 1974 (Hidar 14, 1967 local calendar). The compound was teeming with activity. Soldiers with heavy and light weapons were everywhere. Officers and soldiers hitherto unseen were on location and crowding into the meeting hall. Seating positions were filled with delegates and soldiers standing against the wall. The meeting hall was overcrowded and all the delegates were apprehensive of what the agenda might be. In a little while, Majours Mengistu and Atnafu walked into the meeting and assumed their seats on the podium. Mengistu was seated on the right side and Atnafu on the left. The usual middle chair of the army General Aman was absent this time, testifying to the end of the general's future political life, the author tells us. Majour Mengistu informedthe invited members and delegates that today "we will be discussing somecrucial issues" and this is why we have invited all members and "Neus- Duerg meaning for Sub-Duerg members" dignitaries from the regions to give us their voices. Saddened and angered at the same time and gesturing passionately with his hands, Majour Mengistu said "gobez" matters are taking a turn for the worst. The man we had trusted and decided should lead us, has stopped coming to his office duties claiming his sickness. Soon we discovered that, rather than sickness, his position was borne of anger at us. Despite the various emissaries of peace we have sent to him, he adamantly refused to work with us. In fact, he started agitating against us (the Duerg) with certain elements in the army. The details of his conspiracy have fallen onto our hands. Today's urgent meeting is about how we are going to deal with this troublesomematter and solve it once and for all.

Most of the Duerg members in the hall had limited knowledge that the contradiction between the army general and Majour Mengistu had reachedto this point and decided to keep quite. Others decided that a peaceful solution must be sought to avoid the impending danger. Yet others thought that the general must be imprisoned and his conspiratorial activities exposed to the public. Still, a lot of the "Sub-Duerg" members did not accept Mengistu's allegations about the general's treachery and proposed to go to the general's house and talk to him once again. At this point Mengistu was infuriated, his lips and cheeks started quivering in fury. I do not know why you doubt and fail to believe what we just reported? He wanted to know. "Everything is backed up by concrete evidence and we can present to you the detailed information if necessary."Majour Mengistu was confident in his demeanor and utterances. Now, Colonel Tesfaye Wolde-Selassie has something to present to you, so listencarefully and form your own opinions on the issue. Tesfaye moved to the podium carrying his tape recorder and the incriminating information. Whatyou are going to listen to is the phone conversation between generals Aman Andom and Gizaw Belayneh. Since we have other incriminating communications like this, with other generals and military commanders, we will present them in due course if necessary.

On tape reveals, General Gizaw Belaineh makes a phone call to General Aman and after the necessary greetings, Gizaw pleads with him to changehis mind and return to his duty. Who am I going to work with? Inquired Aman Andom. How can we lead a country with ordinary soldiers and Sergeants? He continued. Since there is an idea I have proposed, unless they accept it (as proposed a 14-members ruling junta led by himself), I am not willing to work with them, Aman thought. When asked more aboutthis idea, the general elaborates on the idea of dismissing the whole Duerg council and creating a new military Council (junta) of more educated and capable military leaders under his direct command. GeneralGizaw explains the impossibility of Aman's ideas for the wellbeing of the popular movement according to Majour Mengistu. Anyway, General Gizawadvises him to return to duty and to try improving the current situation under his leadership. The angered army general Aman rejoins "you guys have failed to listen to what I am telling you. Henceforth I am no longer able to work with these rabbles that have "not wiped their asses!" yet. At this point Colonel Tesfaye stopped the tape and returned to his seat. The silence in the hall erupted into angry murmurs and the Duerg members were visibly livid at the general's insulting remarks. Majour Atnafu was biting his lips in anger and Mengistu was surveying the members' reaction. He had successfully stalked their violent instincts now self- evident throughout the hall. The notion of "not wiping their asses" exemplifies the level of contempt he held for Duerg members. This phrase infuriated all present members in the hall. In Caesar's language, "the diewas cast" henceforth.

JournyMan TV commentary: Land stealing is becoming the single most controversial issue in Africa. It involves large-scale land acquisitions by foreign countries and corporations for farming, biofuels, logging and minerals. Unlike land acquisitions in the United States and Europe where purchasers pay the fair market values for land, in Ethiopia and Africa as whole unscrupulous deals are displacing thousands of farmers and leaving local communities in abject poverty, while government officials benefit from land sales and leases. Land reformin Ethiopia and Africa is about food security, about political and economic corruption, and in many cases about fundamental human rights.

November 26, 2013: Female migrant workers in Saudi Arabia beingmurdered, raped'

News updates: The situation in Riyadh is hopeless say Ethiopians residing in Saudi Arabia that ESAT spoke to. An Ethiopian, who resides in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, said to ESAT that she has witnessed the killing of two Ethiopian women in a place called Mekreyement, Shababiya by Saudi military vehicles. Another Ethiopian lady on her part said that another ladyhad died hit by an iron while talking to Saudi soldiers. The hand of anotherEthiopian lady has been chopped. Other Ethiopians have said that there are so many atrocities that are even worse than this.

Over 50 vehicles have been parked for the past 17 days carrying Ethiopians that are waiting to be repatriated voluntarily. The passengers dine and carry out their sanitation around the buses hence polluting the area. Children are being infected by contagious diseases, according to eyewitnesses. This crisis has also affected documented Ethiopians living inSaudi Arabia. They say they are finding it very difficult to be employed although they have all the necessary legal requirements fulfilled. Althoughunverified, the Ethiopian government has claimed that it has repatriated over 20,000 Ethiopians and the number Ethiopians still concentrated in Menfuah district in Riyadh is overstuffed.

KAFALA VISA - The Gulf Countries Enslavement System'

PERSPECTIVE: By Geletaw Zeleke: The violation of rights of women and foreign workers characterizes the country. Saudi Arabia is the only countryin the world where women are not allowed to drive. To this extent Saudi isfar off from rights issues. Such oppression cannot continue on in this way for obvious reasons. As we have learned from human development there will be change sooner or later. The Arab spring will most likely pass through Saudi Arabia and respect for human rights might then be able to be heard from that region. A country rich from oil, Saudi Arabia, has a high demand for foreign workers especially those from poor countries. Themain system that Saudi employees to invite workers to its land is known as the “Kafala” system. In fact, the same system is employed not only in Saudi Arabia but throughout the majority of Persian Gulf countries or the so called (GCC-Gulf Countries Council). The Kafala system takes away workers rights and puts them in the hands of their sponsor. A person going to work in Saudi Arabian or other Persian Gulf countries through theKafala system has no right to alter his workplace. He also has no right to leave the country without the permission of the sponsor. The Kafala visa system is more appropriately named the Twenty-first Century Persian GulfCountries Enslavement System. As many victims have witnessed, sponsors take possession of passports and other important documents upon their arrival to Saudi Arabia. The fate of such foreign workers falls totheir sponsors. When sponsors abuse the rights of these foreign workers, some workers try to escape and have lost their lives in the process.

Tragically, many domestic workers in Lebanon and Saudi Arabia have been known to jump from high-rise buildings trying to escape from their sponsors. Millions of immigrant workers in Saudi Arabia do not have a system that provides them with security or gives them confidence in institutions. Foreign workers who do escape then become undocumented. Is it fair to label these people as illegal? Even if they want to go back home since their sponsor has to provide them with an exit visa and in fearof arrest they are forced to live a life of fear with no immediate escape in sight. Who is the real criminal in this situation? Those people who are labeled “ illegal“ are not but instead the system that has exposed them tosuch circumstances has violated the international law through exploitationand abuse. GCC countries know that the Kafala sponsorship program is anillegal system as when they ratified the Universal Human Rights Declaration. Article 13 of the universal human right declaration states that, including his own, and return to his country". The Kafala system at minimum violates Article 13 so, those countries who employee this systemincluding countries that sell their citizens under the Kafala sponsorship system clearly violate this international law. This system also violates theirconstitutional laws at the same time. What is more,Sharialaw promises pay before your sweat dries. Still a number of domestic workers of Ethiopian decent living in Saudi Arabia are yet to be paid their promised salaries. We might ask why GCC countries employ this system while they know that it is illegal under international labor law. It seems that the Gulf Countries Council has employed this calculating system for economic exploitation of foreign workers. Under this insecure system cheap labor is imported and then used for advantage at the overall expense of workers. According to sources there are about 15 million immigrant workers in the GCC and most of them are in Saudi Arabia. In countries where millions of workers are foriegners we can easily see how the Kafala sponsorship system exposes them to massive human right violations. Since the focus of these countries is economic gain by manuplating a foreign worker force the responsibility to protect these workers falls to the employers. One sponsor may have a number of workers under him and their fate is determined by his skill, relative good will and ability to control and manage. Further, in countries where the culture of democracy is not well developed the problems with this kind of sponsorship grow worse and worse by manipulation of greedy employers. There is also another illegal visa system which Saudi Arabia uses to exploit foreign workers. The nameof this illegal visa is called "Free Visa". This kind of visa allows the foreign worker to find his own job with only a nominal sponsor. This kind of visa allows Saudi Arabians to bring foreign workers from abroad in the name ofbusinesses organization that do not exist. People who were brought to Saudi Arabia in this visa system have to pay a lot of money every month for their sponsor who controls their visa permits.

“Everyone has the right to freedom of movement and residence within theborders of each state.”

“Everyone has the right to leave any country

In recent years Indonesia and the Philippines have attempted to negotiatelabor agreements concerning the minimum wage and other human right issues of their citizens. However, because of the resistance of the Saudi Arabian government these two countries have prohibited their citizens from entering into employment agreements with Saudi Arabian employers. It appears that the Saudi government which has set out to gather an unprotected cheap labor force has found just that in Ethiopia, a country with a government that is not concerned with protecting its citizens. The Ethiopian government has sold its citizen into the Kafala system to benefit from the remittances of foreign currency by migrant workers. The Ethiopian government does not worry for the livelihood of itscitizens instead it only concerns itself with the revenues and guarantees ofrevenue they build. Sources reveal that the Ethiopian government agreed to regularly recruit 45,000 women to fill the need for cheap labor in Saudi Arabia. Would a competent government who boasts growth sell its own citizens into unsafe working agreements? No, the reality is that this is the manifestation of huge internal problems. Although there has always been a problem in this region the recent crackdown and abuse in Saudi Arabia especially against Ethiopians has angered Ethiopians all over the world. Those who were exploited, abused or undocumented are now again being attacked by government security officers and police. This action is unfair and a crime. Ethiopians will seek justice from the international justice bodies. After unregulated exploitation of foreign workers Saudi Arabia is ina state of heightened crackdown to deport Ethiopian migrant workers. Dueto the nationwide crackdown brutal attacks have been committed against unprotected workers by security forces and the police. This action has caused an outcry of Ethiopians around the world angered by the inhumane practices of the Saudi Arabian government on the one hand and the uncaring attitudes of the Ethiopian government on the other. Both buyers and sellers of labor under the Kafala system are to be held accountable forthe current humanitarian crises.

November 26, 2013: Police: Murder Suspect Dies: Ethio-American in Texas killed daughter and burned himself to death' FREDERICK (AP) — The father was the shooter in a murder-suicide last week that left him, hiswife and infant son dead in their home near New Market, the Frederick County Sheriff's Office said Monday. Benyam Assefa, 40, and his wife Barbara Giomarelli, 42, started arguing Wednesday evening as she gave their 5-year-old daughter a bath, said Capt. Tim Clarke. They took their disagreement downstairs, where Assefa shot Giomarelli with a registered, 9 mm handgun, Clarke said. The bullet passed through Giomarelli and killed their 3-month-old son Samuel Assefa in his mother's arms, Clarke said. Assefa then shot himself, Clarke said. The little girl got dressed, went downstairs and saw the scene, then sought help from a neighbor, who called 911, Clarke said. He said the bodies of Giomarelli and Samuel were found in the kitchen. Assefa's body was found in an adjacent living room. Investigators don't know what the argument was about, Clarke said. He said investigators have learned about previous domestic problems, but police weren't aware of them. Clarke said Assefa, a native of Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, lost his job as a contract worker at a National Institutes of Health laboratory in Frederick Sept. 30, when the position was eliminated to cut costs. Giomarelli, a native of Siena, Italy, had worked at the University of Maryland Center for Environmental Science.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Dina Mufti told Sudan Tribune: “Although we first projected to bring back home [a] maximum [of] 30,000[people, the number of] citizens seeking return is increasing. …The number of Ethiopians flown home has so far reached 70,000 since Ethiopiabegan the repatriation operation on November 13th.” If the ongoing mass airlift continues at this pace, the number of returnees could reach 100,000in the coming days.
December 3, 2013: Saudi Billionaire Plans Two Cement Plants in Ethiopia'By Will Davison: Saudi billionaire Shekh Mohammed Hussein al-Amoudi, the biggest private investor in Ethiopia, plans to build two more cement factories in the Horn of Africa nation amid an improving investment environment. The plants will add to the $351 million facility al-Amoudi’s MIDROC Derba Cement opened in December 2011, the 67-year-old investor said in an interview today in the capital, Addis Ababa. Derba Group, an amalgam of three Ethiopian companies owned by al-Amoudi, plans to invest $3.4 billion in Ethiopia over the next 5 years, the companysaid in March 2012. “Africa’s opportunity lies in involvement of private sector working with stable and responsible government like Ethiopia,” al- Amoudi said in a speech at the African High-Growth Markets Summit in Addis Ababa. Continuing improvements in the business climate will probably to lead to a “great” increase in investment, he said, without elaborating.
Ethiopian-born Al-Amoudi ranks as the world’s 134th richest person, with a net worth estimated at $8.7 billion, according to the Bloomberg Billionaires Index. He is the second-richest person in Saudi Arabia, after Prince Alwaleed bin Talal. Ethiopia’s economy is projected to expand 7.5 percent next year, compared with an estimated 7 percent this year, the International Monetary Fund said in its World Economic Outlook in October. Three farming companies owned by al-Amoudi developed 62,000 hectares (153,205 acres) of land in Ethiopia, al-Amoudi said. Elfora Agro-Industries, Horizon Plantations Ethiopia and Saudi Star Agricultural Development will have prepared an additional 160,000 hectares in the next 2 1/2 to 3 years. “We are focusing on agriculture and industry,” he said.

Agriculture Projects: Horizon bought three agricultural projects from Ethiopia’s government for $59.4 million in April. The company plans to invest 400 million Ethiopian birr ($21 million) over the next two years in Upper Awash Agro Industry Enterprise, Gojeb Agricultural Development Enterprise and Coffee Processing and Warehouse Enterprise. Saudi Star, aDerba company, has been unable to finance the completion of an irrigation canal at its 10,000-hectare rice project in the western Gambella region, the company said last month. “There were certain problems which we are trying to solve,” al-Amoudi said. “Now we are getting in deeply andI’m going to follow it up myself.” Al-Amoudi also announced that an “agreement has been reached” with London-based Hikma PharmaceuticalsPlc (HIK) to produce drugs in Ethiopia for the domestic market and export to Africa. He didn’t provide further details.

December 4, 2013: EPRDF’s ‘negotiation request’ receives variousresponses’

ESAT News: After ESAT broke the news of the repeated ‘let us negotiate’ requests of the ruling EPRDF to the opposition Ginbot-7 Movement, several audiences have phoned ESAT to express their views regarding thedevelopment. Most callers do not want Ginbot-7 to negotiate or talk with the ruling Front. They say “EPRDF has been weakened and EPRDF is not an organisation that can be trusted.” On the other hand, some Ethiopianshave sent an email to ESAT stating that the ‘negotiation’ News is good. These audiences urge that it would be good if parties could peacefully talkand work for their country. “If the negotiation is serious and EPRDF is ready to bring true changes, it is good news for the country” they noted. It is to be recalled that Ginbot-7 has not accepted the negotiation requests for various reasons.

December 4, 2013: Lawlessness is on the rise in Somali regional town ofJigjiga’

ESAT News: The houses of civilians can be searched at any time by securities in Jigjiga, Ogaden, Eastern Ethiopia. The securities do take the properties of civilians such as mobile phones, laptops and money. Those who do not carry local identity cards are held on suspicion. Residents of the town say, Jigjiga has become a place of suffering to Ethiopians even worse than Saudi Arabia. According to some sources the problem exacerbated and got complex after Al Shabab left warning text messages on the mobile phone of the regional president of the Ethiopia Somali region, Abdi Mohammed Illey. The Group reportedly warned the Pesident that it would take action if the Nationalities Day is celebrated in the regionthis month. A man, who was suspected of having links with the Group, has been kidnapped and taken to the woodland where he was beaten to death by the securities. Securities later on paid 50 thousand birr to the deceased’s family as compensation. Another young lady has alsoreportedly been taken to the Central Prison and was raped there.It was learnt that some cabinet members of the Addis Abeba City Administration have expressed their disinterest of taking part in the Nationalities Day celebration to be held on December 8, in Jigjiga, Ogadendue to peace and security concerns. Following this, senior officials are writing strongly-worded letters ordering the cabinet members to take partin the event. In the meantime, ESAT was handed a discussion paper prepared by the Ethiopian House of Federation and the Somali regional government for the 8th Ethiopian Nations Nationalities and Peoples’ Day celebration. The discussion paper contains some contentious articles and statements. For instance at one section it says “the Abyssinian nobilities had only travelled to the desert to loot the cattle resource. In the name of eliminating bandits, Emperor Menelik II’s army, had for example looted over 50 thousand cattle and were sent to Harrar via Jigjiga in 1902.” It also criticises Emperor Haile Selassie and his administration for “failing and discriminating the people and buying clan leaders”. The paper narrates that better opportunities have been brought during the current administration of the EPRDF regime.

December 7, 2013: The renowned athlete Kenenisa Bekele focused onmarathon debut'
IAAF: Three years of nagging injuries dented Kenenisa Bekele's invincibility, reducing him to an also ran on the world stage and giving cause to the theory that the Ethiopian superstar had come to the end of his career. But with a victory at the 2013 Great North Run last September – his debut at the Half-marathon distance – he stunned the naysayers andhanded the reigning World and Olympic 5000m and 10,000m champion Mo Farah a rare defeat. Bekele, 31, clearly has more in the tank and is now setting his sights on running his first Marathon. Odds are he will line up in London next spring, likely the only event that could afford his price tag.

December 9, 2013: Tullow Oil plugs and abandons well in Ethiopia' Business: LONDON -- Oil and gas exploration group Tullow Oil PLC (TLW.LN) said Monday that the Tultule-1 wildcat well in the South Omo block, onshore Ethiopia, will be plugged and abandoned as a dry hole. TheTultule-1 well reached a total depth of 2,101 meters and was targeting a reservoir section similar to the sands drilled in the nearby Sabisa-1 well, where oil shows were encountered, but these sands were not penetrated in Tultule-1. The company will now analyze results of the Sabisa-1 and theTultule-1 wells to determine the future exploration campaign for the area. The company said the OGEC rig will now move to the Chew Bahir basin in Ethiopia to drill the Shimela prospect in the eastern portion of theSouth Omo block. The well is expected to spud at the end of the first quarter of 2014. Tullow is the operator of the Tultule-1 well with a 50% interest along with partners Africa Oil, with 30% interest, and Marathon, with 20% interest. The company also said that the Ewoi-1 well in Block 10BB, Kenya, is expected to spud by the end of 2013. Shares of Tullow Oil on Friday closed at 899 pence, valuing the company at 8.19 billion pounds($13.38 billion).

OI - Donors are embarrassed by blatant regime's use of their money to disenfranchise the poor and sell their land to wealthy foreigners. Groups such as the Oakland Institute and Human Rights Watch have repeatedly protested that foreign aid is actually hurting Ethiopia's poor instead of helping them. The United States, U.K. and Germany have worked out a face-saving formula that should help them fend off criticism of their money harming the very people they purport to help. They have entered aland use contract euphemistically called a "land country partnership."The partnership "will support improved rural land tenure security for all, including…communal and pastoral areas." The agreement "will strengthen transparency in land governance." The effort appears to pressure the regime to curb some of its most blatantly behavior. But the agreement has no mechanism to enforce violations of these limited checks on the government's behavior.

December 11, 2013: The Regime Using Liyu Police has Massacred Civiliansin Mustahil District: ONLF' ONLF reports that security forces in the easternEthiopian region of Ogaden have massacred hundred of civilians. The Ethiopian regime intensifying its scorched earth policies in Ogaden has unleashed its Liyu Police militia on the civilian population in Mustahil district of Shebelle region of Ogaden. During the last two days hundreds of civilians were either killed or wounded in and around Mustahil.
Thousands has been uprooted, some seeking refugee in Somalia. Details will be released as more information becomes available. ONLF strongly condemns this heinous act and calls upon the UN and the AU and donors to make the Ethiopian regime accountable for its crimes against Somalis under its inhumane rule. ONLF calls upon all Somalis to unite and stand upto the Ethiopian regime's planned extermination of the Somali Nation.
December 13, 2013: UK Contributes U.S.$1 Million for Ethiopian Migrants Returning From Saudi' The British government has contributed $1 million for Humanitarian Response Fund (HRF) and Central Emergency Response Fund (CERP) of International Organization of Migration (IOM), set up to help Ethiopian migrant workers deported from the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia. Though UK is the biggest contributor so far, at just $3.7 million IOM is still far short of the required funding to rehabilitate returnees whichis estimated at $15.6. On Thursday Dec. 12th, Greg Dorey, UK's Ambassador to Ethiopia, visited the temporary reception centre accommodating deportees from Saudi Arabia at Bole International Airport. "Today I was able to witness first-hand the enormous challenge the Government of Ethiopia is undertaking to try and help the extraordinary numbers of people who have returned from Saudi Arabia over the past few weeks," Ambassador Dorey said, adding, "I am full of praise for the work of the International Organisation for Migration and others in trying todeal with this massive problem." The Ambassador has toured the reception centre and its various facilities and spoke with some of the returnees. He was briefed by high level officials of the International Organization of Migration (IOM) and local staff coordinating the reception centre about its operations and the wellbeing of returnees. "We are extremely concerned about the welfare of the returnees, which is why the UK has contributed nearly $1million to the IOM through pooled humanitarian funds as part of the international support effort," said Ambassador Dorey. He also promised that his government will "be lookingat other ways" in which the UK can help the Ethiopian government and thereturnees. "We encourage other donors to do all they can to plug the funding gap which exists."

December 17, 2013: Tight celebration in Jigjiga shows Region's instability:Observer'

ESAT News: An Ethiopian government official, who preferred to remain anonymous, said to ESAT that during his stay in the region he leant that the main problem of the Region was the absence of peace. He said although the government stated that the 8th Ethiopian Nations, Nationalities and Peoples' Day Celebration in JigJiga, Ethiopia had ended without any problem, the truth was far from that. In the suburbs of Jijiga city there were tanks, vehicles carrying heavy weapons, special commandos, fully armed soldiers and Federal police officers were giving a24 hour protection while fighting helicopters were conducting surveillance.All vehicles were banned from moving on the Day. The official said the celebration was held inside the Stadium while the rest of the City looked like a city of death. Even in war zones, events are not celebrated under such a tight security, particularly foreigners and his own workmates that visited the city have come to understand what 'peace' meant in the rulingFront's lexicon, the official added.

According to the source, the Speakers of the Houses of the Kenya and Rwanda, who have been invited as guests were under an inconvenience asthey were provided appropriate reception and protocol. The Kenyan Speaker of the House was invited by Abadula Gemeda, his Ethiopian counterpart while the Ugandan Speaker of the House was invited by Kasa Teklebirhan, Speaker of the House of Federation of Ethiopia. When the two Speakers arrived at Jijiga airport, neither Abaduala nor Kasa were there to receive them at the airport. There were not also other officials who were there to accept them. After staying for a while at Jijiga airport, the Jijiga Police took them to Jijiga hotel with an old police vehicle. The official said the Hotel the two diplomats stayed in was below the standard.When the two guests arrived, Abadula and Kasa were taking pleasure in their guest house. The incoming delegation was deeply angry at the uncharacteristic protocol they were provided as well as the quality of the Hotel they were forced to stay in. It is to be recalled that the officials of the Somali Regional Administration expressed their displeasure as the officials of the Federal government were not providing the proper ‘respect’to guests from overseas.

December 18, 2013: Speculation: Multiple sources report president of theAmhara Regional State Ayalew Gobeze resigned.
December 18, 2013: Quarter of the 744 Diaspora owned projects inEthiopia unimplemented’
ESAT News: According to an information obtained from the Diaspora Participation Affairs Directorate General of the Ethiopian Ministry of Foreign Affairs, states that although there are 2-3 million Ethiopian and Ethiopian origin nationals throughout the world, their contribution to theirCountry is minimal. Europe and U.S.A. are the main destinations for Ethiopians and a large number of the Diaspora community reside in thesecountries. The Document reveals that there are Ethiopians that are recognised researchers, health professional, university lecturers, staffers of international organisations and investors in these countries. Although there are reports about the increase of Diaspora investors since the Ethiopian millennium in 2000, what is observed on the ground is differentfrom that. According to the report titled “The Diaspora Participation: International and Ethiopian Realities”, only 120 of the total 744 Diaspora owned projects have started providing service or production. The government had anticipated that these projects would create 1, 82, 972 permanent and 2, 131, 200 temporary job opportunities when implemented. The Directorate states that one of the reasons for the Diaspora not playing the needed roles included what it called “the Diaspora’s wrong perception about the government”. The report stated that the Diaspora community prefers to support Ethiopian rebels and opposition parties in Eritrea than the ruling Front and there are also manywho preferred not to side with neither of the camps.
The report also identified the ‘problems’ of the Diaspora investors such that relate to implementation, lack of knowledge about the law, and improper ways of information collection. In the meantime, some employees of the Ethiopian Ministry of Foreign Affairs have said to ESAT that the Ministry, which is led by Dr. Tedros Adhanom is responsible for the abuse and deportation of over 120 thousand Ethiopians from Saudi Arabia. They say, “although article 5 of the Policy states the Ministry will provide them legal documents to Ethiopians living outside their country toparticipate in their country’s development and follows and supports when they are in problems”, the Ethiopian Embassy or the Consular office in Riyadh have not attempted to prevent the crisis by giving them legal documents. The employees have said the government is completely responsible for this though it attempted to take pictures with the repatriating victims and cover it up. A report by the World Bank states that Ethiopia gets around $3.2 million from its Diaspora in remittance outof which Ethiopians residing in Arab countries take the Lion’s share. The Ministry has not yet explained as to why it has not provided legal identitydocuments and prevents the crisis.
December 19, 2013: Demolishing the city burial sites’

Addis Ababa City Administration is destroying a large portion of the historic Holy Trinity Church cemetery in Addis Ababa after digging out anddumping in mass graves of notable Ethiopian patriots who fought with Italian fascists. Investigative reports of the destruction of the Holy Trinity cemetry and what discovered are so far shocking. This is done in the name of development. The 800-year old Waldeba Monastery is also being destroyed in the name of development — for Shekh Al-Amoudi to grow and export Sugar to Saudi Arabia. The real question is: whose development? The who's who of Ethiopian nobility and patriots are buried at the Holy Trinity and St. Joseph cemetries. Destroying these national treasures is part of the regime's program to rewrite Ethiopia's proud history and dishonor the past leaders who have made Ethiopia once the pride of Africa and all black people of the world. Among Ethiopian heroes and patriots who are buried at Holy Trinity and St. Joseph include Abune Petros, Ras Abebe Aregay, Emperor Haile selassie, Professor Asrat Woldeyes, and many many others. The Holy Trinity thedral is where SylviaPankhurst, the British woman who helped Ethiopia defeat Fascist Italian invaders, is also buried. It has to be recalled that home demolition by the government left hundreds of urban dwellers homeless in the Ethiopian capital'

December 20, 2013: Ethiopian Government Provides 3.6 Million Hectares Of Land For Investments In Agriculture' JIMMA, ETHIOPIA, (BERNAMA- National News Agency of Indonesia) - As its people starve, Ethiopia makesmore land available to wealthy foreigners. EPRDF persists with land sales;ignores donor pleas to slow down. Ethiopia's Agriculture Investment and Land Administration Agency says 3.6 million hectares of arable land is being provided for investors engaged in the agriculture sector.Speaking ata training session for investors engaged in coffee plantations in Oromia and South Ethiopia Peoples' States on Tuesday, agency representative Asres Argaw said 470,000 hectares land had so far been allocated for investors to develop for agriculture.

He said Ethiopian nationals and foreign investors were cultivating cotton, palm trees and sugar cane on the stated land. The government was striving to increase participation of the private sector in the agriculture sector with coffee planting among the priority targets. Asres said the conducive investment policies and strategies as well as incentives were attracting more investors to engage in coffee plantations. He stressed thatwithout exerting maximum efforts and utilisation of modern technologies, the country could not achieve its goal of improving coffee production and productivity. The newly established agency, which comes under the Ministry of Agriculture, is striving to provide integrated support for investors in a bid to improve their land utilisation and production. The agency is also providing training to investors engaged in coffee planting on technologies that improve production and coffee quality.

December 20, 2013: At least 40 people detained in Jigjiga due to recent'festival' die'

ESAT News: At least 40 people detained for being "possible polluters ofJijiga city" during the celebration of the 8th Ethiopian Nations, Nationalities and Peoples' Day two weeks agoin Jigjiga town of the Somali Regional State, have died in detention, 250kms away from Jijiga City in Kebridehar prison. They were buried nearthe detention area. The cause of their death has not been established yet.ESAT learnt from the Region's officials that as the deceased were not properly buried, their bodies were eaten by hyenas. Thus, the rest of the remains were reburied far afield from the prison. Those alive have been released since yesterday. Relatives that learned the death of their kinship have been seating in grief in their houses. The detainees, suspected of being "possible polluters and threats to security of Jijiga city", included street dwellers, daily labourers, the disabled, sightless people, those that were not able to show proof of the regional identity card and other citizenswho have come from other regions of Ethiopia and were deemed 'alien'.

It costs about 115 Eth. Birr for one to get an identity card in Jijiga. Those that were not able to get identity cards on time or show when asked by security are always detained. ESAT incessantly phoned the Region's Security Section Head, Abdulahi, to get his responses on the issue, but hewas unavailable. Insiders following the issue closely have appealed international human rights organisations, journalists or members of the Red Cross to go to the burial site and make the issue public. As it is underthe watch of the Defense Forces, it is impossible to take photographs without the permission of the Regional Administration. Although the government stated that the Nationalities' Day celebration went on without any security problem, the local residents state that they have been exposed to immense difficulties due to the security and image building related measures. ESAT had reported that Nationalities' Day event was mainly organised by people that have direct connection with the Tigrian People's Liberation Front (TPLF). From the provision of Whisky to the organisation of the bazaar, from advertisement and promotional works to material provision, most of the work has been done and millions of birr in profit was garnered by people that have a connection with the TPLF or aremembers of the Front themselves.

December 21, 2013: Ethiopians in South Sudan Demand UrgentRepatriation' Awramba Times, Addis Ababa – Ethiopians living in South Sudan are urgently appealing to the government of Ethiopia to begin the process of repatriation. Ethiopian Embassy in Juba has started registering Ethiopians as the violence escalated between different ethnic and political groups inSouth Sudan. Dina Mufti, spokesperson of Ethiopian Foreign Ministry toldAwramba Times that his government is working to evacuate its citizens from spiraling conflict in the world's newest nation. A mediation team consisting of Ministers from Ethiopia, Kenya, Uganda, Djibouti and Sudantravelled to Juba, for talks with both side to end the week-long deadly strife in the country. United States, British, German, Uganda and Dutch planes were also scheduled to fly out. Hundreds of foreigners, including aid workers, have left South Sudan this week.

December 22, 203: No evidence Israel trained Nelson Mandela, saysfoundation'

AFP: The Nelson Mandela Foundation says it has no evidence that the anti-apartheid icon received training from Israel's Mossad agency in 1962.Israel's Haaretz newspaper reported this week that intelligence documentsfrom Mossad indicated the spy agency had given Mandela weapons training in Ethiopia. 'In 2009, the Nelson Mandela Foundation's senior researcher travelled to Ethiopia and interviewed the surviving men who assisted in Mandela's training,' the foundation said on Saturday.

'No evidence emerged of an Israeli connection.' The foundation, which works to preserve Mandela's legacy, also said nothing in Mandela's privatearchive, including his diaries, indicated he had interacted with Mossad agents during his tour of African countries in the early 1960s when he sought training and support to bolster the armed resistance to apartheid. Israel had developed close links with Ethiopia's dictator at the time, Haile Selassie, the last emperor of the country, who was overthrown in a 1974 coup. Israel later forged a tight bond with the apartheid regime in South Africa, including in nuclear affairs.

Its ties with South Africa were strained after the white-minority regime collapsed and Mandela became the country's first black president. His governing African National Congress is a staunch supporter of Palestinian statehood, and Mandela frequently voiced his allegiance to the Palestiniancause. According to a letter reported in Haaretz, Mandela was given military training and was encouraged to develop Zionist sympathies.The foundation confirmed Mandela received arms training in Morocco from Algerian fighters who rebelled against French colonial rule and in Ethiopiafrom Ethiopian forces.

December 23, 2013: ENTC sends out "Interim Draft Charter" to scholars and political organizations' PR: Ethiopians National Transitional Council (ENTC) has started sending out a draft charter for the interim period in Ethiopia during which a transitional government governs the country. Thedraft charter is at an initial stage and it will be reviewed and discussed byrepresentatives of every sector of the Ethiopian society before it is presented to a constitutional convention for final approval. After it was established in July 2012, ENTC took its first major step a year later in July2013 by organizing a consultative conference on replacing the corrupt, brutal dictatorship in Ethiopia and replacing it with an all-inclusive transitional government. The participants of the July 2013 conference agreed to start the process of drafting an interim period charter. The ENTCleadership has worked hard on coming up with the first draft after consulting with scholars. Next month, in January 2014, ENTC will hold the second consultative conference which will discuss the draft charter and willalso decide on how to proceed with the formation of a transitional government that will replace the criminal junta that is currently ruling Ethiopia. Before presenting the draft charter to the January 2014 consultative conference, ENTC will circulate it to scholars, political and civic organizations, and Ethiopians inside the country and all over the world.

December 24, 2013: Members of the Muslim Arbitration Committee saythey were 'tortured'

ESAT News:The members of the Ethiopian Muslims Arbitration Committeethat have been detained since last year have said that they were 'physically and mentally tortured' in the Central Prison, Addis Abeba. Theysaid they were forced to stand for over 14 hours per day, were lynched wires until their skins bruised, shackling them, blindfolding them and beating the soles of their feet, denying them sleep and prayers, disrespecting their religion and grace, forcing them to shave their beard, denying them visitation by their families, solicitors, doctors and religious leaders, forcing them to do difficult exercises, struck their genitals, were threatened that their children will be killed, their wives will be tortured and a bottled water will be hand on his genital to castrate them. The Committee members said in their statement that although article 18 Sub Article 1 of the Country's Constitution states " Everyone shall have the right not to be subjected to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment", they have been tortured throughout the seasons and were forced to 'admit, speak and sign'.

They said that had spoken out to the Court about the tortures they had gone through in prisons but it had continued as they returned to their cellsfrom court. They said, when they asked for the respect of the Constitutionand rights, the tortures responded saying "tear and throw the Constitution, we came here paying sacrifices". They said although it is imperative that their court proceedings have been open, they were closed.The members of the Committee have said that the unity and respect among Muslims and between Christians and Muslims should be protected. They vowed to continue their peaceful struggle and pay all the sacrifices.

They also said that they are ready for the next stage of the peacefulstruggle. The Committee also called on the government to stop the inhuman acts committed in central prisons and release prisoners' ofconscience.

December 25, 2013: Captain Fikre Selassie Wogderess , general secretary(later prime minister) of the former ruling military council, better known as the Duerg has wrote a book entitled "Igna-ena Abyoitu" meaning: "Us (we) and The February Revolution of 1974" in Amharic version. The authorwrote his such version of story of the Duerg's history from the day it was formed in June 28, 1974 until its fall on the 28th May, 1991. The Ethiopian political scene since the Duerg overthrew the Emperor, has brought the country nothing but miseries, and provided a path for repression and violation of human rights with an ethnic blinded zealot. Furthermore, due to number of human rights violations including, detentions, extra-judicial killings, summary executions, mal-administration and irrelevant policies, the Duerg lost in all the battle fields. The book entitled “Igna-ena-Abyotu”published by the US based ‘Tsehay Publishers’.

December 28, 2013: Ethiopia Starts Evacuating It’s Citizens From SouthSudan’

ERTA (Addis Ababa): Ethiopia has started evacuating its citizens from South Sudan, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs (MoFA) has announced. According to Ambassador Dina Mufti, MoFA Spokesperson, a taskforce comprising members drawn from MoFA, National Information and SecurityService, Administration for the Refugee and Returnees Affairs, Federal Police and Disaster Prevention has been set up for the purpose.

Coordinated efforts are underway to receive the returnees. 650 Ethiopianshave already been brought back home from Nasir town of the Upper Nile state via the Gambella region of Ethiopia. The federal government and theGambella state are providing the necessary support for the returnees. 300Ethiopians have been evacuated from Bor to Juba on helicopter. Similarly,another 800 Ethiopians have been moved from Benitu to Heglig on helicopter.

December 29, 2013: His Holiness Abune Mathias briefly house-arrested’ It was widely rumoured in town that Abune Mathias, the pro-regime patriarch has been briefly placed under house arrest and was released after being questioned for nearly 72 hours by Ato Tsegay Berhe, NationalSecurity Adviser to the Prime Minister, and other senior security officials,according to reliable sources in Addis Ababa. Concerned leaders of the TPLF are apparently upset with previously given statements that have been uttered by Abune over the past 3 weeks that were politically sensitive of the regime. In one particular meeting, Abune Mathias was heard saying that much of the problems facing the church are caused bythe ruling-EPRDF party. The Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahdo Church’s administration in Addis Ababa is currently paralysed by a growing leadership crisis. Many church leaders are in an open refusal to take orders from the Holy Synod.

December 30, 2013: Atsedu Tsegaye carries Ethiopia's torch at DubaiMarathon'

Gulf News; Dubai: The man tipped by many as one of the brightest prospects in African distance running will be aiming to become the third consecutive debut winner from Ethiopia when the Standard Chartered Dubai Marathon gets under way on January 24, 2014. Atsedu Tsegay is a 22-year-old marathon debutant looking to follow in the footsteps of 2012 winner Ayele Abshero (2:04:23) and 2013 champion Lelisa Desisa (2:04:45), who both produced stunning times to win on their first marathon appearances on the international stage. Both Abshero and Desisa arrived in Dubai as relative unknowns but, after posting world-classtimes in the world's richest running event, they returned to Ethiopia with their names firmly established in marathon history.

There are indications that Tsegay might indeed be the next great talent toemerge from Ethiopia despite a year away from the running scene recovering from an ankle injury. In mid-December, he won the New Delhi Half Marathon, which featured an elite field. Tsegay clocked 59m:12s to break the course record by three seconds and show that he has fully recovered from an ankle injury, which kept him out of competition for almost 12 months. His half-marathon personal best also suggests high potential, having run 58m:47s in Prague in 2012, not only a course recordbut also helping him supplant the legendary three-time Dubai winner HaileGebrselassie as the Ethiopian record holder. "We have certainly witnessedsome stunning marathon debuts here in Dubai and there is every reason to suggest we may see another first-timer win in 2014," said event director Peter Connerton.

December 31, 2013: Electric Corporation causes a loss of over 500 millionbirr'

Local News: Due to corruption within the Ethiopian Electric Power Corporation (EEPCo), now divided into two institutions, Ethiopia has lostover half a million birr. The ex-CEO of the Corporation, Miheret Debebe,who opposed this corrupt practice, has finally been removed from the post. Veteran combatant of the TPLF, current Deputy Prime Minister of Ethiopia and Board Chairman of the Corporation, Dr. Debretsion Gebremichael, speaking regarding the removal of Miheret said "as muchas he is appreciated, he knows that he had deficiencies himself. He was not surprised when he was removed from office too”. Although Debretsionalleged incapacity as the main reason for the removal of the CEO, a reportthat has been presented to Prime Minister Hailemaraim Dessalgn by the Ethiopian Federal Ethics and Anti-corruption Commission (FEAC) states that Meheret had been opposing the corrupt practice that had cost the Country to lose over 500 million birr.

The Anti-Corruption Commission had submitted a report to the late PrimeMinister Meles Zenawi that in 2007/08 there was lack of transparency andirresponsible purchase of transformers. The corrupt practices began to unravel when the Corporation announced that an Indian company called Goodluck Steel Tubs Limited won the bids when Transformers with Conservator Units were purchased instead of Hermetically Sealed Transformers. Several other bids and corrupt deals have been conducted between the Indian company and several top management of the Corporation, most of which have been investigated by the Anti CorruptionCommission and were submitted to the Prime Minister although measureshave not been taken. Top officials of the TPLF that have been facilitating the corruption at the backdoors and affecting Meheret’s work have not been detained or punished when many other officials have been. It is to be recalled that an Indian Company had recently signed an agreement to lead the Electric Corporation Management.

December 31 2013: South Sudan, rebels due in Ethiopia for Peace Talkes'AFP News, ADDIS ABABA - South Sudan's president and rebel leader RiekMachar are flying for face-to-face peace talks in Ethiopia, a foreign ministry spokesman said Tuesday, to try and end two weeks of fighting feared to have left thousands dead. "Both President Salva Kiir and Dr RiekMachar are coming to Addis Ababa for talks, they are coming now and should meet today," Ethiopian foreign ministry spokesman Dina Mufti toldAFP. The world's youngest nation plunged into chaos on December 15 when Kiir accused his former deputy Machar of mounting a coup. Machar in turn has accused the president of using a clash between army units as a pretext to carry out a violent purge. Regional leaders at the Inter- Governmental Authority on Development (IGAD), an East African grouping, have demanded Machar agree to a ceasefire and hold face-to- face talks with Kiir by Tuesday.

Ugandan President Yoweri Museveni has warned that Machar must complywith the ceasefire deal by Tuesday or face action by regional nations. He said if Machar does not respond "we shall have to go for him," without clarifying if his threat involved military action. Thousands of people are feared to have been killed in over two weeks of fighting, pitching army units loyal to President Salva Kiir against a loose alliance of ethnic militia forces and mutinous army commanders nominally headed by ex-vice president Riek Machar. Ethiopia's announcement of peace talks between the rivals came as rebel spokesman Moses Ruai claimed to have recaptured the key town of Bor after a pre-dawn assault on government forces. "Bor is under our control... we are now in Bor town now," Ruai toldAFP. However, army spokesman Philip Aguer said that fighting was still ongoing, and rejected the claim. "There is still fighting in Bor, the fightingis not yet finalised," he said. There have also been grim reports of massacres, rapes and killings, prompting the African Union to threaten "targeted sanctions" over the conflict.

December 31, 2013: ETHIOPIA - Defection of journalists in the last fouryears'

Tens of thousands of protesters have voiced their opposition to the appointment of Meles Zenawi for Africa's leading negotiator at the UN Copenhagen Climate Change Conference. According to activists of the G77bloc and world environmentalists, Africa has lost the best chance in Copenhagen because of Meles Zenawi's sell out. "He is simply the wrong messenger who looks at his personal interest first." Others say, "As a human rights violator and environmental criminal, MelesZenawi lacks the moral authority to represent Africa." The defected journalists also share the views of the world environmental activists. Last year Shewangizaw Kassahun, special journalist at the Prime Minister's office, national palace and parliament, went to the US with Meles to attend the annual global initiative of the Clinton Foundation and UN general assembly and didn't return back.

Government journalists, who don't comply with the ruling party's membership quest would face every punitive measure ranging from harassment to imprisonment," says exiled government Journalist Eyader Addis. Eyader Addis was one of journalists who became victim of the Ethiopian regime after 2005 disputed election. He was fined and fired fromhis job at the national service of Radio Ethiopia for refusing the authoritiesurge to misinform the public about the then rigged vote. He was also imprisoned without court warrant dated April 2008.

Dereje Tedla, another government Journalist who is forced to flee from hiscountry after the massive crackdown on press and sought political asylumin Japan, support's Eyader's view. "Officials of the Ethiopian Press Agency's insist journalists to misinform the peoples especially during elections period." He said. Both witness that government journalists are severely restricted by the "unwritten" government censorship. "The recentattacks, harassments and threats against private and government journalists is aimed at warning them not to critically report on the upcoming elections." He added. Dereje is forced to flee his country to escape threats of death, imprisonment, harassment. At least 106 free press journalists and 50 government journalists are known to have been exiled in the last 4 years for fear of persecutions.
January 4, 2014: At least 4 died after Bodi and Konso ethnic-groups clash'Local News: The clash started in Bodina, Southern Ethiopia, last week.
The cause is said to be the re-settlement of Konso people, who have run out of land, in the lands of Bodina people. Four have died from both sideswhile three people from the Konos were wounded and 72 houses were burnt. The two ethnic groups have been fighting for a long time now.
Residents of the area say that the earlier resettlement of Konso in Bode by the government is cited as the main cause of the conflict. The Federal Police force has now occupied the area. Meanwhile, power outage in Jinka,Southern Ethiopia, has put the people in a difficult situation. The residentsstate that power comes once in four days affecting them economically.

January 23, 2014: INVESTMENT - Gov't uneasy about inactive foreigninvestors'

ESAT News: The Ethiopian government has decided to revoke the investment license of at least 2500 foreign direct investors who have notstarted investment. The majorities of the 65, 000 investors who have been given the license in the past 15 years have not been operational.

According to information obtained from the Ethiopian Investment Agency(EIA), investors from Turkey, India and China have been showing an interest to invest in farming, manufacturing and the service sectors. However, the government has been concerned at the fact that investors from Europe and the U.S. who disappear after being given the license. In the past three years alone, 2164 projects with a 51 billion birr capital havebeen given license although only 637 projects have entered the productionphase. The investment law stipulates that it can revoke a license unless an investor reports to the Agency every six month and renews the license yearly. The government had waited for around 10 years giving a chance to the investors to go operational.

January 24,2014: Ethiopian Muslims resumed protest on their religious rights in Addis Ababa and other towns' Local News: The Friday post - prayer peaceful protests of Ethiopian Muslims that had stopped for a whilehave resumed. In the Sedeka and Du'a programs on Friday, thousands of Muslims found in different parts of the Country had remembered the Arbitration Committee leaders that are currently in prison. Raising their hands, they pleaded God. Hundreds of thousands of people had also prayed in the Addis Abeba Anwar Mosque. The government had been declaring that it had put the protests under control. It has also been producing and transmitting documentaries on the State Television in whatlooked like an attempt of linking the religious struggle with terror. The Friday protest sounded like a response to the regime's documentaries andthe request of the imprisoned leaders that the protests be continued. In a related report, journalist Yusuf Getachew, who has been arrested in relation to the protests, is being tortured in Kilinto prison. Yusuf had beendenied prayer and has been shackled and beaten. The cause for the torture is said to be a fight that broke out in Zone 2 of the prison and thathe asked 'why' all this was happening. He was given a last warning and has been accused as the cause of the fighting in the Zone. He has been banned from praying Isha, Megrib or Sulah Solat prayers in alone or in a group.

The 2014 Omnibus Appropriations Bill contains provisions thatensure that US development funds are not used to support forced evictions in Ethiopia. The bill prevents US assistance from being used to support activities that directly or indirectly involve forced displacement in the Lower Omo and Gambella regions. It further requires US assistance inthese areas be used to support local community initiatives aimed at improving livelihoods and be subject to prior consultation with affected populations. The bill goes further and even instructs the directors of international financial institutions to oppose financing for any activities that directly or indirectly involve forced evictions in Ethiopia.

January, 28, 2014: New Chinese-built Headquarters of the African UnionCommission (AUC) inaugurated in the Ethiopian capital, Addis Ababa.

Facts & Stats - African Union Commission

The African Union's new Chinese built headquarters opens in addis Ababa,Ethiopia.

The AU Commission, the secretariat to the political structures, is chairedby Mrs. Nkosazana Dlamini-Zuma of South Africa.

On 15 July 2012, Mrs. Dlamini-Zuma won a tightly contested vote to become the first female head of the African Union Commission, replacingMr. Jean Ping of Gabon.

The main administrative capital of the African Union is in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, where the African Union Commission is headquartered. A new headquarters complex, the AU Conference Center and Office Complex (AUCC), was inaugurated on 28 January 2012, during the 18th AU summit. The complex was built by China State Construction Engineering Corporation as a gift from the Chinese government, and accommodates, amongst other facilities, a 2,500-seat plenary hall and a 20-story office tower. The tower is 99.9 meters high to signify the date 9 September 1999, when the Organization of African Unity (OAU) voted to become theAfrican Union (AU).

Other AU structures are hosted by different member states: the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights is based in Banjul, the Gambia; and the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD) andAPRM Secretariats and the Pan-African Parliament are in Midrand, SouthAfrica.

The AU covers the entire continent except for the kingdom of Morocco andseveral territories held by Spain, France, Portugal and the United Kingdom. Morocco is not a member because it's government opposes the membership of Western Sahara as the Sahrawi Arab Democratic Republic to the former OAU.

However, the kingdom of Morocco has a special status within the AU and benefits from the services available to all AU member states from the institutions of the AU, such as the African Development Bank. Moroccan delegates also participate at important AU functions, and negotiations continue to try to resolve the conflict with the Polisario Front in Tindouf inAlgeria and the parts of Western Sahara. January 28, 2014: CUSO International - Out of the 3,700 Ethiopian Doctors, 3000 Have Fled The Country' CI - Last year the Canadian health-care system managed to save $400 million — by poaching trained doctorsfrom the poorest and most vulnerable communities in the world. A recentstudy by the University of Ottawa indicates that even as Canadian aid programs help Africa to build better health-care systems, our health-care system is taking away their doctors. According to Canada-based CUSO International, between 1990 and 2006, Ethiopia trained 3,700 doctors.

Only 700 of them stayed to work there. Africa's health-care system isn'tthe only sector hemorrhaging skilled workers — there are more African-born engineers and scientists living in Canada and the U.S. than in all ofAfrica.

January 29, 2014: Ethiopia - City Traffic police motorcyclists collided eachother, and killed a woman in Abuare locality, Addis Ababa' January 29, 2014: Sudan Tribune News: Ethiopia "kidnaps" chief rebel negotiators in Kenya'

Side note: An Ethiopian rebel group on Tuesday alleged that the Ethiopianintelligence services have abducted two senior rebel officials from the Kenyan capital, Nairobi. The Ogaden National Liberation Front (ONLF) saidin a statement on Tuesday that their chief negotiators , Sulub Abdi Ahmedand Ali Hussein (who is also known as Ali Dheere), were kidnapped late onMonday. The two rebel leaders had been staying in Nairobi to attend a third-round peace talks with Ethiopian government as negotiators, according to the ONLF. The allegations could not be verified independentlyand Ethiopian officials were not available for comment on Tuesday.

The separatist group said the actions of the Ethiopian government's agents will have a huge affect on the ongoing Kenyan-mediated peace efforts to bring about a lasting solution to conflict in Ethiopia's Ogaden Region. "This heinous act constitutes a breach of confidence in dealing with Ethiopia and will gravely hamper any further talks with Ethiopia", the ONLF said. "This cowardly act, will further invigorate the quest of the Somalis in Ogaden for freedom", the statement adds. The group called up on the Kenyan government to urgently apply diplomatic pressure on AddisAbaba so that the abducted ONLF officials are swiftly freed. “We call upon the Kenyan government, which took the responsibility to be a neutral venue, and as a facilitator to investigate fully this travesty and request the Ethiopian government to return the abductees”, the statement said. Ethiopia launched military offences against the ONLF after the group took responsibility for an attack on a Chinese-run oil exploration field in April 2007 that killed 65 Ethiopians and nine Chinese workers.

The Ogaden rebel group has since been designated as a terrorist entity byEthiopia, which is a key regional ally of the US in its so-called global “war on terror”.

Ogaden, which covers majority of Ethiopia’s eastern Somali Region has been a conflict zone between ONLF and government forces. Ethiopia saysthe group has been defeated and it no longer is a threat in the region, which borders neighbouring Somalia where Ethiopian troops are fighting Al-Qaida allied Al-Shabaab. Since Ethiopia staged offences in the Ogadenregion, international rights groups have accused Addis Ababa’s Special forces of committing abuses in the region, with some right groups referring to the situation in Ogadan as the “Darfur of Ethiopia”. Ethiopia has repeatedly dismissed the allegations.(Text ends)

February 10, 2014: ETHIOPIA News: PMHD of gave reporters access' Side note: Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn of Ethiopia gave reporters access and conducted a press conference. The statements of Hailemariam are fraught with inconsistencies and telling that there is a serious leadership vacuum and lack of direction in Ethiopia. The statements lack principle, direction and strategy. The messages are inconsistent and contradictory to previous statements. On an interview with Africa Confidential January edition, when asked what's your Eritreapolicy? PM Hailemariam Desalegn said, "Our Eritrea policy is very clear.

These two peoples are very friendly; the normalizing of relations, also withthe governments, should come as soon as possible. We have accepted unconditionally the rulings [on the border] and so this has to implementedbut with a discussion because the implementation process needs something on the ground since it is a colonial rather than a people's boundary." Emphasis added.

For a while, Ethiopians have been expressing anger and concern about theborder issue between Ethiopia and Sudan claiming that the minority TPLF regime has unlawfully ceded huge chunks of Ethiopian territories to Sudan. The tenet of their argument is that the signatures of Meles Zenawiand Hailemariam Desaleng are unlawful, null and void based on Article 55(12) of Ethiopian constitution which demands accountability and ratification by parliament. On a recent article, “Save Ethiopia From Chopping Block”, Dr.Alemayehu G. Mariam wrote, “It is important to understand and underscore the fact that the “agreement” Meles and Bashir “signed”, by Meles’ own description and admission, has nothing to do with the so-called Gwen line of 1902 (“Anglo-Ethiopian Treaty of 1902”setting the “frontier between the Sudan and Ethiopia”). It also has nothingto do with any other agreements drafted or concluded by the imperial government prior to 1974, or the Derg regime between 1975 and 1991 forborder demarcation or settlement. Meles’ “agreement”, by his own admission, deals exclusively with border matters and related issues beginning in 1996, when presumably the occupation of Sudanese land by Ethiopians took place under Meles’ personal watch.” (Text ends)

February 11, 2014: Transportation problem continues to adversely affect residents of Capital’ ESAT News - Following the absence of oil in the market, many transport vehicles owned by the government, private and public bodies are finding it difficult to function. The transportation tariff of taxis and buses has also increased. ESAT’s reporter in Addis Ababa said hewas compelled to pay 0.25 cent more than the usual fare when travelling around Addis Abeba. ESAT’s reporter, who travelled to different petrol stations in Addis Abeba, said that there was no petrol in the containers of most petrol stations which then led to the increase of the retailing price of oil. The petrol stations were ordered not to sell any type of oil other than vehicles’; this has led to overcrowding outside the stations. Police officers were observed intervening and managing the sale and the crowd.

Pedestrians have also been forced to take the brunt of traffic jam inconveniencies also resulted due to the unmanaged road constructions inmost parts of the Capital. The transportation problem is also affecting civilservants forcing them to arrive for work after 10 am, ESAT’s reporter added. The government, though unconvincingly to many oil companies, said the cause of the oil shortage was due to the attempt by some oil companies to sell oil aiming to gain extra profit and the transfer of tank trucks by Oil Libya to another company.

February 11, 2014: Ethiopia calls for foreign troops exit from SouthSudan’

News Analysis, Addis Ababa - Ethiopia on Monday called for the withdrawal of all foreign forces, notably Ugandans, from South Sudan,warning of a threat of regional conflict.

"Because of this intervention, the conflict might end up as a regional conflict because there are other interests also from other sides," Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn told reporters. South Sudan has been embroiled in deadly fighting since mid-December when clashes between forces loyal to President Salva Kiir and former vice president Riek Machar erupted in the young nation. Kiir asked Ugandan forces to protect key infrastructure in Juba, including the airport and the presidential palace,but the presence of Ugandan troops has been fiercely condemned by Machar and his allies.

The warring parties signed a shaky ceasefire on January 23 that included a call for the incremental exit of all foreign forces, a major sticking point in the peace talks that kicked off in the Ethiopian capital early last month.Hailemariam called for the withdrawal of alien forces in order to end the conflict that has killed thousands and displaced 900,000 people.

"I hope for the cessation of hostilities..., Ugandan forces and all other external forces must withdraw from that area phase by phase," he said. Despite the agreement signed last month, sporadic fighting has continuedin South Sudan, where aid agencies have warned of a deepening humanitarian crisis. A new round of peace talks was set to begin Monday between government and opposition parties but was delayed until Tuesday for logistical reasons, mediators said.

Rebels threatened to block the talks, demanding the withdrawal of Ugandan troops along with the release of four political detainees arrestedafter fighting erupted on December 15. The latest round of talks, mediated by regional bloc IGAD, is aimed at addressing the roots of the crisis in order to forge long-term political solutions. Oil-rich but deeply impoverished South Sudan gained independence from Sudan in July 2011following decades of civil war. (Text ends)

February 16, 2014: EFF boss talks on national soccer coach replacement’Ethiopian Football Federation (EFF) President Junedin Basha says 12 coaches have sent applications for the vacant national team coach post from Europe and Africa. However Basha intimated that he wanted a transparent process that would go a long way in ensuring the federation hired the right candidate that would help the Walia Ibex as they aspire tomake gains from the recent success.

"There is so much interest in the vacant job as we have received loads of applications from Europe and even top African coaches. I want a very transparent process and right now we are concentrating on putting up criteria that will be used when applying the job and this will be announcedin a week's time to everyone so that when a coach is applying he should know what we expect from him according to our own criteria."

"As soon as we get the applications then we will be able to make the correct informed choice and draw up a contract that will be suitable to thecoach vis a vis our own interest as a federation since we want the best man to take over and help the team rise to unchartered waters," Basha told supersport.com. EFF fired coach Sewnet Bishaw a fortnight ago after he failed to go past the first round in the Chan hosted by South Africa.Sewnet had a distinguished career having qualified Walia to the 2013 Afcon,2014 Chan and World Cup 2014 play off where they lost to African champions Nigeria.

Ethiopia's application was denied in 2010 based on Ethiopia's enactment of the Charities and Society Proclamation (CSO), a law that aggressively targets civil society. According to the principles of EITI, an active, independent and robust civilsociety is essential for the protection of society from the excesses and harmful practices sometimes associated with unethical extractions of oil, gas and minerals; therefore, the lack of such was enough to reject Ethiopia.

February 17, 2013: NILE POLITICS: Things are not going well in Cairo,Egypt'

PRESS: Egyptians are suffering through rare winter power outages – suggesting that things will get worse when the air conditioning season comes next summer. Last summer frequent electricity cuts were part of the motivation for the riots that ousted the Mohammed Morsi government.

A bus full of South Korean tourists, traveling from Cairo to Israel, was blown up over the weekend killing at least four. This is not going to do much for the tourism industry that was the mainstay of Egypt's economy before the Arab Spring. The natural gas pipeline crossing the Sinai was also blown up by militant groups once again. Ethiopia's Grand RenaissanceDam, which will partially block the Nile and likely do considerable damage to Egypt's agriculture, is back in the news. Ethiopia says that should Egypt take the issue to the UN Security Council, it will surely lose. Egypt says alloptions are open which presumably includes using force to stop the GERD project.
February 18, 2014: NILE POLITICS: Sudan FM criticises Egypt over Ethiopian dam dispute'
KARTHOUM PRESS–Sudanese foreign minister AliKarti has criticised Egypt for its handling of a dispute involving the construction of a massive dam project in Ethiopia, which it has vehemently opposed over concerns it could disrupt water flows from theNile river. Karti said Egypt was further inflaming the situation by makingcritical comments in the media, adding that Sudan would continue its efforts to bridge the gap between the two countries. "The position of Sudan is clear and we have already called on Egyptian officials to take advantage of the central role that Sudan could play regarding the crisis, but the arrogance of the previous government did not allow them to accept this idea," he said. "If there is a room for a role that Sudan can play then the atmosphere must be clear away from the tensions and thecries over the media that do more harm than good," he added.

ETHIOPIA: Co-pilot hijacks Ethiopian plane to Geneva, exits cockpit byrope'

Feil! Hyperkoblingsreferansen er ugyldig.

The airliner's second-in-command, named by Ethiopia as Hailemedhin Abera Tegegn, 31, took control of the plane when the pilot left the cockpit to use the toilet. He then sent a coded signal announcing he had hijacked his own aircraft. With the airliner on the tarmac, an unarmed Hailemedhin made his exit via a cockpit window, without harming passengers or crew, police spokesman Pierre Grangean told a news conference. "Just after landing, the co-pilot came out of the cockpit and ran to the police and said, 'I'm the hijacker.' He said he is not safe in his own country and wants asylum," Grangean said. The airliner could later be seen with a knotted yellow rope dangling from an open cockpit window. The oppositionand rights campaigners in Ethiopia accuse the government of stifling dissent and torturing political detainees. But it is rare for state officials and employees - Ethiopian Airlines is run by the state - to seek asylum.
The last senior official to do so fled to the United States in 2009. Ethiopia said Hailemedhin had worked for Ethiopian Airlines for the pastfive years and had no criminal record. "So far it was known that he was medically sane, until otherwise he is proven through the investigation which is going on right now," Redwan Hussein, spokesman for the Ethiopian government, told a news conference. Redwan said Ethiopia may ask for his extradition. Ethiopian Airlines pilots had visas to travel freely toEurope, he said, adding that it made no sense to hijack one's own plane given "that the anti-hijacking law in any country is severe" and can lead toup to 20 years in prison. Redwan said among the 193 passengers on board the Boeing aircraft were 139 Italians, 11 American and four French nationals.

