Named after Ethiopia's luxurious hotel, Sheraton is a block in which detainees are indulged with a movement as well as access to lawyers andrelatives. They can also watch television – mainly broadcast of the state TV programs – at daytime. Detainees who went through interrogations in*Siberia* and Tawla Bet and are waiting to be officially charged are the primary occupants of the Sheraton block.

The political element

Amha Mekonen, a prominent defense attorney who has represented someof the high profile defendants in recent years – including the much publicized case of Zone9 bloggers – is no stranger to the stories of Ma'ekelawi detailed in the HRW report. "Defendants who are detained at Ma'ekelawi often complain that they are subjected to inhuman treatments," he tells this magazine. "Some of the defendants even manage to convince courts that they indeed have been abused and assaulted."

One key problem Amha sees with Ma'ekelawi is that "the division initiates investigation without actually having any real ground to suspect that thereis a crime that warrants an investigation. Many say this happens when thecase is politically motivated. I am not sure whether that is true or not.
What I am sure is the fact that there are instances when the divisionbegins investigation without having sufficient evidence," he says.

But for the HRW's report the political element in Ma'ekelawi's conduct is not easy to miss. The facility is the first stop for the majority of the country's opposition politicians, journalists, protest organizers, and allegedsupporters of ethnic insurgencies once all are taken into police custody, the report says.

Article 6/1 of the Ethiopian Federal Police Commission Establishment Proclamation 720/2011 gives the Federal Police the duty to prevent and investigate any threat and acts of crime against the Constitution and the constitutional order, security of the government and the state and humanrights offenses. As a result the majority detainees in Ma'ekelawi are suspected of committing Federal offenses.

Furthermore, Ethiopia's introduction in 2009 of the infamous Anti- Terrorism Proclamation (ATP) has made Ma'ekelawi an important site for the detention and investigation of most of the politically sensitive cases, according to the HRW report. The provisions included in Ethiopia's ATP seriously undermine basic legal safeguards against prolonged pre-charge detentions. Thus, once accused of offenses under this law, the facilities at*Ma'ekelawi* automatically become home to the majority of detainees in preparation for their trials, according to the report.
As of late the facility is overcrowded, Amha says. "I heard that they are transferring some of the detainees to Addis Abeba Police Commission nearby," he says. "This shows that they are overwhelmed with cases. It might be criminal cases or something else. It might be something the government wants to suppress. It can be politically motivated," Amha opines, but Tsegaye Ararssa, a Melbourne-based legal scholar, is unambiguous in his assertion: "the fact that the larger proportion of detainees are political prisoners and prisoners of conscience indicates thatsomething is wrong with the way the politics is run in that country," he told this magazine in a written interview.

One of the factors that made living conditions inside Ma'ekelawi hellish hasalways been the disproportionately big numbers of people forced to stay ina single room. "We hear that around 12 sometimes up to 15 people are detained in a cell which is no wider than 4 meter square," says Amha. Recently, Bekele Gerba, first secretary general of the opposition Oromo Federalist Congress (OFC) – and who is going through life at *Ma'ekelawifor*the second time – made a passionate plea at a federal court that he and 21 other detainees were forced to stay at a "4×5 meter cell that included a toilet".

The Constitution*:* Ma’ekelawi’s first victim

The operations inside Ma’ekelawi are not only against basic human rightsbut are at odds with the Supreme Law of the land, the constitution, as well as other laws the country governs itself by, according to Amha. ForTsegaye the essential purpose of Ma’ekelawi is “regime security not human security” and as such it has become an institution that flouts the rights and security of citizens that are otherwise guaranteed in the country’s constitution.

Article 19 (2/5) of the Ethiopian Constitution, for example, asserts that people under police custody should not be forced to make confessions or make admissions which could be “used in evidence against them”. It nullifies any evidence obtained under coercion as inadmissible in the courtof law. And article 24 of Proclamation No. 720/2011 prohibits the police from committing, “any inhuman or degrading treatment or act.”

In addition, regulation on the Treatment of Federal Prisoners 138/2007 (art. 3/1) clearly states that “no discrimination on grounds of gender, language, religion, political opinion nation/nationality, social status or citizen,” while art. 3/2 of the same Regulation guarantees “respect to [thedetainees’] human dignity unless restricted by the penalties imposed on them.”

Nonetheless detainees at Ma’ekelawi are not only refused access to lawyers and relatives, but are subjected to tortures. “[Similar] tortures we have been hearing in the Derg period such as hanging a bottle of water onmale genitals, electric shock, beating, being forced to stand for a long time, and other forms of prolonged interrogations," are committed againstdetainees, says Amha, adding that defendants also experience self- incrimination and coercion to testify against co-defendants. "What is more astonishing is the level of details and [organized narratives] we find on those confessions. It is as if they were [composed] by someone with a literary background. No one in his right mind incriminates himself in that manner," Amha says.

Tsegaye reinforces Amha's point. "In Ethiopian detention centers fact is not found, or discovered, as such; they are made. They are created in thecourse of the 'investigation'".

Many detainees are brought from remote areas all over the country. For them the pain is twice as much. "They are separated from their social background and support system. There might even be a language barrier. I am not sure if Ma'ekelawi is equipped with proper translation mechanismduring interrogations," says Amha. "And what is worse is after having gone through painful and life-altering months or even years at *Ma'ekelawi,*they might be acquitted and walk free," he adds.

According to Tsegaye, "the fact that detainees come from afar disconnectsthem from their family and their support system thereof. But more importantly such distance from one's place of residence becomes a barrierto access to justice. Physical distance, cultural distance, and linguistic distance are the three major barriers to access to justice," Tsegaye said, adding that when a detainee is far removed from his/her own place of residence it "makes it more difficult to gather evidence even for the investigator." But because the main focus is on "infliction of pain on the 'suspect' rather than finding facts, often this fact is neglected."

To ease this problem, if not to solve it, Amha suggests that other criminal investigation facilities should be established in regional states. Further explaining on this, Tsegaye says that in principle regional states can – andperhaps should – have their own system of criminal investigation. But their power would be confined to the crimes over which they have jurisdiction. (The States have legislative competence over criminal mattersthat are not covered by the federal criminal code.)

As per Proclamation No. 25/1996 (and its amendments since), the State Supreme Courts have jurisdiction over cases that were meant to appear inthe Federal High Court, according to Tsegaye. "State High Courts would adjudge cases that are normally under the jurisdiction of the Federal First Instance Court. This practice suggests that, to this extent, the Ethiopian federal system is merely an executive/administrative federal system. (That is to say, it is a federal system where the federal government has a legislative power whereas the States have an executive/administrative power. The State institutions enforce or execute federal laws), Tsegayeexplains.

Back to a lingering past

On February 26, 1977 44 prisoners were picked from Ma'ekelawi and weretaken to the outskirts of the city where they were executed and buried in a mass grave, Babile Tola, a survivor of Ma'ekelawi, recounts in his book, "To Kill a Generation: the Red Terror in Ethiopia." The youngest of the 44 was only 17 while many of them were aged between 17 and 26. The storyof the secret mass execution was brought to light thanks to two prisoners who managed to jump and escape out of the police van on their way to their execution. One of them was the young Hilawi Yosef, who subsequently joined the armed struggle against the Derg regime.

After putting the stories during the armed struggle behind him Hilawi Yosef served in several senior positions in the incumbent's government. Asked by this magazine to relate his story of the Ma'ekelawi Hilawi, who iscurrently serving as Ethiopia's Ambassador to Israel, declined to return our email, but his story was narrated in Babile Tola's historical book, as well as Girmaye Abraha's "Yemiyanebu Egroch" (Amharic for "The feet that weep"), an apparent reference to the tortures that leave detainees' feet bleeding.

In addition to Ambassador Hilawi Yosef, several other officials in the current government have been, at one point or another, detained at Ma'ekelawi during the Derg regime. It is a fact that leaves Ma'ekelawi's current victims mystified and in endless search for answers on the logic ofkeeping and running an institution that many died fighting against.

So why is Ma'ekelawi still running?

For Tsegaye, the core reason for its existence as the prime source of stateterror is the fundamental insecurity of the Ethiopian state. "There lacks tobe a political will to demolish this prime example of the apparatus of staterepression," he says. The US state department report revealed that majority of mistreatments happen in "Ma'ekelawi and police stations rather than federal prisons."

Amha carefully points at the existence of other facilities as a viable alternative to (at least) replace the deteriorating physical infrastructure of*Ma'ekelawi,* but agrees with Tsegaye that lack of political will is what is holding the change back. "You can find the evidence to that within a walking distance. The newly built Addis Abeba Police Commission has a much better criminal investigation block and facility. If there was a political will, the same improvements could have been done to Ma'ekelawi."

However, Amha says he doesn't have any problem with the existence of aFederal Criminal Investigation facility. "My problem is with how it is beingoperated. [Also] for symbolic reasons, I would prefer it if it is somewhere else because of the horrible memories associated with that place."

Tsegaye argues that the structure and even the name of Ma'ekelawi should have been altered to "reflect the changed politico-administrative structure of the country. Taking account of the federal set up, the name could have changed into 'Federal Bureau of Criminal Investigation'. That ithasn't changed even in name already betrays the virtually non-federal political culture and the political practice of the country to date."

Tsegaye is of the view that if there was a serious thinking into it, such a change – the change from a unitary system to a federal one – would haveoffered an "opportunity to move away from the dastardly, imperial, and barbaric practices that [Ma'ekelawi] represents and is a symbol of."

One obstacle that hindered this change, according to Tsegaye, is the factthat Ma'ekelawi has never been put to the light of political and legal accountability. "It has never been publicly criticized (for its misdeeds) in representative political institutions (such as Parliamentary Oversight Committees); its power, finance, and personnel have never been put to atransparent audit system; the legal foundation of that institution, its competence (such as the matters it has jurisdiction over), its jurisdiction,and its responsibility framework has never been publicly accounted for."

Aside from the visible lack of political will (see our editorial here), lack of skill in crime investigation is yet another factor that contributes to the brutal handling of detainees under police custody, Tsegaye adds. "Criminalinvestigation is a science, a profession in its own right. Detection requires a distinct set of skills that have to be put to use in the investigation of a particular crime." From his stint as a lecturer at the Police College, Tsegaye remembers "being told that no one was trained in criminal investigation."

Tsegaye is under no illusion that judging from its ultimate purpose as a tool of repression, its ideal location in the heart of Piassa (comforted by ageneral silence), and the total information blackout on the purpose and everyday conduct of the injustice inside its fortress, the current government is, unfortunately, poised to continue running Ma'ekelawi, despite it being a "monument of state barbarity" and a "primary institution that serves as the true face of the repressive regimes – past and present.

How suffragette Sylvia Pankhurst became an 'honorary Ethiopian'

BBC By James Jeffrey June, 2016 Addis Ababa, Ethiopia

She is pictured wearing a long and elaborate Edwardian dress with sleevesto her wrists, beneath a heading: "Votes for Women."

She was one of the women whose campaigns, which included going on hunger-strike, led to British women being allowed to vote in the early 20thCentury.

In the nearby sitting room, a tapestry hanging on a wall testifies to a lesswell known side of his mother.

It depicts Ms Pankhurst in June 1935 walking down a gravel path througha garden in the English city of Bath, accompanied by Ethiopian Emperor Haile Selassie.

The image comes from a photo taken during his exile in England after Ethiopia was subsumed into the short-lived African empire of fascist Italy,Africa Orientale Italiana.

In previous years, Ms Pankhurst had gone to study art in Venice, whereshe witnessed the brutality of the fascist regime. Afterwards in the later1920s and 30s she had become a vocal pacifist, anti-fascist and anti-colonialist activist.

So when Italy began building up its military presence in East Africa sheproved to be one of Ethiopia's most vocal supporters, writing to newspapers in defence of its sovereignty.

Surrounded by exiles

The eventual invasion in 1935 and failure of the League of Nations tointercede only spurred her on, as witnessed by her then teenage son.

"I grew up in London surrounded by Ethiopian exiles visiting my mother,who was always busy organising meetings and fundraising for the Ethiopian cause," says Richard Pankhurst, now 88.

When Ms Pankhurst felt media and readers were losing interest in Ethiopia's plight, she took matters into her own hands and founded anewspaper.

The New Times and Ethiopia News was based in Woodford, London, wherethe family lived and where, following the war and the African country's liberation, many Ethiopian students found their way to the Pankhurst family home, becoming Richard's friends.

Who was Sylvia Pankhurst?

- 1903: Co-founded Women's Social and Political Union (WSPU), alongwith her mother and sister
- Repeatedly imprisoned for her campaigns
- 1913: Left WSPU to join Labour Party
- 1918: Invited to Moscow by Lenin
- 1935: Started to campaign against Italian invasion of Ethiopia
- 1956: Moved to Ethiopia
- 1960: Died, buried in Addis AbabaFind out more

Mr Pankhurst first visited Ethiopia with his mother in 1950, taking a flightfirst to Frankfurt and then to Athens where they changed to the newly created Ethiopian Airlines.

"It was my first introduction to the Third World and poverty," Richardsays, though he saw another, more decorous side of Ethiopia.

"Many of the Ethiopians we befriended in London were now ingovernment."

In 1956, Ms Pankhurst decided to move to Ethiopia permanently, a decision driven by her passionate desire to defend the country, says herson. Having finished his studies, he went with her.

Ms Pankhurst had strongly objected to the post-war British administrationof Ethiopia's south-eastern Ogaden region, and Richard remembers his mother saying she wouldn't give up until the British left.

They had departed by the mid-1950s but Ms Pankhurst stayed on, determined to ensure Ethiopia was better represented to a world she feltmisunderstood it.

She turned the New Times and Ethiopia News into a popular monthly, theEthiopia Observer, based in the capital, Addis Ababa.

"Sylvia devoted each issue to a particular subject that showed how Ethiopia was developing and wasn't the barbarous country some thought,"says Rita, Richard's wife, who moved there to be with him.

Sleep strikes

Despite her advancing age - Ms Pankhurst moved to Ethiopia aged 74 -she travelled around the country, visiting schools, hospitals and development projects reporting for the Observer.

When it was suggested one such trip involving hours in a Land Rover overbad roads might prove too strenuous for her, Rita recalls how Ms

Pankhurst replied: "Do you think I have come to the end of my activelife?"

Despite her tenacity, Ms Pankhurst died of a heart attack in Addis Ababaat the age of 78, her health likely impaired, Rita suggests, by the numerous hunger and sleep strikes she had staged during previous campaigns.

"She told me that sleep strikes were most effective for making you so illyou had to be released from prison," Rita says.

Ms Pankhurst received a state funeral in Ethiopia, at which Haile Selassienamed her an "honorary Ethiopian".

She was buried in front of Addis Ababa's Trinity Cathedral - the only non-Ethiopian among the graves of famous Ethiopian patriots of the Italian war.

After his mother died, Mr Pankhurst continued what she had started,revealing to the world an unknown Ethiopia.

"I am most proud of the books and articles I have written about Ethiopia,"he says, having authored or co-authored 20 books on the country.

"When I came here there was no economic history of the country."

He is also proud of leading the campaign for the return of a giant obelisk taken to Rome from the northern Ethiopian city of Axum. The obelisk wasre-erected in Axum in 2008.

Stolen manuscripts

But Mr Pankhurst has not succeeded in restoring to Ethiopia 349 of itsmost valuable manuscripts, which lie in the British Library in London.

"It is not widely known what happened," he says.

In 1868, a British force of 32,000 led by Gen Robert Napier went to rescuea small group of Britons imprisoned by Ethiopian Emperor Tewodros II.

After Tewodros' defeat, a two-day auction of the spoils of war among thetroops resulted in more than 1,000 manuscripts heading to Britain.
Elephants carried them to the African coast.

"The soldiers were able to pick the best of the best that Ethiopia had tooffer," says Mr Pankhurst.

The manuscripts are indeed wonderful, as I witnessed inside a viewingroom at the library.

"They are so lavish as they were made for kings," says Ilana Tahan, leadcurator of Hebrew and Christian Orient studies at the library.

For the manuscripts to be returned to Ethiopia, the UK parliament wouldhave to enact new legislation, library staff say.

The Pankhursts bear no animosity to the library - during trips to London,Mr Pankhurst researched his books from desk F6 there - but he still feelsstrongly about where the manuscripts should be. His eyes light up whenever they are mentioned.

Much like his mother, Richard cannot tolerate any perceived injusticetoward Ethiopia, says his wife.

EDITORIAL

A new Ethiopia must have no business keeping old, repressiveinstitutions! ADDIS STANDARD June 28, 2016

As you walk by the area, nothing looks out of ordinary. It is a bustling partof Piassa overcrowded with – as many parts of Piassa are – bars, shops, hotels and restaurants. Pedestrians go back and forth past it oblivious of its presence (or perhaps terrified of it.)

The Ethiopian Federal Police Force Central Bureau of Criminal Investigation, known in Amharic by its bone chilling name, Ma'ekelawi, is a time defying institution which has been around for more than half a century, and has been used (and abused) for the same purpose: to detain, without due legal process, people alleged to have committed gravecrimes against the state, the people and the constitution.

But describing Ma'ekelawi simply as "a place of detention" is a gross parody of its fundamental purpose for existence. It isn't just a place of detention; it is, by any definition, a state-run "Torture Chamber" built by an extinct repressive government but preserved and run by a governmentwhich proclaims itself 'democratic'.

Why is it still around?

This is a question that directly points at the essential explanation for the very existence of Ma'ekelawi as a tool of repression: lack of political will by the incumbent to render the brutal practices inside Ma'ekelawi irrelevant as per the values, principles, and rules of the current constitution and that of international covenants Ethiopia is a signatory to.

Owing to that Ma'ekelawi remains to be the only constant throughout the eras of monarchy, socialist totalitarianism, and federalist devolution, which indicates that the nature of the Ethiopian State is, at its core, unchanged; that it is the same; that it is a state which drives its authority(and therefore legitimacy) from force.

This is not a conclusion this magazine is asserting based on allegations. Dissect the often too conspicuous correlation between political dissent andthe people overpopulating Ma'ekelawi suspected of (and charged with) crimes against the state, the people and the constitution. It will give you an idea or two on why successive states chose to keep that institution intact even as it continued depriving, in most instances, due legal processto the people under its custody.

It is no hush-hush that the overwhelming prisoners in Ma'ekelawi arepolitical prisoners brought from all over the country. That leads to thequestion of why is that so.

The existence of too many political prisoners in a given country points a finger at the function of a dysfunctional political system. And politics becomes dysfunctional when it is not governed by the rules prescribed forit in a given constitution. In other words when the politics is extra- constitutional (not to say unconstitutional) the only way a state presiding over such politics deals with dissent is force. In present day Ethiopia Ma'ekelawi has that force, perhaps in abundance.

Part of the reasons for that is because Ma'ekelawi is a legal black hole thatwas never made subject to public scrutiny; it remains beyond and above any form of accountability. The fact that the state kept it running until today with no reform to its function is symptomatic of the ailments of Ethiopia's politics. But above all, it's a symbol of a regime that acts contrary to the values, principles, and rules of the constitution it championed.

Beyond political will

Beyond the state's explicit political will to keep Ma'ekelawi running (or lackof the political will to dismantle it) however, a host of other factors contribute to the inhuman functions inside the center.

First, most of the officials in charge of Ma'ekelawi lack an understanding of the basic constitutionalism that the state they devotedly serve has put in place more than two decades ago. Detainees' basic rights such as access to lawyers, family visits, and their rights not to be tortured, amongothers, are all protected by the constitution. But at Ma'ekelawi they are violated on everyday basis.

Second, there is a chronic lack of skilled personnel in criminal investigation. Investigation officers inside this fortress are not only unqualified in criminal investigation skills but, perhaps because of that, hold the constitution itself with contempt, making detainees vulnerable totheir ignorance. From accounts of survivors, past and present, the story isthat a detainee who dares asking his/her constitutional rights is the one who is often subjected to torture. And evidences are not produced based on skilled criminal investigation techniques, but by confessions under duress.

Third, there is a visible logistical problem. Ma'ekelawi lacks equipment such as forensic materials, machines with which to identify forgery, professional cameras, translation equipment (to help detainees who comefrom several parts of the countryside and who don't speak Amharic to communicate with their investigators), and proper room set-ups where non-abusive investigations could take place.

The result is that, in the absence of constitutional discipline among the bureaucrats who run the institution, or of skills and technical equipment,brute force reigns supreme. And this force makes Ma'ekelawi what it is.

Dismantling Ma'ekelawi is long overdue

Apart from the symbolic demonstration of repression and of contempt toconstitutionalism, there are two compelling reasons why this magazine would like to see the functions inside Ma'ekelawi dismantled.

First, more often than not, the institution's conduct (that it holds detainees brought all over the country without – in most cases – the knowledge of their respective regional states) runs against the fundamental federal system the country has put in place 25 years agotoday. (Please see story here.)

This leads to questions on the division of police powers between the Federal police and the State police. Questions such as which police arrests, and investigates the case of which offender? When is the State Police expected to hand over a detainee/suspect to the Federal Police? When is a State investigating police officer handing over a suspect to afederal investigating officer? And what is the modality of transferring a detainee from state detention facility to a federal detention facility?

These questions in tern require the rethinking of the rights of regionalstates to have their own power over some crimes which they should investigate on their own initiatives, in their own criminal investigation bureaux, under their own State constitutions. This approach in itself initiates the de-codification of the federal criminal code and a (re-)codification of its State equivalents at the State level, and a corresponding division of investigative powers accordingly. But that will bring in relief to those detainees who should not suffer to prove their innocence to an investigator who doesn't speak their language and is unable to gather proper evidence against them due to distance. It will alsostop the federal police's intrusion against state sovereignties, its practice of snatching individuals without even the knowledge of the later, and detaining them inside Ma'ekelawi isolated from the outside world, a common practice in today's Ethiopia.

Second, due to its history of the past Ma'ekelawi should be a place to remember the past and not to live the present. Countries that have, through costly struggles, overcome a repressive system and have instilled a democratic one in place (just like what today's Ethiopia claims to have done 25 years ago) often start their transformation by dismantling the functions of repressive institutions and turning them into – among others − museums and monuments where the past can only be remembered andnot lived. That's what Kenya did with Nyayo Torture Chambers; South Africa with Robin Island; Senegal with Gore Island; and Poland with Auschwitz, among the few examples.

That is what Ethiopia should do with Ma'ekelawi too, because a newEthiopia must have no business keeping old, repressive institutions.

Ethiopia: it is time to stop the reign of terror of the Liyu Police
By Ali Mohamed (The hill) June 28, 2016

A U.S. financed para-military force known as the Liyu police are terrorizingthe civilian population in the eastern Ethiopian Somali region without impunity. Three weeks ago, out of the gaze of the international media, theLiyu (Amharic for "First") police slaughtered more than 40 villagers including women and children in Jama Dubad, a remote hamlet in the eastern Ethiopian Somali region, according to Somali news websites. The Liyu police were retaliating, after a group of armed men attacked customspolice for confiscating a vehicle transporting Khat(a leafy plant, which actsas stimulant when chewed), belonging to a local dealer, for failing to pay taxes.

Since 2008, the Liyu police had committed similar massacres in the villages near Ethiopia's porous border with Somalia and the unrecognizedRepublic of Somaliland: For instance, in June 2015,the Liyu police attacked local ethnic Somali livestock herders, on Ethiopia's borderwith central Somalia, which left 50 people dead. Video footage showing the aftermath of the gruesome killings shot on a cell phone went viral onSomali news websites: In the video, groups of the thuggish Liyu police with camouflage uniforms were desecrating dozens of dead bodies, including young children, who were shot in the head. Their atrocities constitute crimes against humanity and war crimes.

The Liyu police have no formal training or discipline, yet it has the full support of the Tigrean people's liberation front (TPLF) government in Addis Ababa. The TPLF initially set up the Liyu police as a counter insurgency force against the Ogaden national Liberation Front (ONLF), a group fighting for self determination for the Somali region. The un-electedgovernor of the Somali region, Abdi Omar also known as "Iley", commands and controls the Liyu police. Most of the units of the Liyu policeare recruited from his own clan.

Since the Liyu police was instituted, Mr. Iley has been using that force tobully and intimidate the civilian Somali population in the region. The Liyupolice's "scorched-earth" tactics include: "Mass killing, kidnappings, rape,looting livestock, destroying wells, and razing villages to the ground," according to the Human Rights Watch.

The victims of the Jama Dubad terror have kinship with the 4 million Somaliland people, especially those in the town of Burao.The relatives ofthe victims and people throughout Somaliland felt sorrow and grieve because of the horrific crimes and deaths caused by the Liyu police.

Unfortunately, the massive human rights abuses are not only unique in the Somali region. For example, this past November, the Ethiopia securityforces mowed down more than 400 people, after the Oromo ethnic group protested over the government's plan to expand the zoning of the Addis Ababa, Ethiopia's capital. "Ethiopian security forces have fired on and killed hundreds of students, farmers, and other peaceful protesters with blatant disregard for human life," said Leslie Lefkow, Human Rights Watch Deputy Africa Director.

The leaders of the United States, Britain and EU, who provide billions of aid to Ethiopia, should publicly condemn the Ethiopian government's security forces when they are abusing their own people and culture of impunity that prevails there. The west should use all means necessary including aid cuts, travel restriction, and asset freezes to punish countriesthat perpetrate crimes against humanity not only in Ethiopia but throughout Africa.

The west and the United Nations should hold accountable, the belligerent,thuggish commander of the Liyu police, Mr. Iley, the Al Capone of Jigjiga,the regions capital, and his enablers in the Ethiopian army, who are behind these heinous acts.

More importantly, The United State should also argue the Ethiopiangovernment to invite a UN rapporteur and human rights experts to investigate the atrocities in Jama Dubad village and the Oromo region,and to let the media cover the Ethiopian Somali region.

Keeping a blind eye on the human rights violations in Ethiopia would only foment combustible tribal or clan driven violence and extremism spreadinginto the despotic country and the region. The very disaster the United States is expending vast resources trying to eliminate in Somalia.

Enough is enough. I strongly believe it is time to stop the reign of terror ofthe Liyu police. This paramilitary force is not going to change its behavior or reform itself because they are not a professional police force operating under the rule of law. They are neither protecting nor serving the people in the region. They are not accountable for their own actions.

In fact, it is time to disband the Liyu police and replace it with an inclusiveforce from all Somali clans in the region trained by the United Nations or EU. What the beleaguered civilian populations in the region desperately need is a professional police force that would respect human rights, protect the people, and keep the peace.

ETHIOPIA/ERITREA

Which Country Instigated The Current Ethio-Eritrean Skirmish?

Would The Current Skirmish Lead To A Blown-Out War?

Letter to the Editor June 28, 2016

Reasons for the recent Ethiopian-Eritrean border skirmishes and why theSkirmish is unlikely to lead to a blown-out war

Several Ethiopia government pronouncements and other circumstantial evidences indicate that Ethiopia is the instigator of the current military skirmishes (see, for example, this statement posted on the pro-government Tigraionline and this posted on aigaforem .) For one, Ethiopiawants to send to both the government of Asmara and the U.N. and other concerned world powers that it is ready (and falsely so) for an all-out warwith Eritrea.

The Ethiopian authorities want to do this so that their narratives against the government of Eritrea could stick: Violator of human rights, supporterand enabler of “terrorism” and instigator of regional instability, for which the TPLF/EPRDF itself is culpable to all these charges as well. In reality, these current skirmishes should be seen as a sign of weaknesses: Internalstrife such as the one going on in the Oromia (which in effect has becomea Marshall law type military occupation of regional state) and Amhara regions, deflecting criticisms labeled against it regarding its human right violations (please see this U.S. State Department and this HRW appallingreports, for example,) in addition to the suffocating corruption that has paralyzed the country and weakening economy. The complete closure of the political space has also forced citizens to take up arms for which the minority regime in Addis Ababa seems to be fearful about this as well.

The regime in Ethiopia wants to deflect attention to these internal pressures. The TPLF/EPRDF wants to flex its weak muscles, indicating that it is not weak and could wage war while managing internals strives. So, the only predictable causes of the current skirmishes are internal (largely) political turmoil, weakening economy and a multitude of societalproblems-which are all characteristics and results of dictators. The weaknesses and their dictatorial nature of both regimes would indicate that both could be the culprits of the interstate conflict, for provoking interstate conflicts is the DNA of tyrants.

Again, the war of words and several other internal conditions coming out of Addis Ababa indicate that the skirmish indeed was instigated by the Ethiopian regime. In addition to the skirmishes and potential war being senseless, as the silly and laughable arguments between the Ethiopian and Eritrean ambassadors clearly indicate), both the internal and externalsituations both countries indicate that they do not have the appetite (nor the resources) for both to start a full-fledged war against each other. It isunfortunate that people on both sides of the isle have to die for senselesspolitical posturing. Prof. Seid Hassan, Murray State University

The renowned Debebe Eshetu Returns to National Theatre as Socrates in new play By Arefayné Fantahun June 29, 2016

Debebe Eshetu, the 72 year-old legendary actor, will play the Greek philosopher Socrates in a translation of Barefoot in Athens at the EthiopianNational Theatre set to open October 2016. The Award-winning Debebe is slated to act in this tale, the last days of Socrates, translated by playwright Aschalew Demeke, produced by the National Theatre and directed by Rahel Teshome.

Debebe told the audience assembled last Monday to watch Red Leaves, anIsraeli film in which he has principal acting role, his career is not over yet.The event organized by the Israel Embassy and the National Theatre brought the acclaimed film to local audiences.

Red Leaves which was shot in Israel follows the life of an Ethiopian immigrant—74-year-old Meseganio Tadela—who sells his apartment afterhis wife dies, vowing to live the rest of his life with his children whether they like it or not. Having held on stubbornly to his culture, in the 28 years since leaving home, Meseganio’s journey to reconnect with his family becomes a fierce quest to pass on fading cultural values to his sons, and an immigrant community. The veteran actor won best leading actor of Golden Leopard Award at the Canada International Film and Television Festival for the role.

In addition to his cinematic roles in internationally recognized films such as The Shaft in Africa, The Great Rebellion, The Sailor from Gibraltar, The Grave Digger, Zelda, Gouma, A Season in Hell, Debebe has acted in dozenplays in the National Theatre, Hager Fikir Theatre, and Ras Theatre, givinghim wider recognition and acclaim in the history of Ethiopian theatre. He also contributed tremendously as teacher and trainer when he led the theatre training department of the National Theatre. In 2005 he was one of the opposition activists who rallied against the current government, wassubsequently detained on charges of ties to terrorism.

DW June 29, 2016

Ethiopia is to be a non-permanent member of the UN Security Council fortwo years. The country may spread peace while on blue helmet missions abroad, but critics complain that political space at home is contracting.

The vote at the UN General Assembly electing Ethiopia as a non- permanent member of the UN Security Council turned out to be largely aformality because Ethiopia ran unopposed in its regional grouping. Africaheads of state and government had agreed on Ethiopia as a joint candidate at their summit in January, when Kenya and the Seychelleswithdrew from the contest.

Ethiopia may have run unopposed but it still had to pick up two thirds of the votes cast in the 193-nation assembly. It was backed by numerous African states, including Rwanda whose candidacy Ehtiopia backed in 2013/2014, and by Brazil. Brazilian Foreign Minister Mauro Viera said Ethiopia "with its extensive experience in regional, African and global peacekeeping missions" could make "an immense contribution" to the UNSecurity Council.

Regional gendarme
Ethiopia's participation and experience in peacekeeping in Africa was a trump card in its bid for a non-permanent seat on the Security Council. Itscontingent of 8,000 troops - men and women - on peacekeeping duties is the largest in the world. (The official promotional literature says Ethiopia has the biggest number of female peacekeepers worldwide.)

As a founding member and host country of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), the precursor of the African Union (AU), Ethiopia is a major pillar in the continent's peace and security architecture. Africa's second most populous state also chairs the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD), mediating in conflicts on the Horn of Africa, most recently during the strenuous negotiations between the warring parties inSouth Sudan.

Ethiopia and Liberia signed the UN Charter as founding members in 1945.Ethiopia has represented Africa at the Security Council twice in the past, the last time in 1989/90. It contributed troops to the UN in Korea in the 1950s and 60s (where 121 Ethiopian soldiers lost their lives in three years) and in the Congo. Ethiopia pursed its candidacy for 2017/18 with some vigor, it would have been disappointed if it had ended in failure.

Crackdown on dissent

Critics of Ethiopia says its participation in blue helmet missions in Liberia, Burundi, Somalia, Sudan, South Sudan and other conflict zones is considerably more successful than its efforts to create democracy and stability at home. The country, with a population of some 90 million, is runby an authoritarian regime. Journalists, human rights campaigners and opposition activists complain that the political space is contracting and that anti-terror legislation is being used to crack down on dissent.

The Ethiopian foreign ministry says it wishes to use its non-permanent seat on the Security Council to "promote peace and security through dialogue and peaceful conflict resolution." This prompts the question whyEthiopia has been so belligerent in its recent border clashes and verbal exchanges with its neighbor Eritrea.

In the promotional literature for its candidacy, Ethiopia said it "wanted toexpand the role of regional security deals." So why then does Ethiopia ignore the ruling of the Boundary Commission defining its border with Eritrea?

Chatting with DW on Facebook on Tuesday, a number of Ethiopians spoke of the changes they hoped the Security Council seat would bring. "Perhapsthere will be change within the country," said Kibrom Tadesse. Nesta Worku is more pessismistic. "Which African country protects human rightsor democracy? The UN Security Council can't do anything about the African heads of state - they repress human rights."

In his historic speech to the UN General Assembly in 1963, Ethiopian Emperor Haile Selassie said that "the Charter of the United Nations expresses the noblest aspirations of man" only to add that "these, too, areonly words; their value depends wholly on our will to observe and honor them and give them content and meaning."

More than 50 years later, Ethiopia is no longer an empire but one of Africa's "lion states." As such, it will be expected to demonstrate that "African solutions for African problems" really is a promise that can be kept, especially in the field of peace and security policy. There is one particular project which Ethiopia is expected to nudge forward - the African Peace and Security Architecture - the main plank of which is a rapid reaction force based in Addis Ababa.

Ethiopia Ascends to UN Security Council Despite Dismal RightsRecord Credible Investigation Needed Into Deaths of Protesters

By Felix Horne, HRW June 30, 2016

Ethiopia has a horrendous human rights record – but that didn’t stop its election this week to the United Nations Security Council as a non- permanent member. It’s worth noting too that Ethiopia – implicated in thedeaths of hundreds of peaceful protesters in recent months – is also a member of the UN Human Rights Council.

Ethiopia, among Africa’s leading jailors of journalists, has decimated independent civil society and misused its counterterrorism law to stifle peaceful dissent. Arbitrary arrests and torture continue to be major concerns. The ruling coalition won 100 percent of parliamentary seats at federal and regional levels in the 2015 elections, after years of restrictionson opposition parties and supporters.

Two weeks ago, Human Rights Watch published a report into the government’s handling of the largely peaceful Oromo protests, where security forces killed an estimated 400 people, many of them students. Thousands have been arrested. The use of excessive force to stifle peaceful protest has occurred frequently, but Ethiopians have few outlets to criticize the government that won’t get them arrested. This has createda volatile internal security situation. The investigation by Ethiopia’s national Human Rights Commission fell short of international standards and concluded that security forces used “proportionate force” against protesters. A credible, independent investigation with international support is needed into these killings.

Despite the dire human rights situation, Ethiopia is a now a member of both the Security Council and the Human Rights Council. Its track record on the rights council has been poor: it has consistently blocked cooperation with UN special mechanisms, not permitted access to a singlespecial rapporteur since 2007 – other than the special rapporteur on Eritrea, unsurprising given the ongoing “cold war” between the two countries. UN special rapporteurs on torture, freedom of opinion and expression, peaceful assembly, the right of food, and the independent expert on human rights and international solidarity all have outstanding requests for visits.

Ethiopia should stop hiding its own human rights record from internationalscrutiny, and as a member of both the Human Rights Council and the Security Council, cooperate fully with UN special mechanisms, in particularthe rapporteurs on peaceful assembly and torture to further investigate the human rights situation. Moreover, Ethiopia’s international partners should be supporting a credible, independent investigation into abuses during the Oromo protests.

HISTORICIZE

Emperor Haile Selassie’s hisoric meeting with US PresidentTeodore Roosevelt on the Suez canal.

Emperor Haile Selassie meets President Roosevelt in Suez canal.

A stamp was printed in Ethiopia titled 'A ROOSEVELT HOMMAGE RECONNAISANT'historian Solomon Kibriye explained well about the event.

Relations with the British were fraught almost from the moment the Liberation War began when the Emperor crossed Um Idlla into Gojjam from Sudan. The Emperor reached Debre Markos and learned that GeneralCunningham had raced to seize Addis Ababa as soon as the Duke of Aostahad withdrawn from the capital. Colonel Cunningham had raised the British flag over the Grand palace and tried to enforce racial separation in public places (the Fascists had such laws but had not enforced them).

When the Emperor announced his intention to return to his capital Cunningham (backed by colonial officials in the Sudan and Kenya) did allhe could to prevent it. He argued that if the Emperor was allowed to return, the "natives" would rise up and butcher the whites in retaliation. Thankfully Churchill, and even more Sir Anthony Eden insisted on Britainhonoring her promise and the Emperor returned and raised the Ethiopianflag over the Menelik Grand Palace as Cunningham looked on. Col.

Cunningham had tried to assert his authority by receiving the Emperor atthe palace as if he was the host receiving a guest, but the Emperor awarded him a medal, pinning it on his chest on the spot, clearly showingeveryone there who was the superior.

The British designated Ethiopia as "Occupied Enemy Territory" rather thanan allied country (thus still recognizing Italy's annexation) and used this as justification for continued military occupation. They tried to prevent theEmperor from appointing his own ministers, and when that failed imposedBritish directors in every ministry. They took most Italian military equipment for their own war effort and gave Ethiopia little of it. British judges sat alongside Ethiopian judges in trial courts, and the East African Shilling was imposed as national currency. They dismantled Italian built infrastructure in Ethiopia and Eritrea and took it to the Sudan. They had hoped to make Ethiopia their new protectorate.

Opposite to what Col. Cunningham had said about Ethiopians massacring Italians, it was the British who rounded them up and carried them off in large numbers to prisoner of war camps in Kenya and Tanganyika. The Emperor recognized that he needed the Italians for their technical know hows, and knew also that many did not want to leave Ethiopia. He therefore quietly encouraged Ethiopians who hide their Italian neighbors intheir homes from the British. While his government was grateful for the assistance in Liberating Ethiopia, the Emperor was aware of their designs and worked hard to dislodge them. His pact with Roosevelt was key in achieving that.

New Analysis

The Myth of a stable Ethiopia under a Minority Regime

By Neamin Zeleke June 30, 2016

"The morale is to the material as three to one" - Napoleon Bonaparte

"The Way means inducing the people to have the same aim as the leadership, sothat they will share death and share life, without fear of danger." - Sun Tzu

The Myth of a Strong Ethiopian Armed Force

A myth underlying Western relations with Ethiopia regards that country's military as a reliable and stable partner in the Horn of Africa and has dominated U.S. and European policy for more than two decades. This narrative has of late been increasing in influence and impact as foreign allies have grown increasingly dependent on Ethiopia to help defeat the extremist Al Shabaab insurgency in Somalia. Ethiopian support for other African peacekeeping missions is needed from time to time as well. Yet, to quote a Feb. 2016 Stratfor analysis, "…so far, the Islamist militants are clearly succeeding. Not only are they hitting AMISOM [African Union Mission in Somalia] at will, they are also specifically targeting aid shipments and personnel as a way to disrupt the counterinsurgency effort."

The International Crisis Group's June 2016 report asserts that, "Al- Shabaab continued to launch regular attacks." This complaint is echoed inits preceding reports as well: "Al-Shabaab kept up urban attacks and made limited territorial gains" [May 2016], "Al-Shabaab upped terrorist attacks and recaptured locations across south-central Somalia: attacked and recaptured several towns in Lower Shabelle, Bay and Jubaland regions, including 8 Feb. temporary occupation of Marka and 16 Feb. attack on Afgoye…", [March 2016), etc.

Inasmuch as Ethiopia comprises a major component of AMISOM and, more generally, is considered the West's most powerful and stable partnerin Africa's Horn, we shall examine some salient features of Ethiopia's much-touted "strong army" and its future prospects for meeting the goalsof major donors, such as the United States and Britain.

Clausewitz argued that, in order to be effective in war generally, and in military operations in particular, sufficient equilibrium must exist between the people, the army, and the government or the state as to overcome conflicting tensions, contradictions, and the ever-present "friction," i.e., inefficiency and obstacles. Some 2000 years earlier, Sun Tzu described a state of congruence between the aim of the government and the people asthe Tao, or, “The Way,” a prerequisite to victory in war. When leadership and the army share the same purpose, he taught, this, too, is Tao. On the other hand, substantial divergence between government, people, andarmy, spells disaster for the nation.

In today's Ethiopia, such a disaster has been in the making for years. Adeep and widening fault line divides the unpopular regime, the people ofEthiopia, and the military's higher and lower ranks. These schisms afflictEthiopia's armed forces with intractable contradictions that render themhighly vulnerable to external and internal pressures.

It could be argued that the armed forces under the current regime are repeating similar blunders as the of the previous Communist regime thatthey replaced. Unlike the current armed forces under the TPLF/EPRDF regime, the armed forces under Col. Mengistu's regime found itself simultaneously fighting on multiple fronts, staving off Somali aggression while embroiled in protracted counter insurgency campaigns in all four corners of the country.

The historian Gebru Tareke argued in his book, "The Ethiopian Revolution:War in the Horn of Africa," that the main cause of the previous army's defeat was a "lack of imagination" that manifested as strategic and tactical rigidity. The Marxist-Leninist ideology the regime espoused, economic and other attendant policies it pursued, its repressive measures,and the multiple fronts throughout the country alienated the people from the regime. These factors cost that government its critical civilian base of support needed to wage counterinsurgency war in many corners of the country, including the now-dominant Tigray and independent Eritrea.

The loss of popular backing, comprising the rear of the armed forces and representing one of Clausewitz's Trinitarian elements, combined with the low morale of the army due to the lengthy wars in Eritrea and Tigray to the north, betrayed the appearance of superiority of the Ethiopian defenseforces under Col. Mengistu regime presented. The failed coup of 1989 thatwiped out the armed forces' best strategic commanders and leaders, symptomatic of the contradictions besetting both Ethiopian society and the army, signaled the deteriorating conditions and failure to prosecute the war. Along with the will of the public to carry the burden of the war, argued Gebru and others scholars who studied that era's political and military developments, the repressive political system itself plummeted.

[1] The current TPLF/EPRDF regime, even though spared so far the multiple threats that the previous regime's armed forces managed to contain for many years, deploys armed forces that are also very vulnerable. To reuse the terms employed by Professor Terrence Lyons, scholar of conflict resolution, in his study, "Ethiopia: Assessing Risks to Stability," commissioned by the U.S. Africa Command (AFRICOM) in 2011,both the political system and the army are "brittle," i.e., fragile, although in the short term seemingly strong and stable. But mid- and long-term prospects, the professor projected, are a different story. Indeed, Ethiopia's armed forces are under increasing pressure from popular resistance and armed rebellions that are gaining strength every year.

[2] Policymakers relying on Ethiopia as a dependable military ally may findit difficult to grasp that this army is at serious risk of collapse, but similar conditions, even worse conditions, to those that undermined its predecessor are evident. In fact, abysmal conditions afflicting the armed forces under the current regime are numerous and structural. Intelligence,both open source and covert, collected in the past few years confirms the internal crisis within the armed forces. These include testimony, both written and oral, from defecting ground forces' officers of various ranks and specializations, NCOs, privates, Airforce pilots, and technicians. All attest that Ethiopia's ground and air forces are dispirited and demoralized institutions.

The spike in defections has become so high, according to reliable sourcesthat include one recently broadcast on Ethiopian satellite TV and Radio (ESAT), that it's become a recurring topic in internal Ministry of Defense meetings of such significance as to require the attendance of the Ministerof Defense, Siraj Fergessa, and Samora Yunis, the Armed Forces Chief ofStaff. Indeed, chronic defections of significant proportions have afflicted all divisions, including army divisions under the Northern command deployed along the border with Eritrea.

[3] These losses translate directly into operational weakness. The Airforce,for example, already lacks institutional memory and pride in a tradition- based military culture due to the large number pilots and officers dismissed en mass after the fall of d the previous regime. But compounding this deficiency are the scores of pilots and technicians who have defected since 2005, including dozens who were sent for advanced training to Belarus and Israel in 2006 and 2007, respectively. Such defections have not subsided, but continue to date, including two pilots and a senior technician who flew a fighter helicopter out of Ethiopia into a neighboring country in 2014. Most such defectors promptly join opposition movements such as Patriotic Ginbot 7 and others.

The visible increase in defections can generally be ascribed to marginalization and abuse of soldiers and airman by cadres and officers ofthe government. But there are several other reasons for this trend as well. An analysis must begin with the stark fact that Ethiopia's senior leadershipis stealing approximately 2 billion dollars every year. This statistic is basedon the amount of illicit financial outflows documented by a UN panel chaired by former South African president Thabo Mbeki and the fact that the means of embezzlement, over and under-invoicing of exports and imports, are controlled by a small circle of top officials.

Protecting such a source of wealth, especially in the face of extreme poverty suffered by the nation generally, requires tight control of the security forces. But the Tigrayan ethnic composition of those managing Ethiopia's corruption has such small representation within the general population at six percent that it's impossible to fill the ranks only with loyal fellow Tigrayans. This has resulted in a two-tier system in which therank-and-file come from the majority ethnic groups, such as the Oromo and Amhara , while their leadership is comprised almost exclusively of Tigrayans, claiming to represent only a 6% of the population in Ethiopia.

As with any unrepresentative system requiring repression for its survival, injustice in Ethiopia's military is rife. Minority ethnic domination of the command structure and the corresponding pervasive corruption, favoritism, and promotions on the basis of ethnic origin instead of merit have resulted in poor morale and widespread, festering resentment withinthe senior military leadership. These conditions have created the dangerous divisions that today threaten the military's efficiency, and evensurvival.

In this installment, the structural weaknesses in Ethiopia's Armed Forces are examined. The following section will provide a more qualitative description of the problem, based on testimonials obtained from defectorsand from intelligence obtained by opposition groups.

Several practices in particular undermine morale within the lower andmiddle ranks of the Armed Forces, including:

Compulsory "donations" deducted from already-meager monthly salariesfor The Meles Foundation, for the Abay Renaissance Dam, a notorious nexus of corruption, and various ersatz Tehadiso causes, national anniversaries and holidays. Politically-appointed Tigray and unit commanders decide the percentage to be deducted from the soldier's salary without consultation.

Members of the army are told by their commanders that they have a rightnot to contribute. But, in practice, those who refuse to cooperate are blacklisted. Offenders are refused important Benefits, such as the opportunity to be sent on peacekeeping missions, educational and advancement training programs. Those who opt out from donating are accused by their Tigrayan commanders of harboring a hiddenpolitical agenda.

Perceptions within the Armed Forces' rank and file, junior officers, and NCOs for the most part, are that, while Ethiopia's people are starving (Ethiopia is currently suffering the largest famine in its history), senior military leadership are enriching themselves through massive corruption.There is no transparency or accountability for the donations while the construction of large, luxury mansions by the generals is well known.
Members of the army are subjected to the infamous gimgema, in which people are made to confess, and one testifies against his comrade in thepresence of several people. This process, according to defector debriefings, dispirits and humiliates those who undergo this process.

Those who refuse to cooperate in the shakedowns are often subjected tomilitary discipline, ranging from solitary confinement to torture.

Verbal attacks by government cadres at performance assessment meetings, including abuse of senior non-Tigrayan personnel by nominally-subordinate Tigrayans. Organizational efficiency is severely weakened by this practice, as it discourages asking questions about day-to-day operations. It is well known that a low-level cadre can make a non- Tigrayan, even one superior in rank, disappear for simply forwarding a challenging question or constructive criticism.

Despite claims by senior military leadership that the defense forces are committed in their allegiance to the regime, testimony from officers, the rank and file and air force pilots confirms the existence of a broad, underlying attitude that preserving the corrupt status quo is not worth thesacrifice of their lives. Thus, the army is not prepared to defend the country from any threat. Exasperation and fatigue are the common reaction to the regime's persistent and unconvincing propaganda.

The average Ethiopian soldier, generally from a non-Tigrayan ethnic groups, believes his leaders consider him cannon fodder while Tigrayancadres and generals are protected from danger and exempt from hazardous duty.

While the rank-and-file is fighting and dying in Somalia and on the borderwith Eritrea, TPLF cadres and generals pursue conspicuously lavish lifestyles in the capital's posh suburbs. This was widely observed during the 1998-2000 Ethio-Eritrean war. Soldiers risking their lives and limbs fighting extremists in Somalia are painfully aware that their generals and commanders are busy dealing contraband goods, selling petrol and other supplies from the Somalia operation in the open markets of Mogadishu.
Many question why they must risk their lives fighting an Al Shabaab with which their commanders are trading and profiting. Rumors abound that Ethiopia’s military leadership would secretly like the war there to continuefor business reasons. Accusations circulate that Ethiopia’s generals pay AlShabaab under the table to limit its operations to the Somali side of the shared border. esentment is widespread within the rank-and-file members at being made to pay for their uniforms and shoes while their families back home are destitute. Housing is often of intolerably poor quality. On the other hand, their generals have built skyscrapers, enriched themselves on the black market, and are paid thousands of dollars-- as much as twenty five thousand dollars per month in the case of force commanders of thevarious peacekeeping missions.

The deliberate mixing of politicized and fabricated intelligence with thegenuine as a method of impressing foreign military partners.

Such conditions are feeding the flow of military talent and loyalty from theregime to Patriotic Ginbot 7 and other opposition armed groups.

It is now 25 years that a small ethnic minority, representing only 6% of the population, has dominated Ethiopia's military, security services, bureaucracy and economy. They remain at the helm of the command-and-control structure, from the Defense Chief of Staff down to Commands, Divisions, regiments, and even platoon leadership. Despite the need to maintain control over a much larger restive and resentful population and prosecute successfully a difficult counter-insurgency at the same time, the defense forces are not led by competent generals well-schooled in militaryscience, nor do they exhibit leadership qualities. Academically, the TPLF generals tend to be grade school dropouts and the rank-and-file are well aware of this fact, engendering a lack of respect for their superiors.

[4] As well-known contemporary Counter insurgency theorists, who havestudied both successful and unsuccessful counterinsurgencies argued in their studies applying brute force alone cannot possible win over the population. Counter insurgency is not about military force alone but winning the minds and hearts of the people, one of the three elements ofClausewitz's trinity, which the previous regime's blundered and the current minority regime continues on the path. Knowledge of guerrilla warfare, its methods and tactics which these TPLF generals, representingover 80% of the army and air force command, possess from their rebel days does not easily translate into skills at the strategic and theater levels, nor the ability to direct effectively conventional modern warfare requiring joint and combined warfare by infantry, mechanized and air forces.

One might expect such experienced guerilla warriors to understand counterinsurgency, but these ostensibly grizzled veterans appear to have forgotten the lessons of their own early experience: that it's less about military force than winning hearts and minds. And that atrocities manufacture more enemies than they kill (of course, a lot of training and civil operations fly out the window with each year's stolen two billion dollars). For the regime's counterinsurgency track record in the Ogaden in the East, Gondar in the Northwest, and Gambella region in Ethiopia's southwest is stained by horrific, internationally-condemned episodes of brutal persecution of the civilian population. It is no coincidence that thesesame areas have become fertile recruiting grounds for the armed freedomand democracy forces opposing the regime.

[5] The TPLF generals' 25 years' tenure as strategic commanders is apale reflection of what Ethiopia enjoyed at these levels of leadership during the Emperor's, and even during the regime of Col. Mengistu .

From the many illustrative accounts of this phenomenon, we can take, forexample, this description of an Ethiopian army colonel, translated by Bereket Kidane, from Tesfaye Gebreab's published memoir of the 1998- 2000 Ethiopia – Eritrea border war titled The Writer's Memoir "á‹¨á‹°áˆ«áˆ²á‹ áˆ›áˆµá‰³á‹ˆá»:"

" .....Weyane took 10 divisions to the war front against Eritrea. Of thoseten divisions, one was a fully mechanized division. There was also one brigade of commandos among them. When war broke out in 1998, Weyane's armed forces were ready to attack on four fronts, namely Burre, Zalambessa, Tsorona and Badme. The first round of the 1998 war was extremely screwed-up and gruesome. Looking back on it asa commander and a military professional, it was an extremely inept and embarrassingly flawed war plan from the beginning. It was badly planned.It is very sad that no one to date has been held accountable for the wasted treasure in blood and national resources that was expended on thewar effort."

"...we had anywhere from 250,000 to 300,000 of our soldiers killed on thewar effort in Eritrea during the Haile Selassie and Dergue era. But if we compare that to the Weyane era, in just one year we had 98,700 of our soldiers killed and 194,300 wounded. These are figures I got from our Ministry of Defense in Ethiopia. The figures I retrieved from the records ofOrdinance Command is that two-thirds of our heavy weaponry was destroyed during the first round of Ethio-Eritrean border war. The field generals of this nihilistic and meaningless war were Seare Mekonen, Samora Younis, Yohannes Gebremeskel, Tadesse Werede, Abraha , Quarter..."

Most of these generals remain the most senior of the armed forces,including, Samora, the current chief of staff.

"……After the 1-week battle plan failed miserably and concluded with great military losses, the general who was in charge of the war, Tsadkan Gebretensae, called a meeting at Infara, the place that was serving as theCommand and Control Center. General Tsadkan tried to call the meeting to order but he could not hide his emotions and broke down crying. All of the meeting participants cried with him. Infara was like a funeral home.
Once Tsadkan regained his composure, he tried to comfort the meeting's participants. Everyone was crying. General Tsadkan said the following to them: "I have led many battles in my career. I have fought in many wars.I have seen a lot. I have never experienced this kind of utter failure. It is bad." The reason the meeting was called was to assess the situation and find solutions to the problems. Meeting participants agreed that there were two basic problems: the challenging landscape and defective battle plans were equally to blame. The landscape is favorable to the enemy; theenemy is in a defensive position. Also, there was no adequate preparationon our part. We didn't size up the enemy and its strength correctly. We underestimated the enemy's capabilities. The enemy is using the landscape to his advantage and rotating forces and battle plans as he wishes. Without going into much detail, we concluded the meeting. Using that as a starting point, we collectively decided to discard the offensive battle plans for Zalambessa and Burre. In order to beef up our fighting capability, it was decided that a committee led by General Abebe Teklehaymanot would go on a shopping spree for the air and ground forces. Bereket Simon was to lead the conscription of massive number of troops. Aba Dula was to supervise the training of the conscripts. The number of divisions was to increase from 12 to 30 in a short period of time. Until then, the troops would stay in a defensive position…"

leadership of the armed forces was nowhere up to the standard needed tolead conventional forces at the strategic and theater levels, and to wage wars requiring knowledge and experience in the science and art of warfareother than the guerilla methods and tactics the TPLF generals are said to understand due to their guerrilla days as platoon and company commanders. Therefore, the best surviving Generals of the previous regime—Brigadier Generals Tesfaye Habetemarim, Airborne, Brigadier General Behailu Kinde, infantry, Colonel Negussie Adugna, artillery (later to die in battle during the Ethio-Eritrea war), and Brigadier Gen. Techane Mesfin, Airforce, and thousands of heavy weaponry experts, combat engineers, air force pilots, and many high ranking and line officers who had been humiliated and reduced to being paupers for "serving the Derg Army" after the demise of the former regime in May 1991 were called upon once again, almost begged by then-Chief of staff Tsadkan Gebretensay himself, to join preparations for the next round of war the TPLF was preparing against the Eritreans. This was done over the objections of TPLF generals, such as Samora Yunus, the current chief of staff, who did not like the idea of including former generals more educated, trained, and experienced in conventional warfare than he and all of his colleagues were and still are.

Another specific demoralizing issue is that soldiers who have paid the ultimate sacrifice in Ethiopia's recent wars are not being buried, let alonewith the honor and dignity such situations demand. Many corpses are leftto rot and fall prey to carrion, disturbing and dispiriting not only their surviving comrades, but their families and local populations witnessing this degrading abandonment. The regime has refused to disclose the number of its soldiers killed during the war with Eritrea, as well as the ongoing fight in Somalia. One of the major resentments by the people of Ethiopia, and especially by members of the

the government, the ethnic minority generals and high ranking officers isthis indifference and disrespect exhibited to the fallen soldiers.

[7] These facts have been corroborated by testimony obtained from former members of the defense forces who have defected and joinedarmed opposition groups like Patriotic Ginbot 7, and from civilian witnesses, open sources and other channels of information

Based on the preceding facts, it is possible to make the followingassertions:

The lower ranks of Ethiopia's military, like the rest of the Ethiopian people,want to be free from tyranny and ethnic based marginalization. They are willing to serve in an environment where there is no ethnic favoritism, that's free of corruption and where justice, including military justice, prevails. They are not, contrary to Western stereotype, content to live on food handouts alone.

"The military is a dictatorship, not a democracy." But it still needs benevolent, yet strict, leadership displaying values of honor, sacrifice, wisdom, etc. An army needs a leadership that is perceived by the lower ranks as courageous and just, strict yet, professional. The military desiresto be led by commanders and generals with the discipline and knowledge of military science expected of such positions.

The military wants promotions, salary increments and other perks to bebased on merit, not ethnicity.

The military wants appropriate and sufficient logistical support, including, but not limited to, armaments, better food and uniforms that would help itcarry out its duty as a national defense force.

A military with eroded morale, disunited and led by incompetent generalswho constitute a tiny minority, yet command and control 80% of the boththe ground and air forces, will not be a protector of an extremely corrupt,ethnic oligarchy determined to exploit in flagrant fashion every aspect of the Ethiopian state and economy. Rather, it will undoubtedly mutiny and turn its guns on its oppressors when the time is ripe for a popular revolution.

The ethnic based minority regime is neither capable nor willing to heed the demands of the military's lower ranks because this would spell the endof its senior leadership's control of the corruption.

Ethiopia's senior political and military leadership lacks the popular supportcited by Clausewitz as needed to sustain a successful counterinsurgency, especially on multiple fronts.

Conclusion

The armed forces under the present regime is seriously deficient in the requisite morale, esprit de corps, cohesion, confidence and trust in its inept and extremely corrupt commanders. Such an army cannot be a cohesive and effective fighting force. It cannot sustain a drawn-out war with internal liberation movements and face a formidable external threats.

"Morale is three times the materiel," Napoleon said, stressing the importance of will in any war. That genius of military strategy and tacticswould later refer to the guerrilla warfare waged by the Spaniards on the Iberian Peninsula that pinned down some 300,000 members of his "Grande Armee'" as his undoing.

[8] Like Napoleon and so many other conventional armies down to the Ethiopian Army under the Derg which the present regime toppled, the current armed forces under the minority regime will be unable to contain the determined guerilla resistance movement across the county which thepeople of Ethiopia have begun to unleash in the countryside and is poisedto spread to the cities. Moreover, the dirty war such a defense will requirewill elevate international scrutiny of the regime's excesses to an unsupportable level. This leaves Ethiopia's present government, like mostconventional armies besieged by the "Spanish ulcer," vulnerable and susceptible to disintegration if confronted by any of several possible combinations of threats, as seems increasingly likely.

The conditions for this likely outcome are being created and exacerbated by Tigrayan generals and the minority regime's brutality, cruelty, unbridled plunder and illicit extraction of public resources at the expense of the soldier and the civilian population. Such practices, along with the mistreatment and humiliation of both constituencies as second class citizens has led to widespread alienation and represents a significant detachment of elements in the Clausewitzian trinity. The people of Ethiopia have long grown impatient and are highly likely to rise up in the near to moderate term, as already witnessed in the Oromo region and elsewhere, in smaller scales in various parts of Amhara region in particularGonder. Indeed, this process clearly has already begun.

The next installment in this series will highlight the multifarious fault lineswithin the regime itself and the larger population at greatest risk of eruption in the putatively "stable" and "reliable" partner, Ethiopia.

African Union (AU): Build Statue of His Majesty Emperor HaileSelassie Center Front of AU Bldg!

His Majesty Emperor Haile Selassie was the visionary leader and main architect in establishing the African Union (formerly known as Organization of African Unity) in Addis Ababa on May 25, 1963. Despite playing an instrumental role in supporting liberation movements in Africa that led to the development of free and independent African nation states,His Majesty Emperor Haile Selassie has not received due credit and recognition for His Majesty's unparalleled dedication, commitment and contributions to African independence and unity, and for His Majesty's keyrole in establishing the AU/OAU.

July 1, 2016 — Selassie Stand Up's efforts are also on the ground in Africa. Former South African President Thabo Mbeki address on the 120th Anniversary of the Battle of Adwa. It was greatly appreciated Mbeki's remarks regarding the importance of statues and symbols, as well as his great respect for Ethiopia's contributions to Pan-Africanism. We also foundhis statement regarding the important role which the late emperor plays in maintaining the unity of African people to be right on the remark as well. Thanks to the Ethiopian intellect Prof. Mammo Muchie for being on the ground in South Africa. Let us all stand together and ensure Haile Selassie Stand Up comes to fruition!!!

The Saga of Addis Ababa:
The Master Plan & the Revolt of Oromos in EPRDF's Ethiopia
By Mikael Wossen (PhD) July 5, 2016

Keep going, don't ever stop. Keep going, don't ever stop. Keep going. If you want a tasteof freedom, keep going. - Harriet Tubman

The quotation above is worth keeping in mind, when trying to make senseof the following interdisciplinary examination of the so called Addis Ababa Master Plan and its main effects i.e. the protracted and simmering mass protests that it ignited across Oromia, Ethiopia. Our inquiry primarily asks,what are the defining social and economic forces and relations that ignitedthe confrontations that led to this protracted conflict? Moreover, in our pedagogical practice we strive for a national self-consciousness. The focusis on how we can all struggle in unity, as individuals and compatriots, against supremacist domination, injustice and neo-colonial exploitation in all their varieties. An attack on any Ethiopian, regardless of ethnicity, is thus considered as an attack on all of us and the fundamental rights and dignity that define us as Ethiopians.

Addis Ababa, Ethiopia's capital is growing at a furious pace and urban architectural/infrastructural developments are running apace as steel, glass and concrete buildings seem to enmesh and emerge from the ground up. Traffic is clogging up the narrow streets. A new skyline is forming as material and social forces are bubbling up from below. Addis Ababa is growing upwards and outwards. Everybody marvels at the pace of change. Have you seen the underpass and the new Chinese made 'lightrail' public transport train that crosses the city? Have you seen this or thatintersection or building. These are popular subjects of conversation. The distance between Addis Ababa and the surrounding regions, seems to be closing, helped by more rapid and efficient transportation grids. You might say the city is undergoing an urban sprawl of sorts, and experiencing a rising population density as well. New buildings are emerging everywhere. The old city of our childhood is changing fast. Addis Ababa now is a city with an estimated population of around 4 million. While the city grows, most poor Addis Ababans have still no access to a hygienic modern toilet system that befits a city, and lack access to clean water. Both are in short supply in this naturally rich land. Still some form of rapid urbanization and demographic growth is visible tothe naked eye. Electricity is also scant in Addis. Ferequa is a power sharing method introduced by the TPLF. Recently, the lights failed in a hotel inhabited by visiting foreign dignitaries. As usual, some rural folks (over 80% of the Ethiopian population) tend to migrate into the city, in search of wage employment. With few exceptions, providing employment is still the privilege of the state in Ethiopia. And as the old saying goes, in a country where the sole employer tends to be the state, political opposition implies death by starvation. Anyway, in this migratory trend, afew succeed in gaining some kind of employment, others become beggarsor somehow homeless, and still some others move on to Middle Eastern destinations of domestic servitude; a great many become ensnared in a life of local penury and other gross social ills spreading across the breadthand depth of the wider urban landscape, also known as Finfine.

Ethiopia is a tough place to be born in, particularly if you are from the poorer and less powerful sector of society. Ethiopians have always been deprived of civic/political rights and landownership. Food insecurity is endemic in a society where all land is owned by the state or rather the party. Society is run by tired nineteenth and 20th Century ideologies and myopic policies. Peripheral capitalism grinds on in its extractive form. In the name of developmentalism and fighting poverty, the TPLF-led regimeis promoting floriculture within 200 km radius of Addis Ababa and giving away 3 million hectares of virgin lowland areas and water to foreign capitalists, while the Ethiopian small holder's plot is shrinking from abouthalf a hectare (during Mengistu's era) to only a quarter of a hectare now.In essence, Ethiopia is producing flowers and food for others, while its citizens go hungry or starve. One of the authorities thinks we are 'taking off.' Food availability for millions literally depends on the kindness of foreigners. Meanwhile, sanitation coverage in the country remains low even by Africa's depressed standard; only 11% of the population was found to have access to adequate sanitation. Along with rapid urbanization, diseases associated with poor nutrition and scarcityof cleanwater are expanding. People in the capital can go for days without seeingwater or electricity. Yet, the place is endowed with tremendous water resources and hopes to export hydroelectric power to neighbors. When GERD is finally constructed it will be the largest hydroelectric power facility in Africa.

As archaic and regressive as it is, ethnicity has become a fundamental organizing principle of social and political life. Every Ethiopian holds an ethnic ID. Moreover, Ethiopia is divided into nine major killils, or ethnic enclaves (Bantustans). In the TPLF's architecture of domination known asethnic federalism, an ethnic hierarchy prevails and the dominant Tigrean party-state is intrusive in every sphere of social life and sector of production. The political agenda of the ruling ethnic party, as the supremelaw of the land, has subordinated the historic national interests of the Ethiopian state. Thinking freely and opposing the regime is criminalized. The ethnic party commands and polices everything, from its subject's schooling, to their feeding and employment opportunities. All land is state-owned as is distributorship of seed and fertilizers. The TPLF occupies all the seats in parliament, except for one. Subjects are routinelyinfantilized. Let us recall Dowden's description of the minority regime's arrogant and tyrannical modus operandi 'If you do what the party/government says,' you get credit and assistance- land, water, seed and fertilizer services, 'if you don't you get nothing.' Still, a certain process of urbanization and demographic multiculturalism is continuing; inthe city, people of different ethnic groups tend to be working and living more tightly together, rather than apart. Everyone, regardless of ethnicity, will be required to somehow communicate with their neighbors. Generally speaking, the city tends to unify what the ethnic killils divide and segregate. By 2050, it is estimated that 70% of the world's populationwill live in urban centers.

Ethnic segregation/isolation is more palpable in the less-urbanized and rural regions of Ethiopia. The TPLF-led EPRDF regime claims its support among the 80%, barely literate, rural folk it controls tightly through ownership of land and a formidable 5-1espionage apparatus. The regime is formally structured along ethnic federalist lines, or what was more appropriately and honestly termed as apartheid (aparthood) in South Africa. The federal designation is strictly formal, as separate ethnic based 'homelands,' sectarian privileges and inequalities are enforced at gunpointin TPLF's Democratic Republic of ethnic groups. The ideological attachmentto democracy and the 'people,' is equally phony, as land robbery, demonization and persecution of other non-Tigrean 'peoples' and 'nationalities' actually prevails, with Tigrai killil and its people (about 6%ofthe entire population) being the most advantaged. This minority group appropriates the lion's share of the nation's export-oriented political economy (land, offices, gold, airline and military. According to a recent World Bank report on public expenditure review, the TPLF or the federal authorities have never transferred more than 6% of the cash revenue to the regional states. In other words, 94% of federal budget is used wholly at the discretion of the 'vanguardist' TPLF. This is revolutionary democracyindeed. This all-powerful and sectarian ruling group drives the expansion of the city in its own particularistic interests.

At the root of the extended revolt throughout Oromia is the so called Master Plan. According to this contested plan, the expanding multiethnic city of Addis Ababa is set to absorb the surrounding villages and districts,including some 36 potential towns in what is known now as the Oromo Regional State. The city's "Master Plan" is a huge municipal expansion scheme, officially predicated on the need to include and provide services to the impoverished rural areas surrounding the ever-expanding/ urbanizing Addis Ababa metropolis. One wonders why not first provide basic services and sustenance to the urban poor already living within Addis Ababa proper? This would require a people-centered development agenda, rather than the rentier state-led one advocated by Meles' cadres. Anyway, the city has some 29 rural Kebeles that provide gateways of expansion that bleed into the boundaries of Oromia.

That being as such, the growth of the city is as relentless as the rulingcaste's tyrannical craving for absolute domination and quick profits.

During the Italian fascist invasion of 1936-41, the idea of Ethiopia represented a tabula rasa or a blank slate took root in the mind of the colonialists. This false but yet seductive assumption became pronounced in the writings of fascist ideologues, architects and urban planners. It did not matter that the capital has existed at least since 1889. Between1936-1941, the Italians declared that Addis Ababa should emerge anew from this 'virgin fantasy.' This fixed idea of a brand new colonial and fascist urbanism had a modernist appeal and was experimented on Addis Ababa.The idea was to rebuild the existing city 'from the ground up', so as to make it acceptable to the fascist's modern tastes and aesthetic sensibilities. In the colonial scheme of things, Italian overpopulation in Italy was to find a safety pin in the colonies of the empire. Thus, the round houses (tukuls) of Ethiopians were declared unhygienic and irrational. Their primitive architecture was considered hazardous to healthand offensive to Italians. They needed to be removed. This makeover of the imperial city into a modernist capital was to be achieved by adhering to Mussolini's wishes of numerous sventramenti or demolitions within the city's fabric. The rebuilding process was going to involve ruthless planningalong rigid lines, with severe segregation between the races. The realization and extension of this city-wide modernization process, with few modifications, is currently known as the Master Plan.

Towards the end of April of 2014, Oromo higher education students begandemonstrations against this type of TPLF-led demolition, confiscation of land and expansion of Addis Ababa into a mega metropolitan region, as outlined in the current "Integrated Master Plan for Addis Ababa." In other words, the population wanted to have a say in what matters to their land and to them. At the time, the Tigrean chief (Abay Tsehaye) said boastfullythat he would put the protesters/ demonstrators in their place, as 'we willshow them'. Ultimately, however, it was the protestors who showed theirpower to the authorities. The protests, at the time, began around the universities in the Oromo region of Ethiopia. Students alleged that the "Master Plan" was merely an excuse for land grab, or for robbing the Oromo people blind, and enriching the usual suspects of the ruling caste and their foreign partners. In other words, it is more of the same policy ofscramble for prime property/resources that has already enriched a few well connected functionaries/operatives and TPLF's top military brass nowliving in Addis Ababa. These set of preferential policies include granting privileged rights to land use and other properties by the regime to its supporters, foreign investors, assorted sycophants and relaxed credits to members of their own tightly knit Tigrean families. The battle cry ofthose in the streets was something along the lines that the Hagoses cannot enrich themselves with Dibaba's ancestral lands.

Once the outrage exploded across Oromia, the TPLF-EPRDF regime responded by mass slaughter of the students. Soldiers simply shot at them. Some students died and others were injured. The ethnic surrogates were confused and their representativeness begun to be questioned; as with ANDM, so with OPDO now. Who do these parties really represent? Aba Dula called this state-sponsored mass murder a "Sihtet," or a mistake. This savage policy of executing legitimate protesters was clearly a well-practiced criminal attitude, clearly not a mere and sudden mistake. Shooting at citizens peacefully demanding justice was normalized. It is now totally unacceptable to all decent Ethiopians and theprogressive international community. In our view, the legitimate demandsof the Oromo students and all Ethiopians for justice and equality, and the government's blood thirsty response, should be examined more sanely and carefully. After all, Ethiopia is a member of the UN’s Human Rights

Council. Was it not Mill who called democracy ‘a government by discussion’, rather than force/repression. It is time to bring forth important policy decisions concerning land ownership and use/abuse to public discussions. Here is a respected Ethiopian scholar’s opinion (Aklog Birrara, p. 129) on the elemental nature of this conflict. "The massive transfer of fertile farmlands from Ethiopian families, communities and the entire society to foreign investors is the last ominous indicator of a regimethat is determined to rob the country and its people of their most critical natural resource assets, their honor, dignity and sovereignty - all done in the name of development and transformation". In other words, the TPLF’ fights poverty’ by expropriating or usurping (grabbing) the land of Ethiopian families and disenfranchising its ancestral owners.

Our humble proposal is that the cluster of political and jurisdictional issuesin question should be reasoned out in the seminar halls of the rebellious universities. What exactly is being transformed and what is the meaning of development in Ethiopia? Is this about people or is it simply a question of encouraging maximum resource extraction and export? Where do citizens belong in this transformative process? How do these illicit land grab/exchange policies benefit the masses who, in the process, are forcedto give up their most crucial resource i.e, land, and livelihood. In any case, murder of peaceful demonstrators is not what is expected from a government allegedly run by reason and claiming a democratic sensibility.What happened to the much vaunted Ethiopian renaissance movement?
Should not thought/discussion oust brute force in the practice of the TPLF’s statecraft now? The TPLF has been in power for a quarter century.

This time around, unlike 2014, the parents and communities of the students have also joined the new protests that were re-ignited at the endof 2015 and the beginning of 2016. These protests against land robbery and related injustices range from Korem to Gambella. The subjugation andland theft ritual of the TPLF supremacists against the orginal populations of the land is severe and pervasive. The people are impoverished and angered. The current violent reaction of the people of Lafto, a sub-divisionof Addis, is instructive. The frustrations/outcries against the regime could not be contained in the institutions of higher education any longer.
Conservatively, since November alone, over 400 citizens have been killed by special US trained and Tigrean-led paramilitary forces. In some areas, the protests have reached insurrectionary proportions. Roads leading into Addis Ababa have been blocked by debris . The demonstrators of Ginde Beret have burnt and destroyed paraphernalia of what was to be a park and foundation site dedicated to Meles Zenawi, the TPLF’s anointed ‘man of vision’ or visionary. The demonstrators have torched his picture/poster as well. To be sure, this was a nationally popular gesture. Meles is regarded as a neo-colonial puppet by the majority of Ethiopians. In effect,these are resistances against the ideology of Melesism, and his notion of the intrusive developmental state of land expropriation/grab schemes, and against the export-oriented macro-economic priorities of the regime. A European owned company had leased and fenced off some 100 hectares of prime communal grazing land, where families' live Similar injustices prevail in Gambella, Omo region and North-Western Amara district, whereownership of land and water is at stake. People from resource-depleted and overpopulated parts of Ethiopia are invading, leasing out and despoiling and violating the resource rich sections of Ethiopia.

Clearly, there is a gross deficit in both federalism and democracy in Ethiopia. The notion of the centralized dictatorship of the developmental state contradicts the claims to federalism. Equality and freedom of expression are supposed to be at the heart of democracy. These are non-existent in TPLF's Ethiopia. Those demonstrating and protesting are of thenew generation, products of the separatist and neo-colonial politics of "ethnic apartheid" that is struggling to take root in Ethiopia. This is a generation raised under the Meles doctrine of Killilism, economic developmentalism and Tigrai first ideology. They do not oppose the ethnicdispensation of power per se, they merely want their rightful share in thisnew ethnic calculus of wealth and power. They are angered at not being adequately represented in the ethnic equation, and thus unable to fully share in the spoils of power and privilege. They are particularly worried and concerned about the Addis Ababa administration's expansion into what are, by FDRE's Constitution, Oromo farms and villages surrounding the capital and belonging exclusively to the Oromo people. This implies illegal commoditization and transfer of Oromo land by high members of the ruling Tigrean party and the federal administration. What is going to happen to these rural folk evicted from their land for next to nothing?
When Addis Ababa expands twenty-fold as projected in the Master Plan, will former land owners be merely expropriated and kicked off their land?Will they be, in the end, living as landless paupers in Oromia or Addis Ababa? The vexing problem had been officially described as being one of"jurisdictional overlap" between the administrations in Addis Ababa and the authorities of the Oromia state (headquartered in Addis Abeba). In the face of stubborn protests, it was announced that the whole idea of a 'Master Plan' has been shelved.

It was Marx who prophesized that each sociopolitical structure carries within itself the seeds of its own destruction. Obviously the state-led urbanization, expropriation and commercialization of land envisioned for the emerging "special zone" has run up against the ethnic demarcation of territories (Killils) institutionalized by the TPLF-EPRDF. When you start reading specific populations into territories, you are not far from fascism; anyway this regime of ethnic segregation is indeed a product of the Italianfascist occupation period of 1936-41. Today, over 10 million Amaras are said to live without guaranteed rights in Oromia. They live under the threat of ethnic cleansing in other parts of the country as well. Since similar problems of urbanization and transmigration of people, land alienation and transfer of ownership are said to exist around the growing urban regions, realistic negotiations need to begin with an eye to maintaining the long-term national cohesion and integrity of Ethiopia. Thisis a question over who will exercise ownership over land in the future, anddetermine land usage and exchange in the newly urbanized special spaces. As such, this is a political problem and should be resolved by a political engagement with the people directly concerned.

The process of regime atonement must begin, not by offering what amounts to blood money to victims, but by holding the people responsiblefor the shootings of the demonstrators to the high standards of the country's laws. The responsible authorities must at least face the law before paying any form of reparations to the victims. Discussants must becognizant that what is at stake is what it means to be an Ethiopian citizenin the 21st Century. The crucial economic question now concerns how much reward does the government intend to grant the population that agrees to be resettled. Resettlement must be voluntary. A half-hearted request for forgiveness by the puppet PM for the mayhem, massacre, torture and rape committed by his cadres and soldiers will not suffice. A regime that does not account for its atrocious and violent crimes against its own people(s) is one that has lost its ethical compass and right to rule.(text ends)

Activist Abraha Desta released from prison

Ethiomedia July 8, 2016

Abraha Desta, the activist known for his scathing remarks on his Facebookpage against the ruling TPLF party, was on Friday released after serving two years in Kaliti prison.

A Mekelle University philosophy instructor, Abraha became the voice of the voiceless Tigrai people, by writing reports of human rights violations and releasing them on his FaceBook page without the slightest fear of persecution. The Tigrai people were the backbone of TPLF survival duringthe 17-year struggle against the Derg regime, but have since 1991 been reduced to servitude in a region where there are clandestine prisonsreportedly housing thousands of political prisoners.

Once released, the prominent social media activist Abraha, also an executive committee member of the opposition Arena, headed to a hospital in Addis and visited a friend, Habtamu Ayalew, who is down with serious kidney and other critical health issues that he acquired when he was incarcerated and tortured while serving the former Andenet Party asits public relations' chief. "I'm now visiting my friend, Habtamu," Abraha told a Voice of America (VOA) reporter in Addis. When asked how he feltas a free man in the street, the activist said, "Not much. The transfer is like stepping out of a small prison into a larger prison called Ethiopia."

Abraha faced terrorism charges along with three other colleagues: Habtamu Ayalew, Daniel Shibeshi and Yeshiwas Assefa, who were released prior to Abraha's, who faced an extra 'contempt of court' charge, which kept him in prison longer than his comrades. Abraha Desta is a rarebreed among Ethiopian intellectuals from Tigrai region, most of whom quietly resent the brutal TPLF rule, while the remaining some toe party lines in pursuit of their own individual comfort and well being.

Ethiopia blocks social media ahead of exams

By AFP July 11, 2016

(AFP)— Ethiopia has blocked social networking sites in the country since Saturday to prevent leakage of university entrance examination to be heldnext week. “This is a temporary measure until Wednesday as the social networks serve as a distraction to the students," the government spokesman, Getachew Reda told AFP.

Last month, questions for the top examination were posted on social networks causing a national scandal leading to the cancellation of the entire exam. The most popular social networking sites like Facebook, Twitter, Instagram and Viber are inaccessible throughout Ethiopia since Saturday morning. Aside these sites, the internet is functioning normally.The blockade has been criticized by Ethiopian internet users who have found a way around the ban by using the VPN (virtual private networks).

"This is a dangerous precedent. There is no transparency about who took the decision and for how long. This time it is for a few days, but next timeit might be for a month," Daniel Berhane, a blogger and the creator of theinfluential website "Horn Affairs" told AFP.
He added that they believe the Ethiopian authorities are seeking to test new internet filtering tools and also the reaction of the public. Ethiopia filters internet regularly using firewalls which often slows network access.

Problems of accessing social networking sites had been reported in somelocalities of the Oromo region during the anti-government protests, but blocking all sites nationwide is unprecedented in the country.

The UN Human Rights Council passed a resolution last week considering the restrictions of internet access as a violation of human rights. This wasa few days after the election of Ethiopia as a non-permanent member of the UN security Council for a two year term.

Did Saudi Arabia vote against Ethiopia's bid for membership of the UNSC?

ETHIOPIAN OBSERVER July 11, 2016

Saudi Arabia's stance in Ethiopia's bid for non-permanent membership ofthe United Nations' Security Council, which saw her elected on June 29 isnot known, according to the Amharic Reporter's Sunday edition. Among the 190 members of the UN General Assembly, 185 of them were in favour and five countries were against and three abstentions. Addressingthe Ethiopian parliament last Tuesday, Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn, only two countries are known to have voted against Ethiopia's membership bid. "It was clear which these countries were".

Tension between Ethiopia and Saudi Arabia escalated last year when SaudiArabia and the UAE have leased the Port of Assab for 30 years from the Eritrean government in their coalition to fight the Houthis in Yemen. PrimeMinister Hailemariam warned Saudi Arabia it will bear the consequences ofEthiopia's response if their operation in and around Eritrea's Port of Assab supports the 'Eritrean regime's destabilization agenda against Ethiopia.

The Hana Mariam Clash and its Impacts

By Girma Feyissa Jul 12,2016 [Vol 17 ,No 845]

At the southern tip of the capital, bordering the Oromia zone – in an areareferred to as “Hanamariam” – a clash between security forces and law enforcement officers was reported by state media. What stood out in thenews was the unusual visit paid to the bereaved families by officials and their envoys to pay tribute and mumble a few words of condolence.

The mainstream media failed to be explicit in reporting the background tothe clash, which led to the loss of the dear lives of civil servants.

Other international sources, well reckoned by the Ethiopian government, revealed that over 30,000 settlers in the “Hanamariam” area were said to have been affected by the demolition squads sweeping the area with tractors and graders at short notice. The brutal action taken to turn the village into dust and ruins was carried out during the rainy days, when thepoor squatters had nowhere to go and no office to appeal to. No action could ever be more inhumane.

From the victims’ perspective, the atrocious action is speculated to have infuriated many to breaking point. This might well have been the driver behind the retaliations. A few people could have fallen prey to the hands of the armed forces. But the state media did not have the guts to respectthe ethics of journalism to be fair and provide balance.

Be that as it may be, our sympathy goes to the Lord Mayor Diraba Kumsa,who seems to have not yet blossomed during his stay in power as a careerdiplomat. He was present at the mourning not only to pay tribute and express condolences, but more importantly to perform his duties and express allegiance to the party officials who have appointed him.

To put the setting into perspective, Ato Dirba Kuma, like his predecessor,draws his threads of ancestry from the Oromo ethnicity. With the fast growing demands and exponentially increasing urban population, as well as the complexity of managing the critical problems piled up on his desk, people feel sad for him. They are well aware that, whether he is to listento his conscience and principles in life or just fulfil his duties as directed from above, there are planted shadows spying on him.

At any rate, what is being done under his hierarchy, in the name of lawenforcement does not by any account resonate with what an Oromo should do. If we pry deep enough into his background, we can safely assume that somewhere in his ancestral background people must havebeen engaged in cattle herding or land tilling. The Oromos are, if anything, distinctly known for passionately hosting guests, adopting orphans and humbly treating the offended.

Among other things, cheating, stealing or doing any harm to the environment are not known in the cultural history of the Oromos. As for their skill in fighting the enemy as horsemen, you may refer to the historyof the Adwa Victory under the leadership of Emperor Menelik and his courtier.

In light of this background, it becomes incomprehensible to see families dispersed and being marginalised to the life on the streets. This takes us back to the housing problems we are facing in all the big urban areas and in Addis Ababa especially. Humans are being subjected to street life. Theystich old rags and plastic sheets together to protect themselves from nature's hazards and spend their nights under inhumane conditions. Roomrents have soared to a sky high level, forcing people to do whatever they can to put a roof over their heads.

In a diversified settlement, where land is being scrambled for by thosewith ample resources, the gap between the haves and the have nots iswidening more than ever. The poor are forced to flee to the suburbs toerect temporary shelter, in the hope that they may eventually improvethem to a habitable level. Their main concern, for the time being, is simply tending to their children.

Food is also a basic necessity, the price of which is becoming almost impossible to cover. Many are unable to have even one meal a day, let alone three. Some of these small houses, or squats, have been erected byearnings remitted through banks from abroad – mainly from the Middle East. At a time when some altruistic or philanthropic organisations, such as Macedonia Homes, are striving to help, are we really going to lead these squatters back to the streets? Are we sweeping the poor aside, in order to achieve the objective of reducing our enemy, poverty, while at the same time cultivating many more impoverished families? Is that whatis called development and double digit growth?

Squatters accumulate to create slums, which are not only an issue being faced by under developed countries, like Mexico and Columbia, but also globally. This feature is true even in cities like New York and Tokyo, where they have developed plastic gadgets that can be folded and rolled, with mattresses used like sleeping bags. There are human souls taking refugein these squats. Any development effort must have the objective of improving the living conditions in such slums – not simply to bury them under ruins.

If you trapped a pet dog in a closed room, at first it will cry and yell in agony. But, if you continue beating it, at some point it will turn beastly and fight back, biting you. An infuriated human being may also reach theirlimits of tolerance.

Having said all that, I would be betraying myself if I didn't say anythingabout the rectification steps to be taken in the not too distant future. Acaravan like, but modern type of shelter, which could include all the residential amenities, should be put on the table as part of the solution.That is a natural process of change. One cannot jump on to the bandwagon of change, just because a paper has been designed, or because you want to make up for the loss of one's vendetta in the suburbs, as per the failed master plan.

Ethiomedia News July 13, 2016

GONDER - TPLF is very much resented throughout Ethiopia. And in Gonder, the patrioticpeople hate TPLF too much they would love to bury it alive. And they have our prayers.

At present, there is a serious stand-off between the people and TPLF security, federal police and other "law" reinforcement forces. The standoffbegan when masked men in federal police uniform abducted at night fourcivilians who were on the committee that was struggling to establish the Amhara identity of Wolkait-Tsegede people.

Four were arrested during the clampdown, and when the group headed to capture a fifth member, known as Col. Demeke Zewde, the former army colonel told the group he wouldn't open the door for any group that comesin the wee hours of the night.

The group hurled three hand grenades at the colonel's house but a well-barricaded colonel opened fire and reportedly killed two members of theTPLF group that had come to arrest him.

At dawn break, the inhabitants who heard about what was going on cameto the rescue of the Col. Demeke. More armed militia are reportedly pouring into the city, while the regime is also reportedly rushing reinforcements from Tigray region, which is the seat of the ruling party TPLF. The story is developing, and stay tuned for latest developments.

At least six killed in Gondar unrest

ETHIOPIA OBSERVER News updates

At least six people are dead and many more are wounded following clashes between protesters and security forces in Gondar town yesterday, according to various news reports. The protest in the town of Gondar reportedly escalated in retaliation to the security forces' efforts to arrest aperson, wanted in connection with his role on mobilizing dissents on the identity question of the Wolkait and Tegede people, according to the Amharic Reporter. That occurrence happened earlier Tuesday morning andwas later followed by an outbreak of violence in various parts of the town.A number of houses have been burnt down and vehicles damaged by the furious protesters. The Reporter expressed concern that conflict might have dissolved along ethnic lines.

A statement from security forces said the clash was between an Eritrean-funded criminal group and police, resulting in the deaths of three officers,a suspect and a bystander, according to the state media. The Jerusalem Post reported today that the Israel Foreign Ministry and Jewish Agency moved a group of 23 Israeli youth volunteering in Gondar to the local airport on Wednesday, awaiting a decision whether the volatile ethnic tension there merited flying the group out of the region. The Post wrote that as the situation on Wednesday started to calm down – there was no decision taken to attempt to locate or evacuate them.

Ethiomedia July 14, 2016

GONDAR - TPLF's old habit, beating, arresting, killing defenseless civilians,or bulldozing their homes with impunity, was stopped in its tracks in Gondar, thanks to a patriotic people's militia that poured into the city fromall over the areas to rescue Wolkait-Tegede community leaders that the TPLF labelled as Eritrea-backed "anti-peace" and "terrorist" elements.

Pouring public support for the people's militia, sworn to engage TPLF to death, looks like it has boosted the morale of the Gondar as well as peaceand justice-seeking Ethiopians. For now, TPLF is licking its wounds.

Anti-TPLF protests engulf other towns in Gondar region

Ethiomedia July 14, 2016

GONDAR - Anti-TPLF protests spread to other towns in Gondar on July 14as the residents of Debarik town, near the tourist-site Semien Mountains National Park, took to the streets, denouncing TPLF crimes against the Amhara people in general, and the Wolkait-Tegede in particular. This week, a clandestine TPLF operation to arrest Wolkait-Tegede leaders sparked wider anti-TPLF activities that also attracted armed militia groupsin Gondar region.

TPLF’s regime reliability as US partner questioned at congressionalhearing By ESAT News (July 14, 2016)

Harsh repression of dissent, use of the anti-terrorism law to imprison journalists and bloggers, opposition leaders, and civil society activists as well as rigged elections where the ruling EPRDF declared 100% victory areall signs that the regime in Ethiopia could not be a viable US partner, according to Mark Lagon, President of Freedom House.

Presenting his case at a US House hearing on Wednesday on “human rights under siege worldwide,” the former US ambassador for anti-human trafficking, Mark Lagon said the Ethiopian regime “viewed as a key partnerin the war on terror, its harsh repression of dissent raises questions aboutits long-term viability as an effective partner.”
He argued that “there is a difference between the superficial appearance of stability based on repression and the true stability that democracy brings. One argument popular with undemocratic leaders is that the crushing of dissent is necessary to maintain peace and stability. In fact, harsh rule often foments unrest, and unquestioning support for repressiveregimes works against U.S. security interests.”

Lagon argued “there cannot be peace and stability if the government restricts political space and suppresses legitimate dissent with force. Andwithout peace, there can be no reliable access to food or healthcare or education. A country cannot free itself from dependence on foreign aid without strong and accountable governance.”

He pointed out that US aid money should rather be spend on strengthening democratic institutions. “It is far preferable to spend a smallamount in the present to strengthen good governance and maintain peace than to spend a large amount in the future attempting to completely rebuild governance institutions after nations have devolved into war, or a large amount of money and lives on military intervention.”

He went on to say that “In fiscal years 2013 and 2014, Ethiopia received no democracy and governance funding from the United States, despite receiving a total of more than $1.2 billion in foreign assistance. In fiscal year 2015, Ethiopia received nearly $651 million in foreign assistance, butonly $1.25 million was designated for rule of law, good governance, and civil society.” And “Everything else went into financing and training Ethiopia’s military.”

Lagon said the Charities and Societies Proclamation and the Anti-Terrorism Proclamation were designed to squash all dissent.

“The United States would be far wiser to fund a more comprehensive approach to development. We should work to strengthen human rights in Ethiopia to enable a truly peaceful, prosperous, and more reliable securitypartner,” Lagon underscored

Ethiopia: Riots in Gonder claim casualties

By DW July 16, 2016

At least 10 people have been killed in Gonder northern Ethiopia in clashesas locals with security forces. The government blames Eritrea for the unrest but residents cite disputes over land and ethnicity.

According to several reports, the unrest in Gonder began earlier this weekwhen armed police entered the city to arrest members of the "Wolkayit committee" who had been protesting against the government's decision tomerge the Wolkayit community and its land into the neighboring Tigray Regional State. The Ethiopian government spokesperson Getachew Reda on Friday accused the members of kidnapping, murder and being in possesion of arms with an intent of staging terrorist attacks. He also rejected any notion that the clashes was being spearheaded by the Amhara community.

"What happened is that there were individuals suspected of engaging incrime. So to arrest those individuals the Federal Police moved into this area," Negusu Tilahun, Head of Communication Affairs with the AmharaRegional Government told DW.

"As result there was a clash between residents and the police. There wasalso an exchange of gunfire which resulted in the deaths of federal policeofficers and civilians as well. Besides that, there were also damages to property. The government and the public are now working together to bring the town back to its normal situation," Tilahun said.

Ethiopian government officials have blamed opposition groups based in Eritrea for the unrest in Gonder. However, residents say ethnic tensions are the real reason behind the skirmishes. Over the last two decades, theWelkait community has been fighting to become part of Amhara saying itidentifies more with the Amharas than Tigrayans.

One local resident who spoke to DW on condition of anonymity said thegovernment should stop labeling civilians as terrorists. "That is a very cheap political propaganda. Every freedom fighter is linked to Eritrea orterrorism," the resident said.
He accused the government media of ommitting to mention that those who were detained were committee members of the Welkait community."The more the government labels them as terrorists or bandits, rather than responding to the real question, the more things will get worse," headded.

The Welkait region was under Gonder province until it was handed over toTigray State in 1991 by the current EPRDF government. The Amharas andTigrayans had previously lived peacefully side by side but analysts blame the ethnic-federalism system which introduced ethnic ownership of lands for triggering the current dispute.

The US has issued a temporary travel advisory on Gonder and warned itscitizens and those travelling to the city to be cautious. US citizens have also been advised to avoid large crowds and the ongoing protests. The clashes also forced Israel to evacuate a group of 23 young Israeli volunteers from Gonder. The city has about 6,000 Ethiopian Jews who arewaiting to be flown to Israel. The Israeli Foreign Ministry said the Ethiopian Jews were not in any immediate danger.

Gonder Uprising is Made in Eritrea, says TPLF

By Ethiomedia; July 16, 2016

ADDIS ABABA - TPLF spokesperson Getachew Reda blames "a few individuals armed and trained in Eritrea" for the uprising in Gonder. The people of Gonder have made it clear that they have no link to any organization inside or outside of the country whatsoever, and the uprisingis borne out of 25 years of TPLF brutality. TPLF blaming Eritrea for the crisis in Gonder means TPLF war with the revolting Ethiopian people will continue. TPLF knows no reconciliation; it is more like a serial killer

2 journalists sought for political asylum in the U.S. and another in Sweden

A senior sports journalist working for the Addis Ababa Mass Media Agencyand another reporter for the state-run news agency, ENA have requestedpolitical asylum in the U.S., according to reliable sources.

The sports journalists, Ameha Fessha and Libanos Yohannes headed to theUnited States on March to cover 2016 World Indoors W 3000 in which Genzebe Dibaba came first and Meseret Defar second. The two journalists decided to remain there and colleagues informed Ethiopia Observer that the journalists have asked asylum by claiming there is no freedom of expression in Ethiopia during the last few days.

In a related news, the sports reporter for the government-affiliated FanaBroadcasting Corporate Thomas Sebsebe, has also asked asylum in Sweden, it has emerged. The reporter who went there to cover the Stockholm Diamond League on May 30 told friends that he is asking for political asylum in Sweden. Ethiopia is one of the top countries from whichjournalists flee. The majority of those journalists hailed from independent media outlets, but it is not uncommon to see journalists working for the government asking for asylum.

News: Several killed as Ethiopian police force attempt to arrestindividuals, sparking city wide protest in Gondar

ADDIS STANDARD July 14, 2016

Ethiopia blames Eritrea for the unrest; conflicting reports on the exactnumber of loss of lives

Unconfirmed reports claim at least eleven people, six of them police officers, have been killed in the last two days in Gondar city and its environs in Northern Ethiopia. The incident followed a confrontation between members of the "Wolkayit committee" and the police, as the laterattempted to arrest some members of the committee, a university studentfrom Gondar University, told Addis Standard over the phone.

The National Intelligence and Security Service and Federal Police Joint Anti-Terrorism Taskforce told state affiliated FBC yesterday that they have"detained individuals [who] were operating [in] areas called Soroka and Kurbi in north Gondar zone, Amahra regional state, and at Densha and itsenvirons in western Tigray zone." The task force also blamed individuals as having been "terrorist forces" operating from neighboring Eritrea.

But our source, who wants to be anonymous for "fear of retaliation", saidtensions began running high following intensive searches conducted by police forces in the last ten days to arrest members of the "Wolkayit committee" who have been protesting against the government's decisionto administratively include the Wolkayit community and its land into the neighboring Tigray Regional State. He added that searches are being conducted in most parts of the city "as we speak" and that the people targeted were "clearly" members of the "Wolkayit committee".

The statement from the task force admitted "three members of the taskforce were killed and five others injured during a fire exchange held" between the police and supporters of an individual wanted for crimes involving robbery and the killing of civilians in the area. "A person was also killed during the fire exchange." But our source said close to a "dozenpeople, including six police officers" were killed in the last two days. He also said that tensions were running high between Tigrayan and Amhara residents of the town in what he sees as a "dangerous ethnic confrontation." "Some Tirayan students are considering leaving campus because they are afraid that they might become targets of the ethnicconfrontation," he said.

Pictures circulating on social media show a bus and a couple of cars belonging to the regional government burning. Addis Standard couldn't independently verify these pictures. However, Yesterday's statement fromthe task force admitted that several business establishments were vandalized and property damaged.

Identity question

In what several members of the Wolkayit community in north western Ethiopia say was a forced decision by the federal government, the Wolkayit people were made to join the Humera administrative zone in Tigray regional state following the ethnic based federal arrangements of the early 1990s. However community members continue protesting sayingthe decision was not only an administrative decision but also one that affects their question of identity.

In the last two decades therefore members of the Wolkayit community were demanding both the federal and the regional governments to join the Amhara regional state; they also say they identify themselves as Amharas and not Tigrayans. Both the federal and regional governmentsinsist the Wolkayit question has been answered once and for all. In February 2016, the people of Wolkayit were paraded in front of the national TV carrying placards that declared all their questions, includingtheir questions of identity, as have been answered once and for all.

Last year a group of people who call themselves as “Wolkayit committee”travelled to Addis Abeba to file the community’s demand to Ethiopia’s House of Federation (HoF). However, several of them were arrested. Theidentity question of the Wolkayit people continued to intensify as Ethiopiais facing similar questions from various parts of the country.

But in what came as ‘surprising’ to our source, the statement from the National Intelligence and Security Service and Federal Police Joint Anti- Terrorism Taskforce failed to make any connection between the unrest and the Wolkayit community’s demands. It said, instead, that the individuals were connected to armed terrorist organizations operating from Eritrea and were wanted for armed robbery, hostage taking and killings of civilians over the last week of June. Yesterday, another statement from the task force says one of the two ‘ringleaders’ on the police wanted list has given himself up to the police. It also said only onecivilian was killed in a crossfire.

Following the incident, which sparked a city-wide protest in the last two days, “Gondar is tense”, our source said, adding several businesses havealso remained closed.
A report by Jerusalem Post said Israeli government was evacuating Jewish Agency emissaries stationed in Gondar city for fear “amid ethnicviolence.

EDUCATION IN ETHIOPIA

Some Facts on Honorary & Bogus Degrees

Honorary degrees recognize those who have made profound and enduringcontributions to scholarship, culture, and improved quality of life in societyat large. Achievements of national or international significance deserve priority consideration. It is important that recipients be persons of great integrity, as the choices we make reflect our values as an institution. (http://www.washington.edu/ceremony/honorary-degrees/procedures)

In accordance with state statute, “No degree shall ever be conferred in consideration of the payment of money or the giving of property of whatsoever kind.” RCW 28B.20.130 (ibid) Depending on the achievement,schools may present different types of honorary doctorate degrees. Someschools may offer only a Doctor of Philosophy degree, while others bestowa degree based on the accomplishment of the recipient. A few examples include: Doctor of Humane Letters - acknowledging academic distinction Doctor of Laws - awarded to professionals in the field of law Doctor of Science - recognizing revolutionary scientific research and discovery Doctor of Fine Arts - conferred primarily to musicians, actors,architects and artists Doctor of Divinity - bestowed upon exceptional religious figures (m/articles/What_are_Honorary_Doctorate_Degrees.html)

By awarding honorary degrees, the University recognizes those individualswhose accomplishments are of such excellence that they provide inspiration and leadership to its graduates. As well, through its choice of honorary degree recipients, the University makes a public declaration of its values. In selecting candidates, the University should attempt to choose individuals of such a caliber that in honoring them, it too is honored. The Honorary Degrees and Convocations Committee should attempt, through its recommendations of nominees, to reflect the culturaldiversity of the country and the international character and diversity of the University itself. It should also attempt to honor those whose outstanding contributions to their fields or to society have not yet been widely recognized. Stop this nonsense, Addis Ababa University - Nyasa Times

July 19, 2016

It seems Addis Ababa University is trying hard to gain internationalrecognition by conferring on some people honorary degrees for achievements that are entirely false.

According to Dr Admassu Tsegaye, President of the Addis Ababa University, who presided over the conferring on President Peter Mutharikaan honorary doctorate last week, Mutharika has led Malawi from aid to trade, has diversified Malawi’s economy, and has fought corruption. It wasfor these reasons that Addis Ababa University decided to confer on him anhonorary doctorate. But, seriously, folks, did Tsegaye say this based on any evidence at all or he just dreamed up stuff to justify the conferring of the degree on our president? Which trade has Mutharika led us to? Show us the statistics, show us the data. What were our exports before Mutharika became president? And what are our exports now? And what is the evidence of Mutharika's policies' impact on trade?

When Tsegaye says Mutharika has diversified our economy, which economy? Which diversification? Malawi has been relying on tobacco sinceindependence, and it still relies on tobacco now. After tobacco there is sugar, then tea, and so on. Officials have been singing a song for a long time to make tourism a key forex earner, but nothing has been done to make the environment more conducive for improved tourist traffic. The greatest joke is on corruption. Even as Tsegaye was saying this, a few streets away, in the Malawian embassy in Addis Ababa, hundreds of millions of kwacha were unaccounted for, the corruption having taken place on Mutharika's watch.

If this is Dr Admassu Tsegaye's way of joking, I suggest that he should stop joking with the fate of seventeen million souls. He should stop toying with the destiny of other nations. There are enough people in Ethiopia he could confer doctorates on, and for real achievements too, rather than bestowing honour on Mutharika for fictitious reasons. Fighting corruption is one area in which Mutharika has particularly shown lack of commitment.
He has rebuffed granting the Anti-Corruption Bureau (ACB) theindependence it needs to fight corruption more effectively.

In March this year, when a bill to grant ACB independence was brought before Parliament, Mutharika's Democratic Progressive Party (DPP) and itsallies defeated it handily, and Mutharika was gleeful that the bill had failed.

This was despite the fact that both in the DPP's manifesto and also in his own speeches during the general election campaign, Mutharika promised to relinquish some of his powers and grant the ACB independence. So for any foreigner to suggest that Mutharika is fighting corruption to the extentthat merits recognition with an honorary doctorate is to demonstrate that that honorary doctorate is useless, and is awarded based on fictitious reasons. I would have had no problem if the Addis Ababa University wanted to award Mutharika as a former lecturer of theirs, but not to insulta nation by claiming that Mutharika has achieved something he has not.

Truth be told: Mutharika's style of governing involves putting the government machinery on auto-pilot, hoping that nothing goes wrong. When he attempts to step out of his comfort zone to explain his policies tothe people, he appears disconnected from reality.

In Zomba, for instance, he promised that his government would build a stadium and a shopping mall, as if these two pieces of infrastructure arewhat Zomba – with its general hospital in disrepair – really needs right now.

In Mulanje, he asked people to cope with famine by eating mice [and zicheche]. Foreign universities must stop this nonsense of manufacturingachievements for our president, because it, truly, is an insult that is entirely uncalled for.

The turmoil in the Republic of South Sudan is expected to be much more serious than the one before and Ethiopia wants to make a military intervention. For this, it needs an approval from the parliament in US dollars, otherwise, there is nothing South Sudan will bring anything for Tigray. The other most important as I posed it already the Diqalu Tigray are working so hard to prevent the union going after the criminals of Eritrea leadership and theyhave to declare war on South Sudan and the union cannot fight in to twofronts and Eritrea will remain as the bully of Tigrayans from the north side.

The South Sudan intervention is to serve the interests of other countriesand corrupted Generals to be paid

Some other say for sure that the Adwa tribalists are pushing their Adwa man to be PM such as Arkebe the fraude PHD the smartest on this universe per their tribalist website Aiga form(what ever the name is since I never ever clicked that site in my life). But I will stern warn Sebhat Neganot to push Hailemariam Desalegn in order to put your Adwa man. It will be huge backlash by all ethnics and most Tigrayans will not like it due to counter productive for Tigray. Do not touch him let him finish his term andthe main problem is not him but it is Sebhat Nega with the rest of the Diqalu who are refusing to take pro active action to counter the evil criminals in Eritrea for the last 19 years. As Tigrayan we do not want to mess on that position right now, you guys already messed up so many things without thinking the long term consequences like the Addis Ababa expansion nothing to serve Tigray interests.

Korean Textile Company Starts Operation The company invested 49 million Br and employs 1,500 peopleBy LUCY KASSA FORTUNE STAFF WRITER

Shints ETP Garment Plc, a Korean textile company which has rented shedsin the government- owned Bole Lemi Industrial Park started operation a week ago.

Present at the inauguration ceremony, which was held at the factory site onOctober 12, 2015 were, Arkebe Oqubay (PhD), special advisor to the PrimeMinister; Moonhawan Kim, Korean ambassador to Ethiopia; Taddess Haile, state minister for Industry, and other officials.

Shints joined the rapidly expanding textile sector with an investment of 49million Br, excluding the cost of rent for the five sheds it occupies. Three ofthe sheds cover 5,000sqm, whereas the other two are 10,000sqm each.
Each of the first two sheds have 24 lanes that will serve as finishing rooms,while another two have 20 lanes each, dedicated to computer-aided design(CAD) and automatic fabric cutting. Whereas the last sheds have 20 laneseach and serve as warehouses.

Fully importing its textile inputs from the Middle East, the company’s textileoutputs are mainly sportswear and other types of outdoor clothing. It has the capacity to produce around 20,000 pieces per month, destined exclusively for export to the United States, Italy and Spain. It is targetingexport revenue of 1.5 million dollars a year, according to Joseph Kim, general manager. The company plans to install a system at the end of 2015, for higher quality and efficiency.

At this stage the company employs around 1,500 people, which it intends toincrease to 4,800 in the long run.

The textile industry is expected to generate more income and achieve thegoals set in the second growth and transformation plan (GTP II), said Taddess during the press briefing at the inauguration, adding that bilateraland multilateral trade agreements such as the African Growth and Opportunity Act (AGOA), would give the country a competitive edge to export duty free products and benefit the locally operating foreign companies.

There are around 130 textile factories in the country, with 37 of them ownedby foreign investors. Turkish company, Ayka Addis is the largest of all the textile companies in the country producing around 70,000 pieces of garment a day. With the outputs of these companies, export revenue from textile and garment products in the fiscal year 2013/2014 was 111.3 millionBr.

In the Bole Lemi Industrial Park there are three more sheds operated by textile and garment factories and two leather companies. The 156ha park has 15 sheds that are currently under construction. The work is 98pc complete but the sheds have all been rented already. According to Mengestu Regassa, head of the Bole Lemi Branch Office there is high demand for textile sheds in the industrial park, which could not be met by the existing number of sheds. Power and water supply are also challengingthe operation, he said.

The History of Foreign Diplomacy In Ethiopia

Ethiopia is one of the oldest civilizations in the world, with its history spanning over three thousand years. Throughout this long history, situated as it is at a veritable crossroads of Africa, the Middle East and Asia, it has enjoyed varied relations with the outside world. Friendly trading relations have alternated with conflicts with external powers that often involved bloody wars. Ethiopia's modern diplomatic history can be traced back to the reign of Emperor Theodros II in the mid nineteenth century who sought to forge strong diplomatic relations with the outside world, most notably with countries in Western Europe. His vision of a developed and prosperous Ethiopia pitted him against all sorts of enemiesand sparked off the need to obtain the best scientific and technical expertise from what he justifiably considered were the most advanced nations of the day. He received a number of emissaries of western nationsat his court, trying hard to get their advice and counsel on how to developEthiopia. In 1868, he committed suicide when defeated by a British army.

Theodros' tradition of contact with western powers was closely followed bythe Emperor Yohannes IV (1874-1889) who was equally aware of the value of maintaining good relations with the rest of the world, though he too had his problems not least with the Mahdi in the Sudan and with the Italian encroachments into northern Ethiopia. Notable among the diplomatic missions during his reign were the British delegations of Augustus Wylde (1883), Vice-Admiral Hewett 1884 and Gerald Portal (1887) concerning the withdrawal of Egyptian garrisons from Sudan after the Mahdi's revolt, the British promise to hand over Massawa which had been in Egyptian hands and their subsequent gifting of it to Italy.

The regime of Emperor Minelik saw an increased flurry of diplomatic activities with Ethiopia reaching out to more capitals in Europe than ever before. The onset of the so-called scramble for Africa increased the necessity for more intense diplomatic activities by Ethiopia as it had to grapple with the colonial ambitions of various European nations, notably, Britain, France and Italy. After the humiliating defeat of the Egyptians in Sudan and their subsequent withdrawal from the coastal areas of what is now Eritrea, the Italians proceeded to take over Massawa and immediatelybegan their advance inland. Emperor Minelik came to power in 1889 and immediately faced a formidable challenge from Italy which had already managed to take over most of the territory north of the Merab River.
Notable among the diplomatic developments involving Emperor Minelik was the treaty of Wuchale signed with Italy in May 1889 shortly after Yohannis' death. Neither party seems to have realized that its interpretation would become a major problem though certainly the Italianenvoy, Count Antonelli, was aware that the Amharic text gave Minelik theoption of using Italy's good offices for contacts with other counties while the Italian text obligated him to make all such contacts through Italy.
Differences over the interpretation of the treaty, which Minelik abrogatedin 1893 ultimately led to the Battle of Adowa in 1896 when an Italian invading force was wiped out.

Ethiopia's resounding victory at the battle of Adowa went a long way to further cement Ethiopia's position as the only independent nation in the entire African continent. It rapidly led to treaties with Italy, France and Britain regularizing Ethiopia's relations with these three colonial powers. Italso led to a significant increase in the nation's diplomatic relations with the rest of the world. A number of diplomatic missions from all parts of the world arrived in Ethiopia and formal diplomatic relations were established with Italy, Germany, the UK, France and Russia as well as more than a dozen other European countries. In 1903, following a nine day mission headed by Robert Skinner, the American Consul-General in Marseilles, a Treaty to Regulate Commercial Relations between the US andEthiopia was signed.

Diplomacy was to take centre stage as the country began to take more serious steps to modernize following Ras Tefferi's growing access to poweras Regent from 1916 and then as Emperor Haile Selassie from 1930. This was symbolized by Ethiopia's growing adoption of western life styles and development, with more and more diplomatic missions being sent abroad and equally numerous foreign delegations being received in Addis Ababa. Ras Tefferi's coronation as Haile Selassie in 1930 attracted visitors from allround the world.

While Ethiopia's entry to the League of Nations in 1923 was perhaps one of the most important milestones in Ethiopia's diplomatic history, as important in public relations terms was Ras Tefferi's visit the next year to Jerusalem, Egypt, France, Italy, Belgium, Luxembourg, Switzerland, Sweden, Great Britain, and Greece. Membership of the League of Nations was considered important in ensuring the acceptance of Ethiopia's independence, but the League's member states failed to make any seriouseffort to stop Fascist Italy's invasion in 1935. Haile Selassie himself spoketo the League of Nations: "I ask the fifty-two nations, who have given theEthiopian people a promise to help them in their resistance to the aggressor, what are they willing to do for Ethiopia? And the great Powers who have promised the guarantee of collective security to small States onwhom weighs the threat that they may one day suffer the fate of Ethiopia,I ask what measures do you intend to take? Representatives of the World I have come to Geneva to discharge in your midst the most painful of the duties of the head of a State. What reply shall I have to take back to my people?" The League's failure left a lasting scar on the history of the concept of collective international security and justice.

However, it did not destroy Ethiopia's belief in the concept of collective security. Indeed, the effect was rather to make the country more determined than ever to ensure that in the future such concepts should be made to work. Ethiopia became a founding member of the United Nations and it has subsequently played a significant role in all subsequent efforts to make sure that the success of collective security. Ethiopia's participation in the United Nations operations in Korea and then in Congo,as well as later in Rwanda, Burundi, Liberia and Sudan are a testament to the country's unyielding commitment to collective security.

Ethiopia: The once-sleeping giant challenging Kenya's dominance

By Lee Mwiti Monday, Jul 18th 2016 at 23:45

NAIROBI: Few countries in Africa boast a history as rich as Ethiopia's. Egypt with its pyramids comes close, but that is about it. The nation oncecalled Abyssinia produced kings and queens whose legacy stretches all theway back to biblical times; its might and riches were legendary. But the Ethiopia of modern times is different.

Its hot-blooded communist revolutionaries, led by the autocrat MengistuHaile Mariam, seized power from Emperor Haile Selassie and officially pronounced Ethiopia a socialist state in 1975. The country adopted a Marxist economic system that saw all its state corporations nationalised,and large-scale agricultural lands taken over by the government. The private sector was quashed, and the country's markets were closed entirely from neighbouring capitalist countries such as Kenya. But the lack of trade opportunities with its neighbours and inefficiencies in managing the state-controlled economy saw Ethiopia tumble like a wounded giant into the 1990s and early 2000s.

In 1990, Ethiopia had a gross national product of $6 billion (Sh607.8 billion at current exchange rates). Its citizens earned an average annual income of about $120 (Sh12,175), one of the lowest per capita incomes ofany country in the world. Weighed down by economic problems, such as falling productivity, soaring inflation, growing dependence on foreign aid and loans, high unemployment, and a deteriorating balance of payments, a deep social crisis saw the socialist ruling class change the country's economic model. It adopted a more open system that now encourages foreign investment and trade.

On April 5 this year, the Ethiopian parliament passed landmark legislationthat eases restrictions on foreign financial institutions. The move has been termed a watershed moment in Ethiopia's unfolding economic recovery story. Now foreign financial firms can operate in Ethiopia with minimal government control. Ethiopia's parliament made the concession largely to be allowed to join the African Trade Insurance Agency (ATI) after signing of a treaty with the continental body.

1. እንደተለመደው ሕወሃት ወስኖ፣ በኢሕአዴግ ፖሊት ቢሮ አጸድቆ በቶሎ ፓርላማው እንዲወስነው የፈለገው ነገር አለ። አንዳንዶች በኤርትራ ላይ ጦርነት ለማወጅ ነው የሚል አስተያየት ይሰጣሉ። እኔ አይመስለኝም። ሕወሃቶች ሞኝ አይደሉም በአሁኑ ወቅት ኤርትራ ላይ ጦርነት የሚያደረጉት። ኤርትራ ምን ስላደረገቻቸው? ኤርትራ ያሉ ደርጅቶች እኮ ከወሬ ዉጭ ያረጉት ነገር የለም። ይሄን ደግሞ ወያኔዎች ጠንቅቀውታውቃሉ። ለወያኔዎች ትልቅ ራስ ምታት የሆነ ውየ ሕዝቡ እምቢተኝነት ነው።

2. ሃይለማሪያም ደሳለኝ እጅግ በጣም ደካማ የሆነ ሰው ነው። የጦር ሃይሎች ጠቅላይ አዛዥ ሆኖ እንኳን ፣ የኤታ ማጆር ሹሙን ሳሞራ የኑስን ቢሮዬ እንድትመጣ ብሎ ለማዘዝ የሚፈራ ሰው ነው። እንደውእንደሚባለው ህወሃቶች ሙሉ አድርገው እየሰደቡት ያዋርዱታል ሁሉ ይባላል። እንዲህ አይነት የጥቁት ሕወሃቶች መጨፈሪያ የሆነ ጠቅላይ ሚኒስተር አገርን እና ህዝብን እየጎዳ ነው።፡ በዚህም ምክንያት ብአዴን እና ኦህዴድ ጡንቻቸውን በማፈርጠም፣ ይሄንሰው በመቀየር፣ ለሕወሃቶች ታዛዥና አጎብዳጅ ያለሆነ ጠቅላይ ሚኒስተር ለመሾም አስበውም ሊሆን ይችላል።

3. ህወሃትን ጨሮ እንዳለ ኢሕአዴግ በአገሪቷ ያለውቀውስ አስቸኳይ መፍትሄ እንደሚያስፈልገውበማመን፣ በፖሊት ቢሮ ደረጃ ኢሕአዴግ ተሰማምቶ መሰረታዊ የሆኑ ለዉጦችን በቶሎ በማድረግ አገር ወደ ከፋ ደረጃ እንዳትሄድ አንዳንድ ዉሳኔዎች እንድወሰኑ ይሆናል ፓርላማው የተጠራው። መቼም ትንሽም ቢሆን ጥሩ ነገር ተስፋ ማድረግ አይከፋም። ለምሳሌ የጸረ-ሽብር ሕጉን ለጊዜው ተግባራዊ አይሆንም ብለው ቢሰርዙት፣ እጅግ በጣም ብዙየ ሕሊና እስረኞች ይፈታሉ።

የብሄራዊ እርቅ የሚያመቻችና የሕግ መንግስቱና የየፌዴራል አከላለልን አጥንቶ ማሻሻያዎች የሚያቀርብ ኮሚሽን ቢያቋቁሙየወልቃይት ጉዳይ፣ የአዲስ አበባ እና የኦሮሚያ ጉዳይ እንዲሁም
ሌሎችም በሂደት ሊፈቱ እንደሚችሉ ለሕዝቡ ተስፋ ሊሰጥ ይችላል። ለማንኛውም እናያለን

Exclusive interview:

After deadly protests in Gondar what should the government donext? By ADDIS STANDARD July 21, 2016

Between July 12th and 14th more than a dozen people were killed in a protest in Gondar, northern Ethiopia, that followed a raid by heavily armed federal security forces, including the Anti-Terrorism special force, targeting members of the Wolkayit community who have been protestingagainst the federal government's decision to incorporate the area where the community lives into the Tigray regional state. The Wolkayit community members also reject the idea of them being ethnically considered as Tigrayan and want to identify themselves as Amhara.

The government said 11 of its security forces were killed during a shootout between members of the community and security forces. Severaleye witnesses put this number, including the number of civilians, at more than 20. Many cars belonging to the government were set ablaze and businesses considered to be affiliated with the Tigray People Liberation Front (TPLF), the all too powerful party within the ruling EPRDF, were vandalized by protesters, sparking, although unfounded, fears of ethnic violence.

After a negotiated surrender to the local police of Colonel Demeke Zewdu,the leader of the "Wolkayit Committee" who has represented the community to lodge complaints both at the regional and federal governments, calm seems to have returned to the city of Gondar, a historic city home to thousands of tourists every year. But many fear the federal security forces' attempt to take the colonel into its custody may spark further resistance from members of the community and residents ofthe city at large.

Addis Standard interviewed Tsegaye R. Ararssa of the Melbourne lawschool and a constitutional law expert, on the genesis of the Wolkayitquestion and what lies ahead. Excerpts:

Addis Standard – If you can please explain to our readers the genesis ofthe recent protest in Gondar in Amhara regional state? What lies at the heart of the matter?

Tsegaye R. Ararssa – The protest has its roots in the decisions made in the 1990s when the area was first incorporated into Tigray region as part of the larger TPLF-EPRDF scheme of restructuring the Ethiopian state, devolving power to self-governing regional entities, and recognizing the right of "nations, nationalities and peoples" to self-determination (Proc No 7/1992). When Tigray was reconstituted as Region one, this area, which hitherto had been part of Gondar Province, was made part of Region one and formed what came to be known as the Western Province of the Regional State of Tigray. The Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia (FDRE) constitution of 1995 endorsed that by the simple acceptance of Region 1 as the Tigray Region, also known formally as the 'Tigray NationalRegional Government.' The boundary was taken for granted. No discussionwas made about the boundaries. No consideration of the will/consent of the people was made. No consideration of the settlement pattern was made; if anything, it was ignored especially in this locality. Nor were the identity and language patterns of the area. This stood in stark contrast to what the constitution (in its article 46) prescribes for delimitation of inter-regional boundaries.

AS – Can you explain these factors that lay out the delimitation as per theconstitution?

TA – According to art 46 (2) of the FDRE Constitution, four factors: settlement pattern, consent, identity, and language, are the factors to consider in the process of delimiting states. As it is well known, as a frontier area, three languages are commonly spoken in the area: Amharic,Tigrigna, and Arabic. But the vast majority of the people there identify themselves as Amhara. This is as true as it is today, although there was amassive Government-driven Tigryan settlement in the area since the 1990s. The settlement is presumed in some circles as a TPLF strategy of diluting the demographics of the area, but the majority still seem to identify themselves as Amhara nonetheless. And the settlers, most of whom are former TPLF fighters that were demobilized after 1992, view themselves as Tigryan settlers. In short, like everywhere else, the criteria of delimiting regions in art 46 (2) were ignored, and we, as a country, continue to bleed from the reckless delimitation that was done then. The current conflict is an example of the problem of TPLF-EPRDF failure to deliver its own constitutional promises.

AS – When did the people of the area start protesting against thisarrangement?

TA –The arrangement was rejected by the local people from the very start. The people protested the decision then, but their protest was ignored by the TPLF dominated EPRDF government and was submerged atthe national level by several other political issues (such as the Eritrean referendum, the precarious peace among the parties that “negotiated” thetransition, emergence of low-profile local conflicts among various groups, etc) that proliferated in the face of the state crisis. However, it persisted as a low key, intermittent, ad hoc, if disorganized, resistance to the regime. It is important to note, incidentally, that the resentment was openly expressed in the society through local songs in the area and in the wider Amhara region for the last two decades and a half. (In most of these Amharic songs, the names of the towns and villages in the area were invoked as part of Gondar as they used to be before the ascension topower of TPLF-EPRDF. Fasil Demoz’s song is only one example.

