The member of cabinet however did not mention anything about the present condition of the President Mutharika who was flown to South Africa on Thursday night following a cardiac arrest, saying more on the hot issue would be revealed Saturday. The government's stand on the Vice President followed comments from Malawi Law Society (MLS), civil society organizations (CSOs) and former President Bakili Muluzi who earlier on Friday respectively called for the government to allow Joyce Banda take over the country's presidential role in interim capacity following Mutharika's absence in office. Malawi constitution stipulates that where the sitting president becomes incapacitated or deceased the Vice President should take over the role of presidency for the remaining period of a term until elections are held. Hospital sources' confirmation and international media reports indicated Friday that President Mutharika had succumbed to death following the Thursday's cardiac arrest. The Malawi government has so far not officially announced the death of Mutharika.

March 6, 2013: Malawi president dies after two hours of resuscitation – TB Joshua vindicated?

Updates The impoverished nation was plunged into a long night of intrigue after Mutharika's heart attack in the capital Lilongwe. He was rushed to hospital, but doctors were unable to save him, a source at the hospital said. He died… after two hours of resuscitation", shortly after midnight, the hospital source said, speaking on condition of anonymity because the government has not yet made a formal announcement. Â Mutharika was reported by state radio to have been airlifted to South Africa in the early morning hours.

Under the constitution, Vice President Joyce Banda is next in line. But that succession is politically fraught because Mutharika kicked her out of the ruling party in 2010 as he chose to groom his brother as heir apparent instead of her. The Daily Times wrote that Malawians are in "huge suspense" over the president.The nation's suspense has been intensfied after high-profile officials who included several cabinet ministers arrived at the hospital and went straight to the intensive care unit . After some time, they trooped out with sad faces and without a word."

Malawi is located in Africa, and borders three countries, two of which are Zambia and Mozambique. Which is the other one?

John Njoroge Tutor 1y

Malawi borders Zambia, Mozambique, and Tanzania.
Here is a Google Map by John Njoroge

Related Links

How do the countries of Malawi, Tanzania and Mozambique “clearly define there border/s" when it goes over/across the waters of Lake Malawi? Are there border/s clearly marked with floating coloured buoys instead?

Where are Tanzania, Malawi, Zambia, and Zimbabwe located in Africa?

How did Malawi become the poorest country in the world?

What African country is bordered by Namibia, Botswana, Zimbabwe, and Mozambique?

Why was Malawi given independence and not split into part of Zambia and Mozambique after British and Portuguese independence?

Which country is bordered by Zimbabwe, Namibia, South Africa, and Zambia?

Is there a border post between Namibia and Zambia?

Which countries border Africa?

Which countries are located in Africa?

Are Mozambique, Zambia, Zimbabwe, Malawi, and Madagascar considered part of East Africa or Southern Africa?

Will Malawi, Democratic Republic of Congo, Zambia, Somalia, Ethiopia, and Mozambique join EAC eventually?

If the Pink Map had succeeded, would Angola, Zambia, Zimbabwe, Malawi, and Mozambique likely have stayed one country until today, like Brazil?

What is Africa? And where is Africa located?

Which country has borders with the Central African Republic, Sudan, Zambia, Angola, the Republic of the Congo, Uganda, Rwanda and Burundi (with Tanzania across Lake Tanganyika)?

Which country in Africa has the longest border with DRC?

What was the worst marriage of all time?

Osorhor Oghenevwegba Michael Love in marriage Jan 8

An evergreen story of a 47-year-old mother in Malawi who damned condemnation and reproach from her people to marry her biological 30-year-old son has been revealed.

The story about the woman’s controversial love for her son caused serious outrage on social media.

In a publication in one of the Malawian newspapers some years ago, the woman, Memory Njemani revealed that she married her son because she has invested a lot in his education. Continue reading visit link

47-year-old mother in Malawi who damned condemnation and reproach from her people to marry her biological 30-year-old son has been revealed

January 08, 2022

An evergreen story of a 47-year-old mother in Malawi who damned condemnation and reproach from her people to marry her biological 30-year-old son has been revealed.

The story about the woman’s controversial love for her son caused serious outrage on social media. In a publication in one of the Malawian newspapers some years ago, the woman, Memory Njemani revealed that she married her son because she has invested a lot in his education. In her opinion, it's her investment so another woman cannot reap where she did not sow.

"I invested a lot of money in the education of my son. Why should another woman be married to him and enjoy my hard work I invested in him? That will not happen. I'm marrying my son so that we don't empower other women who have been aborting " she lamented. However, social media users have accused the mother of bewitching her son into marrying her because no man in his right senses will make such a move.

Related Links

Do you regret your marriage, and why?
What is it like being in an arranged marriage with someone you don't like? How do you manage?
What is the brutal truth about arranged marriages?
What does it feel like to have a disastrous arranged marriage?
How did your marriage end?
Why arrange marriages in India sounds like a business deal?
What is the worst thing that can cost a woman her marriage?
What are some harsh truth about Indian marriages?
What is the dark side of the arranged marriage?
Do you think arranged marriage is a bad idea? If yes then why?

THE MALAWI EMPIRE: Let's Discuss Ancient and Medieval Africa

Alton Allen Knowledgeable In African and African Diaspora History: Nov 5

An interesting four way conflict between the coastal Swahili the Portuguese the Turks and an inland very powerful state called the Malawi empire, who control another people called the Zimba as shock troops..more shocking than most shock troops because they were reported to be cannibals.

I became aware of the Zimba yrs ago after read one of Dr Clarks books. and I knew they sacked the cities of the coast and eat some of the inhabitants but did not know the reasons why.

Here now is the why they were not some random group of un-controllable barbarians they were in fact a part of the military apparatus of a powerful inland state who could unleashed hell at will.

books.google.com/books?id=0K0p8wCNKTQC&pg=PA372&lpg=PA372&dq=the+lundu+civilization&source=bl&ots=_hzEbgqw81&sig=GfPmEJoSj www.jstor.org/action/showArticleImage?image=images%2Fpages%2Fdtc.3.tif.gif&doi=10.2307%2F182189

THE MARAVI EMPIRE

The name Malawi is thought to be a derivation of the word Maravi. The people of the Maravi Empire were iron workers. The name Maravi is thought to mean "rays of light" and may have come from the sight of many kilns lighting up the night sky. A dynasty known as the Maravi Empire was founded by the Amaravi people in the late 15th century. The Amaravi, who eventually became known as the Chewa (a word possibly derived from a term meaning "foreigner"), migrated to Malawi from the region of the modern day Republic of Congo to escape unrest and disease. The Chewa attacked the Akafula, who settled in small family clans without a unified system of protection. Using a system of destruction they would later employ in hunting predatory animals, the Chewa hunted down and butchered the Akufula.

Eventually encompassing most of modern Malawi, as well as parts of modern day Mozambique and Zambia, the Maravi Empire began on the southwestern shores of Lake Malawi. The head of the empire during its expansion was the Kalonga (also spelt Karonga). The Kalonga ruled from his headquarters in Mankhamba. Under the leadership of the Kalonga, sub-chiefs were appointed to occupy and subdue new areas. The empire began to decline during the early 18th century when fighting among the sub-chiefs and the burgeoning slave trade weakened the Maravi Empire's authority.

TRADE AND INVASIONS

The Portuguese

Initially the Maravi Empire's economy was largely dependent on agriculture, the majority being the production of millet and sorghum. It was during the Maravi Empire, sometime during the 16th Century, that Europeans first came into contact with the people of Malawi. Under the Maravi Empire, the Chewa had access to the coast of modern day Mozambique. Through this coastal area, the Chewa traded ivory, iron, and slaves with the Portuguese and Arabs. Trade was enhanced by the common language of Chewa which was spoken throughout the Maravi Empire.

The Portuguese reached the area via the Mozambican port of Tete in the 16th century and gave the first written reports on the people of Malawi. The Portuguese are also responsible for the introduction of maize to the region.

Maize would eventually replace sorghum as the staple of the Malawian diet. Malawian tribes traded slaves with the Portuguese. These slaves were sent mainly to work on Portuguese plantations in Mozambique or to Brazil.

In 1498 Vasco da Gama reached Mozambique and Mombasa, and the next year he bombarded Mogadishu. Kilwa had long prospered from the gold trade at Sofala and was reached by Pedro Alvares Cabral in 1500; da Gama began imposing tribute two years later. In 1505 the Portuguese led by Francisco d'Almeida built a fort at Sofala near the mouth of the Zambezi River before sacking and garrisoning Kilwa; Mombasa, Hoja, and Brava were only plundered. At Mozambique a hospital, church, factory, warehouse and fort were built in 1507. Only Mogadishu was strong enough to maintain its independence from these attacks. By 1512 the Portuguese garrison and Franciscans left Kilwa, and Sofala also suffered because of lack of gold. Nuno da Cunha plundered Mombasa again in 1528. The Turks raided the east coast down to Malindi in 1540. By then posts were established at Sena and Tete for gold mining up the river. The Portuguese destroyed the shipping at Mogadishu in 1541. Led by Francisco Barrero, they invaded the Zambezi lowlands in 1571 and massacred Muslim traders. Another Portuguese invasion three years later forced the Uteve ruler to pay tribute to Sofala. Yet the Mutapa state managed to retain its independence on the eastern plateau.

The Portuguese capital of Angola was founded at Luanda in 1576. Paolo Dias had tried to found a colony on the coast of Ndongo for mining silver in the Cunza valley; but this failed, and Luanda became a center for the slave trade instead. In 1585 Turks led by Amir 'Ali Bey caused revolts against the Portuguese landlords from Mogadishu to Mombasa; only Malindi remained loyal to Portugal. Zimba cannibals overcame the towns of Sena and Tete on the Zambezi, and in 1587 they took Kilwa, killing 3,000 people. At Mombasa the Zimba slaughtered the Muslim inhabitants; but they were halted at Malindi by the Bantu-speaking Segeju and went home. This stimulated the Portuguese to take over Mombasa a third time in 1589, and four years later they built Fort Jesus to administer the region. Between Lake Malawi and the Zambezi mouth, Kalonga Mzura made an alliance with the Portuguese in 1608 and fielded 4,000 warriors to help defeat their rival Zimba, who were led by chief Lundi. In 1614 Mombasa's sultan al-Hasan went to the Portuguese viceroy at Goa in India to complain. When the shaykh returned to Mombasa the next year, he had to flee and was murdered by the Portuguese. His son Yusuf was sent to Goa to be educated.

www.san.beck.org/AC4_Africa_Middle-East_.htm#2

Malawi is located in Africa, and borders three countries, two of which are Zambia and Mozambique. Which is the other one?

John Njoroge · Follow Tutor2y

Malawi borders Zambia, Mozambique, and Tanzania.
Here is a Google Map.

Related Links

Where are Tanzania, Malawi, Zambia, and Zimbabwe located in Africa?

How do the countries of Malawi, Tanzania and Mozambique “clearly define there border/s" when it goes over/across the waters of Lake Malawi? Are there border/s clearly marked with floating coloured buoys instead?

How did Malawi become the poorest country in the world?
Which countries are located in Africa?
What country in Africa is the most border with other African countries?
Which country has the most number of neighbours touching its border?

Are Mozambique, Zambia, Zimbabwe, Malawi, and Madagascar considered part of East Africa or Southern Africa?

What is Africa? And where is Africa located?
How cold is the coldest African country?
Which country in Africa has the longest border with DRC?

Remember the Zimba were working for the Malawian empire. It was planned aggression

Maravi

The Maravi people built bridges called Uraro due to changing river depth. These bridges were made out of bamboo. Bamboos were placed parallel to each other and tied together by bark (maruze). One end of the bridge would be tied to an existing tree. The bridge would curve downward 80 spans when entering. A bamboo on top would serve as a balustrade.

COUNTRY FACT FILE

Location

In Southeastern Africa

Official title of the state

The Republic of Malawi: is an inland state in southeast Africa that was formerly known as Nyasaland.

Flag description: three equal horizontal bands of red (top), black, and green; a white sun disc is centered on the black band, its surrounding 45 white rays extend partially into the red and green bands; black represents the native peoples, red the blood shed in their struggle for freedom, and green the color of nature; the sun represents Malawi's economic progress since attaining independence.

Neighbours

Zambia on W. Mozambique on SE, Tanzania on N.

Land boundaries; total 2,881 km. Border countries; Mozambique 1,569 km, Tanzania 475 km, Zambia 837 km.

Founder of The Nation
Dr. Hastings Banda was formally appointed as prime minister of then Nyasaland, and led the country to independence as Malawi, that renamed when it achieved full independence in 6th July, 1964, a year later, in July, 1966, declared itself a Republic. In 1971, Dr. Hastings Banda nicknamed as "Kamuzu" meaning for "the Lion", became founder-president of the nation, he consolidated power and later to declare Malawi a one-party state under the Malawi Congress Party (MCP), and designated himself "President for life of Malawi" and ruled Malawi further.

Local divisions

28 Administrative districts

Government type

Republic – presidential Legislaton chamber

Unicameral - National Assembly

Form of State

Multiparty Democracy

Head of State is the President who is elected every 5 years (eligible for second term).

A multi-party republic with one legislative house. The National Assembly 193 seats, members are elected by popular vote to serve for five-year terms. Executive branch President, Vice-President, Unicameral parliament. The president is both the chief of State and head of Government. President elected by popular vote to serve for five-year terms eligible for a second term.

Former Rulers

1964-1966 Sir Glyn Smallwood Jones, Governor-General of Niyasaland Federation

1966-1994 Dr. Hastings Kamuzu Banda, President

1994-2004 Bakili Muluzi, President

2004- April, 2013 Present Bingu Wa-Mutharika

April, 2013 – present Joyce Hilde Banda

Judicial chamber

Supreme court of Appeal

Capital city Lilongwe Altitude 1050 mtrs/3444 ft.

Geographic coordinates 13.59S , 33.47E. It lies in the country's central region, on the Lilongwe river, near the border of Malawi, Mozambique, and Zambia. The capital of the country was formally moved from Zomba in 1974. Founded as a village at the begining of the 20th century.

Names of main towns

Blantyre, Mzuzu, Zomba

Date of independence

6th July, 1964

Religions (Major)

Christian 75%, Muslims 20%, others

Main spoken languages language

English/Chichewa (official)

Currency unit

Malawi Kwacha (MWK) =100 Tambala

Area in Km2

118,484,00

Country area comparison in Africa

37 out of 55 states.

Demographic terms ;-
Average annual population growth rat 2.758 %

Birth rate 41.28 births per 1,000 population

Death rate 13.69 deaths per 1,000 population

Average life expectancy ; 50.92 years

Male 50.22 years ; Female 51.64 years;

Illiteracy rate (%)

Male: 20, Female: 40

Average per capita income

USD 800

Population density

168.4/km2

Urban population (%)

20

Contributor groups (%)

Farming, Fishing: 35, Industry: 20, Social service: 45

Main Export items

Tobacco, tea, sugar, maize, coffee

Economy is based on

Agriculture and Tourism

Climate

Tropical; Cooler in highlands

Extremes;-

Lowest point; Junction of the Shire River and the International boundary with

Mozambique 37 mtrs

Highest point; Sapitwa on Mt. Mlange 3,002 mtrs.

Weather of the Capital city (Lilongwe) average annual temperature 20,2oc.
Altitude Hottest Month

1050 mtrs/3444 ft

November 17-29oc (average daily min and max).
Coldest Month July 7-23oc.

Driest Month June-July 1mm average Rf.

Wettest Month February 218mm average Rf.

Measures

Metric System.

Time zone

2 hours ahead of GMT/UTC

Public holidays

January 1, 15, March 3 (Martyrs day), May 1 (labour day), All Christian holidays, June 14 (Freedom day), July 6 (Republic day), October 17 (Mothers day).

Ethnic groups

Chichewa, Nyanja, Tumbuka, Yao, Lomwe, Sena, Tonga, Ngoni, Ngonde over 90%, other Bantu tribes.

Topographic & Environmental concern.

Malawi stretches 560 miles NS along Lake-Malawi (lake-Nyassa) most of which belongs to Malawi, high plateaus and mountains line the length of the nation. Environment: Deforestation; land degradation; water pollution from agricultural runoff, sewage, industrial wastes; siltation of spawning grounds endangers fish populations.

Economy Overview

Industry

Mainly tourism, textiles, sugar, tobacco, tea, sawmill products, cement, consumer goods.

Chief crops

Tea, tobacco, sugarcane, coffee, cotton, corn, potatoes, cassava, sorghum, pulses, groundnuts : cattle, goats.

Natural resources

At present, exploitation of minerals in Malawi is restricted to extraction of limestone and coal for cement industry deposits of various minerals, Bauxite, unexploited deposit of Uranium, arable land, Hydro-power are the main ones.

Land in use (%)

Arable land: 18

Grassland: 20

Forest woods: 36

Other: 26

Marine:

Coastline; None

Commercial Sea port:-

Malawi is an inland state, most of its trade is handled through South African ports, through port of Dar-es-Salaam (Tanzania) and Beira, port of Mozambique.

Development prospect;-

The International Montary Fund (IMF), the European Union (EU), the United Kingdom, Germany, Norway and the United States have frozen a combined $750m assistance. Immediate losses include the $350m investment from the US Millennium Challenge Corporation slated to modernise Malawi's energy infrastructure. The tobacco industry faces collapse and Malawian farmers will have to diversify their crops without the assurance of subsidised inputs. The successful Farm Input Subsidy Programme, which previously saw 10 per cent of costs covered by aid, has also suffered, causing the government to cut small grower beneficiaries for the 2011/12 season from 1.6m to 1.4m. Compounding the challenges for the agricultural sector is the near-collapse of Malawi's tobacco industry. Once accounting for 70 per cent of the country's exports and 15 per cent of its GDP, its earnings are down 57 per cent on what they were in 2010. A possibly painful period of adjustment is just beginning. Malawi's mining industry looks set to become an increasingly important source of government revenue.Production at Paladin Energy's Kayelekera uranium mine was on target to more than double its output in 2011, with the prospect of an annual output of 1,500tn in the near future. A rising stake in the world's uranium market has brought Malawi a heightened level of interest from Iran, which has donated $50m for the mining sector. A leaked US embassy cable revealed plans for a Malawian embassy in Teheran. And relations with other eastern nations are set to improve as those with western donors sour. India also hopes to reap the benefits of Malawi's uranium resources, and China is already active in the construction sector. Malawi is often hailed a sone of few African nations on track to achieve the UN's Millennium Development Goals, but political and economic setbacks through 2011 have put much progress at risk. In September, the IMF published revised economic forecasts that real GDP growth is set to fall from 6.5 per cent in 2010 to 4.2 per cent in 2012. Bingu wa Mutharika may well spend 2012 under even more fire from his critics. Although well entrenched politically and confident of another DPP victory in 2014, he will have to focus on the economy if the current round of economic damage is to be reversed. The current female president who has succeeded him since reversed several of his policies, including devaluing the currency Malawi Kwacha (MKW), in a bid to get donor funding restored. Many donors cut aid under Mr. Bingu wa Mutharika, accusing him of economic mismanagement and political repression. In her first state of the nation address to parliament, Mrs Banda said: "Some laws which were duly passed by the august house.. will be repealed as a matter of urgency.. these include the provisions regarding indecent practices and unnatural acts." The BBC's Raphael Tenthani in the main city, Blantyre, says the president has the support of a majority of MPs and so should be able to get parliament to overturn the law. President Joyce Hilde Banda is doing her best to get donor funding restored to Malawi.

Top 24 Richest And Poorest Countries Of Africa – 2020 Edition

By Stephanie Rheingold Last updated Oct 23, 2021

Malawi

Error! Filename not specified. Credit: Visit Malawi

Malawi economics are predominantly based on agriculture, as 90% of its 19.13 million people are living in rural areas of the country. The landlocked country is located in the heart of south-central Africa and is regarded by the United Nations as an LDC – a least developed country.

Malawi total nominal GDP is set at $7.44 million and its GDP per capita is at the astoundingly low figure of $366.53. Its agriculture sector is being dominated by tobacco manufacturing and exporting. Tobacco exporting, alongside with tea, sugarcane, and coffee exporting, account for around 90% of Malawi's total export revenue. Malawi also relies on tourism as a source of revenue, which has seen noticeable growth in the last decade.
It continues to be a struggle for Malawi to connect with the rest of the region, but they continue to push forward with new and creative ways. As GDP grew 5.0% in 2019, compared to 2018 4.0% growth. Additional, annual inflation was estimated at 9.0% in 2019, significantly improving from its 21.7% in 2017.

Nominal GDP Rank: #38
Nominal GDP Per Capita Rank: #51

Africa News
Malawi president strips deputy of powers over corruption
17h ago

Malawi's President, Lazarus Chakwera on Tuesday relieved his Vice President Saulos Chilima of all delegated powers after the latter was named in a massive corruption scandal in government contracts already implicating several senior officials.

© Thoko Chikondi/Copyright 2020 The Associated Press. All rights reserved.FILE - Malawi's newly elected President Lazarus Chakwera takes the oath of office...

"I have decided to withdraw all delegated functions" from Vice President Saulos Chilima, Lazarus Chakwera said in a televised address.

The announcement follows a new report by the Anti-Corruption Bureau (ACB), which is investigating British-Malawian businessman Zuneth Sattar on suspicion of corruption, fraud and money laundering.

Several ministers and former ministers have already been arrested in connection with the case.

"The office found that a total of 53 public officials and former public officials allegedly received money from Mr Sattar in the eight months between March and October 2021," Chakwera said.

The Malawian president also suspended his chief of staff and the country's police chief.

"In addition, the Bureau found that 31 other people from the private sector, the media, civil society and the legal profession also received money from Mr Sattar," bringing the total to 84 people suspected of being involved, he added.

The police and military reportedly awarded 16 contracts worth $150 million to five companies owned by Mr Sattar between 2017 and 2021.

In 2020, Saulos Chilima, a presidential candidate, had teamed up with Lazarus Chakwera to win the re-run election following fraud in the first poll in 2019.

MALI

National Flag and Emblem

Locator Map

TEXT BRIEFLY HIGHLIGHTS: Diaries updates, key events, brief analysis and relating news articles in timeline

Overview

Although in its current form Mali is a creation of the French Empire (called French Soudan under colonial rule), Malians continue to draw a sense of national pride from the heritage of the Songay and Malian Empires. The country became an independent republic in 1960 after having briefly joined with Senegal in 1959 in the Federation of Mali. The first head of State, President Modibo Keita, immediately declared a single party state and pursued Marxist Socialist policies supported by alliances with the Soviet Bloc. Keita's regime was overthrown by a military coup in 1968. The coup leader Colonel Moussa Traore promised a return to civilian rule, but in the event continued the oppressive single party rule of his predecessor until his overthrown in early 1991. On 26 March 1991, Lt Col

Amadou Toumani Toure (popularly known as ATT), led a coup which overthrew Traore. Toure kept his promise of overseeing a return to civilian rule. In 1992 the main opposition party to have emerged, ADEMA, won legislative elections, and the Presidential elections were won by its leader Alpha Oumar Konare. He was re-elected for a second term in May 1997. Legislative elections in the same year were beset with technical problems, and opposition parties boycotted the re-run elections of August. As a result, ADEMA and their allies took almost all the seats in the national assembly.

Initially formed by the French Sudanese Republic and Senegal following independence from France in 1960. Senegal withdrew from the union; consequently what remained as the Sudanese Republic was renamed Mali. What formerly made-up the Sudanese republic was renamed Mali at independence in 22nd September, 1960 as Mr. Modibo Keita, a former school teacher, it's founder-president.

Headship since independence; Head of State

In November, 1968, a group of junior army officers led by Lt. Moussa Traore (later to be Colonel), put Mr. Modibo Keita out of office and formed a military national liberation council headed by himself, then soon to self - appointed president in 1969, the deposed president, Mr. Modibo Keita was sent to prison in the northern Malian town of Kidal until his mysterious death in custody on the 16th of May, 1977.

In May, 1977 protests followed Modibo Keita’s death in prison.