CODE "HIJACK": Flight ET702 departed the Ethiopian capital Addis Ababa on Sunday evening and was bound for Rome. The plane was hijacked at about 0330 GMT while over northern Italy, Grangean said. It landed at Geneva at 6:02 a.m. (0502 GMT). He said the co-pilot, an Ethiopian born in 1983, locked the flight deck door when the pilot went to the toilet. He then asked to refuel at Geneva, landed the plane, climbed down on an emergency exit rope from a cockpit window, and gave himself up. Robert Deillon, CEO of Geneva airport, said air traffic controllers learnt the plane had been hijacked when the co-pilot keyed a distress code into the aircraft's transponder, "There is ... a code for hijack. So this co-pilot put in the code for 'I just hijacked the aircraft'," he said. As the plane was over Italy at the time, two Italian Eurofighters were scrambled to accompany it, he said.

The brief drama in Geneva on Monday morning caused the cancellation of some short-haul flights and some incoming flights were diverted to other airports. Hundreds of passengers booked on disrupted flights sought to change their tickets. In an apparent recording of a radio communication between the Ethiopian plane and air traffic control posted on social media site Twitter, a demand for asylum was made. "We need asylum or assurance we will not be transferred to the Ethiopian government," the voice in the recording, apparently the co-pilot, said. Reuters could not independently verify the authenticity of the recording. Ethiopian nationals and the country's flag carrier have been involved in several hijackings in the past. At least 50 people were killed when a hijacked Ethiopian Airlines passenger jet crashed in the Indian Ocean in 1996. COMMENTARY: In the next couple of decades, the most tradeable item is going to be electricity. Those countries that have a deficit will have to buy from those who have a surplus. Therefore, I find it unfair to often read of the complaints that Ethiopia is wrong to build the Renaissance dams. This is acountry with a huge population. In order to sustain an acceptable economic growth rate, Ethiopia must have enough power. The protestors should instead think positive. For example, Egypt can also buy power from Ethiopia and make savings. It is also more efficient to cooperate than complain about such a progressive project. Theother issue is that such projects only come once a lifetime. The Americansdid not think twice before they built the Hoover Dam. Our interests must also count for something if Africa is to develop.

Meeting Fekrou Kidane in Paris

By Arafaynie Fantahun Monday, March 24th, 2014

During a seven-day trip to Paris, I came across someone I could recognizewhile dinning at an Ethiopian restaurant one night. Shyly, I asked him if he was Fekrou Kidane. He admitted that he was. When I asked him whether he would give me an interview for this article, he graciously invited me to his apartment on the following day.

The 78-year-old Ethiopian who had a distinguished career in the local sport and Olympic world has been living in Paris since 1976, although frequently travelling to other parts of the world. He lived in Lausanne Switzerland for 12 years where he was serving as a senior official of the International Olympic Committee (IOC). He is now advising the presidentof the Confederation of African Football (CAF), working from home doing email and Skype video conference. Since quitting IOC ten years ago, Fekrou has written Ye Piassa Ledge, a memoir about childhood and adolescence in Addis Ababa.

The bespectacled Fekrou lives alone in his Parisian apartment crammed with books, magazines and newspapers. During my brief hours with him, Isaw a ton of notes, drafts, pages of ideas, photos, old newspapers, press passes for the L'Equipe, Deutsche welle, and Football France in his shelves, the media that he worked for at some point in his life, hundreds of classical jazz CDs and a collection of the songs the 1950s and the 1960s and also Ethiopian folkloric songs. I also saw biographies of Nelson Mandela, and Ethiopian related books, – from John H. Spencer's Ethiopia At Bay to Dinaw Mengestu novel "The Beautiful Things That Heaven Bears". On his tables were Le Canard enchaîné, a satirical French newspaper.

Fekrou's affinity with the world of sport was born at a time when his father, a member of Saint George club used to transport designated players from school to the playing field. That gave him familiarity to the then nascent local football game and the players who were reputed for playing hard. He over the years developed a deep knowledge of the sportand excellent contacts, all of which he brought when he started covering sports events for the local newspapers and Voice of Ethiopia as the first Ethiopian sport journalist in the early 1950s.

On 1957, listeners of Ethiopian radio service witnessed the unique experience of hearing football commentary from the comfort of their own homes and the honor of being the first commentator of a game fell to Fekrou. It was a match held at Addis Ababa stadium between Ethiopia andSudan.

Employed by the Ministry of Information, Fekrou also wrote articles for thevarious outlets of the ministry. This became his niche and he did a lot of freelancing. He covered general sport for international media like BBC, Voice of America, Voice of Germany, Radio France International, France Football Weekly, amongst others. Later, the opportunity presented itself tobecome the first secretary general of the Ethiopian Cycling Federation, Tennis Federation, National Olympic Committee, and public relations officer of the football federation. Fekrou represented someone with a long history of an independent journalist prior to becoming part of sport federations. He went on to establish the Ethiopian Sports Journalists Association in 1968 in international level and became his first president.

He also served as Secretary General of the African Sports Journalists Union (1970-1974), member of FIFA Press Committee, director of the executive office of the president of The International Olympic Committee(IOC) and the Department of International Cooperation.

He subsequently developed and established a monthly African sports magazine “Jeux d’Afrique” a publication dedicated to African sport for which he served as editor-in-chief from 1977-1982. The idea for the magazine came as Fekrou saw a need to put African sports on the map with this publication because he noticed that there was a visible lack of acomprehensive sports publication in the African media landscape.
Partnering with the Senegalese national, the magazine saw the light of theday with the assistance of L’Equipe, the famous daily sport French newspaper with highest circulation in France. Unfortunately, the magazinewas interrupted due to disagreement with the partner. Fikrou again established and directed another magazine called Continental Sports magazine and digest newsletter in French and English for worldwide circulation, which lasted from 1982-1989. Fekrou also served as a United Nations staff member in the 1960’s.

Fekrou traveled incessantly, visiting around 189 countries. His schedule, like those of many I.O.C. members, was filled with ceremonies, dinners and traversing the globe. The experience gave him a wider perspective and outlook in life. Among world leaders that he mingled with, Mandela stood out most. Fekrou came to know and befriended the human rights icon. “After Mandela left prison, it was reported that Mandela was tired and he needed a vacation. I was then working for IOC. Juan Antonio Samaranch, president of the IOL, proposed inviting him to Swiss. Mandelaaccepted the invitation and I happened to be his host. I’ve had the occasion to chat with him many hours for five days at his hotel. Mandela has a habit of taking a morning stroll every day. He would get up early in the morning and would walk for two hours. The first day I waited for him wearing a neck tie. I walked along with him for two hours, “he recalled.

Talking about his Parisian life, Fekrou says that it could get lonely for himthere and he feels he is a little disconnected from his roots. “The thing is the Ethiopian immigrants in Paris are not numerous. I have only two closefriends that I see often. In America it could have been different. In cities like DC, you would have many compatriots that you would share meals with, swap jokes. It would be easy to immerse yourself in the ways of theold country there."

Yet he loves Paris. "Paris is a wonderful place to live and work. I don't know any other city that is so appealing. Every time I go to other places, and come back, I feel that I've come to new a city. They've got the finest museums and it would take you like two months to visit them all. Plenty ofthings to see and there are many ordinary buildings which are beautiful pieces of architecture. Being able to walk into a church or chateau that is over 500 or 1000 years old is amazing. Paris has lots of parks, public spaces," he says.

"They have an amazing public transport system. The metro, trains and thebuses are great. You can take a metro anywhere in the city effortlessly," Fekrou says.

What is his experience for an Ethiopian living in Paris? "There are the ups and the downs when you are living as an immigrant anywhere. When I was in Ethiopia, I studied at the French school. The French language and culture was no stranger to me," he says. "People in general are friendly. Ihave developed relationships with people around me. I have my favorite baker, butcher, grocer, market and restaurants. Of course, it was much easier decades ago when France hasn't had many immigrants. Now thingsare getting difficult as the country has welcomed so many immigrants from Africa, Asia. This has spoiled the locals,"he says. "I understand why.There are many crimes and theft associated with the arrivals of the new community. I think much of the bitterness is associated with that. "

"When choosing places either for food market, I go to places where peoplearen't mean to me. Some of them know you and respect you. If the reception is chilly, you go to other places," he says.

What is his typical day like? "I get up at 5 a.m early in the morning. I listen to the first bulletin of African news on Radio France international at 5.30. At around 6.00 I sit at my computer and read Ethiopian related news. At 9, 00, I go out for a coffee and look at the French papers. I return home and work. I might also cook lunch. If I have dinner invitation,I will have light dinner. Usually I buy food from Ethiopian restaurant. "

Fekrou recalled his early refugee days in Paris where he was struggling tomeet financial obligations to his son. "When I made it to Paris from Washington D.C in 1970's, I had my twelve year-old-son and 200 dollars.Staying at hotel I looked for employment and boarding school for my child," he recalls.

Today his son Stephen (or Didi after the famous Brazilian footballer) is doing good and lives with his wife and two children in Belgium. Stephen'sson Gil is presently at Liege University. Stephan comes every month to visit his father. I met him on his last trip and shared sandwiches with his father and son. None of the difficulties in his life prevented Fekrou fromradiating intense satisfaction at jobs. Keeping them in tune will be a challenge he has been preparing for most of his life. (text ends)

The Ethiopian Football Federation (EFF) has shortlisted five coaches from the list of 27 applicants that applied for the national team coaching position. The biggest surprise was the exclusion of Tom Saintfiet, who formerly coached Walia, and Serbian Petrovic, who had earlier been ratedas favourites. Reports have now placed former Ghana coach Goran “Plavi”Stevavonic as favourite to replace Sewnet Bishaw with the announcementset for Saturday in Addis Ababa. Among the coaches shortlisted are Serbian Stevanovic, Lars Olof Mattson (Sweden), Diego Garzito (Italy), Mariano Bareto (Holland) and Zoran Filipovic (Portugal).

March 31, 2014: ETHIOPIA NEWS: Addis Ababa City Administration bans party's scheduled demo'

Addis Ababa (Ethiopia) - The Addis Ababa City Administration announced on Monday banning the scheduled demonstration by Unity for Democracy and Justice(UDJ) , which was due to be held this Sunday in Addis Ababa. The Unity for Democracy and Justice (UDJ), which called the demonstration, on its part, said that it willhold the scheduled demonstration, as it was originally scheduled and planned. The city administration in its written letter to the party indicatedthat the party-UDJ- could not hold the demonstration in the area where there are schools and many government offices around. "The party does not accept the ban by the city administration. It is against the law," said UDJ. The demonstration aims to express concern by the deteriorating situation of basic public services in Addis Ababa, home to around five million people, according to UDJ. Residents of the city are expressing lackof regular water and electricity supply. It has to be recalled that UDJ called the demonstration to be held in front of the Prime Minister Office.

ESAT News - Unidentified number of students sustained major and minorinjuries after students of Hawasa Tabor High School, South Ethiopia, clashed over the ‘usage of language.’ Federal police officers have been beating students that were coming out of the school and other students were also throwing stones from inside the campus, eyewitnesses said. Police also fired guns. The school has since been closed. An eyewitness preferring to remain anonymous said the officials of the area are behind the clash. Especially, some sources state, name changes brought in aiming to move Hawasa into the Federal government have caused the clash added with the refusal of local officials to respond to the questions ofthe students. Meanwhile, the problems of ‘identity’ have been intensifying since the past five years thus the students’ clash should not simply be treated as an issue of language but something that is deeper than that.

Some observers link the recent identity and ethnic related problems in Ethiopia to the upcoming election while others warn that the ethnic politicsin Ethiopia is reaching a terrifying level. It is to be recalled that serious wrong mannerisms were witnessed during the recent 4th All Ethiopia games in Bahir Dar city, clashes between Borena and Gudji people broke out and riots broke out in Shakiso, Southern Ethiopia in the past month alone.

This meeting was held by overcoming severe obstacles imposed by the ruling party/EPRDF Cadres and its government officials. Furthermore, EPRDF cadres have alsotried to forcefully prevent people from different Districts coming to Hawassa and participate in the meeting- they have detained all suspectedmeeting participants; they have impounded transport vehicles which the participants were using to come to the meeting, up until the meeting was over. They also have forced civil servants and university students by calling unplanned spontaneous compulsory meetings and examinations onthe day and time of Medrek’s public meeting.

April 8, 2014: Ethiopia is ranked as Sub-Saharan Africa's strongestmilitary power -Global Fire Power. Ethiopia is ranked as the strongest military power in Sub Saharan Africa, according to a study by Global Fire Power The study claims to make use ofover 40 factors to determine each country's power index. Ethiopia with with a total population of 93 million people has 182,500 active frontline personnel. More than 24 million people are considered fit for military service. In its arsenal, Ethiopia's military has over 560 tanks, more than 780 armored fighting vehicles. It also has one of the strongest air power in the continent with more than 81 fighting aircraft and as well as 8 attackhelicopters. Ethiopia's defense budget is $340 million USD according to the report. Africa's strongest military is Egypt thanks to annual military aid from the USA followed by Algeria and Ethiopia.

As analysts, the Ethiopian military is only good at decimating armless opposition members and journalists. It barely defeated Eritrea in 2000,which had significantly less power. The invasion in Somalia also led to high casualty of Ethiopian soldiers; it has to be recalled that the former prime minsiter refused to disclose the toll to the parliament. It cansuccesfully ward off possible aggression from Egypt. (Text ends) April 9, 2014: Wahome Mutahi's son deported from Ethiopia.

April 11, 2014: LGBT News: Ethiopia groups to stage anti-gay protest. Side notes: Two groups say they are holding April 26 demonstration in response to alarming rates of homosexual acts in the country.
Agencies Two groups in Ethiopia said they will hold an anti-gay demonstration laterthis month, a move that puts Ethiopia in line to become the next African country to increase the public demonisation of gays.
The government- affiliated Addis Ababa Youth Forum and a religious group associated with the Ethiopian Orthodox Church told a news conference on Thursday that an increasing rate of homosexual acts in the country had reached an alarming rate. "Children are being raped by gay people in this country.
Just yesterday we have met a woman whose boy was raped by two other men. All in all, gay acts are against health, the law, religion and our culture, so we should break the silence and create awareness about it," said Dereje Negash, chairman of the church group, the Weyiniye Abune Tekelehaimanot Association. Although gay sex is already outlawed in Ethiopia, the rally set for April 26 in the capital Addis Ababa comes as parliament considers making homosexual acts ineligible for presidential pardons.
The bill was sponsored by the Ministry of Justice and could be put to a vote this month. In Ethiopia, same-sex acts are punishable by upto 15 years in prison. A 25-year jail term is given to anyone convicted of infecting another person with HIV during same-sex acts. The Ethiopian government, however, insisted that any group had the right to freedom ofexpression and that it was not for or against the rally.
Government 'indifferent':

"We are indifferent, we just see it as the right to have a demonstration, otherwise we don't support or oppose," Information Minister Redwan Hussein told AFP news agency. Though the organisers said that there wasno specific reason for the timing of the planned demonstration, a prominent blogger and gay activist said that gay-bashing rhetoric was likely to increase in the run-up to elections for parliament next year. Ezana Solomon said the anti-gay movement was trying to invade personal privacy under the banner of child protection. "I refuse to be labeled a rapist, molester or an abuser since I have never committed those things ever. I think the logical or right thing to do is when I have committed those crimes, I should [be] put to justice. This campaign is notjustifiable under any circumstance," Ezana said. "If someone thinks my being gay is a sin, in my opinion the only thing you are allowed or should be allowed to do is to pray for me and your boundary ends there." The demonstration organisers said the protest would be held under the theme "Keeping alien culture and homosexuality at bay". They said they hope to see thousands of residents and some senior government officials come to the protest. "Gay practices are not our culture so we wanted the society to be aware of the danger and protect itself," said Tsegaye Gebretsadik, chairman of the Addis Ababa Youth Forum. New legislation inUganda and Nigeria this year increased penalties for homosexual acts sending many gays underground and some out of the country. April 12, 2014: Fox News - Ethiopian Mom sentenced to prison forstrangling baby.
SAN DIEGO (CNS) - An Ethiopian woman who shook and strangled her 7-month-old son, then told police that he fell from a third-story apartment window, was sentenced Friday to 25 years to life in state prison.
Zewoinesh Badasso, 35, was convicted in February of first-degree murderand child abuse in the death of her son, David. A jury later found that Badasso was sane when she killed the child.
Deputy District Attorney Nicole Rooney told jurors in her opening statement in the guilt phase that Badasso strangled her son in two ways -
- with her hands and a ligature -- on Sept. 7, 2012. Rooney said Badassograbbed, squeezed and shook the baby before killing him. Prior to the killing, Badasso told a therapist that she had anger issues, a history of violence and had difficulty controlling her impulses, according to Rooney. The victim was found about 5 p.m by two passersby in an alley below a third-story apartment in Normal Heights where Badasso was staying. Theperson who spotted the body said the mother seemed calm and "uncaring" as they called 911 to try and save her child's life. Badasso toldpolice she accidentally dropped the baby while trying to open a window.
An autopsy revealed he had been strangled, "murdered by his ownmother," Rooney said.
Defense attorney Amy McDonald told the jury that Badasso was beaten daily by her father in Ethiopia and at 12 years old was held down and had her female genitalia mutilated. She was also left with memory issues andtended to "disassociate" herself from her problems, her attorney said.

Badasso escaped from Ethiopia and came to the United States in 2000, but suffered from major depression and tried to kill herself at least twice, McDonald said. The defendant had two miscarriages, began to hear voicesand was raped by a stranger in 2011, resulting in her becoming pregnant with David, her attorney said. The defendant's doctors and therapists disagreed on whether Badasso should be on medication for anxiety, depression and lack of sleep, McDonald said.

Badasso finally took some prescribed medication and went into a "dissociative state" the day of the killing, feeling like she was in a dream, her attorney said. "It's horrifying," McDonald told the jury, saying her client remembers few details about the killing. McDonald said Badasso felthelpless watching herself kill her child and imagined that he fell out of thewindow (Text ends)

April 13, 2014: Ahram online News: Ethiopia slams International RiversNetwork (IRN) for supporting Egypt.

Side note: Ethiopia's National Panel of Experts linked to the RenaissanceDam project dismiss as biased to Egypt criticisms of the dam levelled byUS-based environmental group.

The National Panel of Experts linked to the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam (GERD) has slammed the International Rivers Network (IRN) for criticising the Renaissance Dam project, accusing the body of being biasedand supporting Egypt against the dam. The panel accused, in a statementissued Thursday, the US-based environmental organisation "of subverting Ethiopia's efforts to develop its water resources and lift its vast and growing population out of poverty." It accused the IRN of being paid by Egypt in order to lobby against the Renaissance Dam internationally. "Again, the IRN never loses opportunity to lobby for its Egyptian paymasters. Not only does the IRN talk about the 'oversize' of GERD, but also about the Egyptians' negative emotions over GERD: anger and fear." The IRN issued 31 March 2014 a statement about Renaissance Damalong with a leaked version of the report of the tripartite technical committee assigned to study the probable impact of the dam on Egyptand Sudan issued last year.

"One international dam expert who has seen the report states that it shows that construction on the project is proceeding on an aggressively accelerated schedule with little room for adjusting key elements of dam design to reduce harm or prevent problems," the IRN said in its statement. The environmental NGO called on Ethiopia to halt constructionof the dam until studies on the impact of the dam on the downstream countries are continued.
The IRN added that it would work on keeping international donors from investing in the GERD project while providing alternatives to Ethiopia for water and land reclamation. Egypt, Ethiopia and Sudan formed a tripartitetechnical committee to study the probable effects of the Renaissance Dam. But the committee's discussions were thwarted in December when Sudanese President Omar Al-Bashir announced his support for the dam during a meeting with Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn.
Talks between Ethiopia and Egypt broke down in recent months. Yet officials from both countries insist they will continue to hold talks in orderto solve the dispute over the dam. Earlier this month, the foreign ministers of both Egypt and Ethiopia held talks in Brussels on the dam. Founded in 1985 as an international NGO, the International RiversNetwork is an environmental anti-dam organisation that aims to protectrivers and local communities that depend on those rivers. The US basedorganisation is known internationally for its stances against dams in general. (Text ends)

April 15, 2014: ESAT News - Tension in Gambella'
Side note: There has been a huge tension of conflict in the Gambella region of Ethiopia, ESAT’s reporter in the region said. The region has beenunder police occupation following the killing of a driver and a police officerat Wanke Road, where the Ethiopian Roads Authority is building near the South Sudan border. The Regional police states that the killers are “terrorists that sneaked in from Eritrea.”
In another place in Gambella known as Fenjo, another lorry driver and anunidentified person have been killed and the identity of the killer has not yet been known. In a military shooting in Gambella city few days ago, a Federal police member was killed.

Members of the Ethiopian National Defense Force and another squad known as Special Force have been deployed near the South Sudaneseborder. Gambella has become restive, the sound of gunshot is often heard, our reporter said.

South Sudanese refugees have been migrating to Ethiopia. The former president of the Gambella region, who was detained in South Sudan, has been recently repatriated to Ethiopia. Efforts to speak with Region's Policehas not been successful due to mobile network outages in the region.

April 16, 2014: ESAT News: EPRDF sketches its 2015 'Election WinningStrategies.

Side note: Sources within the ruling Ethiopian People Revolutionary Democratic Front's (EPRDF) have sent the Front's "2015 Election Execution Plan" to ESAT. The Strategy is among others aimed at giving a fertilizer relief for farmers and enables urban residents to get places to build houses once they make a 20 thousand prepayment.

For those that cannot pay the 20,000 prepayment, there is a plan to prepare loans from Banks as the election approaches. It has already finished preparing lands all across the country. In addition to the above two plans, the strategies include disparaging oppositions, actions that goto the extent of discriminating those that oppose EPRDF, training/pilotingon how voters can vote using the 1 to 5 structure and giving hopes that the existing problems seen in the justice and development sectors wouldbe resolved in the future. The Strategy also states that the training courses the Front gave last year regarding the history, development strategies and the election experiences of EPRDF have been successful.

The document states that it is difficult to trust Amhara and Oromia regions. It mentions that if EPRDF was to lose power, the leadership andtheir families could be sent to prison. It also stresses that it needs to execute the plan with the motto of "EPRDF or death!" The directive has reportedly been sent to new and senior leaderships of the Front. The preelection execution training will be prepared for Kebeles (districts) once ithas been presented to Woreda and has been fully evaluated.

Some of the messages that are planned to be given to the lower level leadership include "EPRDF's victory will be avowed in election 2015", "We will continue the legacies of the great leader", "We will work to sustainablyachieve our development, democratic and good governance goals in rural areas", "We will continue our missions for faster development, good governance, accountability and the creation of an aware and responsible Kebele level leadership", and "the future is bright with EPRDF." According to EPRDF insiders, the Front is infiltrating its members within the opposition parties and then enable them to win the election while representing opposition parties. (Text ends)

April 16, 2014: Gunmen killed nine in western Ethiopia bus attack: statemedia' (Reuters) ADDIS ABABA – Gunmen ambushed a bus carrying dozens of people in western Ethiopia near the Sudanese border, killing nine and wounding six others, state-run media said on Wednesday. There was no claim of responsibility and no group was blamed for the attack, but Ethiopia says it has thwarted several plots in recent years by Ethiopian insurgents as well as Somali al Qaeda-linked al Shabaab Islamist militants. A handful of rebel groups are waging low-level separatist insurgencies in Ethiopia, while Ethiopian troops are part of an offensive against al Shabaab in neighboring Somalia. The bus ambush on Tuesday evening – near the $4 billion-Grand Renaissance Dam – was the second attack on public transportation in the Benishangul Gumuz region in five months. Four people were killed by a bomb on a minibus in November. "The bus was targeted while travelling 100 kilometers (62 miles) south of (regional capital) Assosa," a report on state-owned Ethiopian Television said. No further details were given, and officials were not immediately available to comment. In September, two Somali suicide bombers accidentally blew themselves up in Addis Ababa while preparing to detonate explosives among football fans during Ethiopia's World Cup qualifying match against Nigeria.

April 23, 2014: Ethiopia appoint Portugal's Baretto as national footballsquad coach’

ADDIS ABABA (Reuters News) Ethiopia have named Portugal's Mariano Barreto as coach, the head of the Ethiopian Football Federation (EFF) saidon Wednesday. Barreto, a former Ghana coach and assistant manager of Dynamo Moscow, was given the job after the EFF failed to reach an agreement with first choice Goran Stevanovic of Serbia. "(Barreto) fits well in our plans. He has exituationperience at all levels," EFF chief Junedin Beshah told Reuters.

The 57-year old Barreto signed a two-year deal on Tuesday on a salary of $18,000 a month. "Our primary aim now is to qualify for Morocco," Junedin said, referring to next year's African Cup of Nations. "We need to better our previous record." Ethiopia - nicknamed the 'Walyas' after an antelope endemic to the Horn of Africa country - were previously managedby Sewnet Bishaw, who was sacked in February after a dismal run at this year's Cup of African Nations (CAN).

Under Sewnet, however, the Walyas last year qualified for the African Cupof Nations for the first time in three decades. They also reached the final knockout round for a place at this year's World Cup in Brazil in what wouldhave been east Africa's first-ever spot at the finals but they lost over two legs against regional heavyweights Nigeria. The draw for the African Cup of Nations qualifiers will take place this month with Ethiopia among 21 countries with a bye to the group stages. The Walyas won their maiden African Cup of Nations in 1962 but have not lifted the trophy since.

April 26, 2014: Local News: Arrests Blue Party leaders, members ahead ofprotest rally'

ADDIS ABABA - Police have arrested key figures as well as dozens of members of the rising opposition Blue Party. The detainees include the party's deputy chairperson as well as several executive committee members. The political detainees are being held at several police stations in the capital. The arrests were made at least 48 hours ahead of a protest rally Blue Party had organized for Sunday, April 27 in Addis Ababa. Party chairperson Yilikal Getnet was plucked out of prison by force, after resisting police orders to leave the jail house. Yilkal sought to remain in jail but police said they received no orders to keep him there. Blue Party islargely a political organization of the youth, who are characterized as non-violent, law-abiding and yet defiant to fight the tyrannical regime to the end. In the meantime, police have arrested about half a dozen bloggers.

No reason was given for the arrest of the activists who are collectively known as 'Zone Nine' bloggers. The detainees are Atnafu Berhane, MahletFantahun, Zelalem Kibret, Befekadu Hailu, Natnael Feleke, Abel Wabela and journalist Tesfalem Woldeyes.

Befekadu Hailu, Atnaf Berahane, Natnael Feleke, Mahlet Fantahun, Zelalem Kibret, and Abel Wabela were reportedly arrested in the streets or in their offices.

According to a report by Human Rights Watch, police also searched their homes and confiscated private laptops and literature. After being held incommunicado in Maekelawi, a detention center in Addis Ababa, all six bloggers appeared before the Federal First Instance Court First Criminal Bench in Arada, where they were charged with "Working with foreign organizations that claim to be human rights activists and agreeing in idea and receiving finance to incite public violence through social media." Sincetheir formation in 2012, the Zone Nine bloggers have been vocal in their critique of government policy and practice, especially the growing role of government surveillance and ever-worsening crackdowns on independent media and free expression. Fellow Zone Nine blogger Endalk writes eloquently about the origins of the collective's name: In February 2014, EFF filed a lawsuit against the Ethiopian government on behalf of an American citizen living in Washington DC, whose computer was allegedly infected with spyware by the Ethiopian government, which allegedly used to spy on his Skype calls and Google searches. The arrests come days before United States Secretary of State John Kerry's scheduled visit to Ethiopia.

Editor's note: In the suburbs of Addis Ababa, there is a large prison calledKality where many political prisoners are currently being held, among them journalists Eskinder Nega and Reeyot Alemu. The journalists have told a lot about the prison and its appalling conditions. Kality is divided into eight different zones, the last of which—Zone Eight—is dedicated to journalists, human right activists and dissidents. When they came together, they decided to create a blog for the proverbial prison in which all Ethiopians live: this is Zone Nine.

April 29, 2014:University students protest the new Addis Abeba MasterPlan'

ESAT News - Several university students in Ambo, Jimma, Nekemt and others are protesting the new Addis Abeba City Master Plan, which the City believes will reduce the City's land shortage problems. Students in Wellega University have been injured due to actions taken by the security.Gebru Guebremariam, former MP and current Deputy Chairman of the Oromo Federalist Congress said to ESAT that although it was not clear whether the protests were organised or not, there are ongoing protests.

Gebru said that it was necessary to give proper response to the questionsof the people rather than raising issues and claiming that my way is the only way. He also warned that care should be taken so that the problemsdo not lead to ethnic conflict.

April 30, 2014: Ethiopia's regime seems under fire over recently detained journalists & bloggers' ER News – The ruling EPRDF is in panic because it failed to put people first in its development policy; it arrogantly snubbed inclusivity in matters of paramount national interests such as the GERD and the expansion of the Addis Ababa Master Plan. The people of Ethiopia know that the ruling regime is causing unrest to rig and secure the comingElection-2015 in advance rather than go through the spate of protests that ensued in the aftermath of election 2005 which it lost but kept it by force; it wants to justify to the world that it fairly won Election-2010 and hide the fact that it unilaterally declared garnering 99.6% of parliamentary seats.

The EPRDF regime is gripped with panic; it must revisit its failed strategy of robbing elections in broad daylight by accepting the inevitable scenario of peaceful transfer of power to the Ethiopian people. The reclusive regimeis reaping what it has been sowing in all the years it has been in power; EPRDF is now in panic due to self-inflicted wound arising from its fear of people seeking peaceful change. All tyrants fear the people they misrule!

Nine Ethiopian journalists and bloggers have appeared in an Arada courtto face charges of inciting public violence through social media. A reporton the allAfrica.com site notes that the hearing was presided by Judge Liya Zenebe.

Police claim the suspects have been disseminating information via social media and websites that threatens to destabilise the country. Rights groups are calling on the government to intervene. A report on the News24 site notes that Human Rights Watch urged US Secretary of StateJohn Kerry, who is visiting Ethiopia this week to press for their release.

Amnesty International noted that 20 members of a political opposition group were also arrested last week.

The EPRDF government must be held accountable for the heinous crimes unleashed on the Oromo students. ThePrime Minister should take the lead in bringing all involved criminals to court or resign.

April 30, 2014: PMHD visits border region with South Sudan -ST' Sudan Tribune News , Addis Ababa – Ethiopian prime minister Haile Mariam Desalegn has visited the south-western region of Gambella whichborders South Sudan on security matters.Tuesday's visit is the premier's first since he came to office in 2012 following the death of former prime minister Meles Zenawi. Sources close to the office of the Gambella regional governor, Gatluak Tut Khot, told Sudan Tribune on Wednesadaythat the Ethiopian leader had discussed a wide range of issues, including development and security, with regional leaders. "The meeting with the prime minister also discussed security issues as the region is strategic," said a senior official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, without providing further details.

However, observers said his visit, which also coincided with the celebrations of the 100 years anniversary of the founding of Gambella as an administrative unit, could be related to the current crisis in neighbouring South Sudan. Ethiopia is hosting and mediating the negotiations between the South Sudanese government of president Salva Kiir and trebels led by former vice-president Riek Machar. Last month, a soldier from the South Sudanese army (SPLA), who was armed with a rifleand grenades, was shot dead in Gambella town after he killed an Ethiopian soldier while resisting searches.

Gambella region borders Upper Nile, Jonglei and Eastern Equatoria states of South Sudan. It has 13 counties, nine of which are inhabited by the Nuer and Anyuak ethnic groups who share cultures and languages with their neighbouring communities in South Sudan. While the Nuer constitutethe largest ethnic group in the region, the Anyuak are the second largest. Other minority ethnic groups include Mejenger, Komo, Oppo and highlanders who come from the other regions of Ethiopia. The region has had many attachments to the people of South Sudan as former rebels groups and refugee camps were based in the area. The former military base of Bilpam, as well as Itang, Dimma and Pinyodo, former refugee camps where hundreds of thousands of South Sudanese were sheltered during the 21 years of the civil war with Sudan, all fall within the jurisdiction of the Gambella regional government. The area is also endowed with various natural resources, including gold and a recently discovered oil reserve. (Text ends)

May 1, 2014: Five killed in Gendaweha, North West Ethiopia'

ESAT News: The number of people killed in Gendaweha, North Western Ethiopia by the Federal Police has reached five; other four have been seriously wounded and are now receiving treatment in Gonder Hospital. Although the Woreda Administrators have summoned the residents for talks; the people have said that they are not ready to talk with the people.Police detained youth suspected of "inciting the violence." Meanwhile, Melkamu Masresha, a famous priest from the Abuna Hara Church in Gonder, who has been representing people whose houses were being demolished by the government in Maraki, Gonder, has been killed by unknown people. He was called to immediately present himself in the Church moments before he was killed. The priest used to criticise the government for carelessly allowing the people to spend their resources and energy in building the houses and then all of a sudden ordering demolition. ESAT had interviewed Melakmu a month ago. One the interview, he had called the government to pay a heed to the issue.

Similarly, the government has also continued demolishing houses in Azezo, Gonder. Representatives of the victims who were travelling to thearea to speak with government officials were detained.

May 1, 2014: Secretary John Kerry urges press freedoms for Ethiopia'

AFP News — US Secretary of State John Kerry urged Ethiopia on Thursdayto allow greater freedoms for civil society and journalists, expressing concern for a group of bloggers and journalists arrested last week. "They need to create greater opportunities for citizens to be able to engage withtheir fellow citizens and with their government by opening up more space for civil society," Kerry told reporters. Rights group accuse Ethiopia of having one of the most closed press environments in the world. "I am raising a very legitimate concern, we are concerned about any imprisonedjournalist here or anywhere else," Kerry added, following a meeting with Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn Washington is one of Ethiopia's largest donors, and Kerry urged Addis Ababa to support a free press as an essential precursor to a legitimate democracy. "The work of journalists, whether it's print journalism or the Internet or media of other kinds, makes societies stronger, makes them more vibrant and ultimatelyprovides greater stability and greater voice to democracy," he said. Nine people were arrested last week on charges of "serious criminal activities".Rights groups said they were journalists and bloggers targeted in a sweeping crackdown against free speech. Ethiopia has been accused of cracking down on independent media and has doled out several heavy sentences for journalists charged under controversial anti-terror legislation. "We shouldn't use the anti-terrorism proclamation as mechanisms to be able to curb the free exchange of ideas," said Kerry.

The secretary of state is in Ethiopia as part of his first major Africa tour, aimed at addressing bloody conflicts in several troubled countries including South Sudan and Democratic Republic of Congo. Kerry is due totravel on to DR Congo and Angola on his Africa trip, which runs until May5.

May 2, 2014: Addis Ababa University Students Join Oromo Protests' Ethiomedia News updates ADDIS ABABA - Oromo students of Addis AbabaUniversity on Thursday May 1 held a demonstration against government measures to annex Oromia lands into the capital. The students, who wereblocked by police from taking to the streets of Addis Ababa, were forced to stage their protest on Sidis Killo Campus. The students also condemnedgovernment killings of Oromo protesters in Ambo and other towns. Official records say at least 17 were killed during clashes with security forces in the past week. Others contend as many as 30 were killed and many moreothers injured.

May 2, 2014: 341 immigrants were denied Norwegian citizenship' (NORWAY TODAY) 341 foreigners were denied Norwegian citizenship last year. Immigration has become more aware of identity fraud. It says Karl Erik Sjøholt Directorate in Immigration (UDI) to NRK. Approximately 13,000 people were granted Norwegian citizenship last year. In 341 cases,however, they were rejected the applications. One of the reasons is that the authorities are in doubt whether the applicants are who they are pretending to be, or suspect that the papers are counterfeited. - It is hardto say clearly that several cheats, but we know that someone is using fakedocuments. It is important that we reveal it and not give citizenship to anyone who should not have it, says Sjøholt. Last year were 15 people caught lying after citizenship was granted. Children, Equality and Social Inclusion Minister Solveig Horne (FRP) believes it is important to get rid of the problem with identity fraud once and for all. It is well with stringent requirements for citizenship. Gaining citizenship shall hang high, says Horne. Source: NTB scanpix / Photo Flickr / Norway Today

May 2, 2014: Multimedia News reports on Oromo Protest against AddisAbaba'

The peaceful protest continued in a different Oromia region.

May 2, 2014: ETHIOPIA - Number of deaths in Oromia much higher than official figures: observer ' ADDIS ABABA (UPI) -- The Ethiopian government reported nine students have died as a result of "disturbances"caused by "anti-peace forces" in Oromia Regional State who reacted violently to plans to expand the capital city of Addis Ababa into Oromia state. One witness disputed the government's low casualty figure, saying that in one week, 47 students have died. Students in Ethiopia's Oromia Regional State have been engaging in deadly clashes with security forces since April 25 over reported plans to expand the capital, Addis Ababa. Thegovernment's Communications Affairs Office released a statement regarding the unrest, which it attributed to "baseless rumors which discredit the value and aim of the integrated development master plandesigned to integrate Addis Ababa with the Oromia Special Zone surrounding the city through development." The plan is up for public discussion, the government said. "However, before the full-scale holding of the public discussions with stakeholders in all the regional states, loss of lives and property have occurred in some universities where students confused by deliberate misleading rumors and gossips created havoc." According to the government's report, a total of nine students have died because of the "disturbances" caused by "anti-peace forces." That statistic was challenged by one Ambo resident who told the BBC that 47 people havebeen killed since the unrest began a week earlier. "I saw more than 20 bodies on the streets," the unidentified witness said. "I am hiding in myhouse because I am scared." Four students were killed Monday and 43 students on Tuesday following a large demonstration. Streets, she said,are now deserted with local businesses shuttered, classes canceled at Ambo University -- where protests began -- and students not allowed toleave.

May 2, 2014: Students protest extends into several areas of Oromiaregion'

ESAT News - The students protest in many areas of the Oromia region, Ethiopia has intensified leading to the deaths of at least 40 civilians in theregion under the hands of government forces. According to our sources within the senior leadership of the Oromo Peoples' Democratic Organization (OPDO), member party of the ruling EPRDF, so far 300 havereportedly been injured and over 1500 people have been detained. Peoplefrom all walks of life have reportedly joined the 'democratic struggle' of Oromo students in Bako area. At least 200 youth have been arrested in Burayu in the outskirts of Addis Abeba. After the Administration promisedprotesting students of the Addis Abeba University that their questions willbe duly responded by relevant bodies the next day, securities detained students that were suspected of organising the protest overnight.

In Haromaya University, Eastern Ethiopia, at least two students those were watching football match have died due to a hand grenade thrown in the hall. Over 150 students were injured. The government said only 70 were wounded. Some students say the grenade may have been thrown bygovernment securities to ignite inter-ethnic clash. The Oromo Democratic Congress (ODC) has condemned the killings committed by the forces of the TPLF/EPRDF. Similarly, the Ethiopian National Transitional Council (ENTC) has also condemned the killings on its part. Meanwhile, United Nations (UN) and several Western countries have issued travel advice andwarned their citizens and staff from travelling to Ambo.

May 6, 2014: Swiss reject Ethiopia's request to extradite co-pilot’ Ethiomedia News: GENEVA, Switzerland - The Swiss government has rejected Ethiopia's request to extradite a co-pilot who had hijacked an airliner last February. Hailemedhin Abera, 30, hijacked an Ethiopian Airlines passenger plane that was on an Addis Ababa-Rome route and landed it safely in the Swiss city, thereby requesting a political asylum.The 202 passengers and crew onboard the Boeing 767 plane were not harmed.

The VoA quoted a spokesperson of the Swiss Federal Justice Ministry as saying that criminal proceedings were underway for charges as Ethiopia's.For this reason, the spokesperson said, it was decided not to extradite theperson to Ethiopia. Ethiopia and Swistzerland don't have an extradition treaty. The verdict comes as a victory for the pro-democracy Ethiopian Diaspora which had held several solidarity demonstrations and urged the Swiss government not to extradite the co-pilot to Addis Ababa, where theruling party is often accused by reputable organizations such as Human Rights Watch of gross human rights violations.

May 13, 2014: The struggle for clean, safe water is a daily reality for women in Ethiopia – MSNBC' ER News: In the Konso Region of southern Ethiopia, the struggle for clean, safe water is a daily reality for women andyoung girls. "Bringing the water is not a simple task," says Mariam Bakaule, a mother standing at the edge of the mountaintop village of Jarso. "This is the essence of women. Water and woman are synonymous here." The village of Jarso, like many of the others in the area, overlooks a vast valley stretching towards the Kenyan border. Yet the relative greenery of the region is deceptive. For the 13,000 people in Jarso, lack ofrain in recent years has caused crops of maize, sorghum and haricot beans to fail. At the center of this struggle to survive are the women and young girls whose responsibility it is to trek up to five hours a day to reach dry river beds, only to wait in long lines for scant resources. Uchiya Nallo, an eight-months-pregnant 29-year-old mother, spends half her day climbing a mountainside carrying more than 5 gallons (about 40 pounds) of water. "The road is very dangerous and I feel tired all the time," she says. "I am worried because sometimes I fall down and hurt myself. I worry because I feel tired. Now I am almost ready to give birth and I am walking slowly but maybe I will have some problems, I'm not sure."

May 14, 2014: UK High Court makes important ruling on lawsuit againstFinFisher spyware Gamma Intl' ER News - In a damning judgment todaythe Administrative Court declared that Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs (HMRC) acted unlawfully and "irrationally" in issuing blanket refusals into the status of any investigation into the potentially illegal export of the spyware FinFisher to repressive regimes by UK-based Gamma International.

The case arises from Privacy International's long-running campaign to bring transparency and accountability to the secretive surveillance technology industry. As part of this in November 2012 Privacy International had submitted a dossier of evidence to HMRC that suggestedthat Gamma International had illegally exported surveillance technology togovernments with records of human rights abuse, such as as well as evidence from activists whose computers were targeted withFinFisher.

Despite requests HMRC refused to provide any information on what if anyinvestigation they were conducting. Today's decision marks a significant turning point in this effort, as Mr Justice Green, in his carefully-reasoned judgment, found that HMRC had committed a serious error in not providing information about whether it was investigating British companyGamma International for illegal exporting spyware to repressive regimes.Describing the actions of HMRC as "irrational" and "simply inconsistent with the legislation", the judgment quashed HRMC's decision and orderedit to again consider Privacy International's request.

May 26, 2014: Egyptian news agency director deported from Ethiopia. DAILY NEWS EGYPT: Egyptian citizen Hamdy Al-Anany was deported fromEthiopian capital Addis Ababa, an incident which prompted the Egyptian Foreign Ministry to express “deep regrets”, in a statement on Sunday, anddemand an explanation. Al-Anany, who served as the Ethiopia director of the Egypt’s official state-run news agency, the Middle East News Agency (MENA), was detained by Ethiopian authorities before his deportation. Spokesman of Egypt’s Foreign Ministry Badr Abdelatty said that the Egyptian foreign ministry demanded in an official memo that the Ethiopianforeign ministry provide “explanations and clarifications” on the reasons behind Al-Anany’s deportation and the failure to notify the Egyptian Embassy once he was detained. MENA, which describes itself as the largest and oldest African news agency, expressed condemnation at the position of the Ethiopian authorities and said that the deportation came without “justification or warning”. It condemned Al-Anany’s “mistreatment” and said that it conflicts with all international norms andconventions for the protection of journalists working abroad.

It added that Al-Anany is accredited by both the Ethiopian Authorities andthe African Union Commission. MENA demanded an explanation to this “strange behaviour” and that Ethiopian authorities correct their position and guarantee correspondents’ freedom to exercise their duties. MENA also demanded that the African Union, the Federation of African Journalists and the Egyptian Press Syndicate “bear their responsibilities” towards guaranteeing the protection of the work of journalists and correspondents and securing their lives and property. Ethiopian-Egyptian ties have been strained since Ethiopia began construction of the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam in April 2011. May 30, 2014: BBC condemns Ethiopian broadcast jamming (BBC Media Center) Liliane Landor, acting Director of the BBC World Service Group, has called on the Ethiopian authorities to stop jamming BBC broadcasts in the Middle East and North Africa. She joined directors from Deutsche Welle, France 24, and the US Broadcasting Board of Directors which oversees the Voice of America, in condemning the flagrantviolation of the clearly established international procedures on operating satellite equipment.

Liliane Landor said: “The BBC calls upon the Ethiopian authorities to end this interference. They are disrupting international news broadcasts for noapparent reason. This is a deliberate act of vandalism that tarnishes their reputation.” During the past week, BBC television and radio broadcasts onthe Arabsat satellites have been affected by intentional uplink interference. Many international television broadcasts, including those from France 24 and Deutsche Welle, have been badly affected. The satellite operator Arabsat has reported that the interference has come from within Ethiopia. The interference is intensive and affects services on all three Arabsat satellites. Unlike previous instances of intentional interference, these events do not appear to be linked to any particular content or channel on these satellites.

The interference is contrary to the international regulations that governthe use of radio frequency transmissions and the operation of satellite systems, and inhibits the ability of individuals to freely access media according to Article 19 of the UN Declaration of Human Rights.

THE STANDARD, KENYA - A premier tourism industry investments forum scheduled to take place in Nairobi has been relocated to Addis Ababa. Thisfollows a switch of venue that will add misery to the local tourism industrythat is already struggling to stay afloat. UK based Bench Events who are the organisers of the Africa Hotel Investment Forum (AHIF) said the switch of the venue from Nairobi to Addis Ababa has been due to capacityconstraints. In a statement yesterday, the firm said the space available inNairobi was inadequate to accommodate the huge number of people who had expressed interest in attending and exhibiting at the event. The eventwas to take place at the Intercontinental Hotel, Nairobi, but will now be held at the Sheraton Hotel, Addis Ababa in late September. The cancelation of the event in Nairobi comes amid security concerns that has resulted in large number of cancellations of booked and paid holidays as well as tourists already in the country cutting short their trips.
June 3, 2014: MEDIA NEWS: Arabsat threatens Ethiopia with legal actionover jamming.
Television transmissions from channels carried by Arabsat have suffered intentional signal interference from international jammers based in Ethiopia, according to the regional satellite operator. The Saudi-based organisation says it resents the "illegal act" and expressed surprise at this "vandalism", given there are no Ethiopian or Eritrean channels among the direct-to-home (DTH) satellite bouquets broadcast via Arabsat. "This jamming may be aimed at some opponents' channels for one of the two countries' channels that are broadcast on board satellites near Arabsat 26 East neighbourhood or on board other satellites which Arabsat has no relation with," a statement said. Qatar's first satellite Es'hail 1 operates from the 25.5 degree East orbital location and, among other channels, carries news network Al Jazeera, which has been subject to intentional signal interference in previous years. The International Telecommunication Union and Arab League have both been informed of the satellite jamming, and Arabsat says it will not hesitate to take legal action against theculprits.

June 3, 2014: Egypt deports 77 Ethiopians trying to enter Israel. Ahram Online News: Egypt on Sunday deported 77 Ethiopians for attempting to illegally migrate through the country to Israel, state newsagency MENA and Al-Ahram's Arabic news website reported. The deportees entered the Egyptian governorate of Aswan through the country's southern frontier with Sudan. They were arrested two weeks agoin Aswan but only deported on Sunday following a liaison with the Ethiopian embassy in Egypt, MENA said. Security sources at the airport said the deportees included three children. Interrogations showed they were seeking to land in the Sinai Peninsula and then cross over the eastern border into Israel with plans to work. Ties between Egypt and Ethiopia have soured after the horn of African country began constructing a controversial hydroelectric dam that Egypt fears will substantially harm its share of the Nile River, the country's main source of potable water.
Egypt's authorities often repatriate African nationals attempting toinfiltrate Israel through Egypt's borders to seek jobs there.

June 7, 2014: President El-Sisi says won't allow rift with Ethiopia' Egypt's newly inaugurated President Abdel-Fattah El-Sisi vows to easecrisis with Addis Ababa after a months-long impasse over Ethiopia's controversial Grand Renaissance Dam project. Egypt's newly elected President Abdel-Fattah El-Sisi said he would not allow a rift to developbetween Cairo and Addis Ababa, who have been locked in a stalemate over access to the Nile water. Ties between Egypt and Ethiopia have progressively soured since Addis Ababa launched the construction of a controversial hydroelectric dam that Egypt fears will substantially harm itsshare of the Nile River, the country's main source of potable water.

However, El-Sisi unequivocally stated during his inaugural address at the Qubba Palace on Sunday evening that he will not allow friction to take place with the Ethiopia. “I won’t allow the Renaissance Dam to cause a crisis or problem with sisterly Ethiopia,” he said in the speech addressed to Egyptian public figures. El-Sisi stressed that Egypt is keen on safeguarding Pan-Africanism which, he said, the country cannot disengagefrom. Ethiopia’s Foreign Minister Tedros Adhanom headed a delegation that attended a morning inauguration ceremony at the Ittihadiya Presidential Palace. Attendees included Arab royalty, African leaders and dignitaries from among Egypt’s western allies.

June 7, 2014: AFP News: Over 62 African migrants, crew drown offYemen: UN

Over sixty migrants from Ethiopia and Somalia along with two Yemeni crew members drowned on May 31 in the worst such tragedy off the coastof Yemen this year, the UN said Friday. "The tragedy is the largest single loss of life of migrants and refugees attempting to reach Yemen via the Red Sea and the Gulf of Aden this year," Adrian Edwards, spokesman for the refugee agency UNHCR, told reporters in Geneva.

The UN agency said it was still seeking information about the tragedy, buthad confirmed that the boat carrying 60 Ethiopian and Somali migrants and two Yemeni crew members sank last Saturday. "The victims were reportedly buried by local residents after their bodies washed ashore near the Bab El Mandeb area off Yemen's coast," Edwards said, adding that theUNHCR did not know where the boat begun it journey. In Sanaa, a Yemeniemployee of the UNHCR said the boat went down because of bad weather conditions off Dhubab, at the entrance to the Bab El Mandeb waterway between the Gulf of Aden and the Red Sea. "Most of the victims are of Ethiopian nationality," he said, quoting a local NGO, the Society for Humanitarian Solidarity.

The UNHCR pointed out that counting previous such tragedies in the samearea, at least 121 people have died so far this year trying to reach Yemen.The agency said it had documented the arrival of 16,500 refugees and migrants on the Yemeni coast during the first four months of 2014 alone. That number, however, was far below the 35,000 who arrived in Yemen during the same period last year. Impoverished Yemen is mainly used as atransit country, with African migrants often aiming to move on to neighbouring oil-rich Gulf nations to find work. (Text ends)

June 24, 2014: ST NEWS-Sudan death row woman Meriam Ibrahim 're-arrested' [BBC]

(ST News) - A Sudanese woman freed from death row on Monday has been arrested with her family at Khartoum airport, sources have told the BBC. Meriam Ibrahim was sentenced to hang in May for renouncing Islam, sparking widespread outrage at home and abroad. About 40 security agents detained Mrs Ibrahim - along with her husband, Daniel Wani andtwo children- at the airport, the sources said.

On Monday, Mr Wani said the family intended to leave for the US. Mrs Ibrahim was released from prison after an appeal court annulled the deathsentence imposed on her. She was arrested in February, and gave birth toa daughter in prison not long after being sentenced. Born to a Muslim father, an Ethiopian by origin Mrs Ibrahim, 27, married Mr Wani, a Christian, in 2011. Sudan has a majority Muslim population, and Islamic law has been in force there since the 1980s. Even though Mrs Ibrahim wasbrought up as an Orthodox Christian, the authorities considered her to be a Muslim because that is the religion of her father. Mr Wani has US citizenship.

June 24, 2014: Andargatchew Tsegie General secretay of the outlawed Ginbot 7 political Movement was detained by ‘Yemeni officials’ whilst transiting through Sana’a to Eritrea. The British citizen and leading Ethiopian political activist was quickly and quietly extradited to Ethiopia’sruling regime whos following a nationwide policy of violent suppression and constitutional vandalism in Addis Ababa where he was imprisoned onspurious charges of treason or some such trumped up charges.

Ed’s note: Ginbot 7 (15 May) was named after the date of the 2005 elections, which were marred by protests over alleged fraud that led tothe deaths of about 200 people. In 2009, the year before the last elections, Mr Andergachew was among a group of Ginbot 7 leaders sentenced to death in absentia for planning to assassinate governmentofficials; they denied the charges.

June 25, 2014: Ethiopia News: Saudi Arabia and UAE receive 90% of Ethiopian livestock and meat exports’ Ethiopia eyes to earn 47.48 million USD from meat and animal exports to the Middle East countries, which willobserve the start of the holy fasting month of Ramadan next week.

According to the Ethiopian Trade Ministry's Live Animals, Hides and Skins Department Deputy Head, Kelifa Hussein the rising demand for meat during the month of Ramadan has been a business opportunity to Ethiopiafor a long time.

"We export both live animals and meat to Somalia, Egypt, Djibouti, SaudiArabia and the United Arab Emirates (UAE) and export meat to Turkey and Hong Kong," he said. The Ethiopian revenues will exceed the planned21 million USD, he added. Ethiopia earned 176 million USD from export oflive animals during the last eleven months.

Secretary-General of Ethiopian Association for Meat Producers and Exporters Abebaw Mekonnen said Ethiopia anticipates earning $26.48 million from export of 5405 tons of meat to different countries during Ramadan. "Saudi Arabia and UAE are target markets for 90 percent of ourproducts.We export the remaining 10 percent to Kuwait, Oman and Egypt," he said. "The country earned $66.8 million from meat exports during the last 11 months. The revenue is estimated to increase to $70 million during the month of Ramadan," he said.

Previously, the Ethiopian Airlines used to transport only 24 tons of meat per flight. Now, Mekonnen said, there is a plan to increase the amount to 60 tons per flight. Ethiopia has the largest livestock population in Africa with 53.8 million heads of cattle, 25.51 million sheep, 22.79 million goats, 2.17 million camels and 49.3 million poultry, according to the CentralStatistical Agency of Ethiopia.
June 25, 2014: Stimulant Khat maily exported from East Africa banned inEngland' (Press Association News) - Possessing, selling and importing khat - a plantused as a stimulant by Ethiopian and Somalian communities - is illegal in the U.K. starting this week. Khat, which makes its users feel more alert, happy and talkative when chewed, is now banned as a class C drug despite advice from the Government's official advisers that it should not be classified. Around 2,560 tonnes of khat, which is also favoured by Yemeni and Ethiopian communities, worth £13.8 million was imported to the UK in 2011/12, bringing in £2.8 million of tax revenues. Drug experts and policy campaigners have condemned the ban as it came into force.
Danny Kushlick, director of Transform Drug Policy Foundation, said: "Yet again the Government has ignored the advice of its experts and prohibitedanother drug. "As ever, it will serve to create a new income stream for organised crime and that insurgents could profit from. "At the same time it will unnecessarily criminalise a minority group of Somalis and Yemenis, and deprive producers overseas of much needed legitimate revenue. "It ishigh time that the legal regulation option was considered, not only for khat, but for other prohibited drugs."
In a written statement earlier this year, Theresa May said despite the recommendation of the Advisory Council on Misuse of Drugs (ACMD) not to ban khat, the body acknowledged that there was an absence of robust evidence in a number of areas. The Home Secretary said the whole of northern Europe, most recently the Netherlands, and the majority of otherEU member states have banned khat, as well as most of the G8 countries including Canada and the USA. Mrs May said failure to take action in the UK would place the country at serious risk of becoming a single hub for the illegal onward trafficking of khat to countries where it is banned.
Chief Constable Andy Bliss, national policing lead for drugs, said: "Enforcement of the khat ban will be firm but proportionate. "Officers willtake into account the nature of the offence and its severity, using a tieredapproach towards offences relating to possession for personal use. The police are working with Home Office colleagues, healthcare providers andcommunity leaders to ensure that people in localities where khat use is prevalent are aware of the change in law and the police approach, as wellas the support available to them."
June 23, 2014: President of the Somali region changes securities fearingplot to kill him' (ESAT News) Abdi Mohamed Umar, the President of the Somali RegionalState of Ethiopia, has reportedly changed his security personnel fearing that securities of the Federal government plot to assassinate him. He is also getting his area protected by his loyalists. Since last week, all those heading to his office are being specially searched. Abdi had spoken issuesthat criticise the central government in Addis Abeba by gathering over 1500 elders from 9 zones and six Woredas of the region. Abdi labelled Getachew Asefa, the Head of the Ethiopian Security and Intelligence, as a“thief” and also mentioned that the officials in Addis take bribes from citizens from the Region in order to give them passports. Abdi ordered allthe elders not to cooperate with the EPRDF security and said “Do not be afraid. I have obliterated and kicked out EPRDF’s security from our Region. I am the only one now in this Region.”

“The Ethiopians do not love us, they only love our land. They see us second citizens.’’ He said adding that this government had given them theright to secede. The terrified President has changed his mobile phone, upped the security in his building and closed the offices of people he believed work for the government security. Activities after 7pm near the place Abdi goes to chew Kaht, Kebele 06 have been banned. ESAT had reported that there was a disagreement between Abdi and the nation security Chief, Getachew The recent attack by Alshabab in the region is believed to have widened the difference.

Similarly, a day after Abdi said the Ogaden National Liberation Front (ONLF) has been weakened, ONLF killed 9 people and wound seven othersin an area that is located 1KM away from Deghabour. Asharna, Deghabour’s Security Head and Muhammed Dayika, the area’s Leyu/Special Militia Head, are among those that have been seriously injured by the attack. The President had reportedly sent around 100 members of the Special Force (Leyu Hail) to the area.

June 25, 2014: ESAT News – Degehabur Zone Security Chief killed’ Following the attack by the Ogaden National Liberation Front (ONLF) in Degehabur Zone of the Somali Regional State of Ethiopia three days ago,which took the lives of seven government militia, the Security Head of Degehabur, known by many as Ashar has reportedly died yesterday afterreceiving treatment in Degehabur Hospital for the last few days.

Degehabur’s Special Militia Head, Muhammed Dayik, is still receiving treatment in the same hospital after sustaining major injuries. The PeaceTalks between the Ethiopian ruling Front and ONLF had failed after the Ethiopian government had abducted ONLF’s negotiators from Nairobi, Kenya few months ago. Although the Ethiopian government had said thatthe leaders had voluntarily surrendered, the abductees have not come forward to admit this.

The government has reportedly started an attempt to replace the RegionalPresident with a new one; however, the officials of the Ethiopian Defense that are stationed in the area have opposed the plan. This has caused strife between the Defense and government officials. The government believes the Regional President Abdi Mohammed follows a policy that hasangers the local people making many to support the opposition, while theDefense officials believe Abdi “is essential to stability and security in the Region.” Sources say the girlfriend of one of the top investors in the Region, Lieutenant General Yohannes G/Meskel wants Abdi to remain in power. Abdi’s corrupt relationship with the officials of the Ethiopian Defense officials has won him support from them.

ESAT had reported that Abdi Mohamed Umar, the President of the Somali Regional State of Ethiopia, had reportedly changed his security personnel fearing that the securities of the Federal government would plot to assassinate him. Abdi had spoken issues that criticise the central government in Addis Abeba by gathering over 1500 elders from 9 zones and six Woredas of the region. The President had ordered all the elders not to cooperate with the EPRDF security and said “Do not be afraid. I have obliterated and kicked out EPRDF’s security from our Region. I am the only one now in this Region.” Abdi was even threatening that he woulduse article 39 of the Ethiopia constitution and secede if there are people that want to control the Region. He gave huge amount of money to each elder in a move that seemed was aiming to get their support.

April 26, 2014: ALJAZEERA NEWS: Ethiopia detains bloggers andjournalists’

Security forces arrest six bloggers and a journalist in latest crackdown on opposition voices. The Ethiopian government has arrested six independentbloggers and a journalist in what human rights group Amnesty International has called a "suffocating grip on freedom of expression". Sixmembers of independent blogger and activist group ‘Zone 9’ and a prominent Ethiopian journalist were arrested on Friday in the capital AddisAbaba. All six bloggers were arrested at night by armed security forces and taken from their homes to the Federal Police Crime Investigation Sector ‘Maikelawi’, where political prisoners are alleged to be held in pre- trial, and sometimes arbitrary detention. The Zone 9 group who are said to be very critical of government policy and have a strong following on social media had temporarily suspended their activities earlier this year after accusing the government of harassing their members. Journalist Tesfalem Waldyes who writes independent commentary on political issuesfor a Ethiopian newspaper was also arrested.