AS – but the government maintains the current crisis was orchestrated byEritrean based rebel groups with the support from the Eritrean government.

TA –The genesis of the current crisis has its roots in not paying attention to the identity, consent, settlement pattern, and language of the people ofthe area in the process of delimiting the region. And this is not accidental.

Many people from the area consider it as part of the TPLF's ambition to impose Tigryan hegemony both in the region and in the wider country byincorporating and subsuming peoples in the periphery of its historic borders under Tigrayan political dominance. (The Raya-Oromo of the historical Wollo and the Afar of historic Afar are now incorporated into Tigray (and rendered totally invisible in the region). The Kunama and theIrob (also called Saho in some writings) are the other numerically small groups who, although part of the historic Tigray, were culturally and linguistically suppressed and rendered invisible in the region struggling even to assert a Woreda-level self-government.) There is also the view that the TPLF wants to take economic advantage of the relatively more fertile nature of the land in the area.

AS – What changed in recent years? How did the protest gain momentum?

TA – In recent years, the hitherto sporadic, fragmented, and disorganizedresentment gathered momentum and found an organizational expression through the "Wolkayit Committee" that launched a legal campaign of self-definition by recognizing their distinct identity as Amharas. They believe they are wrongly placed in Tigray region. They presented their claim at various levels of governance: at the levels of District, Zone, State, and Federal Governments. The central claim of their demand is the right to self-definition as Amhara rather than Tigryan. They relied on art 39 of theFederal Constitution and its regional equivalent. Apparently, they took self-definition, rightly, as a form of self-determination.

The demand for self-definition was however not an end in itself. Through self-definition, they sought to advance what is otherwise known as a demand for "ethno-cultural justice." They sought to redress the neglect of their culture as Amhara (holidays, songs, dresses, styles, etc), the marginalization of their language (Amharic) as a medium of providing social services (e.g. education, administration, justice, etc), and their exclusion or severe marginalization in 'representative' political and administrative institutions. They also feel politically dominated by the Tigrayan majority that came up with a series of land laws that effected thetransfer of land to Tigryan investors and settlers thereby increasingly displacing the indigenous inhabitants. The coordinators of the demand also suggest that there are social and local government pressure for the Wolkayit Amhara people to leave the land to the region and go. Implicit in their demand (so far unstated, I think) is the interest to be re- incorporated as part of the Amhara Region South of the border. This is seen as a form of irredentism that leaves Tigray at a disadvantage. The demand has thus activated the fear that this may lead to losing to the Amhara region, often perceived as their traditional rivals.
The grassroots mobilization and formal presentation of the demand provoked a political rage from the TPLF in the region and in the FederalGovernment. In the first place the regime failed the question primarily because of its undeclared aspiration to impose Tigryan hegemony both inthe region and in the country. There is a Tigryan nationalist desire to expand the territory and entrench the power and privileges of the Tigryannation. And they want to do this top-down undemocratically. That is the central problem.

Although legal resolution of the problem could have been easier, they resorted to political footballing (playing back and forth between the Regionand the Federal government) and outright military violence—which has ultimately led to the recent uprising in Gonder. Consequently, the demandhas been met with repressive violence almost at every turn. The coordinators, conscious residents, and activists have been routinely harassed and intimidated, arrested, detained, beaten or otherwise abused by local government officials. There are reports that several people – sometimes claimed to be over a hundred – are subjected to enforced disappearance in these localities. Their right to freely assemble, associate,and organize on the matter has been brutally suppressed. The coordinators complain that they couldn't even hold a public meeting to gather petitions. They charge that their constitutional rights to freedom of assembly, association, petition, and more are consistently violated by the local and regional government. As a result, they had to rely on local self- help associations and restaurants, cafes, market places to have the petition signed. But they were followed by security officials wherever they go. They were even arrested in Addis Abeba while they were on a mission to submit their demand to the House of Federation (HoF).

The coordinators say that [they] had better freedom in the neighbouring Gonder city where they organized a couple of public meeting for the residents of the city as well as the people from their localities. Most of themobilizers and the activists were in safer Gonder when the security forcescame to arrest them on July 12th which provoked so much anger from theresidents of the wider Gonder.

The outburst in Gonder should be understood in context: a long held resentment against the general frustration with the democratic exercise owing to the general closure of the political space and people's deprivationof any avenue of having a say; the perceived privilege of Tigryans living inthe city and in the wider country; the perceived cession of a legitimately Ethiopian (Gondere) territory to the neighbouring Sudan; the unfair economic exploitation of the area that historically belonged to Gonder; theperceived mishandling of the Qemant question and the trauma socially experienced because of the deadly conflict that ensued therefrom; and thelong-held anger about the incorporation of the Wolkayit area into Tigray without their consent in the first place.

AS – The government is repeatedly saying the protest has nothing to dowith Wolkayit's identity question. But we have, if you like, a governmentthat first introduced a federal system in which Ethiopia will be celebratedas a multi-nation state, but why do you think is this same government trying to distort the truth now and distance itself from it?

TA –The Ethiopian government is caught in a deadly paradox. On the one hand, it projects an image of a multinational federal state in which, at least in theory, ALL groups have the right to self-determination. On the other hand, it subscribes to a political practice that represses all rights of groups as well as individuals. Denial of group rights is often justified on the basis of the wrong claim that the question of group rights (alias knownas the National Question) is fully and finally addressed through the constitution in 1995. Denial of individual rights is often justified in the name of 'legal limits' or by claiming that the violation of the result of lack of good governance, development, and the imperfection of a young democracy. The contradiction between its projected image and its politicalpractice, the tension between the legal rhetoric and the political reality, couldn't anymore be contained. Hence, the almost total inability to address just demands of the people. The contradiction demonstrates the unsustainable tension between the pretension of the regime to practice "democratic federalism" on the one hand and its abysmal performance in ensuring democratic opening and in enhancing federalist accommodation of diversities. The failure to address this issue is the final and perhaps the most conclusive example of the limits of the regime pretension both in terms of democratizing the state and decentralized exercise of state power.

AS – There are voices that strongly claim that the aftermath of the protest(the burning of buses and business establishments belonging to a particular ethnic group – the Tigrayans in Gondar) is, in the first place, theresult of the current Ethiopian constitution that introduced what's commonly known as "ethnic federalism." As an expert on constitutionalism, what's your take on that?

TA – No, if anything, it is refusal to implement the promises of multinational federalism that led to this crisis. It seems to me that the crisis is caused by the absence of federalism of any sort rather than too much of it as the regime's critics say. If the regime adheres to the type offederalism that it proclaimed, responding to the demands of self-definitionwould have been the simplest of responsibilities to discharge. In multinational federalism one has more resources than could address the right to self-definition and preservation of one's local, ethnic, or national identity. If anything, this is a demonstration of the need for a more aggressive implementation of the right to self-determination that the Ethiopian multinational federation endorses. Negatively, it exposed the regime's democratic pretensions thereby showing how a federalism without democracy becomes an instance of the abuse of cultural pluralism. It confirmed to us the pattern that suggests that without democracy, federalism tends to degenerate into ‘bad’ pluralism (amongwhich apartheid is an outstanding example).

AS – Once again, the government seems to have hit another dead end with the people of Ethiopia, this time through the people of Wolkayit. What should the government do next to deal with the people of Wolkayit?

TA –Yes. It could have handled it better. It had all the constitutional-legalresources it could deploy to handle it better. The solution is not easy but fairly uncomplicated: first, restore peace. Release the activists. Remove the army. Stop the harassment, the arrest, and enforced disappearances.Secondly, allow the people to decide on their identity (if they are Amharaor Tigray). This can be done by a referendum as per the words of the constitution and Proclamation 250/2001. This satisfies the question of self-definition. The demography settles it. The option that gets most of thevotes will win. Thirdly, allow the people to decide to which region (Tigray or Amhara) they want to be incorporated into. If the decision of the majority is to be part of the Amhara region, then deal with the issues of inter-state borders and issues related to that. If the decision is to remain in Tigray, then deal with the issue of the rights of those who wanted out.
If the decision is to be by themselves, then, depending on whether they submit a demand for a separate statehood in the federation, conduct another referendum to decide on statehood. Whichever way you want togo, the basic principle is simple: listen to the demands of the people andrespect their choices. Period.

Ethiopian Stage & Theater Legend Abate Mekuria Died’

By Arefayné Fantahun

Abate Mekuria, a renowned Ethiopian director,choreographer, and producer who worked in film, television, and theatre passed away lastnight of prostate cancer. He was 72.

Abate had undergone treatment for prostate cancer some months ago. Having not shown much improvement, he was taken to Egypt for an advanced treatment. He came back a month ago with no progress. His health deteriorated and he was againhospitalized in Addis Ababa Hiwot hospital where he passed away.

Abate had begun his career at the Creative Arts Center in the 1960’s before studyingdrama in Britain. A fine producer, he produced more than 15 theatres, including ‘Ha Hu Besedest Wor’, ‘Abugida Keyeso’, ‘Melekite Wezader’, ‘Yementa Enat’, ‘Mekdem’, ‘Gammo’, ‘Othello’, ‘Tewodros’, ‘Hamus’, ‘Alula Aba Nega’, ‘Yalacha Gabicha’, ‘Shoe-Shine Opera’ and ‘Oedipus Rex’.

Debebe Eshetu Remembers a Theatre Great,

As told to Ethiopia Observer, Abate Mekuria was a friend, one of Ethiopia’sall-time greatest stage directors, and one of the most generous people I have ever known. He was exceptionally gifted and he radiated light. I first met him in the 60’s, at the Creative Arts centre of the Addis Ababa University. He was one of the founding members the Centre along with Dr.Philip Caplan, Tesfaye Gessesse, Tsegaye Gebre-Medhin, and Mengistu Lemma. That period was an eventful time in Ethiopia and the centre played an important task by training actors and giving general courses in theatre. European dramas such as those by Becket, Tennessee Williams's,Eugène Ionesco and Eugene O'Neill were produced. Mengistu Lemma's 'YaLacha Gabicha' (Marriage of Unequal) were also performed then, which was direct by Abate, in which I had an acting role. We remained friends since then. We also worked together at the Ethiopian Television.

Abate was warm, vibrant, compassionate and funny. What I remember about him is affable nature, so natural and engaging. I remember all the good times we had together, compassion and kindness. He always brought comfort, and laugh to the group. Abate was brilliant in more thanone sense of the word. I always regarded him as a pillar of our theatre, because of his devotion to the arts. He was a brilliant producer.
Throughout his careers he continually set the standards against whichother new shows were judged.
He was also a brilliant teacher. When he was in charge of the City Hall Theatre, he trained many actors and artists. He managed to channel suchconfident expertise into lifting up the next generation of artists. Unfortunately, he was unjustly fired from this institution some two decades ago. He shouldn't have been. But being who he was, he continued working on his own, never ceasing pouring out ideas. He remained close the creative arts. Some of his bigger productions such asthe one for the centenary of Adwa was a proof.

Elisabeth Melaku pays tribute to Abate Mekuria
Director Elisabeth Melaku says Abate Mekuria, who died Wednesday at age 76, was an influential director. The first time I met him was in 1988 for the restaging of Mengistu Lemma's 'Ya Lacha Gabicha' (Marriage of Unequal), which he directed. He restaged this play to pay expense for hospital fees of the author Mengistu who unfortunately was in his death bed. Abate casted me for the role Woizero Alganesh, even though I was skinny then. The play run for about year and half at the City Hall. I was just a new graduate of the Theatre's Art Department. He was an amazingdirector. His style of directing was new and authentic. I learned a lot of things from him. On another occasion he considered me for the performances of Ye Listro Opera (The shoe-shine Boy's Opera, 1990). ButI think his patience wore a little thin with me. He would fire me. My second chance of working with him did not transform into reality. I wouldI was not lucky. All the same, his influence is still visible in my work.

IN COMMEMORATION OF THE ADWA VICTORY!

Thabo Mbeki celebrates 120 years of the Adwa Victory

By Prof. Al Mariam July 21, 2016

Former President Thabo Mbeki was the keynote speaker at a session tocelebrate 120 years of the battle of ADWA. This session was part of theAfrica Unity for Renaissance Conference & Africa Day Expo on 25

May 2016. The session took place at Ditsong Museum of South Africa in Tshwane.

He addressed the session on “The 120 Years of the Adwa African Victory.”Led by Empress Taitu, the wife of Emperor Menelik II, and the Emperor’s generals, the patriotic Ethiopian army defeated the Italian colonial forces at Adwa, Ethiopia on 1 March 1896 and thus secured Ethiopia’s independence from colonial rule. The victory at Adwa would later serve asan inspiration in the struggle against colonial rule to subsequent generations of Ethiopians and other Africans throughout the Continent.

ETHIOPAN: THE POSSIBLE SEQUENCE OF EVENTS

The Case of Rwanda: Lessons for Ethiopia

By Dawit Woldegiorgis July 22, 2016

Note Readers: In “The Case of Rwanda: Lessons for Ethiopia” Dawit Woldegiorgis warns about unjustified hatred and possible genocide against Tigrians in Ethiopia.

This is article is meant for Ethiopians to remind them to learn lessons fromthe Rwandan genocide. Some might think that such kind of scenario will never happen in Ethiopia. But just think about it: who thought that a country called Somalia with one language, one ethnic group and one religion would so rapidly fall apart and be a failed state for two decades?

Who would have thought that the former Yugoslavia would disintegrate and result in the kind of genocide and ethnic cleaning we have seen in theheart of Europe, sending many leaders to the international criminal court?Who would have thought that South Sudan, which had its independence in2011, after decades of war, would descend to a civil war that is causing the death and displacement of hundreds of thousands of South Sudanese?Who would have thought that Muammar Gadhafi would be overthrown in such a swift and brutal way and the country plunging into civil war and becoming the breeding ground of terrorists like ISIS, an evil that slaughtered many innocent young Ethiopian migrants. And the list can go on.

Let me tell you a first hand story about the genocide in Rwanda just to remind you, though I know that you have read and heard about it and youmay have watched the movie Hotel Rwanda. In 1994, in the month of August I received a call from Ellen Sirleaf Johnson (current president of Liberia) who was then the UNDP Africa Bureau Chief. I was asked if I would be willing to head a UN emergency coordinating team to Rwanda. I accepted the offer.

That was just a few weeks after the genocide, the greatest mass murdersince the holocaust, of close to one million Tutsis and moderate Hutus ended and the Rwandan Patriotic Front had just entered victoriously to Kigali. I had never been to Rwanda before. Flying over Rwanda is an incredible experience. The scenery does not seem real. It is a beautiful country, a country of mountains as it is called in French (mille collines) and looks as if a green carpet has been plastered over the thousands of mountains with beautiful well-structured villages. But being inside Rwanda at that time would give one a very eerie experience that onewould never forget.

I had come to a country where in the last 100 days (April 6 to July 16,1994) an estimated 800,000 to I, 000,000 Tutsis and some moderate Hutus were slaughtered; between 250,000 to 400,000 women raped (67% of these were later infected with HIV); etc. The statistics on thenumber of survivors, orphans, disabled people, widows etc. are staggering. There are two major ‘ethnic’ groups in Rwanda Hutus composing of 84% and Tutsis 15% and the rest Twas, the pygmy population who comprise around 1%.

Though the two groups are one culturally and linguistically united people, they had a very brutal past. The genocide was a culmination of accumulated hatred by the majority Hutus towards the minority Tutsis; hatred and mistrust that had its roots in the Belgian colonial era. In 1860,a certain British officer by the name of John Hanning Speke:

“declared that all culture and civilization had been introduced by the tallersharper featured people who he considered Caucasians from the Horn of Africa, Ethiopians” and I may add perhaps the Oromos in particular. He considered Ethiopians to be of “Caucasian origin, descendent from the biblical King David and therefore superior race to the Negros.” Of course this is not substantiated neither by history nor by science and therefore considered either oral history or just a legend. (I however don't wish to make this subject of discussion since the intention of this article is to look into the genocide and the lessons that can be learnt). Such a contorted categorization of Africans was a convenient way for Europeans to divide and rule, in this case, by creating the illusion that Tutsi blood was more like them than was the Hutus. We see the same pattern in South Africa apartheid system where the whites were classified as first class citizens and the coloreds (half casts) who were to be the closest to the whites andtherefore treated better as second class and the Indians who, though theyare black, have sharper features third class and the black Africans came last in the ladder of categorization of South Africans and rights and privileges distributed in that order.

In Rwanda this categorization resulted in the complete marginalization of the majority during the colonial period. By the end of the Belgian presence in Rwanda in 1959, "forty three chiefs out of forty five were Tutsis as well as 549 sub-chiefs out of 559" in a country where peoples' lives and land holding system were controlled by chiefs. The result was a political and economic monopoly by the minority ethnic group. The collegeenrollments for example was:

1932 forty-five Tutsi and 9 Hutus 1945 forty-six Tutsi and three Hutu;
1954 sixty-three Tutsi and 19 including 13 from Burundi1959 two hundred seventy nine Tutsi and 143 Hutu.

Obtaining secondary education for Hutus was very difficult and even thosewho got the education had difficulty getting employment. This resulted in the creation of a special Rwandese Tutsi minority elites that controlled thelives of the majority and who believed in the Belgian and the Tutsi contorted history that made the Tutsis very different from the Hutus, a superior race narrative, which eventually was embedded into the minds ofTutsis for which they eventually paid a very dear price. The Hutus who were denied everything they had prior to the coming of the colonialists and repeatedly told they were inferior to the Tutsis, began to hate all Tutsis. "The time bomb was set and it was now only a question of when it would go off …Rwanda was not a land of peace and bucolic harmony before the arrival of the Europeans (but) there is no trace in its pre- colonial history of systematic violence between Tutsi and Hutu as such…. ideas and myths can kill, and their manipulation by elite leaders for their own material and power interest does not change the fact that in order tooperate they first have to be implanted in the souls of men." (Gerard Prunier, the Rwanda Crisis.) Tutsis started a movement for independence and this angered the Belgians who quickly changed sides and replaced theTutsi chiefs by Hutus. When Hutu leaders got this power they started settling scores and in 1959 killed over 100,000 Tutsis. A huge number of Tutsis fled to neighboring Uganda, Zaire and Burundi. It was by these refugees that the Rwandan Patriotic Front was established.

In 1994 the RPF, had intensified the war and was closing in Rwanda. Radio des Milles Collines (RTLM) financed by the government launched its program of hate and extermination just after the Arusha Accord. When the president was returning from Arusha, his plane was struck and he was killed. That incident triggered the genocide though the preparation to eliminate the Tutsis had been going on for quiet sometime.A highly educated Rwandese professor, Ferdinand Nahimana was headingthe radio programs. It was full of vitriolic propaganda of hate and clear messages for Hutu extremists to go out and kill. The radio was sending out messages that Tutsis were controlling everything and seeking supremacy and this evil and injustice perpetuated by this minority group can “be cured only by their total extermination” calling them hyenas, snakes, cockroaches, etc. It was hateful, dehumanizing, and designed to incite the people to rise up and kill Tutsis, capitalizing on the years of oppression that Hutus have endured under the real or perceived, direct and indirect control of a minority that only represented 15% of the population. It was not a spontaneous uprising. It was an uprising that had been in the making since the Habermanya government took over (the lastgovernment before the genocide). But the root of the problem goes back to the colonial period.
Many of the killers believed the Tutsis were evil people who have taken everything for themselves and treated the majority as second-class citizens and therefore deserve to be eradicated. Children wee not spared according to Radio Milles Collines “"you must also kill the rat in gestation;it will grow up to be a rat, like the others."

They used languages too graphic to repeat (if interested read Hate as a Contagion: the Role of Media in the Rwandan Genocide by Maria Armoudian). Hutus were killed for helping the fleeing Tutsis because, according to the media they were “inyenzi’ cockroaches. Rwandan Hutus were called to rise up and finish the Tutsi once and for all. They were toldto use knives, machetes and clubs.

The first few weeks in Kigali were extremely traumatizing for me. Thoughthe RPF had been there for a month and cleaned up the city as much as itcan, there were still bodies littered on the outskirts of the city and road blocks that have not yet been cleaned up, road blocks made of human corpses. We could see bodies floating on river Kivu though thousands hadalready been swept away down stream, ‘to Ethiopia’ as their killers statedwhen they threw them in to the river. One church was still full of corpses,with over 700 Tutsis who had run to the church hoping to get protection. The churches all over Rwanda had been the traditional sanctuary for these deeply religious people but on this occasion they became the convenient place where they were killed in mass. Many churches have been used as killing fields because there were a large concentration of frightened people in one small area. In one case over 2000 people had sought refuge in the largest Catholic Church Saint Famille and all of them were killed after the parish priest handed them over to their killers. Apparently he was a supporter of the Hutu extremists. The Ntarama church, where I saw over 700 corpses, has nowbeen turned over to a genocide museum. At the time I arrived there werestill some dogs feasting on human corpses and RPF had to go after stray dogs and shoot them.

Prior to the genocide, Rwanda had come a long way where it had becomesometimes difficult to make a distinction between a Tutsi and a Hutu.
There were many instances where Tutsis were mistaken for Hutus and spared from being killed. Moderate Hutus were killed because of their association to the Tutsis and because they did not want to be part of the killing machinery that was being put in place.

During the first days after the president's plane was hit, on 6 April 1994, the 'Interahamwey' (Hutu militia) started systematically killing Tutsis andHutu moderates in the villages and neighborhoods by imposing curfews and roadblocks. "The roadblocks and barriers were staffed by soldiers andgendarmerie on the main roads, while communal police, civil self-defenseforces, and volunteers guarded others. Together, they successfully stemmed the flight of victims who tried to escape the genocide. Anyone who tried to hide was tracked down by search patrols that scoured the neighborhoods, checking in ceilings, cupboards, latrines, fields, under beds, in car trunks, under dead bodies, in bushes, swamps, forests, rivers,and islands. By April 11, after barely five days, the Rwandan army, interahamwe, and party militias had killed 20,000 Tutsi and moderate Hutu" (OAU May 2000).

In villages where both Tutsis and Hutus were living together people knewwho was who and therefore identifying the Tutsi was not difficult. But in the towns and particularly in Kigali, the business and political capital, where people did not know each other, identification was difficult. The roadblocks were the key locations where many were massacred. Fleeing people were asked their ID cards. Tutsis were automatically hacked to death and those who don't have ID cards were killed as well including Hutus who were suspected of being moderate or associated with Tutsis. In Rwanda of those times all ID cards had to show the ethnicgroup one belongs to.

Jean Kambanda, Prime Minister of Rwanda during the months of the genocide, pleaded guilty to genocide and admitted that "he ordered thesetting up of roadblocks with the knowledge that these roadblocks were used to identify Tutsi for elimination" and that he participated in the distribution of arms knowing that these would be used in massacres of Tutsis (OAU May 2000).

There are many lessons leant from the Rwandan genocide. Most relate tothe response of the international community once the killing machinery was set off. Effective and active response would certainly have helped toreduce the level of carnage that took place in Rwanda in 1994, but it would never have been able to remove the level of anger and hate that were embedded in the minds of most Rwandese.

So we come to the most important lesson that Africa and particularly Ethiopia should learn from the genocide in Rwanda. The genocide in Rwanda happened because of ethnic politics and state sanctioned incitement to hate and kill. The responsible officials were disseminating contempt and demonizing the other group. The supreme court of Canada reviewing the response of the Canadian government based on the report of the then commanding Lt. General Romeo Dallaire stated "…. the holocaust did not begin in the gas chambers-it began with words. These are the chilling facts of history-the catastrophic effects of racism" and the Rwandan Tribunal stated "these acts of genocide were preceded by-and anchored in-the state orchestrated demonization and dehumanization of the minority Tutsi population-using cruel, biological of Tutsis as 'inyenzi' –prologue and justification for their mass murder." Yes genocide starts withwords. Words are the means through which hate or love is expressed. In cases of genocide and crimes against humanity, words are the means through which the flames of hate and intolerance are fanned.
The situation in Ethiopia has not reached that level yet but if it is allowed to reach that level there is no way to stop it. The rhetoric and irresponsible statements coming out from some people including government officials, from community leaders and from the major ethnic groups, which spreads faster and effectively through social media, suggests that if left on its own the situation could escalate to wide spread hatred and retribution, civil war, crimes against humanity and possibly to genocide. 'Genocide is defined in Article 2 of the Convention onthe Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (1948)'

Rwanda showed the worst that human beings can be. It showed how human beings could be manipulated to hate and kill through irresponsible leaders and members of the community in general who may harbor hatred. The hate and anger directed at particular ethnic group accumulates overtime and knows no boundaries when it is unleashed through a concerted effort of hate groups created by the deliberate polices of a government and elite groups who seem to care more about power than the long term consequences of their actions. Ethiopian leaders are accountable for what is happening now and worse on what may happen unless remedial measures are taken. "Africa's redemption is not only claspin the hands of the leadership, but moreover in the active participation in change of the average person, in the home, in the school, in the work place and in their private relationship." (African Holocaust Society)

The damage done on the relationship between the various ethnic groups in Ethiopia is grave and warrants the intervention of the international community to exert meaningful pressure to stop this build up of tensions that could lead to a catastrophic end with very severe consequences that could dwarf the Rwandan genocide. The government should be made accountable and be willing to take steps that could restore sanity and healthe gaping wounds. For this to happen, Ethiopia needs leaders who are not consumed with narrow ethnic and personal interests but leaders who capitalize on the common thread that binds the people and the common vision for unity and democracy.

The international community's indifference to the early warning signs andfaultiness is not acceptable. At this moment the major preoccupation of millions of Ethiopians has become individual and group security, stocking arms and guarding themselves from the excesses of a minority government. Some ethnic groups are spewing hate and vengeance and asin Rwanda (where Hutus hated all Tutsis) people are unjustifiably beginning to hate all Tigreans. This, of course, is unfair to the large majority of Tigreans who are themselves victims of the policies of the current government which does not truly represent the best interests of the majority of Tigreans. When such a sense of insecurity, mistrust and hate is stretched to its logical conclusion it can lead to war and possibly genocide. The silence of the international community in the face of this build up is disturbing. The international community is needed now to ensure that sanity prevails and a system that addresses the grievances ofall ethnic groups is installed sooner than later because at this stage the crisis is preventable. Conflicting western interests might not make an effective intervention possible but silence would not be appropriate either.Reconciliation, election, power sharing would not solve the fundamental problems and grievances once war starts because the stakes become higher as groups dig in deeper, the divisions become sharper and the sacrifices too many to allow easy compromises. The voice of the international community at this early stage could prevent this country from going into war with itself.

With such kind of catastrophe no one wins. In the end every body loses. There will be no Ethiopia to fight about. Each ethnic group in Ethiopia has treasures of wisdom. Let them tap to those wisdoms, let them see what ishappening around the country, let them take note of the signs of difficult times ahead, let them prevent harm on each other, let them go back to the drawing table and begin with the common factors that unite them, let them dwell less on their differences and more on the common ties that bond them or else they become one of those countries they never imagined to be. Let Ethiopians have the courage to stand together to challenge the status quo and build a democratic system that would answerthe grievances of all, because it is possible. Africa has over 3000 tribes and 2000 languages and there are only 54 states. There is, therefore, no alternative to peaceful co-existence.

I worked in Rwanda for two years and had the honor to know closely President Paul Kagame, then vice president and head of the military. His challenge and the challenge the people faced were enormous. With half a million Hutu refugees ‘interahamwes’ most of them just across the border,to build a peaceful country and begin reconciliation was indeed a very tall order. The threat of ‘Interahamwes’ unleashing another war was always there until in 1996 they returned in mass. The reconciliation program started in earnest only then. There was no family in Rwanda, in both the Hutu and Tutsi communities that were not severely affected by the genocide and yet there were no alternatives to re reconciliation and the task had to begin soon. It was difficult to bring about a majority rule as well. Democracy, in the way that has been defined by the western world posed a great danger in a country where reconciliation has not yet been complete and the memories of 1994 are still fresh in many minds. The President had to walk a fine line and the majority had to accept the reality. Pragmatism and common sense than idealism prevailed.

I left Rwanda after two years but what I saw and heard during those yearshaunted me for a long time until I returned to Kigali after ten years to seea population truly trying hard to leave the past behind, learn from the lessons and move on as one people and one nation. During my two years there I had been to the prisons and talked to former 'Interahamwes' who have been implicated in the genocide. Some were still proud that they did what they did. The unrepentant voices of some were scary and had mademe doubt whether there could ever be a true reconciliation. The numerous voices of the survivors were also bitter. But the government and the people chose the right path. For over twenty years people are slowly learning to live together ad heal the wounds together even when they know that some in either communities have been killers and still harbor hate.

There were thousands who were identified as perpetrators of the genocidelocked up in various prisons in Rwanda. To bring about justice and reconciliation, the Rwandan government introduced or reinstituted what isknown in Rwandese tradition the Gacaca community court system. In this system the communities select judges where the cases of perpetrators areheard. The court gives mitigated sentences for those who repent. In manycases those who repent are freed and allowed to go back to the community and be part of the reconciliation program where victims and perpetrators live side by side and talking to each other.

Unlike many other African countries where colonialists carved out the borders, Ethiopia was defined by its own people and its own history and the enormous sacrifices of every ethnic group. It is their only home. Like any family in a home they had differences and on many occasions each encroached on the rights and freedoms of the other in the family. But theystayed together.

No conflict in Africa is similar to another. But the underlying reasons are always the same: leadership and governance. Ethiopia does not need a genocide or civil war to learn from its own lessons. It had its own turbulent years of nation building. It is now time to learn from its own past and from what has happened elsewhere in Africa and form one unitedpeople with freedom, justice and democracy for all. As Bob Marley said: “One love, One Heart … Let’s get Together and Feel Alright.” (text ends)

OUTMIGRATION

The dangerous route of Ethiopian migrants

By Nicolas Niarchos, New Yorker July 22, 2016

The other day, on the outskirts of Fantahero, a small village in the desertof northern Djibouti, Sebhatou Mellis was sheltering from a-hundred-and-four-degree heat in the shade of an acacia tree. Mellis, who is twenty-six and has the rangy build of a runner, was about a thousand miles away from his home, in the impoverished Tigray region of northern Ethiopia.

There, he and his family had taken a government loan to help improve hisfarm, tried to invest it, and failed, he told me. “At the end, the money wasfinished, and all the people began to insult us and say that we took the money from the government and used it badly,” he said.

Mellis had come to Fantahero four days earlier, walking and hitching ridesthrough the Danakil Desert with about a dozen other Tigrayans, a journeythat took them about three weeks. Mellis’s ultimate destination, he hopes,will be Saudi Arabia, where, if he’s lucky, he’ll be able to work illegally. Toget there, he will have to cross the Bab el-Mandeb Strait, which separatesthe Middle East from the Horn of Africa, and navigate his way through war-torn Yemen. “I left to repay my debts, not to die,” he said. “But if I die, at least I will liberate myself from poverty.”

The route through Djibouti and Yemen to Saudi Arabia is an ancient one. Some seventy thousand years ago, early man left Africa across the Bab el-Mandeb. The migration began the process by which modern humans settled the Eurasian continent. The historical connection between this part of Africa and the Middle East stretches through history. Fifteen hundred years ago, the Ethiopian Aksumite Empire extended into the modern Middle East and controlled parts of Yemen.

The modern flow of people to the Middle East waxes and wanes as wars and crises afflict the countries surrounding Djibouti. Over the past decade,though, the number of migrant arrivals in Yemen from the Horn of Africa has increased more than threefold, to about ninety-two thousand last year. That figure is small compared with the million or so irregular entries into Europe last year, but the journey is made more difficult by the harsh conditions crossing the desert. Most of the migrants crossing from Djiboutiare Ethiopian, from the Oromia and Tigray regions, though some are fromSomalia, which has been locked in civil war since 1991.

In Ethiopia, global warming and the El Niño heating effect in the Pacific have contributed to the worst drought in decades. Livestock is rapidly dying, and more than ten million people are now in need of food assistance. Mellis says that poverty and the lack of agricultural equipmentcontribute to the problem. “We have the farms, but we don’t have suitableequipment to develop them and stay there and eat from our own farms,” he said. “In our place, there’s no irrigation for the farms and there are no water holes. If we had water, I would have planted many things, like tomatoes and vegetables, and I would be able to live in my own land.” There are occasional bursts of ethnic violence and reprisals by state security officers. Since the end of last year, government forces in Oromia have killed around two hundred people who were protesting a development plan that they believed would cut them out.

Once the Ethiopian migrants leave home, they risk being arrested by theirown government. About a hundred and seventy thousand Ethiopians weredeported by Saudi Arabia between 2013 and 2014, and Ethiopia responded with a ban on labor movement. (Negotiations have stalled because Ethiopia has asked for a minimum wage for its laborers of about twelve hundred riyals, a little more than three hundred dollars a month.
The Saudi government will only agree to pay seven hundred riyals.) The migrants often have to endure days or even weeks of trekking through thedesert. Even at the most blistering hours of the day, people with little more than flip-flops on their feet and empty plastic bottles in their hands, which they hope friendly passersby will refill, make the walk between LakeAssal, in Djibouti’s west, to Fantahero, in the east. “It’s something that you cannot imagine,” Mellis said, of the walk through the desert. “But you think about the reasons why you are making the journey.”

In Fantahero, a village of traditional aris, huts made from fabric and palmmats by the local Afar people, the migrants wait beneath the acacia trees for smugglers who will take them across the sea. Sometimes they live likethis for weeks, taking water from points set up by the International Organization for Migration, which also houses some people coming through. The I.O.M. has twelve full-time staff members in the town of Obock, near Fantahero, who describe the dangers of continuing on to the Gulf and ask migrants to consider turning back. The organization also helps them return home if they have a change of heart.

Ali al-Jefri, the manager of the I.O.M.'s center in the town of Obock, saidthat few of the migrants—no more than a fifth of them—decide to turn back once they have reached Djibouti. I asked Mellis whether he was scared to cross Yemen, and whether he thought of returning to Ethiopia."Of course I'm afraid, but if I arrive I will have the opportunity to have abetter life," Mellis told me, almost angrily. "Why should I go back? How will I pay my debts and my travel bills?"

The journey across the sea to Yemen, which costs migrants about a hundred and forty dollars, is one of the safer parts of their trip, if they manage to find an adequate boat. Unfortunately, many of the ships are small, old, and do not have adequate equipment to make the crossing. Groups of migrants can find themselves stranded at sea until they are picked up by the Djiboutian Coast Guard. Many of the migrants cannot swim, and the Bab el-Mandeb is known for rough seas; almost three and ahalf thousand have died making the crossing in the past ten years. The dangers at sea, however, hardly compare to what they will face when theyget to Yemen.

Since March of last year, Yemen has been in a grinding civil war, betweenHouthi rebels and the government of Abdo Rabo Mansour Hadi, who is backed by Saudi Arabia. The fighting has been brutal in many parts of thecountry: almost seven thousand people have lost their lives in the fighting, and large parts of cities have been flattened by bombing and rocket attacks. The conflict, however, has not deterred the migrants. "Some of them, especially the women, don't have any awareness that there's a conflict in Yemen," Fatouma Ali, a nurse who works with the
I.O.M. in Fantahero, told me. Petra Neumann, the temporary head of the
I.O.M. in Djibouti, said that the number of migrants was going up despitethe civil war in Yemen, and perhaps even because of it. "We also see, actually, an increasing number of people who are still going from Ethiopiathrough Djibouti, through Yemen, trying to reach the Gulf States," she said. "What we can tell is that either they're not even aware that there isa conflict in Yemen, or that they actually—and maybe this is something the traffickers tell them—think that they can use the conflict in their favor."

Many Ethiopian migrants have been shot and wounded by groups in Yemen, or kidnapped and detained when they arrived in the country because they couldn't afford to pay smugglers. Mellis said that he had not brought money to cross Yemen, though he estimated that the trip would cost him around five hundred and thirty dollars; he would ask his family tosend him the money as the need arises, he told me. Situations like these are particularly dangerous. "In Yemen, if you don't have the money, you'llbe detained, you'll be beaten, your family will be made to send you money," Jefri said. In the previous month, the I.O.M. had helped negotiate the release of twelve hundred and fifty migrants who had been imprisoned by Houthi rebels, he told me. Many of them were in bad shape. "So many of them whom we have evacuated had broken limbs, broken legs, broken hands," he said.

Neumann and Jefri both told me that some of the rescued women reported that they had been sold into sexual slavery in Yemen and in Saudi Arabia. Neumann added that she suspected that human-trafficking rings could be moving women through Djibouti. "When you go to Obock, you see men walking, but you wouldn't see women walking. Women are usually on trucks. For me, that looks quite organized," she said. Those Ethiopians who do arrive and find work in Saudi Arabia and other Gulf countries often have their passports taken away by their employers, whichis a violation of international labor conventions, and are subjected to debt slavery, beatings, and other forms of abuse. Some are forced to work extremely long shifts and are not given days off. Still, "there are opportunities," Mellis told me. "They're not satisfying, but we can take it in turns—someone could work today and someone else could take his place tomorrow. It's better than nothing, I will be waiting for that." He was going to Saudi Arabia, he said, "to change my life." Once he earns enough money there, he plans to return to Ethiopia.

The Ethiopians I met in Fantahero are planning to immigrate to Saudi Arabia illegally. There are periodic mass expulsions from the country, which, according to reports by Human Rights Watch, are often violent. Recently, Ethiopians have been deported from the Kingdom back toYemen instead of being deported home, according to the I.O.M. There, they once again face the dangers of the war and detention by rival militias. All of this, of course, depends on whether they can even make it to Saudi Arabia. In a Trumpian gesture, the Saudis are buildinga thousand-mile-long wall along their southern border with Yemen. Jefri told me that he thought the construction project would have little effect. "It's not going to stop people migrating," he said. "They'll always find a way to get to Saudi Arabia." Nicolas Niarchos is on the editorial staff of The New Yorker.

In Memory of "The King of Kings' Birthday" ex-Emperor Haile Selassie I , King of Kings, The Lion of Judah, Elect of God!

A great man who built his country and his actions later destroyed it. HaileSelassie was a great king in the history of Ethiopia, a man who modernized the country, who brought light to the African country while the rest of Africa was living in dark or living under extreme suffering by colonization, loved his country, fought for its freedom and liberate his people from the yoke of fascism, accelerated the economy of the country,and would have been one of the richest country in Africa has he been succeed, a well traveled King, a man who promoted this country to the world in Grace, while the west think African are monkeys, and he made them believe we are not,a cause of struggle for other blacks suffered in the North America by racism and made them fight for their freedom,.....Great Achievements and accomplishment....HOWEVER, his rule at the end started to frustrate millions at home, the suffering of the peasants by its old fashion feudal system made many to revolt against him, he closed his eyes and ears on his own people and couldn't make a timely reform on his administration, he couldn't be that father who built, fought, educated, etc.. to his people when he was gettingolder and older... his grip to power became a problem and a cause of suffering..... so when he let it go by force, he destroyed the country he built by giving the power to the wrong men and women.... and here we are... suffering for the past 40 years.

ETHIOPIA

Attack on Civil Society Escalates as Dissent Spreads

By Freedom House July 23, 2016

Amid discontent, sometimes violent protests, and a drought of historic proportions that has left more than 15 million Ethiopians in need of urgentfood aid, the Ethiopian government is tightening its stranglehold on domestic politics.

In the wake of the large-scale protests that rocked the Oromia region from November to March, the government, led by the Ethiopian Peoples' Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF), has taken a number of measures aimed at stifling dissent. While consistent with EPRDF's authoritarian posture, these steps are a devastating blow to the country'sindependent media and civil society.

Protests in Oromia and growing ethnic tensions in the Amhara and South regions are viewed as indications that EPRDF's model of governing through complete control over all levels of political and economic life couldsoon reach its breaking point. The government's intolerance of alternativepolitical views is pushing the country's diverse ethnic and political communities to take to the streets to air their grievances.

While the initial trigger for the protests in Oromia was opposition to an unpopular government development plan, the scale and persistence of theprotests in the country's largest and most populous region point to a deeper ethnic discontent after years of misrule. These developments are even more worrisome as deadly protests began to emerge in several partsof the country less than six months after EPRDF and its allies claimed to have won all 547 parliamentary seats in the latest general elections in May 2015.

Ethiopia's perceived stability and its much-touted role in the global fight against terrorism in the Horn of Africa are at stake if EPRDF continues to ignore the dangers of suppressing citizens' legitimate demands for inclusive and accountable governance. Any economic progress can only besustained with a genuine commitment to political reform that adequately responds to the demands of Ethiopia's diverse political, ethnic, and religious groups for participation at all levels of public life.

Tools of repression tightened

The protests brought a violent response from authorities. In addition to extrajudicial killings of hundreds of protesters in the Oromia and Amhararegions, security forces arrested thousands of students, social media activists, and opposition party leaders and supporters. As protests continue in some parts of Oromia, authorities have filed criminal chargesagainst dozens of Oromo students and political activists under the country's Anti-Terrorism Proclamation (ATP). Hundreds more remain in custody without charges.

In response to the role social media played in publicizing human rights violations perpetrated during the protests in Oromia, Ethiopia's parliamentrushed through a cybercrimes law in June. The law stipulates serious penalties for a wide range of online activities and gives authorities greatersurveillance and censorship powers that will limit access to information ondigital platforms. The adoption of this law followed a shutdown of Facebook, Viber, and WhatsApp in parts of the Oromia region. Authorities also cited social media posts as evidence in criminal charges brought against digital activists. These social media posts were images, videos, and audio recordings made during the protests that documented numerous incidents of heavy-handed response to peaceful demonstrators.

Last week the government publicly stated for the first time that it is blocking these social media applications nationwide, claiming that they areadistraction to students taking university entrance exams.

Civil society under renewed attack

In June, the Charities and Societies Agency, the government body that regulates nongovernmental organizations (NGOs), announced that it had shut down more than 200 NGOs in the last nine months. The agency citedfailure to comply with numerous requirements of the Charities and Societies Proclamation (CSP) and lack of funding as reasons for the closures. The announcement followed the agency issuing a directive that seeks to impose penalties for noncompliance with the CSP. By issuing thisdirective, the agency effectively gave itself quasi-judicial powers in criminal proceedings.

Although it is not clear what triggered this latest directive, the move exacerbates the harsh conditions under which civil society organizations are operating. By paving the way for increased imposition of penalties, theCharities and Societies Agency will further undermine civil society's ability to operate independently. Furthermore, these measures suggest a reversal of the willingness that the government had shown in the past fewyears to engage in a dialogue aimed at revising some of the directives previously issued by the agency.

Citizen support for civil society remains strong

While the government continues to take measures that undermine civil society, popular support for civil society remains strong. According to arecent online survey conducted by Freedom House, two-thirds of those polled believe that civil society organizations should engage in human rights and democracy promotion. The survey also found that Ethiopiansare unaware of the significant challenges facing civil society and of the crippling effects of the CSP. The survey findings underscore how a blackout of information from independent sources and constrained civicspace curtail citizens' ability to organize and participate in matters thataffect their daily lives.

Years of government attacks, relentless smear campaigns, and extremely cumbersome rules and regulatory frameworks have crippled Ethiopia's civil society. NGOs are denied access to resources and the ability to network with each other and mobilize support. As demand for democratic reforms in Ethiopia gains momentum, a vibrant civil society will be essential. It is therefore critical that, despite the challenges they are facing, NGOs move beyond mere survival and focus on making themselvesmore accessible, relevant, and accountable to the public, and that their allies at home and abroad support these efforts to build strong constituencies and press ahead for a democratic opening in Ethiopia.

The Swiss engineer Bitwadad Alfred Ilg (30 March 1854 – 7 January1916): the most favoured (confidante) to Emperor Menelik II.

He was born in Frauenfeld, Switzerland. Alfred Ilg was sent to Ethiopia onbehalf of a Swiss company in 1879 and served at the court of Emperor Menelik II (who became emperor in 1889), where he quickly learned the Amharic language.

He contributed to the construction of the new capital of Ethiopia, Addis Ababa. The victory of Ethiopia over the invading Italians ...at the Battle ofAdowa in 1896 can be tracked to his inventions, as his efforts allowed thelocal production of weapons and ammunition, freeing Ethiopia from the need of imports.

The emperor Menelik II rewarded Ilg with the title counselor as "Bitwadad"in the range of an excellency more close to the emperor in 1897 and, furthermore, named him minister of foreign affairs for the years 1897 to 1907. He showed his competence as an engineer when planning and implementing the railway line from then French Territory of Djibouti, then Afar & Issas to the capital Addis Ababa. He was also responsible for supervising the design and construction of the first piped safe water supply to the capital and for installing electrical power within the imperial palace in 1905. Ilg was leading in the construction of several public buildings and worked as chef de protcolle and secretary for the emperor, receiving the highest medal available, the "Star of Ethiopia."

Further achievements worth mentioning are the creation of a unified national currency system and the erection of a postal system. When Friedrich Rosen , an orientalist andleader of an official German delegationestablished several treaties between Ethiopia and Germany on 7 March 1905, Ilg's influence at court began to dwindle. He could not (or did not want to) do anything against several intrigues at court; which led to his resignation in 1907. Alfred Ilg returned to Switzerland and settled in Zürich where he died at the age of 61. Ilg was a contemporary of the French poet-turned-trader Arthur Rimbaud , and was his friend and frequent correspondent in East Africa. Source : Wikipedia

The confessions of Tito and other leaders of the EPRP Youth League were circulating by internet few years back. Tito Hiruy was accused of collaboration of ordering the assassination of his older brother Yohannes Hiruy whos was an instructor at the Addis Ababa University (AAU) Law Faculty, and member of the All Ethiopian Socialist Movement (AESM) commonly known as MEISON. Ethiopia Stops Imports From 11 Egyptian Pharmaceutical Manufacturers for not MeetingHealth (Standards July 25, 2016)

Ethiopia has suspended the importation of medicines from 11 Egyptian pharmaceutical manufacturers after they failed to meet the country’s health criteria. Ethiopia’s Ministry of Health suspended trade with the companies after officials visited Egypt recently to inspect their facilities,” Middle East Observer reported. The Ethiopian delegation, which inspectedthirteen Egyptian pharmaceutical factories, reportedly discovered that eleven of them did not meet government standards. The Egyptian companies, whose names have been withheld, did not meet Ethiopian standards in their manufacturing of medicines.

Egyptian authorities have since responded to the suspension by organizingan urgent meeting with Ethiopia’s ambassador to Cairo. The diplomats areexpected to negotiate to find a solution to the issue. The head of Egypt’s Export Council for Medical Industries Maged George said the Ethiopian inspection and suspension would have consequences for Egyptians companies dependent on trade with Ethiopia. George said a committee, which includes representatives of the suspended companies and officials from the export council, has been formed to address the issue. The committee will reportedly gather information regarding Ethiopia’s pharmaceutical market and its functioning manufacturers. George added that although the 11 companies would be affected by the suspension, theywould survive since their trade is not centered on Ethiopia. The 11 pharmaceutical companies reportedly export their products to about 15 countries including Ethiopia.

The relationship between Egypt and Ethiopia has been tested since 2010when Ethiopia announced plans of constructing the Grand Renaissance Dam (GERD) on the Blue Nile. There have been disagreements regardingthe possible effects that the dam would have on nations like Egypt and Sudan, who are dependent on the Nile for their water supply. The irrigation and Foreign Ministers of Ethiopia, Egypt, and Sudan have met several times in hopes of reaching a consensus on the issue. Technical studies into the possible side-effects of the construction of the dam are currently being conducted by a Dutch and a French consultancy firm.

COMMENTARY

A Radical change of course for Ethiopia, or chaos and Implosion: A commentary on Lt. General Tsadkan Gebre Tensay's article in Amharic

By Publius aethiopicus

Ethiopia under the Tigray People's Liberation Front/Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front-TPLF/EPRDF regime has come to a cross roads, in fact a dead end. Either a change of course towards a genuine constitutional democracy or a nightmarish scenario of the implosion of Ethiopia are the alternatives, as Lt. General Tsadkan Gebre Tensay asserts. The lengthy article published on Horn Affairs by Lt. General Tsadkan G. Tensay, former member of the top leadership of the TPLF and former Chief of Staff of the Ethiopian Armed Forces for almost a decade, isa very interesting development. In recent years the TPLF/EPRDF regime isembroiled in one crisis or another, unable to handle the multiple fault linesand facing total loss of support by the populace in all four corners of Ethiopia. One should recall that the regime declared itself as the sole winner of all 547 parliamentary seats in the May 2015 election.

In dissecting the all-around crisis the regime is mired in, the General doesnot mince words and shy away from being very frank about the pervasivecrises of state, crisis of confidence, crisis of legitimacy. General Tsadkan addresses the all-around crisis – political, economic, massive and pervasive corruption including by The Metals and Engineering Corporation(METEC) a quasi-military-industrial complex run by TPLF generals. He also admits and comments on the pervasive hatred and resentment harbored by the majority towards Tigrayans. This salient feature is amongthe most worrying trends and in fact warning signs in today's Ethiopia under the minority TPLF regime, and its potential to turn into a tragic course.

General Tsadkan also throws powerful salvos and trenchant criticisms ofthe existing dictatorial political and suffocating economic oligarchy instituted by the TPLF/EPRDF. He states, point blank, the dead end reached by the minority regime. He indicates, unless there is a fundamental change, a potentially tragic, indeed, epochal nightmarish, scenario of Ethiopia imploding as a multi-ethnic nation. A multi ethnic nation with historic continuity since antiquity, albeit, checkered by expansions and contractions for millennia.

What makes General Tsadkan's assessment of current conditions in Ethiopia pertinent, and somewhat unique? Such a perspective about the nation's tragic condition under the current dictatorial regime is coming, perhaps for the first time, in a radical and bold fashion, from one of the top leaders of the TPLF and a one-time Chief of Staff of the armed forcesfrom 1991- 2001 before being ousted by Meles Zenawi after TPLF's split.His recommendations for a way forward and solutions therefore has gonebeyond what critics of the regime, the likes of General Abebe Tekle Haimnot, a former Airforce Commander, ousted by Meles during the TPLF's split as well, and many others have talked about and written in recent months in regard to the multi-faceted crisis boiling in Ethiopia andoverwhelming the readily weak regime of the TPLF/EPRDF rocked with internal contradictions and fissures both within the dominant TPLF and the satellite ANDM and OPDO parties that constitute the so-called EPRDF.

As well known, many scholars and analysts alike have commented aboutthe instability of the current track pursued assiduously by the minority regime of the TPLF/EPRDF. The fault lines are expanding, the contradictions are visible and there is a widening gulf separating the regime and the people. A wide chasm exists between the corrupt and inept army's Tigrean top brass and the majority non-Tigrean rank and fileline officers. There is massive discontent and widespread perception by the overwhelming majority of non-Tigreans that Tigreans have become enablers and apologists for a Kleptocratic, ethnocratic and brutal minorityregime. These views have been given credence during the Oromo protest that rocked the Oromo region and beyond, proving the fallacy of the regime's 25 year narrative that Ethiopia, as a democratic and federalstate, for the first time in its history, has brought about the equality of the nations and nationalities that constitute it.

Under this false narrative, Ethiopia, under the current minority TPLF/EPRDF regime, has granted and upheld the equality of all nations and nationalities, including devolution and decentralization of power to theregions to govern their respective regions. This narrative, however, has been busted as a result of the many identity conflicts and popular demands for genuine self-governance in zonal and regional affairs that have been popping up throughout Ethiopia, in particular, the massive and widespread Oromo protest that was triggered by the Addis Ababa Master Plan. The Oromo protest is still continuing despite the ruthless massacre of over 500 Oromos by the regime's special forces and the arrest of tens of thousands in Oromia region in the past nine months, a development that has gotten a wide coverage by the media and attention by International Human Rights organizations, US Senators and the European Parliament.

Just like in Oromia, years of pent up grievances , injustice, inequality, andlack of basic rights to protect and assert ethnic identities, despite the regime's narrative to the contrary, have been simmering in many parts of Ethiopia. Just a few weeks ago it came to the open, in Northern Gondar, Amhara region, where the historically Amhara region of Wolkayit,Tegede and Telemt along the border of formerly, Gondar and Tigray provinces was forcibly annexed and made part of Tigray by the TPLF. Along with the unilateral decision to annex the sub region to Tigray, the Amhara inhabitants were forced to change their identity for the past 25 years. Now the Amharas of Wolkayit, Tegede and Telemt, after trying all legal and peaceful avenues to lodge their demands, have resorted to armed rebellion and civil disobedience to resist an unjust act that has been imposed on their very existence as a people of Amhara ethnic origin,separate from Tigray and Tigrayan ethnic stock. These are just few of the major fault lines besetting the TPL/EPRDF minority regime that has used brutal force to suppress all forms of demands coming from many sectors of the populace throughout Ethiopia during the past 25 years of its tenureon state power.

In his thoughtful and analytic assessment recognizing the crisis and the all-around faultiness that are prevalent in Ethiopia, General Tsadkan concludes that the status quo is not sustainable – that Ethiopia must democratize. The current one party dictatorship of the TPLF/EPRDF needs to give way to a genuine multiparty democracy with a level playing field for all political forces , there are has to be an orderly and peaceful transition, and that a genuinely free, fair and transparent election monitored by the international community has to be held during the next election cycle. Absent such fundamental change, Ethiopia as a multiethnicpolity, may be heading towards an implosion and chaos.

On the other hand, it is time to ponder about what is going in the minds ofthe TPLF leaders, in the minds of their few henchmen in the rest of the so called EPRDF top leadership such as Amhara National Democratic Movement (ANDM) Oromo People's Democratic Organization (OPDO) as well as the majority of Tigrean elites allied with the ruling TPLF/EPRDF. Do they have the mindset to heed such a clarion call for a radical change made by the likes of General Tsadkan? Do they really thinkfar beyond the expedient lure of glitters of temporal power and other vested interests that unchecked power brings to its holders? Are they going to think beyond themselves, in fact for the good of themselves too, for the sake of all Ethiopians, including Tigrean people they claim to represent and that of posterity to live and prosper with a leveled playing field in a just, democratic, and free Ethiopia?

Given past track records and their patterns of behavior by these elements of Ethiopia's political elite, that timeless adage of Lord Acton, "power corrupts, and absolute power corrupts absolutely" comes to mind. Not only does absolute power corrupts the body politic of the state and its machineries, but also the mind and spirit of those at the helm and their cronies. They become stupid due to affliction of mental ossification and dissonance from actual reality which absolute power has a tendency to nurture, however, in retrograde. Hence a very doubtful scenario, whetherthose at the helm of the TPLF/EPRDF dictatorial regime, have both the political will and the wisdom to change course, and change radically beforeit is too late. The crossroads options remains to be seen.

Foreign and security policy circles of Western governments, especially the US and UK, allied to the minority TPLF/EPRDF regime, have been in denial about the prevailing and unsustainable conditions in Ethiopia. Due to theirprimary reason for supporting the regime, as an ally in the war against terrorism and extremism in the Horn of Africa, these governments continue to act like the proverbial ostrich that buried its head in the sand. However, sober and objective assessment of Ethiopiaby foreign analysts and leaders of credible international rights organizations have come to recognize the all-around crisis situation in Ethiopia and the widening fault lines in the society as result of the regime's dictatorial actions and measures and are recommending fundamental change in Ethiopia.

On July 12, 2015 House Foreign Relations Committee hearing convenedby Chairman Ed Royce, Ambassador Mark Lagon, President of Freedoms

House, in his testimony, stated that

"… In November 2015, the EPRDF decided to expand the boundaries of thecapital at the expense of farmers and communities living in the surrounding areas of the Oromia region. This decision was made without adequate consultation with affected communities and sparked widespread protests resulting in the arrests of tens of thousands, including students, teachers, musicians, opposition politicians, health workers, and people who provided assistance or shelter to fleeing students. At least 400 have been killed by Ethiopian security forces; an unknown number remain in detention; and torture continues to be reported. Protests like these break out because citizens have no other ways to engage in the political system or express discontent, which increases instability…."

During the same testimony, Ambassador Lagon added "… there cannot bepeace and stability if the government restricts political space and suppresses legitimate dissent with force. And without peace, there can beno reliable access to food or health care or education. A country cannot free itself from dependence on foreign aid without strong and accountablegovernance. U.S. tax dollars will be wasted as long as Ethiopia lacks rule of law, pluralism, and respect in practice of the pluralism, and respect in practice of the rights of all. The United States would be far wiser to fund amore comprehensive approach to development. We should work to strengthen human rights in Ethiopia to enable a truly peaceful, prosperous, and more reliable security partner…."

In May of 2016, Mr. Adotei Akewi, Managing Director of Government Relations of Amnesty International (AI) USA also wrote an article titled Wrong Way: The Ever Closing Political Space in Ethiopia. In that article, headvised those concerned, allies of the TPLF/ERPDF regime that "…supporting an oppressive regime for the sake of regional security will only further destabilize a region already ravaged by conflict, unclear borders, poverty and lack of respect for the rule of law, all in the pursuit of short term stability. The Ethiopian people deserve better than that…"

Does the international community in general, and the donor countries in particular understand the depth of the crisis facing Ethiopia under the minority regime? Do they know and understand the high stakes and ramifications of the current trajectory of the deepening ethnic and other faultiness in Ethiopia for the Horn of Africa and global security? Ethiopia may implode, as General Tsadkan argues and predicts, unless there is a radical change towards a fundamental reconfiguration of the state towardsa genuine constitutional democracy governed by rule of law, and respect for fundamental liberties that are absent under the current TPLF/EPRDF regime. The current regime they whole-heartedly support with diplomatic,political, and military assistance is leading Ethiopia towards a downwards trajectory of instability, possibly civil war, or even worse case scenarios asDawit Giorgis, Executive Director of African Strategic and Security

Studies , wrote under the heading “Rwanda Genocide: Lessons forEthiopians. “

The narrative that Ethiopia, as a stable and reliable partner, under a minority dictatorship is losing its cache. It is time for the International community and all national stakeholders to come to a sober acceptance ofthe brutal truth and face the glaring reality in Ethiopia. It is neither acceptable nor sustainable to do nothing when all the writings are on the wall. Ethiopia is in grave danger. Too little, too late statements, after potential tragic scenarios unfold become nightmarish reality, is a recipe ofcynics, bordering criminals. It is time for a radical change in order to avertthe current slide towards instability and chaos that the current regime appear to be leading Ethiopia.

Highlights from an article written in Amharic by Lt. Gen. Tsadkan G.Tensay, former Chief of Staff of the Ethiopian Armed Forces

Lt. General Tsadkan G. Tensay, former Chief of Staff has written a bold article calling for the regime to undertake fundamental political changes tospare the country from implosion and turmoil. Here are some of the highlights from the rather lengthy, albeit, bold proposition from a man who once was a member of the ruling clique till his dismissal by the late dictator and mastermind, Meles Zenawi.

- Human and democratic rights that were enshrined in the constitution are not fully respected. Even worse, the political space has become too narrow to be accommodative to the opposition. The quagmire that the government finds itself now was the result of theabsolute monopolization of political and economic power by the ruling party and its leaders.

- Once assuming political power and the political upper hand, the EPRDF has gradually become antidemocratic. Many cases could becited here, but will only mention the three salient cases and the undemocratic means that the EPRDF used to resolve them:

1. The way the EPRDF handled the issue with the Oromo LiberationFront (OLF)

2. The way the TPLF handled the crises within the Front itself [refers tothe 2001 split within the Front]

3. The 2005 elections and the way the Front dealt with the situation inits aftermath.

- The oppressive and undemocratic rule by the regime has become unbearable to the masses. On top of that, the standard of living hasbecome too expensive and unemployment too high. The people do not see any hope that the regime would resolve their problems soon. All these factors have forced the people to protest and revolt against the government soon after it declared 100% victory in the 2015 elections. The government was also forced to admit that thereare real problems that it cannot shy away from.

- Based on the current situations in the country, there are threescenarios that could unfold:

Scenario 1) due to the ongoing popular uprising and political demand and the added pressure from foreign forces, the country could plunge intototal chaos that the government could not control. The odds that this scenario could happen seem little, but not zero. It could happen and the government should be ready. The protest in Oromo region has put strain on the government, especially on the regional government. The uprising was halted by the intervention of the federal forces. If the protest kept its momentum and was joined by other popular protests, it is easy to predictwhat it could do to the central government.

Scenario 2) to continue with the status quo of crises. The regime would try to buy time and stay in power by making few changes here and there,and sacking some officials to appease the populace. This scenario would be the best preferred by the regime in power. This scenario could extend the crises but would not resolve it. It would prevent a peaceful resolutionof the crises and hence would create a fertile ground for those who try toresolve the crises through the use of force. This scenario could cost the country a great deal.

Scenario 3) to begin a peaceful and orderly transition. This requires theacknowledgement that there is a crises in the country; and begin the process of transition with the participation of all political forces and the general public. This scenario also prevents the previous destructive scenarios from happening. It is therefore incumbent on those of us who worry about the future of the country to work for the realization of this scenario.

- What should be the role of the people of Tigray in resolving the current crises in the country? Should the role of the people of Tigraybe to protect and defend the regime that is ruling with the help of itssecurity forces and the military, and alienated and hated by the people? What is the political stand taken by the people of Tigray in the current political crisis in the country?

- The people of Tigray, together with the rest of the Ethiopian peopleneed to work for the full implementation of the Constitution. The fact that few Tigrean elites hold political power is not a guarantee for the people of Tigray.

- I don’t understand why the country’s industrialization is being led byarmy generals. METEC has been tasked with the production of electric power, sugar production and building rails. It is ideal that those projects be done by local manufacturing. But why are they under the complete control of army generals? If the army had the technical capacity and know how, it should rather focus on maintaining and even building tanks, war planes, vehicles and communication equipment.

- The relationship among the legislative, the judiciary and the executive must be clearly defined. There should be check and balance. The reality we have now in the country is that the executive controls the politics and also the economy of the country,which resulted in the current political quagmire.

- The executive is engaged in promulgating restrictive laws to inhibitany movement by the opposition.

- A party that cannot resolve its internal contradictions in ademocratic manner cannot be a vanguard of democracy.

- The EPRDF had come up with several laws that restrict the humanand political rights promulgated in the constitution. It uses the security and military to hang on to power. The EPRDF should remove all obstacles that limit the activities of opposition political parties.

- The role of the military should be that of defending the sovereigntyof the country and the constitution; it should not be a major playerin the politics and economy of the country, as we see in Ethiopia today.

- The EPRDF is not willing to fight mal administration, corruption andabuse of power as it fears genuine action against these problems would lead to its disintegration and downfall.

- Those in political power also control the economy. The executive is also the one that steers the wheel of economy. The executive is theowner of major projects and also the main employer.

- Since the executive controls the economy, cronies and benefactorsare engaged, under the guise of party membership, in rent seekingcorrupt practices.

- The people should have the power to put the executive in check; notthe other way around.

- In order to come out of the current crises, human and political rightsenshrined in the constitution should be fully implemented; and we need to pave the way for all political forces to participate in a peaceful political engagement and fair competition without any interference.

- All political parties should come together and establish a pillar institution that would facilitate a smooth political transition whichwould culminate in the next election that the country is slated to hold.

Details for a peaceful political transition could be decided by consultationsand negotiations among the various political parties, including the ruling party, with the aim of fully realizing the rights protected in the constitution. (text ends)

Review of Lt. General Tsadkan Gebre Tensay's Article

By Messay Kebede July 28, 2016

I read with great attention and interest an article on Ethiomedia in whichLt. General Tsadkan Gebre Tensay analyzes with a sharp critical eye the ruling government and party of present-day Ethiopia and gives us a blueprint of the various scenarios awaiting the country. Let me begin by admitting my surprise and admiration to see a top member of the leadership of the ruling party and a former Chief of Staff of the Ethiopian

Armed Forces undertake such a critical review of a regime that he had served for a long time. One cannot but wonder how deep the level of thedeterioration of the political edifice has become for a top veteran and servant of the regime to feel the need to speak up openly in so alarmingterms. Be that as it may, my review has two parts: in the first one, I present the undeniable virtues of the article and, in the second part, I proceed to some critical remarks, the objective of which is to encourage Gen. Tsadkan to go further in the critical assessment so as to get to the root of the problem bogging down the TPLF itself.

Without doubt, the article gives a candid, almost thorough and straight criticism of the regime. Almost nothing of what is detestable and faulty isleft out: the absolute control of all the branches of government, the calamitous identification of the government with the ruling party, the heavy-handed involvement of government in the economy, the proliferation of corruption and clientelism, etc., are severely denounced. Gen. Tsadkan is not even nice to his former colleagues: he is highly disparaging of the involvement of army generals in the running of key sectors of the economy instead of focusing on their true job, which is to protect the integrity and sovereignty of the country. In a word, the entireregime is put on trial and condemned without any reservation. One admires the courage and honesty of Gen. Tsadkan, given that his positionwill certainly ostracize him, perhaps even arouse the animosity of the leaders of the ruling party.

This much is undeniable: Gen. Tsadkan wants genuine solutions for the numerous and serious problems besieging Ethiopia. For him, the stake is none other than the survival of Ethiopia so that the solutions must be far- reaching enough to stop the dangerous trends toward which the country ismoving. His proposal is clear and simple: the implementation of democracy and the rise of a political system based on the verdict of the people are the only means to tackle the deep problems of the country.
The use of force repeats the mistakes of previous regimes and can only yield the same outcomes, but this time in a context that is much more explosive. Clearly, the author is genuinely concerned about the fate of Ethiopia. True, he does not hide his high concern for the people of Tigray and the TPLF, but one of the virtues of the article is that it understands that the fate of the TPLF is tied up with good things happening in Ethiopia.

According to Gen. Tsadkan, the regime has come to the point of recognizing the seriousness of the problems facing Ethiopia and is lookingfor a solution. Unfortunately, says Gen. Tsadkan, it is looking for easy andself-serving solutions, which are all doomed to failure because they all miss, deliberately or not, the core of the problem, which is the restriction of democracy and democratic rights. The restriction is all the more inexcusable as it violates the constitution, the very constitution that the TPLF and all its allies have sworn to respect and serve. All the problems of Ethiopia have one, and only one, source, namely, illegality, transgressionof the constitution.

One admires the author for admitting that the case of Kinijit was not well handled in the 2005 election disputes. A similar mistake was committed earlier when a conflict broke out with the OLF. In both cases, force was used to settle disputes instead of the democratic means made available bythe constitution. Similarly, I commend the author for spelling out the true interest of the Tigrean people, which is to work in concert with other people of Ethiopia to protect and advance democracy, as opposed to someleaders who orchestrate the scenario of Tigray versus the rest of Ethiopia.Last but not least, I applaud Gen. Tsadkan for being the first top member of the TPLF (to my knowledge) to acknowledge that the Ethiopians who fought under the leadership of the Derg lost, not because they were coward and Tigreans distinctly brave, but because their leaders betrayed the cause for which they were fighting and used them for a totalitarian and self-serving purpose.

Granted this positive side of the article, there remains the question of knowing whether Gen. Tsadkan's explanation of the causes of the derailment of the regime away from the democratic path are equally pertinent. The analyses of the paper rest on one major premise, namely, the contention that the TPLF had a solid, deeply-engrained tradition of democratic methods prior to the seizure of state power, a tradition that was also free of secessionist agenda and the pursuit of ethnic hegemony. This is so true that Gen. Tsadkan ascribes the alleged derailment of the TPLF to the war against Eritrea whose major consequence was a deep splitwithin the party and the rise of a non-democratic clique led by Meles who,by the way, is mentioned only once.

Without denying the importance of the split, one fails to understand how aparty based on such solid and embedded democratic commitment and practices would go suddenly so off course as to empower Meles and his openly undemocratic clique. Is it not fair to say that the split and the outcome prove that democracy was just a façade, a hidden device of manipulation, something similar to the "democracy" that existed in the Soviet camp or, for that matter, in Ethiopia under the Derg? I can easily explain the rise of Meles to dictatorial power if I see it as a consolidation of a trend already existing in the party. By contrast, his rise becomes a complete mystery if I base my analysis on the assumption that the TPLF had a long tradition of democratic workings.

In vain does one look for the numerous blunders committed by the TPLFfrom the very start. For instance, the paper does not mention the momentous decision to land-lock Ethiopia. Nor does it denounce the ill-founded justification to disband the Ethiopian army—which resulted in many soldiers becoming beggars––as though it were a mercenary army,all the more so as Gen. Tsadkan, as already mentioned, recognizes the army as a whole was not against any people. Gen. Tsadkan never questions the prevailing assumption of the ruling circle according to whichthe foundation of the Ethiopian state is sound and that many good things have been accomplished, even though he does not mention them. In so thinking, he turns the problems into an implementation issue, and so fail to see them as the step-by-step unfolding of a design that was originally very flawed.

As a matter of policy, Gen. Tsadkan opts for the developmental state as opposed to neo-liberal policy. The paper does not present strong arguments in favor of developmental state; nor does it indicate why the developmental state is expected to achieve better results in Ethiopia than liberal policy. Still less does the paper pose the problem of knowing whether the ideological and political setups of ethnic federalism go hand inhand with the requirements of the developmental state. Moreover, as stated previously, Gen. Tsadkan strongly favors democracy in the precise sense of multipartism, respect of human rights, including the rights of freeassembly and free speech. Yet, this type of democracy does not square with the notion of developmental state, which precisely advocates the postponement of democratic rights to bring about faster economic growth.Equally noticeable is that the paper does not see that the dismal conditionof education in Ethiopia, mostly due to politicization and the preference of quantity over quality, goes against a major requirement of the developmental state, namely, the production of a highly trained and nationalist technocratic and bureaucratic elite.

One key issue is that the author expects the appropriate solutions to comefrom and be implemented by the ruling party, since one need not look further than the already approved constitution to find the right answers.
In Gen. Tsadkan's view, the remedy lies in the restoration of the suppressed rights and in the development of a mindset approaching opposition parties with a spirit of dialogue and common interests. Not onlydoes such an expectation look utterly utopian, but it is also contradictory. After having made this severe criticism, how does Gen. Tsadkan expect reforms and a change of attitude from such a rotten party? Is it not too late? Is not the party beyond redemption?

The danger of calling for an extremely unlikely change of attitude is that itlends itself to the interpretation that the paper is nothing but an attempt to prolong the life of the TPLF by reviving an already rejected hope. What is more, since the author admits that the difficulties are serious enough torise to the level of structural impediments, is it not obvious that they require nothing less than structural changes? Evidently, change under the leadership of the ruling party will significantly fall short of being structural.In short, what is necessary in the face of failures of such magnitude is regime change.

As already noted, a leitmotif in the paper is the belief that the constitutionprovides the appropriate solutions to all the problems of the country. We just have to restore its democratic provisions and respect them. As a matter of fact, the paper criticizes everything, except the constitution andthe ideological and democratic credentials of the TPLF prior to the captureof state power. Because of the reluctance of the author to critically examine the constitution, no attempt is made to connect some of the problems to its shortcomings.

For instance, there is no any reconsideration of the infamous article 39 affirming the "unconditional right to self-determination, including the rightto secession," a provision that an organization like MEDREK has rightly questioned as it carries the threat of the fragmentation of the country.
Likewise, no prospect is envisaged for the privatization of land ownershipthrough the removal of the stipulation that "ownership of rural and urbanland, as well as of all natural resources, is exclusively vested in the Stateand in the peoples of Ethiopia," even though the dictatorial tendency of the regime can be traced back to the exclusive control of land by the state.

To be fair, Gen. Tsadkan does not reject the right to alter the constitution provided that it emanates from the democratic decision of the peoples of Ethiopia. The trouble, however, is that the respect of the constitution is presented as a sine qua non of all dialogue with opposition forces. A repeated injunction is that everybody must work under the provisions stipulated by the constitution. The condition excludes by definition any structural change to the system. Unless the opposition is given the right toorganize and mobilize the people with the official intent of changing the constitution, I do not see how the stated condition does not amount to a serious restriction of democratic rights.

I cannot push aside the impression I have of a certain naivety on the partof Gen. Tsadkan. Indeed, for him all the problems of Ethiopia originate from a defective implementation of the constitution. The foundation and the principles of government are good, but they have not been properly implemented. May I remind that dictatorial regimes tend to write constitutions that are perfect? Their problem is in the application, not because they fail to apply them properly, but because they do not intend to apply them in the first place. They are written for two purposes: firstly,for external consumption to fool donor countries, and secondly, to manipulate their own people. Their constitutions are just ideological tools for make-believe, for the purpose of misleading by giving an ideal pictureof their regime. What defines them is not the failure of implementation; itis the deliberate gap between stated principles and actual practice. One thing is sure: the leaders of the TPLF who drafted the constitution perfectly knew that the democratic provisions were not meant to be applied.

This is to say that failure in practice does not explain a regime like the oneestablished by the TPLF. Instead, the real intent of the TPLF, as opposed to the fake one, must be given primacy. All what we know about the TPLFpoints to one overriding intent, to wit, the absolute control of state power to empower a furiously ethnicized elite by excluding other elites or by turning them into clients. Only some such approach makes everything clear: the rampant corruption, the dictatorial methods, the policy of divideand rule, the absolute control of all the branches of government are all means to empower a regional elite and sustain that empowerment through the complete ascendancy over the economic, political, and ideological apparatuses of the country. To paraphrase a famous sentence, in the analysis of Gen. Tsadkan, the TPLF "is standing on its head. It mustbe inverted, in order to discover the rational kernel within the mystical shell." The writer, Professor Messay Kebede, can be reached at mkebede1@udayton.edu.

Ethiopian Designer Finds Her Niche in Fashion Industry

Ethiopian Observer July 28, 2016

Enkutatash Kibret, better known as Enku, is an upcoming Ethiopian designer. Soft, sensuous and feminine, the designer talks to Ethiopia Observer about her enduring love affair with couture. Enku runs and ownsan Addis Ababa-based company, Enku Design. She designs and produces Ethiopian traditional fabric, women's wear line. Her design integrates Ethiopian themes and motifs with modern style and blends local focus on luxuriant fabric.

Born and raised in Addis Ababa, Enku started her schooling at Bole Community School and completed high school at Tikur Anbessa SecondarySchool. Her artistic spirit showed from a very young age, when she spent hours sewing dolls and uniforms. After taking marketing courses at the Ethiopian Airlines and designing courses at Next Designs College, she joined the world of modelling. "In fact, I first did modelling when I was a grade twelve student at Tikur Anbessa," she says.

In 2001, she enrolled for a local modelling agency, owned by an Italian lady, Nathalina who also used to have a glossy magazine called New Faces. Under Nathalina's sympathetic and rigorous guidance, she has prospered, gracing magazine covers in different stylish dresses. In 2004,Enku was one of the ten Ethiopian models who went to France to showcase Guenet Fresenbet (Gigi)'s collection at St. Etienne Bazaar at three shows during a ten-day stay. "This opened my eyes even more to the world of fashion," she says.

Enku design was launched four years ago and the elegant and charmingshop located in Berhane Adere Building at Bole Medhani Alem area is drawing a large number of loyal clienteles. "My first shop was at Haya Hulet area. The line was selling well, I wanted a more suitable and spacious location," the designer explains. At the present shop, she produces a large collection of separates, everyday wear and the special occasion wear. Her clothes are more than just pretty: they are moulded toa woman's body, travelling along curves, embracing the softness of a neckline in figure-flattering cuts. Her dress have been worn by local celebrities such as Ruta Mengistab, SelamTesfaye, Hana Tarik, Etsehiwot Abebe, Birtukan Befekadu, Nebiyat Mekonen.

Enku is proud that her business is providing employment and training for young girls. There are about fifteen persons working in her shop and twenty traditional weavers who do the weaving exclusively for her shop with her own design. As part of the creative process, Enku enjoys differentfabrics and threads and taking the time required to achieve a product of quality. She is preparing to organize a colourful fashion show on September here in Addis Ababa. To my question what makes her collection stand out from the crowd, she responds that lot of her collections are based around the body, and architecture. "There are stronglines and silhouettes. I also incorporate a lot of fringing into my work. It just moves so beautifully," she says. Asked who her favourite designer is, Enku says she has a lot of respect and admiration for the Lebanese designer, Elie Saab. Enku says the business is expanding and doing well in Ethiopia. "We would have our store in Washington D.C in three or four months' time," she says. With her husband, Yared Tesfaye, they have already a store in Bole area Robel Plaza and another one in Dubai, called Platinum Couture. Watch out for the unstoppable rise of Enku Design.

GONDER PROTESTS

Gonder Heralds End of TPLF Era

Ethiomedia July 31, 2016

GONDER - Defying a government order not to go ahead with a protest rally, Gonder not only held a massive protest rally but also rekindled thespirit of Ethiopian Unity by condemning government killings in Oromia.

A bedrock of Ethiopian patriotism, Gonder's solidarity with Oromia is a slap in the face of TPLF, because TPLF, the architect of ethnic federalism[aka ethnic hate], had thought its politics had brought Ethiopia to its knees, and the people would never rise up to challenge it.

TPLF, a group of thugs whose job prior to the 1991 change was no more than serving as foot soldiers for Eritrean organizations, had preached ethnic hate and division for 25 years but its gambling backfired on Sundayin Gonder and could be the harbinger of TPLF's demise.

Knowing that the Ethiopian flag has been a symbol of unifying force, TPLF had tarnished the sacred symbol by placing a huge, ugly star at the centerof the flag. Ethiopians didn't accept TPLF's flag, but have been banned by the government never to resort to the original Ethiopia tricolor of Green, Yellow and Red. On Sunday, patriotic Gonder kicked TPLF in the rear and held the genuine Ethiopian flag high in the air throughout the day.

The protesters also chanted that the imprisoned Welkait Tegede committee men should be released without any preconditions, or else facethe consequences. Marchers also denounced ongoing killings in Oromia, and vowed their struggle wouldn't stop short of securing what it takes forthe reign of democracy, freedom and justice in Ethiopia.

NILE REGIONAL DIPLOMACY

Egypt denies Israeli mediation in GERD crisis

Ahram online August 1, 2016

Egypt denied on Monday suggestions that it had requested Israeli mediation to solve the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam (GERD) crisis.

In press statements carried by state-owned MENA agency, Egypt's foreignministry spokesman Ahmed Abu Zeid said that recent discussions held by the Foreign Minister Sameh Shoukry and Israeli officials focused only on finding ways to solve the Palestinian crisis, as well as other bilateral issues.

The Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam (GERD), a giant hydroelectric damproject being undertaken by Ethiopia, has been the source of contention between Cairo and Addis Ababa. Egypt, which relies almost exclusively onthe Nile for farming and drinking, fears the dam would significantly diminish its share of the river's water.

Several media outlets have suggested that Shoukry's July visit to Israel was related to the dam issue, especially in light of Israeli Prime MinisterBenjamen Netanyahu's recent trip to several African countries, includingEthiopia.

Ethiopia Protests:
What's Behind the Trouble in Gondar?

BBC August 1, 2016
Sunday's protest in Ethiopia involving tens of thousands of people in Gondar, the capital of the Amhara region, is a rare example of an anti-government demonstration in the country.

It was organised on social media but no group has taken responsibility forit. The protest comes two weeks after another demonstration in the city inwhich 15 people died, including members of the security forces and civilians.

What's behind the protests?
At the root of the recent demonstrations is a request by representatives from the Welkait community – known as the Welkait Amhara Identity Committee – that their land, which is currently administered by the Tigrayregional state, be moved into neighbouring Amhara region.

The Welkait committee says community members identify themselves asethnic Amharas and say they no longer want to be ruled by Tigrayans.

Demonstrations began a fortnight ago but leaders of the Welkaitcommunity have been asking for the move for a year.

Amharas used to form the country's elite and the language remains themost widely spoken in the country.

Is that the only issue?
Observers say that Ethiopia's governing coalition is dominated by the party from the small Tigray region (TPLF), and some see the protests as away of criticising the country's government.

When Sunday's demonstration was organised on social media, no mentionwas made of other issues, but during the protest banners could be seen expressing solidarity with people from the Oromia region.

Since November last year, the government has been dealing with a waveof protests in Oromia as people complain about alleged marginalisation. Those demonstrations began over a plan to expand the federal capital, Addis Ababa, into Oromia. That plan has been dropped, but the issue highlighted grievances with the government which have not gone away.

The Oromos are Ethiopia's most populous ethnic group.

People on Sunday were also calling for the release of a group of 18 Muslims who were imprisoned last year under controversial anti-terrorlegislation.

Why are regional boundaries so important?
When the current government came to power in 1991 after overthrowingthe military dictatorship of Mengistu Haile Mariam it introduced a federalconstitution aimed at decentralising power.

The regional states that were created were based on ethnicity andlanguage.

That has meant that ethnic identity has come to the fore in disputes over where regional boundaries should lie. These tensions have been witnessedin other parts of the country, not only in Amhara and Oromia.

Is there a connection with other protests in the country?
There is no formal connection between the protesters in Amhara andthose in Oromia, but it does appear to represent a growing boldnessamongst some people to challenge the government.

Ethiopia's government has been criticised by rights groups for cracking down on protests and dissident voices and using anti-terror laws to silencepeople.

In Amhara, the demonstration two weeks ago was sparked by the imprisonment of members of the Welkait Amhara Identity Committee. Inthe face of this apparent repression any anti-government demonstrationcan be seen as significant.

What's the government saying?
Two weeks ago, Ethiopia's federal government accused neighbouring Eritrea of being behind the unrest and strongly warned the country torefrain from its "evil actions". So far there has been no word from the authorities in Addis Ababa about Sunday's protest, but the Amhara regional government has commented.

It said that the problems the protesters raised on Sunday were to do withgood governance and it will try to address these. This echoed the response of the Oromia regional government earlier this year when it saidit would address the grievances of the people there.

Gonder speaks for Amara, Oromia, Tigrai, all of Ethiopia

Ethiomedia Updated August 1, 2016

Update - Gonder Heralds End of TPLF Era TPLF, which was paralyzed by apopular revolt in Gonder over the weekend, has been on a killing spree in Oromia region at about the same time. Agazi forces opened fire on Saturday and killed at least six people and wounded 25 in Awodai town, Hararghe. TPLF/EPRDF offices are reportedly burned down. Despite killings, anti-government protests in Oromia show no sign of abating.

GONDER (July 30) - Defying a government order not to go ahead with a protest rally, Gonder not only held a massive protest rally but also rekindled the spirit of Ethiopian Unity by condemning government killingsin Oromia.

A bedrock of Ethiopian patriotism, Gonder's solidarity with Oromia is a slap in the face of TPLF, because TPLF, the architect of ethnic federalism[aka ethnic hate], had thought its politics had brought Ethiopia to its knees, and the people would never rise up to challenge it.

TPLF, a group of thugs whose job prior to the 1991 change was no more than serving as foot soldiers for Eritrean organizations, had preached ethnic hate and division for 25 years but its gambling backfired on Sundayin Gonder and could be the harbinger of TPLF's demise.

Knowing that the Ethiopian flag has been a symbol of unifying force, TPLF had tarnished the sacred symbol by placing a huge, ugly star at the centerof the flag. Ethiopians didn't accept TPLF's flag, but have been banned by the government never to resort to the original Ethiopia tricolor of Green, Yellow and Red. On Sunday, patriotic Gonder kicked TPLF in the rear and held the genuine Ethiopian flag high in the air throughout the day.

The protesters also chanted that the imprisoned Welkait Tegede committee men should be released without any preconditions, or else facethe consequences. Marchers also denounced ongoing killings in Oromia, and vowed their struggle wouldn't stop short of securing what it takes for the reign of democracy, freedom and justice in Ethiopia.

ETHIOPIA: Socio-Economic Issues: Facts & Stats

Human Rights Watch (HRW) in its report,“Waiting Here For Death," states:The Ethiopian federal government’s current villagization program is occurring in four regions—Gambella, Benishangul-Gumuz, Somali, and Afar. This involves the resettlement of approximately 1.5 million people throughout the lowland areas of the country—500,000 in Somali region, 500,000 in Afar region, 225,000 in Benishangul-Gumuz and 225,000 in Gambella. This is all imposed movement, often applied with force, in orderto provide pristine land, free of any inconveniences and settlements to foreign corporate allies.

Remember the Western outrage and outcry during Mengistu's villagizationagenda. It is almost the opposite now and even the World Bank is participating in these programmes. As they say in Ethiopia lately, Ethiopian foodstuffs, kids and maids are quietly exported to dessert lands and rich farmers are imported into Ethiopia. Warlords can also use identityconstruction in order to create new identities with warrior names for child soldiers or adult soldiers who are recruited to their networks as if to throwoff the ties of family tradition. This reconstruction of identities is thought to make them less responsible for terrible conducts and more effective fighters, as their traditional social context is cut off (MacKinlay, 2007, p.58). The media has produced several stories about these young soldierswith new warrior names who often dress up in attires like wigs and gownsto further distance themselves from their former social identity and context:

There are some agricultural products which significantly contribute to theeconomic development of our region and are very important export itemssuch as sesame and other cereals, gum and gum Arabica, leather and leather products, hides etc. When we take sesame alone, in 2006 by exporting 51,776 tons, a total of 50 million dollar was earned and out of the 1.3 million quintals of sesame produced/ harvested in the production year of 2008, over 90,000 tons was exported to the international marketthrough port Sudan and eventually over 121.5 million dollar foreign/hardcurrency was earned. Therefore, this encouraging result indicates the possibility of increasing the contribution of such agricultural products to the economic development of our region if an integrated and intensified effort is made to increase the quality, quantity and competitiveness of these kinds of export of agricultural products.

warlords are "people who are driven overwhelmingly by personal power, glory, and monetary gain and who are ready to sacrifice thousands of lives, land, and property for that power."12 Lezhnev claims that the central motivation of the warlord, in addition to monetary resources, is thequest for "wealth, power, and fame."13 This thesis accepts the idea that warlords share two main characteristics: they have military legitimacy, and they are motivated by political power, wealth, and fame.

For Ethiopia, the numbers of children sent in adoption climbed from a totalof 262 in 2002 to more than 2520 in 2007—a tenfold expansion in five years. When you consider that the average cost to adopt in Ethiopia is around twenty thousand US dollars (the cheapest in the world) the government took in over 50 million US dollars in 2007 alone. About 3,500Ethiopian children have been adopted by American families and of those, about 1,250 children were adopted in 2007 alone, saidHermela Kebede, director of the Ethiopian Community Center in Washington. Government officials have estimated that 4,000 will be adopted in 2008, she said.

In the United States international adoptions are a big business, where a large number of private international adoption agencies are paid on average $30,000 a time to find a child for hopeful parents. Famine, disease and war have orphaned around five million Ethiopian children. It's not surprising then that the business of international adoptions is thriving here and Americans in particular are queuing up to adopt a child. At least 70 adoption agencies have set up business in Ethiopia. Almost half are unregistered, but there's scant regulation anyway and fraud and deceptionare rife. Some agencies actively recruit children in a process known as harvesting.

About 30 Ethiopian children are leaving the country every week, bound fora new home, new parents and an uncertain future. According to a Ministryof Labor and Social Affairs (MoLSA) report, approximately 150,000 children lived on the streets, and 60,000 of these children lived in the capital. There were an estimated 5.4 million orphans in the country, according to the report of Central Statistics Authority. Government-run orphanages were overcrowded, and conditions were often unsanitary. Dueto severe resource constraints, hospitals and orphanages often overlookedor neglected abandoned infants. Children did not receive adequate health care, and several infants died due to lack of adequate medical attention. There were multiple international press reports that parents received payment from some adoption agencies to relinquish their children for international adoption, and that some agencies concealed the age or health history of children from their adoptive parents. The governmentwas slow to investigate these allegations.

Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs (MoLSA) officials reported that up to 1,500 Ethiopians departed daily as part of the legal migration process. Officials estimated this likely represented only 30 to 40 percent of those migrating for work; the remaining 60 to 70 percent were smuggled with the facilitation of illegal brokers. Brokers serve as the primary recruiters inrural areas. Over 400 employment agencies were licensed to recruit Ethiopians for work abroad; however, government officials acknowledged many to be involved in both legal and illegal recruitment, leading to the government's ban on labor export. Following the ban, irregular labor migration through Sudan is believed to have increased. Eritreans residing in Ethiopia-based refugee camps, some of whom voluntarily migrate out ofthe camps, and others who are lured or abducted from the camps, face situations of human trafficking in Sudan and Egypt's Sinai Peninsula.Since November 2013, the Saudi Arabian government has deported over 163,000 Ethiopians, including over 94,000 men working mostly in the construction sector and over 8,000 children working in cattle herding and domestic service; international organizations and Ethiopian officials believe thousands were likely trafficking victims. Many migrants reported not having repaid debts to those who smuggled them to Saudi Arabia, rendering some of them at risk for re-trafficking. The government also didnot effectively address child prostitution and other forms of internal trafficking through law enforcement, protection, or prevention efforts. It did not report on the number of victims it identified in 2013.

However, following the Saudi Arabian government's closure of its border and massive deportation of migrant workers, officials worked quickly and collaboratively with international organizations and NGOs to repatriate andaccommodate over 163,000 Ethiopian returnees from Saudi Arabia and several hundred from Yemen.

In April 2013, through a bilateral agreement with Yemeni officials, the Ethiopian government facilitated the return of 618 Ethiopian migrants stranded in Yemen after having failed to cross the Saudi Arabian border orbeen deported from Saudi Arabia. The government did not coordinate humanitarian assistance for these returnees upon their arrival in Addis Ababa. IOM coordinated subsequent returns, providing shelter at the IOM transit center in Addis Ababa, where returnees received medical care and psycho-social support while UNICEF conducted family tracing. The government did not provide financial or in-kind support to these IOM-led operations.

During the year, a planned government-funded, six-week, pre-departuretraining for migrant workers was suspended due to lack of funding.
Labor migration agreements negotiated in the previous reporting periodwith Jordan, Kuwait, and Qatar remained in place; the government negotiated new agreements in 2013 with the Governments of Djibouti, Sudan, the UAE, and Kenya. However, these agreements did not explicitly contain provisions to protect workers—such as by outlining mandatory rest periods, including grounds for filing grievances, and prohibiting recruitment fees.

Portrait of The Mystery Lady

Mme Colette Habetwold, widow of the late distinguished diplomat This is a tribute to Colette Valade, one of the most distinguished French citizens who, among her compatriots, protested Fascist aggression when Mussolini invaded Ethiopia in 1933. Valade entangled herself in the fate ofthe country when she married Aklilu Habetwold, an Ethiopian official who later became the Minister of Foreign Affairs and Prime Minister of Ethiopia.Valade became Aklilu's closest confidante and ally in promoting Ethiopia's cause for independence. Together, they established two French support groups in Paris and launched a periodical, Nouvelle d’ethiopie, with the aim of bringing the Ethiopian struggle to French public. As part of their activism, Valade and Aklilu cycled long distances to make speeches and pleas throughout Europe. Valade's tireless support and strong network played a major role in Aklilu's influence and fundraising activities for the nation. Valade defended Ethiopia with determination, centering the plightof Ethiopians to the French and worldwide with remarkable devotion.

During the occupation, Aklilu was an Attaché in the Ethiopian legation in Paris (1936-1940). He was educated at the French Lycée in Alexandria before coming to Paris to obtain his law degree, which he completed in 1936 at Sorbonne. As Secretary of the Ethiopian Delegation Aklilu arguedfor the Ethiopian cause at the League of Nations, flying frequently between Paris and Geneva along with the Ethiopian Minister in Geneva, Fitawrari Tekle Hawariat Wayeh, leader of the delegation.

Aklilu met Colette while he was studying at Sorbonne. She was a tall, charming young woman, often smiling brightly, in one photo seen with herarms akimbo. The handsome young man with huge cinnamon complexion began pursuing her for a date. He wore his black wavy hair just below his ears, European style. There was an immediate attraction, even though a love affair between Europeans and non-Europeans caused a stir. They hadlived together for 24 years until they were married in 1953. Colette's parents reportedly gave their blessing for the union."It was she who always stood by me when I was studying for my undergraduate in law andpolitical science at Sorbonne, and at the Faculté de droit" he would write later.

After the defeat of the French government and the occupation of Paris in June 1940, the young diplomat had to flee on a forged passport under thename of Thomas Woldu. He left his passport with the American ambassador in Paris, requesting him to send it to him to his destination.
He took leave of his lover and partner, Madame Colette, and slipped into Portugal with a Colombian identity. He received his passport on arriving inLisbon, thanks to the American Ambassador and Colette.

Following the restoration in 1941, Aklilu returned to Ethiopia, joined theForeign Office and served in several senior-level diplomatic positions, including vice-minister of the pen (1942-1943), vice-minister and then acting minister of foreign affairs (1943-1949) and minister of foreign affairs (1949-1958). During this time, Aklilu played a key role in the complex process that brought Eritrea into federation with Ethiopia.

For several years, Colette stayed back home while Aklilu was busy servingthe Ethiopian government until 1950, waiting for the Emperor to grant him a permit to tie the knot. Naturally, the Emperor was not enthusiastic to the idea of one his top brass marrying a foreigner. He had to relent knowing Akilu's commitment to her was no passing fancy. Eventually, theygot married with the imperial blessing in n a simple ceremony in Addis Ababa in 1953 at his brother's Akalewold's residence. Their mize, or best men, were minister of the Pen (Tsehafi Tizaz) Wolde Giorgis, Tsehafi Tizaz Tefera-Werque Kidanewold, Col. Kifle Ergetu, Asrat Yinesu (later ambassador). She was devoted to her husband, who was equally devoted to her. She would later tell friends that being married to Aklilu and seeing Ethiopian politics so close up had been a privilege for her. Not content to stay in the background and handle domestic matters, she started taking part in different causes. She even had her own newspaper column at a French language daily L'Ethiopie d'Aujourdhui, which in 1966 later becameAddis Soir. She took on official duties and attended lunches or dinners, mastering the kind of showmanship that was required for the occasion.

And there were plenty of foreign dignitaries then. We see her in black andwhite photographs beside her husband greeting Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia, Nikita Khrushchev of the then Soviet Union, with Shah Reza Pahlavi of Iran, and of course her county's president, De Gaulle who visited Addis Ababa in November 1966.

The two couple's love for one another was not always received by the race-conscious Ethiopian elite and their own lives were languid games played under the old, traditional rules. Aklilu himself was seen as a wild card with a foreign design who had appeared in familiar deck. ChristopherClapham in his book Haile-Selassie's Government (1969) says that Aklilu as Prime Minister in the 1960s has become responsible for much of the government's policy, and is probably the most influential politician in the country. However, he said his foreign connections are a source of suspicion to many, and his social background provides no traditional basefor authority. "He is regarded by some more French than Ethiopia; certainly his administrative methods are rather more European than thoseof most of his contemporaries," Clapham wrote.

John Spencer, who served as a legal and foreign affairs advisers to the Ethiopian government, in his book Ethiopia at Bay: A personal account of the Haile Selassie years wrote that Aklilu was in many ways the most Europeanised of all those surrounding the Emperor and at the same time,he was resented for his greater knowledge of European psychology, wiles,and designs and for the favouritism the emperor showed him.

Madame Aklilu's unscripted part of first lady was not to last long.Emperor Haile Selassie, by then a tremoring and aging patriarch, was to be a victimof a social earthquake. When student protests, and an economic downturnturned into a popular uprising against the government, calls went out for Aklilu to be dismissed. In February 1974, he resigned as prime minster, thus paving the way for the military accession. On 24 November 1974, Akillu along with other 51 other leading political and military figures was executed without trial. Madame Colette, who was in Paris for medical treatment, couldn't make much sense of what has happened. As much as she insisted upon a political justifications for her involvement with the country, it was her burgeoning passion for Aklilu that cemented her devotion to the cause. Their ill-fated love ended in ruin. She decided to remain there. They say her sadness accompanied her to death. She died five years ago at the age of 95. The couple never had children. (Ato AmdeAkalework, Aklilu’s nephew passed on some important information included in the article.)

CHRISTIAN BIBLE:

Ethiopian Bible is the oldest and complete bible on earth.

Written in Ge’ez an ancient dead language of Ethiopia it’s nearly 800 years older than theKing James Version and contains 81-88 books compared to 66. It includes the Book of ENOCH, Esdras, Buruch and all 3 Books of MACCABEE, and a host of others that was excommunicated from the KJV.

World’s first illustrated Christian bible discovered at Ethiopian monastery. The world’s earliest illustrated Christian book has been saved by a British charity which located it at a remote Ethiopian monastery. The incredible Garima Gospels are named after a monk who arrived in the African country in the fifth century and is said to have copied them out in just oneday. Beautifully illustrated, the colours are still vivid and thanks to the Ethiopian Heritage Fund have been conserved.

Abba Garima arrived from Constantinople in 494 AD and legend has it thathe was able to copy the gospels in a day because God delayed the sun from setting.

A page from the Garima Gospels – the world’s oldest Christian book foundin a remote monastery in Ethiopia.The incredible relic has been kept ever since in the Garima Monastery near Adwa in the north of the country, which is in the Tigray region at 7,000 feet.Experts believe it is also the earliest example of book binding still attached to the original pages.

The survival of the Gospels is incredible considering the country has beenunder Muslim invasion, Italian invasion and a fire in the 1930s destroyedthe monastery’s church.They were written on goat skin in the early Ethiopian language of Ge’ez.There are two volumes which date from the same time, but the second is written in a different hand from the first.

Both contain illustrations and the four Gospels.

Though the texts had been mentioned by the occasional traveller since the1950s, it had been thought they dated from the 11th century at the earliest. Carbon dating, however, gives a date between 330 and 650 – which tantalisingly overlaps the date Abba Garima arrived in the country.So the first volume could be in his hand – even if he didn’tcomplete the task in a day as the oral tradition states.

The charity Ethiopian Heritage Fund that was set up to help preserve the treasures in the country has made the stunning discovery.It was also allowed incredibly rare access to the texts so experts could conserve themon site. The incredible relic has been kept ever since in the Garima Monastery near Adwa in the north of Ethiopia

It is now hoped the Gospels will be put in a museum at the monastery where visitors will be able to view them. Blair Priday from the Ethiopian Heritage Fund said: ‘Ethiopia has been overlooked as a source of these fantastic things. ‘Many of these old Christian relics can only be reached byhiking and climbing to remote monasteries as roads are limited in these mountainous regions. ‘All the work on the texts was done in situ and everything is reversible, so if in future they can be taken away for furtherconservation we won’t have hindered that.‘The pages had been crudely stitched together in a restoration in the 1960s and some of the pages wouldn’t even turn. And they were falling to pieces.

‘The Garima Gospels have been kept high and dry which has helped preserve them all these years and they are kept in the dark so the colourslook fresh. ‘This was the most astounding of all our projects and the Patriarch, the head of the Ethiopian Church, had to give his permission.

‘Most of the experts did the work for nothing.

‘We are currently undertaking other restoration programmes on wall paintings and religious texts . We believe that preserving Ethiopia’s cultural heritage will help to increase visitor revenue and understanding ofthe extraordinary history of this country.

ANALYSIS
A Race To The Bottom: Ethiopia at Risk
Why Ethiopians Must Unite By Aklog Birara (PhD)

August 3, 2016

As a prelude to the predictable collapse of Mengistu Hailemariam’s Socialist Military Dictatorship two years before the TPLF/EPRDF took powerin 1991, the Associated Press wrote the following ominous report.

“Nearly the entire high command of this Marxist government has been killed.” If you liquidate your entire defense command, it goes without saying that what follows is state and government collapse. AP could haveadded at the same time that, almost the entire population of Ethiopia hadrevolted against and rejected the regime. Today, the heroic and proud people of Gondar are making history by defying the TPLF Security and Defense apparatus that only caters to its creator, the TPLF. The peaceful and honorable protestors urged all Ethiopians to join the popular strugglefor justice, genuine equality, national unity and sovereignty and a rapid transition to a democratic state and government. The people of Ethiopia are speaking with a loud and unified voice that the TPLF repressive state and government machine is no longer acceptable. Political elites and opposition groups better wake up from their slumber that the people are far ahead and unify their assets.

From this popular revolt that defied the cruel and punishment prone TPLF state and government machine we learn that a regime that does not capture the hearts and minds of the population that it governs has essentially lost the legitimacy to rule. No one respects it; let alone accept it. Its downfall is therefore predictable. My interest is this. This loss of the social and human capital base created and nurtured by the TPLF makes Ethiopia vulnerable regardless of the security and defense establishment the current ruling party deploys. This bloated, well-paid, well-endowed narrow ethnic based Security, Defense and Diplomatic machine is no longer invincible. Nevertheless, it has enormous capacity to kill Ethiopians.It had earlier failed to preserve Ethiopia's access to the sea. It had abandoned its obligation to defend Ethiopia's territorial integrity with the Sudan. It had failed to defend Gambella from foreign attack. In all cases, it acquiesced to the dictates of the self-absorbed and self-serving TPLF rather defending the national interests of Ethiopia and its people.

Mistrust of State and Government is Consequential

The consequence of public mistrust in the state and government at a timeof external threat is huge. It has far reaching effects on the fabric of Ethiopian society, the lives of the vast majority of the population and the security of the country. No sustainable and equitable growth can take place under this condition. This is why experts suggest that no regime canafford to punish its population and explain away the relentless punishmentof ordinary people as a response to external "subversive and terrorist forces." In short, the state and government have become the problem.
When you kill, maim, imprison, evict and dispossess citizens; you subvertthe socioeconomic, cultural and political bonds that hold the population together. You undermine the essential capacity of the country to withstand externa threat. A society whose social fabric is broken through relentless repression and ethnic divide and rule lends itself to external threat and to a failed state. This is inevitable. In effect, TPLF repressive responses suggest that deep seated and systemic problems can be resolved through the use of force rather than through political reform including a transitional government of national unity that will lead to shared political power and ultimately to a free and fair election; and the formation of a genuine democratic state and government. Trying to quell popular unrests in Gambella, the Omo Valley, the through state violence is a losing proposition. Aside from the important domestic socioeconomic and political turmoil it creates, the suppression and alienation of the vast majority of the population emboldens external enemies (See Freedom House, Ethiopia: Attack on Civil Society Escalatesas Dissent Spreads, July 233, 2016).

"Ethiopia's perceived stability and its much-touted role in the global fight against terrorism in the Horn of Africa are at stake if EPRDF continues to ignore the dangers of suppressing citizens' legitimate demands (Gondar, Oromia, Gambella and the Omo Valley) for inclusive and accountable governance. Any economic progress can only be sustained with a genuinecommitment to political reform that adequately responds to the demands of Ethiopia's diverse political, ethnic, and religious groups at all levels of public life." You can't be a regional leader against terrorism while "terrorizing your own people," said one foreign expert in a conversation about the subject. Freedom House explains the essence of the chronic system-driven problem 101 million Ethiopians face and calls for a radical political reform now and not tomorrow. Simply put, Ethiopia's vulnerabilityis compounded several fold by the current system of ethnic enclaves and unbelievable state-sponsored atrocities. It is madness.

This leads me to my own assessment of the external threat that is out there for anyone who reads the Arab, especially the Egyptian media on a regular basis. Long before the TPLF/EPRDF took power, this same media opined and supported the secession of Eritrea and did all it could to make this happen. It had a willing partner in TPLF that facilitated secession that led to Ethiopia being one of the largest countries in the world to be land locked. The TPLF is now teaching children that Eritrea was never part of Ethiopia. It is also teaching them that the lands the TPLF snatched from Wollo and Gondar are historically part of Tigray. In the case of the former,it is even debatable that the ultimate beneficiaries of secession are Eritreans. The Gulf States and Saudi Arabia are achieving their goal of weakening Ethiopia by establishing their predominance over the entire Red Sea. Incidentally, this is what Sadam Hussein had vowed in supporting Eritrean secession. A quarter of a century later, the same Arabmedia chorus has focused on Ethiopia's construction of the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam (GERD), whose completion is not that far.
While I have consistently supported Ethiopia's legitimate right to harness its rivers in support of its 101 million people, especially through irrigated farming, I am not convinced that the beneficiaries of the GERD will be Ethiopians. It certainly will be TPLF elites and the Sudanese. The dam is inches away from the Sudan border for a strategic reason, TPLF's and not Ethiopia's. Does anyone really know why the dam was not built far inland?

Egypt's Daily News covers the story of the dam on a constant basis. In itslatest coverage, it acknowledges that the GERD is 70 percent complete.

Academics and experts present a constant barrage of criticism not only against Ethiopia but also the government of President Abdel Fattah Al-Sisi.

Simply put, the Arab World's media blitz against the GERD is "war-like andvicious." Professor Nader Noor El-Din, a water resources expert at Cairo University argues that consultation and negotiation is "useless." Instead, "Noor El-Din suggested that Egypt should resort to the International Courtand the UN Security Council to prove the potential risks of the construction of the dam on Egypt's access to water." He further contends that "If potential harm was proven later on (after completion), Egypt would not be able to take legal action." The likelihood that the International Court or the UN Security Council would dispute Ethiopia's position to harness its waters for its own development is almost nil. The question is what, if any, is Egypt's option B?

In the "Coming War: Egypt, Ethiopia, and the Nile," March 301, 2016, Malcom Dash quotes Egyptian and pro-Egyptian alarmists as experts. "Egypt is totally dependent on the Nile. Without it, there is no Egypt." Thisis only an assertion. Non one can predict the impact of the GERD on the flow of water to Egypt. Here is the problem. Egypt is used to "be the dominant power in the region for 200 years" by excluding Ethiopia, the primary source of Nile waters. Although Ethiopia was a sovereign state at the time, the water has been regulated by a 1959 Agreement with the Sudan. "This agreement allotted nothing to Ethiopia and other riparian states." It was therefore inevitable that black African states would renegotiate the agreement; and they did. The New Nile Cooperative Framework Agreement that black African states signed and Egypt rejectedmakes it possible for Ethiopia and other black African nations to harness their waters, including building dams. This new agreement has "shaken things up in the region." Dash argues that "Egypt now finds itself without any right of inspection in the GERD…and without a right of veto." I believeEgypt must recognize and embrace the new agreement of sharing the waters of the Nile. If there is decrease in its allotment so what?

The problem is this. Egypt still feels that its "historical and natural rights"position is legitimate. "While officials here (in Cairo) hope for a diplomaticsolution to diffuse the crisis, security sources say Egypt's military leadership is prepared to use force to protect its stake in the river." This will be a disaster for all concerned.

Colonialism is gone but Egypt's colonial position persists

In my estimation, Egypt's position of "historical and natural rights "over the Abbay won't be tenable in both in the International Court or the UN Security Council because of precedents; and because African riparian states have agreed on the New Nile Cooperative Framework Agreement offair and equitable use (see a successive of articles I have written on the subject). Sadly and contrary to this Agreement, the Sisi government has launched an ambitious program of agricultural production against a background of water scarcity. Surprisingly, Egypt has also embarked uponthe creation of the Al-Salam Canal “to transport water from the Nile to the Sinai" while 20 million Ethiopians starve and Ethiopia's need for irrigatedagriculture is compelling and a must for survival.

In short, Egyptian academics and experts have not moved an inch fromEgypt's colonial position:

1. "Historical and natural rights" of water share and insistence that thereshould not be any decrease;

2. Insistence that the GERD is not used for anything else other than thegeneration of electricity; and

3. Egyptian authority to monitor the construction of the GERD thatabrogates Ethiopia's security, long-term national interests and sovereignty.

In my estimation, Ethiopia's legitimate right to harness and utilize its rivers for generating electric power and for irrigation on a massive scale isincontestable. However, the current internal political turmoil and the inability of the TPLF to address it in a fundamental way wisely and quicklyby involving all stakeholders is worrisome and troublesome. Historically, Ethiopia succeeded in defending its territories, independence and sovereignty because of the unity of its diverse population. It is the unity and solidarity of its people that withstood the test of time by repelling invasion and aggression, including Egypt's. Assault of this vital factor makes Ethiopia most vulnerable. The sooner the problem is resolved; the better.

African (the African Union) and the UN system as well as the US tell us that Ethiopia possesses one of the strongest military establishments in theentire continent. So did the socialist Dictatorship. Today, its Defense Forces consist of more than 250,000 personnel. The regime it replaced deployed more than half a million soldiers. The UN/AU, the US and others argue that the TPLF government has expanded Ethiopia's military hardware manufacturing capacity. They rarely acknowledge that the process to make Ethiopia self-sufficient in basic armament hardware was actually initiated under the Military Socialist Dictatorship it overthrew in 1991. They do not tell us or admit that the TPLF dismantled the Ethiopian diverse, competent and National Defense establishment at a huge cost to the country. It replaced it with a TPLF command.

The current security and defense establishment is staffed and managed byTigreans at the top of the decision-making pyramid. How can Ethiopia guarantee its security and sovereignty with this non-representative command? It is true that the country's growing, well-financed and secretive military industry establishment manufactures sophisticated armaments including T-72 tanks, missiles, rocket launchers and other sophisticated armaments. The TPLF intelligence and security system is equally hugely endowed with financial resources and works closely withAfrican and Western partners. Its commitment to national defense is atbest questionable. On the other side of the equation is a nationalist andpatriotic Egyptian army with popular support to sustain a war. Westerngovernments, the UN and AU argue that Ethiopia has not suffered fromatrocities on civilians by terrorist such as Al-Qaeda and Al-Shahab.

However, this capacity tells us only a partial story. The one party state and government is far more adept at deploying its security and defenseforces to kill, maim, arrest and forcibly evict ordinary Ethiopians than atrepelling externa threats. Lack of diversity at the top makes this establishment highly suspect, untrusted and vulnerable.

If we subscribe to the notion that economic growth that is not fair and inclusive is not sustainable or fair; it is equally plausible to suggest that Ethiopia's current military establishment that is dominated by the TPLF iseither invincible or sustainable. It isn't.

When did Ethiopia Determine to Be Self-sufficient in Armaments?

A resilient economy will make Ethiopia self-stuffiest in many areas including defense. To reiterate, the contention that the TPLF pioneered Ethiopia's military modernization is equally questionable. It undermines the value added from a diverse and unified representation and creativity at the command structure. I wish to remind readers the remarkable history, evolution and modernization of Ethiopia's defense forces and the pioneering leaders behind this. No one knows this better than Dr. Richard Pankhurst. In his work, Innovation and Opposition to Change in Ethiopian History he provides us with the following perspective. "Ethiopia's first great innovating monarch was, it is generally agreed, Emperor Tewodros, or Theodore II (1855-1868). The British writer Clements Markham referred to him as no less than the "most remarkable man" of nineteenth century Africa. Likening him to Peter the Great of Russia, he added: "Theywere both born kings of men, both endowed with military genius, both lovers of the mechanical arts; both possessed of dauntless courage."

Why is Emperor Tewodros "remarkable" and in what specific areas? First and foremost is his determination to unify Ethiopia and to retake lands occupied by foreign forces such as the Turks. Second is his recognition that Ethiopia cannot sustain itself without a modern and well-equipped army. Third is his determination that Ethiopia should do all these and more while maintaining its unique culture and identity. Today, these principles have been decimated by the TPLF at a cost to the country's future. In my assessment dismantling Ethiopia's national defense, institutionalizing and celebrating narrow and rent-seeking ethnic- nationalism in the defense establishment and elsewhere is corrosive to thewhole and dangerous to Ethiopia’s security and national interests. An ethnic security and defense establishment that caters to its ethnic creatorscannot be national or patriotic.

“Tewodros’ innovating genius, though remarkable for its intensity and determination, was nonetheless largely restricted, like the modernizing interests of previous rulers, to the strategic and military field. His innovations were thus mainly in such matters as the reorganization of thearmy, the casting of cannon, the construction of carriages upon which to transport these weapons, the building of roads for such wheeled artillery and so forth.” The building of roads entails a recognition that physical infrastructure is fundamental for modernization. Cannons alone won’t create resiliency and sustainability. What is remarkable is that this Ethiopian leader recognized the need of overhauling an entire materially backward society against formidable odds void of modern educational andother institutions. Ethiopia was surrounded by enemies, the Turks in the East, the Egyptians in the West and North and competing feudal lords within.

Despite hurdle, Emperor Tewodros II’s determination to establish a modern Ethiopian army and the material and physical infrastructure to support it was unmatched. “Almost the first evidence of Tewodros’ innovating interest is be found in a report for July 25, 1853, by the BritishConsul, Walter Plowden. It states that Tewodros (still at that time known as Kasa) had, “with the assistance of some Turks, in a degree disciplined his army. In a subsequent report of July 9 of the following year Plowden stated that Kasa had “taught his soldiers some discipline.” Establishing a “disciplined army” is not sufficient in sustaining it. Traditionally, soldiers obtained their sustenance by “looting” food from the population.

Emperor Tewodros II was the first to recognize soldiers needed to be paid;and required them to purchase what they need. Pankhurst quotes Plowdenthat the Emperor “has effected a great reform, by paying them, and ordering them to purchase their food, but in no way to harass and plunderthe peasant as before.” Contrast this principle with the TPLF preoccupationthat it’s Security and Defense establishment had license to harass, kill, maim, persecute and dispossess innocent and peaceful citizens who seek justice. How do explain that the TPLF core in Tigray is licensed and free to send special forces to intimidate, arrest, maim, kill and persecute innocentpeople in Gondar?

What is a Security and Defense Establishment for?

What I find relevant to underscore is the ultimate purpose of a national army. Emperor Tewodros II was unequivocal that the army’s primary andsole loyalty is to Ethiopia and all of the Ethiopian people. It is not to a party, an ethnic or religious group or dictator. He created ranks such as generals in “place of feudal chieftains” or lords wedded to their localities. In Plowden’s own words the Emperor “began the arduous task of breakingthe power of the great feudal chiefs – a task achieved in Europe only during the reigns of many consecutive Kings.” This discipline and loyalty to country over tribe was followed by successive regimes until the TPLF took power 138 years later. It is hard for most of us to believe that the disciplined Emperor was also a teacher and a trainer of protocol and discipline himself. He was against corruption and self-promotion. This national model has evaporated. In its place is a TPLF Security and Defense Establishment that has alienated itself from the vast majority of the population. Time and time again, it has catered to and continues to cater to the TPLF.

This takes me to the primary narrative of manufacturing of arms pioneered by Emperor Tewodros at a village called Gaffat near the town ofDebre Tabor in Gondar. This is where the first Cannon making project in Ethiopian history was launched. According to Pankhurst, "Tewodros' attempts at manufacturing cannon were even more remarkable. Debtera Zaneb, one of the two main Ethiopian chroniclers of the reign, tells the story that as early as 1853 Theodore tried to make a cannon by boring a tree trunk and reinforcing it with iron. Though the result was, as might beexpected, a failure, the attempt was by no means insignificant, particularly in view of later events." The Emperor did not stop his commitment to innovation. Several guns were produced by local craftsmen with guidance from foreign experts. The ultimate product was Sebastopol.

In Pankhurst's own words, "The largest of the guns produced at Tewodros'command was called "Sebastopol", after the then recent great battle in the Crimean War. The weapon was capable of firing a 1,000 pound shell. "Sebastopol" was said to weigh at least 70 tons, and, according to the British envoy Rassam, required as many as 500 people to pull it uphill. "Itwas unquestionably a wonderful piece of ordnance for its size and more wonderful still was the workmanship of his Majesty's European artisans, who had no experience of casting cannon." History notes that the creationof this powerful cannon was the happiest in the life of this modernizing Emperor. Did everyone approve what he did? Of course not. Foreigners were threatened by the notion that a black African country would become the next Germany or Russia. Locals were concerned that the Emperor waswasting resources on something on which they were unfamiliar. Chieftainsor lords were perturbed that their regional powers will be diminished.

To reiterate the point, successive regimes have been guided by this fundamental principle of a institutionalizing a self-reliant National and Patriotic Defense Force representing the country's mosaic of peoples thatis totally loyal to Ethiopia and not to a single tribe or party. Equally impressive and remarkable to internalize and remember is the dedicationof members of Ethiopia's Defense Forces against foreign aggression. Hadthe TPLF retained Ethiopia's seasoned national defense, it would have been unimaginable for the Sudanese or for a group of gangsters and for others to violate Ethiopia's national boundaries and get away with impunity. It would have been unthinkable for the Sudanese to claim Ethiopian territories and assume ownership.

Vulnerability

Political and social volatility entails enormous risks for Ethiopia. Recent events of penetration of Ethiopia's territory in Gambella, the massacre of civilians, the capture and abduction of innocent children and herds of cattle in broad day light followed by North Sudanese aggression against civilians in Beni-Shangul Gumuz close to the mighty Abbay River and the construction of the GERD beg the question of "Who is in charge of Ethiopia's territorial integrity and sovereignty and the safety of its citizens?" The Ethiopian poor support a massive intelligence, security and military establishment for the sole purpose of defending their country fromforeign aggression and for ensuring their own safety regardless of their ethnic or religious affiliation or the location of where they reside.
Ironically, this force that often serves as a hired hand in the UN system does not hesitate for a minute in squashing peaceful protests. So, why thebenign neglect of the country's borders and the safety of the Ethiopian people?

I do not believe that this intelligence, security and defense establishment paid for by 101 million Ethiopians can claim legitimacy as long as its strategic objective is: a) to defend and protect the vast natural resources,financial and economic empire of the TPLF b) to quell internal dissent and
c) to prolong TPLF hegemony.

What makes a state and government legitimate?

Military might and a network of spies alone do not make a country safe and secure. North Korea has a highly developed and sophisticated militaryestablishment. However, it is unable to produce enough goods, including foods to meet domestic demand. This raises the question of what makes agovernment good, acceptable to its people and therefor legitimate. The most widely accepted definition of a legitimate government is one that gets into office as a result of a fair, transparent and free electoral process.It is this fundamental principle in which ballots and votes by each eligible voter and not intimidation, bullying and bullets that gives any party or government a presumptive claim to legitimacy. In contrast, dictatorial and authoritarian governments do not allow separation of powers---legislative,judiciary and executive. Because these institutions are considered to be tools in the pursuit of power and riches, they are merged into one to the point of no distinction. The TPLF seized political power by force of arms and not public consent. Accordingly, it is determined to maintain this power indefinitely without a vote of any kind. It uses the security and defense forces to maintain continuity rather the defense of the country from external aggression. This makes the current government not only illegitimate; but also unreliable. For this reason, no one except a determined and unified popular force can hold this merged government and state accountable for aggression from without and human suffering from within. It operates with absolute impunity regardless of atrocitiesinflicted on the population.

Courage resides in the collective will of the people

Who would have imagined just a few months ago that the people of Gondar would bring the TPLF regime to its knees? Who would have imagined that the old, the young, the rich, the poor, farmers, children as young as 5 years, Muslims and Christians, teachers, students etc. would unite, defy orders from the TPLF, join hands and demand democratic change? In my view, Gondaries shattered the mistaken narrative and viewthat popular resistance does not work. This history making event shows that popular resistance does work. No force can suppress the will and determination of people who stand for a common purpose. This remarkable resistance needs to be scaled up so that it becomes national.

Among the most remarkable attributes of the popular uprising in Gondar is its civility, discipline and peace orientation. The protestors made a cleardistinction between the repressive and arrogant TPLF and the people of Tigray. These two peoples have a great deal in common and they share a common destiny. The call by the TPLF core in Tigray for war and revenge is insane and must be condemned by Tigreans who do not share this call. Gondaries never targeted the people of Tigray and will never do so. The Tigray Kilil administration's irresponsible call for revenge against the Amhara population of Gondar reinforces my contention that the only beneficiaries will be Ethiopia's traditional enemies. I am concerned that killings of more Amhara by the TPLF will lead to civil war. No sane person should want civil war over peace and national reconciliation. No single Gondarie or other person that I know of has called for revenge or for civil war or for the destruction of property etc. It is unbelievable to me that theTPLF core prefers the protection of buildings and other property over the sanctity of life. The persistence of this shameful preoccupation of material property over the sanctity of life will mark a dark that will impact numerous generations to come in the relations between the Tigrean and Amhara peoples. Each Ethiopian needs to work hard to avert such a disaster.

Legitimacy is gone

Legitimacy is often times in the eye of the beholder. Those in power andthose who benefit from misery have a different definition and understanding in contrast to those who suffer from illegitimacy. Remember that, once upon a time slavery was accepted as legitimateexcept by those who were enslaved and tormented by their owners.
Society woke up and said that slavery is not legitimate. This dehumanizingphenomenon was criminalized by the state and the government responsible for implementing the new law barring slavery. Might does not necessarily equate with public safety or national security.

So, why is Ethiopia, a country where 20 million people are starving, tens of thousands political opponents and dissidents are in jail and legions of youth are leaving their homes in search of opportunities abroad given legitimacy by the UN family, Western nations, rising powers in the East and investors? The simple and honest answer is that their interests are well served by a government that an overwhelming number of Ethiopians consider illegitimate. These same powers also contend that Ethiopia is oneof the few countries in Africa and the Middle East that is relatively stable. In a notable commentary by Anna Newby April 29, 2016 entitled "Ethiopia's outsized importance to African security," the author asks a pertinent question that I have tried to un-fathom and answer over the past decade. "Is Ethiopia a rising star in Africa? By some measures, yes.

As the second most-populous country on the continent (after Nigeria), it has achieved GDP growth rates above 10 percent for a decade. It is hometo the African Union headquarters and a key U.S. ally in the fight against al-Shabab militants in Somalia and in counterterrorism efforts more broadly. In a region where sectarian and ethnic tensions have a tendency to flare up, Ethiopia has achieved remarkable social cohesion. All this, after suffering decades of conflict, drought, famine, and poverty, among other challenges." This is untrue. I do not remember a time when there has been peace over the past 40 years. The country has been in a state ofpermanent suspense since the 2005 elections.