In 1979 Lt. Colonel Moussa Traore was reelected president under a new constitution that provided for new elections.

In March, 1991, Lt. Colonel Moussa Traore was deposed in a coup and replaced by a military transnational committee headed by Army Colonel Amadou Toumani Toure, ended 23 years of military rule in the country, brought about reconciliation.

In 1992 a peaceful transfer of power to civilian rule have been made through president-elect, historian Alpha Umar Konare, as he won Mali's democratic presidential ticket and was re-elected until 2002. Keeping with Mali's two-term constitutional limit, professor Alpha Umer Konare stepped aside

In 2002, Mr. Amadou Toumani Toure elected president of Mali and was re - elected to a second term until 2012, elections in Mali were widely judged to be free and fair.

On 21st March, 2012 a junior officer in the Mali army who, significantly, has had military intelligence training in the United States, named Captain Amadou Sanogo, announced that he was seizing power by house arresting the country's civilian leader, President Amadou Toumani Toure blaming the president, saying that Mr. Toumani Toure was not supplying the Malese army with "enough resources" to promote the war against the rebel-Tuaregs that was raging in the north of the country. The coup leaders have called for calm and said all borders are closed after announcing that they have seized control of the country on state TV. But the African Union and it's collaborative regional organs, such as Eonomic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), have made it abundantly clear that they do not favour violent changes of government on the continent.

A Republic in West Africa.

An Inland state that flourished from the 11th to the 17th century, the region was situated on a caravan route across the Sahara. In the mid-nineteenth century the French conquered the area which later incorporated as French Sudan into French west Africa. In 1946 it became an overseas territory of the French Union, proclaimed the French Sudan semi-autonomous republic in 1958, then briefly joined with Senegal to form the French-Mali federation, when Senegal withdrew after only a few months, what formerly made-up the Sudanese republic was renamed Mali at independence in September, 1960 under a former school teacher, it's founder-president Mr. Modibo Keita. In November, 1968, a group of junior army officers led by Lt. Moussa Traore (later to be Colonel), ousted president Modibo Keita in a bloodless military coup put Mr. Modibo Keita out of office and formed a military national liberation council headed by Lt. Colonel Moussa Traore then self-appointed president in 1969, the deposed president, Mr. Modibo Keita was sent to prison in the northern Malian town of Kidal until his mysterious death in custody on the 16th of May, 1977.

Protests followed Modibo Keita's death in prison in 1977. Lt. Colonel Moussa Traore was reelected president in 1979 under a new constitution that provided for elections but he was deposed in a coup in 1991 and replaced by a transnational committee. In March, 1991, another coup have been made by Army Colonel Amadou Toumani Toure, that overthrew the previous president Colonel Mousa Traore, ended 23 years of military rule in the country, brought about reconciliation, a year later a peaceful transfer of power to civilian rule have been made through president-elect, historian Alpha Umar Konare, as he won Mali's democratic presidential ticket in 1992 and was re-elected in 1997. In keeping with Mali's two-term constitution limit, professor Alpha Umer Konare stepped aside in 2002 and was replaced by Mr. Amadou Toumani Toure who was subsequently elected to a second term in 2007, elections in Mali were widely judged to be free and fair.

A 1995 peace agreement with the Tuareg tribes rebels led to thousands of refugees returning home.

Amadou Toumani Toure was elected president by landslide in 2002 April. In October of the same year, the government resigned without public explanation, to be replaced by a government of national unity.

The government in June 2006 signed an Algerian-brokered peace deal with Tuareg rebels seeking greater autonomy for their northern desert region.

In April 2007, Amadou Tumani Toure won a second term in office. Mali operates a remarkable system of consensus politics, which was, however, tested by the 2007 elections with rifts forming between erstwhile allies.

On 21st March, 2012 a junior officer in the Mali army who, significantly, has had military intelligence training in the United States, Captain Amadou Sanogo, announced that he was seizing power by house arresting the country's civilian leader, President Amadou Toumani Toure blaming the president, saying that Mr. Toumani Toure was not supplying the Malese army with "enough resources" to promote the war against the rebel - Tuaregs that was raging in the north of the country. The coup leaders have called for calm and said all borders are closed after announcing that they have seized control of the country on state TV. But the African Union and it's collaborative regional organs, such as Eonomic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), have made it abundantly clear that they do not favour violent changes of government on the continent.

Economy

Mali remains one of the world's poorest countries and currently ranks in the bottom five of the UN Human Development index. Sixty-five per cent of its land area is desert or semi-desert and it has a highly unequal distribution of income. Most of her economic activities centre around the riverine area irrigated by the River Niger, with 80 per cent of the country's labour force engaged in farming and fishing. Ten per cent of the population is nomadic. The country's main exports are gold and cotton; Mali is extremely vulnerable to world price fluctuations. The country is currently implementing a World Bank prescribed structural adjustment programmes as it seeks to diversify her economy, with what observers say have been tangible results. The continued unrest in Cote d'Ivoire has negatively affected growth prospects though, for the landlocked country, but Mali is now building a road network that will connect it to adjacent countries, in addition to a railway line to Senegal.

Social

Mali suffers from extremely high rates of poverty, however, Mali has made significant progress to reduce household poverty since 2002

Major Conflicts - None

It has to be recalled that former president Alpha Umer Konare, was nominated for the African Union Commission (AUC) to serve as chairperson for one term since it's restructuring in 2002. As part of the global Land-grab, four land investment deals currently being carried-out in Mali. The Malibya project established by the Libyan Africa investment secures 100, 000 ha of fertile lands for Libya within the borders of Mali. The land, alloted under the "office du Niger", comes free of charge for 50 years. Libya intends to build the necessary agro-industrial infrastructure e.g. canals and roads in order to cultivate rice and cattle in the region.

Side note: A recent military coup in Mali on has sparked wide international condemnation and calls for reinstatement of the elected government of President Amadou Tomani Toure. The African Union, the European Union, the Organisation of Islamic Cooperation and individual countries in Africa and elsewhere deplored Toure's ousting five weeks ahead of planned elections. Rebel soldiers calling themselves the National Committee for the Establishment of Democracy seized control of the capital overnight because of the government's "inability" to tackle terrorism and put down a Tuareg-led insurrection in the north. On Thursday, the junta said it was closing all of the country's borders, apparently stranding Kenya's Foreign Minister Moses Wetangula and other senior foreign officials who were in Bamako for an African Union meeting on peace and security. "The chairperson of the (AU) Commission strongly condemns this act of rebellion, which seriously undermines constitutional legality and constitutes a significant setback for Mali," the pan-African body said in a statement. Commission chief Jean Ping urged "the mutineers immediately to put an end to their action." "This rebellion has no justification whatsoever, more so given the existence, in Mali, of democratic institutions which provide a framework for free expression and for addressing any legitimate claims," he said. The soldiers fought their way into the presidential palace and forced Toure to flee, claiming on television to have ousted an "incompetent regime" and dissolved state institutions. France, the former colonial power, said it was suspending cooperation with the West African desert nation and urged the rebels not to harm Toure. "We demand the return to the constitutional order, elections; they had been programmed for April, they must take place as soon as possible to allow the Malian people to express themselves," French Foreign Minister Alain Juppe said. EU foreign policy chief Catherine Ashton said, "I condemn the apparent coup d'etat in Bamako and the suspension of the republican institutions of Mali." "I call for the reestablishment of the constitutional order and the holding of democratic elections as soon as possible," she said. "In this crucial period for Mali, marked by a rebellion in the North, I call on all parties to show responsibility to ensure respect for human life, fundamental freedoms and the integrity of the country," Ashton added. "The United States strongly condemns the violence initiated by elements of the armed forces of Mali," the White House said in a statement. "We stand with the legitimately elected government of President Amadou Toumani Toure. Mali is a leading democracy in West Africa and its institutions must be respected," the US State Department added. The Organization of Islamic Conference (OIC) chief, Ekmeleddin Ihsanoglu, expressed "extreme shock" at the coup and called on the rebels "to respect democracy and enable the Malian people... to express its free will," according to a statement.

The coup leaders have called for calm and said all borders are closed after announcing that they have seized control of the country on state TV. A government official told the BBC that President Amadou Toumani Toure is safe and not in the custody of mutineers. The African Union said the "act of rebellion" was a "significant setback for Mali". The West African regional body Ecowas said the mutinous soldiers' behaviour was "reprehensible" and "misguided". The soldiers, calling themselves the Committee for the Re-establishment of Democracy and the Restoration of the State (CNRDR), said they would hand over power to an elected government. "The objective of the CNRDR does not in any way aim to confiscate power, and we solemnly swear to return power to a democratically elected president as soon as national unity and territorial integrity are established," they said in a statement. The soldiers said they had led Wednesday's mutiny because the government had not giving them enough arms to tackle a rebellion by ethnic Tuareg in the north of Mali. They attacked the presidential palace, traded gunfire with soldiers loyal to the government and took over the state radio and TV broadcaster in Bamako and took it off air. After several hours of footage of traditional Malian music and dancing, a group of soldiers appeared on screen early on Thursday morning. The leader of the mutiny was revealed to be Captain Amadou Sanogo, who appeared briefly to announce the imposition of a national curfew, although he did not specifying the time and said the constitution had been suspended. Country has had democratic rule for over 20 years.

Side note: Present-day Mali was once part of three West African empires that controlled trans-Saharan trade: the Ghana Empire, the Mali Empire (from which Mali is named), and the Songhai Empire. In the late 19th century, during the Scramble for Africa, France seized control of Mali making it a part of French Sudan. Mali consists of eight regions and its borders on the north reach deep into the middle of the Sahara, while the country's southern region, where the majority of inhabitants live, features the Niger and Sénégal rivers. The country's economic structure centers around agriculture and fishing. Some of Mali's natural resources are gold, uranium, livestock, and salt.

Side note: Malian military coup d'état began on 21 March, when renegade Malian soldiers attacked several locations in the capital Bamako, including the presidential palace, state television, and military barracks. The soldiers, who said they had formed the National Committee for the Restoration of Democracy and State, declared the following day that they had overthrown the government of Amadou Toumani Touré, forcing him into hiding. The military coup attempt followed weeks of protests at the government's handling of a nomad-led rebellion in the country's north, which had dropped Touré's popularity to "a new low".Soldiers had demanded more weapons and resources for their campaign against the rebels, and they were dissatisfied with what they perceived as a lack of government support for the army;Some soldiers had even been sent to the front without sufficient food. President Amadou Toumani Touré was to leave office when his term expires after the presidential election in April, 2012. Separatist Tuareg rebels in Mali have entered the strategic northern town of Gao, one day after they overtook the provincial capital of Kidal. A Voice of America (VOA) reporter on the scene says there are eyewitness accounts of Tuareg rebels in vehicles entering Gao, carrying the Azawad flags of their planned homeland. Heavy gunfire could be heard, and witnesses say army troops have launched a response using helicopters. Tuareg rebels began their insurgency in mid-January, armed with weapons brought into the country following the fall of neighboring Libya. The rebel's recent advancement has been aided by confusion caused by last week's coup in Mali's capital, Bamako. Mid-ranking soldiers overthrew the democratically elected government of President Amadou Toumani Toure on March 22 after accusing leaders of not providing adequate resources to fight the Tuareg rebellion in the north. Malian coup leader Captain Amadou Sanogo told VOA's French-to-Africa Service in a phone interview that Mali, as part of the regional group known as the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), needs international support to protect it’s territorial integrity against the advancing Tuareg rebels. The coup leaders are facing growing international pressure to give up power, especially from its neighbors. ECOWAS has given Sanogo three days to restore the country's constitutional order or face harsh economic sanctions. Captain Amadou Sanogo said he is now head of state in Mali and has all the honors and privileges that go with it, including the support of the Malian people. The coup came just weeks before the country's national elections and the scheduled end of President Amadou Toumani Toure's term. West African leaders have agreed to send troops to Mali and Guinea-Bissau following coups in both countries. The regional grouping ECOWAS said after an emergency summit that it expected both countries to organise presidential elections within the next 12 months. Between 500 and 600 troops will be sent immediately to Guinea-Bissau. At least 3,000 regional soldiers are ready to go to Mali to support the transitional government's fight against rebels which control the north. Bamako gunfire continues , shooting has been heard for a second day in Mali's capital, despite the junta saying it had reasserted control after an attempt to overthrow it. Most of the gunfire came from a military camp housing loyalists of ousted President Amadou Toumani Toure, who tried to stage an uprising. In a TV addressed message, coup leaders said they held key government buildings. The junta handed power to an interim government after the March coup, but still wields considerable influence.

Side note: Interim Mali President Dioncounda Traore beaten up by protesters: The Interim president has been taken to hospital with a head wound after being attacked by demonstrators, officials say. He is said to have been unconscious on arrival, but later left the hospital. The army says it shot dead three people during mass protests by supporters of March's coup who were angry at a deal for Mr. Traore, 70, to remain in office for a year. Mr. Traore's initial mandate was due to expire right on the day. But West African leaders reached a deal with coup leader Captain Amadou Sanogo for Mr. Traore to stay on to organise elections and end a northern rebellion.The deal also saw Captain Sanogo recognised as a former head of state with a salary and a mansion. Captain Sanogo has been silent all day and has not called on his supporters to leave the streets, correspondents say. The coup, and ensuing rebel seizure of northern Mali, have led many thousands of people to flee their homes. Aid agencies say they are extremely concerned about the humanitarian situation in Mali, which is also suffering from the regional drought.

The Northern Mali conflict’

Updates: Since 16 January 2012, several insurgent groups have been fighting a campaign against the Malian government for independence or greater autonomy for northern Mali, an area known as Azawad. The National Movement for the Liberation of Azawad (MNLA), an organization fighting to make Azawad an independent homeland for the Tuareg people, had taken control of the region by April 2012.On 22 March 2012, President Amadou Toumani Touré was ousted in a coup d'état over his handling of the crisis, a month before a presidential election was to have taken place.Mutinous soldiers, calling themselves the National Committee for the Restoration of Democracy and State (CNRDR), took control and suspended the constitution of Mali. As a consequence of the instability following the coup, Mali's three largest northern cities—Kidal, Gao and Timbuktu—were overrun by the rebels on three consecutive days. On 5 April 2012, after the capture of Douentza, the MNLA said that it had accomplished its goals and called off its offensive. The following day, it proclaimed Azawad's independence from Mali.

The MNLA were initially backed by the Islamist group Ansar Dine. After the Malian military were driven from Azawad, Ansar Dine and a number of smaller Islamist groups began imposing strict Sharia law. The MNLA and Islamists struggled to reconcile their conflicting visions for an intended new state. Afterwards, the MNLA began fighting against Ansar Dine and other Islamist groups, including Movement for Oneness and Jihad in West Africa (MOJWA/MUJAO), a splinter group of Al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb. By 17 July 2012, the MNLA had lost control of most of northern Mali's cities to the IslamistsThe Government of Mali asked for foreign military help to re-take Northern Mali. On 11 January 2013, the French military began operations against the Islamists. Forces from other African Union states were deployed shortly after. By 8 February, 2013, the Islamist-held territory had been re-taken by the Malian military, with help from the international coalition. The MNLA also helped the French and African Union forces.

Updates: Mali Tuareg and Islamist rebels agree on Islamist state. Two rebel groups that seized northern Mali two months ago have agreed to merge and turn their territory into an Islamist state, both sides say. The Tuareg MNLA, a secular rebel group, and the Islamist group Ansar Dine signed the deal in the town of Gao, spokespeople said. Ansar Dine, which has ties to al-Qaeda, has already begun to impose Sharia, or Islamic law, in towns such as Timbuktu. The groups took advantage of a coup in March to seize the territory. West Africa's chief mediator for the Mali crisis told the AFP news agency that he hoped the merger would simplify negotiations with the rebels. Burkinafaso Foreign Minister Djibrill Bassole also called on both groups to renounce terror. Mali's Communications Minister Hamadoun Toure told the BBC that other countries should help Mali tackle al-Qaeda in the region. Capt Amadou Sanogo seized power in March after claiming the then president, Amadou Toumani Toure, was not doing enough to quash the rebellion. Faced with mounting international pressure and sanctions, he was forced to step down only three weeks later, but is still thought to wield power behind the scenes. "It is true that an accord has been signed," Col Bouna Ag Attayoub, a MNLA commander in Timbuktu, told the BBC. "The Islamic Republic of Azawad is now an independent sovereign state." Previously, the MNLA had remained secular, resisting Ansar Dine's efforts to impose Islamic law in towns. Meanwhile, Ansar Dine had rejected the MNLA's call for an independent state. Residents said there was celebratory gunfire in Gao and Timbuktu after the agreement. More than 300,000 people have fled northern Mali since the rebels took the territory in the days following the coup. The regional bloc Economic ommunity of West African States (ECOWAS) has said it is preparing to send 3,000 troops to Mali to help the country reclaim its northern territory, but no date has been set for the force to arrive. Mali's Timbuktu and Askia Tomb put on UNESCO danger list. The United Nations has said it is gravely concerned about Mali's historical city of Timbuktu as violence in the country's north escalates. UNESCO, the UN's cultural agency, said both Timbuktu and the 17th Century Tomb of Askia, which is in the city of Gao, had been placed on its list of sites in danger. Islamist forces have just seized Gao from Tuareg rebels.Unesco said it was also worried about looting and smuggling of artefacts. Mali's government had asked the UN to recognise the threat to the condition of its historical sites and the high risk of trafficking of cultural objects. Timbuktu, which is on the edge of the Sahara Desert, contains many examples of impressive and distinctive architecture which is hundreds of years old and constructed mainly from mud and wood. The city is also home to about 700,000 ancient manuscripts held in about 60 private libraries. Concern about Timbuktu's ancient sites was raised after a coup in March which overthrew the government. Tuareg rebels and Islamist militants capitalised on the chaos and took control of the north of the country, but their uneasy alliance has all but collapsed. Analysts say they do not share the same ambitions, with the Tuaregs wanting secession and Islamist fighters keen to impose Sharia law in the poor West African state. The Tomb of Askia, a pyramidal structure which was built in 1495, is the burial place of the Emperor Mohammad Askia, who led the Empire of Songhai, one of the most successful Islamic empires in history. Al-Qaeda linked Islamist fighters were reported to have destroyed the tomb of a local Muslim saint in Timbuktu. Strict Islamists regard shines as idolatrous, while some Muslims, especially Sufis, regard them as an accepted part of Muslim worship.

Updates: Islamist militants in Mali have attacked one of the most famous mosques in the historic city of Timbuktu which enlisted as world heritage in 1988, residents say. Armed men broke down the door of the 15th-Century Sidi Yahia mosque, a resident told the BBC. The Ansar Dine group, which is said to have links to al-Qaeda, seized control of the city earlier this year. It has already destroyed several of the city's shrines, saying they contravene its strict interpretation of Islam. Ansar Dine spokesman Sanda Ould Bamana told the BBC that his movement had now completed nearly 90% of its objective to destroy all mausoleums that are not in line with Islamic law. He said Sharia did not allow the building of tombs taller than 15cm (6 inches). The new chief prosecutor of the International Criminal Court, Fatou Bensouda, condemned the destruction as a "war crime", reports the AFP news agency. The UN cultural agency Unesco and Mali's government have called on Ansar Dine to halt its campaign. Unesco has also expressed concern that valuable artefacts and manuscripts may be smuggled out of the region and has urged neighbouring countries to prevent this. The 55-nation Organisation of the Islamic Conference said in a statement that the sites Ansar Dine had attacked were "part of the rich Islamic heritage of Mali and should not be allowed to be destroyed and put in harm's way by bigoted extremist elements". The site of Sidi Yahia is one of the three great mosques of Timbuktu. The door which has been smashed had been left sealed as it led to the sacred tomb of saints. Some witnesses started crying when they saw the damage, AFP says. Some local people believe that opening the door will herald misfortune. Timbuktu owes its international fame to its role as a centre of Islamic learning, based in its three large mosques, in the 15th and 16th Centuries. Timbuktu is also known as "City of 333 saints", which originate in the Sufi tradition of Islam. Ansar Dine's Salafist beliefs condemn the veneration of saints. The group seized control of Timbuktu in April, after a coup left Mali's army in disarray. Initially, it was working with secular ethnic Tuareg rebels demanding independence for northern Mali's desert territories but the groups have recently clashed and Islamist forces are in control of northern Mali's three main centres - Timbuktu, Gao and Kidal.

Mali's Tuareg rebellions'

Updates: The Tuareg people numbered approximately at 2 to 3 million and are the indigenous population of much of the Central Sahara and Sahel. Their largest number, estimated at 800, 000 live in Mali followed by neighboring Niger with smaller populations in Algeria, Bukinafaso and Libya. There have been five Tuareg rebellions in Mali since independence in 1960, in addition to three in Niger and sporadic unrest in Algeria. The latest Tuareg rebellion in Mali, by the Mouvement National Liberation de l'Azwad (MNLA), began in January, 2012. The MNLA comprised Tuareg who had returned from Libya around October 2011, rebels who had not laid down their arms after the 2007-2009 uprising, and others who had defected from the Malian army. Their number was estimated at around 3, 0. By mid-March 2012, they had driven Mali's ill-equipped and ill-led, out of most of northern Mali (which the Tuareg call Azawad), meeting little resistance. Following the humiliation of Mali's army, soldiers in the Kati barracks near the capital Bamako mutinied on 22 March, an incident that led to a junta of junior officers taking power in the country. Within a week, the three northern provincial capitals of Kidal, Gao and Timbuktu were in rebel hands and on 5 April, the MNLA declared Azawad an independent state. The declaration of Azawad's independence received no international support. One reason for this was because of the alliance between the MNLA and Ansar al-Din, a newly created jihadist movement led by a Tuareg notable, Iyad ag Ghaly, and another jihadist group, Jamat Tawhid Wal Jihad Fi Garbi Afriqqiya (Movement for oneness and Jihad in West Africa).

Both Ansar al-Din and MUJAO were connected to and supported by al-qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM). By May 2012, it was these islamist groups, not the MNLA, who were calling the political and military shots in Azawad. By the end of June, tension between the MNLA and the Islamists broke into open fighting, resulting in the MNLA being driven out of Gao and becoming increasingly marginalised politically. Since then, the Islamists have imposed strict sharia law in Azawad, especially in Gao, Timbuktu, and Kidal. Summary executions, amputations, stonings, and other such atrocities, as well as the destruction of holy shrines in Timbuktu – UNESCO world heritage sites – are currently being investigated by the International Criminal Court (ICC). By last August, nearly half a million people had fled or been displaced.

UNESCO Registered Treasures of Timbuktu’

Timbuktu was a centre of Islamic learning from the 13th to the 17th Centuries.

700,000 manuscripts survive in public libraries and private collections.

Books on religion, law, literature and science.

Letters between rulers, advisers and merchants on subjects as varied as taxation, commerce, marriage, divorce, adoption, and prostitution.

Added to UNESCO world heritage list in 1988 for its three mosques and 16 cemeteries and mausoleums

They played a major role in spreading Islam in West Africa; the oldest dates from 1329

Islamists destroyed mausoleums after seizing the city. BBC News Africa

The UN Security Council has said it is not ready to back a West African intervention force in northern Mali, which has been seized by Islamist militant groups. The council condemned the destruction of ancient shrines in the historic city of Timbuktu, saying it could constitute a war crime. The West African bloc, ECOWAS, wants to send 3,000 troops to Mali. But a UN diplomat told the BBC that the council wanted more details. "Before endorsing an ECOWAS force, we would need a clearer plan, more information about what the objectives are, and more evidence that such a force would have a reasonable chance of meeting those objectives," he said. Mali's neighbours have lobbied for the UN to back their proposed force, fearing the spread of Islamist militancy from northern Mali. UN’s Security Council resolution warned that "attacks against buildings dedicated to religion or historic monuments can constitute violations of international law". This means that a case could be referred to the International Criminal Court (ICC) in The Hague, The Netherlands, whose prosecutor has already condemned the recent destruction of Muslim tombs in Timbuktu as "war crimes". The resolution also called for sanctions against Islamist fighters in northern Mali.