According to Ethiopian journalist Simegnish Yekoye, Waldyes is being denied visitation by friends and family and it's unclear what prompted hisarrest and what charges he is being held under. Simegnish Yekoye told AlJazeera she was unaware of why the government had clamped down on journalists and their was growing fear on the future of a free press. "I amvery scared, I don't know what's going to happen next," she said. Ranked143 in the 2014 Reporters Without Borders press freedom index, media watchdogs say 49 journalists fled the country between 2007 and 2012 to evade government persecution. Human rights group Amesty Internationalcriticised the arrests, saying "these arrests appear to be yet another alarming round up of opposition or independent voices".

"The Ethiopian government is tightening its suffocating grip on freedom ofexpression in a major crackdown which has seen the arrest of numerous independent, critical and opposition voices over the last two days", Claire Beston, Ethiopia researcher at Amnesty International, said. Al Jazeera's Mohammed Adow reporting from Bahir Dar said it was unclear what will happen to the detained journalists. "There are scores of journalists currently serving between 14 and 27 years in prison with some charged on terrorism offences.

June 26, 2014: Dozens of Civilians Arrested in Degahbur' (Mareeg.com) By Warsame - By Ahmed Abdi-Ethiopian Security Forces arrested dozens of civilians in Dehehbur, about 135 kilometers southeastof the regional Capital city of Jigjiga on Wednesday, following after ONLF insurgency killed 10 Ethiopian Security forces and regional administratorson Monday. Local sources said that the Ethiopian-appointed regional President Abdi Mohamoud Omar better known as Abdi Iley ordered the arrest and killing of anyone suspected of aiding ONLF in part of security swoop.

Abdi Iley reappointed infamous Omar Gamble as the Police commissionerimmediately after the administration had been sustained heavy assaults by the ONLF in a bid to strike the town residents with an iron fist. "I haveseen at least 50 people that the security forces arrested and loaded on pickup trucks," said an eyewitness who asked not to be identified. The source added that 20 civilians that have been transferred to Guna'gado another town near Degehbur, went missing since yesterday and their fateremains unknown.'

ONLF has been fighting against Ethiopian regimes since 1984 and wantsits oil and gas-rich Ogaden region to gain full Independence from Ethiopian highlanders. Peace-talk between ONLF and Ethiopia stalled in Oct 17,2012 ,after the ONLF refused to accept Ethiopian constitution which it says it says the Ethiopian constitution does not concern the Somalis in Ogaden.

June 28, 2014: Ethiopia and Egypt Ease Tension in Nile River Dispute' Prensa Latina News CAIRO - Egyptand Ethiopia agreed to make up a joint committee to improve relations, stated an official communique published here, something that represents a pause in the dispute arisen from the construction of a dam in Ethiopia. The agreement was reached during a meeting in Malabo, the capital city of Guinea Equatorial, between EgyptianPresident Abdel Fattah El Sisi and Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn. The communique asserted that the Ethiopian Government is committed to avoid any possible damage resulting from the Renassaince dam, which is under construction across the Blue Nile site. Following the talks, Foreign ministers Samih Chukri (Egypt) and Tedros Adhanom (Ethiopia) issued an official statement according to which Ethiopia should understand the significance of the Nile River for Egypt while Egypt should understand Ethiopian projects and development needs.

June 29, 2014: APA News - Ten Sudanese soldiers being killed nearEthiopia border'

African Press Agency - Tension is brewing along the Sudan-Ethiopia borderafter ten Sudanese soldiers were killed in a skirmish with a militia group there on Saturday, the army and witnesses said. Sudanese farmers in Gedaref State told the {African Press Agency } on Sunday that another 13soldiers were injured in the attack believed to have been carried out by anEthiopian militia. Other reports spoke of Sudan's Paramilitary Popular Defense (PDF) amassing troops near the border with Ethiopia in the wake of the incident, the second in one month. Sudan and Ethiopia agreed to deploy joint patrols along their common border to prevent the movement of rebels, smugglers and human traffickers. The Sudanese army confirmedthe incident but denied the suspected involvement of Ethiopian regular forces. Army spokesman Colonel Alswarmy Khalid Saad told APA that the soldiers were killed in clashes with an unidentified Ethiopian group, describing the incident as isolated. He said clashes between the Sudanese troops and the militias took place on the farmlands in Basonda near the border on Saturday morning. The gunmen were attempting to control agricultural projects in Basonda, which are owned by the Popular Defence Forcesâ Saad claimed. According to Saad, the Ethiopian authorities have been notified of the incident.
Radiodabanga News updates: Sudan militiamen killed, injured in Gedaref:Ten members of the paramilitary Popular Defence Forces (PDF) were killed, and 13 others wounded in Gedaref State on Friday. Ethiopian gunmen attacked farmlands in the area of Basonda at the Sudanese- Ethiopian border on Friday morning, a farmer reported to Radio Dabanga from the area. "Ten PDF troops were killed and 13 other injured." "The gunmen are attempting to control agricultural projects in Basonda, which are owned by the Popular Defence Forces", the farmer explained. "This is the second attack within one month."
June 29, 2014: Ethiopia reportedly fires 18 journalists from a state-runoutlet.
(EM News) On June 25, when 18 journalists from Ethiopia's state-run Oromia Radio and Television Organization (ORTO) arrived to start their scheduled shifts, they learned their employment had been terminated "with orders from the higher ups." The quiet dismissal of some 10 percentof the station's journalists underscores the country's further descent into total media blackout. The firing of dissenting journalists is hardly surprising; the ruling party controls almost all television and radio stationsin the country. Most diaspora-based critical blogs and websites are blocked. Dubbed one of the enemies of the press, Ethiopia currently imprisons at least 17 journalists and bloggers. On April 26, only days before US Secretary of State John Kerry's visit to the capital, Addis Ababa,authorities arrested six bloggers and three journalists on charges of working with foreign rights groups and plotting to incite violence using social media. The reports of the firings come on the heels of months of anti-government protests by students around the country's largest state, Oromia. Starting in mid-April, students at various colleges around the country took to the streets to protest what they saw as unconstitutional encroachment by federal authorities on the sovereignty of the state of Oromia, which according to a proposed plan would annex a large chunk ofits territory to the federal capital—which is also supposed to double as Oromia's capital. Authorities fear that an increasingly assertive Oromo nationalism is threatening to spin out of state control, and see journalists as the spear of a generation coming of age since the current Ethiopian regime came to power in 1991. To the surprise of many, the first reports of opposition to the city's plan came from ORTO's flagship television network, the TV Oromiyaa (TVO).

June 30, 2014: Ginbot-7 Top Offical Detained In Yemen'

Ginbot 7 says will revenge if Andargachew is transfered to Ethiopia' ESAT News - Andargachew Tsige, has been detained by Yemeni officials while transiting via Sanaa, ESAT Television has reported. ESAT quoted Ginbot 7 as saying that there have been ongoing undisclosed discussionswith Yemeni officials to get Andargachew released, however Yemeni officials have been stubborn to release him. Ginbot 7 Movement, which is chaired by an Ethiopian Economics Professor based in the U.S. and is considered to be one of the most strongest and most feared opposition movements outside Ethiopia, has threatened to take revenge measures "ifAndargachew is transferred to Ethiopia, where he could face psychical, lifeand psychological harm, the relations between the two countries could be affected and we will take revenge measures on Ethiopian officials at anytime and anywhere." the presser stated.

Andargachew Tsige has been serving as the Secretary General of the Movement since it was founded in 2008. He is popularly known for his action and practice orientated activities within the Movement and the opposition in general. A few months ago the Ethiopian government had reportedly employed some members of Kenyan security forces to kidnap two members of delegation of Ethiopian rebel group ONLF who were in Nairobi to negotiate with Ethiopian government delegates with the invitation of Kenyan government. Meanwhile, Ethiopians living in differentparts of the world are to stage demonstrations outside Yemeni Embassiesin Europe, Asia and America calling Yemen and the president of Yemen Abd Rabbuh Mansur Hadi to "Immediately release Ethiopian opposition politician and activist Andargachew Tsige", who is now under the custodyof Yemeni securities for more than a week.

June 30, 2014: Ethiopia News-Oilseed overtakes coffee as top exportearner'

(WIC) Addis Ababa, Ethiopia – Export of oilseeds has become the biggest foreign exchange earner for Ethiopia overtaking coffee, the country's number one export item for decades. A ten-month performance report obtained from the Ministry of Trade (MoT) reveals that Ethiopia obtained just under 585 million

USD from export of oilseeds, knocking coffee off its perch for the first time. In contrast, coffee generated 489.28 million USD during the same period. The country exported over 404 thousand tons of oilseeds during the first ten months of the budget year, a rise of over 10 per cent compared to the same period last year. The revenue obtained also showed a growth of 52 per cent compared to the same period last year. The achievement is over 95 per cent of the revenue the ministry projected to obtain during the period. However, the picture is rather gloomy for coffee. The ministry projected to obtain 822.08 million USD during the first ten months but achieved about 60 per cent of the target. When compared to the previous budget year, export performance of coffee in the first ten months of this budget year showed a decline of 8.7 per cent and 15 per cent in amount exported and revenue generated, respectively. The overall export performance saw the country earn 2.6 billion USD during the ten months of the budget year, registering a growthof 4.8 per cent from the last year.

July 3, 2014: “He is a criminal, and he definitely will have his day incourt,” Ethiopia’s government spokesperson told about Ginbot 7 Andargachew Tsegie.

ADDIS ABABA – Ethiopia said on Thursday it wanted to extradite the leader of an outlawed opposition group arrested in Yemen to face terrorism charges. “He is a criminal, and he definitely will have his day incourt,” government spokesperson Getachew Reda told AFP. AndargachewTsige, secretary general of Ginbot 7 – labelled a terrorist organisation under Ethiopian law – was arrested while transiting through the airport ofYemen’s capital Sanaa last week, according to a statement from the group. Yemen’s National Security said he was held because his name was“on a list”, but giving no further details. Getachew said it would be “the right thing” if Yemen extradited Andargachew, accusing him of plotting terror attacks in Ethiopia. “He’s the head of a terrorist organisation who has been flaunting his leadership for terror operations inside Ethiopia,” hesaid. But Ginbot 7 said Andargachew was detained illegally and called for his release.

Freedom fighter: “The Yemeni government doesn’t have any right to detain Andargachew, even for an hour,” it said in a statement. The US- based Ginbot 7 says it is fighting for democracy and freedom in Ethiopia, and has called for the overthrow of the ruling party. The group vowed to seek retribution if Andargachew, who they called a “freedom fighter”, is extradited to Ethiopia. “If Andargachew is transferred into the custody of the Ethiopian government, if his life and physical wellbeing is threatened, we will avenge,” it warned, without giving further details. In 2012 severalpeople were convicted for having links to Ginbot 7, including journalist Eskinder Nega and opposition leader Andualem Arage, who were handed heavy sentences. The group’s leader, former Addis Ababa mayor Berhanu

Nega, lives in exile in the US. Rights groups have accused Ethiopia of using the anti-terrorism legislation to silence dissent and jail critics, callingthe legislation vague and over-reaching. – AFP

July 3, 2014: Andargachew Tsige may already be in Addis Ababa'

(ER) The British embassy in Yemen is unable to visit Ethiopian opposition leader Andargachew Tsige and Ethiopian Review sources in Addis Ababa are reporting that he has been sent to Addis Ababa over a week ago on June 22. The Yemeni secret police handed him over to the Woyanne juntaagents within 72 hours after he was abducted while on a transit flight through Yemeni capital Sana'a, according to our sources. Ato Andargachew is a British citizen and has been traveling on British passport. The Yemeni government may have violated multiple international laws by detaining him from a transit flight and handing him over to the brutal dictatorship in Ethiopia where he is facing a death penalty.

July 4, 2014: MP Ana Gomes confirms that Yemen handed over Andargachew Tsige to Ethiopia' In a letter to the U.K. Minister for ForeignAffairs William Hague, European Member of Parliament Ana Gomes has said that Ato Andargachew Tsige has been handed over to the regime in Ethiopia.

July 4, 2014: UPDATES "I have received information Mr. Andargachew Tsige Was Extradited to Ethiopia" Mme Ana Gomes said. "An Ethiopian activist who is currently based in London and is a holder of a British Passport has been detained in Sana'a on Monday, June 22nd. His name is Andargachew Tsege, he is a major Ethiopian opposition leader, and he was travelling from Dubai to Asmara, Eritreia, in Yemenia Airways which was transiting through Sana'a. From the information I got, the Yemeni authorities have detained him at the airport and is whereabouts were unknown for days. I was informed that the British Embassy was aware of the detention and I believe that Yemeni authorities acted at the request ofthe Ethiopian authorities".

"Today, I have received information that Mr. Tsege was extradited to Ethiopia, which means that his life and physical integrity are in great danger and that he will be wrongfully accused of crimes he did not commit. I am shocked with this blatant violation of the principle of non- refoulement by Yemeni authorities and seriously disappointed with the lack of visible action on the part of the British authorities, to secure the protection of Mr. Tsege. I urge you, now, to do the utmost to ensure therelease and the highest possible protection of Mr. Tsege in Ethiopia and his return to the United Kingdom as soon as possible."

On the British Government's stance on the death penalty: "The UK opposes the death penalty in all circumstances as a matter of principle. Itsuse undermines human dignity, there is no conclusive evidence of its deterrent value, and any miscarriage of justice leading to its imposition isirreversible and irreparable. We continue to call on all countries around the world that retain the death penalty to cease its use." (Text ends)

July 4, 2014: STATEMENT:British government said on extradition of opposition leader' Martin Plaut: This statement was issued today by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. On the case: "A British national, Andargachew Tsege, was reported missing in Yemen on 24 June. Since then UK officials have pressed the Yemeni authorities at senior levels to establish his whereabouts, including meeting with the Yemeni Ambassadorin London this week. We are aware of reports that he may now be in Ethiopia and we are urgently seeking confirmation from the relevant authorities given our deep concerns about the case. We are continuing to provide consular assistance to his family. "We are aware of reports that hemay now be in Ethiopia and are urgently seeking confirmation. If confirmed this would be deeply concerning given our consistent requests for information from the Yemeni authorities, the lack of any notification of his detention in contravention of the Vienna Convention and our concerns about the death penalty that Mr Tsege could face in Ethiopia."

July 4, 2014: MEDIA NEWS: Ethiopian born Kuwaiti citizen says Ethiopian maids practice witchcraft and sorcery (magic). "When Ethiopians get angry, they will slaughter you" A TV interview widely circulated in Kuwait featured an Ethiopian-Kuwaiti woman who spoke against Ethiopian domestic workers. The naturalized woman called "Um Muhammad" is married to a Kuwaiti man. She warned Kuwaitis from recruiting Ethiopiansdomestic workers because they are not obedient and practice witchcraft. Seeming to have internalized myths of Arab superiority, Um Muhammad claimed Ethiopian domestic workers are tempered and that she herself learned from Kuwaitis how to control her temper.

July 4, 2014: OBITUARY: Her Royal Highness Princess Hirut DestaDamtew dies at age 84'

The cause of the death is unknown, but Princess Hirut had been in poor health for several years. Her funeral services was held on at the Holy Trinity Cathedral in Addis Ababa, and her remain layed at the side of the deceased members of the royal family. The mass funeral was attended byEthiopian Orthodox Church religious leaders including the priests of Lalibela churches, members of the royal family, government officials, andthe public.

Princess Hirut Desta, aka Ruth Desta was the daughter of Dejazmach Desta Damtew (posthumously Ras) was a hero of Ethiopia's resistance movement which fought against the Italian occupation. He was capturedand executed by fascist Italians at a market place in Sidamo in 1937.

After his death, Princess Hirut and her siblings accompanied their motherPrincess Tenagnework Haileselassie, the first daughter child of Emperor Haileselassie into exile and lived with their grandfather the emperor in Bath, England.

Long after the reliberation of Ethiopia, Princess Hirut Desta was married toLt. General Nega Tegegne, the renowned military strategist and military commander of elite armed unit, then upon her marriage she was elevated

by her grandfather to the title of Princess with the dignity of ‘Her RoyalHighness’, in 1968.
During the time when Lt. General Nega Tegegn, was nominated by the premier Lij Endalkachew Makonnen as governor of the province of Begemder & Semien on the start of the Yekatit (February) Revolution, HerRoyal Highness has been moved with her husband to Gondar whos administered the region until he escapes a slightly capture.
Princess Ruth was the granddaughter of Emperor Haileselassie as well as she was the elder sister of the late Rear Admiral Eskinder Desta, the former Deputy commander-in-chief of the Imperial Naval Force who was killed by the former military Duerg regime when it summarily executed 60ex-imperial officials and others in the nobility.
Along with her mother Princess Tenagnework and her three sibilings, Aida,Seble, and Sofya, she was sent without trial to Prison; their male cousins (princes, Wossen Seged, Mikael, Taffari known as Makonnen, and Baade Mariam et-al) were put in the high-security wing, known by its Amharic term as “Alem Bekagne” meaning for “I have had enough of the world”.
For nearly 14 years until a release by amnesty secured for all females of the royal family in 1988. Princess Tenagnework, Hirut, and other females and male cousins were detained in cramped, fetid cells, which they sharedwith rats and lice as they were not allowed visitors, and were without lavatories, warm clothes and shoes. July 4, 2014: Eritrea threatened Yemen with breaking off diplomatic relations over the abduction of Ethiopian opposition leader. Eritrean government insiders have informed Ethiopian Review today that PresidentIsaias Afwerki has warned Yemen that his government will take strong measures such as breaking off diplomatic relations if Ethiopian opposition leader Andargachew Tsige, who was kidnapped by Yemeni secret police, isharmed. Andargachew Tsige, Secretary General of Ethiopian opposition group, Ginbot 7, whose travel itinerary included a visit to Eritrea, was abducted on June 22, 2014, while transiting through Sana'a, Yemen.
Ethiopian Review sources in Addis Ababa are reporting that Ato Andargachew was handed over to Ethiopian regime's secret police within72 hours of his abduction by Yemeni police and that he is currently in Addis Ababa at Maikelawi Prison, also knows as Torture Mecca. Ato Andargachew is a naturalized British citizen, but so far the British government has not said any thing in public about his abduction.
July 5, 2014: MEDIA NEWS: The UK Accused Of Failing To Act Accordingly’The UK accused of failing to prevent the extradition to Ethiopia of an opposition leader facing the death penalty’ The UK Guardian newspaper onthe kidnapping of Ethiopian opposition leader Andargachew Tsige in Yemen: The Foreign Office has been accused of failing to act to prevent the extradition to Ethiopia of an opposition leader facing the death penalty. Andargachew Tsige, a British national, is secretary general of an exiled Ethiopian opposition movement, Ginbot 7. He was arrested at Sana'a airport on 23 June by the Yemeni security services while in transit between the United Arab Emirates and Eritrea. "The British knew he was being held in Yemen for almost a week but they did nothing," said EphremMadebo, a spokesman for Ginbot 7.

The Foreign Office, which called in the Yemeni ambassador earlier this week, said it was urgently seeking confirmation that Andargachew was in Ethiopia. "If confirmed this would be deeply concerning given our consistent requests for information from the Yemeni authorities, the lack of any notification of his detention in contravention of the Vienna convention and our concerns about the death penalty that Mr Tsige could face in Ethiopia," the Foreign Office said in a statement. It added: "The UKopposes the death penalty in all circumstances as a matter of principle … We continue to call on all countries around the world that retain the deathpenalty to cease its use."

July 5, 2014: OPPOSITION: Patriotic measures should be taken to unseatthe ruling party'

The abduction of Andargachew Tsige at an international airport by Yemeniand regime secret police is a blatant violation of international law. The regime idiotic and illegal action should be condemned by all civilized countries around the world. Otherwise, it will expose all government officials and senior political figures to similar kidnappings by rogue regimes such as those in Yemen and Ethiopia. Patriotic Ethiopians can take the following measures: (1)Stop feeding the beast (boyot regime affiliated businesses and parastatals) (2) Calls for a lawsuit by Andargachew's family against Yemeni government. (3) Amplifying the name and shame of the UK Government for not acting accordingly (the international law and the Geneva Convention) to protect Andargachew, whos a holder of British passport. (4) Next time the ethno-centrist regimein Ethiopia sends its senior officials any where in the world, it is within theright of Ethiopians to make citizen arrests and hand them back over to local law enforcement officials to charge them with trumped up charges. (5)Boycot regime businesses and properties in Ethiopia as part of a peaceful civil disobedience campaign. The (Ginbot-7) leadership needs to also examine its reaction to Andargachew's abduction. Why did it take them 10 days to inform the Ethiopian public about such a dastardly crimeagainst its senior leader? Ginbot 7's response so far has been timid and deplorable, to say the least. Hopefully they will regroup and lead a worldwide campaign to secure his release.

July 5, 2014: Ethiopian killed, another injured in truck ambush on Juba- Bor road in South Sudan' (ST News) BOR – At least one person, believed to be from Ethiopia, was killed on Saturday after en route to Juba from leaving Jonglei state capital. The truck came under gunfire near Bang- achorot, not far from the Jonglei-Central Equartoria border. A source fromBor police told Sudan Tribune said that the alleged attackers were seen wearing the green uniforms of the national army (SPLA), carrying jerry cans and weapons.

The driver of the truck, who is believed to be an Ethiopian national, was killed instantly. His conductor, also from Ethiopia, and another passengerfrom Jonglei state's Kolnyang payam(district) were also injured in the attack. The two wounded were taken to Bor hospital, according to a relative of the injured Dinka man. Mac Akoi Mac was shot in the chest, while the Ethiopian conductor suffered a light head injury and was laterreleased from hospital. Akem Chuti Joh, who took his cousin to hospitalfor treatment, said the group encountered the attackers while fetching water from a river. “The attackers were many, but were not counted,” he said. The incident has stirred debate among Bor residents, as speculation grows over who asresponsible for the attack. Some pointed the finger at Murle tribesmen, while others blamed Nuer soldiers who were said to have defected from Camp-15 near Kapeota in Eastern Equatoria state two weeks ago. Others suspect Mundari criminals who have attacked and robbed buses in the past. On 8 April, two middle-aged pastors and two other young men lost their lives in an attack at the same place. No suspects have been arrested.July 7, 2014: Anadolu Agency: PM says negotiations with Egypt not easy. Ethiopia PM interview: Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn hassaid that negotiations with Egypt over the Renaissance Dam will not be easy, expecting Egypt to offer difficult proposals. In a speech on Monday at the Ethiopian Parliament, Desalegn said, “It is a new start. Ethiopia will follow on this. Negotiations will not be easy.” Desalegn also added that his country will continue working on the dam while keeping in mind the interests of the downstream countries. Ties between Cairo and Addis Ababa deteriorated after Ethiopia started constructing the Renaissance Dam in 2011 on the Blue Nile stream. Egypt fears the dam would affect itshistoric share of the Nile water. Ethiopia, however, insists that the dam will not harm Egyptian interests. After President Abdel Fattah al-Sisi’s election, Egypt said it would resume negotiations with Ethiopia.

July 7, 2014: ETV Report - Andargachew Tsege Detained in Ethiopia -

Ethiopia urged to protect the opposition leader. Ethiopian government urged to protect opposition leader at a detention where he is severely beaten. Meantime, the government admitted Andargachew’s detention after it's repeated denials of having him in Addis Ababa. Human Rights Watch (HRW) says an exiled Ethiopian opposition leader who was recently deported from Yemen to Ethiopia is at risk of abuses including torture. A vital point overlooked by HRW as well as AI is that Andargachew Tsige had previously been subjected to inhumane mistreatment and torture followed by the May- 2005 election long before he espoused armed rebellion against the tyranny in Ethiopia. In that torture,he nearly lost sight of his one eye.To avenge Andargachew and to force him stop his activism from overseas, the brutal regime also jailed his80 years old father who was suffering from a serious cardiac condition. It'sbelieved these points need to be highlighted always so that all concerned parties should understand that the current rulers brutality has nothing to do with one's picking up a gun to challenge their power. Cruelty is partand parcel of this brutal regime in Ethiopia.

July 8, 2014: Ethiopia parliament approved 178.6 billion-birr ($9.2 billion)budget for 2014-2015' ADDIS ABABA, (Reuters) Ethiopia's parliament approved a 178.6 billion-birr ($9.2 billion) budget for 2014-2015 on Monday, a 15 percent rise from the previous year that will boost spendingon education, health and road building. Strong state intervention has boosted the economy over the past decade and economic growth is set torise to 8.5 percent in 2014/15 from 8 percent in 2013/14, the International Monetary Fund forecasts.

The IMF has warned that Ethiopia's huge spending on roads, railways andpower is suffocating private lending. It says a reduced public expenditurewould make room for the private sector to access credit. The 2014/2015 budget, unanimously endorsed by lawmakers, allocates more than 64 percent of the total amount for development spending.

Of that, Addis Ababa will spend 24.55 billion birr on education, up from 22.48 billion the previous year. Health spending will rise 12 percent to 5.15 billion birr and 29 billion birr will be spent on road building. Infrastructure projects over the last decade include hydro-electric dams and other power projects to offer cheap electricity, and a growing networkof roads and railways.

Ethiopia, Africa's second-most populous nation after Nigeria, aims to expand its road network to 136,000 km (84,500 miles) by 2015 from lessthan 50,000 km in 2010. It plans to build 5,000 km of railway lines by 2020. The capital will soon have its own metro, a rarity in Africa. Defencespending will increase to 8 billion birr, from 7.5 billion, in a country with the largest army in the Horn of Africa. Ethiopia is a key U.S ally in the region and is fighting al Qaeda-linked insurgents in Somalia as part of an African Union mission. It has also deployed peacekeepers in South Sudan.The 2014/2015 budget runs from July 8 to July 7 next year.

Members of the Ethiopian community living in London turned out to show their support for the jailed secretary-general of Ginbot 7, Andargachew Tsige. Today (Tuesday) the British government put out a statement sayingthat Mr Andargachew was being held in Addis Ababa after being extraditedfrom Yemen. The demonstration calling for his release, outside the Foreignand Commonwealth Office in central London., amplifies Yemen's transfer of Mr Tsige to Ethiopia is in violation of international law. Under the international Convention against Torture, to which Yemen is a party, a state may not "expel, return ('refouler') or extradite a person to another state where there are substantial grounds for believing that he would be indanger of being subjected to torture." July 8, 2014: Horn Affairs News: Ethiopia gov't detained more people today for working with Ginbot-7 and its media ESAT. The counter- terrorism unit recalled that another British national of Ethiopian origin, Abebe Wendmagegn, was captured, along its collaborators, while preparing to bomb Bole-Medhanialem, a busy section of the capital city,on January 2014. The man, who was under Andargachew Tsigie's command was tried and convicted later. The statement from the Joint Counter Terrorism Unit of the National Intelligence and Security Service and the Federal Police indicated further that “suspects who have been embedded in legal opposition parties, but working with Ginbot-7 and its media ESAT have been detained today with court warrants” The statementdidn’t disclose their identity. However, it has been learnt that officials of the opposition parties Unity for Democracy and Justice (UDJ/Andinet), Semayawi party and Arena-Tigrai party – Habtamu Ayalew, Daniel Shibeshi, Yeshiwas Assefa and Abraha Desta were detained today. Arena- Tigrai party’s executive member and well-known facebook activist, AbrahaDesta, was detained late afternoon today, outside Mekele University compound, where he works as a lecturer. His house was searched by the police. Horn Affairs was not able to confirm the reasons for their detentionat the writing of this news. The statement triumphantly claimed that “having foreign countires’ citizenship, being a journalist or membership in a legal opposition party cannot provide immunity from legal accountability” (Text ends)

July 8, 2014: Ethiopia arrests four young, prominent opposition figures (Ethiomedia News)

WASHINGTON, DC - Police on Tuesday arrested four young and prominent political leaders: Habtamu Ayalew, Daniel Shibeshi(both Andinet Party leaders), Yeshiwas Assefa (Semayawi Party) and Mekelle University instructor Abraha Desta, also a leader of Arena Opposition Party in Mekelle, Tigrai region.

Habtamu Ayalew, public relations head of the opposition Andinet Party, widely known as a great protest rally organizer and inspirational speaker,is jailed at the notorious Makelawi Prison.

Habtamu was preparing to travel to the United States where substantial supporters of Andinet Party live.

In the meantime, police have also arrested Daniel Shibeshi and Yeshiwas Assefa. The house of Daniel Shibeshi was being searched in his own presence, Andinet Party chairmanGizachew Shiferaw told the Voice of America (VOA) on Teusday.

Away from the Ethiopian capital to Mekelle, the regional capital of Tigrai,Abraha Desta, a Mekelle University political science instructor widely known among Ethiopians for his opposition notes on his FaceBook page,was being beaten brutally when scurity men took him to an unidenitifed prison, eyewitnesses told Asgede Gebreselassie, a veteran opposition activist who informed Ethiomedia by phone from the city of Mekelle on Tuesday.

"We have asked seven police stations in the city; we couldn't find him there. We don't know if he is jailed at '06'," Asgede said, the inference of "06" meaning an absolutely secret underground prison where hundreds or even thousands of opposition supporters have disappeare. Believed to be on the outskirts of Mekelle, the hellish "06" Prison is unknown to the "legalsystem", and no inmate from "06" has ever appeared in any court of law, even if the courts are under the control of the regime.

Abraha Desta, 31, shot to prominence a few years ago via his FaceBookpage, for his sharp and witty notes critical of the ruling TPLF/EPRDF regime. As executive committee member of the opposition Arena Party,Abraha has been a lone, fearless voice in a society that has been tormented by the TPLF regime. Seen by the West as a partner in the waron terror, Ethiopia has used the leverage to weaken and eventually decimate dissenting voices since TPLF came to power in May 1991. Nationwide crackdown in Oromia, Amhara, Ogaden and other regions ofthe country go unnoticed by the rest of the world. Peaceful and law- abiding Muslims are targets of the government for asking the respect ofreligious freedom, an activist from Addis Ababa who sought anonymity emailed Ethiomedia following the arrest of the activists. "Clearly, the political climate is ripe for change," said Asgede, "what's left is for the opposition to unite and act." (Text ends)

July 11, 2014: ETHIOPIAN NEWS: PMHD defends Andargachew Tsege'sarrest.

Death most resembles a prophet who is without honor in his own land or apoet who is a stranger among his people. -Khalil Gibran (BBC) Ethiopia had a moral obligation to arrest the opposition leader who was controversially extradited from Yemen last month, Ethiopian leader Hailemariam Desalegn has told the BBC. "Andargachew Tsege is a Trojan horse for the Eritrean government to destabilise this country," he said. He(Andargachew) was sentenced to death in 2009 while in exile for plotting a coup. Foreign governments could express their concern, but the man would be dealt with according to the law, the PM said. Andargachew, a UKnational, is secretary-general of Ethiopia's banned Ginbot 7 movement.

The group says Andargachew was on his way from the United Arab Emirates to Eritrea when he was detained at Sanaa airport on 24 June. Ethiopia and Eritrea are long-time rivals and the neighbours fought a bitter border war between 1998 -2000, which left some 100,000 people dead. 'Caught red-handed': Earlier this week, the British Foreign Office said it had raised its "deep concerns" with both Ethiopia and Yemen over Andargachew's extradition and had requested reassurances that the deathpenalty, imposed in absentia, would not be carried out.

The meeting was organized by the Democratic Change in Ethiopia Support Organization in Norway (DCESON), held on the 12th of July 2014, attended by the participants that came from the different towns and cities in Norway and lasted for several hours. The meeting started at 15;00 (3:00 p.m.) local time and many of the participants wore T-shirts bearing the portrait of ato Andargachew Tsige and maxim `I am also Andargachew Tsige. This made the meeting splendid and glamorous. July 17, 2014: News: Ethiopia deported Andargachew Tige's Sister (ESAT News) Washington DC (USA) Ethiopia has deported on Wednesday the sister of Mr. Andargachew Tsige who was recently extradited by Yemen to Ethiopia, sources told ESAT. The sister of Mr. Andargachew, Bizuayehu Tsige, is confirmed to have arrived early on Thursday to the USA. Bizuayehu, according to ESAT sources, have been told on Wednesday by Ethiopian security agents to leave the country within 24 hours. She was in the country to follow her brother's case. Bizuayehu has been in Ethiopia for the past ten days.It is not yet clear where Andargachew Tsige is being detained since his extradition by the Yemeni security forces. Many international human rights organizations says the move violates 'International Laws". It is recalled that the UK Foreign Officehas been accused of failing to act to prevent the extradition of Mr.

Andargachew to Ethiopia who have been sentenced to death in absentia.Andargachew Tsige, a British national, is secretary general of Ethiopian opposition movement, Ginbot 7. Mr.Andargachew was arrested at Sana'aairport on 23 June 2014 by the Yemeni security services while in transit.July 17, 2014: Security sends thousands of Oromo students to concentration camps'

Ethiopia News: Reliable sources received additional reports from Addis Ababa, Ambo and other towns that the number of Oromo high-school andcollege students who have been arrested and sent to concentration campsnow exceeds 40,000. The students have been rounded up following the recent riots where TPLF-controlled banks and stores were set on fire. To cover up the campaign of suppression against the Oromo youth, earlier this month TPLF fired from state media 20 Oromo journalists who are suspected of leaking information to websites and social media. The internal security is sending the Oromo students to Afar region and other remote and extremely inhospitable areas of Ethiopia claiming that they are homeless. Even if they are homeless, it is not necessary to send themto areas of the country that are known for their extreme weather conditions. But the above photo that was leaked to Ethiopian Review and social media (despite the TPLF propaganda machine's attempt to create a false story around it) tells a different story. It clearly indicates that the 3,000 young Ethiopians shown are high-school and college students. Mostof the homeless in Addis Ababa are teenagers and elderly people, as the photos below show:

Meantime, Jen Psaki US State Department Spokesperson briefed reporters that the United States government is deeply concerned by the Ethiopian Federal High Court's July 18 decision to press charges against six bloggers and three independent journalists under the Anti- Terrorism Proclamation. Department Spokesperson told "The United States is deeply concerned by the Ethiopian Federal High Court's July 18 decision to press charges against six bloggers and three independent journalists under the Anti-Terrorism Proclamation. We urge the Ethiopian government to ensure that the trial is fair, transparent, and in compliancewith Ethiopia's constitutional guarantees and international human rights obligations. We also urge the Ethiopian government to ensure that the trial is open to public observation and free of political influence. We reiterate Secretary Kerry's May 1 call on Ethiopia to refrain from using anti-terrorism laws as a mechanism to curb the free exchange of ideas.

The use of the Anti-Terrorism Proclamation in previous cases against journalists, activists, and opposition political figures raises serious questions and concerns about the intent of the law, and about the sanctityof Ethiopians' constitutionally guaranteed rights to freedom of the press and freedom of expression. Freedom of expression and freedom of the press are fundamental elections of a democratic society. The arrest of journalists and bloggers, and their prosecution under terrorism laws, has achilling effect on the media and all Ethiopians' right to freedom of expression."

July 19, 2014: ESAT News: Police brutality wounds many Muslims inAddis.

The prayers of Ethiopian Muslims in Anwar Mosque which was accompanied by the airing of slogans which said "We will gain an equivalent result for the sacrifices we paid", has been followed by bloodsheds. Due to a conflict that was purposely sparked by the Federal Police, many Muslims have been wounded. Hundreds of the worshipers have been arrested and were sent to various prisons. Some worshipers have told ESAT that some of their fellows have been killed; ESAT has not yet confirmed this information from independent sources. ESAT had earlierreceived a tip that members of the Federal Police Force were preparing to take actions. Government securities, having been given fake identity cardswith Muslim names, had reportedly been among the worshipers guiding the police who to catch.

A study has shown for the first time how thesepernicious trends feed off each other. In Ethiopia's Muslim communities it is often deeply shameful or "sinful" for girls to remain unmarried after they begin menstruating, notes the ODI. But once girls are married and sexually initiated, parents consider their social and religious obligations complete.

July 21, 2014: Murder at an EPRDF security meeting; 2 agents fromAmhara region killed.

The state security in Ethiopia summoned intelligence officers (spies) from different regions of the country for a meeting in Addis Ababa. On the second day of the meeting, Deputy security chief Issayas Woldegiorgis started berating agents who came from the Amhara region, accusing themof being inefficient and double agents leaking state secrets to the opposition media such as ESAT, and ignoring orders. He also showered them with lots of oral insults. He called them "fandiya" (horse dung), "shermuta" (Harlet), "shintam," (Urinating) et-cetra to mention just a few of the insults he hurled against at the agents. Some of the agents have had enough and when they started to talk back to Issayas, the meeting erupted into a shouting scene. At this point, Issayas' personal bodyguardsapproached two of the more vocal ones and shot them at point-blank range. Both agents, who came from the Amhara region, died on the scene, according to sources, then Issayas Woldegiorgis left right after the shooting and the agents who were the only ones allowed to carry weapons, dispersed the meeting. The ruling EPRDF has a slave/mastertype relationship with the other partners in the coalition, but some of them recently (OPDO/ANDM) are showing signs of independence.

July 22, 2014: ESAT News:Tension beats parts of Ethiopia.

Most parts of Ethiopia had been in tension after conflicts erupted betweenresidents and government securities and many were detained. In Merahabete, Central Northern Ethiopia, a civilian has been killed in a clashthat started in relation to problem with an electric transformer. Residents have later started protesting by throwing stones against armed police officers, who were shooting back at them. The total number of casualties is not yet known but a few civilians have been wounded and taken to hospital. Despite the continuing tension, the Zonal Administrator has summoned the local people. Similarly, in the town of Enfraz, Northern Gonder, local youth, who said were affected due to problems of water and electricity, had blocked the roads and disrupted transportation. After hours of interruption, the protesters were forcefully dispersed by the localpolice. At least four youths have been detained suspected of organising the protest. Separately, twelve people have been arrested in Metema town, North Western Ethiopia in a problem that is related to the ongoing border controversy with the Sudan. The residents told ESAT that some Sudanese investors are coming more than 42 KM inside Ethiopia, beyond the land that the current Ethiopian government gave to the Sudan, to evict Ethiopian farmers from their lands by paying lump sum to local security officials. Twelve youth that opposed the actions have been detained.

July 23, 2014: Ethiopia's ruling Front deploying army to the North.

(ESAT News) Following the recent meeting between Ethiopian securities inthe Prime Minister's Office, the ruling Front, EPRDF, has started deployinga large number of soldiers and heavy weaponry to Shire, Tekeze, Wolqayiet, Metema, Armachiho areas of Northern Ethiopia. Frightened by the reactions of the people in Northern Ethiopia since the abduction and arrest of Andargachew Tsige, Secretary General of the Ginbot 7 Movement, the Front has deployed an increased number of the Force to crush any form of "protest".

The regime's intelligence in the Northern part of the Country had tipped the securities that Ginbot 7 may advance to the Capital by distributing weapons to the farmers in cooperation with the Eritrean government. The Front has now distributed modern telephones to its members andinvestors found in the region to do intelligence work.

Currently, when the number of the members of the Ethiopian National Defense Force that defect is increasing, the regime's new call for new recruits is not receiving enough responses. The defecting soldiers state that the Defense Force is at a low moral due to nepotistic organisation andstructure, poor quality of the meal provided and the high cost of living.

Meanwhile, sources say EPRDF is at a risk of break up. The ruthless actions of the EPRDF leadership especially following the death of the late Prime Minister Meles Zenawi, has annoyed and raised eyebrows even among the members of the Front. The continuation of the accusations andarrest of opposition parties and leaders under the pretext of the anti- terror law has ignited strong opposition and whinging within the lower andmiddle starta of the Front. The Front does not have its own ways of solving internal differences other than evaluation and the fact that it took violent measures against the larger population of the Muslim community during the Ramadan fasting season fuelled the opposition within the Front.The sources say EPRDF has collided with opposition parties, journalists, the civil society, members of the association of the Orthodox Christian faith group of Mehabre Kidusan and also with the majority of the public that is living under the poverty threshold, which makes it clear that it cannot be elected in a democratic manner and therefore, it has decided toforcefully crush any form of protest. The rise of such members that oppose these actions is one of the signs that the regime is at a high risk ofbreak up, the sources note.

Of the roughly 200 nations (both official and partially recognized) in the world, 40 of these countries have no stockexchanges. As frontier market investors with a focus on public equities, keeping an eye out on which countries are about to launch new stock exchanges is important as they usually represent promising investment opportunities. This is because stock exchanges require a great deal of capital, expertise, controls, and economic growth in order to survive, and a stock market launch is a promising sign that early economic challenges have been overcome. We could not find a definitive list of countries with no stock exchanges online, so we have compiled our own. With a population of almost 90 million, Ethiopia is the biggest country in the world without a stock exchange. On the other hand, it is home to Africa's first commodity exchange, the Ethiopia Commodity Exchange (ECX), which began operations in 2008. The ECX was founded by economist EleniGuebre-Madhin and trades five commodities: coffee, sesame, haricot beans, maize, and wheat. While the National Bank of Ethiopia has done studies on the feasibility of a future stock exchange, nothing is planned yet.

August 1, 2014: News - Ethiopian Minister of Trade Chased Away InWahington DC'

Pan-Ethiopians in Washington DC chased Kebede Chanie, Ethiopian Minister of Trade while he was trying to dine at Lalibela Restaurant in DC. Side note: A week before the U.S.-Africa Summit was opened, Ethiopians had confronted the ruling party officials in Houston and Los Angeles wherethey tried to hold meetings with potential investors. PMHD had canceled his scheduled appearances in both cities. A few days ago, the Minister of Commerce, Kebede Chanie, was chased out of Laliebela Ethiopian Restaurant in Washington DC. On Thursday, the Minster of Information, Redwan Hussien, has been confronted by Ethiopian activists at a shoppingcenter in Arlington, Virginia. Since the abduction of Ethiopian opposition leader Adargachew Tsega, who travels with a British passport, by Ethiopian security agents at Sanna'a International airport in Yemen, the anger against regime has re-intensified. It was not only the Ethiopia government officials who are trying to keep under the radar. Mohammed Al Amoudi, the wealthy Ethio-Saud who is in town for the Summit, did notshow his face any where. The Diaspora Investment Forum planned by Zemedneh Negatu of Ernest & Young in Washington DC was also canceled.As the state terror intensifies against journalists, bloggers, and opposition leaders in Ethiopia, angry and frustrated Ethiopians around the world are hunting down and confronting Ethiopian regime officials who are responsible for the repression.

August 4, 2014: A Global call to Stop the State of Siege in Ethiopia.

The Global Alliance for the Rights of Ethiopians (GARE), an all-inclusive human rights advocacy group is outraged by the state of siege in Ethiopia;and calls on all Ethiopian opposition political parties, civic societies, religious leaders, prominent individuals; and the donor and diplomatic community to rise up express outrage against systematic and recurrent state sponsored human rights abuses, onslaught and terror by the Ethiopian government against its own people. Ominous signs of dissensionand implosion are everywhere. The precedent setting arrest, interrogation,abduction and subsequent rendition of Mr. Andargachew Tsige, a prominent political and human rights activist on June 24, 2014 by Yemeni and Ethiopian Security has formally and brazenly escalated and broadenedthe reign of terror by the Tigray People's Liberation Front (TPLF) and the ruling ethnic coalition, the Ethiopian Peoples' Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) which it commands. A UK citizen, Mr. Tsige's forcible and criminal abduction and rendition to Ethiopia where he is undoubtedly facing the harshest treatment possible is an abrogation of international covenants and civilized behavior. Under the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, the government of Yemen had an obligation to notifythe Embassy of the United Kingdom. Ethiopians are uniformly angry thatYemeni authorities colluded with the Ethiopian government and handed Mr. Tsige to his tormentors; and the UK failed to demand his release thesame way that it would have done if he were not an African. The same can happen to anyone of us.

August 4, 2014: New charges against Ethiopian publications furtherdiminish critical voices.

(CPJ) Five independent magazines and a weekly newspaper have been charged by Ethiopia's Justice Ministry, a move that may add to the long lists of shuttered publications and Ethiopian journalists in exile. In a pressrelease issued August 4, the ministry accused the journals of publishing false information, inciting violence, and undermining public confidence in the government, news reports said. The ministry said it pressed charges after running out of patience with the publications for "encouraging radicalism and terrorism." The state broadcaster aired the ministry's announcement, but none of the publications received the charge sheet, local journalists told me. The six independent publications are Afro Times,a weekly newspaper, and magazines Addis Guday, Enku, Fact, Jano, and Lomi. All are popular alternatives to the state-run press, which espouses an increasingly positive narrative. Local journalists and news reports said the charges could be a way for the ruling party to silence critics ahead of elections expected in May 2015.

August 11, 2014: Defense Forces oppose request to contribute to MelesFoundation.

(ESAT News) Sources from the Ethiopian Defense Forces have opposed calls to contribute money for the Meles Foundation, a foundation established in the name of the late Prime Minster Meles Zenawi. The forces stationed in Bademe Front, Northern Ethiopia, were requested to contribute 200 birr each every month by which soldiers will pay according to their ranks and salary scales. Although personnel in the finance department have attempted to compel the soldiers saying that it is a directive that came from the top, the soldiers have refused to contribute. Similarly, a solider from the 3rd to be apprehended for being suspected ofleading the “protest”. A small pandemonium had erupted just after this incident. Amid this tension, the number of soldiers that defect the army is also increasing, a soldier who recently deserted the Ethiopian Defense said. He said, soldiers that hail from one region are benefiting from the contraband businesses that are going on near Tekeze River. Despite hard living conditions most of the soldiers, who are not benefiting at all from this businesses, are being forced to pay for the Foundation. “They have extra income but our little salary is being cut in the name of contributions”he added. There is a huge economic gap between the rank and file and the top brass of the Ethiopian Defense Forces. Several business people in Ethiopia often tell ESAT that they have been pushed out of the market by Defense officials that import goods under the name of the Defesnse Ministry without paying taxes. Major First Contingent had drowned inside Tekeze River as he was.

August 11, 2014: East African nations on high alert for Ebola - EthiopianAirlines continues to fly to Ebola striken west African countries. The Ethiopian Federal Ministry of Health has also set up its defenses against this scourge. Last week, a workshop was organized by the Ministry in Addis Ababa to educate health workers on the Ebola virus. Reports indicate that more than 200 participants attended the event. Meanwhile,the Ministry has reportedly also formulated a preparedness plan and equipped a unit of front line health workers with the necessary equipments to respond to an outbreak. Ethiopian Airlines has instituted surveillance and preventive measures against Ebola. In a recent statement, the company noted that "The safety and well-being of our customers and staff always come first…Ethiopian has taken the lead in taking extraordinary precautions in connection with the outbreak of the disease in some parts of West Africa."

August 15, 2014: Students with no gov't policy, strategy training to be denied College entry. ESAT News: The Ethiopian Ministry of Education hasissued a mandatory directive that compels over 350 thousand new and existing university students to be trained in government's policy and strategy. The directive also states that students who do not hold the certificate of completion cannot continue their studies. The Minister, Shiferaw Shigute said to journalists that the 116,000 new and 250,000 existing students will be given the training for 15 days receiving per dime.The first round of the training starts next week while the second one will be given in September next year. He said the trainers will be senior government officials but refused to reveal the details and the cost of the training. Other sources however said some of the course modules include Developmental State, Religious Extremism and Terrorism. The ruling Frontis doing this in order to get support in next year's election and succeed itsmembers with university students. The source also revealed that the finance comes from the government's coffers. Similarly, a training is beinggiven to Federal judges, prosecutors, police and security officers about the ruling Front’s ideology, Revolutionary Democracy. Training participants have asked about the need for the training at this time and if judges canact freely when they are being trained by ruling party officials about its policies. Questions were also raised about the potential of future unilinguality in Ethiopia, Emperor Menelik’s legacies and government’s growth rhetoric. Answering to the questions, Front’s official, Abadula Gemeda, said during Menelik’s reign there was “class subjugation in the Amhara region while there was ethnic subjugation in Oromia region”. Healso said his Front follows Taiwan’s and India’s developmental state ideologies. The ruling Front is holding discussions and training with top officials, civil servants and public representative cadres about current national issues.

August 16, 2014: Addis Ababa Administration orders Condo houses to beready before election. ESAT News The Addis Abeba City Administration has passed a new directive ordering the completion of houses being builtunder the 40/60 scheme and the houses to be given to the Ethiopian Diaspora before the election next year. However, ESAT has learnt that it would at least take 16 years to fully complete the building of the houses.The Addis Abeba Housing Enterprise has so far built 13, 800 houses in Sengatera and Kaliti areas, which it plans to distribute to the winners.

ESAT has learned also that the Administration is only building 10, 000 houses per year although 164, 779 people have registered for the scheme. It would take the Administration 16 years to fulfil the demand and house the registrants. During the 2005 general election, the government had promised to house 350,000 people though it is only housing 10,000 people after 10 years. The government spends 2 to 3 billion birr each year for housing purposes but still finds itself short of finance. Tewodros Adhanom, Minister of Foreign Affairs, had also said thata directive has been given to regional authorities so that Ethiopia Diasporamembers could build houses in the regions they choose to. Source has been informed that the building of houses has been stopped due to the shortage of land in Addis Abeba to build houses. The new Addis Abeba Master Plan has been stopped after students in Oromia region protested.

Similarly, the government has been unable to execute the sales of bonds for the construction of the Great Ethiopian Renaissance Dam (GERD). The government had planned to collect 1 billion dollar from the Diaspora. ESAThas been reporting that most fund raising events that were organised by the ruling party have been sternly opposed and disrupted by Ethiopians.

August 18, 2014: Oregon Police News: Ethiopian athletes planned to seekasylum in U.S.
The whereabouts of Amanuel Abebe Atibeha, 17; Dureti Edao, 18; Meaza Kebede, 18; and Zeyituna Mohammed, 18, have not been confirmed sincethey were reported missing.
(AP News) - One of four Ethiopian athletes who went missing during an international track meet in Eugene told a police officer all of them plan to seek asylum in the United States, according to a newly-released University of Oregon police report. Amanuel Abebe, 17, told the police officer that he and three others on the Ethiopian track team, who are 18, planned to apply for asylum at a U.S. immigration office in Portland on July 28, The Register-Guard reported Sunday. The runners were reported missing from the World Junior Championships in Eugene over the July 26-27 weekend, fueling some speculation at the time that they were planningto seek political asylum in the U.S. Three of the athletes were found with acquaintances in Beaverton, Oregon. The fourth, Zeyituna Mohammed, was found with acquaintances in Federal Way, Washington. Mohammed, 18, told a local police officer through an interpreter that she may seek asylum. Ethiopia has seen significant political turmoil and human rights abuses in recent years, and Mohammed said she is afraid to return there, the newspaper reported. The athletes' coaches also told university police officer that the athletes may try to seek U.S. citizenship "to defect from Ethiopia," according to the police report. It's unknown whether the athletes have sought asylum. When the university police officer checked with federal agencies on July 28, none said the athletes had inquired about the asylum process. A spokeswoman with the U.S. Citizen and Immigrations Services said the agency doesn't release that information, citing federal privacy law. The athletes are in the United States legally andcan stay per the terms of their visas, a university official has previously said. To seek asylum, a person must prove persecution because of race, national origin, ethnicity, membership in a particular social class, or political opinion, said Sharon Rummery, a spokeswoman with the Citizen and Immigrations Services. The person must also be afraid to go back to their native country, she said. (Text ends)

August 19, 2014: Ethiopians Christians celebrate a holiday called Buhé (pronounced boo HAY) which is similar to Halloween in the United States.Buhé is celebrated on August 19th (or 20th d...uring leap year) which is during the rainy season in Ethiopia. On the night before Buhé, householdsget bread dough ready for baking the next day. When night falls on August 19, it is customary for groups of children go from door to door asking for bread or dough. They sing a song called "Hoya Hoye" along with other songs and jump up and down until they get their treat. In recent years, these children have begun to ask for money. Unlike, the U.S. Halloween celebration, Ethiopian children do not dress up in costumes. During the night each house lights small bonfires of twigs andeveryone gathers around the flames. Parts of this celebration are said to come from the story of the Lost Children who wandered away and were found by torch light and given bread to eat. NICE BUHE!!

August 28, 2014: ESAT News: Swedish International Criminal Investigation Department given the charges of top Ethiopian government officials. A Task Force established to seek justice for the martyrs and victims of the 2005 Ethiopian General election violence by the government, has submitted a charge containing the names of 13 Ethiopiangovernment and Defense Force officials to the Swedish International Criminal Tribune.
The following officials namely; Arkebe Okubay, Bereket Simon, Abadula Gemeda, General Samora Yunus, Abay Tsehaye, Getachew Assfea, Lt. General Tadese Worede, Hassen Shifa, Mulugeta Berhe, Nega Berhe, Workneh Gebeyehu, Commander Semere and one other official whose name has not been disclosed yet, were charged with ordering the killing,rape, arrest, dismissal, exile and the abduction of citizens. Mola Yigzaw, one of the coordinators and main organisers of the charges, said to ESATthat the Swedish International Criminal Investigation Police has been satisfied with the contents of the charges, the documentary and video evidences. The Police officer who is investigating the Ethiopian case is an experienced officer who also investigated the crimes committed in Yugoslavia and Rwanda. The officer told the Task Force that he has already started the investigation.
Asked what authority Sweden has to sue Ethiopian government officials, Mola said “the reason to file the charges in Sweden was the recent decision of the Swedish parliament that any military crime or human rights violation committed anywhere can be tried in a Swedish Court”. As soon as the Swedish police to the prosecutor who will file the charges in the Swedish International Military Tribunal, Mola said. The current and future results of Police investigations would be submitted to the United Nations Security Council(UNSC). The Council will be asked to give an order for the charges to bepresented in the International Criminal Court (ICC).

The current charge focuses on individual officials but more charges will be brought up soon which include the Ethiopian government. Following that attempts will be made to freeze the money and assets of the Ethiopian government that is found abroad. Mola said that the charges will also sooninclude the heads of the 34 Defense Battalions that led the massacre and pleaded the public to help in identifying their names and details. Mola alsodivulged that there is an ongoing effort via INTERPOL to pursue government officials who are suspected of involvements in the Ogaden region massacre. He also said that the name of the 13th person in the charge has been deliberately withheld.

(Doctors Without Borders) KAMPALA, Uganda - Doctors Without Borderssays a camp in Ethiopia hosting 40,000 refugees from South Sudan is flooded from heavy rains and that it must be abandoned. The medical charity said in a statement Friday that the Lietchuor refugee camp in Ethiopia's Gambella region resembles "a lake dotted with islands." It said newly constructed mud huts for the refugees are completely flooded andthat most patients seen in the camp are suffering from malaria and respiratory infections. After violence broke out in South Sudan last December, tens of thousands of people fled to neighboring countries, including Uganda and Ethiopia. About 875,000 of 1.3 million internally displaced South Sudanese are also living in flood-prone areas, accordingto the U.N.

September 5, 2014: ETHIOPIA: A Destination Crying Out for New Hotels (Africa Hotel Investment Forum) The increasing rate of inbound tourist arrivals and planned events conferences is widening an already huge gap between demand for international-standard hotels and supply of accommodation in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia's capital. A search on Trip Advisor reveals just two international-class, five star hotels in the city, theSheraton and the Radisson Blu - and anecdotes about delegates attendingmeetings at the Africa Union's headquarters having to travel up to 60 miles to find a bed for the night are not unknown. According to research carried out by the Awash International Bank, the projected unsatisfied demand for hotel nights in Ethiopia in 2015 will be 1.3 million, rising to over 3 million by 2020 if new hotels are not built. The accommodation shortage will be high on the agenda at The Africa Hotel Investment Forum(AHIF), Africa's top event for hotel investors, taking place at the end of September in Addis Ababa.

September 6, 2014: Soccer News-Algeria win away at Ethiopia under newcoach

REUTERS ADDIS ABABA, Goals from El Arabi Soudani and Yacine Brahimi ensured Algeria got off to a good start under new coach Christian Gourcuffby beating Ethiopia 2-1 away in Group B of African Nations Cup qualifying on Saturday. Soudani scored 11 minutes before halftime for Algeria, who had faced an early onslaught from their hosts on a wet pitch. He missed a good chance soon after the interval before Leicester City's Riyad Mahrez set up Brahimi for the second in the 79th minute. Ethiopia scored a consolation from the penalty spot deep in stoppage time through Salaheddine Said. Gourcuff, who replaced Vahid Halilhodzic after the World Cup, kept faith with most of the team that reached the last 16 in Brazil, where they were beaten by eventual winners Germany after extra time. (Reporting by Mark Gleeson in Johannesburg; Editing by Toby Davis)September 8, 2014 ESAT News: EPRDF spent over 900 million Eth. Birr in one year for events'

Side note: In the Ethiopian fiscal year which being completed, the ruling Front, EPRDF, had spent over 900 million Ethiopian birr for the Front's political works from the government budget. The sources say the receiptsadded up so far suggest that the Front spent the money for the celebration of Nationalities Day, Flag Day, Defense Day, training of highereducation students, training of police officers, reform training and the training of over 100 thousand members of the EPRDF.

The final balance might even be above 900million birr, they added, the money belongs the tax payer and the general auditor accounts it as the'government's expense'. The sources said especially some of the events such as Nationalities Day, Flag Day and Defense Day are largely organisedand contracted by companies and people that are affiliated with the government and benefit by suggesting ideas for projects that they can winthrough backdoor deals.

The sources say the government has been using funds that came for fighting HIV/AIDS and other diseases. Especially after the fund from the Global Fund was cut, the Front started using the government's finance to fund its political projects. According to the sources, although some of the programs are given recognition by the government, their main role is reflecting EPRDF's Revolutionary Democracy ideology. September 15, 2014: Addis Ababa University students walked out of EPRDF mandated political training. The political indoctrination in Addis Ababa University was being conducted by TPLF/EPRDF spokesperson Redwan Hussien. The training or indoctrination involved accusations against popular Ethiopian personalities including Emperor Menilik, TeddyAfro and others, and fomenting hostilities between ethnic groups, particularly Amharas and Oromos.

The AAU students have had enough of listening to Redwan Hussein's crap and walked out. Ethiopia is a much more complex society today with 100 million people and with all kinds of diverse and divergent visions. But, onething has become entirely clear. TPLF and its goons are not gaining any new support or are they getting any new solutions other than the use of force and repeating their borrow and build dogma. On other hand the most resurgence new force is the all Ethiopian national movement both inCities and rural Ethiopia. TPLF is trying 2 things to slow down its exit - suppress any and all effort at organizing the Ethiopian movement and bribe and cheat the small local tribal conflicts to divert attention and scarethe people. Recently anger over violent crackdown over oromo student protests in the region has sparked violence. A plan by the Ethiopian government to expand the capital's administrative hold into the neighbouring areas has sparked months of student protests. Security forces have been accused of cracking down on demonstrators in the region of Oromia. The government says 17 people died in the violence,but human rights groups say that number is much higher. An Ethiopian diplomat who opened fire to quell a protest outside his country's embassy in Washington has left theUnited States to avoid prosecution, a US official said Thursday. Secret Service agents arrested the man on Monday after shots were fired in the air in the embassy's outside compound in the US capital. Video shown by Ethiopian television ESAT showed a man brandishing and firing a handgunas a small crowd of protesters took down the Ethiopian national flag. StateDepartment spokeswoman Jen Psaki said her bureau had requested that Addis Ababa lift the man's diplomatic immunity "to permit prosecution of the individual involved in that incident." The "request was declined" and inline with State Department regulations "the individual involved has now left the country." Psaki gave no further details about the shooting or the person involved.

October 3, 2014: CAF News: Ethiopia has secretly dropped its bid to hostthe 2017 African Cup of Nations, and will focus instead on the next available tournament in 2025, the president of the country's football federation said. CAF wants a country with already-established facilities to step in at short notice for 2017 after Libya withdrew as host in August because of security and organizational concerns. Ethiopia's bid revolved around building new stadiums.CAF executives "advised" Ethiopia to delay its bid. Zimbabwe and Algeria say they have submitted formal bids to hostthe 2017 tournament, while other candidates could include Ghana, Kenya,Tanzania and Egypt. The deadline for bids to be lodged was Tuesday.

Morocco will stage the next 16-team African Cup in January and February.Cameroon, Ivory Coast and Guinea have been named as hosts for 2019, 2021 and 2023 respectively. CAF said it will name the 2017 host early next year.

asked for the release of detained political prisoners, and Norway to stopinteracting with governments that commit human rights violations. The protestors also reminded Norway that it would be responsible for the human rights violations committed in Ethiopia. The fact that Dr. Tedros'car had been attacked with eggs was widely reported by the Norwegianmedia.

October 18, 2014: ESAT News: Over 80 die, 500 disappear due to Awash River flooding, residents tell ICRC. The overflowing of Ethiopia's Awash River has so far killed at least 87 people and led to the disappearance of 500 people whose whereabouts is not known yet, residents told the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC). The sources of the Awash River come from the central Ethiopian highlands, West of Addis Ababa, and flows towards the Rift Valley. The River's basin covers an areaof 110,000 square kilometers in Ethiopia's Oromia, Afar and Amhara regions, the Afar region being one of the most affected at the moment.