We may debate the rate of growth; but there is growth. I disagree with the contention of internal stability; but, I would have to acknowledge the reality that Ethiopia has contained al-Shahab and other terrorist cells within its soil. Where I agree with the author is the following. "At the same time, the government—led by the Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) coalition since 1991—has been criticized for cracking down on free speech, the press, and critics. And while Ethiopia isunlikely to re-experience famine, an ongoing drought in the country remains a major concern." I disagree with the author on this point. There has not been a single year over the past 25 years in which millions of Ethiopian did not depend on foreign food aid. Currently, 20 million Ethiopians are suffering from the worst drought induced famine in more than 50 years. The Ethiopian government has urged the global communityto provide humanitarian aid. Numerous humanitarian agencies are scrambling for donations. The Ethiopian Diaspora has raised hundreds of thousands of dollars in support of the most vulnerable. Ethiopia is conflict-ridden. It is hunger-ridden.

The author said nothing about interethnic conflicts in Gambella, Gondar and Oromia or abductions in Gambella and Sudanese violations of Ethiopian territories in Beni-Shangul Gumuz. Despite substantial and substantive omissions, Ethiopia continues to generate a great deal of interest among think-tanks and academics; albeit with limited participation by experts of people of Ethiopian decent. At least, Brookings has done better than most where no single Ethiopian is invited to contribute to a discussion that affect Ethiopia and the Ethiopian people.

Anna Newby noted that the Africa Security Initiative hosted a major forumat Brookings Institution early this year. “Brookings Senior Fellow and Co- Director of the Center for 21st Century Security and Intelligence Michael O’Hanlon opened the conversation by commenting that while we don’t always hear a lot about Ethiopia in the West—often drowned out by troubling developments in Somalia, Nigeria, and the Great Lakes region— it is “one of the most important countries on the continent by almost any measure.” Newby says that “As Africa’s oldest independent country, it hasa unique history—and along with it, a unique set of assets and challenges.” The focus of the discussion was the “security situation in Ethiopia and how it related to the broader region “addressed by Terrence Lyons, Professor at George Mason University and a leading scholar on Ethiopia. In his assessment of “Cohesion and tension” he acknowledged that Ethiopia is a “tough story” domestically—with a powerful single party that won 100 percent of seats in Parliament in the last election, the Ethiopian government has its share of authoritarian tendencies.”

Similar to other Western experts who accept government and donor data at face value, he acknowledged that “the economy has grown at an incredible pace for the last decade.” There no indication that lag of meaningful improvements in human development for the vast majority of the population, outrageous income and wealth concentration by a few ethnic elites at the top and an alarming inequality that deepens poverty even further, rent-seeking and scandalous outflow of financial capital fromone of the poorest countries on the planet were considered priorities at this forum. As has become the norm, stability took center stage over the issues of justice, genuine equality, the rule of law and democracy. This is the American narrative we hear all the time. Ethiopians have taken matters into their own hands and are shattering this false narrative.

I was taken aback by the contention presented by one scholar that ethnic-federalism “has worked well.” Why would people in Oromia, Gambella, theOgaden and Gondar risk their lives if this system worked so well? Newby quotes Professor Abye Assefa, associate professor at St. Lawrence University, who highlighted Ethiopia’s ethnic and religious diversity: The largest ethnic group in the country, Oromo people, comprise about 35 percent of the population, with the rest divided among a variety of ethnic groups; and Ethiopians are roughly two-thirds Christian and one-third Muslim” and that the system is working. For sure, Ethiopian society is oneof the most diverse in the world and the Ethiopian people are the least tribal anywhere in the world. This is the reason why the country survived over thousands of years. Abye is generally right in asserting the notion of “a strong sense of an Ethiopian identity—a product of its rich civilizational history. The central government has implemented a system of ethnic federalism that has worked well.” My counter point is that the system of ethnic elite based federalism has failed as has the pretense of democracy. The model has in fact strengthened ethnic elite democracy and riches at the expense of genuine democracy that thrives when its foundation is individual freedom and socioeconomic cohesion and solidarity. The pitfalls of ethnicization of politics in Ethiopia was not discussed. The growth story is exaggerated. A simple question to ask is "Who has benefitted most fromgrowth?" It is ethnic elites, most notably Tigreans with strong ties to the TPLF. This was not acknowledged at the forum.

Further, the ethnic federal model devolved power to ethnic regions. However, the TPLF wields central policy and decision-making authority. Unlike the previous model of a national army representing all ethnic groups that is loyal to the country, the current federal defense force is staffed and managed by the TPLF and is loyal only the TPLF. The TPLF machine permeates all societal life thereby smothering fundamental rightsand freedoms. Tensions and popular eruptions illustrate the notion that a firm national consensus and institutional arrangement on the meaning of democracy for a multi-ethnic and multi-religious society and on the respective and complementary roles of the federal and regional governments has yet to be discussed openly. The Constitution itself must be scrutinized. Some Ethiopian commentators contend that Ethiopia's national unity and sovereignty have been severely diminished by the current ethnic state and government; and that further devolution of powerwithout guaranteeing the rights of non-ethnic citizens would further strengthens secession (Article 39). There is a plethora of evidence that land and other natural resources ownership have become major sources ofconflict. State ownership of land on behalf of the entire Ethiopian people has changed dramatically and irreversibly. This is in part because it is the TPLF that effectively owns land and profits from it. It is also local ethnic elites who claim rightful ownership of land and allow ethnic cleansing in the localities. This tension between the center (federal) and regions (kilil) is conflict-prone. It makes the country vulnerable too.

Commoditization of lands

Land is the single most important source of political power and riches in Ethiopia today. It has become a source of rivalry and conflict. How has theTPLF commoditized and politicized lands? It is through opaque long-term leases and sales to foreign and favored domestic investors. Land became the single most important and globally marketed commodity as a consequence of the great land grab in Africa of which Ethiopia has becomea magnet. Land grab and annexation and regional expansion (e.g. Tigray incorporating Amhara lands) has resulted in the alienation and dispossession of millions of Ethiopians from their singular possession and their identity. This led to the current revolt that is unlikely to stop. As usual, the TPLF will try to crush the rebellion and kill activists. Whether it kill or not, the problem won't go away; and the determination of people will grow stronger. Evidence shows that marginalization and now a major “source of some social, economic, and political tensions” inGambella, Oromia and Gondar.

Professor Assefa’s claim is absolutely absurd and unreal. “On democracy and governance issues,” he claims, “that while the government has its shortcomings (including the lack of an independent judiciary, among others), Ethiopian media and civil society aren’t always engaged in constructive dialogue themselves (it can be “open warfare,” there is a media and civil society”. Is he denying that the media or civil society that serves as a tool of the ruling party does not advance democracy? Both party institutions advocate the status quo while containing and suffocatingdissent. There is no evidence whatsoever that civil society and media are independent or free. They operate as long as they do not question the legitimacy of the TPLF state and government. For this reason, the omission in the presentation is disconcerting. Ethiopia is one of the two worst jailers of journalists in Africa and among the top ten in the world.
More journalists have left Ethiopia than any other country in Africa. Despite repeated global outcry for their release, famous journalists suchas Eskinder Nega are still languishing in jail. Many are tortured. At least 5,000 Oromo are in jail. Dozens have been killed as I write this article. Numerous dissidents have been sentenced under the draconian Anti- Terrorism law. In the absence of a free media and civil society, no groupcan provide the public credible information let alone constructive alternatives.

Equally tragic is the political culture of TPLF ethnic hegemony. It is true that the country’s political culture has always been adversarial or “my wayor the highway.” But, this mentality has been reinforced by the TPLF. It penetrates well-functioning parties, dismantles them and forces them to be adjuncts. It has allowed more than 80 ethnic parties with no additionalvalue to the democratization process. I therefore agree with Professor Lyons that “Ethiopia will be brittle as long as it restricts free expression—amore vibrant society will strengthen Ethiopia as it continues to face new stresses.” I also welcome his assessment of the gravity and “severity of Ethiopia’s drought, with about 10 million people currently in need of food assistance. That said, the government has moved efficiently to respond tocitizens’ needs to date.”

Sadly, no one dared to challenge the root causes for the recurrent droughtrelated famine, hunger and impoverishment. Is it really climate change or oppressive and repressive governance? Why has massive foreign aid not helped to change the structure of Ethiopia’s agriculture? Is food aid the panacea? A provocative piece “Can aid reform end Ethiopia's repeated hunger emergencies?” by Katy Migiro of the Thomson Reuters Foundation,May 5, 2016 illustrates Ethiopia’s growth dilemma this way. “Over the years, Ethiopian mother-of-three Hana Mekonnen has received all sorts of aid designed to free her from the bitter trap of poverty and hunger: goats,cash transfers, resettlement and, of course, sacks of grain.

None has worked.” Her son is malnourished. Food rations do not transform structureand create resiliency among the poor. "No one in this village has anythingto give their children. We all live on food aid." Is God to blame? Not at all.If this was the case, Indians and Chinese and hundreds of millions of people across the globe would be blaming one another and blaming their creator for their misery. India, China, Tanzania and others are able to cope with drought by improving land ownership, improving farming methods, providing substantial inputs in the form of better seeds, fertilizers, loans and credits and offering alternative sources of income.

Ethiopia’s recurring famine and hunger is therefore a matter of misplacedand misguided policy and disempowerment of farmers rather than nature.The TPLF seems happy that poverty, hunger and disease afflict millions.

Its perception is that it is easier to rule poor people. This is not so, as thepeople of Gondar are showing heroically. Justice does not make a distinction on the basis of income or age or religion. It is indivisible. Poorpeople have courage because they want to be free from a system that keeps them poor.

Perpetual dependency

Following the 2005 elections that the ruling party annulled by force, the World Bank came up with a new formula to keep the poor alive. Ethiopia'sProductive Safety Net Programme (PSNP), “set up in 2005, helps Hanna through the 'lean season' between harvests, while also rehabilitating land and building roads, health posts and schools to tackle some of the underlying causes of poverty. The scheme, administered by the government and largely funded by international donors, was set up to endthe annual scramble for emergency funding to feed hungry Ethiopians, averaging 5 million a year in the decade before its launch.” Eleven years later, this program has made little impact in changing the structure of Ethiopia’s rural and Biblical economy. PSNP “has not ended hunger” but has enriched the TPLF. Some experts contend that it has deepened dependency and reliance on food aid. Others contend that Ethiopia is doing better than before, famine has been averted and that the government is responding more effectively than previous governments. Isthis enough? The author quotes a British expert who opines that “There's still this level of vulnerability and poverty that is persistent and that's harder to turn a corner on." Is this not the heart of the issue? If Ethiopia has been growing by double digits for several years, how does one explainthat it is unable to feed itself?

The imperative of policy and structural change

The facts speak. “This year, one in five Ethiopians need food aid, with 8million receiving support from the PSNP and another 10.2 million from a

$1.4 billion humanitarian appeal. By 2020, the project - Africa's largest social safety net - will have cost donors $5.7 billion, raising questions about its sustainability. "Ultimately, there does need to be a vision for this not being a donor-financed safety net," says Greg Collins, director of the Center for Resilience at the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID). We more and more need to be investing in creating opportunities that allow those who are able to graduate from the PSNP." This won't happen under the TPLF. For some odd reason the TPLF does notsee shame in dependency.

Resiliency is a function of people centered and anchored development. Sois national security. Investing in and boosting the natural abilities, capabilities and productive capacities of the poor requires freedom and ownership rights, voice and participation in policy and decision-making.
The growing "acceptance that some Ethiopians will be dependent on aidindefinitely" excuses the TPLF government and the donor community. Inmy assessment they have essentially failed in addressing the core problem of suffocating and repressive governance and its impact on sustainability. Among other things it restrains productivity by politicizinginputs.

The narrative of a growing and expanding economy tells us an incompleteand a distorted story. The fact remains that close to 20 percent of Ethiopians are food aid dependent. I have consistently argued that for Ethiopia to escape the vicious cycle of drought induced and other forms ofhunger citizens must enjoy political freedom. There must be an accelerated structural changes and a bold, deliberate and planned urbanization and manufacturing and industrialization policy owned by Ethiopians—textiles, shoes and other leather products, processed foods.
These would offer alternative employment to millions of rural people; generate millions of employment opportunities specifically for the country's youth; and encourage participation by the domestic private sector. This requires political will and the breaking up of TPLF clientele andendowment monopolies.

Ethiopia needs both political land reform. There is no social or economic rationale of leasing and or selling lands to foreign investors and favored domestic entrepreneurs while smallholders are forced to survive on half anacre of land per family. Forget the GERD. It won't feed Ethiopians.
Ethiopia has yet to develop irrigated agriculture. Further, productivity on small plots of land has been hampered by lag in technological inputs and non-politicized capacity building throughout the country. I therefore agreewith Michael Mosselmans of Christian Aid that "What's needed is more investment in action before droughts strike" rather than scrambling for food aid on a recurrent basis. The TPLF has made Ethiopia a beggar and vulnerable nation. The economics of smart advance planning are out there; but the TPLF won't touch it. The UN and OXFAM and others have been advising the Ethiopian government that "Every dollar spent on preparedness saves seven dollars in disaster aftermath." But it takes a caring government and leadership to avert disaster by making hard choice. I find no evidence that the TPLF cares if millions starve to death.

Here, I tend to agree with Ato Mitiku of the Ethiopian Disaster Mitigation Office that “efforts to end hunger for women like Hana must be driven byEthiopia itself.” This is possible to the extent that the political and social climate becomes conducive to joint efforts in all segments of life.
Participation by Ethiopians means freedom; and freedom is not going to be granted by the TPLF. Only Ethiopians united can achieve freedom. It issheer fantasy for the government to claim that Ethiopia will achieve “middle income status by 2025.” Even if I were to entertain this possibility, it will take immediate and radical political reform that will leadto genuine democratization to achieve this dream. The hemorrhaging of Ethiopian society from ethnic-elite capture, scandalous rent-seeking, narrow ethnic-favoritism as well as massive leakage of billions of dollars out of the country won’t stop unless there is a change in government.

In summary. Ethiopia is an irreplaceable country on its own right. Its durability and prosperity depend in large part on the unfettered equality and unity of its diverse population and on their proper representation in the political process and in policy and decision-making, including in national intelligence, security, defense and foreign relations. It is such national unity that guarantees deterrence of any form of foreign aggression. An intelligence service and defense that caters exclusively toTPLF hegemony is unlikely to be a match to potential Egyptian or other aggression.

The Anti- Amhara Pogroms and the Genocidal Politics of the TPLFin Ethiopia

By Michael Wossen (PhD) August 3, 2016

"Now they have won our brothers, and our clan can no longer act like one.They have put a knife on the things that held us together and we have fallen apart." Chinua Achebe.

In A Problem From Hell, Power chastises the international community for its timidity and failure to stop genocides, especially in Africa. This indifference is occurring long after this appalling crime has been named and proscribed by international law, and genocidal elements worldwide areseeking absolution just as victims are seeking justice. Yet, the crime continues to consume its victims in Africa. Somalia, Gambella, Ogaden , Afar, Wolkayit are all sites of crimes against humanity. This international indifference is characterized in the callous words of the late Boutros Boutros Ghali, spoken at the beginning of the Rwandan genocide:’ What ishappening in Rwanda is first Hutus killing Tutsi and Tutsis killing Hutu, and this is the usual order of thing.’ Also, the book most borrowed from the UN library is a doctoral thesis that inquires into how to escape prosecution for war crimes. Genocide Watch has contemplated a possible genocide against the Tigreans of Ethiopia, as a backlash to their segregationist and cruel policies of ‘internal colonialism’ (Stanton). A similar note of warning was issued to Ethiopians more recently by Dawit Woldegiorgis, who was a prominent UN witness to the genocide in Rwanda. He recognizes the gradual slide of Ethiopia into the genocidal abyss. A prominent TPLF General, and former Ethiopian chief of staff Gen.Tsadkan has concluded that the undemocratic status quo is unsustainable.

In this article, we are more concerned about the prevailing genocide against the 'Amharas' unfolding in Ethiopia. This particular form of organized violence against a specific group of people in Ethiopia, has beenongoing, officially at least since the TPLF's conquest of state power in 1991. During the insurgency years, fighters were encouraged to mercilessly shoot the donkeys, as the Amaras were referred to. The dehumanizing terminology of genocide implies something specific, and those intellectuals who avoid it or choose to euphemize it today risk undermining the needless death and destruction it is causing. A silent genocide is unfolding in Ethiopia, in full view of the international community and the humanitarian organizations. Western silence on Ethiopian atrocities is deafening. I use the term genocide here to refer to the intended systemic and deliberate eradication or destruction of an entire people, a nation, an ethnic group etc. This is precisely what Lemkinmean when he coined the phrase in 1944. In 2016, the TPLF's hands are soaked in Amhara blood.

As the Berlin Wall came down in Europe, other walls emerged between African communities. New African countries like Eritrea and South Sudan emerged as well. It is also no longer a secret that the Tigrean founders of the TPLF had in the 1970s openly contemplated the destruction of the Amara ethnic group in Ethiopia. Gebre-Medhin Araya, the former financial officer of the Tigrean ethnic movement, has been lately talking about this devilish intention of the party's inner group. It was first discussed by Meles-Sibhat & Co. during the early years of the Tigrean ethnic-nationalistmovement. Meles thought the matter was rather simple. The Amara serveus (the TPLF) nothing, he reasoned. The Chauvinist Amara and Tigrean people were deemed totally incompatible enemies, so the colonizing Amaras, their real name, must be subjugated, dispossessed and eradicated as oppressors, so that Tigreans may live peacefully ever after. The class struggle had been replaced by an ethnic struggle for supremacy.In this zero-sum struggle, a people were set against a people.

Besides, the blueprint for this crime had already been designed by the fascist occupiers of Ethiopia. In 1937, General (Chemical) Graziani had declared triumphantly that henceforth "Amharas presently residing in non-Amhara regions" would be resettled in "their land of origin." This encapsulates the Melesian logic as well. The strategy of displacing the Amaras from across Ethiopia and containing them in a designated homeland or Killil, is a planned and deliberate policy of Amarophobia long held by the TPLF elite. This is a bid to re-engineer and wipe away centuries of population movement, intermarriages and admixture of the

Ethiopian people. Meles' fear of Amaras was legendary. This so called 'ethnic federation' it is run by a like-minded group of Eritrean-Tigrian bornAskari-banda clique, assembled around the Issaias recruited Meles-Sebhat& Co. in Ethiopia.

Just as Fascism was born from Italian nationalism, Woyanne fascism was incubated in the development of modern Tigrean ethnic nationalism by thedescendants of Askaris, who were native (Hamasien-Agame) Italian troops. Most TPLF's leader's heritage goes back to the Askaris. Prof.
Mesfin rightly points out that the present generation cannot even distinguish between the offspring of Askaris and those of the Arbegna. This is what has allowed the former success. The movement's ideological details have been defined by the manifestations of Italian colonialism andBritish intervention in the region. British intelligence supported Mussolini'srise to power, as it did Meles'. The official transition of power from the Derg to the Woyannes was executed in London.

In Europe, Anti-Ethiopianism has existed at least since the end of the 17tCentury, if not much earlier. Ultimately however, the paternity of this criminal system of ethnic killils or ethnic federalism goes back to Mussolini's fascists. As a wise Ethiopian observed during the post- liberation era of the monarchy, "although Italy's army was driven out, itspolitics was not."

The Woyanne leadership's commitment to rob and uproot the peaceful Amara population from its ancestral lands, and homes across Ethiopia hasbeen inherited from the fascist occupiers of Ethiopia 1936-41. This crime is being accomplished under the false pretext that the Amara are colonizers. As they say, incitement is as bad as committing the crime.
Such genocidal intent constitutes' a crime against humanity' by its very nature. The pain and suffering visited upon Amaras in EPRDF's Ethiopia since 1991 is enormous and still expanding. The humanity and dignity of Amaras is transgressed daily, and the so called donor world has decided totolerate and laugh off these crimes of the TPLF, as long as the rulers pay respect to the rhetoric of democracy and protect the Euro-American military footprints and economic interests in the region. To be a fairly well-informed Amara these days, is to rage at this collective hypocrisy inthe face of recurring anti-Amara pogroms.

Take the current dilemma of the people of Wolkayit and Tsegede. In fascist manner, the geographic space has been identified as Tigrean. The people who inhabit the region had formed a committee, insisting that theyare Amaras in identity as opposed to being Tigreans, as they have been misidentified by the TPLF state 25 years ago. This is not just an honest 'mistake' but a serious case of politically motivated misrecognition of a people's identity, to better claim the territory as part of greater Tigrai.

This is victor’s justice and those who question it are subversives. You see,the place has been designated as part of an expanding lebensraum for Tigreans, and the indigenous Amaras have been deemed expendable. Hence a criminal scheme of identity deformation and what the experts refer to as 'psychosomatic disenfranchisement' has been imposed on the Amharic-speaking population of this region. This atrocity combined with evictions and has been ongoing for the past quarter of a century. The Amara people finally said 'enough' in Gondar recently. As a resident of theregion complains, he did not fight the Derg to become a Tigrean, but to live freely. Members of this minority ethnic group (6% of the total population) have set themselves up as the privileged first 'golden' citizensin an ethically reconfigured Ethiopia. Their population is moved to populate and farm the Tigrean designated territories.

This identity deformation and population shift, warn the experts, exists throughout the Tigrean-coveted Amara regions of Ethiopia. As one of the protest slogans in Gondar read 'the demand of the Wolkayit people is the demand of the Amara people.' The TPLF's operation has the ability to severely damage the victim's 'ontologies and existentialities' and result in diminished self-worth and self- esteem. A form of dehumanization As Sibhat Nega of the TPLF's leadership constantly remind us, like their Askari forefathers, the TPLF has vowed to break the backbone of the Amaras. This, I believe, is the perfect overture to committing the 'crime ofcrimes' or what is known as genocide.

In as far as a person is a product of his/her thought, the real roots of thecrime of genocide lie deep within our ideology. People are motivated by ideas from books or other like-minded people. Meles used to think that talking to the anti-Ethiopian Isaias for one hour was worth reading 10 books. Later on, he preferred talking to Stiglitz. The insidious animalization and hate propaganda against Amaras is ever present, combined with the implied moral superiority and heroism of Tigraians.
Since 1967, according to Gebre-Medhin Araya "the TPLF incorporated its core belief that 'Amharas are irreconcilable arch enemies of Tigrian people." Although Woyanne-Tigreyans are in control of the state and land,the accusative sermons of Amhara domination and "Amhara colonialism" still persists. What is more, this racist Italian propaganda was internalized among the majority of Eritrean and Tigrean population and elite living in Ethiopia. In the sincere words of the Eritrean Semere "I too was a product of my upbringing who did not feign any qualms of expressing hatred towards the Amara. (S. T. Habtemariam, on Awate, Sept 22/1913).

The imperialist propaganda went as follows. Ethiopia is not really a nation,but made up of dozens of disparate nationalities under 'Amhara-Tigrean supremacists' and ruled by Amhara colonialists. To be sure the Amaras were indigenous to Ethiopia and not colonialists at all, and the political economy of Ethiopia does not fit the 'colonial power matrix' that came to dominate the world after the Berlin Conference of 1884-85. Yet, the propaganda against these disembodied colonialists continued. I use propaganda in the “rational manipulation of what is irrational” (1998) It is above all “the prerogative of the totalitarians” and their collaborators. This gross misinformation and overall imperial irrationality about Ethiopia and the Amara people became normalized and widely taught in imperial books andacademies. These myths were further elaborated and popularized in the newly acquired Italian colonies of Eritrea and Somalia. Shabiya and Woyanne are their native progeny.

According to the famous Ethiopian-Eritrean author Gebre-Ab, the strategy of displacing or de-Ethiopianizing of the Amaras is a long planned, deliberate activity of the Woyanne elite. Conversely, the Amara people feel particularly targeted by the TPLF’s Fascist-Stalinist structures and centralized party-state apparatus. After 1991, the Amara ethnic group hadbecome what the great educator Paulo Freire calls “those whose humanityhas been stolen.”

In terms of political doctrine, the Tigrean Woyanne-TPLF called, amongst other things, for the restoration of “Tigray irrendenta” i.e., the incorporation of unredeemed Tegrean populated territories in the rest of Ethiopia, as claimed by the founders of the TPLF in the 1976 Manifesto. Inother words, it is militarist, ethnicist and expansionist. It has already achieved this idea by extensively dispossessing the neighboring Amara ethnic group of its lands in Wollo, Afla//korem and Begemder. The crimesof misrecognition and ethnic cleansing have been proceeding for decades in these areas too. Consequently, the designated “Amhara” Killil is progressively diminishing, as is the size of sovereign Ethiopia. Land of theAmara is being ceded to Sudan and newly arrived Tigreans and chunks ofit (the size of Belgium) is leased out to foreign powers and corporations.
Land-grabbers alone are said to have displaced about one quarter of a million Ethiopians under the euphemism of resettlement. Over 40.000 Amaras are believed to have been kicked out of Oromia. Where will this vicious pogrom end? There are close to 9 million Amaras living in Oromia.

Woyanne’s long term objective is finally to form an expanded and independent Tigrean state (Abay Tigrai) including the highland parts of Eritrea and secede from Ethiopia. In simple terms, Woyanne is an ethnically exclusivist, territorially expansionist and secessionist anti- Amhara/Ethiopian movement that had decided to act “by force of arms” toregain the lore and glory of Greater Tigrai for Tigreans. When the 1990s arrived, it framed its demands in terms of the general ethnic interest of alloppressed minorities in the Ethiopian empire to decolonize. Throughout, itheld high the Leninist banner of “the rights of nations to self- determination…up to secession.” This line of thinking was amplified by Wallelign Mekonnen, a fellow Amara student radical in the National or Addis Ababa University of the late 1960s, and included in the Woyanne- framed Ethiopian Constitution, Article 39. Misdiagnosing and condemning this Cushitic sub-strata and free Ethiopian population as colonial is at the root of the present crimes being committed constitute some 27% of the country's population, they are indigenous andhave lived for centuries across Ethiopia. They are Ethiopian by nationality.

To get to the original misdiagnosis problem or the 'original sin,' certain analytical distinctions are in order here. As the CIA psych op. and prominent "Ethiopianist." the late Paul Henze appropriately pointed out "Shoan predominance and Amhara domination" are different matters or "not the same thing…" They need to be decoupled from each other. This iscrucial. Shoan-Amara domination was effectively crushed by the Mengisturegime in 1974. An ardent TPLF supporter, Henze also concedes that "in actuality, the core Amhara regions –Gojjam, Begemeder and Wollo…were at least as neglected as Tigray in allocation of developmental resources during the entire period" (198). The "entire period" refers to the century misleadingly characterized as a period of "Amhara dominance," and even 'colonialism'. Yet, in, the past or during the period of Shoan-Solomonic predominance, the Amara population of Ethiopia had no preferential privileges whatsoever, and it fared no better materially or politically than the Tigrean one. During the pre-revolutionary days of Shoan supremacy the great majority of the Amara population has always been as deprived and as poor, if not poorer than its Tigreyan compatriots. Condemning these impoverished farmers as 'colonial' is part of a long-standing foreign doctrine to dissolve Ethiopians and rule them as colonials. Ethiopians weredemonized for having defeated a European colonialist.

In modern Ethiopia, during the 1960s the beginning (1970s), the TPLF ethnic identity/politics arose among students who began a struggle for therights of disinherited and impoverished peasants of Tigrai. 'Land to the tiller' was the leading slogan of Ethiopian students. From its humble rural start, the TPLF movement metamorphosed into a demand for self- determination. This was born among disgruntled Tigrean students, and it identified the Amharas as the oppressor and colonial nationality or simply "the enemy." Once the TPLF Woyanne got the upper hand in 1991, it set out to implement its ethnic creed in terms of precise policies. Their leader Meles' fear of Amaras was very strong, as Cohen confirmed recently.
Henceforth, the minority Tigraians were to enjoy a commanding andeconomically privileged position in the state of Ethiopian Republic ofNations/Nationalities. The matrix for 'ethnic apartheid' and internal colonialism was set. The greatest transfer of wealth from the rest ofEthiopia to Tigrai had begun.

What Wallelign achieved was to re-articulate Marxistically what the Fascists wrote in Wilsonian idiom. Prochazka wrote falsely that"The numerous peoples and tribes who inhabit the territory of the Ethiopian State and which differ in race, language , culture and religion from the ruling minority of Abyssinia proper, would long ago have thrown off theAbyssinian yoke if they had been given the right of self determination.

Instead they are being forcibly kept from European influences and fromthe advantages that progressive colonisation could confer upon the country" Aleme Eshete (June 2008). Instead, Ethiopians at Adwa unitedand militarily threw off the European yoke. White supremacist like Prochazka, wrote that Japan and Ethiopia were entities that prevented white supremacy from reigning supreme in Asia and Africa respectively

The legations continued their anti-Ethiopian and anti-Amara propaganda along these lines. All this was internalized by the so called national liberation movements and their leadership. The final objective of the TPLF-Woyanne's "Brotherhood," directed by the deceased Meles & Co. at its crucial moments, is to expropriate "other" Ethiopians, especially the arrogant Amara colonialists, of their land and wealth, and to secede from Ethiopia (self-determination). The aim was to resurrect the historically independent "Republic of Greater Tigray" a state that embraces the Tigrai-Tigrign population of Ethiopia and Eritrea. This was to be achieved by way of first liberating the lands and peoples of Tigray allegedly imprisoned in Ethiopia (a prison of nationalities).

The Ethnic Re-Engineering of Ethiopia

For the last twenty five years we have witnessed a process of economic political transformation, based on molding or "engineering" Ethiopia into a Fascist-Stalinist state of "ethnic federalism." This political process involvesethnically re-molding the geographic and administrative landscape of Ethiopia in the interest of the Woyanne and its homeland. It involves containing and persecuting the Amaras and taking their land and possessions. The process started in 1991, under the presidency of the puppet Amara and lately Pentacostal pastor Tamrat. He literally incited theOromo to avenge the historic death and oppression of their people by the Amara. Bedeno witnessed the death of many innocent Amaras. They werekilled because they were Amaras. Women and children were thrown alive down the Dengogo gorge. Amaras have been similarly targeted for dispossession and expulsion in Gerda Ferda, Gumuz, Bale, Arsi, Jijjiga, Arba Gugu, Assosa and so on. The information is in the public domain. If any more reminder is necessary, the recent (2013) mass evictions of so called "Amhras" from their ancestral lands across Ethiopia, is the starkest evidence of Woyanne fascism in progress today. While committing this heinous crime, the TPLF falsely insists that it is threatened by Intrahamweforces.

More recently, 12 sacks full of bodies were found in Benishangul, Gumuz. They belonged to Amaras hacked to death on orders of the region's leader. After a recent extirpation of the Amara population from Benji Maji (BM) zone [in Southern Ethiopia], Mr. Zenawi justified the whole exercise as a "resettlement" project, while accusing the evicted Amaras of menacing the Southern region's pristine environment and forestry. In Meles analysis, they were not uprooted for being "Amhara" but rather for causing environmental degradation. This 'man of vision' accuses "Amhara"citizens for not being capable of

and natural resources. This is disingenuous at best, or a cruel mockery for which the late Woyanne leader had gained worldwide reputation. “Doublespeak” on the problem of “Amaras” and double dealing on the vitalnational interests of Ethiopia have become the rhetorical hallmarks of Melesism.

We may ask again, why are Amaras uprooted from the so called “non- Amhara regions” of Ethiopia, while other Ethiopians and even Eritreans,are allowed to live peacefully and own businesses outside their “land oforigin,” or anywhere they wish in Ethiopia, for that matter?

An Ethiopian thinker has recently referred to what prevails in Ethiopia today as a “colonially inspired tribal domination” in the sense that the anti-Amara and wider racial ideology and values of Italian Fascism have endured in TPLF’s Ethiopia. Anti-Amaraism or ”Amarophobia” happens to be at the center of Mussolini’s ideological and geographical design for Italian occupied Ethiopia. White supremacists were always ready to convict the Amaras as colonials and evict Ethiopia from the Eurocentric Westpalian world system. This is what they have bequeathed to their internal collaborators. The TPLF operates its vicious tribal dictatorship and‘killil’ system with Euro- American support and under the euphemisms of democracy and federalism.

Ethnically re-mapped, aid-dependent and landlocked, peripheral Ethiopia is featured as a “developmental state” in the contemporary world of nations. Despite the fact that one in ten Ethiopians requires international food aid, it is considered a fast-growing destination for foreign tourists and capital. Foreign investors and happy tourists are showcased as success stories for the regime’s developmental narrative. Truth is, TPLF’s “ethnic federalism” literally floats and feeds on recurrent international assistance and foreign aid, while the leadership of the Woyanne tyranny accumulates capital by any means necessary. The export of “domestic workers” to the Middle East and the “child adoption” industry and “land grab” bonanza served the same economic purpose for the tyranny, namely primitive accumulation (Adam Smith identifies it as preceding capitalist accumulation) of capital by the Woyanne elite and its accomplices, who control the power. Primitive implies that this form of accumulation is not the result of the capitalist mode but precedes it. It is characterized by conquest, theft and plunder. Dissatisfaction with the Woyanne’s oppression and exploitation is rising and can be felt across theland. Resistance is growing too.

The Tyranny Continues

It is obvious that the present leadership (Meles’ protégé, cadres and nameglorifiers) huddled around the chosen Pentacostal heir and Prime Minister Mr. Haile-Mariam.This group is steadfast in maintaining the dead leader’s criminal “vision.” The mantra of the hand-picked Haile-Mariam is that nothing will change. This was embarrassingly evident in the continuing “ethnic cleansing” casually carried out against the “Amhara” on his watch.The decision was eventually blamed on “low level” cadres and reversed, but the “crime of crimes” had already been committed. What is really going on in Ethiopia is a criminal venture orchestrated by the TPLF ethnic supremacists for pillaging and eventually destroying the Ethiopian state, while empowering and enriching the minority Tigreyan ethnic group.

Conscious of the potential power of the united Amara, the Marxist-LeninistLeague of Tigray (MLLT), the hard core of the TPLF, since the late 1980s advocated that, the Amharas should never be organized as Amharas and by genuine Amrara leaders. This would be dangerous. Hence, the Meles regime started its tyrannical rule with a program of countrywide “de- Amharization.” This implies ethnic cleansing on a large and continuous scale and downgrading local national script and the erstwhile national language, Amarigna. Speaking Amarigna in certain schools is tantamountto throwing rocks and punishable as such. Institutions which identified themselves as Ethiopian, such as Addis Ababa University, were targets of this ethnic cleansing. The recent eviction of Amaras from allegedly “wrong” living spaces in Ethiopia is not exceptional. It is only the latest phase in two decades of “ethnic cleansing” and expropriation perpetrated against Amaras by the Tigrean-Eritean led TPLF- EPRDF regime and its UStrained army.

The TPLF also promptly organized its own “Amhara” dummy organization,the Amhara National Democratic Movement (ANDM) and consolidated it under its ruling party, The Ethiopian People’s Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF). Under the watch and misrepresentation of ANDM, the impoverished Amara population has been declared an enemy and is subjected to horrendous forms of demonization, oppression and marginalization in TPLF’s Ethiopia. The so called Amhararegion is known as one of the poorest on earth, with the highest infant mortality. Doctors are a rarity and education is rudimentary. Moresh has questioned the over 2.4 million Amaras missing from the latest population census. Of late, Ethiopian women identified as Amara were targeted for a vaccinationand mass sterilization program in the Gojjam region of Ethiopia, with medication provided by the US. This effort to stop the reproduction of theAmara is genocidal in effect.

The Fascist’s anti-Amara/Ethiopian discourse appears to be enshrined in the TPLF’s ideological DNA. Ethiopians across the world are appealing to the world’s conscience to recognize the multidimensional ethnic cleansingbeing waged against Amaras. The international community and the UN War Crimes tribunal must not turn a blind eye to these heinous crimes surfacing in Ethiopia. This genocidal turn of events must be stopped in today’s Ethiopia, or resistance will spiral into civil war.

POSSIBLE SEQUENCE OF EVENTS:

Protests in Ethiopia's Gonder City Signal Uncertain Future

By James Butty, VOA August 2, 2016

An Ethiopian professor of political science based in the United States saysEthiopia finds itself at a crossroads with an uncertain future unless the government holds free and fair elections.

This, as tens of thousands of people in Gonder, a city in the Amhara region of northern Ethiopia, protested Sunday calling for a change of government because of what they say is unfair distribution of wealth inthe country.

Charges of ethnic discrimination

Getachew Metaferia, professor of political science at Morgan State University, said the root causes of the Gonder protest and the Oromia protests of last year can be found partly in the Ethiopian government's ethnic-based federalism policy.

"The first one is ethnic-based federalism that has created a dichotomy situation let's say between Amaras and the Oromos, the Oromos and the Tigray. The second is the expansion of the territory of the Tigray people toinclude an area called Wolgait-Tegede in the Gonder region where the uprising is taking place right now. The people in Welkait-Tegede say that they are Amaras and not Tigrays. So, they should not be incorporated in the Tigray region," he said.

Lack of democracy in Ethiopia

Metaferia also said another cause of the uprisings in Ethiopia is what hecalled the worsening democracy situation in Ethiopia.

"There is no human rights protection, no freedom of speech, freedom ofthe press," he said.

He said another reason for the uprising is the widening gap between the haves and have nots. "There is poverty, abject poverty. There a few elitepeople who are benefiting.

The head of the Amhara Regional State government communications office, Ngusu Tlahun, spoke to Ethiopian television and said the town and regional state governments would address the demands made by the protestors on Sunday concerning development and good governing. 'Theproblems would be corrected and solved in time," he said. However, he said the protestors had carried a flag that he said did not represent the one recognized by the Ethiopian constitution.

In response to a similar protest last month, the Ethiopian government blamed individuals who it said have been receiving financial and weaponsassistance from “terrorist and anti-peace forces based in Eritrea and a third country.”

Use of force by government criticized

Professor Metaferia said another source of the protests could be the Ethiopian government’s use of force against protesters in the name of fighting terrorism. “I can also say that the heavy-handedness of the government, using a special force called Agazi. A semblance of resistance,a semblance of opposition leave someone to be killed by the Agazi force. So this is the government that has created more or less a police state.
These are the root causes of the situation taking place in Gonder,”Metaferia said.

Metaferia said he sees no peaceful future for Ethiopia unless the government mends its policy to incorporate all Ethiopians rather than use the divide and rule technique. “What do you expect from a government claiming 100 percent seats in parliament in spite of this popular uprising? Opposition leaders are in prison. So, with that kind of situation there can be no peace in the country. Hopefully the government’s foreign friends willstrongly advise the government to open and let there be free and fair elections,” Metaferia said

A Reply to Lt. Gen. Tsadkan's Reply:

Narrowing the Gap By Messay Kebede (PhD) August 3, 2016

Dear Lt. General Tsadkan Gebre Tensay:

I thank you for sending me your reactions to my review of your article onthe political difficulties of Ethiopia and of the solution you suggest to overcome them. Your response constitutes a very welcome clarification, not only for me, but also for the many more readers who have questions about your article. I have received many emails from various circles.

Some of them agree with my assessment of your article; others reflect theopinion that my review was unnecessarily harsh and missed the core of your argument, which is the necessity of taking the constitution as a framework of a broad agreement to avoid chaos and conflicts. Still others consider your article as a misleading attempt to prolong the life of the existing ruling clique.

Let me affirm from the outset and in the most categorical terms that I donot share the view of those who maintain that your article is an exercise of deception. Your article reflects a genuine concern for the future of Ethiopia and suggests solutions that appeared to you most realistic and feasible. As to the view of those who accuse me of missing the main pointof your argumentation, my reply is that I did not miss it. On the contrary,as I will try to show, my criticism was setting the conditions for the constitution to become a framework for all parties concerned to work together.

Your clarification begins by stating the basic agreement that I share with you, namely, that Ethiopia is going through a deep crisis that threatens itsvery existence and that the only way to counter the danger is by implementing democracy. There is no other solution than the democratic one, given that the use of force will only aggravate the crisis to the point of making it unsolvable through peaceful means. Where we disagree is that the implementation of democracy means for you the unrestricted application of the constitution.

Here I need to specify what I mean by "disagreement." For me, the problem pertains not so much to the core features of the constitution as the people who are supposed to implement it. If the present ruling clique is the implementer, 25 years of experience tell me that it is not going to happen. Those who are ruling the country went to the extent of claiming aparliamentary electoral score of 100 percent even as deep frustration waslooming everywhere and flared up in Oromia after only a few months. I have used the term "naivety" to express this reality. Yes, our solution must be realistic, but equally realistic must be the possibility of implementing it.

What does "realistic" mean? No more no less than the imperative necessity of cleansing the ruling clique of all those elements opposing theimplementation of democratic principles. Without this prior measure, no rapprochement between the government and the opposition is thinkable. In particular, your call for a "structure where all political forces and the populace at large through various forms of organization, shall participate and reach consensus on the way forward including revising some of the laws and reorganize some of the institutions, especially those related to elections," cannot see the light of day unless the TPLF undertakes the purge of die-hard ethnicists and anti-democratic forces from its ranks. In addition to an internal reshuffling, measures to build up confidence must be taken, like the unconditional release of all political prisoners, the liftingof the ban on demonstrations, free speech, etc., as well as the unambiguous abrogation of the infamous anti-terrorist law.

My understanding is that the cleansing of the EPRDF can be undertaken legally if enough members wish to do so. Be that as it may and whatever means are used, there is no possibility to organize fair elections so the present ruling clique remains in power. Better yet, things would movedecidedly in the right direction if a transitional government of national reconciliation in which all parties, community leaders, and important civicorganizations would participate, is established. This would dismiss the present parliament, a move that simply acknowledges that the total electoral victory of the EPRDF was illegal because it was obtained by undemocratic means.

At this stage, I would like to deal with your major argument, which is thenecessity of taking the constitution as a basic framework if the country isto change peacefully. I have already acknowledged that you do not rejectthe alteration of the constitution provided that it is supported by the majority of the Ethiopian people. I agree with you on both accounts.
However, given the undemocratic nature of the EPRDF government sinceit came to power, it is untenable to state that the constitution was approved by the Ethiopian people. It is not an exaggeration to say that the constitution was fundamentally the work of the TPLF and OLF. This isso true that many groups were deliberately excluded and, most of all, there was no open, public debates on the spirit and content of the constitution. Without open debates, there is no democracy. Rather than being democratically established, the constitution was an imposition by the victors on the vanquished.

How can this breach be corrected? The agreement to take the constitutionas a framework, a point of departure must be accompanied by the understanding that one of the major tasks of the transitional government or the forum, as you suggest, is to organize official and public discussionson the constitution and gather suggestions and amendments, be they structural or functional. The second step is to put the suggestions and amendments to the test of popular verdict. If a majority of the Ethiopian people decides that the major provisions of the constitution as they are now are acceptable, then this ends the debate once and for all. However, if the majority decides to include amendments, the amended constitution will be the final one.

A crucially important note is that the main condition for this kind of open debate and democratic procedure is the removal of article 39. The threat of secession will polarize and radicalize various groups, thereby preventingany move toward mutual concessions. For pro-unity forces, article 39 amounts to negotiating with a gun to one’s head. By contrast, my belief isthat a clear majority will support the principle of decentralization and self-rule if the threat of secession is removed. The deletion of the article will also open the possibility of changing the structure of the government so that any hegemony of one ethnic group over other groups is definitively excluded. Moreover, alongside the fortification of self-rule, measures that integrate all ethnic groups into a national unity could be designed and given the necessary political tools.

These amendments should facilitate mutual concessions and the formationof a representative government. If both national unity and self-rule are protected, only extremists on both sides will find a reason to oppose the proposal. In a democratic system, one cannot eliminate by force extremistpositions, but precisely the effectiveness of a true democracy is to isolate them and turn them into a negligible minority.

I hear you when you argue that perfect democracy cannot be established given the conditions of our country. I also admit that the TPLF's option of armed struggle against the Derg was not conducive for the development of democratic culture and methods of work. My issue is not TPLF's inabilityto establish a perfect democracy, but its abysmal failure to put democracy, however limited it may have been, on the path of growth and expansion. Worse yet, it rolled back on its declared democratic intent by effectively moving toward a dictatorial system of government.

The failure and the betrayal are no accidents. You recognize it, the TPLF has followed Leninist principles from its inception. Allow me to add that it never got rid of those principles. Leninism is an anti-democracy ideology based on the goal of establishing a hegemonic party in all political, ideological, and economic spheres of social life. A party cannot be governed by Leninist principles and be at the same time democratic, any more than a square can be a circle at the same time. I really have troubleagreeing with you when, after admitting that the TPLF was a Leninist party, you write: "This is why I say the TPLF was democratic and revolutionary. But it was not without defects and challenges." The essenceof Leninism is not to limit democracy; it is to exclude it by the practice of "democratic centralism," the addition of "democratic" being nothing more than a deceptive adjustment. The truth is that the TPLF must be demystified for Ethiopia to advance in light of the fact that it rejected the content of Leninism but retained its spirit. My criticism was a call for self- criticism, which is the primary condition for renewal. Needless to say, renewal is also highly dependent on a complete critical assessment of Meles's rise, methods of government, and actual outcomes.

I welcome your clarification about the issue of developmental state versusliberalism. You bring out the "dilemma" between restricting freedom and leaving the whole economy to the forces of the free market. I applaud that you reject the use of coercive methods while not turning a blind eye to the danger inherent in the principles of the free market when they are applied to an undeveloped economy. Agreed, the debate is raging and thefinal truth on the question of knowing which one is best for developing countries is not yet in sight.

However, it is clear that Ethiopia under Meles has taken the path of the developmental state. The intention of my criticism was not to take side foror against developmental state: I was merely pointing out that out and neglecting the other conditions, without which the model of development cannot work. Hence my suspicion that he did not choose the path to accelerate development, but to justify authoritarianism. In the end, Ethiopia ended up with nothing, that is, with neither development norfreedom. Wishing you success in your endeavors! Tension high b/n Ethiopia and Eritrea despite harmony in region

James Jeffrey in Addis Ababa The Irish Times August 3, 2016

Tensions between Ethiopia and Eritrea snapped in June in their most dramatic way for the last 15 years. Fighting that erupted at their borderinvolved tanks and heavy shelling and left hundreds dead. While militaryordinance has stopped falling for now, any truce – if that word is applicable, such is the ill will on both sides – hangs by a thread, as doesthe welfare of both countries and the fragile peace and development spreading in the Horn of Africa.

Initially, speculation circulated among critics of both countries' governments that the clash was a fabrication to distract from recent critical reports published by the United Nations and advocacy group Human Rights Watch. Such scepticism, however, became harder to sustain as reports mounted about the gravity of the clash near the bordertown of Tserona.

Eritrea calls Ethiopia the aggressor engaging in "reckless military adventures" and puts the number of Ethiopian dead at 200 and wounded at 300. While rejecting that toll, Ethiopia's government acknowledges that"a major engagement" took place; observers suggest it took action over Eritrean support of subversive elements inside Ethiopia.

This flash of instability actually occurred amid increasing harmony acrossthe region thanks to increasing trade and economic integration between the likes of Ethiopia, Djibouti and Somaliland.

Stalemate

However, any sort of harmonising effect has long been absent at the Ethiopia-Eritrea border, which is frozen in a cold war-type stalemate following a fraught history between the two and in spite of shared bondssuch as language, culture and family ties.

After Eritrea was subsumed into Ethiopia in 1962, it fought a 30-year liberation war against the powers in Addis Ababa, the Ethiopian capital. This culminated in the fall of Ethiopia's military dictatorship in 1991 afterEritrean fighters teamed up with Ethiopian rebels.

A referendum followed in 1993 in which the Eritrean people voted in favour of independence. Ethiopia's new government – created by those same rebels – supported the referendum and its decision, while Eritreanshad great hope for their country's future.

But relations between the two then went downhill and by 1998 fighting broke out over the border around the village of Badme, an inconsequentialpiece of land; pride, however, has never been in short supply in either country.

The following two-year war brought about a disastrous loss of life – 70,000-100,000 people are estimated to have died in scenes of moderntrench warfare – and of financial resources for both sides.

A ceasefire was followed in 2002 by an internationally brokered border resolution to safeguard the peace. Overall it suited both sides, apart fromone key detail: Badme was to return to Eritrea. With forces already ensconced in Badme, the Ethiopian government was loath to withdraw from territory gained through thousands of Ethiopian lives lost. So it proposed that implementation of the resolution required further talks – which didn't happen – while its troops remained on what everyone acknowledged as Eritrean land.

That's the way it has stayed ever since, though it has not helped that theinternational community has looked the other way. Now the worry is of the increasing possibility of full-scale war breaking out with a fight to thefinish.

On paper, Ethiopia, with its larger, well-trained and better equipped military, backed by years of economic growth and development while Eritrea stagnated, would come out on top. But there's no telling how a final contest, or its aftermath, would play out. And if a decisive blow was delivered against Eritrea's regime, what then? There are enough examplesof how the travails of winning war prove nothing to sorting what follows.

‘Economic locomotive’

The last thing Ethiopia needs as it tries to cement its recent economic anddevelopmental gains is another failed state next door, while the likes of Djibouti and Somaliland do not want a country that many call the “economic locomotive of the region” impeded in its progress – or worse, derailed.

Other reasons exist to dissuade either side from instigating a final round of destruction: Ethiopia is trying to become a more respected and engaged international player, while Eritrea shows increasing signs of tiringof its economic isolation and of contemplating increased international co- operation.

However, when a conflict’s fault lines are defined along common heritage, among neighbours and even relatives, the sense of betrayal and anger feltis personal and runs deep – proving much more difficult to resolve than antagonism between strangers.

All the while there remains that apparently unmovable hurdle throughoutthe decades, pride, which is nurtured by mutual loathing between the respective governments. So now would be an excellent time for international diplomacy to finally help sort out a real and lasting compromise settlement – but with diplomacy of an assertive nature, rather than the half-hearted approach of before. Neither Ethiopians nor Eritreans are pushovers.

Six High Level Ethiopian Diplomats defected
ESAT News (August 4, 2015)

Six high-level diplomats who have been serving at different consular positions have reportedly defected from the Ethiopian regime.Sources toldESAT that these diplomats didn’t returned to Ethiopia and failed to report to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs after completing their terms.Sources from the Ethiopian Ministry of Foreign Affairs also revealed that the diplomats had served in Ghana, United States, South Africa, and India.

These diplomats were subordinate to ambassadors in respective countries.Ato Yohannes Getahun and Ms. Emebet Birru, (Minister Councilor and attaché at Ethiopian Embassy in Washington DC respectively), are amongthe top diplomats who have already defected, information ESAT received from Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Addis Ababa revealed.

Ato. Elias Worku and Ato Getachew Mulualem who served as counselors atEthiopian Embassy in South Africa have purportedly defected from the Ethiopian regime. In addition, Ato Eshete Misgana who worked in Ghana as a counselor of the Ambassador did not report to the Ethiopian Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Addis Ababa after his term was over.

Moreover, Ato Henock Asnake, a counselor at the Ethiopian Embassy inIndia, has also defected making him the 6th diplomat to abandon the EPRDF government.

High level political defections are common in EPRDF’s Ethiopia. Sources from Ethiopian embassy locations around the world reveale that the embassy staff could not properly conduct their work due to ethnic based politics, internal bickering and nepotism. ESAT also received a document.

Dark clouds loomed over Ethiopia's stunning development story -

PMHD

Dark clouds have long loomed over Ethiopia's stunning development story. Now, in the face of unprecedented protests, and the government's typically brutal response,those clouds threaten to turn into a perfect storm – with chilling consequences. As much as Ethiopia deserves praise for its stunning economic growth, which has liftedmillions out of poverty, its record on civil and political rights has always been poor. Dissent is simply not an option, and countless journalists, activists and community organisers have found themselves on the wrong side of the state – with brutal, sometimes fatal consequences.

In public, Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn says that building a democratic culture takes time, but that Ethiopia is working on it. In private, Ethiopian officials admit to the abuses, but they say that unrestricted political rights would derail the state-building project. They insist that unfettered freedoms are a western luxury; a luxury that a country as large, diverse and historically divided as Ethiopia simply cannot afford. There is some merit to this argument. It is no coincidence that Africa'stwo most successful developmental states, Ethiopia and Rwanda, are both tightly- controlled one party states. Perhaps a firm hand and a coherent long term vision make it easier to implement policy, distribute aid and maintain political stability (although this is not always the answer, as the continent's many failed dictatorships illustrate).

Proponents of liberal democracy must also acknowledge that the western model offers few examples, in Africa at least, where socio-economic rights have been successfully delivered alongside basic freedoms. “What good is freedom of speech tothe hungry man?” the Indian politician Piloo Mody once asked. Western democracies themselves were almost all founded on what would be considered now to be gross human rights abuses, such as the disenfranchisement of women, or the enslavementof different race groups – abuses that dwarf the sins of modern-day Ethiopia.

But here’s the catch: as Ethiopia’s economy slows, and the glaring inequalities of its growth become more apparent, it’s becoming harder and harder to keep a lid on thatdissent. While it might have been effective, Ethiopia’s authoritarian model of development is inherently fragile – and those fragilities are being exposed by the recent spate of anti-government protests. The unprecedented scale of these protestsmeans that, for once, the government can't make the problem disappear, no matter how ruthless its response.

The Bureau blames residents for failing to strictly adhere to preventionmechanisms but health professionals say the absence of clean potablewater in the city was the culprit.

BBC News (August 8, 2016)

Funerals are taking place after a weekend of violent protests inEthiopia's north-western city of Bahir Dar.

The authorities there told the BBC's Emmanuel Igunza that at least seven people were killed and dozens arrested during anti-governmentdemonstrations.

On Sunday, police used tear gas and fired in the air to disperse thousandsof people who had barricaded roads. Activists say the number of those killed is much higher. The BBC has learnt that two young men are being buried today. It is believed that they were both killed by security forces.

There have also been protests in Ethiopia's Oromia region with local mediareporting that dozens of people were shot dead in towns across the region, though the exact number is yet to be confirmed. Hundreds of protesters in various towns and cities - including the capital, Addis Ababa
- have been arrested for taking part in the demonstrations that have beenbanned by the government.

Ethiopia Observer News (August 8, 2016)
At least 33 people were shot dead by security forces in protests at the weekend across Ethiopia's central Oromiya region linked to an aborted government attempt to commandeer local land, oppositionparty officials said.

(REUTERS) Police fired tear gas and blocked roads to several towns in thevast region as demonstrations erupted after a call from a spontaneous social media movement. Ethiopian authorities had imposed a blanket internet blockade throughout the weekend. Unrest wracked Oromiya for several months until early this year, sparked by plans to allocate farmlandin the region surrounding the capital for development.

Authorities scrapped the land scheme in January, but protests have flaredagain over the continued detention of opposition demonstrators. At the weekend, protesters chanted anti-government slogans and waved dissident flags. Some demanded the release of jailed opposition politicians. "So far, we have compiled a list of 33 protesters killed by armed security forces that included police and soldiers but I am very surethe list will grow," Mulatu Gemechu, Deputy Chairman of the opposition Oromo Federalist Congress, told Reuters.

The deaths took place in at least 10 towns across Oromiya, he said, including Ambo, Dembi Dolo, and Nekemt - areas that were similarly engulfed by previous rounds of protests. "Twenty-six people have also been injured, while several have been detained," Mulatu said. Three members of his party had also being held. Government officials were notimmediately available for comment. The state-owned Ethiopian News Agency said "illegal protests" staged by "anti-peace forces" had been brought under control, but it did not mention casualties.

Oromiya is the second region to be hit by unrest in the past few days. InAmhara, at least two people were killed in the ancient city of Gonder in clashes over the status of a disputed territory. Tensions have been rumbling for two decades over the status of Wolkayt district - a stretch ofland that protesters from Amhara say was illegally incorporated into the neighboring Tigray region to the north.

Any sign of unrest is closely watched in Ethiopia, a major Western ally against Islamist militants in neighboring Somalia and an economic powerseen as a center of relative stability in a fragile region.

COMMENTARY

US and EU: An accomplice to TPLF Genocide in Ethiopia.

By Abel Kebedom

By now it must be clear to every Ethiopian that the western media is neither free nor impartial. Everything it does is intertwined with the western interest. If the news does not serve the western interest, thousands of people could disappear without the world population hearinga single word about their demise. Conversely, if the news serves the western interest, even the death of one person could be a big deal. Although both countries are in the same region, compared to the news coverage given to the popular uprising in Egypt, you could say the western media coverage of the current TPLF minority regime genocide of the Amhara and Oromo people in Ethiopia is nothing. This is mainly because the western TV networks need a green light from their governments to report the news. No green light means no coverage. Thatexplains the deafening silence of CNN and other big TV networks on the genocide the TPLF minority regime has unleashed on the innocent Amharaand Oromo people in Ethiopia.

Imagine if this were in Eritrea, The Martine Plaut's, The Leonard Vincent's,The Dan conell's, and others could have made a big noise out of it. In fact,the monitoring group's and the Keetharuth's could have even pushed it to the security council and made even a bigger news out of it. But when it comes to Ethiopia you do not hear them saying even a single word. The reason is they do not have the green light from their financial backers to talk about it. If you incentivized people to act in a certain way, they will act the way you want them to act. Hence the so called human right advocates, UN agencies and News stations are incentivized to protect western interests. That is why so many people have a reasonable suspicion about the mission of these institutions and are often tend toreject it.

Currently the Oromo and Amhara people, all over Ethiopia, are voicing their opposition to the TPLF, Tigray minority looters, who happen to control the current government in Ethiopia. The opposition by the Amharaand Oromo people to the TPLF minority rule in Ethiopia is important for somany reasons:

1. It is an opposition to a minority by a majority.

The Amhara's and Oromo's, who make 80% of the population of Ethiopia, are opposing the TPLF minority regime that makes less than one percent of the 6% Tigray population. If the western media daily preaching for democracy, rule by the majority and human right was really from the heart, then the current majority voice in Ethiopia could have mattered andgotten a wide coverage. Again when it comes to Ethiopia, it is easy to learn that western interest comes before human rights and democracy.
TPLF is an anchor messenger of the western world in the horn of Africa.Hence for the western world it is better to support the messenger that makes less than 1% of the people of Ethiopia than the will of the 80% Ethiopians. That is how the western system works.

2. It is an opposition to Economic injustice.

Although the TPLF minority regime in Ethiopia makes less than one percent of the 6% Tigreans, it controls almost 90% of the Ethiopian economy. It placed its supporters who are mainly Tigreans in Federal government positions, established parastatal institutions that run the economy, and takes fertile land from the Amhara's and Oromo's to settle minority Tigreans in Addis Ababa, Wolakite-zegede and Wollo. There is nobetter Testament to TPLF tribalism than the recent revelations that the employees of the office of the late prime minister of Ethiopia Meles Zenawi, who hails from Tigray, were all Tigreans. To continue resettling Tigreans in other regions in Ethiopia TPLF continues to place vibrant cities in Ethiopia under the federal government. A city Under federal government of Ethiopia means under the control of Tigreans because thefederal government is controlled by Tigreans. While the Oromo's are fighting Tigrean expansion and settlement in Addis Ababa, the Amhara's are fighting the looting and annexation of their fertile land of Wolkaite- Zegede by Tigray state, which is the foot hold of TPLF.

3. It is an opposition to TPLF hidden agenda.

Everyone knows that TPLF is preparing its foothold Tigray state for future independent country. If that was not the case, there is no reason for TPLFto take land from Wollo, Gonder and Eritrea to create the greater Tigray. If TPLF believed in one Ethiopia, it would let every Ethiopian move all overEthiopia freely to make an ends-meat. Borders should not have mattered at all. There is no reason to annex fertile land from neighboring states andgive it to its foothold Tigray region. TPLF land grab is not limited to within Ethiopia. Due to TPLF's false land claim from an independent country Eritrea, about 70,000 Ethiopian solders lost their life during the 1998- 2000 border war. Later the Eritrean-Ethiopia border commission in The Hague ruled the flash point Badme belongs to Eritrea. TPLF's continuous occupation of Badme, despite the border commission's ruling, and repeated conflict with Eritrea explains TPLF's determination to expand Tigray at any cost, off course cost paid by the people of Ethiopia.

4. It is an opposition to Tyranny.

It cannot be further from the Truth If I say the minority TPLF regime is anoccupying Army in Ethiopia sponsored by the US and EU. The minority TPLF regime steals elections, and when the Ethiopian people mount an opposition to TPLF's stealing voting ballots, it goes on a killing spree without any repercussions from its sponsors. In the year 2000, more than200 Ethiopians, who opposed the TPLF's vote stealing, were killed in execution style and more than 50,000 were arrested. As a revenge to ONLF's attack on Chines' gas exploration facilities in Ogden, TPLF carpet bombed the Ogden region and people fled to refugee camps in Kenya.

Last year about 700 Oromo's youth and women were killed because they opposed the confiscation of their land surrounding Addis Ababa for Tigreanresettlement in Addis Ababa. The killing in Gondar and other places continues even as you read this article. In return for all this atrocities TPLFis unleashing on the Ethiopian people, it is rewarded by a significant money from the US and the EU and a seat in the United security council.

5 It is an opposition to ethnic based politics, regionalism andTPLF divide and rule policy.

The fact that TPLF makes less than one percent of the 6% Tigreans, it hadto cut and slice the Ethiopian people into ethnic groups and work hard to turn them against each other. That policy may have worked for the last 25years. However recently the Ethiopian people realized the consequences ofthe wicked TPLF divide and rule policy and are coming together to challenge it. The unity among the Oromo's, Amhara's, Christians and Moslems witnessed recently is a big blow to the TPLF minority regime and may be the single most weapon that could help them to send the TPLF minority regime back to Tigray. The Ethiopian people understood that it is only when they unite they become strong.

In conclusion, the Ethiopian people should not expect the western media to cover their opposition to the TPLF minority regime unless the western world thinks TPLF rule in Ethiopia is coming to an end. Hence the missionof the current opposition in Ethiopia should be to show the western worldthat TPLF is not a feasible western partner anymore and they have to finda new one, that is the Ethiopian people. Victory to the Masses. http://amharic.voanews.com/a/ethipia-amhara-oromia-demos-clashes- and-deathes-08-07-16/3455171.html

Scores of people were arrested In Ethiopia -The Financial Times Scores of people were arrested in Ethiopia on Saturday in a wave of anti-government protests that rocked the capital Addis Ababa and dozens of other towns in the restless region of Oromia. Images posted on social media showed huge demonstrations in the capital and other cities.

Activists said the protests could mark a possible turning point in the ninemonth campaign against the government.

“The dynamic had shifted and people are now calling for the downfall of the government,” said Jawar Mohammed, who runs the Oromo Media Network in the US state of Minnesota and said he was in regular contact with protesters in multiple cities. “This is by far the biggest demonstrationthat Ethiopia has seen in terms of size and co-ordination across Oromia.” Fisseha Tekle, an Amnesty International researcher who is based in Kenya, said the police and the army were using live bullets to disperse theprotesters.

Gonder Peaceful Protest in Allegiance to Similar in Oromia Region

Fortune with an opinion piece on the current affairs by Girma Feyissa, Sunday August 7, 2016

"The killing of Oromo youth by armed officers has also become a way of life under the cover of fighting “terrorism”. But what terrorism means in reality is not spelled out transparently, as far as any command of the language of terrorising people could go. People ask themselves whether aone-to-five cellular arrangement, making each member spy over the other, is not in itself terrorism of a subtle kind.

They had not only claimed with the strongest term possible that “Wolkaiteand Tegeday” have always been part and parcel of the Amhara ethnic group. They underlined that they have no animosity with the people of Tigray and have always lived together in harmony and good friendship.

Some of the members of the state media, while confirming that the Gondar protest had taken place during the morning hours of last Sunday, added that the demonstration was not approved nor given the blessing of both the city official and the Regional state. But they did not point out whether it was legal or not according to the provisions in the constitution."

Tourism has been a growing industry in Ethiopia and a vital source of foreign currency of late. Among the attractions of historical significance inthe country, the Fasilidus Castles in the old capital of the Kingdom have been among this few wonders of architecture that visitors have been intrigued by. It leaves them questioning how such an intricate design could ever have been built back in the 16th century.

The Scottish explorer James Bruce wanted to discover the source of theNile River and had travelled upstream starting from Egypt. He had cometo Gondar in the middle of 1770's, when it was under the reign of King Mera Tekle Haimanot.

Historians have told us that the capital city kept changing from Axum to Gondar and even to Lalibella in Wollo before the Shoan dynasty came to power and made Ankober its capital. This was before Emperor Menelik engaged himself in the business of creating a united Ethiopia, which tookhim to the south and other directions.

Other historians – the likes of Tekle Tsadik Makuria and others – have written a lot about the ancient kingdoms and the level of intricacy of thecastles of Gondar, the water fortress around them and the steam bath holes, as well as the complexities and wisdom of that period.

At present, the "Diaspora Day" celebrations taking place at Bahr Dar, the capital of the Amhara Regional State, has coincided with Europe's vacationseason and increased the number of tourists visiting Gondar and other places.

Last week, on Sunday, Gondar was also making headline news in the media for a different reason. Thousands of people, men and women, young and old, had made it to Gondar from all parts of the region to takeall their complaints and political demands to the streets and main squaresof the city.

There were many scary speculations by people, who had heard the newsthat armoured security officers had taken key positions around Gondar.

Ato Bereket Simon and other officials had pleaded to be given some time before they could bring their response. People had accused him of being afall out for their causes and in earnest no more than an errand representative only in name.

The massive protest was full of derogative references and demands for the release of Col. Demeke Zawdu, who has allegedly been detained as ascapegoat.

The peaceful protestors also shouted their allegiance to their Oromo brothers, who were put down by officers expected to protect them and ensure their security. There were also slogans demanding for democracy,which by definition entails accountability and transparency – not by officials labelling the killings as commensurate and not repressive!

The investigations made by the so-called Humanitarian Commissioner, who was also behind the unforgivable voting procedure led by Professor Mega Bekana, has instead of presenting his investigations to the Judiciary,given his evaluation as not “repressive” more than necessary.

The killing of Oromo youth by armed officers has also become a way of lifeunder the cover of fighting “terrorism”. But what terrorism means in reality is not spelled out transparently, as far as any command of the language of terrorising people could go.

But they did not point out whether it was legal or not according to the provisions in the constitution.

The slogan sang out by the protestors expressing solidarity with the peaceful Oromo demonstrators has apparently disappointed many who would have liked to see a crack between the two ethnic groups. What wasperhaps most daring and unusual was the vivid waving of the old tricolourof the historical flag – green, yellow and red, without any other mark on it. This is, of course, a gesture of how much the protestors are not with the restrictions of the government’s laws against failures to abide by the new flag. The tricolour, which was taken as a sign of liberation for centuries and which has been adapted by many other African countries inone form or another, does not seem to be well taken with the new changedespite the yearly celebrations of ‘Flag Day’.

By some historical irony, the recent referendum held in Great Britain and the race for office between the Republicans and the Democrats in the US is believed to give ample lessons to those countries like ours where peoplecrave to enjoy their democratic rights. Where do we go next? (text ends)

EthiopiaProtests:
'Nearly 100 killed' in Oromia and Amhara
August 8, 2016

Nearly 100 people were killed in the weekend's protests in Ethiopia asdemonstrators clashed with security forces in different parts of the country, Amnesty International says.

The rights group says the most deadly incident happened in Bahir Dar,where at least 30 people died on Sunday.

The authorities have said seven died in Bahir Dar and that security forceswere reacting to violence from protesters. There has been an unprecedented wave of protests in Ethiopia in recent months.

People in the Oromo and Amhara regions have been complaining aboutpolitical and economic marginalisation.

- What is behind Ethiopia's wave of protests?
- The Oromo protests and Ethiopian unity

Amnesty says that 67 people died when "security forces fired live bulletsat peaceful protesters" in different towns and cities in the Oromo region over the weekend.

There were clashes between security forces and protesters on Sunday inBahir Dar, the Amhara regional capital.

Opposition activists have given similar figures for the number of peoplekilled.

The government has blamed "nearby and distant foreign enemies and social media activists" for defying warnings about holding unauthorisedprotests, the government-affiliated Fana Broadcasting Corporate (FBC)reports.

The authorities have said that the demonstrators were destroying government and private property and "inflicting deaths on innocent citizens" and arrests were made as people were trying to spread theviolence, FBC adds.

The United States, a close ally of the government, said it was "deeply concerned" by the violence and said the people's rights to demonstrateshould be respected.

The unrest was sparked last November by a plan to expand the capital into Oromia. This led to fears farmers from the Oromo ethnic group, thelargest in Ethiopia, would be displaced.

The plan was later dropped but protests continued, highlighting issuessuch as marginalisation and human rights.

New York-based Human Rights Watch says that more than 400 people have been killed in clashes with the security forces since protests began.

The government has disputed this figure. The Amharas are Ethiopia'ssecond biggest ethnic group and used to form the country's elite.

The Washington Post
A year after Obama's visit, Ethiopia is in turmoil
By Paul Schemm The Washington Post August 9, 2016

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia — The shoes lay scattered on the sidewalk as thedetained protesters walked barefoot through the rain, escorted by grim- faced police officers who casually beat them with batons to keep them moving.

In nearby Meskel Square here in the heart of the Ethiopian capital, police kicked around the remnants of protest signs. Just 10 minutes earlier, 500people had gathered at the site, shouting slogans against the government — before being beaten, rounded up and carted off by police.

In Ethiopia's countryside, however, it was a bloodier story. Rights groupsand opposition figures estimate that dozens were killed in a weekend of protests that shook this key U.S. ally in the Horn of Africa.

The government had switched off the Internet over the weekend, apparently to prevent demonstrators from organizing, so it was only by Monday that word spread of the extent of the violence across the Oromiaand Amhara regions.

Ethiopia confronts its worst violence in years
Just a year ago, Ethiopia was basking in the world's spotlight after a visitfrom President Obama and global accolades for its decade of double-digitgrowth and enviable stability in a dangerous region.

Since then, however, this country of nearly 100 million has been hit by a widespread drought that has halved growth, and anti-government protestshave spread across two of its most populous regions.

The local weekly Addis Standard estimated that at least 50 people werekilled over the weekend — based on phone calls to protest hot spots.
Amnesty International put the toll at about 100, citing sources across thecountry.

On Monday, the government announced that the situation was under control and that "the attempted demonstrations were orchestrated byforeign enemies from near and far in partnership with local forces.”

Merera Gudina, chairman of the opposition Oromo Federalist Congress, told The Washington Post that an estimated 50 people died in the Oromia region Saturday and 27 were killed Sunday in Bahir Dar, the capital of theAmhara region and a major tourist destination.

“The government is responding in the same way it has responded to such incidents for the last quarter of the century,” he said by phone from Washington during a visit with the Ethiopian community there. “They wantto rule in the old way, and people are refusing to be ruled in the old way.”

History repeats itself in Ethiopia

Protests began in November in the Oromia region, a sprawling state the size of Nevada that is home to the Oromos, the largest ethnic group in thecountry. It is also home to the capital.

As a booming Addis Ababa expanded and Ethiopia brought in foreign investors, more and more land from the surrounding Oromia region wasconfiscated. People also complained of corrupt administrators and, with little recourse to justice, began to stage demonstrations.

The government response was harsh. Human Rights Watch estimated thatat least 400 people were killed in protests over the next several months.

The official Ethiopian human rights council put the figure at 173.

In the face of the repression, the protests slowly quieted in Oromia, onlyto erupt last month in the neighboring region of Amhara, the historical ethnic center of the Ethiopian state and home to spectacular rock-cut churches and medieval castles that attract tourists.

A botched government attempt to arrest activists in the northern city of Gondar in mid-July led to two days of rioting that left 11 members of the security forces and five civilians dead. Two weeks later, tens of thousandsheld a peaceful demonstration over land issues and government repression.

Protesters in Amhara declared solidarity with the Oromo people and theiropposition to the government, which many say is dominated by the minority Tigrayan ethnic group.

Activists abroad then called for demonstrations across the two regions thispast weekend — a call to which thousands responded despite the Internetshutdown. “It is clear Ethiopia has a potentially serious and destabilizing unrest on its hands,” said Rashid Abdi, the Horn of Africa project director at the International Crisis Group. “What started off as isolated and localized protests in the Oromia and Amhara regions has now morphed into a much broader movement covering a large swath of the country.”

He said the government has to move swiftly to defuse the crisis by engaging in talks with the communities and addressing the root causes of the dissatisfaction. Despite Ethiopia's impressive economic gains, the growth has not been enough to "keep pace with rising social inequality"and unemployment, he said.

Opening these lines of communication, however, may be difficult becauseof a lack of leadership. Opposition parties have been repressed — the ruling coalition won 100 percent of the parliamentary seats in elections last year — and local officials are often mistrusted or viewed as corrupt.

Seyoum Teshome, a university lecturer in Woliso, a town in Oromia whereprotests also occurred, said people have taken to the streets because theydo not feel they have any other choice. "They have no other option other than protests to explain their grievances," he said. "They have nothing."

Gudina, the opposition leader, said his party has been so curtailed by authorities that it has little control over what has been happening in Oromia. Most of the party's leadership was imprisoned when the protestsbegan last year.

He said that unless the government eased its repression, the violence would worsen. "These protests are at the level of an intifada — people intheir own ways are resisting the government pressure and demanding their rights," he said, using an Arabic term that means uprising. "I don't think it's going to die down.

"The government is responding in the same way it has responded to such incidents for the last quarter of the century," he said by phone from Washington during a visit with the Ethiopian community there. "They wantto rule in the old way, and people are refusing to be ruled in the old way."

As a booming Addis Ababa expanded and Ethiopia brought in foreign investors, more and more land from the surrounding Oromia region wasconfiscated. People also complained of corrupt administrators and, with little recourse to justice, began to stage demonstrations.

The government response was harsh. Human Rights Watch estimated thatat least 400 people were killed in protests over the next several months.
The official Ethiopian human rights council put the figure at 173.

In the face of the repression, the protests slowly quieted in Oromia, onlyto erupt last month in the neighboring region of Amhara, the historical ethnic center of the Ethiopian state and home to spectacular rock-cut churches and medieval castles that attract tourists.

A botched government attempt to arrest activists in the northern city of Gondar in mid-July led to two days of rioting that left 11 members of the security forces and five civilians dead. Two weeks later, tens of thousands held a peaceful demonstration over land issues and governmentrepression.

Protesters in Amhara declared solidarity with the Oromo people and theiropposition to the government, which many say is dominated by the minority Tigrayan ethnic group.

Activists abroad then called for demonstrations across the two regions thispast weekend — a call to which thousands responded despite the Internetshutdown. “It is clear Ethiopia has a potentially serious and destabilizing unrest on its hands,” said Rashid Abdi, the Horn of Africa project director at the International Crisis Group. “What started off as isolated and localized protests in the Oromia and Amhara regions has now morphed into a much broader movement covering a large swath of the country.”

Ethiopian Intifadah?

Massacre unfolding in Ethiopia

By Alem Mamo August 10, 2016

More than 100 people were killed on May 6 alone. Sources say the numberis growing every day as those admitted to various hospitals succumb to their injuries.

For any keen observer of politics in Ethiopia over the last twenty-five years the current crisis is not the least surprising. The political, economic and social architecture, which exclusively benefits a small minority that claims to represent less than 6% of the 100,000,000 population, is at thecentre of the wider national discontent. This marginalization of the majority by a small minority reached an intolerable level on May 6, 2016 spilling over on the streets of cities, towns and villages across the four corners of the country. Demonstrations were exclusively peaceful and orderly, simply demanding political and economic rights. The response from the Tigray Liberation Front (TPLF) that has ruled the country over the last twenty-five years was a total massacre.

The May 6th massacre that included children as young as 10 years old was conducted with meticulous planning of the government's security andmilitary apparatus, including the positioning of sharp shooters on rooftopsand high grounds surrounding peaceful demonstrations. Hospital sources in the north western city of Bahir Dar describe several victim's injuries as a 'single bullet head injury'. In preparation for this well-planned and executed mass murder, the regime cut off internet, telephone and electricity services in most cities including the capital Addis Ababa. Some cities still do not have service restored as the state massacre continues.

The scope and magnitude of this massacre truly is horrifying. A mother of two who participated in the Bahir Dar peaceful demonstration describes the situation as a 'blood bath'. When I spoke with her over the phone she could hardly contain herself. Our conversation was interrupted several times as she struggled with her grief. "They shot my son in front of my eyes. I couldn't protect him, I just held him close as he took his last breath. I couldn't save him. Can you imagine?" she asked. "I will save the bloodied scarf I held my son, I will save it." Posing a question to me, she asked, "What would you do if you were me? What would you do?" she repeated.

The stories of horror and utter brutality all across the country are chilling.In the small eastern city of Awodie the indiscriminate killing was conducted door-to- door. I spoke with an elderly man as he returned froma funeral of murdered young men. "We buried nine members of our community, most of them young boys," he said. "I will be going to more burials tomorrow," he said, his voice cracking. "We are under state terror.We thought if we advise our children to stay home, they would be safe.
We were wrong. We are not safe anywhere in our country. No safe placefor us," he said.

As the regime escalates nation-wide massacres many across the countryare discussing establishing 'self defense' units and in some parts of the country people are already forming localized groups to respond to the regime's ongoing violence perpetrated against peaceful demonstrators.

There are some indicators that citizens are arming themselves and the flow of arms in these areas have increased dramatically. The situation inEthiopia has reached to a point of no return. The status quo is not only unsustainable, but also it is at it's last breath. This critical and importantreality should be crystal clear to the western powers who have providedwide ranging support to the regime over the last twenty-five years.

Ethiopia must transition toward true democracy. It is the one and onlyway to avert a major crisis in the country and that is what the people have been demanding for the last twenty-five years. Any attempt to short-circuit these demands by western powers in order to facilitate a softlanding to the TPLF and exclude any political actors who have a stake in the future of the country is unacceptable and most importantly foments another crisis in the country. It is this exact process facilitated by the U.S.State Department in 1991 that brought the country to this point.

To repeat the same mistake is not only a failure to learn from history, but also it is a crime against the people of Ethiopia. There is a very short window of opportunity to save Ethiopia and its people from a full blown crisis that could engulf the region. The tone, psychology and dynamic of the situation is changing rapidly. The masses are losing patience with the political, economic and social domination by a small minority. Hence, the country urgently needs a new political, economic and social order which facilitates the equal participation of all citizens. Ethiopia must move toward a system where no group or an individual is dominated by another.The country's future is inextricably tied to a political system that fosters democratic citizenship, equality, freedom and justice. The failure by western powers to stand with and support the people of Ethiopia in this endeavour is nothing less than orchestrating a crisis with a magnitude of Iraq, Syria and Libya combined with a major catastrophic implication on regional and global peace and security. The writer can be reached at Alem6711@gmail.com Regional protests that began last year in Ethiopia have spread across thecountry, and despite successive crackdowns analysts say dissatisfaction with the authoritarian government is driving ever greater unrest.

Demonstrations began popping up in November 2015 in the Oromia region, which surrounds the capital, due to a government plan to expandthe boundaries of Addis Ababa.The region's Oromo people feared their farmland would be seized, and though the authorities soon dropped the urban enlargement project and brutally suppressed the protests, they badly misjudged the anger it triggered.Protests have since swept other parts of Oromia, and more recently to the northern Amhara region, causing disquiet in the corridors of power of a key US ally and crucial partner in east Africa's fight against terrorism.

"Since it came to power in 1991, the regime has never witnessed such a bad stretch... Ethiopia resembles a plane going through a zone of extremeturbulence," independent Horn of Africa researcher Rene Lafort told AFP.

Despite what he described as the "state of siege" imposed on the Oromia region in recent weeks, the protests have refused to die down, and demonstrators have been challenging government more and more openly.

Minority rule

One rally was even held in Addis Ababa on Saturday, a rare event for theseat of power of a nation ruled by a regime considered among the most repressive in Africa.

More than 140 people were killed when security forces put down theoriginal Oromia land protests, shot or tortured to death, according torights groups.

A fresh crackdown over the weekend led to the deaths of almost 100 more, according to an Amnesty International toll, with live fire used on thecrowds. "This crisis is systemic because it shakes the foundations of the model of government put into place 25 years ago, which is authoritarian and centralised," Lafort explained.

The protesters have different grievances but are united by their disaffection with the country's leaders, who largely hail from the northern Tigray region and represent less than 10 percent of the population. Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn heads the Ethiopian People's RevolutionaryDemocratic Front (EPRDF), which won all the seats in parliament in elections last year.

Although he comes from the minority Wolayta people, he is surrounded ingovernment by Tigreans, who also dominate the security forces and positions of economic power.

Getachew Metaferia, professor of political science at Morgan State University in the United States, described the state as "controlled by anethnic minority imposing its will on the majority," a crucial factor in understanding the protests.

More than 60 percent of the country's almost 100 million people are eitherAmhara or Oromo. "There is no fundamental discussion with the people, no dialogue... the level of frustration is increasing. I don't think there will be a return back to normal," the professor added.

The country's rulers have cultivated the skyrocketing growth and rapidly improving health outcomes that have changed the face of a nation whose famines weighed on the world's conscience in 1980s. But their grip on civilliberties has tightened: Ethiopia ranked 142 of 180 countries in Reporters Without Borders' press freedom index this year, and social media used to organise rallies is regularly blocked by the authorities.

The use of anti-terror laws to jail opposition critics has also provoked ire,combined with more local issues such as the targeting of Amharan politicians campaigning for a referendum on a district absorbed into Tigrean territory.

Reclaiming freedoms

The West has largely avoided direct criticism of the country's rights recordbecause Ethiopia is credited with beating back Al-Qaeda-affiliated Shabaabmilitants in Somalia, but the protests put its allies in an awkward spot. "Ethiopia's leaders have lost the vision of Meles. They are showing signs ofnervousness and don't place trust in their own people," said one Europeandiplomat on condition of anonymity.

After toppling dictator Mengistu Haile Mariam in 1991, Meles Zenawi ruledwith an iron fist until he died in 2012, and Hailemariam took over. More used to its image as an oasis of calm in a troubled region, the governmentis swift to blame foreign "terrorist groups" for the unrest, usually pointing the finger at neighbouring Eritrea.

Hailemariam last Friday announced a ban on demonstrations which "threaten national unity" and called on police to use all means at theirdisposal to prevent them.

Merera Gudina, leader of the opposition Oromo People's Congress, said the nebulous movements were not affiliated with traditional political parties and were focused above all on claiming back freedoms the government has long denied. "We are nine months into this protest. I don't think it will stop," he told AFP. "This is an intifada," he said, using aterm which means uprising.

UN calls for probe into Ethiopia protesters killings

Ninety deaths in Oromia and Amhara regions must be investigated by internationalobservers, UN human rights chief says. By Reuters August 11, 2016

The UN human rights chief has urged Ethiopia to allow international observers to investigate the killings of 90 protesters in restive regions atthe weekend.

Zeid Raad Al Hussein, UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, said on Wednesday that allegations of excessive use of force across the Oromia and Amhara regions must be probed and that his office was in discussionswith Ethiopian authorities. "The use of live ammunition against protestersin Oromia and Amhara of course would be a very serious concern for us," Zeid told the Reuters news agency in an interview in Geneva.

He also said that his office had "not seen any genuine attempt at investigation and accountability" since January when the killings of protesters first began. Unrest continued in Oromia for several months until early this year over plans to allocate farmland surrounding the regional capital for development. Authorities in the Horn of Africa state scrapped the scheme in January, but protests flared again over the continued detention of opposition demonstrators.

In the weekend, protesters chanted anti-government slogans and waveddissident flags. Some demanded the release of jailed opposition politicians. Information on the reported killings has been difficult to obtain, Zeid said.

He added that any detainee, who had been peacefully protesting, shouldbe released promptly. The state-run Ethiopian News Agency said on Monday that "illegal protests" by "anti-peace forces" had been brought under control. It did not mention casualties.

AIGAFORUM

Exhibits of the Hijack of ANDM by Rotten Neftegnas -Pro-TPLF websiteAigaforum attacks ANDM GREW UP LIKE BAMBOO; ROLLED DOWN LIKE PESTLE

(ወጣ ወጣና እንደ ሸምበቆ፥ ተንከባለለ እንደ ሙቀጫ!)

Droughts have been used by past regimes of Ethiopia – the creators and guardians of unimaginable misery – as weapons to subdue and exploit thenations, nationalities, and peoples of the Country. TPLF – the sole architect that has dislodged the creators and guardians of unimaginable misery into the dustbin of history with untold sacrifice – has generated revered strategy of national socioeconomic transformation that has helpedEthiopia to fully come out victorious against the challenges of the El Nino triggered drought of last year. Ethiopia’s success in withstanding the drought has helped herself and her leaders earn broad global acclaim. Thisnational success has made all the Woyanes and their friends thrilled and proud. TPLF always comes with something ingenious that works!

TPLF – as history is lavishly rewarding it – is the most principled, committed, formidable, benevolent, industrious, and successful political party the world has ever seen. TPLF is the only political party in the worldthat has succeeded in pulling the most complex and massive country in the world out of debilitating poverty and backwardness quickly during the most intricate epoch of globalized world by ingeniously crafting one-of-its-kind socioeconomic transformation strategy.

Unfortunately, Ethiopia's success in overcoming the last year's drought isbeing muddied with unrests in various parts of the Country. The sole cause of the unrests is corruption and its various manifestations. The unrest in the Amhara State, nonetheless, goes beyond corruption- triggered one for all intents and reasons. It has evolved towards challenging the Ethiopian political arrangement for the sole purpose of sanitizing the ugly history of the rotten neftegnas by reducing the AmharaNational Democratic Movement (ANDM) into their agent. Below, I will show some clear exhibits that show the hijack of ANDM by the rotten neftegnas and some signs of its decay into neftegna-hijacked ANDM (NH- ANDM).

EXHIBIT ONE

Many observers have aired their worries when ANDM's 35th Anniversary became the platform of venting distorted history and for telling blatant liesin broad day light about the role of ANDM in defeating the Dergue.

ANDM's leadership and cadres have been lectured several times that the history of EPRDF is essentially the history of TPLF. They are well aware that ANDM's role in defeating the Dergue is practically insignificant in terms of lives and nothing in terms of ideas – except few scripts of poems and love letters. The adage "Mezmure Walwa" was coined to convey just that message. But, ANDM's leadership has let the Amhara TV channel to steal documentaries from the ETV (EBC) archives and played them – some without editing their captions – as if they belonged to ANDM. God knows ifANDM had ever owned any apparatus to video-tape a war!

One of reverberating narratives of the 35th Anniversary of ANDM was that"ANDM is self made", i.e. "ANDM is not the creation of TPLF". Whether ANDM is self-made or is the creation of TPLF is not important at all. What is, in fact, quite important is that ANDM is leading the Amhara masses towards socio-economic transformation with the help of the ideas generated by TPLF and by adopting projects pioneered in Tigrai by TPLF. This being the truth, the "ANDM is self made" narrative has served its purpose of boosting the egos of the neftegna remnants within and outsideANDM and encouraged them to make a lot of empty bravados. Therefore, the way how the 35th Anniversary of ANDM has unfolded is Exhibit One ofits hijack by the rotten neftegnas.

EXHIBIT TWO

Once ANDM has morphed itself from allegedly invisible TPLF's stepchild to invincible gorilla organization in few weeks of media hype without hushes and shushes from anybody, the neftegna-hijacked ANDM let or fail to stopthe invasion of Qimant villages and the massacre of defenseless women and school children. NH-ANDM's behavior and actions during the Qimant massacre – similar to all other massacres carried out all over Ethiopia by past neftegna regimes characteristically targeting unaware, unprepared, and unarmed men and defenseless women and children – can be regardedas Exhibit Two of ANDM's total hijack by rotten neftegnas. In fact, the Qimant massacre looks like an intrastate trial for larger and extensive interstate adventure.

EXHIBIT THREE

The reclaim of the alleged lost territories of Amhara have been the long standing mission of the "Yedil Atbiya Jegnoch" faction of ANDM. When NH-ANDM get out victorious after its operations in the Qimant community – with very little hushes and shushes from the federal government and insignificant bruises from the Qimant community – it truly and rightly felt that it is invincible and can go down to the lowlands of Western Tigrai to claim Wolqait through its proxies that have established documented allegiance with Ethiopian enemies. This Exhibit is the strongest one proving the total hijack of ANDM by rotten neftegnas. a. Land-grabbing with no regard for fellow human beings is diagnostic characteristics of the neftegnas. b. The way the proxies like to claim Wolqait throws the FederalConstitution and its instruments under the bus. The singular Ethiopian political entity that detests the Federal Constitution and its instruments tothe core is the rotten neftegnas. Thus, unless it is hijacked by the rotten neftegna, ANDM wouldn't have kept silent when the constitutional order was compromised by the proxies under the nostrils of its leaders.

EXHIBIT FOUR

ANDM's actions and behaviors towards the Gondar unrest are interesting. Rotten neftegnas – who behave like a pack of wild asses that can only seegreen pasture and nothing else – believe that defeating TPLF by all meansnecessary including by harassing the people of Tigrai can help them annihilate EPRDF altogether and reclaim their lost glory. The glory of eating big and [deleted] big while starving millions to death! The first governor of Oromia State once said: "the neftegnas can only think about the coffee when they talk about Jima; and only about the red meat when they talk about Harar". Some rotten neftegnas proxies have openly turnedGondar into war zone while NH-ANDM was taking enabler's role by providing them with protections and by turning blind eyes on them when they suffocate, harass, and kill citizens of Tigrai origin and destroy and loot their hard-earned properties in broad day light. NH-ANDM neither took uncompromising measures nor sought the assistance of the Federal Government until the problem has evolved into Melaku Tefera's era and has put NH-ANDM itself and the Amhara State Government in awkward position as many towns of the State are engulfed. These turns of events can only be unfolded under the leadership of pro-neftegna ANDM or NH- ANDM. The leadership of NH-ANDM and that of the Amhara State were reluctant to call a spade is a spade and protect the lives and properties of citizens of Tigrai origin. It has let the 1997 (E.C.) Addis Ababa mantra of "Tigre Wede Mekelle; Nibret Wede Kebelle; Woyane Wede Kertchelle" sung in Gondar. And yet, the leadership did not yet made any public apologies to the citizens who have lost their loved ones and properties.

EXHIBIT FIVE

Delegations representing the Federal Government of Ethiopia and the governments of the regional states are faced with intense harassment bythe segment of the pro-neftegna, pro-Dergue Diaspora. The most vocal, flag waving anti-Ethiopian Diaspora – from ex-communicated priests and Red Terror criminals up to Dergue's foot soldiers and nameless azmaries –are pro-neftegna and pro-Dergue ethnic Amhara. They are known by the nuisances they create towards anybody belonging to the Ethiopian government. Surprisingly, the delegation led by the NH-ANDM leadership has received the warmest and the most hospitable welcome in its recent tour to the United States. The closed-door meeting of Amhara Diasporas and NH-ANDM leadership during the recent Diaspora Day held in Bahir Daris a tale-tale sign that shows that NH-ANDM is aboard the wrecked boat ofthe neftegnas. Yesterday's ANDM leadership – who were ridiculed for allegedly being the puppets of TPLF – wouldn't have received a respectful treatment in the States and would have returned the same for their recentguests at home unless today's ANDM has surrendered itself to the land- grabbing, riffraff neftegnas and their ideals of chauvinism.

MORE EXHIBITS CAN BE FURNISHED. BUT, WHAT IS TO BE DONE?

Now, the Gondar unrest has evolved into bigger crisis and its primary owners are trying to expand it to engulf Amhara and other states of theCountry. It has grown bigger and the NH-ANDM leadership is not managing it anymore; whereas the Amhara State Government and its apparatus cannot stop it. Neither ANDM nor the Amhara State Government has ever faced with a crisis even a hundredth of this magnitude. It is in recent memory when some members of the "Yedil Atbiya Jegnoch" faction of ANDM stationed in Addis Ababa were lost intothin air following the defeat of EPRDF in the City in the 1997 (E.C.) election and surprised many observers by reappearing in the Federal Parliament to make oath and take ministerial positions after Addis was stabilized by the men and women with guts.

The long-standing dream of some factions of ANDM is overtaking the position of TPLF in the Ethiopian politics. This dream, by itself, does not have any problem at all. In fact, TPLF also wishes to maintain its position in the EPRDF coalition and in the Ethiopian political ecosystem. However, TPLF has always achieved that and is working do so in the generations to come by continuously transforming itself and by generating sellable and ingenious ideas and strategies of development and democratization that transform the Country and her peoples. What is problematic with the dream of ANDM is the way they would like to fulfill it. They endeavor to achieve it by sabotaging and weakening TPLF instead of taking bold measures to transform ANDM itself; and worst of all by aligning themselves with land-grabbing rotten neftegnas. When NH-ANDM was assisting land-grabbing neftegnas to concoct a war from a star hotel in Gondar, it was for the sole mission of sabotaging TPLF by letting the harassment and killing of citizens of Tigrai origin and the destruction and looting of their properties to make them feel that TPLF is failing them. In fact, this strategy is the strategy of all anti-TPLF forces in general and theneftegnas in particular.

ANDM is a gift of TPLF and the people of Tigrai to the peace-loving, humble, and fraternal peoples of Amhara who are still laboring to fullyextricate themselves out of debilitating poverty and backwardness. Anybody can go to the highlands of North Shoa, Gondar, and Wollo and figure out for themselves. The price TPLF and the people of Tigrai have paid from the time of Tekhrarewa until now in protecting, grooming, and guiding EPDM/ANDM to help it become successful leader of the Amhara peoples is the testimonial of the high regard TPLF and the people of Tigraihave towards the fraternal peoples of Amhara.

Many pro-Dergue neftegna riffraff would keep dreaming and talking to resurrect the neftegna system and its chauvinistic ideals. But, no sane observer of the Ethiopian politics would fail to understand that any projectaiming at resurrecting the neftegna system is a futile exercise. Even the NH-ANDM leaders and their tens of thousands of armed-to-the-teeth innocent militias cannot remove a stone-mark put up by a single Woyane let alone resurrecting the neftegna system by defeating TPLF and the people of Tigrai. Agitating innocent and unaware Amharas – who still believe that Woyanes are creatures with ears as large as the leaves false banana – to harass and kill unprepared and unarmed men and defenselesswomen and children and to destroy and loot their hard-earned properties cannot resurrect the neftegnas. The ugly legacy of neftegnas and their chauvinistic ideals are like a child's dead mother who cannot return home from her graves – not like one who left home to fetch water.

Therefore, the good people of Amhara and all Amhara elites – who cannotand should not miss that the legacy of rotten neftegnas is neither salvageable nor useful to anybody including to the Amhara people themselves – have to reclaim ANDM before it is too late. The ideals of chauvinism should be scraped off the psyche of all good-willing Amharas. Likewise, the EPRDF coalition should assist ANDM to sanitize itself off the remnants of neftegna sooner than later. It is time for major renewal (tehadisso) of EPRDF to scrap off narrow nationalism and chauvinism fromthe psyche of the leadership as well as from that of the ranks and files of EPRDF. That is the most effective measure to fight and defeat corruption and rent-seeking. Ethiopia Thrives Over the Graves of Chauvinism and Narrow Nationalism

Ninety deaths in Oromia and Amhara regions must be investigated by international observers,UN human rights chief says.

By Reuters August 11, 2016

The UN human rights chief has urged Ethiopia to allow international observers toinvestigate the killings of 90 protesters in restive regions at the weekend.

Zeid Raad Al Hussein, UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, said on Wednesday that allegations of excessive use of force across the Oromia and Amhararegions must be probed and that his office was in discussions with Ethiopian authorities. "The use of live ammunition against protesters in Oromia and Amhara of course would be a very serious concern for us," Zeid told the Reuters news agency inan interview in Geneva.

He also said that his office had "not seen any genuine attempt at investigation and accountability" since January when the killings of protesters first began. Unrest continued in Oromia for several months until early this year over plans to allocate farmland surrounding the regional capital for development. Authorities in the Horn ofAfrica state scrapped the scheme in January, but protests flared again over the continued detention of opposition demonstrators.

In the weekend, protesters chanted anti-government slogans and waved dissident flags. Some demanded the release of jailed opposition politicians. Information on thereported killings has been difficult to obtain, Zeid said. He added that any detainee, who had been peacefully protesting, should be released promptly. The state-run Ethiopian News Agency said on Monday that "illegal protests" by "anti-peace forces"had been brought under control. It did not mention casualties.

HISTORICIZE

The history of the Ethiopian Imperial Bodyguard:

commonly known as (Kebour-Zabagna ~ ክቡር-ዘበኛ Imperial Bodyguard)

Imperial Bodyguard commonly known as Kebour-Zabagna ~ ክቡር-ዘበኛ was the Ethiopian Imperial Guard. Also known as the Fir...st Division, this unit served the dual purposes of providing security for the Emperor of Ethiopia,and being an elite infantry division. It was not, however, part of the organizational structure of the Ethiopian regular army as it was part of theZebagna, the Addis Ababa Guard.

The Kebur Zabagna was based at Addis Ababa dates the formation of the (previously known as the Mehal Sefari to 1917, when the Regent Ras Taffari(later emperor Haile Selassie) assembled a unit under his direct control from men who had trained in the British army in Kenya as well as a few who had served under the Italians in Tripoli. In 1930 as King or Negus he invited a Belgian military mission to train and modernize the Ethiopian military, which included the Kebur Zabagna.

The unit was organized in three battalions of trained regular infantry armed with rifles, machineguns and mortars; one battalion consisted ofmen from the earlier mahal_safari.

The KeburZabagna also had one heavy machine-gun company. It was commanded by Ethiopian graduates of SaintCyr the French Military Academy, at the time of the Italian invasion of Ethiopia. As a unit, the ImperialBodyguard only participated in the Battle of Maychew (31 March1936), but afterwards many of its members joined the various groups ofthe Ethiopian resistance.

Following the return of emperor Haile Selassie to Ethiopia, the Kebur Zabagna was reconstituted, and a Swidish mission aided in its training.Men for the Kagnew battalion which fought in the Korean war were drawn from the Imperial Bodyguard.
The Kagnew Battalions were three successive battalions drawn from the 1st Division Imperial bodyguard sent by Emperor_Haile_Selassie_I between June1951 and April 1954 as part of the United_Nations forces in the .Korean War

“Kebour-Zebagna remained the elite force of the empire,” notes historianBahru Zawda until discredited in the wake of the attempted coup of 1960." That unsuccessful coup had been planned by its commander Brigadier General Mengistu Neway and his brother Germame Neway.

In 1961 it numbered nine battalions; in 1969 some 7,000 men. In 1974 the Commander wasMajor-General taffese Lemma. The Kebur Zabagna was disbanded after the Duerg consolidated their hold on Ethiopia.

NPR – The Tigrayan elite has a cartel-like grip on the government,military and the fast-growing economy.

GREGORY WARNER

Even more significant? The location of this anti-government protest.

For the last nine months, protests have erupted further south, in Oromiya,home to Ethiopia's largest but historically marginalized ethnic group, the Oromo. But now the protests have spread north to a second region, the Amhara.

The different protesters have different grievances, but they share a growing frustration with the rule of a third, minority ethnic group — the Tigrayans. They say the Tigrayan elite has a cartel-like grip on the government, military and the fast-growing economy.

The response by the Ethiopian military to the protesters was swift and brutal. Amnesty International says that nearly 100 people were killed overthe weekend when soldiers fired directly on demonstrators.

The U.N. human rights chief has "urge[d] the government to allow accessfor international observers" to investigate what happened.

Even after those weekend confrontations, witness reports were still filtering back to Addis Ababa, the capital. "We're hearing who's been wounded, who's in hospital, who's been killed, not to mention those who've disappeared without a trace," said Tsedale Lemma, editor in chiefof Addis Standard, one of the few Ethiopian magazines that risks open critiques of the government.

She described an Orwellian spectacle on state-run television, with "ferocious PR work" to discredit the protests. "People are being paraded inthe TV, being made to denounce the protests. People denouncing even theuse of Facebook."

For years, Ethiopia's government has warned against a social media- fueled uprising like the one that happened just north, in Egypt, in 2011.

If you watch Ethiopia's state TV broadcasts, what you'll be told is that thecountry's protests are fueled by ethnic separatists — or even ethnic terrorists.

Tsedale disputes this explanation, saying the protesters' beef is with the government, not with any particular ethnic group. "I don't see that peopleare deliberately orchestrating ethnic violence in the country," she says. "Of course, the government is eager to identify it as such."

In Ethiopia, politics is ethnicity, and ethnicity is geography. The country isformally divided into autonomous ethnic states, each with its own ethnic government. It’s a controversial system called “ethnic federalism” that was instituted by the current regime. Political parties are organized along ethnic lines. Thus any critique of the central government will automaticallytake on ethnic dimensions.

The protesters impugn the Tigrayan elite — the government officials and army generals — who, they say, have a choke-hold on the country. The government accuses the protesters of fomenting ethnic war on all Tigrayans, rich and poor. And in the fragile ethnic balance that is Ethiopia,the battle to claim the narrative is just as important as the battle in the streets. (text ends)

Ethiopia Versus UN

Ethiopia says Observers not needed as protests rage Government Spokesman tells Al Jazeera government isresponsible for safety of its own citizens.

Aljazeera August 11, 2016

Addis Ababa - Ethopia has dismissed a plea from the United Nations that itallow international observers to investigate the killing of protesters by security forces during a recent bout of anti-government demonstrations.

Getachew Reda, a government spokesman, told Al Jazeera on Thursday that the UN was entitled to its opinion but the government of Ethiopia wasresponsible for the safety of its own people.

Reda's comments came after the UN urged the government to allow observers to investigate the killings of at least 90 protesters in the Oromiaand Amhara regions over the weekend.

Zeid Raad Al Hussein, the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, said allegations of excessive use of force must should be investigated and thathis office was in discussions with Ethiopian authorities.

Reda, however, told Al Jazeera that it was not necessary to send observers to specific parts of the country since the UN already had amassive presence in Ethiopia.

He said the government would launch its own investigation into whethersecurity forces had used excessive force and would do so in consultationwith local people. He blamed what he called "terrorist elements" for stoking the violence from abroad, without giving further detail.

At the weekend, an opposition leader told the AFP news agency that up to50 people were killed as security forces suppressed the protests. AmnestyInternational put the death toll at 97.

Oromia, an area which surrounds the capital Addis Ababa, has seen several months of protests, sparked by plans to allocate farmland in theregion for development.

Authorities scrapped the land scheme in January, but protests have flaredagain over the continued detention of opposition demonstrators. Source: AlJazeera and agencies

Oromo Democratic Front (ODF) and Patriotic Ginbot 7 havereached an agreement to work in unison.)

August 11, 2016

Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) Oromo Democratic Front (ODF) andPatriotic Ginbot 7 (PG7). After several candid discussions and careful considerations of the current political, social, economic and humanitarian situations in Ethiopia, and all the damages caused by successive regimes and the TPLF/EPRDF regime in particular on the welfare and national interests of the peoples of Ethiopia and the security and sovereignty of ourcountry, the ODF and PG7 have made important observations and conclusions. The longer the current regime is allowed to stay in power, theharsher will be the pain, suffering and humiliation endured by the peoples of Ethiopia. Therefore, both parties are fully convinced that a transition from the current TPLF regime towards a new and genuinely federal and democratic state is of utmost urgency.

Ethiopia's Almaz Ayana Wins Gold for Ethiopia

August 11, 2016

In a stunning women's 10,000m championship, Ethiopia's Almaz Ayana shattered the world record by running 29:17.46 to win 10K gold at the Olympic Games. Africa won its first gold medal of the Rio 2016 Olympics as Almaz Ayana triumphed in the women’s 10,000 metre. Almaz Ayana has won the gold medal in the women's 10,000-meter event at Rio's Olympic Stadium, Maracanã, closing lap of 29.17 minutes. Almaz will seekto become just the second woman in history to win Olympic gold in both the 5000m and 10,000m at the Rio 2016 Olympic Games.Tirunesh’s dream of becoming the first athlete to win three gold medals in the Olmpics over 10,000m was shattered. Tirunesh came third. Almaz was born on November 21, 1991 in Benshangul Gumuz. In the 2015 IAAF World Championships in Beijing, Almaz won the 5000m course beating Genzebe Dibaba by a long distance. Almaz Ayana Breaks 10,000m World Record at Olympic Games. Silver was earned by Vivian Cheruiyot in 29:32.53, and bronze was claimed by defending Olympic champion Tirunesh Dibaba, who closed in 29:42.56. U.S. Olympic Trials champion Molly Huddle finished sixth overall, and broke the American record in theprocess. Huddle finished in 30:13.17, which broke the previous record bya whopping nine seconds.

The race was destined to make history from the beginning as the competitors established a fast championship showdown from the gun. Alice Aprot Nawowuna of Kenya established an early lead among with a 3:01 initial 1000m split. The world junior bronze medalist from Kenya tookthe field through 2000m in 5:55, and was followed by the Ethiopian powerhouse duo of world champion Ayana and defending Olympic champion Dibaba. The early move set a precedent for the blazing-fast pace that led the 10K. Nawowuna's front-running and brisk pace established a lead group early on. U.S. Trials winner Huddle attempted to run with them, but was unable to hold the pace, and found herself runningalone around 12 minutes into the race. But running alone didn't phase Huddle in the slightest.

Meanwhile, Nawowuna took the field through an unprecedented 5K split of14:46. Huddle followed nine seconds behind in 14:55--just over 10 seconds slower than her American record 5K time of 14:42. As if the pacewasn't fast enough, Ayana shot to the front and established an even fasterpace just after the 5K mark. With nine laps to go, Ayana found herself with a 20-meter lead on the field, and no challengers in sight. The only woman who attempted to come close was reigning world champion Cheriuyot, who trailed Ayana by a sizable amount.

Ayana powered through 8K in 23:25, which is considerably faster than theworld-record pace set by Wang Junxia of China in 1993. On her way to setting the world record of 29:31, Junxia ran 23:59 for 8K. In just her second track 10K ever, Ayana into the record books with a world record of29:17.46--15 seconds faster than silver medalist Cheruiyot and 42 seconds faster than Junxia's long-standing mark. News Analysis:

The Ethiopian model is breaking, but it’s not too late to fix it

SIMON ALLISON DAILY MAVERICK August 11, 2016

Dark clouds have long loomed over Ethiopia’s stunning development story.Now, in the face of unprecedented protests, and the government’s typically brutal response, those clouds threaten to turn into a perfect storm – with chilling consequences. By SIMON ALLISON.

As much as Ethiopia deserves praise for its stunning economic growth, which has lifted millions out of poverty, its record on civil and political rights has always been poor. Dissent is simply not an option, and countless journalists, activists and community organisers have found themselves on the wrong side of the state – with brutal, sometimes fatalconsequences.
In public, Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn says that building a democratic culture takes time, but that Ethiopia is working on it. In private, Ethiopian officials admit to the abuses, but they say that unrestricted political rights would derail the state-building project. They insist that unfettered freedoms are a western luxury; a luxury that a country as large, diverse and historically divided as Ethiopia simply cannotafford.

There is some merit to this argument. It is no coincidence that Africa's twomost successful developmental states, Ethiopia and Rwanda, are both tightly-controlled one party states. Perhaps a firm hand and a coherent long term vision make it easier to implement policy, distribute aid and maintain political stability (although this is not always the answer, as the continent's many failed dictatorships illustrate).

Proponents of liberal democracy must also acknowledge that the western model offers few examples, in Africa at least, where socio-economic rightshave been successfully delivered alongside basic freedoms. "What good isfreedom of speech to the hungry man?" the Indian politician Piloo Mody once asked. Western democracies themselves were almost all founded onwhat would be considered now to be gross human rights abuses, such as the disenfranchisement of women, or the enslavement of different race groups – abuses that dwarf the sins of modern-day Ethiopia.

But here's the catch: as Ethiopia's economy slows, and the glaring inequalities of its growth become more apparent, it's becoming harder andharder to keep a lid on that dissent. While it might have been effective, Ethiopia's authoritarian model of development is inherently fragile – and those fragilities are being exposed by the recent spate of anti-governmentprotests. The unprecedented scale of these protests means that, for once,the government can't make the problem disappear, no matter how ruthless its response.

The troubles began in November 2015, when affected communities beganto demonstrate against the government's plan to expand Addis Ababa, thecapital, into surrounding farmlands. This tapped into wider discontent among the Oromo, Ethiopia's largest ethnic group but also its most marginalised, and solidarity marches broke out across the region.

The protestors won, eventually – the expansion plans were cancelled – butat an enormous cost. An estimated 400 people were killed, and hundreds more imprisoned. This in turn fuelled more protests, and this year tensions have remained high across Oromia.

More mass demonstrations broke out in early July, but this time from a completely different source. A long-standing regional boundaries disputein Amhara catalysed local resentment against the government, and hugerallies erupted in the region's main cities, Gondar and Bahir Dar. Anger was directed at the government but also at the political dominance of another ethnic group, the Tigray, who occupy most senior government positions. Solidarity rallies were held across Amhara, Oromia and even inAddis Ababa.

The government responded the only way that it knows how: with lethal force. Amnesty International estimates that nearly 100 people were killedthis weekend as security forces tried to disperse countrywide protests. InBahir Dar alone, the police shot live rounds into the crowd, claiming 30 lives.

If the last nine months are anything to go by, the deaths will not stem thedissent. If anything, the more people the government kills, the louder andmore widespread the protests seem to get.

For Ethiopia, the implications of this are deeply unsettling: the state canno longer stifle opposition by force. The authoritarianism which has underpinned the country's development isn't working any more.

Ethiopia's rulers are now faced with a stark choice. Double down on the despotism, and risk a revolution – thereby undoing much of the country'seconomic growth (donors are already under intense pressure to pull out).Or acknowledge that civil and political rights are not just a luxury, but a necessary condition for sustainable, long-term development – and reformthe state accordingly.

The Ethiopian model of development may be buckling under the strain of the recent protests, and the government's brutal response. But the modelcan, and must, be fixed. Before it's too late. (text ends)

‘A Generation Is Protesting’ in Ethiopia, Long a U.S. AllyIs Ethiopia about to crack?

By JEFFREY GETTLEMAN August 12, 2016

For the last decade, it has been one of Africa’s most stable nations, a solid Western ally with a fast-growing economy. But in recent months, antigovernment protests have convulsed the country, spreading into moreand more areas. In the last week alone, thousands of people stormed intothe streets, demanding fundamental political change.

The government's response, according to human rights groups, wasruthless. Witnesses said that police officers shot and killed scores of unarmed demonstrators. Videos circulating from protests thought to be from late last year or earlier this year show security officers whipping young people with sticks as they are forced to perform handstands againsta wall. The top United Nations human rights official is now calling for a thorough investigation.

"It was always difficult holding this country together, and moving forward,it will be even harder," said Rashid Abdi, the Horn of Africa project director for the International Crisis Group, a research organization.

Ethiopia is the second most populous nation in Africa, after Nigeria, and itsstability is cherished by the West. American military and intelligence services work closely with the Ethiopians to combat terrorist threats across the region, especially in Somalia, and few if any countries in Africa receive as much Western aid.

Ethiopia's economy has been expanding at an impressive clip. Its infrastructure has improved drastically — there is even a new commutertrain in the capital, Addis Ababa. And its streets are typically quiet, safe and clean. Though Ethiopia has hardly been a paragon of democracy — human rights groups have constantly cited the government's repressiveness — opposition within the country had been limited, with dissidents effectively silenced. Many have been exiled, jailed, killed or driven to the far reaches of the desert.

But that may be changing.

"If you suffocate people and they don't have any other options but toprotest, it breaks out," said Seyoum Teshome, a university lecturer incentral Ethiopia. "The whole youth is protesting. A generation is protesting."

The complaints are many, covering everything from land use to the governing coalition's stranglehold on power. After a widely criticized election last year, the governing party and its allies got the last seat the opposition had held and now control 100 percent of Parliament. At the same time, tensions are rising along the border with Eritrea; a battle along that jagged, disputed line claimed hundreds of lives in June.

Analysts fear that separatist groups that had been more or less vanquished in recent years, like the Oromo Liberation Front or the OgadenNational Liberation Front, may try to exploit the turbulence and rearm.

Several factors explain why bitter feelings, after years of simmeringbeneath the surface, are exploding now.

The first is seemingly innocuous: smartphones.
Only in the last couple of years have large numbers of Ethiopians been able to communicate using social media as cheaper smartphones becamecommon and internet service improves. Even when the government shutsdown access to Facebook and Twitter, as it frequently does, especially during protests, many people are still able to communicate via internet proxies that mask where they are. Several young Ethiopians said this washow they gathered for protests.
Second, there is more solidarity between Oromos and Amharas, Ethiopia'stwo largest ethnic groups. Oromos and Amharas are not natural allies. Foreons, Amharas from Ethiopia's predominantly Christian highlands flourished in politics and business, exploiting the Oromos, many of whom are Muslim and live in lowland areas.
But that is changing as well.
"We are on the way to coordinate under one umbrella," said MulatuGemechu, an Oromo leader.
The biggest protests have been in Amhara and Oromo areas. Many Amharas and Oromos feel Ethiopia is unfairly dominated by members ofthe Tigrayan ethnic group, which makes up about 6 percent of the population and dominates the military, the intelligence services, commerce and politics.

The third reason behind the unrest is the loss of Meles Zenawi.

Mr. Meles, a former rebel leader, was Ethiopia's prime minister for 17years, until his death from an undisclosed illness in 2012. He was considered a tactical genius, a man who could see around corners. Analysts say he was especially adept at detecting early signals of discontent and using emissaries to massage and defang opponents.

"The current regime lacks that ground savvy," Mr. Abdi, the conflictanalyst, said.

Ethiopia's new prime minister, Hailemariam Desalegn, was plucked fromrelative obscurity to fill Mr. Meles's shoes. Unlike Mr. Meles, who came from the Tigray region of northern Ethiopia, Mr.

Hailemariam is a southerner. Analysts say he does not have the trust of the Tigrayan- controlled security services.

The result, many fear, is more bloodshed. The last time Ethiopia experienced such turmoil was in 2005, after thousands protested over what analysts have said appeared to be an election the government bungled and then stole. In the ensuing crackdown, many protesters werekilled, though fewer than in recent months, and that period of unrest passed relatively quickly.
Development experts have praised Ethiopia's leaders for visionary infrastructure planning, such as the new commuter train, and measurablestrides in fighting poverty. But clearly that has not stopped the internal resentment of Ethiopia's government from intensifying. And it is taking a dangerous ethnic shape.

Last month, protesters in Gondar, an Amhara town, attacked businesses owned by Tigrayans, and anti-Tigrayan hatred is becoming more commonin social media.

Analysts say the protests are putting the United States and other Western allies in an awkward position. The American government has used Ethiopiaas a base for drone flights over neighboring Somalia, though it recently said it had closed that base.

While the West clearly wants to support democracy, it also does not want its ally in an already volatile region to crumble. "That," Mr. Abdi said, "is avery tight rope to walk." (text ends)

አሁን አሁን በሀገራችን ውስጥ እየታየ ውያለውነገር ለማመን በሚቸግር መልኩ ነው። ይህን ያልኩበት ዋነኛ ምክንያት አንዳንድ የህወሓት ካድሬዎች በእምነት ተቋማት ውስጥ እየተዘወተሩ መተዋል። በተለይ በኦርቶዶክስ እምነት ተቋም ውስጥ መዘውተሩ እየተለመደ መቷል። ይህ አካሄድ በእጁጉ ልንቃወመው የሚገባ ነገር ነው። ቤተ እምነት ማለት እግዚሃብሄር የሚመለክበት እንደመሆኑ መጠን የመንግስት ስራ ማስፈፀሚያ ሲሆን ዝምብሎ ማየቱተገቢ አይደለም።

Biologist, Educator, conservationist Prof. Ensermu Kelbessa PassesAway

Prof. Ensermu Kelbessa, an Ethiopian biologist and taxonomist, whose research on the plant species earned him renown, was laid to rest yesterday, August 15, 2016 in Holy Trinity Cathedral in Addis Ababa. Hewas 64.

Prof. Ensermu was a pioneer researcher and theorist of plant diversity thatincludes discovering, describing and publishing new plant taxa, floristic, undertaking assessment of plants conservation, pollination ecology and vegetation of Ethiopia. He taught biodiversity, taxonomy and systematic biology to generations of students. He co-authored landmark papers Medicinal plants and their uses by the people in the Region of Randa, Djibouti in the Journal of Ethnopharmacology and Antimicrobial activity of traditional medicinal plants from Ankober District, North Shewa Zone,Amhara Region, Ethiopia in the Journal of Ethonobiology and Ethnomedicine.

Ensermu was born in 1952, in Hardo village of Cheliya woreda, in the former Shoa province and did his secondary education in Ambo’s Hager Hiowt School and Addis Ababa’s Beide Mariam School. He earned a biologydegree at age 26 from Addis Ababa University in 1978. He earned the highest grades during his undergraduate years, graduating with honours. In the same year, Ensermu joined the Addis Ababa University, where he stared teaching biology. After earning his PhD in Systematic Botany from Sweden’s Uppsala University in 1990, he started serving as as curator of the National Herbarium, a post that he held until 2010.

Ensermu, who served in many international bodies and initiatives, made an important contributions in the establishment of Gulele Botanical Gardens. He also served as associate editor of Ethiopian Journal of Biological Sciences, a journal that he co-founded. He spent his later yearsthere as a chair department of plant biology and biodiversity managementof the Addis Ababa University.

Prof. Ensermu received a number of awards, including an award from Patenscaften für Biologische Vieltfalt e.V, Germany. He is survived by histwo daughters, and a son.

ETHIOPIAN IDENTITY

Where or what is "Abyssinia"? - An investigation

Excerpted from Tsehai Berhane-Selassie's August 15, 2016

Territorial Ethiopia and its population underwent a transition under Emperor Tewodros II (1855-1868) Emperor Yohannes IV (1872-1889) andMenelik II (1889-1913). Tewodros' successful rise and achievements challenged various power centres, including those that had acquired near- autonomy, and oversaw the phasing of the power of descendants of the powerful in the so-called 'Era of Princes'. This set in motion a process of constant battles for redefining territories and populations as one 'country'. Nineteenth century travellers saw these confrontations as the absence or irrelevance of the neguse negest outside the areas these European termed*Abyssinia*. Negating the views of unifying neguse negest and their country,the roots of this European terminology had serious consequences for Ethiopian territorial history. [2] The concept Abyssinia is rooted in European knowledge of Africa and even earlier. Its nineteenth century association with Africa, to say the least, was vague, and came when colonialism was in the offing in the region, or was already in full swing in the rest of Africa. Travelers, diplomats, missionaries, scholars and merchants left records on Abyssinia, using the term to refer to the northern Ethiopian highlands that they associated with Christians and earlier in older sources, [3] with a mythical "land of the Prester John". [4] Though the legend of the "land of the Prester John" was first heard of in Europe around 1122, it continued to resurface from time to time in subsequent documents [5] in association with a place ruled by priestly kings in vaguely known about places such as India or Ethiopia.

True to legends, these perceptions gave secondary importance to the actual location, length, breadth or history of Abyssinia. Alvarez, one of thePortuguese missionaries who reached the Ethiopian highlands in the sixteenth century, entitled his travel book on Ethiopia.

The Prester John of the Indies. His firsthand experience firmly broughtthe tale of the land of the priest-king to bear on the ethnography of thenorthern parts of Ethiopia that the Portuguese visited. Their "discovery" generated not only fresh but also heightened interest in Ethiopia, and indeed, religious texts and Gi'iz literature they brought out from what theycalled Abyssinia were claimed as "evidence" of true Christianity: the tenets of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church beliefs, purported to rest on a "pristine form of Christianity", were seen to have been preserved intact in that "isolated" country. This development firmly associated Christianity asthe only religion of the Ethiopia that they called Abyssinia.

Though the religious debates of the period appear to have used the term,giving it wide circulation in the form Abyssinia, the term Habesha was never a place name, though it was a self-appellation to mean "mixed people" who live anywhere in Ethiopia. The nearest the word had come torefer to a place name, according to some scholars, was around 404-369
B.C. when King Harsiotef of Meroe "claimed to have sent a successful expedition against a town called Habasa (Habasi = Hebsi)," whose inhabitants, probably present day Barya-Kunama of south-western Eritrea,were called Metit. [6] Sergew Hable Selassie who bases his conclusions mainly on ancient inscriptions and documents, claims that Habeshat has otherwise been used to refer to two "tribes who migrated to Ethiopia" from the ancient Sabaean kingdom of South Arabia around 1000 B. C., over half a millennium prior to Harsiotef's expedition. In later stone inscriptions the word was used only once as a reference to the people whocalled themselves Agazian and their land Behere Agazian, which accordingto Sergew "seems to be very old" as an official name for the country as Gaze. It was used by an "unknown emperor of Ethiopia" (with uncertain dates), who left an inscription in Adulis. [7] A third century A.D. novel too (to be discussed below) seems to specify "Ethiopia" as the area of the ancient Behere Agazian.