Endnote:- Mali's President Diouncounda Traore returns from Paris:- Mali's interim President Diouncounda Traore has arrived back home after a two-month absence. He has been recovering in Paris from injuries sustained when he was beaten by supporters of March's coup. Journalist Idrissa Fane told the BBC Mr. Traore was greeted by a large crowds at the airport and looked to be healthy. Analysts say he has a tough task ahead in trying to resolve the political stalemate caused by the coup and an Islamist rebellion in the north. Tuareg rebels and Islamist militants capitalised on the chaos following an army coup in March and took control of the north of the country, but their uneasy alliance has collapsed. The Al -Qaeda Islamists now control all three of the region's main cities - Timbuktu, Gao and Kidal. Thousands have fled the north. Idrissa Fane told the BBC's Focus on Africa programme there was a huge security presence at the airport. The smiling president was greeted by politicians, diplomats, religious and security leaders, he said. Crowds of Mr Traore's party supporters also lined the road from the airport to his residence. Correspondents says there is high hope in Mali that this is not just a symbolic return. Mr. Traore is expected to form a new government of unity within days of his arrival and deliver a strategy to reclaim the northern region of Mali back from rebel control. The BBC's West Africa correspondent Thomas Fessy says Mr. Traore will also have to handle with care the group of soldiers that overthrew the previous administration and agreed to an interim government after the intervention of the regional bloc, ECOWAS. Coup leader Captain Amadou Sanogo remains very influential in the management of the state's affairs, he says. Mr. Traore also faces a growing humanitarian crisis mainly with more than 4.5m people at risk of food insecurity. According to the UN, nearly 200,000 children are suffering from acute malnutrition. The BBC correspondent says it is also not clear whether Mr. Traore will back ECOWAS's plan to send 3,000 troops to intervene in northern Mali. There has been international condemnation of the Islamist fighters in the ancient city of Timbuktu where they have been destroying centuries-old shrines to Islamic saints revered by Sufi Muslims. Their Salafist beliefs condemn the veneration of saints and they regard the mausoleums as idolatrous.

April 9, 2013: Mali crisis: French troops begin withdrawal'

BBC News: France has begun to withdraw troops from Mali where they have battling Islamist militants, the French defence ministry has said. Around 100 of the 4,000 sent to the West African nation in January have been withdrawn to Cyprus, it said. France intervened after saying the al-Qaeda-linked militants who had taken over northern Mali threatened to march on the capital, Bamako A regional African force is in Mali to help its army provide security. The French-led operation drove Islamist groups out of northern cities and towns, but some fighters have retreated to desert hideouts in the vast northern region. The troops who have been withdrawn belong to parachute units of the army, AFP news agency cited Thierry Burkhard, a spokesman for the chief of staff, as saying. He said they had been deployed in the area around Tessalit, a town in the far north-east Mali near the Tegharghar mountains which saw heavy fighting against Islamists. Nationwide elections are due in July, by which time France wants its troop presence to have been halved.

France hopes to have only 1,000 soldiers in Mali by the end of the year, handing over duties to the African force which currently numbers around 6,300 soldiers. The European Union has begun training 2,000 Malian soldiers mainly for patrol duties, says the BBC's Alex Duval Smith in Bamako. Their weakness in the face of the Islamist advance was what prompted the French intervention in the first place, she says. The EU also gave 50m euros ($65m, £42m) to the regional African forces, known by the acronym Afisma, to help with training and equipment. UN chief Ban Ki-moon has suggested that an 11,000-strong UN peace force, made up of African troops, be deployed in Mali, once France reduces its presence. Mr Ban also called for the creation of a second force to fight militants. Remaining French troops could be part of this force, correspondents say. Islamist groups took advantage of a coup in March 2012 to take control of the north of Mali, including major cities including Gao, Kidal and Timbuktu. They imposed a strict form of Islamic law in the area.

Mali: France Hails Mali for Breakthrough in Polls’

Summary & Comment: "Malian authorities claim that the election exercise went off well . . The July presidential election is part of the deal that saw a civilian interim authority established in August following weeks of rule by the military junta. Provisional results from the Sunday polls put former Prime Minister Ibrahim Boubakar Keita in the lead, according to reports from the state broadcaster, predicting an outright win for him, averting a run-off vote on 11 August." Former colonial power France, which had sent its troops in January to crush the Islamists rebellion, has praised Malian authorities for the exercise that went off well. France has hailed Mali’s presidential elections as a great success, in the landmark polls first since the military-led coup and a separatist-led rebellion in the north by Islamists that had plunged the country into civil unrest. Renegade soldiers led by Captain Amadou Sanogo took over power in March 2012, over what it claimed as incompetence by then President Amadou Toumani Toure regime to crush a Tuareg rebellion in north-eastern Mali. Provisional results from the Sunday polls put former Prime Minister Ibrahim Boubakar Keita in the lead, according to reports from the state broadcaster, predicting an outright win for him, averting a run-off vote on 11 August. Already Mr Keita’s supporters are holding celebrations in the capital, Bamako, and in towns throughout in the country as vote counting exercise continued.

The presidential election had attracted 27 candidates, with some 6.8 million people registered to vote in the 21,000 polloing stations across the country. French Prime Minister Jean-Marc Ayrault said France did not act out of "paternalism" and wanted Mali to become a "democratic independent nation", AFP news agency reports. "Congratulations are in order that the Mali elections went off well... For France, it is a great success," Mr Ayrault is quoted as saying. The July presidential election is part of the deal that saw a civilian interim authority established in August following weeks of rule by the military junta that had ordered closure of border and imposed curfew. European Union poll observation mission said the election had gone off well and was marked by enthusiasm among voters. An incursion southwards by the Islamist fighters in the north, threatening to overrun Bamako had taken advantage of the coup, prompting the Malian interim authorities to seek the French intervention. France heeded with a military mission in January, sending 4,000 troops to operate jointly with their Malian counterparts, to beat back the Islamist rebels, who were in control of the northern region of the country want independent. The French have begun withdrawing its troops from Mali, paving way for the UN peacekeeping force deployed earlier this month to watch over the election intended to reunite the north and south. France has independently said it will help rebuild Mali once the military campaign in the country is over.

Accession to power of Interim Mali President Dioncounda Traore 21st March, 2012.

Tentative election calendar- Presidential, April.

Mali – Timeline Diaries updates, and related key notes :

11th century - Empire of Mali becomes dominant force in the upper Niger basin, its period of greatness beginning under King Sundiata in 1235 and peaking under Mansa Musa who ruled between 1312 and 1337 and extended empire to the Atlantic.

14th-15th centuries - Decline of the Empire of Mali, which loses dominance of the gold trade to the Songhai Empire, which makes its base in Timbuktu - historically important as a focal point of Islamic culture and a trading post on the trans-Saharan caravan route.

Late 16th century - Moroccans defeat the Songhai, make Timbuktu their capital and rule until their decline in the 18th century.

19th century - French colonial advance, and Islamic religious wars which lead to creation of theocratic states.

1898 - France completes conquest of Mali, then called French Sudan.

1959 - Mali and Senegal form the Mali Federation, which splits a year later.

1960 - Mali becomes independent with Modibo Keita as founder president. It becomes a one-party, socialist state and withdraws from the Franc zone.

1968 – President Modibo Keita ousted in a coup led by Lieutenant Colonel Moussa Traore.

1977 - Protests erupt following Modibo Keita's death in prison cell.

1979 – Mali new constitution provides for elections; Mousa Traore re-elected president.

1985 - Mali and Burkina Faso engage in border fighting.

1991 – Moussa Traore deposed in coup and replaced by military transitional committee.

1992 – History professor Alpha Umar Konare wins multiparty elections to become Mali's first democratically-elected president.

1995 - Peace agreement with Tuareg tribes leads to return of thousands of refugees.

1999 - Former President Moussa Traore sentenced to death on corruption charges, but has his sentence commuted to life imprisonment by President Alpha Umar Konare.

October 1999 - Several people killed in fighting in the north between members of the Kunta tribe and an Arab community over local disputes.

February 2000 – President Alpha Umar Konare appoints former International Monetary Fund official Mande Sidibe prime minister.

December 2001 - Manantali dam in southwest produces its first megawatt of hydro-electricity, 13 years after it was completed.

April 2002 - Amadou Toumani Toure elected president by landslide. Poll is marred by allegations of fraud.

September 2002 - France says it will cancel 40% of debts owed to it by Mali, amounting to some 80m euros ($79m, £51m).

October 2002 - Government resigns, without public explanation. New "government of national unity" is unveiled.

August 2003 - Clashes between rival Muslim groups in west kill at least 10 people.

December 26, 2003: Mali claimed that it was taking all necessary steps to make guarantee their country did not become a rear-area base for Islamic radicals acting against their neighbors. Mali's security forces clamped down on their northern Timbuktu 40 kilometers from the border with Mauritania, 24 hours after armed Islamist fighters were spotted in the region. The group was traveling aboard dozens of all -terrain vehicles along the frontier and their intentions were unknown. While no strength figures were given, the number was large enough for the government to "significantly bolster security" in the zone.

Suspected Mauritanian military coup plotters from the June 2003 attempt may have also crossed into Mali and security forces are still seeking the Algerian terrorists who kidnapped 32 European tourists for ransom. The last hostages were released in the Malian desert in August. US soldiers were expected to arrive in the vast desert region of northern Mali in the near future, either to help train Malian forces for peacekeeping missions or "how to fight against terrorism." - Adam Geibel

The past is very prominent at present: The three great mosques or madrasas (schools) of Dijingareyber, Sankore, and Sidi Yahya are a testament in mud-architecture to the city's golden age. During the 15th and 16th centuries, Timbuktu was a fabulous wealthy African city. It was the city's key role in transsaharan trade in Gold, Ivory, slaves, Salt and other goods. A trade conducted by Tuareg, Mande, and Fulani merchants - which led to it's prosperity. With wealth came learning, libraries and universities. The city was perhaps the most important centre of learning in Sub-Saharan Africa during the 15th and 16th centuries, where scholars of religion, arts and sciences flourished. During this time tens of thousands of manuscripts were commissioned and meticulously executed by African academics.

April 6, 2012: The military junta made a deal with ECOWAS to step down and allow the civilian government to resume control of the country. The army mutineers will receive amnesty, the current president will resign and be replaced by someone from the legislature. The exact timing of the turnover was not spelled out. Sanogo and his fellow mutineers were forced to make this deal when, earlier in the week, they found that no existing Mali political parties or groups would deal with the mutineers.

In the north the MNLA declared that all of Mali north of the narrow center of the country was now the new, Tuareg dominated, country of Azawad. Neighboring promptly refused to recognize this claim of independence.

April 8, 2012: President Amadou Toumani Touré resigned as part of a deal with the army rebels to return to civilian rule. The president of the legislature will now be sworn in as the new president of the country.

The rebellious Mali soldiers have been moving to the central Mali city of Mopti (which is at the junction of the Niger and Bani rivers) and preparing to retake control of the north. To the north of Mopti the terrain becomes drier and, after a hundred kilometers or so, desert. The city is also the destination of many of the 200,000 northerners who fled their homes to escape the violence. ECOWAS and the AU are raising a force of 3,000 troops to assist in putting down the Tuareg rebels up north. Captain Sanogo and his fellow mutineers still have their weapons and may yet try to hold onto their power.

There are at least three separate armed forces in the north. The main one is the MNLA (Liberation Army of Azawad) which represents the most militant and heavily armed Tuareg rebels. A smaller, less well equipped ally is Ansar Dine, an Islamic radical group containing many former (or current) al Qaeda members and technically an ally of MNLA. Then there is the FLNA (Azawad National Liberation Front), a group of armed Arab residents of Timbuktu which seeks to defend member interests as the Tuareg (who are not Arabs) take control of Timbuktu. The AU and the Mali army hope to exploit the differences between these northern rebel groups. Currently, there are often tense relations between MNLA and Ansar Dine members. The Ansar Dine considers themselves morally superior to the MNLA (which contains a lot of mercenaries and thugs who are in it for the money and freedom from those non-Tuareg southerners). MNLA men have looted and raped in towns they have captured, and this has sometimes resulted in violent confrontations with Ansar Dine men. Militias like the FLNA oppose both the Tuareg and the largely foreign Islamic radicals. This is already causing some unrest inside Timbuktu, a city long run by Arabs but one that Ansar Dine is now trying to impose Islamic law on. This could get nasty. Meanwhile there is still a drought and food shortage in the north. The Tuareg uprising has halted aid shipments (especially food) because of the increased criminality up there. If things don't settle down up there in the next month people are going to begin dying of starvation.

April 10, 2012: The coup leader (Captain Amadou Sanogo) warned that foreign troops would not be welcome as the Mali armed forces prepared to take back the sparsely populated northern part of the country, which is now under the control of Tuareg rebels. Sanogo has a serious problem in that many of his army followers do not agree with his decision to return the elected government to power. But Sanogo had little choice, as the AU (African Union) and ECOWAS (Economic Community of West African States) was preparing to invade and had already imposed economic sanctions on land-locked Mali. Moreover, most Malians do not back the army mutineers. Sanogo believed that his actions and those of the several thousand troops that followed him would lead to broad popular support. That did not happen, and now he is being blamed for the northern half of the country being lost to Tuareg rebels (who have proclaimed their independence). The AU, and most other foreign government, refuses to recognize the new Tuareg government in northern Mali.

May 3, 2012: Several days of fighting between army rebels (who ran the March 22nd coup) and the Presidential Guard. The rebels won and the attempt to reinstate the elected government was defeated. In the wake of this incident there are several armed militias in the capital, all ready to fight if they see a chance for victory.

May 15, 2012: Islamic terrorists stopped a food aid convoy from entering the northern city of Timbuktu because women were involved in the aid effort. After hours of negotiations, and threats by the people in the city, the convoy was allowed in.

May 18, 2012: Mali still has a shaky interim government that ends its 40 day rule on May 22nd. ECOWAS (Economic Community of West African States) wants the temporary rule extended 12 months so new elections can be held. The March 22 coup leaders still exist, along with hundreds of armed followers. These guys threaten to take power again or at least try to. They are held back, in part, by being blamed for the northern two-thirds of the country seceding to form a separate Tuareg and Islamic radical controlled country. ECOWAS wants to send peacekeepers to deal with the situation in northern Mali, as well as disarm the coup members. Naturally the coup group and the armed rebels in the north object to this. ECOWAS is still talking about sending peacekeepers to Mali but it may be a month or more before these troops actually arrive in Mali.

In the north the MNLA (Liberation Army of Azawad), which represents the most militant and heavily armed Tuareg rebels, is losing ground to Islamic radical groups. The smaller, less well equipped ally is Ansar Dine, an Islamic radical group containing many former (or current) al Qaeda members and technically an ally of MNLA, has been growing rapidly. Islamic terrorists from Algeria, Nigeria, and other areas are coming to northern Mali. A growing number of Tuareg see this as an invasion and the MNLA is breaking into factions over this issue. Islamic terrorist control in the north is spotty because they do not have as many followers (armed and unarmed) as MNLA (who comprise most of the northern population). The north contains only about 12 percent of Mali's population and is largely barren desert. The Islamic terror groups are making themselves unpopular in the north by forcing everyone to live a strict (no tobacco, alcohol, music, video, shaved men, and unveiled women) Islamic lifestyle rules. The Islamic radicals have also damaged some non-Islamic cultural sites. There are a growing number of anti-Ansar Dine demonstrations. This has caused the Ansar Dine to back off a bit because many of the Tuareg men in the north have weapons. While most of these guys did not join the MNLA rebellion, they still back the idea of a Tuareg controlled northern Mali and increasingly see outsiders (as most of the Islamic terrorists are) as invaders rather than allies. The Tuareg population is also suffering from increased banditry. Before the MNLA uprising the soldiers and police controlled crime and at least kept the main roads safe. MNLA has not established that kind of security, and food and other goods, which have to be trucked in, are in short supply.

May 20, 2012: In the south the army rebels officially returned power to the civilian government. But the coup leaders and their armed followers have not surrendered themselves or their weapons.

May 26, 2012: MNLA and Ansar Dine agreed to an alliance so they can both jointly rule, and defend, the north. To achieve this compromise, Ansar Dine agreed to recognize the independent Tuareg state of Azawad in the northern two thirds of Mali. In return, the MNLA agreed to allow Ansar Dine to impose a "limited" form of Islamic law throughout Azawad. This agreement quickly fell apart as most people (Tuareg and southerners) in Azawad made it clear that they wanted nothing to do with any form of Islamic law. Ansar Dine responded by trying to impose even stricter forms of Islamic law, and the MNLA gunmen refused to let this happen to them or their families. This eventually led to fighting between groups of MNLA and Ansar Dine gunmen.

June 8, 2012: In the town of Kidal (population 25,000) in the northeast, MNLA and Ansar Dine gunmen began fighting each other after days of arguing about how to handle civilians who are opposed to the Ansar Dine imposition of Islamic law.

June 11, 2012: The AU (African Union) has asked the UN for authorization to intervene in northern Mali.

June 12, 2012: MNLA and Ansar Dine gunmen fought near Timbuktu. MNLA efforts to assert authority over their Ansar Dine allies have failed and Ansar Dine is in turn fighting to show that it is the superior military power in the north.

June 15, 2012: Ansar Dine and MNLA representatives arrived in Burkina Faso to hold peace talks with ECOWAS. These talks are not expected to go anywhere, but it was considered a useful way to keep in touch with the two rebel factions in the north. ECOWAS is meeting separately with the two groups, as Ansar Dine and MNLA have been increasingly at war with each other in northern Mali.

June 28, 2012: Algerian al Qaeda leader Mokhtar Belmokhtar was reported killed in northern Mali while fighting for Ansar Dine against rebel Tuareg tribesmen. In Algeria Belmokhtar has earned the nickname "the untouchable" for his ability to escape many efforts to capture or kill him.

June 29, 2012: Ansar Dine declared that it had expelled Tuareg (MNLA) gunmen from Gao, Kidal, and Timbuktu. MNLA admitted they lost control of the three cities but insisted they still controlled 90 percent of northern Mali (which is mostly desert). The fighting between Ansar Dine and the MNLA has been escalating for weeks and became more widespread in the last few days. The most intense fighting was outside Gao, the largest city (population 86,000) in the north. There were over a hundred casualties, and the MNLA men usually fled when they realized that the Ansar Dine fighters would keep coming no matter what.

June 30, 2012: Ansar Dine gunmen in Timbuktu (population 54,000), the oldest city in the north, began destroying the dozens of ancient tombs of Moslem clerics and scholars worshipped by Sufi Moslems. To conservative Sunni Moslems, Sufis are heretics and their shrines are to be destroyed whenever possible. The destruction of the tombs was condemned by many Moslem leaders worldwide, and the ICC (International Criminal Court) declared it a war crime. This did not discourage Ansar Dine, which threatened to destroy dozens of Sufi shrines in Timbuktu. So far they have not energetically followed through on this threat.

July 2, 2012: Ansar Dine announced that it had planted landmines around the city of Gao and are prepared to defeat any MNLA attempt to retake the place.

Neighboring states, especially Algeria, as well as most nations in the West, fear that if Ansar Dine is left in control of northern Mali (even if subordinate to the Tuareg majority up there), the place will become a base for Islamic terrorist operations. This is what happened in Afghanistan in the 1990s, and Iraq, Yemen, and Somalia in the last decade.

In the southern third of Mali, where 88 percent of the population lives, life is also hard. The March army coup disrupted the economy and foreign aid. The coup leaders, and many of their armed followers, are still around and able to seize control again. In the north it is worse. In addition to the loss of foreign economic aid, the tourist business has also dried up, leaving thousands of northerners jobless.

The MNLA is now at war with Ansar Dine and is appealing to northerners (especially Tuareg) to work with them against the "foreign invaders" (Ansar Dine). Most civilians in the area have more urgent problems, like how to get food. The unrest in the north has disrupted the movement of food and other goods into the area. People are getting hungry and Ansar Dine is often preventing foreign food aid from reaching civilians. More and more people are fleeing the north. So far, over 300,000 have fled to the south or neighboring countries. Many more are planning to do so if the food situation does not improve.

France has taken the lead in organizing international (and UN) backing for an armed intervention in northern Mali. ECOWAS (Economic Community of West African States) has organized a force of 3,300 peacekeepers (from Nigeria, Niger, and Senegal) but wants UN backing, and Western cash, before these troops are sent into Mali. The UN is discussing the matter and Western nations are willing to pay up if the UN approves of the operation. But there is doubt that these 3,300 troops and a thousand or so from Mali could defeat a nearly equal number of Tuareg and Ansar Dine fighters. The Tuareg and Islamic radicals are tough fighters. Many in the UN are seeking larger troop commitments before they OK an invasion in their name. One thing the UN has agreed on is not to recognize a partition of Mali.

The Islamic radicals also damaged some cultural sites that were seen as unclean by the Sunni Islamic conservatives within Ansar Dine. There were a few anti-Ansar Dine demonstrations, which were put down with gunfire and threats of more violence. Ansar Dine may be able to control most of the north for a while but can they maintain that control for any length of time? Aware of their weakness, Ansar Dine has appealed to Islamic terrorists throughout the world to come to northern Mali (not easy to do). Because Islamic radicals are currently being defeated in most of the world (Somalia, Yemen, Pakistan, and so on), the Ansar Dine appeal is motivating a lot of Islamic terrorists to head for Mali. Will that be enough? ECOWAS is offering to make peace with Ansar Dine and MNLA if Ansar Dine will rid itself of known Islamic terrorists. This is something of a mad gambit, as the government in southern Mali will not agree to partition of their country and Ansar Dine depends too much on the experienced Islamic terrorists in their ranks, who are the most deadly fighters and quick to kill anyone who opposes them. Then again, just the news that this sort of thing is under discussion causes some tension within Ansar Dine.

A growing number of Tuareg see Ansar Dine as an invasion, and this caused quarrels among MNLA leaders. Islamic terrorist control in the north was spotty at first because they did not have as many followers (armed and unarmed) as the MNLA (who comprise most of the northern population). The north contains only about 12 percent of Mali's 15 million people and is largely barren desert. The Islamic terror groups made themselves unpopular in the north by forcing everyone to obey strict (no tobacco, alcohol, music, video, shaved men, and unveiled women) Islamic lifestyle rules. This ran into a lot of resistance, and Ansar Dine backed off, for the moment, from seizing all TVs and video games. Meanwhile, Ansar Dine makes no secret of its ultimate goal, turning all of Mali into an Islamic religious dictatorship.

The MNLA (Liberation Army of Azawad) represents the most militant and heavily armed Tuareg rebels, but they have not been able to stand up to its smaller, less well equipped ally Ansar Dine, an Islamic radical group containing many former (or current) al Qaeda members. Islamic terrorists from Algeria, Nigeria, and other areas are coming to northern Mali to join Ansar Dine. The leader of Ansar Dine (Iyad Ag Ghali) is a local Tuareg tribal leader who has always been active in Tuareg separatism efforts and is adept at playing Tuareg tribal politics. Ghali has always been seen as an opportunist, and now he is making a violent attempt to establish his own Tuareg religious dictatorship in northern Mali. Most Tuaregs oppose Islamic radicals but support an independent Tuareg state. Ghali is playing on this division to keep the more numerous Tuareg from uniting and destroying Ansar Dine. If the northern Tuareg did unite, they could turn out over 50,000 armed and angry men, if only for a short period. Ansar Dine has only a few thousand armed men and many of those are Tuaregs who recently joined.

July 4, 2012: In the African state of Mali, the Tuareg tribal rebels (MNLA, Liberation Army of Azawad) that took control of the thinly populated, largely desert northern two-thirds of the country three months ago have been defeated by their smaller, but more fanatic, Islamic radical allies, the Ansar Dine (Defenders of the Faith). The success of the two groups in chasing the largely black African Mali army out of the north three months ago encouraged Ansar Dine to call for more Islamic radicals throughout the region to come join them. Meanwhile the MNLA found that their fighters were not as willing to die for the cause as their Ansar Dine allies were.