Sources close to the Organisation have told ESAT that the Ethiopian government's report that the residents have not faced any causality is farfrom the truth. The residents said that they have buried 87 people with Ejan so far and the news of the disaster was reported a week after it hadoccurred making the problem even worse. They said that they are saddened by what has unfolded since the disaster and critiqued the government for being an "unconcerned government." They have called Red Cross to reach out for them stressing that the disaster is still continuing troublingly.

October 22, 2014: VoA News: More than 540 civilians killed – ethnicconflicts in Ethiopia.

Addis Ababa (Agencies + DIPLOMAT.SO updates) – Over 500 Ethiopians from Amhara and other ethnic groups murdered in Gambella. VoA reportsthat over 500 Ethiopians, mostly from the ethnic-Amhara group, have been killed over the past few weeks in Gambella, western Ethiopia. The Voice of America (VoA) Amharic Service, on its October 21 special program, reports the killing of over 540 people, mostly from the Amhara ethnic group, in a conflict with the Mezenger people in the Gambella region of Western Ethiopia. The gruesome massacre that started in the town of Meti, Godere zone on September 10th was a direct consequence of the ill-fated land grab policy of the Ethiopian government. According tothe VoA, the under reported massacre specifically started when government started to forcefully evict Mezenger people from their ancestral land in order to give it away to a recently retired TPLF Generals for "investment" purposes and the illegal campaign of selling lands that ensued following the arrival of hundreds of 'Tirgrayans' as 'workers' to theTPLF 'investors'. As expected, the main stream media and right groups such as Amnesty International and Human Rights Watch turned a deaf earto the extraordinary massacre of Ethiopians by the regime.

October 28, 2014 Increasing military presence in Gambella frightenedresidents.

ESAT News: Following the violent clashes between Mezhenger and government forces near the Southern and Gambella borders, which claimed the lives of local militia and at least 50 members of the Federal police members in the past few weeks, a large presence of the Ethiopian Defense Forces is now being observed. ESAT's reporter said that there hasbeen a fear that a war could break out in the area since last week, and schools have been closed. Despite the fears and tension in the area, no conflict has since arisen; the disquiet is allegedly related to the large presence of a military force in the area. Meanwhile, following the clashes in Abobo and Gambella, many members of the Special Force that had been evaluated by authorities have deserted carrying their weapons. The deserters hail from the Angnuak, Nuer and Mezhenger communities.

ESAT's efforts to speak to the deserting soldiers have been unsuccessful due to bad telephone network connection. Total power outage in this same area has also caused a problem to the people living in the area. Thecause for the outages in the zones of Jimma, Keffa, Masha and Maji is unknown. Similarly, water disruptions have been occurring regularly in thezone. ESAT's effort to speak to local officials on the issue has been unsuccessful.

REPORTERS WITHOUT BORDER

Ethiopian government's witchhunt against privately-owned media

News November 7, 2014

At least six publications have had to close in recent months and around 30journalists have fled abroad since the start of the year as a result of the biggest crackdown on the privately-owned press since 2005, one reflectinga government desire to make a clean sweep of independent media before parliamentary elections next May, local analysts say.

In the latest development, Reporters Without Borders learned on 1 November that magazine editor Temesgen Desalegn has been transferredto a prison in the town of Ziway, about 200 km away from Addis Ababa toserve the three-year jail sentence of his 13 October condemnation.

Desalegn was convicted of publishing reports about "politicians and journalists linked to terrorist groups" in the now-closed newspaper Fitih, which he edited before becoming the editor of Fact, a magazine closed in August. These charges were dropped after originally being brought againstDesalegn in connection with a defamation case in 2012, but were revived last year.

"We are extremely concerned about Temesgen Desalegn's conviction andhis transfer to a prison far from his family, especially as he has chronic health problems," said Cléa Kahn-Sriber, the head of the Reporters Without Borders Africa desk.

"This conviction is just the latest example of the witchhunt that the Ethiopian government has decided to wage against the independent press.Invoking the spectre of terrorism in order to silence critics has unfortunately become a systematic government practice."

Desalegn's trial and conviction have been preceded by many other acts ofintimidation and harassment that have created a state of extreme fear within the Ethiopian media.

The owners of three magazines – Endalkachew Tesfaye of Addis Guday, Gizaw Taye of Lomi and Fatuma Nuriya of Fact – were convicted in absentia of "encouraging terrorism" on 7 October and were given sentences ranging from three years and three months to three years andeleven months in prison.

The source of the charges was the justice ministry, which has brought thesame charges against three other publications – Enqu, Jano and Afro- Times – whose fate is not yet known.

Even public media are not spared when they stray from the party line: inJune, 18 journalists were fired by the main state-owned broadcaster in Oromia, Ethiopia's largest region, because of their political views.

In April, six bloggers with the Zone 9 collection and three journalists – onea freelancer and the other two employed by privately-owned media – werearrested in the course of a single weekend without any explanation being given.

It was only after they had been held without charge for three months thatthey learned that they were to be prosecuted under the 2009 anti- terrorism law for allegedly “organizing themselves into covert sub-groups to overthrow the government by contacting and receiving finance and training from two designated terrorist groups" – a charge that carries apossible 15-year jail sentence.

Since then, all their requests to be released on bail have been denied.

"We call on the authorities to reverse these convictions of journalists and media owners on specious grounds in recent months and to withdraw all the charges against the news and information providers currently jailed orin exile," Reporters Without Borders deputy programme director Virginie Dangles said.

Persecution campaign against independent media

A smear campaign against a number of independent newspapers began inJanuary when the government newspaper Addis Zemen published an Ethiopian Press Agency study listing articles they had published that allegedly promoted an uprising and terrorism.

One of the journalists concerned said: "This is where the government announces its future decisions. If your name appears there, you know youare going to have problems."

In late August, state-owned Ethiopian TV broadcast three documentaries,including one entitled "Untamed Pens," that portrayed the staff of the magazines Lomi, Fact, Enqu, Jano, Addis Guday and the newspaper AfroTimes as enemies of the state. This documentary aims at justifying the charges brought against these publications.

In the weeks before and after this documentary aired, several media wereclosed down and their employees threatened or harassed.

Seals were placed on the entrance to Lomi's office on 19 July – on the grounds that it did not have a licence to operate – and the police searchedit thoroughly. Ethio Midhar, a newspaper, was closed in October and its editor was summoned for questioning by the criminal investigation division, known as Maekelawi.

The companies that print certain newspapers, such as Ethio Midhar, AddisGuday and Lomi, have also been harassed by the authorities, as a result of which they are now refusing to print them.

Many journalists have reported being summoned by the police and threatened with arrest or physical reprisals. When the police could not locate them, they threatened their relatives with arbitrary arrest or raidson their homes.

All this harassment and intimidation has created a climate of terror withinthe media community that has driven about 30 journalists to flee the country since the start of the year. The entire staff of some publications has fled abroad. They include Lomi, whose editor, two of its reporters andsix other employees fled abroad as soon as the judicial proceedings were initiated.

Many have gone to the Kenyan capital of Nairobi, which Reporters WithoutBorders visited last month to interview them about their life in exile and the way they were persecuted in Ethiopia. With no source of income, theyhave had to endure the most appalling material and psychological conditions in Kenya, and fear being followed by the Ethiopian embassy's agents.

"I arrived here just a few days ago," one told Reporters Without Borders."I am in a neighbourhood where many Ethiopians live. I don't feel safe. Ineed a safer place but I don't really know where to go."

Despite the extremely precarious situation awaiting them, journalists arecontinuing to flee Ethiopia.

Another newly arrived journalist said: "Other colleagues are thinking of joining us. The legislative elections are coming and they know that the climate will continue to deteriorate." One journalist, Million Shurube of thenewspaper Maraki, fell ill during the journey and died in exile for lack of treatment.

Observers of the situation in Ethiopia say this is the worst crackdown sincethe one that followed the elections in 2005.

Looming parliamentary elections

Although its economic and social record has been relatively satisfactory inrecent years, the Ethiopian government seems to fear any form of criticism or protest at a time when ethnic and religious-based demands are growing.

"The government has managed to eliminate much of the privately-ownedpress in the space of a few months, thereby curtailing public debate and the ability of ordinary citizens to discuss issues concerning them," Kahn- Sriber said. "Such a censorship campaign in the run-up to elections is particularly disturbing."

An Ethiopian media analyst who spoke to Reporters Without Borders on condition of anonymity said the situation is all the more worrying becauseit will continue until next May at least. "Even if the bloggers and journalists continue to appear in court, their case won't advance before the elections. The government is deliberately blocking it.”

The privately-owned press is clearly experiencing its most difficult period in a decade even if some publications, such as Reporter, Addis Admas and*Ethio Miska,* are continuing to appear.

“It’s true that some journalists have been very critical of the governmentbut it is important to respect the principle of proportionality,” the analystsaid. “There are procedures for challenging articles regarded as defamatory. Mass arrests and forcing newspapers to close are counter- productive, especially if the very existence of these critical newspapers isa direct result of the government’s news control policies.”

Publications that did not originally intend to cover politics felt obliged to evolve because of a pressing public demand for more diverse coverage ofpolitical and social developments. And sometimes their staff took radical positions that failed to respect media ethics.

But, according to the information obtained by Reporters Without Borders,none of these media ever published articles that justified the current crackdown. The government’s aim is to clear – to install such a level of fear that it will not be challenged.

According to Reporters Without Borders’ tally, at least ten journalists andsix netizens are currently detained in Ethiopia, which is ranked 143rd outof 180 countries in the 2014 Reporters Without Borders press freedom index. (text ends)

November 13, 2014: BLOOMBERG NEWS: Court Requests Detailed Terror Charges Against Bloggers’ An Ethiopian court asked prosecutors to amendcharges so they specify the acts of terrorism that 10 bloggers and journalists are alleged to have been plotting, a defense lawyer said. The order was made Wednesday at the Federal High Court in the capital, AddisAbaba, where nine out of the 10 accused are standing trial for collaborating with a U.S.-based opposition group, Ginbot 7, which is classified as a terrorist organization by Ethiopia’s government. The charges “simply say these suspects organized themselves and designed terrorism without me ntioning what kind of terrorism did they plot as defined under Article 3” of a 2009 anti-terrorism law. The clandestine Ginbot 7 was formed in 2008 after few members among its leadership spent almost two years in prison in the aftermath of the ill-fated election of May 15, 2005. As well known by the International community, the regime overturned the election results that clearly showed the opposition party Coalition for Unity and Democracy (CUD) has won the majority throughout the country. This is a fact corroborated by international election observes such as the European Union's Election Monitoring Group that was present in Ethiopia to observe the election in 2005. Those who formed Ginbot7, then leaders of the CUD, were among the leaders thrownin prison on trumped up charges. Ginbot 7 was formed as a political movement in order to advance justice, freedom, and liberal democracy in Ethiopia. Ginbot 7 believes that no meaningful and genuinely competitive elections can take place in the country due to the prevailing and ever worsening egregious human rights violations, the closing of political space,the harassment and persecution of members of the legal and peaceful political opposition. Furthermore, an entrenched minority ethnocratic dictatorship in Ethiopia has determined to perpetuate its hold on power byall and any means necessary.

The Voice of America has removed Peter Heinlein as Chief of the Horn of Africa service after investigation into allegations of deliberate distortions and professional misconduct. VoA Director David Ensor convened the section staffers last Friday and made a surprise announcement that Heinlein was replaced by his Senior Advisor William Marsh. The director told the gathering that Marsh would serve as an interim chief of the Horn of Africa service. It emerged that Heinlein was demoted to English to Africa with no managerial and administrative roles. Heinlein had faced internal and external complaints of misconduct including recent allegation of deliberate distortions with regard to Azusa Pacific University’s decision to revoke an honor it had already bestowed on Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn. Heinlein played a key role in repeatedly crafting and broadcasting distorted and misleading reports. Some staff members of VoA Amharic had also filed complaints against Heinlein regarding ethicaland administrative issues.

November 19, 2014: TELECOM News - China's ZTE risks loss in $800million deal: Ethiopia.

PARIS (Reuters) – Ethiopia has told Chinese telecoms firm ZTE Corp it risked losing part of its deal worth $800 million to expand the nation's network because of differences over costs of upgrading existing systems,an Ethiopian minister and executive said.

The deal last year with monopoly state-run operator Ethio Telecom was part of a $1.6 billion package, split between ZTE and another Chinese firmHuawei Technologies Co Ltd [HWT.UL]. The African nation of more than 90million people wants to double mobile subscribers to 50 million in 2015 and expand its 3G service. The overall contract includes a plan for Huawei roll out a high-speed 4G network in Addis Ababa. "We have contractual issues unresolved," Communications and Technology Minister Debretsion Gebremichael told Reuters. "Swapping existing technology with no additional costs is one."

He said Ethiopia's government expected the firms to upgrade existing equipment without extra charge, but added ZTE had said this would cost an additional $150 million to $200 million. "Discussions with Nokia and Ericsson is plan B in case it does not work out," the minister said in Paris,where he was attending a business forum. A source close to Nokia said last week that Ericsson and Nokia could be in the running to replace ZTE.ZTE officials had no comment when asked about a report on the dispute last week. Ericsson and Nokia officials had no comment when asked on Tuesday.

The $1.6 billion contract was awarded under a long-term loan package to be paid over a 13-year period with an interest rate of less than 1 percent, Ethiopian officials said. Analysts said other firms might find it tough to match such terms. Ethio Telecom Chief Executive Andualem Admassie, who was also in Paris, said a decision was expected in a "matter of weeks"but said ZTE's contract would not be scrapped altogether. "There is nothing about ZTE being pushed out. They are going to continue, but theymay lose some of their market share which was allotted before," Andualem said without giving details. "We approached two companies - Nokia and Ericsson. Possibly it is going to be Ericsson," he said, without offering details. Ethiopia has said it will not follow other African nations that in handing telecoms licences to private firms, saying the income generated helped finance railway and other projects.

November 19, 2014: ESAT News - Jimma residents expresseddissatisfaction with the regime.

The people of Jimma, South Western Ethiopia, and representatives of various organisations, have expressed that they have lost faith in the government and that they want change, during a meeting held in the presence of Muktar Kedir, President of the Oromia Region, Sufian Ahmed, Minister of Finance and also the Head of Security in Oromia region in Jimma town. They have told the officials that soldiers stationed in the areaare killing and abusing locals, citing recent cases. The residents noted thatcorruption has been rife especially among the regional officials, who steal money to construct buildings or found companies. Muktar later summonedthe regional officials in Central Hotel ordering them to take immediate measures to calm down the peoples' anger. Federal police officers stationed in the Zone had in the past weeks killed a son along with his grandmother and also severely wounded another artist, Wonde and his child. Similarly, in Harar, Eastern Ethiopia, a meeting themed 'Good Governance Movement' was held in the presence of the President of the region and his Deputy, when the residents spoke about youth unemployment, nepotism and unfairly distributed development projects. Although the people raised several questions, the President said that theywould get responses from local Woreda offices; which led the participantsto leave the auditorium.

November 20, 2014: ESAT News - Land confiscated after over 400 peoplewere evicted.

After 470 people were inhumanely evicted from their lands from Kebele 11, Kombolcha Woreda of South Wello Zone in the name of investment, the land has been sold for 1 birr and 26 cents per meter. After the mounting pressures, a meeting between members of the public and the cabinet revealed that they have sold the land through corrupt methods. Habtom, the Liaison Officer in the Woreda said that Abera Abere, the localAdministrator had bought land in Bahir Dar and Addis Abeba, rents out dozers while his Deputy had built houses in different places and over 8 million Birr was found in his account. Habtom himself was accused by others of owning two houses in Kombolcha town and owns a land in Mekelle. The officials have only been suspended from their work.

Whistleblower farmers have been forced to live in exile and hunger for lack of listeners. Similarly, over 100 farmers have been evicted from theirlands in Gurafarda, Southern Ethiopia. The farmers have been told to pay4500 Birr to get land security certificate but they refused saying that theyhave been paying taxes. As a result, they have been evcicted from the lands and the land is being sold to investors who have shares in the companies with local government officials, which according to many is thecause of the conflicts in the area.

November 23, 1974: COMEMORATION - Ethiopia's Black SaturdayRemembered
On the fateful night of Saturday 23 November 1974, exactly 40 years agotoday, 60 prominent Ethiopians, government ministers and high ranking military officers from the just collapsed kingdom of Emperor HaileSelassiewere executed by the Marxist junta's firing squad. Even though they havenever been tried in a court for any crime, they were accused of corruptionand gunned down. The Ethiopian history has marked this day As “Black Saturday” and as always say “no one deserves to be forgotten.” Regardless of who they were or what they meant to our society, they deserve to be remembered. The Ethiopian history has marked this day As “Black Saturday” and as we always say “no one deserves to be forgotten.” Regardless of who they were or what they meant to our society, they deserve to be remembered. “ remember the day very well, I am sorry for them all,I didn't feel the same as I do now,we were a little brainwashed by the Duerg regime propoganda in the first months.” “As a human being it makes you sad to think of what happened to the emperor, his family and all the dignitaries and how many more have died in the same situation, as John Lennen song in his famous song ‘imagine’ "no reason todie or to kill for"

November 24, 2014: ESAT News - Harari president beaten by Party’s Chair. Murad Abdulahi, the President of the Harari Regional State of Ethiopia, Eastern Ethiopia, has reportedly been beaten by Nebil Mehadi, the Chairman of the Harari League and the Head of the Regional Trade and Industry Development Bureau inside his own office last Friday. The division of the Region’s officials into two is causing a security threat. Nebilentered the President’s office saying that he needed an audience with him before he punched the Murad in the face. Nebil was later taken out of theoffice by police and until the filing of the News report, he was not detained. Nebil was the Head of Harar Municipality and Head of the Education Bureau. The power struggle between the Harari leadership is expected to be a big challenge to General Abraha Woldemariam, who is allegedly the overall administrator of the Region. Nebil, who had a big position in the Region, was first removed from his Chairmanship of the League and then from the Development Bureau, to be posted in a purchasing department by the Regional President after an evaluation wasconducted. Information about the President is being leaked by other Party officials, who are accusing the President of removing his opponents and replacing them with his relatives. The President's wife had reportedly left for the U.S. by stashing millions of birr. The Region has 36 Kebeles/districts; people in rural and urban areas majorly speak Oromignaand Amharic languages respectively. Since Oromigna and Harari languages were made the only working languages of the Region, around 65% of the people who only speak Amharic language have been finding it difficult to live and communicate.

November 29, 2014: Government says some security concerns solved

ESAT News Dr. Shiferaw Teklemaraim, Minister of Federal Affairs, said to regional and federal security and intelligence heads that the government has been faced with four major security concerns. The first concern being the security threat caused by what he called “armed insurgent groups”; fully controlling these groups and terrorists has been testing, he said. But concerns that were created due to religious extremism have been fully controlled, he noted. Similarly, ethnic conflicts have been put under control with the ongoing attempts to mediate Afar and Somali ethnic groups reaching a good begining. Gedu Andargachew, the President of theAmhara regional state, said security forces were able to control extremismalthough forces that are armed and sent by the Eritrean government still continue to be causes of insecurity.

December 1, 2014: Government considers ways of trouncing local opposition under the pretext of ‘extremism’ ESAT News ESAT has receiveddetails of a discussion recently held between the Federal Government Security Affairs and government officials regarding the government’s preparation to sue legally registered local opposition parties under the guise of “terrorism, extremism”. Officials from the Tigray, Beni Shangul and Amhara regions have accused Semayawi (Blue), Unity for Democracyand Justice (UDJ) and the All Ethiopian Union Party (AEUP) as extremist parties that have been organising and preparing youth to ‘terror’. Insiderssay the plot is to neutralise the parties so that they would not get enoughvote in the election and not become threats to the ruling government.

They also say the recent accusations and linking of all religion related protests in the country to opposition parties especially to Blue Party is partof the scheme. Security officials from the Amhara and Benishangul regionshave stated that a lot of work was needed in putting the security concernsunder control. Another government official on his part said that the partieshave not yet built their capacities to organise the people but similar measures should be taken in the future to prevent them from reorganising.

December 8, 2014: Nearly 70 Ethiopians perish in Red Sea – Aljazeera (ALJAZEERA News) – At least 70 Ethiopians have drowned after a boat used by smugglers to transport migrants to Yemen sank in the Red Sea in rough weather, according to security authorities in the western part of Yemen. The authorities in Taiz province told the Associated Press news agency on Sunday that the small boat sank after encountering high winds and rough seas off al-Makha port. Human traffickers often use unseaworthy boats to smuggle African migrants to Yemen, seen as a gateway to wealthier parts of the Middle East, such as Saudi Arabia and Oman, and Europe. They said the boat was carrying 70 people, all of them Ethiopians. Tens of thousands of migrants from Africa, the Middle East andbeyond crowd into often unsafe boats each year and many drown. In March, at least 42 African migrants drowned in the Arabian Sea off the southern coast of Yemen.

December 10, 2014: ESAT News: Forum set to hold a demonstration inAddis

Forum locally known as Medrek, a coalition of Ethiopian opposition parties,has called a demonstration in Addis Abeba to be held on December 14, 2014. The demonstration is aimed at calling the government to stop rightsabuses, to hold a free, fair and democratic election, and equally smooth for all. Forum stated that it has repeatedly called on the government to sitfor talks and negotiations although the regime refused. It said the demonstration to be held between 9 am to 1 pm on Sunday December 14, will oppose the ruling Front's stubbornness and the continued arrest and harassment of opposition members and the society. Tilahun Endashaw, the Public Relations Head of Forum, said it is now impossible to free and fair election in such a condition when the government controls everythingthrough the one-to-five structure. Tilahun said unless the regime is willingto solve the questions of the people, it will utilise different forms of peaceful and legal strategies and hold successive protests.

December 12, 2014: The 101st years of the passing away of the great Emperor Menelik II quietly remembered. 101 years ago on this day (December 13, 1913), the great leader in African history, the unifier of present Ethiopia qoquerer of the battle of Adwa Emperor Menelik II, passed away on this day 101 years ago. Emperor Menelik II, baptized as Sahle Maryam (17 August 1844 – 13 December 1913), was Negus of Shewa (1866–89), then Nəgusä Nägäst (King of Kings) of Ethiopia from 1889 to his death. At the height of his internal power and external prestige, the process of territorial expansion and creation of the modern empire-state had been completed by 1898. Ethiopia was transformed under Nəgusä Nägäst Menelik: the major signposts of modernization were put in place. Externally, his victory over the Italian invaders had earned him great fame: following Adwa, recognition of Ethiopia's independence byexternal powers was expressed in terms of diplomatic representation at the court of Menelik and delineation of Ethiopia's boundaries with the adjacent colonies. One of the most decisive leaders of Africa of his time who went into the History Books as an African Icon. The African continent can be proud of Emperor Menelik, for his achievements and visionary ideals a man a head of his time and well skilled on international affairs.

December 15, 2014: Tigray People's Liberation Front, Human TraffickingRing widely exposed.
Side note: After the war of 2000 failed to do the job, the Tigray People Liberation Front (TPLF) and their handlers developed schemes to yank Eritrean youth-out of their country, homes and livelihood. They targeted the youth to deprive Eritrea from the workforce necessary to build a nation and, to degrade the military's capacities in order to launch one major assault and decapitate the nation when opportune. Eritrean youth are lured with incentives of access into the US, West and other friendly nations. As long as Eritreans are able to reach other countries, no questions are asked, they are granted asylums. At a time that human trafficking is lucrative business, by default, they made Eritrean nationalitythe most valuable and coveted citizenship in Africa and beyond. Today, there are countless political asylums granted to none Eritreans as Eritreans with minimum scrutiny. Ethiopians from Tigray, TPLF members and officials are the key benefactors. In Washington DC and other major US cities, there are reports that former TPLF officials have been granted asylum as Eritreans. This is common knowledge and more Ethiopians are coming into the US using falsified Eritrean documents. But why are Ethiopian authorities allowing this blunt illegal-act to take place?

December 17, 2014: RANKING: Countries with the most and leastInternet freedom’

By Matt Petronzio, Mashable

Internet freedom around the world has declined for the fourth year in a row, as more countries introduce aggressive online censorship measures,according to a new report.

Freedom on the Net 2014, the fifth-annual report released by independentwatchdog organization Freedom House last week, found that of the 65 countries assessed, 36 experienced a negative trajectory in online freedom between May 2013 and May 2014. This was due to factors such as blocked social networks, aggressive online surveillance and cyberattacks, and the intimidation and arrests of journalists and digital activists.

The report analyzed three main factors in each country: obstacles to Internet access, limits on content and violations of user rights. Iran remained the country with the lowest degree of Internet freedom, despite hopes of reform when President Hassan Rouhani took office in August 2013. Although the new administration has embraced social media, Iranian citizens still don't have access to websites the government finds politically sensitive, such as Twitter and Facebook.

The report also pointed to Iranian authorities sentencing people to "lengthy prison terms for promoting Sufism online, among other digital activities." In May 2014, six young Iranians were arrested for recording aviral YouTube video of them dancing to Pharrell's song "Happy." They were subsequently given "suspended sentences" of six months in prison (the director was given one year), and 91 lashes.

Syria, China, Cuba, Ethiopia and Uzbekistan follow Iran in terms ofInternet freedom.

In contrast, Iceland ranked first as the nation with the most Internet freedom. The government there doesn't blog social media platforms orcontent and 97 percent of households are connected to the Internet.

Estonia, Canada, Australia, Germany and the United States made the top five in the index, after Iceland.

An extensive study published in Novembershowed that 83% of Internet users around the world believe affordable access to the Internet should be a basic human right. This big spending has been the talking point among the member parties of the EPRDF. TPLF says such an amount of money is being spent for the sake of “image building”. Many cannot swallow why TPLF needed to use government coffers while it could have used money from its own corporation, Endowment Fund for the Relief of Tigray (EFFORT), which controls one third of the Country’s wealth. The total cost of the celebration is not known however; so far the cost is being covered by regional and federal governments. Selected artists and journalists will travel to Tigary region on December 22, 2014 in preparation for the celebration set to be held on February 18, 2014. Their total costs are being covered by the government. Sources say the TPLF planned to get the Region visited in order to do a wide propaganda work. December 30, 2014: Devaluation comes to the Ethiopian Birr (ETB 20.52 December 30, 2014: NW-Wealth holds the ruling party accountable. Side note: It is even worse when comes to Ethiopia where the tiny rich(top civilian officials, generals, businessmen allied to TPLF regime, and their cronies) hailing from a minority ethnic group comprising only 6% of the Ethiopian people possess 94% of the national resources. And this filthy- rich group trade in the name of the valiant and impoverished peopleof Tigray. EPRDF's foreign partners rather than holding the regime accountable for the growing wealth inequality and prodding it to do its level best to narrow the gap between the haves and the have not, instead prefer to gauge Ethiopia's progress by the number of newly minted millionaires. According to NW-Wealth. com, between 2007-2013, Ethiopia topped all African countries in the growth percentage of millionaires at 108%. Starting with 1,300 millionaires in 2007, it more than doubled them in 2013 at 2,700. If the trend holds, we will have 3,000 of them this year! While most of them may be connected to the party and it is a milestone for them to celebrate, this is a hollow victory for the 30 million Ethiopians that worry about their next meals. It is not hard to guess that members in this exclusive club include thieves like government affiliates and other high-placed government thieves.

The ruling regime is gripped with fear … It is sinking wearing a heavy albatross of heinous crime around its neck. This is because the legacy of the dead tyrant Meles Zenawi amounts to gruesome package of gross violations of fundamental human rights of Ethiopian citizens including genocides, war crimes and crimes against humanity not to mention in detail colossal damage to vital national interests on a scale unprecedentedin the long history of Ethiopia. As a result of the brinkmanship of the Zenawi Era Ethiopia is land-locked paying close to one billion US$ dollars annually to tiny Djibouti for the use of its sea port.

The article by Professor Alemayehu Gebremariam titled “The de-Ethiopianization of Ethiopia” dated … 2014 brilliantly captures the draconian damage done bythe TPLF/EPRDF regime to our national interest during the last 23 years, and counting, of its tyrannical misrule far worse than that of its predecessor. Therefore, the top echelon in the leadership of the brutal ruling regime has every reason to fear accountability in the face of mounting awareness of the international community about its gross human rights violation, pathological lies, incompetence and endemic corruption. February 19, 2015: REVELATION: Scientists announce anti-HIV agent sopowerful it can work in a vaccine. Meantime, Scientists announce breakthrough in anti-HIV vaccine’ -Medical Press

Side note: In a remarkable new advance against the virus that causes AIDS, scientists from the Jupiter, Florida campus of The Scripps Research Institute (TSRI) have announced the creation of a novel drug candidate that is so potent and universally effective, it might work as part of an unconventional vaccine. The research, which involved scientists from morethan a dozen research institutions, was published February 18 online ahead of print by the prestigious journal Nature. The study shows that thenew drug candidate blocks every strain of HIV-1, HIV-2 and SIV (simian immunodeficiency virus) that has been isolated from humans or rhesus macaques, including the hardest-to-stop variants. It also protects against much-higher doses of virus than occur in most human transmission and does so for at least eight months after injection. "Our compound is the broadest and most potent entry inhibitor described so far," said Michael Farzan, a TSRI professor who led the effort. "Unlike antibodies, which fail to neutralize a large fraction of HIV-1 strains, our protein has been effective against all strains tested, raising the possibility it could offer an effective HIV vaccine alternative."

May 12, 2015: EBC News - Eritrean government senior diplomat defects toEthiopia. Mr. Mohammed Idris a low profile diplomat from the Eritrea headof mission to the African Union based in Addis Ababa sought asylum in Ethiopia.

Side note: The defections to Eritrea by Ethiopian mid-ranking army commanders, pilots and co-pilots, holding fighter aircraft, combat helicopters, pilot trainer planes is on the rise since the Eritrean governmet did not elaborate the news to media. According to commentators, the incumbent in Ethiopia amplifies such propganada as to divert the attentionof Ethiopians from crimes committed against human rights by the regime'ssecurity police in the entire country.

May 15, 2015: The US State Department issues travel alert to Ethiopiaright after the kingdom of Norway have issued the same.
Side note: The State Department recommends U.S. citizens maintain a high level of security awareness during the electoral period and avoid political rallies, polling centers, demonstrations, and crowds of any kind asinstances of unrest can occur. Review your personal security plans; remain aware of your surroundings, including local events; and monitor local news stations for updates. Although there have been no specific incidents of violence targeting U.S. citizens, U.S. citizens are urged to exercise caution and stay current with media coverage of local events.
Meantime, Canada, Sweden, Ireland and Australia issued a travel warningto their respective citizens. Election results are scheduled to be announcedJune 22, 2015. During previous elections, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs (MFA) required all diplomats and international organization staff living in Addis Ababa to receive an official pass from the MFA if they planned to travel outside of Addis Ababa during the election season. While not in effect this election, the U.S. Embassy continues to urge U.S. citizens to be aware of election sensitivities. We especially recommend avoiding public polling stations on the day of the election, including schools and other public buildings. In Addis Ababa alone there will be nearly 1,600 polling stations – roughly one polling station for every kilometer. (Text ends)
May 21, 2015: Remembering the disgraceful fall of Ethiopia's dictator. It's well known that Ethiopians wish to have a government of to the people, by the people, and for the people that cares about the well beingof all citizens have repeatedly failed— as example, Mengistu Haile Mariam of the Workers Party of Ethiopia (WPE) failed to achieve, Meles Zenawi and his ruling TPLF/EPRDF also failed to achieve as ruling party. The TPLF/EPRDF leaders must show their willingness to come to the negotiating table. Release all the political prisoners, journalists, human rights activists, religious leaders and political opposition leaders. Stop trumped up charging of opposition activists, human rights activists, journalists who disagrees with ruling labeling as potential terrorists. The ethnic oriented TPLF led regime cannot

humility. They must show signs of openness to bring change. They must be honest. They must speak the truth, not lies. They must take actions that are not deceptive, but which will build up trust between the people. Without change, the TPLF will pass away on a legacy of death and consequences to others, most of whom are innocent bystanders or futuregenerations.

May 25, 2015: IAAF News: Ethiopians claim Ottawa marathon victories Side note: Ethiopia's Aberu Mekuria won the Scotiabank Ottawa Marathonon Sunday (24) with the second-fastest time in the history of the IAAF Silver Label Road Race, while compatriot Girmay Birhanu won the men's race in what was his fourth marathon in seven months. Mekuria took almost half a minute off her PB to win in 2:25:30. Birhanu's winning timeof 2:08:14 was his third sub-2:09 clocking of the year. It was the third year in a row that Ethiopians had won both races in Ottawa. The women'srace was an Ethiopian affair with four of the top six places filled by their contingent. The heavily favoured Meselech Melkamu was at the front of a large pack for most of the race but that group whittled down to three by 40km. It was shortly after this point that Mekuria put her foot down and opened a gap, holding it to the finish. Her winning time of 2:25:30 was within a minute of Tigist Tufa's 2014 course record of 2:24:31. Kenya's Rebecca Chesire was second in 2:25:41 and Abebech Afework took third in 2:25:53. Melkamu finished fifth in 2:26:45.

May 26, 2015 The African Union criticized Sunday's election in Ethiopia. Side note: The African Union election observation mission said that the election that was held in Ethiopian last Sunday lacked transparency and did not follow basic election procedures. June 24, 2015: BBC News: Lack of progress on Andargachew Tsige's caserisks undermining the UK’s much valued bilateral relationship with Ethiopia -UK Foreign Secretary Philip Hammond Side note: The Foreign Secretary discussed the continued detention of British national Andargachew Tsege with the Ethiopian Foreign Minister, DrTedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus. Following the call the Foreign Secretary said: I am deeply concerned that, a year after he was first detained, British national Andargachew Tsege remains in solitary confinement in Ethiopia without a legal process to challenge his detention. I am also concerned for his welfare and disappointed that our repeated requests for regular consular access have not been granted, despite promises made. I spoke to Foreign Minister Tedros this afternoon and made clear that Ethiopia’s failure to grant our repeated and basic requests is not acceptable. I informed Dr Tedros that the lack of progress risks undermining the UK’s much valued bilateral relationship with Ethiopia. I asked Dr Tedros once again to permit immediate regular consular access and for our concerns regarding Mr Tsege’s welfare to be addressed. I havealso asked that the Ethiopian authorities facilitate a visit by Mr Tsege’s family. Foreign Office officials will continue to provide consular support both to Mr Tsege and to his family during this difficult time.

June 30, 2015: American embassy in Addis fails to give visa to Teddy AfroSide note: Ethiopian music sensation Teddy Afro will not be attending the Ethiopian Sports Federation in North American ESFNA's festival this coming July 4th weekend because the American embassy in Addis Ababa turned him away saying that their system is down due to hacking. The embassy told him that it has stopped issuing visa for every one in Ethiopia. Meantime, the consular section of the American Embassy in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia is pleased to announce that the technical problem ofConsular Sections throughout the world is resolved. Applicants who were issued visas can now collect their passports accordingly.

July 4, 2015: ESAT BREAKING NEWS News: Patriotic Ginbot 7 fightersattacked regime positions.

July 2, 2015 Ethiomedia News: WASHINGTON, DC ESFNA says TeddyAfro-Gossaye Concert Cancelled Due to Visa complications.

Side note: Teddy Afro and Gossaye, the two superstars who were on schedule to perform at the annual soccer tournament underway in DC, were unable to clear travel problems to the United States and hence their shows have been cancelled, ESFNA announced in a press release on Thursday. ESFNA said the unhappy incident was beyond its control, and tickets sold for the performances would be refunded. "Refunds have already been processed for all customers who purchased presale tickets tothe Teddy Afro & Gossaye event on our website. Refunds will take 5 to 10days to appear on your statement.

July 4, 2015: Ethiomedia News - WASHINGTON, DC Ethiopians protestObama's Ethiopia visit.

Side note: Ethiopian activists on Friday protested the scheduled visit of USPresident Barack Obama to the east Africanation of Ethiopia. The activists also confronted a VoA reporter namely, Henok Semagzher underreporting as pro-regime journalist in the guise of journalism within the VoA.

July 7, 2015: Ethiopia News: PM Hailemariam Desalegn responds at Parliament to ESAT's report about Ginbot-7 Arbegnoch military action in northern regions. Hailemariam responds to ESAT’s report about Ginbot 7 military action in Tigray region. New wave of tension starts to brew between Ethiopia and Eritrea this week following a surprise attack by Ethiopian armed opposition groups based in Eritrea escalating deep insideto northern territories. ‘Arbegnoch Ginbot 7′ for Unity and Democratic Movement (AGUDM) earlier this week announced that it has officially started taking military action against the Ethiopian regime.

Side note: It's a complicated, events are moving fast and unpredicted situations are emerging each day which is worse.. PM Haile Mariam “Ethiopia will not tolerate anymore transgression by Eritrea going forward”Military vehicles have been observed in a mobilization to southern and western Eritrea over the past few weeks. Automatic rifles are also being distributed to ordinary citizens. Actually this started about two years ago, but now it is being done now with more urgency. Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn's threat and reaction of Eritreans on the social media: The Ethiopian Prime Minister quoted as saying “Our Strategy of NoWar No Peace with Eritrea has Changed "Removing Shaabia is the only solution to Ethiopia". The Prime Minister of Ethiopia said recently in an interview with pro-government radio station in Washington D.C., "If the Eritrea government tries once more to send its 'foot soldier' [Ginbot 7], we will remove the Eritrea government." He added the strategy has changed meaning the 'no war no peace' strategy has expires.

July 8, 2015: Ethiopia accuses Eritrea of war provocations.

Side note: Ethiopia warned on Tuesday that it may go to war against Eritrea because of what he called Asmara's 'destabilizing' activities in the region. Addressing the parliament on Tuesday, Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn said his government has been informing the international community of its concern about Eritrea's war-provoking activities in the region. The independent ESAT TV reported that Hailemariam's address came in the wake of Ethiopian rebel attacks in northern Ethiopia. ESAT has been reporting that Arbegnoch Ginbot 7 rebels had inflicted heavy casualties on Ethiopian troops in several days offighting along the border. Ethiopia's government spokesperson Getachew Reda on Monday dismissed ESAT's report as fictitious, but the Prime Minister's new accusations against Eritrea justifies ESAT's report as authentic the Eritrea-based rebels were really enagaged in combat operations against Ethiopian troops. Ethiopia and Eritrea fought a costly war in 1998-2000 in which over 100,000 soldiers died on both sides.

Despite signing a peace agreement, the countries have technically beenon war footing.

July 10, 2015: EBC News: PMHD says, pledges continued support to MelesZenawi Foundation.

July 10, 2015: Ethiopian forces cross into Somalia.

Side note: A large contingent of Ethiopian troops have entered Somalia. Witnesses said at least a force of 3,000 strongly armed Ethiopian troops have entered Somalia through the border and proceeded into the town of

Luq South West of Somalia. Reports say the soldiers intend to attack al- Shabab militants. Residents of the southwestern Gedo region said troops with tanks and armored vehicles began crossing the border Monday and have been seen in the town of Luq. Some people speculated that the Ethiopian forces may be heading towards Bardere town, which is controlled by the Al-Qaeda-linked Al-Shabaab militia. Earlier, authorities inthe region told VOA that forces are being mobilized for an offensive in areas still controlled by al-Shabab, including the group's last major stronghold, the town of Bardere.

July 16, 2015: Ethiomedia News: Journalists Released; Religious LeadersConvicted - The Manipulation of Political Prisoners for Political Gain in Ethiopia'

Side note: Those convicted include six members of the Ethiopian Muslims Arbitration Committee, eight scholars, two journalists, one artist and one student. They had been arrested in July 2012 related to their leadership roles in objecting to government interference in their internal religious affairs, in violation of Ethiopian law and the Constitution. This interferenceincluded at least three major complaints Ethiopian regime control of the appointment of regime-friendly officials tothe Islamic Supreme Council (Mejlis); this council assumes top authority over mosques, imams and Muslims in the country.
Regime pressure, enforced by the above-mentioned Islamic Supreme Council, to adopt extremist doctrine (Ahbash) that is foreign-imported from the Middle East and strongly opposed by the majority of moderate Ethiopian Muslims who have lived a peaceful co-existence with Christiansfor centuries.
Regime’s attempt to force this imported Ahbash ideology at religious institutions like Awoliya College and School as well as the move to bringthis school under the auspices of the even more radical Islamic International Relief Organization (IIRO), a group based in Saudi Arabia that has advanced militancy around the world.
The Muslim arbitration committee was formed to attempt to peacefully resolve these grievances through negotiations with the current one-party regime of Ethiopia, the Ethiopian Peoples’ Revolutionary Democratic Front,(EPRDF), a coalition regime. However, the EPRDF is controlled by one of the four parties, the Tigrayan Peoples' Liberation Front (TPLF) that is said to represent 6% of the population. In reality, the leaders in the TPLF Central Committee control nearly everything within country to their own political or financial advantage, from high level court cases such as thisone, to the mundane. (Text ends)

Over 50 human rights groups, including Human Rights Watch, Freedom House and the Robert F. Kennedy Human Rights Center, issued an open letter calling on the president to meet with democracy activists inKenya and Ethiopia during his visits. The issued letter reads, "We believe it imperative that you take the opportunity of your visits to meet publicly with pro-democracy and human rights activists," reads the letter, "thereby sending a strong message that your administration remains committed to integrating human rights and good governance concerns into its official bilateral relations with all nations."
July 21, 2015: ESAT News: Sur Construction property destroyed in Gondar. Patriotic Ginbot 7 insurgents attacked and destroyed stone crushing plant owned by Sur Construction, a subsidiary company of EFFORT (Endowment Fund for Rehabilitation of Tigray). After the incident,the company has reportedly evacuated its belongings from the area. The Patriotic Ginbot 7 forces said the attack took place on July 18, 2015 in a place known as Atsede and Azezo, in the vicinity of Gondar. Other infrastructural plants were also partially destroyed, a news sent to ESAT revealed. The attack was carried out to break the economic hegemony of TPLF, sources from the movement claimed. No casualties were reported during the attack. ESAT previously reported that several road construction projects financedby funds borrowed from international financial institutions are apparentlyawarded to TPLF-affiliated companies without contract, competitive tender, or proper bidding process. In addition, only TPLF-affiliated construction companies such as Sur Construction are allowed to participate the government construction bids in Ethiopia. Recently, Ethiopian Road Transport Authority appointed Araya Girma, former Sur Construction engineer, as a new Director General for the Ethiopian Road Transport Authority. (Text ends)

Side note: Yilikal Getinet, leader of the main opposition Semayawi (Blue) party, in Ethiopia, has announced today that he will not attend a receptionparty that is hosted at the National Palace in honor of President Barack Obama after he heard the president claiming that Ethiopia's government that has won 100% of the votes in the recent election is "democratically elected." President Obama's claim has angered Ethiopian opposition parties, independent journalists, and human rights groups. Human rights organizations and democracy advocates world-wide have condemned the May 2015 fraudulent elections in Ethiopia, and Obama's endorsement of the Ethiopian regime as "democratically elected" is a big blow to the struggle for democracy in Africa, according to observers. Meantime, the US president Obama touches "Lucy" during his second day visit to the national museum in Ethiopia. Lucy is estimated to have lived 3.2 million years ago in Ethiopia.

August 7, 2015: In Memory of The Barefoot Runner Abebe Bikila:
Side note: The greatest heroe ever is to be remembered as he would haveturn 83 years today. Happy Birthday. We may wish to celebrate the birthday of this this greatest athelet in memory of his two times Olympic gold medals winning. The double Olympic marathon champion Abebe Bikila was born in August 7, 1932 in Jato, central Ethiopia. Abebe is well known for winning a marathon gold medal while running barefoot in the 1960 Summer Olympics that was held in Rome, Italy from August 25 to September 11. After the race, Abebe responded news reporters why he had run barefoot, “I wanted the whole world to know that my country, Ethiopia, has always won with determination and heroism." The welcoming ceremony of Abebe’s victory at home was highly crowded, and cermonious. Remembering Abebe Bikila the greatest heroe is to rememberthat history is the essence of whom we are as one people and a country.
Abebe Bikila ran and won two Olympic Gold medals for his native country,we all salute one of our greatest heroes that have touched our lives in many ways. Our one and only Abebe Bikila would have turned to his 83 years birthdat today so let's celebrate the memory of the two time Olympic gold winner. As one historian said it, "Abebe Bikila wasn't on...ly a friend of kings, queens and world leaders or well known public figures ofhis era, but he was also a friend of those from the lowest part of this life. Sincerely, He was good man who was sent to teach goodness to the world
. Plus Being an Olympic hero wasn't the only thing that made Abebe Bikilato be world's highly recognized personality. He was simply a gentle with humble background and unique soul from the highest place of the universe"
August 9, 2015: ETHIOPIA OBSERVER News:Ethiopia's Khat ExportEarnings In Decline'
Even as the domestic leafy narcotic khat production and consumption is on the rise in Ethiopia, the country’s khat export has declined 8.4 per centfor the just ended financial year, for the first time in its history of khat export. The country that boasts to be the world’s chief exporters of the crop earned 272 million from exports of the commodity in 2014/15, down from $297.4 million a year earlier, according to data from the Ministry of Trade. The decline in exports is mainly due to dropping export destinations as countries such as the UK, the Netherlands and China banned the stimulant drug from entering their countries. Clashes in Yemen and the closure of the Aden airport also made it practically difficultfor the leaf to enter there. Hence, Somalia and Djibouti remain to be the only markets for Ethiopian khat. The plant comes at the fourth position interms of generating dollar revenues for Ethiopia, behind coffee, oil seeds,and gold.

khat export has so far been registering steady growth. Ethiopia exported22,000tn of Khat in 2007/08, earning 108 million dollars. This increasedby 3500tn the following year, with 31 million dollars in additional earnings. The volume of exports increased to 36,000tn, 41,000tn, 41,100tn, respectively, for the three consecutive years that followed 2008/09. The country has also earned 209 million dollars, 238 million dollars and 297 million dollars during those years.

Concern about harms associated with khat, and its conflation with othersubstances, has led a number of countries to prohibit the substance.

However, the Ethiopian government is not taking any measure to discourage or ban the production and distribution of khat. The continuing rise in production has raised much concern, and critics lament that much agricultural land and labour is wasted on narcotic crop, while Ethiopian consumers expend much of their household budgets on the addictive crop.(Text ends)

August 9, 2015: ESAT NEWS: Seminar on “Ethio-Eritrean Relation:Current State and Prospect’

Side note: The Ethiopia Satellite Television and Radio (ESAT) Service, in collaboration with Vision Ethiopia (a group composed of Ethiopian academics, researchers, and pro-democracy advocates), is pleased to convene a timely one day seminar on “Ethio-Eritrean Relation: Current State and Prospect” in the Metropolitan Washington D.C. area. The purpose of the conference is to create a forum for scholars and pro- democracy advocates from the Ethiopian and Eritrean Diaspora and friends of Ethiopia to discuss the current political challenges Ethiopia facesand the solutions needed for the country to enjoy lasting peace, stability, democracy, and economic prosperity. The conference has two main objectives. They are: (1) understanding the current political situation in Ethiopia and devising strategies to bring an enduring political change in the country; and (2) creating a consensus around the means and methodsof struggle that the Ethiopian democratic forces may have to follow. All views and positions are welcome. The area of focus to achieve these two objectives include, but not limited to, the relationship between Ethiopian political organizations and the Government of Eritrea, feasibility of armed struggle against the regime in Ethiopia staging from Eritrea, and the necessary conditions for Ethiopians to support Ethiopian political organizations using Eritrea as a rear and staging ground.(Text ends) August 10, 2015: DROUGHT ALERTED: The Possibility of Famine and the Food Crisis in Ethiopia - Martin Geissler reports.

August 14, 2015: Man survives flight to Stockholm Arlanda airport inplane hold.

News Update: Ethiopian asylum seeker smuggled himself into Sweden byhiding inside the cargo hold of a plane. An asylum seeker has been discovered alive in the hold of a plane that landed at Stockholm Arlanda airport on Friday morning, after smuggling himself on to an Ethiopian Airlines flight from Addis Ababa.

The stowaway was found after the plane landed in Sweden just before 7am. The flight time for journeys between Addis Ababa and Stockholm is typically around eight hours. The man, who is understood to be in his 20sand was hoping to seek asylum in Sweden, was discovered when staff unloaded luggage from the plane, a spokesperson for Swedavia, which operates Sweden's main airports, told The Local.

"He was found when they were unloading the cargo from the plane. Theyopened the compartment and there he was. He was not inside a suitcase,he was sitting down in some way," said Henrik Kelfve.

"I can't recall any case like this at Swedish airports happening before." Swedish tabloid Aftonbladet, which broke the story, reported that the manwas checked over by medical staff at Arlanda airport soon after his flight landed. "He seems to feel pretty okay. A nurse is looking after him right now," Anders Mattsson, a duty officer at Stockholm police told the newspaper just after 10am. An hour later, Swedavia confirmed that the man was in police custody.

"After we found him we delivered him to the officers. They have him rightnow and will be asking him further questions," Kelfve told The Local. The TT newswire is reporting that the man told officers that he was employedat Addis Ababa's international airport and had therefore managed to secure access to plane while it was on the runway.

"We have talked to him via an interpreter and the purpose of the journey here was to seek asylum. He is not suspected of any crime and despite hisspectacular route to Sweden his case will now be handled in the same wasas other asylum seekers," Stefan Färdigs, a police spokesperson at Arlanda airport told TT.

Arlanda is Sweden's largest and busiest airport, with flights to more than180 destinations. Sweden was second only to Germany as the top recipient of refugees in the European Union last year. In 2014, it grantedasylum to 35,000 people out 81,000 who had asked for its protection.

Asylum applications from Ethiopians have boomed in the first seven months of 2015, shooting up by 140 percent over the same period lastyear. (Text ends)

September 9, 2015: U.S. State Department Highlights 3 Women PoliticalPrisoners from Ethiopia.

Side note: During a Q&A session with the press following her announcement of the campaign last Tuesday, a reporter asked Ambassador Power regarding the women from Ethiopia: “You’ve got threefrom Ethiopia on here,” the journalist said. “I’m curious – the President, our President, was just in Ethiopia, where he made some comments praising its democracy. I’m just wondering if you see a discord there?” U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations, Samantha Power, launched a one-month campaign last week called #FreeThe20 that will highlight 20 women from around the world who are political prisoners, including three female members of Ethiopia’s Semayawi (Blue) Party: Blen Mesfin, Meron Alemayehu, and Nigist Wondifraw. According to the campaign, which will last through September 2015, the Ethiopian trio will be the focus of attention on day 4-6 this week.

According to the campaign, which will last through September 2015, the Ethiopian trio will be the focus of attention on day 4-6 this week. “Blen Mesfin, Meron Alemayehu, and Nigist Wondifraw, Ethiopia were among a number of opposition party members and others arrested and charged with inciting violence during anti-Islamic State in Libya (ISIL) demonstrations in Addis Ababa in April 2015, which were organized by thegovernment of Ethiopia following the killing of 26 Ethiopians by ISIL,” states the campaign’s website humanrights.gov.

In her response Ambassador Power said: “As President Obama said on histrip to Ethiopia, the full potential of Ethiopia will not be unleashed and unlocked until journalists are able to report on what’s going in the countryfreely and opposition – credible opposition candidates are able to participate in elections.”

Humanrights.gov adds: “Blen, Meron, and Nigist are leading members of Ethiopia’s Blue Party, which advocates peacefully for democratic principlesand has faced numerous obstacles in exercising freedom of association and assembly both in the build-up to May 24 parliamentary elections, andthereafter. All three were arrested in Addis Ababa in the days following the April 22 protests and charged with inciting violence at the rally. They remain behind bars to this day.”

Side note: With 100% of votes in parliament, the Ethiopian prime ministerHailemariam Desalegn has been re-elected to a second term. But Hailemariam’s sweeping win isn’t so much a vote of confidence as anotherexample of how democracy is lagging in one of Africa’s fastest growing economies. Hailemariam’s win was assured by a parliament controlled by his coalition, the Ethiopian People’s Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF), which has ruled the country for the past two decades and now holds all 547 seats in the legislature. For the decade ending in 2013, the country averaged a rate of 10.8% expansion. Hailemariam has promised annual economic growth of “about 11%” for the next five years and to help the country reach “middle income” status, as opposed to being labeled a developing country, by 2025.

October 13, 2015: Ahram Online News: Egypt has ‘pressure cards’ in Ethiopia Renaissance dam dispute, says minister. Egypt holds pressure cards in Ethiopia's Renaissance dam issue and is making political and diplomatic efforts that aim to reach a compromise, Egypt's irrigation minister Hossam Moghazi said in press statements late Monday. "We are currently discussing the next tripartite meeting between the irrigation ministers of Egypt, Ethiopia, and Sudan to decide over the fate of both theFrench and the Dutch consultancy firms. It is expected to take place within the last 10 days of October," he said. Moghazi, however, said that the current dispute is not about a power struggle between the involved parties, stressing that Egypt is seeking political and diplomatic solutions for the stand off. The two foreign consultancy firms were supposed to reach an agreement and deliver their reports on 5 September to a committee of representatives and experts from Egypt, Ethiopia, and Sudan.

It is the one and only known example of this reference bearing a previously never before seen military-style black dial with luminous Arabic numerals and luminous Alpha hands — all these features being unrestored and in original condition. This timepiece features one of the most distinguished provenances ever seen in an auction room. According to our research, it was commissioned in 1954 as a gift for Ethiopian Emperor Haile Selassie, and presented during his official visit to Switzerland in November that year.
November 7, 2015: 6 Ethiopians Burned to Death in Latest South AfricaXenophobic Attacks. In a new spate of violent xenophobic attacks to hitSouth Africa, six Ethiopian nationals have been killed this past week in separate incidents.

Side note: On Friday, VOA reported that the killings happened in Durban,which has a history of violent attacks on foreigners. Locals, particularly poor South Africans, blame foreign nationals for the lack of jobs and increasing crime rates – hence the attacks. “They just come, steal and attack. In fact, the body of one of the victims is about to be sent back home… they doused his body in kerosene and killed him. But there were two others who were killed before him,” Yonas Fikru, an Ethiopian businessman living in Durban, said. Although the names of the victims have not been revealed, reports indicate that they were all Ethiopian menin their 20s.

The Ethiopian community in Durban has expressed frustration over thekillings and the inability of the South African police to deal with the culprits and protect foreigners. Tegegne Aboye, an Ethiopian living in Durban, said even when the criminals are reported and arrested, there isnot justice as they are released soon after.

“The killer vigilante mobs are thinking that it is their right to do what theyare doing,” Aboye said. “Even when they are caught or when someone point out criminals, we see them released shortly. Some of them and we see them coming out the next day and committing more crime.” Aboye claims the Ethiopian embassy in South Africa has been of little help in protecting its citizens from xenophobic attacks. “We see our brothers getting killed, doused with a three-liter jerrican of kerosene, and no one ishelping is when this happens,” he lamented. “We haven’t seen anyone sticking up for Ethiopian citizens here.”

In April, about three Ethiopians were killed during a series of xenophobicattacks against foreigners in Durban. The attacks, which mostly targetedimmigrant-owned shops and homes in Durban’s poor townships, followedsimilar occurrences in Soweto, near South Africa’s capital city Joburg.
South Africa has seen several xenophobic attacks this year following inciting statements from several high-profile figures in the country. In May, Zulu King Goodwill Zwelithini, leader of the Zulus, one of the biggestethnic groups in South Africa, said foreigners “need to pack their bags andleave.” Edward Zuma, son of South Africa’s President Jacob Zuma, has also said the country is “sitting on a ticking time bomb of them [foreigners] taking over the country”.

However, Jacob Zuma and the South African government have categorically condemned the attacks. King Zwelithini later said his statements were misinterpreted – he also condemned the attacks. PoliceMinister Nathi Nhleko said the attacks were a form of African “self-hate”.“Some of us find it difficult to think that this is just xenophobic. I think it also represents a particular political problem. You don’t see Australians being chased on the street, you don’t see Britons being chased on the streets,” he said. At the time of writing this article, South African authorities have not announced any arrests following the killing of the sixEthiopian men. The Ethiopian embassy has also not released any statement about the murders.

November 10, 2015: ERI PRESS: UK Exports Nuclear Weapon 'ingredient'to Ethiopia by CDE.

Side note: The UK Government has been urged to provide assurances of "strict scrutiny" over the export of material which can be used to manufacture nuclear weapons to Ethiopia. Data shows that in January thisyear, the UK approved the export of £1,193 of deuterium compounds to Ethiopia under a licence granted by the government's Department of Business, Innovation and Skills (BIS).

The materials has uses ranging from the construction of nuclear reactors and manufacture of medical drugs, to the production of nuclear weapons.The information, collected by the Campaign Against the Arms Trade (CAAT), also shows the deuterium has been exported to Ethiopia under a"dual-use" licence as goods for both MILITARY and civilian purposes.

But SNP MP Stephen Gethins, a member of the House of Commons Foreign Affairs Committee, has raised concerns over the transaction, pointing out there is no record of any nuclear power reactor in Ethiopia. Gethins has written to Foreign Secretary Philip Hammond pointing out Ethiopia's longstanding defence relationship with North Korea, which has a"prediction for nuclear armament".

The letter said:"Given Ethiopia has signed and ratified the African NuclearWeapon Free Zone Treaty and Non-Proliferation Treaty, what purpose could be had for acquiring nuclear material that has military capabilities? The Ethiopian Embassy in London was asked to comment but did not respond.

November 10, 2015:Denver Post News: Ethiopian-Americans irked atauction of Haile Selassie’s wristwatch.

Side note: Ethiopian-Americans in Denver and other U.S. cities are demanding that a Swiss wristwatch owned by the late Emperor Haile Selassie be returned to his royal descendants. They've been working with Selassie's grandson to persuade the auction house Christie's to halt a scheduled sale. Late Monday, Christie's officials agreed to withdraw the watch, which is valued between $520,000 and $1 million.

Haile Selassie died in August 1975 after a Marxist coup in which non- commissioned soldiers plundered his property. "We are honestly shocked that a prestigious and reputable auction house will want to get involved with the sale of this watch," said a letter to Christie's from the Society of Ethiopians in Colorado, home to an estimated 30,000 Ethiopian-Americans. "He loved this watch so much that he wore it on few occasionsuntil his mysterious death in August 1975. All of his property was stolen orconfiscated by heartless junior military officers of Communist Ethiopia," society spokesman Girum Alemayehu said in the letter.

Ethiopian-Americans regard the auctioning of Selassie's watch with "outrage" because it was seized "without due process of law," grandson Prince Ermias Sahle Selassie said in an e-mail from Washington D.C. "Weknow that other personal items have been taken and probably sold. ...
Knowing the history of what transpired in Ethiopia, it is perplexing why such a reputable firm such as Christie's would not say who the customer iswho is the owner," Prince Ermias said.

November 10, 2015: SOCCER News: Host Ethiopia will not allow Eritrea atEast Africa tournament. KAMPALA, Uganda (AP) Eritrea has been excluded from East Africa's main soccer tournament this month because ofpolitical tensions with host Ethiopia. Nicholas Musonye, secretary general of the Council for East and Central African Football Associations, says the regional soccer body "must respect" Ethiopia's position not to allow the Eritrea team into the country to play at the CECAFA Cup from Nov. 21- Dec. 6. The neighbors were at war between 1998 and 2000. Eritrean players have also frequently used soccer trips to try to escape their restrictive homeland. A group of 15 Eritrean players and a team doctor went missing and claimed political asylum at the 2012 CECAFA Cup in Uganda. Last month, 10 were granted asylum in Botswana having refused to return home following a World Cup qualifier.

November 12, 2015: TesfaNews: 40 Percent of Eritrean Migrants inEurope are Ethiopians told Austrian ambassador in Ethiopia.

Side note: Austrian ambassador in Ethiopia, Andreas Melan, in an interview with APA explained that as thousands of Ethiopians continue toillegally migrate to Saudi Arabia and South Africa, those who fled to Europe usually claim they are from Eritrea as that have better chance ofrecognition for asylum. The “mass exodus” of Ethiopians that no one speaks about attracts about 100,000 Ethiopians annually Eastwards, said Ambassador Melan. The official figures of course not known as Ethiopians mostly migrate illegally as legal migration has been prohibitedby the government.

“As Ethiopians, the only chance to get asylum in Europe is for opposition politician or a homosexual or any one who can demonstrate persecution,” said Ambassador Melan. “Critical journalists also often flee the country.” Ambassador Melan went on to say that, the Eritrean Community in Austriais very small while traditionally the number of asylum applications from Eritrea in Switzerland are relatively high.

However, “We believe that among the thousands of Eritrean migrants in Europe, 30 to 40 percent are Ethiopians,” said the ambassador. The 2013and 2014 European migration statistics also confirms Ambassador Melan’sassertion. Among the top countries of origin for asylum seekers, Ethiopiais not listed even among the top 20 origins as the thousands of its illegal migrants already claimed they are from Eritrea. For such simple fact and error, Eritrea has been singled out as the second most refugee producing country next to Syria.

But Ethiopia is also the destination country of many people from the region. At present, the East African country is home to a population ofover 94 million people on top of around 750,000 refugees from Sudan, Eritrea and Somalia.