The word Habeshat also appears in South Arabian inscriptions with reference to the activities of an Ethiopian emperor, Adbah (or Atsbeha). As part of the Ethiopian political presence in that area and was already visible from earlier centuries, Adbah sent a force of occupation in support of a king of Rayda against that of Saba, [8] and this contact continued withdifferent degrees of control well into the sixth and seventh centuries AD. On the western shores of the Red Sea, however, it appears that the word Habesha "was avoided in official as well as in literary texts." The exceptionseems to have been the use made of it in the trilingual stone inscription ofthe military expeditions of the Aksumite emperor Ezana in the fourth century. The Sabaean and Gi'iz versions use the word Habeshat, but in the Greek, the word used is "Ethiopia." Indeed, the inscription has slight variations of all place names in the three languages, [9] implying that Ezana intended to use the languages in senses that went beyond the political message of his military exploits. F. Josephus, a Jewish Rabbi of the first century AD had already mentioned Ethiopia in association with the "Queen of Egypt and Ethiopia…" who came to visit King Solomon, and returned to her own country "having obtained the gifts … and given othersto the king from among her possessions…" Reminiscent of the Ethiopian story of Makeda (the Queen of Sheba) and Solomon, this story is repeatedin the Gi'iz manuscript, the Kibre Negest, said to have been composed later in the tenth century AD. [10]

Of course, the differences in how Ethiopians and non-Ethiopians used the terms Habesha and Ethiopia has persisted to more recent times. Haggai asserts that for medieval Islamic scholars of the Middle East, Habesha is "black natives of the Horn of Africa, who joined Islam and lived under its sway", "not the Ethiopians of the Horn of Africa." In Arabic, Habash means"a mixture" and "in popular usage it connoted a mixed ethnic origin, partlyblack, partly brown." Arabs and Turks used the word Habesha even in the tenth and fourteenth centuries, with reference to Ethiopia. [11] A geography book published in 1846 vaguely refers to Ludolf's claims that "This country [Abyssinia] corresponds to the southern parts of the Aethiopia supra Aegyptum of the ancients; and the Abyssinians still call themselves Ethiopiawans, and their country Ethiopia [strictly pronounced ItÉ™yopÌ£É™ya], scornfully disdaining the names of Abassi and Abyssinians, which have been coined from the Arabic Habesh signifying a mixed people.[2] They prefer, however, the appellation Agazians for themselves, and Agazi, or Ghez, for their country. Sometimes they name themselves according to the provinces to which they belong: as people of Tigre, Amhara, etc." Interestingly, the author's footnote 2 denies the self- reference on the grounds of political correctness, saying: "This [Ethiopiawans or Ethiopia] is not politically correct, for the rulers of Abyssinia have at present no command of the sea coast. The Baharnegashterritory, which forms the N. E. mountain-terrace of Abyssinia, overlooks the flat coast of the Red Sea near Arkeeko. The sea-coast itself is in the hands of the Mohammedans."

Isenberg's Amharic dictionary repeats that Habesha is the "common nameby which the Abyssinians themselves as well as their neighbours call theircountry. The ancient name 'Ethiopia' is occasionally used among the learned…" Likewise Antoine d'Abaddie in his Dictionnaire de la langue Amarinna (1881) says: "Ce mot de l'Ethiopie n'est employe que par un petit nombre d'indigenes qui parla un peu d'Arabe, sans savoir que dans cette langue le terme habax est injurieux'. D'Abaddie also asserts that the Geez name 'Ethiopia' is used by the Amhara and Tigre for the region extending from Sawakin to Sennar, Kaffa and Harar.

Ethiopian scholars who base their work on Geez literature simply say that Habesha is the name of the country otherwise known as Ethiopia. Kidane Weld Kifle derives the etymology of the word from abas, 'a sweet smellingplant', while the rest claim the origin of the word Ethiopia to be the ancient Greek word for all blacks of Noba, Sudan and the south of Egypt, and extending to Madagascar. The 'main meaning indicates the word blackand that of being 'lowlander', says Kidane Weld Kifle. Other traditional scholars who emphasize the Bible derive the etymology from the Biblical name and descent of the Kushites.
In traditional writings, for example in historical works from the nineteenthcentury, in newspapers from the early twentieth and in general from poems and everyday idiomatic expressions, the word is frequently used inthe phrase difin Habesha or 'the whole of the Habesha' to mean all living in Ethiopia, or in the saying ye Habesha ketero, 'a Habesha appointment',to mean unpunctuality. Evoked when contrasting the formal political, military or religious structure of the state itself, the word Habesha locally appears to blot out ethnic differences and to connote the idea that land and people are inseparable.

In English and other European languages, the word Habesha became Abyssinia and gained influences that went beyond mere references, its subsequent uses engraining the reference to a geographical location rather than to people. Indeed, in Europe, the term had very little to do with the identity of the Ethiopians. It firmly referred to the lands that the Portuguese travel literature reported as Christian, and was used in the context of the heated religious debates of the Reformation that used "discoveries", including on Abyssinia and its literature. In those debates, and subsequently in other European discourses, any distinction that couldbe made between fact, legend and the function of words in describing locations, were clouded by the claims and counter-claims of the Reformation; they left copious documentation on the word and the form ittook. Evoking the exotic images and other material the Portuguese brought back from Ethiopia, imaginative elaborations appeared in certain aspects of European art: Verde, for instance, produced Aida, and Mozart, the Magic Flute.

The process of spreading the use of the term was enhanced by the creative works of giants such as Samuel Johnson (1759), the central illustrative material used below. Such references ingrained Abyssinia in European languages as a reference to a block of highlands they "knew" tobe Christian and nothing else. Irrespective of the incomplete geographicaland ethnographic knowledge, they remained in use by diplomats, commercial entrepreneurs and travelers who visited Ethiopia in the heyday of the colonial era. Armed with such "knowledge" from high culture, such visitors eschewed the word “Ethiopia” in preference for Abyssinia and related to the country and people on their own terms.

[12] The writers among them added romance to the image by touting Abyssinia as an inaccessible mountain block and by underlining its long isolation within a region. A Christian kingdom called Abyssinia became a fixture of northern Ethiopia. While some used it interchangeably with Ethiopia, many had Abyssinia (often followed by “other” Ethiopian peoples) in the titles of their works. Over thirty books bearing the name Abyssinia appeared between 1800 and 1896, when an Italian invasion waspartially repulsed from Ethiopian soil. [13]

The borders of the lands that Europeans called Abyssinia fluctuated, depending on the authors’ experiences and, from about the second half of the nineteenth century, colonial writings that generally denied historical relationships between African peoples prior to their arrival. Many wrote that Christian monarchs from the Abyssinian highlands forcefully held together a collection of tribes in North East Africa. True to the colonialist model, ethnographers in the 1880s and 1890s dubbed the monarchs and the rest of the government only as Amhara or Tigre, two ethnic groups they considered to be inhabitants of the “Abyssinian highlands”. [14] Used intensively in all manners, the term generated a seemingly knowledgeablenineteenth century literature that essentially divided Ethiopia into an Abyssinia of those two tribes and “others.” Other than its reference to highlands in northern Ethiopia, this European Abyssinia lacked clarity as towidth and breath, and the maps that emerged implicitly defined the African nation only in terms of tribes such as Tigre and Amhara.

Most scholars who use those sources ignore the influence of “Abyssinia” on colonial thinking. They emphasize Ethiopia’s historical success in sustaining its independence, and attach little significance to how the term*Abyssinia* was used in nineteenth century records, thus inadvertently underscoring the validity of the name Abyssinia for northern Ethiopia.

Only a few point out that Europeans used Abyssinia to impose an identity on Ethiopia. [15] However, since it emerged in the European literary world,an unequal political playing field of the nineteenth century, Abyssinia has to be seen as part of how identities were created to suit colonial ambitionsover Africa in that period. The assertions stereotyped Ethiopia in European thinking, placing the country at a conceptual level that favouredcolonial patronage. Haggai Erlich refers to the slighting ways in which some Turkish governors too considered Ethiopia their colony, even long after they had lost their control of areas along the Red Sea coast.

In that sense, and loaded with ambiguous attributes, Abyssinia was the hidden face of colonialism. Its simple function was the later use in studies that reduced wars and other political relationships among regional leaders variously to the panache of individual leaders, the availability of guns, the "feudal" attraction of the right of access to land, or the military operationsof the "kings of kings". The validity of each of these attributes rested on accepting an Abyssinia that lacked coherent internal dynamics tying together politically the parts of the region. The approach denied any senseof nationhood to Ethiopia, except in the context of its state power, and ultimately its aggression in the North East African region. It seems to havejustified making Abyssinia the starting point for Ethiopian studies at the expense of explorations into local notions about the nature of nationhood. Even in the context of studies on power relations and sovereignty, it precluded explorations into local concepts of borders, senseof national identity and pertinent reasons for defense against colonialist incursions.

Ethiopians, of course, were not concerned about the Arab/Turkish andEuropean usage of the word Habesha. Local rulers who related to the nineteenth century visitors used either Ethiopia or the immediate locality to describe where they were. [16] To a certain extent, of course, Ethiopianhistory itself fed into some of the attributes of the European Abyssinia.
Among aspects of Ethiopian historiography that supported defining Ethiopia as Christian and nothing else, one was the well-known saga of Ethiopia's repeated invitations to Christian Europe in a struggle against Islam in the Red Sea region. In the sixteenth century, as three centuries later when European colonialism surged through Africa, Ethiopia was still searching for Christian alliance against its traditional enemies, such as theArabs and the Turks. In addition, the first travelers, missionaries, merchants and diplomatic and scientific missions that arrived in Ethiopiancourts, saw that most rulers adhered to Christianity and used their personal power to protect the Ethiopian Orthodox Church. Some, like Menelik II, swore in the names of saints of the Christian church even in their edicts. His predecessor, Yohannes IV, ordered provincial governors to construct churches throughout the land and even engaged in religious campaigns to convert Muslims and to persecute foreign missionaries.
Earlier, Tewodros II, who was not very friendly towards the priesthood, tried his hand at reforming the church. They all brought priests with themto battlefields. With these signs of the state's interests in the church, Europeans who reached nineteenth century Ethiopia found a lot that supported their own traditions of Abyssinia being Christian and almost nothing else.

Moreover, with the attempts to keep the Turks, Egyptians, British, French or Italians out of the region, and to develop a stronger state for the purpose, the wars provided the material for an aggressively expanding new empire. In the 1930s some emphasized that Christian Abyssinia was a source of regional barbaric power that needed to be brought under a civilizing colonial yoke. The view that it was at best a reservoir of a pristine form of Christianity, included condescending attributes such as an"isolated" and "stagnant" civilization. It generated the famous statement by the notable historian Edward Gibbons: "Ethiopia slept for a thousand years forgetful of the world by whom it was forgotten." In the early decades of the twentieth century, this contributed to vagueness about Ethiopia and a deconstruction of its realities. Insistence on Abyssinia was filtered through to new generation of Europeans by varied ways, e.g. school atlases, stamp albums and young peoples' encyclopedia. In the Oxford Junior Encyclopaedia, [17] for example, the first entry of Volume I,Mankind, reads: "ABYSSINIANS: The inhabitants of Abyssinia, or Ethiopia as it is now called [emphasis mine], in north east Africa, live in a country which has always been a land of mystery because of its inaccessibility." Added to ill-developed ethnographic analysis and the lack of a serious undertaking to study the Ethiopian sense of nationhood, along with, of course, the Italian invasion of 1935-41, Abyssinia remained a European name for Ethiopia and, since the mid-1970s, the conceptual starting point for any studies on Ethiopia, arising from the use of European literature.
A comparison of the two books discussed below is critical to specify the degree of deliberateness and intent of such European emphasis on the word Abyssinia, especially given its subsequent political influences. (textends)

What's triggering Ethiopia's unrest?

August 15, 2016

Calls for an international investigation in Ethiopia have surfaced after more than 100 people were killed in demonstrations. The violence has ledto 400 deaths since November, 100 of them in the last week alone, according to human rights groups.

The Ethiopian government is accused of using excessive force in the Oromia and Amhara regions, where protesters have been calling for political reforms. Human rights groups have called the response ruthless, while the UN wants to send international observers to investigate.

Ethiopia has denied that request, saying it alone is responsible for thesecurity of its citizens. But what can be done to ensure the Ethiopian government respects human rights?

Ethiopian Food Aid Jammed Up in Djibouti Port

By James Jeffrey, IPS August 16, 2016

DJIBOUTI CITY, August 15 (IPS) - Bags of wheat speed down multiple conveyor belts to be heaved onto trucks lined up during the middle of ablisteringly hot afternoon beside the busy docks of Djibouti Port.

Once loaded, the trucks set off westward toward Ethiopia carrying food aidto help with its worst drought for decades. With crop failures ranging from50 to 90 percent in parts of the country, Ethiopia, sub-Saharan Africa's biggest wheat consumer, was forced to seek international tenders and drastically increase wheat purchases to tackle food shortages effecting at least 10 million people.

This resulted in extra ships coming to the already busy port city of Djibouti, and despite the hive of activity and efforts of multitudes ofworkers, the ships aren't being unloaded fast enough. The result: a bottleneck with ships stuck out in the bay unable to berth to unload.

"We received ships carrying aid cargo and carrying fertilizer at the same time, and deciding which to give priority to was a challenge," says Aboubaker Omar, chairman and CEO of Djibouti Ports and Free Zones Authority (DPFZA). "If you give priority to food aid, which is understandable, then you are going to face a problem with the next crop ifyou don't get fertilizer to farmers on time."

Since mid-June until this month, Ethiopian farmers have been planting crops for the main cropping season that begins in September. At the sametime, the United Nations' Food and Agriculture Organization has been working with the Ethiopian government to help farmers sow their fields and prevent drought-hit areas of the country from falling deeper into hunger and food insecurity.

Spring rains that arrived earlier this year, coupled with ongoing summer rains, should increase the chances of more successful harvests, but that doesn't reduce the need for food aid now—and into the future, at least forthe short term. "The production cycle is long," says FAO's Ethiopia countryrepresentative Amadou Allahoury. "The current seeds planted in June and July will only produce in September and October, so therefore the food shortage remains high despite the rain."

As of the middle of July, 12 ships remained at anchorage outside DjiboutiPort waiting to unload about 476,750 metric tonnes of wheat—down from16 ships similarly loaded at the end of June—according to information on the port's website. At the same time, four ships had managed to dock carrying about 83,000 metric tonnes of wheat, barley and sorghum. "Thebottleneck is not because of the port but the inland transportation—therearen't enough trucks for the aid, the fertilizer and the usual commercial cargo," Aboubaker says.

It's estimated that 1,500 trucks a day leave Djibouti for Ethiopia and thatthere will be 8,000 a day by 2020 as Ethiopia tries to address the shortage. But so many additional trucks—an inefficient and environmentally damaging means of transport—might not be needed, Aboubaker says, if customs procedures could be sped up on the Ethiopianside so it doesn't take current trucks 10 days to complete a 48-hour journey from Djibouti to Addis Ababa to make deliveries.

"There is too much bureaucracy," Aboubaker says. "We are building andmaking efficient roads and railways: we are building bridges but there iswhat you call invisible barriers—this documentation. The Ethiopian government relies too much on customs revenue and so doesn't want torisk interfering with procedures."

Ethiopians are not famed for their alacrity when it comes to paperwork and related bureaucratic processes. Drought relief operations have beendelayed by regular government assessments of who the neediest are, according to some aid agencies working in Ethiopia.

And even once ships have berthed, there still remains the challenge of unloading them, a process that can take up to 40 days, according to aid agencies assisting with Ethiopia's drought. "I honestly don't know how they do it," port official Dawit Gebre-ab says of workers toiling away in temperatures around 38 degrees Celsius that with humidity of 52 percentfeel more like 43 degrees. "But the ports have to continue."

"We feel pain everywhere, for sure," Agaby says during the hottest afternoon shift, a fluorescent vest tied around his forehead as a sweat rag,standing out of the sun between those trucks being filled with bags of wheat from conveyor belts. "It is a struggle."

To help get food aid away to where it is needed and relieve pressure on the port, a new 756 km railway running between Djibouti and Ethiopia was brought into service early in November 2015—it still isn't actually commissioned—with a daily train that can carry about 2,000 tonnes, Aboubaker says. Capacity will increase further once the railway is fully commissioned this September and becomes electrified, allowing five trainsto run carrying about 3,500 tonnes each.

Djibouti also has three new ports scheduled to open in the second half of the year—allowing more ships to dock—while the one at Tadjoura will have another railway line going westward to Bahir Dar in Ethiopia. This, Aboubaker explains, should connect with the railway line currently under construction in Ethiopia running south to north to connect the cities of Awash and Mekele, further improving transport and distribution options inEthiopia. "Once the trains are running in September we hope to clear the backlog of vessels within three months," Aboubaker says.

The jam at the port has highlighted for Ethiopia—not that it needs reminding—its dependency on Djibouti. Already about 90 percent of Ethiopia's trade goes through Djibouti. In 2005 this amounted to two million tonnes and now stands at 11 million tonnes. During the next threeyears it is set to increase to 15 million tonnes.
Hence Ethiopia has long been looking to diversify its options, strengthening bilateral relations with Somaliland through various Memorandum Of Understandings (MOU) during the past couple of years.

The most recent of these stipulated about 30 percent of Ethiopia's importsshifting to Berbera Port, which this May saw Dubai-based DP World awarded the concession to manage and expand the underused and underdeveloped port for 30 years, a project valued at about $442 million and which could transform Berbera into another major Horn of Africa tradehub.

But such is Ethiopia's growth—both in terms of economy and population;its current population of around 100 million is set to reach 130 million by2025, according to the United Nations—that some say it's going to need all the ports it can get. "Ethiopia's rate of development means Djibouti can't satisfy demand, and even if Berbera is used, Ethiopia will also needMogadishu and Kismayo in the long run, and Port Sudan," says Ali Toubeh, a Djiboutian entrepreneur whose container company is based inDjibouti's free trade zone.

Meanwhile as night descends on Djibouti City, arc lights dotted across theport are turned on, continuing to blaze away as offloading continues and throughout the night loaded Ethiopian trucks set out into the hot darkness.
"El Niño will impact families for a long period as a number of them lostproductive assets or jobs," Amadou says. "They will need time and assistance to recover." This story is part of special IPS coverage of World Humanitarian Day on August 19. © Inter Press Service (2016) — All Rights Reserved
Rio Olympic
Ethiopia searching for answers after "dismal" Olympicresults EO August 16, 2016
Ethiopia put in its worst performance at the 2016 Rio games, failing to replicate its past glories in Brazil. The team finished behind neighbouring rival Kenya and SouthAfrica in the medals table, with Team Ethiopia taking 1 gold medals to Kenya's 6.
Four years ago in London Olympics, Ethiopia came second, next to South Africa andsending neighbouring rival Kenya to third.
At this year's Olympic, Almaz Ayana's outstanding performance win the country thewomen's 10000m and bronze in the women's 5 000m. Genzebe Dibaba won silver (women's 1 500m) and Feyisa Lilesa came second in the men's marathon. The rest was five modest bronze medals, lagging much behind the head of the government'scommittee expectations. The country was expected to bring home four gold, four silver and four bronze medals.
Winning four gold medals in Sydney, two in Athens and four in Beijing, Ethiopianathletes have delivered between 50 per cent of the country's total medal tally inrecent Olympics. Rio has proved inglorious in the Ethiopia's Olympic history, thecountry standing at position 44th globally, to Kenya's 15th.
The multitude of sports bureaucrats and federations are widely accused for putting their own interests ahead of the athletes. Triple Olympic gold medal winner KenenisaBekele said he was deeply saddened by the result and feels the country is losing thedominance of the long distance tradition. Kenenisa blamed lack of competent coaches and problems in selection process of athletes for the demise. He said members of the country's athletics federation knew nothing of the sport.

For the Ethiopian minister for Youth and Sports, the poor Olympic record would be anoccasion to probe into the organisation and practice of the sports sector. "A total andcomprehensive overhaul of the country's sports system is needed. Our priority now isto work with different stakeholders to find out the root causes of the problem. We intend to embark on massive reforms," says the minister.

A certain Shifta commented it is all about corruption. "The system is corrupt. People in charge don't care about the damage this is causing, nor how it's affecting the national pride. Sad times. By 2020, I reckon talented Ethiopian athletes will run for other nations, while the Robel and alike will be promoted. Robel the Whale is the epitome of how corrupt the system is: nepotism, arrogance, cluelessness. He thoughtthis would be a walk in the park. Pathetic," he commented on Facebook.

By "Robel the Whale", the critic was referring to an Ethiopian swimmer Robel Habte,who found notoriety because of his paunch and ill-performance. The son of the Ethiopian Swimming Federation president, Roble finished half a lap behind anyone else in his heat - drawing inevitable comparisons with Equatorial Guinea's Eric the Eel, provoking anger and criticism in the home front and beyond.

Other commentators suggest for more structural and long-term reform. For Elshadai Negash, a sports journalist specializing in athletics, the country has now come to a point where Ethiopian athletics does not just need a purge of coaches, administrators, and officials to satisfy a narrow-focused public outcry and hunt for a scapegoat to silence the disappointment of missing a few gold medals. "There is no escape this time by attributing the atrocious results in Rio to a handful of individuals and getting away with it. What are needed are painful, often-unpopular, and longer- term reforms to drastically change the administration, coaching, talent sport, marketing, and reputation of the sport in Ethiopia similar to the kind of reforms that have been kickstarted by the IAAF globally," he wrote on his Facebook page. "Stakeholders at all levels need to be consulted in this process and fresh approachesthat have worked in other contexts must be brought into a drastically-overhauled system. Deep-rooted reforms and culture changes will take time and might mean thatEthiopia's medal hopes for London 2017 and Doha 2019 might suffer," Elshadai argued.

Addis Ababa (AFP) August 17, 2016

A massive deployment of police in Ethiopia's restive Oromo and Amhararegions prevented fresh anti-government protests over the weekend, anopposition leader said Monday.

"The situation is very tense," said Beyene Petros, chairperson of MEDREK,an opposition coalition. "The army, the federal police and plain clothes policemen are heavily deployed. They beat (the protesters). They chasethem. They even go house to house threatening the parents."

Small-scale protests were however reported over the weekend in at least three locations in Amhara region in the north and one in the central Oromo region. Last week, simultaneous protests were held for the first time in Oromo and Amhara regions, home to Ethiopia's two biggest ethnicgroups.

They were violently suppressed by security forces who opened fire on crowds in several places leaving at least a hundred dead, according to rights group Amnesty International. Further rallies are expected in the coming days but the traditional, weak opposition parties claim to have little control over a protest movement they say is coordinated by youthactivists using social media. "People are coming out spontaneously.
Political parties are bypassed," said Petros. "We're just watching and try toadvise both sides so the damage will be minimised."

Ethiopian opposition parties have been decimated by the arrests of leaders and members in recent years, often under a broadly-applied anti-terrorism law. The ruling EPRDF coalition --in power for a quarter of a century -- won every parliamentary seat in last year's elections, triggering a wave of angry protests, according to Petros. "This has enraged the population who has given up on EPRDF when it comes to bringing about a democratic system in this country," he said. "We are challenging the ruling party to open the political space."

Key Western Ally Ethiopia Descends into Violence

By Malik Ibrahim August 18, 2016

It has now been just over three months since Abdirahman Mahdi warned al-Jazeera that “Ethiopia is now boiling.” A founding member of the Ethiopian Somali rebel group known as the Ogaden National Liberation Front, Mahdi described an Ethiopian government in disarray as its citizens − divided among 80 different ethnic groups – rose up against the country’s Tigrayan minority rulers in what he saw as a new Arab Spring.

Ethiopia’s longstanding political tensions have been boiling over since latelast year, as escalating violence has claimed nearly 100 lives in the latest round of protests. Even so, it’s been difficult for Western observers and Ethiopians alike to understand the extent of the upheaval. Despite the frequent portrayal of Ethiopia as a reliable (and critically, stable) partner in one of the most turbulent regions in Africa, Ethiopians live in one of thecontinent’s most repressive states and contend with draconian laws that curtail a free press and limit digital access. Now, United Nations officials are demanding entry for international observers to assess the mounting evidence of human rights violations, including the government’s use of lethal force against its citizens. According to Amnesty International, hundreds of protesters have been detained.

Separate protests in Ethiopia’s Oromia and Amhara regions come after months of simmering frustrations among the two ethnic groups, who together account for more than 60 percent of a population of 100 million.The proximal causes of their grievances – including a failed attempt to annex land the Oromo claim as their own to the Addis Ababa capital region – have triggered an outpouring of anger which had been pent up since 1991, when the current regime came to power. Fueling that anger are underlying ethnic tensions and the dominant power of the Tigrayan People's Liberation Front (TPLF) at the heart of the regime.

Ethnic divisions at the root of the crisis

The Tigray elites, representing just six percent of the population, hail froma small northern territory that shares its border with Eritrea. Their role in the overthrow of Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam, the former ethnic Amhara dictator whose political career spanned decades of internal violence, positioned them atop Ethiopia's ruling class. That has left the Oromo, the largest ethnic group, oppressed and discriminated against for decades by successive governments. Their longstanding lack of civic and economic opportunity has fueled the current upheaval, an unprecedented challenge to TPLF leadership.

The spark came in April 2014, when the Ethiopian government announcedits Addis Ababa Integrated Master Plan. The urban plan required the annexation of Oromo territory and the forced removal of Oromo farmers from precious arable land. The first protests came soon afterward, as did the first reported deaths at the hands of the Ethiopian military. Because the Ethiopian government tends to punish dissent under laws that interpret activism as a threat to peace and even as terrorism, officials blamed the bloodshed on protesting students and citizens.

The current anti-government protests have spread across the Oromia region since November 2015, stoked by outrage over the previous killings and detained protesters who are still missing. Even though the plans for Addis Ababa's expansion were shelved in January, the crackdown on the Oromo continued. As their protests persisted, the show of defiance motivated the Amhara (who have their own longstanding disputes with theTigray) as well as ethnic Somalis in their own long and bloody civil conflicts.

Implications for the U.S. and the Horn of Africa

Despite a track record of human rights abuses that include lengthy sentences for journalists, police-state surveillance strategies, torture, andextrajudicial killings, the United States and other Western partners consider Ethiopia a valuable partner in the war on terror. Geopolitical realities, and the strategic interests of the U.S. in particular, make financial and diplomatic investment in Ethiopia an ugly expedient. For its part, Ethiopia's merciless repression – even if partially masked by intense censorship – fits neatly into the counterterrorism narrative it presents to the global community. The security rationale serves as an excuse for the repression of ethnic minorities like the Somalis, while the United States continues to provide material support to a regime that violates democraticprinciples on nearly every measure. In the midst of the current upheaval, this has gone so far as shutting off state-controlled Internet access to those few citizens who have it.

The U.S. has been circumspect in its concern over the escalating violence in Ethiopia, a cautious approach informed by the breakdown of state structures in neighboring South Sudan and Somalia. American officials have taken a similar approach in dealing with neighboring Djibouti, where strongman Ismail Omar Guelleh's controversial re-election to a fourth term this year followed a violent crackdown on opposition groups. Securityforces loyal to Guelleh killed 19 people in an attack on a religious gathering and a meeting of political opponents last December, and opposition parties boycotted the presidential contest after the Djiboutian leader broke the terms of a previous settlement. The American response to the tainted elections reflected the security relationship between the twocountries, including the American lease on Camp Lemonnier and Djibouti'srole as a staging ground in the regional war on terrorism.

That political developments in Ethiopia and Djibouti so closely align shouldcome as little surprise, given their close relationship; Guelleh has even floated the idea of a political union in the past. In addition to the United States, China also has a vested interest in the maintenance of the status quo in both countries. Beijing recently began building its first overseas base in Djibouti, and a spate of Chinese infrastructure investments in bothEthiopia and Djibouti are aimed at integrating the two and facilitating Chinese access to the landlocked Ethiopian market. Unfortunately for dissidents and rights activists on the ground, the world's two most powerful states have little incentive to upset a fragile applecart in either ofthese repressive states. ETHIOPIA: POSSIBLE SEQUENCE OF EVENTS

The Horn: Another Civil War Looming

By Dawit Giorgis August 18, 2016

A civil war, and possibly genocide, is in the making in the Horn of Africa, in Ethiopia. The most recent events characterized by regular countrywide demonstrations in defiance of a government ban, by the two largest ethnicgroups, the Oromos and the Amharas, have demonstrated once again the power of a marginalized majority to wreak havoc and paralyze the countrydespite the state's brutal response. Ethiopia's minority ethnic group, the Tigrai, which comprises less than sixpercent of the population of ninety million, has ruled the country with an iron-fist for 25 years. As was the case in Rwanda decades ago, the accumulated anger directed at this minority group is likely to explode andresult in a human catastrophe with serious implications on regional stability.

The 2015 US Country Human Rights Report on Ethiopia states: “The most significant human rights problems included harassment and intimidation ofopposition members and supporters and journalists; alleged torture, beating, abuse, and mistreatment of detainees by security forces; and politically motivated trials and arbitrary killings.”

The 2016 Human Rights Watch on the Oromo protests depicts a disturbingpicture of a government that thrives on systematic repression and official violence. The report, which puts the death toll from the seven-month-longprotest at more than 400, rightly exposes the myth of "Ethiopia rising" as a political "Ponzi scheme.” This figure does not include the100 killed during the first weeks of August.

To camouflage the repressive nature of the regime, the government and its international supporters have been blatantly asserting that Ethiopia hasthe fastest growing economy in Africa, while in actual fact it is one of the ten poorest countries in the world currently with over 10,000,000 facing famine.

Now, after 25 years of absolute control over the people, the regime is facing a deadly resistance to its iron-fisted rule and people are anxiouslywaiting for its staunchest ally, the US, to intervene.

“Washington must be prepared to press its partner to alter its strong-handed approach to political dissent and counterterrorism or considerending the relationship”

In 2012 Genocide Watch reported “Genocide Watch is deeply concerned with the rising number of human rights violations in Ethiopia; as a resultGenocide Watch is classifying the situation as a genocide alert. The warning signs have been there for sometime.

In the case of the Rwandan genocide administration officials admit that the US lost “opportunities to reverse the tide of killings at the earliest stages.” Information obtained through the US Freedom of Information Actshows that President Clinton knew about the planned "final solution to eliminate all Tutsis." Over 800, 000 Tutsis and moderate Hutus were killedin this genocide. In 1998 Mr. Clinton apologized “for not acting quickly enough or immediately calling the crimes genocide.”
If civil war begins in Ethiopia it will be unprecedented catastrophe the likes of which has not been seen in Africa. It will also create an opportunity for extremist like al Shabab to flourish in next-door Ethiopia, which has a 40% Muslim population. Because of the Nile River, the lifelineof both Sudan and Egypt, instability in Ethiopia will be a major concern and it is likely that these countries will intervene either directly or indirectly. Together with the failed states of South Sudan, Somalia, Central Africa Republic, Yemen across the Red Sea, and with Sudan and Eritrea tittering as a result of US sanction, the Horn can turn out to be themost complicated security zone the world has yet to see with severe implications for maritime activities in the Indian Ocean and the Red Sea.

Because of the protracted war in the Horn of Africa over the last three decades, including some of the world's longest war, the Horn has becomethe source of a huge percentage of the world's refugee and migrant population. With civil war in Ethiopia this percentage can quadruple.

The US cannot afford to miscalculate the possible consequences of the gross abuses of power for 25 years. Its strategic interest, including the partnership on counter terrorism in the region, can be taken care better by a stable democratic government rather than a fragile autocratic regime, which is most likely to fall soon under the weight of people's insurrection. Therefore, the United States should see beyond its short- term interest and support the establishment of an inclusive democratic government.

EO August 19, 2017

The Ethiopian Orthodox Christians fasting season is coming to an end on Monday. The frenzy to eat raw meat would also start with it. The Addis Ababa city health bureau expressed its concern about it because of alarm over the spread of outbreak of AWD and cholera that already broke out onJuly 2, 2016. "There has been signs that the outbreak and the impact wason decline, in part because of the fasting season and people stopping eating raw meat. However, if people start eating raw meat, I think there isa risk of the cholera resurfacing," communication head for city's health Bureau, Mulugeta Admassu said at a press conference, in Addis Ababa's Golden Tulip Hotel yesterday. The city health bureau once more warned people to be on guard against contaminated water, unwashed fruits, uncooked vegetables, and raw meat. Officials are scrambling to measure the severity of an outbreak that beganin Addis Ababa on July, before spreading to the Amhara and Tigay regions, but they have refused to tell the number of deaths so far. In an effort to contain the epidemic, the city announced the establishment of a command post, comprising of the Addis Abba city mayor, the Addis Abebawater & sewerage authority, the city administration's food, drugs & healthbureau, code enforcement officers and the police. The post so far has shutdown more than hundred business establishments, in addition to several butcheries.

In a related news, a local firm Citrus International Trading Company revealed its efforts to make a water purifier tablets, Aquatabs widely available in the market and affordable to low income groups. Aquatabs, created by a research and development team based in Ireland, has beenintroduced into Ethiopia ten years ago with the potential of making unclean water safe for consumption.

The product however has not been as availabe as it should have been forvarious reasons, the managing director of the firm, Ato Minase Kifle, saidat the press conference in Golden Tulip Hotel.

The product, which has been used several years by the World Health Organisation (WHO) and the Red Cross Society during cholera outbreak invarious parts of the world, is presently being commercially distributed in Addis Ababa, and in all regions of Ethiopia, Minase told journalists.

Ato Minase said Aquatab had been produced to meet pharmaceutical standards and had been approved by the WHO. He said the product was very effective in preventing diarrhoea and waterne borne diseases, addingthat there were no side effects associated with its usage, stressing that allthe ingredients used in its preparation had been approved by the WHO.

To encourage lower income people to buy the product, Aquatabs are soldat a low price – a strip containing ten tablets (one tablet is used to treat 20 litres of water) costs only 6 birr and 25 centimes.
Ato Minase said Aquatab had also been introduced in seven other Africancountries and had contributed towards improving the lives of the people.Citrus PLC plans to expand its water treatment offerings by innovating household water treatment accessories such as water filtration systems, measuring & storage units for each household dosage and water tanker testing kits, according to the managing director.

A Muffled Insurrection in Ethiopia

By Stratfor August 19, 2016

Ethiopia's government, led by Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn, hascontended with protests for nearly a year. The government's efforts to quell the unrest have mad headlines and drawn international criticism of late, but its problems go well beyond humanitarian concerns. Since the mid-1970s, Ethiopia underwent several periods of upheaval that changednot just the leaders of the country but also the political system and institutions that govern it. Now, with ethnic discontent reaching a new high and the tendrils of insurgency starting to re-emerge, Desalegn's administration faces the greatest challenge to its rule yet.

Analysis

The protests erupted over a land reform measure, but the roots of discontent go much deeper. Ethiopia's Tigray ethnic population makes up just 6 percent of the country's population, yet it enjoys disproportionate influence and representation in government institutions. When the Tigray-dominated government proposed to develop farmland predominantly usedby the Oromo people, who make up 34 percent of the population, protestsbroke out across Oromo regions from November 2015 onward. Eventually, the government decided against the planned reform, hoping that the protests would dissipate. Instead, protesters continued to turn out, driven by the imprisonment of demonstrators. Then, in recent weeks,the Amhara people — another large ethnic group, accounting for 29 percent of the population — joined in, and the focus of the protests shiftedto demands for political equality and an end to the Tigray-dominated ruling coalition's reign. The protests have now surpassed any grievances about specific legislation, or any specific law enforcement action. Instead, there is a rising resistance to the Tigray's outsize power and enough pent-up discontent to challenge Ethiopia's current government.

Together, the Oromo and Amhara are a more serious threat to Ethiopia's leadership than the Oromo on their own. Furthermore, the Amhara peopleare more concentrated in urban areas than the Oromo, which has led to protests in population centers. Facing mounting dissent from two of the country's largest ethnic groups, the government has attempted to suppress the unrest through force. During the weekend of Aug. 7, reports emerged that over 100 civilians had been killed in protests, which led to outcry over the Ethiopian security services' brutal methods to control the demonstrations. Because the Ethiopian government exercises strict controlover media activity in the country and restricts internet access, reports of what exactly happened are slow to emerge. But information from local hospitals suggests that another 100 civilians have been killed since that weekend; at least 55 of these deaths have been confirmed. The rise of urban protests has also led to greater media coverage of the turmoil, despite the government's attempts to control information.

A History of Upheaval

Ethiopia is no stranger to political unrest. For many centuries the country was run by a monarchy, the Solomonic dynasty, whose rule ended with emperor Haile Selassie. In 1974, a military council brought the first regime change, installing a communist-inspired military council, the Dergue, to lead the country. Eventually, popular support for the new administration began to erode, leading to civil war. The Dergue's most prominent officer, Mengistu Haile Mariam, tried to reform the Dergue into the People's Democratic Republic of Ethiopia in 1987, but just four years later, several ethnic rebel groups overthrew the government. The TigrayanPeople's Liberation Front, led by Meles Zenawi, eventually gained control of Ethiopia and installed the element that rules to this day.

The government in Addis Ababa has been challenged before. Unlike the ongoing protests, however, previous uprisings such as the Ogaden rebellion were isolated to smaller ethnic groups acting alone, and the government dealt with them decisively and successfully. By joining forcesacross ethnic lines to oppose the ruling powers, the Oromo and Amhara present a more formidable problem for Ethiopia's leadership. Additionally,under Desalegn's rule, the government has faced internal unrest and maynot be as strong as it was during Zenawi's rule, which lasted until 2012.

As the chairman of the Tigrayan People's Liberation Front — the dominantparty in the ruling Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front coalition — Zenawi led the fight against the communist government that preceded it and installed the Tigray-dominated government in Addis Ababa. His parliament consisted of fellow rebel veterans who had all fought and won together in the war against the Dergue, while Desalegn's administration lacks the same unity and solidarity. The Oromo and Amhara protests will test whether the Tigrayan administration can endurewithout Zenawi.

A Budding Insurrection

At this point, the protests and limited rebel activity do not even approach the situation Ethiopia faced in the 1970s and 1980s, when the Dergue countered multiple severe rebellions. Nonetheless, given the size of the Amhara and Oromo populations in Ethiopia, the threat they present shouldnot be taken lightly. As strong as they appear, the Tigray-dominated institutions in Ethiopia are not monolithic. And, because of their small number, the Tigray have had to co-opt members of smaller ethnicities (such as the Wolayta, from which Desalegn hails), and even the Amhara and Oromo, to serve in government and man the security forces. If opposition to the government increases along ethnic lines, the ruling elite or even Ethiopia's security forces could fracture.

Since the bloody Aug. 7 weekend, protesters in some areas have turned to less violent forms of civil disobedience. For instance, in the Amhara cityof Gondar — once the capital of an ancient Ethiopian empire — civilians have gone on a general strike, turning the city into a ghost town despite calls from the government to resume business as usual. Some reports even claim that local militia or rebel groups near Gondar have attacked convoys and bases belonging to the security forces. Though these incidents seem to be few and far between at this point, several latent insurgencies linger in Ethiopia, and growing ethnic dissent could rejuvenate and galvanize support for these simmering rebellions. In the past week, two rebel groups announced their alliance. If these groups increase their attacks, or if other groups join the movement opposing thegovernment, the current administration could face a similar fate to the one it brought upon its predecessors.

The Oromo and Amhara protest movements could change the course of Ethiopia's future, but it is not yet clear what the result of their uprising willbe. A change of leadership could bring greater political freedoms, such as allowing outlawed opposition groups to take part in free and fair elections.On the other hand, it could also lead to prolonged conflict and instability.

If the resistance against the government reaches critical levels, Desalegn could decide against an armed struggle and instead take political measures to liberalize or transfer power. Regardless of how this situation develops, Ethiopia's Tigray-dominated government may not be able to sustainits hold on power for much longer. And though the current protestsmay be Desalegn's first major challenge, they will likely not be his last. (text ends)

Ethiopia tells UN it will launch independent investigation into killings

UN welcomes report but reiterates request for access

By Ravina ShamdasaniAugust 20, 2016

Given the extremely alarming reports that emerged earlier this month about serioushuman rights violations in the Oromia and Amhara regions of Ethiopia, the High Commissioner reached out to the Ethiopian Government, seeking access for independent observers to the country to assess the human rights situation. We havenow received a reply from the Government, indicating that they will launch an independent investigation into the events.

We welcome the decision to launch an independent investigation, and we urge the Government to ensure that the investigation has a mandate to cover allegations of human rights violations since the unrest in Oromia began in November 2015, that it isindeed independent, transparent, thorough and effective, with a view to establishing whether the use of excessive force occurred and with a view to bringing to justice the perpetrators of any human rights violations.

We stand ready to assist in ensuring that the investigation is undertaken in line withinternational human rights standards. We also reiterate our request for access to theaffected areas, as the situation on the ground makes it very challenging for independent civil society actors to operate, particularly given the tense situation in parts of the Oromia and Amhara regions, where a large security presence has reportedly been deployed, and there are reports of ongoing arbitrary arrests, intimidation and harassment of people in the regions.

We call on the Government to ensure that the rights to freedom of peaceful assemblyand expression are protected and that those detained for exercising these rights are promptly released. Protests must be handled by security forces with full respect for international human rights laws and standards on the use of force.

We also call on the Government to work towards opening up the political and democratic space. This should include a comprehensive reform of the security sector,as well as legislative and institutional reforms. Ravina Shamdasani is the spokesperson for the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights in Geneva.

US issues travel warning to Ethiopia

By State Department August 20, 2016

The State Department alerts U.S. citizens of the risks of traveling in certain regions of Ethiopia due to anti-government protests, some of which have involved violence. Associated disruptions in telephone and internet services have hampered the U.S. Embassy’s ability to communicate with U.S. citizens in Ethiopia. This Travel Alert expires onFebruary 18, 2017.

Since November 2015, anti-government protests, mainly in the regional states of Amhara and Oromia, have resulted in violent clashes between demonstrators and government security forces. Internet, cellular data, and phone service have been sporadically restricted or completely cut offprior to and during some of the protests, impeding the U.S. Embassy's ability to communicate with U.S. citizens.

Protests are likely to continue, and could spread to other parts of the country, including the capital, Addis Ababa. U.S. citizens in Ethiopia shouldincrease their level of situational awareness, continuously assess their surroundings, evaluate their personal level of safety, and avoid dem

Ethiopian leader at UN Assembly decries use of social media tospread messages of hate and bigotry

August 21, 2016

As much as social media offers a digital platform to improve exchange ofinformation and enhance popular participation, its attendant negative impacts simply cannot be ignored, Hailemariam Dessalegn, the Prime Minister of Ethiopia, told the United Nations General Assembly today.

“In fact, we are seeing how misinformation could easily go viral via socialmedia and mislead many people, especially the youth,” he said in his address to the annual general debate, adding: “Social media has certainlyempowered populists and other extremists to exploit people's genuine concerns and spread their message of hate and bigotry without anyinhibition."

On other global challenges, he said international peace and stability is facing greater risks with the rise of geo-political tensions and the growingthreats posed by “all shades” of terrorist groups. Moreover, the global economy has not yet rebounded from the financial crisis.

Further, “it is critical to underline one critical matter which is usually givenshort shrift, both by the media and others. It is simply hypocritical to denythat some of our countries have been targets for destabilization activities carried out with no accountability by people and groups who have been given shelters by states with whom we have absolutely no problems,” he stressed.

It is under these challenging circumstances that countries are striving to implement the new UN transformational agenda, including the SustainableDevelopment Goals, and, obviously, he said, there are no easy solutions to these complex issues. “The situation is much more pronounced specially for least developed countries like us which are making every possible effort to […] escape from the poverty trap.”

“We believe our vision is right and we are determined to get there. Whatever challenges and shortcomings we may have, we don't have difficulty owning up to them and we will make every- possible effort to deal with them in close consultation, cooperation and participation of ourpeople,” Prime Minister Dessalegn said, noting that there is no better testimony for the resolve Ethiopia had shown in this regard than the way it had handled this past year’s devastating El-Nino.

At the same time, he said Ethiopia could not simply “wish away” the challenges it is facing. Indeed, they need collective and coordinated responses “and we are always ready willing to continue to contribute positively in close partnership with others in our region and beyond intackling these challenges.” (text ends)

ETHIOPIA PROTESTS:

Protests in Oromia, Amhara Regions Present 'Critical Challenge' -

U.S.

Daily New Share: August 21, 2016

The Obama administration's top official promoting democracy and human rights,Tom Malinowski, says the Ethiopian government's tactics in response to protests in the Oromia and Amhara regions of the country are"self-defeating". Writing ahead of the arrival of U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry in Nairobi for talks on East African issues, including security, Malinowski says Addis Ababa's "next great national task is to master the challenge of political openness." The United States and Ethiopia have years of strong partnership, based on a recognition that we need each other. Ethiopia is a major contributor to peace and security in Africa, the U.S.'s ally in the fight against violent extremists, and has shown incredible generosity to those escaping violence and repression, admitting more refugees than any country in the world.

The United States has meanwhile been the main contributor to Ethiopia's impressive fight to end poverty, to protect its environment and to developits economy. Because of the friendship and common interests our two nations share, the U.S. has a stake in Ethiopia's prosperity, stability and success. When Ethiopia does well, it is able to inspire and help others. On the other hand, a protracted crisis in Ethiopia would undermine the goals that both nations are trying to achieve together. The recent protests in theOromia and Amhara regions present a critical challenge. They appear to be a manifestation of Ethiopian citizens' expectation of more responsive governance and political pluralism, as laid out in their constitution. Almostevery Ethiopian I have met during my three recent trips to the country, including government officials, has told me that as Ethiopians become more prosperous and educated, they demand a greater political voice, andthat such demands must be met. While a few of the protests may have been used as a vehicle for violence, we are convinced that the vast majority of participants were exercising their right under Ethiopia's constitution to express their views. Any counsel that the United States might offer is intended to help find solutions, and is given with humility.

As President Barack Obama said during his July, 2015 visit to Addis Ababa, the U.S. is not perfect, and we have learned hard lessons from ourown experiences in addressing popular grievances. We also know Ethiopiafaces real external threats. Ethiopia has bravely confronted Al-Shabaab, aruthless terrorist group based on its border. Individuals and groups outside Ethiopia, often backed by countries that have no respect for human rights themselves, sometimes recklessly call for violent change.

Ethiopia rightly condemns such rhetoric, and the United States joins that condemnation. But Ethiopia has made far too much progress to be undoneby the jabs of scattered antagonists who have little support among the Ethiopian people. And it is from within that Ethiopia faces the greatest challenges to its stability and unity. When thousands of people, in dozens of locations, in multiple regions come out on the streets to ask for a bigger say in the decisions that affect their lives, this cannot be dismissedas the handiwork of external enemies.

Ethiopian officials have acknowledged that protestors have genuine grievances that deserve sincere answers. They are working to address issues such as corruption and a lack of job opportunities. Yet security forces have continued to use excessive force to prevent Ethiopians fromcongregating peacefully, killing and injuring many people and arresting thousands. We believe thousands of Ethiopians remain in detention for alleged involvement in the protests - in most cases without having been brought before a court, provided access to legal counsel, or formally charged with a crime. These are self-defeating tactics. Arresting opposition leaders and restricting civil society will not stop people from protesting, but it can create leaderless movements that leave no one with whom the government can mediate a peaceful way forward. Shutting down the Internet will not silence opposition, but it will scare away foreigninvestors and tourists. Using force may temporarily deter some protesters,but it will exacerbate their anger and make them more uncompromising when they inevitably return to the streets. Every government has a duty to protect its citizens; but every legitimate and successful government also listens to its citizens, admits mistakes, and offers redress to those it has unjustly harmed. Responding openly and peacefully to criticism showsconfidence and wisdom, not weakness.

Ethiopia would also be stronger if it had more independent voices in government, parliament and society, and if civil society organizations could legally channel popular grievances and propose policy solutions. Those who are critical of the government would then have to share responsibility, and accountability, for finding those solutions. Progress inreforming the system would moderate demands to reject it altogether. Ethiopia's next great national task is to master the challenge of political openness, just as it has been mastering the challenge of economic development. Given how far Ethiopia has traveled since the days of terrorand famine, the United States is confident that its people can meet this challenge - not to satisfy any foreign country, but to fulfill their own aspirations. The U.S. and all of Ethiopia's friends are ready to help. Tom Malinowski is the U.S. Assistant Secretary of State for Democracy, HumanRights, and Labor.

An Ethiopian medalist just led a protest that could land him in jail

He Speaks Out About Killings of Oromo Protesters in Ethiopia.

By Kevin Sieff, Washington Post August 22, 2016

NAIROBI — When he crossed the Olympics marathon finish line, Feyisa Lilesa put his hands above his head in an "X." Most of those who watched Lilesa's spectacular silver medal performance didn't know what that meant — or just how dangerous a protest they were watching.

Lilesa was protesting the Ethiopian government's killing of hundreds of thecountry's Oromo people — the country's largest ethnic group — that has long complained about being marginalized by the country's government.
The group has held protests this year over plans to reallocate Oromo land.Many of those protests ended in bloodshed.

According to Human Rights Watch, more than 400 people have been killedsince November. For months, the Oromo have been using the same "X" gesture that Lilesa, 26, used at the finish line. At a news conference following the race, he reiterated his defiant message. "The Ethiopian government is killing my people, so I stand with all protests anywhere, asOromo is my tribe," Lilesa said. "My relatives are in prison and if they talkabout democratic rights they are killed."

It was a remarkable turn of events — within seconds, Lilesa had gonefrom a national hero to a man who might not be able to return to his home country. In addition to those killed, many Oromo protesters are currently languishing in prison.

In Ethiopia, the state broadcaster did not air a replay of the finish. Lilesawas conscious of the danger. He immediately suggested that he might have to move somewhere else. "If I go back to Ethiopia maybe they will kill me. If not kill me, they will put me in prison. I have not decided yet,but maybe I will move to another country," he said.

It wasn’t the first time an Ethiopian athlete had considered defecting aftercompetition. In 2014, four of the country’s runners applied for asylum in the United States after disappearing from the international junior track championships in Eugene, Oregon.

The plight of the Oromo and the Ethiopian government's use of force against civilians have received some attention recently, but nothing as prominent as Lilesa's defiance. Earlier this month, the U.S. Embassy in Addis Ababa said that it was “deeply concerned” about the most recent killing of protesters. But likely because Ethiopia remains a U.S. ally in thefight against Somali Islamist group Al-Shabab, American officials have been reluctant to offer any further condemnation.

Oromo dissidents, particularly those outside Ethiopia, have been active onsocial media about their cause. As soon as Lilesa crossed the finish line, tweets and Facebook posts went up with pictures of their new folk hero.
Ethiopia is one of Africa's fastest growing nations, and it seen by many asa model of economic potential. The government has played down the protests, saying earlier this month that “the attempted demonstrations were orchestrated by foreign enemies from near and far in partnership with local forces.”

Lilesa has been racing internationally for Ethiopia for more than eight years, and holds one of the world's fastest ever marathon times: 2:04:52.

The UN High Commissioner's recommendation for a specialinvestigation August 23, 2016

The UN High Commissioner's recommendation for a special investigationby international observers reflects the magnitude of the problem. This recommendation should be enforced by the UN Security Council. A

While quantitate data and global attention have been drawn with regard tokillings in Gambella, the Ogaden and Oromia, massive ethnic cleansing of the Amhara has not received such attention until recently. This unprecedented ethnic cleansing of the Amhara population before and afterthe TPLF took power has now been well-documented and deserves global attention. (See a recent documentary on Ethnic Cleansing of the Amhara https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=1K--5J6tmdg)

Annex II. Killings continue

On August 20, the TPLF killed at least 3 people in Gondar. Their crime is to protest peacefully in defense of freedom, justice and equality. It is clearthat these atrocities won't stop until the global community, especially the U.S. sees dangers ahead and unless the system changes.

In brief, in all cases there is still lack of engagement with the population by donors, NGOS and the Diplomatic community in Addis Ababa. Daily killings continue with the world community dead silent as if nothing happened. Only Ethiopians who care must stand with the people and provide sustained support. There is also a dearth of commitment by thesegroups to people's empowerment and capacity building, including participation in policy and decision making. If the donor, NGO and diplomatic community conducted a survey in Ethiopia they will be shockedthat the flash points mentioned above are taking place under their noses while the TPLF wines and dines them. It is tragic to note that donors, diplomats and NGOs are detached and thus appear irrelevant in the lives of the vast majority of Ethiopians. We are not helpless at all. I am convinced that we can change this situation through collective action and voice.

It is therefore time for the Obama administration to side with the Ethiopian people, especially young Amhara and Oromo who are sacrificingtheir lives for a just, equitable, rule of law based and democratic system of government for all Ethiopians.

Siliver Medallist Feyisa Lilesa fails to return to Ethiopia afterOlympic protest

EO August 24, 2016 The Olympic marathon silver medallist Feyisa Lilesa has failed to return to Ethiopia despite assurances he would not be punished for his Rio protestover political repression in his country.

An AFP journalist at the airport in Addis Ababa said Lilesa was not on board theplane that landed on Monday night carrying Ethiopia's Olympics team.

Ethiopian sports officials congratulated team members but made no mention of Lilesa's silver medal achievement – one of only eight medals won by Ethiopia – andrefused to answer any questions about the athlete.

On Sunday, Lilesa, who came second to Kenyan favourite Eliud Kipchoge in Rio,crossed his arms as he finished the marathon in a symbolic protest against the repressive Ethiopian regime.

August 26, 2016

ኢትዮጵያችን ያለችበት ሁኔታ ለብዙዎች የጭንቀት ምክንያት ሆኗል። ማለቂያችን ምን ይሆን በሚል። ለእኔ ዛሬ ካለኝ የተጨባጭ ሁኔታ ግንዛቤ በመነሳት ስድስት የተለያዩ ውጤቶች ሊያጋጥሙ ይችሉ ይሆናል ብዬ አስባለሁ።

1) ሥርአቱ ቀውሱን አሸንፎ ይደላደላል።

2) ቀውሱ አሸናፊም ተሸናፊም ሳይኖረው ለረጅም ጊዜ በመቀጠል፣ ሃገሪቱ ረጅም ውጥረት ውስጥ ልትገባ ትችላለች።

3) የህዝባዊ እምቢተኝነቱ አሸንፎ ከሁሉም የተውጣጣ ብሄራዊ የሽግግርና እርቅ መንግስት ይመሰረታል።

4) ኢህአዴግ ውስጥ ያሉት ሃይሎች በህዝባዊ ድጋፋቸው እየተማመኑ ሄደው፣ የወያኔን የበላይነት እምቢተኛ በመሆን ኢህአዴግ ራሱን አርሞና፣ ነፃ የምርጫቦርድና ፍትሃዊና ርቱአዊ ምርጫየሚቀበል ፓርቲ እንዲሆን በማስገደድ፣ ወደ ዴሞክራሲያዊ ተስፋ የምንሸጋገርበት እድል ሊፈጠር ይችላል።

5) ህወሐት ኢህአዴግ ላይ ያለውን የበላይነት ማስጠበቅ ሲያቅተው፣ የመከላከያ ጄኔራሎችን ከፊት አስቀምጦየ መንግስት ግልበጣ ሊያካሂድ ይችላል።

የዘረኛው ወያኔ ውድቀት፤ የመጨረሻው መጀመሪያ እየታየ ነው!

ጎንደር ሕብረት August 27, 2016

በዓለምዙሪያ የተከሰቱ አምባገነኖች የሕዝብን መብት በመሳሪያ ኃይል አፍኖ እና እረግጦ እስከ ዘለዓለም የስልጣን እድሚያቸውን ለማራዝም በሕዝብ ላይ የመከራ ዶፍ ያወርዳሉ::ቢሆንም፤ ግን መብቱ የተረገጠና ማንነቱ የተካደ ሕዝብ ሲመረው፤ አያሌ አምባገነኖችን ከስልጣናቸው አሽቀንጥሮ ሲጥል ስለማየታችን በርካታ አብነቶችን መጥቀስ እንችላለን።

የኢትዮጵያም ሕዝብም እንደ ሌሎቹ፤ ምሳሌ ሊሆን፤ ወያኔ በህዝባችን ላይ ለሃያ አምስት ዓመት ጭኖት የኖረውየግፍ ጽዋ ሊሸከም ከሚችለውበላይ ስለሆነበት፤ ከእንግዲህ ወደ ኋላ ላይመለስ፤ ለመብቱና ለአገራዊ አንድነት ሆ!ብሎ በመነሳት ለአንዴ እና ለመጨረሻ አሽቀንጥሮ ሊጥል ቆርጦ ተነስቷል። ወያኔ ምይህን የሕዝብ አመጽ ለማክሸፍ እና ስልጣኑን ለማስንበት የሚችለውን ሁሉ ከማድረግ ወደ ኋላ አይልም። ስለሆነም፤ እያሰበ ያለውንና በማድረግ ላይ ያለውን አንዳንድ ማሳያዎችን ለመጥቀስ እንወዳለን። ምክንያቱም፤ ከአሁን በፊት በመግለጫዎቻችን ያስቀመጥናቸውነገሮች ሁሉ ተፈጽመዋል እና፤ ሕዝባችን ልብሊል ይገባል። በጎንደር የተጀመረው ሕዝባዊ አመጽ ወደ ሌሎችም ከተሞችና ክልሎች እየተቀጣጠለ በመሄዱ፤ ጎንደርን መቀጣጫ አድርጎ ሌላውን ለማስደንገጥ፤ ልዩ ልዩ ዝግጅቶችን እያደረግ በመሆኑ ሕዝባችን እጅ ለእጅ ተያይዞ በአንድነት በመቆምየተጀመረውትግል ለድል እንዲበቃ፤ የተለያዩ የትግል ስልቶችን በመጠቀም፤ የተገኘውን ውጤት መከላከል አለበት ብለን እናምናለን። የወያኔን ኃይል ለመበታተን፤ ትግሉ በሌሎች ክልሎችም ተጠናክሮ መቀጠል አለበት። የነብርን ጅራት አይዙም ከያዙም አይለቁም ነውና።

ወያኔ የጎንደርን ሕዝብ ለመከፋፈልና እርስ በርሱ እንዲጋጭ፤ የቅማንት ሕዝብ ሳይወድ በተጽኖ፤ እራሱን በራሱ እንዲያስተዳድር የጠየቀውን ጥያቄ ከተዳፈናበት በማንሳት እንደገና ለማንቀሳቀስ፤ “የጠየቃችሁትን ሁሉ እንፈቅዳለን ተቀበሉን”ለማለት በመዘጋጀት ላይ በመሆኑ እንዲታወቅ። የጎንደር ሕዝብ ይህን የወያኔን ሴራ አውቆ በወያኔ ወኪሎች የሚመጣውን ጥያቄ ውድቅ እንደሚያደርገውብናምንም፤ ቀድሞ መዘጋጀትን ይጠይቃል። ጥያቄውን ያነሱ የቅማንት ወገኖቻችንም፤ የወያኔን ወጥመድ ይረግጣሉ ብለን ጭራሽ አናምንም። ድቅድቁ ጨለማ ሊነጋ ደሮ በሚጭበበት ሰዓት እንዲህ ያለ ከፋፋይ እና ለትውልድ ጠንቅ ጥሎ የሚያልፍ እርምጃ ሕዝባችን መቀበል የለበትምብለን ስለምናምን ማለት ነው። ዘርን መሰረት ያደረገ መብት እውነተኛ የሕዝብን መብት አያስከብርም። አሁንትኩረታችን በወያኔ ላይ ብቻ መሆን አለበት።

በአሁኑ ሰዓት ብዙ ከተማዎች ከወያኔ አፋኝ የመንግሥት መዋቅር ነፃ እየወጡ በመሆኑ እና ለጊዜው የዳኝነት ሥራ የሚያስከብር እና ጸጥታውን የሚቆጣጠር ባለመኖሩ፤ ጉልበት ያለው ሁሉ ክፍተቱን ለመጠቀም በዘረፋ እና በግድያ የተሰማሩ ሐላፍነት የጎደላቸው ቡድኖች እየፈሉ መሆኑ ምልክቶች እየታዩ ነው። ስለዚህ፤ ሕዝብ ጸጥታውን የሚያስከብር የጎበዝ አለቃ በመምረጥ የአካባቢውን ሰላም እንዲያስጠብቁ፤ የሐገር ሺማግሌችም እንደ ጥንቱ የዳኝነቱን ሥራ እንዲያስከብሩ እናሳስባለን። በአሁኑ ሰዓት ሕብረተሰባችን ዋናው ጠላቱ ወያኔና በሆዳቸው ከተገዙ ጥቅመኞች በስተቀር ሌላ ጠላት የለውም። ስለሆነ ምትኩረታችን ከወያኔ በኩል የሚመጣውን ጥቃት እየመከትን፤ ጥላቻን እያጠበብን ወደ አይቀሬው ድል መጓዝ ብቻ ነው።

Italo-Ethiopian Wal Wal Incident:

Why Italo-Ethiopian War Started At the request of Regent RasTafari Mako...?

The Wal Wal Incident - Why the Italo Ethiopian War Started?

At the request of Regent Ras Tafari Makonnen, in 1923 Italy agreed withFrance to enter Ethiopia into the League of Nations (LON).

By 1925 the Fascist regime was established, with Benito Mussolini rapidly gaining power. In 1926 Great Britain and Italy made an agreement that Italy would be granted a zone of economic influence in the Eastern horn ofAfrika in exchange for Italy's promise not to interfere with the waters of the Nile that flow from Ethiopia, which Britain monopolized. Italy would have their railway and Britain their waterway.

Ethiopia knew of this exchange because all correspondents between LON member states were open for all to view. The Regent of Ethiopia was shocked and appalled and immediately sent notes of protest to both GreatBritain and Italy through the LON. How could they make such a decision that involved Ethiopia, without the country's involvement?

In 1928 the Regent Tafari signed with Italy a twenty year friendship treatywhere Ethiopia gained a free-zone at the Port of Assab on the Eritrean coast which was an Italian territory. A road would be constructed to link Ethiopia's Dessie to Assab. The signatories Ethiopia and Italy agreed to build the road in their respective countries. An Italo-Ethiopian company would have monopoly on the road traffic.

This agreement however caused a lot of disagreement. The Ethiopians did not want to allow Italian engineers into Ethiopia and the Italians wouldn't allow Ethiopia's appointed Dutch engineers to give their plans for the road.A lot of mistrust and arguing ensued. Between 1930-35 Italy made a series of complaints against Ethiopia about border raids. They kept harassing Ethiopia during this time but the Emperor remained calm and trusted in the treaties signed with Italy and the LON.

In 1930 Italy built a garrison or fort at the Wal Wal/Ogaden Oasis at theEthiopian-Somaliland border, but this garrison went over onto Ethiopian territory by 60 miles. The Italians stationed Somali Ascari or fighters as their frontier troops. In November of 1934, Ethiopian border troops wereaccompanying the Anglo-Ethiopian Boundary Commission on a survey, when the infringement was discovered. They voiced their outrage to the Italians and Somalis at the frontier. The British in the party fled the areato avoid upsetting Italy and becoming involved in the argument. But theEthiopian troops stayed and set up camp alongside the Ascaris.

On December 6th the Wal Wal Incident happened – the two sides finallyclashed. 110-150 Ethiopians died, while only 30-50 Italians and Somalisperished. The Italians had in fact planned this skirmish after seeing thatthe Ethiopian troops would not leave the area. They brought in planes tobomb the frontier, and 3 armored vehicles with machine guns.

The Ethiopian Government requested that the disagreement be settled byarbitration but Italy's government rejected the proposition, demanding compensation instead. On January 3rd 1935 the Ethiopian Government submitted a report on the incident to the LON under Article II of the Covenant. The League Council agreed on the arbitration because of the Italo-Ethiopian treaty of 1928, but delayed the application until the nextmeeting which was months ahead.

Italy also disagreed that an assessment on the location of the garrison should be done to prove that they were in fact on Ethiopian territory. ButEthiopia insisted that the placement of the fort needed to be known in determining which country was at fault; and before they were forced to pay any form of compensation to Italy.

When the Commission of Arbitration finally met on June 25th the Italians still refused to allow their garrison's location on the frontier to be questioned. Because the arbitration could reach nowhere, the LON decidedan independent chairman should be appointed to the Committee. On September 3rd the chairman ruled that neither party was to blame for theincident.

But this ruling by that time was of no concern to Ethiopia or Italy, becausethe war was already on the horizon. The Emperor Haile Sellassie I did all He could to get the LON to intervene, but they didn't. The LON failed to exercise their power by not stopping Italy from property violation, and by not helping Ethiopia settle the conflict in a reasonable time frame.

In memory of His Imperial Majesty Haile Selassie I, Elect of God, King ofKings of Ethiopia. The last reigning Emperor of Ethiopia died at the handof the Godless exactly 41 years ago today, and Ethiopia continues to paythe wages of this great crime.

When Ras Tafari Makonnen was named Crown Prince and Regent for Empress Zewditu in 1916 taking on state responsibility, Ethiopia had schools, hospitals, roads, telephone and telegraph posts, and towns that had electricity that c...ould be counted on a few fingers.Every surroundingstate was under the rule of a foreign colonial power, Ethiopia was landlocked and at the economic mercy of these foreign powers. In the decades that followed, he fought a fascist invasion and was driven into a hardship filled exile. He returned in triumph to restore independence at the head of a force backed by the British. He then skillfully thwarted British plans for a protectorate and the partition of his country, instead managing the federation of Eritrea to Ethiopia and Ethiopia's access to thesea. He built roads and hospitals, established the first university donatinghis own palace to be its main campus. Above all he invested in the education of his subjects, touring schools, handing out school prizes personally, and paying for the higher education of many who could not afford it in prestigious foreign institutions. He worked hard to support the emerging states of Africa as they gained independence, and struggled tomake sure the Organization of African Unity (now the African Union) wasestablished. This is but a small drop of all this man did for his people.

In 1974, in the frailty of old age, he was driven off in a baby blue Volkswagen bug, as "progressives" screamed "thief" at the heir of the oldest royal line in Christendom. The country has not known true peace since.

May God rest the soul of Haile Selassie I, Emperor of Ethiopia, and bringpeace to the land he worked so hard for.

Quebec City Marathon:
Winner Ebisa Ejigu replicates Olympic medallist’s political protest
August 29, 2016

Ebisa Ejigu of Ethiopia performed a sign of protest against his home country's government as he won the Quebec City Marathon on Sunday. Feyisa Lilesa of Ethiopia made headlines last Sunday when he finished second in themen’s marathon at the Olympics with his arms crossed above his head. The gesture, which was done in solidarity with the Oromo people’s anti-government protests in hishome region, led Lilesa to say “If I go back to Ethiopia, they will kill me.”

On Sunday, the winner of the Quebec City Marathon crossed the finish line in an almost-identical fashion as Lilesa did one week earlier in Brazil. Ebisa Ejigu, who is from Addis Ababa, ran 2:30:40 to win the SSQ Quebec City Marathon and formed an“X” with his arms across the line and into the finisher’s zone.

Four other storylines from Sunday’s Quebec City Marathon
Forming an “X” with their arms is a sign of protest against the government’s treatmentof the Oromo people, the largest ethnic group in the Horn of Africa. The protests weresparked after the government began extending the municipal boundary of the country’s capital, threatening parts of Oromia and the people’s land rights.

The protests began in a small town named Ginchi, approximately 80 kilometres outside of the capital. Both Lilesa and Ejigu are from Addis Ababa or the surroundingarea. Runner from Jordan finishes last in Olympic marathon but was all smiles. Ejiguis a regular on the Canadian running scene having run the Toronto Waterfront 10K inJune and winning the Mississauga Marathon in May.

According to Sportstats, Ejigu has listed his place of residence as Toronto since June 25. In Quebec City, he was wearing a Toronto Olympic Club singlet. He has a lifetimemarathon best of 2:12:03.

Since November 2015, Human Rights Watch reports that 400 people have been killed by the government’s security forces as part of the protests. An additional 100people are believed to have been killed in August, according to BBC News.

Lilesa, the Olympic silver medallist, did not return to Ethiopia as scheduled after the Rio Games and is seeking asylum. The decision to not board the flight came after thegovernment said that Lilesa would get a “heroic welcome” in Ethiopia. A crowdfunding page has raised US$157,438 in the 26-year-old’s name to cover travel costs and provide support for his wife and two children in Ethiopia. (text ends)

Time for Boycotting Ethiopian Government Services andTPLF/EPRDF-owned companies

By Seid Hassan August 30, 2016

Gandhi wrote: "Non-cooperation with evil is as much a responsibility as co-operation withgood."

Which Specific Ethiopian Government Services, Products andCompanies to Boycott- some ideas

Boycotting is one of means for non-violent struggle. It has been effectively used in many parts of the world, particularly against the apartheid regime in South Africa. It is about time for all Ethiopians and freedom loving people to put pressure by boycotting products and servicesoffered by the government, its supporters and particularly those businesses owned by the EPRDF. By boycotting government services, party-owned parastatals (such as EFFORT) and the businesses owned by its staunch supporters, we will effectively be reducing (even incapacitating) the financial wherewithal the regime uses to buy weapons, pay the Agazi killers, the federal police and the military.

Some of the government owned (effectively TPLF/EPRDF's cash cows) which have used to exploit the Ethiopian people with poor service, exorbitant fees, extraordinary nepotism include Ethiopian Airlines, Ethio Telecom, National and Commercial Bank of Ethiopia. Furthermore, numerous anecdotal evidence indicates that some Ethiopian Airlines employees have committed criminal acts against Ethiopians, particularly against those tens of thousands who were expelled from Saudi Arabia andthe Middle East, by intentionally disappearing their languages and products. This writer has heard horror stories from expelled Ethiopianswhose smartphones have been expropriated by Ethiopian Airlines employees. The airline employees are alleged to have made tens of thousands of dollars with such criminal acts.

Recommendation:

1. To all Ethiopians and Members of the Diaspora: Carefully identify staunch supporters of the TPLF/EPRDF haunting and sociallyostracize.
2. Foster Discourse/Dialogue with Care while Boycotting. Try tocommunicate with those who became wealthy either by being supporters of the TPLF/EPRDF and collaborators of a corruptive scourge and/or by being ethnically affiliated, particularly those who have not committed economic and political crimes. Let's understandthat the TPLF/EPRDF is also hated by its own members and the ethnic groups it purports to represent. Avoid a national and/or seemingly all-inclusive divide that the TPLF has used and is still currently using, pitting Tigrayans against the Amharas and/or the Oromos. Let's try to create conditions for those genuine TPLFites/EPRDFites who want a way out, showing them our shared interests. We should be vigilant [against] hardcore TPLFites/EPRDFites [who are] using the dialog/discourse as a delaying tactic and/or as their means to continue business as usual.And/or buy time.

1. To the Diaspora: Stop visiting Ethiopia for a while unless it isabsolutely necessary. If you must travel to Ethiopia, fly other airlines.
2. To all Ethiopians and Members of the Diaspora: Boycott allservices and products provided by TPLF-owned EFFORT and companies. In addition to being cash cows for party leaders, my research strongly indicate that these companies were illegally established and were (and continue to be) deeply involved in corruption and suffocating monopolistic practices.
3. To all Ethiopians and Members of the Diaspora: Boycott all services and products provided by MIDROC-Ethiopia. Research andanecdotal evidence indicates that the owner of MIDRO-Ethiopia notonly has been collaborating and supporting the dictatorial regime but it is known to be deeply involved in corruption. The own Diaspora
4. To the Diaspora: Stop buying imported products from Ethiopia,particularly products and services imported and provided by the Ethiopian government and its supporters. Shun those companies, restaurant, grocery stress and foreign exchange (remittance) services owned and operated by the TPLF/EPRDF and the GOE.

5. To the Diaspora: Stop new investments in Ethiopia for now. Doingso will deny the regime the foreign exchange reserves it so desperately needs.
6. To the Diaspora: Be careful about the remittances you send. Sendremittances only if necessary.
7. To all Ethiopians and Members of the Diaspora: Stop buying land Ethiopia. As showed elsewhere, those who have been buying land in Ethiopia have effectively immersed themselves in corruption.The day of reckoning is getting closer for those who have been a part of the corrupt activities of the TPLF/EPRDF!
8. To all Ethiopians Back Home: Refuse to Pay Taxes if at allpossible.
9. To all Ethiopians Back Home: The use of property damage as a means of non-violent struggle is an unsettled issue. As *Adam Rothstein, argues, whether property destruction is non-violent means of struggle is an unsettled issue, since, "[*w]hile we all hope that we avoid violence, at all costs, the facts of history is that poweris not relinquished just because the people ask for it…" It can be argued that, particularly for very greedy business politicians such asthe TPLF/EPRDF, destroying their properties, in a limited way (surgical but not wholesale), could be a very effective tactic while atthe same time a means to boost the morale of protesters (see also, Louisa Dean). In some respects, if the desire for change is to be taken seriously, such a measure may be acceptable such as, as reported by ESAT, the setting ablaze of a home belonging to government informant and/or a federal police who shot and killed peaceful protesters. My suggestion is to avoid the destruction properties as much as possible, while at the same time trying to surgically sabotage the sources of funds for the ruling party and its corrupt supporters. Ethiopians have to understand a few facts in regards to this issue: (1) Even those they may now be in hands of the ruling party and/or its supporters, at the end of the day, some of these same government and party-owned properties that have been pillaged by the TPLF/EPRDF, maybe repossessed by the Ethiopian people; (2) Any country, let alone poor Ethiopia cannot afford to lose any properties/resources. Though it is understandable (as I fretted and predicted it to take place in recent article) why Ethiopians may be tempted to destroy some ill-gotten properties and resources, Ethiopians must refrain from doing so while using a multitude of other tactics at their disposal in order to deny the rulingparty and its supporters economic power. Destroying properties denies protesters the moral high ground as well.

Early human ancestor Lucy 'died falling out of a tree'

By Jonathan Webb Science reporter, BBC News 29 August 2016

CT scans have shown injuries to her bones similar to those suffered bymodern humans in similar falls.

The 3.2 million-year-old hominin was found on a treed flood plain, makinga branch her most likely final perch.

It bolsters the view that her species - Australopithecus afarensis - spent atleast some of its life in the trees. Writing in the journal Nature, researchers from the US and Ethiopia describe a "vertical deceleration event" which they argue caused Lucy's death.

In particular they point to a crushed shoulder joint, of the sort seen whenwe humans reach out our arms to break a fall, as well as fractures of the ankle, leg bones, pelvis, ribs, vertebrae, arm, jaw and skull. "We weren'tthere - we didn't see it - but the subset of fractures that we've identified are fully consistent with what's reported in a voluminous orthopaedic surgical literature about fall victims who have come down from height," said lead author John Kappelman from the University of Texas at Austin. "It's tested every day in emergency rooms all around the planet."

Discovered in Ethiopia's Afar region in 1974, Lucy's 40%-complete skeleton is one of the world's best known fossils. She was around 1.1m(3ft 7in) tall and is thought to have been a young adult when she died. Her species, Australopithecus afarensis, shows signs of having walked upright on the ground and had lost her ancestors' ape-like, grasping feet -but also had an upper body well-suited to climbing.

Window of opportunity

The bones of this well-studied skeleton are in fact laced with fractures,like most fossils. But with modern tools such as high-resolution CT scanners, researchers can start to unpick which ones were injuries and which ones happened during the intervening millennia.

"These fractures have been known since she was discovered," Prof Kappelman told BBC News. "I've looked at this fossil for 30 years and Iknew that these fractures were there."

It was during a brief break in Lucy's 2008 tour of US museums that heand his colleagues found time for the scans.

"We were able to get permission from the Ethiopian government… and after the exhibit closed down in Houston, we brought Lucy here to the UTcampus - in secret, for security purposes. And we have a high-resolution CT scan here.

"We scanned everything. We worked 24/7, 10 days straight without abreak."

Without those precious scans, Prof Kappelman said, Lucy's injuries wouldnever have come to light.

"What it allows us to do is literally look inside mineralised rocks andbones. And Lucy - as much as we love her - she's a rock. She's fullymineralised."

Serious trauma

By peering inside the bones in minute detail, the scanner showed that several of the fractures were "greenstick" breaks. The bone had bent and snapped like a twig: something that only happens to healthy, living bones.

So the injuries happened while Lucy was alive - but they also show no signs of healing, so these misfortunes apparently befell the small creatureat the very time of her death.

A fatal fall also fits with the fact that Lucy's tiny first rib is broken. Thisbone is small and heavily protected, Prof Kappelman explained; if it's fractured, you're having a bad day.

"When you look at rib fractures, the first rib is the most rarely fractured. Ittake a high amount of chest trauma.

But the shattered top of the fossilised humerus bone - Lucy's upper arm -is the most compelling piece of the puzzle. "If our hypothesis stands up…it tells us that Lucy was conscious when she reached out her arms to break her fall," said Prof Kappelman.

The researchers even used their scans to 3D print Lucy's humerus anddiscuss it with orthopaedic surgeons. So far, they have all agreed.

"At this point I'm nine from nine," Prof Kappelman said of his blind tests on unsuspecting bone doctors, adding that he printed out the bones in anenlarged form so that they appeared human. "Everybody agrees this is a fall from height."

In fact, 3D printing is now something that anyone with an interest in Lucycan do. The researchers, in partnership with the government of Ethiopia, have made the files available online. "The Ethiopian ministry has agreed to release 3D files of Lucy's right shoulder and her left knee. So anyone with an interest in this can print Lucy out and evaluate these fractures, and our hypothesis, for themselves."

'Perfectly plausible'

Nancy Lovell, a professor of anthropology at the University of Alberta inCanada, commented that the fracture findings were surprising but convincing. "It seems fantastical but there's nothing to contradict their interpretation," she told the BBC. "And their use of really good, computerised imaging helps. "Taken individually, the pieces all look perfectly plausible.

Prof Lovell is uncertain about the precise height and speed of the fall, which the Texas-led team estimated at 12m (40ft) and 60km/h (35mph)."People die from falls. People fall off ladders and die of head injuries - it doesn't have to have been a really tall tree," she said. "[But] we certainlythink the area where she was living was treed at the time."

Prof Chris Stringer, from London's Natural History Museum, said the ideaof a tree fall was a good fit with our understanding of how Australopithecus afarensis lived. "They could have been in trees some ofthe time for feeding, nesting, or protection," he said. "If Lucy had young,for example, trees would certainly have been a safer option than the ground when predators were around."

Atnafseged Yilma– A life in journalism

Arefayné Fantahun Wednesday, August 31st, 2016

“I don’t have an interesting back story about why I became a journalist,” says Atnafseged Yilma. The experienced journalist, who began work as a cadet journalist at Voice of Ethiopia newspaper and Menen magazine at age 22, said his chosen career was the product of happenstance. “Having taught for ten months at military school of office practice in Addis Ababa, Istarted asking around for another better paying employment. A friend toldme that there was a post in the Ethiopian Patriotic Association for a translating and reporting job. My training was chiefly in typing and office practice but I audaciously applied for the job and I sat down with eleven people for screening. Two of us were selected for the final oral interview.

Though the other one had more experience, they took me because I settled for a lower pay than he proposed,” the old-timer journalist and author recounts, when I met him at his villa in Gerji area recently.

He is agenial interviewee and with his expressive eyes, flashing with intensity, draws people in, as does his warm smile and congenial nature. I could notfail to be impressed by his eloquent mastery of the Amharic language throughout the interview.

As he stumbled into journalism by accident, Atnafseged worked hard to master his craft and has managed, through diligent application, to becomea well reputed journalist. Now 79 and still practicing the craft and maintaining a writing career, Atnafseged has authored four Amharic books titled “Recompense”, “The Riots of Animals and the Conference of Men” “The Rise and Fall of Abeto Iyasu” and “Secrets of My Life.” “The Rise and Fall Abeto Iyasu” has particularly proved successful; the book has not onlybeen acclaimed by critics but has sold well. The book was praised for presenting the history of his nation from an Ethiopian point of view and a true portrait of the Lij Iyasu, the ill-fated grandson of Emperor Menilek, who though groomed to succeed his grand-father, was never crowned because of his rather unregally glamorous and wayward life. Atnafseged’s mastery of Amharic is revealed in a refined language which has made his books popular. He is putting the finishing touches on another book of historical interest, Ras Abebe Aregay.

Atnafseged was born in the town of Ticho, in the former Arsi province. His parents were landlords owning a large plots of land. When, his father died,his mother put the six years of age in the care of her grand-father who was head of the army ammunition storage depot known as Barud Bet in a Guguma village close to Shashemene, former Sidamo province.
“Originally hailing from Gondar, they settled in the area during the reign of Menelik II. My great-grandfather, Fitawrari Workneh was part of the Ethiopian forces on the southern front led by Ras Desta Damtew, governorof Sidamo, against the invading Italian army in 1935. The bold offensive was thwarted at the battle of Genale, which resulted in the massacre of Ethiopians. Fitawrari Workneh was captured in February 1937 along with Ras Damtew and other officials and summarily executed after the assassination attempt on Graziani,” he recalls.

Atnafseged then started schooling under the guidance of a church priest, who routinely beat students, was repelled and did not advance much. At the age of 14 or 15 year-old, he moved from Sidamo to Arsi. There he joined Ticho Kedamawi Haile Selassie Primary school and studied there until grade 8. He recalls walking 10km to school every day, carrying his school books. “When I had to walk to school, I had to be on guard againsthyenas who happened to stray at dawn after the pack left in a field whichthey frequented. I once had a close call with such a hyena. I managed to escape by climbing on a tree branch. The other challenge was the ordeal of walking such a great distance to school. I would have some snack for breakfast and would hit the road with a provision of Kolo, roasted grain inmy pocket for lunch. I would go down to a nearby stream, drink a handfulor two of water from the spring and clean my teeth with a wawate twig,” he recalls.

He did so well there that , after completing grade eight he was able to goon to Commercial College in Addis Ababa. To be in the city, which was constantly growing, was a big change for him. He loved the splendour of city life, the allure of the markets, the cacophony of the streets, the clustered houses teeming with children. He begun studying secretarial science and accounting at the commercial college. “When I was completing grade 10, there was a conflict between Commercial College and the Addis Ababa Technical School students because of shot sput sports event. I was member of the team and we were sentenced to amonth of hard labour, which I found unduly harsh. I quitted my high school education as result,"

While wondering what to do next, he came to learn about a job opportunity at the Ministry of Defence's Typing and Office Practice School,where he joined and worked there for ten months. He took a job as reporter for Menen, work that instilled in him disciplines of journalism, that he practiced more than twenty years. After working as a translator and proof-reader, typist at the bilingual publication, Menen, he was transferred to the Ye Ethiopia Dimits and Voice of Ethiopia, both dailies in Amharic and English.

"The person responsible for my transfer was the lateAmbassador Zewde Reta, the then general director of Menen magazine and Voice of Ethiopia, both operating under the National Patriotic Association. The Voice of Ethiopia was founded on the occasion of silver jubilee anniversary of Emperor Haile Selassie's coronation as weekly and afew years later, it was elevated to a daily with separate Amharic and English editions under the editorship of Ayalew Woldeghiorgis and Yakob Woldemariam respectively," he says.

Accordingly he set about applying himself to the task, news reporting, article writing, translation, proofreading. He was resolved to avail himselfof the opportunity to learn from those who were ahead of him in the job.

"I was glad to have joined the profession of journalism which I have foundto be enjoyable. Though I had little training, I fearlessly plunged into which demanded by its nature news mongering, research, maturity, objectivity, credibility, ethics, discipline, efficiency, and above all professionalism. Though my stay at Menen did not make of me much of a journalist, it had certainly aroused my interest for it,"

There he met many of the progressive writers and newspapermen of thosedays. He singles out for mention Bearya Gebre Selassie, whom he says was a good and tolerant editor.

The newspaper job suited Atnafseged's inquisitive and fertile mind. It was an eventful period where young reporters were working hard against the odds such censures between the gulps of whisky and the young Atnafseged's curiosity and keen news sense produced hundreds of stories over the next decade.

One particular event that he recalls happened whilehe was working for the Ye Ethiopia Dimts he wrote a news report exposinga shady practice of the then governor of Arsi province, Dejamatch Sahlu Defaye who unjustly forced the Arsi people to contribute, 80 birr per gasha land for the construction of Mojo-Aere road in Shoa Province, whichwas his birthplace. "As would be expected, the publication of the piece angered Dejazmatch Sahlu who then reported me to Prime Minister AkiluluHabtewold. The Prime Minster then ordered Dr. Minassie Haile, the Minister of Information, to administer appropriate punishment. Dr.

Minassie called me to his office and to receive rebuke I was fined 100 birr from my salary, an order that he gave with a hint of apology in his voice,”he says. Dr. Minassie was sympathetic to the plight of journalists and Atnafesged was given back the 100 birr in the form of over time payment.

On another occasion, Atnafseged was fined for an imprudent blunder thatcaused offense to the regime. The Somali government in its bid to realise its nightmare of establishing Greater Somalia, was trying to cede the Ogaden region from Ethiopia, by sending regular army and infiltrators. In the front page, there was a cartoon image under the caption, “one of the Somale expansionists” and there was a story about the Emperor giving trophy to a leader of winning sports team. The two captions mixed up andthe news came out as “His Imperial Majesty Haile Selassie I awarding a trophy to one of the Somale expansionist”. Hell broke loose and his boss called him to tell him how angry he was and fined him, along with the editor-in-chief, Yacob Wolde-Mariam.

Another memory that stood out of those days was the friendships and a sense of camaraderie he enjoyed working with such colleagues as Paulos Gnogno, an a self-taught journalist and urbanite, hailing from Dire Dawa.During the abortive coup d’état, Atnafseged says, press people led by Paulos organized a demonstration in support of the coup. “While were marching to Ras Mekonen Bridge from Arat Kilo Square, we were stoppedby a vehicle loaded with security people. Then Paulos who was always quick to come up with a way out ingeniously started shouting using a popular formula “Emperor Haile Selassie, come to the rescue of my soul.”After Voice was folded in 1973, Atnafseged was assigned to work as deputy editor-in-chief of Menen magazine, under the leadership of a journalist whom he said was his junior. He refused to work and he was unemployed for three months but he kept his salary. After three months, he was asked to participate in preparing a book, Selected Speeches of HisImperial Majesty Haile Selassie I with another journalist Teshome Adera. “Though we were given a month, we managed to finish the task in fifteendays’ time,” he recalls. He was praised by his superiors and got a hefty bonus.

He then started working for the Amharic daily, Addis Zemen as city deskeditor, of which Baalu Girma was the principal editor from 1970-1973.
Among his colleagues were senior journalists Kegazmatch Yared Woldemickael, Paulos Gnogno, Merse Hazen Abebe. It was a job that Atnafseged particularly remembers as demanding and fulfilling, spendinga huge amount of time with colleagues in the field and newsroom, and overseeing the news operation which necessitated arriving home late often. It was transition period when the feudal regime was in its twilight and when journalists enjoyed a relatively better, albeit brief, press freedom and enabling them to publish extensive investigative stories.
Atnafseged said he got along very well with Baalu Grima, for whom he was a best man in his wedding with Almaz Abera few years ago. After theformation of Prime Minster Endalkachew cabinet, Baalu, he said, was criticized by public for his editorial writing advising students and activiststo “go slow”.

When Kebede Anisa, editor-in-chief of the weekly Yezaretu Ethiopia, left for Wollo in 1973 to take a post as a general manager of development andplanning, his post was filled by none other than Atnafesged. Though he liked the upgraded position, for him to be appointed as an editor of a weekly newspaper coming from the daily paper, Addis Zemen, was not aneasy thing to get used to. All the same, with other two colleagues, sports reporter Abebe Wolde Tasdaik and culture and society writer Shiferaw Mengesha, the paper gained popularity, with circulation growing from 3,000 copies to 20,000 copies. Atnafseged calls this period the golden years of Ethiopian journalism, when the journalists were allowed the freedom to do what they wanted to write, discussing, debating and analysing issues of heated public concern such as land reform, the famine,drought and the future of the country, something that was not done before. However, that was not to last long, a year after the army took over the reign of government, and the newly-discovered freedom was crushed.

After a year Atnafseged was transferred to the Ethiopian News Agency, then located in Abune Petros area. He served there for three years, whereat some point got into trouble when the names of military generals were misspelled. He left the news agency work, taking a job as public relation officer at the Ministry of Urban Development and Housing, a post that he held until 1992, two years after the EPRDF took power.

After this, he joined a team of veteran journalists who embarked on launching a private press. In early 1992, Paulos Gongo launched a newspaper called Ruh together with his long-time colleague Kefale Mamo,Atnafseged joined the magazine as an advisor to the acting editor, Laekemariam Demisse, a diligent journalist, who took over the work afterPaulos passed away suddenly. He also worked for another Amharic magazine Tobia, a magazine founded by Mulugeta Lule and his colleaguesjoining them as guest writer.

The seasoned journalist who had accumulated a wealth of knowledge on the history of the country used the opportunity to write a series of articleson Abeto (Lij) Iyasu Michael that run on five issues under the pseudonym Aba Genbaw. He was later to build on the articles and develop them into abook, which came out two years ago. “After for ten years, the magazine run there was split in the editorial committee because of disagreement over ethnic representation. The disaffected group splintered to form another magazine called Lisane Hizib (Voice of the People) which I joined.I also did series of articles on the famous patriot Ras Abebe, which I am working on to turn into a book. A regular contributor to Lisane Hizib of which he was ordinary, and later honorary member, he wrote numerous articles and notes.

Atnafseged speaks in honor of colleagues whose achievements were especially meaningful to him. Of Mairegu Bezabih, he said, “What makes Mairegu stand out from among the other journalists is that he is well experienced, well educated in the profession. He started out as a reporterand eventually went on to become an editor. He strictly followed the basicfive ‘Ws’ of journalism, mastering them and dutifully adhering to the principle. This enabled him to achieve clarity and accuracy and brevity, qualities which distinguished his work. He avoided verbosity, repetition.
We tried to emulate him. Other journalists like Berhanu Zerihun didn’tcare much for this principles,” Mulugeta Lule was among the departed friends whom Atnafseged paid tribute, having worked with him for a number of years. When I asked himwhat he thinks of Mulugeta’s infamous book, “Atifito Metfat”, a book excoriating Mengistu Haile Mariam and his brutal ways, even though the author served loyally under the Derg regime. (There was rumor that that Mulugeta wrote this book to curry favours with the current government.) “Mulugeta was a precipitous person. He was a loyalist to the Derg but he felt that had it not been for the blunders of the Derg, the system would not have been collapsed. I was cross with him because of the publication of the book but later when he gave me some justifications, I relented. I don’t think it was an attempt made to make peace with the EPRDF government. People may have their reasons to have such suspicions but deep at heart he was not the kind of person who wants to ingratiate himself with the regime,” Atnafseged defended him.

Of all his accomplishments, Atnafseged was most proud of his family. He and his wife, Almaz Sineghiorgis, an intense and vivacious woman, built a life surrounded by fun, friends and family. (They have five children). Theycelebrated their ‘ 50th wedding anniversary two years ago. His marriage was not always a happy one and at one point they were almost separated,a story of which he narrated in length in his recent memoir. (text ends)

I would go down to a nearby stream, drink a handfulor two of water from the spring and clean my teeth with a wawate twig,” he recalls.

He did so well there that , after completing grade eight he was able to goon to Commercial College in Addis Ababa. To be in the city, which was constantly growing, was a big change for him. He loved the splendour of city life, the allure of the markets, the cacophony of the streets, the clustered houses teeming with children. He begun studying secretarial science and accounting at the commercial college. “When I was completing grade 10, there was a conflict between Commercial College and the Addis Ababa Technical School students because of shot sput sports event. I was member of the team and we were sentenced to a month of hard labour, which I found unduly harsh. I quitted my high school education as result,”

While wondering what to do next, he came to learn about a job opportunity at the Ministry of Defence’s Typing and Office Practice School,where he joined and worked there for ten months. He took a job as reporter for Menen, work that instilled in him disciplines of journalism, that he practiced more than twenty years. After working as a translator and proof-reader, typist at the bilingual publication, Menen, he was transferred to the Ye Ethiopia Dimits and Voice of Ethiopia, both dailies in Amharic and English. “The person responsible for my transfer was the lateAmbassador Zewde Reta, the then general director of Menen magazine and Voice of Ethiopia, both operating under the National Patriotic Association. The Voice of Ethiopia was founded on the occasion of silver jubilee anniversary of Emperor Haile Selassie’s coronation as weekly and afew years later, it was elevated to a daily with separate Amharic and English editions under the editorship of Ayalew Woldeghiorgis and Yakob Woldemariam respectively,” he says.

Accordingly he set about applying himself to the task, news reporting, article writing, translation, proofreading. He was resolved to avail himself of the opportunity to learn from those who were ahead of him in the job. “I was glad to have joined the profession of journalism which I have foundto be enjoyable. Though I had little training, I fearlessly plunged into which demanded by its nature news mongering, research, maturity, objectivity, credibility, ethics, discipline, efficiency, and above all professionalism. Though my stay at Menen did not make of me much of a journalist, it had certainly aroused my interest for it,”

There he met many of the progressive writers and newspapermen of thosedays. He singles out for mention Bearya Gebre Selassie, whom he says was a good and tolerant editor.The newspaper job suited Atnafseged’s inquisitive and fertile mind. It was an eventful period where young reporters were working hard against the odds such censures between the gulps of whisky and the young Atnafseged’s curiosity and keen news sense produced hundreds of stories over the next decade. One particular event that he recalls happened while he was working for the Ye Ethiopia Dimts he wrote a news report exposing a shady practice of the then governor of Arussi province, Dejamatch Sahlu Defaye who unjustly forced the Arussi people to contribute, 80 birr per gasha land for the constructionof Mojo-Aegere road in Shoa Province, which was his birthplace. “As wouldbe expected, the publication of the piece angered Dejazmatch Sahlu who then reported me to Prime Minister Akilulu Habtewold. The Prime Minster then ordered Dr. Minassie Haile, the Minister of Information, to administerappropriate punishment. Dr. Minassie called me to his office and to receive rebuke I was fined 100 birr from my salary, an order that he gavewith a hint of apology in his voice,” he says. Dr. Minassie was sympatheticto the plight of journalists and Atnafesged was given back the 100 birr in the form of overtime payment.

On another occasion, Atnafseged was fined for an imprudent blunder thatcaused offense to the regime. The Somali government in its bid to realise its nightmare of establishing Greater Somalia, was trying to cede the Ogaden region from Ethiopia, by sending regular army and infiltrators. In the front page, there was a cartoon image under the caption, “one of the Somali expansionists” and there was a story about the Emperor giving trophy to a leader of winning sports team. The two captions mixed up andthe news came out as “His Imperial Majesty Haile Selassie I awarding a trophy to one of the Somali expansionist”. Hell broke loose and his boss called him to tell him how angry he was and fined him, along with the editor-in-chief, Yacob Wolde-mariam.

Another memory that stood out was among the fond memories he cherishes of those days was the friendships a sense of camaraderie he enjoyed working with such colleagues as Paulos Gnogno, an a self-taughtjournalist and urbanite, hailing from Dire Dawa. During the abortive coupd’état, Atnafseged says, press people led by Paulos organized a demonstration in support of the coup. “While were marching to Ras Mekonen Bridge from Arat Kilo Square, we were stopped by a vehicle loaded with security people. Then Paulos who was always quick to come up with ingeniously started shouting using a popular formula “Emperor Haile Selassie, come to the rescue of my soul.”

Once a Bucknell Professor, Now the Commander of an EthiopianRebel Army By JOSHUA HAMMER August 31, 2016 The NY Times Magazine

Why Berhanu Nega traded a tenured position for the chance to lead arevolutionary force against an oppressive regime?

Berhanu Nega was once one of Bucknell University’s most popular professors. An Ethiopian exile with a Ph.D. from the New School for SocialResearch in Manhattan, he taught one of the economics department’s most sought-after electives, African Economic Development. When he wasn’t leading seminars or puttering around his comfortable home in a wooded neighborhood five minutes from the Bucknell campus in rural Lewisburg, Pa., Nega traveled abroad for academic conferences and lectured on human rights at the European Parliament in Brussels. “He wasvery much concerned with the relationship between democracy and development,” says John Rickard, an English professor who became one ofhis close friends. “He argued that you cannot have viable economic development without democratization, and vice versa.” A gregarious and active figure on campus, he rooted for the Philadelphia Eagles and the Cleveland Cavaliers, campaigned door-to-door for Barack Obama in 2008 and was known as one of the best squash players on the Bucknell faculty. He and his wife, an Ethiopian-born optometrist, raised two sons and sent them to top-ranked colleges, the University of Pennsylvania and Carnegie Mellon. On weekends he sometimes hosted dinners for other Bucknell professors and their families, regaling them with stories about Abyssinian culture and history over Ethiopian food he would prepare himself; he imported the spices from Addis Ababa and made the injera, a spongy sourdough bread made of teff flour, by hand.

Nega remained vague about his past. But students curious enough to Google him would discover that the man who stood before them, outliningdevelopment policies in sub-Saharan Africa, was in fact intimately involved in the long-running hostility between Ethiopia and neighboring Eritrea, a conflict that has dragged on for half a century. By the start of the millennium, its newest incarnation, a border war over a patch of seemingly worthless ground just 250 square miles in size, devolved into atense standoff, with the two nations each massing along the border thousands of troops from both official and unofficial armies. One proxy army fighting on the Eritrean side, a group of disaffected Ethiopians calledGinbot 7, was a force that Nega helped create, founding the movement in2008 with another Ethiopian exile, Andargachew Tsege, in Washington.
The Ethiopian government, which had previously detained Nega as a political prisoner for two years in Addis Ababa, now sentenced him to death in absentia. Bucknell students who did learn about their teacher’spast were thrilled. “It made his classes exciting,” Rickard says.

In Ginbot 7, Tsege served as the political leader based in Eritrea; Nega was the group’s intellectual leader and principal fund-raiser, collecting money from members of the Ethiopian diaspora in Europe and the United States. That all changed one day in June 2014, when Tsege, known to everyone as Andy, made a brief stopover in Sanaa, the capital of Yemen, on his way to Asmara, the capital of Eritrea. As he sat in the airport transitlounge, waiting to board his flight, Yemeni security forces, apparently acting in collusion with Ethiopian intelligence, arrested him and put him ona plane to Addis Ababa, where he was paraded on state television and currently faces a death sentence.

Days after Tsege’s arrest and extradition, Nega volunteered to replace himin Eritrea. “Was I going to remain an academic, sitting in an ivory tower

criticizing things?" he told me. "Or was I going to do something as an engaged citizen?" Nega put his house up for sale and took an indefiniteleave of absence from the university. It was an extended sabbatical, hetold his colleagues. Only a handful of close friends, his wife and his twosons knew the truth.

On a hot July afternoon in 2015, Nega packed a suitcase, bade his wife farewell and was driven by comrades to John F. Kennedy International Airport. He carried a laissez-passer from the Eritrean government, allowing him a one-time entry into the country. Nega was heading for a new life inside a destitute dictatorship sometimes referred to as the NorthKorea of Africa; the regime was notorious for having supported the Shabab, an Islamist terrorist group in Somalia, and for a military conscription program that condemns many citizens over age 18 to unlimited servitude. Nega also believes he has drawn the scrutiny of the Obama administration and was worried about being stopped and turned around by Homeland Security. It wasn't until the wheels on the Egypt Air jet were up and he was settling into his seat over the Atlantic Ocean, bound for one of the most isolated and repressive nations on Earth, that he was able to relax.

The lights cut out above Nega one chilly night this July, and the rebel chiefsat in darkness in a bungalow in Asmara, Eritrea's 7,600-foot-high capital.Nega had spread a map on a coffee table, and he was showing me the route for a clandestine mission that he planned to undertake the following morning. At dawn, he and a comrade would drive 300 miles southwest to the mined, militarized border between Eritrea and Ethiopia to rendezvous with intelligence sources at a rebel base camp. His contacts were smuggling across the border "highly sensitive information" about Ethiopiantroop positions and about the strength of resistance cells inside Ethiopia, whom Nega was hoping to link up with his own fighters on the Eritrean side of the border.

"They've got documents, and they insist on handing them over only to me," Nega told me. "When there is sensitive material, they first want me to see it and then filter the information to the rest of the organization." Nega, a burly, balding 58-year-old with a rumpled facade and an appealingly unassuming manner, rubbed his forehead as the lights flickered and then returned. In recent years, Ginbot 7 has grown, and it isnow guided by an 80-member council of representatives spread around the world. As commander, Nega oversees several hundred rebel fighters in Eritrea as well as an unknown number of armed members inside Ethiopia who carry out occasional attacks in the movement's name.
During his frequent visits to the front lines, he spends his time meeting with fellow commanders, observing training and — ever the professor — leading history and democracy seminars using chalk and a blackboard in a"classroom" in the bush.

Nega turned back to the map and traced a straight line leading to the Tekeze River, the westernmost border between Ethiopia and Eritrea. The stream was a main crossing point for Ethiopian Army deserters fleeing to the rebels, and in recent weeks it had come under threat from advancingEthiopian troops. “They are moving a sizable force into this area, becausewe are their main target now,” he said, referring to Ginbot 7, now knownas Patriotic Ginbot 7. “And they are pushing a large part of their army, artillery and tanks into this zone. They haven’t started shelling us yet.”

The two nations, now ferocious enemies, were once joined. Eritrea, an Italian colony from 1890 until 1941, was annexed by Ethiopia after World War II; it took a three-decades-long war for the Eritreans to finally liberate themselves, in 1991. The neighbors remained at peace until 1998,when a simmering dispute over the Yirga triangle, a piece of rocky land along the border that had never been clearly demarcated in colonial maps,exploded into two years of tank and trench warfare in which 100,000 died. Today, despite a United Nations-supervised mediation that awarded the disputed territory to Eritrea, Ethiopia continues to occupy the border village Badame. Tens of thousands of troops face each other across a landscape of mines, bunkers, sniper posts and other fortifications.

Violence on the border, while infrequent, can be both sudden and brutal.In mid-June, according to the Eritrean government, Ethiopia launched a full-scale attack along the frontier at Tsorona, the first major incursion since 2012, possibly in retaliation for attacks on its forces by Ginbot 7.
Eritrea claimed that it had killed 200 enemy soldiers and wounded 300, though Ethiopia downplayed its losses. “They almost always deny it,” Nega told me. “As far as the Ethiopian government is concerned, nobodyever dies.”

Ethiopia, while an American ally and an economic leader by African standards, is notoriously repressive. The minority Tigrayan regime has jailed hundreds of bloggers, journalists and opposition figures, keeping itself in power by intimidating political opponents, rigging elections and violently putting down protests. Since November of last year, according toHuman Rights Watch, state security forces killed more than 400 protestersin the Oromia region, which surrounds Addis Ababa. Protests have recently spread to the Amhara region, as well; in August, security forces shot dead roughly 100 demonstrators and injured hundreds more.
Thousands of Oromos, a minority group that makes up about a third of the population, have been jailed without trial on suspicion of supporting the Oromo Liberation Front, a secessionist group. The Ethiopian marathoner Feyisa Lilesa, who won the silver medal at the Olympics this year, drew global attention to the government’s abuses when he held hiscrossed arms over his head at the finish line in solidarity with his fellow Oromos; he says he fears returning home and is seeking political asylum.

Across the room in Nega's bungalow, four fellow rebel commanders, all members of the Ethiopian diaspora, were finishing their supper. The men tore off pieces of injera and dipped the bread into a thick sauce called shiro, washing down the meal with bottles of the local Asmara beer. Esat,an Ethiopian opposition satellite channel broadcast from Europe and the United States, played softly on a television in the corner. The men were part of a revolving contingent of commanders who returned to Asmara from time to time to check their email and escape the primitive conditionsin the bush. "We are five right now," Nega said, introducing me to his comrades from Dallas; Arlington, Va.; Calgary, Canada; and Luxembourg."Another, from the United Kingdom, is returning here tomorrow morning. We'll be six when he comes. Last week we were eight — at one point we were 11."

The house also serves as an infirmary for rebels who become ill or are wounded in combat, and it provides a temporary sanctuary for Ethiopian Army defectors who cross the front lines. One recent arrival was a formerEthiopian Air Force officer, an Oromo who had traveled north 42 hours bybus and on foot, then swum across the Tekeze River to Eritrea. He made the decision to defect while sitting in an Addis Ababa jail cell on "false charges," he told me, of being a member of the Oromo secessionist movement. "We have many like him," Nega said.

Nega put on his jacket to head off in search of diesel fuel for the morning journey to the border. With another rebel comrade from Virginia, we drovedown the deserted, lightless streets of Asmara, searching for an open filling station, but the one we found had run out of diesel; Nega would have to return the next morning, delaying his departure for the front lines.When we returned to his home, Nega pointed to a pile of medical supplies in the hallway — bandages, splints, antibiotics, antimalarials — that he was planning to ferry to his fighters, and three cardboard boxes packed with solar cells that would provide some rudimentary electricity in the bush. While in the camps, Nega was dependent on his mobile phone for contact with the outside world, but even that was not guaranteed. "They have shut off phone coverage since the incursion" by the Ethiopians at Tsorona, he told me. "I'll be out of touch for days."

When I first met Nega, in late May 2016, the conditions were decidedly more comfortable. After 10 months in Asmara, Nega had flown back to theUnited States to attend meetings and the graduation of his younger son, Iyassu, from the University of Pennsylvania. Given his deepening involvement in a rebellion against an American ally, it was possible that this would be the last time he could visit the United States. Indeed, Nega, who is not an American citizen, had his State Department-issued "travel document" suspended three years ago, and his application for United States citizenship has been put on indefinite hold. He now travels on an Eritrean passport; together with his green card, it gained him entry into the country — this time. The State Department would not comment on Nega or Ginbot 7, but Nega surmises that the Obama administration doesnot look favorably on his activities. Still, he insists, “nobody is saying, ‘Back off.’ I think they know that this is not about being against the U.S. We are upholding the basic principles under which the U.S. was established.”

We met over Memorial Day weekend on the terrace of the upscale Café Dupont on Dupont Circle in Washington, joined by his sister Hiwot, who runs a technology start-up in New York, and Iyassu, a 21-year-old formerhigh-school track star who was starting work at a New York investment bank in the fall. Over white wine and chicken salad, the conversation touched on Lin-Manuel Miranda’s commencement address and Nega’s excitement over crossing paths, after the ceremony, with Donald Trump and Vice President Joe Biden. (Trump’s daughter and Biden’s granddaughter were members of Iyassu’s graduating class.) I asked Iyassu if he had reconciled himself to the idea of his father’s new life on the front lines, and he said that he had. “Ultimately he should continue topursue what he believes in,” he told me. He expressed little interest, though, in visiting his father at his Eritrean rebel camp or delving deeper into the raison d’être of the Ginbot 7 movement. “I just got out of college — my life has its own direction,” he said. “I can’t take time off. ... I’m alittle bit removed generationally as well.”

The elder Nega is part of a generation of Ethiopians who grew up amid violence and tumult. Over lunch, he recalled what it was like to be a high-school student when a Marxist junta, the Soviet-backed Derg, overthrew Emperor Haile Selassie and ushered in a brutal dictatorship. Nega had grown up privileged, the son of a wealthy entrepreneur, and he watched as his father’s vast commercial corn and soybean farms were seized and security forces began arresting, imprisoning and executing thousands of dissidents, including many students. He and his two older sisters joined aresistance movement called the Ethiopian People’s Revolutionary Party (E.P.R.P.). They went underground, living in safe houses, eluding the police. His eldest sister was later captured and disappeared in the Derg’s prisons. His family searched for her everywhere.

“We had people coming to our house and telling my parents, ‘I saw her at this place.’ My mother used to go out all over looking for her,” Nega recalls. Her former cellmates later told him that she had died in prison, probably by committing suicide with a cyanide capsule that she wore around her neck. “It was common to have cyanide with you because if youwere caught, you would be tortured and executed, and through torture you might be forced to betray people,” Nega said. As the crackdown in Addis intensified, the E.P.R.P. sent Nega north to Tigray province, the center of a growing guerrilla war against the Derg; there, he carried out attacks on government forces. In 1978 a power struggle erupted within the E.P.R.P. leadership, and Nega was thrown into prison. He was releasedone day before guards turned their guns on killing 15. Nega escaped to Sudan, living as a refugee in Khartoum for nearly two years, then obtained political asylum in the United States in1980.

He earned his bachelor's degree from the State University of New York atNew Paltz, where he also played on the soccer team. While studying for his doctorate at the New School for Social Research, he lived in Brooklyn and wrote his dissertation on the failures of Ethiopian agriculture under the Communist regime. Meanwhile, Ethiopia was sliding deeper into calamity. When the guerrilla movements increased their attacks in Tigrayin the mid-1980s, the Derg dictator, Mengistu Haile Mariam, blocked foodsupplies to the region, creating a devastating famine in which one millionpeople died. Photographs of starving children, disseminated by the news media, catalyzed an international relief effort, Live Aid, and inspired the pop hit "We Are the World," making Ethiopia a worldwide synonym for hunger. The famine had wound down, and the rebel war was escalating, when Bucknell hired Nega as an assistant professor in 1990. "He never trumpeted his background, the fact that he had been a guerrilla fighter," says Dean Baker, a former Bucknell colleague who now heads the Centerfor Economic and Policy Research in Washington.

In 1991, after a decade's struggle, three rebel groups — the Tigrayan People's Liberation Front, the Oromo Liberation Front and the Eritrean People's Liberation Front — defeated the Derg and marched into Addis Ababa. The new government, led by the Tigrayan rebel leader Meles Zenawi, set about rebuilding the war-shattered nation. Nega finally had reason for optimism. He knew Meles well — the prime minister had beenin the same university class as his dead sister — and after the Tigrayans consolidated power, Nega obtained a leave of absence from Bucknell andflew with his wife and two sons, both toddlers, back to Addis, determinedto help rebuild the country. Nega believed that Meles "had good intentions," he told me.

But Nega's enthusiasm for the new government wore off quickly. At AddisAbaba University, where he taught part-time (he had also taken over several of his father's businesses), administrators cracked down on dissent, banning the student government and the school newspaper.
When Nega encouraged his students to press for academic freedoms, police assaulted them and other demonstrators; later, as unrest spread through the city, they shot 41 people dead. Nega spent a month in jail forabetting the protests. "At night I was hearing prisoners being tortured, beaten," he says.

In May 2005, with the economy growing rapidly and the government's popularity apparently high, Ethiopia held elections, the first truly multiparty vote in Ethiopia's history, and invited international observers toattend. But the results were not to Meles's liking. Nega's Coalition for Unity and Democracy won 137 of the 138 seats on the City Council in Addis Ababa. Nega was poised to become mayor, but the government denied his party the victory and jailed him along with other C.U.D. leaders. American colleagues began a campaign to free Nega. “The Bucknell faculty approved a motion to support him and call attention to hisplight,” Rickard says. “We talked with journalists, ambassadors, trying to make sure that he stayed on the front burner.” International pressure helped to secure Nega’s release after 21 months, and he returned to the United States. The experience “hardened him,” says Samuel Adamassu, a member of the Ethiopian diaspora who has known Nega and his family since the 1980s. “It made him realize these people are not willing to change without being forced.”

After our lunch in Washington, I attended a fund-raising rally for Ginbot 7 at the Georgetown Marriott, attended by about 500 members of the Ethiopian diaspora. Nega stood before a backdrop of Ethiopian and American flags. It would be a fight to the death, he assured the cheering crowd. “There is no negotiation with someone who is coming to rape you,”Nega went on in Amharic, the principal language of Ethiopia. “We have to stop them.” The contrast between the mild-mannered academic I had meton the patio of the Café Dupont and the fiery rebel leader was striking.
Nega announced that he had brought news from the front lines: Guerillasclaiming loyalty to his movement had carried out their most significant attack to date, outside the town Arba Minch, in southern Ethiopia, formerly the site of an American drone base. “We killed 20 soldiers and injured 50 of them,” he said, calling it “a new stage in the struggle.” (TheEthiopian government claimed they foiled the attack and killed some of the gunman.)

When Nega helped found the Ginbot 7 movement in 2008, the year he returned to teaching at Bucknell, he explained that the movement would seek to “organize civil disobedience and help the existing armed movements” inside and outside Ethiopia and “put pressure on the government, and the international community, to come to a negotiation.” Yet the Ginbot 7 platform advocated destabilizing the government “by anymeans necessary,” including attacks on soldiers and police. It was a discordant message coming out of a liberal American university whose first class was held in the basement of the First Baptist Church of Lewisburg in 1846. “It’s a line that he has crossed,” says Rickard, the English professor, who finds Nega’s advocacy of violence “troubling” but understandable. “He has never been a pacifist, never renounced armed struggle,” he says. “He has seen elections overturned, hundreds of peoplemurdered on the streets. His sister died, and his best friend is in prison, inperil of his life. He sees violence as viable and necessary. It’s kind of shocking, in a way.”

While Ginbot 7 started to foment its resistance, Ethiopia was busy rebranding itself as an economic success story. Following South Korean and Chinese models of state-directed development, Meles state-owned banks and used Western aid money to invest heavily in dams, airlines, agriculture, education and health care. Ethiopia's economy took off, averaging nearly 11 percent growth per year for the last decade, one of the highest rates in Africa. Addis Ababa became the showpiece of the country's transformation, with a light rail system, ubiquitous high-rise construction and luxury hotels, high-end restaurants and wine bars packed with newly minted millionaires. At the same time, the country was becoming a bulwark against the spread of radical Islam in the Horn of Africa. Today Ethiopia provides 4,400 peacekeepers to an African Union force in Somalia and helps keep the peace along the tense border betweenNorth and South Sudan. In July 2015 President Obama, on an African tour, paid the first visit ever to Ethiopia by a sitting American president.

Yet in the classroom and abroad, Nega argued that Ethiopia's transformation was a mirage, created to placate Western observers troubled by the lack of democracy. "In 2005, it became clear that legitimacy would not come through the political process, so they started this new narrative — development," he told me. Nega insists that Ethiopiahas "cooked the books," and that its growth rate is largely attributable to huge infrastructure projects and Western development aid, with little contribution from the private sector. "The World Bank is throwing money at Ethiopia like there's no tomorrow," he told me. The actual growth rate,he insists, is closer to 5 to 6 percent — per capita income is still among the lowest in the world — and the weakness of the country's institutions will mean that even this rate cannot be sustained.

Two months before Obama arrived, the government presided over what was widely considered a sham election, in which the ruling party won all 547 seats in Parliament, But Obama, making it clear that security trumpedother concerns in the Horn of Africa, stood beside Meles's successor, Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn, and described the government as being "democratically elected."

"I was shocked," Nega told me. " I understand the reality of power and why he supports the Ethiopian government, but to say it is 'democraticallyelected'? I was disgusted."

Three days after my first meeting with Nega in Asmara, and shortly after he returned from his border rendezvous, we drove in the late afternoon inhis white Hilux pickup truck through the landscape of his new life. We passed the run-down and nearly deserted Asmara Palace Hotel, formerly an Intercontinental Hotel, and a large Catholic church that Nega couldn't identify. "I'm a lousy tourist guide," he said apologetically. While in Asmara, he spends most of his time hunkered down either in his residenceor at a borrowed office in the center of town — one of the few places in the city with a high-speed internet connection. Eritrea has the lowest internet penetration in the world, with only about 1 percent of the population online, and this rare broadband connection allows him to catch up regularly on Skype with his sons and his wife. “I don’t think she’s veryhappy about my being here,” he admitted, shifting uncomfortably. “We have really stopped talking about it.

Immediately following its independence in the early 1990s, under the rebel-leader-turned-president Isaias Afwerki, Eritrea was briefly considered one of the hopes of Africa. When I visited the country in 1996, five years after it won its liberation from Ethiopia, the former rebels were starting to revive the wrecked economy — rebuilding roads, bridges and a railway to the coast, calling on the Eritrean diaspora to invest. But after the border war between 1998 and 2000, Eritrea’s leadership turned inward, growing increasingly suspicious of the outside world. Afwerki suppressed dissent, expelled Western journalists and NGOs, turned down foreign aid, nationalized industries and discouraged foreign investment; according to the World Bank, per capita income is about $1,400 a year. In2009 the United Nations Security Council imposed sanctions on Eritrea, including an arms embargo and a travel ban and a freeze on the assets of top Eritrean officials, for providing weapons to the Shabab, the radical Islamist group that has carried out hundreds of terrorist attacks in Somalia and neighboring Kenya. (Eritrea called the allegation “fabricated lies.”) A June 2016 United Nations report accused the Eritrean governmentof committing “crimes against humanity,” including torture, jailing dissidents and the open-ended military conscription program that the government justifies as preparation against another Ethiopian invasion.

With virtually no investment coming into the country, Asmara has becomea city frozen in time. Two donkeys meandered down Harnet Avenue, the capital’s main boulevard, stopping to nibble at a patch of grass around a palm tree. As we watched the crowds walk down the tidy avenue lined by an imposing red brick cathedral, a 1930s-era Art Deco movie theater and crumbling Italian bakeries and cappuccino bars, Nega defended his decision to turn to the dictatorship for support.

“Do we really have to discuss the kind of dictatorships that the U.S. sleepswith?” he asked me. “Here is a country that was willing to give us sanctuary, a country that had once been part of Ethiopia. I look at any of these people, I talk to them, and they are just like me, they are as Ethiopian as I am. Why should I not get help from them?”

Nega insisted that he saw some positives in the dictatorship. “This is the only country that says, despite its poverty, ‘We are going to chart our owncourse — whether you like it or not,’ ” he told me. “They are not corrupt.
You see these government officials driving 1980s cars, torn down the middle. I have seen their lives, their houses. There is some element of a David-and-Goliath struggle in this thing.” He called the United Nations report describing crimes against humanity an “exaggeration.” (A Westerndiplomat in Asmara I talked to, who asked not to be identified because ofthe political sensitivities of his position, agreed with Nega’s assessment of the report, saying it was based on testimony of refugees in Europe whohad “an interest in depicting their country as badly as possible to justifytheir status.”)

It goes without saying that Nega was reluctant to speak harshly about thenation that was providing his movement with a refuge — and that could snatch it away at any moment. “I don’t want to butt into their personal issues,” he said carefully. “They’ve always been nice to us.” Out of the public eye, however, the rebel leader can be more critical. “He holds no illusions about Eritrea,” says his friend and former Bucknell colleague Dean Baker.

I asked Nega if he was confident that pressure by the rebel groups could bring down the Ethiopian government. Nega believed that momentum wason his side. “This resistance to the state is coming in every direction now, in all parts of the country,” he said. He was giving himself “four or five years” before he and his rebel forces entered Ethiopia as part of a new democratic dispensation. “It certainly won’t be a decade,” he told me Until that happens, Nega will continue planning and preparing from a precarious and lonely limbo. Back at the bungalow, he led me down the corridor and showed me where he slept: a monastic chamber furnished with a single bed, an armoire and a night table strewn with jars of vitamins and blood-pressure medication. (He lost his medical insurance when he left Bucknell, but still has American insurance coverage through his wife, and he picked up a three-month supply of the medicine on his May trip to the United States.) He retrieved from the freezer a chilled bottle of Absolut and poured two glasses. We sat in the concrete courtyard, beside a clothesline draped with Nega’s laundry. The power failed again, casting us into total darkness, then returned a few seconds later. The contrast with his previous life in the States — cheering for the Lewisburg Green Dragons, his son’s high-school track team; vacationing on the beaches of Maryland and North Carolina with his extended family —could hardly have been more extreme.

“If you like comfort, and that’s what drives you, you’ll never do this,” he told me, taking a sip of the ice-cold vodka. “But sometimes you get really surprised. Once you have a commitment to something, all these things that you thought were normal in your day-to-day life become unnecessaryluxuries.” Joshua Hammer is a freelance foreign correspondent and the author of “The Bad-Ass Librarians of Timbuktu.”

A group of civil society organizations are calling for an independent andimpartial international investigation into human rights violations in Ethiopia, including the unlawful killing of peaceful protesters and a recentspate of arrests of civil society members documenting this crackdown.

DefendDefenders (East and Horn of African Human Rights Defenders Project), the Association for Human Rights in Ethiopia (AHRE), Amnesty International, the Ethiopia Human Rights Project (EHRP), Front Line Defenders, and the International Federation for Human Rights (FIDH), areconcerned about the levels of persecution and detention of civil society members in the country. Since last month, four members of one of Ethiopia's most prominent human rights organizations, the Human Rights Council (HRCO), were arrested and detained in the Amhara and Oromia regions. HRCO believes these arrests are related to the members' monitoring and documentation of the crackdown of on-going protests in these regions.

On 14 August, authorities arrested Tesfa Burayu, Chairperson of HRCO's West Ethiopian Regional Executive Committee at his home in Nekemte, Oromia. Tesfa, who had been monitoring the protests for the organization,was denied access to his family and his lawyer, and released on 16 Augustwithout charge. Two days earlier on 12 August, Abebe Wakene, also a member of HRCO, was arrested and taken to the Diga district police station in Oromia. Abebe Wakene remains in detention with no formal charges against him.

In addition, on 13 August, Tesfaye Takele, a human rights monitor in theAmhara region, was arrested in the North Wollo zone and is still detainedwithout charge. The lack of independent and transparent investigation ofhuman rights violations in Ethiopia strongly implies that the Ethiopian government's investigation of the ongoing human rights crisis will not beindependent, impartial and transparent. Sarah Jackson, Deputy RegionalDirector for East Africa, the Horn and the Great Lakes

On 8 July, Bulti Tesema -another active member of HRCO - was arrestedin Nejo, Oromia. He had been working with HRCO to monitor and document violent repression of the protests. Sources told DefendDefenders that his whereabouts remained unknown for several weeks after his arrest, until they found out that he had been transferredto the capital's Kilinto prison and charged with terrorist offences. He hasnot been given access to either his family or his lawyer. The court has adjourned the hearing to 12 October.

"New levels of violence are being reported in the crackdown on the largelypeaceful protests that have taken place across Oromia and Amhara regions in recent weeks," said Hassan Shire, Executive Director of DefendDefenders. "Instead of investigating and holding accountable thoseresponsible for rights violations, the government is jailing the few independent human rights defenders left working in the country.”

HRCO's human rights monitors were arrested for attempting to document the large-scale pro-democracy protests and the following violent crackdown by the authorities in the Oromia and Amhara regions, as well as in the capital Addis Ababa on 6 and 7 August. Amnesty International reported that close to 100 protesters were killed and scores more arrestedduring the largely peaceful protests.