July 9, 2012: Mali's new government is trying to form an elite force of 1,200 troops, to protect the senior government officials from another coup or attacks by Islamic terrorists.

July 10, 2012: In Kenya police arrested two Iranians on June 20th and found them in possession of bomb making materials and with orders to make terror attacks on Israeli, American, British, or Saudi Arabian targets. Over the last five years, Iran has been trying to develop trade with Kenya and good relations in general. This has not resulted in much economic activity, but Iranian diplomatic personnel have been seen around more, trying to establish contacts among the Moslem minority in largely Christian Kenya. This has made Kenyan police alert to any suspicious behavior on the part of Iranians

What happened in Kenya was not an isolated incident. Two years ago an Iranian weapons smuggling operation in Nigeria was revealed and caused much embarrassment. Nigerian police found 13 cargo containers full of weapons. The shipping documents listed the contents as building materials. Some detective work confirmed that the containers were shipped from Iran several months previously. Worse, at least two Nigerian Moslems were involved in the operation, as well as an Iranian diplomat. It was eventually discovered that the weapons were headed for Gambia, up the coast, where pro-Iranian rebels were waiting for the shipment. In response, Gambia (and neighboring Senegal) kicked out Iranian diplomats and the incidents alerted all other African governments to be careful with Iranian diplomats or any Iranian citizens who show up for no good reason. Chances are that such Iranians are members of the Quds Force, and if they are, no good will come of it.

The Quds Force is an Iranian organization trained to spread the Islamic revolution outside Iran. The Quds force has a major problem, in that they are spreading a Shia Islamic revolution, while only 10-15 percent of Moslems are Shia. Most (about 80 percent) of the rest are Sunni, and many of them consider Shia heretics. In several countries there is constant violence between Shia and Sunni radicals. This has been going on long before the clerics took control of Iran in 1979 (al Qaeda showed up in the 1990s). But Quds also try to carry out terror attacks against any enemies of Iran. At the moment the main enemies are Israel, the United States, Britain, and Saudi Arabia.

The core operatives of the Quds Force consists of only a few thousand people. But many of them are highly educated, most speak foreign languages, and all are Islamic radicals. They are on a mission from God to convert the world to Shia Islam and then rule by Shia clergy. The Quds Force has been around since the 1980s, and their biggest success has been in Lebanon, where they helped some local Shia (who comprise about a third of the population) form the Hezbollah organization.

The Quds Force has eight departments, each assigned to a different part of the world. While the one that works in the Palestine/Lebanon/Jordan area have been the most successful, the other departments have been hard at it for two decades. Currently, however, Quds is heavily involved in trying to keep the Assad family in control of Syria. Shortly after Iraq invaded Iran in 1980, the Shia Assads of Syria became allies of Iran. This was an "enemy of my enemy is my friend" deal. At the time, both Syria and Iraq were run by feuding branches of the Baath Party. This is an Arab socialist, and secular, political organization that, in the 1960s, had visions of uniting all Arab states. That didn't work out, although Baath took control in Syria and Iraq, but the two branches of the party found they could not work together and really didn't like each other very much. Syria has been dependent on and subordinate to Iran ever since.

The Western Directorate of Quds established a recruiting and fund raising network in Western nations. Many recruits are brought back to Iran for training, while Shia migrants are encouraged to donate money, and services, to Quds Force operations. Because many of these operations are considered terrorist operations, Quds Force is banned in many Western nations.

The Iraq Department long maintained an army of anti-Saddam fighters in exile (in Iran) as well as running an intelligence operation inside Iraq. After the coalition toppled Saddam in 2003, Quds Force moved people, money, and weapons into Iraq, to form pro-Iranian political forces and militias. That did not work out as expected, as the Indo-European Iranians found (again) that Iraqi Shia are Arabs first.

The South Asia Department (Afghanistan, Pakistan, and India) was active in aiding Afghan Shia who have long been persecuted by the Taliban (a Sunni operation) and al Qaeda (a very Sunni operation). Quds has also been operating in Pakistan, where Sunni terrorists have been attacking Shia for decades.

The Turkey Department has been active in encouraging Shia Kurds to commit terrorist acts. That has not been very successful, as most Kurds want to see Iranian Kurds achieve independence or autonomy.

The North Africa Department has an operation in Sudan that functions in the open, despite the Sunni conservatives who run the country. This department has been caught providing weapons to the Islamic radicals in Somalia. This department has also been operating in the rest of Africa, but without much skill or success.

The Arabian Department supports terrorist groups that exist in all the Persian Gulf Arab countries. The Arab Sunni governments in these nations do not appreciate Iran's support for this sort of thing. Quds has been caught several times trying to smuggle weapons to rebel Shia tribesmen in northern Yemen.

The Central Asian Department supports Shia and Sunni terrorists in countries that used to be part of the Soviet Union. So does al Qaeda, but the Quds operation has been more discreet because Russia has been a useful diplomatic ally of Iran.

Back in Iran, Quds is believed to provide safe houses for al Qaeda leaders, even though al Qaeda has taken part in many atrocities against Shia outside Iran. However, Quds appears to believe that the al Qaeda can be useful to Iran. Actually, there is a major dispute in the Iranian government over the al Qaeda issue. But the Iranian leadership is more a federation than a dictatorship, so Quds can keep being nice to al Qaeda as long as not too many factions get mad at Quds. But the death of bin Laden last year presented a unique opportunity for al Quds to expand its terror network and help keep these Sunni radicals from killing Shia.

The Iranian leadership, despite their radical sounding pronouncements, have actually been quite cautious. This is in line with ancient Iranian custom. Most of the Hezbollah violence in Lebanon was at the behest of Lebanese. The same pattern has occurred elsewhere. The Quds guys usually counsel restraint, although in Iraq there has been more enthusiasm for violence. Iraq is a special case, as several hundred thousand Iranians died fighting Saddam in the 1980s, and Iranians have not forgotten.

July 12, 2012: France said it was probable that Western states would intervene in northern Mali. At the same time, the U.S. offered $10 million in food and other aid for refugees. The U.S. and France have been cooperating in northeast Africa for a decade and both nations maintain special operations bases in Djibouti (northwest of Somalia). In West Africa the U.S. has its new AFRICOM operation that is assisting nations there to fight Islamic terrorism. Whatever Mali-oriented cooperation France and the U.S. (and other NATO countries) may be planning they are not discussing openly. But counter-terrorism experts agree that northern Mali is turning into another Islamic terrorist sanctuary.

July 15, 2012: The MNLA declared that they no longer wanted an independent state in the north but would settle for more autonomy. At the moment the MNLA fighters stand defeated. Recently driven out of the few cities and large towns in the north (by Ansar Dine), ECOWAS and the AU approached MNLA about a coordinated effort to defeat Ansar Dine. But there is still no cooperation from the Mali government or the UN.

July 19, 2012: Three European aid workers (two Spaniards and an Italian), kidnapped last year from an Algerian refugee camp, have been held in Mali by al Qaeda while negotiations took place. Terms for the release were not revealed. It's believed three imprisoned Islamic terrorists in Mauritania were released and a large cash ransom was also paid. All this just makes the terrorists stronger and encourages more kidnappings. But the political and media pressure back in Europe eventually makes these shortsighted deals happen.

Meanwhile, the Mali government is still disorganized and the UN has refused to back a military campaign by ECOWAS (Economic Community of West African States) and the AU (African Union) to defeat the rebels up north. ECOWAS has organized a force of 3,300 peacekeepers (from Nigeria, Niger, and Senegal) and Mali has recruited over a thousand young men and is training them for combat in the north. If the new Mali government can stabilize itself in the next few weeks (which is what is expected), then the UN is more inclined to authorize some international military aid to deal with the mess in the north.

There are only about 1.4 million people in the breakaway north, and about ten percent of them have already fled the harsh Ansar Dine rule. It's not just the punishments, restrictions, and growing shortages. Ansar Dine is also recruiting local young men, especially teenagers who don't know any better. Families are forced to surrender their young daughters to become "wives" for Ansar Dine fighters. Often this is just a subterfuge for forced prostitution.

While the MNLA (Liberation Army of Azawad) represents the most militant and heavily armed Tuareg rebels, Ansar Dine is an Islamic radical group containing many former (or current) al Qaeda members. The leader of Ansar Dine (Iyad Ag Ghali) is a local Tuareg tribal leader who has always been active in Tuareg separatism efforts and is adept at playing Tuareg tribal politics. Ghali has always been seen as an opportunist, and now he is making a violent attempt to establish his own Tuareg religious dictatorship in northern Mali. Most Tuaregs oppose Islamic radicals but support an independent Tuareg state. Ghali is playing on this division to keep the more numerous Tuareg from uniting and destroying Ansar Dine. If the northern Tuareg did unite, they could turn out over 50,000 armed and angry men, if only for a short period. Ansar Dine has only a few thousand armed men and many of those are Tuaregs who recently joined.

While the MNLA found that their fighters were not as willing to die for the cause as their Ansar Dine allies were, there are still thousands of Tuareg up north with guns who have not been fighting. Ansar Dine is worried about these Tuareg because a growing number of Tuareg (and black African Malis from the south) in the cities are protesting harsh Islamic rule. Men are being whipped for smoking, drinking, not praying, or just protesting. Ansar Dine has also destroyed many Moslem shrines, which were big tourist attractions. Life is hard in the desert north and most people there, especially the Tuareg, want some help, not a bunch of religious fanatics. The Ansar Dine sense that unless they can deal with this growing Tuareg anger they will have a serious counterrevolution on their hands. The Tuareg know the area and they know how to fight. Ansar Dine has had the edge so far because its men are not afraid to die. If the Tuareg get angry and desperate enough, they too will lose their fear of dying and that could mean the end of Ansar Dine rule.

July 20, 2012: In the African state of Mali (population 15 million), several thousand fanatic Islamic radical fighters of the Ansar Dine (Defenders of the Faith) have driven the more numerous Tuareg tribal rebels (MNLA, Liberation Army of Azawad) out of the major cities in the north. Ansar Dine and MNLA used to be allies and took control of the thinly populated, largely desert northern two-thirds of the country three months ago. The success of the two groups in chasing the largely black African Mali army out of the north encouraged Ansar Dine to call for more Islamic radicals throughout the region to come join them. At this point, about a third of Ansar Dine fighters are foreigners. Ansar Dine also insisted on imposing Islamic law in the north and MNLA opposed that. This caused a split between the two groups last year, which devolved into fighting between the two groups.

July 29, 2012: In the north Islamic militants condemn an unmarried couple (with children) to death by stoning and carry out the sentence. The Islamic militants are enforcing Sharia law, which is welcome to many because it shuts down a lot of criminal activity. But it also means you can no longer listen to music, watch video, smoke cigarettes, dance, or play sports. Severe restrictions are placed on women and education. Most people in this situation eventually decide that personal freedoms are more important than the security of a police state.

In the south several armed militias have formed for the purpose of regaining control of the north. So far it's all talk and bluster. More armed groups in the south is not a good thing, no matter what their intentions.

The transitional government in Mali (another place where drug gangs bribed a lot of politicians) is having a difficult time arranging new elections. The corrupt politicians and unhappy population cannot agree on what the new government should be like. There is great popular anger at the corrupt and inept politicians and the politicians are shifting blame as quickly as they can. Everyone says they want to reclaim the north but there's no enthusiasm for letting foreigners (including the UN) do it or getting organized so the more numerous southern Malians can do it. The West is leaning towards taking unilateral action, as the al Qaeda controlled north turns into another terrorist sanctuary. The UN is stalemated over the issue.

The impact of the drug gangs (smuggling South American cocaine and local drugs north to Europe) cannot be underestimated. Local officials are easy to bribe and are not keen on wiping out the source of all their new-found wealth. This has led to resistance to Western (or any outside) intervention in northern Mali. Many local leaders blame the United States and the West for this mess. The reasoning is twisted but it involves Western counter-terrorism efforts in Africa and the usual Western imperialism. No mention of corruption among African politicians. This is one of the causes of a military coup in Mali last March. The troops wanted their political leaders to spend less time stealing and more time dealing with the growing unrest in the north.

The success of the two groups in chasing the largely black African Mali army out of the north encouraged Ansar Dine to call for more Islamic radicals throughout the region to come join them. At this point about a third of Ansar Dine fighters are foreigners. Ansar Dine also insisted on imposing Islamic law in the north and MNLA opposed that. This caused a split between the two groups last year, which devolved into fighting between the two groups.

Meanwhile, Mali has a growing refugee problem. About two-thirds of the refugees are in Mali and the UN is having trouble getting aid donors to contribute. The problem is the corruption and theft, which is more frequent and blatant in Africa, especially when it comes to foreign aid for refugees. It's worse in northern Mali, where Islamic radicals control most of the population and are hostile to foreign aid workers (but not foreign aid, which they plunder energetically).

August 3, 2012: In the last few months a coup and a tribal rebellion in Mali have caused over 250,000 people to flee their homes. Most of the refugees are from the thinly populated northern two-thirds of the country. While the African state of Mali has a population of 15 million, less than two million live in the dry north. Here several thousand fanatic Islamic radical fighters of the Ansar Dine (Defenders of the Faith) have driven the more numerous Tuareg tribal rebels (MNLA, Liberation Army of Azawad) out of the major cities there. Ansar Dine and MNLA used to be allies and took control of the thinly populated, largely desert northern two-thirds of the country four months ago. But the Islamic radicals had the benefit of more money (from drug smuggling operations in West Africa) and an $18.4 million ransom recently received for the release of an Italian and two Spanish aid workers (who were seized in Algeria last October). The Islamic militants up north can hire more gunmen than the tribal separatists can, it’s as simple as that. European governments that pay these ransoms acknowledge that the money makes the terrorists stronger but European domestic politics forces payments to me made, no matter what the downside (more violence, kidnappings, and death).

August 8, 2012: The UN has called for sanctions against northern Mali rebel leaders. ECOWAS has been talking to Islamic radical leaders in the north but has been unable to get assurances that the north would not turn into an Islamic terrorist sanctuary. Ansar Dine and other radical groups up north are willing to talk but apparently only for the purpose of getting foreign aid for the hungry population they now preside over. By controlling the foreign aid, the restive population can be more easily controlled.

August 11, 2012: The UN has called on the Mali military to stop interfering in politics. The leaders of the military refuse. The military coup of last March has still not been resolved, even though the coup leaders were forced to back off and allow new elections. ECOWAS and the UN do not want to fight the remaining Mali army mutineers as well as the rebels up north. But that may happen anyway.

In southern Mali the government has recruited over a thousand young men and is training them for combat in the north. If the new Mali government can stabilize itself, then the UN is more inclined to authorize some international military aid to deal with the mess in the north.

August 15, 2012: Army leaders (who are still in opposition, if not rebellion, to the government) threaten to fight any foreign troops entering southern (government controlled) Mali on their way to defeat the rebels in the north. ECOWAS (Economic Community of West African States) and the AU (African Union) have offered to organize a force of 3,300 peacekeepers (from Nigeria, Niger, and Senegal) for that purpose, but the UN has been slow to sign off on this. The Mali army had 7,000 troops at the beginning of the year but as many as half have deserted or been put out of action by northern rebels since then. The remainder are occupied guarding their bases and towns north of the Niger river that mark the boundary between government and rebel controlled Mali. Despite a host of political and logistical difficulties, ECOWAS and the UN are working out the details for sending in a peacekeeper (and peacemaking) force that will end Islamic control of the north. That force won't arrive until next month, at the earliest.

In the south several armed militias have formed for the purpose of regaining control of the north. So far it's all talk and bluster. More armed groups in the south is not a good thing, no matter what their intentions.

The transitional government in Mali (another place where drug gangs bribed a lot of politicians) is having a difficult time arranging new elections. The corrupt politicians and unhappy population cannot agree on what the new government should be like. There is great popular anger at the corrupt and inept politicians, and the politicians are shifting blame as quickly as they can. Everyone says they want to reclaim the north but there's no enthusiasm for letting foreigners (including the UN) do it or getting organized so the more numerous southern Malians can do it. The West is leaning towards taking unilateral action, as the al Qaeda controlled north turns into another terrorist sanctuary.

The impact of the drug gangs (smuggling South American cocaine and local drugs north to Europe) cannot be underestimated. Local officials are easy to bribe and are not keen on wiping out the source of all their new-found wealth. This has led to resistance to Western (or any outside) intervention in northern Mali. Many local leaders blame the United States and the West for this mess. The reasoning is twisted, but it involves Western counter-terrorism efforts in Africa and the usual Western imperialism. No mention of corruption among African politicians. This is one of the causes of a military coup in Mali last March. The troops wanted their political leaders to spend less time stealing and more time dealing with the growing unrest in the north.

The success of the Islamic radicals and Tuareg rebels in chasing the largely black African Mali army out of the north encouraged Ansar Dine to call for more Islamic radicals throughout the region to come join them. At this point, about a third of Ansar Dine fighters are foreigners. Ansar Dine also insisted on imposing Islamic law in the north and MNLA opposed that.

This caused a split between the two groups two months ago, which devolved into fighting between the two groups.

In the last eight months a coup and a tribal rebellion in Mali have caused over 300,000 people to flee their homes. About two-thirds of the refugees are still in Mali. Most of the refugees are from the thinly populated northern two-thirds of the country. While the African state of Mali has a population of 15 million, less than two million live in the dry north. The region was very poor in the best of times and the recent violence there has halted tourism (a major source of income, especially in Timbuktu) and the movement of many goods. Foreign aid, especially food, is not arriving in sufficient quantities. Donor nations have been burned too often by local corruption (that sees most of the food aid stolen and then showing up in local markets). This part of the world is very corrupt and the food is not coming without assurances that the most needy will receive it. That is being negotiated, along with unofficial limits on how much can be stolen by armed locals.

The northern city of Gao, one of the three major population centers, near the Niger border is one of the most unruly places for Ansari Dine. The Islamic radicals are faced with a growing armed opposition. If the fighting gets started here it could turn very bloody.

Then there are the Tuareg rebels. Two months ago the more numerous Tuareg tribal rebels (MNLA, Liberation Army of Azawad) were driven out of the major cities there by the Islamic radicals. Ansar Dine and MNLA used to be allies and drove the Mali army and police out of the thinly populated, largely desert northern two-thirds of the country four months ago. The Islamic radicals have more money and fanaticism but the MNLA gunmen are still out there. The north is a patchwork of areas controlled by Islamic radicals, MNLA, or local militias. The MNLA are disliked because of looting and general unruliness. While the Islamic radicals impose law and order, their strict lifestyle rules quickly dissipate any good will.

August 16, 2012: In northern Mali the Islamic radical Ansar Dine (Defenders of the Faith) have used their larger supplies of cash (from al Qaeda controlled drug smuggling and ransoms) to recruit men and teenagers from an increasingly desperate (for food and other goods) population. There are several Islamic radical groups in the north, with the local Ansari Dine nominally in charge. Al Qaeda wants to establish a terrorist haven in the area but first the Islamic radicals have to gain a greater measure of control. That is proving difficult because the locals are resisting. In the last month there have been more demonstrations against Ansar Dine, which has been met by Islamic radicals using clubs and whips. Now the angry locals are trying to form armed militias to drive out the Islamic radicals. But the locals don't have weapons or the cash to buy them. The Islamic radicals don't have the manpower to occupy all the neighborhoods and villages where their increasingly angry local enemies might be. The thinly populated and largely desert north is becoming chaotic.

August 20, 2012: A new interim civilian government was finally formed. Five of the 31 ministers are allies of the rebel army officers, who backed off from running the government after the north fell to Tuareg rebels and Islamic terrorists. The army rebels are down but not out.

Islamic terrorists drove into the southern town of Douentza (800 kilometers north of the capital) and drove away a local militia. This town is just across the unofficial border between the north and south.

Al Qaeda forces in northern Mali killed an Algerian diplomat they had been holding for ransom when the Algerian government refused to release Islamic terrorists from its prisons. The Algerians knew that giving in to the terrorists would mean more terrorists could operate and more Algerians would be kidnapped.

September 1, 2012: The Mali government backed away from its earlier request for five battalions (about 3,500 troops) of infantry to help regain control of the north. Apparently under pressure from the Mali army, the government now announced that it just wants logistical and other support, including trainers to prepare more Malians to do the fighting. ECOWAS is stalled by this lack of unity within the Mali government.

September 4, 2012: France insists that Mali government officials want foreign troops to liberate the north. Apparently the Mali officials fear retaliation by their own army if they say that openly.

September 7, 2012: ECOWAS (Economic Community of West African States) is blocking the movement of a shipment of weapons to Mali. These weapons were ordered before the army coup last March but the loyalty of the army is questionable. ECOWAS, and many in Mali, do not trust the Mail army.

September 8, 2012: Soldiers guarding a road near 400 kilometers northeast of the capital (near the border with northern Mali) opened fire on several vehicles, killing sixteen pro-government Islamic clerics, including many from neighboring Mauritania (whose government threatened military retaliation if the guilty Mali soldiers were not punished). The clerics were members of the moderate Dawa sect and were headed for a conference in Mali (where many members of Dawa live). The army initially announced that their troops had killed 16 Islamic terrorists but are now trying to figure out a way to apologize without punishing the guilty (which would be bad for morale).

While the takeover in the north has disrupted the economy, it has not stopped merchants in the south, and neighboring countries, from moving in food and other goods. As long as Malians can pay, there will be food. But the Islamic terrorists have destroyed the tourist trade (a big business in some cities) and shut down some businesses. As more people have less money, they will have less food. The Islamic terror groups have been involved with moving drugs north into Algeria and thence to Europe and this will continue. The Islamic groups also smuggle weapons and people. There will still be jobs in the north, just more dangerous ones. In response to all this, hundreds, if not thousands of northerners are forming resistance groups. The Tuaregs up north are particularly angry at how the Islamic terror groups, which contain many foreigners, turned on the native Tuareg separatist militias that have been fighting southern control for decades and led the rebellion in the north earlier this year. Now the better armed and more fanatic Islamic terror groups control the cities, while the Tuareg rebel militias wait in the countryside, and plan their counterattack. The Islamic terrorists are trying to negotiate a long-term peace with the Tuareg but this is not going well. The Tuareg are well and truly pissed.

The Islamic terror groups in the north are also driving non-Moslems out of the area. Some 200,000 Mali Christians have fled the north to Algeria and Mauritania. Meanwhile the senior Moslem clerics of Mali, especially those from the south, have opened discussions with the Islamic radicals who have taken over up north. This is unlikely to do much good since the Islamic radicals back a severe form of Islam that is not popular with most Mali Moslems (who are 90 percent of the population).

In the south the government has called for foreign troops to help deal with the Islamic terrorists, who have begun advancing into the more populous (and less arid) south. The army threatens to block foreign troops but is willing to accept weapons, logistical aid (transports and helicopters), and cash. Few people, inside or outside Mali, trust the leadership of the Mali army (which only consists of about five thousand troops). The army is currently more concerned with growing competition (independent militias training and arming to retake the north) and regaing control of the government than they are with fighting up north.

September 9, 2012: A senior AQIM commander, Algerian Nabil Makhloufi, was killed in a car accident in northern Mali.

September 12, 2012: Chaos and disunity reigns in the north (held by various Islamic terror and tribal separatist groups) and the south (run by a temporary government and army officers who want to run the country and openly disagree with the civilian government). Islamic terrorists, many affiliated with al Qaeda, control most of the large cities and towns in the north and have been enforcing Islamic law. That means no secular music, outside work for women, no school for girls, and lashings and amputations for criminals. Short on fighters, the Islamic terrorists are recruiting (sometimes by force) teenage boys, while older people are secretly forming resistance groups. In the countryside up there the Tuareg rebel groups are in control and are starting to raid into the south as well.