However, Ethiopia itself is one of the poorest countries in the world – 30 percent of the population live on less than one dollar a day – and many ofits citizens often have no prospects in their homeland, and for that many of them leave their homes. In 2013, only 20 Ethiopians and 59 Eritreans have applied for asylum in Austria. In 2014, Ethiopia was counted not even among the 15 most countries of origin as they all start registering asEritreans up on arrival.

In addition to Europe and the Middle East, the route to South Africa is so popular among Ethiopian immigrants. This, however, is the least explored,so Maria Temesvari of the UN Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) in Addis Ababa said it is the least explored route by Ethiopians so far. No matter in which direction, the Ethiopian government wants its citizens to migrate legaly and for that it introduced a front against traffickers to curb illegal migration. In July, legislation was passed that will penalizes. “This goes back to the death penalty,” said Temesvari. (text ends)

November 12, 2015: ER News: Gondar University Hospital in northern Ethiopia is filling up with children who have been shot by Federal Police. Asource, who works at Gonder University Hospital as physician told that several children and adults with severe injuries have been arriving at the hospital over the past few days. Many of the injuries were caused by bullets. Currently there is a civil disobedience among the public of Quemant, a sub-ethnic group in Gondar and the regime has sent the notorious Federal Police to crack down indiscriminately by beating and shooting in sight, including children, women, and the elderly.

November 12, 2015: Abay Tsehaye senior member of the ruling EPRDF called upon to clear the muddy waters in a meeting in the southern town of Hawasa and secure buy-in from the Oromo portion of the ruling party, the Oromo People’s Democratic Organization (OPDO). In a leaked audio from the meeting, Tsehaye reportedly threatened that the Master Plan willbe implemented whether some liked it or not and that the plan’s opponents will be quashed. But Tsehaye remained silent as the controversy spawned by his words swirled.

November 26, 2015: STANDARD Digital News: Border closed after fiercegun battle between Kenya police and Ethiopian soldiers.

Side note: Hundreds of Kenyans, mostly businessmen and revelers are stranded in at least five centres in southern Ethiopia after the closure of border points by Ethiopian Immigration officials. Residents said Moyale town, Sololo, Forolle, Dukana and Illeret border points were closed on Friday at around 6pm. "They have closed their border from Friday evening. My vehicle is in Yaballo. My brother went to sell some livestock and we buy goods from them. They are now stranded there," said YattaniBoru, a businessman from Dukana. The development follows a fierce gun battle on Friday between Kenya police and Ethiopian forces at Anona and parts of Sololo township that left four Ethiopian soldiers and three Kenyanpolice officers dead.

November 30, 2015: Oromo protest updates:Police indiscriminately gun down civilians in Gondar, nothern Ethiopia, aftter prison fire breaks out Gonder looked like a war zone today after a huge fire destroyed a prison in the northern Ethiopian town. Instead of trying to extinguish the fire, thepolice, assisted by soldiers, mowed down the prisoners who were trying toescape from the fire and civilians who were on near-by roads. Some of theresidents who witnessed the savagery clashed with the police. Schools andshops were closed in the city after the shooting started. Hundreds of people were wounded and killed by police. In fact, the savage police have done more damage than the fire itself.

December 11, 2015: Horrifying! A Mosque grenade attack wounds 24 people in the capital of Addis Ababa. The hand grenade was reportedly thrown into the crowds at Friday Solat prayers at Addis Ababa's Anwar Mosque. The Anwar Mosque is the city's main Islamic house of worship.

Side note: A grenade attack Friday during evening prayers wounded 24 people at the biggest mosque in the Ethiopian capital of Addis Ababa, fiveof them seriously, the government said. Authorities are not sure who is responsible for the attack at the Grand Anwar Mosque but investigations are underway, said Information Minister Getachew Reda. Despite deploying troops to Somalia to fight the al-Qaida-linked militant group al- Shabab, Ethiopia has largely avoided retaliatory attacks from the militants. Al-Shabab has previously targeted Kenya, Uganda and Djibouti who have also deployed troops to Somalia under the banner of the AfricanUnion to bolster the country’s weak U.N.-backed government from an insurgency by the militants. Ethiopian authorities have, however, recentlyjailed a number of Muslims on charges of terrorism and a conspiracy to establish an Islamic State in the country. A court sentenced 18 people to lengthy sentences in August.

December 24, 2015: OROMO PROTEST: Ethiopian government briefly arrested president of OFC Merera Gudina. It is reported that the Chairman of Oromo Federalist Congress Dr. Merera Gudina is arrested. It was also reported that Gerbadeputy chairman of OFC and Dejene Tafa, secretary & legal council are arrested today in Adama and Addis Ababa respectively.

December 24, 2015 The TPLF regime and its supporters have been circulating the picture of collected guns alleging it was confiscated from Oromo protesters. The plan is to accuse the rival opposition ...leaders of leading an armed insurrection. The truth is these weapons were collected in Western and South Western Shawa from the government's own local police and village militias at the start of the protest due to fear that they will turn against the government. You might recall that disarming Oromia police and militia was widely reported on social media. Meantime, regime ordered families to cover up the expense of the killers! (for the bullets, per-diem, transportation cost). Following the recent killing of innocent Oromo students and citizens, TPLF forced families who lost their love once to pay 1000 Birr to cover the cost of the killing and in addition forced to sign incriminating document prepared by the same Nazi regime of TPLF that states "my love one is killing while participating interrorism act." How worse can it get! This is the time to uproot TPLF by any means. To remove this fascist regime from Ethiopia, I am not afraid to die and I am not ashamed to kill!

December 31, 2015: Social Media Top OFC leader beaten, threatened withdeath, now under house arrest. "This morning, on my way to work, 4 menin civilian clothes greeted me by my name; identified themselves as ‘police’ and asked me to get in a car parked next to where they stopped me. When I refused, they grabbed me by my arms left and right; forced me into the backseat of their car and started driving. Once the car startedmoving, they started to hit me: the two guys in my left and right continued to punch me while the one sitting in the front-seat kept touching my face with his gun. While they were hitting me, they kept saying that they were doing this because I was talking to the media despite their warnings not to do so. After they stopped the beating, they took away my phone at gun point and threatened that I do as they say orthey would come for me and my family. They told me that not only mine but also my family’s lives were in danger: “If you step out of your house or talk to any media, you will take responsibility for what may happen to you or your children” “ከዛሬ ጀምሮ ከቤትህ ብትወጣ ወይ ሚዲያ ብታናግር በአንተ ምሆነ በቤተሰቦችህ ላይ ለሚሆነ ውነገር ሃላፊነቱ ያንተ ነው”). Before they let me go, they also made it clear that they would resort to killing if I don’t do as they say “we no longer have a place to keep you, if you don’t do as you’re told killing you or paralyzing you is what is left to do.” (“ከእንግዲህ ወዲህ እናንተን የምናስርበት ቦታ የለንም::ወይ እንገድልሃለን ወይ በሞኪና ገጭተን ፓራላይዝ እናደርግሃለን" The Ethiopian government has turned deaf ears to the many peaceful pleas to stop the violent crackdownall over Oromia, and continues to intimidate, arrest and kill citizens with no accountability. More than 4,000 of our party's members including Bekele Gerba, Dejene Tafa, Addisu Bulala, and Desta Dinka are currently imprisoned incommunicado. It is my hope that the government and thosewho are silently watching understand that arresting and killing of innocentindividuals has never silenced Oromos and will never be a solution to a legitimate demand of millions, and move quickly to rectify this situation. Until then, I, as an individual and member of OFC, will continue to peacefully voice the concerns of the Oromo people, because the peaceful struggle for the freedom and dignity of our people is a cause that millionsof Oromos including me are prepared to sacrifice our lives for. -Bekele Nega, General Secretary, Oromo Federalist Congress (OFC).

December 31, 2015: AFP News: urges Ethiopia to free jailed journalists (Washington AFP News) - The White House demanded that Ethiopia stop using its controversial anti-terror law to jail journalists Wednesday, in an unusually stark rebuke for a key US ally in Africa. National Security Council spokesman Ned Price did not name the reporters the United States is concerned for, but he spoke amid a harsh Ethiopian crackdown on dissent. "We are deeply concerned by the recent arrests of other journalists in Ethiopia," Price said. "We urge the Ethiopiann Government to release journalists and all others imprisoned for exercising their right tofree expression," he added. The White House urged Ethiopia "to refrain from using its Anti-Terrorism Proclamation as a mechanism to silence dissent and to protect the rights of journalists, bloggers, and dissidents towrite and speak freely as voices of a diverse nation."

On December 19, Human Rights Watch reported that Ethiopian security forces had killed at least 75 demonstrators with live fire during weeks of regional anti-government protests. US President Barack Obama visited theEthiopian capital Addis Ababa, the seat of the African Union, in July, and Washington is seen as close to the government, headed by Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn. But, while admiring Ethiopia's strong economic growth and welcoming its role in peacekeeping missions, Washington has been cautious not to endorse its rights record.

In October, Washington welcomed the release of a previous group of dissident bloggers and journalists, but on Wednesday the White House warned Ethiopia against new arrests. "The United States has consistentlyapplauded Ethiopia for being a model and a voice for development in Africa," price said. "But such gains must rest on a foundation of democratic governance and respect for human rights if they are to be sustainable. (Text ends)

January 5, 2016: Ethiomedia updates: Abay Tsehaye the ever shifty politician loses temper, whips Oromia president Muktar Kedir.Abay Tsehaye, a senior member of the ruling coalition partner TPLF lost his temper recently and whipped Muktar Kedir, the president of Oromia region. The reason for the whipping was that Muktar failed to tighten up and crush the ongoing protests in the region against the entrenched TPLFtyranny.

January 11, 2016: Antiquity News: Representatives from the Howard University School of Divinity (HUSD) have traveled to Addis Ababa, to return a sacred, 14th-15th century manuscript to Debre Libanos Monastery, one of Ethiopia’s holiest sites. The manuscript, known as Tweed MS150, contains two different texts: Acts of Paul, and Acts of Serabamon. It is part of one of the largest collections of Ethiopian sacredartifacts housed in the United States.

January 16, 2016: When he finally broke his silence, Abay Tsehaye instead of admitting that his prized asset, his lethal tongue, has irredeemably failed him, Tsehaye once again plunged himself headlong into much hotter waters. In a curious interview with friendly and independent-sounding Horn Affairs blog, Tsehaye categorically denied ever uttering that famous phrase that inflamed and animated Oromo revolutionaries, at home and abroad: that the master plan will be implemented regardless of the public’s opposition to it and his party willmercilessly silence those who dare oppose it.

January 18, 2016: European Union Parliament Resolution On Ethiopia’s current situation. The EU urges the Ethiopian government to bring the continuing exactions perpetrated against the Oromo community to an end,calls on Ethiopian authorities to conduct an impartial and independent investigation on the repression that took place against the protesters, ensure that the perpetrators are prosecuted and tried before the competent jurisdictions.

Side note: The Oromos are Ethiopia's largest ethnic group but have beenhistorically excluded from centers of power. Because Ethiopia lacks an ethnic majority (and perhaps because it has a 1,500-year history rife with conflict between the country's centers of power and it’s geographic and social periphery), the country's regions are supposed to receive a certain degree of autonomy under Ethiopia's 1995 Federal Constitution, which actually gives the regions a right to secede under certain circumstances. The ruling EPRDF led government is dominated largely by elites from the Tigrayan ethnic groups. Its rule depends on a baseline of inter-communal harmony — just as it depends on the appearance of progress and economic growth.

26 JANUARY 1887:

Emir Abdullahi II Ibn 'Ali' Abdosh-Shakur (1885) was the last Emir of Harrar from 1885 to 1887, when the state was terminated, following thedefeat of the Harrari troops at the Battle of Chelenqo by King Menelik ofShewa state.

Harrar remained independent until the Ottoman-Egyptian occupation of 1875 to 85. The Battle of Chelenqo was an engagement fought on January1887 between the army of Shewa under Negus Menelik and Emir AbdullahiII of Harrar. The Harrari forces were routed, and Ne...gus Menelik afterwards occupied and annexed the city of Harrar.

Negus Menelik, in response to Italian control of parts of Eritrea and the port of Massawa, had begun to import firearms and munitions through theFrench-controlled ports of Djibouti. By 1886, Emir Abdullahi of Harrar had blocked transport of these firearms through his territories. Negus Menelik sought to avoid war, and in January 1887, offered Emir Abdullahi the same kind of autonomy that the king Abba Jifar of Jimma enjoyed; but theEmir refused this offer.

Knowing that he was heavily outnumbered, and his troops had only obsolete matchlocks and a few cannons, Emir Abdullahi decided to attack on early in the morning of the Ethiopian christian christmas (January 9), expecting the Shewans to be unprepared and befuddled with food and alcohol. However, Negus Menelik had worried about a surprise attack, andkept his men at alert.

The Emir's men opened fire at 11:00 am. The Shewan soldiers quickly responded and routed the Harrari infantry troops with few casualties. Menelik pursued the retreating Emir to Harrar, whose ancient walls wouldnot long resist his assault. Once again Abdullahi refused to surrender, then fled into the desert, leaving his uncle to negotiate the city's surrender. With the occupation, the independence of Harrar came to an end. The former Emir Abdullahi later returned to the town to live as a Sufior religious scholar. He died there in 1930.

01 JANUARY 1890:
In addition to the drought that displaced an overwhelming amount of population in Medri Bahri presently, the Italians were able to sweep the territory one by one to proclaim "Medri Bahri" as presently called 'Eritrea'

Balambaras Kafel of the Seraye (circa 1887/1888) and his entire family were among the over 300 notable elites and local rulers of Medri Bahri imprisoned and tortured by Italian colonists. Nearly all members of their families and other notables were perished in the Nakura prison of the RedSea as a result of harshly resisting the Italian colonial efforts and campaigns.

The strategic and isolated Nakura prison located in the Dahlak Archipelago, becomes infamous for it's hellacious atmosphere of widespread star...vation, disease, tortures, and slow executions. With the imprisonment and eventual death of Medri Bahri's ruler, Dejazmatch Woldemicael Solomon, and having the entire highland and lowland regionsof present Eritrea leaderless with the imprisonment and brutal executions of then anti-colonial local rulers resisting the Italians.

"The British army comprised 16,000 combatants, an equal number of servants, forty-five elephants, and a great many pack mules. Napier, on landing in Abyssinia, (3 January, 1868), issued a proclamation to the Ethiopians to the effect that the sole object of the invasion was to deliverthe captives, and that he had nothing but friendly feelings except for those who should seek to interfere with his progress. With this, the army

boldly began its march through the steep defiles of the "great Africancitadel".

03 JANUARY 1854:
On this date the British explorer, and apparent imposter Richard Burton (1821-1890) enters the town of Harar for a ten day sojourn. Burton wouldbe quickly caught and imprisoned and expelled.

Burton---disguised himself as a Muslim Arab Sheikh-is believed to havebeen the first known European to enter the Ethiopian city of Harar in 1854.

Local Harar custom proclaimed a prophecy warning of the city's inevitabledestruction should such a mishap of a a non-Muslim European foreigner enters its walls. Sir Richard Burton recounts his experiences in his book "First Steps in East Africa, or an Exploration of Harar".

Burton, later knighted a Sir, wrote: "'at all times these gates are carefullyguarded; in the evening the keys are taken to the Amir, after which no one can leave the city till the dawn'." The Old Harar walled city is registered under the world heritage list by UNESCO in 2006. JANUARY 1899:

THE APPEAL: A NATIONAL AFRO-AMERICAN NEWSPAPERS: ON THEABYSSINIAN SUSPENSION BRIDGE

Native Roeblings Built It With Cables and Bracas of Vines. Many and strange were the things seen by the French expedition Bonvalot de Bor champs in Africa, but nothing stranger than the bridge of vines over the Omo river in Abyssinia, which is pictured in "L'IlUustration" from a photograph taken by a member of the party. In most parts of Africa, bridges are undreamed' of; big rivers are crossed by rafts and little ones forded. But in the mountains of Abyssinia the torrents that pour clown to join the Nile are not so lightly stemmed. Over one of these the Abysinians,who have something like a settled country and: stable government, have thrown the bridge. , Unlike the Brooklyn bridge or the suspension bridge at Niagara, the. Abyssi ian engineers had no cables, no scientific bands of siteel. instead they had only nature's growth with which to withstand nature's force. But ingenuity succeeded In the absence of other resources. It is built upon thesuspension plan bung from big cables made of twisted creepers; from these depend the uprights bearing the floor supports. The roadway la verynarrow, for no one ever travels across the hills except with caravans of porters bearing trade goods. The skil -vlth which the bridge is built Is something marvelous.

The Bonvalot de Bonchamps party set out from Djibouti, on the Red sea,and travelled across the Somali desert and the Abyssinian hills to join Marchant at Fasboda, which he reached from the west coast. Thus they planned to throw a strip of French soil right across the Dark Continent. Itreached the headwaters of the Sobat and went boating merrily down theriver; but meanwhile the British gunboats reached the junction of the Sobat with the White Nile and the expedition is now toiling back to Djibouti. The road going out is a good deal longer than it was going in.

Prince Makonnen Haile Selassie met with the Egyptian governor of Suezduring his visit to Egypt as Royal prince of Ethiopia at age 9.

26 JANUARY 2013:
Princess Aida Desta the granddaughter of the late emperor laid to rest.

Her Royal Princess Aida Desta, the granddaughter of Emperor Haile- Selassie I passes away at the age of 85. The funeral of Princess Aida Desta, the granddaughter of Emperor Haile-Selassie of Ethiopia (1930-1974) was held on Thursday at the Holy Trinity Cathedral in Addis Ababa.

The Ceremony was attended by members of the royal family, religious leaders and government officials, including the veteran former chairman of the ruling Ethiopian Peoples' Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF),Sebhat Nega. Born in 1927, Princess Aida was the daughter of the heroicRas Desta Damtew, who was killed by the Italians in 1937, and EmperorHaile Selassie's eldest daughter, Princess Tenagnework Haile-Selassie.
In 1974, Princess Aida was seized at the palace of Mekele by the revolutionary soldiers sent to arrest her husband, His Royal Leul Ras Mengesha Seyoum, the great grandson of Emperor Yohannes. But, he had escaped slightly days earlier and was able to establish and chair the Ethiopian Democratic Union (EDU,) which would fight the Duerg regime until its fracture in the winter of 1977 between rival factions. Princess Aida however, had decided to remain behind and share the fate of her grandfather, mother and the royal family as a whole. Her younger brotherprince Rear Admiral Eskinder Desta was executed along with other formerofficials widely known as the sixty former Imperial military and civilian officials in the evening of Friday November 23, 1974. She was imprisoned together with her mother Princess Tenagnework and her sisters PrincessesHirut, Seble, and Sofia as well as Sara Gizaw, Duchess of Harar. She received praise and was called by many, Aida the beautiful and the talented princess.

She graduated from Cambridge University in History as the first Ethiopianroyal family member to be enrolled in a University abroad; she then served as the UN immigrants' representative commissioner. She is survived by six children from the same husband and 11 grand children.
She was also one of the royal family members who were in prison for nearly 14 years under the Duerg military regime. She died at the age of85 on the 15th of January in the US State of Northern Virginia.

She will be remembered for her sense of humor particularly in relation toher time under arrest under the military junta in the palace of Mekelle castle, which is also known as Emperor Yohannes VI palace.

Princess Aida Desta was known for her quotation as said on April 8, 1974,when she stepped off the military airplane, that when her eyes swept the tarmac and she quoted as saying, "The Lion has gone out of his cage. He has escaped you and you are looking at the Lioness. I won't bite you", mentioning about her husband Leul Ras Mengesha Seyoum, then Governor-general of Tigre Province who slightly escapes capture of the security plainclothes.

Engineer Kitaw Ejigu died on this day at the age of 58. One of the world'sbest aerospace scientists and the only widely known Ethiopian in the field,Engineer Kitaw worked for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA), Rockwell International and for the Boeing Company.

Apart from his prestigious status as an aerospace scientist, he was also widely known for his efforts to bring about political change in Ethiopia, particularly during the last few years of his life. He publicly denounced theEPRDF regime in Ethiopia and may of its policies. Even though he was ambitious about using his knowledge, experience and high-status to help his homeland, he repeatedly said he was not made welcome by the regime. And in 2002, he founded a political party by the name of the Ethiopian National United Front, “to help overthrow the Ethiopian regime and to bring about a stable and democratic political system.”

14 JANUARY 1994:

January 14, 1994: Ato Ketema Yifru ((12 December 1929 - 14 January1994), the former top diplomat and politician who served in various positions under the Imperial government (between 1961 and 1970) passed away of pancreatic cancer at age of 55.

Remembering The Distinguished Ethiopian Diplomat:

The late Ketema Yifru born in by the slopes of Mt. Gara-Mulleta the sub- district of Grawa, in former Harrarghe province of Eastern Ethiopia, Ketema rose to the highest levels of Emperor Haile Selassie's government,including Minister of Foreign Affairs of Ethiopia between 1961 and 1970.

He was a son of a farmer in the rural Gara-Mulleta. He was among the very few young Ethiopians of humble family background to rise to the position of high government rank through his educational achievement. The late top diplomat being considered one of the educated young elitesamong others, whome probably got a chance to worked along with the emperor under his special cabinet.

The late top diplomat remembered for his important role during the formation of the ex-Organization of African Unity (OAU), the predecessor of the present-day African Union (AU). Ketema Yifru also served in severalministries in the Aklilu Habte-Wold government. He was imprisoned without charge by the ruling Duerg regime for over eight years until he released in September, 1983 among with 715 others .

Following his release, Ketema Yifru accepted a senior position with the United Nations agency, the UN-World Food Program based in Nairobi, Kenya. The late Ketema Yifru is remembered for his outstanding diplomatic efforts and role on to lobby government officials of founding member states to sign up the OAU founding Charter, and secures the General secretariat in Addis Ababa upon it's formation as Organization ofAfrican Union (OAU), the predecessor of the present-day African Union Commission (AUC).

Among his generation of African top diplomats actively engaged with activities of founding and strengthening the continental organ were, Njoroge Mungai/Robert Ouko of Kenya, Belaid Abdisalaam/Addulaziz Boutaflika/Mohammed Ben Yahya of Algeria, Ibrahim Koroma Sorri of SierraLeone, Rudolph Grimes of Liberia, Mohammed Riad of Egypt, Mansoor Khaled of the Sudan, Idris Miskini of Chad, Abdullahi Issa/OmarArteh Galeb of Somali Republic, Ibrahim Fal of Senegal, John Malecela/ Ibrahim Kadona/Salim A. Salim of Tanzania, Elijah Mudenda of Zambia among others, but one thing is real, Ketema Yifru was the best of all mentioned above for his pre-inormedness on the Liberation struggles in Africa and the outstanding effort and contribution when we come to the OAU's foundation he enlightens. Ethiopians are proud of this career diplomat of his time. 'Nefse Yimar' (Rest In Peace)

16 JANUARY 2005:

Comedian Albachew Teka died on this day. The name Albachew Teka is synonymous with hilarious comedy in Ethiopia. Along with his fellow comedian Lemeneh Tadesse, Alebachew popularized modern Ethiopian comedy in Ethiopia on the national television. It was his efforts and talentsthat set new and unprecedented standards and that paved the way for comedy to be a recognized modern-day profession in Ethiopia. He entertained Ethiopians in Ethiopia for many years and traveled abroad to make Ethiopian expatriates in different parts of the world laugh.

After touring the world to entertain Ethiopians for decades, he then started the first Ethiopian TV talk show named: The Alebesho Show. Thistoo was unprecedented in Ethiopia and as such, the show caught the interests of thousands of Ethiopians. In the pioneering show, he persuaded many of the Ethiopian affluent guests to the show to help thedestitute of Ethiopia, and as a result gained recognition as a very humanitarian Ethiopian as well.

Alebachew died in a suspicious car accident while traveling from Addis Ababa to Jimma, in southern Ethiopia, to film an episode for his show. Hiscar reportedly plunged into a ravine about 30km from Jimma. He was 44 years old. News of his death was met with shock and more than 100,000 mourners attended his funeral at St. Joseph's Church in Addis Ababa.

Alebachew is survived by his wife and three children.

Italian daily ranks First Lady Azeb Mesfin nicknamed “Gual Gola” as amost corrupted person.

Italian language daily hard copy journal http://multimedia.quotidiano.net/Named the former first lady Azeb Mesfen as the most corrupted member of the ruling regime and labeled her name on nearly all corrupted activities in the nation.

She is mentioned for being the owner of the company that illegally smuggling 4 million pieces of enjera out of the country daily after snatching from the dinner table of 4 million Ethiopians, bottled drinking water and so forth Have you been aware of it? It is a full blown fact. Notrumor has it at all.

It is just because you hardly read, that doesn’t mean the world doesn’t write about us. It does. In fact the world says more negative about our nation, the regime and the officials. Plus how filthy poor we are then anyother country in the continent. Even though the officials of the ruling regime often brainwash and cover us by a heavy blanket of lies, but the world knows the true color of us. (Source: Edwardo Bayrono)

FaceToFaceAfrica.com; Ethiopia's Most Important Religious ManuscriptsNow in Washington, D.C.

What's In the Collection?
In total, the collection is comprised of 125 Christian manuscripts, includingliturgical books, hagiographies, psalters, and 215 Islamic manuscripts, including the Quran and commentaries on Quran.

According to the Catholic News Agency, it's the largest collection of Ethiopian Islamic manuscripts outside of Ethiopia. More than 600 manuscripts were handmade using hides from calves, sheep, and goats,and are estimated to date back to the 18th and 19th century.

In the collection, there are over 350 "magic" locally known as "Asmat" scrolls, which are traditional Christian prayer talismans, and each was handwritten by a "debtera," or a intellectual cleric in the Ethiopian church,and includes the name of the person it was written for.

Pieces of the manuscripts were worn around the neck for purposes ofhelping people with different kinds of ailments, including headaches, painful menstruation, and complicated childbirth.

Some of these scrolls, which were predominantly worn by women, may have been passed down through many generations, mainly from motherto daughter. The prayer jewels haven't been studied much due to the personal nature of their use.

Washington, D.C., hosts one of the largest Ethiopian communities outsideEthiopia, and has several Ethiopian Orthodox and Catholic churches and cultural centers, making it the best location to donate the manuscripts.

Ethiopian Religion; Ethiopia is predominantly a Christian country, withthe majority of Christians belonging to the Ethiopian Orthodox TewahedoChurch (EOTC).
However, there are other small religious communities in the country, including Muslims, Judaists, and Pagans. There is also a minority sectionof Christians who are Roman Catholics or Protestants.
Many Ethiopians still use the prayer scrolls for protection and healing. They are often inscribed with prayers, spells, and charms to offer protection to their specific owner. The text on these "magic" scrolls is often derived from the bible, which is why the majority of churches in thecountry tolerate despite their connection to magic.

The United Nations Security Council Session on The African Soil in AddisAbaba, Ethiopia.

Dr. Minasie Haile, Ethiopain Ministter of Foreign Affairs made a remarkablespeech on the closing ceremony of the security council meeting in Addis Ababa. The United Nations Security Council session in Addis Ababa ended in the early hours of Saturday morning the 5th of February.

Most delegates rated the week-long session - the first to be held on African soil - as a success, despite Great Britain's veto of a resolution on Rhodesia in the closing stages. It was in this vein that Ethiopia's Foreign Minister Dr. Minassie Haile spoke when he addressed the Security Councilbefore it rose at 1.25 local time.

"I would like to assure the members of the Council that we have considered it a privilege to play host to this historic session of the United Nations Security Council. The first ever held in Africa. When we expressedour readiness to receive the Council here in our capital, we were any much conscious of the special significance and the consequence that thesesay have on developments in Africa. I believe that the United Nations has never before come as close to the African peoples who need its assistancemost, as it has in the last week, when the Council has been meeting here.Even of the achievements of the Council at the end of the session were not as much as had been hoped for by the African in general, and particularly by those who are still under colonial domination, the fact that the Council in its wisdom has found it possible to meet on African soil is initself, as the Secretary-General put it, an achievement.”

Brigadier General Taffari Banti, the second post-monarchial symbolic military head of state killed after a meeting of the standing committee of the Duerg on this day (local calendar Tir 26, 1969 late morning) The shootout is occurred in the Grand palace known as commonly the “MenelikPalace” when gunfire erupted during a meeting of the Standing Committeeof the Provisional Military Adminstrative Council (PMAC) commonly known as the Duerg.

After nine weeks of "strenuous internal negotiations on to restructuring the Provisional Military Administrative Council (PMAC) commonly known as the "Duerg", a meeting of the standing committee of the Duerg found all the wanted persons assembled them in one room, among them were Brigadier General Taffari Banti, the symbolic chairman of the PMAC and other senior members of the council. Taffari Banti along with others criticized the lack of a vanguard party in words which termed it as "the bloody war between MEISON and the EPRP to be politically unjustifiable, and that it should be in any case remain limited to the civilian Left withoutthe army intervening in any way".

This meeting ended with the deaths of not only Brigadier General TaffariBanti (the military head of state) and the two captains, Alemayehu Haile(head of the Duerg's Administrative Affairs) and Moges Wolde-Michael (head of the Duerg's Economic Affairs), but four other senior Duerg members who had been opposed to Majour Mengistu's move are, Lt.
Colonel Asrat Desta (head of the Duerg's Public Relations affairs), Lt. Colonel Heruy Haile Selassie, Captain Teffera Deneke, Majour Yohannes Miseker and Corporal Haile Belay were summarly killed during the palace shootouts as well as Duerg's chief of the security branch Lt. Colonel DanielAsfaw, and a civilian intellect, senior political orator in the name of Dr.
Senay Likue whose supports Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam were amongthe killed during the shootout.

Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam and his supporters gained undisputed leadership of the Duerg. The coup gave upperhand rightly for him to replace hastly the military head of state Brigadier General Taffari Banti and his leftist allies the complete freedom to launch a full-scale offensiveknown as usually the "Red-Terror" against it's cladestine rival, the Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Party (EPRP).

The Marshal Graziani Massacre: Facist Italy launches three days of massacre in Addis Ababa in which hundreds of thousands of the city's residents are shot dead, beheaded or disemboweled indiscriminately afteran attempt to kill the ruthless Italian general Rodolfo Graziani is made byEthiopians as part of the resistance movement against the facist's invasion. Thousands of women and children are gassed to death, homes set alight and various types of fascist brutality used in retaliation.

Ethiopians Never Forget Rodolpho Graziani the ‘Butcher of Addis Ababa’ADDIS INSIGHT World Bulletin / News Desk February 20, 2016.

As Ethiopia remembers thousands of people killed by Italian forces in Addis Ababa 79 years ago, survivors and veterans remain angry that Italyauthorized a mausoleum for the man who ordered the deaths.
Rodolfo Graziani, a committed Italian Fascist officer, is widely held responsible for the deaths and internment of thousands of people by occupation forces around Feb. 19, 1937. Three days of killings and reprisals were triggered after two Ethiopians attempted to assassinateGraziani.

One historian told Anadolu Agency that between 6,000 to 12,000 people were killed over three days of violence. Italy invaded Ethiopia for the first time in 1896 but was defeated by Ethiopians under the leadership of Emperor Menelik II. Italy attempted to colonize Ethiopia a second time in 1935 but was driven out after five years of fighting. Ethiopians held remembrance ceremonies held Saturday in the capital and throughout the country, attended by officials, survivors and war veterans. ‘Burned alive’: Zewdu Temtime, a lecturer at the History Department of Addis Ababa University, told Anadolu Agency on Saturday that “the Italians targeted the massacre at the educated, the young and the elites that were engagedin leading the liberation movement”.

According to Zewdu, “the invading forces locked residents of Addis Ababain their homes and burned them alive and destroyed the city. “They also continued the massacre to a famous monastery in northern Ethiopia, where they believed that the leaders and collaborators of the assassination attempt took shelter, and massacred 1,500-3,000 monks.”However, other historians have put the total number of people killed at 30,000.

‘I was there’: Addis Ababa resident Gedame Abate, 92, recalled the massacre to Anadolu Agency: “My parents had a 12-room house in Addis Ababa locally known as the Gullele area. “Some of the rooms were rented.When the Italians began massacring citizens, all people who were living inthat place locked their doors. We ran away to another part of the city.” “Later I found out that the Italians burnt the house and the occupants to ash.”

She added that she saw corpses littered in the city’s alleyways: “It wasthe most horrifying thing that lives with me.” Colonel Tessema Lemma,81, who was barely two years old at the time, was lucky to survive thekilling with his family. “I grew up with horror stories of the killings and remember how my family and neighbors were hurt by the action of theItalian soldiers,” he said.

Memorial dispute: In 2012, a mausoleum and park in the village of Affile,east of Rome, was dedicated to the memory of Graziani. The president ofthe Ancient Ethiopian Patriots’ Association, Daniel Jote Mesfin, told Anadolu Agency that Ethiopians strongly oppose the honor given to Graziani, who led the indiscriminate massacre. “What does honoring sucha person demonstrate? This means supporting fascism and encouraging generations to engage in similar acts,” Daniel said. According to Zewdu, honoring Graziani, —subsequently dubbed the ‘Butcher of Addis Ababa’ —reflects budding neo-fascist outlooks in western Europe. Ethiopians are denouncing the honor given to Graziani, however, it depends on Italy’s willingness to stop honoring him, he added.

Marks the 99th anniversary of the death of Her Late Empress Taitu Bitul ofEthiopia (baptismal name Wollete Mikael).

She had been Empress-Consort of Emperor Menelik II of Ethiopia from May 1889 until December 1913 when the Emperor died and she became Dowager Empress. During her husband's reign as King of Shewa, and thenlater as Emperor of all Ethiopia, Empress Taitu had wielded more power than any other Empress in Ethiopia's long history. A staunch conservative,she led the traditionalist camp among the aristocracy who looked upon herhusband's efforts at modernization and westernization with skepticism.
She was among the architects of Ethiopia's decisive victory against Italy inthe first Ethio-Italian war, and commanded her own forces in the decisive Battle of Adowa.

As her husband's health declined and he became incapacitated, Taitu had assumed state responsibility, making government appointments and decisions. The nobility stepped in and removed her from state responsibility and set up a regency under Ras Tessema Nadew, restricting her to the care of her husband in 1910. The Emperor died on December 12, 1913, which was when her step-grandson, Lij Iyasu, expelled her fromthe Imperial Palace. She went to live in the old palace atop Mt. Entoto, overlooking Addis Ababa.
It is said that she got her revenge on Lij Iyasu by advising the conspirators that deposed him in 1916 in favor of her step-daughter Empress Zewditu, and helped advise on the strategy to defeat Lij Iyasu'sfather Nigus Mikael at Segelle when he rose up to restore his son to the throne.

Empress Taitu was a formidable woman, who wielded power in an age where few women in the world were able to. God rest the soul of EmpressTaitu, Light of Ethiopia, and may her memory be eternal.

Richard Pankhurst, a great scholar, humanist and champion of Ethiopia's history and her people died on this day. Prof. Pankhurst was known for the many books he authored, the institutions he established (the Instituteof Ethiopian Studies and the Journal of Ethiopian Studies), for his valiant fight he waged against the Italian and British governments to repatriate stolen heritages (including the Axum obelisk, ancient books and artifacts),and many students he mentored and taught.

To say more, Professor Pankhurst is not only remembered for the more than 30 books that he authored or co-authored mostly on Ethiopia, but forhis indefatigable crusade to restore to Ethiopia the historical relics looted from her during periods of wars from the 19th to the 20th centuries. His campaign forced Italy to return Ethiopia’s most sacred Axum Obelisk, (circa 1st century AD) which was plundered by Mussolini’s troops during the Fascist occupation of 1936-41. The historical relic stood in the Piazza di Porta Capena in Rome from 1937 until its return to Ethiopia in 2005, thanks to Prof. Pankhurst’s dogged struggle. His concerted campaign for the return of Ethiopia artifacts looted by British troops during the 1868 Magdala war – sacred parchments, books, crosses and icons held in the British Museum, the Buckingham palace and in private collections was only partially successful. Nevertheless, he did succeed to retrieve and return to Ethiopia, a number of the country’s national treasures, most notably the sword and shield of Emperor Tewodros and the Tabot (replica of the Ark of the Covenant) named in honour of the Saviour of the World.

In the vicinity of the northern Ethiopian town of Adwa, a nationalist army led by Emperor Menelik II, also known as Emmeye Menelik, cut acolonialist Italian army to pieces.
The Battle of Adwa Victory: Colonial Italy is defeated resoundingly by Ethiopia in one of the greatest battles in the history of Africa. This victory realised at the Battle of Adwa over Italy comes at a time when almost all of Africa is colonised by European powers. Emperor Minilik is credited withrallying his fellow Ethiopians behind him to fight back fiercely enough so as to deliver an unimaginable victory against the so called powerful and mighty forces of a European army.
The Italian army was severely defeated by Menelik patriotic army on this day at the Battle of Adwa. A settlement after the battle cancelled the Treaty of Wuchale and acknowledged the full sovereignty and independence of Ethiopia. The resounding victory of Emperor Minilik's mighty army over colonial Italy in Adwa has a very special place not only in the history of Ethiopia but also in the history of the African continent forthe defeat of Italy in Ethiopia came at a time when almost all of Africa wascolonized by European powers.
Historians consider the Battle of Adwa, culmination point of the Italo- Ethiopian War of 1895-1896, to be one of the most important events in the world. In fact, it was the first victory of an African national army against a European counterpart since Hannibal's successful battles againstRome during the Second Punic War 2,200 years ago. In the introduction to their book The Battle of Adwa, Reflections on Ethiopia's History againstEuropean Colonialism, editors Paulos Milkias and Getachew Metaferia wrote, "Adwa holds a significant place in Africa's history … it challenges the demeaning Western conception of African cultures; it demonstrates that being targeted for colonization is not a prelude to fatality and that colonialism can be defeated…"

History & Justice have been served by The Emperor!
When you turn your back on your country to stand with the enemy, that iswhat you get in those days. About 6,000 Eritrean Askaris or (Bandas) collaborated with the Italian Army and fought Menelik's men. And at the end of the battle, about 800 of them had been apprehended and had theirright arm and left leg amputated.

Is that worthy punishment for the collaborators (the Askaris)?

Several days after this fitting punishment, a certain European war reporternamed Thomas Hughes claimed to come across an amputated Askari carried by two gentlemen near Adwa. His name was Aboy Tekalay from Hammassien of present Eritrea. He was hopeless, empty and dry like a desert, the reporter described him. Simply, he was helplessly waiting untildeath put an end to his deepest misery.
In an Italian Military Hospital named Abd el-Kader located in Massawa Eritrea, taken pictured amputated Eritrean Askari (soldiers) and some Italian officers in right after the defeat of the Italians in the war of 1896,.

The Askari soldiers were captured at a stroke March 1, 1896 between the invading Italian colonial army and the Menelik nationalist armies. The Ethiopians won and 2000 askari soldiers under Italian service were killed while 800 were taken prisoners of war. Since the Ethiopians saw the participation of the Eritrea origins as traitors and collaborators to their amputated right hand and left foot. According to the Italian caption this occurred at the Monastery of Abba Garima at east of Adwa, in Tigre regionof northern Ethiopia. Many of them died of the injuries. As Augustus Wylde quoted as saying, “A war is not a community picnic or a wedding festival “

Minilik's leadership at that crucial time was one of the reasons why Ethiopia is the only country in Africa to have never been colonized. AfterAdwa, Minlik's Ethiopia was accepted by the European powers as a real political force. The crushing defeat of a European army greatly enhancedMinlik's international reputation and caused a host of foreign advisers, ambassadors, emissaries and adventurers to seek opportunities to work,travel and live in Ethiopia.

Ato Teffera Deguefe former Imperial Governor of the National Bank ofEthiopia during the seventies died at age of 89 in the Canadian city ofVancouver, British Columbia.

Remembering The First Chief Banker In Ethiopia. And VintageMemories From The Peaceful Past

Ato Teffera Deguefe remembered as the one who revolutionized the Ethiopian banking system. In his recent autobiography entitled, "Minutes ofan Ethiopian Century", he throws light on the deregatory that the former emperor Haile Selassie had deposited a secret treasure in the Swiss Bank.
Despite his ilness, Ato Teffera managed to discuss four chapters of his twelve chapters book. The truth about the late emperor Haile Selassie percieved stolen money widely exposed by the former head of the NationalBank of Ethiopia.

There was a big Indian community in AA and very vibrant concentrated mostly in the Bénin or banyan Seffer (Upper Churchill Rd eastern side) when the New municipality was being built many of them were scatteredelsewhere and formed enclaves of populations) They were mostly merchants some names remembered were: Nathoo Muljee, Paprudass, Ahmed Ali Kahmruddin, JJ Kothari...!
You had many Indians from Goa mainly of Roman Catholic confession employees in the State Bank of Ethiopia formerly known as Bank of Abyssinya as managers, tellers, senior accountants! They were gradually replaced when gradually the process of Ethiopianization of staff occured! Some left others remained and reconverted in other lines of business! Youhad medical doctors in various hospitals of the City like the Ghandi obstretics Hospital, and many working there. There were many teachers inthe payrolls of the Imperial Ministry of Éducation & Fine Arts who played àsignificant role in post-Italian occupation Éducation in Ethiopia!

They too were progressively substituted by Ethiopians from the various Teacher Training Colleges that a visionary Emperor had ordered to be operational in so many locations of the empire! There were lots of accountants and shopkeepers divided between muslims and Hindus! A very vibrant community, they even had a School in the Serategna Sefer!
Indian movies were projected in the local cinema houses of the Piazza andMercato areas, movie goers used to like very much those productions filled with dancing and singing! They contributed to the erection of a statue of the Emperor Haile Selassie besides the Cinema Empire! The decline of the Community started when the Duerg military administration structured and many of them migrated elsewhere around the globe!

08 MARCH 2017:

TRADITION: Kura Jarso, inherited the newly Traditional Borana AbbaGadaa

The Borana Oromo have elected Kura Jarso, 30, as their 71st Abba Gadaain an elaborate, week long ceremony attended by tens of thousands of people in Badhaasa, southern Ethiopia. Spectators and invited guests started arriving at Arda Jila Badhaasa (the Badhasa ceremonial place) several days ahead of Jarso's inaguration. The mood here was euphoric allweek long and Badhaasa is packed with people from every corner of Oromia. This is where the Borana Oromo leaders have exchanged power peacefully and in a democratic manner every eight years for the past more than 560 years.

BADHAASA, Oromia (OPride) — The Borana Oromo have elected Kura Jarso, 30, as their 71st Abba Gadaa in an elaborate, week long ceremonyattended by tens of thousands of people in Badhaasa, southern Ethiopia.

Spectators and invited guests started arriving at Arda Jila Badhaasa (the Badhasa ceremonial place) several days ahead of Jarso's inaguration. Themood here was euphoric all week long and Badhaasa is packed with people from every corner of Oromia. This is where the Borana Oromo leaders have exchanged power peacefully and in a democratic manner every eight years for more than 560 years.

Everyone is welcome to Badhaasa, but the sacred coronation ceremony of the newly minted Gadaa leader was held in secret. Those who came towitness this historic event entertained themselves with food and drinks ina designated area. The transfer of power (baallii dabarsuu) took place onMarch 2, 2017, around 3 a.m. local time out of the sight of the general public.

No one except the two Abba Gadaa's and their advisors is allowed to witness the transfer of power. The ceremony is so sacred that the Borana believe "it has the power to kill unauthorized observers." As per the Borana Gadaa tradition, the newly elected Abba Gadaa, Kura Jarso and hisseven-person cabinet arrived at the outgoing Abba Gadaa, Guyo Goba's house on a horseback last Thursday and loudly proclaimed: "Yaa dhiyaanne, Sa'aa nama nu duraa gorsaa." Roughly translated: "We are here, keep every person and cattle out of our sight."

The two leaders and their council of advisers then rode their horses until itwas clear that no one could see them or witness the secret ceremony.

That's when the formal transfer of power took place. At that point, after passing on the mantle of leadership to Jarso, Goba blessed his successor:"Hormaataan na caali. Bultumaan na caali." "I bless you to be more fruitful than me. I bless you to be a better leader than me."

The outgoing Borana Gadaa leader announced the peaceful transfer ofpower to an anxious public at sunrise. The details are meticulously planned down to the specific language and timing of Goba's remarks.

Following a brief exchange of pleasantries, Kura Jarso retreated inside, where he stayed indoors for the next three days. During this period, whichis known as nyaachisa or ulumaa, no one from the general public could see or interact with him. The formal inauguration took place on March 5.
At the event, which was attended by government officials, foreign dignitaries, tourists and the media, the newly elected leader announced new laws and pledged to work for preserving the Oromo culture, on areas conflict resolution, and on improving the livelihood of the Borana people. In his inaugural address, Kura Jarso prayed for the rain to come and called on the federal government to bolster its assistance for the Borana who are dealing with the effects of a severe drought.

Unlike many of his predecessors, Kura Jarso is educated. He was a second-year statistics student at Hawassa University when he quit to takeover the reins of Gadaa leadership.he officially handed power to Kura Jarso, Guyo Goba will have an immense advisory role in Jarso's administration. In fact, several councilors are elected from Goba's government to serve in the incoming administration to ensure continuity and smooth transition. In addition, all Gadaa leaders who are still alive, including Jilo Aga and Liban Jaldessa, both of whom advised Goba, will continue to work with Jarso.

In addition to Kura Jarso, two other Gadaa leaders assumed power this week: Tarii (Adii) Jaldessa of Gadaa Hawaxa and Boru Dima of Gadaa Konitu. But since Kura Jarso's Harbora is the eldest of the three Gadaas, Kura assumes the role of Adula Fixe, meaning he is the Abba Gadaa of all Borana. The other two are leaders of their respective clans. The Boran arethe senior of Oromo's many tribes.

Gadaa is an egalitarian socio-economic and political system of the Oromo people, in which power rotates between five Gadaa classes every eight years. Under Gadaa, members of the society are organized into 11 age- based grades that range from birth to death. While its influence has waned due to the encroaching forces of modernity, religious influence anddecades of political repression, the Borana are among the few remaining Oromo tribes to still fully practice the Gadaa system.

In a historic achievement for the Oromo people, in November 2016, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)inscribed the Gadaa system on the Representative List of the Intangible Cultural Heritage of Humanity.
"The system regulates political, economic, social and religious activities ofthe community dealing with issues such as conflict resolution, reparation and protecting women's rights," UNESCO said at the time. "It serves as amechanism for enforcing moral conduct, building social cohesion, and expressing forms of community culture."

Humanrights concerns raised in the election of the next World Health Organization(WHO) Director-General:

ONEILL INSTITUTE: The AU based in Addis Ababa has endorsed TedrosAdhanom – the then Foreign Minister of Ethiopia to the next WHO Director-General role. This man is at the Center of a regime which has andis still committing the most dreadful crimes against humanity on its peopleand has been getting away with it because the west has turned a blind eye to it. Why would Africa back a man who has his hands messed with the most inhuman decisions and actions against his own people who are also fellow Africans?

Three candidates remain in the race to be the next WHO Director-Generalare: Tedros Adhanom, David Nabarro, and Sania Nishtar. All candidates should be accountable for their past support of human rights, and outlinetheir plans for furthering human rights around the world if chosen to leadthe World Health Organization (WHO). While it is important for all candidates to do this, one candidate in particular ought to provide a detailed public account of where he stands, and has stood, on human rights.

Having spent more than a decade as a cabinet minister in a government that has committed large-scale human rights abuses, Dr. Tedros must make clear his position and intention. Serving as Minister of Health of Ethiopia from 2005 through 2012, when he became Minister of Foreign Affairs, remaining in the post until a cabinet reshuffle last November. He was, and remains, a member of the Central Committee of the Tigray People's Liberation Front (TPLF), long the country's dominant political party, of the more select, nine-member TPLF Executive Committee, and ofthe Executive Committee of the Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF), the ruling coalition. Some background on human rights in Ethiopia is in order. It is a country where the ruling coalition won all 547 seats in its most recent (2015) parliamentary election, which surely says much more about the state of democracy thanthe government's popularity.

Freedom House rates Ethiopia as "not free," ranking it below than manyother of the "not free" countries (p. 18) and with one of the world's largest declines in freedom over the past decade (p. 10)..

In its World Report 2017, Human Rights Watch calls the media in Ethiopia"under government stranglehold," with at least 75 journalists fleeing into exile since 2010, and others arrested. A 2009 law "continues to severely curtail the ability of independent nongovernmental organizations." Security forces "frequently" torture political detainees, of whom there aremany. Over the past decade, Ethiopia has denied entry to all UN human rights special rapporteurs, other than on Eritrea.

The Ethiopian government's repressive ways gained international prominence at the Rio Olympics last summer. As he crossed the finish line, winning the silver medal, Ethiopian marathon runner Feyisa Lilesa crossed his arms as a symbol of protest against the government's violentresponse to protests in the Ethiopia's Oromia region. Two months earlier,Human Rights Watch had released a report detailing the government's violent response to the protests, the most recent round of which began inNovember 2015. They broke out in response to the government clearing land for an investment project. This fed into wider fears about farmers being displaced without adequate consultation or compensation as part ofa master plan to massively expand the boundaries of Addis Ababa, the capital, into the neighboring Oromia region. Adding fuel to the protests were environmental and other local concerns, and longer-standing grievances among members of Ethiopia’s largest ethnic group, the Oromo,of political, economic, and cultural marginalization. Amnesty International reported that least 800 protesters had been killed by the end of 2016.

BBC News: Rhino horns worth $5m seized in Thailand off flight fromEthiopia

Twenty-one rhino horns worth an estimated $5m have been seized in Thailand after being found in luggage sent from Ethiopia in the biggest such haul in years. The seizure comes days after 300kg of elephant ivorywas also impounded in the country. Thailand is seen as a transit point forthe illegal trafficking of wildlife.

Several species of rhino are at critical risk of extinction, conservationistssay. The horns arrived at Bangkok's international airport where two Thaiwomen who had travelled from Vietnam and Cambodia came to collect them.

According to Thai police, they ran off when the luggage was subjected to arandom check. Officials describe the incident as an elaborate smuggling effort which involved several other people inside Thailand and abroad.
Wildlife campaigners believe the rhinos were probably killed to order insouthern Africa, a BBC correspondent in Bangkok says.

Activists say that despite improvements in Thailand's anti-smuggling efforts, its main airport remains a popular hub for wildlife smuggling in Asia. Some 29,000 rhinos are left in the wild today compared to 500,000 at the beginning of the 20th Century, according to the International RhinoFoundation. Earlier this month, poachers shot a rhino dead and hacked offits horn at a zoo in France in what is believed to be the first such incident in Europe.

Last month poachers stormed an animal orphanage in South Africa and killed two rhinos for their horns after taking staff hostage. Rhino horns areprized in some Asian cultures as an ingredient for traditional medicines believed to be effective in treating ailments ranging from fever to cancer.

La Stampa: A global competition for influence in Ethiopia Journalist and Africa expert Howard W. French says that Chinese "neocolonialism" began in Ethiopia about two decades ago, in 1996. That year, in a visit to Addis Ababa, then-Chinese President Jiang Zemin proposed the establishment of the Forum on China-Africa Cooperation (FOCAC). Upon his return to China, Zemin urged industrialists to invest inAfrica. Since then the Chinese presence on the continent has grown and become ever more visible, with Chinese-built roads, railroads, and industrial hubs popping up across Africa.

Buckling under the pressure of a food crisis and an influx of refugees escaping long-running instability in the Horn of Africa, the Ethiopian government sold the country’s best land to Chinese investors, who used itto produce grain for export.

The new railway linking Addis Ababa to the port of Djibouti, 750 km away,grants the landlocked nation access to the sea and was built by the China Railway Group (CREC) and the China Civil Engineering Construction Corporation, a subsidiary of the China Railway Construction Corporation (CRCC). The three-lane Modjo-Hawassa highway, at a cost of $700 million, is also being built by the Chinese, as was the $500 million light rail system that cuts through Addis Ababa’s traffic. The two-line system isthe first to be built in sub-Saharan Africa.

But Beijing isn’t solely interested in business investments on the world’s second-largest continent. China is building its first overseas military base in neighboring Djibouti, which will include an air force base, lodging for thousands of soldiers, and a deep-water port that can host large warships.

The expropriation of land for these projects has run into intense opposition from local tribes in Ethiopia. Last summer, protests erupted across Oromia, the country’s largest and most populous region, spurring a brutal crackdown that killed thousands and forced the regime to declare astate of emergency.

"The fear now is that protesters and farmers will see radical Islam as a source of hope against the Orthodox Christian elite that rules the capital,"says a youth who asks to remain anonymous.

Other Ethiopians claim they have never seen so many imams and people wearing the Islamic veil as they do now. Ethiopia has ancient ties to Islamand was the site of the first ever hijra — the journey undertaken by the prophet Muhammad’s earliest followers to escape persecution in Mecca. Itis also home to Nejashi, the oldest Muslim settlement in Africa.

Experts claim that despite this long history, the Gulf monarchies embarked upon a targeted "Islamization" of the country after the fall of the Soviet Union and Ethiopia's communist dictator Mengistu Haile Mariam in 1991. This was done by building mosques in Muslim-majority areas andspreading their version of the Sunni faith in Islamic schools.

"In 1991 Riyadh took 2,000 young Ethiopians to study the Koran in Saudi Arabia, sending them back as imams two years later," says an anonymoussource. «That’s when burqas and minarets began to appear everywhere, and the Gulf monarchies want to build two mosques for every community.» While China focuses on business interests, the Arab states seek to indoctrinate ordinary Ethiopians. Ethiopia has one of the highest population growth rates in Africa and is projected to reach 210 million people in 2060, up from the current 99 million. Their goals and tactics vary. But Beijing and the Arabian Gulf both see Ethiopia, whose global importance will only continue to grow, as an area full of promise.

John Charles Robinson (November 26, 1903 – March 26, 1954) - The Father of Ethiopian Airlines was an American aviator and activist who washailed as the "Brown Condor" for his service in serving in the Imperial Ethiopian Air Force against Fascist Italy. Robinson pushed for equal opportunities for African-Americans during his early career, and was ableto open his own eponymous aviation school in addition to initiating a program for black pilots at his college, the Tuskegee Institute.
Robinson's achievements as an aviator were in stark contrast to the limited opportunities for most African-Americans in aviation careers, andwere an important factor in reducing racially based prohibitions in the United States. Robinson is sometimes referred to as the "Father of the Tuskegee Airmen" for inspiring this all-black set of pilots who served during the United States' entry into World War II.

General Rodolfo Graziani was De Bono's subordinate. He was the Commander-in-Chief of forces invading from Italian Somaliland, the "southern front". Initially he had two divisions and a variety of smaller units under his command. His forces included a mix of Italians, Somalis, Eritreans, Libyans, and others. De Bono regarded Italian Somaliland as asecondary theatre that needed primarily to defend itself and possibly aidthe main front with offensive thrusts if the enemy forces there were not too large.

Ethiopia, one of the oldest Christian nations in the world, is mentioned by the Holy Bible several times, including the first chapter of Genesis. Its prominent Orthodox Church is the most important institution that preserved the east African nation’s spiritual, cultural, and literary heritages. Indeed, the church remains a significant presence in the lives oftens of millions of its followers and maintains a vast array of priceless treasures.

The ancient language of Ge’ez, as noted in the article, is one such treasure that still serves as the official liturgical language in every Ethiopian Orthodox Church. Ge’ez is as important to the church today asLatin is to the Catholic Church.

REUTERS: The Height of the Red Terror Campaign ... In EthiopianRevolution

INTRODUCTION: Workers in seven Ethiopian factories have been issued with arms by the government which is taking an increasingly violent line against its political enemies. The move follows the killing last month of thehead of state, Brigadier General Tefferi Bante, and the assumption of supreme power by Lieutenant Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam.

SYNOPSIS: The weapons were handed out in factories near the capital, Addis Ababa, on Friday (1 April). The Provisional Military Administrative Council was represented by Sergeant Legesse Asfaw. The council said themove was necessary to "raise the level of political consciousness of the masses and to organise them to the Ethiopian Revolution can attain its objective." The Sergeant then led the workers in a chant of "Long Live theRevolution."

The government is taking increasingly violent measures against the opposition and a report in the New York Times claims killings by the partyare now common. Those who are loyal to the government receive weapons -- often handed out door-to-door by supporters. Colonel Mengistu has promised that the 28 months of the socialist revolution, designed to life Ethiopia out of centuries of poverty, would move "from thedefensive to the offensive." The country's facing yet another famine this year because political upheavals over land reform meant the spring sowing last year wasn't carried out.

According to former PDRE VP Fisseha Desta, Sergeant (later captain) Legesse Asfaw is the person who started Red Terror, He is arming thecivilians to fight against the opponents. Legesse, one of the most notorious low rank army officer is responsible for the killing of many.

As a final tribute The Ex has published this photobook. 168 pages. Four sections of pictures; a selection from Getatchew's private album with historical photos and photos by three very different international photographers — Andy Moor, guitarist in The Ex, Matias Corral and Nick Helderman who came on tour in Europe, America and to Addis Abeba — todocument this unique collaboration between Getatchew Mekuria & The Ex & Guests.

This photobook is the result of what appears to be an unlikely collaboration between Dutch underground band The Ex and Ethiopian saxophone legend Getatchew Mekuria. The Ex fell in love with an old Getatchew cassette from 1972, and in 2004 they wanted to invite him for their 25th Anniversary Festival. They went to Addis to find him and when they met, Getatchew was up for it right away. The result was a fruitful 10-year collaboration with more than a 100 concerts worldwide, plenty of enthusiastic press and two beautiful CD/LPs.

In 2014, because of diabetes, he developed serious problems with his legsand couldn't travel any more. The Ex at that point decided to organise a Celebration of Getatchew Mekuria concert series in Ethiopia, including the National Theatre in Addis Abeba. It sold out. 1500 people came and there was a standing ovation. A truly honourable farewell to a great musician.

Soon after this, his health began to deteriorate quickly. The book is co-published by Terp Records and Ex Records (EX 146-B). The famous Saxophonist Getatchew Mekuria passed away on this day at the age of 81after a musical career of more than 68 years.

Professor Aklilu Lemma died at the age of 63. He was the Ethiopian scientist who discovered a remedy for the Bilharzia disease from the fruitof a local plant called Endod. Bilharzia is a life-threatening parasitic disease caused by a worm that lives in a host snail. Humans can becomeinfected when they come in contact with water in ponds and rivers wherethe snail lives. It occurs most often in tropical regions and is among the worst killer diseases in developing countries.
In 1966, he established the Institute of Pathobiology in Addis Ababa University and for the next 10 years he directed a team to carry out systematic research on Endod. He was joined in this work in 1974 by a fellow Ethiopian scientist – Dr. Legesse Wolde Yohannes. The discoveryoffered no less than a cheap, locally-controllable means of eradicating adisease that is the second greatest plague, after malaria, in the African continent as well as the rest of the developing world.
Both Professor Aklilu Lemma and Dr. Legesse Wolde Yohannes founded the Endod Foundation in 1992 to serve as an umbrella for all Endod- related work. The foundation is an Ethiopian scientific research associationand has its headquarters in Addis Ababa.
Professor Aklilu Lemma and his research associate Dr. Legesse Wolde Yohannis were awarded the Swedish Right Livelihood Award in November1989 in Sweden for their research and pioneering discoveries. Other honours of Dr. Aklilu include various fellowships from the Ethiopian government, the International Atomic Energy Agency, the World Health Organization and Johns Hopkins University in the United States. He was also a recipient of Emperor Haileselsassie's Gold Medal for achievements in scientific research in Ethiopia. Scientist Aklilu Lemma was once quotedas saying: "we found a poor man's medicine for a poor man's disease."

Fascist Italy's attempts to colonize Ethiopia came to an abrupt end on thisday. Four years before the start of the Second World War, Italy invaded Ethiopia on 3 October 1935 under the orders of the then Italian Prime Minister Benito Mussolini.

The Italians took control of the capital Addis Ababa on 5 May 1936 and Emperor Haileselassie left Ethiopia for Switzerland to ask for internationalhelp to oust Italy from Ethiopia at the League of Nations in Geneva.

Ethiopian Patriots liberated Addis Ababa on 6 April 1941 and this victory officially ended Italian occupation. Emperor Haileselassie returned to AddisAbaba on 5 May 1941.

In 1996, Italy admitted to have killed 275,000 Ethiopians during its unsuccessful attempt to colonize Ethiopia. It was Italy 's second humiliating defeat by Ethiopia. The first invasion of Ethiopia by the Italianswas in March 1895 and they were badly defeated at Adwa the following year.

WASHINGTON, DC - Opposition figure Habtamu Ayalew on April 9 in DC tells an audience what it means to be a political prisoner in Ethiopia. He said the Duerg was no doubt brutal but the Duerg's brutality would pale toTPLF's other-worldly atrocities. It's inconceivable that fellow human beingswould inflict too much pain in other human beings who only wished for a quick death - like by a firing squad - than being dragged through the torture chamber of TPLF at the notorious Maekelawi.