Three journalists were also arrested and detained by Ethiopian security officials for 24 hours on 8 August 2016 in the Shashemene area of the Oromo region. According to the Foreign Correspondents' Association of Ethiopia, Hadra Ahmed, a correspondent with Africa News Agency, was arrested along with Public Broadcasting Services (PBS) reporters Fred deSam Lazaro and Thomas Adair, despite having proper accreditation. Theywere reporting on the government's response to the drought in the Oromia region, where protests have been ongoing since November 2015.Their passports and equipment were confiscated and they were forced toreturn to Addis Ababa.

"Despite the systematic repression of peaceful protestors, political dissents, journalists and human rights defenders, the absence of efficientand effective grievance redress mechanisms risks plunging the country into further turmoil," said Yared Hailemariam, Executive Director of AHRE."

In response to the on-going crackdown, the UN High Commissioner forHuman Rights, Zeid Ra'ad Al Hussein, has called for "access for independent observers to the country to assess the human rights situation". Ethiopia's government, however, has rejected the call and promised to launch its own investigation.

Ethiopia's National Human Rights Commission, which has the mandate toinvestigate rights violations in Ethiopia, has failed to make public its ownJune report on the Oromo protests, while concluding in its oral report to Parliament that the lethal force used by security forces in Oromia was proportionate to the risk they faced from the protesters. Since November2015, at least 500 demonstrators have been killed and thousands of others arrested in largely peaceful protests in the Oromia and Amhara regions and other locations across the country.

"The lack of independent and transparent investigation of human rights violations in Ethiopia strongly implies that the Ethiopian government's investigation of the ongoing human rights crisis will not be independent, impartial and transparent" said Sarah Jackson, Amnesty International's Deputy Regional Director for East Africa, the Horn and the Great Lakes. "Itis time to step up efforts for an international and independent investigation in Ethiopia."

A group of civil society organizations are calling for an independent and impartial international investigation into human rights violations in Ethiopia, including the unlawful killing of peaceful protesters and a recentspate of arrests of civil society members documenting the claim are the followed ones, DefendDefenders, AHRE, Amnesty International, EHRP, Front Line Defenders, and FIDH urge the Ethiopian authorities to (i) immediately and unconditionally release civil society members targeted for their work and (ii) facilitate access for international human rights monitoring bodies including the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) to conduct thorough, independent, impartial andtransparent investigations into the ongoing human rights violations in the Oromia, Amhara and Addis Ababa areas. Ethiopian Airlines Transports Troops to Amhara Region – To CrushGrowing Unrest By Ethiomedia August 31, 2016

On Tuesday, August 30th, Ethiopian Airlines made five flights to the City of Bahr Dar and transported over 1,000 heavily armed soldiers. Bahr Dar,the capital of Amhara region, is at the forefront of an anti-government uprising which has engulfed the entire region (which has a population of approximately 11.5 million people).

Chief of Staff Samora Yunis has reportedly arrived in Gonder. He hasindicated that the Army will try to crush the current massive citizens' protest. Thousands of soldiers are also being rushed to the area along land routes. In many towns and villages, the government has been dismantled, and community organizers installed. These transitional administrators are doing an excellent job, under most trying circumstances.

Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn has ordered the Army to kill protestors. During a press briefing on Tuesday, Hailemariam blamed foreigners and Ethiopians (living abroad) for the current unrest. Many Ethiopians consider Hailemariam's order as a "declaration of war" on thepeople of Amhara and Oromo. These two regions constitute two-thirds ofEthiopia's total population. Other citizens are concerned that the Army (which is well equipped but poorly trained) may commit genocide to put down the unrest. What makes the present situation even more volatile isthe fact that most Ethiopian citizens are trained to use weapons.

A large number of Ethiopians are also worried a civil war may break out. This will be far more serious than the present war in Syria. Ethiopia has apopulation of over 102 million people, as compared to Syria's population of 18 million. A civil war in Ethiopia will lead to a chaotic situation in the entire East African region, as well as a massive number of citizens fleeingto Europe.

A call to United Nations to stop genocide in Ethiopia: EALtransporting troops to restive northwest Ethiopia Ethiomedia News updates August 31, 2016

News updates: Ethiopian Airlines on Tuesday made five flights in a single day transporting over 1,000 heavily armed soldiers to Bahr Dar city, the capital of Amhara region which also in the forefront of an anti governmentuprising that has engulfed the entire Gonder-Gojjam mainstream Amhara region.

Armed Forces Chief of Staff Samora Yunus has arrived in Gonder, signifying that the army is going to be deployed to crush the public uprising against 25 years of brutal ethnic minority rule in the country. Thousands of soldiers are also being rushed to the area along land routes.In many towns and villages, government administrations have been dismantled and people’s committees installed.

Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn on his part has given orders to the country’s security forces to secure law and order in the protest-hit areas. During a press briefing, Hailemariam blamed what he called the traditionalenemies of the country as well as the ‘extremist diaspora’ for fomenting unrest.

Many activists have interpreted Hailemariam’s order as a “declaration of war” on the Amhara people. Others have expressed fear that the army may commit genocide to violently put down the uprising. Given the determination of the people, still other Ethiopians fear the country may slide into a civil war that may make Syria a child’s play. Ethiopia, they say, is home to nearly 100 million people, five times Syria’s, whose population was 22 million in 2015, and any civil war in Ethiopia means anunprecedented humanitarian catastrophe in Africa.

Ethiopia anti-government protesters set flower farms ablaze

By Associated Press September 1, 2016

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia — A Dutch company says protesters in Ethiopia are torching flower farms as they target businesses with links to thegovernment. Flowers are one of the country’s top exports.

The Esmeralda Farms statement comes amid anti-government protests inthe Oromia and Amhara regions in recent weeks that residents and rightsgroups say have left dozens dead. The company says its 10 million Euro investment went up in smoke this week in Bahir Dar city and that severalother horticulture companies were affected.

Demonstrators have been calling for wider freedoms in this East African country. The Ethiopian Human Rights Council has said government security forces are using excessive force against them. Ethiopia’s government, a close security ally of the West, is often accused of silencingdissent, even blocking internet access at times.

Ethiopia: Amhara Protesters Face a Regional Crackdown

By Stratfor (REUTERS) September 1, 2016

Protests in Ethiopia's Amhara regions remain geographically contained but have intensified over the past week. If the government's efforts to quell the insurrection donot succeed quickly, the region could become a breeding ground for greater unrest.

Protests in Ethiopia have taken on a more ominous tone in the past few days. The most recent insurrection is still largely contained in the country'snorthwestern regions near Lake Tana, an area populated by the Amhara ethnic group, which represents nearly 30 percent of Ethiopia's population.But the protests now present a real contest for control over the area.

Reports from opposition-leaning information channels increasingly mention armed civilians resisting security operations, and some even claim that localgovernment officials and security forces have been ousted from several population centers. In response, the government has dispatched a large number of troops to the Amhara region over the past two days.

The most important shift in the tenor of the protests have been attempts bycivilians to abolish established local administrations and statements indicating that regional councils are being formed to replace them. This is, of course, concerning to the government, and columns of troops and heavyequipment have been seen moving through Ethiopia toward the region.

Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn said the protests were not out of control and issued assurances that they will be contained. He authorized the country's armed forces to take "any and all" measures to restore order.

Although the government also pledged to make some minor reforms to address corruption in the ruling class, they fall far short of the larger demands by unhappy Ethiopians to end the rule of the Tigray ethnic group,which constitutes just 6 percent of the population. A regionwide crackdownagainst the unrest is expected, as troops move into the Gondar zone in thenorthern part of the Amhara region (though they have had to alter their routes to avoid barricades erected along the main roads into the protest areas).

The Amhara protests, which followed almost a year of protests by the Oromo people in other parts of the country, initially had been limited to almost dailyprotests or strikes in cities such as Gondar and Bahir Dar and sporadic protest marches in other areas. The activity has dramatically increased during the past week, however, and near constant demonstrations now pervade the core Amhara region. Instead of protesters coming to the streetsto face security forces, civilians are now directly targeting military personneland government officials — as well as their private residences — throughout the region. Those activities appear to be coordinated only locally, and there have not been signs of regionwide organization. If troops are unable to rapidly reinstate the local administrations and security forces, the region could provide a breeding ground for a further expansion of resistance to the government. If, however, the regional crackdown in progress succeeds, it will drain the protest movement of much of its momentum.

'Foreign firms attacked' as Ethiopia protests continue

Horn of Africa nation has seen months of protests during whichrights groups say security forces have killed hundreds.

Protesters in Ethiopia have attacked foreign businesses, according to theowners of a flower firm, as demonstrations in which rights groups say hundreds of people have been killed continued.

The Dutch company said crowds of people in the Oromia and Amhara regions torched flower farms as they targeted businesses with perceivedlinks to the government. Flowers are one of the country's top exports.

The Esmeralda Farms statement came after weeks of escalating protests that started among the Oromo, Ethiopia's biggest ethnic group, and later spread to the Amhara, the second most populous group. Both groups of protesters are demanding more political and economic rights, and say thata ruling coalition is dominated by the Tigrayan ethnic group, which makes up about 6 percent of the population.

According to the New York-based Human Rights Watch group, security forces have killed at least 500 people since the unrest began in Novemberand thousands of people have been arrested. The government has deniedthat violence from the security forces is "systemic" and pledged to launchan independent investigation, blaming opposition groups inside and outside of the country and what it called "anti-peace" elements for the chaos.

Esmeralda Farms said its 10 million euro ($11.1m) investment went up in smoke this week in Bahir Dar city and that several other horticulture companies were also affected. Remco Bergkamp, assistant manager at Esmeralda Farms in the Netherlands, told Al Jazeera that the company would probably leave Ethiopia, rather than rebuild the farm. "The situation is not stable enough to run a business. You just don’t know where thecountry is headed," Bergkamp told Al Jazeera.

Ethiopia has seen sustained economic growth in recent years and the government has been keen to attract foreign investors, often offering attractive incentives to firms who want to do business there. Government opponents, though, say the country's poorest have seen little benefit fromthe Investment. "The government sent security forces to protect the farm.Eventually the group of protesters grew so large that the soldiers were forced to flee and the property was torched," Bergkamp said. "One of our Ethiopian staff members was wounded in the attack."

Protests in Oromia started in November last year when the government announced a plan to expand the capital - a city state - into the surrounding Oromia region. Many Oromos saw that as a plan to remove them from fertile land. The scheme has since been dropped but the unrestspread as demonstrators called for the release of prisoners and for wider freedoms.

In the Amhara region, demonstrations began over the status of a district -Wolkait - that was once part of Amhara but was incorporated into the neighbouring Tigrayan region more than 20 years ago. Those demonstrations have also since widened.

The governing Ethiopian People's Revolutonary Democratic Front last month rejected a United Nations request that it send in observers, sayingit alone was responsible for the security of its citizens. The government, aclose security ally of the West, is often accused of silencing dissent, even blocking internet access at times. At elections last year, it won every seatin the 547-seat parliament.

HISTORICIZE

How the nation remember Meskerem 2 (Sept. 12) in the past?

The Provisional Military Ruling Council abbreviated as PMAC commonly known as the DUERG came to power after an outburst of public anger andriot just 41 years ago this day, and after effectively manipulating the situation and snatching the revolution from every one at that time. After 17 years of repression they were overthrown by another communist rebelgroup who actually started armed struggle even before the Duerg has proper control of the country. Many asked why the rebels started struggling before even checking whether the Duerg is repressive or not.

After 40 years the country is still witnessing similar public outburst, similar land system, similar organization of the public and similar ideology.All promised democracy and right for the people, and better life. The past 41 years were miseries for millions of Ethiopians, millions of people died by internal civil war, famine, systematic killing, etc.. and hundreds of thousands were tortured, displaced, and flee their own country. No one so far can justify who is responsible for the miseries of the country and itspeople in the past 40 years. Share your thoughts and experiences…..

A Glimpse into the Amhara Awakening

By Messay Kebede (PhD) September 2, 2016

Let me begin by sharing my surprise at the dazzling nature of Amhara open resistance and determination in the fight against the government and the repressive forces of the TPLF. Of course, the wide but subdued discontent of the Amhara was quite obvious for anybody with a minimum sense of observation. But nobody expected that, within a short period of time, an active and confrontational form of resistance will engulf the wholeAmhara region, whose consequence is the exposure of the depth of the popular discontent as well as of the vulnerability of the regime after 25 years of tight dictatorial rule. As a matter of fact, those who follow my online write-ups know that, at the peak of the Oromo unrest, I posted an article urging the Amhara to join the protest. At the same time, I was confronted with some articles explaining the Amhara reluctance by the fear that secessionists are leading the Oromo protest. According to the articles, to support the protest under this condition would be tantamount to endorsing the secession of Oromia.

How, then, is, one to explain this sudden and massive uprising of a peoplethat many, especially the ruling clique, had considered as decisively beaten and resigned to a second-rate citizenship? And what happened to the fear of Oromo secession for the Amhara to rise so massively and all ofa sudden against a demeaning ruling elite that they were allegedly tolerating in the name of peace and the unity of the country?

I think an understanding of the uprising transpires if we start our analysis from the fact of a wide and deep frustration of the Amhara. This frustration is not only due to the lack of economic opportunities and the dictatorial methods of the government, but also to the TPLF's systematic policy of humiliating and marginalizing an ethnic group with impressive records of leadership and achievements in the past as well as in modern Ethiopia. Perhaps the psychological frustration of humiliation at being bothdegraded and demeaned is even stronger than economic deprivation and youth unemployment.

Add to this already intense frustration the dispute over the identity of thepeople of Wolkait-Tegede and the government's recourse to force to dealwith the dispute. Without doubt, the violent response was, as the saying goes, the final straw that broke the camel's back. As a cumulative process, frustration has a boiling point which, when reached, changes qualitatively into open rebellion. When frustration reaches such a heightened level, fear vanishes in the face of an anger that is no longer containable.

Some such explanation leaves us still perplexed: true, anger explodes, butfor that reason it is also short-lived and cannot by itself alone feeds on a prolonged resistance because very soon the fear of repression and violent death sets in, reviving the previous attitude of quiet resentment. To all appearances, however, the Amhara uprising has gone beyond the explosion of anger: it is changing into a political movement, which can no longer defeated, even if it is possible to intermittently muzzle it by means of harsh and indiscriminate repression.

It is here that the importance of the Oromo uprising comes into play. The precedence of the Oromo rebellion achieved two interrelated results. First,it created the sense of the Amhara and Oromo being both victims of the same ruthless and discriminatory rule. This common condition became notonly the basis of a rapprochement, but also ushered in a vision in which both will have their proper places in a truly democratic Ethiopia. Secondly,in addition to decrease the fear of disintegration, the Oromo rebellion exposed the fundamental weakness and vulnerability of the regime. The mobilization of army units to crush a popular rebellion is not a sign of strength; it is the proof that the regime has lost all legitimacy so that it can only govern by force and intimidation. Such a regime is at the mercy of incidents, not to mention the inevitability of internal divisions and even of a coup d'état.

When you combine intense frustration with the vulnerability of the existingregime, you have a revolutionary situation, exactly as Lenin describes it.
To quote him, "for a revolution to take place it is not enough for the exploited and oppressed masses to realize the impossibility of living in theold way, and demand changes; for a revolution to take place it is essentialthat the exploiters should not be able to live and rule in the old way. It is only when the 'lower classes' do not want to live in the old way and the 'upper classes' cannot carry on in the old way that the revolution can triumph." Indeed, for the Amhara as well as for the Oromo, the TPLF can no longer rule in the old day and they themselves do not want to be ruledin the old way: change is in sight.

Last but not least, the other triggering factor was the impact of what can be called "the appeal of the hero." I have in mind the inspiring reaction of Colonel Demeke Zewdu to the illegal attempt to arrest him by TPLFite hitmen. His determined refusal and his self-defensive measure had a deepresonance on the Amhara soul, all the more resoundingly as they brought back to memory the glorious past from which the modern Amhara wandered away, at least since the Italian occupation of Ethiopia. In showing the example, Colonel Demeke both exhorted the Amhara to rise to the level of their historical legacy and injected a bitter dose of shame attheir resignation to be humiliated by TPLFite renegades, who indeed did not even hesitate to throw away Tigray's long-standing and zealous commitment to Ethiopian integrity. The families of the inmates told when they reached the gate to see their loved ones, gunfire was continually fired andthey have been chased by the security guard without no information whathappened to the prison. At least 20 killed at Qilinto Maximum Prison in Ethiopia WASHINGTON, DC (Sept 3) - At least 20 prisoners were killed and many others injured Saturday night when fire broke out at a prison housing the most prominent opposition leaders as well as religious figures and university students.

Qilinto Prison, which is on the outskirts of Addis Ababa, is where Oromo Federalist Congress (OFC) leader Bekele Gerba and his comrades as wellas the leading members of the Muslim committee were serving time.

Most of the dead were killed after they were shot at by security guards ofthe prison.

The state-owned EBC TV put the toll as one person dead, and six othersinjured. The public usually discredits EBC as baseless and a propagandatool of the ruling party.

The prison remains cordoned off to public, saying the cause of the fire wasunder investigation. No victims have been identified by their names either,throwing families and friends of the prisoners into confusion and anxiety.

TPLF, the dominant group in the coalition EPRDF, has a history of settingprisons on fire, and when inmates flee, greeting them with an outburst ofmachine-gun fire.

"We are seriously worried about the fate of our leaders, members andsupporters of our party," OFC deputy Mulatu Gemechu told VOA correspondent Eskinder Frew on Tuesday.

He said the Qilinto Fire tragedy was reminiscent of the Ambo Prison and Gonder Prison tragedies. In both cases, prisoners who were trying to savethemselves by fleeing the inferno were gunned down by security guards.

A report of the nearly two-dozen deaths of prison inmates has not beenverified by an independent body.

The ruling TPLF party, in power since 1991, is facing widespread public uprising, notably in Oromia and Amhara regions. Lately, the regime hasdeployed the military in the rebelling regions, and human rights activitsfear atrocities may have been already committed thanks to a news blackout that the government has imposed either by shutting down theInternet or other means of public communications.

Deadly Qilinto Prison fire the work of the government: WitnessesBy Ethiomedia September 5, 2016

ADDIS ABABA (Sept 5) - The fire and ensuing gunfire that killed at least 20 inmates at Qilinto maximum security prison on Saturday were clearlythe work of the government, witnesses have told the media.

"At 8 o'clock in the morning, we were waiting for the guards to open thegate for us to hand over meals and other necessities for our loved ones being held there," a relative of one political prisoner said.

"Unlike other days, we were forced to stay away... until about 9:30 AM when an outburst of gunfire was heard. we were in the middle of what seemed a war zone. We were running in every direction to save our lives,"the witness, who sought anonymity for fear of a government reprisal, said. "They [the government] knew what they were doing. They had a plan to start fire and mow down inmates under the pretext of stopping a jailbreak." the witness added.

A second witness also shared the same line of story that there was no gunfire and no smoke until around 9:30 AM when we were at risk of beingkilled from gunshots. "The guards kept us away from the prison compoundfor what seemed nearly two hours when all of a sudden chaos reigned: shots were being fired. Then from a distance we began to see a heartbreaking scene: plumes of smoke rising from the quarters where high-profile prisoners like Bekele Gerba and Yonatan Tesfaye were being held."

Throughout the day, the place looked like a battle site. Ambulances rushing victims to hospitals. Fire fighters fighting the blaze. And yet guards were busy firing shots. Though victims were being taken to mainlythree hospitals in Addis, they were off-limits to visitors some of whom were openly crying for their loved ones who didn't know whether they were dead or alive.

St. Paul's hospital Forensic Unit received the bodies of about 20 inmates while other hospitals, Tirunesh Beijing General Hospital and Police Hospitalwere flooded with the wounded, sources said.

Until this hour, the government has released no information on the identities of the victims, despite saying the cause of the fire was underinvestigation.

Over 3,000 inmates were being held in three zones of Qilinto Prison. Eachzone has eight prison halls, housing close to one thousand inmates. Of all,Zone 2 was reportedly destroyed by the fire. Families of inmates were going to prisons in other towns like Ziway and Shewa Robit in case they were there.

PMHD sacks Ethiopian Edu Minister Shiferaw Shigute
Published September 5, 2016

Shiferaw is an executive committee member of EPRDF and former president of SNNP region. Shiferaw is the second person to be sacked from Hailemariam's homeparty SEPDM after the latest EPRDF Council meeting.

The EPRDF council announced last week a plan to conduct massive "clean up" including its top leadership. It appears Hailemariam is setting the tone of the purge bysacking two ministers, who are also two of the 9 top people in SEPDM.

The EPRDF executive committee consists 36 members drawn from the four memberparties. OPDO had sacked one of its executive committee members in June.
ANDM and TPLF are expected to follow suit.

Qilinto Prison Fire:
Eyewitness – "They were indiscriminately shooting at prisoners"
MINILIK SALSAWI September 5, 2016
In a disturbing e-mail message received by Addis Standard, an eyewitnesswho said he was on guard the morning of Saturday Sep 3, says that armed prison guards were indiscriminately shooting at prisoners" most of whom were running "frantically to extinguish the fire" that broke at Ethiopia's notorious prison ward known as Qilinto, in Aqaqi, on the outskirts south of the capital.

The government has not released the extent of the fire, not the cause ofit, but several social media accounts allege the death toll reaching above
20. Until this morning families of prisoners who want to know the safety oftheir loved ones are not allowed to pass the Tirunesh Beijing Hospital, located at about three km before the prison. Some families said the prisonadministration told them information on the safety and whereabouts of the prisoners will only be available on Wednesday this week.

In the e-mail, the person who also attached his work ID but said he wishes to remain anonymous wrote many prisoners were "kept at gun point" from approaching the area where the fire was destroying parts of the prison in the "southern end of the ward." "I have seen about five prisoners gunned down in the spot by armed security guards from two different towers during the first 20 minutes only," the email said. It added: "unarmed guards at the gate, including myself, were told by theprison admiration to instruct family members who were already at the gate and who came to visit their loved ones to return back.”

The maximum security prison is administered by the Addis Abeba Prison administration but since Saturday morning the “federal army has taken over the security and most of the prison guards, including myself, are notallowed inside since then.”

The fire broke at around 8:10 AM in the morning and lasted a good “two hours” before the fire brigade from the Addis Abeba Fire and Emergency Prevention and Rescue Agency arrived at the scene. The state-affiliated news portal FBC reported that three firefighters were treated at a hospitalfor smoke related breathing problems while it maintained only one personwas killed in the accident.

However, in the email received by Addis Standard, the security guard revealed that he has helped “18 bodies being taken out of the prison in the late afternoon. As far as I know none of the dead were due to the fire.They all died of gunshot wounds.”

Abusive prison

Qilinto is known for the harsh treatment of its prisoners, many of who are prisoners of conscious including the prominent opposition leader Bekele Gerba, secretary general of the opposition Oromo Federalist Congress (OFC), and 21 others with him facing charges of terrorism. It is also whereYonatan Tesfaye, the young senior opposition Blue Party member, and prominent rights activist is held.

Recently Bekele Gerba and others with him were mobilizing activists from their cell by sending letters which were secretly smuggled out of the maximum security prison. One such letter called for peaceful resistance aspart of the ongoing #AmharaProtests and #OromoProtests and asked supporters of the protests to shave their heads and wear black, to which supporters responded in numbers.

Three days after the tragic incident exact figures of causalities (both deathand injuries, as well as property damages) are still hard to come by. The prison itself is not accessible to anyone and is being guarded by heavily armed federal police officers who are also conducting rigorous searching ofresidents living nearby.

Eyewitnesses say the remaining prisoners were taken on Saturday afternoon to Ziway prison, located some 200km south of the capital. However, due to the inaccessibility of the prison and unavailability of official information, Addis Standard is unable to verify both the e-mailedinformation and other eyewitness accounts. 160 Years Old Man In Ethiopia

He remembers emperors Menelik & Haile Selassie

It has been reported that a 160 year old man is still living today in theremote parts of Ethiopia.

Retired farmer Dhaqabo Ebba, the grand old man is said to clearly remember details of the first Italian war of aggression against Ethiopia. Ethiopia was then ruled by Emperor Menelik, an Uncle to Emperor Haile Selassie. In that war, the Ethiopian armed forces led by Emperor MenelikII defeated the Italians. This was in 1895.

In 1895, the grand old man was already married with two wives. He had ason old enough to herd cattle at that time.

According to the reports, this man provided so much minute details of thatperiod around 1895 that the earliest one could calculate his real age was between 140 to 160 years.

Though there is no documentary proof of his real age, his story is corroborated by material and documentary evidence of the said period, aswell as the confirmation of his neighbours and fellow villagers.

As the oldest man in his region where records are passed and kept orally,he is a living library and an encyclopaedia of cultural and scientific knowledge of the folks of those times.

BBC UK NEWS REPORT:

This man might possibly be the oldest man in Africa and the world

An Ethiopian reporter claims to have discovered the world’s oldest livingman.

Retired farmer Dhaqabo Ebba claims to have clear memories of Italy’s 1895 invasion of the country. In an interview with regional Oromiya TV, he provided so much detail on the changes of power in his local area that reporter Mohammed Ademo has become convinced that Dhaqabo must beat least 160 – 46 years older than the oldest ever recorded man.

‘When Italy invaded Ethiopia I had two wives, and my son was old enoughto herd cattle,’ he said at home near Dodola. He went on to recount his childhood eight-day horseback ride to Addis Ababa – a journey of a few hours today.

There is no way of verifying Mr Dhaqabo’s age, but Mohammed Ademo notes that in an oral society like the Oromo, “every time an elder dies, alibrary is lost. Ebba is one such library from whom so much can still be preserved”. Source: AfricanResource

Ethiopia lacks a model of leadership – Jerusalem postBy SHMUEL LEGESSE September 6, 2016

THE LOCAL independent Ethiopian citizens' news agencies are reporting outside the country that there is a huge popular mobilization against thegovernment.

In January, 2016, Ethiopian Foreign Minister Tedros Adhanom was nominated as Africa's candidate for director general of the UN WorldHealth Organization.

Just this past week, former New York City mayor Michael Bloomberg wasnamed global ambassador for noncommunicable diseases (NCDs) by theWHO, a position in which he will serve under whoever is ultimately appointed as the WHO's director general. While Bloomberg, with his impeccable record of public health advocacy and international philanthropy, is clearly over-qualified for this role, what frightens me is the potential appointment of Adhanom as his superior. A rudimentary comparison of these two men's records highlights the latter's extreme unfitness for the office he seeks to assume and the absurdity of his evenbeing considered.

During his unprecedented three-term tenure, mayor Bloomberg took direct control of the troubled New York City school system and oversaw a marked increase in children's test scores; he banned smoking in restaurants, bars, parks and other indoor and outdoor public arenas; he partnered with and empowered citizens of the city by calling upon them tonotify authorities of suspicious happenings they observed; he established a comprehensive information hotline that provides vital factual data to citydwellers and visitors in more than 170 languages; he banned trans-fats and mandated the posting of calorie counts in New York restaurants, measures that have since been adopted in major cities throughout the nation toward combating rising obesity rates in both adults and children;he used his own private funds to pay for a Super Bowl ad promoting stricter gun control.

And this is a mere sampling of his contributions to the quality of life of thepeople he governed. Now that his terms as mayor have ended, he has expanded his health, well-being and justice initiatives to the broader global community and continues to work tirelessly, and to donate generously, to promote causes at the core of human flourishing.

No model of leadership could be more divergent from Bloomberg's than the one Ethiopian Foreign Minister Adhanom, along with his political associates, represents. The current Ethiopian government is widely recognized as a criminally organized group with high rates of human rights abuses. According to The New York Times and Human Rights Watch, tens of thousands of peaceful protesters against the government have been incarcerated, and over 700 have been killed, in recent months.The Ethiopian athlete Feyisa Lilesa made a powerful public gesture in solidarity with his oppressed countrymen at the Summer Olympics in Rio last month and was warned not to return home afterward.

The International Committee to Protect Journalists reports that Ethiopia is among Africa's leading jailers of journalists and has destroyed its own independent civil society. The UN Commissioner for Human Rights has requested an independent evaluation of the deaths of hundreds of peaceful civilian protesters in recent months at the hands of the Ethiopian army. However, Foreign Minister Adhanom and his government have refused external evaluation of human rights abuses complained of by largenumbers of citizens.

THE LOCAL independent Ethiopian citizens' news agencies are reporting outside the country that there is a huge popular mobilization against thegovernment.

The local citizens are demonstrating peacefully, with the following complaints: that the government is killing them indiscriminately and robbing the country of power and economic resources, which are being funneled to one small, elite tribal group (known as the Tgria Peoples Liberation Front), and that their land is being sold to the Tgrian tribe, orthat this tribe is selling their land to foreign investors.

On the day that the athlete Lilesa showed his support at the Olympics in Rio, there was a demonstration planned in the capital city of Addis Ababa,but the government deployed military force to put down the peaceful citizens who organized it. Only Lilesa could make his statement, safely insulated, for the moment, from the army's threatened violence, by acouple thousand miles.

His fellow citizens at home were not so fortunate. Just this past week,Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn announced on nationaltelevision that all military personnel would be ordered to open fire on peaceful demonstrators, which, on the first day following, resulted in dozens of civilian deaths.

Britain Foreign Secretary Philip Hammond recently warned, in a meeting with Adhanom, that Ethiopia's "repeated failure to deliver on our basic requests" regarding an Ethiopian-born English citizen being held on death row simply because he is the opposition party leader had led him be begin"looking carefully at the bilateral relationship" between the two nations.
This is yet another example of the current Ethiopian government'spervasive corruption and lawlessness.

As a chief agent of this depraved, bloody government body, how can Adhanom be considered as a prospective director general of the WHO? How does his candidacy reflect on the WHO itself, or, more broadly, the UN's role as the world's moral anchor and arbiter? Clearly, there is no justway forward but for the UN to investigate the current Ethiopian government's reported abuses and to renounce the candidacy of its foreign minister for the position he seeks at the WHO.

It is perhaps in the values that underlie the actions of Bloomberg and Adhanom, respectively, that the starkest contrast between these two menmight be drawn. Bloomberg has often been quoted as saying, "The thing about great wealth is that you can't take it with you," by way of explainingwhy he is choosing to give so much of his private fortune away – a total of $4.3 billion thus far, including $510 million distributed by his philanthropies in 2015 alone. Adhanom, on the other hand, is a prominentmember of the Ethiopian government whose former leader, Meles Zenawi (the man who appointed Adhanom to his position), had a reported net worth of over $3b., having amassed this amount entirely during his years in office.

He took power in 1991 with an officially listed salary of $220 per month, and had no private financial resources to his name at that point. Today, allthe top leaders of the TPLF are billionaires, though their nation remains animpoverished member of the Third World. Sadly, the source of these leaders' newfound wealth is not too hard to surmise.

I have lived, for years, under the governance of both mayor Bloomberg and Finance Minister Adhanom and can thus attest, on a personal level, tothe disparate impact of their leadership on the people they've ruled. I know, first hand, what it has been like to live under the policies of Bloomberg's and Adhanom's administrations, and how each has affectedthe daily life of his constituency.

More than all the facts and figures I have cited above, these real-life, on- the-ground experiences have shaped my conviction that Adhanom and hiscronies must go if my native land is ever to prosper as my adopted city has in the past few decades. The WHO's recent appointments, within the broader context of rising unrest in Ethiopia, where my family resides, andmy own relatively secure life in New York, have brought this realization home to me as never before. I can only hope that the world will begin to see things in kind.

Dutch Flower Farm Closes Doors After Attack by EthiopianMilitants Amsterdam (NL Times) September 7, 2016

Flower company Esmeralda Farms Nederland in Aalsmeer is closing its doors permanently after its farm in Ethiopia was burned to the ground by militants lastweek. The damage to the farm is extensive that the American parent companydecided to close the Dutch branch, NU.nl reports.

Esmeralda Flowers in Aalsmeer was largely dependent on the production at its Ethiopian farm. A spokesperson said to NU that the loss of supply from the Africancountry fatally wounded the company.

That means that the over 600 workers in Ethiopia and 14 employees in theNetherlands now lost their jobs, director Loui Hooijman confirmed.

The militants attacked the Esmeralda Flowers farm and a number of other foreign farms near Bahir Dar because they have ties with the Ethiopian government. The attacks follow an ongoing dispute between some parts of the Ethiopian population that feel they are not profiting from the country's economic growth and the government. Human rights groups reported that the government killed more than 500people since June in an effort to suppress the protests.

According to NU.nl, there are about 350 Dutch people in the affected area in theAmhara region.

Perfect Storm in Ethiopia: Big Government Controlled by a SmallGroup By Mehari Fisseha

September 7, 2016

In an Al Jazeera article published on August 20, 2016, security forces were reported to have used excessive force in quelling recent anti- government demonstrations in Ethiopia. Video footage showing the protest was embedded in the article with Aljazeera's reporter Charles Stratford interviewing victims of the violence. According to Stratford, thewave of violence was fueled by tribal conflict that began with the Oromo,the biggest ethnic community in Ethiopia. Most notable here is the fact that the Ethiopian government is controlled by the country's smallest ethnic group. The protests were organized to demonstrate against violations of the human rights by the ruling party.

Political and Social Drivers

In his report, Stratford stated that Human Rights Watch had estimated thenumber of people killed in the protests at 500 people. The demonstrationsfirst arose in November 2015 and since then thousands of Ethiopian nationals have been arrested and detained. Human Rights Watch reiterates that the Amhara (Ethiopia's second largest tribe) joined the Oromo in protesting against the violation of both political and economic rights. The article features one picture of a protesters with a poster stating, "Stop killing the Oromo people." This poster clearly shows that theOromo people are under fire from the government security forces, raising the possibility that the protests are due to systemic violence.

Ethiopian government spokesman Getachew Reda was also interviewed inthe article and he denied the violence being "systemic." In his explanation, Mr. Reda stated that the Ethiopian government took seriouslythe allegations of "off-grid police officers" who used excessive force on peaceful protesters. Nevertheless, the government was stated to blame the predicament on the opposition working from within and outside Ethiopia. The government stated that the opposition had used "anti-peaceforces" to organize "unauthorized protests." The article raised the need foraccountability.

Speaking for the Office of the UN High Commission for Human Rights (OHCHR), Ravina Shamdasani stated that commission was ready to start investigations into the Ethiopian situation. Ethiopia had previously dismissed pressure from the UN to permit investigations into the killings ofinternational observers. Ms. Shamdasani clarified that the UN welcomed investigations by the Ethiopian government on violations of human rights since the inception of the unrests in Oromia. She reiterated that the probe was supposed to be "independent, transparent, thorough and effective." Thus, the success of this investigation would be dependent onthe cooperation of the Ethiopian government.

Stratford also reported that the Ethiopian government had pledged to punish all members of the security forces found guilty of killing innocentprotesters. However, there has since been no information in the domain of any culprit being brought to book. It is thus important to consider the constitution of human rights violations according to the Ethiopian government that would warrant possible arrests and detention of guilty officers. Furthermore, the conflict and ensuing investigations impact directly to the future progress of Ethiopia and the entire East African region.

Future Impact of the Situation in Ethiopia

Owing to the fact that up to 500 people have been killed in the Ethiopian protests from November 2015 to August 2016, the number is likely to riseexponentially if these protests and violent responses are not quelled.

According to Asafa Jalata "terrorism" has been fostered within the Ethiopian government against the Oromo people beginning with the "last decades of the 19th Century. Although they are the largest ethnic community, the Oromo people have faced tragedy and destruction especially by the Abyssinia people that dominate the government since the colonial period. The Oromo population has been shrinking drastically inthe wake of anti-government protests, leading to a decrease in economic development.

In a CNN article by Awol Allo, the United States was cited as the greatestcontributor to the deadlock in Ethiopia. With its funding capabilities and the recent visit of the US President to Ethiopia, the US was seen to escalate tensions in the country. Pressure from civil society organizationsand human rights groups in the international arena have mounted such that the US withdrew funding aid to Ethiopia until investigations into the violence are conducted. The withdrawal of the US will also push other international donors from supporting Ethiopian projects.

According to Dana Sanchez, Western government are accused of funding of Ethiopian projects despite the country's crisis. The protests began whena development plan was drawn to enlarge the "territorial limits of Addis Ababa" into the ancestral lands of the Oromo in April 2014. The Oromo people feared that this development agenda of the government would evict them as it had been shown since the colonial era. With over 33 million people representing the Oromo people in Ethiopia, continued violence would in turn lead to a huge spill-over of refugees into neighboring East African countries.

Awol K. Allo's article stated that the US aided Ethiopia saw the Mulatu Teshome-led government as a partner against global terrorism attacks. However, the escalation of violence against the Oromo, who are widely affiliated to the Muslim religion, will attract the attention of terrorists not only into Ethiopia but the entire East African region. Additional marginalization of the Oromo will work to suppress economic progress in the region and downplay investment decisions by foreigners in the future.(text ends)

HISTORICIZE:

US targets Ethiopia for sanctions

BBC News: September 7, 2016

Legislator Donald Payne told the BBC the House of Representatives passed the bill "because there has been a serious problem with democracyin Ethiopia". Ethiopia's ambassador to the US criticised the proposal sayingit would "undermine regional stability". Ethiopia is the US's strongest ally in the region in its "war on terror".

The legislation now passes to the Senate for approval and can be vetoedby the president. Correspondents say Ethiopia has come in for increasedcriticism over its human rights record since the violent crackdown on postpoll protests in 2005; opposition leaders imprisoned as a consequence have subsequently been released.

And since Ethiopia's went into Somalia last December to help the transitional government- a rebellion in its eastern Ogaden region whichborders Somalia has escalated.

'Correct wrongdoings'

The US representatives approved the Ethiopian Democracy and Accountability Act on Tuesday, which puts Ethiopian government officials atrisk of being denied entry visas over human rights violations.

It also threatens to withhold military aid of at least $1.5m

Mr Payne said the bill was bipartisan and secured unanimous approval. "It'ssomething that's been discussed ever since the killing of civilians, gunned down in the streets of Addis [Ababa] almost two years ago," the DemocraticCongressman told the BBC's Network Africa.

"There was a feeling that Ethiopia, being an ally of the United States, should have an opportunity to correct some of the wrongdoings, and thathas not happened. "Two years later people are still being imprisoned.

There's still problems in the Ogaden region. People are having food kept away from them. That's why we finally said we need to move forward withit."

Samuel Assefa, Ethiopia's ambassador to the US, called the bill "irresponsible" and said it would hamper efforts to improve things. "The legislation also would undermine regional stability in the Horn of Africa by jeopardising vital security cooperation between the United States and Ethiopia," he said in a statement, Reuters news agency reports.

The BBC's Elizabeth Blunt in Addis Ababa says as Ethiopia is such a strong ally of the US in the Horn of Africa, it is unlikely that President George Bush's administratation will be sympathetic to the bill

TPLF's Desperate Measures:
Genocide, Deceit and Divide-and-Conquer
Selam Beyene (PhD) September 7, 2016

Confronted with fiercely determined resistance from all corners of Ethiopia, the Woyane regime has desperately resorted to its notorious andcontemptible tactics of divide-and-concur, genocide, and sinister power- sharing scam to abort a budding insurrection. Ethiopians in the Diaspora, opposition leaders at home and abroad, and backers of the criminal TPLF regime in the West have a moral responsibility to avert a human tragedy of biblical proportion in the Amhara and Oromo regions being perpetrated by a brutal dictatorship.

Playing the Ethnic Card
In a last ditch effort to break the solidifying solidarity between the Amharaand Oromo people, the regime has now unveiled, through its mouthpiece Aigaforum, its intention to "… introduce legislation to make Oromiffa as official language besides Amharic in Addis Ababa, … in line with the special status of Addis Ababa as a region and its significance to Oromia region." Obviously, the declared intention, which is preposterous at best and egregiously offensive at worst, does not pass a sniff test for sincerity. While there is no genuine Ethiopian who would have any qualms about instituting legislation to elevate in a just society the status of Oromiffa or the rights of the Oromo or any other ethnic group, the TPLF regime, whichhas massacred peaceful protesters, trashed basic human rights, and distinguished itself as one of the most repressive governments on the faceof the earth, can no longer delude the opposition through appeasement and subornment at a time when it is cornered like a caged animal.

Over the years, the TPLF thugs have been too inebriated by corruption and greed to heed Joseph Conrad's words: "Your strength is just an accident arising from the weakness of others". The people of Oromo and Amhara have now firmly grasped that Woyane's accidental rise to power and atrociously unrestrained abuse of human rights have been enabled bythe hitherto failure of the various groups to rise in unison to abolish the malignantly repressive system.

The legitimate questions of the Oromo people, as well as the broader demands for democracy, can only get lasting and genuine solutions when the repressive and corrupt minority rule of the TPLF is abolished and a justsystem of government is established based on the universal principles of equality, fraternity and liberty.

Therefore, this recent futile ploy by the evil regime to nip at the bud theemerging solidarity among the Oromo, Amhara and other ethnic groups should not be allowed to thwart the nascent uprising, thereby giving adying dictatorship another lease at life.

Genocide as a Means of Prolonging Power

Over the last several months, the ethnocentric regime has unleashed itskilling machinery, which is generously oiled by Western donors, and hasviciously massacred defenseless Oromo and Amhara people, as it has recurrently done so against any group it has perceived as a threat sinceits inception in the bushes of Tigray.

The West, blinded by a myopic and puerile policy of sacrificing long-term stability and democratic governance in favor of short-term alliance againstextremism, is shamelessly watching as the brutal TPLF leaders let loose their destructive forces against peaceful protesters in the Oromo and Amhara regions.

Paradoxically, President Barack Obama has yet to officially comment on the vicious killings of Oromo and Amhara victims by those very criminalshe brazenly praised as democratically elected. This has come as a shocking surprise even to those who are in the know about the close tiesof his National Security advisor, Susan Rice, to the Woyane regime and her fanatical worship of the late Meles Zenawi.

The hundreds of thousands of Ethiopian Americans, who overwhelmingly voted for Barack Obama in the last two elections, are carefully watching whether Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton would have themoral backbone to atone for past sins by officially denouncing the killingsof Amharas and Oromos by the dictators, who had once paid, through their agent Mohammed al- Amoudi, $20 million in a quid pro quo to the Clinton Foundation.

Today, the people of the Amhara region are being slaughtered with impunity by a ruthless army that is trained, advised and modernly equipped by the Pentagon. However, there is no force that can permanently stop an uprising of the kind that has manifested itself in the regions of Gondar and Gojjam. In fact, history is a witness that the genocidal actions of the dictators and the immoral silence of their Westernbackers would only lead to a continuous and violent recrudescence of the upheaval that is now shaking the very foundation of a jumpy dictatorial regime.

The Power-Sharing Gambit

On another front, the regime is busy formulating a sham scheme to attract the attentions of gullible opposition leaders through a power- sharing maneuver. The idea, apparently espoused by worried U.S. State Department career bureaucrats, is again a reincarnation of the same oldand deceitful policy that the regime has used to prolong its repressive rules for over two decades.

Opposition groups should be under no illusion that a just system could beestablished through a power-sharing arrangement with a criminal regime.An authoritarian government that has committed crimes against humanity, destroyed the national fabric of a nation, and plundered the meager resources of a defenseless people, cannot be trusted to cohabit ina democratic framework with those it has abused for much too long.

A Call to Action

Today Ethiopia is at a crossroads. Hardened by decades of repression, abuse and injustice, the people have risen in their ferocious and determined might to deal the Woyane dictatorial rule a fatal blow. It is high time for the Western sponsors of this criminal and failed governmentto stand with the people, and support the revolution to end an era of human suffering and repression. By all indications, the end is in sight for the minority regime whose guiding philosophy is engrained in deception, corruption, treachery, criminality, brute force and a dated principle of divide-and-rule.

The judgment of history would also be equally harsh against those in theopposition who may fall in the traps of Woyane, tempted by the lure of power sharing, and serve as unwitting accomplices of the dictators to thwart the people's march to victory.

The indefatigable Ethiopians in the Diaspora should continue their vigil, and use their electoral might to force national and regional candidates to take stand on the emergent human tragedy perpetrated by the TPLF ethnocentric regime against our compatriots in the Amhara and Oromo regions. Indeed, as we are attempting to do so through a copy of this communication, there should be a sustained effort to nudge candidates forpolitical offices in the U.S. and elsewhere to call for the prosecution of all TPLF leaders who are responsible for the genocide and suppression of human rights in Ethiopia. Dutch Flower Farm Closes Doors After Attack by EthiopianMilitants Amsterdam (NL Times) September 7, 2016

Flower company Esmeralda Farms Nederland in Aalsmeer is closing its doors permanently after its farm in Ethiopia was burned to the ground by militants lastweek. The damage to the farm is extensive that the American parent companydecided to close the Dutch branch, NU.nl reports.

Esmeralda Flowers in Aalsmeer was largely dependent on the production at its Ethiopian farm. A spokesperson said to NU that the loss of supply from the Africancountry fatally wounded the company.

That means that the over 600 workers in Ethiopia and 14 employees in theNetherlands now lost their jobs, director Loui Hooijman confirmed.

The militants attacked the Esmeralda Flowers farm and a number of other foreign farms near Bahir Dar because they have ties with the Ethiopian government. The attacks follow an ongoing dispute between some parts of the Ethiopian population that feel they are not profiting from the country's economic growth and the government. Human rights groups reported that the government killed more than 500people since June in an effort to suppress the protests.

According to NU.nl, there are about 350 Dutch people in the affected area in theAmhara region.

US targets Ethiopia for sanctions

BBC News: September 7, 2016

Legislator Donald Payne told the BBC the House of Representatives passed the bill “because there has been a serious problem with democracyin Ethiopia”.

Ethiopia's ambassador to the US criticised the proposal saying it would"undermine regional stability". Ethiopia is the US's strongest ally in theregion in its "war on terror".

The legislation now passes to the Senate for approval and can be vetoedby the president. Correspondents say Ethiopia has come in for increasedcriticism over its human rights record since the violent crackdown on postpoll protests in 2005; opposition leaders imprisoned as a consequence have subsequently been released.

And since Ethiopia's went into Somalia last December to help the transitional government- a rebellion in its eastern Ogaden region whichborders Somalia has escalated.

'Correct wrongdoings'

The US representatives approved the Ethiopian Democracy and Accountability Act on Tuesday, which puts Ethiopian government officials atrisk of being denied entry visas over human rights violations.

It also threatens to withhold military aid of at least $1.5m

Mr Payne said the bill was bipartisan and secured unanimous approval.

"It's something that's been discussed ever since the killing of civilians, gunned down in the streets of Addis [Ababa] almost two years ago," theDemocratic Congressman told the BBC's Network Africa.

"There was a feeling that Ethiopia, being an ally of the United States, should have an opportunity to correct some of the wrongdoings, and thathas not happened.

"Two years later people are still being imprisoned. There's still problems inthe Ogaden region. People are having food kept away from them. That's why we finally said we need to move forward with it."

Samuel Assefa, Ethiopia's ambassador to the US, called the bill "irresponsible" and said it would hamper efforts to improve things.

"The legislation also would undermine regional stability in the Horn of Africaby jeopardising vital security cooperation between the United States and Ethiopia," he said in a statement, Reuters news agency reports.

The BBC's Elizabeth Blunt in Addis Ababa says as Ethiopia is such a strong ally of the US in the Horn of Africa, it is unlikely that President George Bush's administratation will be sympathetic to the bill

Political Grievances in Ethiopia and the Way Forward

By Waltenegus Dargie September 7, 2016

The political development in our country is both alarming and grievous. We are hearing the heart-wrenching tides of young people dying by tens and hundreds every single day, gunned down by federal police, the sole purpose of which should have been to protect and, if needed, sacrifice its life for them. No doubt the country is heading towards an irreversible endthe outcome of which we cannot predict at this point in time. And yet, thegovernment seems to be unable and unwilling to save the country from calamity, carrying out plans which are contrary to common sense and outof time and out of place. The reasons may be the following:

1. Inasmuch as there are genuine people in the government who sincerely believe that they are serving their country, the multitude components have personal interest in the establishment. They haveeffectively used it in the past to massively invest in local businessesfrom which they harvest richly. These people will not give up their interest so easily. Indeed, some need to buy time to bring their money and asset to a "safe" place.
2. We should not undermine the existence of people in the country whoare fearful of change because they believe that its coming endangers their well-being and the well-being of their loved ones.
3. The West is fearful of any change at this particular time. The ones undergoing, namely, the civil war in Syria, the migration crisis in Europe, the Ukraine-Russia stand-off, Brexit, the nefarious electioninfighting in the US, the contention for world dominance amongst the great powers (US, china, and Russia) are giving the west enough trouble and annoyance; democracy and justice in Ethiopia are the least of their concern.

But change is coming in Ethiopia. It cannot be ignored nor can it be underestimated. It is profoundly regrettable if the present regime goes on to think that it can bring normalcy by suppression and terror. The brief calm we are witnessing right now is what historians call the calm before the storm. The government can and, indeed must, use this opportunity to contribute positively and to unite the country and to lead it into enduring democracy. In their part, the oppositions should be ready to make compromise, in that they show the willingness and preparedness to build on what is already established and to introduce change in steps and in a manner that is productive, sustainable, and useful for all stakeholders. It will be naïve to believe that the government should be theonly one which should bend to the demand of the people. It is equally important to deliberate how to replace it and to put in place plausible, clear, and quantifiable alternatives for the coming few years. My own proposal looks like the following (some of them I borrowed from people who are by far better than I in matters of politics; I reproduce them here for the sake of completion):

1. The government should free all political prisoners immediately andwithout any precondition. This is the first step towards showing openness and political maturity.
2. The army should show integrity by refusing to get entangled in political matters. It should withdraw its troops immediately (But howcan this be done when we know that most generals are major investors in the country's economy?).
3. The government should use the time between now and the next election to establish a genuine transitional government consisting ofall major political parties.
4. The transition government should guarantee free and unlimited expression of ideas and views, so that political parties can campaignfor the next election.
5. All the existing media should be put under a neutral board tooversee the free dissemination of ideas.
6. The transition government should oversee the next election.

The usefulness of this proposal rests on the willingness of the regime to save the country from the brink of disaster and its unimaginable consequence. A firm leap of faith and an extraordinary good will from those who are fearful and suspicious of change and a willingness to forgopersonal gains from those who benefit from the Status quo are required.We should learn from the past, ours and many others, and greet the future with extraordinary selflessness.

Internal Colonization

By Sahlu Bekele September 7, 2016

The Spanish, the Portuguese, the British, the French, the Italians and the Dutch were the major colonizers of their respective colonies in Africa. All colonies except Ethiopia had suffered humiliation and conquest in the hands of these European forces. After the colonizers devoured all the resources and decided when they had enough, they allowed independenceof their colonies willingly or unwillingly only about half a century ago.

Ethiopia was an exception in the history of colonization. When the British army came to Ethiopia, King Tewodros shot himself in the head not to givein to the foreign forces in honour of his people and his land at Mekdela.
The British left for England taking the King's wife and son along with them. When the Italians marched on Ethiopia in 1896, King Menilik mobilized Ethiopians and defeated the Italians at the battle of Adwa. Having suffered their humiliation and mourning for forty years, the Italians again tried to conquer

Ethiopia unsuccessfully for a brief period between 1936 – 1941. Forced by the relentless resistance of the Ethiopianpatriots who fought them in the jungle, meadows, mountains and valleys,and by the late support of the British and Americans, they finally succumbed to their defeat and went back to where they came from. So there was a history of Italian attempt to colonize Ethiopia that never materialized, however their failure has become the mother of success bythe internal colonizers we call Weyanes.

A narrow nationalist gorilla movement named TPLF (Tigrean People Liberation Front) as the name indicates has its mandate to secede the province of Tigray from the rest of Ethiopia. Its mission was supposed to stop right there; however, the people of Ethiopia who had been repressedand reigned brutally by the Mengistu's military junta did not resist these new Weyane visitors substantially because they thought they could bring peace and freedom for these were what they allegedly fought for.
Nevertheless, they had a different agenda hiding in their package. Just like the European colonizers they focussed on the divide and rule formula in the name of "the right of nationalities" by splitting Ethiopians on ethnic lines and labelling them as Oromos, Amharas, Debubs, Tigrians and so on.The current population of Ethiopia is estimated to be 98 million and the population of Tigreans ranks fourth after Oromo, Amhara and Somali.
From the outset the TPLF's agenda was to liberate and set them free, freefrom whom, I don't know.

So, as mentioned above, these Weyanes who are a handful duces have their claws stuck in the flesh and bones of Ethiopians and are determined to conquer and reign the nation indefinitely. Their ignorance and our stupidity is talking about democracy, election and human rights. The issueclearly has to be a movement of independence and freedom from the internal colonization that we are truly facing. So we can forget about all the other socio political agendas that come with a free and democratic system and our agenda today has to be to stand against the modern internal colonization of Weyanes in Ethiopia. Do not expect a pigeon chick from a snake egg. That's what they are and this is the only truth. A minority rule is brutalizing the majority of Ethiopians. This is not democracy but is totalitarianism or absolute dictatorship. Therefore, the majority of Ethiopians had been and are being colonized by the Woyane dynasty with their military wing called Agazi and their economic empire called EFFORT. This colonization however could be more dangerous for thepeople of Tigray if the resentment against them translates in undesirable consequences. According to Genocide Watch, Ethiopia has satisfied the 8 stages for genocide which are classification, symbolization, dehumanization, organization, polarization, preparation, extermination and denial. Genocide is taking place in Ethiopia as we speak. Ethiopia should not be another Rwanda.

This is the time for Weyane supporters to stand with the people of Ethiopia if they can. If they don't and are not willing, they will be on the wrong side of history. Ethiopia is enough for all of us. We, unfortunately suffer for no apparent reason other than the retarded nature and consciousness of the TPLF leaders. Dictators have crooked and clouded brains that they will never realize their demise until the last

have the donkey's mentality that goes with the cliché, "Who cares whether or not the grass grows after I die" So, they will inflict harm anddamage of enormous magnitude. Regardless, we will be free; it is a matter of time. History has shown again and again that you can not suppress, oppress and repress people against their will for ever. Historydoesn't lie; historians do. So here we go; Ethiopia will rise again; why not?

No Emergency Trust Fund money goes to Ethiopian government, EUCommission stresses
By Matthew Tempest, EurActiv.com September 8, 2016

No monies from the EU's flagship Emergency Trust Fund (ETF) for Africa goes to the Ethiopian government or its agencies, the Commission stressed yesterday (6 September), as human rights groups say more than400 people have been killed in clashes with the government.

The ETF was set up last year, at the Valleta migration summit, in an attempt to mitigate the 'pull' factors behind uncontrolled migration fromsub-Saharan Africa to Europe, in the wake of the migration crisis.

Ethiopia, with a stable and West-friendly government in the Horn of Africa,is one of the major recipients of the trust fund, which aims to improve life chances and livelihoods in some of the world's poorest countries.

However, the authoritarian government in Addis Ababa has long been thebutt of accusations over its treatment of the Oromia people and their region – which surrounds the capital.

Since November 2015 – when Commission President Jean-Claude Junckersigned the ETF – some 400 people have been killed by Ethiopian government security forces during protests, according to New York-basedHuman Rights Watch.

Thousands more have been detained.

Amnesty International says over 100 people were killed at a demonstration in early August. This week, the situation deteriorated further, with the deaths of at least 23 inmates in a fire at a prison believed to be holding detained protestors. Pictures showed smoke billowing from the jail, but the BBC cited local media reporting the soundof gunfire from the Qilinto prison.

Pressed by EurActiv.com on whether the Commission had a view on the unrest in one of its key partners in sub-Saharan Africa, and whether the ETF contained a mechanism for either reviewing or even suspending payments through the Emergency Trust Fund, a spokesman was quick to point out that no monies were channelled directly through the governmentin Addis Ababa, or any government agencies.

In an emailed statement later, it added, “As far as the Emergency TrustFund for Africa is concerned, it is important to know that no funding aredecentralised to, or channelled through, the beneficiary countries’ government structures.

“This of course also applies to Ethiopia.” The cause of the Oromo people hit the headlines worldwide this summer, as Ethiopian runner Feyisa Lilesacrossed the finishing line at the Rio Olympics with his arms crossed in protest, before seeking political asylum abroad.

A spokesman for the Commission said, “The EU follows the human rightssituation in Ethiopia very closely. “Through high-level political contacts, the EU consistently raises concerns with the Ethiopian government.

“The EU also provides specific assistance to support human rights in the country, notably through the EU Civil Society Fund. We firmly believe thatthe combination of constructive dialogue and targeted development assistance will lead to positive changes in the human rights situation in Ethiopia and in the region. “Key areas of concern are human rights, peaceand stability in the country, as well as irregular migration and displacement.

Recently, the Ethiopian government began a big drive to increase itsattraction as a high-end international tourism destination.

ESCALATING HUMAN RIGHTS CRISIS IN OROMIA & AMHARA REGIONS

Many Eth. New Year concerts cancelled because of public unrest

ETHIOPIA OBSERVER September 8, 2016

The US-based Abdu Kiar and the Addis-based Betty G’s joint concert scheduled to take place at Ghion Hotel in Addis Ababa on September 10 towelcome in Ethiopia’s New Year has been cancelled. Abdu Kiar announced that he discussed with the organiser Eyoha Entertainment to cancel the event as mark of respect and mourning for the lives lost in recent protestsin the country. Many other performances were also called off.

Two important New Year concerts by Michael Belayneh and Helen Berhe were also cancelled. Oromo singer Tsegaye Dandana called off a show thathe planned to do with the Ethiopian Television in the aftermath of the tragedy. Some other shows planned abroad were called off such as Aster Aweke and Mehari Degefaw's Seattle concert. Abby Lakew and Madingo Afewerk's shows in Dallas, Chicago and Las Vegas have been cancelled.

"I do not want to perform on any stage as of right now while my people are dying. I will pray for peace and I believe in one love! All people should be treated equally, with the same rights, dignity and human rights," Abbywrote on her Facebook page. The hugely popular songwriter and singer Teddy Afro has decided to delay the release his highly anticipated album.The unprecedented wave of protests has resulted in hundreds of deaths since November.

Olympian Protester Feyisa Lilesa arrives in the U.S.

BBC News September 9, 2016

Ethiopian Olympian Feyisa Lilesa, who said he wanted to seek asylum after making an anti-government gesture in Rio, has arrived in the US. The marathon runner crossed the line in second place with his arms abovehis head in solidarity with Oromo activists who are staging protests in Ethiopia.

He repeated the gesture later at a press conference, saying his life wouldbe in danger if he returned home. The government has been accused of brutally cracking down on protesters. The country's Information Minister Getachew Reda told the BBC at the time that he had nothing to fear and would be welcomed home as a hero.

But speaking after the race, Mr Feyisa said he might be killed if he returned. "If not kill me, they will put me in prison. I have not decidedyet, but maybe I will move to another country."

His family later said that he wanted to seek asylum in the US. A funding campaign, which has now reached its $150,000 (£113,000) target, was set up to help pay his legal fees and support his family back home in Ethiopia. Mr Feyisa is from Oromia, home to most of Ethiopia's 35 millionOromo people, the country's largest ethnic group.

The region has been hit by a wave of anti-government protests since November last year as people complain about social and political marginalisation. US-based rights group Human Rights Watch has said thatmore than 400 people have been killed by security forces during the demonstrations.

The government disputes the figure and has said that it welcomes dialogue and peaceful protests to sort out issues that people may have.

The information minister has acknowledged that there have been somekillings but has said that in the main the security forces conducted themselves "in a very professional and responsible manner". He put thekillings down to "a few bad apples".

The regime in Addis Ababa has lost any semblance of humanity

By Alem Mamo September 9, 2016

"They killed my son, and they forced me to sit on his dead body while theywere beating me."

If there is any doubt in one's mind that the regime in Addis Ababa would come to itssenses and respect the dignity and sanctity of human life, what happened this weekin a western town of Dembi Dolo should put that doubt to rest. An act so cruel, so abhorrent, not just humans, it makes the rocks weep. A mother finds her sixteen- year-old son's lifeless body covered with blood in the middle of the street, shot by forces loyal to the regime. Arriving at the scene, a mother, as all mothers do, beganwailing while holding her son's body. What followed next was hard to describe and painful to comprehend to any one with a minimum degree of decency. The same forces loyal to the regime ordered the mother to sit on her sixteen-year old son's dead body as they mercilessly hit her.

It is an act so savage, so devoid of any norms and values cultural or otherwise, it reflects the psychopathic behavior of forces that do the killings in Ethiopia. Ephrem Hailu, the sixteen- year old boy, was simply in his daily routine like any other sixteen-year-old, playing and doing what sixteen-year-olds do. His life was cut short for no apparent reason exceptthe psychopathic killing machines called Agazi have to kill someone to satisfy their addiction of killing.

The regime in Addis Ababa is at war with the Ethiopian people, young andold, men and women are being terrorized and murdered in broad daylightfor simply demanding freedom of expression, assembly and respect to therule of law.

"I was in my house knowing that my son was out playing with his friends,"said Ephrem's mother. "Upon hearing gunshots downtown the boys, including my son, began running and that is when they shot and killed myson." She said sobbing "He wasn't just my son; he was looking after me like a father; he did manual labour work to support me. He was my only hope, my only lifeline. I didn't have money for his funeral; my neighbors raised money for the funeral. I sat holding his body with my little girl by my side worried they might shoot my little girl, too."

This is the dark and horrifying reality in the four corners of Ethiopia. Mothers are terrified to send their children to school because they have noguarantee they would return home safe. If they escape from the bullets they might not avoid the concentration camps where they are tortured and exposed to malaria infection without any proper medical service. Thesuffering of the Ethiopian people, particularly the young has reached an intolerable climax. While all peace and freedom loving people in Ethiopia and around the world mourn with Ephrem Hailu's mother, it is also a reminder that the only way to have safety and security is by ridding the country from a brutal authoritarian rule once and for all.

Recently, I posted a piece titled “Refusing to be adversaries.” In this pieceI was given a short poem which was written by a young man who lost his best friend to forces loyal to regime. I was moved by the poem because itdescribes the sorrow and pain of a mother whose child was gunned down.I have re-posted the same poem (below). It was originally written in Amharic. I translated it to English.

Tears of the moon

Gripped with an overwhelming sorrowA mother says “I have no tears left

I have cried until I no longer see
I have wailed until I have no voice left

What is sight for, if I cannot see my child?
What is a voice for, if he cannot come to me when I call his name?

Here we have run out of tears.
Instead, our rocks, trees and fields are crying for us,

Here the birds no longer sing,
As they are mourning with us in silence.

The sun, too, weeps as we languish in the burning shadows of oppression,

And the moon sheds tears with us at night, as we hide in our blood stained forest.When will this end?”
She asks, “When will we relearn to laugh again?
When will peace reign?

When will the true spirit of humanity return to this land of our ancestors again?

We are collectively tired of oppressionWe are people of an exhausted nation.”(Alem6711@gmail.com)

Groups urge UN Council over Ethiopia protests

By Elias Meseret, AP September 9, 2016

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — More than a dozen rights groups have written to the U.N. Human Rights Council urging an immediate halt to "excessive" useof force by Ethiopian security forces.

The letter dated Thursday also calls for an independent investigation into the reported killings of hundreds of people in Ethiopia's Amhara and Oromiastates since November 2015 amid protests.

"Authorities have also arbitrarily arrested thousands of people throughoutOromia and Amhara during and after protests, including journalists and human rights defenders," the letter says.

Groups signing the letter include Human Rights Watch, Amnesty International and Reporters Without Borders. The Human Rights Council isexpected to convene later this month in Geneva.

This week, the U.S. said it has raised "grave concerns" about the use offorce against protesters.

Protests over regional concerns in Ethiopia have turned into broader anti-government protests demanding wider freedoms and the release of detained protesters. Tensions rose over the weekend when more than 20 people were killed during a fire at a prison on the outskirts of the capital,Addis Ababa, which holds many opposition figures and journalists.

The East African country, an ally of the West, is often accused of stiflingdissent and cutting off the internet. Thursday's letter says "there are noeffective avenues to pursue accountability for abuses given the lack of independence of the judiciary and legislative constraints." The ruling coalition party controls all the 547 seats in the federal parliament.

Ethiopian officials have called the recent protests illegal. The country's prime minister, Haliemariam Desalegn, has ordered security forces to useproportionate measures to control the protests.

As frustration grows, attacks have been reported on some businesses,including foreign ones, with suspected links to the government.

Ethiopians stormed their embassy in London

By Ethiomedia September 9, 2016

SEATTLE - Ethiopian patriots on Thursday stormed TPLF-run embassies in London,Stockholm, Washington, DC and a consulate in Frankfurt, Germany, and took down the portrait of Meles Zenawi, the political dracula who died in August 2012. The activists also hoisted the popular Ethiopian tricolor over the controversial TPLF- endorsed flag.

The measures came after the Qaliti Prison fire last week in which security guards fired shots indiscriminately at those prisoners who were running forsafety. The TPLF gang said 23 were killed. Indepedent sources, however, put the figure much higher, calling for an investigation by a UN-endorsed international independent investigation team.

In London, one activist asks an individual "Who are you? What do you dohere?" The guy answers: "I'm a diplomat."

Well, our advice is here: If you are a diplomat worth the profession, you should know better to abandon the embassy any time soon as staying withthem would mean that you are an accomplice in a criminal ring known as TPLF. A popular uprising is underway, and steps are being taken to make the 'government' ungovernable.

The 'Ethiopian Spring': "Killing is not an answer to our grievances"
René Lefort 9 September 2016

There is every sign that Ethiopia is plunging into a crisis whose scale,intensity, and multiple and interdependent drivers are unprecedentedsince the founding of the regime in 1991.

The Ethiopian leadership remains in denial. The long meetings of its rulingbodies have culminated in a report on 15 years of national "rebirth", in which it awards itself good marks, while acknowledging the existence of afew problems here and there.

Nonetheless, the odd warning signal may be heard – though very seldom
− in counterpoint to the general complacency. Hailemariam Desalegn, prime minister and chairman of what is essentially the single party, hasgone so far as to warn that the issues facing the regime are a matter of"life or death",[1] and that Ethiopia is "sliding towards ethnic conflict similar to that in neighbouring countries".[2]

Well, these neighbouring countries include Somalia, epitome of the 'failedstate', and Sudan, which has split in two and where civil war is raging in the new Southern State. In this, unusually, he is in agreement with Merera Gudina, head of one of the main opposition parties still permittedto operate, who speaks of the probability of "civil war […] if the government continues to repress".[3] There is every sign that Ethiopia isplunging into a crisis whose scale, intensity, and multiple and interdependent drivers are unprecedented since the founding of the regime in 1991, although the impossibility of field research precludes anyin-depth and conclusive assessment.

The first, very discreet signs of this crisis appeared in the spring of 2014 in a part of the country where they were probably least expected: in Tigray, where the Tigrean People's Liberation Front (TPLF), pillar of the quadri-ethnic party ruling coalition – the Ethiopian People’s RevolutionaryDemocratic Front (EPRDF) – seemed both unopposed and unopposable.

Yet the Tigreans loudly and clearly accused “their” Front of neglecting them by only looking after its own interests or, as Hailemariam Desalegnexpressed it, of using “public authority for personal gain at all levels”.[4]

The crisis erupted into the open a few weeks later in Oromya, with additional grievances. In the most populous of the nine states and two municipalities that make up federal Ethiopia, a state that is also the country’s economic powerhouse, students took to the streets to protest against the Addis Ababa Master Plan. Their suspicion was that this would inevitably lead to a transfer of sovereignty from the Oromo region to central government and be accompanied by “land grabbing”, the expulsionand dispossession of the local peasant farmers. Protests resumed in November 2015 and continue today at a larger scale that now includes thegeneral population and almost the whole of Oromo State.

Turning up the heat

The heat was turned up a further notch in mid-July with the advent of protests in the historic heart of Amhara State. Together, Amhara and Oromo account for almost two-thirds of the country’s total population. Thediversity of the ways of life that characterizes Oromo – farmers and pastoralists, of its religions – Orthodox Christian, Muslim, Protestant, animist, together with its very loose traditional structures, prompts MereraGudina to emphasise “the chronic division between Oromo political forces”.[5] By contrast, the homogeneity of the Amhara population – in itsvast majority small farmers and Christian Orthodox – fosters unity, while its mobilisation is favoured by its sense of hierarchy and discipline. Finally,the parallel protests by Oromo and Amhara, with largely shared reasons and objectives, breaks with their historical antagonism: the dispossession and subsequent exploitation of the Oromo by an Amhara – and Tigrean – elite from the late nineteenth century onwards, embedded their relations in a system that the Oromo have described as colonial.

The toughest demonstrations that the regime had faced followed the contested elections of 2005. They were essentially confined to Addis Ababa, with the young unemployed playing a major role. In all, they lasted only a few days, in two surges. They came in response to a call from established political forces for a very clear outcome – respect for theverdict of the ballot box. The regime reacted in unison with violent repression – killing almost 200 and arresting tens of thousands – immediately followed by a large-scale strategy of political reconquest through the expansion of the quasi-single party and a rallying of the elites. The protests very quickly died down, and the opposition forces collapsed.

This time, the protests affect the country’s two main states. Despite therepression – hundreds killed, thousands arrested – it has been going onfor nine months, with varying degrees of intensity. The attempts dissuasion through fear have not been enough[6] – at least for the moment – to demobilize the protesters, as evidenced by new forms of protest such as the recent “dead city” operations in the Amhara region[7] and the just launched boycott campaign in Oromya.

This time, a whole generation of young people is in the forefront of the protests – the 15-29 age group represents more than a quarter of the population – starting with, but not confined to, all those who have benefited from mass education, who have carried their elders with them.This time, their anger derives from widespread discontent, focusing on three areas.

First, they are fed up not just with the regime’s authoritarianism, but more so with the way it is exercised: supervision and control that are stifling, intrusive and infantilising, imposed everywhere, all the time, on everyone, by a Party that has swallowed up the State. The second focus isthe implementation of a federalism that is in theory equitable, but in reality profoundly unbalanced. Tigray, representing 6% of the population, was the epicentre of the rebellion, which threw out Mengistu Haile Mariam’s military-socialist junta in 1991, the Derg. It was headed by the Tigrean student elite that founded the TPLF. This historical role justified itsinitial primacy.

Twenty-five years on, however, this elite remains vastly overrepresented at the apex of political power, the army, the security services. In addition,through public and para-public companies, it controls two thirds of the modern economy, excluding traditional agriculture. In the specific Ethiopian case… a tentacular and increasingly voracious and arrogant oligarchy… has ultimately filtered down to village level.

The third focus of discontent is the backlashes of the “developmental state”. This system centralises revenues at the summit of power, which supremely decides on its optimal use for development across the country.This strategy has been decisive in the exceptional economic growth of thelast decade – probably around 6% to 7% per year – and in the expansionof education and health services alike. However, the centralisation it entails is evidently incompatible with authentic federalism. Moreover, in the specific Ethiopian case, the fact that the functions of political leadership, economic decision-making and the management of public andpara-public enterprises are concentrated in the hands of the same peopleat the summit of the party-state, free of any control and political counterweight, has led to the creation of a tentacular and increasingly voracious and arrogant oligarchy, which has ultimately filtered down to village level.

These flaws have had a cumulative and mutually reinforcing impact. In Oromya in particular, the implementation of development projects dictated from above and often controlled by nonindigenous oligarchs, has frequently been marked by authoritarianism, spoliation and ethnic favouritism. In the case of "land grabbing", there are multiple instances ofland being brutally appropriated and embezzlement of the compensation owed to evicted farmers. The triggering factor for the protests in Amhara region was the authorities' refusal to tackle the dispute arising from the incorporation into Tigray of the Wolkait region – a thin strip of land in the north that was part of the imperial province of Amhara – imposed after 1991 without public consultation of any kind, together with the transfer ofwestern areas to Sudan, a process conducted in total secrecy.

"Thief!"

The demonstrators' slogans and targets speak for themselves. They haveattacked prisons to free the inmates. They have ransacked public properties, not just offices, vehicles, etc., but also health centres, unemployment offices and cooperatives, places they see as existing moreto control the population than to perform their purported functions. They have ransacked public properties… they see as existing more to control the population than to perform their purported functions.

They have gone after local party bosses and their possessions – the lowestlayer of the oligarchy – targeting government representatives as much as the despoilers. They have burned businesses owned by national and foreign investors (farms, factories, hotels, etc.) because they symbolise an external stranglehold over Oromya and the Amhara region. "Oromya is not for sale" was one favourite slogan. In short, the demonstrators are targeting both the persons and property of those they see as having obtained position and/or wealth at their expense, through the patronage of the ruling power. "Thief!" is one of the most oft repeated slogans.

In Oromya, the conviction of having remained second-class citizens in a system dominated by a "northist" minority, and in the Amhara region of having become second-class and of feeling permanently "humiliated and marginalized"[8] because a part of the Amhara elite was dominant in the imperial era, is less and less tolerated. The assertion of ethnic identity andthe demand for the full rights associated with it are at the heart of the demonstrations. "We want genuine self rule", cry the Oromo, "We are Amhara", declare the crowds in the historical capital Gondar, or in Bahir Dar, the new capital. However, these claims are also taking a very worrying turn. In Oromo, demonstrators have gone after Amhara and Tigreans, as well as their properties. Tigreans have been targeted in the Amhara region. However, distortions of every kind in the propaganda war make the reality difficult to grasp. In particular, were the rioters targetingarrivistes more than Tigreans, or vice versa? Anyway, Tigreans are even beginning to leave certain areas, notably in a "mass exodus" from Gondar.[9] Some go so far as to speak of "ethnic cleansing".

There are pressing calls for these practices to cease, both on social mediaand from the legal opposition. But as Beyene Petros, one of its leaders, explains: "we're just watching… people are coming out spontaneously… political parties are bypassed".[10] By contrast with 2005, this popular protest is largely independent of the legal opposition, and even the illegalopposition groups, such as the Oromo Liberation Front, the oldest and most radical of the Oromo "nationalist movements", and Ginbot 7, heir toone of the big opposition parties of 2005 and considered a pan-Ethiopian movement. There is no secret central command orchestrating events.

There is no secret central command orchestrating events, although there is no doubt that informal clandestine networks, with links to the diaspora,are contributing to basic coordination and the exchange of information. "These protests are at the level of an intifada", claims Merera Gudina,[11]or rather at the level of what could be called an "Ethiopian Spring" reminiscent of the "Arab Springs".

'Arab plot'

In addressing this situation, the ruling power clings stubbornly to a binary,reductive and simplistic analysis. True, it quickly shelved the Master Plan, an entirely unprecedented turnaround. It also reaffirmed the self-critique that emerged from the congresses of summer 2015: beyond the immensebenefits that it has brought – peace and development – its action has been marred by failures and deficiencies, notably with regard to corruption, bad governance, unaccountability and youth unemployment.

The narrative is that these are the only failings that the "public" condemns, which makes them "legitimate". It has undertaken to correctthem and "to discuss with the people" in order to tackle them more effectively.

So the legitimacy of these "public" claims is accepted. But those who demand more are supposedly driven by a "destructive agenda" manipulated by "destructive", "anti-peace", "anti-development elements", "bandits", or even "evil forces" and "terrorist groups", "extremist Diasporamembers who have negotiated their country's chaos for money", which are puppets of "foreign actors" or "invaders", starting with Eritrea. It is they who are "hijacking" peaceful demonstrations and turning them into illegal and violent protests. Websites close to the TPLF, among the few accessible in Ethiopia, are more explicit: according to them, the wave of protest is simply the outcome of an Arab plot, led by Egypt, in which Asmara, the OLF and Ginbot 7 are mere "foot soldiers". Their real purpose? "To destabilise" Ethiopia, repeats the government, "the total disintegration of Ethiopia as a country", according to these websites.[12]

To attribute the crisis to external, foreign conspiracy is unjustifiable. Eritrea, still in an on/off state of war with Ethiopia, and Egypt, deeplyalarmed by the construction of a colossal dam on the Nile, would undoubtedly welcome a weakening of Ethiopia. It may even be that they are trying to fan the flames. But they do not have the means to light the fire and keep it burning. And the ruling power's claim that they have beenable to do so is itself an admission of weakness: for them to succeed, theregime must already have been resting on weak foundations.

This externalisation also exempts the government from having to considerthe grievances at the heart of the protests, going far beyond a few personal failings and deficiencies in implementation. Externalisation is alsoused to justify repression as the only possible response: there can be no compromise with the enemies of the motherland. It would therefore be pointless to move beyond the use of force and engage in the political sphere, as it did in 2005. Above all, however, the government rejects this option because a political response to the protesters' demands would require it to question its whole political structure and policy.

'Intellocracy'

The TPLF is a child of the student movement of the end of Haile Selassie's reign, radically Marxist and above all Leninist. From its creation, it adopted the movement's analysis of Ethiopian society. The peasantry – still 80% of the population today – backward and illiterate, the working class tiny and in any case 'trade-unionist', the 'national' bourgeoisie equally small and anyway indecisive, assigned an irreplaceable role to "revolutionary intellectuals", as Lenin defined them. They are the only ones able to develop the path that would bring Ethiopia progress and well-being, and therefore the only ones with the legitimacy to impose it on Ethiopians, willingly or by force if necessary.[13]

This conviction remains. Just a few years ago, Hailemariam Desalegn explained: "due to poor education and illiteracy, the Ethiopian public is toounderdeveloped to make a well reasoned, informed decision"; so the "enlightened leaders" have "to lead the people".[14] At the other extreme,every local official is convinced that his position places him within the circle of "enlightened leaders" and that he has the right and duty to assume all the authority associated with that role.

This messianic vision creates an unbridgeable divide between a handful of 'knowers', an 'intellocracy', which alone has the legitimacy and the capacity to exercise power, and all the others, the 'ignorant', in other words the people, reified and bound to obey in its own interests, whateverit may think. It justifies a totalising ascendancy in every sphere, exercisedthrough an age-old hierarchy on which the Leninist formula "democratic centralism" confers a modern and revolutionary dimension. Or, in this particular case, "revolutionary elitism" or "elitist centralism".[15] Of course, the outcome has been exactly the same: centralising excess and denial of democracy, culminating with the installation of a "strong man" at death in 2012, would become the acknowledged fulfiller of this role,drawing on immense rhetorical skills backed by an exceptional intelligence.

In this binary vision, the political spectrum is inevitably polarised at two extremes. The ruling power is the sole promoter of peace and development. Those who oppose or merely question it are assigned to the "anti-peace", "anti-development", "anti-federalist" camp, as "chauvinists"or "narrow nationalists", threatening the Ethiopian state and the integrity of the country. Although masked in the early days of the TPLF by the collective operation of the leadership, this conception of ruling, monopolistic and exclusive to the point of extreme sectarianism, is in essence undemocratic. It legitimises the use of force whenever those in power deem it appropriate.

A new middle class

However, a growing section of the population is no longer prepared to be stifled, undervalued and marginalised. A new middle class has emerged, essentially in the public sector, in services and – largely unrecognised – inthe countryside, where a rump of recently enriched farmers has emerged. 700,000 young people are in university, 500,000 have obtained degrees inthe last five years.[16] In a country of close to 100 million inhabitants, thenumber of mobile phone customers has reached 46 million, internet users 13.6 million,[17] compared respectively with fewer than a million and 30,000 ten years ago. Satellite dishes have sprouted on the roofs wherever electricity is present, breaking the public television monopoly. Itis estimated that 4 million Ethiopians live abroad, but still maintain close relations with their native country. Millions of Ethiopians are suddenly connected to the world. More globally, the demands society now places onthe regime are commensurate with the upheavals brought about by the development it has driven. In this sense, the regime's very successes have come back to bite it.

Ethnic faultlines are also imprinted in the regime's DNA. From the mid- 1980s onwards, the TPLF carried its combat against the Derg from the regional to the national level. At least within the country's two major "nations", Oromo and Amhara, it thus had to find ethnic political movements to join it. But rather than forming partnerships, which wouldhave entailed power-sharing, it imposed its grip on them. That is the original sin of federalism 'Ethiopian style'.

Rather than reaching agreement with the spearhead of anti-Derg strugglein Oromya, the OLF, it created the Oromo People's Democratic Organisation (OPDO), drawn from among its Oromo or simply Oromifa-speaking prisoners. This structure would be confined to the rank of 'juniorpartner', even more than the Amhara National Democratic Movement (ANDM), the Amhara component of the EPRDF, although its initial nucleus had been an autonomous group. The new Oromo and Amhara elites that joined this structure did so more out of opportunism than by conviction, and in general at least without recognising their leaderships as legitimaterepresentatives.

Federalism, which was supposed to achieve a harmonious balance in inter-ethnic relations, has in fact as practised led ultimately to their deterioration. It faced an insurmountable contradiction. On the one hand, it promoted new ethnic elites to political, administrative and economic functions; on the other, it continued to keep them subordinate, while sharpening ethnic identities. Large parts of these elites, and moreover large swathes of their nations, are no longer prepared to tolerate this.

Deepening faultlines

Ultimately, the exclusiveness and top-down approach are having a negative impact on the economy. In the first phase, the party's control over the State and the modern sector encouraged the mobilisation and effective use of resources. At this time, the 'developmental state' provedits worth by delivering remarkable economic growth. It has to continue ifthe regime wishes to tout it as a pillar of its legitimacy.

However, this model is on the wane. The developmental state has gone offthe rails, diverted by the oligarchical dynamic. The onus is on private investors, in particular foreign investors, to take over from public investment to drive structural transformation towards a globalised market economy. However, the governing power's obsession with maintaining control is stifling those investors.

Finally, the party political discipline imposed on the technocracy smothersits professional capacities and its confidence. This is one of the primary sources of frustration. It also hampers the effective use of the resources essential for growth in an increasingly complex economy. Yet even at its current rate, that growth is unable to absorb the two to two and a half million young people entering the labour market each year, including newgraduates, contributing to the anger that is now exploding in the streets.

In light of these contradictions, the fault lines are deepening. The discontent of the Tigreans has triggered the emergence of a 'reforming',pragmatic and politicised current inside the TPLF, which wants to rally them by making the Front work for them again. It advocates breaking with the "rule of force", an immemorial feature of Ethiopian history.

It underlines that the only way to achieve long-term stability, beginning with peaceful changes of government, is through the step-by-step introduction of the "rule of law" by full and integral application of the constitution, notably the separation of powers, the exercise of fundamental liberties and an authentic federalism.[18] It would have to be

"consociationalist". The chief nations would be equally represented, with decisions taken by consensus, so each would possess an effective right of veto. The second "traditionalist" or "conservative" current rejects significant change and argues for continuity. Essentially, it takes the view that Ethiopia is not yet mature enough for democratic move, and still needs to kept under iron control. A website close to the TPLF argues: "the people are not ready yet in every aspect and meaning of the word (democracy). Any attempt to accelerate that process other than its naturalcourse… can only lead to darker places".[19]

Reflecting the intensity of this division, these websites are full of heated debate between those who show real understanding of the protests and those who utterly condemn them, between those arguing for immediate political openness and those calling first and foremost for the crushing ofthe unrest. However, they agree on one point: an unprecedentedly virulent condemnation of the leadership of the Front, which is deemed inept and incapable of handling the situation.

This political division has also reached the ranks of the ANDM and OPDO, but here the focus is on federalism. The "ethno-nationalists" reject the asymmetries of the current federal system and are keen to assert their party's autonomy from the TPLF. Their adversaries are considered too weak to fend for themselves and vitally in need of the TPLF's support. So, the OPDO base has literally disintegrated. At its summit, there is overt opposition between Abadula Gemeda, who expresses understanding for the claims of protesters and is the only leader who enjoys real popularity, and Muktar Kedir, who is perceived as an insubstantial apparatchik imposed by the TPLF. The same applies to the problematic destiny of Gedu Andergatchew, President of the Amhara region, number two in the ANDM and the Movement's real heavyweight in terms of popularity, and the official number one, Demeke Mekonnen, a much criticised figure who is nevertheless supported by the TPLF.

This ethnicisation of the political landscape is also apparent in the deterioration of relations between TPLF, ANDM and OPDO. Discussions with their rank and file members and a reading of their websites give aninsight into their mutual mistrust.

In the TPLF, there is an iron belief that the "rotten chauvinists" and "revanchist" Amhara, controlled remotely by Ginbot 7, have "hijacked" theANDM, are intent of restoring their former hegemony by "overtaking the position of TPLF in the Ethiopian politics" and are even once again forcing Tigreans "to defend our existence from extinction". [20]

In the ANDM, there is a conviction that the TPLF wants to continue to make Amhara pay for the former dominance of some of their elite, to marginalize them and to dispossess them of ancestral lands. [21] For theordinary OPDO party official, nothing has changed since the nineteenth century conquests: exploitation, oppression, marginalisation, or even quite baldly "genocide". Hackneyed as it clearly is, the word is widely used, symptomatic of a paranoia that casts doubt on what remains of the unity at least at the base of the EPRDF.

These fractures were born since the initial formation of the ruling power. Meles Zenawi widened them, but succeeded in masking them by maintaining an iron grip over the tensions that they engendered. The present wave of protests has exacerbated them. They are splitting, not tosay cracking, the party, from its summit to its 7 million member base, which is torn between loyalty and discipline, the material advantages of membership, and the ever-growing swell of popular aspirations within it.

In Oromya, part of the OPDO pushed behind the scenes for overt opposition to the Master Plan. The regional police were unable to cope or adopt a prudent 'wait and see' strategy. Today, they are virtually out of the game, and the federal police and army have had to intervene. The OPDO has essentially been relieved of the government of Oromya, which is under military administration via a "Command Post" based in Addis Ababa and headed by Hailemariam Dessalegn.[22] In the Amhara region,at least the big initial demonstrations were held with the support or tacit approval of part of the ANDM, although officially forbidden. Out of their depth, the Amhara State authorities had to request army intervention. The region has been placed under military command. [23]

The growing number of leaks of documents and recordings of discussions at the highest level of government and the State-Party are testament to the fact that frontline leaders now have one foot in the government campand one in the protesters' camp. Villages and entire local areas are takingadvantage of the dilution or even disappearance of public authority to set up embryonic forms of self-government. In places, the State-Party's local structures have placed their organisations at the service of the protesters. Armed men, who can only be village militiamen in principle strictly under local government control, have fired in the air alongside demonstrators.
They are necessarily involved in fatal ambushes on soldiers and attacks onmilitary depots. Desertions and overt acts of insubordination are taking place.

Losing authority
By contrast with 2005, when neither the federal nor regional governmentslost control, today – at least at certain times and in certain places – they have lost authority over their own agents and even their monopoly on theuse of force. Hailemariam Desalegn had to concede: "chaos" has broken out "in parts of Oromia and Amhara states"..[24] There has been a shift from demonstrations to riots, and then from riots to pockets of insurrection. Militiamen and farmers hold hundreds of thousands of weapons. The transition from unrest towards a scattered armed peasantrevolt (a "jacquerie"), is a possibility.

The crisis is not only about a change of government, or even regime change. It is systemic, because it is rooted in the form in which contemporary power has been exercised since its bases were laid down inthe middle of the nineteenth century. This has been theocratic, authoritarian, centralised, hierarchical, ethnically biased, monopolising thecountry's resources.

"Intellocracy" has replaced theocratic feudalism, but other main traits have been more or less transposed in an updated form. The ruling power faces more or less the same demands as those it addressed to Haile Selassie's regime forty years ago: rule of law; fair use of assets, beginningwith land ("land to the tiller", went the slogan; denunciation of "land grabbing'" now); the "national question", in other words a balanced relationship between Ethiopia's 80 "nations, nationalities and peoples"; and, at the crossroads of the land issue and the "national question", the border conflicts between the states. "They want to rule in the old way, andpeople are refusing to be ruled in the old way"

"They want to rule in the old way, and people are refusing to be ruled in the old way", is Merera Gudina's concise summing up.[25] What the protesters – and indeed the "reformists" – are demanding is huge: the shift from an imposed, exclusive and closed system, to an accepted, inclusive and open system. This would require a total reconstruction, an outcome that the successors of Haile Selassie, then of Mengistu, failed tobring about.

For the moment at least, this goal is well beyond the EPRDF's capacities. Firstly, it is paralysed by its divisions. These range from personal conflictsto business rivalries, from old ethnic tensions to new political disagreements. Secondly, the Front would risk disintegration if the "reformists" tried to force through their views. Whatever side they are on,its leaders know that a split would be fatal to everyone. They are obliged to maintain unity, with the result that they seem for now condemned to immobility.

Opening up

The majority of the Front perceives opening up as a leap in the dark and afatal threat to its positions and its interests.

Opening up to the opponents of the Front would have to go hand-in-handwith an internal opening up. It would inevitably threaten numerous unfairly acquired positions.

Until now, the rule of winner-takes-all has reigned. In the general perception, or at least 'Abyssinian' perception, authority is either absoluteor moribund: if it accepts concessions, it implicitly acknowledges that its end is imminent. To open up would therefore trigger a sharing of power, which could culminate in total loss of power.

Opening up would also mean a historic shift. For centuries, power has been "northern", Abyssinian. A fair representation of the different ethniccomponents is inconceivable without the Oromo, the largest ethnicity, playing a central role, a role moreover that they are demanding.

That would be an even more hazardous leap for the TPLF, abandoning its domination and betting that a genuinely democratic federalism would emerge. In other words, that nations or a coalition of nations much more populous than the Tigreans would not impose majority rule, threatening the preservation of what for the Front is non- negotiable: Tigreans remaining in charge of Tigray. Finally, power and enrichment go together.

Finally, power and enrichment go together. From the summit of the state-party to its most modest ranks, official positions and oligarchical rents aremutually reinforcing. This material dimension is an overwhelming reason to preserve the status quo. In particular, the vast majority of the Front's members think that it is right that their commitment and obedience should be rewarded with direct or indirect favours.

To open up, but to whom, in what domain, and to what point? Everyone agrees that the protest movement has neither a recognised leadership nora clear programme, which is its major weakness. Would it consider itself authentically represented by the legal opposition, enfeebled through repression and its own divisions, or by the more radical illegal opposition, whose real representativeness is impossible to assess? Would these very diverse forces agree on a sort of shared programme of demands?

Up to now they have always stumbled over two crucial points: whether to maintain public ownership of land – far and away the primary asset – or toprivatise it; and whether to accentuate or to temper federalism. For the moment, the voices making themselves heard cover a very wide spectrumof demands, from the launch of a national dialogue through to the total and immediate overthrow of the EPRDF. And history tells us that in such circumstances the extremists quickly prevail over the moderates. But the word compromise has no direct translation in Amharic…

Yet short of plunging the country into chaos, there exists no credible alternative to the existing authority, except in the long term. Supposing the EPRDF were to decide “to rule in a new way”, it would only do so on condition that it remained in control of a very gradual and therefore very long process of change. Which of its adversaries would accept this? On one side or the other, all-or-nothing politics have so far been the rule. But an inclusive and open system cannot be created unless all the stakeholders, without exception, are ready for compromise, in other wordsready to make reciprocal concessions in order to reach an agreement. But the word compromise has no direct translation in Amharic…

Worst case scenario

So every scenario remains possible, including the worst-case. The regimemay decide to continue on the same trajectory, relying on repression andthe acceleration of its recovery plan for the state-party. It could be that the machinery of repression will stifle the protest movement. This machinery is extensive and experienced. It is even possible that the armycould decide to take matters into its own hands, if it thought that the political leadership was failing. Its effective head, Samora Yunus, has always said that "the army is always vigilant to safeguard the constitutional order*"*.[26]

But will it be able to, especially if protest intensifies, and in particular if it takes root in the rural areas? From a leaked record of a meeting of army chiefs, it seems that some are uncertain about the physical capacity of thetroops to hold firm on multiple fronts, and above all about the risks of insubordination, or even mutiny, resulting from the ethnic divisions in their ranks.[27] "Killing is not an answer to our grievances"

Even supposing that simple repression works, the probability is high that itwould only offer the regime a period of respite before, sooner or later, a new – even more devastating – surge of unrest. To prevent this, it has just decided to put on the table the question of Wolkait and the relations between Addis Ababa and the Oromo lands around it, and above all to "sack and reshuffle party and government officials including Ministers" in the coming month, all through wide-ranging discussions "with the people".[28]

But even the legal opposition judges these reforms to be "cosmetic".[29]Up to now, these discussions have always consisted in a massive processof self-justification, with no genuine consultation of the people, which is unable – or does not dare – to make itself heard. Moreover, this promiseis an old chestnut. The struggle against the dark triad of corruption, bad governance and unaccountability, on the agenda since the early 2000s, has had no impact. The campaign to "purify" the state-party of its black sheep, launched with much fanfare in the autumn of 2015, has been a damp squib. It touched only minor officials, while none of the senior figures – some are notorious for their corrupt practices – was affected, leading the population to conclude that the campaign was nothing but a smokescreen.

This triad of failings extends from top to bottom of the EPRDF. It is hard tosee how the Party could put an end to them in response to what it sees as the main demand emanating from the people, without putting itself athigh risk.

"Killing is not an answer to our grievances", cry the demonstrators. For the moment, however, no other genuine answers are to be heard or seen,unless basic common sense, not to mention democratic aspirations, were to prevail in the ruling power.

US Embassy in Addis Finally Talks about the Protest

By anonymous Sep 9, 2016

This Has been Published on US Embassy Facebook

Friends, many of you have been asking why we aren't talking about the ongoingreports of violence against and detentions of protesters in Ethiopia. In the last several weeks, Assistant Secretary for Democracy, Human Rights and Labor Tom Malinowski, former Ambassador Haslach, and U.S.

Ambassador to the United Nations Samantha Power have all publicly called for anend to the violence and for respect for basic constitutional rights to be observed inEthiopia. Our position has not changed nor has our commitment to helping the people of Ethiopia achieve the prosperous future they deserve.

So we continue to provide humanitarian assistance for millions of Ethiopians living onthe edge of hunger as well important health and education programs as part of our support for Ethiopia's long-term development goals. All the areas of our support: democratic development, economic growth and resiliency, and regional peace and security are equally important and interdependent. Success in one will not come without progress in the others so we remain committed to advancing all of them.

ETHIOPIA PROTEST

Protesters Barge into Ethiopian Embassies in London andStockholm

On September 9, 2016 BBC reports two protests have taken place atEthiopian embassies in London and Stockholm.

An Oromo activist posted a video on Facebook showing a small group of protesters entering the Ethiopian embassy in London. An exchange of words in Amharic between the protesters and the embassy officials can beheard. One of the protesters is seen overturning a portrait of late Ethiopian Prime Minister Meles Zenawi, while another kicks it. Then, someone else stands on a table to cloak the current Ethiopian flag, adopted in 1996, over an older version, part of a string of flags suspendedfrom the ceiling.

An embassy official confronts them, saying, according to the BBC, “This is illegal” and “You can provide your requests but it should not be like this. Itshould be peaceful.” The protesters’ responses run the gamut from “This is not illegal. It is an Ethiopian flag. We won’t damage anything. People are dying for this flag” to “You burn our compatriots like a torch. We camehere to demand their blood.”

Meanwhile at the embassy in Stockholm, protesters have been heard shouting, “You are Nazis.” Ethiopian TV channel Esat has posted footage of protesters barging into the embassy there. The video also features images of police talking to the protesters in London, which suggests theseprotests may have been coordinated.

Abay Tsehaye Harps on Rwanda Genocide. But why?

By Ethiomedia September 10, 2016

Why should the removal of one regime from power lead to an ethnicconflict in Ethiopia?

Abay Tsehaye, a top TPLF official, draws parallels between Ethiopia and Rwanda, among others, and says Ethiopia may never become one countryif an ethnic conflict is started (following the downfall of TPLF). He said Rwanda re-emerged as one country because Rwanda has only two ethnic groups - Hutus and Tutsis - and after a painful journey, the Rwanda people managed to reconcile and restore a country that was almost gone for ever. In the case of Ethiopia, he said with an air of certainty, it is totally different as the Ethiopia has over 80 ethnic groups, and once an ethnic conflict is started, it may never stop, thus ending Ethiopia as one country.

Now the question is why should a country and people be relegated to ethnic conflict because the people decided to remove the TPLF regime for a better governance? Abay speaks as if the people of Tigrai are hostage toTPLF and TPLF will never hesitate to use the people of Tigrai as a TOOL toput down a nationwide uprising against TPLF. Are the people of Tigrai the slaves of TPLF? Will the people of Tigrai die for TPLF than live for Ethiopia?Time will answer the questions.

But in the meantime, Ethiopian forces of unity - the emerging forces of Amahra, Oromo and the rest of the country - should take a serious note ofAbay's statement and make it clear to international organizations like the UN Security Council, EU, ICC, AU and Genocide Watch that TPLF officials are harping on 'genocide' because the Ethiopian people are seeking a better governance than the bestial rule by TPLF.

In clear words, TPLF officials are saying the price of removing TPLF from power would be to throw Ethiopia into an ethnic conflict that would makethe Rwanda genocide a child's play.

In 2005 elections, when EPRDF lost the election but declared a state of emergency and reversed the poll's outcome, the late Prime Minister MelesZenawi also brought up the case of Rwanda, and accused the multi-ethnicpro-democracy Kinijit (CUD) leaders of fomenting genocide.

ሀ)በኢትዮጵያ የተንሰራፋውየሙስና ንቅዘት ጠባይ ምን ይመስላል?

1.የኢትዮጵያን ሙስና በሚመለከት በርከት ያሉ ጽሁፎችንና ንግግሮችን አድርጌአለሁ። በዚህ ጉዳይም እቀጥላለሁ። በኢትዮጵያ ላይ ተንሰርፍቶ ያለው ሙስና ተመሳሳይነቱ በዩክሬይን፤ በራሽያና ተመሳሳይ ሀገሮች የተከሰተውን አይነት አይን ያወጣ ዝርፊያ መሆኑን አመላክቻለሁ። በነዚህ ሀገሮች ከተከሰተው ሙስና በጣም የከፋ መሆኑንም አሳይቻለሁ። እሱም የገዥዎች ነጠቃ የሙስና ንቅዘት (state capture)-ይባላል።

እንደዚህ ያለው ሙስና የፀረ-ሙስና ኮሚሽንን በማቋቋም ሊወገድ አይችልም!ሙስናውከነ ሥርዓቱ መወገድ አለበት።

የይድነቃቸውየአፍሪካ እግርኳስ ጉዞ ከቅኝ አገዛዝ፣ በደቡብአፍሪካ ከነበረውየአፓርታይድ ስርአት እንዲሁምአፍሪካ በአውሮፓውያን ቁጥጥር ስር በነበረውፊፋ ተገቢውቦታ እንዲሰጣት ከተደረገውትግል ጋር ሰፊ ቁርኝት ያለውነው።

ነገር ግን አፍሪካ ከሶቭየት ህብረት እና ተከታዮቿ እንዲሁም ከደቡብ አሜሪካ ሃገራት ድጋፍ አገኘች። በፊፋ ስራ አስፈፃሚ ኮሚቴም ተወካይ ለማግኘት ቻለች። ግብፃዊውኢንጂነር አብዱላዚዝ አብደላህ ሳሌም የአፍሪካ የመጀመሪያው ተወካይ ነበሩ። አፍሪካ የራሷን የእግርኳስ ኮንፌዴሬሽን እንድታቋቁምም ፊፋ ፈቃዱን ሰጠ።

ETHIOPIAN MUSIC

Ali Kaifa: the man who built Ethiopia's Motown

ETHIOPIA OBSERVER September 13, 2016

When we hear a great music, the trend here is that to think of the recordas having solely originated from the imagination of the musician. But thatobviously ignores the role of the producer, who transforms the musician'seffort into the sound we experience. The contributions that Ali Abdela Kaifa (better known as Ali Tango), has made to the modern Ethiopian music is significant, a fact that has been acknowledged, for instance, by an Ethiopian music expert Francis Falceto, who included many of Ali's records on the compilation series of Ethiopiques CDS. Many of the musician's greatest songs owe their sound and character to the highly influential and longs-serving Ali Tango's behind-the-scenes work.

A pillar of the Addis Ababa music scene in the 70's, 80's and 90's, Ali Kaifa's prodigious output was the result of his skill at organization and self-discipline. His label, Kaifa has become a successful independent record label in Ethiopia, producing some of the greatest, most uplifting and most enduring popular music in history. Ali, who was born in Jimma,located at 335 kilometers south west of Addis Ababa, to an Ethiopian mother and Yemeni father, started out assisting his father in the coffee trade in his teen years, going to school for a half day. A football fan and enthusiast since his school days, Ali played for St. George along with thethen prominent players such as Netsere Wolde Selassie and Mengistu Worku. He also encouraged his younger brother Ahmed Muker to play forSt. George, who a few years later proved to be one of the team's best players, representing the Ethiopian National Team.

Ali's father inculcated in his children the values of strong family and hardwork. Ali's siblings followed in their father's footsteps as strivers and entrepreneurs. The younger brother Mohammed was on his way to becoming a successful businessman, importing the fashionable Seiko watch, and taking the name Mohammed Seiko along the way, associatedwith the product. For Ali, when the coffee trade declined, in later effort tocarve out his livelihood, he became an agent for Sony, distributing radio and television.

After a fateful encounter of listening to the captivating sound of GetachewKassa's a Tizita song, Ali was hooked to the sound of local music. He decided to venture into the world of music business, eventually transforming Calypso Music shop that his mother bought into Tango Musicshop in the early 70's, a shop which would become his professional address for more than three decades "Coincidentally, my shop was locatedin the centre of Piazza in front of Amha's Harambe shop and I used to sell many of Amah's records, which gave me insight into the potential of the music business," Ali recalls. This sharpened his urge to record and produce music albums in reel, thus adding to the budding music recordingindustry, then dominated by Amha Eshete and Phillips Ethiopia.
When Ali decided to record music he first thought of Getachew Kassa whomade an impression on him and he has remained a reference point to whom Ali could turn on. But that was not to be as he would learn that Getachew already made a deal with Harambe Music, but all the same he went on securing legal license and recording for others. He launched his label proper, Kaifa Records would alter become an integral force in the development of the modern music recording.
One of the first artists he recorded on vinyl was Alemayehu Borobor's Belaya Belaya, after watching the artist's performance on TV. Alemayehu was a backing vocalist with the Ibex Band, and his work had a moderate success. "It had modest reception, not as much as I expected to," Ali says. He continued all the same releasing other vinyl records by prominent musicians such as Ayalew Mesfin, Alemayehu Eshete, Bizunesh Bekele, Tamrat Ferenji, Muluken Melesse and Atselefetch Ashene. Some ofthese vinyl dating to 1976-78 were reissued with an altered track listing as Ethiopiques 13, Ethiopian Grooves, the Golden Seventies in 2002. After the 1974 revolution, the pioneering Amha Records was closedand its owner, Amha Eshete relocated to the US.

However, the demand for fresh recordings continued and Kaifa records thrived on to fulfill the demand to accompany the clandestine lock-in parties that replaced the night scenes of years earlier. From the 1978 onwards, Kaifa switched its attention from vinyl to the cheaper medium of cassettes, a technology that started making a massive impact on music distribution in the country. Ali understood the accelerating importance of popular culture, felt that he was in the right place at the right time to takeup the torch for the music recording. Since then, Ali recorded and produced a number of artists and launched the careers of acts as Ali Birra,Neway Debebe, Hamalmal Abate, Kiros Alemayehu, and Sofia Atsebeha.

ETHIOPIAN MODERN MUSIC & The WALIAS BAND!

September 13, 2016

Among those successful artists whose career was launched by Kaifa records was Aster Aweke. "The idea of finding women to act as chorus for the Walias band whose record that I was producing in 1974 occurred to the band members. (The Walias Band was an active band from the early 1970s, until the beginning of the 1990s, comprising a collection of the finest young music talents of the country). Accordingly, they asked aroundand they brought three girls with them. One of those girls were none other than Aster Aweke," Ali recalls. "I thought she had a lot of promise and I asked her if she was interested to work with me. As I came to learn she was then working temporarily for Hager Fikir theatre. She welcomed the idea and I recorded her songs on vinyl," Ali continues. "It was not thatmuch successful because people complained her voice wouldn't come out. I proposed she team up with the late Woubishet Fisseha and I gave them a space in my house so that they could rehearse together, which they did for a year. I recorded an original cassette for her, finally getting satisfactory versions of the songs. Since I really believed that she was destined to be a star, I did a lot to promote her works through radio and TV commercials. I gave her lots of advice about stage manners," he says. Aster Aweke's and Woubishet Fiseha's albums were printed in 1975.

Aster's development was gradual rather than revolutionary and Ali carriedon making her records and recorded four more cassettes and two singles of her. (Aster later found herself in great demand, being asked to sing at parties and at clubs around the capital. She eventually immigrated to the United States in 1982, first settling in California and then in Washington, D.C., where one of the largest Ethiopian expat communities existed. Asterbecame the first Ethiopian whose recordings were distributed internationally by a major record label, with her album released by Iain Scott at Triple Earth Records in UK in 1989.)

Another musician who generated excitement almost immediately recording with Kaifa Records was Oromo singer Ali Birra. Ali Birra, who joined the Imperial Body Guard Band in 1966, first recorded with Kaifa Records in 1977. "When I first met Ali Birra, his fame was restricted to hisnative town Dire Dawa. Initially I was not willing to take a chance by recording him. But he insisted that I record him and I gave in. To my surprise, it became an instant hit in Addis Ababa and elsewhere in the country. He started working in a night club," Ali recalls. Ali would departfor the United States, joining the growing refuge artists in the United States.

Another musician who emerged in the period and whose instrumental music Ali recorded in 1977 was a keyboardist Hailu Mergia, who was accompanied by the famous Walias' band and Mulatu Astake. Ali first noticed Hailu's development when he spent hours in the audience duringthe band engagement and the participation of the arranger and pianist Girme Beyene would bring the work critical and popular acclaim. Three decades later and the tape was rediscovered by producer Brian Shimkovitz, founder of a small record label called Awesome Tapes from Africa, and reissued it, generating newer interest in the work. (In 1981, Hailu Mergia travelled to the United States where he was booked to play with the Walias band and then settled in Washington. For about 20 yearsin Washington, Hailu made money playing with another band and managing a nightclub. When those jobs ended, he became a taxi driver.)

Another relative new comer whom Ali met in the early 85 was Neway Debebe, who was working at Cinema Ras as a songwriter and stage vocalist. "I got in touch with him. I came to learn that it was him who wrote the lyrics and composed the melody for Tsehay Yohannes's 'Yaz Yaz'which was a hit then. The other music producers turned him down. Your voice is forceful, and is more suited to revolutionary songs than romantic and love songs, they would tell him. When I recorded Niway debut album, he became an idol," Ali says. The recognition for Neway came quickly. "Tracks such as Eshete Belahu, Ye Tikimt Abeba brought the recognition that I could hardly imagine," Ali says. In a month's time, the sales reached greater than 100,000 copies, which was a far cry from the Vinyal copies that sold around 3,000 copies. Neway Debebe, 57, who is currentlybased in Addis Ababa after years of stay in the US gives his account. He said he was composing lyrics for different singers, exasperated for a while because it took him long to get recording exposure. "I was going around asking music labels, showing my compositions. Finally Tango was willing to record me, which opened for me the path for recognition" said Neway. "This was a really exciting time in my life, and I am indebted to Tango music shop, its owner Ali Kaifa and studio engineer Mensur Abdurahaman for inducting me into the world of music records and making my music accessible to the wider public. I have tremendous respect for people like Ali Kaifa who not only loved the music, but put their money where their mouth was," Neway says.
Over the years Ali Kaifa produced a significant body of cassettes, releasing53 records between 1973 and 1977. He helped many of the young artist's transition from amateur performers to best-selling recording artist. He earned a reputation for being honest and generous with musicians when itcame to earnings and thus inspired decent loyalty. However, despite his efforts Ali was under no such illusion about the poor and raw quality of the production. He said there were no professional or semi-professional studios to record. “We didn’t have enough equipment for recording. Thiswas why the quality of the recording is poor,” he said.

Ali said that the military government didn’t grant them licenses to import better equipment. The government said they had more important priorities when allocating scare foreign exchange. Equally worrying for Aliwas the problem of piracy, which he found was appalling and made the industry precarious. With the opening of newer music shops, he felt, the problem was getting bigger and bigger. Numerous local recording firms started to mushroom in the printing process. As result, large number of cassettes were produced, though most of were not original. “The others shops, when I released a new cassette, they made unauthorized copies ofthe cassettes and sold them in their shops,” Very little of the profit endedup in the pockets of the recording artists and record label.

“The level of piracy was such that it forced me out of the recording business for four years. There were a few music recordings who were engaged in uncompetitive and unethical practice of unlawfully reproducingthe records by my label. I decided to play the same card, copying their own production and selling it through my shop. I wanted them to know what it meant to be at the receiving end of such illegal act. Angered by my action, two of the labels approached me though my lawyer. (We had the same lawyer). I had my sleeve up and sent my agent to buy my records from one of those shops. He came along with my records illegally copied with their seal upon it. What more evidence could I produce than such this? I told him that I was willing to pay for their four year’s loss if they would pay for my fifteen years’. The lawyer had no more to say,”

Ali’s dexterity has extended into the new concept of music and video shop during the peak time of the military regime. Francis Falceto who was in Addis Ababa during those days and befriended Ali Tango remembers that, “People were queuing every day at his shop, renting videos (mostly films or TV programs from American and English TVs), as they were fed up withthe socialist propaganda on the state-run television and radio,” Ali is warmin his praise for Francis Falceto, who later reissued some of his works and made them available in the international market. He said the French national has done more than most to uncover a seam of excellent music from the country, who have remained wholly obscure in the west. Ali said they still keep their friendship and communicate frequently.

Ali also gives credit to the former Roha Band, a band that he said was his long-time associate, and particularly two of the memebers, Selam Seyoumand Giovanni Rico. Ali Tango, now 74, leads a quieter life in Seattle, Washington. He has lived there for the past eight years. His label and music shop, Tango no longer exists. The last cassette he recorded was in 1990, featuring Getachew Gadissisa’s 'Yifeal buna, yifela sahi', which was the hit of the year. After Ali's departure first to Yemen and then the US, his son Adil tried to keep the flame by running the music shop in Atikilt Tera's area. He managed to do that for about five years, finally giving it up five years ago. Ali is father to 13 children biologically, and to hundredsmusically. Ali says he is following the recent trends in Ethiopian music andappreciates the fact that a new generation of musicians are introducing newer elements to the melodies of the past, and traditional and modern styles are mixed in an array of regional and ethnic varieties.

ETHIOPIAN MODERN MUSIC & The Roha band in the mid- 80s

The Ibex band was formed in the 1970 and played in Ras Hotel for more than 12 years. Among its main players were: Giovanni Rico (Bass); Selam Seyoum (Lead Guitar); Tedros Metiku (Tenor Sax); Fekade Amdemeskel (Tenor / Alto/ Flute); Hailemariam (Keyborad); Tesfaye Mekonen (Drums) ; Girma Chibssa (Congs Drums). It is the band that produced numerous recordings with other singers. It's greatest productionwas Mohamud's first two albums – Mela Mela and Tizeta. The band disbanded in the early 1980's

The Roha Band was formed in the early 1980's right after the Ibex Band was disbanded. Members of the Ibex Band, namely Giovanni ; Selam andFekade got together with Dawit Yifru, who was a member of the Dahlak Band and agreed to form a new band. The core members of the band were Giovanni Rico (Bass); Selam Seyoum (Lead Guitar); Fekade Amdemeskel (Tenor/Alto/Flute); Dawit Yifru (Keyborad); Tekle Tesfazigie(Drums); Levon Fondachi (Vocals).

The Roha Band went on to dominate the Ethiopian music scene playing atthe Hilton Hotel and Ghion Hotel. In addition it took part in numerous national and international music festivals travelling all over the Middle East; Europe and the United States. It recorded Mohamud's subsequent albums and other renowned singers producing some 400 albums. Even though the Roha Band disbanded in the early 1990's, most of the members are still active.

Is becoming a PR disaster for Ethiopia's government

Newsweek Magazine September 13, 2016

Ethiopian Paralympian Tamiru Demisse showed solidarity with Oromiaprotesters—who have clashed with the country's government—as he claimed a silver medal, following a protest gesture made by Olympic counterpart Feyisa Lilesa.
Demisse, who competed in the men's 1,500-meter T13 race for visually impaired runners, claimed a silver medal in the race on Sunday at the Olympic Station in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. As he crossed the finish line, Demisse crossed his arms above his head.The gesture has become widelyadopted among members of the Oromo people, the country's largest ethnic group. Oromo protesters have clashed with Ethiopian security forces in recent months, with Human Rights Watch claiming the unrest has seen more than 400 people killed. The Ethiopian government has denied these death occurred.

Demisse, 22, repeated the gesture on the podium and again in the athletes' mixed zone. The athlete said he did not want to return to the Horn of Africa country but wanted to go to the U.S.. "If I go back, I'm a dead man," said Demisse, according to Brazilian television network Globo."I am totally against what they are doing in Ethiopia, [and I'm] against the government."

The protest echoed that carried out by Lilesa, who also crossed his armsabove his head when finishing second in the men's marathon in the Rio 2016 Olympics in August. Lilesa has gone to the U.S., possibly to seek asylum, after saying he would be killed or imprisoned if he returned to Ethiopia following his protest. A crowdfunding campaign set up to cover Lilesa's legal costs and support his family has generated more than $160,000 since it began on August 21.

The protests began in Oromia, a region that surrounds the capital Addis Ababa, in November 2015 over government plans to extend the capital's territory, which protesters said would see Oromo farmers forcibly evicted.

The government abandoned its plans in January, but anti-governmentprotests have continued and spread to other areas. Almost 100 peoplewere killed in early August when security forces used live bullets on protesters in the Oromia and Amhara regions.

Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn apologized for the deathsin March, but blamed "anti-peace forces" for orchestrating the demonstrations, claiming that protesters had damaged government property.

"Joy Comes in the Morning!":
My Message for the Ethiopian New Year 2009 (E.C.)
By Prof. Al Mariam

September 11, 2016 is the beginning of the 2009 Ethiopian New Year(Meskerem 1, Ethiopian Calendar [E.C.]).
It is painful for me to utter the words, “Happy Ethiopian New Year- 2009”(Melkam Adis Amet) this new year. 2008 E.C. has been a Year of Mourning for the people of Ethiopia.

In 2008 E.C., the Thugtatorship of the Tigrean People’s Liberation Front (T-TPLF) intensified the murderous spree it started a quarter of a centuryago in 1991.

Human Rights Watch (HRW) in its June 2016 report documented that “security forces in Ethiopia have used excessive and lethal force againstlargely peaceful protests that have swept through Oromia, the country’slargest region, since November 2015.”

According to HRW, T-TPLF security forces shot into crowds, summarily killing people during mass roundups, and torturing detained protesters. Because primary and secondary school students in Oromia were among the early protesters, many of those arrested or killed were children under the age of 18. Security forces, including members of the federal police andthe military, have arbitrarily arrested students, teachers, musicians, opposition politicians, health workers, and people who provided assistanceor shelter to fleeing students.

The T-TPLF massacres in 2008 E.C. have been so atrocious even the Obama Administration, the protector, guardian and benefactor of the ofT-TPLF, was forced to diplomatically express its horror and disgust.

Last week, Samantha Power, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, expressed “grave concerns” about the “excessive use of forceagainst protesters in Ethiopia.”

Power described the T-TPLF “violence” as “extremely serious” and called for a transparent and independent investigation. Power said “the U.S. hasasked the government to allow people to protest peacefully.”

All that mumbo jumbo is diplomatic-speak for, “The T-TPLF has committedlarge-scale crimes against humanity. A credible international investigationis needed to bring the perpetrators to justice. The T-TPLF should let peaceful demonstrators peacefully demonstrate."

On August 10, 2016, the head of the United Nations High Commission forHuman Rights demanded that the T-TPLF "allow international observers into restive regions" where scores of unarmed demonstrators have been massacred by T-TPLF forces to conduct an investigation. The T-TPLF thumbed its nose (or did it flip the bird at) on the High Commissioner.

On August 21, 2016, Tom Malinowski, U.S. Assistant Secretary of State for Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor and Obama's global messengerof democracy and human rights declared the T-TPLF's "tactics in response to protests in the Oromia and Amhara regions of the country are 'self-defeating'".

That is diplomatic-speak for, "The more innocent people the T-TPLF massacres, the more it dooms and seals its fate. Those who live by thesword shall die by the sword."

The fact of the matter is that the T-TPLF can't run and can't hide. It hasreached the end of the line!

On September 6, 2016, the European Union (EU) took action and cut off funds from its Emergency Trust Fund going to the T-TPLF. The EU statement declared: "As far as the Emergency Trust Fund for Africa is concerned, it is important to know that no funding are decentralised to, orchannelled through, the beneficiary countries' government structures." In other words, the EU will no longer feed the T-TPLF Beast.

In America, September 11 is a day that shall live in infamy.

On September 11, 2001, the terrorist group al-Qaeda coordinated four attacks in the United States massacring over 3,000 innocent civilians andcausing property damage in untold billions.

Americans and the whole world reacted with horror and outrage at thework of Al Qaeda.

Yet, when the T-TPLF, an organization listed as a terrorist organization inthe Global Terrorism Data Base, commits massacres and crimes against humanity on an industrial scale in broad daylight day after day, the Obama Administration turns deaf ears and blind eyes.

Aah! The double standard on global terrorists.

The Obama Administration's attitude is, "The T-TPLF may be a terroristorganization. But they are OUR terrorists."

Not unlike President Franklin D. Roosevelt's attitude towards the Latin American dictator Somoza Garcia. "Somoza may be an S.O.B., but he'sour S.O.B." (text ends)

Rep. Chris Smith on Ethiopia Rights Abuses: 'Abomination When You Torture Your Own Citizens'(CNSNews.com) By Penny Starr | September 13, 2016

Rep. Chris Smith (R. N.J.) said on Tuesday that the human rights abusestaking place under the current government in Ethiopia are an "abomination."
"It is an abomination when any country tortures its own citizens," Smith told a press conference on Capitol Hill. "The post-traumatic stress disorderthat is suffered by those, not to mention the physical injuries that they endure, but the psychological consequences usually go on for a lifetime."

Smith, who is chairman of the House Foreign Affairs' subcommittee on Africa, Global Health, Global Human Rights and International Organizations, was joined by Reps. Al Green (D-Texas) and Mike Coffman(R-Colo.) to announce the introduction of a bipartisan resolution "supporting respect for human rights and encouraging inclusive government in Ethiopia."

"This legislation calls for credible investigations into the government in theOromia and Amhara regions, as well as the recent fire and shootings at Qilinto Prison," Smith said in his opening remarks. "House Resolution 861 also urges the government of Ethiopia to allow a United Nations human rights rapporteur to conduct an independent examination of the state of human rights in Ethiopia."

Smith said the U.S. should consider all aspects of its relationship with itstraditional Ethiopian ally, including foreign aid and the issuance of visas,when addressing rights abuses in that country.

Also attending the press conference was Feyisa Lilesa, who won the silver medal for the marathon at the 2016 Olympics. Following his victory, Lilesadisplayed solidarity with the people protesting President Mulatu Teshome'smistreatment of people of different ethnic groups. Lilesa is now seeking asylum in the United States.

"The situation in Ethiopia is getting worse and it is very concerning," Lilesasaid. "The Ethiopian government is imprisoning its people, it is killing its people. It is forcing its people into exile." "Enough is enough," Smith said."Friends don't let friends commit human rights abuses."

Sens. Marco Rubio (R-Fla.) and Ben Cardin (D-Md.) introduced a companion Senate resolution, S.Res.432, last April. Freedom House ranksEthiopia as "not free." (Amy Furr contributed to this report.)

Ethiopian Human Rights Violations Brought to Light

Smith, Engel, Ellison, Green and Coffman introduce legislation to protect civilians

Washington, Sep 13, 2016

As victims of the repressive Ethiopian government looked on, Rep. Chris Smith (NJ-04), Rep. Al Green(TX-09) and Rep. Mike Coffman (CO-06) brought international attention to the oppressive actions taken by the Government of President Mulatu Teshome at a press conference held thisafternoon. "When I visited Ethiopia on a fact finding trip, then-Prime Minister Meles Zenawi was nonchalant about the shootings of peaceful demonstrators, arrests of innocents. The head of the main opposition party was refused medicine, threatening his life," said Smith, Chairman ofthe House panel on Africa.

"I have remained in contact with the Ethiopian government in an effort toconvince them to moderate their behavior toward their citizens," Smith continued. "Unfortunately this moderation has not taken place—if anything, the actions of the government of Ethiopia have intensified in its effort to shut down political opposition and critics in civil society." Smith'sopening statement can be found here.

During the conference Smith highlighted Feyisa Lilesa, an Olympic silvermedalist who was in the crowd. After raising his arms in a gesture of solidarity with his Oromo people, Lilesa now fears for his life and is seeking asylum in the United States. "The violence in Ethiopia is increasing and this this will send a clear message to the Ethiopian government that the current situation is unacceptable and that U.N. personnel must be allowed into the country to assess the situation," saidCoffman.

"I applaud Rep. Chris Smith for introducing this important resolution thatwill reiterate to the world Congress's support for democracy and human rights in Ethiopia," Green said. "I believe Ethiopia is for all Ethiopians; I believe in stability in Ethiopia; I believe the military and security apparatus of a nation should not be used against those only seeking a voice in their government and equal protection under the law; and, I believe all Ethiopians are entitled to the freedoms and rights we would expect any democracy to extend to all its citizens. I look forward to continuing to work with Rep. Smith in his efforts to raise awareness and make positive progress on this serious issue."

In response to these continued attacks on a peaceful opposition, Smith, Green and Coffman, along with Rep. Keith Ellison (MN-05), Rep. Eliot Engel (NY-16) and others introduced the bipartisan House Resolution 861.This legislation is the culmination of a long effort to promote democracy and good governance in Ethiopia and, among other key provisions, condemns the actions of the Government of Ethiopia and calls on the Secretary of State to improve the oversight and accountability of U.S. assistance to Ethiopia. "The Government of Ethiopia undoubtedly sees itself as part of the Global War on Terror," said Smith. "But violating the rights of its own citizens will only create the kind of frustration that will lead to domestic violence."