September 16, 2012: Four French citizens were kidnapped by Islamic radicals in northern Niger and moved to northern Mali. The Islamic terrorists are using these four, and two others taken last November, to try and coerce France into cooperating with the terrorists. This does put pressure on French politicians, but so far the French have remained determined to expel the Islamic terrorists from northern Mali.

September 17, 2012: In the north Islamic terrorists destroyed another Sufi shrine.

September 21, 2012: The government agreed to allow 3,300 ECOWAS troops to enter the country and liberate the north from Islamic terrorists and Tuareg rebels. But this force won't enter Mali until the UN approves of the intervention.

September 22, 2012: The Islamic terrorists who control the north refuse to negotiate with the Mali government until the entire country accepts Sharia. While 90 percent of Malians are Moslem, most of them do not want to live under Sharia law.

September 26, 2012: France is leading the effort to get the UN to approve a foreign intervention in Mali to expel the Islamic terror groups from northern Mali. France occupied Mali as a colony for 68 years, until 1960, and has maintained close economic, cultural, and diplomatic ties ever since they left.

September 29, 2012: In the north Islamic terrorists (who are Sunni extremists) destroyed another Sufi shrine. The Sufis (and Shia and other Islamic sects) are considered heretics and often persecuted by Sunni conservatives.

The EU (European Union) is planning to support the ECOWAS intervention force with cash, weapons, transportation, and technical services (like mine clearing) but only after the UN agrees. Many UN members are generally opposed to interventions like this. But no one wants a terrorist sanctuary in northern Mali either. At the moment, many nations are content to dither.

Actually, the Islamic terror groups have only a loose control of the north. That's because there are only a few thousand armed Islamic terrorists and recruiting reliable and dedicated new members locally has been difficult. Several hundred teenagers have been accepted (or kidnapped according to some parents), while many adults are willing to be collaborators but not Islamic radicals. This makes it difficult to enforce Sharia (Islamic law) everywhere. The two largest cities (Timbuktu and Gao) require a lot of armed men to maintain control, and outside the cities Tuareg rebels often keep the Islamic radicals from moving about freely.

There are actually three different Islamic radical groups in the north. Ansar Dine, which controls Timbuktu, is from Mali and led by Tuareg Islamic radicals. MUJAO (Movement for Unity and Jihad in West Africa) controls GAO and is from neighboring Mauritania. Al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM) has members from all over North Africa but mostly from Algeria. MUJAO is basically a Mauritanian faction of AQIM and there is some tension between the two groups. AQIM has the most money and weapons and uses this to exercise control over the other two radical groups (who outnumber AQIM in Mali). Both these groups are sometimes at odds with Ansari Dine, which feels it should be in charge because it is Malian. But for the moment all three groups cooperate in order to maintain their control of the north.

While bureaucrats and diplomats debate what to do and how to do it in the south, there is much suffering up north, where over 30 percent of the population has fled their homes and about 120,000 are still living in refugee camps. The economy up north is a mess and hunger is a growing problem. Getting free food aid to the north is getting easier, as the Islamic radicals are increasingly willing to work with southerners to avoid economic collapse and mass starvation in the north.

Then there is the impact of the drug gangs (smuggling South American cocaine and local drugs north to Europe) which cannot be underestimated. Local officials are easy to bribe and are not keen on wiping out the source of all their new-found wealth. This has led to some resistance to Western (or any outside) intervention in northern Mali. Many local leaders blame the United States and the West for this mess. The reasoning is twisted, but it involves Western counter-terrorism efforts in Africa and the usual Western imperialism. No mention of corruption among African politicians. This is one of the causes of a military coup in Mali last March. The troops wanted their political leaders to spend less time stealing and more time dealing with the growing unrest in the north. This is why the mutinous officers manage to retain control of the army because too many Malians they are the good guys and the politicians are the real villains. Many Malians see foreign troops being used to keep corrupt Mali politicians in power, as well as expelling the Islamic terrorists in the north. It may take a while to sort out the political situation in southern Mali. Meanwhile the Islamic terror groups are making themselves comfortable in the north and planning new attacks locally and further afield.

Other African states in the neighborhood want the Islamic radicals out of northern Mali. Western nations also want the Islamic terror groups shut down or chased out of northern Mali. But there is disagreement over how to do this. ECOWAS (Economic Community of West African States) has organized an intervention force and France is willing to help. But the United States wants a stable government in southern Mali first before it supports a military operation in the north. In other words, the Mali military must be purged of the mutinous officers who took over the government last March. These officers gave up power in April but remained in control of the military. There are supposed to be new elections, but these have not been held yet.

In the south the government has called for foreign troops to help deal with the Islamic terrorists, who have begun pushing into the more populous (and less arid) south. The army threatens to block foreign troops but is willing to accept weapons, logistical aid (transports and helicopters), and cash. Few people, inside or outside Mali, trust the leadership of the Mali army (which only consists of a about five thousand troops). The army is currently more concerned with growing competition (independent militias training and arming to retake the north) and regaining control of the government than they are with fighting up north.

In the north the Islamic terrorists control most of the cities and large towns and have been trying to enforce Islamic law (Sharia). That means no secular music, outside work for women, no school for girls, and lashings and amputations for criminals. Short on fighters, the Islamic terrorists are recruiting (sometimes by force) teenage boys, while older people are secretly forming resistance groups. In the countryside the Tuareg rebel groups are in control and are starting to raid into the south as well. The Islamic radicals have encountered growing resistance in the north but no real threat to their rule. There have been some compromises. Recently some schools were reopened in the north and girls were allowed to attend, as long as they covered themselves and sat together in the back of the classroom.

September 29, 2012: In the capital several hundred people demonstrated, demanding to know who took their family members during the 1990s war with Islamic terrorists. As many as 10,000 people just disappeared. Six years ago the government got 6,146 families to accept compensation and stop demanding that the government admit that the army or police kidnapped and killed people suspected of supporting terrorists. Many families did not accept the money and still insist on the government admitting it secretly kidnapped and killed people. So did the Islamic terrorists, and it was never clear in some cases which side was responsible for someone disappearing.

September 30, 2012: Islamic terrorists (MUJAO) in northern Mali announced that they had killed an Algerian diplomat they kidnapped five months ago. MUJAO had demanded that Algeria release three Islamic terrorists they had (and pay lots of money) in return for the diplomat. The Algerians refused and the terrorists killed the diplomat yesterday.

There is a debate within the government whether or not to back armed intervention in Mali. ECOWAS (Economic Community of West African States) has organized an intervention force of 3,300 troops, and France and other Western nations are willing to help. UN approval is being sought. Algeria has long opposed such interventions, especially if its former colonial rule France was involved. But the Islamic terrorist control of northern Mali directly threatens Algeria and the Mail government is not able to deal with the situation. Self-interest is expected to prevail when the UN asks Algeria if it approves of this intervention on its border.

October 3, 2012: Northern Mali is still held by various Islamic terror and tribal separatist groups. The south is run by a temporary government while army officers who want to run the country and openly disagree with the civilian government are still there waiting to stage another coup (as they did last April).

October 4, 2012: The government has identified 146 Algerian Islamic terrorists working in Mali for AQIM (Al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb) and MUJAO (Movement for Unity and Jihad in West Africa), which is basically a Mauritanian faction of AQIM. Al Qaeda has the most money and weapons and uses this to exercise control over the other Islamic radicals in Mali. AQIM and MUJAO are sometimes at odds with Ansar Dine, which feels it should be in charge because it is Malian. But for the moment all three groups cooperate in order to maintain their control of northern Mali. The Algerian terrorists are among the most experienced, many having survived the 1990s war against the Algerian government (which the terrorists lost, killing over 100,000 civilians, terrorists, police, and soldiers in the process). The movement of so many Algerian Islamic terrorists to Mali in the last six months is the main reason there have been so few Islamic terror attacks in Algeria this year.

October 5, 2012: In the northern city of Timbuktu several hundred women demonstrated in opposition to al Qaeda demands that all adult women wear a veil. Al Qaeda responded to the demonstration by beating the demonstrators and jailing some of them. A few women have been publically whipped for refusing to wear a veil.

October 12, 2012: The UN Security Council authorized the use of military force against Islamic radicals in northern Mali, but set a 45 day deadline for the operation to begin. Meanwhile there was a large demonstration in Mali's capital supporting an invasion of the north.

Meantime, the UNSC voted unanimously in favour of a French-drafted resolution asking Mali's government to draw up plans for a military mission to re-establish control over the northern part of the country, an area of the Sahara bigger than France. Known as “Azawad” by local Tuareg people, northern Mali has been under the control of Islamist extremists following a Tuareg rebellion at the beginning of last year. For several months, the international media have been referring to northern Mali as “Africa’s Afghanistan”, with calls for international military intervention becoming inexorable. In a month time the Economic Community of West African States abbreviated as ECOWAS resolved to send troops to northern Mali to deal with rebels who seized the north of the country last January from government control.

October 13, 2012: Islamic radicals in the north announced that they would kill six French citizens they hold captive (and three other Europeans) if the French supported an ECOWAS invasion of the north. France refused to back down.

October 17, 2012: Guinea has released (after two months) a shipping container of weapons headed for Mail. Guinea wanted to be assured that the weapons were going to people legally able to receive them.

In response to all this, the main Tuareg rebel group, the MNLA, which led the rebellion in the north last January, is now willing (since early in October) to take autonomy in the north, rather than a separate state, in return for ousting the Islamic radical groups that pushed the MNLA aside six months ago and took over in the north.

The Islamic radicals are increasing their manpower by offering over a thousand dollars a month to local teenagers who will join. However, the teenagers are told that once they take the money they are in until they die or the threat of ECOWAS intervention goes away. In a part of the world where family income is usually less than a thousand dollars a year, getting more than that each month is enormously attractive. The Islamic radicals assign hard core members of their organization to supervise the young recruits and beat or kill any who resist or try to desert. This approach has worked elsewhere in Africa and the world. The Islamic radicals can afford all this because al Qaeda has millions in cash on hand from drug smuggling operations and ransoms (for kidnapped Europeans).

Meanwhile, Islamic radical rule in the north is becoming increasingly intrusive and brutal. People are being executed and there are a growing number of raids into markets, shops, and even homes looking for forbidden items (tobacco, alcohol, video or music recordings, religious amulets, and other items forbidden by Islamic conservatives). A girl was recently given sixty lashes in a public whipping as punishment for speaking to men she was not related to.

The problem with the Mali Army has to do with politics. Most of the troops and officers got their jobs as political favors. It was all about patronage, not preparedness for combat. The few units that were combat ready were disbanded after the coup last March. This is common in many parts of the world, especially Africa. The current Mali troops are more about paychecks than military professionalism. Any plan for invading the north relegates the Mali troops to guard duty in the south. The U.S. would still like the Mali military to turn pro but that is a local political issue that is not quickly or easily resolved.

October 18, 2012: The UN has authorized a military operation in northern Mali (now held by al Qaeda and other Islamic radical groups) but only if the African troops assigned to the task are made ready. The United States and EU (European Union) are planning to support the ECOWAS intervention force with cash, weapons, transportation, and technical services (like mine clearing). The U.S. and EU will not commit their own combat troops to the operation. ECOWAS (Economic Community of West African States) has offered an intervention force (mostly Nigerians) but the UN points out that these troops are not ready for a campaign in the northern Mali desert. The U.S. and EU are offering trainers to get the African troops ready for the campaign (that is mainly about capturing half a dozen cities and large towns, where the Islamic radicals are the strongest). The United States had demanded a stable government in southern Mali first but has since changed its mind. The U.S. still wants the Mali military purged of the mutinous officers who took over the government last March. These officers gave up power in April but remained in control of the military. There are supposed to be new elections, but these have not been held yet. The U.S. is backing off on this demand because it isn’t likely to be met any time soon.

October 24, 2012: 3,200 African troops needed to fight Mali rebels'

Associated PressThe African Union on Wednesday pledged to mobilize an African military force to battle al-Qaida-affiliated groups controlling northern Mali. African foreign ministers meeting at the African Union headquarters in Ethiopia agreed to write a final operational plan for the African-led force by the end of the month, as well as calling for arms and equipment to be provided for Mali's army from members and international partners. Kadre Desire Ouedraogo, the president of the Economic Community of West African States, told The Associated Press after closed-door meeting that roughly 3,200 troops would be needed. Western officials have said the planned African-led military offensive is unlikely to begin before next year - despite growing concern about the terrorist threat militants there pose to the continent and the rest of the world. The United Nations Security Council passed a resolution earlier this month giving Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon 45 days to help Mali develop a plan to recover the occupied territory. The United States, France and Britain have said they will offer logistical support, but the invasion needs to be led by African troops. Mali was once considered one of the only stable democracies in West Africa, but it has since plunged into chaos. Islamist groups, including al-Qaida in the Islamic Maghreb, are the de facto rulers of the north. Ramtane Lamamra, the head of the African Union's Peace and Security Council, said the AU is willing to hold talks with armed groups in Mali if they unequivocally denounce links with terrorists and are willing to forgo their separatist agenda. Separately, the AU council gave Sudan and South Sudan to reach an agreement on the contested region of Abyei and two weeks on the disputed border areas. South Sudan peacefully broke away from Sudan north last year. Editor

November 9, 2012: Meddling in Mali'

United States is meddling in another internal civil war to prevent a “terrorist haven” from developing. This time it’s not in Somalia or Yemen but instead in the West African country of Mali. The United States and France are concerned that Islamists have taken over northern Mali, and the two countries are heavily leaning on Abdelaziz Bouteflika, president of the neighboring regional power Algeria, to support an international invasion of Mali. The American and French implication is that, if left unmolested, the Islamists in control of this territory will create a base for international Islamist terrorist operations. They back an invasion because they believe the government of Mali is incapable of retaking its own territory. U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton recently met with and tried to browbeat a reluctant President Bouteflika, who believes such an invasion would create more problems than it would solve. The U.S. superpower, with many carrots and sticks, can probably eventually “persuade” Bouteflika to get on board. Such a proxy invasion of Mali would fit with a recent pattern used by the United States—a nation with a domestic population, after direct interventions of Afghanistan and Iraq, which is fatigued with war. Instead, in Libya, Yemen, and Somalia, the United States has supported proxy armies. In Libya and Yemen, the U.S. has supported indigenous forces from the air. In Somalia, it has supported a nominal government from the air and also recruited Ethiopia and Kenya to invade and fight the al-Shabab Islamist fighters. In Mali, any invasion would probably mirror that in Somalia by the recruitment of regional powers to do the dirty work. As it did in Afghanistan and Iraq, however, the U.S. often bulls ahead without listening to those who know best — people who actually live in the particular region involved. Bouteflika’s reluctance should be a big red flag to U.S. pressure for proxy military action. Bouteflika’s country has experienced Islamist militancy firsthand, and the capture by Islamists of neighboring northern Mali should worry Algeria far more than it does the faraway United States.But as during the Cold War, the U.S. superpower regularly worries more about regional threats to friendly countries than the countries do themselves. And as during the Cold War, the distant superpower fails to distinguish among potential adversaries. For much of the Cold War—until Richard Nixon recognized that the Chinese and Soviet Communists hated each other and that such divisions could be exploited—all Communists were regarded as alike. Nowadays, the United States makes a similar error by regarding all Islamist radicals as fellow travelers with al-Qaeda. Yet most of the groups in Yemen, Somalia, and Mali are Islamists with mainly local concerns. Meddling in their business only creates more enemies of the U.S. Instead of dividing (and even cultivating) potential opponents, as Nixon did to U.S. advantage, indiscriminate American hostility usually drives locally oriented Islamists to support al-Qaeda. Making further unnecessary enemies undoubtedly has entered Bouteflika's mind and helps explain his reluctance to endorse an invasion of Mali. After all, Bouteflika has to live in the same neighborhood with these people. Instead of being the usual "bull in a china shop," the U.S. should learn from Bouteflika's lack of enthusiasm. Why create more anti-U.S. terrorists in a part of the world that is hardly strategic to U.S. vital interests? France, with Mali being somewhat close to the Mediterranean, may have some interest in what happens there, but the distant U.S. should have much less. If, in the worst case, somehow local Islamists in Mali allow anti-U.S. terror groups to train in any of their camps established there—at much risk to their own cause—the United States could easily take out such facilities with drone attacks or airstrikes in the open desert environment. But at a time of war weariness and budget and economic crises at home, the U.S. cannot afford to keep making new and unnecessary enemies by promoting an invasion of Mali. IndepthAfrica, Ivan Eland

In mid-November: Economic Community of West African States abbreviated as ECOWAS resolved to send troops to northern Mali to deal with rebels who seized the north of the country last January from government control.

December 8, 2012: The army arrested the prime minister and forced him to resign, along with all his ministers, on TV. The army said this was legitimate because the president was still in power (to appoint a new prime minister, with the approval of the army).

December 13, 2012: Britain and other Western nations called for the Mali army to back off and not install a "civilian" government composed of civilians who are friends and allies of the coup leaders. ECOWAS also condemned the army removal of the civilian government but is apparently ready to try and do business with the new army approved civilian government.

December 15, 2012: A new prime minister has organized a new government. This includes representatives from the rebellious north, which is controlled by Islamic radicals. The Economy Minister, Defense Minister, and Foreign Minister were held over from the previous government.

There are over 300,000 refugees from the Islamic terrorism in the north and the UN expects Western nations to pay for taking care of the refugees. The Mali army expects to grab some of that aid money, which is how it usually works in this part of the world.

Meanwhile there is a constant stream of refugees from northern Mali telling of increasing enforcement of strict Islamic lifestyle (no tobacco, alcohol, music, video, shaved men, and unveiled women) lifestyle rules. The Islamic radicals have also damaged some non-Islamic cultural sites. There have been a number of demonstrations against this. That caused the Islamic radicals to back off a bit but only until more new enforcers (often teenage boys given guns and told to enforce the rules). Now demonstrators are quickly attacked and punished for their blasphemous behavior. The Islamic radicals are also forcing teenage girls to marry Islamic terrorists. Some Islamic radicals are using the Islamic "temporary marriage" as an excuse to force some women into prostitution.

The UN has still not approved the ECOWAS invasion of northern Mali. The ECOWAS nations do not want Islamic radical groups running northern Mali as a terrorist sanctuary. Western nations are even more upset at this prospect. The Mali army leadership apparently believes they can work out a compromise with the northern rebels, one that will keep the ECOWAS force out and the coup leaders in power. That power will make the coup leaders rich, given the prevalence of corruption in Mali. The UN is not in a hurry to approve a peacekeeping mission that is opposed by the army leadership of the nation the peacekeepers are going to. As more and more terrorist acts are traced back to groups in northern Mali (especially kidnappings in Africa or bombings in the West) there will be popular pressure on Western nations to intervene without UN permission. The only question is how much terrorism (kidnapping and bombing victims) will it take to trigger an invasion of northern Mali? The Islamic terrorists in northern Mali have made it clear that they see kidnapping Europeans as an excellent way to raise money, which in turn will be used to finance terror attacks in the region and in the West.

December 17, 2012: Although the army returned power to a civilian government in April, the coup leaders retained control of the army. The army objected to plans (approved by the civilian government) to use a UN approved ECOWAS (Economic Community of West African States) peacekeeper forces to regain control of the north. The Mali army believed they should be given new weapons and training and allowed to retake the north by themselves, with perhaps some help from foreign troops or aircraft. Western and ECOWAS does not believe the Mali army was up to that task and did not want to make the Mali army any stronger as long as the army leaders had set themselves up as the ultimate political force in the country. Now the army has forcibly removed the civilian government and replaced it with civilians known to be allies of the army leadership. The Mali army failed to maintain government control of the north and is now the main obstacle to regaining control of the north.

December 20, 2012: The UN officially authorized an armed intervention in northern Mali. In response the two tribal rebel groups in the north (Ansar Dine and MNLA) offered to hold peace talks with the Mali government and the UN. These two groups are at odds with the al Qaeda groups but are still allied with them

As if Mali didn't have enough problems, its army continues to insist on controlling the government and delaying elections (as demanded by most Malians and the donor nations who are keeping the country afloat financially during the crisis with the uprising in the north). Everyone wants to avoid a civil war, which would be triggered by any attempt (foreign or local) to disband the army (which is now more of a threat than an asset).

It was MNLA, a local Tuareg group that seized control of northern Mali last April and was supposed to run northern Mali after the takeover. But their more radical foreign allies (MUJWA and AQIM - al Qaeda's North African wing) brought in more foreign gunmen who turned out to be more effective than the Tuareg fighters. This led to Tuareg fighters being forced out of northern cities and towns after the resisting al Qaeda insistence that a foreign (Saudi Arabian) form of Islamic conservatism be imposed on the population. The MNLA was not destroyed but fled to the countryside, regrouped, and have been waging a guerilla war against the al Qaeda fighters. The Tuaregs now regret their alliance with the Islamic terror groups but still insist on some autonomy after the terrorists are driven out.

For over a month now West African mediator Burkina Faso has been holding talks with MNLA (Tuareg rebels) representatives and members of Ansar Dine, another al Qaeda-linked Islamist group (composed of Tuaregs) occupying parts of Mali's north. This is an effort to negotiate an end to separatist rule in the north. Groups that agree to a negotiated deal would be spared from the planned African offensive against MUJWA and AQIM (al Qaeda's North African wing which it operates alongside). The Tuareg groups want al Qaeda out of northern Mali and don't consider any of that negotiable. MUJWA and AQIM threaten "another Iraq" (in terms of terror attacks) if the planned international force invades northern Mali. That invasion is now scheduled for next September or even later. MNLA and Ansari Dine have offered to work with the Mali government to destroy al Qaeda control of the north in return for autonomy for the Tuareg tribes that predominate up there and the continued use of Sharia (Islamic) law.

The southerners are willing to discuss the former but are hostile to the latter. Meanwhile MNLA and Ansari Dine have discovered that they lack the firepower to defeat al Qaeda. Meanwhile, the UN believes it's still possible to settle all the problems in northern Mali through negotiation and authorized the use of force, in part, to spur negotiations.

The shutdown of the tourism in northern Mali has hurt the more populous south as well. There were also poor harvests down there in the last year. All this has pushed unemployment in the south to over 17 percent and caused some foreign investors to pull out. The foreigners are concerned about the Mali Army and its continuing efforts to control the government. This sort of thing causes unrest, uncertainty, and a bad climate for investment.

In the last year a coup and a tribal rebellion in Mali have caused over 500,000 people to flee their homes. About two-thirds of the refugees are still in Mali. Most of the refugees are from the thinly populated northern two-thirds of the country. While the African state of Mali has a population of 15 million, less than two million live in the dry north. The region was very poor in the best of times, and the recent violence there has halted tourism (a major source of income, especially in Timbuktu) and the movement of many goods. Foreign aid, especially food, is not arriving in sufficient quantities. Donor nations have been burned too often by local corruption (that sees most of the food aid stolen and then showing up in local markets) and are not as generous as aid groups want them to be.

Despite their imminent defeat, the Islamic terrorists are leaving a permanent mark on northern Mali by destroying centuries old tombs and religious buildings that al Qaeda considers blasphemous. There are many sects in Islam (Sunni, Shia, and Sufi, for example), but al Qaeda considers anyone who does not conform to their particular brand of Sunni orthodoxy to be heretics. In addition to the structures in northern Mali, al Qaeda is searching for ancient religious and historical documents long preserved in the area. Al Qaeda wants to burn these blasphemous bits of parchment. That is another act that will make people remember the al Qaeda visit to northern Mali.

Despite being on a Mission From God, many al Qaeda leaders are aware of the problems their tactics create and the need to try and deal with all that. What the terrorist leaders don't realize is that no al Qaeda type organization has ever succeeded. That realization does limit the pool of potential terrorist leaders, as many talented Islamic conservative men seek less extreme ways to take over the world for Allah. In Mali the al Qaeda leaders are pretty brutish and self-destructive. For example, they hold six French citizens that have been kidnapped over the last few years and each held for a multimillion dollar ransom. In the past France has paid, but now it is so blatantly obvious that the money would simply be used to increase the number of Islamic terrorists (and kidnappings) that the French are not paying. So the terrorists have announced that the captives will be killed (with gruesome video released on the Internet) if French led forces enter northern Mali. Al Qaeda also fears that the French may use the eight months of military preparations to increase surveillance in northern Mali, locate the captives, and send in commandoes to get them. The French have done that successfully many times. France is now sending large UAVs (similar to American Predators and Reapers) to Mali. France has used these UAVs in Afghanistan for years and know how to get the most out of them.