Today in local calendar, 30th MEGABIT, 2008 memorises the Day of Holy Wednesday that rests in the Ethiopian fasting month of Hudadie (Arba Tsom) every year. The Day of Holy Wednesday is whos Juda betrayed Jesus Christ (Iyesus Kristos). The Holy Trinity Cathedral in Addis Ababa is a very special place that holds such ceremony. It has a special yearly event that reminds of the OrthodoxChristian families. Today is the great Feast of the Holy Trinity and the people of Addis Ababa are flocking here by the thousands to pay homage to the sovereign and most Holy fasting month. Happy Trinity Day! Happy Fasting Month “Aman be Amane Mengiste Selassie Le Zelealeme!”, as taught by the Ethiopian Tewahedo faith. May the Peace, Protection and Prayers of the Holy Ones be Upon the Children of Igiziabier/God of the Universe both now and forever.

Emperor Theodros II commits suicide At Magdalla Citadel.
The British sent their well-equipped army to Ethiopia to bring down the Emperor following a diplomatic standoff between the two countries. Aidedby rebellious nobles along the way, the British force attacked Thewodros'forces at Magdela on 10 April 1868. Emperor Theodros commits suicide after British forces advance into his stronghold at the top of Makdela Hill in Southern Wollo following a diplomatic standoff between the two countries. Considering capture by a foreign army as bringing shame on himself and his country, the Emperor takes his own life just moments before the arrival of British forces, who, upon finding his body, set out to destroy the city of Magdala including its churches and looting a largenumber of treasures with them.
The British also took the Emperor's son, Prince Alemayehu, 7, first to India and to England where he died 11 years later at the age of 18. The courageous Emperor, who regarded capture by a foreign army as bringingshame on himself and his beloved country, committed suicide on 13 April 1868 at the top of Makdela Hill in Southern Wello. The Emperor's heroic story has gone down in history as the single most inspiring act of braveryfor most Ethiopians to date. In doing so, Emperor Thewodros left Ethiopians with a legacy of not accepting defeat by any foreign army and Ethiopia remains undefeated by any colonial power to date.

Legendary Ethiopian musician Tilahun Gesesse, regarded as the king of modern Ethiopian music, died on this day. The day was Ethiopian Easter Sunday and Tilahun and his wife, Roman Bezu, had arrived in Addis Ababafrom a trip to the United States only the day before to spend the EthiopianEaster holidays with family and friends.
It was reported that Tilahun returned to Ethiopia to celebrate Easter as well as to continue working on an album which he had planned to be his final. He was a singer like no other with tremendously charismatic appearance, holding his rightful place in Ethiopia as the country's one andonly king of pop for almost half-a-century. From love, family and friendship to liberty, unity and justice, there isn’t an aspect of life that Tilahun didn’t sing about.
He was farewelled in an unprecedented state funeral ceremony in Addis Ababa on 23 April 2009. State funerals are automatically granted to headsof the Ethiopian state, but no other Ethiopian in the country's modern history was given a final send-off in such a dignified manner. Tilahun proved that he could be even larger in death than in life as his state funeral was the first such event witnessed in modern Ethiopia attended bytens of thousands of genuine mourners.

ETHIOMEDIA: Prominent lawyer, writer and politician passes away. Assefa Chabo, the exiled politician who was known for his writing skills, died on at age 76 in Dallas, TX. Assefa, who was also a government critic, was being treated at the hospital for a few days before he was pronounceddead on Sunday. He was 76. The Ethiopian community in Dallas expressed its sorrow via a social media notice where they urged volunteers to make donations to arrange the funeral of the veteran government critic.

Assefa Chabo was born in Chencha, in the former Gemu Goffa, in 1941 and had a degree in law from former Haile Selassie I University in Addis Ababa. He was a member of then Imperial parliament during the early days of the Duerg military dictatorship, but his being vocal against corruption and for democracy had nearly cost his life. He was imprisonedfor almost 11 years during the Duerg years.

Assefa Chabo has been living in exile in the United States, and had almostexcluded himself from any social life around Ethiopians. He re-emerged from seclusion in recent years when he began to write to various social media platforms and news media websites. His commentaries were knownfor the beauty of the prose spiced up with wits and sarcasm.

Saint (Mahletai) Yared was born in the city of Axum from his father Abyud(Isaac) and his mother Christina (Tawklia) was a semi-legendary Ethiopianmusician credited with inventing the sacred music tradition of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church and Ethiopia's system of musical notation.

Saint (Mahletai) Yared (25th April 505 AD - 20th May, 571)

He is responsible for creating the Zema or the chant tradition of Ethiopia, particularly the chants of the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Church, whichare still performed today. He is regarded as a saint of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church with a feast day of 11 Ginbot (May 19). Reading the Bible in Gee’z and the Yaredian soundings and position how to serv the church are preserved. The Holy St. Yared developed and composed the liturgical music and chants of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church, as well as aunique 5 note system and notation system for Ethiopian music.

THE HORN: Al-Shabab Seizes Key Somali Towns After Ethiopians Pull Out.

Ethiopian troops fighting militant Islamist group al-Shabab have withdrawn from a key military base in central Somalia's Galgudud region, according to residents. Heavily armed al-Shabab fighters took control of ElBur following the pullout of Ethiopian troops and a small number of SomaliNational Army soldiers early Monday.

The fall of El Bur was confirmed by Nur Hassan Gutale, the town’s districtcommissioner, who said Ethiopians did not tell them the reason of their withdrawal. “The Ethiopians and our troops withdrew from the town and now it is under the control of the militants. The Ethiopians did not informus about their withdrawal plan and once we saw them abandoning, our troops also abandoned,” Gutale said.

Residents of El Bur say al-Shabab militants traveling in pickup trucks moved into the town early Monday without a fight. “The militants travelingin more than six pickup trucks mounted with anti-aircraft machine guns moved into town this morning. They took up the strategic positions, raisedtheir black flags on the top of some buildings,” one of the residents told VOA on the condition of anonymity.

Gutale has accused both the al-Shabab militants and the Ethiopian troopsof mistreating the civilians. “Al-Shabab forced most of the residents to leave the town when the Ethiopians came three years ago. And the Ethiopians mistreated with some who remained in the town,” Gutale said.“The civilians had only two choices: to stay in the town and face the Ethiopian mistreatment or live as hostages under Al-Shabab."

The reason for the Ethiopian troops' withdrawal was not clear, and their military officials were not immediately available for comment. El Bur wasonce the commercial hub and main stronghold of al-Shabab in central Somalia, but the group lost the town to Ethiopian troops serving under African Union peacekeeping mission known as AMISOM three years ago.

Analysts have warned the town was vulnerable to reoccupation by the militants because al-Shabab blocked all roads leading in and out, forcingalmost all of the residents of the town to leave. Some Ethiopian soldiersare in Somalia as part of AMISOM while others are there as a result of abilateral deal with Somalia's federal government.

The Ethiopians serving the AU mission are responsible for securing Bay, Bakool, and Gedo regions in South-Western Somalia, but they are also present in Hiran and Galgudud regions, where they have been moving intotowns and withdrawing from others at will.

Born in 1921 to an affluent family in southern Ethiopia, Jagama Kello seton his legendary career at age 15 when he raised a gun and began to fight against Italian fascism during the five-year resistance (1935-1941).

Jagama joined his older brother and an uncle at his teen age to fight backItalian invaders, and he rose to prominence after his army grew to over 3000. He spent the entire five-year period fighting the Italians, especiallytargeting those who were entrenched in Addis Ababa. When Emperor Haile-Selassie returned home from his exiled life in London, he was quick to honor Jagama Kello for his unparalleled patriotism.

The soldier Jagama Kello took part in several armed conflicts, including the Ogaden War in the 1960s, and was wounded 17 times but survived them all. When the emperor opened army colleges, Jagama was a cadet at Holeta Military Training College, and subsequently after graduation as ayoung lieutenant, he rose through the ranks of the army till he was decorated as Lt. General several years later.

Author Fikremarkos Desta, who wrote the biography of Lt. Gen. JagamaKello, was overwhelmed with the heroic, death-defying feats of the national icon that his widely-read book was rightly titled: "የበጋው ጭብረቅ"(The Summer Thunder).
General Jagama Kello nicknamed "የበጋውጭብረቅ" (The Summer Lightning) spent the last five years of his star-studded life confined to the bed, beingtaken care by his family, relatives, notably his youngest daughter. The Ethiopian hero, who always was seen with the Ethiopian flag either aroundhis neck or in his hand, is survived by five daughters and a son, several grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

In local calendar known as Ginbot 1 (or equivalent to May 9th) every yearis Lideta Mariam, a day in every christian village of Ethiopia celberated warmly. All neighbours contribute even staple teff flour (ye teff duqet),edible oil (ye migib zeit), hot pepper (berbere), Iodized salt (chew), etcand some amount of money to buy sheep or goat or ox meat. Females had started to prepare the food early in the morning. Men assigned to bring the sheep.

After many items of food had been prepared, around 5 o'clock in the afternoon the sheep or goat might be slaughtered. Then the meat would be fried with cooking plate "beremitad". Males knew how to fry the meat.They poured alcohol like"vino" or other local tej or tella on it. It became very delicious. Around 7 o'clock every body would have every thing.
Bread, meat, qolo, nifiro, anebabero, etc.

We all remember that we were very pleased to participate every year since childhood. It was very colorful. Here if you were late, every neighborasked about your wellbeing or why not attended. So that the social bondage was very strong. Never forgotte the ceremony even if not around. Lideta is part of daily life even among muslims too.

14 MAY 1999:
Professor Asrat Woldeyes died on this day. He was the first Ethiopian surgeon and the first Dean of the Medical Faculty at Addis Ababa University, of which he was a co-founder. He worked very hard along withhis few Ethiopian colleagues to create the first medical school in the country. This medical school came into being in 1965 and it has been producing hundreds of medical graduates every year since its opening. Hewas also Emperor Haileselassie's physician for many years.
Apart from his pioneering achievements as the country's first surgeon, Professor Asrat is widely known for his courageous attempts to bring about a truly democratic political system in Ethiopia in the face of systematic crackdown on the part of the current government. Soon afterthe EPRDF came to power in 1991, Professor Asrat founded a political party as an opposition to the government with the purpose of bringing about unity and to abolish the policy of ethnic federalism, which the EPRDF introduced to the Ethiopian constitution.

The Treaty between Ethiopia and Great Britain Signed. A Treaty Between Ethiopia and Great Britain on the Delimitation of the Frontier between Ethiopia and Sudan His Majesty Edward VII by the Grace of God, King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, Emperor of India, and His Majesty Menelik II,by the Grace of God, King of Kings of Ethiopia, being animated with the desire to confirm the friendly relations between the two Powers and to settle the frontier between the Soudan and Ethiopia, and His Majesty KingEdward, having appointed as His Plenipotentiary Lieutenant-Colonel John Lane Harrington, a Commander of the Royal Victorian Order, His Majesty'sagent at the court of His Majesty Menelik II, King of Kings of Ethiopia, whose full power have been found in due and proper form, and His Majesty the Emperor Menelik, negotiating in his own name as King of Kings of Ethiopia, they have agreed upon and do conclude the following Articles, which shall be binding on themselves, their heirs and successors:

There are only two documents that attempt to deal with the relationship ofEthiopia and the lower riparian countries with regard to the utilization of Nile. Those are the 1902 Ethiopia and UK Treaty and the 1993 Ethio-EgyptFramework Agreement. The 1902 Agreement was signed by Ethiopia's Emperor Menelik and United Kingdom's envoy Lt. Col. John Lane Harrington in Addis Ababa in May 15 1902. The Ethiopian public hardly aware of the 1902 Treaty and/or its implications find it bizarre that Egypt and Sudan partitioned the Nile waters amongst themselves in the absenceof Ethiopia, where 85% of the water originates.

However, Egypt and Sudan which were colonies of UK in 1902 claim to therights in the Treaty based on principles of state succession. Moreover, it isargued the 1929 Anglo-Egyptian Treaty, which gives Egypt veto power, binds not only the then colonies of UK but also Ethiopia by virtue of the 1902 Treaty. Consequently, Egyptian and Sudanese scholars claim the 1959 Treaty is binding on upper-riparian countries including Ethiopia. Thatis why you find the the 1902 cited on the website of Egypt State Information Service. Ratifications exchanged in Addis Ababa on the 28 October 1902.

EPRDF combatant forces captured Addis Ababa, 25 years ago this day as self proclaimed as liberators. The rebel Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary Front shortly known as EPRDF, a rebel group led by Meles Zenawi, comesto power toppling the Duerg regime led by Mengistu Haile Mariam after decades of war and having facilitated Eritrea’s separation from Ethiopia. The EPRDF's control of the capital Addis Ababa follows three decades of civil war.

The rebel turned EPRDF leaders promised the people the era of oppressionis over. No more war, no more killing, no more genocide were the words from almost all senior fighters. Peaceful Ethiopia with democratic rights, and peaceful elections were the promises made at the time. After 25 years, here the people of Ethiopia again with the drums of war, with demonstrations ending up in deaths, but still the media is broadcasting about democracy and peace.

What a paradox! After 25 years Ethiopians witnessing a rebel movement being built up and calling themselves freedom fighters again. Identically...the defunct Duerg used to label EPRDF bandits, now history is repeating itself, EPRDF is labels it's rivals as bandits, terrorists, anti-peace elementset-al. When will this be stopped?

03 JUNE 1884:

Emperor Yohannes IV signed the Treaty of Adwa with a British negotiator.The treaty stated that Britain would help Ethiopia in the return of Bogos –a part of Ethiopia occupied by Egypt and that Ethiopia would have the right to the free import of goods including arms and ammunition through the port of Massawa. In return, Emperor Yohannes IV agreed to rescue British troops from Mahdist Sudan. Yohannes IV assumed that he would get control of Massawa, but Britain broke the spirit of the agreement in less than a year after it was signed by handing Massawa to Italy.

Remembering The June and November massacres of May-2005 Election! The Commission's list of 193 victims includes only those deaths that occurred on June 6-8 and November 1-4, 2005, the specific dates the Commission was authorized to investigate. It is believed the Commission has an additional list of many hundreds of victims of extra-judicial killingsby government security forces which it did not publicly report because thekillings occurred outside the dates the Commission was authorized to investigate.

Following the May-2005 parliamentary elections the military, police andsecurity forces of the ruling EPRDF in Ethiopia under the personal command and control of the PM Meles Zenawi committed crimes againsthumanity in various times.

An official Inquiry Commission established jointly by the late prime minister Meles Zenawi and his parliament documented that in various times of (June 6-8) and (November 1-4) 2005 in Kaliti Prison, 193 unarmed men, women, and children demonstrating in the streets of AddisAbaba and scores of other detainees held in a high-security prison were intentionally shot dead by police and security officials. An additional 763 were wounded. The Commission held Meles Zenawi and his security forcesaccountable for the committed massacres. Meantime, police and security personnels killed eachother in crossfire: Nega Gebre, Jebena Desalegn, Mulita Irko, Yohannes Solomon, Ashenafi Desalegn, Feyisa Gebremenfes were the ones.

Ethiopia is on the outbreak of the Yekatit (February) Revolution. Amid increasing dissent across the country, pay rises for the military were notenough to pacify them, the Co-ordination Committee of the Armed Forces, Police and Territorial Army known as locally "the Duerg" is well coordinated this time. In July that year, they obtained power to imprisonthe imperial military and government officials of Emperor Haile Selassie.By September that year the emperor was deposed and placed under house arrest, and the Duerg formed a military junta made up of around 109 members.

The Duerg is on the third month of it's seizure of power which is later to be called as the "crippled coup" by the military committee locally known as the "Duerg" (The Coordinating Committee of the Armed Forces, Police,and Territorial Army) started a process taking political decisions that deeply transformed social, political and economic reforms in the country.

This period in Ethiopian history saw the emergence of a flurry of organisations and publications that espoused Marxism-Leninism, Maoism.The Marxist classics were translated in large numbers and made availablewidely within the time span of months following the beginning of the Revolution. A 3rd source of material relating to this period is the former JFK library within the Haile Selassie I University of Addis Ababa, a more recent flurry of biographical texts by participants at the time.

Emperor Haileseelassie in Geneva: Emperor Haileselassie gives a major speech to members of the League of Nations (LoN) in Geneva appealing for help to oust the invading facist Italian forces from Ethiopia.

The late Ethiopian Emperor Haileselassie gave one of his most famous speeches atthe League of Nations in Geneva, Switzerland. He was making an appeal for help to oust the Italian occupying forces from Ethiopia. The League responded adversely saying that it would not interfere with the troops of the fascist dictator, effectively causing the downfall of the organization.

During his speech in Geneva, the late Emperor quoted as saying: "If astrong Government finds that it can, with impunity, destroy a weak people, then the hour has struck for that weak people to appeal to the League of Nations to give its judgment in all freedom. God in history will remember your judgment … "Today it is us, tomorrow it will be you". I askthe great powers, who have promised the guarantee of collective security to small states, … what measures do you intend to take? Representatives of the world, I have come to Geneva to discharge in your midst the most powerful of the duties of the head of a state. What answer am I to take back to my people."

Transitional President Meles Zenawi and members of the TGE pledged to oversee the formation of a multi-party democracy. The election for a 547-member constituent assembly was held and this assembly adopted the constitution of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia in December 1994. The elections for Ethiopia's first popularly chosen national parliament and regional legislatures were held in May and June 1995.

Most opposition parties chose to boycott these elections, ensuring a landslide victory for the EPRDF. International and non-governmental observers concluded that opposition parties would have been able to participate had they chosen to do so. The Government of the FederalDemocratic Republic of Ethiopia (FDRE) was installed in August 1995.

++Wearing red velvet robes heavy with gold and silver trimmings and large silk turbans embroidered with pearls the special envoys of Abyssinya greeted President Widrow Wilson and congrajulated him on the conclusion of peace. They then presented him Elephant Tusks seven feet long mounted in solid gold spears and javelins, native garments of the richest and most beautiful materials embroidered in jewels, two gold cups and a gold box lined with silk containing letters addressed to the president by the Abissinyan Queen, a daughter of Menelik II who is also empressof Ethiopia. The envoy who spoke to the president linked their visit with that of the Queen of Sheeba to King Solomon. The members of the mission comprising the Dejazmatch Nadew, the Kantiba Gebru, and the Ato Hirouy, with the Ato Sinke who served as secretary, were presented to the president by Breckenridge Long, third assistant Secretary of state.

Make Speech to President
As head of the mission the Dejazmatch Nadew addressed the president as follows: "Your excellency we have the honor to be the first mission to America to present our congrajulation of our country on your work with the allies for the successful termination of the war with Germany. More than 5, 000 years have elapsed since theestablishment of the Ethiopian government. In the time of David and Solomon this government was well known. The Queen of Ethiopia Makeda ruled over all Sheeba atthat time."

She Heard of King Solomon
"She heard of King Solomon and came to listen his wisdom and see the country andas she returned to her own dominion she proclaimed the religion of the living God.
From that time to until Constantine the great, Ethiopia has believed in God accordingto the laws of the Old Testament. In the time of Constantine Ethiopia became Christian according to the gospel of Jesus Christ, and since that time has fought for her Christianity and independence against the surrounding Mohammedans and heathens. "Undoubtedly your excellency knows more about the history of our race and religion than I am able to tell.

Rejoice Over America

All the people of Ethiopia knowing that the United States of America after securely establishing her own independence, has taken upon herself the wonderful duty of assisting the allies in gaining equal liberty and independence rejoiced and praised the American people. "We hope that the friendship with the United States begun during the reign of emperor Menelik II, will continue and develop, and that commercewill be renewed and increased as a result of that friendship. This is the anxious desire of Her Majesty our empress of the heir apparent to the throne, and of all our people.

President Thanks Envoys

14 JULY 1979:

Abuna-Theofilos the 2nd patriarch of the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahdo Church /EOTC/ who imprisoned couple of years ago, was brutally executed. In the case of the former Patriarch Abune Theofilos. The Duergimprisoned him for over a year and then strangled him by a rope and buried him in the security prison compound commonly known as the "RasKassa Ghibbi" on the feast day of the Holy Trinity, Meantime, Lij, later Dejazmatch Kassa Wolde Mariam grandson-in-law ofthe emperor, and Brigadier General Samuel were among the summonedones for execution. Lij Kassa Wolde Mariam, heir to the old Oromo Kingdom of Leqa Qellam, former President of the Haile Selassie I University, was on his knees before the Patriarch Abune Tewophilos receiving his final absolution before going to his death, when Abune Tewophilos himself was called. The Patriarch turned and asked Nebre-IdErmias to absolve him, and he left the prison together with Dejazmatch Kassa Wolde Mariam.

The patriarch and his fellow prisoners were taken to the former home of Leul Tas Kassa and were executed and buried there. It is believed that Patriarch Abune Theophilos was killed by being strangled by electrical wire, and buried face-down in a deep trench grave. His remains would later be identified by long black clerical robes and monk's cap. Following the fall of the Derg regime, his remains were disinterred from the groundsof the home of Leul Ras Kassa and reburied in full ceremonial state at theGofa St. Gabriel church which he himself had built in southern Addis Ababa.

King Haile Sellasie I (Janhoy) made important speech to the first parliament that was convened. He had high hopes for his country, that it will ultimately transform itself into a democratic polity with an elected parliament. King Hailesilassie was though the first demochratic leader in the History of Ethiopia! Unfortunately he was surounded by old feudals who didn't want the reform and were desturbing him through out his reign! Because of his modernization stand especially in teaching childeren of the poor and transform the country into a civilized society were the causes why the feudal landlords oppose him and at last cooperated with rivals to end his rule! That is clear, the feudals surounding him were always against his reform tendencies and education for all! This amazing fact apart from the politics, should make us all proudly ethiopians! But we are becoming evidence for the saying goes, “Nebiye Behageru Ayikeberim” english meaning for “a prophet never be honored in his own land or by hisown people.”

Prime Minister Endelkachew Makonnen who becomes under intense pressure to resign detained on this day. The critical event that doomedEndelkachew's administration occurred on the 26th June, 1974 and afterwards.
Despite his continued attempts to retain on power, Prime Minister Endalkachew Makonnen as well as members of the newly appointed PrimeMinister Lij Endalkatchew Makonnen and most of his cabinet members were arrested by the military steering committee known as ‘the Duerg’ this time.
However, an Inquiry Commission led by commander Lemma Gutema Debel who had been empowered to investigate the corruption in the military, arrested earlier the former prime minister Tsehafi Taezaz Aklilu and most of the men who had served in his cabinet, as well as members of the newly appointed Prime Minister Lij Endalkatchew Makonnen and hiscabinet. Prime Minister Endalkachew was arrested, and the Duerg asked Lij Mikael Imru to assume the Prime Minister's office.

The Oxford-educated Endelkachew served as Prime Minister from February28 to July 22, 1974. During this period, the Imperial government was under assault by protesting students and striking workers who demanded investigation of corruption in the highest levels of government, reforms in land tenure, and political reforms as well. Endalkachew Makonnen attempted to address these demands by presenting reforms that began tochange the very nature of the Ethiopian monarchy. The Emperor also agreed to some of these proposals, which included the drafting of a new constitution to replace the one adopted in 1955, and having the Prime Minister be responsible to the elected Lower House of Parliament rather than to the Emperor.

Over next months, events moved swiftly as the Duerg systematically dismantled the government and numerous public institutions. The critical event that doomed Endelkachew's administration occurred 26 June. On that day, a group of conservative members from the Chamber of Deputiespetitioned the Emperor for the release of some of the officials that had been imprisoned for corruption. Numerous writers agree with Keller's judgement that this act "was seen as a clear indication that ruling politicians had no intention of bringing these individuals to justice." The new military committee acted swiftly, arresting 50 more alleged culprits from the ruling classes on 30 June.

Within the next two weeks, 150 more members of not only the former government, but the current government, the provincial administration, the nobility, and even the Imperial family including the grandson of the emperor Rear Admiral Eskinder Desta, Deputy Commander of the ImperialEthiopian Navy.
Lij Endalkachew had previously served in a variety of diplomatic and political posts. He was Ethiopian Ambassador to Britain, and later Permanent Representative to the United Nations, and was one of the people under consideration for the post of UN Secretary General in 1972,before the Austrian Kurt Waldheim was appointed. He had also served asMinister for Postal, Telegraph, and Tele-communications, and had servedas the International President of the World Young Men's Christian Association (YMCA).

President William Tubman whos country Liberia termed as the 1st Republic in Africa regarded as "father of modern Liberia"; his presidency was marked by attracting sufficient foreign investment to modernize the economy and infrastructure. During his tenure, Liberia experienced a period of prosperity. He also led a policy of national unity in order to reduce the social and political differences between his fellow Americo-Liberians and the indigenous Liberians. It has to be remembered that he has been honoured by then Haile Selassie I University (HSIU) in Addis Ababa while attended the sign-in ceremony of the African charter in May,1963. To honour President Tubman, Imperial Ethiopian flag is officially half-masted throughout the nation for three days.

23 JULY 1977:
Somali Nationalism and The Greater Somalia (Soomaaliweyn) concept atit's peak.

Somali National Army (SNA) under the guise of Western Somali LiberationFront (WSLF) captures the Eastern Ethiopian region of Ogadien this day.

President Mohammed Siyadd Barre advocates the concept of a "Greater Somalia (Soomaaliweyn)", which refers to those regions in the Horn of Africa in which ethnic Somalis reside and have historically represented thepredominant population. Greater Somalia thus encompasses Somalia, therepublic of Djibouti, the Ogaden (in modern day Ethiopia) and the North Eastern Province (in Kenya) i.e. the almost exclusively Somali-inhabited regions of the Horn of Africa.

The Oga...den War broke out after the government sought to incorporatethe various Somali-inhabited territories of the region into a Greater Somalia. The Somali National Army (SNA) invaded the Ogaden and was successful at first, capturing most of the territory, reaching near to Addis-ababa the capital of Ethiopia.

The invasion reached an abrupt end with the Soviet Union's shift of support to Ethiopia, followed by almost the entire communist world siding with the latter. The Soviets halted their previous supplies to Barre's regime and increased the distribution of aid, weapons, and training to the Ethiopian government, and also brought in around 15,000 Cuban troops toassist the Ethiopian regime. In March 1978, President Siyadd Barre withdrew his Somali troops from Ethiopia.

23 JULY 1877:
Majour Legesse Tefera was an ace pilot of the Imperial Ethiopian Air force era who brought down Somalia's 5 Migs in a dogfight with his American built F5E during Somalia's incursion in July 1977....

Captain Legesse had also been a POW who was released during a peace accord and exchange of POWs before Siad Barre of Somalia and Mengistu Hailemariam of Ethiopia departed the scene from the Horn of Africa. The Ethiopian Head of State Mengistu Haile Mariam decorated and bestowed the highest honorto Majour Legesse Tefera the heroic title with a promotion to Brigadier General who performed beyond the call of duty.

13 JULY 1989:
General Arnaldo T. Ochoa Sánchez (1930 in Cacocum, Cuba – July 13, 1989), a prominent Cuban army general executed by the government ofFidel Castro after being found guilty of a variety of crimes including drugsmuggling and treason by a firing squad at the "Tropas Especiales" military base at dawn in Baracoa, West Havana. He was a Cuban shininghero who fought in the Ogaden war throughout the war in 1977 led the Cuban group of troops.

Arnaldo T. Ochoa was named commander of Cuban Expeditionary Forces in Ethiopia under the command of Soviet Army General Petrov during the war with Somali expantionis forces in 1977. His successes during the Ogaden war impressed the Soviet commanders in the field. By 1980, Arnaldo Ochoa was widely considered a great internationalist, and was awarded the title "Hero of the Revolution" by President Fidel Castro Ruz in1984.

As a once comrade in arm an Ethiopian serviceman commented "I had theopportunity of providing him with air transport to battle fronts where the Cuban forces were operating in the Ogaden region. Knowing him personally was a good experience for me. He was humble, quiet, but quickand decisive when it comes to giving directions and solutions to current problems in military tactics and strategy. I still visualize him with his green khaki battle dress plain without chest decoration always with a black leather jacket on top of his uniform. I've never seen him wearing hisrank at all."

The Solomonic dynasty, a bastion of Ethiopian Orthodox Christianity cameto rule Ethiopia. Atse (emperor) Amde Tsion was crowned in 1313 and brought all the Christian distrincts of the northern highlands under his firmcontrol. He expanded his power deeper into Shewa, Gojjam, Damot and Agew Midir. He established stronger control of the Lake Tana area, establishing a strong base on the Zegie penninsula where he built the beautiful St. Mary's church which still stands today with it's magnificent murals. He also expanded deep into the south into Hadiya, which is in modern Sidama (Sidamo), and spread Christianity throughout the south.

He strengthened the monarchy and established a more stable system ofgovernment. Emperor Amde Tsion died in 1344.

Milestones in Ethiopianism --- On this date the United Press Association writes from South Africa: "An Ethiopian preacher has been sentenced at Durban to six months imprisonment and twenty-five lashes for inciting Natal natives to rebellion. It is said that the preacher was in the habit of praying in the native Kraals that the natives might be given strength to drive the whites across the sea." The article associates the emergence of the Ethiopianism moveme...nt as the source of the uprising. "The spread of Ethiopianism has been very great, and is undoubtedly at the bottom ofthe great unrest which prevails among the blacks of Africa." (Henry Sylvester Williams, born in Trinidad on Feb 19, 1869, is considered one ofthe founding fathers of Pan Africanism---organizing the first known Pan African Conference, the African Association. Williams studied law in the United States, Canada, and finally in England, where he was the first person of African descent to address the House of Commons. In 1900, African delegates around the world met in London. Representing Ethiopia on behalf of Menelik II was Haitian Benito Sylvain. Ethiopia was identifiedat the conference as "a source of inspiration". The African Association waslater the Pan African Association and in 1901 Williams launched the journal the Pan African. Williams returned to Trinidad after his 1908's tripto Liberia. It was in Trinidad where he fell ill and died in 1911.)

His Royal Highness Ras Imiru Haile-selassie Abayneh, he was also a cousin of Emperor Haile-selassie I, leader of the Tikur Anbassa (Black Lion) Resistance against the Italian occupation, a distinguished diplomatalso called in nickname as the "Red-Ras of Ethiopia" by the public for hisprogressive outlooks, passed away at age of 88. After his death he became the only member of ex-Imperial regime officials to be given a state funeral by the ruling Duerg regime.

Remembering the “Red Ras” Imeru Haile Selassie Abayneh
A story that clearly indicate the well lived life of the one time Governor ofGojjam a noble soldier, diplomat,... leader of many fields, a close ally andfirst cousin of emperor Haile Selassie I, Ras Imeru Haile Selassie (1892- 1980) who has been seen as a symbol along with his family.
After the Imperial regime collapsed in September, 1974 miraculously RasImeru was one of a few royal figures who was never arrested or questioned by the newly arrived Duerg regime who murdered or jailed each and every royal family members and associates of with the imperialregime who were then found in the country. Also after his passing Ras Imru became the only member of the royal family to be given a state funeral by the ruling Duerg regime. Ethiopian television and radio have announced his death with his full titles of, “Ras” and the dignity of "His Royal Highness" even though the Duerg had abolished all Imperial and traditional titles earlier when the emperor deposed in September, 1974.

In the era of emepror Haile Selassie, Ras Imru was appointed and served as Ambassador to India, the United States, the Soviet Union and was religiously devoted as well. Because of his liberal stands and being with anopen minded personality, many have suspected that the “Ras” might havebeen attached with socialist royal figure, and many shortly called him as, “the Red Ras” locally meaning for “Qayu Ras”.

Tekle Tesfazghi the legend Tigrigna singer passed away of severe caraccident this day.
Tekle Tesfazghi was born in Asmara, in the former Eritrea province under Ethiopian administration. His musical inclination begun in his school days but further refined and took shape when he was enrolled in an amateur theatre and cultural group known as mahbere theatre Asmara (Ma-te-a) inEritrea cultural and theatre group. He took part in the group as a singer, player of musical instruments as well as music writer. Having left the group, he was recruited by an army orchestra (the second division orchestra) where he worked as a singer. He won fame by the song “Saba, Sabina”, a well known song. When Tekle was still in the service, the black lion band toured Asmara to give a live show to the public and the army.
Tekle took the opportunity and introduced himself to Ayalew Mesfin, the band owner and himself a well known singer. Joining the musikal band Tekle came to Addis Ababa. He also served the famous Izra band under then Haile Selasssie I Theatre briefly. His engagement with the band as adrummer and vocalist lasted several years which included many tours including neigbouring countries.

Vocalist Tekle was among the first artists who set up the Roha band, thefamous musical group which remained glorious for about 13 years. He served the band as a drummer and also as a lead singer in Tigrigna, Arabic and English languages. He was among the best known singers in the band. Tekle has not released any album because of security reasonsby the time, he just only sings for the audience.

However, songs he performed along with the Roha band in several showswhich included “saba”, “Fikrey Telemeni”, ”Mistrawi debdabe”, “Kewakbti””Kemdilaye”, were recorded by the Ethiopian Radio and Television.
Besides his immense individual talent, he had influenced many upcoming Tigrigna singers to venture into modern Tigrigna songs. He had also helped them in composing and musical arrangement notable among the beneficiaries was the late kiros Alemayehu, the other best known Tigrignasinger. The legacy of artist Tekle also could be seen in the pioneering rolehe had in setting up a recording studio thereby positive by benefitting theindustry. Until his untimely death in a car accident Tekle took part in several music tours of the Roha Band both in the country and in neghbouring countries added to his already big fame. Rest In Peace!

The Washington Times FINAL EDITION, American Weekly!

The Triumph or Empress Zaouditu, of Abyssinia, King Solomons descendant over the pro-German Mohammedan forces of the deposed emperor Eyassu V. The Triumph or Empress Zaoditu, of Abyssinia, King Solomons Descendant. Over the Pro-German Mohammedan, The EmpressZaoditu, Daughter of the Late Menelek, and Reputed Descendant of King Solomon and the Queen of Sheba, in Her Gorgeous Coronation Robes,
After Her Final Triumph Over Her Pro-German Mohammedan Enemies. WHILE tie great war has been ab sorbing most of the attention of civilization strange and thrilling events have been happening In the far away, little known African land of Abyssinia. A fierce civil war in that country has resulted In placing a Christian Empress on the throne of herfathers and the complete defeat of the pagan. pro-German, Moham medan forces. I This event Is of more than merely curious interest, for Abyssinia has good claims to be regarded as the oldest Christian land inthe world and to the posses sion of the largest proportion of the purest ancient Hebrew blood the blood of King David, King Solomon and other great He brew patriots of the most glorious period of Judaism.

The new Empress Zaoditu, who has just been secured on the throne, is reputed to be a descendant of King Solomon and the immortal Queen of Sheba, which enor mously increases her claims to our attention. There is no doubt that Abyssinia was the country of that magnificent and generousQueen of Sheba, whose visit to King Solomon at Jerusalem Is described with considerable detail In the Bible. In the Book of Kings, Chapter X., weread:"1 When the Queen of Sheba heard of the fame of Solomon concerning the name of the Lord, she came to prove him with hard questions."

And she came to Jerusalem with a very great train, with camels that bare spices, and very much gold, and precious stones: and when she was cometo Solomonship communed with him of all that was in her heart. Ami Solomon told her all her questions: there was not any thing hid from the King which he told her not. And she gave the King an hundred talentsof gold, and of spices very groat store, and precious stones: there came no more such abundance of spices as those which the Queen of Sheba gave to King Solomon.” And King Solomon gave unto He Queen of Sheba all her desire, whatsoever she asked, beside that which Solomon gave herof his royal bounty. So she turned and went to her own country, she and her servant;-." Very ancient Hebrew and Arab legends prove that this famous Queen came from a land that roughly corresponds to the pres entAbyssinia. The land was also known in the Bible and in the classics as Ethiopia.

The reason why Sheba and Ethiopia are thus associated is simple. Sheba. or Saba, was an important country of southern Arabia. The Sabaean Arab." extended their rule across the few miles of the Red Sea that separated them from Ethiopia, and in King Solomon's time the race had itsmost important territory in the latter country.

The Arabic legends tell the story of the Queen of Sheba. partly as it Is given in the Iiihlc, but with many additional inter esting details. They givethe Queen's name as Dalkis. They say she had a son by King Solomon, whom she called Menelek, and that has ever since been a favor ite name in the land. It was borne by the late Emperor Menelek, and he. in turn, was reputed to be a descendant of King Solomon. As the presentEmpress is bis daughter she can claim the same illustrious ancestry.
Concerning the early conversion of the hand to Christianity, there is strong evi dence. In the Acts of the Apostles, Chapter VIII., we read thatwhile the Apostle Philip was preaching there came to him "a man of Ethiopia, an eunuch of great authority under Candace, Queen of the Ethiopians, who had charge of all her treasure, and had come toJerusalem to worship."

The Bible tells us that this man listened to the teaching of the Gospel and "went on his way rejoicing." With the help' of Queen Candace he founded the Christian church in Ethiopia, or Abyssinia, In the very lifetime of the first Apostles. It has existed there ever snce, in spite of ages of change and the rise of Mohammedanism in Asia and Africa. And now, as to recentoccurrences in this picturesque land. Abyssinia was thrown into a state of convulsion at the very beginning of the European war. About that time theEmperor Menelek, who had governed Abyssinia with a success unknown among native African rulers, died.

His death was concealed for sev eral months, because it was felt that no one could fill his place successfully, but finally it was necessary to let the people know the truth. His widow, the notorious Empress Taitou, who had had ten husband and lost all but Menelek by violent deaths, endeavored tograsp the supremo power. Her career did not recommend her as a safe person to tho most influential chiefs of Abyssinia, and after a brief struggle the Empress, who had lost much of her early vigor, was overcome and placed in a convent.

The outbreak of internal strife gave tho Germans an opportunity of Interfering, ac cording to the policy they have followed in all parts of the world. The nearest heir to the throne was a young boy, named Lij Eyassu, grandson of Emperor Menelek and son of his oldest daughter and her husband. Has Mikail. He was hastily crowned Emperor as soon as the Taitou disturbances had been suppressed. Now, although Abyssinia is mainly Christian, a certain section Is Mohammedan, which is not surprising, as the country has always been in close contact with the great centres of Mohammedanism. Lias Mikail happened to be chief of a territorythat was largely Mohammedan.

The Germans, with the help of Turks and other Mohammedan agents, planned to take advantage of this fact and turn the country Into a non- Christian, pro-German, Mohammedan stronghold. German money was spent freely In promoting strife. Leaflets printed in the native tongue were circulated by the German agents, de claring that England, France and Italy were in league to destroy the Independence of the country and divide it between them. This lie gained credence among many Abyssinlansthe more easily because of the fierce struggle they had had with Italy In recent years.

The German propaganda progressed famously for a time. Christians were driven out of public offices and murdered and Mohammedans appointed intheir places. The representatives of the Entente Allies and the United States were insulted and threatened, and the Germans and Turkish agentsbecame the favourite advisers of the court. A new war against Italy was threatened. Finally, the misguided young Emperor, Lidj Yeassu, under the influence of his German and Turkish advisers, publicly announced that had become a Mohammedan, and that henceforth Mohammedanism wouldbe the national religion of Abyssinia, the oldest Christian country in the world. The Emperor's name, "Veassi'," by the way, means "Jesus." At about the same time Lidj Yeassu removed his capital from Addis Abeba, its ancient site, to Harrar, in order that it might be near the Mohammedantribes who dwell east of this province.

These steps outraged the Christian ele ments of Abyssinia beyond endurance. Ras Tafari, Governor of the Province of Harrar, whom Germanagents bad plotted to assassinate, placed himself at the head of the opposition, which Included the principal Christian priests and native princes. A large army was raised, and after fierce fighting Lidj Yeassu fledinto the territory of bis father, Ras Mikail. During this struggle the youngest daugh ter of Menelek, the Princess Zaoditu, had remained true to the Christian religion, the faith of her' fathers, and upon her tho hopesof the Christians were centered. She showed a spirit worthy of the best traditions of queenly rulers.

A great national gathering of Christians called a "maskal" was summoned to meet at Addis Abeba. There; amid solemn ceremony, the supreme headof the national church, the Abuna Matheos, or Archbishop Matthew, solemnly released every Abys sinian from his oath of allegiance, and declared Lidj Yeassu deposed from the throne for his religious apostasy.

The throne was then offered to the Princess Zaoditu, and she accepted jt, and promised to defend the Christian faith as long as she lived. The Ras Tafari wasm named as her successor in case she had no children. The deposed ruler had then taken refuge in the territory of his father, Ras Mikail, who raised an army and endeavored to re place him on the throne.Tho army was assisted by German officers and munitions, but In the wild mountainous land of Abyssinia bravery and a knowledge of local conditions proved more Important than military science. Ras Mikail was defeated in a sanguinary battle, and both be and his son taken prisoners.

The latest dispatches from Abyssinia report that the Empress Zaoditu hasbeen crowned with Christian rites. The ceremony, which was extremely elaborate and picturesque, occurred at the Cathedral of St. George in Addis Abeba. The Ministers of the Entente Powers and the United States represented their Governments The German Minister and the Turkish Consul-General were not present. It is conjectured that their participationin a plan to murder the new Empress and her principal supporters, including the Archbishop, may have had something to do with their absence.

After the ceremony the Empress left the Cathedral, supported by the Regent Ras Tafari and by Ras Kassa, a cousin of Menelek. She then took her seat on a throne in the centre of a large platform erected in the courtyard. The Diplomatic Corps having passed before her. ceremoniouslybowing, the Archbishop of Abyssinia made a speech, In which he cleverly showed that a woman ruler was a hopeful sign for tho country. He referred to the Queen of Sheba, Queen Candace and other illustrious women who had been famed in Abyssinia in ancient times. He reminded the fierce natives that England had enjoyed her greatest prosperity underthe rule of a woman.

Queen Victoria, who reigned for sixty years and was a good friend of Abyssinia. Altogether, he satis fied his hearers that they were far better off under a Christian Empress than under a Mohammedan proilerman Emperor. A New and Interesting Conception of the Gorgeous and Generous Queen of Sheba's Visit to King Solomon. Her Gold and Emerald Mines Are Now Possessed by the Newly Crowned Empress of Abyssinia. Painting by Julius Kronberg, the Noted Swedish Artist Abyssinia is noted for its vast wealth of precious stones and gold. One of Her Majesty's emblems of power is a great umbrella adorned with gold and jewels, which is raised above her throne. This umbrella is never loaned. It will greatly interest all Ilible scholars to know that Abyssinia has been definitely saved to Christianity. In this country are strangely preserved many forgotten rites of the ancientHebrews and the first Christians. After the Queen of Sheba's visit to King Solomon, It is said 12.000 Hebrews of the best families in Jerusalem settled in Great Britaln Rights Reserved.

The descendants of these people to-day form tho aristocracy of Abyssiniaand are Christian. On the other hand, another contingent of Hebrews came to Abyssinia after the destruction of the Temple at Jerusalem, and have remained faithful to the original Jewish religion. Each church inAbyssinia has a tabot of ark of tho covenant, in front of its holy of holies. This lends support to a tradition that the original Ark of the Covenant, given to the people of Israel by Jehovah, was sent to Abyssiniafor safe-keeping Emperor when it was imperilled. It is an interesting fact that the Abyssinlans still dance in their churches, as tho Israelites did before the ark.

Abyssinia is supposed to hold many Biblical manuscripts of surpassing interest. When the French explorer Hugues Le Roux, went there a few years "ago, one of the treasures he brought back was an ancient Abyssinian manuscript of "The Song of Solomon," differing considerablyfrom the Biblical version, and also a native version of the Queen of Sheba's visit to her illustrious ally.

PM Meles Zenawi Asresu is declared dead: After weeks of speculation about his health and unsubstantiated reports of his death, Prime Minister Meles Zenawi is declared dead on the state-controlled television. The announcement follows the government's repeated denial that the PM was dead or gravely ill. The government's announcement said Meles Zenawi died on 20 August 2012 "after contracting an infection" and was temporarily replaced by Haile Mariam Desalegn as Acting Prime Minister. The late primeminister was known for his incoherent, and unsincerely actsby unshielding the country’s interest internationally. Large number of Ethiopians considered him as mercinary whos protect the outsiders interest especially in regard to the farmlands giveaway to the Sudan, and the controversial UN sponsored referendum in Eritrea, the former provinceof Ethiopia to the culmination of Ethiopia’s access to the Red sea, which such act still hard to understand for large number of Ethiopians.

Luciano Vassallo: An Italo-Ethiopian, footballer of his time born in Asmara.Singular case in African Football History, he won an African cup of nations (in February 1962) with his younger brother Italo, marking a decisive goal. Not exaclty the easiest of lifes here, his dad was repatriated, as fascist combatant, soon after his birth in 1935. One in his Dire Dawa changing room fellow national team member derided him as a useless mixed blood. He thoroughly beat up a number of them, gaining much due... attention in the room! He feted his 80th birthday (last August,2015) in Italy.

People were talking about him today at the Iddir cafe at AAU with top Ethiopian sports officers. The two brothers are unforgotten, much revered.Since over fifty years. There have a couple of their photoes in a proposed "Quel Posto al Sole" photo exhibit in Addis Ababa.

The last August was memorised eighty years of the legendary Luciano Vassallo. Emperor Haileselassie I – The last Emperor of Ethiopia’s Solomonic Dynasty – was mysteriously died in custody on this day, at age of 84. Theruling Military council commonly known as the "Duerg" had taken power by dethroned him through a slow motion coup d'état as some called it " the crippled coup", a year earlier of his mysterious death. Just 42 years after his mysterious death, Ras Taffari of Harrarghe, emperor Haile Selassie in his coronation name is still deeply missed by the many hearts he has touched across the continent and beyond. He wasn't just an inspirational leader, also unexplained figure.

Ethiopian Twin Otter Relief and Rehabilitation Commission (RRC) Aviation plane boarded by US Congressman Senator Micky Leyland, nicknamed as “a man for all” and other local relief officials on board crashed in Gambellaremote jungles.

The rescue operation conducted in Ethiopia in search for the slain body of the US Congressman Senator Mickey Leyland. Micke...y Leyland with 8 other US citizens and about 7 Ethiopians were killed in a plane crash on a remote mountainside in Gambella administrative region of Western Ethiopiaas the group was traveling to Fugnido refugee camp near the Sudan border. Congressman Mickey Leyland was an active advocate on hunger &public health issues.

The CIA secret operation conducted to rescue Maj-GeneralKumlachew Dejene
In May 1989 when the coup attempt by the Ethiopian/Duerg’s' generals failed, it was only Maj-General

Kumlachew Dejene who managed to flee Ethiopia to come to the USA, while the rest of the generals who attemtedthe coup became the Last Supper For Mengistu Haile Mariam.

But, the question is how did Maj-General Kumlachew Dejene escape thewrath of Mengistu, and how did he come to the USA right away?

According to the book "Operation Solomon", Brigadier general KumlachewDejene was rescued by the Secret Operation of the CIA. The operation was as follows:

1) On the day of the coup attempt, Maj-General Kumlachew Dejene managed to escape the arrest by the Duerg's security Forces, and went tothe countryside of the Guragie village by dressing as a Guragie old lady. Then he went to one of the Guragie thached huts and hide himself there. In the meantime, he sent one of his close relatives to the American Embassy in Addis Ababa to let the CIA know where he was hiding. His relatives accomplished their secret mission, and the CIA knew where he was hiding.

2) After the failed coup of May 1989, The American Congressman, Mickey Leyland, went to Ethiopia to visit the refugee camp at Fugnido in western Ethiopia, but the twin motor Airplane that was taking him to the place wascrashed and disappeared in a jungle. The Ethiopian government could not pinpoint where the plane was crashed to collect the dead bodies at that time.

3) The American government then sent C-5 Galaxi along with Military helicopters to search for the crashed plane to find the dead body of theirCongressman. The head of State Mengistu Haile Mariam could not objectto this idea, because the US government said they have to find the deadbody of their Congressman Micky Leyland..

4) When the Operation started, one of the American military helicopters immediately changed its direction and flew to the village of the Guragieregion where Maj-General Kumlachew Dejene was hiding. The helicopter then landed near the cottage houses, and then they make himdressed up Maj-General Kumlachew Dejene with the American military ranger uniform, and then flew to Nairobi, Kenya.
5) After they arrived in Nairobi, Kenya, Maj-General Kumlachew Dejenewas safely flown to the USA. It is amazing to note that the death of theAmerican Congressman, Mickey Leyland, became the cause for the resurrection from the dead for Maj-General Kumlachew.

6) The life of Maj-General Kumlachew Dejene was rescued by the Secretoperation of the CIA. After he arrived in the USA, he was interviewed bythe VOA Amharic service, but did not give much information in public.

Premier Alexievich Nikolai Kosygin’s official visit to Ethiopia. During the negotiations and discussions with A. N. Kosygin, Lt. Colonel Mengistu HaileMariam touching upon the situation in his country, noted that the internal political situation in Ethiopia at the present time has generally stabilized, and right now the national-democratic revolution is confidently going forward.

In the opinion of the Ethiopian leadership, a possibility has been createdfor concurrently resolving the issues presented by the protection of the revolution and the social-economic development of the country. At the same time, the Ethiopian leaders realize that the question of insuring Ethiopian security has not been taken off the agenda, and the struggle ahead is still difficult.

The Ethiopian Military head of state pointed to the separatist movement inEritrea, which is receiving support from foreign reactionary forces, as one of the pointed problems. The fight with separatism in Eritrea is regarded by the Ethiopian leadership as a class war. The counter-revolutionary forces, relying on nationalist elements, are active in other areas of the country as well, including the central regions. There continues to be a tense situation in Ogaden.

12 SEPTEMBER 2015:

Ethiopian rebels based in Eritrea overpower forces to enter Sudan.

Ethiopian rebels who were based in Eritrea routed Eritrean governmentforces in clashes near the Sudanese town of Omhajer on Friday and crossed the border to Ethiopia in peace, sources reported on Sunday. Tigray People's Democratic Movement (TPDM), which was under the radarof the Eritrean regime of President Issaias Afefwerki for more than 12 years, and largely seen as a mercenary force in the eyes of change- seeking Eritreans, broke its chain loose and entered Sudan on Friday afterdestroying Eritrean troops who were rushed to the area to block the rebels' flight.

Residents of the Ethiopian town of Bereket, about 70km northwest of the Ethiopian border town of Humera, reported heavy fighting between the rebels and Eritrean government forces. A story carried by the Sudanese Arabic-language Farajat online also published photos of the scores of the Ethiopian rebels being checked by Sudanese security officers. Arrests werebeing made within the ranks of the Eritrean army and security, according to reliable sources.

Both Addis Ababa and Asmara have been using proxy forces to divert theirown respective crises, and according to analysts, any major conflict between the two governments due to the latest crisis in Eritrea remains remote as war would only lead to the subsequent downfall of each regime.

13 SEPTEMBER 2016:

HISORICIZE: Defiant marathoner Feyisa Lilesa has taken Ethiopia's protests calling the United States and world’s attention to the wave ofviolent protests that has engulfed his home country.

In his first press conference, almost a week since he came to the United States, the Olympic silver medalist painted a gloomy picture of a countryin distress and warned of a looming “ethnic conflict” in Ethiopia. The government, he said, was using the “power of the gun” to silence Oromoprotesters, who have been demanding economic, political and land reforms since November last year.

When he crossed his arms at the finish line at the Rio Olympics, he said hewanted the world to “finally see and hear the cry of my people.” More than 500 people, mostly from the Oromo and Amhara communities, have been killed in largely peaceful protests, according to human rights organizations.

Meantime, to keep a grip the central component in the Ethiopian ruling party the Tigrayan People's Liberation Front's (TPLF) executive member for many years, Abay Tsehaye – is running a disinformation campaign in the wake of the Amhara's peaceful protests in Gondar area. To discredit and humiliate the Gondar protesters, Abay Tsehaye blamed the protestersselectively attacking Tigrayans who were residing for generations in Gondar areas and forced them to leave the region. To agitate Tigrayans, he compared the protesters acts with the Rwandan genocide against the Tutsis. He implied that Ethiopia would disintegrate if the TPLF would be forced to lose its grip on power. And the situation would turn out to be a civil war like the Syrian type.

19 SEPTEMBER 2016:

Thousands of Ethiopians held a Historic Peaceful Marched Protest in Washington DC. The Peaceful March Protest started from the U.S. Department of State to the US Capitol and gathered in front of the US Capitol building to bring attention to the ongoing killing of peaceful protestors, in the Oromia, the Amhara regions and other human rightscrimes being perpetrated against the people of Ethiopia throughout thecountry by the repressive authoritarian regime of the TPLF/EPRDF.

Millions of Ethiopians are worring that the situation could easily explode, pushing Ethiopia over the edge to become another failed state in the Hornof Africa. Actions or inaction taken in the next days, weeks and months may determine which direction it will go. Countries like Libya, Syria, Yemen and now South Sudan provide disturbing images of the kind of disintegration seek to avoid in Ethiopia.

On this day exactly 100 years ago in 1916, the nobles of the Ethiopian Empire gathered in Addis Ababa at the annual celebrations of the Finding of the True Cross locally known as Meskel at Demera Celebration, proclaimed that Lij Iyasu, the uncrowned monarch heir and grandson of the late Emperor Menelik II had been excommunicated from the OrthodoxChurch and replaced on the throne by his aunt Zewditu, the late EmperorMenelik II's daughter.

Woizaro Zawditu Menelik whos crowned as Empress of Ethiopia: The eldest daughter of Emperor Minilik, Zwditu I, crowned Empress of Ethiopiaafter official announcement of the death of Emperor Menelik II and Lij Iyasu is deposed. She is the first female head of state in Africa in the modern era.

Empress Zewdit...u would reign as Queen of Kings (Nigiste Negest) and Seyimte Igziabiher (Elect of God) until her death in 1930. She was a deeply religious woman whose focus was largely on religious matters, building churches and caring for their upkeep while her cousin and heir Leul Ras (later Nigus) Tafari Makonnen ran the government in her name.She was deeply conservative like her step-mother Empress Taitu, but notnearly as assertive and vocal as she had been. She deferred to the will ofthe powerful men of her court such as Ras Tafari, Fitawrari Hapte Giorgisand others.

Empress Zewditu ironically was the only Ethiopian national leader to receive a state funeral at the time of death from before Tewodros II seized power until Prime Minister Meles Zenawi's state funeral. Zewditu ruled Ethiopia until 1930 and was the first woman head of state in the world.

27 SEPTEMBER, 2015:
The Annual Finding of The True Cross (✞ ✞) Celebration commonly knownas (✞ ✞ Meskel) Festival rests on this day:

The annual Holy Cross Celebration (Meskel) of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church. According to legend, the True Cross on which Jesus Christ was crucified, was found by St. Helena—the mother of Constantine the Great,the Roman Emperor who converted to Christianity—in the 4th century. A relic of that cross was later given to Ethiopia’s kings for protecting Coptic Christians in their country. Meskel celebrates the arrival of the True Crossin Ethiopia and has been celebrated there for more than 1,600 years.

Meskel, one of the major Ethiopian Orthodox festivals is celebrated for twodays beginning September 26th. Legend has it that in the year 326, Queen Helena (Empress Helen) the Mother of Constantine the Great, discovered the cross upon which Christ was crucified. Unable to find the Holy Sepulchre, she prayed for help and was directed by the smoke from a burning fire as to where the cross was buried. After unearthing the Holy Cross, Queen Helena lit torches heralding her success. In the Middle Ages, the Patriarch of Alexandria gave the Ethiopian Emperor Dawit half ofthe True Cross in return for protection afforded to the Coptic Christians. A fragment of the True Cross is reputedly held at the Gishen Mariam, about 70 kilometres northwest of Dessie. Ethiopians have been celebrating this day for millennium.

There are two occasions on ✞ ✞ Meskel. The first is Demera (September 26), in which bonfires are built topped by a cross to which flowers are tied. The flowers are Meskel Daisies. Priests in full ceremonial dress singaround the bonfire. While the Demera is set on fire there is an inner feeling of brightness for all those who are around it. Little Demera are alsobuilt at individual houses or villages.

The day after the Demera is Meskel. This day is observed with plenty of food and drink as believers go to the spot of the Demera and, using ashesfrom the fire, mark their heads with the sign of the cross. The festival coincides with the mass blooming of the golden yellow Meskel daisies. Thebest place to see the Meskel Festival is in the capital Addis Ababa at the famous Meskel Square. But all along the Historic route (Bahir Dar, Gonder, Axum, and Lalibela) and in other major towns, Meskel is colourfully celebrated.

The Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Church has a special place for “The True Cross Day.” This special celebration was brought to the attention ofthe international community in Addis Ababa and was recognized by UNESCO as a historical treasure and religious festival. Today, we are celebrating the finding of the True Cross (Kidus Meskel or The True CrossDay, organized by EOTC.

New York Times news article resurfaces that the great-grandchildren of thelate Emperor Haile Selassie I took journey that had brought them fromtheir homeland, Sadness plagued members of the royal family and the great-grandchildrenof the late Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia yesterday as they prepared to continue a journey that had brought them from their homeland, once their ancestor’s opulent seat of power, to a dingy hotel on the East Side ofNew York. “We are relieved to get out of the country.” one of the great- grandchildren, Rahel Fikre-Selassie, 19 years old, said. “‘We are relieved we are not going to die. But we are not altogether safe. A lot of loved ones are still there experiencing the terrifying thing that we are escaping.”

The young refugees said their lives had “not been settled" since the emperor was overthrown by a military coup in September 1974. He diedin next August 1975 at the age of 83. Since his death reprisals against relatives and political associates of Haile Selassie have reportedly been severe.

The six brothers and sisters escaped last July, with four of their cousins from a country in the midst of a revolution and of an undeclared war between Somali forces and Ethiopian armies. They fled only months after their mother, Princess Ijigayehu daughter of the late emperor's eldest son,died in an Ethiopian prison.

Father Still in Prison

The children's father, Dedjazmatch Fikre-Selassie Habte Mariam, who wasgovernor general of Welega in the western province of Ethiopia, remains in prison there. A relative of the children who is assisting them in this country described their father as the "victim of imprisonment by the military regime because he was associated with the emperor."

With the help of friends and relatives, all of whom they had to leave behind, the children escaped to Nairobi, Kenya, and then traveled to Sweden and West Germany before being permitted to enter the United States. The family arrived in New York Saturday evening and left yesterday afternoon for an undisclosed location in this country where theyhope to settle. Their cousins are living in another state.

Miss Fikre-Selassie sat on a double bed in the cramped hotel room. Surrounding her were her brothers and sisters, Samson, 21, Meheret. l8,Esther, l7, Bekere, l5, and Issac, 13. Their delicately chiseled faces were veiled by the dim lighting in the room.

On a dresser were framed photographs of their mother. The children livedwith relatives in Ethiopia before escaping with virtually only the clothes they wore. They described their life in that country as being haunted by fear and spoke cautiously, providing only a scant outline of their life in Ethiopia. To fill in details, they said, would be to jeopardize the lives of relatives they left behind.

Death of Mother Noted

Life was hard because both our parents were in prison "Miss Fikre-Selassiesaid. "Our mother died, and there was nothing we could do about it," The children had been allowed to see their mother only twice in the two and a half years she was imprisoned. "But we had to survive somehow, and we kept on going," Miss Fikre-Selassie said. "It's hard to put it into words. Wewill be glad when there will be no more traveling and we can be normal people again."

A relative said the-children's major goal was simply "to stay together." They are unsure how that can be achieved, however, because they have little money. "We were unable to take our belongings," Miss Fikre-Selassiesaid in a soft voice as her brothers and sisters listened solemnly. "We won’t know from day to day what will happen to us.” Joey Adams, the comedian and his wife, Cindy, who was a friend of the children’s mother,hope to raise money to help the family. The couple met the children Saturday at Kennedy International Airport.

Forced Service Recalled

Although younger children remained in school after the coup that overthrew the emperor, the older ones were made to participate in themilitary regime’s “literacy campaign,” in which high school and college students worked in education and health programs in rural communities.

“It was difficult for us because, coming from the royal family, we didn’t know how people would react if they knew who we were," Miss Fikre Selassie said. The children spoke respectfully of their great-grandfather, the late “Lion of Judah,” who ruled Ethiopia for half a century before he was deposed. “He was a great man, and we still remember him," Miss Fikre-Selassie said.Samson Fikre-Selassie recalled his great-grandfather’s“drive to do things, to go on without backing down, his courage.”

The children said they had drawn on some of that courage and inner strength in facing the uncertainty in their lives in their homeland and, nowin the United States.

CULTURE & TRADITION: The Irreacha celebration to be celebrated as traditional festival in Bishoftu (Debre Zeit)

The ethnic-Oromo thanksgiving day “Irreecha Festival” would be colorfully celebrate every year at Hora Arsadi, Bishoftu in Oromia region. Irreecha isthe Oromo thanksgiving day celebrated annually at the end of the rainy season and the start of Ethiopias’s “Autumn” season – at which the Oromopeople thank their creator “Waaqa” (God) for new beginning. This year’s Irreecha will be celebrated all over Oromia region, especially at the Bishoftu Hora (Lake Arsadi) on October 4, 2015. Likewise, it’s colorfully celebrated where Oromo communities reside over the months of September and October 2015.