Smith has chaired three hearings on Ethiopia, the most recent of which looked into the deterioration of the human rights situation in Ethiopia andwas titled "Ethiopia After Meles: The Future of Democracy and Human Rights."

Congress of the United States House of Representatives

Excerpts of Remarks by Rep. Chris Smith September 13, 2016

Yesterday, I and Congressmen Keith Ellison, Mike Coffman, Eliot Engel, and Al Green introduced House Resolution 861 supporting respect for human rights and encouraging inclusive governance in Ethiopia. This legislation has been the productof a long effort to promote democracy and good governance in Ethiopia. When I visited Ethiopia in August 2005, the purpose of my fact-finding trip was to determine why the May election results still had not been released and why peaceful demonstrators had been shot by government security forces. Then-Prime Minister Meles Zenawi was nonchalant about the shooting and told me that he had dossiers on his political opposition and could arrest them at any time.

In November 2005, more peaceful demonstrators were shot by government forces and opposition and human rights organization leaders were arrested, sometimes on charges that Ethiopian courts said were nonexistent. Even when charges were foundto be unfounded, the government refused to let these leaders free. One of them, Hailu Shawel, who headed the main opposition party, was diabetic and was denied his medicine. That threatened his life. Others also were older men held under harshcircumstances, putting their health at risk.

I and my staff have remained in contact with the Ethiopian government over the last 11 years in an effort to convince them to moderate their behavior toward their citizens. Unfortunately, this moderation has not taken place. If anything, the actionsof the government of Ethiopia have intensified in its effort to shut down its political opposition and critics in civil society.

The annual State Department Human rights Report, as well as many other human rights reports cite serious human rights violations, including arbitrary arrests, killingsand torture committed by Ethiopian government security forces; restrictions on freedom of expression and freedom of association, politically motivated trials; harassment and intimidation of opposition party members and journalists.

This has created a genuine climate of fear in Ethiopia. During the recent Summer Olympic Games in Brazil, Ethiopian marathon runner Feyisa Lilesa won a silver medal in the men's race. After raising his arms in a gesture of solidarity with protesters from among his Oromo people, Lilesa is now afraid to return home and isseeking asylum. He is here with us today.

Lilesa is not alone in fearing harsh punishment from the Ethiopian government. Several survivors of torture at the hands of the Ethiopian governmentare here with us today as well. Demssew Tsega Abebe is also an Ethiopian long distance runner. In December last year, he joined thousands of Oromos who wereprotesting a government seizure of land. Singled out by security forces, he was tortured on the heels of his feet because security forces knew he was a runner.

Feyera Sobokssa was an accountant for Ethiopian Airlines. He was tortured for speaking about discrimination against the Oromo ethnic group. Active for many years as a Truth Speaker for human rights groups, he also is here with us today.

Let me emphasize at this point that we acknowledge that Ethiopia has been an ally of the United States and a positive contributor to international peacekeeping. This facthas prevented any hint of punitive action, such as my earlier Ethiopia Human RightsAct, no matter how relatively minimal any sanctions may have been.However, egregious human rights violations must always be pointed out and condemned evenif an ally is the one being criticized.

House Resolution 861 condemns the human rights violations by the Government ofEthiopia, from the denial of freedoms and legal recourse for such denials to the displacement of farmers in violation of international principles. It calls for that government to end the use of excessive force by security forces – a position also taken by the U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Samantha Power. This legislation calls for credible investigations into the government killings in the Oromiaand Amhara regions, as well as the recent fire and shootings at Qilinto Prison. House Resolution 861 also urges the Government of Ethiopia to allow a UNhuman rights rapporteur to conduct an independent examination of the state of human rights in Ethiopia. That government has demonstrated an inability or unwillingness to credibly examine its own behavior, and the impunity of its security forces is only leading to further human rights violations.

The Government of Ethiopia undoubtedly sees itself as a part of the Global War on Terror, but violating the rights of its own citizens will only create the kind of frustrationthat will lead to domestic violence. Our resolution calls on protesters to refrain from violence, but in the long run, that will only happen if people have the right to voice their opposition to government action peacefully and seek redress of the denial of their rights effectively.

This is the aim of House Resolution 861, and we hope our Administration and theGovernment of Ethiopia understand we are trying to prevent serious unrest in Ethiopia so that democracy and the rule of law can be genuinely enjoyed by the people of Ethiopia.

Washington — The undersigned civil society organizations applaud U.S.Representatives Chris Smith, Keith Ellison and Mike Coffman for introducing House Resolution 861, entitled "Supporting human rights andencouraging inclusive governance in Ethiopia.

H.Res.861, introduced today as companion legislation to S.Res.432, addresses the ongoing human rights abuses and political instability in Ethiopia. It condemns the killing and arbitrary arrest of protesters and calls on the Ethiopian government to conduct a full, credible and transparent investigation into the killing and excessive use of force againstprotesters in the Amhara and Oromia regions. It also urges the Ethiopian government to allow the UN to conduct an independent examination of thehuman rights situation in Ethiopia. The resolution calls on the U.S. Government to conduct a review of its security assistance to Ethiopia in light of recent developments and to develop immediately a comprehensivestrategy to improve good governance in Ethiopia.

We believe that this resolution is a powerful call to action to promote national and international accountability and redress for the egregious human rights abuses perpetrated by Ethiopian government security forcesduring recent protests in the Amhara and Oromia regions. The resolution adds to efforts by Ethiopians in Ethiopia and around the world to bring about democratic reforms, inclusive governance, and respect for human rights in Ethiopia. By specifically instructing the Department of State and USAID to improve oversight and accountability of U.S. assistance to Ethiopia, the resolution highlights the obligation of donor countries to ensure that aid given to the government of Ethiopia is not used to suppress the legitimate demands of citizens for accountable government and equal representation at all levels of the political structure.

We express our support for this resolution and the intent behind it, whichis to focus attention on helping the Ethiopian people and the Ethiopian government find a path forward out of the deepening human rights crisis.We encourage members of the House to support H.Res.861 and urge members of the Senate to support S.Res.432, the companion resolution introduced by Senators Cardin and Rubio in April.

Oromo Democratic Front and Patriotic Ginbot 7: Carnage Will NotHold the Fire Down

Joint Statement on the Current Political Crisis in EthiopiaSeptember 20, 2016

The Oromo Democratic Front and Patriotic Ginbot 7 condemn in the strongest terms possible the mass killings, detention and torture of peaceful protesters by the TPLF ruling clique's security forces in the Oromo and Amhara regions in particular, but also in the rest of Ethiopia, and calls for its immediate halt. All the peoples of Ethiopia have said enough is enough to 25 years of repression, murder, rape, looting and humiliation brought upon them by the criminal regime. The continuation ofthis unbridled massacre of the Ethiopian peoples in almost all regions of Ethiopia is not only threatening the peace, security, welfare and stability of Ethiopia, but will have grave consequences for the already volatile region of the Horn of Africa.

Thief of the Year (የ አመቱ ምርጥ ሌባ)!! -Eduardo Byrono on Azeb Mesfin

In socialist Cuba, stealing from public, spending state funds for personal motive, using government office to pr...actice corruption by any means is considered treason and carries a death penalty. So I hope the coming Ethiopian government will set up such law to sue and punish high profile criminals, like Azeb Mesfin and her team, as soon as the cloud, which hasbeen hovering on the top of us gets cleared one of this days.

She is a compulsive thief whom Ethiopians should hold accountable. She has been ransacking the whole country all year long. She is the main figurebehind the killing of peaceful protesters across the country at the moment. And I just can't wait to see her in orange jumpsuit and in chains sooner thanlater. I will applaud that day.

Don't even doubt that, she will definitely fall on the arms of justice and pay afitting price for her crimes. Trust me, it is only a matter of time. Even the mighty Roman empire has Collapsed 3 times.

Colonel Hubert Julian.. Another Aviator for The Emperor

The Black Eagle of Harlem: The truth behind the tall tales of Hubert Fauntleroy JulianStory By David Shaftel Air & Space Magazine September 16, 2016

In 1930, when future Ethiopian Emperor Haile Selassie was planning a lavish ceremony to celebrate his coronation as emperor, he sent an emissary to a 33-year-old U.S.-based aviator, Hubert Fauntleroy Julian. Aviation had come to Ethiopia only the year before, with the arrival of aFrench Potez 25 biplane piloted by André Maillet, but the modernity- obsessed Selassie hoped to put on an aerial display, with a flamboyant performer who would attract the world's attention. Julian, known in NewYork as the "Black Eagle of Harlem" and sometimes called the "Negro Lindbergh," was the perfect choice.

At the emperor-elect's request, the Ethiopian Imperial Air Force, which consisted of two Junkers monoplanes, a Gipsy Moth, and two French pilots, performed a pre-coronation show. In an unplanned flourish, Julianleapt from Maillet's airplane, parachuting to the feet of Selassie, who wasso pleased that he bestowed Ethiopian citizenship on Julian, the rank of colonel, and awarded him the Order of Menelik, the empire's highest honor.

Julian's glory was short-lived. Four months later, during a coronationdress rehearsal in Addis Ababa, Julian lost control of the de Havilland Gipsy Moth he was flying. As the emperor-elect looked on in fury, Julian made a crash landing into a eucalyptus tree. The Moth had been Selassie'spersonal airplane, a gift from Selfridge's department store in London, and Julian was expelled from the country amid allegations that he had stolen the aircraft. He accused the Ethiopian air force's French airmen of sabotaging him, but conceded in his 1964 memoir, Black Eagle, that “a crash at an air display watched by foreigners whom the Emperor wanted to impress was clearly a disaster.”

So the Black Eagle returned to Harlem. For the rest of his life Julian wouldcontinue to promote himself as Selassie’s air marshal, but Ethiopia would prove to be only a brief chapter in the Black Eagle’s just-true-enough life story.

Oromo Asylum Seekers In Egypt Are Self-Immolating Out OfDesperation

The Huffington Post September 16, 2016

Frustrations among Oromo refugees from Ethiopia stranded in Egypt over long waits for their claims to be processed by the U.N. refugee agency and the high rate of rejection haverecently mounted to horrifying extremes.

CAIRO – On July 21, Getu Ayana, a 26-year-old Oromo asylum seeker self-immolated in front of the city’s United Nations refugee agency (UNHCR) office. Asli Nure, another refugee from the Ethiopian ethnic group, ran towards Getu in a panic. She too was soon engulfed in flames.Both were rushed to hospital, but had already sustained third-degree burns over 60 and 40 percent of their bodies, respectively. Nure died fivedays later, and on July 31, Ayana too.

UNHCR closed its doors for three days. The issuing of refugee status determination (RSD) decisions resumed normally once it was reopened,but the decisions for Ethiopian asylum seekers were suspended for an extra week.

A group of 40 Oromo asylum seekers, including Ayana and Nure, had beencamping outside the UNHCR offices for four months at that point.
According to the witnesses who camped alongside the pair, the self- immolation was the culmination of months of frustration. Ayana and Nureacted because of what fellow demonstrators claim are the long wait timesfor refugee status determination (RSD) interviews and the high rate of rejection for Oromos in Egypt.

The night before the incident, the group decided that if there were any more rejections they would take some sort of action. “If we go back to ourcountry, all we can expect is jail and torture. Rather than return back to Ethiopia to die, we decided it would be better for us to die here,” saidAbdo, a teacher from Ethiopia's Oromia state.

Thirty-three of the 40 agreed to self-immolate. "On the Wednesday evening, we collected money to buy a container of gas," said Jafar UmarMohammed, a farmer from Oromia. Ayana went ahead – but the others say they may follow if the UNHCRdoes not address their concerns.

Sophia Ibrahim Sani, a single mother of four, was one of the few that didn't agree to self-immolate, but she echoed a similar sense of desperation. "If I didn't have my children here depending on me, I would have participated as well. If you have problems and there are no solutions, it's better to die," she said. Demonstrations against the allegedly long wait times and rejection rate began on March 27, when nearly 300 Oromos gathered in protest outside UNHCR.

"UNHCR staff held a series of meetings with community leaders to addressthe complaints of the community," said Elizabeth Tan, theUNHCR regional representative in Egypt. "After two weeks of intensive discussions, UNHCRreached an agreement with the community on a number of issues," she said. While the majority of protestors dispersed by April 11, around 40 remained, camping outside the offices.

"The Oromo community leaders told us to go home. But where should wego? We don't have a home, we don't have anywhere to go," explained Abdo. Mufti, a young shopkeeper from Oromia, said that while squatting on the site was originally an act of protest, it also became a necessity forthose with no other housing options. "We told the community leaders many times we don't have a house and that we have security problems,"he said.

He said he is afraid to run into the smugglers that brought him into Egypt."I owe them money, money I don't have, and they've already attacked meonce in the streets," said Mufti.

Sani said she too had security issues when she lived in Arab al-Maadi, a densely populated neighborhood in Cairo where most Oromos live. "Egyptian teenagers would chase my daughters and throw stones or shards of glass at them," she said. According to both Mufti and Sani, attacks on refugees in Egypt are frequent, especially on ones from Africancountries. When they try to report problems to Egyptian police, they are often ignored.

Though the Oromos make up the largest ethnic group in Ethiopia, their culture has long been repressed by successive Ethiopian governments. "Iwas a teacher of Afan-Oromo, English and Amhara in a preparatory school. The government accused me of teaching the students Oromo culture and opposition politics. Because of this, I was arrestedrepeatedly," said Abdo.

Sani said that between 2005 and 2013, she was detained twice – once forthree years and the second time for 18 months. She was accused of having links to the Oromo Liberation Front (OLF), a common pretense used by the Ethiopian government to carry out arbitrary arrests and detentions of Oromos. According to Human Rights Watch (HRW), "tens ofthousands have been targeted for arbitrary detention, torture, and other abuses, even when there is no evidence linking them to the OLF."

The HRW report states that between November 2015 and June 2016, over400 protesters are estimated to have been killed in Oromia. Those protests initially began to oppose the expansion of Addis Ababa. While theplan was shelved,further grievances with the government's grip over power and repressive tactics have returned to the fore in recent months. By August, protests spread throughout Oromia and into the Amhara region, with the government responding harshly, leaving nearly another 100 protesters dead.

"Since I've been living here, each week they hand out around 40 rejectionletters, and maybe one acceptance for Oromos," said Abdo. Tan said that negative RSDdecisions for Oromos have increased between 2014 and 2016. But she noted, "RSD decisions are based on asylum seekers' individual claims and UNHCR uses country of origin information approved by UNHCR HQ to help assess the individual claims."

"The waiting period between registration and RSD interviews is often lengthy because of UNHCR's lack of capacity," said Tan. She noted that UNHCR has reduced RSD processing from 28 to 16 months, but added that the majority of the decisions being issued now are from cases filed in2013 and 2014.

The majority of asylum seekers entering Egypt come from Syria, Sudan,South Sudan, Ethiopia, Somalia, Eritrea and Iraq. As of July 30, 184,116refugees and asylum seekers have registered withUNHCR in Egypt.
Between July 2015 and July 2016, the number of Ethiopian (includingOromo and Amhara) asylum seekers and refugees alone has nearly doubled from 5,518 to 10,288.

According to Tan, emergency housing and financial assistance in Egypt areprovided for the most vulnerable newcomers. However she noted, "Only between 15 and 35 percent of refugees and asylum seekers are provided with financial assistance, and the levels of assistance are inadequate to sustain a basic standard of living. This low level is due to the insufficient funding levels for refugee programs in Egypt.”

Refugees in Egypt often find themselves caught between personal and financial insecurity. Employment opportunities for refugees in Egypt are slim and financial assistance very limited. This makes access to housing, medical treatment and basics difficult. Oromo refugees bear a particularlyheavy toll due to such dearth of support.

Peddling Hate and Division:
Tigray People's Liberation Front Vocation
By Alem Mamo September 16, 2016

"Monsters exist, but they are too few in number to be truly dangerous. More dangerousare the common men, the functionaries ready to believe and to act without asking questions."- Primo Levi

Hate, whether it is at the individual or group level, is a serious and debilitating illness. First it consumes the carrier’s emotional, psychologicaland spiritual being before it is peddled into the ‘other’. The notion of the ‘other’ is the primary root of this dangerous and destructive illness.
Through deliberate and systemic construction of fictitious narratives, the‘other’ is portrayed as a monster, devilish, and in an extreme case sub- human. During the Rwandan genocide Hutu extremist radio stations described Tutsi’s as ‘cockroaches,’ and ‘it’ should be exterminated. The radio station declared, “you have to kill the Tutsi; they are cockroaches.”This hateful and monstrous narrative wasn’t built overnight. It was carefully and meticulously laid brick by brick and spewed with a tone of viciousness for decades.

In Ethiopia, the dehumanization of the other is incorporated into theofficial and unofficial policies and narratives of the TPLF.

It is not surprising that the TPLF has a long list of ‘others’ which it hates and identifies as ‘enemies’ who the group believes must be eliminated: the Agaw, Amhara, Gambella, Oromo, Konso, Ogaden, Wolqaiet, Raya, pro-democracy activists, human rights defenders, journalists, and the list goes on. At the top of its hate and hit list, however, is the Amhara people.The TPLF’s hate for the Amhara people is deeply entrenched and viscous. The group’s history, political program, and narrative is carved out of Amhara hate and Amhara dehumanization. During the guerilla years it’s fighters sang anti-Amhara songs, and the cadres psyche up the foot soldiers by spewing anti-Amhara hate stories. As such the group launcheda calculated political, military, social, and economic campaign against the Amhara, including the annexation and occupation of Amhara fertile land incorporating it into Tigray territory.

As the TPLF began to consolidate power at a national level, various groupsbegan to question its character, policy, and legitimacy. At the same time the group's hate list also grew rapidly. Today, it is engaged in a large scale military operation against the entire population in four corners of thecountry. Promising young men and women are murdered by the regime's snipers in broad daylight. Villages are burnt, peaceful protestors are summarily executed, prisons are filled with any one who dares to questionthe group's legitimacy. People are being killed by forces loyal to the regime for no other crime than belonging to a particular ethnic group.
When one's identity becomes the prime justification and rationale forbeing killed, it is no longer just unlawful killing. It is a precursor to genocide, a violation of international law.

During the Trojan War (in Greek mythology) the Amazonian queen, Penthesilea, was killed by the Greek hero, Achilles. After killing her he removes her helmet and sees her face and instantly falls in love with her corpse. The solider Thersites who witnessed Achilles killing Penthesilea and his romantic reaction accused him of necrophilia to which Achilles responded by killing Thersites. Necrophilia is pathological romance with death. It is the dark emotional and psychological whole in which love is replaced with death. The TPLF has been dancing with death and destruction for a very long time. It embraces everything that is contrary to love, life and human decency. It is this disturbing and twisted nature ofthe group which makes a political solution to the country's problems moredifficult.

The demagogues, after preaching hate and division for more than quarterof a century now, are evoking dark and painful memories of human suffering. Two of the highest priests of hate, Seyoum Mesfin, TPLF's Ambassador to People's Republic of China, and Abaye Tsehaye with a rotating official and unofficial title, painted a bleak scenario relative to theRwandan Genocide and the Shoah, the extermination of six million Jews by the Nazi's. Their audacity to lie is breathtaking. It is an open secret that the current political, economic, and social woes of the country have their roots in the belligerence and violent behaviour of the group itself.
Instead of looking deep into their own soul, they once again resort to theirhateful rhetoric and denial.
There is an Egyptian joke related to the recentRevolution that overthrew President Hosni Mubarak. In this joke the archangel of death appears before Mubarak and tells him to bid farewell tothe Egyptian people. Mubarak asks, "Why, where are they going?"

At these challenging and trying times Ethiopia desperately needs wise andeven-tempered leadership. The country is at the edge of the abyss. It is the thoughtfulness and enlightened quality of the Ethiopian people that has kept relative peace in the country, so far. If it was left to the TPLF's hate peddling and campaign of division, this ancient and proud nation would have descended into a catastrophic chaos. It is imperative that this culture of coexistence, mutual respect, peace, and harmony mustcontinue, in spite of TPLF's divisive and hateful policy.

The ethnic hegemony that the TPLF has imposed on the Ethiopian people for the last twenty-five years is unravelling. At the same time, the unwavering commitment of the people to establish a free, democratic, andjust political order in the country is being pronounced daily in city streets, towns, and villages. While the demand of the people remains the building of a democratic society, the TPLF's hate mongers are still resorting to theirold and tired mantra of 'revolutionary democracy'. Authoritarian demagogues, wherever they are, whatever culture they come from, are allcut from the same cloth. They don't see what is coming. They don't distinguish the difference between military might and people power. Thereis no a page in the history book that confirms people's uprising being quashed with military might forever. In the end, it never stops the forces of freedom, truth and justice from their triumphant march.

The Powerful Gonder Miltias Reacts

18 soldiers killed, 20 more captured as TPLF tries to disarm

By Ethiomedia September 16, 2016

GONDER, Ethiopia - The powerful Gonder militias fighting the regime inAddis Ababa killed 18 soldiers and captured 20 more during battles on September 5, Amara Tegadlo has reported.

Two army units were dispatched to Belesa, Wegera and other areas surrounding Gonder to disarm the local militias who have come into the spotlight in recent times following the outbreak of public protests in Gonder, the main city seen as the bedrock of powerful opposition fightingto unseat the ethnic minority TPLF regime.

Amara Tegadlo, a movement empowering the marginalized Amhara people, said the 18 soldiers were killed during the first combat operation while a second reinforcement unit of about 100 soldiers left 20 of their colleagues captives of the local militia. The source didn't give details aboutwhat happened to the rest of the unit.

Gonder caught the attention of the nation in recent months after a clandestine TPLF group that had travelled from Mekelle to Gonder to arrest members of Wolkait Amhara Identity Establishing Committee, a committee trying to restore the areas annexed into Tigrai back under Gonder/Amhara administration, was wiped out during a shootout to arrestCol. Demeke Zewdu, leader of the rebelling committee.

Now in police custody in his hometown of Gonder, Col. Demeke enjoys thestatus of a national hero, and any attempts by TPLF to take the former army officer back to Mekelle is fraught with sparking a deadly fight with the local militias spreading all across the northwest region of Ethiopia.
During funeral marches in honor of their fallen comrades, the local militiassported their much-valued AK-47 rifles and fired shots after shots as per the custom of the region.

TPLF has been on edge to disarm the militias and its latest attempt at doing so has ended in a major setback amid a national uprising in Oromiaand other regions to end TPLF's 25-year-old brutal rule.

Immediate Press Release

Ethiopian Forum for Peace, Democracy & Development

September 2016 Ex- Ambassador Imru Zelleke

It is clear by now that Ethiopia is in the midst of a nationwide grass roots popular revolt. After a quarter of a century of abuse, corruption and criminal governance by the Tigrai Peoples Liberation Front, (TPLF) a minority tribal mafia Government, the Ethiopian people are openly rebelling. Thanks to the courage and sacrifice made by our heroic citizens,who are confronting the armed forces of oppression with their bare hands,a new opportunity to gain democratic governance is at hand.

The question is how do we ensure that this is not a lost opportunity? Ethiopia has in its old time traditions, the philosophical and ethical valuesand organic laws that are an integral part of a democratic system of government. Our country has an abundance of experienced and mature politicians, civil servants and professionals in all fields, to manage and administer a democratic government. There is no reasonable justificationfor the turbid political and social state the country has fallen into in the recent past. Forty years after the fall of the Monarchy, we have been under two regimes: the first with a pseudo-Marxist ideology supported bythe former Eastern Block countries, the second a neo-fascist mafia supported by the western democracies. We find ourselves back to squareone, still struggling to achieve a democratic system of government.

At this critical moment, it is hoped that the Ethiopian opposition parties will acquire a new cohesive spirit and will coalesce into a united national democratic alliance that will offer a credible alternative to the existing regime, with intent to bring an effective solution to the present crisis. We appeal strongly to the US and other donor countries that have been supporting the TPLF/EPRDF regime, a leadership tainted by the unaccountable executive power of the party apparatus, to realize the illegitimacy and poor governance of the regime whose image is unraveling. Some policy-makers may believe that a future solution for the crisis should be a ‘political deal’ between the existing parties, I believe that it is too late for a patch up job worked out by politicians with trifling roles in the present revolt.

More importantly, a serious consideration should be given to the popularvoice of the Ethiopian people, who after 25 years have finally repudiatedthe ethnic based political structure imposed by the present regime. The opposition should realize the difficulty of reaching a positive solution, particularly when an enfeebled party such as the TPLF continues to hold the reins of power and state machinery, the army, the police and the media. The opposition should see that the regime's proclaimed revolutionary democratic capitalism, based on the peasantry, whatever it may mean, along with the new reconstruction of the EPRDF, are all a hollow gesture. This would only signify the survival and continuation of thetribal minority regime and its present leadership.

The onus is on the opposition parties to table publicly, right now, clear andunequivocal conditions that will secure the installation of a genuine democratic system of government, and guarantee a lasting peace in the nation. However, tempting an offer, they should furthermore avoid falling into half-backed deals that will compromise their own future and that of the country. The opposition has to clearly understand that once they enterinto negotiations with the TPLF/EPRDF regime, they will be party to the regime's failings, and share responsibilities of the outcome.

That being said, whatever form the future constitutional framework will beagreed upon, it must ensure the following principles and conditions:

- Abrogation of the present ethnic based constitution with replacement bya free democratic, one person one vote national system.

- Organizing of a Constitutional Assembly to draft a new democratic constitution that a) guarantees freedom and equality to all citizens of Ethiopia, b) establish clear separations of power between the legislativeand executive branches and c) establish an independent judiciary.

- Establishing a constitutional court should be considered of primeimportance.

- Releasing of all political prisoners.

- Establishing a care-taker government with full participation of all politicaland civic groups, with the absolute exclusion of former officials of the Derg regime, to ensure installation of a transitional arrangement for the smooth transfer of power.

- Setting up a Bill of Rights that will be irrevocable.

- Setting up a program of relief and recovery for victims of war, notably the returning refugees and the internally displaced people. Provide medical and health services for those and other judicial bodies, and seekcompensations for the victims of such criminal acts affected by infectiousdiseases, establish special programs to help children victimized by the crisis.

- Setting up a systems for solving human rights abuses of the pastthrough international tribunals.
- Dismantling the ethnic based federal system, reorganize the internal administration along social, economic and cultural lines preferred by thepeople.
- Should there be insistence to maintain the “ethnic” based federal structure, a revision of the ethnic identity must be made according to thereal internal population movements that have occurred in the country in the preceding six centuries. For instance there are over twenty five million people of mixed ethnic backgrounds – Amhara, Oromo and others whose identity is not recognized by the present constitution, andare forced to join groups indigenous to the locality in which they reside,a process that has caused the murder, enslavement and immeasurable pain on the Amhara people living in different parts of the Country.
  Members of this group, that consist of over a quarter of the total population should be able to remain with any particular ethnic group oftheir choice, or have their own autonomous entity within the future administrative structure.

- Returning of territories that have been forcibly integrated with other jurisdictions or conceded to foreign states (including Assab and relatedterritories) to their original status.

- Guaranteeing freedom of press and media.

- Restructuring the army, police and security forces into a national defense and civilian police with the national forces and institutions.

- Guaranteeing free and fair elections under a revised electoral law withproper and indiscriminate candidacy of all citizens.

- Provide assurance that citizens enjoy the right to reside, work and ownproperty anywhere within the sovereign territory of Ethiopia. Return orgive just and fair compensation for confiscated property and land.

- Planning and implement a market based economic system, with a strongsocial safety net promoting, advising and assisting the development of the private sector compatible with the national environmental and economic development.

- Excluding political parties from commercial activities.

- Liquidating existing party owned corporations and monopolistic ventures.
- Giving high priority to social services, health, education, welfare andskills development

- Enhancing the full participation of women in national economic andpolitical life
- Promoting vigorously the expansion and appreciation of traditional andcultural values, including the arts and crafts, literature, theater and music.

- Creating understanding amongst all factions of Ethiopian society.

- Encouraging and helping the development of civil societies.

- Guaranteeing the separation of religious institutions from politics.

The above ideas and suggestions should be considered in negotiationsthat are likely to be held in order to achieve a lasting and peaceful solution to the present crisis. (text ends)

PERSPECTIVE

From Retroactive to Proactive Strategic Management Style: Redressing Widespread Social Unrest in Contemporary Ethiopia By Asayehgn Desta

September 18, 2016

Though it is uncertain who has been appropriating it, Ethiopia's economy has been showing monumentally high economic growth for the last fifteenyears. Given this economic environment, Ethiopia's investment climate has been on the right trajectory and as a result it has been appealing to many domestic and foreign investors.

However, Ethiopia's governance has been run without accountability. It isshot-through with corruption. Conspicuous rent-seeking behavior has become a way of life in the country because people in power have been extracting wealth for non-productive activities (Desta, 2014, p. 243). As vigorously argued by Hagos, Ethiopia is one of the fastest growing economies in the world. "Yet, corruption in both the public and private sectors remains a very serious problem throughout the country" (2016).

Additionally, Ethiopia's political landscape has been triggering flashpoints that indicate signs of deteriorating political stability. For instance, massivedemonstrations and violent social interactions have been flaring up throughout the country. More specifically, feeling deprived of entitlementsas guaranteed in the 1994 Constitution, Ethiopians residing in the Amhara, Oromo, and the Tigrai regions of Ethiopia have been demanding and agitating for power to rule themselves so that they are able to enjoy self-identity and benefits they are entitled to.

As a result of upheavals that have occurred in some parts of the country,the regime in power, the Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF), has been preoccupied with immediate or retroactive challenges. To hold on to power, the EPRDF regime has been using draconian measures to crack down on the unrest and muzzle its critics.

Nonetheless, realizing that these popular demands after all need greater accountability, the regime in power has promised the Ethiopian citizens that it is in the process of designing sweeping political reforms that will soon be presented to the Federal Parliamentary Assembly of Ethiopia or the House of Peoples' Representatives. Given the upheaval, the cardinal question that needs to be asked at this juncture is: Is the regime in powerundertaking reactive or proactive measures to redress the widespread upheaval and social unrest in Ethiopia?

The remaining sections of this paper are organized as follows. Section 2 outlines the tactical moves initiated by the Government to resolve the social unrest in the Walkaet and Tsegadi areas (Woredas). Section 3 presents some of the reactive management tactics used to solve massive youth unemployment in Ethiopia. Section 4, outlines some possible tactical plans that could be used to wipeout corruption and rent- seeking behaviors from the Ethiopian bureaucracy. Some proactive or basic structural changes needed for Ethiopia's future are presented in Section 5.Section 6, considers some of the fundamental impacts the newly designedstrategy might have on the political transformation and democracy- building in Ethiopia.

Business as Usual: Initiated Tactical Moves to Resolve theSocial Unrest in Ethiopia

A question was raised by an Ethiopian group of journalists on August 28,2016, to Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalgne asking him to clarify to them whether the people of Walkaet and Tsegadi are ethnically Amharasor Tigrignas; the Prime Minister gave a clear cut answer by referring to the 1994 Ethiopian Constitution that the people of Walkaet and Tsegadi have been and are classified as part and parcel of the Tigrai

Region. Therefore, given the terrible social upheavals, and sporadic acts of violent protest that have left a number of people dead, Prime Minister Haile Mariam made it clear that his government will be forced to take the necessary stepsto maintain peace and stability if the people of Walkaet and Tsegadi woredas, as they are doing now, fail to abide by the laws andrules clearly stated in the Ethiopian Federal Constitution.

Additionally, concerning the dispute that has occurred between the peopleof Walkaet -Tsegadi and the Tigrai Regional Administrative Region, the Prime Minister stated that it is the duty of the Tigrai Administrative Region, through a referendum, to prove or disprove whether or not the residents of Walkaet and Tsegadi woredas were ethnically Amharas, before the formation of ethnic federalism and the subsequent implementation of the Tigraigna language for government and school system operations.

Prime Minister Hailemariam's interpretation of the existing constitution seems to be unambiguous. Nevertheless, even if the Prime Minister's interpretation of the constitution is partly right, given the sensitivity of theissue (like the Silite case), in order to reduce the existing tensions that are sparking not only in the Walkeat and Tsegadi areas but also in other parts of Ethiopia; it would have been wiser for the Prime Minister to restrain his answers instead of exacerbating the case by saying that it needs to be arbitrated by the Tigrai Administrative Region.

Given the unconditional answer by Prime Minister Hailemariam, the peopleof Walkaet and Tsegadi areas seem to have lost confidence in the Prime Minister's judgment and have been reacting with defiance against the Tigrai administrative Region. Looking at the case objectively and considering the time it would take to resolve it, it would have been more prudent and humane, had the Prime Minister at the outset referred the case to be handled by the House of Federation (upper chamber), instead prolonging it.

Solving the Massive Youth Unemployment in Ethiopia: FromReactive to Proactive Strategies

Given the very intense political situation in Ethiopia, Prime Minister Hailemariam was aggrieved having to address some of the heart breakingproblems he has been observing throughout Ethiopia. According to the Prime Minister's description, a large portion of the participants in the demonstrations occurring are mainly youth showing their resentment andfrustration for being unemployed. Being concerned about the youth unemployment in the country, the Prime Minister resolutely assured the interviewing journalists that the EPRDF regime would be presenting to theHouse of People's Representatives for approval, a radical plan that could end the youth unemployment.

Even if we assume that the regime in power has the ability and the capacity to implement the tactical measures when approved by the parliament to solve the rampant youth unemployment in the country, it seems very likely that it cannot be solved without making appropriate adjustments in the real income, training, and factors of production (Desta,2014).

Furthermore, we have to bear in mind that the targets from the Growth and Transformation Plan I (GTP I from 1010-11 to 2014/15) were not metbecause of unforeseen natural calamities such as the El Nino disaster of last year. Given the plan that the EPRDF would be presenting to the parliament to solve the youth unemployment, it seems short-sighted, without contingencies for unexpected problems or the possibility of exploiting opportunities. Therefore, it would be more difficult to reach the target initiated by the Second Growth Transformation Plan II (GTP II, from 2015/16 to2019/20), let alone to create full productive employment forthe Ethiopian youth.

The existing Developmental State Model in Ethiopia does not seem to be operating adequately. It has become dysfunctional by accelerating youth unemployment. Therefore, as given in detail in my book: "From EconomicDependency and Stagnation to Democratic Developmental State…".
Ethiopia has to relinquish it reactive model and focus on a proactive strategy to look at the Employer of Last Resort (ELR) economic model. This ELR model has been widely approved by United Nations Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC) and has been used by a number of nations to achieve full employment. As described by Wary (2007) and Becker (1993), respecting the fundamental right to work, the ELR framework focuses on guaranteeing full employment by the government to those whoare ready and are willing to work at a minimum wage in suitable activities.The ELR stimulates productivity, lowers unemployment, arrests inflation, and it plays a vital role in stabilizing the economy by reducing economic fluctuations.

As stated in my book (2014): …if the ELR type of people-centered cooperative organizations, managed by democratically elected local leaders, were to be implemented in a decentralized way, the empowerment of local communities would present the greatest potential for the development of domestic resources, and end cyclical unemployment . In addition, employing the most vibrant working-age Ethiopians based on the powerhouse development of a full employment program led by the ELR will likely empower the employed to be involved intheir own environmentally sensitive projects …

Similarly, since agriculture accounts for about 45 percent of gross domestic product and 85 percent of total employment (See Desta, 2016.
P. 247); a better way of tackling and achieving full-employment in Ethiopia is by making the land-holding in rural Ethiopia cooperatively owned at the grassroots level. Currently, by and large, the government has been leasing fertile land to foreign agri-business investors to produce wheat, rice and corn for exports. As stated by Belineh (2009), agriculturalproducts produced by foreign investors in rural Ethiopia are based on mono-cropping, which is capital intensive, and contributes to mass unemployment instead of fulfilling the promise of building infrastructure that could generate jobs for native residents.

Therefore, to achieve cooperative enterprises on communal land in rural Ethiopia, it has to be operated under the "Employer of Last Resort" model.However, the ELR need not be run by government organizations.Instead, to achieve full employment, as stated in the ELR model, "the Ethiopian government must relinquish its direct control over much of the rural people. The rural community organizations need to be implemented in a decentralized way and funded by the national government," (Kofi andDesta 2008).

Wiping out the endemic Rent-seeking behavior: A Tactical Plan

In the interview he gave to the group of Journalists on August 28, 2016, Prime Minister Hailemariam was very candid, stressing that the existing rampant rent-seeking behavior and the massive corruption that predominates in the country, have the tendency to devastate Ethiopia's rekindling economy. Furthermore, Prime Minister Hailemariam insinuated that rent-seeking in Ethiopia has been generating dissatisfaction that mayinstill in the minds of Ethiopians an illusion that one doesn't need to workhard and be innovative in order to accumulate wealth in Ethiopia.

As stated by the Prime Minister, if we should be assured that the EPRDFRegime had a radical plan to tackle the trends in the rampant unemployment particularly affecting the youth and that it was also adamant about wiping out the glaring corruption that has taken root within the country's governmental bureaucracy, why does the Prime Minister, under the Constitution, call for an emergency meeting of the House of People's Representatives to deliberate the urgent case?

Let us assume that the Prime Minister's projected plan would be acceptedwithout serious objections from the EPRDF-controlled Parliament.

Considering the fact that rent-seeking is deeply ingrained, practically in allgovernment offices, the Prime Minister's new plan would not start with a clean slate. Instead, it is possible to assume that the strategies developedto uproot rent-seeking are likely to face formidable obstacles in the government offices.

Moreover, it would be difficult to objectively assess the government's future plan because the Prime Minister's overarching assumptions for theplan don't seem feasible since it has not been systematically designed. Since it is focusing on symptoms rather than on real substance,the Prime Minister's tactical plan doesn't appear to be based on proper advance planning. As such, it is less likely to help the country solve the existing root causes of youth unemployment. The following section suggests that policy makers in Ethiopia may need to shift from being reactive to being robustly proactive focusing on continuous improvement.

Proactive Designs for Ethiopia's Future

Rejecting the EPRDF's gradual and piecemeal ethno-political reform that has been in operation in Ethiopia for the last twenty-five years, now is thetime for civic organizations (a myriad of people who have the desire to provide services to their community), multi-parties, the Diaspora, and other opposition groups, all to be involved in discourse and dialogues inorder to pursue Ethiopia's democratic plan for the future.

A number of Ethiopian elites who live in Ethiopia or in the Diaspora are against the ethnic-based type of demarcation that has been operating since 1994 in Ethiopia to delineate the country into separate regions.These groups further claim that the regime in power is a deeply rooted administration run by tightly controlled zealots (cadres, who actively advance and safeguard their interest and the interests of the ruling party) who are not amenable to bringing fundamental changes butfollow blindly the instructions given by their superiors.

Though very critical about the regime in power, these groups of social thinkers argue that it is possible to bring peaceful fundamental changes and secure legitimacy in Ethiopia without endangering the fragile political stability. Based on this premise, these groups of thinkers advocate that abottom–up type of decentralized (autonomous) democratic federalismcould serve as a compromise formulato govern Ethiopia.That is,they strongly argue that establishing autonomous and self-governing regions in Ethiopia advances its economic growth and thereby moves it forward to become a middle income country in the future.

Reforming the 1994 Ethiopian Constitution: Subject fordiscussion

In order to have a deeper understanding of the causes of the uprising in the Oromio Region, Kemente (in Amhara Region), Welkate and Tsegadi (inTigrai region), we need to explore the establishment of the 1994 Ethiopian Constitution that created the current political background of Ethiopia.

Briefly stated, the 1994 Constitution was ratified in December 1994 and implemented in 1995. On August 21, 1995, the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia created a federal structure of government. By and large, ethnicity was used as an important factor to demarcate the FederalGovernment of Ethiopia into different regional states or kililis. Based on this, the country was divided into nine ethnic regional states. Though a number of cities, such as, Gonder, Bahre Dar, Desie, Makele, Jimma, Awasa etc. could have been included as city-states, the then existing transitional government incorporated two city-states (Addis Ababa & DireDawa) to be part and parcel of the Ethiopian federal polity. As previously mentioned, Article 39 of the Ethiopian Constitution stipulated that each regional state was assured the unconditional right to self-determination, including the rights to secession.

As a result, the current unrest in contemporary Ethiopia seems to be inherent in the 1994 Constitution. By design or default, using Article 39 of the constitution, Ethiopia seems to have established the political gridlock for itself. Since the ethnic and regional federalism was created in Ethiopia,communication among the various constituents has gradually become inadequate because the various Nations, Nationality, and Peoples of Ethiopia were confined within watertight compartments or silos (Desta, 2014, p. 94).

As planned by the Transitional Government that came to power in 1991, in theory, converting Ethiopia from a centralized system or unitary militarydictatorship into a federal structure was a move in the right direction because federalism was established to allow the inhabitants of the federal states to enjoy self and shared rule. Stated differently, as a result of the formation of ethnic federalism, each region formed in Ethiopia was supposed to have the opportunity to develop, promote, and preserve its language and its culture. The majority of Ethiopians highly valued federalism because it cherished all forms of human rights. As time passed however, a number of inhabitants of the Federal Ethiopian states felt that they were denied economic and political rights by their various governments in power. As a result, they are demanding that Ethiopia needs to be restructured to accommodate the disenfranchised.

For example, it is surprising to witness that even in regions that have been inhabited by various multiethnic and cross-cultural groups, like the city of Gondar, some groups who are against the regime in power, seem to be venting their anger against Tigraians, who have no relation, except their ethnicity, to those who are in power. Since time immemorial, the now down-trodden or mishandled Tigrians have been living for years in some of the multi-cultural hubs, like the Gondar area. In mentioning Gondar, it is sad to pinpoint the ethnic unrest that exploded and left a number of Tigarianes by origin to be treated inhumanly. What is more disturbing is that a number of Tigrians who lived in Gondar were forced to evacuate their lifelong premises, leaving their belongings and made to fleeto Sudan. In Ethiopia that is supposed to be governed by the rules of law and order, why is this awful crisis occurring, and how can it be resolved?

If the Ethiopian policy makers are reconditioned to exercise a proactive type of management, it will not be too late for the existing federal structure to be restored. Rather than being involved in destructive activities, the regime in power and those who have a stake in Ethiopia andother civic societies need to be engaged in fruitful discussions in order to:

a) democratically redress and revise the existing constitution, b) redefinethe ethnically-based regional states, c) be involved in power-sharing to promote social equity, and d) reform the political system in the country.

Unless the existing constitutional crisis is first resolved, no political reformis possible in Ethiopia. Using the framework of the existing constitutionas a benchmark for negotiation and discussion, a new constitution needs to be drafted by all stakeholders (i.e., representatives of all social, political, ethnic and religious groups etc.) to form a federal republic or design a federation of Ethiopian woredas. That is, based on population or other coherent historical and geographical bases that ensure proportionate representation,the current existing ethnically designed regional states need to be subdivided into manageable units or woredas. For example, ten or fifteen woredas that have common language or culture could agreeamong themselves to form a common regional state. But, it should be clear that each woreda has to have complete sovereignty over aspects of its political life and cannot be intruded upon by any central or federal authority.

Every year, the ten or fifteen regional woredas have to circulate their administrations. This type of system could allow them to share their experiences democratically, stimulate their economy, encourage their environmental capital and have some type of social equity experiences. Agovernor of the woreda at the yearly meeting would be selected to be thehead of the ten to fifteen woredas only for that year. Unlike the unmanageable, heterogonous regional settings that we currently have in Ethiopia, forming regional cooperative woredas could increase the residents' capacity to empathize with one another more readily.

Subsequently, each woreda could have a number of municipalities run by community elected mayors and council members.Each municipality havinga strong social base, has to have control over social services (i.e., education and health services), raise its own revenues, make investment decisions, etc. As discussed by Desta (2016), the formation of autonomous self-rule woredas with local self-governance encourages localunits to have a say in selecting their own administrator to bring about political stability and who can hold them to account for their decisions.

Summary and Conclusions

For the last fifteen years, Ethiopia's economy has been thriving. Yet, recently, in its political domain, Ethiopia has been facing slow-moving instability. Its rulers are succumbing to youth unrest. Thus as it stands now, Ethiopia represents a paradox. When a crisis is developing, what sortof governance will be resilient for running Ethiopia's existence? Does the existing centralized federalism or the proposed decentralized autonomous federal system of administrative structure give Ethiopia the best prospect for survival?

As suggested above, the proposed democratic self-rule of woredas willserve as the organizational structure for the New Federal Ethiopia and become the means of achieving effective bargaining for civic society inEthiopia. It was with the formation of democratically decentralized geographic systems such as the proposed " wo*redas"* for Ethiopia, thathave helped states in India, South Africa, Switzerland, Canada, etc. toattain political stability.

Thus, it is hoped that the government in power and other conscientiousEthiopians are on board to see that Ethiopia is sub-divided into manageable geographic regions so that Ethiopia achieves the triple- bottom line (economic, social and environmental dimensions) of sustainability. In short, to make Ethiopia's journey towards autonomousfederalism become realty, change in visions, shift in policies and strategies, and flexible governance based on robust democracy with thecapacity to adapt, improvise, change direction is needed.

Maps had claimed Ras Dashen mountain is in Tigray Regional Stateinstead of the Amhara Regional State. Ethiopian 'apology over textbook blunders'

BBC: September 19, 2016

Ethiopia's Ministry of Education has apologised for mistakes in schooltextbooks, state-owned television has reported.

The sixth grade English language textbook wrongly placed Ethiopia'shighest mountain, Ras Dashen, in Tigray Regional State instead of the Amhara Regional State, it quotes an unidentified ministry official assaying.

The official added that a map in a tenth grade textbook on nationality andethics failed to show the correct location of regional states, the report added. The sixth grade text book was published in 2004 and the tenth grade book in 2010.
It is unclear why the ministry has made the apology now, but Amhara hasbeen one of the regions recently rocked by deadly protests against the government. Protesters have accused the government of political and economic marginalisation - a charge it denies.

There have been lots of reaction on Twitter to the apology. One tweeterershared a picture of the Ras Dashen mountain.

ETHIOPIA/Illicit Transfer
$11.7 billion stolen from Ethiopia: Wall Street Journal

Ethiopian Illicit Outflows Doubled In 2009, New Report Says
From The Wall Street Journal December 6, 2011

By Christopher Matthews | Wall Street Journal

Ethiopia lost $11.7 billion to outflows of ill-gotten gains between 2000 and2009, according to a coming report by Global Financial Integrity.

That's a lot of money to lose to corruption for a country that has a per- capita GDP of just $365. In 2009, illicit money leaving the country totaled $3.26 billion, double the amount in each of the two previous years. The capital flight is also disturbing because the country received $829 millionin development aid in 2008.
According to GFI economist Sarah Freitas, who co-authored the report,corruption, kickbacks and bribery accounted for the vast majority of the increase in illicit outflows.

“The scope of Ethiopia’s capital flight is so severe that our conservativeUS$3.26 billion estimate greatly exceeds the US$2 billion value of Ethiopia’s total exports in 2009,” Freitas wrote in a blog post on the website of the Task Force on Financial Integrity and Economic Development.

The report, titled “Illicit Financial Flows from Developing Countries over the Decade Ending 2009,” drew on data from the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund on external debt and trade mis-pricing to calculate illicit capital leakage. The study, which will be released later thismonth, measures the illicit financial flows out of 160 different developingnations.

Ethiopia is one of the poorest countries on earth as 38.9% of Ethiopianslive in poverty, and life expectancy in 2009 was just 58 years.

“The people of Ethiopia are being bled dry,” Freitas wrote. “No matter howhard they try to fight their way out of absolute destitution and poverty, they will be swimming upstream against the current of illicit capital leakage.”

OPDO is neither the the cause nor solution for the political crisis

By Jawar Mohammed September 21, 2016

Yesterday the regime announced that the top two puppets in Oromia havebeen removed and replaced by not so new faces. TPLF is either still dumband numb about the depth of the crisis or chose to continue insulting the intelligence of our people.

The cause of conflict between the regime and the Oromo and other peoples of Ethiopia is TPLF's mission of and obsession with building and maintaining the supremacy of Tigreans. They have successfully built a system whereby power and wealth is monopolized in their hand. They arekilling, jailing, exiling and reshuffling to preserve such domination. The puppet parties be it OPDO, ANDM or SEPDM were built and maintained toserve as tools of advancing and protecting this Tigrean supremacy. Hencereshuffling men and women at the head of these puppet parties does not make any difference in the ongoing conflict. They could appoint an OPDO or ANDM as prime minister, and still it won'tsolve the problem. Since it’s created to advance TPLF mission of creatingand protecting Tigrean supremacy, the so called EPRDF cannot be reformed through changing of guards or policy fixes --solution will come only when the mission is defeated and the regime is dismantled.

Having said this, why are Lemma Megersa & Workineh Gebeyehu chosenas the new place holders in Oromia? It meant to achieve two tactical objectives; to pacify the growing resentment within OPDO rank and file and the bureaucracy in Oromia, and to further militarize the administration in Oromia.

Lemma is relatively popular among the younger cadres--hence TPLF believes appointing him will give false hope to the bureaucracy and give them breathing time internally...Workineh is a shrewd politician with keenunderstanding of the role of the cultural sphere.

He has long experience of reaching out to Oromo elders and religious leaders every time the regime faces challenge. They hope he can tap intothat to isolate young protesters from the masses through the elders.

The most important reason however is this. Both men come from the security branch having worked as police and intelligence chiefs. As it anticipates and prepares for further escalation into armed confrontation, TPLF believes these guys will be easier to work with the military and intelligence than Mukar ad Aster whom were very loyal but clueless aboutdealing with the military generals and spy masters who took over throughcommand post.

Well that is TPLF's calculation. They are still using that very old calculatorleft behind by Meles. The input, the machine and the output is off the mark. ከትግራይ ተወላጆች የተሰጠ መግለጫ

Ecadforum September 21, 2016 8 መስከረም 2009

በአገራችን፣ ህወሓት በመጀመሪያ በትግራይ ከ40 አመት በፊት በመላ ኢትዮጵያ ደግሞ በበላይነት በሚቆጣጠረውኢህአዴግ ከ25 አመት በፊት የጀመረውየግድያና የአፈና ስርዓት አሁንም በመቀጠል ላይ ነው፡፡

በአገራችን ያሉ ዋናዎቹ ችግሮች፡

1. ህወሓት/ኢህአዴግ ገዳይ፣ አፈኝና ከፋፋይ መሆኑና ህዝባችን በህይወት የመኖር ዋስትና ማጣቱ፣ ሰብአዊና ዴሞክራሲያዊ መብቶቹ መረገጣቸውና ባገሩ ውስጥ በነፃነት መኖር አለመቻሉ ናቸው።

በኢህአዴግ ውስጥ ህወሓት፡

1.1 ጉልበት በሚጠቀሙ ተቋሞች፡ በሰራዊቱ፣ በደህንነትና በእስር ቤቶች፣

1.2 በአስተሳሰብ ላይ ጫና በሚያደርጉ ተቋሞች፡ በመገናኛ ብዙሃንና በሃይማኖታዊ አመራሮች፣

1.3 በውጭጉዳይ

1.4 ከፍተኛ ያገሪቱን ሃብት በመቆጣጠርና በመዝረፍ በዘውግ ላይ የተመሰረተ ቡድናዊ የበላይነትይዟል፡፡

እነዚህን ችግሮች ለማስወገድ ወሳኙ እርምጃ ህወሓት/ኢህአዴግ ከስልጣን አስወግዶ ዴሞክራሲያዊ ስርዓት መገንባት

ነው፡፡ ይህን ኣላማ ለማሳካት በትግሉ የሚያጋጥሙ ችግሮችን መፍታት በጣም አስፈላጊ ነው፡፡ ከነዚህ ችግሮች ውስጥ በሚከተሉት ላይ ትኩረት ያስፈልጋል፡፡

በአገራችን ሊከሰቱ የሚችሉ አደጋዎች፡

1.ህወሓት/ኢህአዴግ በህዝብ ላይ ከፍተኛ ጭፍጨፋ ሊያካሂድ ይችላል፡፡ አባይ ፀሃየና ስዩም መስፍን በትግራይ ህዝብ ላይ ያነጣጠረ እነሱ "የዘር"የሚሉትና ከሆሎካውስትና ከሩዋንዳ እልቂት ጋር የሚያመሳስሉትና የእርስ በርስ ጦርነት አስከትሎ አገሪቷን የሚበታትን አደጋ እንደሚያሰጋ የሚገልፁት ማስፈራሪያ አለ፡፡

PMHD blames Olympic protest on U.S.-based dissenters

By Siobhán O'Grady and Brian Stout, Chicago TribuneSeptember 21, 2016

When Ethiopian marathoner Feyisa Lilesa held his arms in an "X" as he crossed the finish line for a silver medal last month at the Rio Olympics, he says he was culminating a political protest he'd planned for months. But top Ethiopian officials say he was put up to the stunt by U.S.-based opposition groups in order to protest the government's crackdown on demonstrations and further fuel controversial secessionist movements athome and in neighboring Eritrea.

Speaking to Foreign Policy in an exclusive interview from the living roomof his suite at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel on Tuesday, Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn said he strongly believes that groups of anti-government Ethiopians based in the United States convinced the athlete to use the Summer Games as a protest venue. He also figures they helped get him from a Rio hotel to Washington, D.C. in time for a televised press conference last week.

"It's me who sent him to Rio for the Olympics, and we expected him tocome back after winning the medal," Hailemariam said, specifically naming members of the Oromo Liberation Front as having likely contributed to Feyisa's protest. "This is not the capacity of the man himself. It's something which has been orchestrated by someone else from outside."

"It's me who sent him to Rio for the Olympics, and we expected him tocome back after winning the medal," Hailemariam said, specifically naming members of the Oromo Liberation Front as having likely contributed to Feyisa's protest. "This is not the capacity of the man himself. It's something which has been orchestrated by someone else from outside."

The OLF did not respond to multiple requests for comment. Feyisa could not be reached for comment, but he told the Washington Post earlier this month that Oromo sympathizers helped him with his U.S. visa application.Feyisa's move was meant to signal solidarity with protesters in Ethiopia's Oromia Region, who have taken to the streets in recent months to protesttheir marginalization from the country's central government. Internationalhuman rights groups, including Human Rights Watch, have reported that security forces killed more than 400 peaceful protesters in the Oromia andAmhara regions since demonstrations began last November.
Feyisa claims that he had planned his own protest in Rio for months. Fearing retribution for his political demonstration, the silver-medal winnerleft the Olympic Village after his race and hid in a Brazilian hotel until early September, when he flew to the United States and appeared at a press conference organized by Rep. Chris Smith (R-N.J.), chairman of the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on Africa. There, Smith announcedhis plan to introduce bipartisan legislation that would recommend the Ethiopian government allow an independent rapporteur into Ethiopia toassess the human rights situation in the country.

Ethiopia wants nothing to do with that.

Hailemariam, who is in New York for the U.N. General Assembly this week,told FP that he would never allow an outside investigation to take place when Ethiopia has its own institutions available, because to do so would be a "breach of sovereignty."

In an email to FP, Smith said that the rapporteur would not be imposed upon Ethiopia without its consent, but that "in the absence of any crediblehuman rights reporting from the Ethiopian government on many incidentsregarding the denial of human rights," it would be standard for the U.N. to"gain an impartial assessment" of the situation on the ground.

But Smith's claim that Ethiopia has not proved itself credible in human rights investigations rubbed both the prime minister and the ambassadorthe wrong way.

"Ethiopia is a sovereign country and Ethiopia has the capability to investigate its own case," the Ethiopian ambassador to Washington, GirmaBirru, told FP in a conversation at the Ethiopian Embassy in Washington last week. "When the Ethiopian government is assumed to have failed to do these things, it's an insult." He accepted that protesters have legitimate grievances regarding land reform but denied accusations of institutional discrimination by the government, pointing to Oromia's share of seats in both chambers of parliament -- the largest of any region.

Critics of Ethiopia's human rights investigations say the government deflates numbers in order to cover up abuses taking place at the hands oftheir security services. Human Rights Watch's death statistics roughly quadruple those of Ethiopian civil society groups such as Human Rights Council Ethiopia, a nongovernmental organization that monitors human rights in the country, and those published in an official Ethiopia Human Rights Commission report presented to the country's parliament.

The Ethiopian parliament endorsed the commission's findings, which determined that agitators seized upon the peaceful protests and used them as an opportunity to incite ethno-religious hatred. According to the commission, 28 police officers were killed in November and December alone. The commission also reported that excessive use of force had beenused on some occasions in the northern region of Amhara, but not in Oromia. And Girma stressed that international advocacy organizations failed to acknowledge that protesters also used weapons.

Girma could not explain why security forces have fired upon crowds withlive ammunition instead of rubber bullets or other nonlethal rounds commonly used in riot control. But he pointed out that the protests in which the government found itself to have used excessive force were illegal for failing to provide local authorities with advance notice.

And both Girma and Hailemariam said that their government is committedto revealing abuses that may have taken place on both sides. According tothe prime minister's count, some 70 percent of those wounded during the protests this year have been law enforcement officials. But he also said that there are measures in place to determine whether excessive use of force may also have been used against civilians by government security forces.

"There is no need for somebody from outside to come and investigate thisissue," Hailemariam said. "It's not because there is something to be hidden but it's because we have a sovereignty that needs to be kept."
The Oromo protests have put the Ethiopian government on shaky groundwith international partners who worry the intensity of the government's crackdown could spark larger demonstrations, and threaten to disrupt therelatively stable nation that finds itself sandwiched between war-torn South Sudan on one side and the failing state of Somalia on the other.
More than 700,000 refugees now live in Ethiopia, straining the fledglingdemocracy's already limited resources.
Last year, Ethiopia hosted talks intended to end the brutal civil war in South Sudan. But the peace deal signed in Addis Ababa last August has since all but fallen apart: Opposition leader Riek Machar took eight monthsto return to Juba after the talks, then fled in July after his forces and those loyal to his rival, President Salva Kiir, opened fire on one another in the capital.
Hailemariam said Tuesday that Machar, who is now in Khartoum but lived in Ethiopia for significant stretches of the civil war, will be allowed to pass through Ethiopia in his travels but is not welcome to stay again long-term."We do not need someone who is leading an armed struggle in Ethiopia," he said.

How Ethiopian prince scuppered Germany's WW1 plans

25 September 2016 From the section World

A hundred years ago, the Ethiopian prince Lij Iyasu was deposed after theOrthodox church feared he had converted to Islam. But it also scuppered Germany's plans to draw Ethiopia into World War One, writes Martin Plaut.

In January 1915 a dhow slipped quietly out of the Arabian port of Al-Wajh.On board were a group of Germans and Turks, under the guise of the Fourth German Inner-Africa Research Expedition.
Led by Leo Frobenius, adventurer, archaeologist and personal friend of theGerman Emperor, Kaiser Wilhelm II, its aim was nothing less than to encourage Ethiopia to enter World War One.

Germany believed that the Suez canal was Britain's "jugular vein" allowingtroops and supplies to be brought from Australia, New Zealand and India.

The war plan

An assault on the canal by Turkish and German forces had been repelledin early 1915, but it was clear that this was not the final attack.

Ethiopia - an independent nation - was the major power in the region andGermany believed that if it could persuade the Ethiopians to enter the waron its side, British and allied forces would have to be withdrawn from the Canal and other fronts.

The aims of the General Staff in Berlin were: "To force the enemy to commit large forces in defending their colonies in the Horn of Africa, thusweakening their European front and relieving the German forces fighting in German East Africa."

This called for "insurrection" in Sudan with the aim of toppling British ruleand attacks on French-ruled Djibouti and Italian Eritrea.

"The colonial Italian and French possessions on the shore of the Red Seawere difficult even impossible to defend without [the] commitment of large forces: chances were that an Ethiopian blow against the shores of the Red Sea and Suez Canal would either succeed at once, or that Italy and France would voluntarily withdraw in view of the critical situation of the European front, where all men and rifles were badly needed after theinitial military successes of the Central powers."

In Berlin's view, the "double threat" of internal insurrection in Sudan andan Ethiopian offensive would pave the way for a successful attack on theSuez Canal by Turkish forces "supported by a German expeditionary force".

The loss of the Canal would be a decisive blow against Britain and itsallies, from which it would be unable to recover.

Mission failure

It was with this objective in mind that Frobenius was despatched to Ethiopia, with orders which mirrored the plans drawn up by the British foran Arab uprising against the Ottomans - plans which resulted in the Arab Revolt of 1916 and the legend of "Lawrence of Arabia".

The Frobenius expedition landed in the Italian colony of Eritrea on 15February but the Italians, who were British allies, arrested them.

Forbenius was deported back to Berlin, but the German high commandwere determined that this would not be the end of the story.

A fresh expedition was despatched in June 1915, this time led by SalomonHall, who came from a Jewish Polish family with long ties to Ethiopia.

Again he was intercepted in Eritrea. Keen-eyed police spotted that although he wore sandals, he had corns, and was clearly not the Arab hewas pretending to be.

Although the Hall mission failed, copies of the documents he carriedreached the German mission to Ethiopia in October.

The German envoy in Addis Ababa, Frederick Wilhelm von Syburg, was instructed to do everything possible to convince the Ethiopian governmentto enter the war.

Von Syburg was ordered to explain to the Ethiopians that Germany hadscored "great victories" in the war and made lavish promises of what might follow.

"Now the time has come for Ethiopia to regain the coast of the Red Seadriving the Italians home, to restore the Empire to its ancient size...

"Germany commits herself to recognize any territory which Ethiopia may conquer or occupy in military action against the Allied powers as being herrightful and permanent property and part of the Ethiopian Empire after thewar."

These plans found a ready audience with the heir to the Ethiopian throne,Lij Iyasu. The prince, who was never crowned, had become the effective ruler after his grandfather, Emperor Menelik II suffered a massive stroke in 1909, finally dying in December 1913.

On 10 April 1911 the 16-year-old Iyasu took the opportunity of the death of the regent, to claim personal rule. He was hardly ready for the position.

As historian Harold Marcus wrote: "The youth was hardly ready to govern:during his adolescence, he had mostly abandoned the classrooms for the capital's bars and brothels. He had a short attention span, and lacked political common sense, if not a grand vision."

That vision included reaching out to the Muslim peoples whom his grandfather had conquered during his expansion of Ethiopian rule from theChristian highlands into the surrounding Muslim lowlands.

Muslim empire

Lij Iyasu sent much of his time outside the capital, touring the Somali andAfar regions of his country. Iyasu was encouraged by the Ottoman envoy to Ethiopia, Ahmad Manzar.

Iyasu took a number of Muslim wives and soon rumours began spreadingthat the prince had adopted Islam himself.

Although his ancestors had included Muslim nobility who had converted toChristianity, the idea that Iyasu returned to Islam is contested by scholars.

What is clear is that the prince was very friendly with Muslims, including alongstanding British enemy, Sayyid, Muhammad Abd Allah al-Hassan, (known as the "Mad Mullah") of Somaliland.

Iyasu - encouraged by the Ottomans - sent weapons and ammunition tothe Sayyid. Turkey went further, promising that it would land troops to back the Sayyid.

By 1916 most of the pieces were in place. Iyasu appeared to have decidedto throw in his lot with the Ottoman and German cause.

He was reinforced in this view by the Turkish successes in Gallipoli andMesopotamia.

Matters came to a head in September. Reports began to circulate thatIyasu had presented an Ethiopian flag with a Red Crescent and a quotation from the Koran to Somali troops.

As historian Haggai Erlich concluded: "His steps cannot be interpreted other than leading towards a new Ethiopia, centred on Harar as the capitalof an Islamic, African empire, allied with Istanbul and under his rule."

Excommunicated

The Ethiopian nobility and the church, fearing for the future of their nationas a bastion of Christianity, decided to act.

The head of the Orthodox church was persuaded - somewhat reluctantly -to excommunicate Iyasu.

On 27 September 1916, the prince was deposed. Iyasu fought back, but his troops were defeated and he fled into hiding. Iyasu was only capturedin 1921, when he was finally imprisoned.

Ras Tefari - crowned Haile Selassie in 1930 - was placed on the throne.
Britain, France and Italy had encouraged the coup by lobbying theEthiopian elite to act against Iyasu.

On 12 September, the Tripartite powers sent a formal message to the Ethiopian foreign minister complaining that Iyasu was supporting rebellionin Somaliland and demanded an immediate explanation.

With the prince out of the way, they breathed a collective sigh of relief.

As the UK ambassador to Ethiopia Wilfred Thesiger informed the Foreign Office in London: "the Government is now in the hands of those who are friendly to our cause." The threat that Ethiopia might enter the war was atan end.
The attempt to set Ethiopia on a new course as part of Kaiser Wilhelm'sdream of inflaming the "whole Mohammedan world with wild revolt" hadcome to nought.

There had been no landing of Turkish or German troops from the Red Sea.Yet it had been a close-run thing.

If the Arab Revolt had not taken hold on the opposite side of the Red Seaand Iyasu had not played his cards quite so poorly, the outcome might have been very different, with catastrophic implications for Britain and itsallies.

የጊዜው አንገብጋቢ ጥያቄ

የወያኔ ሎሌዎች እኔ ስለትግራይ ያለኝን አመለካከት እያጠናገሩ ማውራት ከጀመሩ ዓመታት አለፉ፤ ፋይዳ የላቸውም ብዬንቄ ትቻቸውቆይቻለሁ፤ አሁን ግን የወያኔ ሎሌዎች በትግራይ ሕዝብላይ ያደረሱትንና የቃጡበትን ከባድ አደጋ በጥልቅ ስለተገነዘብሁ፣ የምችለውን ያህል ለማስተካከል ቆርጫለሁ፡፡

ከዚህ በፊት ከክንፈ ወልደ ሚካኤል ጋር ብቻ ተነጋገሬበት ነበር፤ ዛሬ እንደክንፈ የሚያምነኝና የማምነው ወያኔ የለም፤ ችግሩ እየተባባሰ በመሄዱ ጊዜን የሚሰጥ አልመሰለኝም፤ ስለዚህ አደባባይ ላውጣውና የሌሎች ሰዎች ሀሳብ ተጨምሮበት በጊዜ መፍትሔ ብንፈልግ ተገቢ ይመስለኛል፡፡

በአጼ ዮሐንስ ዘመን የትግራዩ ራስ አሉላ መረብ-ምላሽን ይገዙ ነበር፤ ኢጣልያኖች ለመረብ-ምላሽ ኤርትራ የሚል ስም ካወጡለት እአአ ከ1900 በኋላ፡

- ኢትዮጵያ በፋሺስት ኢጣልያ በተወረረችበት ዘመናት እአአ ከ1935 አስከ 1941 ኤርትራ ከትግራይ ጋርተቀላቅሎ እንደአጼ ዮሐንስ ዘመን በአንድ ላይ ይተዳደር ነበር፤
- እአአ ከ1961 እስከ 1993 ኤርትራ አንድ የኢትዮጵያ ክፍለ ሀገር ሆኖ ነበር፤
- እአአ በ1991 ሻቢያና ወያኔ በተቀናጀ ጦር የደርግን የጦር ኃይል ጥሰውኢትዮጵያን በሙሉ ኤርትራንም ጭምር ተቆጣጠሩ፤

- ኤርትራን በሚመለከት ወያኔ የመጀመሪያውን ብሔራዊ ስሕተት ፈጸመ፤ ኤርትራ ከኢትዮጵያ ተገንጥሎ ራሱን የቻለ ሉዓላዊ አገር እንዲሆን አደረገ፤
- ገና አሥር ዓመታት እንኳን ሳይሞላ እአአ በ1998 ሻቢያና ወያኔ በድንበር ጦርነት ተፋልመው በብዙ ሺህ የሚቆጠሩ ኢትዮጵያውያን አልቀዋል፤ ጦሱ አሁንም አልበረደም፤
- በዚህ ጦርነት ኤርትራ ልዩና ከኢትዮጵያ ጋር የታሪክ ምሆነ ሌላ ግንኙነት ካልነበራቸው አገሮች ጋር ተፈረጀ፤
- የኤርትራ ሕዝብ አንኳን ለቀረው የኢትዮጵያ ሕዝብ ይቅርና ለትግራይ ሕዘብ ምቦዕድ እንደሆነ ታወጀ፤
- የኤርትራ ሕዝብ ቦዕድ ብቻ ሳይሆን ጠላትም ሆነ፤

የትግራይ ሕዝብ ያለበት ሁኔታ

ዛሬ የትግራይ ክልል የሚባለውከመጀመሪያ አስከመጨረሻ ከባድ የአስተሳሰብ ስሕተት የተጠናወተውአመራር ያለውነ ው፤ የሚከተሉትን የማያስፈልጉ እክሎች ለትግራይ ሕዝብ ፈጥሮአል፡ –

- የጎንደርንና የወሎንም፣ የአፋርንም መሬት ወደትግራይ ማካተቱ ኤርትራ ደጀን ይሆናል በሚል እሳቤ የተፈጸመ ሳይሆን አይቀርም፤
- ከኤርትራ ጋር ግጭት፣ ከዚያም ጦርነት የተካሄደው የኢትዮጵያን ኃይል በመተማመን ነበር፤
- ሁሉም እንደሚያውቀው ውጤቱ ኤርትራን ባዕድና ጠላት አድርጎ በጦርነት ማዋረድና ከአሜሪካ ጋር በመተባበር ኤርትራን ሽብርተኛ በማድረግ ማዕቀብ እንዲጣልበት አድርጎ በማደህየት የበላይነትን ለማረጋገጥ ነበር፤
- የወያኔ አገዛዝ ኃላፊነት የጎደለው (ጌታዋን የተማመነች በግ ላቷን ውጭ ታሳድራለች) በሚዘገንን ጭካኔ የታጀበ ሆኖ በሃያ አምስት ዓመታት ውስጥ በመሸሻል ፋንታ እየተባባሰና እየከፋ በመሄዱ ዛሬ ሰላማዊ ዓመጽ ወደእርስበርስ ጦርነት ለመሸጋገር ተቃርቧል፤
- በዚህ ምየተነሣ ትግራይ በሁለት ሆን ተብሎ ወያኔ ጠላት ባደረጋቸው ሕዝቦች መሀከል ተጥዶ እንደገና ዳቦ እሳት እስኪቀጣጠልበት እየጠበቀ ነው፤

ትግራይ በሰሜን በኩል ‹በባዕድ ጠላት› ታጠረ፤ ለትግራይ ሕዝብ በማናቸውም መመዘኛ የተፈጥሮ ዝምድና ያላቸውየኤርትራ ተወላጆች ባዕድና ጠላት በመደረጋቸውየኤርትራንምሆነ የትግራይን ሕዝብየሚጎዳ ነበረ፤ በዚህ ባበቃ!

Thanks professor for the balanced opinion. I hope many Ethiopians canread and learn how to think logically.

Unlike many of your writings to name or characterize the people of Tigrayas “Tigrie/ትግሬ”, except in few places, you avoided to use this derogatory word in this writing, and I thank you for that (probably you agree with mycomments in your facebook writing titled “ወያኔና ትግሬ”).

To mention few mistakes in this writings — do you know that in your “figure 1” (the Derg’s Tigray kiflehager), a good portion (probably half) ofthe now Afar killil was part of Tigray?, then, you keep continue to mentionas if there is land from Afar is taken to Tigray killil (while the fact is, the current Afar Kill was partly in the old Tigray and Wollo kiflehagers) —- probably you want to support your argument that the current Tigray is surrounded by enemy in every direction; I think it could be enough for you to mention Gonder, Eritrea, and Wollo — because I never heard a border dispute between the now Afar and Tigray killil (or maybe, you are speculating it will happen in the future. If that is the case you should clearly specify; otherwise, when you add untrue statements like that, it makes your all writing doubtful).

Anther fact is that, the word “Weyane/ወያኔ ” is a good word — it means “Revolution”, I try to teach as many non-Tigrigna speaking friends as possible that most Tigrians like the word Weyane — that is why, by the way, TPLF called themselves the “Second Weyane” (the first being the Woyane that revolted against King Hilesilasie, in the 1940’s), and I think the current opposition to TPLF in Tigray (i.e. Arena Tigray) call themselvesas the “Third Woyane” …. what I am trying to say is that, most Tigrians like to call themselves “Woyane”, the question is what kind of “Woyane” ?

— I think the answer to most Tigrians is like the “Woyane” during the fightagainst Derg (probably, Derg was too bad and it makes TPLF looks the real and democrat Woyane at that time) — to most Tigrians, they think the current “Woyane” (TPLF) are corrupted, hence, most Tigrians want to see them to correct themselves to the real “Woyane” (democratic and not corrupted Woyanes), otherwise they want to see them replaced with another real “Woyane” (probably, Arena Tigray in Tigray, and also in collaboration with other real-Ethiopians in Ethiopia; What I mean by real- Ethiopians is to Ethiopians other than Ginbot-7, OLF and other Sha’ebiya boys).

Another point is that, I could be wrong, but, I think most Ethiopians doesn’t want to hear about any possibility of ethnic conflict in Ethiopia from the government officials (or from Woyanes); otherwise, what I understand from your writing is that, there is a possibility of such conflictsand you seem to really care and advise all Ethiopians to avoid such conflict ….. you are not in fact alone, there are other knowledgeable Ethiopians who think the same (eg. see a recent work titled “The Case of Rwanda: Lessons for Ethiopia”, by Dawit Woldegiorgis); So, when Abay and Siyum mentioned that such conflict can lead to distraction of Ethiopia,and I do not see the logic why it should be interpreted that as if “TPLF is planning for such conflict” …. the problem I see here is that, you take theirstatements out of context and make them as if “TPLF is planning for Ethnic conflict” ……. if I take the logic of your interpretation of Abay and Suyum’s comment, I must be correct if I interpret your writing as a work written to scare Tigrians not to support TPLF, rather than a genuine concern to Tigray people if such conflict had to occur … I think a lot of your readers will be happy to hear your answer to this contradiction —- i.e. how similar or different are your concern vs Suyum’s/Abay’s concern?

I think, most Tigrans see TPLF as corrupt and undemocratic, hence needs reform or give its power to capable and democratic one, but I do not thinkmost Tigrians (TPLF supporters or opposing groups) will agree with you that TPLF is against the people Ethiopia as describe in your writing ….. or at least, the people of Ethiopia should understand that most Tigrians (TPLF supporters or opposing) think that TPLF is better than Ginbot-7 andOLF to Tigray people and even to most people of Ethiopia ….. because of the recent Ethio-Eritrea war, they think Saebiya is the main enemy of Tigray and Ethiopia , and anyone who is cooperating at this time with Shaebiya is enemy of Tigray and Ethiopia ……

Another problem I have is that, because of the demonstrations in some cities of Amhara (mostly in Gonder city) and Oromia (in few cities), you generalize that 3/4 of the people of Ethiopia are against EPRDF. I think you still did not learn from your mistake when you were in Kinijit that because Kinijit won Addis, you and your party extrapolate Addis’s victory to all Ethiopia and chose to go to jail instead of parliament with significantminority chair, if EPRDF did not agree to relinquish power

Robel says,

I hope and pray that the TPLF leaders read this carefully. Ato Seyoum Mesfin and Ato Abay Tsehaye calmly explained the disaster they planned. I want them to read the scenarios Prof. Mesfin outlined above. The time isnot right for blind bravado. Such blind bravado from the likes of Seyoum and Abay, in the end will hurt most the Tigray region. Even if the Tigray people are under heavy boots of the TPLF, it is my hope that a few will rise up, and another few will follow to stop this madness of the TPLF leadership. I really believe that, because you can't loose hope on Humanity. The TPLF leaders has to understand by now that, those born when they came to power are now 25 years old (remember Feyisa Lelissa, age 25) and they are resolved to no more live under the boots of TPLF , in Oromia, in Amhara, Southern regions etc., today. The same will happen in Tigray too. A care taker government, as outlined above, is the safe minimum TPLF has now. Remember Dergu ? such windows of opportunity closes fast. As an Engineer, I would like to also remind the TPLF leaders, that high-resolution satellite images are now cheap to get by zooming commercial satellites on potential crime scenes from which TPLF can't hide (remember Abiye in Sudan ?

Wondwossen Teklu says,

This is my 2nd comment dear Prof . I quite agree with your obeservstion about our country. I also agree with your proposal as a durabl solution forthe challenge we currently have but the main issue now is to come up with a different kind of strategy to implement the way our solution.

Because

1. You know better than us the nature of TPLF
2. You know also better than us the situation in Tigeray that is uncollaborative to the people for expressing their will independently
3. The presumption of Ethiopians towards of Tigeray people, in generalthe possibility of accepting your proposal is becom too slim .

Am not talking about the dooms day to my country but either we like it ornot we are heading to a bloody civil war in which the people of Tigeray willperished then partially Parts of Ethiopia.

We are going to witness the stateless of Ethioia as Somalia . Yes, wemight be become stateless for a while and Tigeray too will declare itssovereign state but will gonna be short .
Unfortunately the biggest loser will be Tigeray not Ethiopia but thebloodshed is too high even more than like Ruwanda .
Now we have a time to stop this .

Your proposal is quite progressive but it luck mechanism of implementingit in order to save our country and our people . How can we convince thestubborn arrogant TPLF regime ??
Now the more they kill, the strongest will they have to remain in power .

Prof. We have to come up with a kind of tactic or strategy for your proposal acceptance since the last and final option has been contained onit. We have no time at all. The Eritreans are in vein to avenge the blood .Many other Ethiopian community too have blood thrist for Tigeray thanksto TPLF. The arogant stubborn and Fascist TPLF is totally bliend unable tosee the upcoming danger . We need something different kind of mechanism to disarm this danger. I always your admire of your ability

Assessment of government stability amid ongoing protests

Security Intelligence, Sub-Saharan Africa September 27, 2016

The Ethiopian government is looking increasingly unstable, and the security environment in Ethiopia is looking more dangerous. Oppositionprotests over the past few months have been larger and more frequent than any in Ethiopia since the end of the civil war. The ethnic nature ofthese protest movements means that a mutiny within the police or security forces is more likely than in recent years.

We also warn that higher impact scenarios, like a change of prime minister, or a coup, are both credible scenarios in the medium to long term. This is because, other than these demonstrations, there are underlying indications that the government’s position is increasingly precarious. The ruling Ethiopian People’s Revolutionary Democratic Front’s(EPRDF) grip on power appears to have been weakening in recent years, and the country’s economy has unresolved structural problems.

Despite restrictions on local and international media operations in Ethiopia, social media users have reported on the protests. Attendance atweekly protests in cities and towns countrywide over the past few monthshas tended to vary, but we have seen images of rallies with what appearsto be several thousand protesters in Addis Ababa, Dessie, Mekele and Gomar. The scale of such public opposition to the government is unprecedented.

Analysis of protests

The motivations behind the recent protests have varied widely between regions of the country and between organising groups. But a common theme has been opposition to the government. In Oromia, protests were originally against a plan to expand Addis Ababa into surrounding areas buthave turned into a broader anti-government movement. In Amhara and Tigray, protests have been against the purported mistreatment of the Amhara ethnic group. We have also seen images on social media of Muslim groups protesting outside mosques in the past month, reportedly against government interference in religious affairs.

The government has blamed the protests on ‘people with terror links’ andoverseas activists who they claim are trying to destabilise the country.
This approach has in some cases, exacerbated the risk of protests. Earlierthis year, government heavy-handedness in response to protests in Oromia prompted other groups to join the demonstrations. So far, the various recent protest movements appear to have remained organisationally distinct. But they do seem to have become less single- issue oriented and converged on a more broadly anti-government stance.

Protest outlook

Although it is unclear how these protests will play out in Ethiopia, we thinkthat there are several credible scenarios in the coming months that point to increasing risks in the country. If the protests persist at their current size and frequency, the EPRDF may attempt to replace the current prime minister, Hailemariam Desalegn. Such a move would probably be an attempt by the ruling party to appease protesters, but would be likely to result in little tangible political change.

We also think it is credible that the security forces might mutiny, or the army may attempt a coup. This is particularly likely if the current protestsescalate into a more widespread and sustained anti-government movement – a development similar to the popular protests and subsequent coup in Burkina Faso last year. An early warning sign of this would be the government ordering local military units to violently suppress demonstrations related to ethnic grievances.

The nine regional states of Ethiopia are in part divided along ethnic lines, and the government claims that the security forces in each region are predominantly made up of members of that ethnic group. Given that the protests in Amhara, Oromia and Tigray appear to be at least partly motivated by perceived ethnic-biased issues, a mutiny, in which the policeor soldiers refuse to follow orders to use heavy handed tactics against protesters of the same ethnic group, is a credible scenario in our view.
Despite this risk, we anticipate that the Ethiopian government will use more forceful tactics to suppress the protests, particularly if they continueto spread, grow and intensify. The use of heavy handed tactics by the security forces is already commonplace. Human Rights Watch claims that more than 400 people have been killed at demonstrations by the security forces since late 2015. This response suggests that there is a high level ofconcern in government about the effect the protests will have on its stability.
Political outlook
We have seen several indications that the EPRDF has been losing public support in recent years, especially since Hailemariam became prime minister in 2012. He is widely seen as less charismatic than his predecessor, and anecdotal reports suggest that he is generally perceivedby the population as having failed to move to a more democratic and inclusive style of government.

One of Hailemariam’s central claims to legitimacy is his government’s handling of the economy. Over the past decade, the Ethiopian economy has grown by an average of 11.7% per year, according to the World Bank.But the country’s GDP per capita is still amongst the lowest in the world, and it appears that the high growth rate is not benefiting the growing youth population.

None of this points to an improving outlook. The US government estimates that 71% of the population is younger than 30. But Ethiopian labour ministry statistics from 2015 show that 25% of under 30s in Ethiopia are either under- or unemployed. Such high rates of joblessnesssignificantly increase the risk that protests movements will become morefrequent and intense in the coming months

Soap actor Znah-Bzu Tsegaye flees Ethiopia

By BBC September 27, 2016

Prominent Ethiopian actor Znah-Bzu Tsegaye has sought asylum in the USafter leaving the country about two months ago, he told Voice of America.The actor was in a weekly soap opera Sew Le Sew on state television.

He left because of "repeated harassment and for being Amhara" reportsthe opposition Zehabesha website. Human Rights Watch says security forces killed at least 100 people at protests in the Amhara region in August but the government denies this.

In an interview with Voice of America's Amharic service, the actor said theEthiopian security forces had carried out "atrocious actions" and he had decided not to return home until the "regime is changed". "It is sad to respond with bullets to people's demand for their rights," he added.

At the root of the recent demonstrations in Amhara is a request by representatives from the Welkait Amhara Identity Committee that theirland, which is currently administered by the Tigray regional state, be moved into the neighbouring Amhara region.

The Oromo people in Ethiopia have also been protesting against the government, saying they have been excluded politically and economically.During the Rio Olympics, marathon runner Feyisa Lilesa crossed the line insecond place with his arms above his head in solidarity with Oromo activists.
He said he wanted to seek asylum after the high-profile anti-governmentprotest, and he is now in the US.

Exclusive Interview

Ethiopia's gradual journey to the verge of crisis

ADDIS STANDARD September 29, 2016

Born in Mekelle, the Capital of the Tigray regional state in the north, Gebru Asrat became one of the early members of the Tigray People Liberation Front (TPLF), Ethiopia's all too powerful member of the governing coalition, Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF). But Gebru left EPRDF in early 2000 following a major split withinTPLF in the wake of the 1998-2000 war between Eritrea and Ethiopia.

Prior to that Gebru served as the president of the Tigray Regional State from 1991 – 2001 and was one of the top executive members of the TPLF's politburo as well as the executive member of EPRDF. After leaving EPRDF, Gebru established the opposition Arena Tigray and became its chairman in 2007. Today Arena Tigray is one of the member parties of thelarger opposition block, MEDREK. In 2014, Gebru has published an acclaimed book: "LualawinetEna Democracy Be Ethiopia" (Sovereignty andDemocracy in Ethiopia). Addis Standard's Kalkidan Yibeltal interviewed Gebru on the current Ethiopian political affairs. Excerpts:

Addis Standard – In your 2014 book "Democracy and Sovereignty in Ethiopia" you argued that TPLF's culture of secrecy had helped its eventualtriumph in overthrowing the militarist Derg and most of the party's followers were indoctrinated with the propaganda of Stalinist determination. What's the context of that culture, if you will, in light of thecurrent situation in the TPLF-dominated-EPRDF led Ethiopia?

Gebru Asrat – TPLF was initially formed to pursue a political struggle. In order to meet that political goal through military means, it had establishedan army. This is one of its features. In its early days TPLF was a Marxist Leninist party. An army needs prudence [and] caution; secrets are not needed to be passed to the opposing group or to the enemy. But there isalso fierce centralism which comes from the Marxist Leninist ideology.

These two factors [contributed to TPLF's culture of secrecy] and helped it for the success of the armed struggle. But later on, after the armed struggle came to an end [with victory] TPLF denounced the Marxist Leninist ideology, and its militarist approach was seemingly replaced by a political program. But what TPLF did was to remove the flesh from its Stalinism structure, not the bone and the skeleton. It kept the skeleton so that it would help it to rule the people of Ethiopia. It did so by using thefundamental principles of centralism; there is the rule of one party, which now they call the dominant party under the guise of revolution ary democracy. The party kept its culture of secrecy and its centralism principle because they are convenient to rule [with an iron first].All the talks about democracy, justice, equality and the rule of law were eventually abandoned. Although it somehow shifted the gear to Capitalismduring the early days of its rule the transition was not clear either. The party didn't completely abandon the old Marxist Leninist ways; it selected what it needed to rule, to maintain its power and sustained them.
Transparency was lost and a highly centralized one party dominated system was established. This secretive nature of the dominant TPLF andits refusal to be open to the public has impacted the democratization process of the country. More than that the features it has brought from the Marxist Leninist ideology like centralism, the concept of a dominant party and revolutionary democracy has eventually hampered the road todemocracy and gave way to our reality today in which one party does whatever it wants.

AS – There are people who argue that TPLF betrayed its initial noble goals, which were its foundations, after it assumed power. But judging from what you just said above (its culture of secrecy and its loyalty to an out-of-date ideology) one could say that the formation of TPLF was essentially flawed from the very beginning.And it seems that the problems we are witnessing today are the manifestations of those flaws. Am I correct?

GA – We have to clarify this in two ways: there are those who argue that TPLF's noble goals could have only been attained through [the guiding principles of] Marxist Leninist ideology. I was one of those who believed inthis. I used to fully believe that other ways of democratization were wrong; that it would not bring equality, liberty and justice. It was a mixture of belief, philosophy and ideology. So people who saw [the party'slast minute conversion to capitalism] felt they were betrayed. Many of theold guard (the old cadres), were carved in this way, so they clearly felt betrayed. On the other hand there were those even in that time who asked [if TPLF] shouldn't have to be a democratic organization in which a marketplace of ideas were entertained. People who saw things from this perspective felt like the Marxist Leninist ideology, in its essence, could nothave brought democracy. These were people who felt betrayed from the very beginning. At the end both of them have lost. There is no democracy; and there was no Marxist Leninist as it was envisioned in the beginning. Those ardent Marxist Leninist ideology supporters were betrayed because at the dawn of victory when the rebel soldiers entered into the capital the ideology was not even to be mentioned. And those who yearned for democracy were also betrayed because we ended up having a system of one dominant party rule.

AS – In chapter two of your book you explained the rocky relationship that often existed between TPLF and other armed groups that were operating in the country during the armed struggle. As someone who has been in the inner circles of the TPLFboth during the armed struggle and afterwards, how do you characterize this nature of TPLF as a party vis a vis its relationship with the other sister parties within the governing coalition of EPRDF?

GA – Yes I have written that TPLF often ended its relationships with other armed groups, which did not identify with it, by force and war. That was during the time of the armed struggle. Now, these four parties that make up the EPRDF are sister parties. More than that they say they have the same program and objective. But even in that case, there is something that must be known: these parties are not unified and it is not clear why.If they do not have a program difference, if they have similar national visions, if they do not have a principle or ideology difference, as they claim, they should have been one national party [or] should have formed a unity. But this didn't happen because there is this notion that EPRDF cankeep the interests of each party, so it stayed this way for 25 years.

As it is known, of the four parties the one with the highest influence and the most veteran is TPLF. The amount of influence TPLF has, or we shouldrather say had, on other parties is not a minor one. This is not visible during eventless and peaceful times. But when there is a problem, things start to surface. For example in 2000, when EPRDF as a governing coalition was hit by a serious crisis, the value of these parties began to bemeasured by their loyalties to the late MelesZenawi, or TPLF. The leaders of some of these parties have even found themselves in dangerous positions. Senior party members who have a sense of independence werekicked out and were replaced by others. This is to say that during the times of peace, the parties appear to be equal. Gradually this led the umbrella party to become what we can call a one man tyranny. As a resultevery party or member, who is not loyal, has faced difficulties.

But now there appear to be changes following the death of MelesZenawi,which had a very big tactical implication to EPRDF. The late Meles was a leader who managed to control and rule all the parties as well as the army. After his death all the parties within EPRDF, or rather senior leaderswithin those parties, have nominated him/herself to be the next Meles, showing visible signs of an increasing distance between the four parties.

AS – In the past intra-party or intra-region conflicts which are common in federal states like Ethiopia were effectively managed by TPLF/EPDRF. This was attributed to the absence of the role of opposition parties in any of the regions. Since EPRDF governs all the regions, it has found it to be easier to manage potential intra-party or intra-region conflicts. But recent regional squabbles, for example between the Amhara and Tigray regions, seem to be on the rise. These are not simply expressions of discontent by the people of the two regions. They are rather conflicts between the two parties governing the two regions. What is at the bottom of this? These are two parties under the same umbrella. What does this say about the two parties which are seemingly loyal to the principles of the mother party EPRDF?

GA – We can call these parties one and at the same time four. They are one because they have a common program and a national vision. On the other hand they are parties formed to maintain the interests of their individual regional interests. So this problem, even if it was not as accentuated as now, was seen before, especially in border issues. There were problems about border demarcation between Tigray and Amhara in two particular places; one in Wolkait, specifically in the place called Dansha; the second around Agaw, in the area called Abergede. There were conflicts. At the end of the day what are these parties loyal to? Theirown regions or the country in general? It is not clear. Even if we see themas members of one party, they are also four different entities. So they give precedence for their respective regions. This in itself creates conflicts; here it is expressed in the form of border conflict. It might as well be expressed in a different form. In benefits, in budget, for instance.So it can stem from the regional interest each party is trying to pursue. But essentially the Wolkait situation can be resolved by following the dictates of the Constitution. The same with Addis Abeba and Oromia. They can be solved following the Constitution. But the questions raised bythe public go beyond that. They are questions of basic rights and liberties.They are questions of justice. They are questions of governorship. But in EPRDF's Ethiopia whenever there is a problem, there is a tendency to externalize the sources. They point fingers at others. They are even saying that the public movement we are seeing now is the doing of the Eritrean government, the doings of our enemies from abroad. I think it is pure insanity to assume that millions are bought by the enemy; it is insane to assume that the Eritrean government has the power, in our country, to mobilize all these people. This externalization is also visible in other ways; whenever there is a problem in Oromia, the others see it as the fault line of OPDO. Whenever there is a problem in Amhara, the otherspoint their fingers at ANDM and so on. They do not see it as a national problem. So when big problems, like we are witnessing now, occur, theytend to pull each other. We have seen it in 2000. It was triggered by theEritrean question and how sovereignty was handled. There are problemswithin one party, let alone a front of four parties that are not unified.

AS – Ethiopia is experiencing frequent protests almost in every corner. With that in mind some prominent veterans say TPLF/EPRDF is at a crossroads and they are calling for a reformfrom within. What is your take on that? Do you agree that theirprescription of reform within the TPLF/EPRDF is what a better Ethiopia needs now?

In my view TPLF was at the crossroads for a long time now. It's been a long time but now it is very clear. It is failing to even manage the situation in its own backyard. There are demonstrations, for example the one in Embasenet. There is public discontent. There are questions of absence of good governance and democracy, and the presence of rampantcorruption. These problems, through time, have penetrated into the party itself. Last year in August and September when the TPLF held its convention, the questions were raised from within the party. Party members were saying that the party was not in the right track. They criticized TPLF for being so weak that it can't even manage its own region properly let alone impact the wider country. These questions are still alive. Now the situation is very critical. For an entire year, there have been public gatherings, public meetings by members of civil servants and the society at large. But as [Albert] Einstein said it well it's insanity to do the same thing over and over again and expect a different result. They have tried it for more than twenty years without a change. And now we have reached at a tipping point. This problem cannot be solved in a similarway unless there is a fundamental change in the country. So these people,my older comrades, appear to be concerned by this reality. I agree with the analyses they give about the presence of a critical situation in the country. I see their initiation to do this as a much needed positive move. However, when we come to solutions they subscribed, I must say that, they have said what I have said personally and as a member of Arena Tigray Party, which is also a member of the larger Medrek. We, as a party,have long put what we saw as the solutions to the problems in Ethiopia onseveral occasions. Fundamental democratic change is needed, much different from what EPRDF is following right now. If there is no democratization in Ethiopia, the problems will keep on escalating and theywill put the country in a very dangerous situation. So I agree with some ofwhat they had to say personally. But there are also suggestions that revolutionary democracy is still right. I disagree with that. It is not right.

It hasn't been right. It never worked. It cannot be a means to cultivate democracy. In fact it chokes it to death. And those commentators are saying that they agree with the principles of the developmental state. Thisis a scheme to put the entire economy in the hands of the state; to put the land, the budget, the country's wealth in the hands of the state to oppress the others more easily. So I don't agree. I do not have any problem with the government putting its hand in the economy. But like the way it is now, when the government controls everything, it becomes wrong. But the main thing is they have seen it that the country is in a critical state. And there are some solutions they suggested, like mass public discussions. But I don't have the naiveté to believe that EPRDF is capable of reforming itself. I don't believe that. To be fair, these are not the only solutions they suggested. They also recommended the party to have a dialogue with other opposition parties and to open the political space, which I agree with. If EPRDF reforms itself it might be useful for it.However I, as an opposition, and as someone who is a member of a partyrepresenting an alternative way, I say, as long as democracy is not practiced in its entirety, I don't see a way out of this quagmire for Ethiopia. There will not be justice. A fundamental change is what is needed; not a mending reform.

AS – But do you believe TPLF/EPRDF is capable of reforming itself? The language of reform has been applied for over 15 years. It's been that long since the late MelesZenawi himself admitted EPRDF was 'rotten' inside out. Can TPLF/EPRDF reform itself or is the fear that if it does it might bring in its own demise takes precedence? Which one do you believe in: is it the unwillingness orthe incapacity to reform that's holding it back?

In my view reform can come in two ways; from the forces within or from the outside public. In TPLF/EPRDF when they talk about reform, it is all about keeping the status quo because on many of the important questionsthe party falters. They believe any change must happen over the graves of the party. They say they are ready to debate but they are not open for debate because they are afraid; they work from the assumption that any change on the status quo will be dangerous for them. They tried it after the split in 2000 and during elections in 2005, but the results became overwhelming. So they used all means to close until they ended up takinga 100 per cent of the parliamentary seats. They have managed to have eight million members in an attempt to control every village. The recent statement by Prime Minister HailemariamDesalegn can be read in this light. For over a year, he has been saying they have problems of all sorts.But recently he resorted to force as a means to relinquish these pubic demands. All he said was they have the military power and they can control the situation forcefully. He didn't solicit political legitimacy. He didn't see democratization as a solution, unless nominally. So far the way TPLF/EPRDF follows is guided by the principle that it controls the army, the police and the intelligence to rule the country with an iron fist. So the pressures witnessed from within are not making TPLF/EPRDF to reform. Now we have to wait and see how the public demands are pressurizingthem into having a reform.

AS – Perhaps getting into the bottom of the party's way of governing the county may help us understand on whether or not applying the language of reform could yield any result. You have, for instance, served as the president of the Tigray Regional state for about ten years. And one of the long standing problems of TPLF/EPRDF is its failure to implement the federal system as stipulated in the constitution. You had a chance to see how exactlythat was played out during your presidency. How do you evaluate, for example, the fault lines in the federal-regional nexus? And what's its contribution to the current crisis?

GA – This is a good question. Constitutionally speaking Ethiopia is a federated country. There are authority levels and limitations between theFederal government and the Regional governments. But the Constitutionis not functioning. EPRDF is not practicing the Constitution. The fundamental rights and freedoms stipulated in the constitution are not respected. They are being muzzled. Human rights, freedom of speech, freedom of assembly, freedom of organization, are to mention few. My opinion is that the government is not operating following the Constitution. It must be known that EPRDF is a highly centralized party which has and follows its own program outside of the Constitution. Thereis nothing like revolutionary democracy in the Constitution; it is a liberal constitution. There is no centralism in the Constitution. The Constitution isdesigned in such a fabulous manner only to appease the public and the wider world. But what is practiced is EPRDF's party program. The party releases so many regulations and directives and that is what is used to govern the county. Almost all these papers are written to ensure the hegemony of one party. And all the cadres are guided by these papers.

The 'shared-rule' and 'self-rule principles of federalism cannot work in a highly centralized party. Let me make myself an example. [In 2000] the split within TPLF occurred. When the split occurred, I was the President of Tigray Regional government. I was elected by the Tigray people. But I wassacked by the central government. This means that the people have no right at all. The party ousts, sacks anybody that it wants to. The regional government, the regional entity has no power at all. This didn't happen only to me. Abate Kisho, the president of the Southern regions was sacked in a similar manner. In Benishangul and Gambella and Somali regional states the leaders are changed frequently by the order from the EPRDF office. This flawed operation of the Federal system is just one example. But it works in all aspects. The justice system suffers from similar fate as is the military. EPRDF's central hand is stretched in every aspect.

AS – Often time people talk about first 2000 and then 2005 beingthe turning points or the downward spiral in the country's democratic experiment. The implications of these assertions are that all was well before 2000. You were the President of a Regional government before the first turning point in 2000. Do youbelieve that the country was on the right track before that?

GA– There are two things here: on the one hand I was the President of a regional state, on the other I was a member of EPRDF's central committeeas part of TPLF's Executive Committee. Decisions were always made not by the regional parliament but by the party's Executive committee. After that happened, the decision was taken to the public. In what I mentioned earlier as democratic centralism, it is not possible to refuse this. Even if it was wrong, you can't refuse it. Of course there are possibilities to convince the committeeby raising arguments but it was up to the committee, not the public. One of the flaws of the system, I believe, is this. The party members are everywhere. They are in the Federal system.They are in the civil service structure. And they decide based on the instructions that they receive from above, from the party. Not according to what the public demand and need in every aspect. It must be known that the cause of public resentment, especially now, is this. What the people need is one thing, the party's interest is another. There is a gap.
When I look back at what was happening in the party then, there were arguments and dialogues but when it comes to the relationship between the Federal government and regional states, the dominance lies within theparty. It makes the decisions.

AS – Despite these blatant failure of the ruling party to implementthe federalism arrangement many people, including some opposition parties, point their fingers at the ethnic (some call it linguistic) federalism to be the main cause of the problem the country finds itself today. What is your opinion of that? Do you think the federalism arrangement is something that is worth protecting or something to blame for the country's problems today?

GA – I don't agree with such accusations. Federalism can be arranged in various ways. Now, what we have here in Ethiopia is an ethnic Federalismarrangement. There can also be a Federal arrangement based on geography. But the main thing is not this; the main thing is whether thereis a condition for the pubic to choose these freely. Is there a condition to protect the people's rights and freedoms? I believe that is the fundamental thing. As long as there is no democracy, there is going to be a problem. I mean, if there is a democratic system, those things can be debated upon. If the people don't like them, the people can change them.But in the absence of democracy, there can't even be a debate. So what I say is the source to all problems is lack of democratic practices, rights andfreedoms by and for the public. As I said earlier the current federalism is not practiced rightly. It's just nominal. Yes, people work in their own languages, they celebrate their cultures. But when it comes to essential decisions, the Federal arrangement is not functioning at all. As long as there is a dominance of one party, federalism, ethnic or geographical, cannot function. I don't think the root of Ethiopian problems is this arrangement. Problems were there long before the system came in place. TPLF and OLF and others started armed struggle in the absence of this arrangement. It was the lack of democracy. In fact what I believe is that, the structuring of the current system has lessened ethnic resentments. What the Ethiopian people, including intellectuals should focus on is the absence or presence of democracy. Rights and freedoms must be respected. Without doing this all the attempts will be futile. WhatI am saying is that this is not the root cause of all problems the country isfacing today. It is the dominance of one party and the lack of basic democratic practices.

AS – When you say the dominance of one party, are you sayingEPRDF in general or TPLF's dominance over EPRDF?

GA – To make it clear, I don't think EPRDF is a non-existent entity. Their level of power might be different but OPDO is an existing party. ANDM is an existing party. I don't think those parties are free from taking responsibilities from whatever is happening in the country. I don't think they have no influence on what is going on. TPLF used to be the most influential one; I doubt if it is like this now. It's not clear. When I see whatis going on and ask if TPLF has the level of influence it used to have, I have [doubts]. But even if TPLF is the most influential party, the other three cannot be exempted from taking the blame.

AS – What do you mean when you say TPLF might not have the level of influence it once has? The protests in Oromia throughout the year and quite recently in Amhara have laid bare not only the level of public discontent, but also the deep seated dissatisfactionsby the two parties representing the two regions, the OPDO and ANDM against the all too powerful TPLF. Do you agree with that?

GA – I find it difficult to answer this question with full certainty. However Itried to explain it earlier. Whenever there is a problem, pointing fingers is very common. In my opinion, for the lack of democracy in the country, forthe muzzling of rights and freedoms, and for the rampant corruption all member parties of the EPRDF are blameworthy. They participated in the thievery; they have participated in the oppression so they can't claim innocence. But as I said earlier pointing fingers is very common. TPLF points its fingers at others. It says it has been betrayed as the recent article on Aigaforum claims. It is nothing more than casting blame on others. And the fact is in a union that was not formed in a democratic way, this is inevitable. Because whenever individuals or groups become stronger the others develop a sentiment of antipathy. When I see TPLF and others, I don't think the lower level party members think like the leadership. I don't think the leadership has enough control, influence, on its own members, like it used to have. It's weak now. Each party has more than a million members. Those members can't even control what's going on in one Kebele, or in one Woreda. So when this happens, instead of saying this happens because of us, because of the roads we follow, theysay it's all about failed implementation, even worse, they say it's because some betrayed us. It's an inevitable accusation.

AS – What do you think is the best way to address the country'snot only political and economic but also historical crisis withoutcausing a regrettable outcome? What do you see as prescriptionfor redemption, if you will?

GA– As I see Ethiopia is a country at the verge of crisis. In this regard I agree with what my previous comrades have written about. The crisis is created. In this reality, there are things not just politicians but also the general public must think about. The first one is that in Ethiopia there is lack of one strong guiding vision. So the main thing, I think, is to have a consensus of vision for the country. When I say this I am not denying the fact that each party has its own vision. But it has become a country without a vision which can gather people around. So in order to salvage the country out of this crisis, we must have more dialogues, more ideas. We need ideas, strong ideas that can gather the public together. But sinceideas are not enough, strong institutions are needed. Strong parties are needed. By this I don't mean dominant party.I think Ethiopia lacks strongnational parties that can gather people of all spectrums together. Some ofthem incline too much to their region. Some others deny the questions of nations and ethnicity; they claim to be national but their influence doesn'ttranscend from one region. So I don't see alternatives in which strong parties with strong vision can be created. We evaluate EPRDF on many parameters and we understand that the party is finding it difficult to bringforth solutions to the problems the country is facing. Or we are saying theparty is in crisis. But we must also ask does the alternative certainly has principles and organizations that can bring forth change? We can't bring inchange using the same ideas. What Ethiopia needs is a change of ideas.

Besides that there is yet another question that must be raised. Before now, during the Derg and Imperial regimes, there were problems in the country such as lack of democracy, lack of justice, lack of equality. But the country somehow survived these problems and stayed as one. We should be careful that the current situation isn't any different. What I seenow dominantly, among the radical opposition and EPRDF alike, is the proliferation of racial or ethnic hatred. We can see that in the state ownedand affiliated media there is a proliferation of mixing the ruling party with the people. This will lead us to irrevocable conflicts. There is no weak areain this regard, even if it is small. But sadly EPRDF is using it to its advantage. To put it bluntly, TPLF is doing a lot of mobilization saying to the [Tigray] people that chauvinists are going to invade them and they should gather around it. It is trying to make the [Tigray] people believe that all the critiques it is receiving are critiques not against the party but against the [Tigray] people. This is very dangerous. Similarly there are others who mix up the party and the people and spread rumors that the Tigayans are about to do this or that to this or that people. The oppositionfinds it easy to collect followers by telling people that what's happening tothem is done to them by Tigrayans. The ruling party is doing the same.

They have been doing it for quite a long time actually. Every time an election approaches they tell the people in Tigray that chauvinist Amharasare going to engulf them. And they tell the Amhara that narrow Oromos are coming to destroy them. And for the Oromo they say the chauvinists are going to sabotage them. This is an age old way of the party. And I believe that it has contributed to what is going on now. If religious leadersin this country were not followers and executers of EPRDF's program who never slide an inch from the party's dictates, they would have been important in looking for solutions for the country's problems. The intellectuals and religious leaders must be part of the solution. So what I see as a strategy to get out of this quagmire is there must be an organization with a strong vision which can be an alternative to the EPRDFand which can gather the people of Ethiopia around this vision.

AS – Owing to this monumental failure to uphold the rule of law, many people say the ruling party in Ethiopia has forced its relationship with the people of Ethiopia to become violent. Your own party Arena Tigray has been pushed left and right to a point where peaceful politicking has become virtually impossible. This isleading many people to say that the idea of armed struggle is now becoming the last resort to deal with EPRDF. As a party which is denied the means to a peaceful struggle, do you see Arena Tigray responding to EPRDF's dominance in what many say is the only means EPRDF understands: armed struggle?

GA – Your question is right. EPRDF is pushing the people, especially the youth, to the extreme. It made me recall a Central Committee member weonce had. He raised an argument that with EPRDF in power it's impossible to have a peaceful struggle. But we said we have to use the political spacethat is available, as narrow as it can be, and conduct a peaceful struggle. Otherwise the other way is going to unleash calamity. He finally moved to Eritrea to join TIMIHT. This man represents a way of thinking among the youth. And the narrower the space gets, the more the youth are pushed to pick up armed struggle because they see what they see; they believe peaceful struggle is just getting to jail. But I don't believe in that; I believe the current movements [the protests in various parts of the country] are essentially peaceful. I have a belief that it is possible to forcethe government to change. I also believe that it is possible to execute policy in a peaceful way.

Right after the election [in 2015] we have three of our members killedincluding a member of our central committee here in Addis Abeba.

Another of our member was poisoned to death and we have about twentymembers in jail. Incidents like this make peaceful struggle difficult. But paying the prices requires us to continue the peaceful struggle. And the protests we are seeing now, I count them as part and parcels of peacefulstruggle. Other than that I don't see anything but bloodshed from armedstruggle.

AS – Where is EPRDF taking Ethiopia to?

GA – This is a very difficult question. A hard one. In its own book, it istaking the country to development, to wealth, to job creation, to the providing of health services and what have you. That's what it says. Of course there are some changes in some regards. This is undeniable.
Access to health and education is better than what it used to be. There areforeign and domestic investments. But this cannot be a source of legitimacy for a regime. The main thing is: is there democracy? Are the rights and freedoms of people protected? A person who owns a cart feeds the horse that pushes the cart but it doesn't mean that he gives the horse freedom. And humans are different from horses, from animals. Freedom isthe main foundation and element of development. What is being seen right now is that people come out to protest, EPRDF kills. It is trying to govern by the force of arms, but the Ethiopian people are not going to accept that. If things continue this way, we are getting into a very dangerous road. Talking about development while refusing to protect the rights and freedoms of the people, who are the main instruments of development, is both insanity and an embarrassment. Any dictatorial regime can build infrastructure but development, in its essence, is intertwined with the rights and freedoms of the people who benefit from it. Unless EPRDF tries to seek its legitimacy from respecting these rights and freedoms, it is taking the country in a wrong way, to a very dangerous place where there might be carnages. (text ends)

The Hon. Dr. Haddis Alemayehu (the late)

Written by Wemezekir

Haddis Alemayehu was a humble patriot who has served his country and enriched the lives of his fellow Ethiopians in diverse ways. Not only has hefought for his country at the frontline against Italian occupation, he has also defended Ethiopia's interests through remarkable diplomacy after the war. He wrote the first masterpiece of Ethiopian literature ፍቅር እስከ ጫቃብር ("Love Unto Grave"). He also made efforts toward cultivating the minds of young Ethiopians through education when he was a top official ofMinistry of Education.

Haddis Alemayehu was born on Tikimt 7, 1902 E.C. (15th October 1909 G.C) in the Indodam Kidane Mehret, a village not far from Debre Markos,capital of Gojam Province. He was the son of an Orthodox priest, Abba (Father) Alemayehu Solomon, and his wife Woizero Desta Alemu. Haddisembarked on religious education from a very young age. As he grew older, he studied at the renowned Gojjam monasteries of Debre Elias, Debre Worq, and Dima. Later, he moved to Addis Ababa and enrolled at the Swedish Mission, and then at Taffari Makonnen School for further studies. Upon graduation he took up a post as a teacher.

In the 1930s, Fascist Italy invaded Ethiopia and the young patriotic Haddiswent to the war front to defend his country. He joined the freedom fighters under the leadership of Ras Imru Haile Selassie. Vigorously fighting the Italians on many fronts, he was caught by the Italians andsent to Italy where he was imprisoned along with Ras Imru. He stayed there for 7 years and 8 months. Although the fascist troops were defeated and thrown out of Ethiopia in 1941, Haddis did not return to Ethiopia untila year later.

Since his return Haddis was assigned to a number of official posts. After brief stints In the Department of Press and Propaganda and Ministry of Foreign Affairs, he became the Ethiopian consul in Jerusalem (1945-1946)where he stayed for about two years there. There he met and married Kibebe-Tsehay Belay, who had been brought up in Jerusalem.Haddis then served as a delegate to the International Telecommunications Conference in Atlantic City, New Jersey (1946) & as First Secretary in the Ethiopian Mission in Washington, D.C. He attended the Assembly of the United Nations in its formative years as member of Ethiopia's delegation and thenserved as ambassador to the United Nations (1946-1950). His next assignment was at the Ethiopian Ministry of Foreign Affairs (1950-1960), as a director general. Between the 1956-1960, Haddis served as Ethiopia'srepresentative to the UN. Afterwards, in 1961 (1953 E.C.), he was appointed Vice-Minister in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Shortly after, he was transferred to the Ministry of Education where he was a top official.
Although Haddis served at a Ministerial level, it was Emperor Haile-Selassie who was known officially as Minister of Education.

Haddis was back to diplomacy, when he was sent to London as the Ambassador to Britain in 1961. He stayed there until he was recalled toEthiopia in 1966. After his recall, Haddis, who was not in good health, preferred not to reenter government service. Reluctantly, he agreed tobecome minister of planning and development, and later served as Senator (1968-1974).

During the first two years of the Dergue regime, Haddis served as a member of the "advisory body" that had been created to replace thedissolved parliament. However he declined Dergue's offer to becomeprime minister, thus removing himself from any meaningful role in government.

Besides his official responsibilities, he was known for writing great Amharic literary works such as *'YeAbeshana YeWedehuala Gabicha (የ ሐበሻና የ ወደኋላ ጋብቻ)* (1948 E.C.) *"Teret, Teret YeMesere*t (ተረት ተረት፣ የ መሰረት*) (*1948E.C.) etc. Haddis Alemayehu became a prominent author when he wrote his most famous novel ፍቅር እስከ መቃብር (Love Unto Grave) in 1958 E.Cwhich has become a classic Amharic novel and which deals with love across the social class divide of feudal Ethiopia. He also wrote ወንጀለኛ ውዳኛ (The Guilty Judge) in 1974 E.C. and other works.

Haddis Alemayehu was awarded the Haile Selassie Trust Prize Medal, and the Gold Mercury Medal for his contribution to Ethiopian literature. He alsoreceived an honorary Doctorate degree from Addis Ababa University.
On Saturday, Hidar 26, 1996 E.C. (6th December 2003) Haddis Alemayehu passed away in Addis Ababa, and was buried at Holy Trinity Cathedral. He was 94 years old. Haddis Alemayehu left a legacy of a solid work and an immense contribution that spans over six decades.

Ethiopia: many dead in anti-government protest at religiousfestival
News Updates October 2, 2016:

Police in Ethiopia’s Oromiya region fired teargas and warning shots to disperse anti-government protesters at a religious festival, triggering a stampede the opposition party said killed at least 50 people. The government did not give a precise death toll resulting from chaotic sceneson Sunday during the annual festival, where some people chanted slogansagainst the government and waved a rebel flag. But it said “lives were lost” and that several were injured.

Sporadic protests have erupted in Oromiya in the last two years, initially sparked by a land row but increasingly turning more broadly against the government. Since late 2015, scores of protesters have been killed in clashes with police. These developments highlight tensions in the countrywhere the government has delivered stellar economic growth rates but faced criticism from opponents and rights group that it has trampled on political freedoms.

Thousands of people had gathered for the annual Irreecha festival of thanksgiving in the town of Bishoftu, about 25 miles (40km) south of thecapital, Addis Ababa.

Crowds chanted “we need freedom” and “we need justice”, preventing community elders, deemed close to the government, from delivering speeches at the festival. Some protesters waved the red, green and yellow flag of the Oromo Liberation Front, a rebel group branded a terrorist organisation by the government, witnesses said.

When police fired teargas and guns into the air, crowds fled and created astampede, some of them plunging into a ditch, according to witnesses.
The witnesses said they saw people dragging out a dozen or more victims,showing no obvious sign of life. Half a dozen people, also motionless, wereseen being taken by pick-up truck to a hospital, one witness said.

“As a result of the chaos, lives were lost and several of the injured were taken to hospital,” the government communications office said in a statement. “Those responsible will face justice.” Merera Gudina, the chairman of the opposition Oromo Federalist Congress, told Reuters at least 50 people were killed, saying his group had been talking to families of the victims. He said the government tried to use the event to showOromiya was calm. “But residents still protested,” he said.

The government blames rebel groups and dissidents abroad for stirring upthe protests and provoking violence. It dismisses charges that it clamps down on free speech or its opponents.

Protesters had chanted slogans against Oromo People’s Democratic Organisation, one of the four regional parties that make up the EthiopianPeople’s Revolutionary Democratic Front, which has ruled the country forquarter of a century.

In a 2015 parliamentary election, opposition parties failed to win a single seat – down from just one in the previous parliament. Opponents accusedthe government of rigging the vote, a charge government officials dismissed.

Protests in Oromiya province initially flared in 2014 over a development plan for the capital that would have expanded its boundaries, a move seenas threatening farmland. Scores of people have been killed since late in 2015 and this year as protests gathered pace, although the government shelved the boundary plan earlier this year.

Ethiopia | Assessment of government stability amidongoing protests

By RiskAdvisory Security Intelligence, Sub-Saharan Africa October 3, 2016

The Ethiopian government is looking increasingly unstable, and the security environment in Ethiopia is looking more dangerous. Oppositionprotests over the past few months have been larger and more frequent than any in Ethiopia since the end of the civil war. The ethnic nature ofthese protest movements means that a mutiny within the police or security forces is more likely than in recent years.

We also warn that higher impact scenarios, like a change of prime minister, or a coup, are both credible scenarios in the medium to long term. This is because, other than these demonstrations, there are underlying indications that the government's position is increasingly precarious. The ruling Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front's (EPRDF) grip on power appears to have been weakening in recent years,and the country's economy has unresolved structural problems.

Despite restrictions on local and international media operations in Ethiopia, social media users have reported on the protests. Attendance atweekly protests in cities and towns countrywide over the past few monthshas tended to vary, but we have seen images of rallies with what appearsto be several thousand protesters in Addis Ababa, Dessie, Mekele and Gomar. The scale of such public opposition to the government is unprecedented.

Analysis of protests

The motivations behind the recent protests have varied widely between regions of the country and between organising groups. But a common theme has been opposition to the government. In Oromia, protests were originally against a plan to expand Addis Ababa into surrounding areas buthave turned into a broader anti-government movement. In Amhara and Tigray, protests have been against the purported mistreatment of the Amhara ethnic group. We have also seen images on social media of Muslim groups protesting outside mosques in the past month, reportedly against government interference in religious affairs.

The government has blamed the protests on 'people with terror links' andoverseas activists who they claim are trying to destabilise the country.

This approach has in some cases, exacerbated the risk of protests. Earlierthis year, government heavy-handedness in response to protests in Oromia prompted other groups to join the demonstrations. So far, the various recent protest movements appear to have remained organisationally distinct. But they do seem to have become less single- issue oriented and converged on a more broadly anti-government stance.

Protest outlook

Although it is unclear how these protests will play out in Ethiopia, we thinkthat there are several credible scenarios in the coming months that point to increasing risks in the country. If the protests persist at their current size and frequency, the EPRDF may attempt to replace the current prime minister, Hailemariam

Desalegn. Such a move would probably be an attempt by the ruling party to appease protesters, but would be likely to result in little tangible political change.

We also think it is credible that the security forces might mutiny, or the army may attempt a coup. This is particularly likely if the current protestsescalate into a more widespread and sustained anti-government movement – a development similar to the popular protests and subsequent coup in Burkina Faso last year. An early warning sign of this would be the government ordering local military units to violentlysuppress demonstrations related to ethnic grievances.

The nine regional states of Ethiopia are in part divided along ethnic lines, and the government claims that the security forces in each region are predominantly made up of members of that ethnic group. Given that the protests in Amhara, Oromia and Tigray appear to be at least partly motivated by perceived ethnic-biased issues, a mutiny, in which the policeor soldiers refuse to follow orders to use heavy handed tactics against protesters of the same ethnic group, is a credible scenario in our view.

Despite this risk, we anticipate that the Ethiopian government will use more forceful tactics to suppress the protests, particularly if they continueto spread, grow and intensify. The use of heavy handed tactics by the security forces is already commonplace. Human Rights Watch claims that more than 400 people have been killed at demonstrations by the security forces since late 2015. This response suggests that there is a high level ofconcern in government about the effect the protests will have on its stability.

We have seen several indications that the EPRDF has been losing public support in recent years, especially since Hailemariam became prime minister in 2012. He is widely seen as less charismatic than his predecessor, and anecdotal reports suggest that he is generally perceivedby the population as having failed to move to a more democratic and inclusive style of government.

One of Hailemariam's central claims to legitimacy is his government's handling of the economy. Over the past decade, the Ethiopian economy has grown by an average of 11.7% per year, according to the World Bank.But the country's GDP per capita is still amongst the lowest in the world, and it appears that the high growth rate is not benefiting the growing youth population.

None of this points to an improving outlook. The US government estimates that 71% of the population is younger than 30. But Ethiopian labour ministry statistics from 2015 show that 25% of under 30s in Ethiopia are either under- or unemployed. Such high rates of joblessnesssignificantly increase the risk that protests movements will become morefrequent and intense in the coming months.

"The army blocked all the exits and started shooting at the crowd"

By Assif H. October 4, 2016

When our Observer Assif travelled to the town of Bishoftu, Ethiopia, to take part in the Ireecha festival held yearly by the Oromo ethnic group, hedidn't expect gunfire and blind panic. However, when Ethiopian security forces opened fire on the celebrating crowds, he found himself swept up ina deadly stampede that resulted in approximately 50 people losing their lives. This latest tragedy has inflamed tensions in the Oromo region, where a rebellion against the government has been ongoing for the past year.

It's hard to know how many people actually died on Sunday, October 2 inBishoftu, a town located in the Oromia region south of the Ethiopian capital of Addis Ababa. The government reported that 52 people died, while the opposition say the number is closer to 100.

Tens of thousands of people had gathered on the shores of Lake Harsadito attend the Ireecha ceremony, which is a traditional Oromo festival marking the end to the rainy season. The Oromos represent the largest ethnic group in Ethiopia.

But the festivities were overshadowed by tensions between the Oromo people and the central government. Since November 2015, the region hasseen frequent protests and subsequent government crackdowns. There have been large numbers of arbitrary arrests. At the root of the crisis is the government's decision to implement an urban development plan that would encroach upon land belonging to the Oromo community.

Our Observer attended the festival. He told FRANCE 24 that the situationdescended into violence when several participants crossed their arms in an X over their heads, a sign of Oromo solidarity. The gesture gained international recognition after Ethiopian athlete Feyisa Lilesa made the sign in protest as he crossed the finish line of the marathon at this year'sOlympics in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. "The army blocked all the exits and started shooting at the crowd"

Assif H. is our Observer's pseudonym. France 24 has decided not to usehis real name for his protection.

I went to Bishoftu to celebrate Ireecha, which I've been doing for the pastten years. But what I saw yesterday was unusual. Starting early in the morning, helicopters were circling overhead, keeping an eye on the crowd.The army had several armoured vehicles stationed around town. The atmosphere was heavy and oppressive.

The festivities had already begun when the crowd started protesting. Theywere unhappy with the fact that there were several Oromo officials who are affiliated with the government onstage. I think people felt as if they were using the festival as an excuse to spread pro-government propaganda. The crowd began to shout "Liberty, liberty and end to the TPLF regime!" [Editor's note: The Tigrayan People's Liberation Front is a political party based in Tigray, Ethiopia. It is mostly made up of Tigrayans,a minority ethnolinguistic group that makes up about 6% of the population of Ethiopia. The TPLF is the main partner of the Ethiopian People's Democratic Front, the ruling coalition in Ethiopia].