Al Qaeda leaders know they cannot stand up against this invading force, especially since it will probably have Western air support (missile firing UAVs and warplanes with smart bombs). Al Qaeda also knows that they have angered most of the 1.5 million or so civilians still in northern Mali with the harsh lifestyle rules and disrupting the economy. That means the Islamic terrorists have little local support. The Islamic radicals up north rule by terror and hiring local teenagers to act as armed enforcers. But once driven out of the cities and major towns the Islamic radicals would be hunted down and killed, although many would flee to neighboring countries where it would be easier to hide out.

The 6,000 invading troops would face a smaller number of less -well armed and equipped Islamic radical fighters. The foreign ones (at least a thousand men) have some experience (add, Pakistan, Somalia, Yemen) but have also suffered defeat in battles like this. That is why they have come to (or fled to) northern Mali. The Islamic terrorists are recruiting locals, but most of these are teenagers out for some thrills, a paycheck, and a chance to order adults around. These kids die or flee when the fighting starts.

December 23, 2012: Timbuktu mausoleums 'destroyed'

Islamists in Mali have begun destroying remaining mausoleums in the historic city of Timbuktu, an Islamist leader and a tourism official said. "Not a single mausoleum will remain in Timbuktu," Abou Dardar, a leader of the Islamist group Ansar Dine, told AFP news agency. Islamists in control of northern Mali began earlier this year to pull down shrines that they consider idolatrous.

Tourist official Sane Chirfi said four mausoleums had been razed on Sunday. One resident told AFP that the Islamists were destroying the shrines with pickaxes. Timbuktu was a centre of Islamic learning from the 13th to the 17th centuries. It is a UN World Heritage site with centuries-old shrines to Islamic saints that are revered by Sufi Muslims. The Salafists of Ansar Dine condemn the veneration of saints. "Allah doesn't like it," said Abou Dardar. "We are in the process of smashing all the hidden mausoleums in the area."

Islamists seized control of Timbuktu in April, after a coup left Mali's army in disarray. The news that further monuments were being destroyed came one day after Islamists were reported to have cut the hands off two people.

The Movement for Oneness and Jihad in West Africa, another Islamist group operating in the area, warned that there would be further amputations, AFP reported. Last Thursday the UN Security Council gave its backing for an African-led military operation to help Mali's government retake the north if no peaceful solution can be found in coming months. A day later, Ansar Dine and the Azawad National Liberation Movement (MNLA), a Tuareg separatist group, said they were committed to finding a negotiated solution.

December 27, 2012: Al Qaeda leaders in northern Mali are pretty certain that the French are going to invade using a force of 3,000 Mali soldiers trained and led by French and African officers and 3,300 more from neighboring states. A force of 400 European officers and NCOs will begin upgrading the training of the African troops next month, and a French general with extensive experience in Africa has been appointed to lead the training and combat mission. The foreign contingent, organized by ECOWAS(Economic Community of West African States), now has the approval of the UN to clear the Islamic terror groups out of Mali. It’s no longer just a civil war in Mali, it’s now an international peacemaking operation.

January 7, 2013: Troops in the central Mali town of Mopti fired warning shots with machine-guns and mortars at an approaching column of al Qaeda gunmen. The Islamic radicals turned around and moved back a bit.

The other two nations with long borders with northern Mali are Mauritania and Niger. Both these nations have sent more troops and police to their Mali borders and tried to keep Islamic terrorists from getting in or out. That is difficult because the borders with northern Mali are long (1,376 kilometers with Algeria, 1,200 kilometers with Mauritania, and 821 kilometers with Niger) and mostly desert or semi-desert and thinly populated. Anyone with a guide and transportation (four-wheel drive or four footed) can sneak across. The more daring can dispense with the guide and try it just using GPS, but that can be dangerous because of unknown natural or human hazards.

Although Algeria has so far refused to join in an invasion of northern Mali, they are finding growing al Qaeda presence among refugee camps on their Morocco border. There, an al Qaeda splinter group, MOJWA (Movement for Oneness and Jihad in West Africa), kidnapped three European aid workers (a man and two women) in one of those refugee camps last October. MOJWA is unique because its leadership is black African. There has long been a lot of tension between Arabs and black Africans. The Arabs disdain the blacks and that causes a lot of tension and resentment. It appears that MOJWA is striving to show they can be more extreme and effective than the Arab dominated al Qaeda. MOJWA claims inspiration by 19th century West African Moslem leaders, who fought European colonial powers. The appearance of MOJWA presents the possibility of a war among Islamic radical groups. MOJWAs three captives were taken at a Polisario refugee camp near the Moroccan border. The three European aid workers may have been taken with the help of some Polisario officials. This may have something to do with the declining prospects of Polisario, which has been in bad shape since 1991. Back then Morocco finally won its war with Polisario Front rebels, who were seeking independence for the Western Sahara (a region south of Morocco). Polisario remained powerful in Mauritania, where the rebel group has official recognition and maintains several more refugee camps. Because Polisario was so well - subsidized by Algeria, back when Algeria was a radical state, Polisario still has enough diehards out there to keep a lot of people in Western Sahara unhappy. This was known to provide recruits and sanctuary for al Qaeda and other Islamic radicals. For two decades the UN has been trying to work out a final peace deal between Polasario and Morocco. In the 1990s, Algeria cut off all support for Polasario. But that, and UN efforts to mediate the differences, have just not worked. The contested area is largely desert with a population of less than 300,000. Logic would have it that the area is better off as a part of Morocco. But there are still thousands of locals who would rather fight for independence than submit to Morocco. Some resistance is tribal and cultural, with the Moroccans seen as another bunch of alien invaders (the area was administered, until 1976, as a Spanish colony). If the fighting breaks out again, possibly inspired by Islamic radicals, it could go on for years, just as it does in many other parts of Africa and the immediate neighborhood. Getting involved in the cocaine smuggling provides money, some of which goes towards guns and vehicles, making the Polisario fighters more formidable. Mali and Mauritanian police are increasingly arresting members of the Polisario Front who are involved with a major drug smuggling operation (moving cocaine from Guinea-Bissau, where it is flown in from South America, to the Mediterranean coast). Polisario Front members have long been involved in smuggling and other illegal activities but their involvement in moving cocaine is relatively recent. This implies cooperation with al Qaeda, which apparently has worked out deals with Polisario. There are over 160,000 Polasario controlled refugees living (many since the 1970s) in these Algerian refugee camps. Young men in these camps see opportunity in Islamic terrorism and recruiters are finding more volunteers.

In the north the Islamic radical groups are spread thin but have been able to terrorize the remaining population into submission. About a quarter of the two million people in the north (a year ago) have fled, most of them south to Mopti and beyond. Few of those still in the north support the Islamic radicals but are too terrified to fight back. The Islamic radicals hold public punishments of "thieves" (often just people who openly opposed them) and whip them or cut off an arm or leg. In some cases the civilians have resisted attending these public punishments but relented when threatened with mass violence against them. This Islamic radicals claim they are on a Mission From God and cannot be argued with. The Islamic radicals have also destroyed most of the tombs of honored ancient Moslem local holy men. Al Qaeda considers openly honoring these holy men in this way to be blasphemous. The locals are appalled by the destruction of their shrines and resentment is building up. To counter this, al Qaeda is offering local teenagers cash and a gun to join them. This recruiting program has worked. While the new recruits are somewhat unreliable and have little experience, they help maintain order. Each week more Islamic radicals get into northern Mali, slowly increasing the number of experienced Islamic terrorists in the area.

The army has been in a state of disorder since the first coup last March, when about half its 9,000 personnel deserted. For months many senior officers were uncertain of the loyalty of subordinate officers. The leader of the coup was a low ranking captain who was able to motivate a lot of dissatisfied (by corruption and mismanagement in the military) officers and troops to rebel. The army has recovered from the coup-related confusion nine months ago and enlisted two thousand new recruits to bring its strength up to 7,000. The army is still able to maintain control of the government as well as garrison Mopti with over a thousand troops who will fight, or at least not flee at the sight of the enemy. The army has replaced the government leadership twice in the last year, once in March and once in December. The army was forced to give up control in April but now has pro-army politicians in charge again.

To the north of Mopti the terrain becomes drier and, after a hundred kilometers or so, desert. The city has also been the destination of many of the northerners who fled their homes to escape the violence. Over 300,000 have fled the north so far.

January 9, 2013: The army has moved hundreds of additional troops to the northern town of Mopti (450 kilometers northeast of the capital). Several hundred al Qaeda gunmen showed up on the outskirts of the town two days ago, halted when troops opened fire, and began establishing themselves within sight of soldiers. Mopti is a market town at the junction of the Niger and Bani rivers and has become the base for efforts to retake control of the north or keep the rebels from moving south (where most of the people, water, and national wealth are). In the last few days al Qaeda gunmen have taken control of a village of Bourei which is 40 kilometers north of Mopti. Before that the closest al Qaeda controlled territory was about a hundred kilometers north of Mopti, although al Qaeda gunmen would sometimes move south to look around and retreat at the sight of any army troops.

January 10, 2013: Rebels advanced and captured the town of Konna, which is 60 kilometers north of Mopti, on the road into southern Mali. Losing Konna prompted France to start using its fighter-bombers in Mali to bomb Islamic terrorists north of Mopti. This caused some of the Islamic terrorists to flee and some are believed to have gone southwest and later seized Diabaly. This was a suicidal move, but that's how al Qaeda rolls. Meanwhile, Malian troops were unable to force all the remaining Islamic terrorists from Konna. This failure apparently played a large role in France deciding to use its armed forces to attack the Islamic terrorists. France had been planning on waiting until an African peacekeeping force was trained and ready to go later this year. Malian troops were also to receive training, and the failure at Konna shows that this is still needed.

January 11, 2013: France began bombing Islamic terrorist targets in northern Mali, initially using warplanes based in Mali but later joined by ones operating from France. Aircraft have since been reported flying multiple recon missions over Timbuktu and Gao, the largest cities in the north and where most of the Islamic terrorists groups up there live.

January 12, 2013: In France the government ordered tighter security around major government buildings and increased alertness to Islamic terrorist threats. Al Qaeda has called for attacks inside France in retaliation for French military operations against Islamic terrorists in Mali.

Tuareg rebels who split with the Islamic terrorist groups in Mali announced that they are now allied with the French and will help liberate Gao. Many of these Tuareg tribesmen are based just across the Niger River from Gao, in Niger (the country).

January 13, 2013: Algeria revealed that it had given France permission to fly combat aircraft over Algeria to Mali. That helped increase the smart bomb attacks on the city of Gao in northern Mali. Apparently the terrorists were caught by surprise because they suffered many casualties and most of the survivors fled the city. But the terrorists also cut all landline and cell phone connections between Gao and the outside world, to make it difficult for residents to provide information to advancing Mali and French troops. That advance has not begun yet and will have to deal with the Islamic terrorists now out in the countryside and looking to ambush the vehicles of the advancing troops.

The U.S. announced that it was sharing intelligence with French troops in Mali and implied that more American intelligence gathering and reconnaissance aircraft would be sent to operate over Mali.

January 14, 2013: A column of Islamic terrorists moved south again, going around the government troops concentrated in Mopti and seizing the town of Diabaly (population about a thousand) and a nearby military base. This is all about 350 kilometers north of the capital. There are now over a hundred armed men in the town. Local police and soldiers fled and civilians have been told to act normally or else. The terrorists are mainly staying inside houses they have taken over. They move about in small groups to avoid detection and attack from the air. Most of these guys are foreigners and some apparently have experience with missile armed UAVs and aircraft using smart bombs. Civilians are not being allowed to leave town and are being used as human shields against the coming French led counterattack. Some residents are sneaking out of town anyway because there are not enough terrorists to patrol the entire place constantly, but plenty of civilians will still be available as human shields. Despite that, French warplanes dropped smart bombs on Diabaly today and kept at it in the days after. The Islamic terrorists in Diabaly boasted that they would inflict heavy casualties on French ground troops. It is believed that these terrorists were from those driven out of Konna, a village north of Mopti

January 15, 2013: France announced that it was going to clear the Islamic terrorists out of Mali and this would be done quickly, at least in southern Mali. In the desert north, France expects to get some help from the locals (including the rebellious Tuareg who started the rebellion a year ago), who are known to be unhappy with the harsh religious rules imposed by the al Qaeda fanatics. France is apparently depending on the Americans coming through with their aerial and satellite photo and electronic reconnaissance capabilities. While European nations are building up these capabilities, the U.S. again demonstrated in Libya two years ago that if you really want to keep an eye on a large battle zone, you need the Americans, especially the U.S. Air Force.

In eastern Algeria, on the Libyan border, over a dozen armed men from a breakaway faction of AQIM (al Qaeda's North African wing) attacked a natural gas drilling and pumping operation. The first attack, against a bus carrying people to work at the Amenas gas field, was repulsed by the security escort. A Briton and an Algerian were killed in that fight. The terrorists then went to a housing area and took about 40 foreigners hostage (including seven Americans and two Britons). At that point security forces had surrounded the area. The terrorists demanded transportation and safe passage out of the country for themselves and their hostages and the release of a hundred Islamic terrorists being held in Algerian prisons. The Algerians refused this and prepared to negotiate an end to the standoff. The terrorists are also demanding that France stop attacking Islamic terrorist forces in Mali. That demand was also ignored. This siege will probably end badly as Islamic terrorists are not just eager to kill, they are also enthusiastic about dying.

January 16, 2013: French and Mali troops have surrounded the town of Diabaly.

Other nations in the region have agreed to send in over 3,000 troops but they are not coming in right away. The African troops are not trained and equipped for operations outside their country like many Western forces are. Now it looks like Western troops will do most of the attacking, with African troops mostly on defense.

January 17, 2013: France is sending at least 2,500 combat troops to Mali immediately and has asked other NATO members to help out. Britain and the U.S. have offered logistical support. Both nations have a lot of large air transports in the area. The U.S. may also provide combat troops, as there are American UAVs and Special Forces in the region. Thousands of U.S. and French special operations troops have worked together in Djibouti (northeast Africa) for over a decade. These are available for use in Mali, and France has already moved several hundred troops in from neighboring Ivory Coast (where France has been active in peacekeeping for over a decade but are not needed there much these days). The U.S. has made it clear that it wants the Islamic terrorist groups out of Mali and North Africa in general.

As if Mali didn’t have enough problems, its army continues to insist on controlling the government and delaying elections (as demanded by most Malians and the donor nations who are keeping the country afloat financially during the crisis with the uprising in the north). Everyone wants to avoid a civil war, which would be triggered by any attempt (foreign or local) to disband the army (which is now more of a threat than an asset).

It was MNLA, a local Tuareg group that seized control of northern Mali last April and was supposed to run northern Mali after the takeover. But their more radical foreign allies (MUJWA and AQIM - al Qaeda's North African wing) brought in more foreign gunmen who turned out to be more effective than the Tuareg fighters. This led to Tuareg fighters being forced out of northern cities and towns after the resisting al Qaeda insistence that a foreign (Saudi Arabian) form of Islamic conservatism be imposed on the population. The MNLA was not destroyed but fled to the countryside, regrouped, and have been waging a guerilla war against the al Qaeda fighters. The Tuaregs now regret their alliance with the Islamic terror groups but still insist on some autonomy after the terrorists are driven out.

For over a month now West African mediator Burkina Faso has been holding talks with MNLA (Tuareg rebels) representatives and members of Ansar Dine, another al Qaeda-linked Islamist group (composed of Tuaregs) occupying parts of Mali's north. This is an effort to negotiate an end to separatist rule in the north. Groups that agree to a negotiated deal would be spared from the planned African offensive against MUJWA and AQIM (al Qaeda's North African wing which it operates alongside). The Tuareg groups want al Qaeda out of northern Mali and don't consider any of that negotiable. MUJWA and AQIM threaten "another Iraq" (in terms of terror attacks) if the planned international force invades northern Mali. That invasion is now scheduled for next September or even later. MNLA and Ansari Dine have offered to work with the Mali government to destroy al Qaeda control of the north in return for autonomy for the Tuareg tribes that predominate up there and the continued use of Sharia (Islamic) law. The southerners are willing to discuss the former but are hostile to the latter. Meanwhile MNLA and Ansari Dine have discovered that they lack the firepower to defeat al Qaeda. Meanwhile, the UN believes it's still possible to settle all the problems in northern Mali through negotiation and authorized the use of force, in part, to spur negotiations.

The shutdown of the tourism in northern Mali has hurt the more populous south as well. There were also poor harvests down there in the last year. All this has pushed unemployment in the south to over 17 percent and caused some foreign investors to pull out. The foreigners are concerned about the Mali Army and its continuing efforts to control the government. This sort of thing causes unrest, uncertainty, and a bad climate for investment.

In the last year a coup and a tribal rebellion in Mali have caused over 500,000 people to flee their homes. About two-thirds of the refugees are still in Mali. Most of the refugees are from the thinly populated northern two-thirds of the country. While the African state of Mali has a population of 15 million, less than two million live in the dry north. The region was very poor in the best of times, and the recent violence there has halted tourism (a major source of income, especially in Timbuktu) and the movement of many goods. Foreign aid, especially food, is not arriving in sufficient quantities. Donor nations have been burned too often by local corruption (that sees most of the food aid stolen and then showing up in local markets) and are not as generous as aid groups want them to be.

Despite their imminent defeat, the Islamic terrorists are leaving a permanent mark on northern Mali by destroying centuries old tombs and religious buildings that al Qaeda considers blasphemous. There are many sects in Islam (Sunni, Shia, and Sufi, for example), but al Qaeda considers anyone who does not conform to their particular brand of Sunni orthodoxy to be heretics. In addition to the structures in northern Mali, al Qaeda is searching for ancient religious and historical documents long preserved in the area. Al Qaeda wants to burn these blasphemous bits of parchment. That is another act that will make people remember the al Qaeda visit to northern Mali.

Despite being on a Mission From God, many al Qaeda leaders are aware of the problems their tactics create and the need to try and deal with all that. What the terrorist leaders don't realize is that no al Qaeda type organization has ever succeeded. That realization does limit the pool of potential terrorist leaders, as many talented Islamic conservative men seek less extreme ways to take over the world for Allah. In Mali the al Qaeda leaders are pretty brutish and self-destructive. For example, they hold six French citizens that have been kidnapped over the last few years and each held for a multimillion dollar ransom. In the past France has paid, but now it is so blatantly obvious that the money would simply be used to increase the number of Islamic terrorists (and kidnappings) that the French are not paying. So the terrorists have announced that the captives will be killed (with gruesome video released on the Internet) if French led forces enter northern Mali. Al Qaeda also fears that the French may use the eight months of military preparations to increase surveillance in northern Mali, locate the captives, and send in commandoes to get them. The French have done that successfully many times. France is now sending large UAVs (similar to American Predators and Reapers) to Mali. France has used these UAVs in Afghanistan for years and know how to get the most out of them.

Al Qaeda leaders know they cannot stand up against this invading force, especially since it will probably have Western air support (missile firing UAVs and warplanes with smart bombs). Al Qaeda also knows that they have angered most of the 1.5 million or so civilians still in northern Mali with the harsh lifestyle rules and disrupting the economy. That means the Islamic terrorists have little local support. The Islamic radicals up north rule by terror and hiring local teenagers to act as armed enforcers. But once driven out of the cities and major towns the Islamic radicals would be hunted down and killed, although many would flee to neighboring countries where it would be easier to hide out.

The 6,000 invading troops would face a smaller number of less -well armed and equipped Islamic radical fighters. The foreign ones (at least a thousand men) have some experience (add, Pakistan, Somalia, Yemen) but have also suffered defeat in battles like this. That is why they have come to (or fled to) northern Mali. The Islamic terrorists are recruiting locals, but most of these are teenagers out for some thrills, a paycheck, and a chance to order adults around. These kids die or flee when the fighting starts.

January 19, 2013: Nigeria has sent two of its light bombers (Alpha jets) to Mali. Nigeria has used these jets in peacekeeping missions before, for scouting and attacking ground targets with machine-guns and bombs.

January 20, 2013: Canada has moved most of its embassy personnel out of Mali and urged any other Canadians in Mali to leave as well.

The 32 Islamic terrorists from Mali who attacked a natural gas field in Algeria four days ago have been all killed or captured. The group planned to grab as many foreign workers as they could and return to Mali, where the foreigners could be held for ransom. The Algerian security forces prevented this but nearly 40 captured workers were killed, along with 29 terrorists.

Another column and French and Mali troops recaptured Douentza (800 kilometers north of the capital) and found the al Qaeda garrison gone. This town is just across the unofficial border between the north and south and has been occupied by al Qaeda since last September. The town is also about 200 kilometers northeast of Mopti, the main town separating north and south Mali. North of Douentza there is mostly desert and not many people. Over 90 percent of Malians live south of Mopti.

January 21, 2013: French troops entered Diabaly (350 kilometers north of the capital) after using some smart bombs on the houses al Qaeda had taken over. This caused the surviving terrorists to flee on foot two days ago, after holding the town for five days. Residents said that no civilians were hurt by the bombing. The French warplanes have targeting pods which enable the pilots to scrutinize the target in detail before releasing the laser guided bombs or missiles. French pilots have been doing this in Afghanistan and Libya for years.

January 22, 2013: Mali troops are patrolling Diabaly (400 kilometers north of the capital), a town the French recently chased al Qaeda out of. The U.S. revealed that its C-17 transports had begun moving French troops and equipment from France to Mali.

January 23, 2013: At least a thousand African troops have arrived to serve as peacekeepers. This is part of a 3,300 strong force authorized by the UN and organized by ECOWAS (Economic Community of West African States). Western nations are expected to supply weapons, equipment, supplies, and cash to keep these troops operational.

Such talk is still popular in Arabia, where Saudi Arabia and several other nations there use Sharia extensively. Many Saudi charities are known to channel some of their ample funds to groups that back using violence to impose Sharia. The Saudis have outlawed giving money to al Qaeda, but a lot of Saudi cash is still reaching Islamic radicals and many people in Arabia still back imposing Sharia everywhere and doing whatever is necessary to make this happen. The new pro-Islamic government of Egypt is also hostile to the anti-terrorist operations in Mali. Mohammed al Zawahri, the brother of al-Qaida leader Ayman al Zawahri, was freed from prison and declared innocent of any crimes last March and is loudly condemning France for helping Mali. He has been calling on all Moslems to help defend al Qaeda, and Islam, in Mali and fight against the Western invaders. Mohammed al Zawahri denies belonging to al Qaeda but supports its goals (turning the world into an Islamic religious dictatorship).

About a third of the people living in northern Mali have fled to get away from the harsh rule of the Islamic radicals (al Qaeda and others). Many media outlets in the Arab world have said little about this but have condemned the French intervention in Mali as another example of the West making war on Islam. Some Western media, usually leftist run operations that consider fighting Islamic terrorism another form of Western imperialism, have gone along with this. Most Mali Moslems (90 percent are) also fear what is going on in the north and will take any help they can get to drive the Islamic radicals out. While many Islamic clergy back the use of Islamic law to control corruption and bad government (Mali has lots of both), it's no longer prudent in the south to preach about how great Sharia (Islamic law) is.

This sort of animosity has been around for over a thousand years. Arabs first moved south of the Sahara over a thousand years ago and often came as conquerors and slavers. Although many of the black Africans were converted to Islam, the lighter skinned Arabs (including the Tuareg and Berbers of North Africa) considered themselves superior. This racist attitude has persisted and the black Africans often reciprocate. This is one reason why the largely Tuareg of northern Mali constantly rebel. Not only is the Mali government corrupt but it is dominated by black Africans, which is what 90 percent of Malians are. Officially, Islam and most African governments deny that such ethnic tensions exist. This in itself is progress, but the animosities remain and often become quite deadly. The slaving also continues, most recently in Sudan, where the government encouraged Arabized tribes to raid non-Moslem black African tribes and take slaves.