A renowned journalist told, «today is the day I finally saw the Oromo National Thanksgiving day-Irreacha in action. Having gotten up at 5.00 a.m. in the morning from Shola area, I have used taxi and bus to get inBisohftu (Debre Zeit). The centre of town was filled to bursting with visitors and pilgrims and the road was blocked for cars, which means around 40 minutes’ walk to the place of the ceremony.

Irreacha takes place annually throughout Oromia on the first Sunday of last week of September or the first Sunday of the first week of October according to Oromo time reckoning. Bishoftu hosts the major gathering ofthe largest festival in the country.

Bishoftu’s celebration of Irreacha is unique, so it’s not unusual for people to travel a great distance to take part in the events. The festivities consistof a series of some parades or processions making their way across the Hora Harsadi Lake. It’s hard to describe all the sights and sounds of Irreacha. What is impressive is to see each procession beginning from thetown centre, receiving a blessing from elders. The great mass of people follows, most dressed in a white outfits adorned with the tri-colours, black, red and white. Scarfs and hats are also common. On this festival, spiritual leaders, community leaders and folks share their produces and address thanks to Waqa (God) for the blessed transition from the rainy season to the bright and colourful season.

Many of the onlookers hold small branches of grass and the Adey Abeba which were sold in smaller bundles. The branch can be tucked into the pocket of an outfit, where it was seen accenting many a wardrobe for therest of the day. Some group of pilgrims were dancing making circles.
There was such festivity and effervescence.

In the shores, amongst thousands of people already standing there, the newly arrived wait the elders to stir long grasses in the lake before sprinkling the blessed water. Some makes lines to get blessed hoping thatit will bring them closer to Waaqa (God) Many of them also made presentsto thank God for the blessings and mercies received in the previous year. Watching many small children, I was amazed by how fully they had already learned to live Irrecha, making an ancient tradition live once againin a cycle that has gone on for hundred of years or more.»

Ethiopian Retired Airforce Veteran Passes Away.
The most decorated airforce pilot (retired) passes in Washington, DC today where he was receiving treatment after he was diagnosed with Alzheimer's. Brigadier General Legese Tefera shot to fame in the mid 1970s when he brought down five jets of the former Somali invading airforce. Brigadier General Legesse Teffera (retired) was an airforce officerand hero while serving in the former Ethiopian airforce. He was a humble deeply patriotic officer who would go beyond the call of duty in the fight against the former invading Somali army. Eventually he proved his gallantry and selflessness in the confrontation with the ex-Somali army which had invaded the east and southeastern parts of Ethiopian territories in July 1977.

The highly skilled in his profession as an aircraft pilot and together with his passion for his country, it has to remembered that he outmaneuveredthe enemy pilots along with their fighter jets, into colliding themselves, before being captured he also bombarded several strategic enemy targetswithin the enemy country and was able to cease the advances of enemy troops. The Provisionary Military Government of Ethiopia promoted him toLt. Colonel title at his detainment.

Even the enemy respected him at a higher. He stands out as one of distinguished heroes who sacrificed his youth as a prisoner of war (POW)and ultimately his life. Since then, his life as a retired officer has been honored, now Ethiopians honor his death. They say: "Heroes Never Die. This man's courage will continue nerving thousands living Ethiopians. Helives on forever in the Hearts and Minds of those braves enough to followin his footsteps."

The late flight officer Legesse Tefera is one of the three recipients of thehighest honor for heroic deeds in combat with an enemy. During one of his heroic missions. He was shot down and detained in Somalia for eleven years and up on his release as Prisoner of War (PoW), he had been promoted to Brigadier General title with the adventuristic deeds he made right after his release as PoW from Somalia, then he became instructor at the Ethiopian Air Force. He self-exiled in the United States. when the EPRDF took over power in May 1991 and lived there until his death. He battled alzheimer's for the last three years. He was also an honorary guestfor the current Cuban President Raúl Castro, who pinned him a medal of honor. The late Legese Tefera is survived by two children, Nestanet and Lulit Legesse.

Athlete Abebe Bikilla became the first athlete in the world to win back-to- back Olympic marathon titles when won the race entering the finish line in2 hours, 12 minutes and 11.2 seconds at the 1964 Tokyo Olympics.

Abebe Bikila traveled to Tokyo but was not expected to compete. He didenter the marathon. He used the same strategy as in 1960: to stay withthe leaders until the 20 kilometer point, then slowly increase his pace.

After 15 km he only had company from Ron Clarke of Australia and Jim Hogan of Ireland. Shortly before 20 km only Hogan was in contention andby 30 km, Abebe was 40 seconds in front of Hogan and two minutes in front of Kokichi Tsuburaya of Japan in third place.

He entered the Olympic stadium alone to the cheers of 70,000 spectators.He finished the marathon in a new Olympic record time of 2:12:11.2; 4 minutes, 8 seconds in front of the silver medalist Basil Heatley of Great Britain. Kokichi Tsuburaya was third. He was the first athlete in history to win the Olympic marathon twice. After finishing he astonished the crowd: not appearing exhausted, he started a routine of stretching exercises. He later stated that he could have run another 10 kilometers.

Abebe returned to Ethiopia to a hero's welcome once again. He was againpromoted by the Emperor, and he received his own vehicle, a white Volkswagen Beetle with some upgrades.

Bracing for Fana TV knowing what's in store. Is License to thrill?
Amid the declaration of state of emergency and the subsequent cabinet reshuffle a TV broadcasting license has quietly been issued to three broadcasters. Same number of permits have also been doled out to FM stations, some with deep pocket connections. The licensing of TV would have been a landmark event had it not come too late and too little. The satellite broadcasting licenses were issued to the usual suspects though: Fana Broadcasting Corporate and Walta Information Center among them.

FBC and Walta are owned by Tigray People Liberation Front which currently runs the country in a different name. As such the move contravenes article 23 of the Broadcasting Service Proclamation that bar political parties from running stations. However, the contradictions do notend there. Incessant rhetoric against Egypt notwithstanding, the stations will be using the service of NileSat, which is partially owned by that government.

CAREER DIPLOMACY: Ambassador Konjit SineGiorgis of Ethiopia -A fond farewell to longest serving female diplomat

The African Union bids a final farewell to Africa's longest serving diplomat,Ambassador Konjit SineGiorgis of Ethiopia on Monday, November 16.
Konjit who started her diplomatic career a year before the establishment of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) on May 25, 1963, was given acolorful farewell party. The Chairperson of the African Union Commission,Dr. Dlamini Zuma, the Foreign Minister of Ethiopia, Dr. Tedros Adhanom,former State Minister of Foreign Affairs of Ethiopia, Berhane Gebre- Christos, and many other diplomats in Addis Ababa attended the ceremony.

konjit received a long standing ovation from the crowd as she delivered her final keynote speech, declaring that 'My career has been my life and Isacrificed everything for it. That is why I feel emotional as I retire after allthese years of diplomatic service." She added, "I have to be honest with you, I really wish I was a bit younger to participate more during this exciting period when both Africa and my country, Ethiopia, are making somuch progress." Konjit concluded: "There's no greater honor than servingone's country to the fullest. God bless you… Long live Africa!"

Foreign Minister Dr. In the early days of her career, Konjit served as an officer in charge of decolonization affairs in the Ethiopian permanent mission to the UN in New York. Later, she became Ethiopia's permanent representative to the OAU, and eventually to the AU, and contributed hershare in the transformation OAU to the AU.

Tedros paid tribute to the veteran diplomat saying in her close to 53 yearsof service, "she taught us all the pride and dignity of public service. We call her our encyclopedia of African Affairs," Tedros said.

Ambassador Berhane, after underlining the instrumental role AmbassadorKonjit had played in the transformation of the continent for the past half century, stressed that her commitment to her country and to Africa, and devotion to diplomatic service, was indeed both exceptional and very wellknown. He said Ambassador Konjit's meticulous work, her diligence, her readiness to carry out her duty, and the way she provided what he calledoften " brutally frank" as well as fully informed advice, were her trademarks. Dr. Nkosazana Dlamini Zuma called Ambassador Konjit the "African Diplomat par excellence", added that she loved her country, and her continent. She asked Ambassador Konjit to work with the African Union as a guide and advisor in the future.

17 NOVEMBER 1983:
BOTHER KILLED BROTHER: Ethiopian Patriot of Gondar Bitwoded AdaneMekonnen horsenamed "Aba Defar" killed in a minor clash with rivals.

Patriot/Arbegña/ Bitwoded Adane Mekonnen "Aba Defar" was an EthiopianPatriot from Tsélemti/Telemt in the province of former Begemidr & Smien Gondar. He led Ethiopian Patriots in the area close to 60 battles against the fascist Italians and their soldiers. The people of Tsélemti/Telemt, WelQayit, Tségede, Humera, Adi RemeTsé, Wegera and nearby areas werefiercely in opposition against any form of Italian occupation in their lands.

After the Ital...ians were removed from Ethiopia, Bitwoded Adane Mekonnen was awarded governorship of the 'Awraja of Wegera' as well asdistinguished titles by Emperor Haile Selassie I. When the unthinkable occurred and the maniacs that formed the Duerg ousted Ethiopia's Emperor Haile Selassie in September 1974, Bitwoded Adane Mekonnen atthe age of 71 grabbed his weapons and went off to fight another unwanted group as he had done with the fascist Italians. He was appointed to be a field commander of the "Ethiopian Democratic Union" (EDU) by Ras Mengesha Seyoum, the great-grandson of Emperor Yohannes IV of Ethiopia who began to lead the EDU fight against the Duerg regime. During this era, many opposition groups lined up against the Duerg were, the EDU, EPRP, TPLF, EPLF, OLF, WSLF, ELF and many other armed groups that wanted to remove the Duerg also had ideological defferences one with another. The EPLF vs ELF, the TPLF vs TLF and the EPRP, the EPRP vs EDU...et-al.

The EDU had a stronghold in the northern and western areas of Gondarand pockets of the EPRP also existed. The EDU and EPRP shared a common enemy, Menigstu Haile-Mariam/Duerg, but did not support oneanother based on serious ideological differences.

Nevertheless, in 1983 while near a river at the Ethio-Sudan border, a group of 11 armed EPRP members (10 males & 1 female) approached Bitwoded Adane Mekonnen and a few of the EDU rebels. The EPRP rebels opened fire and murdered the Ethiopian Patriot Bitwoded Adane Mekonnenand six of his compatriots.

The EPRP soldiers who murdered them were namely, Birhanu Deneqew "Dessalegn", Alebel Addisu, Zewolde Mariyam, Molalign Endiryas, Mare Addisu, Haile-Mariyam Aderaw, Eshete Seyoum, Asserasahign Ayele, Sertse Tedla, Alemneh Seifu and the woman was Tibereh Nigussie. Manytraditional 'call to arms', poetry and songs have been performed on the bravery and patriotism of the Ethiopian hero, Bitwoded Adane Mekonnen"Aba Defar". Rest In Peace!

Emperor Haile Selassie met Mzee Jomo Kenyatta, the nationalist leaderfrom Kenya to discuss the liberation struggle.

23 NOVEMBER 1974:

The massive execution of former Imperial government civilian and militaryofficials by the Duerg regime.

The military ruling council gathered and took a “simple vote” to summarilyexecute 60 high level government officials, civil servants, decorated war veterans and elite army officers and enlisted soldiers of the imperial regime of Emperor Haile Selassie. That massacre propelled Ethiopia into aspiraling vortex of gross humanrights violations and tyranny which persists for so long.

The military junta in-de-facto of Majour Mengistu Haile Mariam massacred60 Haile Selassie’s government officials including all of the emperor's cabinet ministers and buried in a mass grave in the central prison commonly known as “Karchalle”. The execution of the 60 officials is announced on the national radio also giving warnings against any public display of mourning.

The prominent members of the former imperial government, including all of the government’s cabinet ministers, were massively executed. Among them were, the grandson of the Emperor, Rear Admiral Eskinder Desta nicknamed "Alex", Deputy commander-in-chief of the Imperial Ethiopian Navy after having returned voluntarily from Djibouti where he soght asylum, and the last Imperial Minister of Defence Lt. General Abiye Abebewas one of the Aristocrats known for his book that wrote his account in anAmharic writing entitled "Let's find ourselves at a consciously manner (Awquen Entarem)” based on his past and present life and experiences ofhis personal knowledge warned the decadent imperial officials and riches in the then Ethiopia (ጄኔራል ዐቢይ አበበ “አውቀን እንታረም”የሚል መጽሐፍ ደርሰው ነበር። ጠንቃቃው ጄኔራል “አውቀን ካልታረምን ሌላውቀርቶ ሬሳችን የወደቀበት እንኳ አይታወቅም”ብለውእንደነበር ይታወቃል) as well as Dejazmatch Solomon Abraha whos father Dejazmatch Abraha Araya a cousin of Emperor Yohannes IV at the Tembien side. His son Dejazmatch Solomon Abraha, was a senior imperial official during the reign of Emperor Haile Selassie, his last post being the Enderassie of the former Wollo province replacing the incapacitated Crown Prince Merid Azmatch Asfaw Wossen. Dejazmatch Abraha Araya was also the father ofAffeworki Abraha, the biological father of the current Eritrean President Issayas.

In justifying the summary executions, the Provisional Military Ruling Council commonly known as the Duerg issued the following statementthrough Radio broadcast:

“The Military Ruling Council (Duerg) found it necessary to execute formercivilian and military officials on whose account repeated plots have been made that might engulf the country into a bloodbath. This decision was imperative to save the lives of innocent people that had suffered for so long in the past. Hence the Council ordered the execution of those found guilty of mal-administration, hindering fair administration of justice, selling secret documents of the country to foreign agents and attemptingto disrupt the present Ethiopian popular movement."

State-owned media outlets announced, "All the mentioned 60 people including the post-monarchial head of state, Lt. General Aman Michael Andom have been executed in a political decision made right after the evening of the 23rd November, 1974. And their funeral has taken place,so family members are not allowed to request for their coffins", state media outlets announced.

It has to be recalled that just two months earlier a military coup overthrew the monarchy and installed a socialist system of government. The execution of the sixty officials was announced on the national radio and the announcement also said that not only were the ex-officials executed, but their bodies had already been buried without the presence of their families. The national Radio broadcast also gave warnings againstany public display of mourning. It was later revealed that all of the sixty officials were buried in a mass grave within the central prison commonly known as "Karchalle".

Zerai Deres (Ge'ez ዘርኣይ ደረስ) of Hazega (died 1937 in Rome, Italy), in public opposition to the rise of fascist power in Italy and her African colonies. His death is considered part of the movement against Italian occupation. Deres was born in Hazega, Eritrea and is considered a folk hero in both Eritrea and Ethiopia. Zerai Deres is one of the eternal heroes Ethiopia had and will have in its history. The spiritof Ethiopia was burning inside his soul and could not stand the vilification of his country's flag.

A human fossil the “Lucy” specimen a skeleton of an individual "Ausralopithecus afarensis" was discovered at Hadar in the Awash valleyof Ethiopia's Afar Depression.

Side note: Lucy is found in the Afar region of Ethiopia: Scientists find in Ethiopia the earliest known fossil evidence of human beings from 3.2 million years ago. An individual named "Deneknesh" or "Lucy" with half of the bones of her skeleton is found, as well as a series of fossils collectivelycalled the "First Family" that includes remains from at least 13 individuals.The finding instantly gives the world of science a much clearer evidence asto where human beings come from and Ethiopia is now referred to as the "cradle of mankind."

Lucy is the common name of AL 288-1, several hundred pieces of bone representing about 40% of the skeleton of an individual Australopithecusafarensis. Lucy is estimated to have lived 3.2 million years ago.

Fidel Castro is known for his victorious speech of February 6, 1959 to a waiting crowd during his triumphant march to Havana after the fall of the Batista regime. Former President Fidel Castro, who led a rebel army to improbable victory in Cuba, embraced Soviet-style communism and defiedthe power of 10 U.S. past presidents during his half a century rule, has died at age 90.

The bearded revolutionary, who survived a crippling U.S. trade embargoas well as dozens, possibly hundreds, of assassination plots, died eight years after ill health forced him to formally hand power over to his younger brother Raul Castro, who announced his death late Friday, on state television.

Fidel Castro, died at 90,

- He faced more than 638 assassination attempts
- When he lived faces several hundred assassination plots and poisoningattempts.
- Potentially more than 638 assassination attempts on his life.
- The American Mafia and the CIA have both tried to kill him.
- Scores of Cuban exiles in the US have tried as well.
- There have been numerous attempted poisonings too.
- His cigars, camera flashlights, wetsuits, and even a chocolate milkshakewere targeted.
- Castro's health had been declining over the past several years.
- He had said that he never expected to live to see 90 years old age.
- He turned 90 last August, 2016.

How ordinary Cubans Are Celebrating Fidel Castro’s Death? Cuba’s revolutionary leader, Fidel Castro, passed on yesterday aged 90, and it seems not everyone is sad at his passing. Immediately the news of his demise spread across the world, hundreds of Cubans who had been exiled in the United States took to the streets to celebrate his death. Evenby organizing lots of rallies..

The Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahodo Church celebrates the feast of “Our Lady of Zion” (Hidar Tsion) this day, marked by many with a pilgrimage tothe monastery shrine of St. Mary of Zion in Axum. The ancient city of Axum was once the capital of the Empire, and it's Cathedral is considered the holiest site in the country. It is firmly maintained by the Ethiopian Orthodox Church that the Ark of the Covenant is kept here, in a special chapel to which only a single guardian monk has access. The Ark ...is saidto have been brought to Ethiopia by Emperor Menelik I, son of King Solomon of ancient Israel, and Makeda the Queen of Sheba.

Co-Emperors Ezana and Shezana (Abreha and Astbeha), the first Christianmonarchs of Ethiopia, built the first Cathedral in Axum and dedicated it to the Mother of God. Ezana's Cathedral is reputed to have been a massive building with 12 naves each dedicated to an Apostle. The original cathedral was destroyed by Yodit Gudit, and it's replacement destroyed byGragn. Currently there are two Cathedrals at Axum, the old Cathedral built by Emperor Fasiledes in the 1630's, and the new Cathedral built by Emperor Haile Selassie completed in the 1960s (both pictured here). Mostof Ethiopia's Emperors were crowned at Axum.

St. Mary is deeply revered in Ethiopia as is the Ark, and so this place is atthe very core of National and religious identity in Ethiopia. It has additional significance to me because my father built the altar of the newCathedral, commissioned to do so by Emperor Haile Selassie. Happy St.
Mary's (Hidar Tsion) day, or "Hidar Tsion" to all EOTC worshippers!

17 DECEMBER, 1960:

Ras Abebe Aregay Bachire and other renowned figures became victim ofthe unsuccessful December 1960 military coup led by Brigadier General Mengistu Neway, then commander of the elite Imperial Bodyguard. Ras Abebe Aregai Bechire (18 August 1903 – 17 December 1960) was an Ethiopian military commander who, during the Italian occupation, led a group of resistance fighters (collectively known as the Arbegnoch or "Patriots") that operated in Menz and northern Shewa districts.

Ras Abebe Aregai later served as Prime Minister of Ethiopia from 27 November 1957 until his death. It is sad he was killed by the coup plotterswho murdered 13 civilian officials of the imperial regime whose mostly war veterans of the Italian occupation. He was 57 when he was gunned down in the Guenneta Leul palace after he was summoned to the palace by the coup plotters told him that Empress Mennen was badly sick, instead Brigadier General Menegistu Neway shut the door and purged them with gunshots.

16 DECEMBER 1960:
Police Brigadier General Tedla Ugbit who supported the Pro-Ethiopian policies that led to Annexation, and his deputy, Goitom Gebrezghi, the police Commander of Asmara city, was instrumental in suppressing the 1958 General Labour Strike in then Eritrea province under Ethiopian administration. During the general strike and demonstrations of 1958 theBritish consul noted that the majority were Christians and that UP members were “mostly very anti-Ethiopia.

During the attempted coup of December 1960 of Brigadier General Mengistu Neway, leader of the coup communicated with Brig. General Tedla Uqbit requiring him to secure the borders as the military branch committee which he lead had decided to recognize Eritrea’s independence.But the Eritrean Police senior officer rejected the offer and preferred to welcome the Emperor on his way from Brazil through Sudan to Asmara.
As a result of this, the coup was failed and the Emperor returned safely tothe capital Addis Ababa on 17 December, 1960. Brigadier-General Tedla Uqbit: an ardent Unionist who persistently worked and assisted the annexation of Eritrea. Trained under the British Administration, Tedla Uqbit became one of the most feared Eritrean personalities during the Federation years.

In 1951 The British Administration sent him for study to England. In November 1954, alongside with two other police officers, dismissed by theChief Executive of Eritrea Federation with Ethiopia on the grounds of redundancy. Tedla Uqbit resigned from his post rather than accept a transfer to a civilian position, giving his reason that his dismissal had beendue to his strong support for Union. His case was taken up by the Imperialpalace, and with pressure from the Federal government, in May 1955 the Chief Executive of Eritrea forced to appoint Tedla Uqbit as deputy Police Commissioner with the rank of Major.

In June 1962, for his unwavering service to Imperial Ethiopia, Tedla Uqbit was promoted from colonel to a senior police position by the Ethiopian Emperor Haile Selassie and bestowed the title of "Commander of the orderof the Honor of Ethiopia." During the abolition of the Federation he was the busiest man to make sure all Eritrean Assembly members available forthe intended final vote to terminate the Federal status. Surprisingly, nine months after the fall of the Federation he lost his life in confrontation with the Imperial regime whos he loyally served for years. When his power wasconsiderably minimized by the Crown Governor-General, Brigadier General Abiy Abebe, he began to resent Ethiopian rule and objected order. Eventually, Tedla declared that he had restored the Federation and ordered all his subordinates including all police heads of each division inthe territory, to stay in standby position until further order. In his futileattempt of restoring the federation back, he had contacted the UN Secretary General, Mr. U-Thant through the consulate of the United Kingdom in Asmara.

The Crown Governor Abiy Abebe ordered the arrest of Tedla Uqbit and onJune 11, 1963 his police headquarter in Eritrea was encircled by the Ethiopian army. Amid negotiation with Ethiopian army officers, it was pronounced that Tedla Uqbit had committed suicide. Although official reports claimed the same, his death is still mysterious. The same day Colonel Zer'emariam Azzazi, his deputy, was promoted to the Police Commissioner of Eritrea.

Tedla Ogbit who was active in the assembly intimidating members and interrogated ELM (Haraka) members was recruited by Tuku’e Yehadego’e. After the annexation of Eritrea, Tedla Ogbit, Goitom Gebre’ezghy and Second in-command Zeramariam Azazi, were flown toAddis Ababa and entertained by the emperor Haile Selassie.

Nonetheless, Tedla Ogbit had a change of heart following the annexation of Eritrea and on June 11, 1963 Tedla Ogbit was found shot to death in hisoffice after he had apparently been involved in a plot to restore Eritrea’s independent status. This plot was part of the larger ELM plan to infiltrate the Eritrean police and use them to carry out an anti-Ethiopian coup d’étatthrough the plan never materialized, many Eritrean police were sympathetic to the nationalist movement. Immediately after Tedla's death, police headquarters was surrounded by Ethiopian troops and a number of leading Eritreans were detained. Zeramariam Azazi replaces Tedla Ogbit and was promoted to Brigadier-General (Killion 1991: 341)

Some 112 years ago this month the first American diplomatic mission arrived in Ethiopia. Ethiopia and the United States of America formally engaged in diplomatic relations when Ethiopian Emperor Menelik II andU..S. Representative and Commissioner to Abysinnia Robert P Skinner signed a Treaty of Commerce.

In the name of Robert P. Skinner would recount his experiences and the event in his 1906 book "Abyssinia of Today: An account of the first mission sent by the American Government to the court of the King of Kings, 1903-1904" During this period President Theodore Roosevelt was inoffice although Skinner notes in his book that the mission was initially in the works during the previous administration of President William McKinley. Skinner describes how the mission set sail from New York during the summer months , making stops in Naples and Beirut before arriving in Dijbouti on November 17. The mission traveled to Dire Dawa with a quick visit to Harar before proceeding to Addis Ababa. (Source: Historical Dictionary of Ethiopia)

Mesqel Reda and Wallelign Makonnen, Tilahun is remembered by Ethiopians as anoutstanding student leader who paid the ultimate sacrifice in pursuit of theideals of good governance and progress for Ethiopia.

DECEMBER 1954:
Emperor Haile Selassie I made a royal visit to México. Mexico is the only country to support the Ethiopian cause during the fascist Italian invasion of October 1935. Mexico condemned Italy along with the League and rallied support for Ethiopia. Mexico also was known for it's support to helpEthiopia reorganize in post-Italian occupation; In Mexico city there is a metro station dedicated to his visit to Mexico in 1954. Every metro stationhas a symbol and that of "Plaza de Etiopia" is the l first station, which canbe seen on the tiles that make up the walls of the station.

His Majesty the Emperor of Ethiopia was trying on a sombrero during his visit. There is also a "Plaza México" in Ethiopia, which Emperor Haile Selassie had also constructed after he returned from Mexico. Plaza Méxicois the only Plaza in the Ethiopia which is named after a different country.
As a result of this historical connection, México and Ethiopia consider themselves to be sister countries. The royal visit by Emperor Haile Selassie At Guildhall in England in 1954 ... also was key visit for the establishement of the Imperial Ethiopian Navy. In the centre of the Ethiopian capital there is a square renamed after "Mexico" Mexico was oneof the few countries that supported Ethiopias anti-Fascist struggles.
Emperor Haile Selassie I was the most outstanding representative ever and all his visits served one purpose and that was Ethiopia at the time ofhis Royal visit.

Students joined by local residents block roads in some towns in Oromia region of Ethiopia to prevent soldiers from moving around and attack peaceful protesters. Transportation to Wolliso, other towns in southwestern Ethiopia completely shut down by protesters. Protesters shut down several highways and roads in south and west Ethiopian towns,including Wolliso, as these photos show.

04 DECEMBER 2015:
Mass Student Protest Arrests In Oromia Region:
Police shot and killed a high school student while arresting many studentsin Chelya town of western Oromia region, the VOA has reported. Studentsalso fled towns into the woods for fear of mass arrests and beatings.
Student protests throughout Oromia region have been backed up by the local people, who have been the targets of government brutality for years.The latest student protest flare-up is linked to a controversial Master Plan of Addis Ababa and Oromia region. The ruling TPLF/EPRDF promotes the politics of ethnic division, a system experts see with apprehension because they believe it is a time-bomb for the eventual fragmentation of the country.

Out of the mouths of genociders: Hutu extremists called the Tutsis "cockroaches" before they unleashed the Rwandan genocide in July, 1994.Muammar Al-Quadhafi of Libya belittled Libyan protesters as "rats" and paid a heavy price for it. And now rulers from the minority ethnic clique ofthe establishment in Ethiopia described peaceful protesters as "demons" while gunning them down. Note that the implication of the word "demon" in Amharic, i.e አጋንንት (AGANINT to term Evil), has a more sinister labeling meaning than its English synonym.

22 DECEMBER 2015:
The death of peaceful protesters estimated at 165, over 4500 detained inOromia Region during the month-long protests. The number of individualskilled during the month-long protests has risen to over 185, while over 4500 have been detained, a leading figure of the opposition Oromo Federalist Congress (OFC) told Voice of America (VOA) Amharic Service.

8 DECEMBER 2016:

Former Ethiopian Prime Minster under PDRE government Tesfaye Dinka has passed away in natural sickness on 7 December 2016 at his home inFairfax, VA. He was 77. He was named Prime Minister of Ethiopia as oneof the last official acts of Lt. Col. Mengistu Hailemariam, the Ethiopian head of State before he fled the country for exile, Tesfaye has played a prominent role during his service under PDRE government in the past.

Tesfay...e has served his country in different ministerial positions including minister of Industry, Finance, and Foreign affairs, and was the lead negotiator at the May-1991 London Peace Conference with armed rebel groups such as the Oromo Liberation Front (OLF), Tigrai Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF), and the Eritrean Peoples Liberation Front (EPLF),

With an MSc degree in engineering from Syracuse University in the US, and an undergraduate degree from the American University in Beirut, Lebanon, Tesfaye was one of the highly educated officials of the military government. Tesfaye Dinka served as foreign minister between 1989 and1991 before assuming the premiership for less than 3 months until the Duerg was toppled in May 1991.

During the crumbling weeks of the Duerg regime, Tesfaye was a leader ofthe Ethiopian delegation to the US-brokered London Peace Conference which paved the way for the transfer of power to Tigrai Peoples Liberation Front (TPLF) led rebel umbrella group in Ethiopia and Eritrean PeoplesLiberation Front (EPLF) rebels in Asmara at the same time.

Tesfaye once nicknamed “the seasoned diplomat” is well known to make abrief impression at the UN Security Council session by drawing a parallel image between Italy's invasion of Ethiopia in 1935 with the invasion of Kuwait by its largest and heavily equipped neighbor, Iraq. Via Tesfaye, thePDRE government unequivocally condemned the Iraq invasion of Kuwait and voted along those who condemned the invasion.

In a recently published book entitled “Ethiopia During the Duerg Years”: an inside account printed after his death, Tesfaye left his account for the next generation to come, how time is of great importance for historians and publishers alike to document the rise and fall of the Duerg regime whose stories are intertwined with the past history of Ethiopia as well as the London Peace Conference of May 1991 but it also helps substantiate the discourse and evidence historians and the general public could have about the time and the impact it has on the present day Ethiopian politics.Ato Tesfaye is survived by his wife and three children, and grandchildren. Tesfaye’s contribution for the unity and territorial integrity of Ethiopia will always be remembered for the generations to come .

The United States, one of Ethiopia’s biggest backers, is urging the government to address the widespread dissatisfaction and open up thecountry’s politics before the time is too late for the ruling EPRDF.

He quoted as saying, “We feel it has reached an inflection point where some hard decisions are going to have to be made,” said Tom Malinowski,the assistant secretary of state for human rights, in an interview during arecent visit to the capital, Addis Ababa. “Otherwise, a lot of the achievements could be jeopardized, and we know from the country’s history what a true crisis could look like.”

Hundreds of people are thought to have been killed and tens of thousandsdetained in Ethiopia over the last year, though exact figures are unavailable. Opposition groups, mostly based abroad, say the figure is much higher. The government recently said it had released 11,000 detainees.

Scores of senior opposition politicians have been arrested and jailed, as well as bloggers and commentators such as Sorri. The unrest has been most intense in areas dominated by the Oromo ethnic group, which comprises around 40% of the population. There have also been demonstrations and clashes in parts of Ethiopia dominated by the Amharaethnicity, which analysts say indicate a deep-rooted discontent with decades of rule by the EPRDF. The overall situation appears to have calmed since an upsurge in protest and associated violence in November,though some areas remain tense.

First Session of the UN Economic Commission for Africa (UNECA) in Addis Ababa. UN Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjöld arrived at Addis Ababa airport this day for the opening of the first session of the new UN Economic Commission for Africa (UNECA) on 29 December. The Commission, the fourth regional commission to be set up by the United Nations, will provide a focal point where the economic needs of the Africanpeople can be expressed and where action to meet them can be initiated and stimulated. Mr. Hammarskjöld is seen here as he inspected the Guardof Honour at the airport upon his arrival. He made a brief address before leaving the airport for the Jubilee Palace, where he was State Guest of Emperor Haile Sellassie. (UN Archive)

EX-Imperial Ethiopian Retired Honorifics & Court Titles

Recognized Imperial Honorifics:

Traditional and Court titles, with sound meanings anddefinitions.

Until the end of the Ethiopian monarchy in September 1974, there were two categories of nobility in Ethiopia, the ‘Mesafint’ and the ‘Mekuwanint’.The Mesafint or princes, hereditary nobles, formed the upper echelon of the ruling class. The Mekwanint were the appointed nobles, often of humble birth, who formed the bulk of the nobility. Until the 20th century, the most powerful people at court were generally Mekwanint appointed bythe monarch, while regionally, the Mesafint enjoyed greater influence andpower. Now the above titles and all other are under negligence by successive overnments.

Here below list of traditional positions and awards of which only granted by the royal crowncouncil in previous years to the nobility ladies and gentlemen among the society by former Imperial regime. Nowadays Afterthe fall of the conservative regime, these traditional position-awards, andnamings were being neglected by successor regimes. Here are some of previous traditional position awards wordings.

Imperial Ethiopia - Royal Males Honorifics - Aristocratic & Court Titles’Nəgusä nägäst "King of kings" "Emperor of Ethiopia"

ንጉስ ነገስት -የአንድ ሉአላዊ ሃገር የበላይ ገዥ/ሙሪ/

Although several kings of Aksum used this style, until the restoration of the Solomonic dynasty under Yekuno Amlak, rulers of Ethiopia generally used the style of Negus, although "King of Kings" was used as far back as Ezana. The full title of the Emperor of Ethiopia included the terms Atse (Emperor), Neguse Negest (King of kings), and Seyoume Igziabeher (Electof God). The title of Moa Anbessa Ze Imnegede Yehuda (Conquering Lion of the Tribe of Judah) always preceded the titles of the Emperor. It was not a personal title, but rather referred to the title of Christ, and placed the office of the Christ ahead of the Emperor's name in an act of Imperial submission. Until Yohannes IV the Emperor was also Neguse Tsion (King of Zion). The Emperor was entitled to the dignities of Girmawi (His/Your Imperial Majesty), and Janhoy (Sire), Atse (Emperor when referred to in the third person) and in his own household and family as Getochu (our Master in the plural).

Negus (ንጉስ) meaning for "king" (ንጉስ -የአንድ ክፍል ሀገር ገዥ)

This word was often used as part of the title to denote any important official. The title of Negus was awarded at the discretion of the Emperor to the Rases who ruled important provinces. The rulers of Gondar Shoa, Gojjam, Wollo have all held the title of Negus at some point. The title of Negus of Tsion (Zion), usually held by the Emperor, gave hegemony over much of the north of the Empire and was seated at Axum. The title was last used by Emperor Yohannes IV. It was awarded to Negus Mikael fatherof Eyassu V but changed to Negus of Wollo in consideration of the feelingsof many princes in northern Ethiopia, then after his son Lij Eyassu's deposition the title went to Tafari Makonnen, who later became Emperor Haile Selassie I. He would be the last person to bear the title of Negus.

Imperial Aristocratic and Court Titles በነገስታት ዘመን ከ1632 እስከ 1769 የነበረውየስልጣን አይነት እና ትርጉም

Abetohun (አቤቶሁን) or Abeto (አቤቶ) -- Prince. Title reserved for males of Imperial ancestry in the male line. Title fell into disuse by the late 19thcentury.
Abeto-hoy Lij Iyasu attempted to revive the title and this form is still usedby the current Iyasuist claimants.
Ras (ራስ "head") -- One of the powerful non-imperial (ራስ -የአንድ ሃገር ከንጉስ በታችሆኖ የሚገዛ የጦር ሃይል የበላይ አዛዥ ቢትወደድ ባለ ሙሉ ስልጣን) ; Harold G. Marcus equates this to a Duke. The combined title of "Leul Ras" was given to the heads ofthe cadet branches of the Imperial dynasty, such as the Princes of Gojjam, Tigrai and Selale.
Bitwaded (ቢትወደድ, meaning for "the beloved") -- An office thought to havebeen created by Zara-Yakob who appointed two of these, one of the Left and one of the Right. These were later merged into one office, which became the supreme grade of Ras, "Ras Betwadad".
Lij -- (ልጅ) literally meaning for "younger" -Title given from birth to sons ofmembers of thenobility (mesafint) Lij also meaning for "child", and...serves to indicate that a youth is of noble blood. Haile Selassie was given a name, Taffari Makonnen, the latter emperor Haile Selassie was given the title of “Lij” meaning “the one who’s respected or feared".
Dejazmatch ("Commander or General of the Gate") ደጅ-አዝማች -የአንድ ክፍለ ሃገርከራስ በታች የጦር መሪ ሆኖ ትዛዝ ሰጪ a military title meaning commander of the central body of a traditional Ethiopian armed force composed of a vanguard, main body, left and right wings and a rear body. Marcus equates this to a count. The heirs of the "Leul Rases" were titled Leul Dejazmach to elevate them above the non-Imperial blood Dejazmaches.
Fitawrari (ፊትአውራሪ) Commander of the Vanguard meaning chief of staff), amilitary title meaning commander of the vanguard of a traditional Ethiopian armed force. Marcus equates this to a baron.
Quegn-Azmach (Commander of the Right wing) a military title meaningcommander of the right wing of a traditional Ethiopian armed force.
Azmatch (Commander of the Rearguard) a military title meaning commander of the rearguard of a traditional Ethiopian armed force. Thiswas usually a trustworthy counselor and the leader's chief minister.
Bale-Amba-Ras (Commander of an Amba or fortress) ባላምባራስ -ከግራ አዝማች በታች ሆኖ ሠራዊት ይዞ የሚዘምት ,head of an Amba, these could also be commandersof the guards, artillery or cavalry of a traditional Ethiopian armed force, basically a man entrusted with important commands. Head of an Amba (village).
Royal Females Honorifics
Nigiste Negest- "Empress Regnant" (in her own right) Literally "Queen of Kings". Empress Zewditu

(reigned 1917–1930) was the only woman to becrowned in Ethiopia in her own right since ancient times. Rather than takethe title of Itege which was reserved for Empress-Consorts, Zewditu was given the feminized version of Niguse Negest to indicate that she reigned in her own right. She was accorded the dignity of Girmawit (Imperial Majesty) and the title of Siyimte Igziabiher (feminzed "Elect of God"). She was commonly referred to as Nigist (Queen). The 1955 revised constitution excluded women from the succession to the throne so this title was effectively abolished.

Itegue – (እቴጌ) Equivalent to "Empress Consort" were generally crowned asconsorts by the Emperor at the Imperial Palace (የ አ ን ድ ሀ ገ ር ገ ዥ ሀ ያ ዊ ሚስ ት /ን ግ ስ ት /)

However, Empress Taitu Bitul consort of Menelik II, became the first Itegeto be crowned by the Emperor at church rather than at the Palace. Her coronation took place on the second day of the Emperor's coronation holiday. Empress Menen Asfaw became the first Itege to be crowned by the archbishop on the same day and during the same ceremony as her husband, Emperor Haile selassie. The Itegue was entitled to the dignity ofGirmawit (Her/YourImperial Majesty).

Leul Reserved at birth for daughters of the monarch, and granddaughtersin the male line. Prince is a title born by sons and daughters of the Royalfamily, and by the higher nobility who already have the title of "Ras", hence "Leul Ras".

ልዑል -በ ቤ ተ -መን ግ ስ ት ለ ወ ን ድ ን ጉ ሳ ዊ ቤ ተ ሰ ብ የ ሚሰ ጥ የ ክ ብር ስ ም

Leult (feminine) -- Princess. Reserved at birth for daughters of themonarch, ልዕ ል ት -በ ቤ ተ መን ግ ስ ት ለ ሴ ት ን ጉ ሳ ዊ ቤ ተ ሰ ብ የ ሚሰ ጥ የ ክ ብር ስ ም - and granddaughters in themale line.

Usually bestowed on the wives of "Leul Rases" as well as the monarch's granddaughters in the female line upon their marriages. The notable exception to the rule was "Leult" Yeshasheworq Yilma Emperor Haile Selassie's niece by his elder brother, who received the title with the dignity of "Highness" from Empress Zawditu upon the princesses marriageto 'Leul Ras' Gugsa Araya Selassie Yohannes in 1918, and then again fromher uncle upon his coronation in 1930 with the enhanced dignity of "Imperial Highness".

Note again: Higher ranks from the title of Ras through Balambaras were also bestowed upon members of the Mekwanint. A Ras who was a member of the Mesafint (such as Ras Mengesha Yohannes son of EmperorYohannes IV would usually be given precedence over a Ras who was a member of the Mekwanint, (such as Ras Alula Engida who was of humble birth) even though their ranks were equal. There were also however parallel rules of precedence based on seniority based on age, on offices held, and on when they each obtained their titles, which made the rules for precedence fairly complicated.

Nebura-Ed ("one put in office through the laying of hands") -- civil governor of Axum. Also called "Liqat Axum". Because of the historical andsymbolic importance of this city, the rules of precedence promulgated in 1689 ranked the Nebura ed ahead of all of the provincial governors.

Indeed, when the title was granted with Ras Warq (the right to wear a coronet), it was higher than even the title of Ras. Although a civil title granted by the Emperor, it was usually bestowed on a clergyman due to Axum's status as the holiest site of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church within the country. Note: The Nebre Id of Axum was both the clerical and seculargovernor of the town and Monasteries of Axum including the great ...

Cathedrals of St. Mary of Zion. The rank of Nebre Id was granted only to the heads of the churches in Axum and Addis Alem, with the Axum NebreId being the senior ranking one. When the rank of Nebre Id was granted with the dignity of "Ras Worq" (the right to wear a coronet), it outranked the title of Ras. Although Nebre Id's could be reasigned to other offices, the title stayed with them for life. Nebre Id Ermias Guebre Selassie remains an active clergyman in the Ethiopian Orthodox Tewahedo Bete Kresteyen, abbreviated as EOTC and is considered one of it's leading intellectuals. He served several terms in the Imperial parliament, and wasimprisoned by the succesive Duerg regime for seven years. (Text ends)

HISTORICIZE: Queen Makeda/Queen Of Sheeba

The True Name of the Ethiopian Queen, the Wife of King SolomonOf Judah

"I am black but lovely, O daughters of Jerusalem, Like the tents of Kedar,Like the curtains of Solomon." Song of Solomon 1:5

In 960 B.C., the nation that is now called Ethiopia, came back upon the center of the stage of history. Ethiopia was then represented by a queen,who in some books is referred to as "Makeda. "She is better known to theworld as the Queen of Sheba. In his book, "World's Great Men of Color,"
J.A. Rogers, gives this description: "Out of the mists of three thousand years, emerges this beautiful story of a Black Queen, who attracted by thefame of a Judean monarch, made a long journey to see him."

Makeda, according to lore and legend, is the mysterious and majestic Queen of Sheba, and the beloved of King Solomon of Judea. However, according to the Old Testament , she is portrayed as a chaste and unnamed queen of the land of Sheba heard of the great wisdom of King Solomon of Israel and journeyed there with gifts of spices, gold, preciousstones, and beautiful wood and to test him with questions, as recorded inFirst Kings 10:1-13 (2 Chronicles 9:1–12).

It is related further that the queen was awed by Solomon's great wisdomand wealth, and pronounced a blessing on Solomon's deity, Solomon reciprocated with gifts and "everything she desired," whereupon the queen returned to her country. Makeda was apparently quite rich, however, as she brought 4.5 tons of gold with her to give to Solomon (1 Kings 10:10).

There is no hint of love or sexual attraction between Solomon and the Queen of Sheba. The two are depicted merely as fellow monarchs engaged in the affairs of state. Note that the Songs of Solomon (the shortest book in the Bible with only 117 verses) are amongst the mostbeautiful odes to love between a man and a woman ever written.
Makeda's name is never mentioned.

Together they had a son, Menelik I, who would become the first Emperor of Ethiopia. Based on a text The Kebra Nagast, a royal chronicle compiled in Abyssinia in the 14th century, this ancestry reestablished the Solomonicline. In 1270, with Emperor Yekuno's declaration to be the lineal descent Menelik, all succeeding Ethiopian rulers confirmed they have full filial and ruling rights by birth to Yekuno Amlak and, by that means, to King Solomon and Queen Makeda.

In many versions of the Old Testament and in subsequent art, Queen Makeda was whitewashed. She was a beautiful powerful black woman whoconverted to Judaism, out of love, and traditional Western culture have never acknoweldged this. It is also believed that one of the ten lost tribes of Israel are the “Falashas”, a group of Ethiopian Jews who live today as inBiblical times.

Perfumer Shelley Waddington is the first to name a fragrance after Makeda This perfume magically evokes the love between King Solomonand Makeda , the fragrance is hand blended as in the days of old; Makeda’s heart of Jasmine Sambac, base of Oud,and cedarwood (“The beams of our house are cedar, King James 1.17′) clearly evoke the passion, sexuality and royalty of its noble namesake. – Michelyn Camen, Editor-in-Chief http://www.cafleurebon.com

HISTORICIZE: Divine Meaning of the Symbols of The Ethiopian Royal Standard of The Kings of The Solmonc Dynasty/The ImperialCrest on the Royal Ethiopian Flag

The Royal Standard of the Kings of the Solomonic Dynasty.ethiopian royal standard

This symbol is the crown (Zewd) summarizes Ethiopia’s custodianship of the throne of God. The Ethiopian Royal Standard carries two angels around an unoccupied throne on which sits a globe, an Orb with the crosson top of it.

At the back of the throne, there is the Star of David.Above the throne is an open Bible
Before the throne is the Lion bearing the Ethiopian banner. This indicatesthat the Ethiopians and the Royal family are given the custodianship of God's throne, but the throne is Eternal as many kings have come and gone. It continues to exist as it awaits the One who should come to execute the Final Judgement.

"And He shall send Yahshua Ha'Mashiach/Iyesus Kristos, which before was preached to you: Whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things which Igziabier/Lord God of The Universe has spoken by the mouth of all His holy prophets, and the Covenant which Amlak/God made with our fathers, saying to Abaraham, "And in thy seed,shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed. Onto you first, God, havingraised up His Son Yahshua Ha'Mashiach, sent Him to bless you, in turningaway everyone of you from his iniquities.""

The House of Solomon is the former ruling Imperial House of the EthiopianEmpire. Its members claim patrilineal descent from Solomon of Israel and the Queen of Sheba, the latter of whom tradition asserts gave birth to Menelik I after her biblically described visit to Solomon in Jerusalem.

History of Ethiopia

The dynasty, a bastion of Judaism and later of Ethiopian Orthodox Christianity, is considered to have ruled Ethiopia in the 10th century BC. Records of the dynasty's history were reported to have been maintained by the Ethiopian Orthodox monasteries to near antiquity; however, if suchrecords existed, most were lost as a result of the destruction of Orthodox monasteries by the resurgent Judaic Judith I. Yekuno Amlak I re- established the dynasty, tracing his ancestry to the last Solomonic King ofAxum, Dil Na'od. The Dynasty re-established itself on 10 Nehasé 1262 EC
[2] [need quotation to verify] (10 August 1270 AD) when Yekuno Amlakoverthrew the last ruler of the Zagwe dynasty.

Yekuno Amlak claimed direct male line descent from the old Axumite royalhouse that the Zagwes had replaced on the throne. Menelik II, and later his daughter Zewditu I, would be the last Ethiopian monarchs who could claim uninterrupted direct male descent from Solomon of Israel and the Queen of Sheba (both Iyasu V and Haile Selassie I were in the female line,Iyasu V through his mother Shewarega Menelik, and Haile Selassie I through his paternal grandmother, Tenagnework Sahle Selassie). The male line, through the descendants of Menelik's cousin Dejazmatch Taye Gulilat, still existed, but had been pushed aside largely because of Menelik's personal distaste for this branch of his family.

The Solomonic Dynasty continued to rule Ethiopia with few interruptions until 1974, when the last emperor, Haile Selassie I, was deposed. The royal family is currently non-regnant. Members of the family in Ethiopia at the time of the 1974 revolution were imprisoned; some were executed and others exiled. In 1976, ten great grandchildren of Haile Selassie I were extracted from Ethiopia in an undertaking later detailed in a book byJodie Collins titled Code Word: Catherine. The women of the dynasty werereleased by the regime from prison in 1989, and the men were released in1990. Several members were then allowed to leave the country in mid 1990, and the rest left in 1991 upon the fall of the Communist Regime. Many members of the Imperial family have since returned to live inEthiopia.

Imperial Standard (obverse)

Imperial Standard (reverse)

During much of the dynasty’s existence, its effective realm was the northwestern quadrant of present-day Ethiopia, the Ethiopian Highlands. The Empire expanded and contracted over the centuries, sometimes incorporating parts of modern day Sudan and South Sudan, and coastal areas of the Red Sea and Gulf of Aden. Southern and eastern regions werepermanently incorporated during the last two centuries, some by Shewan kings and some by Emperors Menelek II and Haile Selassie I; although much of the central and southern regions were previously incorporated into the empire under Amda Seyon I and Zara Yaqob, peripheral areas were lost after the invasion of Ahmad Gragn (Gurey).

In the modern era, the Imperial dynasty has several cadet branches. Theelder Gondarine line, starting with Susenyos in 1606 (although often credited to his son Fasilides who established his capital at Gondar) endedits rule with the fall of the largely powerless Yohannes III in 1855 and thecoming to power of Tewodros II, whose later claims of Solomonic descentwere never widely accepted. The Tigrean line came to power briefly with the enthronement of Yohannes IV in 1872, and although this line did not persist on the Imperial throne after the Emperor was killed in battle withthe Mahdists in 1889, the heirs of this cadet branch ruled Tigre until therevolution of 1974 toppled the Ethiopian monarchy.

The Tigrean Cadet branch (along with its various sub-branches) traces its lineage to the main Solomonic line of Emperors through at least two female links. The more recent link was through Woizero Aster Iyasu (wife of Ras Mikael Sehul, daughter of Mentewab and her lover, Melmal Iyasu, aSolomonic prince and nephew of Mentewabs late husband Bakaffa).

The Shewan line was next on the Imperial throne with the coronation of Menelik II, previously Menelik King of Shewa, in 1889. The Shewan Branch of the Imperial Solomonic dynasty, like the Gondarine line, could trace uninterrupted male line descent from King Yekonu Amlak, though Abeto Negassi Yisaq, the grandson of Dawit II by his youngest son Abeto Yaqob. The direct male line ended with Menelik II – who was succeeded first by the son of his daughter Lij Iyasu from 1913 to 1916, then by his daughter Zewditu until 1930, and finally by the son of a first cousin in thefemale line, Haile Selassie I. Haile Selassie's reign lasted until 1974, whenthe dynasty was removed from power. His grandson Prince Zera Yacob is his legal heir and therefore the current head of the imperial dynasty. The Shewan branch has several sub-branches, most notably the Selalle line established by Menelik II's uncle Ras Darge.

The oldest junior cadet branch of the Solomonic Dynasty is the Gojjam branch which traces its ancestry to Woizero Romanework, daughter of Na'od and sister of Dawit II. Its most prominent recent members includeTekle Haimanot King of Gojjam, his son Leul Ras Hailu Tekle Haimanot, who was the most senior Ethiopian noble who submitted to the Italian occupation of 1936–1941; and his nephew Ras Hailu Belew who was a noted figure in the resistance against the Italian occupation.

Coat of arms

Lion of the Tribe of Judah

The Imperial Coat of arms was adopted by Haile Selassie I, and is currently held by his direct heir in the male line, Prince Zera Yacob, and by the Crown Council of Ethiopia. The arms are composed of an ImperialThrone flanked by two angels, one holding a sword and a pair of scales, the other holding the Imperial scepter. The throne is often shown with a Christian cross, and a Star of David, (representing the Christian and Jewish traditions). It is surmounted by a red mantle with the Imperial Crown, and before the throne is the Lion of the Tribe of Judah. The Lion ofJudah was the central emblem of the Ethiopian tri-color flag during the reign of the monarchy, and now serves as the chief symbol of the Ethiopian monarchist movement. The Lion of Judah has also been adoptedas the leading religious symbol for the Rastafari movement that regards Emperor Haile Selassie as divine.

The phrase “Moa Ambassa ze imnegede Yehuda”, (Conquering Lion of the Tribe of Judah) appeared on the arms, and always preceded the Emperor’sofficial style and titles, signaling the Emperor’s submission to Christ, to whom the title belonged. It was an often repeated mistake that the title of“Lion of Judah” referred to the Emperor himself. The official Imperial Dynastic motto was “Ityopia tabetsih edewiha habe Igziabiher” (Ethiopia stretches her hands unto God), a quote from the Psalms of David

The First Migration (part 1 of 2): Linked by their Love for Prophet Jesus
Ethiopia is a nation which accepted 94 male and 26 female refugee asearly as 615 A.D before the existence of the new nations like America,Canada, Australia etc..
A total of 120 first Muslim refugees came from Mecca across the Red Seato Axum, in today's Tigray region of Ethiopia. These refugees were welcomed with great hospitality by the Axumite Christian king "Ezana".

The refugees fled their homeland due to war between the Prophet Mohammed and his adversaries. The P...rophet send the Muslim refugees to Axum / Ethiopia for their safety. When the adversaries of the Prophet asked King Ezana to extradite them, he refused and provided them with full Asylum. He even build a Mosque (place of worship) for the refugees to practice their religion in his kingdom. This flight of early Muslims to Ethiopia is regarded as the First Hijra in Islamic history. The gratitude towards the Ethiopians is preserved in a Hadith: "utruk al-habasha ma tarkukum"Leave the Abyssinians / Ethiopians alone, so long as they do nottake the offensive ! The mosque in Tigray is said to be the first built in Ethiopia by the followers of Prophet Mohammed who came with the First Hijra.

Prophet Muhammad sends a small band of Muslims to Ethiopia.By Aisha Stacey (© 2012 IslamReligion.com)

Ethiopia is a country that most of us know very little about. You might recognize the name but do you know that it is one of the countries in the region known as the Horn of Africa? It is the second most populous nationin Africa and frequently in the grip of severe famine. The region that we now call Ethiopia was once, in English, and most commonly outside Ethiopia, known as Abyssinia. It was also previously known as the Kingdom of Axum, and named by Mani (216–276 CE)[1] as one of the four great powers of his time along with Persia, Rome, and China. Axum remained a strong empire and trading power until the rise of Islam in the 7th century. However, unlike the relations between the Islamic powers and Christian Europe, Axum was on good terms with its Islamic neighbours. For Muslims, Ethiopia is synonymous with freedom from persecution and fear.

In the early years of Islam the Muslims were persecuted and tortured by the ruling families of Mecca. There were even instances of people mistreating members of their own families. Among the new converts to Islam were the poor and weak who were unable to put up with pain and hunger they were forced to endure. In order to protect them and their new found religion Prophet Muhammad, may the mercy and blessings of God be upon him, sent approx 80 people, including one of his own daughters, to Ethiopia. This event is known as the first Hijrah (migration).

The King of Ethiopia, sometimes known as the Negus and possibly one ofthe last rulers of the Axum Empire was known as a just and truthful man. He was a Christian with deep religious convictions. Prophet Muhammad believed that his followers would be well looked after if they migrated to a country whose religion was Christianity-a scriptural religionwhose Prophet was Jesus son of Mary. The migrants set off on their hazardous journey carrying with them a letter of introduction for the King. What follows is a translation of that letter.

I begin with the Name of God, the Most Merciful, Most Gracious, FromMuhammad, the Messenger of God to the Negus Al-Asham, king of Abyssinia (Ethiopia).

Peace be upon you, I praise God and I bear witness that Jesus, son of Mary, is the slave of God. He was created by the command of God and Mary the virgin, the good, the pure, conceived Jesus. As God created Adam, He created Jesus. I call you to God, the Unique without partner, and to His obedience, and to follow me and believe in that which came tome, for I am the Messenger of God.
I send to you my cousin Jafar with a number of Muslims, and when theycome, I ask you to entertain and receive them. Peace be upon all thosewho follow True Guidance.

When the rulers of Mecca heard about the migration they hastened to send their own emissaries to the Ethiopian court. It was their fear that if such a ruler welcomed the Muslims it would give credence to the new religion and legitimize their beliefs. They planned to convince the King to expel the Muslims by giving him gifts, and by spreading gossip and slander about the new religion and the immigrants. However the King wasa wise, noble and just man and was prepared to meet and hear both groups.

The two Meccan delegates reiterated their accusations. They said, “YourMajesty, you well know that a group of fools have turned renegade and have taken asylum in your country. They did not embrace your religion,but rather invented their own religion that neither of us knows. We arepeople of high rank who are related to their fathers, uncles, and tribes, and ask that you would surrender these wretched renegades to us”.

The King then asked the group of Muslims why they had chosen this new religion rather than adhere to the religion of their forefathers or embrace the established religion of Christianity. Jafar, the son of Abu Talib and thusProphet Muhammad’s cousin, rose to speak on behalf of the immigrants and Islam. He said:

O your Majesty, we used to be a people of ignorance. We worshipped idols, ate dead animals, committed great sins, severed family relations, and the strong among us abused the weak. We were like that until God sent from among us a Prophet who was known for his noble descent, honesty, trustworthiness, and decency. He invited us to worship God alone and abstain from worshipping stones and idols. He ordered us to speak nothing but the truth and to render back our trusts to those to whom they are due. Moreover, he ordered us to keep our ties of kinship intact, be good to our neighbours, and abstain from what is forbidden. Healso ordered us not to commit evil, nor to say false statements, nor to eatup the property of orphans, nor to accuse chaste women of wrong-doing without proof or witness. He has commanded us to worship God alone andnot to associate anything with Him and to pray, give Zakat and fast.

Hence, we believed in him and in God's message to him. We worshippedGod alone. We rejected that which we used to associate with Him as His partners. We consider unlawful what he has told us is unlawful and lawfulwhat he has told us is lawful. For this reason alone our people have attacked us, tortured us and forced us from our religion. They intend to make us revert to the worship of idols instead of praising God. They wantus to consider lawful the evil actions which we used to do in the past.
When they tortured us and hemmed us in, and came between us and our religion, we left for your kingdom, choosing you because we need your protection. We hope that we would be treated fairly while we are with you,O King!

The King listened to this exchange with patience and attention, when boththe Meccans and the Muslims had spoken he turned to Jafar and said, “Doyou have with you anything sent down from God to your Prophet?” What happened next caused both the King and his bishops to weep until their beards were soaked with tears, and we will learn about what this was in part 2.

HISTORIC ETHIOPIA

Emperor Teddy of Magdalla & The Gaffat Cannon Fodder

A cannon fodder is an enduring symbol of the reign of the Emperor Tewodros II of Ethiopia. Emperor Tewodros's ambition was to manufacturefire arms and he had achieved it at Gaffat. He tried in vain to materialize his wishes... He was hot blooded and in a hurry to achieve something.
What his hurry was about? He only knows! But surely it was for a good reason. His overzealous ambition costed him an invasion by British power and sacrifices his dear life.... Menelik II must have learned a history lesson from him. Ambition with patience and wisdom. Menelik materializedat least a glimpse of what Tewodros had dreamt for his country.

HISTORIC ETHIOPIA

Emperor Yohannes IV & The Ethiopian Unity

English John IV, original name Kahssai Mircha (born in Tembien of Tigray region of Ethiopia in 1831—died March 10, 1889, in action at Metema), emperor of Ethiopia (1872–89). Like his predecessor, Tewodros II (r...eigned 1855–68), Yohannes IV was a strong, progressive ruler, but hespent most of his time repelling military threats from Egypt, Italy, and theDervish Mahdists of the Sudan.

Superior weaponry allowed Yohannes, a dejazmatch (early) of Tigray in northern Ethiopia, to fight his way to the Ethiopian throne on January 21, 1872, four years after Tewodros's death. His main rival was Menilek II, king of Shewa, who did not recognize Yohannes as emperor until 1878/79,after a military defeat. Menilek's eclipse, however, was only temporary. In1882 a dynastic marriage was arranged between Menilek's daughter and Yohannes' son, and it was agreed that Menilek would be Yohannes' successor as emperor. Yohannes also recognized Menilek's control of the south, and their separate spheres of influence were carefully defined.

Tensions between the two rose again by 1888, however, when Menilek,fearing that Yohannes' son might try to follow his father to the throne, made an agreement with the Italians in exchange for arms.

Aside from the recurrent problem of the powerful king of Shewa, Yohannes' domestic concerns were mainly to reduce the power of theother regional nobles (and thus create a unitary government) and to increase his hold on his subjects through enforced conversion to the Ethiopian Orthodox church. His attempt to use religion as a basis for unityaroused resistance, however, particularly from Muslims who were orderedto build churches, pay tithes, and eventually be baptized.

The expansionist khedive (Ottoman viceroy) Ismāʿīl Pasha of Egypt posed the first external threat to Yohannes' empire. By the mid-1870s Egypt hadencroached on Ethiopia to the east and south, but Ethiopian forces, in what verged on an anti-Muslim crusade, won decisive victories in the mountainous country of the north in 1875 and 1876. Italy, the next aggressor, in 1885 occupied the former Turkish and Egyptian Red Sea portof Mitsiwa (now Massawa, Eritrea) and then began to expand inland toward the province of Tigray, only to be soundly defeated by Yohannes in1887. In the same year, the Islamic revivalist Mahdist forces, gaining ground in the Sudan, invaded Ethiopia and devastated the old capital, Gonder. In retaliation, and possibly in the hope of getting Sudanese gold and slaves and even of gaining access to the Nile River, Yohannes invadedthe Sudan and was killed in the Battle of Metema (March 1889).