MPE calls on EU to act on government crimes in Ethiopia

By Ethiomedia October 5, 2016

WASHINGTON, DC - Ana Gomes, the Honorable Member of European Parliament and a time-tested friend of the Ethiopian people, called on theEuropean Union to see to the crimes in Ethiopia where government security forces On October 2 in Bishoftu town, 40 km southeast of Addis,caused the death of 678 people. Many remained unaccounted for after they fell into deep ravines and a nearby lake.

Over 2 million Oromo people were celebrating Irreecha, a Thanksgiving religious day, when security forces used live ammunition and tear gas to breakup peaceful protests by youths. In the ensuing stampede, many fellto their deaths in deep ravines and a lake. Independent sources say the number of deaths would exceed 1000 because many were believed deadin the sea, and little or no effort has been made to retrieve bodies from the sea for lack of equipment or an organized rescue mission.

The Bishoftu Massacre has now led to the flare-up of protests in severaltowns in Oromia region, including those skirting the Ethiopian capital.

Tributes for veteran journalist Mulugeta Lule

By Arafaynie Fantahun Monday, October 5th, 2016

Veteran journalist Mulugeta Lule died at the weekend at the age of 75.

Mulugeta Lule was a contributor for the Ethiopian Herlad, an editor of Yezaretu Ethiopia and Serto Ader newspapers, acting editor of Menen magazine and columnist for the Yekatit magazine, and was considered oneof the country's top political writers.Finishing high school at Haile Mariam Mamo in Debre Berhan, Mulugeta joined the press in the 1960's. He quickly charmed his way into literary society, befriending well established writers such as Baalu Girma, Solomon Deressa, Gedamu Abraha, and others. Mulugeta's review of Baalu's "Ke Admas Bashager" and Solomon Deressa's Ledgnet were interesting and there had been some heated reactions to the reviews.

In the 1980s Mulugeta put his writing talents to use as part of the Inter- governmental Consultative Commission established to strengthen relationsbetween Ethiopia, Somalia, Sudan, Kenya and Egypt. The work brought him into contact with Mengestu Hailemariam and lots of hearsays about his proximity with the country's strongman.

Before the end of the Derg regime, Mulugeta was head of the Ethiopian Press Department, in charge of the major government newspapers, the Ethiopian Herald, Addis Zemen and Yezaretu Ethiopia. The magazine, Tobia that he established following the mass dismissal of senior journalistsin 1992 from the government media, gained popularity and attracted wider readership. Many of his best essays appeared in this magazine and later in Lisane Hizib, writing under the pseudonym Tsegaye Gebre-Medhinand Sinshaw Tegne. His criticism of the new regime and his association with the former order did not endear him to officials. He was forced to exile in the US where he lived for the past twenty years.

Kebede Anisa, a former colleague and a senior journalist told Ethiopia Observer that his passing is a huge loss to the Ethiopian journalism. “Mulugeta was one of a generation of journalists that has left a huge impact. He didn’t even have a college diploma but he was well-read andsophisticated, able to understand the ways of the world with ease.

“As a journalist, he wrote exceptionally well, and his great talent was hissuperb news judgment. I remember particularly his love of words.”

Teferra Shawul Kidane-Kal, a former journalist and diplomat described Mulugeta as someone who grew up as an avid reader. “Mulugeta could recite word for word the small Concise Oxford Dictionary. He possessed agigantic memory. His writings were also well researched and often full ofwit.”

Elias Wondimu of Tsehai Publshers described the late journalist as one of the leading figures of the free press movement in the early 1990’s Ethiopia. “For those of us who were starting at the time, he was a towering figure. His courage and mighty pen gave us hope to stand tall and walk on the road paved by him and other seasoned journalists of his generation. His strength and perseverance in a difficult condition, gave usthe will to fight and champion the cause of freedom-of-expression wherever we find ourselves,” he wrote.

Jawar Mohammed, executive director at Oromia Media Network, wrote onhis Facebook page that he had an opportunity talk to him in multiple occasion when he lived in DC. “He was an attentive listener and a well versed conversant. My condolence to his family and friends.”

Dinberu Melakehiowt, an immigration interpreter based in Silver Spring, Mary Land, said “I have known Mulugeta Lule through his work while he was in Ethiopia and after he came to the U.S. sometime in 1996, I had thepleasure of meeting him in person. Ever since then, we meet in many places where the issue of Ethiopia discussed.

Mulugeta was an advocate of freedom of expression and worked very closely with various organizations in bring the issues of journalism in Ethiopia. He advocated for the releases of all detained journalists in Ethiopia and he was successful in getting nominated some of Ethiopian Journalists for various awards. He worked very closely with Committee to Protect Journalists (CPJ) and exposed grave situation in Ethiopia. I personally know that he himself escaped from various attempt on his life while he was working as a journalist and editor in Ethiopia. After he came to the U.S. he appeared at various television and radio shows and shared his experiences with members of the Ethiopian community in the diaspora.After launching of Ethiopian Satellite Television, Mr. Mulugeta Lule appeared in many shows and gave his analysis on many national and international issues.

In addition, I know that he appeared at various immigration court hearings and provided his expert witness testimonies in support of manyEthiopian immigrants,”

BBC: US woman dies stoned by protesters in van attack

October 5, 2016 from the section Africa

A US citizen has been killed in Ethiopia amid large anti-governmentprotests.

A van travelling on Addis Ababa's outskirts was hit by stones "thrown by unknown individuals", the US embassy in the capital said. A woman passenger was struck by a stone and died later from her injuries. A waveof protests have killed hundreds of people in Ethiopia since November 2015, but it is unclear if the American's death is connected to them.

The Associated Press news agency reported the woman was an "agricultural expert" working in the troubled Oromia region. It quoted alocal official as saying the group had not asked for police protection.

The embassy did not provide additional details about the incident, but the region has been hit by violent protests over the rights of the Oromo ethnicgroup. The BBC's correspondent in Ethiopia, Emmanuel Igunza, said manyroads were blocked after protests on Tuesday night, and there is a heavy police presence on the streets. Internet services in Ethiopia were also shutdown temporarily earlier on Wednesday, but have now been partially restored.

Ethiopian protesters ramp up attacks on foreign Companies

Unrest threatens stability of one of Africa’s leading economies October 6, 2016:
Ethiopian anti-government protesters are escalating attacks on foreign investors as anger grows over the regime’s crackdown on demonstrations,in which hundreds of people have been killed.

Activists torched a Turkish textile factory and attacked a mine owned by Aliko Dangote, Africa’s richest man, damaging trucks and machinery on Tuesday, days after more than 50 people were killed when police fired tear gas and rubber bullets to disperse protests at a religious festival. TheUS embassy in Addis Ababa said an American woman died on Tuesday when her vehicle was struck by rocks thrown by Ethiopians on the outskirts of the capital.

The violence comes after a wave of protests this year that were originally triggered over a land dispute in the Oromia region of central and southernEthiopia. They have since escalated into broader demonstrations against the autocratic government and spread to other regions, threatening the stability of one of Africa's best-performing economies.

Addis Ababa has responded with force — activists accuse security forces offiring live ammunition on unarmed demonstrators and say hundreds have been killed in the protests. Washington has called the government's approach to the unrest "self-defeating," while the EU on Wednesday calledfor the authorities to address the "wider aspects of the grievances".

Activists and analysts say the attacks on foreign companies are becomingincreasingly co-ordinated. More than two dozen foreign companies, including flower farms and other agribusinesses have suffered millions of dollars in damage in recent weeks, according to Verisk Maplecroft, a UK- based consultancy.

Juan Carlos Vallejo, co-owner of Esmeralda Farms, pulled out of the country after his business was attacked several weeks ago. "Right now,everyone is really scared," he said. "We never expected something like this to happen. I don't think anyone is going to want to invest here any more."

Ethiopia has been one of Africa's star performers, recording 10 per cent annual growth and attracting tens of billions of dollars in foreign investment over the past decade thanks to a carefully planned, state-led development and industrialisation policies.

But it is also a tightly controlled society, with the Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front — which has governed with an iron gripsince 1991 — and its allies controlling all the seats in parliament.

Dissent is swiftly repressed and the political opposition was severely weakened by a government crackdown — during which scores of peoplewere also killed — after disputed 2005 elections. "We have made clear that Ethiopia's prosperity depends on the ability of its government to maintain a stable and predictable investment climate and to expand political space," a western diplomat said.

The current protests began in Oromia region last November over plans toexpand Addis Ababa into Oromo lands. The initiative was shelved but thegovernment's aggressive response to the protests saw them spread to northern areas, which are dominated by the Amhara ethnic group.

Both the Amhara and Oromo are frustrated by the political dominance ofthe Tigray minority, which makes up 6 per cent of the 100m population,analysts say. The Oromo and Amhara comprise some two-thirds of Ethiopians. Awol Allo, an Ethiopian law lecturer at Keele University, said foreign investors were being targeted because "they are seen as the source of legitimacy for the government". "The government has to attractforeign investment to keep the economy growing and has to provide land and services cheaply," he said. "People are taking out their anger on investments by foreigners to undermine the government."

The government has sought to play down the protests, blaming overseas agitators and criminal elements. Analysts say the Tigray-dominated regime has maintained its grip in part by keeping the larger ethnic groupsdivided. But they add that now the Oromo and Amhara have united in their opposition to the government, it will be hard for the authorities to appease them without making significant concessions.

However, Rashid Abdi, an analyst at the International Crisis Group, saidsome ministers, and the Tigray-controlled military, are loath to do this. "The protests have now reached a serious level, a different scale," he said. "We should not exaggerate and say the government is going to keel over tomorrow, but it portends future trouble unless they get a grip.What's worrying is that so far they haven't."

Prominent opposition figure Hailu Shawel dies at age 80
By Ethiomedia October 7, 2016

SEATTLE - Engineer Hailu Shawel, one of the most prominent opposition figures whose party nearly toppled the incumbent government in a 2005 election, died October 6 while receiving treament at a hospital in Bangkok,Thailand. He was 80.

After serving in various government offices during the Derg military regime, Engineer Hailu resorted to politics following to coming to power ofTPLF, an organization largely seen detrimental to the survival of Ethiopia as one country. Hailu was a founding member of the All Ethiopia Unity Party (AEUP) and the Coalition for Unity and Democracy (CUD) or popularly known among the people as "Kinijit."

Following sweeping victories at the ill-fated 2005 election, Engineer Hailu and his colleagues in the CUD were thrown into prison under the orders ofthe late tyrant, Meles Zenawi, who overturned election results by means of violence accompanied by a state of emergency.

In prison, Hailu suffered horrowing days and nights in a solitary confinement before he was released after two years of incarceration. Engineer Hailu said his imprisonment under appalling conditions was the reason for his poor health, for which he spent the last two years nursing his illness. Hailu was also a successful businessman in the country. But hisill health, compounded by being diabetic, put him out of his blossoming business specially the last few years of his life.
The body of Engineer Hailu will arrive in Addis Friday October 7, reportedVOA Amharic Service on Thursday, without giving details for funeral.
Engineer Hailu is survived by his six children.

A New Vision for A New Ethiopia

By Kebour Ghenna October 6, 2016

“Society in every state is a blessing, but government even in its best stateis but a necessary evil; in its worst state an intolerable one”. Thomas Paine

Last week someone asked me what would I say are the three immediate problems facing Ethiopia today, and how would I want them to be addressed. The following is my candid response. But first some thought about Ethiopia today. Most of you will have seen the sickening video footage of people running away from bullets and jumping into deadly ditches at the Ireecha festivities in Bishoftu, Oromya. Blame for all of thisrests squarely on the Hailemariam administration, which is no longer prepared to tolerate even the truncated display of peaceful protest. It hasdeliberately (or not) created the conditions for a civil war to erupt.
Everywhere in Oromiya today, there is mass social and political discontentdirected against the ruling party. The fight against the regime now will bedifficult to contain, and the resulting crisis, for better or for worse, will affect many aspects of our lives including the unity of thecountry.

It’s time for Oromos, Afars, Amharas, Tigrays, Somalis, Welaytas and therest of us, to reach consensus on the type of society we want to live in.

Indeed, if we fancy modernizing our country by reforming its institutions and replace the detrimental with the constructive we need to start this debate immediately. Well-informed people know that nations do break uplike empires. Sometimes the process is inevitable, sometimes precipitatedby folly. EPRDF should not commit an act of folly by attempting to direct the state on its own term i.e. by force. That would not be in anybody's interest. Instead it should conduct considerable discussion and consultation with opposition leaders and genuine community leaders to hold the country together by strengthening the democratic influence and rights of the people. There is no other alternative.

Now, here are my eight [not three] comments [with no particular order ofpriority] to avoid the unwanted dismemberment of Ethiopia and move thecountry forward. None of these arguments are new. They have been discussed in great detail in the past twenty years.

1. Understanding of the problem: The current problem of Ethiopia, argue EPRDF politicians, is lack of good governance; and the solution, they say,is a mix of new appointments to top positions, some recruited from withinthe party, others coming from outside. Even on this deceptively simple issue, agreement has apparently not come easy.

But wait…What about the other serious problem.
From where we stand, the most serious problem is not personnel, rather the unwillingness of EPRDF leaders to accept that citizens are truly tired ofa 'democracy' dominated by TPLF as the leader of the EPRDF. Now that memories of the horrors of the Derg period are fading, people demand more political rights and participation. Change in personnel isn't going to cut it. At best, it may give us people who think things are under control…ministers who believe the present system works…and that it will deliver transformation….but real change? Nope.

The problem is that people have lost confidence in the system: a system that divide rather than unite, a system that dominate rather than liberate.Too bad the folks at EPRDF can't see this. The question to answer is what kind of nation are we building? Are we in favor of one nation, albeit with distinct identities (like Switzerland) or rather separate multiple independent nations dominated by TPLF? This issue may seem for many settled and done and printed in black and white in the constitution, but the question of how to balance the promotion of national cultures with thecreation of multinational statehood was never fully resolved in Ethiopia, oranywhere in the world for that matter.

The increasing rebellion, injuries and casualties that we all witnessed and continue to witness are the clearest early indicators of this failure. The time to reflect and engage citizens based on consultation and co-operationabout holding the state of Ethiopia together is now. Fortunately despite the crisis there is still TODAY enough support within the broader public to wish to retain and nurture the unity of the state of Ethiopia. I underline TODAY, because history tells us that on such a fundamental issue opinion can change decisively over night.

2. Commit to revising the constitution: The Constitution of "We, the nations, nationalities and the Peoples of Ethiopia…" (which is historicallyand ideologically rooted in TPLF cultures) is full of ambiguities, so outmoded, so dangerously ethno-nationalist that it has already created and solidified to a varying degree, distinct states, some more homogeneous (Tigray, Somali Region, Afar) than others, together with local elites that increasingly give allegiance to their ethnic state rather than the state of 'Ethiopia'.

Perhaps it's time for a new political order to redefine a new Ethiopia. An Ethiopia that is negotiated among all parties of the federal state (bottomup), not on terms laid out by TPLF, but rather on terms agreed by all administratively recognized ethnic groups with equal representation regardless of size or population. It's important for TPLF (assuming it's committed to a multi state united Ethiopia) to immediately pledge to therevision of the constitution and facilitate the process to calling a constitutional convention. On this matter, as they say: Time is of the essence.

3. Order the military and security forces back to their barracks: Today state repression should be unthinkable. Attempting to solve what is a political problem with force and violence will not bring a long term solution. By the way, even if the EPRDF come to re-establish a new administration say, in Oromiya and Amhara, will it really be obeyed: eachvillage will be a nest of resistance, each former associate an enemy.

4. Rule of Law: A good nation must abide by the Rule of Law. We need a Justice Ministry that understands the importance of rule of law and will be committed to it. There is too much injustice and disappointment in this country. Memoirs will show this Government to be the most corrupt in the history of Ethiopia. That's why we must demand an honest and courageous Attorney General – one who would rather resign than do something anti-constitutional or sell out our nation. The first thing that needs to be done is release all political prisoners, establish an independentpanel to investigate "thoroughly" the allegations of corruption in government and 'private sector'. All those matters that demand audit and investigation should be audited and investigated. Corruption is the "first cousin" to prejudice. It limits high performance in management and fiscal excellence.

5. Discourage ethnic based separatist parties: How can one reconcile the fact that TPLF, which is a political movement as well as an ideology of values, concepts and ideas that advocates independence for Tigray region,can at the same time root for national unity. The same can be said of the ‘puppet’ parties organized along the same logic. Clarity is in order on this issue. The fact is Ethiopia has been good for Tigray – for its economy, its openness, its culture, its visibility and its national clout; and if TPLF has not gone the ‘independence’ way it is not out of any misty-eyed Ethiopian patriotism, but because it knows that its bread is buttered in Addis Ababa.

6. Announce new elections and reform: The recent incidents in Oromiya and Amhara regions have left Ethiopia a more divided society than ever before. The government should take responsibility for its failure to preempt the slow burning bad governance issues causing growing discontent and anger, and leading the country to a possible violent breakup. All this because of lack of space for dissent. Indeed the total absence of any opposition in parliament made proper democratic functioning impossible in the country. New legislation could not be properly tested. Committees could not fully examine their issues. Political energy got channeled away from where it could do most good. Most critically, this situation undermined public confidence in government institutions and thereby discouraged public willingness to engage fully andconstructively in democratic processes. So political dialogue is definitely very important. Democracies need dialogue to resolve issues, and Ethiopiais no exception. The EPRDF should announce an independent commission to study and recommend reforms that will make the government more representative, with some form of proportional voting system that is fairand competitive.

7. Free the Media: Ethiopia’s constitution affords its citizens freedom of speech and press, but the opacity of media regulations allows authoritiesto crack down on news stories by claiming that they expose state secretsand endanger the country. The definition of state secrets in Ethiopia remains vague, fostering censorship (including self censorship) of any information that authorities deem harmful to their political or economic interests. The media has to be free so that government officials can be easily exposed if they abuse or misuse the power they have. Corrective action should be immediate.

8. Issue a new ID card without ethnic identification: Here is another example reinforcing division amongst people supposedly of one nation. Animmediate Must Change policy is in order.

How can this ‘movie’ possibly have a happy ending? Let me just say this,each of us has a choice. We can actively participate in the great initiativeto keep our country united in the interest of all the people in Ethiopia; ordo nothing, and see us loose our country. As Gandhi noted: ‘The future depends on what we do in the present.’ Now, more than ever, we must uphold that responsibility. What will you do?

Hailu Shawul (also spelled Shawel; Shawil) (in Ge’ez: ሃይሉ ሻዉል ;born 1936): According to Wikipedia: is an Ethiopian engineer and the chairman of the Coalition for Unity and Democracy (CUD). He was born in Northern Shewa. Hailu Shawul was the chairman of Kinijit and succeeded Professor Asrat Woldeyes as the head of the All-Amhara People's Organization (AAPO). However, some sources dispute his presidency and show that the AAPO's split into two factions – the All Ethiopian Unity Party (AEUP) and the United Ethiopian Democratic Party-Medhin – was due to Hailu Shawel not gaining the presidency and thus creating his own party. Many believe that the division was tactically mediated by the EPRDF government interference. He contributed to the transformation of the AAPO into the multi-ethnic AEUP, which was one ofseveral that united October 2004 in the CUD, with the goal of fielding candidates in the May 15, 2005 general elections.

OROMO PROTESTS

Protesters damage Turkish-owned factory near Ethiopia's capital

By PressTV October 6, 2016

Crowds of protesters have attacked and partially destroyed an Ethiopianfactory run by a Turkish textile firm as a wave of anti-government sentiments rages on in Oromiya region near the capital, Addis Ababa.

General Manager Fatih Mehmet Yangin said on Wednesday that the assault wrecked about a third of the plant in the town of Sebeta, locatedabout 35 kilometers southwest of Addis Ababa.

"A large crowd attacked the factory," burning the weaving section and three vehicles, said Yangin. The plant, which is run by Turkish textile firm,Saygin Dima, and employs about 1,000 people, opened in 2012 and exports yarn and fabric, one of the sectors the Ethiopian government is seeking to develop.

In recent weeks, several foreign-owned flower farms and factories have been burnt to the ground or partially damaged. In a separate development, the US embassy in the Horn of Africa country said an American woman was killed on Tuesday when stones were hurled at her vehicle on the outskirts of Addis Ababa. At least 55 people were reportedlykilled after clashes between protesters and Ethiopian police turned into a stampede in the town of Bishoftu in Oromiya on October 2.

According to witnesses, the participants chanted anti-government slogans,and when police intervened, the crowd panicked and fled, creating a stampede, with many of the protesters falling into a nearby deep ditch amid the chaos.

The region has been the scene of sporadic protests over the past few years. The demonstrations were sparked by a government plan to expandthe municipal boundaries of the capital city into Oromiya, a move that could result in farmers from the Oromo ethnic group being displaced and losing their land and property.

The Ethiopian government was forced to withhold the expansion project inJanuary but sporadic protests have continued in the region. A report by Human Rights Watch in June said security forces had repeatedly used lethal force, including by firing live ammunition, to break up many of the 500 reported protests that have occurred since November last year.

Oromiya, with at least 27 million people, is the most populous of the EastAfrican country's federal states, surrounding Addis Ababa, on all sides.
Tensions have been compounded by the country's worst drought in 50years, which was caused by subnormal rainfalls.

FBI should investigate the death of Sharon Gray inEthiopia

October 7, 2016

The death of American woman Sharon Gray in Ethiopia should investigateby the FBI. It's highly unlikely Gray was killed by Ethiopian protesters, it could be one of the Ethiopian mafia regime covert actions to secure the United States political support on the ongoing bloody protest crackdown.

As the WikiLeaks diplomatic cables exposed, the Ethiopian regime used tobomb Ethiopian cities to extend its so called "war on terror ally" status with the west.

It's Ethiopians culture to respect any foreigner/gusts to their country. Since the protest began a year ago thousands of peaceful protesters weremurdered by the regime forces, protesters never touched or attempt to harm foreign journalists, diplomats or tourists.

And finally western media should stop saying that "Sharon Gray killed by protesters". How in the hell you believe words of the same regime became1st in the world by its anti-free press practices while keep producing its own lies and fabricated news?

UN Calls for Independent Investigation into Ethiopia Violence

AFP September 7, 2016

The UN on Friday called for an independent investigation into deadlyweekend violence in Ethiopia, where more than 50 people died in a stampede triggered when police clashed with protesters.
“There is clearly a need for an independent investigation into what exactlytranspired last Sunday,” said Rupert Colville, a spokesman for the United Nations human rights agency.

Such a probe was needed “to ensure accountability for this and severalother incidents since last November involving protests that have endedviolently,” he told reporters in Geneva.

His comments came after a religious festival in the restive Oromia region,to the south of Addis Ababa, ended in tragedy when police fired tear-gas on anti-government protesters, sparking panic in the massive crowd and triggering a stampede.

Protests have subsequently broken out in several parts of the Oromiaregion and elsewhere, some targeting foreign companies which are regarded as supporting and being backed by the central government.

Medical sources and authorities gave differing death tolls of between 52and 58, however the opposition believes it is much higher.

“We call on the protestors to exercise restraint and to renounce the use ofviolence,” Colville said, stressing also that “security forces must conduct themselves in line with international human rights laws and standards.”

He criticised authorities for reacting to the unrest by cutting access to themobile internet network in parts of the country, including in the capital Addis Ababa.

Instead, he said, the government should “take concrete measures to address the increasing tensions, in particular by allowing independent observers to access the Oromia and Amhara regions to speak to all sidesand assess the facts.”

Ethiopia is facing its biggest anti-government unrest in a decade, from themajority Oromo and Amhara ethnic groups which feel marginalized by a minority-led government.

International rights groups estimate at least 500 demonstrators have beenkilled in a bloody crackdown on protests over the past 10 months. Source:AFP

Assessing Engineer Hailu Shawel and his legacy

By Tesfaye Mengestu October 8, 2016

The inevitable sad chapter of engineer HAILU Shawl's passing away thatwas announced October 6, I am sure might have hit hard on many who knew him closely. With his death comes an end of a chapter in a life of aman who played many pivotal political roles, in the days and years of politics where justice meant only what TPLF said and dictated.

His death that reverberated through out the land, especially in the Ethiopian Amhara regions, might have the same impact among diasporaEthiopians, who knew and worked with him.

General background;

Engineer HAILU was not your everyday simple politician. He was a man who knew how to size his opponents well and accordingly, prepared his fights for the duel. He might not have been a warrior who won all his battles on the political stages he fought, but yet, none of his enemies whosat with him to negotiate on the table would dare say he was a simple man to defeat.

He was a savvy politician, who has the talent, the know how and the shrewdness that politics required as qualification. As s result, though itmay not be from their hearts, none in the room he entered had the audacity to deny him the respect of a state's man.

It is said that on the days Melees will have political discourse with theoppositions in which All Amhara organization is represented by HAILUShawul, he will be at his most civil behavior with full and complete political equality exhibited.

Whatever that diminutive politician called Melees said to others, he neverdared to say it to HAILU. On the contrary, if it is EDEP or any other, if hedoesn't feel the conversation was going in his favor , he will cut them to pieces right there and then leave the room telling his guards to show them the door.

His general contributions:
No one will doubt including the Ethiopian political history into which he willbe well written, about his immense contributions and the senses of true political gamesmanship he played for a country and people he loved.

His efforts to bring democratic govornance to a country and people devoidof their rights thanks to TPLF, never waned until his death.

When over 83,000 Amhara people were uprooted from the Southern People's and Nationalities where the Woyanne dog and butcher Tefera Shenkute, was the sole perpetrator of the ethnic cleansing policy, it was HAILU Shawul and the Amhara party that gave them shelter and food untilthey were given a one way bus tickets by Woyanne and told to ugo and find their roots and settle in Amhara states, whom many had no idea where it was and what it is.

Most of all, and this is very important to him, and the Amhara people, hishard fought battles for the rights of the Amhara people throughout his living and breathing years, should never be forgotten.

Without Hailu Shawul at the helm of the party and shrewd political gameshe only knew how to play with Woyanne, the carnage of the Amhara people to continue after the gallant death of its leader professor Asrat Woldeyes, by TPLF was a certainty.

His roles as Kinjit leader:
It was in his era and leadership that for the first time, the Ethiopian political opposition parties made to realize that defeating the evil TPLF , can only be achieved through the formation of one United opposition group. Their failure not listen and do what was right he told them, will beconsidered as going against the very interests of the people they championed to serve. That cemented the argument (the words are mine but not the statements).

Unity accomplished, largely at his party's effort and his leadership withgood hand twisting, Hailu was elected with unanimous vote to be chairand nominee of the newly formed KINIJT, pausing for the first time a serious threat to TPLF power. Kinjit won the national election of 2005.

However, this is besides what TPLF did shortly after it received the badnews of its humiliating defeat.

The Contributions of the Diaspora

Looking at the efforts we mounted in the diaspora during those critical election days in writing coverages, raising funds, holding teleconferences sometimes every other day, I think and believe wholeheartedly, we did what humanely was possible as people far detached from their homelands by distances. We also did more than answering the call of our national andparty duties as you will read later.

Woyanne's evil games and the jailing of Konjit leadership

Woyanne, in its fear and evil political intent, where it failed to win at the polls, took different route to retaliate against Kinijit's leadership. To do it itdidn't only steal and take away what Kinijit as a political organization won,but it also jailed the entire leadership save for few non harmful ones, accusing them of subversive activities that is considered treason against the state, which carried a sentence that is punishable by death. This shocking news demanded our unity and effort to mount a challenge!

The evil Woyanne, not only jailed our leaders, but also denied them proper medical services. As a result, many including Engineer HAILU'shealth fell under serious threat.

Thanks for the true Ethiopiwinet efforts of few people in Konjit's leadershipand our affiliated chapters across the diaspora, we mounted a 24 hour campaign worldwide to get them released. It wasn't an easy job but we did as a troop that must defend its last fortress.

We wrote letters, passed petitions and held candle light vigils across theworld at every government institutions across the diaspora where KinijitSupporters or just any Ethiopian not affiliated with Woyanne lived.

To our advantages, we had huge data base of Ethiopians and therefore,though doing it was not a breath and required good effort, we did it anyway, because our people were kind, loved their country and people, but most of all, understood the sacrifices our leaders were paying for usand the country. It was an effort worth everything!

By doing what we did, we honored their accomplishments and sacrifices. Because of our untiring efforts and the help from international leaders andgovernments like the United States. TPLF finally but against its will agreedto release them. Their time of incarceration was two years,

The slow disintegration of Kinijit

As Kinjit's active supporter and North American PR for one year when the ineffective Dr Taye Woldesemayat was our chairman, I know how much we worked the phones and campaigned 24 hours to keep our organizationin place and undivided.

However, as time went by and the leadership under Hailu Shawul becameincreasingly unresponsive to much needed strategic changes of direction and leadership, things started taking toll on the party's very survival and its future.

As if Engineer HAILU Shawul's very hostility against some of its own closesupporters wasn't enough, a powerful group of people from with in mounted serious challenges against his leadership calling dictatorial and unwilling to change for fear of losing his position. Hence, many who played key active roles like Dr Brehanu Nega and Birtukan Medeksa and others pulled out. Still, Engineer HAILU never admitted for once there is aproblem with in the party. He was so powerful and politically savvy, that he knew how to work the political landscapes such that the enemy will have no scant chance of slipping through the fence and reach his power gate.

Much as the All Amhara party and later Konjit as organization may owe him a lot in contributions, I will always remain a believer that had he moved aside much earlier, like soon after they all came out of prison, hislegacy would have been much appreciated than otherwise

His defective management of Kinijit

Though there were certain controversies on how he managed Kinijit in itsfinal days, a point I have to raise because I was one that was seriously disappointed at how he handled them, that is they weren't done in spiritsof good intentions and true political camaraderie, i can take some but notmuch less grades from his many contributions.

Yes, what he did in many respects were utterly bad and never in the interests of our political organization and unity. Yet none of us dared to tell him in his face that he was a bit of a rogue politician . HAILU was treated by our leadership as a king that he wwwas not. Meeting in privatewith HAILU Shawul was thought by many of the leadership as meeting with king Haileselassie. This gave HAILU that autocorrect feeling he so cherished and identified with here in democratic America!

He used and abused many who served him well like those who took turnto drive him around wherever he wanted to go or cocked and served himhot launches aat his hotel.

May he Rest In Peace and may God Almighty give his family the comfortsthey need at his loss The writer can be reached at tmglobal@aol.com

Growing Unrest In Ethiopia
Destroys a dozen foreign-[and ruling-party]-owned property

By Aaron Maasho, Reuters October 8, 2016

Editor's Note - One glaring fact is excluded from the following Reuters report: The October 2 Bishoftu Massacre in which 678 lives were lost to the shots and teargas firedby TPLF security forces.

ADDIS ABABA, Oct 7 (Reuters) - Protesters in Ethiopia damaged almost adozen mostly foreign-owned factories and flower farms and destroyed scores of vehicles this week, adding economic casualties to a rising deathtoll in a wave of unrest over land grabs and rights.

The violence has cast a shadow over a nation where a state-led industrial drive has created one of Africa's fastest growing economies, but where thegovernment has also faced rising international criticism and popular opposition to its authoritarian approach to development.

The flare-up followed the death of at least 55 people in a stampede onSunday when police fired tear gas and shot into the air to disperse demonstrators in the Oromiya region near the capital.
It raises to more than 450 the number of people rights groups and opponents say have been killed in unrest since 2015. A U.S. researcher was killed on Tuesday when her car was attacked by stone-throwers near Addis Ababa.

The government says the toll cited by critics is inflated.

Fana Broadcasting, which is seen as close to the state, reported on its website that 11 companies ranging from textile firms to a plastics makerto flower farms had been damaged or destroyed, while more than 60 vehicles had been torched.

Dutch firm FV SeleQt said its 300-hectare vegetable farm and warehousehad been plundered. Another Dutch firm, Africa Juice, said its factory hadbeen partially destroyed.

The manager of one of the Turkish companies, textile firm Saygin Dima,told Reuters this week at least a third of his factory was burned down.

Fana's website showed images of burned-out trucks on the road side, blaming the damage on "perpetrators of violence", echoing the line taken by the government, which accuses local rebel groups and dissidents basedabroad for stoking the unrest.

It said the firms damaged had created 40,000 jobs in a country of 99 million people that has long been blighted by famine but which has beenrapidly transforming its fortunes, delivering growth rates that hit 10 percent in fiscal 2015/16.

STRUGGLING FOR WORK

People from Oromiya, a region at the heart of the state's industrialisationefforts, accuse the state of seizing their land and offering tiny compensation, before selling it on to companies, often foreign investors, at inflated prices.

They also say they struggle to find work, even when a new factory is sitedon property they or their families once owned.

"I went to apply for a job at a steel factory that was built on my family's land but I was turned away when they discovered I was the son of the previous land owner," said Mulugeta, who asked for only his first name tobe used to avoid any state reprisals.

"Most factories give priority to employees from other regions for fear localpeople would one day stage strikes," he said, speaking by telephone fromOromiya where he now drives a truck for another company.

In Ethiopia, once ruled by Marxists whose draconian policies drove the nation into a devastating 1984 famine, all land still belongs to the state and owners are only deemed leaseholders, even if they have been livingor farming there for generations.

For the state, it means a swift and legally uncomplicated route to ejectingleaseholders to make way for new factories and construction of highwaysand railways, including a 750-km electrified line opened this week that links the capital of landlocked Ethiopia with Djibouti's busy sea port.

For the opposition and those turfed out of farm plots where they growfood for their families, it shows how the government that has ruled forquarter of a century tramples on their rights.

"It is time for the government to change tack," said Merera Gudina, chairman of the opposition Oromo Federalist Congress. "People are demanding change, but the problem is the only language the government knows is the use of excessive force."

The government says police have clashed with what it calls "armed gangs"intent on destabilising the nation. A regional Oromo official accused protesters of hindering efforts to reverse generations of poverty in Oromiya.

Pressure has been mounting from abroad too. U.S. President Barack Obama told his Ethiopian hosts in Addis Ababa last year that greater political openness would "strengthen rather than inhibit" the developmentagenda. The government said it differed over the pace of any reforms demanded by Washington.

"Economic development has outpaced political change," said former U.S.ambassador to Ethiopia and academic David Shinn.

Noting "phenomenal" economic gains, he said: "It is less clear, however,whether the Ethiopian peasant farmer, who still constitutes about 80 percent of the population, has benefited significantly."

FEELING THE HEAT

Foreign investors are feeling the heat from protesters, not because they are foreigners but because they are among the biggest purchasers of thenew land leases from the state.

Ethiopia's budding tourist industry is also taking a hit. The Bishangari Lodge, on Lake Langano about 200 km south of Addis Ababa, was lootedand torched this week.

Resort owner Omar Bagersh said, even before the attack, he had had 90 percent cancellations in the past two or three months. "It is very difficult to convince a tourist to travel to a country that has this kind of situation,"he said.

Investors have been attracted by cheap electricity from Ethiopia's huge new hydroelectric dams being built, cheap labour, improving transport andtax incentives offered by a financially stretched government hungry for foreign exchange.

New industries have been focused in Oromiya and the nearby Amhara regions, which surround Addis Ababa, a city that now boasts Sub-SaharanAfrica's only light rail metro system and a rapidly rising skyline.

Protests in Oromiya province initially erupted in 2014 over a development plan for the capital that would have expanded its boundaries, a move seenas threatening farmland.

Clashes with police flared in 2015 and this year, although the governmenthas shelved the boundary plan. Protesters have increasingly focused on broader political issues, accusing the government of stifling opposition. The government, which won a parliamentary election in 2015 in which the opposition failed to secure a single seat, denies this. Germany: Merkel Should Press Rights on Africa Trip Curbing Security Force Abuses, Ensuring Justice Crucial in Ethiopia, MaliHRW (Berlin) October 8, 2016
German Chancellor Angela Merkel should stress the urgent need for key rights reforms during her visits to Mali, Niger, and Ethiopia. Between October 9 and 11, 2016, Chancellor Merkel will meet officials in each country to discuss migration to Europe, as well as German support for theUN peacekeeping mission in Mali.
“Any serious discussion of migration from Africa to Europe needs to focuson the grave human rights violations and governance concerns at home that force people to flee their countries,” said Wenzel Michalski, Germanydirector at Human Rights Watch. “Ethiopia and Mali are key examples of countries where serious crimes by the security forces and lack of accountability are fueling refugee flows, and Germany’s priority should beto end these abuses.”

Merkel’s visit comes against the backdrop of intensified European Union efforts to secure migration cooperation agreements with origin and transit countries in Africa. A new “partnership framework” for relations with thesecountries, announced in June, signaled the EU’s intention to place migration control at the core of its foreign policy and development aid.

There is a risk that this approach will create an incentive for countries to engage in abusive policies to block departures or restrict freedom of movement, with a devastating impact on the ability of asylum seekers toreach places of genuine safety and of individuals to exercise their right toleave their own country.

In Mali, Chancellor Merkel should raise concerns over government failure to curb and address security force abuses, including torture, arbitrary arrests, and executions, Human Rights Watch said. The abuses have beenregular features during and since the 2012-2013 armed conflict in Mali and have contributed to the radicalization of some Malian youth. Merkel should also raise concerns over government corruption and urge the government to provide more support for the country’s weak rule of law institutions, including the judiciary.

German participation in the UN peacekeeping operation in Mali (MINUSMA) should bolster efforts by the Malian government to protect civilians from the rampant banditry and lawlessness in large areas of the country.

In Ethiopia, Chancellor Merkel will attend the opening of an African Unionbuilding. While there, she should raise with the government the urgent need to end the use of excessive force by security forces against protesters, and to release thousands of protesters who have been arbitrarily detained over the past year. She should express support for a credible, international investigation into the deaths of more than 500 protesters. Merkel should also press the government to lift government restrictions on media reporting and access to the internet and social media.

Tensions and public frustration over security force killings and other abuses against protesters in Oromia, Ethiopia’s largest region, have spread to other parts of the country in recent months and risk spiralinginto a wider crisis if the Ethiopian government does not change course,Human Rights Watch said.

“Chancellor Merkel has an important opportunity to address some of the root causes of migration: unchecked rights abuses and poor governance incountries like Ethiopia and Mali,” Michalski said. “Germany’s long-term partnerships, including security cooperation in both countries, can only benefit from progress on the core human rights concerns.”

HRW: Declaration of State of Emergency Risks Further Abuses

Felix Horne Senior Researcher, Horn of Africa

On October 9, the Ethiopian government declared a country-wide six- month state of emergency. It has been a bloody year for Ethiopia, and thepast few weeks have been no different.

Scores of people – possibly hundreds – died in a stampede on October 2 in Bishoftu, Oromia region, fleeing security force gunfire and teargas during the annual Irreecha harvest festival, important for the country's 40million ethnic Oromos. This was the latest lethal crackdown by the government, which has suppressed hundreds of protests across Oromia that grew out of opposition to development plans around the capital, AddisAbaba, last November.

While the vast majority of those protests have been peaceful, anger boiledover last week after the deaths at Irreecha. In Oromia, protesters attacked government buildings and private businesses perceived to be close to the ruling party, setting some on fire.

Now, under the state of emergency – declared on state television – the army will be deployed country-wide. Intensifying the military's role in responding to the protests is sure to fuel the escalating anger in Oromia.

From the hundreds of interviews Human Rights Watch has carried out withprotesters, witnesses and victims since the protests began, it is clear that each act of brutality by the military – the same military now tasked with restoring law and order – further emboldens the protest movement.

The government's announcement indicates that it does not intend to reverse course, away from the use of force and towards engagement withcommunities about their grievances. Instead it seems determined to use force to suppress free expression and peaceful assembly.

Until Ethiopians can voice their views about critical issues such as development and governance, anger and frustration will likely continue, plunging the country into further uncertainty and possibly toward an evenmore dire and irreversible human rights crisis.

Ethiopia declares a state of emergency to stop protests

By Elias Meseret, AP updates October 9, 2016

The Ethiopian government has declared a state of emergency effective immediately following a week of anti-government violence that resulted indeaths and property damage across the country, especially in the restive Oromia region.

In a televised address on Sunday morning, Ethiopia's Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn said the state of emergency was declared becausethere has been an 'enormous' damage to property that was carried out inhis country. "We put our citizens' safety first. Besides, we want to put an end to the damage that is being carried out against infrastructure projects, education institutions, health centers, administration and justice buildings," said Desalegn on the state Ethiopian Broadcasting Corporation.

"The recent developments in Ethiopia have put the integrity of the nationat risk," he said. "The state of emergency will not breach basic human rights enshrined under the Ethiopian constitution and won't also affect diplomatic rights listed under the Vienna Convention," said Desalegn.

The internet is blocked across many parts of Ethiopia, residents reportedSunday. The government has blocked the internet for more than a week to prevent protesters from using social media to get supporters to attenddemonstrations.

Major towns and cities across Ethiopia's Oromia region are experiencing unrest and widespread violent protests after dozens were killed on October 2 in a stampede triggered when police fired teargas and bullets todisperse protestors at the annual Irrecha thanksgiving celebration in Bishoftu town.

Anti-government protests continued Sunday. Many roads into and out ofthe capital, Addis Ababa, are blocked by protesters and those who try todrive through are targeted by people who jump out from behind bushes and hurl rocks, witnesses told the Associated Press by phone on Sunday.

The state broadcaster said details of the state of emergency will becommunicated to the public later Sunday.

In a separate development, Ethiopian officials summoned Egypt's ambassador to the country, Aboubakr Hefny, for discussions. The State Minister for Ethiopia's Foreign Affairs Ministry talked to the Egyptian diplomat after a video appeared online which purportedly shows membersof the outlawed Oromo Liberation Front sharing a stage with what Ethiopia's state broadcaster described as Egyptians.

ጊዜ ገድቦ መናገር ይከብድ ካልሆነ በቀር በኢትዮጵያ የስርዓት ለውጥ አይቀሬ ስለመሆኑ ክርክር የለም (አንዳንድ የወያኔ አንጋሽ ምዕራባውያን ባለሙያዎች በጥቂት ወራት ይተምኑታል)። ይህ እውነት ቢሆንምአንዳንድ "የፖለቲካ

መክለፍለፎች”ሊወድቅ የተቃረበውን አገዛዝ እንዲውተረተር ዕድል ሊሰጠው ይችላል የሚል ስጋት ያላቸው ወገኖች ከያቅጣጫው ብቅ እያሉ ነው። የስጋታቸው መንስኤ ደግሞ በዋናነት የግልጽነት፣ ያለመተማመን፣ የውድድርና “ጊዜን” የመጠቀም ተራ እሽቅድምድም እንደሆነ እነዚሁ ስጋት የገባቸው ክፍሎች ይናገራሉ።

ከየአቅጣጫው የሚሰሙት የ“ሽግግር”ዜናዎች፣ ዳር ዳሩን በለሆሳስ ይሰማየነበረው “የሃሜት በሽታ”ገልጠውታል። በዚሁ መነሻ ይመስላል ለኦሮሚያ የሽግግር ሰነድ እንደሚዘጋጅ ይፋ መሆኑንን ተከትሎ ሰፊና ግልጽ ያለ መልስ ከሚመለከታቸው የእነ በቀለ ገረባ ወኪሎች ህዝብ እየጠበቀ ነው። በሌላ በኩል ደግሞ “የቱ መቀደም ነበረበት?” የሚሉ አሉ።

የኢትዮጵያን አረንጓዴ ቢጫና ቀይ ሰንደቅ ይዞ የሚታገለው “አማራ”፣ በብሔር ደረጃ ወይስ በብሔራዊ ደረጃ ቻርተር ሊያረቅ?በሚል ግራ የተጋባ ጥያቄ የሚያቀርቡ ክፍሎች፣ “ሁሉም ብሔረሰቦች በግል ሊሮጡ?”ሲሉ ይጠይቃሉ። ሁሉንም የሚያገባቸ ሰነድ ማዘጋጀትና ውሳኔውን ለህዝብ መተው እንደሚሻል በመጠቆም ያገባናል የሚሉ ወገኖች በአንድነት መክረው አንድ የመሸጋገሪያ ሰነድ ለማዘጋጀት አለማሰባቸው ያስገረማቸውም አሉ። ሁሉም ያለውን ቢል አሁን ይፋ የሆነው የኦሮሚያ የሽግግር ቻርተር ጉዳይ አንኳር ጉዳይ ለመሆን በቅቷል።

Army commander for Harar and Dire Dawa shotdead by hissoldiers

By Ethiomedia October 10, 2016

HARAR, Eastern Ethiopia - A TPLF army commander in charge of majortowns in Eastern Ethiopia has been shot dead by one of the soldiers under his command.

Major Atsbeha Asghedom, chief of army operations in Harar, Haramaya, Awadai, and Dire Dawa, was killed by one of the Oromo soldiers under his command, according to an Amharic news report by journalist Kinfu Assefa.

Meanwhile in Dilla town, capital of the protesting Gedeo zone, a police commander was killed by Agazi government security forces, local residents have told the media. Known for their cruel measures, the Agazi special security soldiers entered Dilla after the town went through three days of destruction to looting and burning, and summarily executed Mr. Kebede, the Gedeo zone police chief.

The vicious attacks spearheaded by Gedeo citizens in Dilla, Wonago, and Fesseha Ghenet were aimed at attacking the Amhara and Guraghe people,and were directed to carry out the crimes by ruling party cadres, local sources said.

The Amhara and Guraghe families have fled the area with many taking shelter in the wilderness. Agazi is at the moment taking extrajudicial measures, sources said, and its arrival in the town after three days of warand destruction was the create the feeling of a "savior" among the people,who already know that it was the government and ruling party that it wasstirring ethnic hate and conflict in the country. Government and party officials fled the towns in Gedeo and were stayingin Awassa, a major city in almost all of southern Ethiopia.

Ethiopian Lives Matter!

By Getachew Abera Seyoum, October 10, 2016

Ethiopia knows no peace throughout its long history. The same is true inthe current case, too.

The governments that came to power (which came to the throne) neverrequired the consent of the people to rule on its behalf. The demand to the establishment of popularly elected gov't was always met with brutalsuppression by the dictatorial regimes, past and present.

1. Imperial kings claimed to have got political power directly from Godand never intended to give up power to the people until the last emperor was dethroned in 1974 by popular revolution.
2. The military junta was set up by men-in-uniform and hijacked the revolution to turn it to its own greedy interest, It soon turned to bemilitary dictator and stood against all the youth who demanded forpeople's gov't.

The pro-Soviet military junta was dressed with M-Leninist cover and was confronted by underground leftist organization called EPRP (Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Party). EPRP, in so amateurish style launched urban guerilla against the military gov't which was later branded as "WhiteTerror" by its cadres. The response was so brutal and indiscriminate killingof all youth that may be suspect of EPRP members. Tens of thousands of lives were lost in short span of time in the name of the infamous "red terror" between 1976 and 1978.

The rest of the world rarely reported such cases, as if our lives did notmatter!

Ironically, injuries in the clash between the Israelis and Palestinians or theattempt of the IRA to assassinate British official were the headlines of the largest Western media networks in the same period.

Lives, be it Ethiopian or otherwise, black or white, Arab or African, etcequally matter. Isn't it?

Not only that, in the conventional civil war between the military gov't (itclaimed to be civilian later) and ethnic and secessionist groups in the north of the country, tens of thousands were killed in single front almoston regular basis. Although both sides claim to be successful against the other, that the country was loosing dearest human lives was true.
However, reports on international level were rare or even if it was made,only in a minor scale.

The civil war that was widely ignored by the rest of the world resulted inthe:

- Replacement of the military regime by ethnically organized groups inAddis Ababa;

- Creation of two countries: Ethiopia and Eritrea (based in Asmara).

1. The nation-hating group which assumed power in Addis Ababa soonstarted to silence down its opponents by means of arms.

The main targets of the TPLF-led (Tigrean…) regime are students(university and secondary school), intellectuals and party politicians. If we particularly pick out only the killing crime that this gov'tmade, the following are worth mentioning:

1. The 1992 massacre of the AAU(Addis Ababa University) students inreaction to their peaceful protest to the visit of the late Secretary general, UN, Boutros B. Gali;
2. The 2001 massacre of university and high school students in as aresult of gov't intervention in the academic independence;
3. The massacre of religious believers by gov't forces in the sacredsites(churches) such as in Gondar and Wolayita 20 years ago;
4. The brutal killing at Hawassa town in reaction to a peaceful demonstration demanding that Sidama be given the status ofregional state;
5. The massacre of Agnuak people by the regime army in reaction tothe allegation of the ambush and killing of the 'Northerners' by theAgnuaks(one of the largest ethnic groups in Gambella region);
6. The post-2005 election killing in A.A. and other cities which resultedin the death of more than 200 persons;
7. The murder of hundreds and arrest of thousands of Oromo ethnicmembers in reaction to the protracted protest in Oromiya region more than a year ago;
8. The very recent barbaric massacre of youngsters in the Amhara region (mainly in Gondar, Bahir Dar, etc) in reaction to the popular demand that Wolkait of Gondar be restored to its original part fromTigrai; the action of the gov't and reaction of the people take wide coverage and is seemingly the starting point of the crumbling of thesystem
9. As I am writing this note, I am sadly listening to the news and watching very horrible pictures while believers were being killed during stampede at Debre Zeit; un exhausted report of the causalityis more than 700 dead and thousands injured. The gov't as usual plays the key role in this savage killing at a sacred religious site.

In all the above damage inflicted upon us, Ethiopians the rest of the worldwas not let to know much. No due attention was not given to us. Why?
Does not our life matter? Three Mistaken Parties*Ethiopian Diaspora*

The angry and louder Ethiopian Diaspora is always tireless in condemningthe current gov't and calling the local population to rise violently. This group uses all means to express its extreme stand and desire to change. However, this group lacks:

-Unity and coordination to add a valuable support to the force/s ofchange;

-Strategy and meaningful organization to compel for change and stand asa viable alternative if the opportunity of setting up of a new system/stateis created;

-Regularity, commitment and effectiveness to lobby foreign statesmen or legislatures to support the cause of the Ethiopian people. Had the Diaspora been so effective in this sector, many states would have passed laws, would have designed policies, would have curtailed their aid to TPLF-led gov't that it tends to change;

-Cohesion and is deeply divided into different polarized and hostilegroupings.

Diplomatic Community in Ethiopia

Ethiopia has many embassies and diplomatic councils among African countries, since it is the seat of AU(African Union) and UNECA(United Nations Economic Commission for Africa). There is no doubt that the diplomatic community has a clear look and information on what is goingon in the country.

Suppression of political opponents by the gov't, clear violations of human rights by state organs, enforcement of repressive laws, etc are not hiddento the diplomatic in Addis Ababa. However, they make no attempt to exerttheir influence on the gov't or to provide constructive advice to have a change for good. Some key embassies, including the US and EU are merely reserved in inviting some opposition groups/renowned individuals in their respective embassies and pay lip service. Their meaningless nod had never been productive to date. They pretend to listen and understandour case, but no reasonable action on the ground.

They do not stand for universal human rights as they claim, They are rather for their greedy principle: "In politics there is no permanent enemy,but permanent national interest".

Big Media Networks

No reasonably average person can understand why the biggest international air medias such as CNN, BBC, Aljazeera, etc ignore our casethat is characterized by death, violence, imprisonment, compulsion to flee abroad, election fraud, and what have you. Their frequency and level of coverage is by far incompatible to the reality what we encounter in Ethiopia. Particularly the bloody confrontation between gov't forces and the public in the Oromiya and Amhara regions deserves attention. Even the state media is accepting the death of significant number of people. Then, why do not such powerful media give time and budget to cover ourdeaths? We know that they make injuries in USA or single stabbing in Israel or the founding of fake explosion in Brussels the headlines of their news. *Do not our Lives Matter? Ethiopia: ex-Ambassador Herman Cohen blames Tigriandomination, fake federalism for current crisis

ESAT October 10, 2016

Former US Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, Herman Cohen, said thathe believes the current crises in Ethiopia was a result of domination by Tigrians overthe economy and politics of the country as well as putting in place a "fake" federal political arrangement.

"In 1991 a system of states was established based on ethnic groups. But this was a fake system because none of the states that had ethnic groups different from the Tigrians had any voice what their government should be and what they should have.So it is strictly a one party state, which most African governments had abandoned long time ago," he noted in an exclusive interview with ESAT.

"It looks to me that the government does not understand there are majorgrievances among large groups of people especially younger people who graduated from the university and unable to find unemployment. Also thefact that members of the TPLF dominate the economy, have monopoly over economic activity. So there is major frustration there."

He pointed out that TPLF regime failed to deliver economic benefits to the vast majority of the population. "The benefits come mainly to Tigrians," heasserted. Cohen said it was unfortunate that the TPLF had used lethal force against unarmed demonstrators.

The Ambassador said the TPLF will have the fate of Mengistu regime if it continues to use lethal force to stay in power. " If things continue as theyare now, it will be very very difficult for the government to remain in power with any sort of legitimacy. So it is time for them to stop using lethal force and to start political discussions. If they continue to use lethalforce, they will become just like the Mengistu regime that they fought for so many years."

Asked why the US government still allied itself with the TPLF regimedespite gross human rights violations, the Ambassador said it is a “dilemma” for the US government. “There is a dilemma for the US government because there are geo strategic interests. Al Shabaab in Somalia next door is a great danger to the entire Horn of Africa. It is adanger to the US and all of its interest.”

“Our interest is fighting Al Shabaab, let’s be frank about it. Al Shabaab isvery dangerous. It is part of the Islamic State. But also human rights anddemocracy is important. And I think the weight of the US government in the Horn of Africa is moving more and more to human rights and democracy. And I think the TPLF is feeling that,” the Ambassador said.

Cohen, who was the US Assistant Secretary of State during the Bush administration, from 1989 to 1993, played a key role in negotiating the departure of Mengistu Hailemariam and is said to have given blessing forthe TPLF to assume power in 1991.

He is currently President of the Cohen and Woods International, his consulting firm. He is also a registered lobbyist for the Coalition for aDemocratic Congo.

Addis Ababa: Ethiopia must allow protests, police must bemeasured –Chanceller Angela Merkel HRW October 11, 2016

German Chancellor, Angela Merkel, has asked the Ethiopian governmentto allow protests and that police response to these protests should be proportionate.

She also called on the government to include opposition groups in the political process. Merkel is currently in Ethiopia on the last leg of her historic African tour. Her trip started in Mali on Sunday, before she wentto Niger on Monday.

There was pressure by rights groups tasking the German leader to speak on human rights in the country. Ethiopia over the weekend imposed a 6- month state of emergency in a bid to quell anti-government protests. TheUnited Nations and other bodies have charged the government to desist from mass arrests and the partial internet shutdown.

Merkel’s African tour was focused on seeking investment opportunities andsecurity cooperation with the host nations. The German government hopes primarily to drive economic development on the continent and in the long run curb future waves of migration to Europe.

The Ethiopian Prime Minister, Desalegn Hailemariam, also refuted claimsthat security forces employed violent tactics against protesters in the Oromia region.
Desalegn and Merkel held a joint press conference after the prime ministerreceived the German leader at the national palace.

EU Needs a New Approach to Ethiopia
EU Observer, October 11, 2016
By Felix Horne Senior Researcher, Horn of Africa

In January the European Parliament passed a 19-point resolution condemning the Ethiopian government's brutal crackdown on protests that had left more than a hundred dead. Many Ethiopians rejoiced at the resolution. I read it to some Ethiopian friends, whocried.

They had assumed Ethiopia was part of an international order in which noWestern institution would dare criticize a trusted ally despite the government's brutal repression. They hoped the resolution would be a watershed in Europe's relationship with Ethiopia.

But in the nine months since, the European Parliament's outrage has not been matched by the European Union or its member countries. This despite the hundreds more Ethiopians killed throughout the country, the detention of tens of thousands, and widespread torture in detention, as wehave documented.

Instead, on the sidelines of EU Development Days in June, High Representative Frederica Mogherini and Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn worked on a joint declaration "Towards an EU- Ethiopia Strategic Engagement" that proclaimed business as usual. While demonstrators were being shot, journalists and opposition members locked up, and peaceful activists punished, the EU was silently signing thechecks.

EU officials are quick to point to rare but tepid statements expressing concern for Ethiopia's human rights situation but it's not enough. The October 12 European parliamentary hearing on Ethiopia could be the catalyst for much stronger action —built on a willingness to use the considerable leverage that comes with providing various forms of supportto the Ethiopian government, including €745 million in European aid for 2014-2020.

Ethiopia’s protests began last November in the largest region, Oromia, over the government’s development plans. Protests soon spread to the Amhara region where grievances focused on complex questions of ethnic identity and the dominance in economic and political affairs of people withties to the ruling party. Security forces have shown no intention to changetheir heavy-handed tactics, and the government hasn’t been willing to discuss the issues. The cycle of demonstrations and brutal government responses is feeding Ethiopia’s biggest political and human rights crisis in decades. How this plays out could jeopardize Europe’s long-term interestsin the Horn of Africa.
Ethiopia’s current crisis came as a surprise to many European policymakers, but it follows years of systematic government attacks on fundamental rights and freedoms, cutting off dissent. Despite widespread frustration with the government, the ruling party is able to hold every oneof the seats in the federal and regional parliaments. The courts have shown little independence on politically sensitive cases, misusing an anti- terrorism law to punish peaceful dissent. There is little scrutiny of abusive security forces in part because of restrictions on independent media and NGOs. All of this has contributed to the complete closure of political space,creating the perfect storm.

The EU is among many donors that have historically been silent about Ethiopia’s human rights abuses, afraid to risk strategic partnerships on development, migration, peacekeeping, and security. Foreign diplomats and development organizations working in Ethiopia understand that you limit public criticism in exchange for access. The EU claims that “quiet diplomacy” is the most effective way to push Ethiopia in the right direction. But given the dramatic deterioration in Ethiopia’s human rightsrecord it’s hard to argue that this approach works.

Offering government benefits in exchange for silence is something many Ethiopians, particularly in rural areas, have known for years. Ethiopia’s government carefully controls access to the benefits of development – including seeds, fertilizers, food aid, and jobs, much of it funded by the EUand its members.

To their credit, some African institutions have broken rank and expressed concern over the killings, including the African Commission on Human andPeoples’ Rights and the African Union. And the United States, a key ally ofEthiopia, has been stronger than usual in condemning the use of lethal force, with forceful resolutions introduced in the US House and Senate.

Last month the UN’s top human rights official, Zeid Ra'ad Al Hussein, said that an international investigation is needed. A recent EU statement at theUN Human Rights Council in Geneva echoed his call for an investigation, an important step that needs follow-up.

The EU needs a new approach to Ethiopia. Strategic relationships will become obsolete if Ethiopia plunges further into crisis, and all the signs are there. As a valuable friend, the EU needs to push Ethiopia to respectdivergent views, and rein in forces who rapidly turn to bullets, beatings,and mass arrests.

Ethiopia's current approach to dissent guarantees future unrest and makes it less likely that the government will be able to find a way back togain the trust of its citizens, all of which jeopardizes the EU's long term interests in the Horn. The EU and its member states should continue to push for an international investigation into the killings, press the government to grant the UN access to investigate, and urge the government to hold to account security force members responsible for abuses. By taking these steps, the EU and its member states can improvethe potential for Ethiopians to be stable long-term partners.

EU calls for an independent investigation into death of protestersin Ethiopia

By EU Press Release October 11, 2016

Extremely concerned about the death of protesters in Ethiopia, the Chair of the European Parliament's Subcommittee on Human Rights (DROI), Elena Valenciano (S&D, ES), madethe following statement calling for an independent investigation:

"On 2 October at least 50 people died after police in Ethiopia fired teargasand warning shots to disperse anti-government protesters at the religiousIreecha festival in Bishoftu, triggering a stampede. Opposition groups have even estimated the deaths at 600 or more.

I deplore the deaths of these civilians and stand together with Ethiopia and all Ethiopians in mourning the victims. Since the end of 2015 excessive use of force against protesters has been used time and time again. Before this week's tragic events, just a short while ago, in August2016 around 400 protesters were killed by security forces.

The European Parliament adopted an urgency resolution on the violent crackdown on protesters in January 2016, calling on the Ethiopian government to respect the right to peaceful assembly, freedom of expression and association. I reiterate the Parliament's demands and alsothe call of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, Zeid Ra'ad Al Hussein, and of the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights foraccess for independent observers to the country to assess the human rights situation.

Moreover I invite the Ethiopian government to allow an independentinvestigation to examine what happened on Sunday in Bishoftu and whether unlawful government crowd control measures triggered the stampede.

The repeated government clampdown on peaceful protesters has led to rising tensions in several Ethiopian regions including Addis Ababa, and thesituation in the country risks becoming even more inflamed. In order to avoid further escalations of violence, security officers guilty of abuse of power must be held to account."

The European Parliament's Subcommittee on Human Rights (DROI) will hold an exchange of views on the human rights situation in Ethiopia at itsnext meeting on 12 October 2016.

German leader calls for Ethiopia to open up politics after unrest

By Andreas Rinke and Aaron Maasho | ADDIS ABABAOctober 11, 2016

(News updates) German Chancellor Angela Merkel told Ethiopia on Tuesday to open up its politics and ensure police do not use heavy-handedtactics against protesters, after more than a year of unrest that rights groups say has led to about 500 deaths.

Merkel, who spoke at a news conference with Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn, arrived in Ethiopia after a fresh flare-up near the capital of the clashes that have cast a shadow over a nation with one of Africa's fastest-growing economies.

The violence prompted the government to declare a nationwide state ofemergency on Sunday. It says the death toll cited by rights groups is exaggerated and blames the wave of violence on "armed gangs" backed by foreigners.

Western states, which are among the biggest donors to what is still a poornation, want their companies to win deals in Ethiopia but have become increasingly concerned by the government's authoritarian approach to development.
"I made the case that you should have open talks with people who haveproblems," Merkel told Hailemariam, adding that police should respond proportionately to protests.

Last week, protesters ransacked or torched about a dozen mostly foreign-owned factories, flower farms and other sites, accusing the government ofbuilding on seized land and stifling opposition.

Opponents blamed police for provoking a stampede at a festival inOromiya that killed at least 55 people on Oct. 2.

"In a democracy there always needs to be an opposition that has a voice -in the best case in parliament," Merkel added.

Opposition parties failed to win a single seat in parliament in the 2015 election, accusing the government of rigging the vote - charges which it denies. There was just one opposition lawmaker in the previous assembly.

"The government is not using extreme violence. If it happened, we willinvestigate the units involved," the prime minister responded.

DEMAND FOR DIALOGUE

Addressing parliament the day before Merkel arrived, Ethiopia's presidentcalled for an amendment to the election law to allow "alternative voices" to be heard - an offer that senior opposition figure Merera Gudina said was "too little, too late".

Merera, chairman of the Oromo Federalist Congress, from a region whereprotests have raged, said Merkel should push for the release of political prisoners and a national dialogue.

The government denies it detains people for their politics.

In another show of German discontent, a diplomat said Addis Ababa hadproposed that Merkel address parliament, but Berlin refused because it lacked any opposition members.

The diplomat, who asked not to be named, said the message being sentwas that there was "no business as usual".

The international community has praised Ethiopia for its economic achievements and development strategy. Under this, healthcare and othertypes of social support have spread across a country where most people rely on subsistence farming that has been hit by severe drought in the past two years or more.
A nation still renowned in the West for a devastating 1984 famine exacerbated by the policies of the then Marxist government, Ethiopia hasbeen one of Africa's fastest-expanding economies for the past 15 years ofso. In 2015, growth was 10 percent.

But the lack of public space for criticism has risen up the agenda for Western powers. U.S. President Barack Obama told his Ethiopian hosts inAddis Ababa last year that greater political openness would "strengthen rather than inhibit" development.

The government said at the time it ensured political freedoms but differedover the pace of reforms that Washington wanted.

Till now, Chinese firms and financing have been a major driver of growth,building high-rise towers and a metro system in Addis Abba, and constructing a new railway that links the capital of the land-locked nationto Djibouti port.

Western investors have also secured deals. Britain's Diageo and Heinekenof the Netherlands have bought breweries, Dutch and Belgian firms run flower farms and companies such as Hennes and Mauritz (H&M) are starting to source clothes from Ethiopian plants.

Merkel also visited the headquarters of the African Union, which are in Addis Ababa. She called for the body to try to solve the conflict in Libya and also urged African states to increase efforts to fight Islamist militants.(Writing by Edmund Blair and Madeline Chambers; editing by David Stamp and Pravin Char)

‘A Generation Is Protesting’ in Ethiopia, Long a U.S. Ally

By JEFFREY GETTLEMAN

August 12, 2016

Is Ethiopia about to crack?

For the last decade, it has been one of Africa's most stable nations, a solid Western ally with a fast-growing economy. But in recent months, antigovernment protests have convulsed the country, spreading into more and more areas. In the last week alone, thousands of people stormed into the streets, demanding fundamental politicalchange.

The government's response, according to human rights groups, was ruthless. Witnesses said that police officers shot and killed scores of unarmed demonstrators.Videos circulating from protests thought to be from late last year or earlier this yearshow security officers whipping young people with sticks as they are forced to perform handstands against a wall. The top United Nations human rights official is now calling for a thorough investigation.

"It was always difficult holding this country together, and moving forward, it will beeven harder," said Rashid Abdi, the Horn of Africa project director for the International Crisis Group, a research organization.

Ethiopia is the second most populous nation in Africa, after Nigeria, and its stability ischerished by the West. American military and intelligence services work closely with the Ethiopians to combat terrorist threats across the region, especially in Somalia, and few if any countries in Africa receive as much Western aid.

Ethiopia's economy has been expanding at an impressive clip. Its infrastructure has improved drastically — there is even a new commuter train in the capital, Addis Ababa. And its streets are typically quiet, safe and clean. Though Ethiopia has hardlybeen a paragon of democracy — human rights groups have constantly cited the government's repressiveness — opposition within the country had been limited, with dissidents effectively silenced. Many have been exiled, jailed, killed or driven to the far reaches of the desert.

But that may be changing.

"If you suffocate people and they don't have any other options but to protest, it breaks out," said Seyoum Teshome, a university lecturer in central Ethiopia. "Thewhole youth is protesting. A generation is protesting.”

The complaints are many, covering everything from land use to the governing coalition’s stranglehold on power. After a widely criticized election last year, the governing party and its allies got the last seat the opposition had held and now control 100 percent of Parliament. At the same time, tensions are rising along the border with Eritrea; a battle along that jagged, disputed line claimed hundreds of livesin June.

Analysts fear that separatist groups that had been more or less vanquished in recentyears, like the Oromo Liberation Front or the Ogaden National Liberation Front, maytry to exploit the turbulence and rearm.

Several factors explain why bitter feelings, after years of simmering beneath thesurface, are exploding now.

The first is seemingly innocuous: smartphones.

Only in the last couple of years have large numbers of Ethiopians been able to communicate using social media as cheaper smartphones became common and internet service improves. Even when the government shuts down access to Facebook and Twitter, as it frequently does, especially during protests, many peopleare still able to communicate via internet proxies that mask where they are. Severalyoung Ethiopians said this was how they gathered for protests.

Second, there is more solidarity between Oromos and Amharas, Ethiopia’s two largest ethnic groups. Oromos and Amharas are not natural allies. For eons, Amharas from Ethiopia’s predominantly Christian highlands flourished in politics andbusiness, exploiting the Oromos, many of whom are Muslim and live in lowland areas.

But that is changing as well.

“We are on the way to coordinate under one umbrella,” said Mulatu Gemechu, anOromo leader.

The biggest protests have been in Amhara and Oromo areas. Many Amharas and Oromos feel Ethiopia is unfairly dominated by members of the Tigrayan ethnic group,which makes up about 6 percent of the population and dominates the military, the intelligence services, commerce and politics.

The third reason behind the unrest is the loss of Meles Zenawi.

Mr. Meles, a former rebel leader, was Ethiopia’s prime minister for 17 years, until hisdeath from an undisclosed illness in 2012. He was considered a tactical genius, a man who could see around corners. Analysts say he was especially adept at detecting early signals of discontent and using emissaries to massage and defang opponents.

“The current regime lacks that ground savvy,” Mr. Abdi, the conflict analyst, said.
Ethiopia’s new prime minister, Hailemariam Desalegn, was plucked from relative obscurity to fill Mr. Meles’s shoes. Unlike Mr. Meles, who came from the Tigray region of northern Ethiopia, Mr. Hailemariam is a southerner. Analysts say he doesnot have the trust of the Tigrayan-controlled security services.

The result, many fear, is more bloodshed. The last time Ethiopia experienced suchturmoil was in 2005, after thousands protested over what analysts have said appeared to be an election the government bungled and then stole. In the ensuingcrackdown, many protesters were killed, though fewer than in recent months, andthat period of unrest passed relatively quickly.

Development experts have praised Ethiopia’s leaders for visionary infrastructureplanning, such as the new commuter train, and measurable strides in fighting poverty. But clearly that has not stopped the internal resentment of Ethiopia’s government from intensifying. And it is taking a dangerous ethnic shape.

Last month, protesters in Gondar, an Amhara town, attacked businesses owned byTigrayans, and anti-Tigrayan hatred is becoming more common in social media.

Analysts say the protests are putting the United States and other Western allies in anawkward position. The American government has used Ethiopia as a base for drone flights over neighboring Somalia, though it recently said it had closed that base.

While the West clearly wants to support democracy, it also does not want its ally inan already volatile region to crumble. “That,” Mr. Abdi said, “is a very tight rope to walk.”

Ethiopia Opinion
Ethiopia is in a state of emergency. The tyrannical government mustgo

theguardian: By Alemante Gebre-Selassie October 12, 2016

The country’s deadly protests stem from ethnic division, endemic corruption and high youth unemployment. The world must support callsfor a new government

The deadly protests that have rocked Ethiopia over the past several months, resulting in the declaration of a six-month state of emergency, stem from many regional and national grievances, most of which reflect a sense of economic and political marginalisation by wide sections of the country.

The unrest in the south dates back to November 2015, when demonstrators opposed a government plan to expand the boundaries ofAddis Ababa into the Oromo regional state. Farmers were particularly upset, worrying that they would lose their farms in the government's notorious "land grab" policy. Those protests have claimed the lives of hundreds of people and still counting.

In July, another wave of protests began in the Amhara region when thegovernment arrested members of the Welkait Committee, who were demanding the reversal of a 1991 decision by the ruling party to annex three districts of the Amhara region into the Tigray regional state. The inhabitants of these districts identify as ethnic Amhara and want to be reintegrated into the Amhara regional state, of which they have been apart for centuries.

The larger context for these protests, however, is the fact that for the lastquarter century Ethiopians of various ethnicities have been subject to a system of governance whereby the Tigray People's Liberation Front (TPLF), which represents a mere 6% of Ethiopia's population, controls virtually all key levers of economic and political power. The TPLF, its cronies, party loyalists and their families control more than 70% of the modern economy, including communications, transport, agriculture and the defence industry. Key political institutions, including defence, intelligence and foreign affairs, are similarly owned and operated by and for the benefit of the ruling ethnic clique, with as many as 98% of the topechelons of the military and security forces being staffed by ethnic Tigrayans.

In a word, the TPLF owns the government. Although the federal constitution was designed to empower the major ethnic groups of thecountry to form their own states as the main framework for their governance, none of the member states (with the sole exception of Tigray) have any real powers to take care of its internal affairs.

As a consequence, the Oromo and Amhara ethnic groups – who togetherconstitute close to 70% of the population – are deeply resentful about playing second fiddle. Naturally, this has been a deep source of political disaffection for vast numbers of the members of these communities.

At the same time, the ethnically based federal system has left minoritiestrapped in their respective regions. They are treated as second-class citizens, lacking access to education, civil service employment, business licenses, bank loans and land leases on a nondiscriminatory basis. Even worse, they are liable to be expelled from regions in which they are considered "outsiders".

This has particularly been the fate of the Amhara, who have faced mass killing at various times since the current government came to power. Yetthe central authorities have shown no willingness to take protective measures or to provide any legal redress for these minorities.

Compounding the problems thrown up by ethnic division is endemic corruption. Ethiopia ranks 103 out of 168 countries on Transparency International's corruption perceptions index, a global civil society coalition that encourages accountability. It has also lost about $25bn since 2000 toillicit financial outflows, according to Global Financial Integrity.

Government officials and party loyalists receive preferential access to credit, land leases and jobs. Areas vulnerable to corruption are land administration, tax and revenue, the justice system, telecommunications, land procurement, licensing areas, and the finance sector.

Particularly egregious is the government's practice of leasing large tracts of land to foreign governments and local investors in opaque deals that have displaced thousands of people. Also disconcerting is the fact that 50% of the modern economy is controlled by conglomerates affiliated withthe ruling party.

Ethiopia's Oromo people are systematically targeted and oppressed by itsruling regime. The athlete's crossed arms protest shouldn't be ignored

A further factor fuelling the protests in Ethiopia is youth unemployment and the sense of hopelessness it has engendered. In recent years, the country has been producing thousands of college and university graduateseach year but only a limited number are able to obtain productive employment. A sizable number often risk their lives to brave the Sahara desert and Mediterranean Sea in a desperate search for better opportunities. Others remain unemployed for long periods or are engagedin cutting cobblestones for streets.

Freedom of assembly and association are guaranteed by the constitution but they remain a dead letter in practice. The government often resorts toits anti-terrorism law to stifle political dissent and to terrorise its political opponents. The judiciary is officially independent but in practice it rarely deviates from government policy. As of 2014, Ethiopia holds the second highest number of journalists behind bars.

The TPLF-government has to be held to account. The donor communities,particularly the UK, the US and the EU, should stand with the Ethiopian people by ceasing all military, financial and diplomatic support to the tyrannical government, supporting instead the opposition's call for an all-inclusive transitional process to replace the current government.

Ethiopia Opens a Pandora's Box of Ethnic Tensions the heart of the protests is the fundamental question of how to build a modern nation-state on the back of ethnic fault lines that have been exploited over centuries.

By Aleksandra W. Gadzala October 12, 2016

Since November 2015, Ethiopia has been beset by an unprecedented wave of protests. They began as a rebuke to a government plan to expandthe municipal boundaries of the capital, Addis Ababa, into Oromia Region. They have since expanded to the neighboring Amhara Region, underscoring decades of grievances against ethnic marginalization and authoritarian rule by the governing Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF). The regime has responded aggressively.
Human Rights Watch reports upwards of five hundred people have been so far killed in what the United States has decried as an "excessive use offorce." Tens of thousands more have been detained. An unexplained fire on September 3 in Kilinto prison in which hundreds of political prisoners are housed killed at least twenty-three. Rather than backing down, however, the protesters are gathering steam. The unrest has opened a pandora's box of institutional and ideological contradictions that strike at the heart of contemporary Ethiopian statehood. Understanding these issues is essential for an understanding of the unrest now gripping the country.

"You cannot remove the ethnic issue from Ethiopian politics," Eskinder Nega, a now-imprisoned Ethiopian journalist and democracy activist, told me in 2010. At the time I was an overeager doctoral student living in Addis Ababa and researching Chinese investments in the country. I had been introduced to Eskinder by a university professor, and he was kind enough to indulge (and endure) the inquisitive pepperings of a graduate student. Ethiopia is made up of nine dominant ethnic groups and approximately eighty others. Historically, the Amhara people—of which Eskinder is a member—were the country's governing force. Emperor HaileSelassie, Emperor Menilek (1889–1913) before him, and Mengistu Haile Mariam's Derg regime (1974–89) after him were all Amhara. Each soughtto establish a unified Ethiopia with Amharic as the official language and the Amhara culture as the foundation of Ethiopian identity. All other identities were to be eliminated—either by way of assimilation, or by force. In this the Derg was especially merciless. It perceived ethnic diversity as a threat to state unity; through its Red Terror campaign, it brutally slaughtered over five hundred thousand people—all, in its eyes, enemies of the Amhara state. The policies of the Derg were especially damaging to the population of Tigray, a tiny region in the northernmost part of Ethiopia along the border with Eritrea. Today, the Tigray make upa mere six percent of the population. Government brutality, lack of economic opportunity, and prohibitions on labor migration left the Tigrayethnically and economically isolated.

Years of repression ultimately gave way to resentment of the Amhara and,by extension, the state. It also gave rise to what Ethiopian historian GebruTareke calls "dissent nationalism," and the emergence of ethno-nationalistgroups like the Tigray People's Liberation Front (TPLF). For the TPLF, the state was an oppressive and colonizing force from which the country's ethnicities had to be liberated. In 1975 the group waged what amounted to a secessionist struggle: its 1976 manifesto established "the first task ofthe national struggle will be the establishment of an independent democratic republic of Tigray." When in 1989 the TPLF, then already under the direction of Meles Zenawi, successfully overthrew the Derg and in 1991 merged with three other political factions to form the EPRDF, Ethiopia was subdivided into nine mostly ethnic regions, each with the right to independent lawmaking, executive, and judicial powers. Enshrinedin Article 39.3 of the constitution is the right of all ethnicities to "self- government." Ethnic communities ostensibly inherited Ethiopia. The catch,of course, is that the EPRDF believes the only mechanism capable of ensuring sovereignty for each of the country's ethnicities is the EPRDF itself. Relations between the central government and the regions have over the years become so centralized, and local authority so emasculated,that the *de jure*premise of the modern Ethiopian state—ethnic federalism—is meaningless. Contemporary Ethiopia is a shining example of the ancient dictum, repeated throughout the ages, dīvide et īmpera— divide and rule. Further complicating the narrative is the fact that the EPRDF—in which the TPLF remains the dominant force—has never fully surrendered its vision of an independent Tigray. The 1976 manifesto has never been revised. In this way, decades of Amhara control have given way to decades of Tigray control. The presidential office, the parliament, central government ministries and agencies—including public enterprises—and financial institutions have since 1991 all been controlled by the TPLF. So too the military. 99 percent of Ethiopian National Defense Force officers are from Tigray; 97 percent are from the same village. Only the prime minister, Hailemariam Desalegn, is not Tigray: he is Wolayta, an ethnic group that forms the majority of the population in the Southern Nations, Nationalities, and People's Region (SNNPR). His historically close ties to Meles, first while President of SNNPR, then Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs, have, however, effectively rendered him Tigrayby association.

The EPRDF's governing ideology, "revolutionary democracy"—a curious concoction of Marxist, Maoist, and ethno-regionalist thought—demands Soviet-style submission to the Tigray-dominated state. It calls for communal collective participation and democratic centralism. Through gimgima, nationally publicized government evaluation sessions, the regime weeds out dissidents and indoctrinates citizens. Following the regime's violent clampdown during the disputed 2005 elections, the EPRDF published a booklet entitled Democracy and Democratic Unity that it used nationwide*gim gima* to explain away its brutal response. The booklet gaveEthiopians a "clear choice between dependency and anti-democracy forces" (i.e. opposition parties) and "revolutionary democracy (peace and developmentalism)." Rather than participants in a liberal order, then, Ethiopian citizens are mobilizing apparatchiks for the vanguard party. Andsince 1991 they have been subject to the diktats of one ethnic (minority) group. Resistance has been met with imprisonment, or worse. If, as William Davidson writes, today's protests "seem to be taking on a worrying ethnic tinge," that is because they have been ethnic from the start. Politics in Ethiopia is inherently ethnic.

Of the EPRDF's most beloved methods of centralizing control is throughthe centralization of land—land grabbing—which has become a rallying point in the current turmoil. While it is foreign firms in Ethiopia who are generally accused of expropriating land, the blame in fact lies with the EPRDF. A 2009 government regulation gives the EPRDF full control over allaspects of land investments over five thousand hectares (approximately 12,350 acres), including the right to expropriate land from the country's regions and transfer it to investors. Under Ethiopian law all revenues, taxes, and associated infrastructure resulting from the investments now accrue to the EPRDF. Previously, real estate transactions had been handled by each of the country's nine regional governments. As Chatham House, a London-based think tank, notes, "it is the state that stands to reap the most significant gains." But the factors underpinning the government's land grabs extend beyond simple economics: they are also a means for the TPLF-dominated EPRDF to realize some version of an independent Tigray. The seizure of large tracts of land is a process of re- concentration and of the marginalization and disempowerment of Ethiopia's (non-Tigray) ethnic groups. Theoretically at least, it is intended to forge greater dependence on the central state and to render it increasingly difficult for rebel groups to emerge and operate in lowland areas. Most projects are concentrated in Benishangul-Gumuz, Gambella, SNNPR, and northern Amhara—remote regions of the country where government processes of assimilation and integration are ongoing. By commandeering the land, the EPRDF hopes to speed them up.

Violent attacks carried out by Ethiopian protesters on Dutch, Israeli, Indian and Belgian-owned farms in Amhara in early September therefore did not target foreign interests in the country per se, but EPRDF efforts tostrip Ethiopians of land and identity. Foreign firms were the unfortunate middlemen.

For the better part of the last quarter century the EPRDF has attempted towhitewash its ethnic ambitions with its economic development agenda.
Ethiopia is at the heart of the “Africa rising” narrative and has succeeded in lifting millions out of extreme poverty, cutting child mortality rates, andoverseeing an impressive decline in HIV/AIDS-related deaths by 50 percent. Some argue that rather than ethnic tensions, the protests reflect mounting frustrations with an uneven distribution of the economic pie. This is undoubtedly part of the story. Yet as unrest engulfs places like theAmhara capital, Bahir Dar, and Adama, Oromia's most vibrant city, whichhave benefitted from economic growth, it is clear that economic grievances are secondary. When in 2010 Eskinder told me, regrettably, that Ethiopia has become "the world's star backslider," he did not mean this economically. He meant in terms of governance and in terms of statehood. "Meles' rule," he said, "is not only that of the party but of the ethnicity. Meles' relatives, friends, et cetera are putting pressure on him not to give up control because he would be giving up the control of the entire Tigray people." This rings true of the TPLF today.

This is what makes the Ethiopian unrest so significant—and potentially dangerous. At the heart of the protests is the fundamental question of how to build a modern nation state on the back of ethnic fault lines that have been exploited over centuries. Through its formula of ethnic federalism and revolutionary democracy the EPRDF has merely succeeded in repeating the errors of its predecessors through different means. In many respects the state-building question has gone unresolved; Ethiopia'scrisis is largely an existential one. In the coming weeks Hailemariam Desalegn will likely attempt peace by announcing a redistribution of government investments. Most—if not all—political and economic power will remain vested in the TPLF. While this may quell the protests for a time, without genuine attention to the country's conflicting institutional and ideological challenges—central to which is the dominance of the TPLF and the Tigray—the situation is likely to get worse before it gets better. Allthat is at stake, is everything.

Ethiopian PM bows to Merkel pressure over electoral reforms

By Conor Gaffey, Newsweek October 12, 2016

Ethiopia's prime minister has pledged to reform the country's one-partyelectoral system after pressure from German Chancellor Angela Merkel.

Merkel visited the Horn of Africa country on Tuesday at the conclusion of athree-legged Africa tour, which also included Mali and Niger. The visit came at a tense period in Ethiopia, where the government declared a six- month state of emergency on Sunday following months of deadly protestsby members of the country's two largest ethnic groups.

The country's parliament is completely dominated by a coalition headedby the ruling Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front, which controls all 524 parliamentary seats along with a coalition partner.

“We want to reform the electoral system so the voices of those who are not represented can also be heard in parliament,” said Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn at a joint conference with Merkel, AFP reported. “Our democratization process is still nascent. It’s fledgling...We want to go further in opening up political space and engagement with civilsociety groups.”

Merkel had told Hailemariam that a “vibrant democracy needs opposition,it needs free media.” Internet access has reportedly been blocked across many parts of the country and Ethiopia’s press is severely restricted, withthe country ranked 142 out of 180 in the 2016 Press Freedom Index of international NGO Reporters Without Borders.

The German chancellor also touched on anti-government protests thathave rocked Ethiopia in recent months. Demonstrations began in November 2015 among members of the Oromo ethnic group, the country’s largest tribe, in relation to plans to expand the capital AddisAbaba and potentially evict Oromo farmers living on the fringes of thecapital.

The Ethiopian government abandoned the plans in January, but the protests have snowballed into opposition towards brutality by the securityforces. Human Rights Watch said in June that security forces had killed more than 400 people during the protests, and there have been further incidents since then.

Amnesty International stated that almost 100 people died when Ethiopiansecurity forces used live bullets on protesters in Bahir Dar, capital of the Amhara region and home to the country’s second-largest ethnic group.
Earlier in October, more than 50 people died in a stampede at a religiousfestival in Oromia, which protesters blamed on heavy-handedness by security forces but which the government said was due to unspecified “violent forces.”

Merkel said that the Ethiopian government should hold “open talks” withprotesters and offered Ethiopian police training from the German interiorministry on the use of appropriate force in dealing with demonstrations.

Hailemariam, who admitted on Tuesday that the death toll from the protests “could be more than 500,” promised the government would do “everything in its disposal” to investigate police brutality. But he added that the country had a right to “engage with extremist violent groups in aproportionate manner,” the BBC reported.

Following the declaration of a state of emergency, Ethiopia’s governmentaccused foreign actors including groups in Egypt and Eritrea of backing the protests, claims denied by both countries.

Ethiopia's State of Emergency:
‘The Last Sequence of a Brutal Authoritarian Regime'?
October 13, 2016

The Ethiopian Council of Ministers has declared a six-month state of emergency following a series of deadly anti-government protests in theOromia and Amhara regions, a move that some Ethiopians online have characterized as dangerous and desperate.

Demonstrations have regularly taken place in Oromia since November 2015. They originally began as a response to a government plan to expand the capital city Addis Ababa into Oromia's surrounding farmlands. But the protests soon grew to demand greater self-rule, freedom and respect for the ethnic identity of the Oromo people, who have experiencedsystematic marginalization and persecution over the last quarter century.

Authorities have used deadly force against protesters. At least 52 peoplewere killed recently at a gathering for the Irreecha holiday in Oromia, after security forces firing smoke bombs and live bullets triggered a stampede.

A similar movement is also happening in Amhara. Both represent a challenge to the dominance of the Tigray ethnic group in Ethiopia's politics. The Tigray make up 6% of the population, but have an overwhelming hold on power in the country, while the Oromos, who are the country's largest ethnic group, representing 34%, and the Amharas at27% have very little representation in key government positions.

The declaration of a state of emergency came around the same time as ashutdown of all mobile internet services in the country lasting at least seven days. The movements have relied on social media to organize protests and to bring their message to international audiences.

The state of emergency has been widely condemned. The Association forHuman Rights in Ethiopia has asked the Ethiopian government to stop using the state of emergency as a pretext to the escalating human rightsviolations in the country. However, Ethiopian Prime Minister HailemariamDesalegn has said the state of emergency “will not breach basic human rights enshrined under the Ethiopian constitution and won't also affect diplomatic rights listed under the Vienna Convention.” Reacting to the declaration, Ethiopian human rights activist Soleyana noted: At a news conference on Monday, October 10, 2016, the TPLF [Tigrayan People's Liberation Front] regime’s spokesperson, Getachew Reda, denied there was a locally organized uprising in the country. Instead, he singled out Eritrea and Egypt as sources of backing for “armed gangs. The state of emergency a “comical show” and pointed out that this is the last card of the Tigrayan People's Liberation Front (TPLF):

Editor’s Note: In 2011, during the Libyan uprising, the leader Colonel Muammar Al Gaddafi was asked about the rebellion engulfing the country to get rid of his regime. Gaddafi’s response was purely self-deception. He said “I am loved by all my people, and there are no protests in Tripoli.” Healso said true Libyans had not demonstrated against me but those who had come on to the streets were under the influence of drugs supplied by al-Qaeda and they are thugs and mercenaries.

Human Right Watch

Europe to take tough action against Ethiopia

By Marthe van der Wolf, VOA October 13, 2016

At a European Parliament subcommittee meeting on human rights anddevelopment, Human Rights Watch called on the European Union and international community to take strong action against Ethiopia.

The international community has largely looked the other way when it comes to human rights abuses and limits to the freedom of expression inEthiopia, according to international human rights groups.

HRW senior researcher Felix Horne says he believes there is an unwillingness to address hard issues with Ethiopia because it has strongrelationships with its international allies on development, migration and security.

“The European Union should be taking much stronger action on Ethiopia, should be pushing for an international investigation; it should be pushing for special U.N. investigators to be allowed into the country - 11 of whichhave outstanding invites," Horne said. " And it should be pushing Ethiopiato release all of those arbitrarily detained during the protests.”

Protests for wider political freedoms have been ongoing and led to the Ethiopian government's recent declaration of a six-month state of emergency for the first time in more than 20 years. Ethiopia is the largestrecipient of EU assistance. The European Union adopted a resolution last January condemning violence used by Ethiopian security forces.

Merkel visit criticized

German Chancellor Angela Merkel visited Ethiopia this week. Although sherefused to speak at the Ethiopian parliament for its lack of opposition members, she urged the government to open up the political space.

EU Parliament member Ana Gomes led an observer mission during Ethiopia's contested and bloody 2005 elections. She describes Merkel'sdecision to go to Ethiopia as regrettable.

“It was important the message she passed that indeed there must be dialogue and open space for opposition and activists and critics of the government to exist," Gomes said. "That is a weak message nevertheless,because of course Germany has tremendous responsibilities in the positionof the EU toward Ethiopia.”

People in Ethiopia's Oromia region started protesting an urban expansion plan last year. The demonstrations have spread across the country and led to more than 500 deaths, according to rights groups. Ethiopia said thisweek foreign groups are stoking unrest in an attempt to overthrow the government.

US worries over the state of emergency decree in Ethiopia

US State Department October 13, 2016

The United States takes note of the Government of Ethiopia’s October 8 declaration of a State of Emergency in response to recent protests and violence in the Oromia and Amhara regions. We are troubled by the potential impact of the decision to authorize detention without a warrantand to further limit freedom of expression, including by blocking Internetaccess, prohibiting public gatherings, and imposing curfews. This declaration, if implemented in these ways, would further enshrine the typeof response that has failed to ameliorate the recent political crisis.

Political pluralism and respect for fundamental freedoms are essential to addressing the legitimate grievances of protesters and other Ethiopians. We reiterate our longstanding call for the Government of Ethiopia to respect its citizens’ constitutionally guaranteed freedoms of expression and association, and to release those detained for peacefully exercising those rights. Arresting and silencing independent and critical voices is self-defeating and will lead to greater polarization, and makes it harder to find a solution acceptable to all Ethiopians.

We strongly encourage everyone to refrain from committing further actsof violence in Ethiopia. Peaceful dialogue is the path to resolution of Ethiopia’s need for reform. Too many innocent lives have already been lost and too much destruction has already taken place.

We welcome President Mulatu’s October 10 address to Parliament committing the government to addressing some of these grievances - such as land rights, electoral reform, and recognition of the special interest of the Oromia region in the city of Addis Ababa. We encourage the government to act on these commitments decisively and quickly, andurge it to undertake further comprehensive reforms with the goal of opening political space and ensuring respect for fundamental freedoms and the democratic rights enshrined in the Constitution of Ethiopia. We also note the Prime Minister’s commitment that the state of emergency will not breach human rights protected by the Ethiopian constitution.

Ex-minister claims late dictator denigrated the Oromos as“narrow-minded”

ESAT News (October 13, 2016)

A former minister and President of the Oromo region of Ethiopia (2001 to2005) said the late dictator Meles Zenawi had prejudicially labelled the Oromo people as “narrow-minded”.

Junedin Sado said in an exclusive interview with ESAT that Zenawi, the late Tigrian strongman, had come up with a document labeling Oromos asnarrow-minded. He said the cadres of the Oromo People's Democratic Organization (OPDO), one of the satellite parties operating under the ruling EPRDF, were outraged and had demanded the document to be collected and destroyed.

Sado who defected four years ago and lives in exile in the US, said members of the coalition on several occasion confronted the late primeminister Meles Zenawi on Tigrian supremacy and the privilege givento the TPLF businesses.

According to Junedin Sado, Zenawi was once asked why EFFORT, the business conglomerate of the TPLF, was given special privileges but the prime minister dismissed the issue as unfounded. “He told us that EFFORTwas set up with money earned selling sacks,” he said.

Junedin said the 2005 elections in which the opposition Coalition for Unityand Democracy won in a landslide has been the most difficult time for theruling TPLF. He confessed that he and other high ranking officials had lostfair and square in that election.
There has been a rise in defections of Oromo officials and army commanders in the last few years as the Oromos, the largest ethnic groupin the country, have been subjected political and economic marginalization.

Sado also served as minister of four departments in the current regimebefore he went to exile four years ago. He was the minister of civil service, science and technology and transport and communications.

Ethiopian News update:
Over 1000 Ethiopian prisoners in Yemen freed by unknown forces

(ESAT) October 13, 2013
Yemen authorities say over 1000 Ethiopian inmates in a prison in Shabwatown in northern part of the country are freed in an apparent coordinatedoperation by unknown armed groups and taken to a different location, according to Ethiopian Satellite Television.

Intelligence authorities are said to have told media in Yemen that freedEthiopians are taken to Marib and Bayda region of Yemen.

These areas are reportedly under the influence of al-qaeda. There seem tobe a precedence that terrorists use freed inmates for war.

Ethiopians were arrested on alleged grounds of illegal presence in Yemen.Claimant refugees often times face abuse in the hands of police and arreston grounds of “illegal presence” while it is clear that claimant refugees could not possess legal documents when they are running away from Ethiopia.

ESAT report indicated that Yemen intelligence authorities avoided disclosing details as to why Ethiopians are taken to these towns. Hundredsof thousands of Ethiopians are believed to live in Yemen. Even at a time when Yemen is living ravaging civil war that involved powers in the region,among others, Ethiopians still flee to Yemen to escape desperate political and economic situation in Ethiopia. Ethiopia failing on human rights

africanews October 14, 2016

Ethiopia’s rulers have redoubled a repressive policy that is failing. Insteadof looking for ways to alleviate the pent-up frustrations of the ethnic Oromo and Amhara populations that spilt out in demonstrations over the past 11 months, a six-month state of emergency has been announced, allowing the deployment of troops and bans on protests.

The latest confrontation was tragic and emblematic of the Government’s wrong-headed use of force. On October 2, in Bishoftu, a town 25 miles southeast of Addis Ababa, an enormous crowd gathered to celebrate Irreecha, the festival that marks the end of the rainy season and onset ofthe harvest.

Since last November, protests have been rising among Ethiopia’s approximately 40 million ethnic Oromos, fuelled by anger over plans for reallocating their land, political disenfranchisement and detention of opposition activists. Antigovernment chants began at the festival and security forces responded with teargas. In previous protests, teargas has foreshadowed live ammunition. When the teargas in Bishoftu was followedby the sound of gunshots, panic ensued. Many people were killed when they fell into deep trenches and drowned or were trampled.

According to Human Rights Watch, Ethiopian forces have killed more than500 people during protests in the past year.

In announcing the state of emergency, Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn blamed “anti-peace forces” and “foreign enemies”, whom heclaimed are trying to destabilise Ethiopia.

But Ethiopia’s human rights abuses and political repression must be addressed frontally by the United States and Europe, no longer shunted tothe back burner because of co-operation fighting terrorism.

ETHIOPIA: Opposition Wants 'Real Change' But Views on Tactics Differ

By Jill Craig, VOA October 14, 2016

NAIROBI — Insisting the demonstrations in Ethiopia’s Oromia region during the past year are a mass movement, not just two or three protestgroups, Merera Gudina, the chairman of Ethiopia’s opposition Oromo Federalist Congress, is calling for the government to listen to the people'sdemands.

“Our struggle, until a democratic state is created in the country, a politicalsystem that accommodates for all the citizens in the country, is created, we continue our struggle,” said Gudina. “Whatever the cost may be.”

He says the government has been using "carrot and stick" tactics. PrimeMinister Hailemariam Desalegn has promised political reforms, which Gudina says are “too little, too late." Desalegn also announced a six- month national state of emergency to restore order.

Recent violent protests have targeted mostly foreign-owned businesses, burning and damaging almost a dozen factories and flower farms, and anestimated 60 vehicles across the Oromia region. An American researcherwas killed near Addis Ababa when her car was attacked.

Rights groups such as Amnesty International have accused security forcesof using excessive force to put down the protests.

During the recent thanksgiving celebration in early October at least 55 people were killed in a stampede when police fired tear gas and shots intothe air. In August, protests in the Oromia and Amhara regions left dozensdead and hundreds injured after Ethiopian security forces allegedly opened fire on unarmed anti-government protesters.

Several requests by VOA for a response from the Ethiopiancommunications minister were not answered.

Disagreement on credibility

Rashid Abdi, Horn of Africa analyst for the International Crisis Group, saysviolence is counterproductive to the protest movement.

“Yes, I think, in these kind of protests, you know, more militant elementstend to take actions necessary without the interests of others, and I thinkthe turn of events in probably the last three weeks, has really dented theimage of the protest movement and undermined their credibility,” said Abdi.

Gudina disagrees.
“I don’t think that it is losing credibility. It is probably the fabrication of the government and some Western media. Otherwise, really, it is a popular movement; across the country people are refusing to be ruled inthe old way,” said Gudina. “I don’t think it is losing any credibility in the eyes of the people of Ethiopia.”

Elise Dufief is the research and monitoring manager at transparency groupPublish What You Fund, who did her PhD work on Ethiopia. Dufief said political and opposition parties have a role to play in turning frustrations into a constructive political force.

“Because whenever violence occurs in that way, it gives another reason tothe government to say, ‘You see, these are distracting forces. We cannot really have a discussion or a dialogue with them. We cannot have a constructive discussion to see how we can identify the way forward. All wecan do is reassert our authority and make sure that these people do not have a voice in the political sphere of the country.’ So that is not helping their case,” said Dufief.

Dufief added the protesters are trying these different tactics in an attemptto make their voices heard.
But regardless of tactics, Gudina said protesters know what they want inthe end.

“Now people want real change, you know, real change on the ground, realchange in the tangible things, but not empty promises,” said Gudina.

The protests began in November 2015 over a government plan to expand the boundaries of the capital, Addis Ababa. Issues have since expanded toinclude human rights, political representation, and political participation.

Ethiopian PM to initiate inclusive political dialogue quickly

-Federica Mogherini, EU Foreign Affairs and Security Policy chiefOctober 15, 2016
The High Representative of the European Union (EU) for Foreign Affairs and Security Policy, Federica Mogherini, has tasked the Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn to respect democratic principles and civilrights in the country.

Mogherini, who is also Vice-President of the European Commission said there was the need to initiate an inclusive political dialogue within the shortest possible time. The dialogue ‘‘will require space, not restriction,”an EU statement said.

She further underlined the need for transparency and determined engagement by the government to respond to the grievances of the population. The EU said it expected the opening up of the democratic space, and respect of fundamental freedoms.

The two leaders, spoke in a phone call, where they discussed developments in the country – particularly the recently imposed six-monthstate of emergency.

The EU chief expressed concern over the curfew imposed on October 9 and its possible effect on democratic principles and civil rights of citizens.The Prime Minister on his part assured that the state of emergency will not breach human rights protected by the Ethiopian constitution.

The PM had earlier this week assured that plans were underway for electoral reforms and the EU further urged that necessary political reformsare conducted to achieve this goal.

Mogherini also emphasized that talks between the government and opposition if done expeditiously will provide an inclusive economy withbenefits for all, notably the youth.

Ethiopia: Mattress factory blazed near Addis Ababa

October 15, 2016

Royal Foam Spring Mattress and Plastic Manufacturing Enterprise, locatedin the south west outskirts of Addis Ababa, is blazed after it caught fire this morning.

From company profile, the company is established and owned by, EyobNigussie.

Ethiopia is under state of emergency since last week for a period of sixmonths. In a breaking news coverage ESAT claims that it has verified from its sources that the arson on the factory is related to the ongoingpopular protest in the country.

If the claim is true, chances are the owner has relation with the rulingTigray People’s Liberation Front in one way or another.

Citizen report on social media indicate that there has been an intense gunfire in the area and huge presence of security forces. Although extentof causality is not known at this point in time, the factory is completely destroyed.

Ethiopian Broadcasting Corporation and pro-regime media outlets did notcover the news so far. At least eleven factories are reportedly burned in small towns close to the capital Addis Ababa in connection with the popular protest but became more rife after nearly 700 Ethiopians were killed during Ireecha, religious festival, celebration in the town of Bishoftu(Debre Zeit)

State TV recently reported that the country’s ceremonial president, MulatuTeshome, visited factories attacked by protesters and disclosed that all forms of support will be given owners of those factories. The statement is blurry -perhaps for a reason. In addition to tax adjustments, the regime could arrange loan for these “investors.”

For years, scathing attack on local investors is grounded on that fact thatregime facilitated bank loan from state banks, primarily Commercial Bankof Ethiopia, in a fraudulent and corrupt ways. The regime admitted that the system is corrupted and that it is working on “in-depth renewal”

TPLF Erases Ethiopia from World Map by Criminalizing the Internet
By Ethiomedia October 16, 2016

Staring a nationwide uprising in the eye, the ruling party TPLF has comeup with a severely harsh and stringent law so much that it's a crime to gaze at a Facebook page or exchange emails. Watching satellite TV programs carry harsh prison sentences; opposition parties are prohibitedfrom making political statements that could easily be interpreted as attempts to incite violence, and hence subject to years in prison.

Even diplomats are not spared of TPLF's chainsaw decree. Members of thediplomatic corps are warned to remain within 25 miles (40 km) of radius of the Ethiopian capital of Addis. In short, TPLF has - instead of paving theway for a smooth transfer of power as per the demand of the majority of the Ethiopian people - chosen to plunge the country into the depths of utter darkness so that it would remain in power indefinitely.

The details are too restrictive it is not an overstatement to say the rulingparty has erased Ethiopia from the World Map by criminalizing Internet and satellite TV services.

The draconian law is aimed at severely curtailing, and if possible, crushingthe nationwide uprising that has threatened to topple the TPLF regime, 25years in power and vowing to remain in power indefinitely even at the costof exposing the country to ethnic conflict and break-up.

Security Forces in serious border face off

Author: Samuel Karanja

- Ethiopian soldiers on Sunday, October 16 entered into Kenya andsorrounded a village

- The about 100 foreign soldiers said they were looking formilitants who killed police officers in Ethiopia

Fear engulfed a village in Northeastern Kenya after Ethiopian forces whohad crossed over the border surrounded it.

The Nation reports that the more than 100 foreign forces from the neigbouring country arrived at Golole village in Marsabit surrounding itand causing fear among residents.

The attack happens days after Ethiopia declared a six months state ofemergency period following weeks of protests majorly by the majorityOromo community.

The Ethiopian forces struck on Sunday, October 16 at around 3 pm. The foreign forces alleged they were after militants from the Oromo LiberationFront (OLF) whom they said had killed police officers in their country.

The village is situated about 9 km west of Sololo police station. As a result, the Kenya Defence Forces based at Oda Camp have been deployedto Sololo police station.

It is not yet known what the instructions are but the fact that the village isonly 9 kilometres from where the KDF personnel has been deployed means the Kenyan is closely monitoring the situation. This is not the first time for Ethiopian forces to cross over to Kenya reportedly to pursue the OLF militants.

In 2015, they crossed over to Kenya, shot and killed three police officersin an ambush, destroyed a police vehicle, and siezed four fire arms. In total, Ethiopian forces crossed over five times in 2015.

The OLF was established in 1973 to push for self governance of the Oromia region in Ethiopia but the Ethiopian government have declined tohear none of that. Apart from being opposed to the Ethiopian regime, theOLF claims that the majority Oromia- speaking people who include the Borana also found in Kenya have been marginalised.

Ethiopian Government declares using Social Media is a crime.

October 15, 2016

"Ethiopian Government" declared today that Opening FACEBOOK, Listening Voice of America (VoA) and German Radio (DW), Watching Aljazeera TV, ESAT TV, OMN and accessing and opening Social media is acrime in the country. As broadcasted today, Militray command post will take action for those seeing and watching these media outlets. This is veryshame for Obama administration because Obama had made statement to the "Ethiopian Parliament"

"I don't bite my tongue too much when it comes to these issues. We are opposed to anygroup that is promoting the violent overthrow of a government, including the government of Ethiopia, that has been democratically elected. We are very mindful of Ethiopia's history – the hardships that this country has gone through. It has been relatively recently in which the constitution that was formed and the elections put forward a democratically elected government. U.S. President Barack Obama, Press conference in Addis Ababa 27 July 2015".

This is an empty talk of Obama. How this leader is leading America? Whythey are helping this rogue regime in Ethiopia? Is there any change fromAmerica, German and UK about the definition of freedom and Democracyin Horn of Africa? There is a famous Ethiopian proverb, «Don't catch a leopard by the tail, but if you do, don't let it go.» We the young generation will not cease our struggle until we get our freedom.

Progress in Ethiopia can come only from unity, not ethnic rivalry Letter to the Editor: The letter was originally published by the The Washington Post October 17, 2016

The October 11 World article “Ethiopia imposes state of emergency amidunrest” highlighted the widespread and proactive dissent that the undemocratic government is facing and the desperate measures it is taking. The situation is a consequence of the ruling party’s 25 years of dominance and its brutal suppression of human rights and political opposition.

Every segment of Ethiopian society, regardless of ethnic affiliation, has been victimized by the government’s unfair and misguided policies. The people of Ethiopia, therefore, in unison, are saying enough to a quarter- century of abuse. That is the reason there are active opposition movements throughout the country. This should not overshadow, however, the destructive presence of secessionist groups and liberation fronts that will further threaten Ethiopia’s unity and stability. Such groupsand their agendas will add only unmanageable chaos to the situation.

The current popular movement can become effective only if it is channeled through a unifying, not a separatist, leadership. The people of Ethiopia are demanding that type of leadership to bring a sustainable, democratic change to their nation. Promoting and fighting for the interests of a single ethnic group will never be the solution for Ethiopia’s persistentpolitical problems. Unity is the key to establishing freedom, equality and justice.

In Ethiopia, that resentment seems to be growing by the day
By JEFFREY GETTLEMAN October 17, 2016

The trouble started last year when members of Ethiopia’s largest ethnicgroup, the Oromo, began protesting government land policies. Soon Ethiopia’s second largest ethnic group, the Amhara, joined in, and the protests have now hardened into calls to overthrow the government, which is led by a small ethnic minority.
If you track the news coming out of Ethiopia, you would not be a fool tothink it is two totally different countries. One day, there is a triumphantpicture of a new electric train, with Chinese conductors standing next toshiny carriages. (China remains a huge investor in Ethiopia.) The next, there are grisly images of dead bodies that witnesses said were people gunned down by the police.

Several witnesses said the security forces might be beginning to split, withsome officers taking off their uniforms and joining the protests.

The most recent economic data shows Africa’s growth slowing because of political instability and a global slump in commodity prices. Morten Jerven,a Norwegian economic historian who has studied statistics from across Africa, argues that the growth was never as robust as had been believed.

He said that the economic indicators for many African economies in the 1990s and early 2000s were inaccurate, and that the economic progressin the last five to 10 years that appeared to have been sudden was, in fact, gradual.

In other cases, Mr. Jerven said, African governments made bold economicassumptions or simply used fake numbers to make themselves look good.“The narrative had been too rosy,” he said.

Africa Yearning or Africa Struggling might be a more apt characterization,but neither of these is especially new. Whatever narrative emerges shouldinclude what Mr. Chelwa calls the continent’s “ghastly inequality,” and thesharp increase in the number of people who are now better equipped withtechnology and information and are demanding more from their governments.

Of course, it is difficult to apply a sweeping narrative to all 54 countries inAfrica, where analysts agree that the picture is mixed. For instance, Rwanda remains stable with new businesses and floods of tourists whileits neighbor Burundi teeters on the edge of chaos.

Some of the same economic factors that investors cite as grounds for optimism, like Africa’s growing cities, cut both ways. According to Mr. Jerven, rapid urbanization in Africa often leads to sprawling slums, low wages and legions of disenfranchised youth. “All the economic variablesfor turmoil are there,” he said.

Mass arrests in Ethiopia's Oromia region days after state of emergencydeclared

By Ludovica Iaccino October 18, 2016

At least 1,000 people have been arrested in Ethiopia, which declared a nationwide state of emergency on 9 October due to ongoing anti-government protests. The massarrest occurred in Sebeta town, near the capital Addis Ababa.

Those arrested were accused of carrying out violence and damaging properties. Earlier in October, anti-government protesters attacked public buildings, companies and firms, including foreign ones, in Oromia. "Among the detainees, natives of the town are not more than 40 and 50. Majority of the detainees came from other areas of Oromia Regional State," the Sebeta mayor Ararsa Merdasa, was quoted as sayingby the state-affiliated Fana Broadcasting Corporate.

He added that the authorities would release anyone found innocent, but said more arrests were expected. The remarks came as an investors' peace conference startedin Sebeta. Investors expressed concern over recent violence and called on the authorities to ensure long-lasting peace and security.

The mass arrest came shortly after Ethiopia disclosed new rules to be observed under the state of emergency, expected to last for the next six months. Among otherthings, diplomats cannot travel more than 40km (25m) outside of Addis Ababa without official permission.

People are also barred from contacting individuals and groups that the state has labelled terrorists and from watching media channels including Oromia Media Network and Ethiopian Satellite Television and Radio. Demonstrators first took to thestreets of Oromia in November 2015 to voice their dissent against a government draftplan that aimed to expand the boundaries of the capital.

They argued the so-called "Addis Ababa master plan" would lead to the forced evictions of Oromo farmers and would undermine the survival of the Oromo culture and language. The Ethiopian government scrapped the master plan, following increasing agitation. Protests are continuing, with people calling for self-rule, the liberation of political prisoners and the end of what they perceive to be a military regime in the region. This includes an end to an alleged crackdown by security forceson "peaceful and unarmed" demonstrators, mainly students and farmers.
Human Rights Watch (HRW) and other rights groups have claimed that the security forces killed at least 100 people in the Amhara region during anti-government protests held in August. The government denied the allegations of violence. Protestserupted in Amhara after thousands took to the streets of Gondar and Bahir Dar to protest over the administration of disputed territories.

Members of the Welkait Tegede community demanded their lands be administeredby the Amhara region, instead of the Tigray state. Protesters, who identify themselves as ethnically Amhara – Ethiopia's second largest group – clashed with police during the demonstrations, labelled as the biggest anti-government unrest Ethiopia has witnessed in recent history.

On Monday, President Teshome told parliament, where no opposition party is represented, that the electoral system needs to be altered so that non-governmentMPs are elected.

Ethiopian Patriotism: The Patriot Weyzero Abebech!

Although I've written about Weyzero Abebech in the past, I've come across another picture of this Patriotic Ethiopian woman and wanted to share. In this picture you cansee her traditional Ethiopian tattoos (niQisa/TuQurat) on her neck as well as her Ethiopian Orthodox Christian cross on the back of her hand. Weyzero Abebech is armed with a pistol Luger LP.08 ready to protect Ethiopia from the fascist Italians, Askari's of Eritrea and Somal...ia as well as homegrown bandas.

When the fascist of Italy, Mussolini, sent his Italian men to Ethiopia, the bravedaughters of Ethiopia were there to protect it's dignity.

Weyzero Abebech was the wife of a senior officer in the Ethiopian army. After seeingher husband on the front, she decided that she would not simply cry and pray. Like many daughters of Ethiopia in the past, she opted to protect Ethiopia.

She actively began the creation of the "Ethiopian Women's Military Movement" in Addis Abeba and urged the wives and mothers of soldiers to work to supply the army,care for the wounded and assistant the refugees.

Weyzero Abebech was well known internationally. Newspapers in the United Stateswould write articles about her and her patriotism. Newspapers in Texas, Pennsylvania, California and other places would speak of her bravery.

The famous American military journalist Paula LeCler, having taken an interview withWeyzero Abebech, took some pictures of the 'bold Ethiopian woman' with her horse while dressed in Ethiopian army uniform, armed with a German self-loading " Borchardt - Luger " and a gun .

In 1935 she began a speech with a direct message to the daughters of Ethiopia: "Sisters, we need to study military science, learn how to fight with a rifle, a machinegun, a knife, so we can help our loved ones fight against the cruel enemy". ProtectEthiopia.

Seven things banned under Ethiopia's state of emergency

(BBC) Ethiopia's government has declared a six-month state of emergency in theface of an unprecedented wave of violent protests.

Activists in the country's Oromia region has been holding demonstrations since last November, and protesters from the Amhara region have also joined in. The deaths ofat least 55 people at an Oromo religious festival on 2 October triggered fresh unrest,including the targeting of some foreign-owned businesses.

Rights groups say that at least 500 people have died during the protests overall andlast week Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn said that could be an accurate estimate. The emergency was announced earlier this month but the government hasnow made clear what this means in practical terms. Here are some of the things thatare restricted:

1. Social media

You cannot use social media, such as Facebook and Twitter, to contact what are called "outside forces". In fact, any attempt to communicate with "terrorist organisations and anti-peace groups designated as terrorist" is banned. Protestershave been posting messages and mobile phone footage to social media and websites run by Ethiopian dissidents living abroad. The government has accused Eritrea and Egypt of fomenting the protests.

2. Broadcast Media

You cannot watch the TV channels Esat and OMN, which are both based outside the country. The government has described them as "belonging toterrorist organisations". These broadcasters have become some of the major sources for people wanting to know more about the protests.

3. Protests

You cannot organise a demonstration at your school or university, neithercan you be involved in a political campaign that is "likely to cause disturbances, violence, hatred and distrust among the people". University campuses were among the first places to be hit by the wave of anti- government protests.

4. Gestures

You cannot make a political gesture, such as crossing your arms above your head, orcommunicate a political message to the public "without permission". The crossing- arms gesture has been seen widely at the protests in Oromia, and even made it to the Olympics when marathon runner Feyisa Lilesa used it as he crossed the line in second place in Rio in August.

5. Curfew

You cannot visit a factory, farm or governmental institution between 6pm and 6amthe next day. If you violate the curfew than "law enforcement bodies have been authorised to take the necessary action". Government buildings and private businesses, some of them foreign owned, have been deliberately targeted by someof the protesters.

6. Diplomats

If you are a diplomat you are not allowed to travel more than 40km (25 miles) from the capital, Addis Ababa, without permission. The governmentsays that this is for your own safety. In general, the diplomatic reaction tothe protests and the state of emergency has been muted. The US has said that it is "troubled" by any restrictions on the freedom of expression in the state of emergency, but, like other western powers has called for peaceful dialogue to solve the country's problems. Ethiopia is a close ally of the US against Islamist militancy in neighbouring Somalia.

7. Guns

If you have a gun, you cannot take it within 25km of the country's main roads out of Addis Ababa, and within 50km of the country's borders, evenif you have a permit to carry it.

Ethiopia limits diplomats' movements, media access

AFP October 19, 2016

Ethiopia has banned access to foreign-based opposition media and restricted foreigndiplomats' travel, in new provisions of a state of emergency.

The government declared the six-month state of emergency eight daysago, stepping up its response to an unprecedented wave of protests against its authoritarian rule which has left hundreds dead.

New restrictions published in local media on Sunday also include a 50- kilometre (30-mile) "red zone" adjacent to the country's borders in which it is illegal to carry firearms. The areas around several key roads have alsobeen declared red zones.

Foreign diplomats are forbidden from travelling more than 40 kilometresoutside the capital, Addis Ababa, "for their own security". "This is a stateof emergency and we expect repressive measures," a Western diplomat told AFP on condition of anonymity on Monday.

"But we also expect an opening of the political space for the opposition as stated by the president in front of the parliament. This is not what seems to be happening," the diplomat added. UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moonis following developments in Ethiopia "with concern", his spokesman said Monday. The UN chief urged Ethiopian authorities to uphold human rights and called for calm and urged "inclusive dialogue to resolve all grievances."

The new measures include a 6:00 pm to 6:00 am curfew around factories,farms and government institutions, which have come under attack from protesters in recent weeks.

Political parties are "banned from giving press statements that inciteviolence" and religious leaders are forbidden from making political statements.

Security forces are banned from going on holiday or resigning their jobs.The measures also make it illegal to watch television stations set up by the diaspora such as Ethiopian Satellite Television (ESAT) and the US- based Oromia Media Network (OMN). Posting links from these organisations' websites onto social media has also been declared a "criminal activity".

Cellphone internet access has been cut for almost three weeks in most parts of the country, including the capital. "There is a pressing concern that the Ethiopian authorities will need even less of a pretext to prevent foreign journalists from doing their work during the state of emergency,"said Will Davison, head of the Foreign Press Association, an informal gathering of foreign correspondents in Ethiopia.

On Friday an AFP photographer was stopped in the central town of Sebeta
-- in the restive Oromia region -- and taken to the police station beforebeing released.

The country's Oromo and Amhara communities -- which together make up60 percent of the population -- have been protesting for nearly a year against marginalisation by a government largely made up of minority Tigrayans, which controls power and the economy.

The latest surge in violence came after police fired tear gas at protestersattending an Oromo religious festival on October 2, sparking panic in a massive crowd and triggering a stampede that left over 50 dead.

International rights groups estimate the government crackdown has left more than 500 dead. Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn promised lastweek to reform the electoral system and "open up political space".

ETHIOPIA: Semhal, Zenawi’s daughter unveiled acrimony withinTigray Peoples Liberation Front party session

October 20,2016

Secrecy is core attribute that characterize Tigray People’s Liberation Frontpolitical tradition- among many other things. However, as much as it is secretive, its political moves are usually predictable even for an average political minds with modest familiarity to Ethiopian politics. Simple observation of analysis in various Ethiopian sites and social media suggests so.

Perhaps what is strange in view of its secretive workings is that the partyhas always been vulnerable to information leaks; most often, and ostensibly, attributed to the works of infiltrators. However, TPLF has shown astuteness to exploit its weakness to its own advantage in some sense. Occasionally, and in time of crisis like situations,it incline towards the idea of exploiting public sensitivity to information leaks by way of disseminating information about bogus internal schisms within the party.That can divert attention at least for days if not for weeks, even months.

Rumors of wranglings after the death of Meles Zenawi,however, does seem to hold some truth. In a short video released on social media today,Semhal Meles , daughter of the late Meles Zenawi, unveiled a glimpse of rivalry from within and what the rivalry is about when she posed a question during what it seem to be a party forum.

Political development that led to deceleration of state of emergency apparently lured the party to invite veteran TPLF (and EPRDF?) politburo members to assume position in the politburo again. Party decision was justified, according to Zenawi's daughter, on grounds of vacuum, presumably manpower and administrative, within the party. However, younger members in the party opposed the decision during party congressand recommended the gap be filled from the younger generation, says Semhal. It was in that way that people like the 80 years old Sebhat Nega,among others, reappeared as executives in the politburo. Zenawi's daughter seem to think that the party owes them explanation. Of course when Semhal make a case for the youth , inversely against former TPLF executives, she is not making a case for bright and patriotic young Ethiopians outside of the party. She was perhaps making a case for youthfrom TPLF oligarchy like herself.

What came to the fore front along with her first question is identities of cliques that are fighting from within over power. In that line, acrimony is on the matter as to whether it is the party or the government that should be subject to performance evaluation. TPLF figures like Kassa Tekle Birhan(he is poised as ANDM member rather and apparently Zenawi's wife is behind him) argue for party evaluation over government evaluation whereas figures like Bereket Simon (he too is poised as ANDM member) and Sebhat Nega prioritize government evaluation over party evaluation.

Semhal accuses the latter for choosing government evaluation over party evaluation and she thinks that it is to protect their power within the party.A politicized Ethiopian in the opposition quarter will certainly, and rightly, trivialize the matter as there is no practical distinction between the party and government.For that matter, there is no opposition voice in the parliament in Ethiopia.

In any case, if the information in the released video is to be absorbed cautiously, the merits of it lies in that it confirms and spells out divisionfrom within, what it is about and as to who the rival groups are. Writtenby Dimetros Birku. Can be reached on twitter: @dimetros

Ethiopia state of emergency affecting work of USembassy

Abdurahman Alfa Shaban October 21, 2016

The United States embassy in Addis Ababa has disclosed that the October9 state of emergency currently in force in Ethiopia severely affects their ability to assist US citizens.

One of the restrictions under the curfew is that diplomats for their ownsafety were to avoid travelling 40 kilometers outside the capital.

‘’…the decree restricts U.S. and other foreign diplomats from traveling 40 kilometers outside of Addis Ababa, which severely affects the ability of theConsular Section to assist U.S. Citizens,’‘ the embassy said.

The embassy in a release titled ‘Security Message for US Citizens: State ofEmergency’ reminded citizens that the decree implementing the state of emergency had been published on the official government website, hencethe need to observe all rules to avoid arrest.

Whiles tasking citizens to know and abide by the rules, they also warnedthat ‘‘citizens could be arrested for activities they would otherwise consider routine.

‘‘U.S. citizens should be aware that the decree also requires landlords toreport tenants’ identities to police, with a copy of their passport if the renter is a foreign national,’‘ they added.

They published the full text of the decree in English – in what they saidwas an unofficial translation because the original text is in Amharic.

Opposition groups and other western diplomats in the country have decried the the government’s decision to impose the state of emergency.The move has been described as a measure to continue with increased repression of opponents.

The government however blames the violence on “anti-peace forces” and “foreignenemies,” specifically Egypt and Djibouti, even though Egyptian president Al Sisi denied any involvement in the protests.

Ethiopia has since November last year suffered a series of protests in two main regions Coup attempt foiled in Burkina Faso, government announces– Amhara and Oromia. The attendant security clampdown has led to the arrests of over 2000 peopleand death of hundreds of protesters.

Vice News
“We don’t care if we get killed” protests in Ethiopia continue:

By David Gilbert Vice NewsOctober 21,2016

The Ethiopian government has declared a state of emergency in the country as it intensifies a crackdown on widespread anti-government protests born of frustration that’s been fomenting for decades. In the past two weeks alone, authorities have arrested thousands of protesters, overwhelmingly young people by some accounts.