Mali troops are accused of singling out and murdering lighter skinned Arabs and Tuaregs in towns that were briefly occupied by al Qaeda. The victims were accused of being Islamic radicals or collaborators. Some black Africans were accused of collaborating with al Qaeda. When the Islamic radicals arrived in towns like Douentza, Diabaly, and Konna they offered cash to those who would join them as fighters or help run the town. When the French and Mali troops arrived, these collaborators were identified by other town residents. It's no secret in southern Mali what is happening in the north. Hundreds of thousands of northerners (both native Tuaregs and black Africans) have fled their to the south and all tell the same stories of being terrorized and plundered for not being Islamic enough. It's also been reported that the Islamic terrorists have lots of cash and they recruit unemployed teenagers to help with security and identifying non-Moslems, foreigners, or families of soldiers or government officials.

Because of the aggressiveness and savagery demonstrated by the Islamic radicals in northern Mali, other African nations are contributing more troops than the 3,300 the UN authorized. Chad alone has pledged 2,000. If Western nations provide the supplies, cash, and transportation for all these, there could be up to 10,000 African peacekeepers in Mali in the next few weeks. Many of these troops are poorly trained and equipped compared to Western forces and, at best, can only defend themselves from the fanatical Islamic terrorist forces. But some of the African troops are able to go after the fanatics and defeat them, especially if they have some air support. The French are using their smart bomb equipped warplanes and armed helicopters to deal with al Qaeda fighters, which is why the Islamic fanatics have fled the French. There is no defense against smart bombs, especially when combined with well trained and equipped Western infantry. Al Qaeda first learned that in Afghanistan in late 2001, and has received thousands of additional lessons since then.

Al Qaeda is operating in small groups, usually columns of a dozen or so vehicles (usually trucks of some sort) carrying a hundred or so gunmen. They travel light and steal what supplies, vehicles, and anything else they can to keep going. These combat columns are excellent targets for the Hellfire missiles carried by UAVs. Some of these are expected to be operating in Mali as well, both French and American models. Some may already be running surveillance missions over north Mali as the U.S. has been using some in the area to find Islamic terrorist operating in the semi-desert Sahel that stretches from the Atlantic to the Red Sea. France is also using armed helicopters against the Islamic terrorists.

January 24, 2013: France has nearly 2,500 troops in Mali and they are advancing north with Mali troops. Several hundred combat experienced troops are coming from Chad, moving by road in their trucks and armored vehicles. At least 160 troops from Burkina Faso have recently arrived in central Mali, near where the French are operating. Most of the African troops will be used to maintain order in towns Islamic terrorists have been driven out of. Mali military leaders want the French to lead an advance on the main al Qaeda strongholds in the north (Gao and Timbuktu). Before this can happen transportation and logistics (supply delivery) must be arranged. America, Belgium, Britain, Canada, Denmark, Netherlands, Spain, and the UAE (United Arab Emirates) are providing transport planes and helicopters needed to help move the African and French troops around in the north. It will take a few weeks to get the aircraft and helicopters into Mali, along with their support troops, equipment, and supplies. A lot of fuel will be used, especially by the helicopters and warplanes. That has to be trucked in to landlocked Mali. As the old saying goes, “amateurs study tactics, professionals study logistics.” Sending troops north without sufficient water, food, water, ammo, fuel, and other supplies, and the ground and land transport to keep the stuff coming, is not practical. It simply won’t work.

January 24, 2013: In the north, near Gao, Islamic terrorists used explosives to destroy a bridge. This was one of the few combat actions the Islamic terrorists have taken in the face of the two week old French offensive. Most of the time the surviving (after smart bomb attacks) Islamic radicals simply flee.

January 25, 2013: French troops entered Hombori, a town 920 kilometers northeast of the capital (Bamako, on the southern border of Mali). Troops from Niger and Chad entered Gao.

Canadian special operations troops are in Mali, to protect Canadian diplomats and other Canadians. Canada is providing support for the military operations and aid for the refugees.

January 27, 2013: Taking advantage of the French offensive, MNLA gunmen entered Kidal, after the Islamic terrorists had fled.

January 28, 2013: French troops entered Timbuktu (population 54,000), the oldest city and long the major tourist attraction in the north. Timbuktu is a thousand kilometers north of the capital and long has been the major city in the thinly populated north. Eight months ago Ansar Dine gunmen in Timbuktu began destroying the dozens of ancient tombs of Moslem clerics and scholars worshipped by Sufi Moslems. To conservative Sunni Moslems, Sufis are heretics and their shrines are to be destroyed whenever possible. The destruction of the tombs was condemned by many Moslem leaders worldwide, and the ICC (International Criminal Court) declared it a war crime. This did not discourage Ansar Dine, which went on to destroy dozens of Sufi shrines in Timbuktu. Last June, Ansar Dine declared that it had expelled Tuareg (MNLA) gunmen from Gao, Kidal, and Timbuktu. MNLA admitted they lost control of the three cities but insisted they still controlled 90 percent of northern Mali (which is mostly desert). The fighting between Ansar Dine and the MNLA has been escalating for weeks. The most intense fighting was outside Gao, the largest city (population 86,000) in the north. There were over a hundred casualties, and the MNLA men usually fled when they realized that the Ansar Dine fighters would keep coming no matter what. Now MNLA is back in Gao and has offered its services to the Mali government to hunt down the remaining Islamic radicals in the north.

January 28, 2013: Mali crisis: French-led troops enter Timbuktu'

Updates: French-led troops in Mali have entered the historic city of Timbuktu encountering little resistance, French and Malian military sources say.But there are reports of thousands of ancient manuscripts being destroyed, with video footage of the library showing charred books and empty boxes. French President Francois Hollande declared that the joint forces were "winning this battle". They have been pushing north in their offensive against Islamist rebels. They seized Gao, northern Mali's biggest city, on Saturday. Islamists seized the north of the country last year, but have been losing ground since French forces launched an operation earlier this month. Most militants appear to have moved out to desert hideouts, says the BBC's Thomas Fessy in the capital, Bamako. The advance came as African Union (AU) leaders met for a summit in the Ethiopian capital, Addis Ababa, the key issue at which was Mali. The AU decided to contribute $50m (£32m) to the multinational force, in what the BBC's James Copnall says is an attempt to start the ball rolling for what promises to be a costly operation.

Library 'emptied': On Monday afternoon, a French military spokesman said troops had moved into Timbuktu. They were met by cheering crowds as they entered, waving French and Malian flags and shouting "Mali, Mali, Mali!". "We are proud of France and proud of Mali. We thank you a thousand times," one resident said. "We are independent again! We were held hostage for 10 months but it seemed like 10 years," AFP news agency quoted resident Hama Cisse as saying.

Meanwhile, a Malian army colonel told the agency: "The Malian army and the French army are in complete control of the city of Timbuktu." Soldiers were now patrolling the town to carry out clean-up operations, fearing Islamist elements may still be hiding within the population, the French military said. Reports have emerged that militants had destroyed a library of ancient manuscripts, some dating back to the 13th Century. Sky News correspondent Alex Crawford, who is with the joint forces, showed some charred documents and piles of empty boxes at the library said to have contained the manuscripts, and said vaults beneath the building had been emptied. The library, the Ahmed Baba institute, held about 30,000 manuscripts, and includes documents about centuries of life in the city, Mali and neighbouring countries. 'Strategy of evasion' French army spokesman Col Thierry Burkhard had told the BBC earlier that "substantial airpower" had been used to support about 1,000 French and 200

Malian forces in their offensive against militants in Timbuktu. He said French forces had taken access points to the city during the night. Once Timbuktu is secured, the French-led troops are expected to focus on the last rebel stronghold, Kidal, near the border with Algeria.

But reports from the city - which is the home of the head of Ansar Dine, the main militant group in northern Mali - suggest that the group may have lost control there as well. The secular Tuareg rebel group, MNLA, said it had taken charge. AFP quoted a spokesman of an Ansar Dine breakaway faction as saying that it was jointly "ensuring security" with the MNLA. Once Kidal is taken, the first phase of the French operation will be over, our correspondent says. The second phase will be to track down the militants to their desert hideouts, which could prove a much more difficult task, he adds. Mr Fabius warned that the militants had adopted a "strategy of evasion and some of them could return in the north". President Hollande later outlined plans for the operation, saying African troops would take over once French forces had retaken key towns. The French would then return to their bases, and from then on their sole task would be to support and train Malian forces, he added. "Just as we went into action rapidly, we will draw back to the starting points," he said. French officials said they now had 2,900 troops in Mali, backed by 2,700 African forces in Mali and neighbouring Chad. The African contingent is expected to be bolstered to 7,900, including 2,200 troops promised by Chad, AP news agency quotes a Nigerian military official, Col Shehu Usman Abdulkadir, as saying.

January 29, 2013: Malian President Offers Tuareg Rebels Talks'

Mali's president offered talks to Tuareg rebels on Thursday in a bid for national reconciliation after a French-led offensive drove their Islamist former allies into desert and mountain hideaways in the country's vast north. Mali's president offered talks to Tuareg rebels on Thursday in a bid for national reconciliation after a French-led offensive drove their Islamist former allies into desert and mountain hideaways in the country's vast north. France's three-week ground and air campaign has dislodged al Qaeda-linked fighters from northern Mali's major towns, ending the first phase of an operation designed to prevent Islamists using the region as a launchpad for attacks on neighboring West African countries and Europe. France is now due to gradually transfer the military mission to a U.N.-mandated African force of some 8,000 soldiers, tasked with securing northern towns and pursuing militants into their mountain redoubts near the Algerian border. French air strikes have destroyed the Islamists' training camps and logistics bases but Paris says a long-term solution hinges on finding a political settlement between Mali's restive northern Tuareg community and the distant capital Bamako.

Under pressure from Paris, Mali's interim President Dioncounda Traore said he was ready to open talks with the Tuareg rebel MNLA provided it honored a pledge to drop its claims of independence for northern Mali. The MNLA seized control of north Mali in April before its revolt was hijacked by the better armed and financed Islamists. "Today, the only group that we could think of negotiating with is certainly the MNLA. But, of course, on condition that the MNLA drops any pretence to a territorial claim," Traore told French radio RFI, ruling out talks with any Islamist groups. MNLA reoccupied its former northern stronghold of Kidal on Monday after al Qaeda-linked fighters fled French air strikes. It has offered to battle the Islamists in the nearby desert and Adrar des Ifoghas mountains, amid fears that the Malian army would carry out reprisals against Tuaregs in recaptured towns. Any dialogue could anger Mali's powerful and meddling military, which toppled the civilian government last year in frustration at its handling of the Tuareg uprising and is still smarting from the massacre of some 80 soldiers by Islamists at the northern town of Alguelhoc. "We agree to negotiate but not with people who have committed crimes," said one senior Malian military source. Many ordinary Malians, particularly in the country's south, also blame the MNLA for the current crisis. Traore, installed in office after the March military coup, has called national elections for July 31 to complete a political transition. France, which seized Kidal's airport on Tuesday, has been careful to maintain good relations with Tuareg chieftains. Its forces have not entered the town of Kidal but carried out airstrikes on Islamist training camps and logistics depots to the north at Aguelhoc and to the south at Almoustarat.

TIMBUKTU'S ANCIENT RELICS

On the quiet, dusty streets of Timbuktu, liberated by French forces at the weekend, life began to return to normal. The ancient caravan town has been living under strict sharia law imposed by Islamist militants, including a ban on music. In acts reminiscent of the Taliban in Afghanistan, Islamists had bulldozed mausoleums and burned some ancient manuscripts. On Thursday, a French armored vehicle stood guard outside the Sankore mosque - a UNESCO world heritage site - and residents grateful for Paris' intervention hung a tricolor flag from a telephone pole. Some residents had looted shops and houses belonging to Tuaregs and Arabs, ethnic groups associated with the Islamist rebels, raising fears of ethnic reprisals. Rights groups have already accused Malian soldiers of executing several Tuaregs and Arabs in the central Malian town of Sevare. Military analysts suggest the conflict could now be headed for a prolonged, low-level insurgency, with small groups of Islamist fighters carrying out sporadic attacks. Four Malian soldiers were killed and five injured when their patrol vehicle hit a mine on the road between Gao and the nearby town of Gossi, Malian military sources said. A large group of Islamist fighters led by feared head of the Islamist police in Gao, Aliou Toure, was camped in the region of Bourem, to the north of the town, military sources said. The army was deploying reinforcements there. An attack on the In Amenas gas plant in Algeria earlier this month by Islamist fighters opposing the French intervention in Mali led to the deaths of 37 foreign hostages and raised fears of similar reprisals across North and West Africa. Amid concerns over the funding, equipment and leadership of the African force, Paris renewed a push for the U.N. Security Council to approve a peacekeeping force. UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon had resisted U.N. peacekeepers becoming embroiled in an offensive combat mission but the recapture of the main Malian towns has made a deployment less risky. The Security Council is due to discuss the possibility soon, U.N. diplomats said on Wednesday. "This development is extremely positive and I want this initiative to be carried through," French Jean-Yves Le Drian told France Inter radio.

January 30, 2013: Near Gao four Malian soldiers were killed when their vehicle hit a landmine, apparently planted by retreating Islamic terrorists.

February 4, 2013: Tuareg MNLA rebels seized two Islamic terrorist leaders who were caught trying to get to the Algerian border. One of the men, Mohamed Moussa Ag Mohamed, was in charge of enforcing Sharia (Islamic law) in Timbuktu and one of three top leaders of Ansar Dine. He ordered attacks that caused considerable damage to holy places and ancient artifacts the Islamic radicals considered heretical. The other leader taken was Oumeini Ould Baba Akhmed, who planned and carried out at least one kidnapping operation (to grab Westerners).

Islamic radical group Ansar Dine has split into at least two factions, with one of them wanting to negotiate a peace deal. This is another reaction to the rapid French advance into the north. Several months ago Ansar Dine agreed to begin peace talks with the Mali government. This did not result in anything of value. There are three different Islamic radical groups in the north. Ansar Dine (which controlled Timbuktu) is from Mali and led by Tuareg Islamic radicals. MUJAO (Movement for Unity and Jihad in West Africa) controlled Gao and is from neighboring Mauritania. Al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM) has members from all over North Africa but mostly from Algeria. MUJAO is basically a Mauritanian faction of AQIM and there is some tension between the two groups. AQIM has the most money and weapons and uses this to exercise some control over the other two radical groups (who outnumber AQIM in Mali). Both these groups are sometimes at odds with Ansar Dine, which feels it should be in charge because it is Malian. Until a few months ago all three groups cooperated in order to maintain their control of the north. Then Ansar Dine began negotiating with the Mali government for a separate peace and some kind of compromise over Tuareg autonomy in the north. In part, this was because MUJAO and AQIM were bringing in reinforcements from Morocco, Western Sahara, Algeria, Pakistan, Egypt, Yemen, Nigeria, and Sudan and threatened to reduce the area Ansar Dine controls. Ansar Dine sees itself as the only Mali group in the Islamic radical government up north and is determined to defend Tuareg interests against the many foreigners in MUJAO (which has many Malian members) and especially AQIM (which wants to run everything). Ansar Dine sees AQIM as a bunch of gangsters, dependent on its relationship with drug gangs (al Qaeda moves the drugs north to the Mediterranean coast) and kidnappers (who hold Europeans for multi-million dollar ransoms). All this cash gives AQIM a lot of power, both to buy weapons and hire locals. With the high unemployment in the north and the image as Islamic warriors, working for AQIM is an attractive prospect for many young men. Most of those new recruits deserted as their employers fled the advancing French. The Tuareg rebels (MUJAO) also want to talk but the Mali government, despite pressure from Western and African allies, is not eager to try that. The Mali Army is still in control of the government. The Mali Army is, and always has been, very corrupt. Troops are hired for their loyalty, not their military aptitude. In combat the Mali troops tend to act more like gangsters than trained soldiers. Corruption and bad behavior has long been a problem with the entire Mali government. That problem is not going to disappear anytime soon.

Priority is now on restoring the economy and getting over 300,000 refugees back to their homes in the north. A third of these refugees fled the country the rest went to southern Mali.

About half of the 8,000 African peacekeepers have already arrived and about 2,000 (most from Chad) are already in the north providing security in the newly liberated cities. There is already a problem with the Malian troops and the peacekeepers in that the Mali forces want to disarm the Tuareg rebels while the rebels are unwilling to comply but are willing to negotiate. The Mali Army leaders are angry over how the Tuareg rolled over Malian troops last year and are accused of executing some of them. The Malian troops accompanying the French have behaved badly when they encountered Arab and Tuareg civilians in the north, killing, robbing, or otherwise abusing them.

So far French warplanes have carried out over 150 bombing attacks at about 30 targets. A growing number of American and French UAVs are in action, mainly for surveillance. There are currently about 4,000 French troops in Mali, about half of them special operations and other combat type forces. In most cases the Islamic radicals fled after being hit with smart bombs and before French ground troops arrived. There was some ground fighting in Konna and Gao but it did not last long. Some prisoners were taken, but the senior people died or got away.

France is using its air power, and reconnaissance aircraft, including additional ones from Britain and the U.S., to find the fleeing groups of al Qaeda men out in the desert and to hit them with smart bombs. Hiding in the desert used to work but now with photo and electronic reconnaissance aircraft (including UAVs) you can monitor large areas of desert and get a close look at anyone down there. If the Tuareg rebels agree to go after these al Qaeda remnants, that would be the end of the Islamic terrorist threat in northern Mali (not counting the drug smuggling, which will continue). If the Tuareg can be persuaded to make a deal with the government after that, the French will be able to leave. Several thousand Western support troops and trainers will remain for some time. These will help train the African and Malian troops for their peacekeeping duties as well as continuing to monitor northern Mail from the air and deliver smart bombs as needed. The French are also continuing to search for seven French citizens who were kidnapped in the last few years. These victims are believed to be held in al Qaeda camps in the remote mountains near the Algerian border. French warplanes have found and bombed some of these camps, but French commandos are being sent to the area to try and find Western hostages.

February 6, 2013: France wants to get its two thousand combat troops out of Mali in the next two months. That depends on African and Malian troops taking control of the north. That will happen quickly if the Mali government can make some kind of deal with the Tuareg tribes, whose rebellion a year ago let the Islamic terrorists in. The Mali government is not sounding very diplomatic at the moment and the Mali Army is demanding revenge. Meanwhile, the Tuareg also want revenge. Nine months ago the more numerous Tuareg rebels were pushed out of the few cities up north by a thousand or so Islamic terrorists (most of them foreigners). The al Qaeda dominated Islamic rebels had more money and more ferocity in combat. Tuareg teenagers were hired to fight with the Islamic radicals and provide security in the cities. While many of these recent hires have quit with the appearance of French and Malian troops, the Tuareg rebels are still there. So are many of the surviving Islamic rebels. About half the foreign terrorists were killed or quickly fled the country but several hundred are still out there, planning a comeback.

February 8, 2013: In the north French and Malian troops captured the oasis town of Tessalit, which is 70 kilometers from the Algerian border and in the Adrar des Ifoghas. It is one of the larger towns in the area with a population of about 5,000. The French troops parachuted in and seized the small airport. Malian troops, supplies, and vehicles were then flown in. A small force of French troops, with some wheeled armored vehicles, drove in from the south as well.

In the capital army troops were ordered to surround the base of the paratroop regiment. This unit is still loyal to the elected president, who was removed from power by the army last year. This was the second coup in a year and the paratroopers did not support it. The paratroopers had been ordered north to fight the Islamic terrorists but wanted to go as a unit, not piecemeal. The paratroopers feared that the coup leaders would have them arrested if they went north in smaller numbers. Negotiations between paratroop and coup leaders settled the dispute before it could escalate into a major battle.

In Gao a suicide bomber attacked an army checkpoint, killing only himself.

February 9, 2013: Outside of Gao, an Arab suicide bomber attacked Malian soldiers at a roadblock. Only the bomber was killed and several soldiers wounded. Malian troops panicked and some left their guard posts around Gao for a while. Malian troops did arrest two local men who were found to be carrying explosives.

February 10, 2013: About twenty al Qaeda men, aided by local sympathizers who had a hidden stocks of weapons, got into Gao and occupied the police headquarters. They were surrounded by French troops and killed after several hours of shooting. Many Malian al Qaeda come from Gao. The al Qaeda men who occupied Gao for ten months belonged to MUJAO. There are three different Islamic radical groups in the north. Ansar Dine (which controlled Timbuktu) is from Mali and led by Tuareg Islamic radicals. MUJAO (Movement for Unity and Jihad in West Africa) controlled Gao and is from neighboring Mauritania. Al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM) has members from all over North Africa but mostly from Algeria. MUJAO is basically a Mauritanian faction of AQIM and there is some tension between the two groups. AQIM has the most money and weapons and uses this to exercise some control over the other two radical groups (who outnumber AQIM in Mali). Both these groups are sometimes at odds with Ansar Dine, which felt it should be in charge because it is Malian. Until a few months ago all three groups cooperated in order to maintain their control of the north. Then Ansar Dine began negotiating with the Mali government for a separate peace and some kind of compromise over Tuareg autonomy in the north. In part this was because MUJAO and AQIM were bringing in reinforcements from Morocco, Western Sahara, Algeria, Pakistan, Egypt, Yemen, Nigeria, and Sudan and threatened to reduce the area Ansar Dine controls. Ansar Dine sees itself as the only Mali group in the Islamic radical government up north and is determined to defend Tuareg interests against the many foreigners in MUJAO (which has many Malian members) and especially AQIM (which wants to run everything). Ansar Dine sees AQIM as a bunch of gangsters, dependent on its relationship with drug gangs (al Qaeda moves the drugs north to the Mediterranean coast) and kidnappers (who hold Europeans for multi-million dollar ransoms). All this cash gives AQIM a lot of power, both to buy weapons and hire locals. With the high unemployment in the north and the image as Islamic warriors, working for AQIM was an attractive prospect for many young men. Most of those new recruits deserted as their employers fled the advancing French. Some Tuareg factions have made peace with the Mali government and are cooperating in the hunt for al Qaeda fighters. But other Tuareg factions have not decided yet, even as they are threatened with smart bomb attacks if they make a move against the pro-government forces that have taken back control of the north. If the government can negotiate an autonomy deal with the Tuaregs in the north, that will go a long way towards making the area more hostile for al Qaeda. But it's not certain that such a deal will be made.

February 11, 2013: Al Qaeda called for an international holy war against France and other non-Moslem nations for sending troops into northern Mali to drive out al Qaeda forces that had controlled most of the area for the last eight months. Al Qaeda is particularly eager to get Moslems in the West to help out. France recently arrested four African Moslems in France who were plotting to send aid to al Qaeda in Mali.

French and Malian troops searched the city of Gao for any more al Qaeda fighters after weekend violence involving a group of al Qaeda gunmen who got into the city and seized the police headquarters building (which al Qaeda had used as a headquarters until recently). These attackers apparently came from Niger (and paddled across the Niger River) and from among Malian al Qaeda sympathizers who lived in the city and were able to remain behind when most of the al Qaeda men (most are foreigners) fled the city.

There are apparently already small groups of French commandos in the Adrar des Ifoghas. These men are there to get a better idea of how well al Qaeda survived their retreat north. French warplanes found and bombed some of those convoys (of cars, pickups, and trucks) that brought the Islamic radicals from cities like Gao, Kidal, and and Timbuktu to mountain refuges near the Algerian border. This journey took up to ten hours, with the vehicles visible from the air on desert roads. Hundreds of terrorists were believed killed on those few roads by French warplanes. The French commandos are seeking to find out what shape the survivors are in and how many of them are up in the hills.