HISTORIC ETHIOPIA

The Battle of Gura'e & Ethiopian victory of March 7 to 9 of 1876 Isma'il Pasha of Egypt, who sought to bring the entire Nile River basin under his rule. The two armies met at Gundat (also called Guda-gude) at present Eritrea then Bahir-Negash on the morning of 16 November 1875.The Egyptians were tricked into marching into a narrow and steep valley and were wiped out by Ethiopian gunners surrounding the valley from thesurrounding mountains. Virtually the entire Egyptian force, along with its many officers of European and North American background, were killed.

News of this huge defeat was suppressed in Egypt for fear that it would undermine the government of Khedive Isma'il Pasha of Egypt. A new Egyptian force was assembled and sent to avenge the defeat at Gundat. The Egyptians were defeated again at the Battle of Gura'e (March 7 – 9, 1876), where the Ethiopians were led again by the Emperor Yohannes himself, and his loyal army general, the capable (and the future Ras) AlulaEngida horsenamed as Abba Nega.

Emperor Menelik II: 1889

Menelik II is crowned emperor, in 1889, after a time of great turmoil inthe region - both internally and outside Ethiopia's borders.

Three decades of internal upheaval have led to a strengthening of centralcontrol, but this has not been achieved by Menelik's royal dynasty. By theearly 19th century his ancestors have become little more than token emperors in a feudal system which has collapsed into anarchy. Order is restored in mid-century by one of the powerful barons, who after defeating his northern rivals proclaims himself emperor in 1855 as Theodore II. In 1856 Theodore marches south against Haile Malakot, king of Shewa and a member of the Solomon dynasty.

Haile Malakot dies during Theodore's invasion of his territory, whereupon Theodore takes with him as a hostage Malakot's 11-year-old son, prince Menelik. The boy lives the next twelve years in virtual imprisonment until,on the death of Theodore in 1868, he becomes one of three claimants to the throne. From 1872 he bides his time during the reign of a stronger rival, John IV. He is finally crowned after John dies, in 1889, in battle against a Muslim army invading from the Sudan.

Aggressive followers of the Mahdi in the Sudan are only one of the external dangers facing the new emperor. Equally threatening are the European imperialists now staking out their claims on the Red Sea coast,and in particular the Italians.

Ethiopia and Colonialist Italy: 1889-1897

Menelik's first response to the Italian presence on the coast is to make analliance to his own advantage. In the treaty of Uccialli, signed in 1889, heaccepts their right to Eritrea and cedes to them territories in the north of Ethiopia around Keren, Massawa and Asmera. In return he receives money and weapons (30,000 muskets and 28 cannon).

However the treaty, whether by accident or by Italian design, contains a discrepancy which guarantees future conflict. One of its articles states, inthe Amharic version, that when dealing with international powers the Ethiopian emperor may use the assistance of the Italian government. TheItalian text of the treaty says that he must do so.

On this basis Italy declares to the world that Ethiopia is now an Italian protectorate. In 1890 Menelik dismisses this claim. In 1893 he repudiatesthe entire treaty. The Italians respond with an attempt to impose their protectorate by force. The Italian commander in Eritrea, instructed to wina decisive victory over Menelik, begins his campaign by declaring that he will return with the Ethiopian ruler in a cage. The actual result is strikinglydifferent.

Menelik leads some 70,000 men on the long journey north from Addis Ababa. When the armies meet, at Aduwa on 1 March 1896, the Italianssuffer the most humiliating and bloody defeat ever experienced by a colonial power in Africa.

By the end of the day more than 4000 Italian soldiers are dead or missing.Another 2000 have been captured, to be taken on an agonizing march back to Addis Ababa. 4000 Eritrean troops in the Italian army are also dead or captured. The Ethiopian losses have been comparable (about 7000 dead), but this figure is dramatically out of keeping with the disparity between Ethiopian and Italian weapons.

When news of the disaster reaches Italy, there are riots in the streets. Within two weeks the prime minister is replaced. Before the end of the year the new Italian government climbs down on the issue of the supposed protectorate, accepting now the full independence of Menelik'sEthiopia.

With this much achieved, Menelik presses his diplomatic advantage. From all three colonial powers in the region he wins slices of Somali territory. Tothe north the border is redrawn to bring into Ethiopia the southern parts of French and British Somaliland.

But it is to the east, and at the expense of the defeated Italians, that Menelik makes the greatest gain. Harar and the rich province of Ogaden, independent regions long ago penetrated from the coast by Islam, have recently been subject to Italian pressure from the same direction. Now, inthe aftermath of Aduwa, Italy accepts Menelik's claim to this area. The frontier of Ethiopia is permanently redrawn in a great easterly peak, like an inner reflection of the Horn of Africa.

Empress Zauditu Menelik and HRH Tafari: 1916-1930

When Menelik II dies, in 1913, he is succeeded by his grandson, Lij Yasu.The young man is ineffectual, but also gives more serious cause for affront in this Christian country. He shows an inclination towards Islam.

With the outbreak of World War I in 1914 this implies the likelihood ofsupporting Turkey and the Central powers.

A plot is hatched by the church leaders in conjunction with a talented young man in his twenties, Ras Tafari. As a member of the imperial family, son of Menelik's most trusted lieutenant Ras Makonnen, and from1910 governor of his native province of Harar, Ras Tafari is already a considerable figure. In 1916 he leads a successful coup against Lij Yasu.

The deposed emperor is replaced on the throne by his aunt, Zauditu, daughter of Menelik. Ras Tafari is appointed regent and becomes heir tothe throne.

For fourteen years he gives Ethiopia a greatly enhanced international presence, while accepting that the conservative character of the empressrestricts as yet the opportunity for much change at home. In 1923 he secures the admission of Ethiopia to the League of Nations. In the following year he becomes the first Ethiopian ruler to travel abroad, visiting Rome, Paris and London. When Zauditu dies, in 1930, Ras Tafari is crowned emperor. He takes thetitle Haile Selassie, meaning 'might of the Trinity'. He immediately introduces a programme of reform, beginning with the provision of Ethiopia's first written constitution. He attempts to put an end to slavery and to improve the provision of public services such as education. But an international crisis intervenes in December 1934.

A dispute over grazing rights and the use of wells by Somali tribes, on theborder of Ethiopia and the Italian colony of Somalia, flares up into a skirmish at Wal Wal between Ethiopian and Italian Somali troops. It is a minor incident. But it is eagerly seized upon by fascist Italy as a pretext for war.

Italian East Africa (ORIENTALE ITALIANA): 1936-1942

The issue of grazing rights around Wal Wal, in the Ogaden, is referred to the League of Nations. The League takes its time before coming up with anon-committal decision in September 1935. But meanwhile Italy, which has been sending out large reinforcements of troops to Somalia and Eritrea, seems intent on war. Mussolini's obsessive desire for an Italian empire leaves no time for legal niceties.

A month after the League's pronouncement, in October, Italian forces cross the borders into Ethiopia in a two-pronged attack - from Eritrea in the north, from Somalia in the east. This time, unlike at Aduwa forty yearspreviously, the relatively primitive Ethiopian weapons are no match for a modern European armed force.

In their advance the Italians have the benefit of tracked armoured vehicles, artillery, fighter and bomber aircraft. To this conventional arsenalthey also add one of the horrors developed in World War I, mustard gas.

Even so, the terrain in Ethiopia is difficult. It is not until May 1936 that theItalians enter Addis Ababa. Haile Selassie has fled abroad four days earlier. He presents his country's case in person to the League of Nations in Geneva, but to no avail. The European nations, accepting the Italian conquest of Ethiopia as a fait accompli, soon re-establish normal diplomatic relations with Addis Ababa under its new masters - making all too plain the inability of the League to safeguard the international rule of law.

In Italy Mussolini is able to make much of his triumph. On May 5, the dayon which Addis Ababa falls, he announces the establishment of a new Italian empire. The king of Italy, Victor Emmanuel III, is proclaimed emperor of Ethiopia. And a new colonial entity, comprising Ethiopia, Eritrea and Somalia, is established under the name Italian East Africa.
Haile Selassie retires to the English city of Bath. As it turns out, Italian East Africa has only four years of existence. When Mussolini brings Italy into World War II on Hitler's side, in June 1940, Haile Selassie travels to Khartoum to help prepare an allied invasion of hiscountry. This begins in January 1941. On May 5, five years to the day after Addis Ababa fell to the Italians, the Ethiopian emperor returns in triumph to his capital.

Emperor Haile Selassie: May 1941 to September 1974

After the war the restored emperor continues to give Ethiopia a leading role among the nations of Africa. The most notable example of this is the establishment of the OAU, or Organization of African Unity. Designed to bethe voice of Africa on the world stage, the OAU is founded at a conference in Addis Ababa in 1963. Addis Ababa remains to this day its headquarters.

Internally the emperor continues his pre-war attempts to give Ethiopia aless feudal system of government. In 1955 he introduces a new constitution. This provides for an elected lower chamber in parliament, with power to question the acts of the emperor and his ministers. And itpurports to give full independence to the nation's judges.

Nevertheless the emperor still retains the right to rule by decree and to appoint his ministers. The situation is a drastic improvement on Ethiopia'spast, but it falls far short of what Africans elsewhere are expecting in the rush of the late 1950s towards independence from the colonial powers.

The result is an attempted military coup while Haile Selassie is abroad in1960.

The coup fails. But it has the effect of pushing the emperor into a more authoritarian stance. He now chooses his ministers increasingly from thelandowning aristocracy, the power base of a feudal ruler. Meanwhile his policy on Eritrea is also, in the early 1960s, running into trouble.

Ethiopia and Eritrea: 1945-1974

During the first half of the century, with the Italians in possession of Eritrea, Ethiopia has been landlocked. The defeat of Italy in World War II gives Haile Selassie the chance to redress this deficiency. In a meeting with President Roosevelt in 1945 he stresses his need for access to the sea through the possession of Eritrea, an area loosely linked with Ethiopiaat various periods in the past.

The USA, seeing the chance of a naval base in the Red Sea at Massawa, shares an interest in this development. When the United Nations considersthe future of Eritrea, in 1948-50, Washington applies pressure for its annexation by Ethiopia.

The UN decision, given in 1950, is that Eritrea shall become part of Ethiopia from 1952, as an autonomous federal province with its own constitution and elected government. In that year an Eritrean administration duly takes control, bringing to an end the temporary Britishrule in the region.

Within Eritrea opinion has been divided, largely along Christian versus Muslim lines, on the question of union with Christian Ethiopia. On one sideis the Unionist party, founded in 1946 with financial assistance from AddisAbaba. On the other is the Muslim League, set up a year later to campaignfor Eritrean independence. In the election the Unionists fail to win an outright majority. The Eritrean government is therefore at first a coalition.

Aware that there will be continuing agitation for independence, Haile Selassie shamelessly interferes to secure his aim of union. With his help the Unionists remove Muslims from government jobs, put an end to teaching in Arabic, ban all other political parties (1958) and trade unions(1959), introduce Ethiopian law and even give the Eritrean government anew name. It becomes merely the Eritrean administration.

In these circumstances, and with the persecuted leaders of the independence movement now abroad, the result is a foregone conclusion when the Ethiopian and Eritrean parliaments debate the question of unionin November 1962.

On a unanimous vote in both Addis Ababa and Asmara it is agreed that Eritrea's federal status within Ethiopia shall be abolished. The area is nowto become a province like any other in the Ethiopian empire.

By the same token this degree of unanimity also exists by now on the opposing side. In 1960 Eritrea's Muslim leaders, living in exile, form the ELF or Eritrean Liberation Front to fight for independence. By the mid- 1960s they have a guerrilla force operating in western Eritrea. And in a few years they cease to be a purely Muslim movement. Soon after the union of 1962 Haile Selassie interferes in Tigre's schools, banning Tigrinya, the local language, and replacing it with Amharic. This convertsmany Tigre Christians to the cause of independence.

Eventually, after bitter disputes and even outright warfare between rival factions in the Eritrean independence movement, a single powerful groupemerges as a distant offshoot of the original ELF. This is the EPLF, or Eritrean People's Liberation Front. Dedicated to a religion as demanding and intolerant as either Christianity or Islam (in their most radical forms),the EPLF is a highly efficient Marxist enterprise. The EPLF is offered an unexpected chance to achieve its aims in 1974,when Ethiopia is convulsed by a major upheaval.

From empire to Dergue: Sept. 1974 to May, 1991

Early in 1974 there is dissatisfaction on many fronts - with Ethiopia's economic performance, with the continuing struggle against separatists inEritrea, and with Haile Selassie himself (seen by now as running an outdated feudal system, with benefits reserved for his own group and withtoo much reliance on US support). The result is a series of mutinies withinthe army.

By June the spirit of mutiny is affecting the police as well as the regular and territorial armies. A committee (Dergue in Amharic) is set up to provide coordinated action. By September the movement is strong enoughto arrest the emperor, now eighty-two and senile. In November sixty senior members of his entourage are shot. In August 1975 the old man is strangled in his bed.

These events are followed by three years of chaos during which rival guerrilla groups fight each other. The man who emerges in control is theoriginal chairman of the Dergue, Major Mengistu Haile Mariam. Mengistu proceeds to impose upon Ethiopia a brutally rigid Marxist regime. Opponents are purged or driven into exile. Peasant families areresettled in villages, around which they are allotted twenty-five acres each. From these plots they are expected to produce unrealistic yields -and, as the economy declines, to provide them to the state at below themarket price.

The result, exacerbated by the lack of spring rain two years running, is anappalling famine in 1984. Millions in the north of the country, in Tigre andEritrea, are in danger of death by starvation. Their plight is the first of its kind to be seen all round the world on television.

Mengistu's response is typical of an authoritarian theorist. He forcibly moves 600,000 people from the drought-striken north to areas in the south where he proposes to resettle them. The result, through lack of effective organization, is to add a massive refugee problem to the other difficulties already affecting Ethiopia. Chief among these is the continuingguerrilla campaign in Eritrea.

The toppling of Dergue & Mengistu Haile Mariam:March1977 to May 1991

The beginning of the end for Mengistu and the Dergue is in 1987, when the Eritrean guerrillas, the EPLF, are strong enough to move south past Nakfa into the highlands of Ethiopia. In 1988 they join forces with anotherMarxist group fighting for regional independence, the TPLF or Tigre People's Liberation Front. In 1990, in the most crucial step of all, they capture Massawa, cutting off Ethiopia's link with the sea.

Meanwhile the TPLF have merged with yet another guerrilla organization to form the EPRDF or Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front. Together they move south through Gondar and into the province of Welo.

Confronted with this seemingly inexorable advance, Mengistu announces adrastic change of policy. Socialism is to be abandoned. Resettled peasantsreturn to their old territories. Goods belonging to the state are seized in a mood of anarchy. Local officials lose all authority. The army becomes demoralized. Mengistu's predicament is markedly worse.

By May 1991 it is clear that there is nothing to prevent the rebels reachingAddis Ababa. Mengistu flees the country. The EPRDF takes power, under its chairman Meles Zenawi. He promises a new form of government guaranteeing rights (even to the point of secession) to regional minorities.Implicitly included is Eritrea's claim to independence.

A federation of regions: from May 1991

Meles Zenawi and the EPRDF are prompt in delivering what they have promised. A national conference in July 1991 appoints a provisional government, headed by Zenawi, which draws up a plan to divide Ethiopiainto fourteen regions reflecting as closely as possible the territory of different ethnic groups. The councils of these regions are to be given devolved power on all matters other than foreign affairs, defence and economic policy.

Elections to the councils are held in 1992. By 1994 a new constitution is ready, enshrining these reforms and confirming the promised right of eachregion to secede. From the start the new regime has supported the independence of Eritrea, which is achieved in 1993.

The first multiparty elections under the new constitution are held in 1995.Four major opposition parties boycott the election, enabling the EPRDF towin by a wide margin with 80% of the seats in the Council of People's Representatives. The council elects Negaso Gidada to the non-executive role of president. Meles Zenawi becomes prime minister.

The newly democratic Ethiopia also takes quick action to confront its recent past. The trial begins in 1994 of Mengistu and seventy-two of his senior officials, jointly charged with war crimes, genocide and the death ofbetween 100,000 and 200,000 people. Twenty-four of them, including Mengistu who is in Zimbabwe, are tried in their absence.

The mid-1990s seem to offer exceptional promise for long-troubled Ethiopia. There is admittedly a recurrence of famine in the Tigre region in 1994, but thereafter the country becomes almost self-sufficient in food - an unusual circumstance, caused now by good rains combined with higheroutput from the reintroduction of a market economy.

Moreover the blight of the previous three decades, war with Eritrea, seems a thing of the past - understandly, since the EPLF and the EPRDF fought side by side in toppling the Dergue. A tariff-free border between the two countries is agreed in 1995. Relations have never been better. Butsuddenly, in 1998, things go disastrously wrong.

The return of war b7n Ethiopia and Eritrea: May 1998

Relations between Ethiopia and Eritrea begin to turn sour after Eritrea introduces its own currency, the nakfa, in November 1997. Until this timeit has continued to use the Ethiopian birr. Eritrea declares the nakfa to beof equal value to the birr and expects its trade with Ethiopia (70% of its total exports) to continue uninterrupted.

Ethiopia insists, instead, that all transactions between the two nationsshall henceforth be in hard foreign currency. Although this restriction harms both nations' economies, it is far from being a cause for renewed war. Nor, on the face of it, is the small incident which actually reignites the long but apparently resolved conflict between the two countries.

In May 1998 there is an incident in the town of Badme, in Tigre just on the Ethiopian side of a disputed section of the border. Gunfire is exchanged between Ethiopian policemen and a group of armed intruders from Eritrea. In spite of international mediation, the conflict escalates intofull-scale war.

Being a war along a border, it develops a World War I quality. Trenches are dug, mines are laid, the bodies of dead soldiers rot between the lines,the unimportant desert town of Badme is taken and retaken like a symbolic trophy. By mid-1999 it is calculated that the confronting armies number some 400,000 men and that 50,000 soldiers have died. Just as inWorld War I, it seems hard to understand why.

The costly stalemate continues until May 2000, when Ethiopia wins largetracts of land in a sudden push. Peace talks begin in Algeria in June. Butapart from the appalling death toll at the front, the futile border war hasgrievously aggravated conditions of famine in both the belligerent countries.

LEGEND ETHIOPIANS

In Memory of Ras Wolde Giorgis Aboye of Gondar

Ras Wolde Giorgis Aboye (later Nigus Wolde Giorgis, King of Gondar) wasa grandson of King Sahle Selassie of Shewa and first cousin to Emperor Menelik II, and a first cousin once removed to both Empress Zewditu Menelik and Emperor Haile Selassie I. He was one of Menelik's leading army generals, who led several campaigns in the south and helped re- incorporate various regions back into the Ethiopian Empire. He was the senior prince of the Imperial blood during the reign of Empress Zewditu, and was long married to a neice of Empress Taitu.

In 1916, upon the coronation of Zewditu as Empress Zewditu I, Empressof Ethiopia, and the designation of Ras Taffari Makonnen as Crown Princeand Regent of the Empire, Ras Wolde Giorgis Aboye was crowned King ofGondar with full direct authority over Beghemidir & Simien, and overlordship over Yejju, Wollo, Wag, Lasta and Tigrai. HISTORIC ETHIOPIA:

A look at where modern day highlander Kebessas in present dayEritrea originate from.

It is commonly believed among the villagers in Mai-Weini that they that is the Tigrigna speaking people in Akele-Guzay and Hamassien trace their descent to a common mythical ancestor called King Meroni. The myth claims that he was originally from Dembia of Gondar in the region of Amhara in Ethiopia before he settled down at the present Hamassien in the Eritrea. Stefen Longring who believes that Meroni may be in part historica, notes that this event might have taken place about the year 1350. He has recorded that Meroni was “descendant of Menab (or Biniam), the captain of the host of Menelik himself”

(Longring 1945:29). The villagers, of course, do not have any calendar dating of this event, butestimate that it took place about 40 to 50 generations ago. Source: Mai Weini, a highland village in Eritrea: A study of the People, Their Livelihood, and Land Tenure During Times of Turbelence.

HISTORIC ETHIOPIA

Emperor (Atse) Menelik & The Battle of Adwa

“Emperor Menelik & The Battle of Adwa with Italians agressors signifies the African victory over colonization in March 1896 (Ethiopia) is an all time history of Africa: here is a lesson in history for those the youngsters and a bitter pill for narrow nationalists Menelik II and his Victory at Adwa will remain a world historical event despite a quite nonsense and hate. In March 1896 a well-disciplined and massive Ethiopian army did the unthinkable—it routed an invading Italian forces and brought Italy's war of conquest in Africa to an end. In an age of relentless European expansion, Ethiopia had successfully defended its independence and cast doubt upon an unshakable.” the Harvard ProfessorDefends Menelik's Legacy and Bravery.

LEGEND PEOPLE: THE MEHAL SAFARIS

"The Mehal Sefari, literally “the one that camps at the center” are perhapsthe most distinctive troops in Haile Selassie’s army. They have not the look of the European style Imperial Guard nor the tribal warriors of the powerful Rases, the Mehal Sefari was older than Emperor himself, formingan important role in Ethiopian society. A significantly large force they werealso to provide many recruits to the more professional and better equipped Imperial Guard battalions under the emperors modernisation programme. Dressed in a blend of traditional dress and contemporary military style clothing they make for a unique looking Ethiopian soldier unlike others of their time."

The Prince of Abyssinia commissioned by The Queen of England in1879 as prince in-exile

The bronze statue portrait of Prince Alemayehu Tewodros .. always pictured in a sad face and heart breaking every time seen his picture was commissioned by Queen Victoria, possibly after the death of the young prince in 1879. It was presented by the artist, the English sculptor FrancisJohn Williamson, at Windsor Castle in July 1880. It was sent to Queen Victoria’s favourite residence, Osborne House, in the Isle of Wight, to be placed in the Upper Corridor. Prince Alemayehu was the only son of King Tewodros of Abyssinia. In 1868, following the collapse of his father’s reign, he came to England and Queen Victoria took a personal interest in his education and upbringing. The Prince is shown in profile relief, wearinga native tunic and a cloak wrapped around his body. The cloak is edged with a lion’s mane, a symbol of Abyssinian princes.

A Swiss engineer who became foreign policy.....

A Swiss engineer who became foreign policy advisor to the emperor ofEthiopia is the subject of an exhibition at the Ethnographic Museum inZurich.

Alfred Ilg later entitled as “Bitwadad” emigrated to Ethiopia in 1879 andstayed there for 27 eventful years.

The exhibition documents the amazing story of how Ilg entered servicewith the Ethiopian emperor aged 25, and went on to become one of themost influential men in the country.

Emperor Menelik was very keen to modernise his country and build a newcapital, and he employed workmen, technicians and military advisers fromEurope.

Arriving in Ethiopia, the young Ilg soon found work in Addis Ababa, building bridges and streets. He personally installed the first water pipe inthe emperor’s palace.

Ilg later installed machines, built an ammunition factory and taught theEthiopian people how to use new weapons.

He took around 1,000 pictures during his time in Addis Ababa, some ofwhich are on display in the Ethnographic Museum in Zurich.

The pictures show the royal family in their westernised surroundings, theemperor riding on his mule, the construction of the railway line and market scenes.

Political adviser

Ilg was born in 1854 into a poor family. After completing his studies at theFederal Institute of Technology in Zurich, he successfully applied for the job in Ethiopia.

A few years after his arrival, he was given the job as the emperor'spolitical adviser.

He was able to speak and write the local language, Amharic, and hadproved his loyalty to the emperor on many occasions.

"I loved him like a father," Ilg is quoted as saying about the emperor.

For his part, the emperor depended on the Swiss engineer's advice andtrusted him above all others. The fact that Ilg came from a neutral country during an era of colonialism was also an advantage.

Menelik felt threatened by the imperialistic policies of the European superpowers of France, Italy and Britain, as Ethiopia was the only countryin Africa that had not been colonised.

It was Ilg who drew Menelik's attention to discrepancies in the 1889 Treaty of Wichale, an agreement supposed to promote friendship andcooperation between Italy and Ethiopia.

War

He discovered that in the Italian version of the treaty Ethiopia wasreferred to as an Italian protectorate. Ethiopia's refusal to accept the treaty led Italy to declare war in 1895 inan attempt to preserve the power it thought it had achieved over the African country.

"I had underestimated the European countries' imperialistic struggle forpower," Ilg wrote later in a letter.

With Ethiopia's victory over Italy at the Battle of Adwa in 1896, thecountry's independence was ensured and it began to attract foreigninvestment.

First railway

The construction of the 784km-long railway linking Addis Ababa and the coastal town of Djibouti began in 1897 and was completed 20 years laterin 1917.

Part of the line was opened as early as 1902, and the first train to run onit was manufactured by the Swiss locomotive manufacturer, Winterthur.

By now Ilg was at the height of his career, drawing up a peace agreementbetween Italy and Ethiopia and receiving European diplomats.

In March 1897, Ilg was officially appointed privy counsellor to the emperorand received the highest order of the country – the star of Ethiopia.

But it wasn't long before rivals began plotting against him, and hisposition became harder after the emperor fell ill in 1906.

Ilg's influence faded and he returned to Zurich, where he lived with hiswife and his four children until his death in 1916.

"Pomp and Glory at the Menelik Palace. Alfred Ilg's Ethiopia around 1900"runs at the Ethnographic Museum until May 2005. The highlight is a film by Christoph Kühn exploring Ilg's life through his letters.

LEGENDARY ETHIOPIANS

Dr. Melaku E. Bayen: Unsung Hero of the Ethiopian FascistResistance in America

By Girma Abebe (PhD)

Few Ethiopians know that Dr. Melaku Bayen was the first Ethiopian to receive an American college degree. And even fewer know of his tirelessstruggles in a foreign land against the Fascist occupation of his country.

On March 5, 2017, Dr. Melaku will be remembered by the New York chapter of Global Alliance for Justice - the Ethiopian Cause, and the New York Ethiopian Community Assistance Association (ECMAA), as they observe the 80th anniversary of both the three-day Fascist massacre of 30,000 citizens in Addis Ababa, as well as the start of Dr. Melaku's diplomatic campaigns to free his homeland from Fascist occupation. Theoccasion will be observed with prayers, speeches, and film clips on March5, 2017, at 301 Cathedral Parkway (Corner of West 110 St & Frederick Douglass Blvd), New York, NY 10026.

Melaku was born in Wollo Province on April 27, 1900. His parents, Grazmach Bayen and Woizero Desta, had moved to Harar Province where Melaku joined a church school and was quickly noticed by Crown Prince Tafari Makonen for his brilliance. As luck would have it, young Melaku became was one of the three young boys, including Beshahwoured Habtewold and Worku Gobena, selected by the Crown Prince to be sent to school in British India on January 19, 1921. In India the three students joined a preparatory school under British tutors who constantly kept reminding them of the colonial ambitions of Great Britain and that Ethiopiatoo would soon become a British colony.

The young students were upset by these offensive remarks but all they could think of was to return to their own country or go to America wherethey learned the country had a democratic government that was against colonialism. It was very difficult to arrange the long trip, but eventually, the students came to America to pursue their education armed with only aletter of recommendation from Crown Prince Tafari Makonen addressed toPresident Warren Harding of the United States.

As improbable as it may seem, the Ethiopian guests were fortunate to be able to meet President Harding in the White House and to receive from him a generous advice on their planned education. The President advised them to join his alma mater, Marietta College in Columbus, Ohio. The Ethiopians promptly expressed the Crown Prince's deep appreciation and their own sincere thanks to the President and immediately submitted theirapplications to the dean of admissions of that college. They were joyful when they received a positive reply.

Once the three able students completed their degree programs, two of them headed home while Malaku Bayen decided to join the graduate school at the Ohio State University, and upon completion, he transferredto Howard University, in Washington D.C. where he enrolled in the medical faculty. After vigorous work and successful results, Malaku obtained his degree of Doctor of Medicine, cum laude.

Immediately after graduation, Dr. Malaku returned to his home country inthe early 1930's and joined his compatriots to serve his people as a physician. It was an outstanding, selfless and timely contribution. Unfortunately, Malaku had also to prepare himself for an expected Italianaggression against his people.

Surely, his school work in America that lasted for well over a decade wasintended to serve him for his nation's growth and development. That hopeful dream and thoughtful anticipation had now become a midnight dream.

Fascist Italy attacked Ethiopia in late 1935 and Malaku served as EmperorHaile Selassie's physician and aide in charge of 120,000 combatants.
When the war began, Italian warplanes started dropping nerve gas withcruel brutality and efficiency.

Having fought and witnessed these fascist atrocities with his own eyes, Emperor Haile Selassie appeared before the League of Nations and sadly said, "This most deplorable scheme was eventually accomplished. Man and beast perished completely. The deadly downpour that descended fromthe sky made anyone who touched it to suffer with torment," adding, "Those who drank the water upon which this poisonous rain had settled orate the food which the poison had touched died in dreadful agony."

The Emperor and his top advisers concluded that if they were to save theirland from fascist atrocities, they had no alternative but to seek the active cooperation of peace-loving people everywhere. They decided to send Dr. Malaku Bayen to the United States to join Americans, especially AfricanAmericans, who had already begun to support the Ethiopian cause.

Dr. Malaku Bayen reached the United States in September 1936, and Harlem in New York City became his base of operation. Immediately, the young physician introduced a very valuable review "The Voice of Ethiopia" and soon established an organization called "The Ethiopian World Federation." Dr. Malaku assembled prominent African Americans who devoted time and resources to assist actively Ethiopian patriots in action and to stand firmly in opposition to those who rushed to endorse fascist aggression against Ethiopia. The supporters of his cause included leaders like W.E.B. Du Bois, Rev. Lloyd Imes, Mildred Houston, Lorenzo King and across-section of individuals and organizations in the Caribbean, America and Europe. Dr. Malaku proclaimed that his organization was pledged to continue the struggle for the liberation of the entire black race and he encouraged his collaborators never to slow down their efforts to dismantleMussolini and his fascist soldiers and send them back home before they committed further destruction. In the 1940's, there was hope. Ethiopians began to see the giant fascist colonial castle collapsing.

Dr. Malaku Bayen left no stone unturned in his struggle against fascists who massacred his people and occupied peaceful Ethiopia. He was able tomobilize massive protest marches of supporters numbering over 20,000 inHarlem, New York City. Unfortunately, he died on May 4, 1940, at age 40, just one year before Ethiopia's independence, from what doctors described as exhaustion. He was buried at Woodlawn Cemetery, Bronx, New York, on may 11, 1940.

Rest in peace Dr. Malaku; your country will always remember you for yourdevotion to fight for its rightful causes and to safeguard its independence.(text ends)

Speech by Emperor Haile Selassie I during the memorial serviceheld for Empress Menen in February 15, 1962

All of you know her well, but she was more intimately known to me. She was devoutly religious and never lost her faith even in times of adversity. During the memorable days of our relationship we never had differences as to require the intervention of others. As Sara was with Abraham, so shewas obedient. Our desires were shared until we were separated from the Almighty. Her contribution to the good of the young, the elderly and the needy requires no testimony is greater because of thoughts and words.

We were extremely happy to live long enough in the perfect union that has allowed us to see (grow) our children, our grandchildren and our great-grandchildren. We are grateful to the Almighty for having grantedso long uninterrupted union that is not very common in today's world.
There could be no deeper prayer for me to pronounce. Despite our best efforts to save her life in the time of her illness, it was achieved by the fate of Adam and passed away.We cannot defy the Almighty, nor can weafford to be idle. Now that the time of mourning came to an end, the public and our officials must perform their duties. Since idleness is detrimental to the welfare of the nation, from Monday everyone will haveto return to their jobs.

A large number of people have come from the provinces to participate in our mourning. Because we do not wish that they continue not to interruptthe normal life, it would be better for them to send two or three representatives with letters. We are deeply touched by the expressions ofpain from both of our people that by the foreign communities.

This is not the first time that Our people joined us in our mourning. WhenOur beloved son, Prince Makonnen, passed away expressed its grief in noless measure of ourselves. We pray that the Almighty will reward you for your actions.When she was sick Itegue the general public, following the events through radio, shared Our anxiety. Doctors and her personal attendants are indebted for their tireless assistance. May these tears thatwe shed be accepted by God as a price for peace in Ethiopia and around the world.

HISTORIC ETHIOPIA:

The Prince of Abyssinia commissioned by The Queen of England in1879 as prince in-exile

The bronze statue portrait of Prince Alemayehu Tewodros .. always pictured in a sad face and heart breaking every time seen his picture was commissioned by Queen Victoria, possibly after the death of the young prince in 1879. It was presented by the artist, the English sculptor FrancisJohn Williamson, at Windsor Castle in July 1880. It was sent to Queen Victoria’s favourite residence, Osborne House, in the Isle of Wight, to be placed in the Upper Corridor. Prince Alemayehu was the only son of King Tewodros of Abyssinia. In 1868, following the collapse of his father’s reign, he came to England and Queen Victoria took a personal interest in his education and upbringing. The Prince is shown in profile relief, wearinga native tunic and a cloak wrapped around his body. The cloak is edged with a lion’s mane, a symbol of Abyssinian princes.

Untold Story of Empress Menen Asfaw

The Biography of Empress Menen Afsaw, The Mother of the Ethiopian Nation. Written by TEAM RasTafari in Empress Menen Archive EmpressMenen Asfaw: is considered quite an achievement in and of itself, documenting as it does the life of a matriarch of the Ethiopian royal family.

Parnell, a white woman born in Anchorage, Alaska undertook voluminous research, travelled to South Africa, and Ethiopia and spent hours talking with people who know the royal family in order to get an accurate representation of a woman respected the world over for her unflinching commitment to the Emperor of Ethiopia, Haile Selassie, and the people of that nation. The journey which started in 2009 with a trip to South Africa, culminated with the book launch at the Bob Marley Museum, St Andrew on Tuesday, April 3 the 121st anniversary of Empress Menen’s ‘earthday’ (birthday).

It adds much substance to the meagre body of personal information aboutthe woman who was crowned alongside the Emperor of Ethiopia, Haile Selassie, whose official title was King of Kings and Lord of Lords on Sunday, November 2, 1930, spending 47 years together before predeceasing him in 1962. The most notable work on Empress Menen's life prior to Parnell's book is the 50-page document by Yared Gebre Michael. With 240 pages inclusive of 62 historic photographs Empress Menen Afsaw, the Mother of the Ethiopian Nation offers much more than aglimpse into the everyday life of this remarkable woman.

It records how while husband Haile Selassie was engaged on the battlefield, among other things the empress established childcare centres and handicraft schools, and pursued successful business ventures while always attending to the needs of her family. Empress Menen also experienced a great deal of sorrow and personal hardship, including the loss of seven of her 10 children, spent five years in exile during the Italianoccupation of Ethiopia and coped with the everyday struggle of on-going health problems.

For the author, who is married to a Rastafarian and lives in Jamaica but isherself not Rastafarian, the gruelling hours spent on the road and other hardships encountered trying to verify information which in most cases had to be translated first from the original Ge'ez to Amharic and then English, it was a difficult task. Still, she is proud of what is still a work in progress and there are some errors such as the misspelling of the Empress' name, Asfaw which appears as Afsaw on the cover. This, however, in no way detracts from what is definitely a well-needed and timed delivery, which was as much a joy in the conceptualization as gestation for Parnell, who admits as much.
"This entire project has felt like a gift from God, and so it is offered to theworld with that in mind. I am deeply grateful for this opportunity to highlight such an extraordinary woman, Empress Menen. May her good works be remembered and treasured," she shared with The Sunday Gleaner.

In his endorsement of the text, His Imperial Highness, Sahle Selassie, theEmpress' grandson who is also president of the Ethiopian Crown Council wrote: "The rich, complex and challenging life of Empress Menen has remained obscure for decades. With the first-time translation and publication of this new volume, I trust readers will once again become reacquainted with the life of the Empress and her great contribution to herfaith, her country and her family. There were many details about EmpressMenen's life in the book that I learned about through this biography." Source: Jamaica Gleaner

Emperor Yohannes VI, the Der Sultan monastry of EOTC InJerusalem:

Emperor Yohannes the devoted Christian king of Ethiopia helps found thechurches at Jerusalem in Israel. The one other achievement of Emperor Yohannes deserves mention: founding of the EOTC Church of Dabra Gannat at Jerusalem. This place of worship was initially funded with goldhe had captured from the Egyptians at the battle of Gurae at present Eritrea in 1876. He subsequently made the church with many further payments, to a total value of 328,500 Maria Theresa, of which 141,500 dollars were for construction purposes.

HISTORIC ETHIOPIA:

Zerai Deres: "An Abyssinian patriot shot in Rome June 15, 1938"

"Romans hurrying to lunch today saw a negro, presumably an Abyssinian, praying before the large gilt Lion of Judah which now reposes at the foot of the monument inhonor of the 500 Italians who were killed at the battle of Dogali in 1887 by the generalof Emperor Yohannes IV of Ethiopia, Ras Alula Aba Nega.

"A crowd gathered, and when an army officer attempted to prevent the negro from continuing his devotions, the latter produced a scimitar from his clothing and slashedat him, inflicting a serious wound. A butcher's boy who intervened was also slashed,whereupon two soldiers fired four shots at the negro and put him out of action, but not before he had wounded the soldiers".

The hero of the incident, who lived on to learn of the liberation of Ethiopia in 1941 and of the Allied occupation of Italy in 1943-4, but died in his land of captivity before the restoration of the Lion of Judah statue, was a young Eritrean, Zerai Deres, a former post-office clerk, then in his early twenties. During one of the many fascist demonstrations in Rome, his obituary in the Ethiopian Herald states, Zerai, [standing]by the Lion of Judah statue "bowed down to pray. Naturally all the spectators were distracted from the main purpose of the display and the humble Ethiopian became the pivot of their attention. A Fascist officer went over to him and asked him to get up and end his prayer. Not wishing to be disturbed Zerai continued his bowing posture.Rougher measures were applied by the officer.

"In religious anger his sword was unsheathed and in a rage somewhat similar to thedivine fury induced by the priestess Apollo, he fell on the would-be mockers of his country's national symbol and killed them, uttering the words, 'The Lion of Judah isavenged!'. Animated by this passion and burning with enthusiasm to protect the emblem of his country, he gave no quarter until he was run down by a motor cycle and arrested".

A somewhat more dramatic account of the incident, the exact details of which are inthe nature of things almost impossible to establish, was given a few years alter by anEritrean writer, Alazar Tesafa Michael, who relates that "when Zerai saw the nationalsymbol of his country displayed as a trophy of the conqueror, he sank down in grief,tears streaming from his eyes. Then he rose up, hastened to the Museo Coloniale, possessed himself of a sword which was on show there. Returning to the statue of the Lion he prostrated himself before it.

"Leaping to his feet as he unsheathed his sword, he then rushed into the midst of thethousands of Fascists who had assembled for the celebration. He took his stand by the monument erected to the Italians who were killed at Dogali... Wielding the sword he killed five Italians and wounded many more before they dare lay their hands on him. Then he paused and shouted out, in Italian:

"Long live Tafari! (i.e. the Emperor Haile Sellassie). Long live the Lion of Judah!Down with Italy! Raise up and exalt Ethiopia!
Down with the King of Italy! Down with Mussolini!".

"Zerai", Alazar Tesfa Michel concludes, "was shot by two railway station police in thePiazza Esedra, and fell near the Conquering Lion of the Tribe of Judah, still holding his sword. He was retained in prison till after the Italian defeat, and died there duringthe Allied occupation of Italy, in July 1945, at 29 years of age".

Ed's Note: History always remembers Zerai Deres for what he did against the fascist Italians of their invasion of Ethiopia. Unfortunately the subsequent rulers of Abyssiniawere less eager to honor those patriots who sacrificed their lives to liberate their country from colonialism the statue of Zerai Deres should had been built not only in Asmara but also in Addis Ababa or elsewhere in Ethiopia. Any way Ethiopians remember their heroes and may God put their soul in heaven [In view of the manifest discrepancies between the above accounts readers are referred to the recent reprintby his nephew Alem Tesfazion of the book Zerai Deres: Note RP, March 2005]

OAU/AU ARCHIVE: The OAU was disbanded in July 2002 in favor of thenewly initiated African Union (AU), by its last yearly chairperson, the South African President Thabo Mbeki. Ethiopia's Haile Selassie I served asthe OAU's first chairperson. The Organisation of African Unity (OAU) was founded by 30 independent African countries on May the 25th, 1963 in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia with the exception of then independent Togo whos president Silvanous Olympios was assasinated by disgruntled soldiers. To mark the 50th anniversary of this organization, African and international leaders and heads of state will convene in the newly built AU headquarters(built by China as symbolic gesture for Africa) in the Ethiopian capital where the AU's golden jubilee is being commemorated on the theme: "'Pan-Africanism and African Renaissance".

ARCHIVE: ERITREA FEDERATION WTH ETHIOPA

This is in October, 1951 when the UN General Assembly assigned a political team to survey the opinion of highlander Eritreans whether to befederated with Ethiopia or stay under Italy or England or independent status. For most of Eritrean highlanders it seems a paradox to be asked such thing when their inner inside tells them who they are. The Unionist Fikri-Hager party used to organised such demonstration to assert its demands of unconditional Union with Ethiopia. Scholars believed that it was the united action of the imperial government of Haile Selassie and this party, which ended the federation and caused the outbreak of armedstruggle. This party demands nothing less than unconditional and complete union with Ethiopia.

Ethiopia Welcomes The British Monarchial Head

The state visit was made after the Emperor of Ethiopia visited London when SirWinston Churchill was Prime Minister...

In February 2, 1965: The Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh came here tonight to aleonine welcome at the start of a week's state visit to Ethiopia .

Waiting for her at the airport was the Emperor of Ethiopia King of Kings of Ethiopia Inthe full court dress uniform of Field Marshal and a lion's mane helmet of the ImperialEthiopian Army,

As she drove the two miles to the Jubilee Palace she passed two huge gilded aluminium lions erected in her honour. Halfway on the journey they changed from a car to a state coach drawn by six white horses. Surrounded by a 100 horsemen of the imperial bodyguard, jogging under heavy lion's mane helmets, it took more than an hour to drive the two miles through crowd clapping a rhythmic welcome and drums thumping. Horsemen cantered among the crowd with even longer lions' manes stuck to their hair. "from the Guardian archive"

Story of the valiant Ethiopian fighters in Korean War

The Korea Times By Lee Hyo-w July 9, 2010

A Greek war correspondent travels across the globe to cover the first armed clash of the Cold War. But instead of trailing the battlefield feats ofhis countrymen in the Korean War (1950-53), he ends up writing a book on Ethiopian warriors — yes, warriors, like the stuff of ancient Greek myth

It's not hard to see why the soldiers of Ethiopia, one of the 21 U.N. member nations to send troops into the inter-Korean conflict, struck thefancy of the journalist: The Kagnew Battalion, bound by the motto "onefor all and all for one" to "fight until we win or die," won all 235 of its battles against North Korean forces.

And true to their motto, there were 124 deaths and 536 injuries but not asingle one of the 6,037 warriors went missing or became a prisoner of war. They literally either died or survived to a victorious end, Kimon Skordiles observes in his book. "Kagnew: The Story of Ethiopian Fighters in Korea," published in 1954 shortly after the armistice was signed, is nowfinally available in Korean (Today's Books: 319 pp., 15,000 won) on the 60th anniversary of the outbreak of the Korean War.

It sheds light upon an overlooked past but moreover, like most invaluablehistory lessons, serves as a window to the future. Most South Koreans today however are oblivious of such a sacrifice and the fact that the KoreaInternational Cooperation Agency (KOICA), the governmental aid relief organization, is making waves in Ethiopia — lending help to the country that once was giving aid.

Though the book chronicles extraordinary battles, a most touching instance of heroism and friendship shines through in a rather minor incident. One fateful morning, the enemy opened fire at South Korean civilians who were employed to lay wires. Melese Berihun of the 1st company heard the cries of a man who did not have time to escape andjumped to the rescue — "The Ethiopian soldier did not understand whatthe wounded Korean was saying; but the painful cries were directed notonly to the ears, but to the hea

A shell fell nearby and the two men died in each other's arms. They wereburied in a common grave in Busan — which serves as "a symbol of theircommon sacrifice, in a common struggle, for a common goal," writes Skordiles. "The mixed blood is the foundation of friendship and a symbolof unity between Ethiopian and Korean. It is the fire of comradeship thatcame alive in the dark days of the Korean War, the friendship that will remain in perpetuation in the history through the joining of the hands of the two countries.”

David In-yeup Song, who served as chief representative of KOICA in Ethiopia for two years, took the initiative to translate the account. “I cameacross the book a couple months after I arrived in Ethiopia. I knew Ethiopia had sent troops but I was surprised to learn about their amazing achievements,” he said in a recent Korea Times interview in Seoul. He wasin town for a few days before assuming a new post in earthquake-struck Haiti.

“I spent sleepless nights reading the book. I decided to translate it because it passes on an important lesson to the younger generation. Theyenjoy a materially rich life thanks to the sacrifice of such warriors like the Ethiopians, but many don’t even know when the Korean War broke out.
Moreover, they can learn about integrity, teamwork and courage from theKagnew Batallion,” he said.

The book introduces how Ethiopia became involved in the Korean War, and invites readers to explore the colorful history and character of the country. For then-Emperor Haile Selassie the Korean War was a “holy” mission for world peace and collective security, to stop the further spreadof ideological conflict. He thus dispatched members of the elite royal guard, the most physically adept and intelligent soldiers. Their perfect battle score did not go unnoticed, as then-U.S. Secretary of State J. F. Dulles paid the battalion a visit during a trip to Korea in 1953.

The Korean version of “Kagnew” however is more than a simple translation. Song places Skordiles’ work in a more contemporary contextby tracing the legacy of the Ethiopian warriors, through interviews with some of the 400 veterans who are alive today. Various facts, figures andanecdotes are provided in both Korean and English.

Among them, Haile Giorgis, who served as 2nd lieutenant during the war, became promoted as military protocol chief to emperor in 1972. Quite ironically, however, the emperor was overthrown in a communist coup, and during a spell of red terror through the 1980s, the Korean War veterans, once honored heroes, were forced to conceal the fact that they had fought against communist forces. Giorgis lived a reclusive life until theearly 1990s.
Last month, some 40 members of the Korean War Veterans Association ofEthiopia recently visited Seoul to witness what had become of the impoverished country they fought in as young men. “Ethiopians take noteof Korea’s rapid economic development as a model for their country’s owngrowth, and the local press widely covers KOICA’s efforts. Korea on the other hand must not forget Ethiopia’s help in the past. There is much room for friendship to bloom anew,” he said.

Today KOICA is helping build schools, drinking water facilities and welfarecenters for women and children. Song urged Koreans to take more interest in Ethiopia's gourmet coffee and take note of the country's rich history and the fact that it is home to the capital of the African Union.

This is Song's second translation project after introducing Koreans to JeanSasson's "Love in a Torn Land," which chronicles a true story set in war- torn Iraq.

LEGEND PEOPLE:

The Hotel Pioneer Bekele Mola & his Hotel chains

This Ethiopian entrepreneur (1913 - 2000) is arguably the single most important personality to have left a long lasting positive effect on the tourist industry of southern Ethiopia from the central Ethiopian town of Mojo to the Ethio/Kenyan border town of Moyalle. He had started his business at the age of 12 just with less than 16 Maria Theresa dollars selling eggs and chicken in Harar. At the end of his long and fruitful life, his business empire was responsible for employing more than 500 people.

LEGEND PEOPLE:

Football Icon Yidnekachew Tessema Eshete

One of Ethiopia's priceless Son who was born in Jimma town in former Kaffa province in September 1921, and moved to Addis Ababa around "Doro Mankiya" when he was just 4 years old. His father Negadras Tessema Eshete who was also the legendary poet, a well-respected modern businessman who has done a great deal of contribution to help the newly printed Ethiopian currency to successfully circulate through the market, in the early part of the 1930th. Lij Yidenekachew Tessema (1921-1987) was not only a gifted footballer, also an extraordinary figure who left behind an extraordinary contribution in the sport. He was an activist who stood firmly protesting to prevent south Africa from participating at any kind of worldly organized sports because of its apartheid administration and the illegally imprisonment of Nelson Mandela. He fought tirelessly to make the sport equally and peacefully shared event without discrimination. His dedicated participation in the noble cause, has sought him to earn an outstanding reputation and all kind of awards from number of organizations.

A Giant of Ethiopian Students movement of the 60sIn Memory of Tilahun Gizaw Abera

Media source: Ethiopian university students association president whoseoratory stirred nationwide student uprisings against the totalitarian Emperor Haile-Sellassie in the 1960s. Son of a wealthy aristocrat with very close family ties to Emperor Haile-Sellassie, Tilahun was the first student to put the "Land to the Tiller" motto into practice by confiscating his father's vast farmlands among the tenants of Raya Azebo. Feared as a deadly threat to Emperor Haile-Sellassie's absolute reign, Tilahun Gizaw was assassinated on December 28, 1969 by unknown gunmen believed tobe government security men. A number of students were killed and manymore injured in an ensuing violence between government forces and the radical university students over who would claim the remains of the slain student activist.

Guarded by military trucks mounted with machine guns, the casket was escorted all the way from Addis Ababa to Maichew and lowered into the cemetery at Mariam Hizba. He was buried in the presence of his sister Princess Sara Gizaw (wife of the Emperor's late son Prince Mekonnen HaileSilassie), as well as the then Tigray governor, Prince (Leul) Ras MengeshaSeyoum. Following decades of political turmoil and with the coming to power of the EPRDF in May 1991, Maichew quietly honored the hero of the1960s nationwide student uprisings by naming the town's high school and a junior high school after his name.

Tilahun Gizaw along with his compatriot Berhane Mesqel Reda and Walelign Mekonnen Walelign, Martha Mebrahtu (an Ethiopian originally from the Eritrea province who was the daughter of Brigadier General Mebrahtu Fisseha, a former senior police officer, later governor-general (Enderassie) of former Gemgofa province). Tilahun is remembered by Ethiopians as an outstanding student leader who paid the ultimate sacrifice in pursuit of the ideals of good governance and progress for Ethiopia. The student movement he had led in the 60s still acts as inspiration for the new generation of Ethiopian students who continue tobattle repressive governments in Ethiopia.

HISTORICIZE

Farewell To The Distinguished Diplomat

Ato Ayalew Mandefro Ethiopian Review, February 1994

It was in the late fifties continuing into the sixties when "The Wind of Change" began to blow strongly across the continent of Africa. The sixties was a special decade because the torch of freedom and independence wascascading rapidly from one African country to the other, as the shackles ofcolonialism kept [to fall] and continues to do so until we all witness the burial of the last vestige of colonialism with the impending independence by the fact that one eminent Ethiopian will not be around to witness when Nelson Mandela will soon be extolled at the helm of Independent South Africa. This Ethiopian is none other than great Ethiopian and an avowed Pan-Africanist, who passed away last week in Addis Ababa.

Ironically, some thirty years ago, when the white South African security force apprehended Nelson Mandela, two articles were confiscated from hispocket; one, was the memento from Emperor Haile Selassie and the otherwas a small photo of Ketema Yifru which Mandela kept from his days in Ethiopia. Ketema's death may evoke many different memories to everyonewho remembers him, be it in Ethiopia or elsewhere? To those of us who closely followed the path of his career and worked with him, we remember him most for the brilliant achievements he garnered both for himself and for Ethiopia when serving his country as a Foreign Minister for more than a full decade. After all, that was enjoying great respect for their achievements and visionary thinking, both domestically and internationally. Those were the days when all Africans were in upbeat mode, many of them dazed with exuberant celebrations on the occasion oftheir newly acquired independence. Dignitaries of all shades from every African state were criss-crossing the continent, first time for most of them, to attend these celebrations. Ethiopia too was in the take of those happy period; dies one remember when Prince Sahle Selassie was sent to Accra representing Emperor Haile Selassie for the occasion ofGhana's independence celebration in 1957?

It was because of the very causes leading to these happy events that Ketema should all the more be remembered. It was he, more than any Ethiopian Foreign Minister in memory, who astutely, diligently, indefatigably and with a dedicated sense of politically nationalistic support,escorted most of the African freedom movement fighters, later turned leader, during their trying period of political struggles en-route to independence. Taking arduous trips, from Algeria to Southern Africa or from Guinea Bissau across to neighboring Kenya, it was Ketema's unending diplomatic initiatives in Africa, not to mention his other efforts outside Africa that helped Ethiopia achieve a most successful foreign policy during the eventful period of the sixties. His work schedules at headquarters too, attested to no lesser task of activities; typically, Monday might be meeting with Amilcar Cabral, a week later was Nyerere, Kaunda was on continuing on and on, as the retinue of distinguished Africans visiting Ketema's office kept on coming.

For Ketema, these series of meetings with his African counterparts wereterribly important as they served

foreign policy. It was the cumulative experience he gained from such meetings that helped him most in playing a leading role in the African political landscape of the sixties during which period Ethiopia was crownedto seat the headquarters of the Organization of African Unity. It was an enviable prize with which Ketema was closely identified with French backed Senegal. Needless to mention, Ketema's diplomatic performancesand participation in the Non-Aligned Movements and in the Group of Seventy Seven are not to be underestimated for his contributions to their respective deliberations be it in Belgrade, Bandung, Cairo, United Nations, Montevideo, etc. In point of fact, for a long time, Ketema Yifru was a household name that appeared daily with high regard and affection in the news media throughout Africa. At one time, even figures like J. Wachuku, the ebullient External Minister of the Nigerian Federation, had gone to the extent of refusing to greet any Ethiopian he met after hearingthe news that his friend Ketema Yifru had been detained by the Derg.
It was under such background that Ketema' professional talent and his individual character as a person came to the limelight of outside observers. To begin with, he was a great communicator with people both socially as well as in official capacity. Apparently,hisEthiopian schoolmatesrecognized this in early times at Wisconsin and Boston Universities where Ketema received his higher education. In the late fifties, serving for threeyears as Vice Minister in the politically charged post of the Ministry of Pen, Ketema distinguished himself with exceptional political acumen in Ethiopia's intricate domestic politics. He used to say how important his work in this ministry meant to him by way of grasping firsthand knowledge that he felt to have missed in his youth and about which, his uncle, Ato Teklu, used to narrate for him on the unique traditional systemof administration practiced in the Ethiopian Imperial Court. During fascist occupation of Ethiopia, uncle Teklu and Ketema both lived together in exile with other Ethiopian refugees first, in Menchasein, Somaliland, and later at Taveta, Kenya.

As a person, Ketema always behaved in a humble and disarmingly simple manner with a special knack of imparting a relaxing gesture even to officials who are noted to personify stiff protocol. I can understand that, attimes, his behavior may give away somewhat of an impatient if not flippant impression, to someone who encounters Ketema for the first time. This perception, however, is a superficial element and eludes a lot of his enduring qualities. His colleagues have watched Ketema chairing a large conference or a special political committee's work in a ten to twelve hours marathon session without budging one bit and in perfect control of the conduct of those meetings. Ketema has also been known as an avid reader of history. His friends could hardly cope supplying him with readingmaterials when he remained under detention by the Derg for eight years. Incidentally, in spite of being robbed eight years of his productive life and the separation from his family, Ketema came out of detention, more mellowed and with no vengeance to speak of. He just looked fresh and ready to resume serving his country. However, the prevailing circumstances obtaining Ethiopia did not offer him with such an opportunity. His wealth of knowledge and experience would have served well in the need of present day Ethiopia. Instead, Ketema opted to serve the African peoples by joining the World Food Program of the United Nations Agency first, at the Headquarters in Rome and later on in Nairobi,where he worked as an international civil servant until his retirement last October. Three months ago he returned to his home in Addis Ababa wherehe fell ill and passed away two weeks ago.

In bidding farewell to Ketema, all his friends and especially his former colleagues, bow to him with their highest respect and immense appreciations for his lasting contributions to the well being of Ethiopia andto his fellow compatriots.

We, friends of Ketema would also like to express deepest condolences tohis surviving wife Rahel, his sons, Mulugeta, Yohannes, Mikael and Mekonnen during their day of mourning. May God rest their father's soulin peace.

Ato Ayalew Mandefro is former Ethiopian Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiaryto the United States November 22, 1977 to June 4, 1978.

Haddis Alemayehu's Versatile Personality

Fitsum G. December 2012 via Wemezekir

Just a few weeks ago, the late Haddis Alemayehu's 95th birthday was observed, posthumously. Academics, scholars, lecturers, authors as well as literary critics were among the people who partook in the occasion thatalmost coincided with the first commemoration of his death. During the tribute, his works as teacher, diplomat, thinker and author were more or less discussed placed in an Ethiopian context evaluated from the point of view of the person's exceptionally long life and his precious contribution inthe spheres of Ethiopian politics, literature, culture and education, as a whole.

Certainly, Haddis Alemayehu is a household name to the educated. But hisname is also well known among those who even without having had the chance to go to school, had nevertheless got the occasion to listen to the radio narration of his famous masterpiece: ፍቅር እስከ መቃብር (Love Until the Grave). (This classic tragedy is currently being narrated nationwide on Radio Ethiopia). In fact, this narration is being broadcast for the third time, as it had been aired the first time, during the Derg Regime, when itwas recorded for the popular radio program called “ከ መጻ ህ ፍ ት ዓ ለ ም”, (The World of Books) by the renowned Artist Wegayehu Nigatu. (I remember the author’s admiration for Wegayehu, the narrator, for ‘giving life to thecharacters in the story’. Haddis paid tribute to the exceptional artistic skills of the narrator.) The novel was again on air when the author celebrated his 85th birthday, while the current must be a tribute to the author’s passing away. A deserved tribute.

Although ‘ፍ ቅ ር እ ስ ከ መ ቃ ብ ር ’ is the most celebrated of the books written by Dr. Haddis, he has written two other long novels after this, as part of a trilogycovering different generations of Ethiopian life. ‘የ ል ምዞ ች’, (Nightmare) and ‘ወ ን ጀ ለ ኛ ው ዳ ኛ ’, (The Criminal Judge) also reflect Ethiopian society, witnessing to the exceptional pen of the author, not only as a creator and narrator of stories with vivid and palatable language, but also intensity, lucidity and honesty that you rarely encounter in Amharic books. They testify to the author’s exceptional qualities as a keen observer of mores and costumes, with extraordinary skills of externalizing and interpreting them, placed in acertain Ethiopian time frame.

Besides these novels, Haddis has also written plays and essays based onEthiopian socio-political realities, mirroring Ethiopian life with pondered suggestions of how to effect changes. That is where Haddis poses as a real thinker. In these dissertations, the writer has tried to share with hiscompatriots his vision of a new and developed Ethiopia. These rotated around how to transform Ethiopian society, based on a valid and compatible educational policy and an updated system of government, (twospecific areas in which he was closely involved in his public service).
Haddis has also written a sort of autobiographical essay ት ዝ ታ (Remembrance) recollecting the ordeal he underwent while surviving inexile in Fascist Italy, describing the hardship his generation had to passthrough.

Be that as it may, in all Haddis’ works, his patriotic personality and experience emerge markedly. Haddis begins writing at an early age, whilestill at school, showing talent, imagination and skills. His creation has always been critical of the system in vigor, and dreams of changes.
Expressing his mind not only with sincerity, but also great courage, he seems not to bother about whom he could irritate, (most importantly the powerful advocates of the system, the beneficiaries of the system), and perhaps fall into trouble. Even if the then monarch did not feel involved inthe problems raised, (as he too considered himself as an agent of advancement, with a clear vision, trying to change the retrograde societythen in vogue), there were nevertheless others in the Imperial Court or adjacent who might have misunderstood the ideas of Haddis and worked to efface him, along with his ideas. In fact, many were surprised to see that the emperor himself acknowledged the excellence of his work, by awarding him with his maximum award for literature for ‘‘ፍቅር እስከ መቃብር’.Haddis was also awarded the ‘Golden Mercury’ for literature, beside a lifetime achievement Doctorate Degree from Addis Ababa University (along with Dr. Kebede Michael, the other celebrated Ethiopian literarygiant everybody recalls with fondness).

Many agree that ‘ፍቅር እስከ መቃብር is more than a novel. Seriously critical ofthe whole socio-political, legal and customary system of traditional Ethiopia, it meticulously goes through all the various social mores (family,marriage, mourning, duels, tenancy, celebrations, feasts, religion, superstitions...) in a clear perspective of change, then unimaginable.
Haddis highlights the sort of injustice that reigned in the land tenure system, the hierarchies that thrived with the philosophy and social background behind them. The book even dwells on tax imposition, the corvé etc by the various landlords and chieftains on the poor tenants, all part and parcel of a firmly established system that hailed from ancestors.

What is even more alarming was his criticism of the Ethiopian clergy, a taboo. He calls on such venerated establishment as the Church to exposethe negative facets at various junctures in the narration. And for such courage and lucidity, along with a truly fascinating suspense-filled lovestory, between a member of the nobility and one of the wretched, the novel received acclamation as the best ever in its genre.

Haddis Alemayehu and ‘ፍቅር እስከ መቃብር are hence, in many ways, inseparable and unforgettable. If anyone wants to talk about Haddis, onecannot exclude ‘ፍቅር እስከ መቃብር and vice-versa. But as Haddis has written seven other books as well, it is astonishing that the impact of this adored