In the unprecedented anti-government protests sweeping the country, thisweek alone has seen more than 2,600 people detained in the Oromia and Amhara regions, with 450 arrested in the capital Addis Ababa. Those detained include business owners who closed their shops and teachers who “abandoned their schools.” In June, Human Rights Watch reported that “tens of thousands” of protesters had been arrested since the unrest that began 11 months ago.
However, the number arrested is already likely much higher than the figure quoted by the government, according to Fisseha Tekle, the chief researcher for Amnesty International in Ethiopia. He told VICE News thatarrests are ongoing and that the focus is on younger people.

“They must have some list, the security forces, because they are not arresting everyone, but they really target the youths, because it is theyouths who have been protesting for the last year,” Tekle said. “They don’t arrest older people; students are the main target.”

US citizens advised to cancel non-essential travel to Ethiopia
October 21, 2016

US State Department issued travel advisory for its citizens in relation tothe situation in Ethiopia. This is for the second time when State Department issue travel advisory on Ethiopia in a matter of months.

Sharon Gray, post-doctoral researcher from UC Davis, was killed in Sebetaoutside of Addis Ababa early October when the van she was in was attacked-allegedly by protesters.

the advisory, US citizens are urged to defer non-essential travels toEthiopia apparently on grounds of what the statement described as“unrest” in the country.

The statement noted that thousands of arrests and the deaths of hundredsof civilians in Amhara and Oromia regions of Ethiopia.

Seemingly, prevailing security situation in Ethiopia is impacting the U.Sembassy in the delivery of consular services.

Statement advised US citizens to have alternative communication plans inlight of restrictions of internet, phone services and cellular data and to inform their family and friends that communication could be an issue in Ethiopia owing to “unrest.”

Unpredictability of communication in Ethiopia is underscored; Department of State “strongly” advised US citizens to register cellular phone number with the U.S.embassy in Addis Ababa to get information updates regardingsecurity and to enroll in “the Smart Traveler Enrollment Program (STEP)”

In addition, demonstrations and large gatherings are to be avoided andcitizens are urged to assess safety situation continuously.

Something strongly implied in the statement is that safety issue could arise as a result of measures taken by the government : “Remember thatthe government may use force and live fire in response to demonstrations, and that even gatherings intended to be peaceful can be met with a violent response or turn violent without warning. U.S. citizensin Ethiopia should monitor their security situation and have contingency plans in place in case you need to depart suddenly.”

State of emergency declared in Ethiopia on October 8, 2016 restricted,among many other things, movement of diplomats outside of 40 kilometers in all directions from the capital, Addis Ababa.

The Historic Ethiopia Hotel in the heart of Addis to be demolished

By Dimetros Birku, October 22,2016

Preservation of historical heritage is of crucial importance in urban planning. It is a norm everywhere. The principle is simple. Building a cityshould not come at the expense of structures that mean much for the country by virtue of their historical significance. And if identity matters, history matters too.

Addis Ababa City administration does not seem to get it. Perhaps, it is happening not because of lack of awareness on the importance of heritageand the need to preserve it but perhaps ethno-nationalists, for decades now,waged their wars against Ethiopia from within by exploiting government structures and public policy.

This time around the target is the historic Ethiopia hotel (pictured above).

As Addis Ababa became a hub for African diplomats in the 1960’s with theestablishment of organizations like Economic Commission for Africa and what was then Organization of African Union (now Africa Union), expansion of services including in hotel became a necessity to keep up with service demand.

Imperial government of Haileselassie responded to the situation. That is how Ethiopia Hotel came into being. It is a conveniently located in the heart of Addis Ababa and takes only a few minutes of drive to the nationalpalace and the African Union,not to mention proximity to other important facilities in the city.

Ethiopian news, http://www.borkena.com/tag/haileselassie/
Ethiopia hotel proudly hosted African dignitaries and diplomats for manydecades. During the military government of colonel Mengistu, Ethiopia hotel was owned and administered by government. It is a national heritage by all measures.

A report by Wazema radio indicates that Ethiopia Hotel was already sold with a throw away price (under $ 5 million which is a price of a good house in the current mortgage market in cities like Toronto and Vancouver) by “privatization agency” to a local “investor” some six years ago. Adjacent to Ethiopia hotel is another heritage building hosting stringsof service providers. Rental Housing Administration, based on Wazema report, notified occupants to vacate the building in a matter of a month.

Then Belayneh Kinde, the “investor”, plans to demolish the historic Ethiopia Hotel and the adjacent structure and erect a 60 story building.

Of course, government has done unimaginably worst things but still irks –to say the least. It is an act of belligerence on the part of the regime in power and sort of psychological war on Ethiopians. Dimetros Birku, he canbe reached on twitter:@dimetros

Oromo Democratic Front (ODF) - Our Common Future:

A Proposal

Seeking the Next Breakthrough in Democracy and Multinational Federation inEthiopia

An Oromo Democratic Front (ODF) Proposal October 24, 2016

Ethiopia stands at a crossroads, once again.once again. But this time the prospects facing it are much more starkly contrasting than during past instances of change. If it is put on one course of change, achieving a final breakthrough to a common democratic future looks distinctly promising. Ifsuch a course is blocked or not pursued by the stakeholders, on the other hand, the breakdown of order appears threateningly possible. The time to put the country on the right course is now. Unless a country-wide consensus is forged for doing so today, the country will continue its steadyslide towards the abyss.

As things stand now, the worrying scenario mentioned above appears more plausible than the former. Are we exaggerating and being alarmist when we draw this pessimistic conclusion? If we are alarmist, we are justified to be so because the time to take corrective measures is now before the country has gone over the cliff and reached a point of no return. There are important reasons why all concerned should worry about Ethiopia's future.

The ongoing debate of the deaf in Ethiopia is just one of these reasons. Parties are talking past each other instead of conversing with each other. No one is genuinely paying attention to the pain and grievances or perspective of the other. As during many past periods in the country's history, the choices currently confronting it are, once again, posed in a binary either/or manner. Even though the Oromo is at the forefront of thestruggle to bring fundamental change in Ethiopia, some continue to sidestep core Oromo demands and talk as if the choices are either defending the present order or restoring the unitary state of yesteryears. Unless prominence is given to the more forward looking alternatives espoused by the Oromo, Ethiopia's continued existence as a polity is questionable and we may all be condemned to live under a condition of sustained instability.

The present rulers of Ethiopia are absolutely convinced that there is no alternative to their style of administration. Even when admitting the needfor some reform, however cosmetic, they can only think of reforming themselves. While endangering the country with its intransigence and refusal to make a shift in course, they shed crocodile tears for the country's possible implosion if they are toppled. Consequently, they are determined to permanently preserve the status quo. However, societal rejection of their administration has been steadily growing and has now reached fever pitch.

The opposite stand, espoused by a very vocal sector, recognizes nothing valuable in how the present rulers structured Ethiopia and have ruled it fora quarter of a century. In this perspective, the present rulers put Ethiopia on a completely disastrous course from the outset by structuring Ethiopia into a federation curved along ethno-linguistic bases. Proponents of thisstand see no alternative to dumping the present administrative system lock, stock and barrel.

The rancorous debate between these two opposing sides, hence, offers nothing new about the future. The present rulers are determined to preserve the status quo that has been rejected by most Ethiopians. Their vocal opponents look back to the time when the country was conceived asa unitary state with ethnic homogenization through assimilation as a strategy to forge a unitary nation and wish to restore it. But that conception of Ethiopia was militarily challenged by an increasing number of armed groups culminating in its replacement by the present structure. Hence, Ethiopian society is being offered the choice of either enduring thepresent failed approach to governance or the one preceding it, which has also disastrously failed. It is the stalemate between these two proposals, lacking any forward looking element, which worries us about the future ofEthiopia.

We wish to state one of our convictions up front. Structuring Ethiopia as amultinational state is a move in the right direction. And this move is due to neither the diabolical nor noble intensions of the present rulers. It was a historical necessity that was insurmountable at the time the military regime collapsed and the current rulers were catapulted to power.
Consequently, the present rulers deserve neither commendation nor condemnation for embracing the principle of multinational federalism in Ethiopia. Structuring Ethiopia as a multinational state was as an unavoidable as was the Dergue's Land Reform Proclamation of 4 March 1975. Both of these constructive developments in Ethiopia's recent historywere however ultimately abused to serve negative purposes not because they were wrong but because those ruling the country are/were averse todemocracy in both instances.

The fundamental aim of this Proposal is articulating an alternative to the two proposals discussed above. Its core intention is recognizing and preserving what is positive in the status quo as well as the one preceding it. This stems from our conviction that some progress has been registered during each of the previous two incidents of change. When posed in this manner, the intention of this Proposal is undeniably reformist. Even at thiseleventh hour of a popular revolution precipitated by the regime's refusal to implement the minimum of reforms in its core policies and basic modusoperandi, we believe reform and reformism offers the best route out of thecountry's malaise. It aspires to build on positive developments during these instances of change instead of aspiring to totally scrap them.

All stakeholders must admit one fact. The only thing unchangeable inhuman history is the inevitability of change. Hence, it is better to anticipate the inevitably coming change and plan for it than to be overwhelmed by its unexpected consequences after it has occurred.
What constitutes the litmus test for evaluating the preferred direction of the coming change? We believe the answer lies in Martin Luther King's now well-known observation that "the arc of the moral universe is long, but it bends toward justice." Thus, the next process of change in Ethiopiashould position the country "on the arc of the moral universe … bending toward justice." Morality demands the search for justice for all.

Seeking justice for all is the fundamental aim of this Proposal. Becausewhat is considered as just by one set of actors is often denounced as unjust by another group of actors, even the term "justice" could be controversial in the Ethiopian context just like so many other concepts.

What principle can help close the gulf separating these kinds of contrasting stands concerning justice? We propose that if the exercise ofany right does not unjustly infringe on another’s ability to freely exercise their rights, then justice for all would be realized.

This Proposal is deliberately written in a concise form for a reason. The more is stated, the more detractors would find reasons to argue against it.We are not afraid of debate but wish to avoid the hair-splitting type of exchanges that so bedevil political discourse in Ethiopia. We are also not directly addressing the issues that are subjects of ongoing controversies inthe country. Instead, we are dealing with the premises, traditions and mentalities—worldviews—lurking behind the positions currently confronting each other. Unless these underlying assumptions are seriouslyinterrogated and their hindrance to charting a better future is unearthed, we are condemned to relive our past and dismal present. To prevent Ethiopia from sliding into further chaos, many, including some from the international community, are calling for dialogue between Ethiopia’s contending stakeholders to resolve the impasse. Dialogue is the only alternative. However, no dialogue can tackle the impasse without meaningfully addressing the mindsets that underlie the ongoing conflict.
This Proposal is prepared with this in mind.

How Ethiopian Airlines Became Africa's Largest And MostProfitable Airline?

October 25, 2016

"Ethiopian is Africa's largest and most profitable airline, earning more thanits rivals on the continent combined. Its expansion has been rapid: by 2015 it served 82 international destinations, with 13 more added this year. According to unaudited figures, it nearly doubled its profits in the last financial year" says the Economist.

According to the International Air Transport Association, African carriersare likely collectively to record a net loss of $500m this year. Kenya Airways and South Africa's national carrier have been declaring losses every year, and constantly saved by government input.

Ethiopian airlines took advantage of the location and located to China andAsia plus Brazil while other African airlines were still fixated on Europe routes.

“In 1973 it was the first African carrier to fly to China. Today a bustlingChinese transit counter at Addis Ababa’s Bole airport testifies to the importance the company attaches to the market” says the report by the Economist

In addition Ethiopian airlines reduced flights to small African towns withsmall numbers in favour of busy routes. Although Ethiopian airlines is state owned which helps in keeping its costs low it acts as internationalfirm taking no state subsidies and management has tried to be independent from politics.

Ethiopian airlines is targeting being the first pan-African airline with new hubs in Togo, Malawi and teaming up with smaller airplane rivals howeverMiddle Eastern rivals such as Qatar Airways are also expanding in Africa.

'Addis Standard' ends publication for fear of persecution under theemergency law

By Conor Gaffey, Newsweek October 26, 2016

One of Ethiopia’s few independent magazines has suspended its print edition after the government imposed a restrictive state of emergency inthe country.

The editor-in-chief of the Addis Standard, Tsedale Lemma, told AFP that printers and vendors were afraid to be involved in producing the monthlypublication in case the government interpreted it as dissent. “We have tried to convince them that the state of emergency only targets ‘incitefulmaterial’ but they fear this can be interpreted and abused,” said Lemma.

Around half of the Standard’s 23 full-time staff are expected to lose theirjobs. While the print edition is suspended indefinitely, Lemma said that the digital edition would continue and that new podcasts were in the pipeline. The English-language magazine had been in print continuously since February 2011.

Ethiopia’s press is largely controlled by the government. The country isranked 142out of 180 nations in the 2016 World Press Freedom Index,compiled by international NGO Reporters Without Borders. Ethiopia arrested ten journalists in 2015, according to the Committee to ProtectJournalists.

Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn brought in the six-monthstate of emergency on October 9 following months of deadly clashes between security forces and anti-government protesters.

The clashes had intensified after at least 50 people died in a stampededuring the Irreecha festival, an annual religious gathering held by members of the Oromo ethnic group. Protesters said that security forces provoked the stampede by firing tear gas and rubber bullets at the crowd.

Under the state of emergency, Ethiopians are barred from using social media to contact so-called “outside forces” and are not allowed to watchcertain television channels that are based outside the country. The government is also cracking down on gestures of dissent, including crossed arms above the head, which has become associated with the Oromo protests and was demonstrated at the Rio 2016 Olympics by Ethiopian marathon runner Feyisa Lilesa.

Protests begun among the Oromo, Ethiopia’s largest ethnic group, in November 2015 against government plans to expand the capital Addis Ababa. The government abandoned the plans in January, but demonstrations have continued and spread to the Amhara, the country’ssecond-largest ethnicity.

Human Rights Watch said in June that 400 people had been killed in the course of the demonstrations, and there have been several incidents since—including the Irreecha stampede and clashes in the Amhara regionin August, in which almost 100 people reportedly died. The Ethiopian government has denied that the death toll is as high as rights groups say.

TPLF gets fresh ammo from the defeatist Oromoextremists
News updates October 26, 2016

LONDON - Oromo extremists have dropped a bombshell that their avowedgoal is to destroy Ethiopia and build a free republic of Oromia. Such defeatist remarks from the extremists have sparked anger across the Ethiopian community, with many Oromo activists condemning the speakers at the London conference as "TPLF spies" with a mission to destroy the emerging Amhara-Oromo unity against the TPLF led regime.

Opposition leader says West should look into Ethiopian crises
ESAT News (October, 27, 2016)

A leading Ethiopian opposition political figure said it was high time that allies of the Ethiopian regime and the international community to seriouslylook into what’s happening in Ethiopia and act before the country plunges into civil war and humanitarian catastrophe.

In an interview with Radio France International, Prof. Berhanu Nega, Chairman of Patriotic Ginbot 7, described the West's foreign policy towards Ethiopia as "myopic," which ignores basic human rights of the people that are suffering under tyranny. He said the West is focused on the so called war on terror, while the regime is destabilizing a country of100 million people.

Speaking from Eritrea, Nega said "a brutal regime in Ethiopia, even byAfrican standards, is leading the country into total abyss."

The state of emergency declared by the regime, according to Nega, was amore stifling measure taken by the regime, which should instead look for solutions to the crises in the country.

The state of emergency that prohibits people from access to the media and that curtails other basic rights of the people is "outlandish and makesthe situation worse instead of addressing the problem."

The measures taken by the regime is "would lead the country into civilwar," Nega warns. "The chickens have come home to roost."

A yearlong unrest in the east African country has led to the death of hundreds of people in the hands of regime's security forces that use deadly force as people in all corners of the country took to the streets demanding an end to a quarter century of tyranny by a minority regime.

3rd Conference on Transition and Constitution Making in Post-Conflict Ethiopia

Conference Communique October 28, 2016

Conference Communique

Ethiopia", on October 22 and 23, 2016. The Conference was convened atGeorgetown Marriot Hotel and Renaissance Hotel, Washington D.C., and was graced by the presence of several Ethiopians of all backgrounds, including, experts on constitution making, conflict resolution and peace building, political scientists, scholars, former diplomats, and leaders of religious and civic organizations. The event was live streamed throughoutthe world.

The conference addressed the current situation in Ethiopia and exploredthe pre-conditions, modalities, and pathways for establishing a stable post-conflict social, economic and political order in the country. The participants examined and deliberated on the root causes of the crisis engulfing the country.

Background

Vision Ethiopia, an independent and nonpartisan network of Ethiopian academics and professionals, in collaboration with the Ethiopian SatelliteTelevision and Radio (ESAT), organized a two-day conference entitled "Roadmap for Transition and Constitution Making in Post-Conflict the implications of the declaration of State of Emergency by the ruling party.

Accordingly Conference participants accomplished the following:

A. Discussed the atrocities being committed by the ruling party, paid tribute to all those killed by the regime since it came to power and sent their condolences and sympathies to the families of the victims; acknowledged the sufferings of those injured and those who were sent toprisons for demanding their civil and political rights;

B. Commended the courage of the patriotic Ethiopians all over the countryfor standing firm on demanding for freedom from repression, bad governance, fraudulent elections and violations of civil, political and human rights;

C. Underscored the urgency of ending TPLF's/EPRDF's divide-and-rule policies, and the need to build alliances embracing our shared beliefs and values, while at the same time acknowledging our diversity in ways thatpromote respect and appreciation to each other;

D. Emphasized the necessity of developing a collaborative and reconciliation efforts by all Ethiopians, working towards establishing a newpolitical order in Ethiopia where freedom, the rule of law, citizenship, and religious and human rights are fully respected and practiced.

Therefore, conference participants agreed that it is imperative to initiate acomprehensive and inclusive process to identify the road map for a post- conflict political, social, and economic order in Ethiopia. Accordingly, Conference participants recommend a set of principles that help end the violence and facilitate the reconciliation process towards establishing a peaceful transitional arrangement for sustainable peace and democratic order. The Conference participants call for the government to:

1.1. Immediately lift the State of Emergency

1.2. Stop the killings!

1.3. Stop the imprisonment of peaceful protesters in Ethiopia and fullyrespect the civil and political rights of the Ethiopian people.

1.4. Allow independent investigations of the violence by a team of UnitedNations Human Rights Council, local human rights organizations as well as other credible international organizations. Upon the findings of such independent investigations, hold those responsible fully accountable;

1.5. Immediately release all political prisoners and prisoners of conscience, including those in secret concentration camps withoutany precondition.

1.6. Remove the restrictions imposed on the diplomatic and internationalbusiness communities residing in Addis Ababa.

2. Action-Based Roadmap for Confidence-Building Measures and Reconciliation Consensus was reached among Conference participants in regards to establishing the foundation for post-conflict political orderon clear and shared vision and mission.

Consensus was reached among Conference participants in regards to establishing the foundation for post-conflict political order on clear and shared vision and mission. Consequently, conference participants outlinedthe following action-based principles for the roadmap, which include confidence building measures, reconciliation efforts, and willingness for allstakeholders to do their fair share in realizing a peaceful transition into a new political order that provides peace, stability, and democracy to all Ethiopians. Whereas, it takes the effort of all Ethiopians and the international community to facilitate the smooth transition to durable peace in Ethiopia, conference participants identify specific set of measures that need to be undertaken by the ruling party, opposition parties in the country, armed and unarmed opposition forces, diaspora based political and civic movements, Ethiopian citizens both at home and abroad, to realize the potentials of the proposed roadmap.

2.1. The Ruling party-TPLF/EPRDF Conference panelists and participants fully recognize that the instruments of violence are primarily in the hands of the government-its security forces and the military apparatus. Protesters and civilians have legitimate rights to demanda responsible, accountable, and effective government that delivers for the economic, political, social challenges of the public.

Citizens have the right to demand an unfettered free and fair election. Repressive methods and violence are not solutions for political problems. Serious violations of the rights of civilians, the abuse of political power, and widespread corruption have been widely recognized and even admitted by the ruling party itself. As a result, the government has completely lost legitimacy and the consent of the public. It is therefore critically important for the ruling party to accept these facts and master the courage to initiate a new peace plan to resolve the current crisis. The ruling party must realize the fact that its reaction to the popular resistanceis making matters even worse. Its promise to transform itself, after 25 years in power, cabinet reshuffle or change of personnel and minor election concession are not sufficient to bring peace. Therefore, the conference participants underscored the immediate need for the government to contribute to peace making by:

(1) Realizing that there is a need for a new transition, the party mustprepare itself for change.

(2) Lifting the State of Emergency immediately and releasing all political prisoners and prisoners of conscience without any precondition so thatgenuine negotiations can start.

(3) Declaring clearly its commitment to peaceful and inclusive politicaldialogue with all stakeholders;

(4) Facilitating a national dialogue on main political, economic and socialissues and the modalities; including the formation of a Transition Council;

(5) Removing all obstacles for the peaceful and robust national dialogueand for mapping out a new pathway for the establishment of a new political order in the country;

(6) Ensuring public and private media outlets are free to facilitate the exchange of political ideas, programs, and discussions so as to engagethe larger public in the peace process;

(7) Immediately repealing the ban on some political parties and armedorganizations so that they are reintegrated into normal life;

(8) Taking series of confidence building measures so that all Ethiopiansparticipate in the new post-conflict political, economic and social order.

2.2. Transition Council Conference participants have deliberated on a number of modalities and possibilities, including carefully taking into consideration our historical, cultural and social foundations as basis for reconciliation and for addressing the contending demands of our currentsituation. Upon deliberation, Conference participants underlined the importance of using our own traditional institutions of peaceful and just reconciliation that provide mutually acceptable and honorable way out from the crisis situation.

Conference participants recommend the formation of Transition Council with tasks of peacemaking and peace building. Members of the Council areEthiopians who have proved themselves and earned the respect of their communities for their unbiased, just, and fairness in dealing with issues ofconflict, justice, moral independence, and humbleness. Participants of the conference firmly support that the current crisis demands finding indigenous and tradition considered solutions for our political, social, and economic problems and every effort must be made to facilitate the formation and empowering the Transition Council.

The Transition Council should:

(1) On behalf of the people of Ethiopia, facilitate the peaceful, orderly, andsmooth transition period until the formation of a new republic and the establishment of a new government of national unity;

(2) Uphold basic principles of UN Declarations on Human Rights and the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights, with emphasis on Freedomof Assembly and Association, Freedom of Religion, Freedom of Movement,Freedom of the Press, Freedom of Life, and the Civil and Political Rights ofall Citizens.

(3) Invite all political parties including existing and new generation of political leaders to engage fully in the political process, and communicatewith their constituencies in public places throughout the country;

(4) Allow, facilitate and guarantee the unconditional return of armed groups and political exiles and provide security and safety of all returnees;
(5) Allow all stakeholders – political parties, civil society organizations, trade unions, students, youth, women organizations, religious leaders, etc. to be full participants of the reconciliation and peace-building process;

(6) Declare acceptance and commitment to the outcomes of the NationalConstitutional Dialogue including a Transitional National Government.

(7) Allow and facilitate the establishment of a Truth and ReconciliationCommission that will investigate, acknowledge and compensate thosepolitically motivated and unlawfully killed, victims of torture, imprisoned and/or prosecuted;

(8) Establish an independent, non-partisan, and credible and effective Electoral Board; establish a reliable systems and processes, and allow theselection and appointment of a nonpartisan, independent, qualified, fully representative national electoral board staff that earns the trust and support of the Ethiopian people;

(9) Allow and guarantee a level playing-field to all contesting politicalparties in the drafting of the National Charter and elections;

(10) Create conducive environment for the media and civil society tooperate freely;

(11) Oversee the transfer of political power to the newly elected party orcoalition of parties.

2.3. Opposition Parties

Conference participants recognize that the Ethiopian people are yearningfor new leaders. In order to ensure democracy, peace, the rule of law, accountability, and freedom, it is critically important that all political parties should aspire to achieve political power only through the consentof the electorate. The parties must contribute to the establishment of institutions that create suitable environment for credible electoral processes and political accountability.

Conference participants call upon all opposition parties operating now orthose that may emerge in the future to adhere to the central principles that respect the ultimate source of political power is the general electorate. To facilitate the full participation of opposition parties, civil societies, and religious institutions in the Ethiopian political process, we call up on all parties and coalitions to:

(1) Immediately convene a national conference to establish a new politicalorder in Ethiopia;
(2) Come together and negotiate in good faith to collaborate in drafting the National Charter, appoint members of the Constitutional DraftingCommission and design methods of ratifying it;

(3) Demonstrate willingness to reciprocate goodwill gestures to oppositiongroups, including members of the ruling party;

(4) Promote internal party democracy and transparency;

(5) Negotiate and agree, in good faith, to establish a Transitional/InterimCouncil/Government;

(6) Seek to formulate their policies which would guarantee political stability, articulate their party's positions, all in for the betterment ofthe general public.

(7) Protect and defend the interests of all Ethiopians and the unity andsovereignty of the country.

2.4. The International and Donor Community

Conference participants recognize the role of the international community
-donor countries and multilateral institutions-in playing an enabling role inthe current or future governments of Ethiopia. Participants also noted the geopolitical situation of the region. The conference underscored that it is to the interest of the international community that a peaceful, democratic,and prosperous Ethiopia at peace with itself emerges. Conference participants, therefore, call upon the international and donor community to:

(1) facilitate the effort of the Ethiopian people towards establishing a post-conflict political order;

(2) put pressure and encourage the ruling party to seriously considerconvening an inclusive conference for a National Charter;

(3) provide technical and independent and transparent assistance for allparties and coalitions in their effort to build legal organizational structures and political programs;

(4) Encourage and assist all parties for an inclusive dialogue;

(5) Assist for the establishment of an independent and fully transparentElectoral Board, for an unfettered free and fair election, for the respect of the rule of law, and democracy;

(6) Encourage and put pressure on all parties so that women, youth,minorities, and the under privileged will be provided equal opportunities in drafting the National Charter and constitution,appointing Constitution Writing Commission and in all walks ofpolitical life;

(7) Use democratic principles as their guide for establishing a genuinepolitical system and institutions;

(8) Respect the unity and territorial integrity of the country.

2.5. The Ethiopian People at Large

The Ethiopian people have never been fully in control of their political power. In the long and successive history of Ethiopia, Ethiopian rulers have always deprived the citizens to exercise their legitimate political rights and resorted to brutal violence to eliminate actual or perceived andpotential “enemies” suspected of threatening their exclusive and abusive power.

Conference participants recognize the central importance of a full and complete transition to the birth of a new republic in which all Ethiopian citizens are equal under the law, live and exercise their inalienable rights. It is time politics to be guided only by the consent of the electorate. It is time for holding public office to be public trust. It is time for public officialsto be accountable for any breach of public trust. Never again should the Ethiopian people be subjected to repression, political violence, corruption and injustice. To ensure a new, peaceful, inclusive, and democratic political system emerging in Ethiopia, Conference participants call upon the Ethiopian people to:

(1) stay vigilant and continue to protect your civil, political and economicrights;

(2) hold all political parties and politicians accountable for breach of trust,inefficiency, and political corruption and human rights violations;

(3) recognize the fact that our diversity in unity is our strength and thebuilding block for peace and prosperity;

(4) appeal to all Ethiopian citizens both at home and in the Diaspora toengage in the political, economic, and social life of their country;

(5) cultivate the politics of inclusivity and mutual cooperation to addressthe diverse economic, social, political, and environmental challengesof the country;

(6) And, cultivate and reinvigorate the political culture of accountability,justice, freedom, equality, and honor defend and protect Ethiopia's sovereignty

(7) Continue to put pressure on political parties to be fewer and build strong and stable organizations based on shared vision and mission.

(8) Create cross cultural and interfaith bridges, and protect minorities.

This Communique is adopted at the end of the Conference on this day of October 23rd, 2016, at the city of Washington DC, United State of America.(text ends)

HISTORICIZE

Ethiopia's High Court Judge and his wife founder of Ethiopia's firstschool of law....

Providing a glimpse into the judicial system of Ethiopia during the reign ofEmperor Haile Selassie I as he endeavored to modernize Ethiopia, and also of the influence of English Law, these papers are from the personal archives of Ethiopia's High Court Judge, the Right Honorable Leonard Mullen, and his wife Agnes whom in her own right made a positive impactto the community by founding the very first law school in the country.

[After the Ethiopian Liberation War, a 1941 campaign, efforts were made to follow the legal procedures and apply the rules of evidence employed by the British courts. Directly a result of Mrs. Mullen's initiative, by 1948 there were a number of qualified Ethiopian lawyers practicing in the various courts, and a great demand existed for their services, owing to thehighly litigious character of the community. However, there remained a lack of trained and experienced lawyers for the High Court, where proceedings were conducted in both Amharic and English. Interestingly, atthis time, the Ethiopian criminal law codified in 1930 (a revision of the Fitha Negast) was enforced for Ethiopian citizens, whereas Italian law was enforced for all foreigners, until a then very recent ruling granted a foreigner with the right to choose either the Ethiopian or the Italian penal code for his/her trial and sentencing.]

The archive's letters acknowledge Leonard's resignation from service, and further reveal the ongoing ineffectiveness of Ethiopian administration, as well as the cultural differences surrounding death. After the termination ofhis contract, without empathy or understanding of bereavement, the Director-General of Ethiopian Ministry of Justice, Tamirat Yigazu, further demanded Leonard's departure from the country. Yigazu also claimed thatthe judge was over-payed for the last period of his services, and funds aredue to be returned. Leonard's passport reveals that he travelled extensively throughout Africa between 1947 and 1956, possibly in part to deal with the affairs of his wife and/or his own financial matters with the Ministry. With some stamps made in Ethiopian and Arabic script, others inEnglish or French, during the nine-year period he was in Egypt, Sudan, Ethiopia, Eritrea, Suez, and Aden.

Agnes Carus Mullen (1907-1947, née Neville) was the eldest daughter of Liverpool solicitor John Herbert Neville and Jane Helen Carus. Agnes was apracticing junior solicitor working for her father's firm when she married Leonard Mullen in 1931. When Leonard accepted a post as judge for the High Court of Ethiopia, naturally, she travelled with him, the couple making a home in Addis Ababa. The newspaper obituary notice present in this archive, describes her individual accomplishments in Ethiopia, her legacy being the founding of Ethiopia's first school of law. Almost immediately upon her arrival, the Ethiopian Imperial Government learned of her accreditation as a solicitor, and invited her to form the law school, and to educate indigenous lawyers on proper legal practices, thus Ethiopian advocates would finally be appointed according to qualifications as opposed to personal referral.

Ethiopian troops in Somalia refuse to return home
ESAT News (November 1, 2016)

Hundreds of Ethiopian troops in Somalia who have been fighting Al-Shabaab in that country have revolted, with dozens crossing to theArabian peninsula selling their weapons.

According to ESAT's military and intelligence sources, the soldiers, whoare not with the regular African Mission in Somalia (AMISOM), have notbeen paid their salaries for three months.

About 70 of the troops have sold their weapons and crossed the sea to theArabian peninsula, while the rest have refused to join the troops returninghome. The troops, according to the sources, have revolted due to interruptions in their salaries for three months, ethnic favoritism in the Ethiopian army in which Tigrayans commanders act with impunity.

Ethiopia: PM reshuffles cabinet hoping to calm wave of pro
ESAT News (November 1, 2016)

Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn on Tuesday reshuffles hiscabinet in a move many see as an attempt to calm the growing protest against a minority tyranny.

The nominal prime minister presented the list of 30 key positions and theirministers, which the rubber stamp parliament endorsed without any challenge.

The move came after a yearlong deadly uprising against the minority Tigrayan government in which all key positions were held by the Tigrayanclique. The posts of military and security as well as intelligence are still controlled by the Tigrayans.

The not-so-popular foreign minister, Tedros Adhanom, was replaced by Workineh Gebyehu Negeo, listed in official documents as an Oromo, but known to be a Tigrayan, who have dropped his last name, Woldekidan, inthe last election to pass as an Oromo, according to a fascinating book written by Merara Gudina, an Oromo opposition leader. The University ofSouth Africa, where he did his PhD, listed his last name as Woldekidan.

Adhanom is eying the top position of the WHO but his campaign has facedopposition from Ethiopians all over the world who accuse the former malaria researcher of corruption and association with a ruthless regime.

Of the 30 ministers, 9 have survived the reshuffle and would continue inthe new cabinet. The 21 new cabinet ministers have served at several high key positions and ministries.
Early in October, the regime declared a six month state of emergency after a yearlong protest in which security forces killed at least 700 people,by estimates of local political parties.

PMHD says regime may not provide protection to embassies

ESAT News (November 2, 2016)

Ethiopia's titular prime minister warns western governments that his security forces will stop protecting their embassies unless the favor isreciprocated by them.

Speaking to the parliament on Monday, where he also announced a reshuffled cabinet, Hailemariam Desalegn called on western governmentsto protect Ethiopian Embassies from activists and Ethiopians in the Diaspora who have been venting their angers and holding their embassiesin protest for the killings and atrocities committed by the regime.

Speaking about Egypt, one of the countries the Ethiopian regime routinelyaccuses of fomenting the uprising in the country, Desalegn said some institutions in Egypt were found to have a hand in the unrest in his country.

The Ethiopian regime customarily blames neighboring Egypt and Eritreafor all the ills in the country. Egyptian president Abdul Fattha Al Sisi lastmonth denied his country had any hand in the uprising in Ethiopia.
Similarly, Eritrean officials has said accusations by the regime in Ethiopiais a futile exercise of externalizing its internal crises.

A year long protest has shaken the regime to the core and is making superficial changes to calm the widespread protests. Desalegn on Mondayannounced a new cabinet appointing new ministers but protesters are demanding removal of the regime, which is dominated and run by a minority Tigrayan oligarchy accused of dominating the politics and economy of the country.

ENM leaders to hold press conference at DC National Press Club

New Ethiopia Opposition Coalition Envisions Regime Change

ESAT News (November 2, 2016)

The newly formed Ethiopian National Movement (ENM), a coalition of fourpolitical parties said it is established with a view to "lead and coordinatethe struggle of the Ethiopian people for justice, freedom and democracy."

In a press release it issued in connection with an international press conference it organizes in Washington, DC for the coming Friday, the coalition which condemned the killings in Ethiopia said the status quo isnot sustainable.

The four parties making the ENM are the Oromo Democratic Movement(ODF), Patriotic Ginbot 7 Movement for Unity and Democracy, Afar People's Party and Sidama People's Democratic Movement.

"ENM strongly condemns the killings, mass incarcerations and atrocities being committed against innocent civilians. It believes that the unjust ruleof the brutal minority regime, which has declared a state of emergency tocrush popular demand for change, is no longer sustainable."

The coalition also called on western allies of the regime to instead sidewith popular movements like ENM. "The coalition urges the U.S. Government and other Western countries to work with change agents such ENM instead of providing unconditional aid to a regime that is terrorizing its own people."

The ENM was officially formed last sunday at a signing ceremony in SilverSpring, Maryland where representatives of the four parties responded to questions by Ethiopians in the metropolitan area. Facilitators said it took months of negotiations to bring the parties together. Leaders of the coalition and representatives of the four parties as well as activists will address Friday's presser

Assailants set trucks, buses on fire in northern Ethiopia

ESAT News (November 2, 2016)

Unknown assailants attacked trucks and busses belonging to the ruling party on Tuesday in Gondar, according to ESAT's sources. The armed menambushed and set ablaze the heavy duty truck belonging to Dashen Beer,owned by the business empire of the ruling party. Two medium size busses were also set on fire in the attack.

Several people were feared injured in the exchange of fire with securityforces accompanying the truck. Armed groups have launched similar attacks in the last few months in northern Ethiopia where anti-regime sentiments run high.

In Tis Abay on Monday, four people were killed when an armed person killed a federal police and injured two soldiers. The alleged assailant, Mikru Berhanu, was killed after the attack. The attack came contrary to Ethiopian regime's narrative that the state of emergency declared early inOctober has brought peace and stability in the country.

Response to "there is no Ethiopian identity" etc. remarks
Press Release November 3, 2016

Ethiopians, mostly Oromo compatriots, were enraged by the comment ofan individual at a recent OLF conference in London? That desperate individual should have learned the lesson of a lifetime after he threw his tantrum: "We have to make sure first that Ethiopia is disintegrated to guarantee an independent Oromia."

Well, such individuals are victims who have gone astray the perspective ofmainstream Oromo compatriots who outrightly discard the connection between a political repression and wishing the country's disintegration.
The disgruntled camp has claimed its latest victim in the name of Tsegaye Ararsa (dr.) who said: "There is no such thing as Ethiopianidentity."

Such remarks would be a slap in the face of many great Ethiopians of Oromo heritage who have, far from questioning, embraced their Ethiopianidentity with unparalleled pride. For now, Tsegaye gets a response more than he bargained for from Hana Legesse.

EU-AU call on African governments to protect journalists
ESAT News (November 3, 2016)

The European Union and the African Union called on African states to protect the rights of journalists and investigate crimes perpetrated againstjournalists.

"We call on state authorities to fulfil their responsibility to protect journalists, establish a meaningful deterrence against the violent targetingof media professionals, and fully abide by their international and continental obligations," said the joint statement by EU and AU delegations in Addis Ababa.

In a statement issued in connection with the International Day to End Impunity for Crimes against Journalists, Ranieri Sabatucci Head of the European Union Delegation to the African Union and Aisha Abdullahi African Union Commissioner for Political Affairs said those who violatedthe rights of journalists should be brought to justice.

"State authorities should investigate crimes against journalists effectively,promptly and in an independent manner and ensure that both state and non-state perpetrators and instigators of such violence are brought to justice."

The statement which said journalists continue to be killed and face increasing level of intimidation and violence noted that "the disregard for the fundamental rights of journalists as they exercise their profession hasled to a climate of impunity affecting not only victims, but also freedom ofexpression and rule of law."

Dozens of journalists are still in jail in Ethiopia. The Ethiopian regime isone of the world’s leading jailer of journalists and bloggers.

Ethiopia: Crackdown on black market following forex crunch

ESAT News (November 3 (1), 2016

Security forces are cracking down on black market foreign currency exchange shops in the capital Addis Ababa and in major towns in the country as regime faces serious foreign currency crunch. Security forces are also going house to house and searching the illegal exchange outletsseizing undisclosed amount of foreign currency.

Residents say the search and confiscations were being carried out under the guise of the state of emergency, which does not give the power to security forces as regards to seizing black market foreign currencies. Theysaid security forces were also targeting remittances sent from abroad by family members. Security forces in plain clothe are also arresting people suspected of engaging in illegal foreign currency exchange transactions.

The National Bank of Ethiopia had issued a directive three years ago outlawing black market foreign currency exchanges following thedepletion of the country's foreign currency reserve.

The World Bank and other monetary institutions have been advising theEthiopian government to reform its policies to curb the currency crises. Ethiopia has been hit by foreign currency crises for the last three years and the shortage has gotten worse in the last one year as anti government protests bear a negative impact on the country's foreign trade.

IBTimes UK interviews Jawar Mohammed as Ethiopia bans OMNunder state of emergency.

By Ludovica Iaccino November 3, 2016

Jawar Mohammed, political analyst and executive director of the Oromia Media Network (OMN), believes the Ethiopian government would kill him,should he return to his homeland.
Mohammed,30, is an ethnic Oromo. He grew up in Dhummuga, a small town located in Oromia, Ethiopia's largest state. During his childhood, Mohammed went to school in Asela and Adama and left his homeland in2003 on a schoolarship to study in Singapore.

He later moved to the US to study political science at "I came here as a student, not as a refugee. But right now, I am probably the most wanted person by the Ethiopian government and I think the government is willingto kill me if they have a chance," Mohammed, who is based in Minneapolis, alleged during a phone interview with IBTimes UK.

“Every time I appear on television, for the last few months, the government is all over the place condemning me and calling me aterrorist, an agitator and an enemy of the state.”

Oromo people ‘are making history’

In October, Ethiopia declared a six-month-long state of emergencyfollowing unrest in Oromia, and occasionally in Amhara.

The response to the protests, labelled as the biggest anti-government unrest Ethiopia has witnessed in recent history, has resulted in the deathof more than 500 people since November 2015, a figure the governmentlater confirmed.

In Oromia, people demonstrated against perceived disenfranchisement and lack of inclusion in the political process as the government is dominated by the Tigray minority. They also called for an end to land grabbing, claiming Oromo farmers are forcibly evicted from their farms.

Mohammed is a strong supporter of the protests as he believes Ethiopia “needs a regime change and the installation of a government elected by the people.” “Oromo people are making history, they have been fighting for freedom, dignity and self-determination for almost 50 years now. In the last couple of years they struggled intensified, has become more strategic, co-ordinated and unified, it has weakened the government andhas inspired other people in Ethiopia and the region,” he said.

Ethiopia’s largest ethnic groups: Who are the Oromos?

Who are the Amhara people involved in anti-government protests?

Under the state of emergency, Ethiopia banned certain media outlets, including OMN. “The government believes OMN and social media, Facebook particularly, are used to mobilise, agitate, coordinate people. The government sees this as a way to undermine their control over the population,” Mohammed claimed. Mohammed believes it is too dangerousfor him to go to Ethiopia right now. However, he said he is planning to return. “Going back is not an potion at the moment, but in the future, Iwill return and fight with my people.”

Government’s position

When contacted by IBTimes UK for comments on the allegations, a spokesperson for the Ethiopian embassy in London dismissed Mohammed's claims as "unsubstantiated information". The diplomat also alleged Mohammed and other members of the diaspora community could have links to the Oromo Liberation Front, which the Ethiopian governmentlabelled as a terrorist organisation that carried out violent acts in Ethiopia,Somalia and Kenya.

Created in 1973, OLF stemmed from the discontent among people over aperceived marginalisation by the government and to fight the hegemonyof the Amhara people. OLF – still active today – calls for the self-determination of the Oromo people. The group has always denied allegations of violence, claiming its mission is to terminate "a century of oppression" against the Oromos.

Official press release on state of emergency in Ethiopia
Ethiopia's Prime Minister Hailemariam Dessalegn declared a six-month nationwide state of emergency on Sunday, 9th October, according to theprovisions established under the constitution of the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia, saying months of unrest threatened the nation's stability.

"A state of emergency has been declared because the situation posed a threat to the people of the country," Hailemariam said. He added that "Vital infrastructure, businesses, health and education centres, as well as government offices, and courts have been destroyed". There have been attacks on businesses, many of them foreign-owned, including farms growing flowers for export.

Attorney General Getachew Ambaye said that the aim of the decree is to maintain peace and order and would permit authorities to stop and searchthose suspected of involvement in activities contributing to the deterioration of law and order.

It also bars the "preparation, distribution and exhibition of material that could incite further chaos", he said in an official announcement. The measures did not contain curfews, but Getachew said the command post, chaired by the Prime Minister, set up to oversee the implementation of thelegislation, would determine where and when to impose curfews "should the need arise". The decree went on to state that human rights would be respected and that diplomatic missions and international organisations would be protected as per the Vienna Convention. "Failure to observethese measures would lead to imprisonment according to the law." Stanford University and Human Rights at the Columbia.

ETHIOPIA PROTEST

Are super powers behind the Current Ethiopian Crisis?

News Analysis By Houriso Gemechu, PhD

November 4, 2016 There is a lot going on behind the scenes than what is being discussed publicly about the crisis in Ethiopia. There are several curious events that need to be brought out in public for all to clearly understand the development of the Ethiopian crisis. We need to ask and answer fundamental questions such as what prompted the events of the crisis? Or for those who are familiar with Marxist socialist principles, we need to outline the objective conditions. Who are the parties and individuals involved in the crisis? Or who are the subjective determinants?We may also have to focus on what does the crisis implies for the near and long-term future of the country?

Although I do not claim to have all the necessary information to answer the above questions, I will try to present the underlying issues and the key protagonists below. That said, I boldly venture to state that I find it improbable that the crisis in Ethiopia is driven exclusively by events in Ethiopia and Ethiopians alone. I say this because it has been nearly a quarter century since the Ethiopian government implemented principles and policies that appear to be the underlying causes of the crisis. So whatchanged, why now? Who, besides the ordinary people subjected to the brutal treatments of the Ethiopian government, had had enough? Could it be powers that hitherto tolerated the brutal treatments by the Ethiopiangovernment turned on the government?

The answer to these complicated questions, in part, is that geopolitical circumstances have changed and that the Ethiopian administration may now be perceived as a risk instead of an asset for the certain super powers. Specifically, is the United Stated government or an agency thereof such as the CIA destabilizing the TPLF government? What factorsprompt for such an act to be even considered? The answer, as difficult asit could be and as speculative as it nearly always appears, is that almostnothing ever happens in US-dependent countries, such as Ethiopia, without the implicit or explicit compliance of the United States.

To that end, I state that it appears that some in the US administration were not comfortable in tolerating the Ethiopian administration continue its practices. They may have come to believe that such practices were counter to the long term US political and strategic interests. Furthermore,any contemplated changes may have anticipated the upcoming changes inUS administration to give support to Obama's dubious legacy of democratization in Africa?

One critical factor leading to my speculation is that since early June, therehas been a concerted effort by US agencies such as the USAID, Dept. of State and others to obtain scholarly and popular views on a wide variety of issues concerning Ethiopia in general and in particular the process of democratization and participation in a democratic transformation of one sort or another. Key Ethiopian leaders as recognized by the US and even the EU have been on occasion invited to appear and discuss what is to be done. This effort may have been mingled with the usual cover of summer travels of intellectuals coming to the US to present their academic views at open and public venues. But, in some cases these appearances were not public and the presentations were classified.

However, going over the many so-called Ethiopian intelligentsia or leaders, I can name some prominent persons such as Prof. Birhanu Nega of GINBOT 7, Prof. Merera Gudina of the Oromo People's Congress (OPC),Prof. Getachew Begashaw-- Vision Ethiopia and Former EPRP Leader, EngYilkal Getnet -- Semayawi (Blue) party chairman, Dr. Aregawi berehe— Former TPLF and author of "A Political History of the Tigray People's Liberation Front", Mr. David H. Shinn-- former Ambassador to Ethiopia, Mr. Herman Jay Cohen-- Former Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, Mr. Iyasu Alemayehu-- Leader EPRP have appeared at meetings where US officials had been present, even the late former Eritrean ambassador Girma Asmerom had his views on Ethiopia heard. I am sure there are several others that I have missed. What precisely prompted these gatherings is not known to me. Nevertheless, I suspect a US administration endeavor to focus on Ethiopia's leadership and governmental apparatus was underway. Moreover, in other previous circumstances these kinds of gatherings often reflected recognizable USPolicy shifts.

Speculation aside, there have been significant issues on which the direction taken by the TPLF government did not match that of the United States. Chief among them was the growing dependence on china instead of the US in philosophy and investments. Furthermore, TPLF leaderships' unabashed exuberance for Chinese policies and practices did not go unnoticed. China's influence in Africa appears to ascend just as US outlooktowards Africa's profitability was also growing. The competition for African resources is becoming intense and china appears to win it even when governments like that of Ethiopia are enamored by China's potential whilecollecting US economic assistance.

Before, I move on and discuss the role of China and the US in Ethiopianeconomic and politics; I would like the reader to know that China and Africa enjoy a history of traditional friendship. However, the relationshiphas not lasted as long as that of the Africa's relationship with the west, particularly the United States. Similarly, Ethiopia has had diplomatic relationship with China since the 1970's. Needless to say, until recently the China-Ethiopia relation has not been as long or as deep as that withthe United States.

The Chinese and Ethiopia

After the ascent of the TPLF to power in Ethiopia, the government of Ethiopia has been copying most political and economic transformations that China has experienced in its heyday as a growing global economic and political power. The affinity shown by the TPLF to China's approach ineconomic transformation and governance has been such that a leading international magazine has called Ethiopia as "Africa's China". The web site of the Chinese embassy in Ethiopia unabashedly brags that Ethiopia is indeed "China's successful little brother". The embassy further notes that China has often expressed its appreciation and admiration for Ethiopia, just as an elder brother would for a younger brother who has become a success. According to the embassy this is so because Ethiopia has presented a lot of opportunities for China, which has openly stated that Ethiopia is its best bet because of its low-cost labor and stability.

Meanwhile TPLF has had an alluring love affair with Chinese-style political and economic organization and administration. Any success being experienced by Ethiopia in economics and infrastructure development wasunabashedly attributed and fancied by TPLF to its policies and its similarities to China's, especially in governance. As evidence, both Chineseand Ethiopians appear to have been fairly closed societies that opened up to foreign investment and strict political order in order to have faster economic achievements. Each has been hailed internationally for its unprecedented economic growth. The milestones Ethiopia has passed clearly show the political will toward ensuring that the country benefit from a booming economy - through infrastructure, an open market, investment opportunities. Early on, Ethiopia's only investors were India,China and Turkey.

To add to this curious love affair, From Dec 1 to 5, 2015, Chinese President Xi Jinping paid a state visit to Zimbabwe and South Africa and chaired the Johannesburg Summit of the Forum on China–Africa Cooperation (FACOC), which supports new international relations betweenChina and Africa based on mutual benefits. The Chinese and African leaders agreed to lift the Sino-African relationship to a comprehensive strategic cooperative partnership featuring political equality and mutual trust, win-win economic cooperation and civilization exchanges, close ranks and help each other in security, and cement unity on international affairs with the entire Africa.

In short, China wants to be the model and power of Africa's next transformations. This also means that the strategic alliance and influence over African nations by nations like the US, Germany, France and the westis seriously being challenged. China thus presents itself to many African governments as an alternative to the benefits of their association with the traditional west. To sweeten the pot, The Chinese leader Xi had recently announced the "10 major plans" in cooperation with Africa in the coming three years, covering the areas of industrialization, agricultural modernization, infrastructure, financial services, green development, tradeand investment facilitation, poverty reduction and public welfare, public health, people-to-people exchanges, as well as peace and security. The three year budget covered some $60 billion of funding to guarantee implementation of the plans, which injected more impetus for vital Sino-African relations.

China has been particularly focused on Ethiopia, which for a brief while was the fastest growing economy in sub-Saharan Africa. Much of this growth has been driven by China, whose total investment in the country has reached almost $17 billion. In fact, Ethiopia is one of China’s six special economic zones in Africa. In addition, China is wielding soft poweras in for instance, a Confucius Institute, a Chinese government-affiliated language and culture center established in Addis Ababa. China has also expanded the number of scholarships for Ethiopian students studying in China as well as volunteers from the Chinese mainland, in a program similar to America’s Peace Corps.

After the demise of the ideological leader of TPLF’s Ethiopia-- Meles Zenawi--, his followers have become even more enamored by his link withChina. During his latest visit to China, Prime Minister Haile mariam Desalegn met and held discussions with Chinese President Xi Jinping and Premier Li Keqiang, whereby they deliberated on ways of an even closer association. The Chinese ambassador to Ethiopia asserted that "In the area of business-to-business cooperation, even though our relation dates back 45 years ago, and the Chinese business community is the late comer, over the last 20 years; one can see the full spread of Chinese businesses everywhere; not only in the capital city but also in the countrysides." The ambassador also noted that the people-to-people exchanges between the two countries have also grown in the areas of culture and education underscoring the very active grooming and training of TPLF cadres by China.

The west (United States) and Ethiopia

Just as the growing importance of the Chinese in Ethiopian affairs is becoming more and more apparent, the relationship between the ruling Ethiopian regime and Western countries has been deteriorating particularly due to the role played by the Ethiopian diaspora in exposingthe undemocratic measures employed by the TPLF in administering the country, the threat posed by ethnic fractionalization on regional and national peace. This was recently highlighted by the explosive and destructive protests across the nation. The primary interest of western countries had been Ethiopia's cooperation in securing neighboring statesin Africa as well as combating terrorism and piracy that risked an even bigger de-stabilization across Africa.

In effect, the west used Ethiopian military capabilities to prevent or lessenits own involvement across the many unstable frontiers of Africa such as Somalia, Central African Republic, South Sudan, the red sea, etc. In exchange Ethiopia received economic and military assistance that prevented hitherto well known calamities such as famines, coups, and wars among neighboring countries.

Until the end of the Cold War in the late-1980s, U.S. policy in East Africaand the Horn tried to balance regional security concerns with support for economic development and mitigating food shortages and famines. The primary goal of U.S. policy in the region was to minimize Soviet influenceand that of China, Eastern Europe and Cuba. As the Cold War came to anend, the United States added to its policy agenda the objectives of encouraging democratic governance and improving human rights practices.

In the post-Cold War era, the primary U.S. human rights and governanceconcerns in the region have been the lack of transparent elections that allow meaningful participation by the opposition; the arrest of prominentopposition political leaders and journalists; corruption and discrimination against marginalized groups.

However, the United States demonstrated relatively little interest in the region until the 1998 al-Qaida attacks on the U.S. embassies in Nairobi, Kenya, and Dar es Salaam, Tanzania. Since then, and especially after the Sept. 11, 2001, al-Qaida attacks on the U.S., counterterrorism hasdominated the U.S. policy agenda in the region, though not to the exclusion of other priorities.

The United States has been the single largest source of emergency food aid in times of need, for instance, and has done more to combat HIV andAIDS than any other country. It has also maintained significant development aid programs in most countries in East Africa and the Horn.All of these programs have, however, been implemented with an eye on the impact of both international terrorism and political instability to U.S. interests in the region and even the homeland. The United States Leans on Ethiopia for Security obligations while the government of Ethiopia wants US Money but is ever cozier with Chinese type control over its people and Chinese influence.

In conclusion, what this analysis is asserting is that it is not the people of Ethiopia who after so many years of subjugation that all of a sudden decided to go against a proven merciless power like the TPLF but that US tolerance of Chinese influence on TPLF had reached its limits. To that end,several so-called opposition groups were gathered and disbursed to accomplish the goal of teaching TPLF a lesson and accommodate a government perhaps more democratic while maintaining closer ties with US and performing its obligatory service in support of US policy.

HUMILATION AT IT'S FINEST

Tedros Adhanom fails to understand WHO questions

He was slammed by cross-examiners

Ethiomedia November 5, 2016

The audacity of Tedros Adhanom to become WHO chief has hit a deadend after Tedros failed to understand very well formulated questions by delegates of WHO member countries. "Sorry," "Can you clarify the question for me?" and other "don't humiliate me, please" type of remarks were what the visibly stressed TPLF official could say. Watch the video andjudge for yourself.

With 'competence' out of the question, the only hope Tedros will be giventhe WHO directorship is because of the "Whose Turn?" question. No one from Africa has ever been a WHO director general. And despite strong opposition from those who say "merit" should be the key factor to appointa WHO boss, Tedros may slip through the cracks and get the job if it is decided that the job should be given to an African, even if as incompetentas Tedros Adhanom.

Humiliation in its finest at the world health organization's cross-examiningtable in the full view of history. However since mine is worse than his, I am not here to mock his ability to articulate the English language.

Rather I am here to doubt his doctorate degree. And now I believe that hetoo is as baloney doctor as his colleagues at TPLF's headquarters. What a shameful individual he is. He couldn't even understand one word from anyof the questions which presented to him by the cross-examiner. He bumbled in a confused manner for the longest time. Shame!!

Tewodros has humiliated and let our country down 10 times more than Robel has done at the Rio Olympic games a few months ago. And as longas we don’t unite to free our nation from this baloney doctors, engineers,embarrassment is all we get. Shame on you, Tewodros Adhanom Gebreyesus.

ETHIOPIAN ATHLETICS

Haile Gebrselassie elected president of Ethiopian track federation

Olympic champion said country had been 'stained' by doping allegations andwants to 'clear that up'

The Associated Press November, 06, 2016

Distance running great Haile Gebrselassie was elected president of the Ethiopian Athletics Federation on Saturday after saying the sport in his country had been "stained" by doping allegations and he wanted to "clearthat up."

The two-time Olympic champion in the 10,000 metres received nine of the15 votes in a ballot of Ethiopia's regional athletics leaders. He beat two other candidates, with incumbent EAF president Alebachew Nigusse not standing for re-election.

The 43-year-old Gebrselassie was elected for a four-year term.

Gebrselassie is probably Ethiopia's greatest ever runner, winning two Olympic and four world titles in a career that spanned over 20 years andalso included a series of major marathon victories and world records in distances from 5,000 metres up to the marathon.

"I feel so honoured to be elected president of the Ethiopian AthleticsFederation! Will work on a great future for Ethiopian athletics!" Gebrselassie wrote on his official Twitter account.

In an interview with The Associated Press ahead of the election, Gebrselassie said Ethiopian athletics was "not on the right track."

The country was underperforming in comparison to East African neighbourand distance running rival Kenya, Gebrselassie said, but also had its reputation undermined by a string of doping cases.

Six Ethiopian athletes were suspended on suspicion of doping this year —two of them have now been banned — and the World Anti-Doping Agencywarned the country's authorities that they needed to strengthen their anti-doping programs.

"Our country's name has been mentioned alongside other countries for doping," Gebrselassie told AP. "One of my first jobs if I get elected is tomake sure that athletes could win without doping by showing them thatI'm a living proof.

"Instead of challenging WADA and other anti-doping agencies, we have tobe able to admit that we have a problem and then work hard to address it. I believe that Ethiopia's doping problem is not deep. But certainly thereare signs."

Ethiopia has had to live in Kenya's shadow in recent years in terms of success on the track, a trend that continued at the Olympics in Rio de Janeiro where Ethiopia won one gold medal in track and field comparedtop Kenya's six. Changing that was a priority, Gebrselassie said.

"The state of athletics in Ethiopia is not on the right track so I don't want to sit idle and watch it turn into ruins," Gebrselassie said. "Ethiopia's athletics potential is probably four times bigger than our neighbour Kenya.Our main problem is that we haven't had a leadership that could bring outand nurture that talent."

AFRICAN UNION

Dlamini-Zuma calls for ‘intense dialogue’ in crisis-hit Ethiopia

TODAY November 7, 2016

African Union Commission head Nkosazana Dlamini-Zuma has called forintense dialogue over the recent protests in Ethiopia, saying that it wasimperative to find lasting solutions in the country.

In a statement, Dlamini-Zuma said that the Ethiopian government shouldensure that fundamental human rights and freedoms were respected as the guidelines on state of emergency were implemented. She also urged the government to ensure that the internet which had been restricted dueto the protests was restored.

“The AUC chairperson calls for calm and peace during the period when thestate of emergency is in effect, and further urges the government to consider ensuring that citizens’ rights to access to information and communication technologies, including internet services and social media are restored,” the statement said. Dlamini-Zuma’s remarks came just lessthan a week after Ethiopian Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn announced a cabinet reshuffle that has seen opposition leaders receivingsenior roles in government.

The prime minister gave key government positions to two leaders from the Oromo people who spearheaded deadly anti-government protests overthe last year, reducing the dominance of the minority Tigrayans. Reports indicated that protesters from the majority Oromo and Amhara ethnic groups had claimed that they were being marginalised by the minority Tigrayan-led government which they accused of monopolising power and controlling the economy.

Last month dozens of people were crushed to death in a stampede afterpolice fired tear gas and rubber bullets to disperse an anti-government protest that grew out of a massive religious festival last month. At least52 people died during the stampede.The government last responded byimposing a state of emergence that would last at least for six months inorder to get the country back to normal.

Following a the imposing of the state of emergence and a visit by Germany Chancellor Angela Markel, Desalegn said that his government was planning to reform the country’s electoral system which had excludedthe opposition.

HISTORICIZE: Portrait of the mystery lady
The Widowed Madame Colette Aklilu HabetwoldEthiopia Observer:

This is a tribute to Colette Valade, one of the most distinguished French citizens who, among her compatriots, protested Fascist aggression when Mussolini invaded Ethiopia in 1933. Valade entangled herself in the fate ofthe country when she married Aklilu Habetwold, an Ethiopian official who later became the Minister of Foreign Affairs and Prime Minister of Ethiopia.Valade became Aklilu’s closest confidante and ally in promoting Ethiopia’s cause for independence. Together, they established two French support groups in Paris and launched a periodical, Nouvelle d’ethiopie, with the aim of bringing the Ethiopian struggle to French public. As part of their activism, Valade and Aklilu cycled long distances to make speeches and pleas throughout Europe. Valade's tireless support and strong network played a major role in Aklilu's influence and fundraising activities for the nation. Valade defended Ethiopia with determination, centering the plight of Ethiopians to the French and worldwide with remarkable devotion.

During the occupation, Aklilu was an Attaché in the Ethiopian legation in Paris (1936-1940). He was educated at the French Lycée in Alexandria before coming to Paris to obtain his law degree, which he completed in 1936 at Sorbonne. As Secretary of the Ethiopian Delegation Aklilu arguedfor the Ethiopian cause at the League of Nations, flying frequently between Paris and Geneva along with the Ethiopian Minister in Geneva, Fitawrari Tekle Hawariat Wayeh, leader of the delegation.

Aklilu met Colette while he was studying at Sorbonne. She was a tall, charming young woman, often smiling brightly, in one photo seen with herarms akimbo. The handsome young man with huge cinnamon complexion began pursuing her for a date. He wore his black wavy hair just below his ears, European style. There was an immediate attraction, even though a love affair between Europeans and non-Europeans caused a stir. They hadlived together for 24 years until they were married in 1953. Colette's parents reportedly gave their blessing for the union. "It was she who always stood by me when I was studying for my undergraduate in law andpolitical science at Sorbonne, and at the Faculté de droit" he would write later.

After the defeat of the French government and the occupation of Paris in June 1940, the young diplomat had to flee on a forged passport under thename of Thomas Woldu. He left his passport with the American ambassador in Paris, requesting him to send it to him to his destination.
He took leave of his lover and partner, Madame Colette, and slipped into Portugal with a Colombian identity. He received his passport on arriving in Lisbon, thanks to the American Ambassador and Colette.

Following the restoration in 1941, Aklilu returned to Ethiopia, joined theForeign Office and served in several senior-level diplomatic positions, including vice-minister of the pen (1942-1943), vice-minister and then acting minister of foreign affairs (1943-1949) and minister of foreign affairs (1949-1958). During this time, Aklilu played a key role in the complex process that brought Eritrea into federation with Ethiopia.

For several years, Colette stayed back home while Aklilu was busy servingthe Ethiopian government until 1950, waiting for the Emperor to grant him a permit to tie the knot. Naturally, the Emperor was not enthusiastic to the idea of one his top brass marrying a foreigner. He had to relent knowing Akilu's commitment to her was no passing fancy. Eventually, theygot married with the imperial blessing in n a simple ceremony in Addis Ababa in 1953 at his brother's Akalewold's residence. Their mize, or best men, were minister of the Pen (Tsehafi Tizaz) Wolde Giorgis, Tsehafi TizazTefera-Werque Kidanewold, Col. Kifle Ergetu, Asrat Yinesu (later ambassador). She was devoted to her husband, who was equally devoted to her. She would later tell friends that being married to Aklilu and seeing Ethiopian politics so close up had been a privilege for her. Not content to stay in the background and handle domestic matters, she started taking part in different causes. She even had her own newspaper column at a French language daily L'Ethiopie d'Aujourdhui, which in 1966 later becameAddis Soir. She took on official duties and attended lunches or dinners, mastering the kind of showmanship that was required for the occasion. And there were plenty of foreign dignitaries then. We see her in black andwhite photographs beside her husband greeting Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia, Nikita Khrushchev of the then Soviet Union, with Shah Reza Pahlavi of Iran, and of course her county's president, De Gaulle who visited Addis Ababa in November 1966.

The two couple's love for one another was not always received by the race-conscious Ethiopian elite and their own lives were languid games played under the old, traditional rules. Aklilu himself was seen as a wild card with a foreign design who had appeared in familiar deck. ChristopherClapham in his book Haile-Selassie's Government (1969) says that Aklilu as Prime Minister in the 1960s has become responsible for much of the government's policy, and is probably the most influential politician in the country. However, he said his foreign connections are a source of suspicion to many, and his social background provides no traditional basefor authority. "He is regarded by some more French than Ethiopia; certainly his administrative methods are rather more European than thoseof most of his contemporaries," Clapham wrote.

John Spencer, who served as a legal and foreign affairs advisers to the Ethiopian government, in his book Ethiopia at Bay: A personal account ofthe Haile Selassie years wrote that Aklilu was in many ways the most Europeanised of all those surrounding the Emperor and at the same time,he was resented for his greater knowledge of European psychology, wiles,and designs and for the favouritism the emperor showed him. Madame Aklilu's unscripted part of first lady was not to last long. Emperor Haile Selassie, by then a tremoring and aging patriarch, was to be a victim of asocial earthquake. When student protests, and an economic downturn turned into a popular uprising against the government, calls went out for Aklilus cabinet to be dismissed.

In February 1974, he resigned as prime minster, thus paving the way forthe military accession. On 24 November 1974, Akillu along with other 51other leading political and military figures was executed without trial.

Madame Colette, who was in Paris for medical treatment, couldn't make much sense of what has happened. As much as she insisted upon a political justifications for her involvement with the country, it was her burgeoning passion for Aklilu that cemented her devotion to the cause. Their ill-fated love ended in ruin. She decided to remain there. They say her sadness accompanied her to death. She died five years ago at the ageof 95. The couple never had children. (Ato Amde Akalework, Aklilu's nephew passed on some important information included in the article.)

US PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION:
Donald J. Trump Elected President of United States
By Hunter Walker and Dylan Stableford November 7, 2016
NEW YORK — Donald J. Trump will be the 45th president of the United States, the Associated Press projected Wednesday. He will be the first person to hold the office despite having no prior political or military experience. "It's time for America to bind the wounds of division," Trump,flanked by his family and his running mate, Mike Pence, told the crowd inside the Hilton hotel in midtown Manhattan. “To all Republicans, Democrats and independents across this nation: I say it is time for us to come together as one united people. It’s time.”

The Republican nominee’s victory over Hillary Clinton marks a stunning upset that neither the polls nor the pundits saw coming. But Trump, defiant to the end, insisted he would win despite burning bridges with keyvoting groups and even many Republicans. In winning, Trump upended almost every norm of American politics and apparently changed the shapeof the Republican Party.

Clinton called Trump to concede the race shortly before he took the stage,Trump said. “I’ve just received a call from Secretary Clinton,” he said. “She congratulated us — it’s about us — on our victory. And I congratulated her and her family on a very, very hard-fought campaign. Imean, she fought very hard. Hillary has worked very long and very hard over a very long period of time, and we owe her a major debt of gratitudefor her service to our country. And I mean that very sincerely.”

Ethiopia's diplomatic travel ban ends as 'peace restored'

November 8, 2016

Ethiopia has lifted a ban on diplomats travelling more than 40km (25miles) from the capital Addis Ababa without permission, state media report.

The ban was imposed under last month's state of emergency and hasbeen lifted because relative peace and security has been restored, Defence Minister Siraj Fegessa was quoted as saying. Ethiopia has recently faced an unprecedented wave of viole

Ethiopia last month declared a six-month state of emergency after a waveof deadly anti-government demonstrations by activists in both the Oromiaand Amhara regions.

The deaths of at least 55 people at an Oromo religious festival on 2 October triggered fresh unrest, including the targeting of some foreign-owned businesses.

Rights groups say that at least 500 people have died during the protestsoverall. Some of the things restricted under the state of emergency included social media, broadcast media, protests, gestures, freedom ofmovement and guns.nt protests. But Mr Fegessa said the situation nationwide was now much more stable.

He said the travel ban - imposed for the safety of diplomats - was being lifted because it was "unthinkable" that the security threat was so serious.

Estelle Sylvia Pankhurst and her son Richard Pankhurst

(Source: Sylvia Pankhurst: A Life in Radical Politics by Mary Davis)

Fans of Ethiopian history should need no introduction who these two outstandingindividuals are.

Sylvia (1882-1960) was an English radical, who became a staunch advocate againstItalian aggression and occupation of Ethiopia, erecting the Anti-Abyssinian War Memorial in London in October, 1935. Sylvia soon afterward began publishing the New Times and Ethiopia News in 1936, receiving death threats of ...her activities.

Sylvia became a close confidant to the exiled Emperor Haile Selassie during his stayin England, and she was regarded as one of the first great "Friend's of Ethiopia".

Later, at the invitation of the Emperor, Sylvia and her son Richard(and his wife Rita)moved to Ethiopia in the late 1950s, where they embarked on researching and writing about Ethiopian development and history in the publications the Ethiopian Observer and the Journal of Ethiopian Studies.

Sylvia died in Addis Ababa in 1960, receiving a full state funeral and was recognizedas an "honorary Ethiopian'. Sylvia is the only foreigner to be buried in front of Holy Trinity in Addis Ababa.

Richard (b. 1927) went onto becoming Ethiopia's most prolific scholar-historian, authoring countless books on Ethiopia, and served as a tireless advocate for thereturn of many Ethiopian artifacts stolen by both the British and the Italians.

Richard and Rita have two children, Alula and Helen. Ethiopia’s iconic hotel set to be demolishedBy Africa Property News

November 11, 2016 – Ethiopia Hotel and the adjacent Bego Adragot building are to be torn down within the next month. Belayneh Kindie, theimport export mogul, bought the Hotel in 2010 for 92 million Br.

He now has plans to tear down the three star hotel and erect a new 60 storey building. Ethiopia Hotel was one of the earliest hotels built in Ethiopia. It was built to receive guests while Ethiopia was hosting the meetings of the Organisation of the African Unity during the reign of Emperor Haileselassie I. At that time Ethiopia Hotel, along with Ras Hotel,was the most modern hotel in the country.

The Bego Adragot building, building adjacent to Ethiopia Hotel, is also to be removed. It was one of the earliest modern buildings in Ethiopia, built more than 80 years ago, during the Italian invasion. The building, which issituated opposite the National Theatre, is an example of the architecture of a bygone era. The brick arches and the arcade of the building exhibits the craft of the Italian architects then dwelling in Addis Ababa.

Residents of the building and owners of the various bars, cafes, restaurantand a supermarket on the building have been ordered to leave the building by November 19th. The chairman of the local woreda told Fortunethat the people living in the building will be given condominiums as replacements. There have been arguments as to whether Ethiopia Hotel and the Bego Adragot building are heritage buildings that should be preserved.

Amhara militias set 15 soldiers free as show of clemency but TPLFasks for return of all weapons taken from captured soldiers

By Ethiomedia November 12, 2016

Amhara militias sent 15 soldiers home as a show of clemency but weresurprised more soldiers were digging up trenches for further combat operations.

The armed farmers in Wegera of Gonder region had captured about 50 soldiers during a battle with TPLF forces on November 9, 2016. Fightersadmitted a greater number of soldiers were killed than those captured during the long battle.

The local militias were surprised when TPLF asked through mediators for the return of all the weapons they had seized from the soldiers. From badto worse, they were startled that government forces were digging trenches for further military operations in the remote and rugged mountainous region. The local militias have vowed to fight TPLF forces to the end.

Amhara fighters in Gonder destroy TPLF forces sent to disarmcommunity Over 50 government soldiers were captured and a greater number killed in Wegera district of northern Gonder during a pitched battle that began inthe afternoon of November 9 and went on throughout the night, a reporter said.

According to journalist Muluken Tesfaw, the army that was sent to thearea to disarm the farmers was routed after the farmers engaged the soldiers. "The 50 soldiers were captured with all their weapons," the reporter said. "Two heavy machine guns, a sniper and a few militaryradios were also seized."

One of the combatants said at least 20 soldiers were killed before dusk setin, and he believed a greater number were killed during the night battle.

The farmers didn't say how many were killed from their side but identifiedby name one of their fighters who was killed in a heroic feat that enabled him to kill some of the government forces.

For months, the Amhara region has been at war with the TPLF regime, which last month declared a state of emergency to crush public uprisings. Thousands are believed to have been killed in the restive Oromia region aswell in Amhara, where in the case of the latter armed peasants have proven to be a bone in the throat of the TPLF government. Cases of armedconflicts between the Amhara combatants and TPLF forces usually remain unreported due to the news blackout that the regime has enforced via the State of Emergency and other factors like inaccessibility of the remote areas.

Fund-raising events have been reported in the Ethiopian Diaspora, particularly in North America, to help fund peasant families who have vowed to engage the regime until its downfall and bear the brunt of an armed conflict. Fiercely proud of their Ethiopian heritage, the Amhara have long been the target of TPLF, whose ethnic federalism is deliberatelyin place to make sure either it rules the country indefinitely or, in the event of its downfall, it abandons Ethiopia to ethnic fragmentation.

SoE or T-TPLF S.O.S. (Save Our Souls/Ship) Emergency?

Al Mariam's Commentaries By almariam October 12, 2016

Did the T-TPLF just pull off a publicity stunt by declaring a “state of emergency”? Or was it a big distress signal the T-TPLF sent out, “Save Our Souls/Save Our Ship”? I enjoy T-TPLF scams, disinformation, hypesand con games.

I really do. I even grudgingly admire them T-TPLF dudes on how they usetheir weapons of mass distraction. Ain’t they slicker than a can of grease?The thing I don’t like about them is that they believe they can roll out onescam after another and pull the wool over everyone's eyes. The latest T- TPLF scam and con game is "state of emergency" (SoE).

On October 9, 2016, T-TPLF puppet prime minister (PPM) Hailemariam(more appropriately crime minister) declared a "state of emergency".

Big deal!
With T-TPLF boots one their necks, Ethiopians have been under an undeclared state of emergency for the past 25 years.

For crying out loud! Ethiopia has been in a de facto state of emergency —a police state — for the last 25 years.

When Erin Burnett of CNN visited Ethiopia in July 2012, she describedwhat she saw in stark terms:

We saw what an African police state looked like when I was in Ethiopia last month… At the airport, it took an hour to clear customs – not becauseof lines, but because of checks and questioning. Officials tried multiple times to take us to government cars so they'd know where we went. Theyonly relented after forcing us to leave hundreds of thousands of dollars of TV gear in the airport…

Now, the T-TPLF wants to make its police state official in a "state ofemergency decree"?

I don't buy any of the T-TPLF's "state of emergency" rubbish. But the Western media bought all of the hoopla (more accurately crapola) hook,line and sinker.

On October 9, 2016, the mighty New York Times (and many othersincluding the BBC) headlined its report, "Ethiopia Declares State ofEmergency to Stop Protests."

No kidding?
Well, I don't pay much attention to the mindless Western press (I did notsay Western parrots) reiterating the official T-TPLF disinformation and passing it on to the world as news.

Call me "curmudgeon" if you like. But my view on much of what passes asjournalism today is the same as H.L. Mencken's who said, "American journalism (like the journalism of any other country) is predominantly paltry and worthless. Its pretensions are enormous, but its achievements are insignificant."

Touche!

The whole “state of emergency” declaration by the T-TPLF sounded to me as though it is the T-TPLF itself that in a state of emergency. It’s more likethe T-TPLF is on life support in the ICU.

On October 9, the T-TPLF did not declare a state of emergency for theEthiopia. It declared an emergency S.O.S. for the “S.S. T-TPLF”.
There is no question about it. The T-TPLF Ship of State is sinking, andsinking fast.
The S.S. T-TPLF has been struck by a tsunami of the Ethiopian peoples’ anger, frustration and outrage.
The S.S. T-TPLF is going DOWN! DOWN! DOWN! (Did someone say, “Down, down, Woyane!?”)
Flying the “State ofEmergency” flag on the “S.S. T-TPLF” is not going to save it.

In a 20-minute television statement, a gaunt, haggard and sallow (I didnot say shriveled) PPM flew the “state of emergency flag” and blatheredabout the reasons for declaring the SoE.

In delivering “his” statement, the PPM looked unsure of himself. His wordslacked conviction. He looked robotic reciting some programmed words on a screen. His usual swagger and bluster was completely gone. His body language showed extreme tension, anxiety and stress. He clasped his hands tightly for the entire 20 minutes. His body posture remained stiff forthe entire time; he barely bobbed his head. He seemed almost impaled to the television screen. His facial expression was blank. He seemed to have dry mouth. His eyes flitted but his gaze was fixed on the screen from which he was reading. The pitch, intonation and volume of his voice dissipated into tedious monotony. He sounded to me like the class monitorin high school telling everybody what the teacher said.

Was PPM Hailemariam the messenger boy for someone else sitting in thedark behind the throne?

The PPM in “his” statement repeated himself like a broken record (possiblyfor emphasis but more likely to captivate his audience and keep them glued to his message since most Ethiopians would naturally walk away in disgust after listening to a few seconds of his drivel). The gist of the PPM’sstatement is summarized as follows:

First, anti-peace elements (does that mean terrorists? Does it mean pro-war? If so, why not call them “pro-war?) allied with foreigners have undermined the peace and stability of the people (of Ethiopia);

Second, the regular process of pacifying (suppressing) actions (by anti- peace elements) has proven ineffective and as a result people are dying including foreign citizens and ethnic and sectarian strife is increasing. Theonly way to return to peace and stability fast is through the SoE.

Third, Ethiopia is a country where local capitalists and foreign investors have created great wealth (Could he be referring to T-TPLF crony capitalists?) and many development projects supported by taxes and foreign loans are in place. The (anti-peace elements) are destroying theseprojects and government offices and have caused economic retaliation (boycotts?) by persuading store keepers to shut down their stores. Unlessswift action is taken, these problems will continue.

Fourth, the SoE is constitutional and authorized by Article 93.
Fifth, emphatically, fundamental human rights will not be violated or trampled under the SoE. Rights secured under the "Vienna Convention"will be protected and observed. A parliamentary oversight body will ensure human rights violations are not caused by the SoE.

Sixth, the governance system needs deep and extensive reforms. There are practices in (the T-TPLF) regime that reveal democratic deficits, whichwill be identified (extracted) and corrected. Reforming the "democratic structure" is a big job (for the T-TPLF). There is a need for legislative oversight of executive branch activities.

Seventh, the (T-TPLF) is ready to engage civic and professional organizations in discussions and dialogue to expand and deepen ourdemocracy. It is vital to make our democracy deep and wide.

Eight, the (T-TPLF) is ready to engage political parties on differentagendas and discuss political reform with them.

Ninth, Ethiopia's development and progress is at extreme peril as a resultof the (mass uprisings). The (T-TPLF) pleads with the people not throw out the baby (development) with the dirty bathwater (the T-TPLF). We need to correct mistakes very fast.

Tenth, all Ethiopians must come together and fight against an(unidentified) foreign enemy.

The T-TPLF's dour-faced prosecutor provided a rambling explanation ofthe SoE reading from what appeared to be talking points.

The T-TPLF prosecutor's mantra was "Command Post". He talked abouthow the SoE will be implemented by the “Command Post”. He was so cryptic about the “Command Post”, I thought he was talking about the Boogey Man coming after anyone violating the SoE.

The gist of the “prosecutor’s” statement is summarized as follows:
First, the “Command Post” will implement the state of emergency order. (He offered no explanation what the so-called command post is.) Second, the “Command Post” is responsible for the investigation and apprehension of anyone engaged the following activities and take action:Suspicion of inciting any kind of chaos, strife, mistrust and misunderstanding among peoples in public or covertly; Preparing, writing, publishing and disseminating writings, putting on dramatic shows, using symbols (such as crossed hands at the wrist over one’s head) or making any kind of public message and "engaging inpublic gathering or assembly."

The “Command Post” has the power to:
Close all communications means (internet and telephone?);
Arrest without a court order anyone suspected of incitement;
Search any home or vehicle and stop and frisk of any person withoutprobable cause or reasonable suspicion.
Impose curfew.

According to the T-TPLF prosecutor, the “command post” has the power toRequire all citizens to obey and co-operate with the SoE.
Impose a sentence of 5 year at hard labor for those found guilty of suspected involvement in the vague. Those who fail to cooperate get 3 years. T-TPLF spokesman Getachew Reda said the “state of emergency”will last for 6 months.

The SoE is UNCONSTITUTIONAL

Under the T-TPLF constitution a “state of emergency can be declared if authorized by the “council of ministers” (Art. 93(a)). If the House of Peoples’ Representatives is in session, the decree shall be submitted to the House within forty-eight hours of its declaration for approval by “two-thirds majority vote”. (Art. 93, 2(a).) However, “a state of emergency decreed by the Council of Ministers, if approved by the House of Peoples’ Representatives, can remain in effect up to six months.”

In other words, for the Declaration to be effective for a period of 6 months, it is mandatory that the “House of Peoples’ Representatives” approve it by at least “two-thirds majority vote”. There is no evidence thatthe constitutionally required approval has been obtained to implement theSoE declared by the “Council of Ministers” for six months.

There is no evidence the so-called House of Peoples’ Representatives (ofwhich all 547 members belong to the T-TPLF party) actually acted, even on a pro forma basis, on the state of emergency declaration. There is noevidence “two-thirds of the House” voted to approve any declaration of astate of emergency.

By failing to comply with the prescribed constitutional process, the T-TPLFonce again trashed its own constitution.

PPM Hailemariam talking about the status of human rights during the SoEsaid, “In this regard, as set forth in the constitution, there are two things,rights that cannot be violated or trampled or splintered (under the SoE). The first is, as set forth in the constitution, fundamental human rights willbe observed without violation under no circumstances. Under the state of emergency, human rights will be given a big focus. I want to make it public that there will be no violation of human rights under the emergencydeclaration.”

It seems the PPM is totally clueless of what human rights are; or he hasno idea what his chief prosecutor is saying about arbitrary arrests, detentions and the rest of it.

Arresting anyone without probable cause or reasonable suspicion (arbitrary detention) is a violation of human rights. Denial of due process(denial of regular judicial proceedings and a fair trial to suspects) is a violation of human rights. Searching a person's home or vehicle or stopping and frisking anyone without probable cause or reasonable suspicion is a violation of human rights. (International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, Article 17.) Blanket censorship is a violation of human rights.

Both the PPM the T-TPLF attorney general made references to certain "human rights" (without explicitly stating them) as completely off-limits under the SoE declaration; but those references are principally concerned with the use of torture. The fact of the matter is that the T-TPLF regularlyuses torture on detainees under its so-called anti-terrorism law. In its 2013 report, Human Rights Watch stated, "Ethiopian authorities have subjected political detainees to torture and other ill-treatment at the main detention center in Addis Ababa."

It seems the SoE is not only unconstitutional but also in violation of well-established human rights treaties and conventions to which Ethiopia is a party.

Since the SoE is manifestly unconstitutional, could it be deemed a de factodeclaration of martial law?

The T-TPLF prosecutor stated the SoE will be implemented by a"Command Post".

The T-TPLF prosecutor did not say a "civilian command post". Did he intentionally omit the word "civilian" because he wanted to fudge the nature of the "command post", or thought it is reasonably obvious that itwill be a military command post.

I am puzzled by the T-TPLF prosecutor's references to "command post" asthe enforcement agency for the SoE.

I am aware of two general types of "command posts" in operation in mostplaces in the world. One is an "emergency command post" that oversees operations post-natural disasters or other man-made events of extreme urgency. The other is a military "command post" where a commander andhis staff at a particular headquarters operate the command post.

Given the nature of the tasks of the T-TPLF's SoE "command post", it isclear to me that the "command post" will be a military one without explicitly stating so.

Supporting the foregoing interpretation are the following factors:

1) The specific tasks delegated to the "Command Post" can be carried outmost effectively by a military force unaccountable to any civilian authority.

2) The constitution has been suspended for all intents and purposes.

3) The courts are prohibited from exercising judicial review over the actions of the "Command Post". Instead, the courts are replaced by amilitary or quasi-military authority to determine guilt.

3) Those detained by the "Command Post" will not have the right to legalrepresentation, nor the legal capacity to challenge their detention through their lawyers.

4) The "Command Post" has plenary powers. That means absolute power.Such power exists only under martial law and in complete disregard forcivilian judicial or political institutions.

Declaration of State of Emergency is common in dictatorships

Most dictatorships at one point or another declare states of emergency.

On May 16, 2005, one day after the parliamentary election, Meles Zenawideclared a state of emergency, outlawed all public gatherings and placed under his direct personal command and control all police, security and military forces, and replaced the capital city police with federal police andspecial forces.

In the coming weeks, Meles' forces went on a killing rampage slaughteringnearly 200 innocent protesters and severely wounding nearly 800 others. The unarmed protesters were hunted down and shot in the streets and in their homes simply because they chose to exercise their right to peaceablyprotest that rigged election.

In its November 2010 report Human Rights Watch reported, "In November2005, nearly 200 people were killed by security forces in Addis Ababa, andan estimated 30,000 people in Addis Ababa and other towns were arrested and transported to military camps outside of Addis Ababa."

In July 2016, Turkish president Recep Tayyip Erdogan declared a state of emergency following an alleged coup attempt. According to Reuters, morethan 100,000 public officials, including members of the police, civil service and military, have been dismissed or suspended from their jobs in the ensuing crackdown. About 40,000 people have been detained. The Turkishjustice minister a couple of weeks ago announced that some 32,000 people have been formally arrested as part of the investigation into the suspected Gulenist network.

Egyptians lived under an Emergency Law (Law No. 162 of 1958) from 1967 to 2012 (Arab Spring). (See my May 2011 commentary, "Africa'sYouth United Can Never be Defeated".)

In May 2013, Goodluck Jonathan of Nigeria declared a state of emergencyfor the entire northeastern states of Borno, Yobe and Adamawa. Many Latin American and East Asian countries have toyed with states of emergency.

The current declaration of state of emergency (SoE) is verysimilar to the Apartheid South Africa's
In 1960, the apartheid for the first time faced widespread revolt throughout South Africa particularly against the pass laws. As the revolt began to spread, the white minority regime was alarmed and threatenedby popular revolt. (See my May 2015 commentary, "Remembering the Sharpeville Massacre in South Africa".)

On March 21, 1960, unarmed black South African went to a police station to peacefully protest. The police fired on the crowd killing 69 people and injuring 180. Strikes and other labor actions followed and the apartheid state declared a State of Emergency for the first time. The apartheid regime passed other measures and banned both the African National Congress and other organizations. Over 25 thousand people were arrestedwithin less than two months of the Declaration. Detainees were held without access to lawyers and family and even placed in solitary confinement.

The T-TPLF declaration in much the same way as the 1960 apartheid stateemergency declaration prohibits all protest and demonstrations, authorizes arbitrary arrests, prolonged detentions and extrajudicial actions by any authority of the government. The T-TPLF declaration also prohibits judicial review and bans all expressive freedoms including speechand assembly. (See my May 2016 commentary, "The "Law" as State Terrorism in Apartheid Ethiopia".)

In July 1985, the apartheid white minority regime declared another State of Emergency. The Declaration granted wide powers to police, soldiers andother authorities. Under the 1985 state of emergency declaration, the police and any other state authority: 1) can search anyone's (black people) house and take away anything they want; 2) stop any meeting, 3) arrest anyone and keep them in jail for as long as they like; 4) the head of police can stop the newspapers from writing anything about the State of Emergency. 5) newspapers cannot give the names of people in jail without reporting their names; police have the power to impose curfews;

6) the police cannot be challenged in court, 7) detainees can have any visit, including family visits, only if the police approve, 8) the police can impose solitary confinement for any detainee, 9) a sick detainee does nothave a right to medical care.

Following both declarations, the apartheid regime was able to detain not only thousands of political activists within a short time but also minor children and old people suspected of not cooperating. Ironically, the stateof emergency and other repressive measures intensified and expanded theopposition to apartheid, ushering in three decades of resistance and protest in the country and increasing condemnation by world leaders. Thatis exactly what the T-TPLF "state of emergency" decree does today!!!

The declaration of "state of emergency" is a publicity stunt:
Here is the evidence

Using its so-called anti-terrorism law (Proclamation No. 652/2009), the T-TPLF has been doing everything it says it wants to do under the declaration of state of emergency.

There are two differences. First, in the SoE the targets are "anti-peace elements". In the "antiterrorsim law", the the targets are "terrorists". Second, terrorism suspects at least get kangaroo (monkey) court trials.Anti-peace elements do not.

Section (5) of the T-TPLF anti-terrorism proclamation condemns as "terrorist" anyone who "provides a skill, expertise or moral support or gives advice… makes available any property in any manner… monetary, financial or other related services … provides any training or instruction ordirective". Section (6) criminalizes as a terrorist act publication of "a statement that is likely to be understood by some or all of the members ofthe public as a direct or indirect encouragement… of an act of terrorism…"Section (7) criminalizes the "recruitment" of any person "for the purpose of a terrorist organization or committing a terrorist act."

The T-TPLF anti-terrorism proclamation authorizes warrantless searches and seizure. Section (14) allows warrantless “interception and surveillanceon the telephone, fax, radio, internet, electronic, postal and similar communications of a person suspected of terrorism”, “enter into any premise in secret to enforce the interception” or “install or remove instruments enabling the interception.” It further allows any “police officer who has reasonable suspicion that a terrorist act may be committed and deems it necessary to make a sudden search…, stop vehicle and pedestrian in an area and conduct sudden search at any time, and seize relevant evidences.”

Section (19) of the T-TPLF Proclamation authorizes any police officer to “arrest without court warrant any person whom he reasonably suspects ofterrorism.” Section (20) allows the court to grant endless continuances and postponements so that the police/prosecutor “for sufficient period to complete the investigation.” Section (23) allows the admission of unverified intelligence reports, hearsay or indirect surveillance evidence including those gathered by “foreign law enforcement bodies” and “confessions of suspects, including coerced confessions. Section (25) authorizes the “House of Peoples’ Representatives” the power to list and de-list an organization as terrorist organization. Section (37) allows the “Council of Ministers” to issue “regulations necessary for the implementation of this proclamation.

Under the ambiguous, vague, sweeping and overbroad language of the T- TPLF proclamation, any act, speech, statement, and even thought, could be punished. Anyone the T-TPLF prosecutor/police believe or make-believeis engaged in “advancing a political, religious or ideological cause” and intending to “influence the government”, “intimidate the public”, “destabilize or destroy the fundamental political, constitutional, economic or social institutions of the country” could be condemned to long imprisonment or suffer the death penalty. The T-TPLF police and prosecutors could charge anyone they wanted without so much as a scintilla of evidence of wrongdoing. Making or publishing statements “likely to be understood as encouraging terrorist acts” is a punishable offense. Anyone alleged to have provided “moral support or advice” or hashad any contact with an individual accused of a terrorist act is presumed to be a terrorist supporter.

Under the T-TPLF proclamation, anyone who “writes, edits, prints, publishes, publicizes, disseminates, shows, makes to be heard any promotional statements encouraging, supporting or advancing terroristacts” is deemed a “terrorist”. Peaceful protesters who carry banners critical of the regime could be charged for “promotional statements encouraging” terrorist acts. Anyone who “disrupts any public service” is considered a “terrorist” (Section 3); and workers who may legitimatelygrieve working conditions by work stoppages could be charged with “terrorism” for disruption.

Under the T-TPLF proclamation, a person who “fails to immediately informor give information or evidence to the police" on a neighbor, co-worker orothers s/he may suspect of "terrorism" could face up to 10 years for failure to report. Two or more persons who have contact with a "terror" suspect could be charged with conspiracy to commit "terrorism".

The procedural due process rights (fair trial) of suspects and the accused guaranteed under the T-TPLF constitution and international human rights conventions are ignored, evaded, overlooked and disregarded by the proclamation. "The police may arrest without court warrant any person whom he reasonably suspects to have committed or is committing a terrorism" and hold that person in incommunicado detention. The police can engage in random and "sudden search and seizure" of the person, place or personal effects of anyone suspected of "terrorism". The police can "intercept, install or conduct surveillance on the telephone, fax, radio,internet, electronic, postal, and similar communications" of a person suspected of terrorism. The police can order "any government institution,official, bank, or a private organization or an individual" to turn over documents, evidence and information on a "terror" suspect.

A "terror" suspect can be held in custody without charge for up to "28 days" with unlimited renewals. Any "evidence" presented by the regime's prosecutor against a "terror" suspect in "court" is admissible, including "confessions" (extracted by torture), "hearsay", "indirect, digital and electronic evidences" and "intelligence reports even if the report does not disclose the source or the method it was gathered (including evidence obtained by torture). The "law" presumes the "terror" suspect to be guilty and puts the burden of proof on the suspect/defendant in violation of the universal principle that the accused is presumed innocent until proven guilty. Any evidence including involuntary confessions and hearsay could be used in court as evidence. The T-TPLF proclamation bars habeas reviewor pretrial judicial intervention even to adjudicate detainee allegations of abuse and torture.

In the police state Ethiopia has become, opposition political and civic leaders and dissidents are kept under 24/7 surveillance, and the ordinary people they meet in the street are intimidated, harassed and persecuted. The climate of fear that permeates every aspect of urban and rural societyis reinforced and maintained by a structure of repression that is vertically integrated from the very top to the local (kebele) level making impossible dissent or peaceful opposition political activity. As former president under the T-TPLF and currently an opposition leader Dr. Negasso Gidada has documented, the structure of state terrorism in Ethiopia is so horrific one can only find parallels for it in Stalin-era Soviet Union. According to Negasso, "The police and security offices and personnel collect informationon each household through other means. One of these methods involves the use of organizations or structures called "shane", which in Oromo means "the five".

SoE DECREE IS A PUBLICITY STUNT!

The SoE declaration is another T-TPLF disinformation con job

The T-TPLF state of emergency decree is another disinformationcampaign. The T-TPLF hopes to achieve six objectives.

First, The T-TPLF hopes the SoE will create a Fear Factor in the populationat large. When people are being massacred by the thousands, they fear nothing. The people of Ethiopia have reached a defining Shakespearean moment: “A coward dies a thousand times before his death, but the valiant taste of death but once. It seems to me most strange that men should fear, seeing that death, a necessary end, will come when it will come.”

Second, the T-TPLF hopes to steal the headlines from the Irreecha Massacre. The T-TPLF hopes to change the subject from the Irreecha Massacre to their silly emergency declaration. To a limited extent, they have succeeded in this at least in the Diaspora Ethiopia. As I scour socialmedia and the websites, the talk seems to have changed from the Irreecha Massacre to the emergency declaration.

Third, the T-TPLF hopes its declaration will be a game changer. They hopethe people of Ethiopia and the Western donors, loaners and international poverty pimps will use the declaration as a basis for some sort of a negotiated settlement. The fact of the matter is that the declaration is nota game changer; it is just a T-TPLF game of disinformation. It is nothing more than a T-TPLF publicity stunt.

Fourth, the T-TPLF hopes the declaration will help it regain the illusion of invincibility it had created over the past 25 years. In practical terms whatthe T-TPLF is saying with its declaration of a state of emergency is that they can massacre, kill, jail, persecute, prosecute their way back to business as usual. It ain’t happening!

Reality check: Is it not true that the T-TPLF has been massacring, jailing, killing, persecuting and prosecuting anyone they pleased over thepast 25 years? What else is new? Has any T-TPLF official ever been brought to justice in the last 25 years for crimes against humanity?

Fifth, the T-TPLF wants to send the message to its loaners and donors thatit is still in control of the country. The declaration gives T-TPLF leaders the opportunity to publicly claim that they have the military and civil administrative capacity to enforce their political will. The fact is the T- TPLF’s administrative offices in the rural areas are going up in smoke and the T-TPLF lackeys are abandoning their posts and joining the people or just beating feet. The fact is that the T-TPLF administrative structure has disintegrated completely except perhaps in the capital and its own stronghold.

Sixth, the T-TPLF aims to scare the people that it can jail everyone it doesnot like. How much prison capacity does the T-TPLF have left to add more prisoners and detainees? I guess it could be limitless since the T-TPLF isburning its prisons to reduce overcrowding by claiming the inmates died from a “stampede” . There have been at least 3 major fires in T-TPLF prisons over the past three years with hundred burned to death.

I believe the T-TPLF state of emergency declaration is a form of psychological warfare being waged on the people. It is the T-TPLF’s last ditch effort to inspire fear in the population and suppressing the uprisingthat is spreading like wildfire.

But it is an empty threat. There is nothing more the T-TPLF can do with itsemergency declaration that it has not been able to do over the last 25 years. But they still believe they can outsmart and outfox the people and get them back in the state of fear through a state of emergency.

Still the T-TPLF hopes against hope that the silly declaration will crush thepeoples’ spirit, erode the peoples’ will to resist, disrupt their networks, confuse their thinking process and destroy their will to fight and resist.
They hope to be able to destroy the morale of the popular resistance. They hope to create dissension among the opposition, ultimately leadingto a surrender.

Sorry, T-TPLF. Those days are over!

Let’s get down to the nitty-gritty. What’s all this state of emergency crapabout?

Just one thing. The T-TPLF is trying to get its behind out of the ringer in an “honorable” way. The PPM spent nearly half of his speech pleading foranother chance. Pleeese, pleeese Ethiopian people, give us one more chance to get it right….

The WHOLE purpose of the state of emergency declaration is to get the people’s attention so that the T-TPLF can get down on its knees and begfor one more chance to do it right.

This is what the PPM said: In this regard, as set forth in the constitution, our aim is to continue the work started by the people and the government. Our government’s system of governance needs to be renewed (rehabilitated). We have started a competent mobilization process. We will reshape our (administration) from top to bottom and address the questions raised by the people and their complaints about theservices the government should give them. This is one of our biggest goals. Second, the governance process must be rehabilitated. We have todo deep reforms. In so doing, we will extract those things that are democratic deficits and correct them. Reforming our democratic structure is another one of the big jobs we have to do. That means increasing executive accountability to the legislature. It is also necessary to engage civic and professional organizations in discussion with the government andwiden our democracy. Also to broaden and deepen our democracy, it is very necessary to engage the legal parties in discussion with the government on various agendas…

The people of Ethiopia have spoken: DOWN, DOWN, WOYANE!

Post Script: What I do not understand about the T-TPLF is this: When 20million people were facing famine and starvation, they did not declare a state of emergency. When they “won” one hundred percent of the seats intheir rubber stamp parliament and stole the peoples voices, they did not declare a state of emergency. When the hundreds of people in Gambella were massacred, and tens of thousands forcibly removed from their land so foreign investors could take it, they did not declare a state of emergency. When the people of the Ogaden were subjected to genocide, they did not declare a state of emergency.

But when a few pieces of property belonging to foreign investors and theirown cronies and supporters are destroyed, the declare a state of emergency. The SoE is ultimately about T-TPLF clinging to power and ensuring the economic dominance its partners and supporters. (text ends)

The Military Command Post & Mass Arrests In Ethiopia:Over 11,000 arrested since state of emergency

By Aljazeera November 14, 2016

Authorities have arrested more than 11,000 people since Ethiopia declareda state of emergency early last month amid violent protests.

A majority of the arrests were made in the Oromo and Amhara regions - the centre of demonstrations and home to two ethnic groups that make upabout 60 percent of the country's population. "Some 11,607 individuals have so far been detained in six prisons, of which 347 are female, in connection with the state of emergency declared in the country," official Taddesse Hordofa said in a televised statement on Saturday.

More than 500 people have been killed in unrest since last year, rights groups say, triggered initially by anger over a development scheme for the capital, Addis Ababa, which demonstrators said would force farmersoff their land in the surrounding Oromo region.

The protests evolved into broader demonstrations over politics and humanrights and led to attacks on businesses, many of them foreign-owned, prompting the government to declare a six-month nationwide state of emergency on October 9. Mobile internet service and access to social media are blocked in the capital as part of the measures.
The emergency decree included restrictions on opposition party activity,curfews, and a ban on diplomats travelling more than 40km outside thecapital without authorisation. On Tuesday, the country lifted travel restrictions imposed on diplomats, Reuters news agency reported.

Hordofa reeled off a long list of offences ranging from serious crimes suchas "attacking security forces using firearms" or "killing civilians and members of security forces" to the much more mundane "denying provision of public services" and "disrupting movement of vehicles".

This figure is a huge increase to the 2,500 arrests that Prime Minister Hailemariam Desalegn's government had announced at the end of October. It has to be recalled that on October 31, Defence Minister Siraj Fegessa announced 2,000 people who had participated in protests had been released, although Saturday's announcement included no details onhow many of the 11,000 remain in prison.

Senior journalist and former Reuters Correspondent Reflects onCareer

By Arefayné Fantahun (November, 2016)

He is a good raconteur with a wealth of anecdote and reminiscence abouthis journalistic careers. Many people know him as ‘Tsegaye Reuters’, associating him for the news company that he worked for 35 years duringthe Mengistu and the current regimes. The words of recognition given to him by the news company after his retirement, congratulates him for “providing exceptional news coverage from Ethiopia with the utmost dedication and professionalism.”

His journalism career started in the 1960’s during the Emperor Haile Selassie reign. He has spent a sizable portion of his professional life working for the Ethiopian Herald, making him one of the pioneering Ethiopian reporters. He covered conferences and summits, the courts,council meetings, the parliaments.

Tsegaye Tadesse, 83, had witnessed major milestones, such as the historic signing of the charter that would bring African leaders together, the attempted military coup against Emperor Haile Selassie, the abolishment of the monarchy in March 1975. He is one of the very few surviving journalists who started their careers during the Imperial era andhe has built a formidable network of contacts along the years even while battling Mengistu's censors. He developed a reputation as a moderate man, who preferred to work by consensus rather than confrontation and he has had a way of getting access to events and places where others would have failed.
I've had a privilege to speak to him recently about his career, and how hisjournalism years have been, which he describes as, a "joy and a life-time pleasure". He lives in a house wrapped in imperial-purple bougainvillea behind the American Embassy. Despite a recent pneumonia infection, he is doing well for an 83-year-old man.

Born in 1933, in Senadyan Sefer in Amanuel Mesalemia area in Addis Ababa, Tsegaye spent his early years in the area attending religious school as was common then. He recited alphabet, psalms of David and kine (poetry). His father was appointed to Ilibabur and he moved to SidistKilo area with his mother. There he joined Addis Ababa's famous secondary school, Teferi Mekonen, which produced many Ethiopian elites.That was around when the occupying Italians left the country, he says.
After completing high school, he wanted to join the air forceunsuccessfully.

He instead joined the Teacher's Training College that was just opened at Kotebe. After graduation, Tsegaye was assigned as a teacher at the remote region of Gore, Ilibabur but was later transferred to Shewa. "It was at Addis Alem School that I served a little longer than others," he recalls. He also taught at Debre Berhan Haile Mariam School for a year. During those times, he was an avid reader of the national newspaper to which he used to contribute articles. Shortly after the end of his teaching career at Addis Alem, Tsegaye steeped into the office of the Ethiopian Herald in 1961 to take up a job as cub reporter-armed only with a flair for English. Herald was then edited by the African-American Dr. David Talbot, whom Tsegaye described as a remarkable person, which though turgid and dull, had a positively effervescent personality. "At the time, we had noofficial journalism training in our country, but we learned the trade on the job, proof reading, sub editing, and so on,"

"It was hard to find local news then. We had to depend upon the international news agencies for the bulk of the news," he recalls. "Our rolewas to re-write a story taken from one of those agencies and give it a titleand try to fit it into the page. That was the biggest job," he says. Over time, Tsegaye moved on to more responsible assignments, developing andwriting news stories, translating, and sending dispatches from the capital. Within just four years, he rose to the rank of sub editor.

Upon his move to parliament reporting, becoming the first parliamentary reporter for the Herald in 1963, Tsegaye came to learn of the so-called flogging bill which many progressive elements in the parliament regardedwith dread. Tsegaye says it was a bill primarily intended to cow the general populous who were becoming more daring in expressing themselves after the 1960 coup. It threatened to penalize anyone who spoke ill of the monarch and the system with thirty lashes of the whip.
The bill would also require journalists to refer anyone beyond the rank of adirector as "honourable". After many heated discussions and exchanges, the bill was rejected by the parliament. Tsegaye duly wrote a news storyon it, even though the censor rejected the story. "The editor Tegen Yeteshawork and I disregarded the order and published it. We even shared the news to other agencies, before it came out on the paper. Thenews became a success and it was aired on many foreign channels," Tsegaye recalls. This angered the government, especially the prime minster Aklilu Habtewold who was the brain behind the bill. He called theMinster of Information and railed at him. The irritated Minster on his partsummoned Tsegaye and Tegen and heaped insults on them. Initially, thetwo were threatened with losing their three months' salary for the "misconduct". Tsegaye says "it was only for the sake of appearance. We had our salaries. We instead received lots of insults and swearing." The censor hardened to keep a very strict watch on them afterwards.

Tsegaye saw the protracted Ethiopian revolution coming, which ousted Emperor Haile Selassie. One of the articles Tsegaye did before the dawn ofthe revolution was a full page story entitled "One Day with the Emperor", written on the 23rd of July 1973 on the occasion of the Emperor's eightieth birthday, and the last he was to celebrate as ruler. The article was intended to show the public duties of the Emperor, such as ceremonies, receptions and visitations. Tsegaye had to accompany the Emperor for the whole day, observing him whilst in prayer, reading officialpapers and notes, having audiences with ministers and meetings with his secretaries to discuss daily business and riding his horse at his ranch which was then located at Ghion Hotel. The article came out better than he hoped for, a sympathetic spread which even pleased the Emperor. "One of the Emperor's greatest strengths was his ability to master astonishing amounts of details without losing a sense of strategic vison," Tsegaye observed.

In the turbulent days after the overthrow of Emperor Haile Selassie, Tsegaye's career for the government press ended. He came to establishhis own advertising and distribution company. The company prepared brochures, fliers, catalogues, trading cards, magazines and run commercials for some of the biggest companies in the country.

While working there, the international news agency Reuters recruited himin 1975 as its Ethiopian correspondent. This was after the then British correspondent was expelled from the country for refusing to reveal his sources for a report about the execution of five Ethiopian army officers.

Tsegaye views his days on the Reuters had been the best years of his working life; he believes it was this job that made his reputation as a journalist, allowing him to demonstrate what proper, standard journalism looks like. He covered the fierce fighting between the Eritrean's People's Liberation Army and the Ethiopian national army in the 1980's. His reporting has proven essential, guiding viewers through the complexitiesof the bloody conflict. The military junta kept a close watch on his dispatches, threatening to revoke his license whenever angered by his reports. The military government was not particularly pleased whenTsegaye quoted from the rebel's radio, which it was trying to jam regularly.

One of his reports would bring him to the military leader Mengistu Hailemarim's office. When former American President Jimmy Carter staredto mediate conflict between the Ethiopian government and the rebel group, EPLF, in 1989, he begged local and foreign journalists not to aggravate the situation by focusing on negative side. The Ethiopian government officials also promised Mr. Carter to drop all the swaggering war discourse. However, while the negotiation was in progress, Lt. Col.
Mengistu Haile Mariam would declare in a speech in the Revolution squareon the occasion of May Day that, he would "drive the Eritrean bandits away by force, there couldn't be any peace brokering with them". When Tsegaye reported this to Reuters, he was called by some government member's anti-peace and war-monger. The Minster of Information threatened to revoke his license and on the following day, brought him toMengistu's office. But the President came to his defence saying that all hedid was truthfully report what he said.

Tsegaye has also covered extensively the bloody war between Ethiopia and Eritrea that broke out in 1998 and the deepening humanitarian crisis which has spread across the region in its wake. He travelled four times tothe battlefield at significant personal risk. His reports have focused on – amongst other subjects – the effect of devastating 'cluster bomb' attack on the Ethiopian civilian population and the humanitarian and economic costs of the enforced inscription, mass expulsions of each other's citizens.

Tsegaye expresses admiration for the prominent member of the elite group of the then journalists. Tegen Yeteshawork, the Columbia Universityeducated journalist who took over editorship of the Ethiopian Herald from November 1961 and who later became head of the Press Department, wasone of the journalists who made an extremely positive impression on Tsegaye. "He was a genius editor and a learned journalist. He was truly inspirational figure whom I loved like a brother. He was open to me in a generous manner from the very start, the way he engaged people throughout his life. Over the years we came to spend many hours together, and I always came away from these meetings well-informed. Hehad revolutionary instincts and he was a times at loggerheads with the monarch," he recalls. When Tegen was killed by the military junta along with the other 60 officials in 1974, Tsegaye was stunned. He admired him a great deal- his intelligence, courage, and love for his country.

Another colourful personality that Tsegaye held in great esteem was the late Gedamu Abraha, who was the brain behind Addis Reporter, a highly-rated weekly English magazine, published in the 1969. Though Tsegaye and Gedamu didn't work together, they had formed a warm continuing friendship when both were in the United States on a two month trip to attend Nixon's election in 1968, invited by the State Department. They visited 36 states together. Tsegaye described Gedamu as quick-thinking, witty and hugely knowledgeable about Ethiopian political events and trends. "He had a laid-back, no-nonsense style of writing and brought a cool head and long perspective in the rhetoric of political and social reporting. In the nascent word Ethiopian journalism, he was a stickler for accuracy, precision and meticulousness." He also praises Seyoum Ayele, who was first the reporter for Voice of Ethiopia and later the Associated Press's correspondent and Abebe Andualem as people "determined to get at the truth, people who believed in accuracy, people who subscribe to thecode".

Tsegaye described the job of a correspondent for a foreign news agency as "extremely demanding, both mentally and physically", but hailed it as "a profession which teaches you to cope with literally any situation withoutpanicking and without yielding to the pressures of interested parties.
When Meles Zenawi's EPRDF's forces entered Addis Ababa in 1991, Tsegaye was busy chronicling events unfolding with perspective gained from decades of watching history upfront. A colleague at the time recalls him as being «always a calm, avuncular figure puffing on his pipe; he sported a sort of deerstalker and drove around Addis in his vintage bangerpast tanks and men with machine guns."
"Beneath it all seethed with incredulity at man's folly, but he was a survivor. He had to be –only his basilisk eyes betrayed what was going on his mind," he added.

Since leaving Reuters a few years ago Tsegaye had been involved in a number of social service projects as well as travelling and spending timewith his wife and his five children who are all living in the United States.(text ends)

BBC World News
Broadcast in Amharic, Afaan Oromo and Tigrinya

November 17, 2016

(Reuters) — The BBC said on Wednesday that its World Service will beginbroadcasting in 11 additional languages in a drive to reach millions more people, including in places like North Korea where impartial news is hard to get.

The World Service started out in 1932 as a radio channel for English- speakers in the British empire but has morphed over time into a highly respected provider of news to global audiences. It already broadcasts in 29 languages, reaching an estimated 246 million people around the worldevery week.

The expansion is a result of a funding injection of 289 million pounds ($360 million) until 2020 announced by the government last year. The boost reversed a previous decision to cut World Service funding and was part of a broader strategy to increase Britain's 'soft power'. "This is a historic day for the BBC, as we announce the biggest expansion of the World Service since the 1940s," said BBC Director General Tony Hall. "TheBBC World Service is a jewel in the crown – for the BBC and for Britain."

Fran Unsworth, director of the World Service, said the new funding from government would have no impact on the service's independence. "Wherethe money comes from is irrelevant," she said in an interview on BBC Radio 4. "The World Service is going to do what it's always done, go over the heads of government providing a service directly to citizens of the world," she said.

The additional African languages will be Afaan Oromo and Amharic, spoken in Ethiopia and other countries, Tigrinya, the main language of Eritrea, and Nigerian languages Igbo, Yoruba and Pidgin, also spoken inother West African countries.

The World Service will also add Indian languages Gujarati, Marathi and Telugu, as well as Punjabi which is widely spoken in Pakistan and parts ofIndia, and Korean, spoken in both North and South Korea. The expansionwill mean more journalists on the ground in locations around the world.

The BBC will also extend its news bulletins in Russian, with regionalised versions for surrounding countries, and add regional programming in Arabic and short-wave and medium-wave radio programs aimed at audiences in the Korean peninsula. "We do believe that there is an opportunity for North Koreans to have access to free and independent andimpartial information," said Unsworth.

She said BBC Monitoring, a service that keeps track of stories published orbroadcast by other media around the world, had reported this week that most North Koreans did not know Donald Trump had won the U.S. presidential election.

The BBC as a whole reaches a weekly global audience of 348 million people. Hall has set a target for it to reach 500 million people worldwideby its centenary in 2022.

Ethiopia's Crisis -Open Democracy Analysis

By René Lefort November 19, 2016

Things fall apart: will the centre hold?
Almost exactly a year ago, Ethiopia entered its worst crisis since the arrival of the regime in 1991. Last month, a state of emergency was proclaimed. These two events have generated a flood of commentary and analysis. A few key points, sometimes underplayed if not ignored, areworth closer attention.

"Mengist yelem!" - "Authority has disappeared!"
People waited in vain for the government to react other than by brute force alone to the opposition it was facing and the resulting chaos. The unrest in Oromya, Ethiopia's most populous state with 35% of the country's total population, began on November 12, 2015; the uprising inpart of the Amhara Region, the second largest by population (27%), on July 12, 2016.

For 11 long months the government was content to quell protest and to release information in dribs and drabs, the epitome of one-sided doublespeak. A handful of cryptic press releases repeated the same platitudes ad nauseam. When in June 2016 the ruling power finally realized the severity of the crisis, launching a series of internal deliberations, these took place in total secrecy. This pseudo- communication destroyed its credibility and in turn lent credence to the sole alternative source of information, the diaspora, which itself is often hyperbolic to the point of implausibility. On both sides, the space available for information that exhibits even a degree of measure, not to say simple rationality, is shrinking alarmingly .[1]

People have stopped taking notice of anything the ruling power says, seeing it as incapable of handling the situation. In short, trust has gone."It is not even able to listen… It has lost its collective ability to reach the collective mindset of the governed".[2] The general view is that Prime Minister Hailemariam Dessalegn "always promises but never delivers".

Both in central government and in the regional authorities, or between one and the other, authority has dramatically deflated. A multitude of anecdotes confirm that it is being ignored – officials simply turn their backs – or even mocked, right up to the highest levels. The man in the street could only conclude: "Mengist yelem !" – "Authority has disappeared!". This perception, initially confined to the cities, is increasingly reaching into the rural areas as they open up more and more.

An even more serious indictment is spreading. The government's primaryrole is to maintain law and order, and it has proved incapable of doing so;worse still, the violence of repression is further fueling discontent. In the end, rather than fulfilling its first duty, the ruling power has become the principal cause of revolt.

Why this impotence and loss of credibility?

Under Meles Zenawi, the all-powerful Prime Minister who died suddenly inAugust 2012, the system of power was like a pyramid. Meles sat enthroned at the summit, and below him, every tier – executive or legislative, political or economic, national or regional, even local – was simply a transmission belt from the top. Party and State were inextricablyintertwined. This profoundly centralized and vertical system, intensifying over the years, hung on him alone.

For most observers, the smooth succession from Meles Zenawi to Hailemariam Desalegn proved the robustness of the regime and the reliability of its institutions. However, Hailemariam lacks what it takes to "fill the boots" of his predecessor. Most of his authority comes not from hisown resources but has been handed down to him through a constellation of powers – baronies one might call them – characterized not just by theirdiversity, but also by the rivalry, or even conflict, between them. In short,Ethiopia is left with a system of power tailored for a strongman and filled accordingly, but which now lacks a strongman. "Meles left with the password", the joke goes.

The succession couldn't be a change of personnel only. The whole power system too needed reshaping, and this is in full swing. Hence the misfiresin response to the crisis.

People used to say that Ethiopia was like a plane on autopilot, controlled by the Meles software ("Meles legacy"). To pursue the metaphor in currentcircumstances, the more turbulence the plane encounters, the more ineffective the software has proved to be. It is noteworthy that constant references to that legacy have practically disappeared from official rhetoric. So the software has been disconnected, but no pilot – whether individual or collective – has been able to take over the controls.

Three big sources of the crisis

The weakening of central authority – Addis Ababa – has thus released centrifugal – regional – forces that had been steadily stifled in Meles Zenawi's iron grip. The first source of the current crisis is the trial of strength between central authority and the peripheral powers that it originally created – a sort of bid for emancipation from the father – as wellas between the peripheral powers.

At stake is the sharing of powers and resources, notably between the regions and Addis Ababa, where Tigrayans are perceived to be overrepresented, wrongly in their view, quite obviously according to allthe other ethnicities.

In other words, what is at stake is the place that should be assigned tothe "people's fundamental freedoms and rights" enshrined in the constitution, collective rights. How can the country make the transition from a bogus and ethnically weighted federalism to real decentralization, which would bring about a more authentic and ethnically fairer federalism,or even confederalism? The immemorial "national question" remains as acute as ever: what will the name Ethiopia come to refer to? In other words, why should and how can an Ethiopian state exist, and on what basis?

This question has deep historical roots. From the mid-nineteenth century onwards, the economic centre of gravity shifted from the North – Abyssinia – towards the Centre. But power always remained Abyssinian. At stake in the current crisis is a historic break that would also shift powerto the Centre, i.e. to Oromya. Despite their internal divisions, this claim unites the vast majority of Oromo, justified by their numbers and their major contribution to the economy. It is generally agreed that a genuine application of the constitution would be sufficient for this claim to be satisfied.

For the Amhara, whose elite dominated Abyssinian power for more than a century, the challenge is to revamp their identity. They have to say farewell to their historical ascendancy and accept that their place in the Ethiopian state should reflect their numerical and economic importance, no more, no less. In other words, the only way out of the undoubted ostracism they suffer is not to re-establish the former status quo. The assertion of "Amhara-ness" – legitimate as it is – cannot become a cover for the aspiration for a return to an "Ethiopianness" based around Amhara,with the other ethnicities in a lesser role. This metamorphosis is under way, but not yet complete. Nonetheless, many Oromo and even more Tigrayans deny that anything has changed, convinced that this elite has not abandoned its "chauvinism" and "revanchism", and that the federal system that they defend tooth and nail could therefore never satisfy its deeply cherished ambition.
These ethno-nationalisms have become inflamed and even paranoid. Today, "all the politics is revolving around ethnicity", a former senior TPLFofficial told me, and in a previous remark: "what I see now dominantly… isthe proliferation of racial or ethnic hatred".[3] It is focused on the Tigrayans, not only because of the major role of the Tigrayan Peoples's Liberation Front (TPLF), but because both Oromo and Amhara equate Tigrayan silence in the face of repression with approval. "The preliminary rhetoric of ethnic cleansing is already here", opines one social scientist, a man familiar with the grass roots of the country.

The second source of the crisis relates to what might be called "democratic aspiration". In this respect, Ethiopia's leaders are right to talkabout the price of success. Economic growth has brought the emergence of a new middle class, not just urban but also in the countryside, which has seen the rapid enrichment of an upper tier of farmers. In parallel, education has dramatically expanded. This upper tier has opened up to the outside world, in particular through social media. However, the aspiration for "individual rights" runs up against a system of power which,everywhere in Ethiopia, from the summit of the state to the lowliest levelsof authority, from the capital to the smallest village, shares the same defects: authoritarianism, stifling control, infantilization.

Finally, the third source of the crisis relates to collateral damage from super-rapid growth. Such damage is inevitable, but has been exacerbatedby the type and methods of development pursued. First, forced impositionthrough ultra-centralized and secretive decision-making, and brutal execution. "Land grabbing", and more generally almost instant evictions with absurd levels of compensation, are commonplace. Second, the overwhelming role of the ruling power through the "developmental state" has produced an ever more powerful and arrogant oligarchy embedded in the Party-State. The stakes in the crisis are not only political: they directlyconcern the mobilization, distribution and therefore the accumulation of resources in the hands of the ruling power, and hence the division of the cake between central and peripheral authorities and/or oligarchies, but also between these oligarchies and the population in general.

The present crisis is particularly acute because these three factors reinforce each other. The demonstrators chant "we want justice" and "wewant freedom", but also "Oromya is not for sale" and "we want self rule" or, in Gondar, the historic capital of the Amhara, "respect for Amhara- ness".[4]

"Alarmists" and "complacents"

In this poisonous climate, the vigour and scale of the protest accentuated the "crisis of leadership".[5] It was the first factor responsible for the government's paralysis, as confirmed by one participant in the last meeting of the Central Committee of the TPLF, in early October. He ascribes it first of all to pure and simple "power struggles", leading to a tussle that is all the more confused in that these conflicts run through every regional party, the relations between those parties, and between those parties and the centre, while on the same time the centre originatesfrom the peripheries: the supreme decision-making body is the ExecutiveCommittee of the EPRDF (Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front), composed equally of representatives of the TPLF, ANDM (Amhara National Democratic Movement), OPDO (Oromo People's Democratic Organisation) and SPDM (Southern People's Democratic Movement).

These conflicts are first of all personal in nature, based on local affinities,religious solidarities, family connections, not to mention business interests. However, the crisis triggered a new and crucial division, between "alarmists" and "complacents", the former advocating a rapid shift from the status quo, the latter seeing neither its necessity nor its urgency.
The "old guard" is the backbone of the "alarmists". It consists of the survivors of the founding group of the TPLF, including the heads of the army and the security services, Samora Yunus and Getachew Assefa, plussome old comrades in arms such as Berket Simon, guiding light of the ANDM. They became involved in politics in the early 1970s, within the student protest movement against Haile Selassie. Their long journey together gives them an experience, a maturity, and a cohesion greater than that of any current within the EPRDF. Concentrated in the centre, in Addis Ababa, most of them were sidelined from official positions as Meles imposed generational change. Returning in force behind the scenes after his death, they are the strongest backers of Hailemariam Dessalegn

They ascribe the crisis to the breaking of the bonds between "the people" and the party. In their view, those most responsible are the regional parties, starting with their new leaders. The urgent priority is to restore those bonds and to reinforce central power, to compensate for the failuresof the regional authorities.

Hailemariam expressed the anxiety of this group when he said that the issues facing the regime are a matter of "life or death",[6] and that Ethiopia is "sliding towards ethnic conflict similar to that in neighbouringcountries".[7] Abay Tsehaye, said to be the most political head of the TPLF, raised the specter of a genocide even worse than Rwanda's.[8] Bereket Simon warned the leadership of his party that the country was sliding towards the abyss. In vain.

In contrast, Debretsion Gebremichael, member of the Politburo of the TPLF and until recently Deputy Prime Minister, one of the foremost of thesecond generation of leaders, retorted that there had simply been a few,geographically limited "disturbances", that they did not reflect the overallsituation in the country, that "there is no mobilization against Tigrayans anywhere". And even, dogmatically: "It is not possible to have people to people [i.e. ethnic] conflict in Ethiopia".[9]