Most al Qaeda (up to 2,000 armed men) have fled for the Adrar des Ifoghas, a 250,000 square kilometers mountainous plateau near the Algerian border. Long dominated by Tuareg tribes, al Qaeda has maintained bases up there for years. In the last week French warplanes have bombed at least two dozen al Qaeda bases in those hills. Al Qaeda activity in this area has been mapped with reconnaissance aircraft and satellites and some troops on the ground. Several hundred Chadian troops have been sent into this area. The Chad soldiers are experienced at fighting in this kind of terrain and have some French troops (to handle calling in smart bombs) and Mali Tuaregs (as guides, negotiators, and translators) along. While many civilians in the Adrar des Ifoghas are hostile to the Mali government and depend on al Qaeda for cash (obtained from kidnapping ransoms and drug smuggling), they are also angry at the way al Qaeda forced Tuareg rebels out of the northern Mali cities last June. The Chadian troops hope to avoid fighting the locals and concentrate on scattering the al Qaeda men into the desert, where they can be more easily attacked from the air. The Islamic terrorists know how the French smart bombs work and will likely fight to the death in their village bases.

The problem between the army and the politicians is corruption. Mali has held a lot of elections but those elected always turn out to be corrupt and inept. Junior army officers staged their first coup 11 months ago, as al Qaeda and Tuareg tribal rebels were seizing control of the north. The UN and ECOWAS forced the army to accept a civilian government in April if there was to be help in regaining control of the north. But last December the army forced out the caretaker (until elections) civilian officials and replaced them with pro-army civilians. The army wants to run the country until honest candidates can be found for a civilian government. This sort of thing rarely works, as the entire government is corrupt and just changing a few people at the top does not solve that. The army ends up joining in with the corrupt practices and so it goes. The elections are scheduled for July 31st.

February 13, 2013: About 2,500 of the 5,000 African peacekeepers have arrived and the rest will be in Mali by the end of the month. France is still planning to withdraw most of its 4,000 troops by the end of March. The arriving African force was organized by ECOWAS (Economic Community of West African States) and supported by the UN and Western nations. The Mali government (led by men approved by a group of rebellious army officers) is opposed to a UN led peacekeeping force in Mali. That's because the UN is hostile to the Mali Army control over the government. The army has agreed to new elections, but that is thought to be mainly because the UN was withholding over $300 million in economic aid until the army agreed to new elections.

February 21, 2013: Two suicide car bombers attempted to attack a French camp outside the northern town of Tessalit. In addition to the bombers, three others were killed.

The U.S. announced that it had set up a UAV and intelligence base in nearby Niger. About a hundred American troops were there to maintain several Reaper UAVs.

February 22, 2013: Chadian troops in northern Mali believed they killed Mokhtar Belmokhtar (the planner of the January natural gas facility attack in southern Algeria that got 37 workers killed) and Abdelhamid Abou Zeid (leader of the other al Qaeda group that was long based in these mountains). Al Qaeda later said Belmokhtar was still alive but offered no proof. The loss of Belmokhtar would be a major blow to al Qaeda morale as Belmokhtar had a reputation for always escaping the many efforts to kill or capture him. When a legend dies, it is always demoralizing for the followers. The supreme leader of al Qaeda in North Africa (Abdel Malek Droukdel) is believed to be still hiding out in northern Algeria and he would be the one to appoint a successor to Belmokhtar, who was number two or three in the North African al Qaeda organization. There has been no such announcement yet. The battle that got the two al Qaeda leaders cost the lives of 13 Chadian troops and over 40 other Islamic terrorists.

February 25, 2013: The U.S. played a supporting role in the recent French-led effort to drive al Qaeda out of Mali. One critical bit of support was KC-135 aerial tankers, which have so far delivered nearly 500 tons of fuel to French warplanes, allowing for these aircraft to spend hours more in the air, waiting for a request from troops below for a smart bomb or missile. Despite having nearly 400 of these tankers in service, about a quarter of them are sidelined because of maintenance, much of it brought on by advanced age. As these tankers are also used for many training exercises and the movement of air cargo, it is not easy for the air force to collect some for an emergency like Mali. This will become more of a problem over the next decade because of the delays in finding a replacement.

February 26, 2013: In the northern city of Kidal, a suicide car bomber killed six armed Tuaregs manning a check point. The Tuareg rebel militias split with al Qaeda over eight months ago and shifted their allegiance to the French when French troops showed up in northern Mali. Kidal is the nearest city to the Adrar des Ifoghas Mountains.

February 28, 2013: France has spent $131 million for its Mali operations so far and some French officials want to keep French troops there until July. Other French leaders want to get the troops out beginning in March. Apparently a compromise on the withdrawal date is in the works.

Mali announced that presidential elections will be held in July. It’s still unclear if the army leadership will obey whoever is elected.

March 1, 2013: The Chadian government went public with the news that Chadian troops in northern Mali had killed two al Qaeda leaders on February 22nd.

March 3, 2013: Over the last three days more than fifty Islamic terrorists were killed during several clashes in northern Mali. Ten Chadian and one French soldier were also killed. Dozens of vehicles and large quantit ies of weapons and documents were captured. All this took place between Gao and the Adrar des Ifoghas Mountains near the Algerian border,

In the northern mountains 2,000 French and Chadian troops killed at least 15 Islamic terrorists in several clashes today. This fighting took place in the Ametetai valley, where over a hundred Islamic terrorists had taken refuge. The valley has water, as do many other valleys in these mountains near the Algerian border. The locals want no part of this fighting, but will provide information with the right incentives (cash will often work, as it worked for al Qaeda, which operated their lucrative and drug smuggling operations from bases in these mountains).

March 6, 2013: A French soldier was killed a hundred kilometers north of Gao in northern Mail, while accompanying a force of one hundred Chadian troops that encountered some al Qaeda men. Four Chadians and an unknown number of terrorists were wounded. In the last few days over a hundred al Qaeda men have been killed or wounded. These men were part of a larger force (of several hundred al Qaeda) that were either trapped in Gao or entered from Niger, which is just across the Niger River.

In the end it may be that driving al Qaeda out of Mali was easy, while dealing with the rebellious Malian Army proved to be much more difficult. At the moment the Mali Army has about 10,000 people on the payroll and about 6,000 of these are soldiers, while the rest are support personnel. The army has always been more of a political than a military force. Jobs in the military are much sought after and those who get them are expected to bring the support of their family for whoever runs the military. Until last year it was senior politicians who controlled the military. Then a coup by junior officers, seeking better weapons and equipment for the army, displaced the political control. Politicians are notoriously corrupt in Mali but the new army leadership, calling for clean government, has now become a force to contend with in Mali politics. To the foreign nations that supply much of the government budget (via foreign aid), the coup is not acceptable. The foreigners want the elections back, even though the elections were rigged by the corrupt politicians that the younger officers despise. Unfortunately, these officers are not immune to the endemic corruption and are turning into the kind of men they seek to replace. It's a messy situation that mixes rebellious troops with corrupt politicians. While the EU (European Union) training force (220 military trainers and another to train civilian officials) is planning to train and equip four battalions (about half the troops in the Mali Army) to higher standards, forcing out the officers who support the coup will be a lot more difficult. The training program begins on April 2nd.
An African peacekeeping force of about 5,000 troops is occupying the cities and large towns in northern Mali and fighting with al Qaeda men who did not make it to the mountains or across the border. The destruction of so many al Qaeda bases in Mali and the death of hundreds of hard-core Islamic terrorists there have demoralized Islamic radicals throughout North Africa. At the same time, all counter-terrorism forces in the region are trying to take advantage of all this by seeking out Is lamic terrorists fleeing Mali.

France and its African allies (especially the desert experienced Chadians) are making an effort to kill or capture as many veteran al Qaeda men before they can scatter to more distant sanctuaries. To this end, the recent arrival of American UAVs and electronic intelligence collecting aircraft have proven crucial in detecting and tracking Islamic terrorists who attempt to leave the mountains and head for Libya, Algeria, or more distant points. France would prefer to capture as many of these terrorists as possible, but second best is killing them and searching the bodies. French aircraft have to do the killing because the American UAVs are unarmed. The American aircraft have apparently provided target information for at least sixty of the French air strikes in the last few weeks. France is also seeking to rescue seven French civilians believed to be held captive in the Adrar des Ifoghas. So far the French force of 4,000 in Mali has lost four troops killed during eight weeks of fighting. There are 1,200 French and 800 Chadian troops in the mountains near the Algerian border and dozens of al Qaeda safe houses and weapons and ammo storage sites have been captured or destroyed from the air.

March 7, 2013: France will keep its troops in Mali a month later than planned, with withdrawal beginning in April. France is still not sure which senior Mali leaders were killed recently because definitive identification of these senior, but definitely dead, men has proved difficult to confirm. In the last two weeks France rapidly moved troops into the Adrar des Ifoghas mountains near the Algerian border, where France already knew al Qaeda had bases. French warplanes have been bombing these bases as more recon aircraft and UAVs are available to confirm al Qaeda targets.

March 8, 2013: In the north four civilians were killed, apparently by a group of Islamic terrorists while stealing the car that belonged to the four victims.

There was some unrest among Mali troops because they had not been paid. Corruption has long been a problem in Mali and particularly in the military. Officers will try to steal money meant for their troops, and this caused low morale and poor performance among the troops.

March 13, 2013: Moderates with Ansar Dine (an al Qaeda-linked Islamist group composed of Tuaregs) has agreed to merge with the main Tuareg rebel groups (MNLA). Last year MNLA and Ansar Dine tried to force al Qaeda out of northern Mali. Before the French moved north MNLA and Ansar Dine offered to work with the Mali government to destroy al Qaeda control of the north, in return for autonomy for the Tuareg tribes that predominate up there and the continued use of Sharia (Islamic) law. The southerners were willing to discuss the former but are hostile to the latter.

Meanwhile, MNLA and Ansar Dine discovered they lacked the firepower to defeat AQIM and MOJWA (an AQIM splinter group). With the Islamic terrorists now on the run, the various Tuareg factions are offering to work with the French and the Mali government. Meanwhile the return of the Mali Army has caused problems because of troops seeking revenge over the way they were chased out of the north a year ago. The French and the AU (African Union) peacekeepers are trying to persuade the Malian troops to behave but without a lot of success. The French believe that treating the defeated Tuareg decently is essential to keeping the Islamic terrorists out of northern Mali. If there are enough hostile Tuaregs in the north, the Islamic terrorists (especially the Tuareg Ansar Dine) will have a population to hide among. AQIM have a harder time because the Arab population in northern Mali is much smaller and concentrated in a few cities and large towns.

March 16, 2013: A fifth French soldier was killed in Mali, this time by a roadside bomb in the north (Adrar des Ifoghas mountains). French and Chadian troops are scouring the mountains for remaining groups of al Qaeda men. Intense aerial reconnaissance (including half a dozen large American and French UAVs) are providing leads for the ground troops to check out.

Five rockets landed outside Gao, apparently an attempt by al Qaeda men to hit the city with the unguided rockets.

France is trying to organize a UN sponsored counter-terrorism force of up to 10,000 troops for northern Mali, one that has some Western troops. Many of the African peacekeeping contingents will take months to be complete and skilled troops are needed right now to hunt down al Qaeda in northern Mali. France has 4,000 troops in Mali and wants to withdraw these, if only because many have been in constant action for over two months. It is believed that France wants these experienced special operations troops available to go into any other African nation that gets hit with an al Qaeda invasion. Burkina Faso, Niger, and Mauritania have already expressed fears that they may be next. Chad, with a strong, experienced army (and years of experience fighting Islamic irregulars from Chad) is at less risk. All of Mali's neighbors have increased border security and efforts to identify any Islamic radicals, especially new ones, among their people.

European counter-terrorism organizations are warning Europeans that some of the Islamic radicals who had long lived in Europe had gone to northern Mali, and a few had been caught trying to return to their European sanctuary. France announced that it had captured two French citizens in Mali who had been working with al Qaeda. These two men are being sent back to France for prosecution. There are other men like these two who have picked up more terrorism skills and motivation in Mali and are a more serious threat now if they get back home undetected. There are at least a hundred Islamic men from Europe who were blocked (by countries they had to mass through) from reaching Mali and have returned angry and more determined to do some damage. Most of these men are known to police.

In addition to capturing documents, French troops have seized hundreds of tons of weapons, ammunition, and other equipment. Many al Qaeda men are being taken alive and have been a good source of information. One thing the captured terrorists mention a lot of the demoralizing impact of their sudden change of fortune. In early January the al Qaeda men believed they had hit the jackpot, with the establishment of a new sanctuary, and one that could easily be defended from attack. Al Qaeda was setting up training camps for the hundreds of new recruits who were showing up. Then in a matter days that call came apart. This was a major blow to morale. But many of these prisoners still believed that Islamic radicalism would eventually win and the entire world would be run by a religious dictatorship. After all, this was a Mission From God.

Calling for attacks in the West is a bold move by al Qaeda, which could backfire if there are no attacks. While many young Moslems living in the West like to talk about how much they admire al Qaeda, the terrorist organization has had a difficult time turning those attitudes into action. Al Qaeda has also called for Islamic terrorist veterans and supporters in North Africa to help by attacking local targets or organizing support for terrorists fleeing Mali.

March 18, 2013: Documents captured by French troops in Mali have compromised al Qaeda's normal, secret communications system, and it will take weeks or months to rebuild that, so the Internet and public messages are serving as a temporary substitute. Having suffered another unexpected and very damaging defeat in Mali, al Qaeda is trying to use the Internet to turn indignation among its supporters into some locally organized terror attacks in the West, while also striving to impose Islamic (Sharia) law imposed in Moslem communities and eventually throughout the West. Al Qaeda fans are warned to not try and come to North Africa, where hundreds of al Qaeda veterans are scrambling to avoid death or capture. Dozens of terrorism volunteers have been arrested for trying to get into the region and many more have been turned back.

Intelligence agencies are seeking to discover how al Qaeda leadership is reacting to this disastrous turn of events. Most al Qaeda leaders thought taking control of northern Mali would be very helpful. The reality was quite the opposite and losses, not just in manpower and reputation, have been enormous.

It isn't just drug revenue that is drying up for AQIM (Al Qaeda in the Maghreb, the Arab term for North Africa). Kidnapping European tourists is also more difficult. Over the last decade AQIM has earned nearly $100 million in ransoms. But now more European tourists are paying attention to the warnings. So AQIM is going after any foreigners (including a growing number of Chinese) working in the area. Both the tourists and the foreign workers (usually technical specialists not available locally) are good for the local economy and the locals are making more of an effort to protect the foreigners, or rescue them if al Qaeda does grab some.

These new routes provided al Qaeda with a lucrative opportunity to earn cash guarding the drug shipments, and get close to smugglers in the region. This provided contacts and access to illegal weapons. West Africa became a new playground for the Islamic terrorists, and that enabled them to keep operations going further to the north in Algeria and west in Mali. But al Qaeda got greedy and began demanding more money from the drug gangs. In effect, the drug gangs were being extorted. In response, the drug gangs are seeking new routes that avoid greedy and unpredictable Islamic terrorists.

For over a decade now a new drug distribution network has developed. This one goes across the Atlantic from South America to Guinea Bissau in West Africa and overland to the Mediterranean coast) have developed in West Africa. More recently drugs have been flying in to Mauritania and Mali for overland shipment north.

March 20, 2013: In Timbuktu a suicide car bomber attacked a checkpoint near the airport, killing a soldier and wounding two others. This was the first Islamic terrorist suicide attack since French troops moved north on January 11th.

March 21, 2013: The fighting in northern Mali has done more than just disrupt al Qaeda plans to establish another sanctuary in that largely desert region. Defeat in Mali has cost the Islamic terrorists a lot of money. For one thing it has caused drug smugglers to seek other routes for moving their contraband north to the lucrative markets in Europe. This is because all the military activity associated with al Qaeda in northern Mali has made life difficult for all smugglers. Moreover, al Qaeda had been raising its rates for protecting the movement of drugs north. The drug gangs were not happy with this.

In Timbuktu French and Mali troops repulsed a night attack by some 30 Islamic terrorists, killing ten of them. Two Mali soldiers were wounded.

March 21, 2013: The U.S. declared Ansar Dine (an al Qaeda-linked Islamist group composed of Tuaregs) an international terrorist organization. This makes it difficult for Ansari Dine to raise funds overseas or for its known members to travel abroad.

AQIM announced a new leader (Djamel Okacha) who would replace Abou Zeid (killed last month in the northern mountains). At first AQIM insisted Abou Zeid was still alive but he wasn't. Also lost last month was another senior AQIM man, Mokhtar Belmokhtar. No replacement for him has been announced. AQIM also reported that it killed (on March 10th) and beheaded one of the French hostages (Philippe Verdon) that it was holding in northern Mali. Verdon was taken 18 months ago and France refused to pay ransom. AQIM and its allies still hold 14 foreign hostages in Africa. Up to half a dozen are still believed to be somewhere in northern Mali.

March 23, 2013: Several dozen MOJWA (an AQIM splinter group) gunmen entered Gao and a gun battle ensued. Nine were killed (four terrorists, one soldier, and four civilians) during 24 hours of skirmishing before the surviving terrorists fled back to the countryside.

France has another problem with the Mali government. As the French moved north they used the many followers (armed and unarmed) as the MNLA (Tuaregs rebels, who comprise most of the northern population) to maintain order in the cities. There simply were not enough soldiers available and the MNLA men were there and had already been negotiating with the Mali government to make peace, once the Islamic terrorists were gone. The Mali Army is still not strong enough to drive the MNLA out of the north. This is despite the fact that the north contains only about 12 percent of Mali's 15 million people and is largely barren desert. The MNLA is popular because they are locals, relatively honest, and sufficiently well - armed to keep the thieving southern politicians and soldiers away. The Islamic terror groups made themselves unpopular (and made the MNLA look much better by comparison) in the north by forcing everyone to obey strict (no tobacco, alcohol, music, video, shaved men, and unveiled women) Islamic lifestyle rules. This ran into a lot of resistance, especially once the Islamic terrorists made it clear that their ultimate goal was turning all of Mali into an Islamic religious dictatorship. MNLA means (in French) "Liberation Army of Azawad" and the Mali government is enraged that some of the MNLA men controlling roads and cities are approving documents (like passes) with rubber stamps that say "State of Azawad". That is the Tuareg term for their homeland in northern Mali.

Two thousand (out of 4,000) French and 2,000 (out of 2,400) Chadian troops have done most of the fighting in the north since January. In that time five French and 30 Chadian troops have been killed, along with several hundred Islamic terrorists. An exact count of the enemy dead is impossible because air strikes killed many of them and no survivors were captured who could provide information on how many people were around when the bombs hit. An even more difficult problem remains in southern Mali: corruption and army leaders who refuse to obey the elected politicians. In both cases corruption and mismanagement are the main cause of the widespread anger. The immediate cause of the army rebellion a year ago was corrupt politicians (and senior military officers) who looted the defense budget and left the troops fighting Tuareg rebels and Islamic terrorists in the north without weapons, ammo, and needed equipment. The troops are still steamed over that and the southern politicians have not cleaned up their act.

March 26, 2013: Al Qaeda is making public appeals via the Internet for supporters to come to Mali and help. That's pretty desperate but not the first time al Qaeda has put out such a call. Six years ago a similar debacle in Iraq caused a similar panic. Then, as now, al Qaeda can survive in some form. In Iraq al Qaeda continued as a subsidiary of the Iraqi Sunni Arab groups that are trying to terrorize their way back into power. In Mali there are still a lot of northerners (mainly Tuareg tribesmen) willing to risk all (they don't much to begin with) for the sake of a radical cause. All al Qaeda needs is some foreign volunteers for the really nasty jobs (like suicide bomber) and continued dissatisfaction by some locals. Al Qaeda also needs help in moving the weapons, ammo, and other equipment (hidden in the northern mountains) that the French and Chadian troops have not found yet. Those mountains near the Algerian border have been AQIM (al Qaeda's North African wing that contains mainly Arab and non-African Islamic radicals) central for over a decade. AQIM developed relationships with the local Tuareg (jobs and cash gifts in return for cooperation and silence) that can still be exploited. The French are aware of this and are trying to get the UN to establish a competent (meaning some Western special operations troops) peacekeeper force to keep an eye on AQIM efforts to rebuild in the northern Adrar des Ifoghas Mountains.

March 28, 2013: France announced that it would keep its 4,000 troops in Mali until July, and at that point half would be withdrawn. By the end of this year there will be only a thousand French troops in Mali. That could change if the UN sponsored peacekeeping force does not show up or proves ineffective.

March 30, 2013: In Timbuktu a suicide bomber attacked a checkpoint outside the city, wounding a Mali soldier. This attack was believed to be a diversion to allow several vehicles carrying other terrorists to get into the city.

March 31, 2013: Inside Timbuktu several Islamic terrorists fired on Malian troops. This led to a day-long gun battle that left four terrorists, a soldier, and a civilian dead. France sent in fifty troops and a warplane to help the Malians. Civilians in the city claim that more civilians were killed by the cross fire.

April 1, 2013: In Timbuktu Malian troops searched several neighborhoods for Islamic terrorist safe houses and weapons storage sites. Over the last few days terror attacks in the city have left seven dead.

Although the Mali government is sending administrators and bureaucrats north to revive local government up north, Tuareg rebels, who have allied themselves with the French, are setting up their own government, especially in and around Kidal. This could lead to a resumption of fighting between Tuareg and Mali troops.

The Mali Army says it has lost 64 soldiers in the north this year and that at least 600 Islamic terrorists have been killed. French troops and their African allies have lost about 40 dead.

French troops have found over seven tons of weapons and ammo in the northern mountains so far. Most of it has been destroyed were found by French engineers. Over half this stuff was stolen from the Malian Army when the Tuareg rebels and their al Qaeda allies took control of the north a year ago, but some of it had been smuggled in from other countries.

The Islamic terrorists are still active in the north. No one knows how many there are but there appear to be several hundred of them, organized into five or more gangs. They are planting mines in roads and launching several terror attacks a week. More peacekeepers would make it possible to put regular checkpoints on the few roads and limit the mobility of terrorists (or the growing number of bandits). The terrorists tend to stay outside the cities, where they find shelter in Tuareg villages. Inside the cities black African residents will report Islamic terrorist activity, even if it involves the few black Islamic terrorists.

The UN wants to expand the Mali peacekeeping force from 7,000 to 11,000. While most of these peacekeepers will be in the north, some are also needed in the south, where the Mali Army still refuses to halt its interference in the government. Getting the money and troops for the larger force may not be possible because donor countries are tired of the constant demands for troops and cash from African countries.

There are still nearly a half a million refugees created by the year of violence in the north. Some 290,000 people fled to other parts of Mali while 177,000 went to Mauritania, Niger, and Burkina Faso. There are still food shortages in the north, caused by the Islamic radicals and their policies. Over a million refugees and inhabitants of the north need food aid.

The Islamic terrorists can still operate in populated areas of the north because most of the population up there is Tuareg and Arab. The Tuaregs predominate but to the blacks the Tuaregs and Arabs are both “lights” and potential enemies. The Tuaregs have actually been in northern Mali longer than the blacks and feel the region belongs to them. But 19th century borders drawn by European colonial governments are considered sacrosanct in Africa, which had few permanent borders before the Europeans arrived two centuries ago (and largely departed fifty years ago). Most Tuaregs didn't like the Islamic radicals, but if some move into your neighborhood and threaten to kill anyone who talks to the military, it will be hard to tell the bad guys from the other Tuareg civilians.

This sort of animosity between dark skinned Africans and lighter skinned people from the north has been around as long as the two groups have been in contact. Arabs first moved south of the Sahara in large numbers over a thousand years ago and often came as conquerors and slavers. Although many of the black Africans encountered converted to Islam, the lighter skinned Arabs (including the Tuareg and Berbers of North Africa) considered themselves superior. This racist attitude has persisted and the black Africans often reciprocate. This is one reason why the largely Tuareg of northern Mali constantly rebel. Not only is the Mali government corrupt but it is dominated by black Africans, which is what 90 percent of Malians are. Officially, Islam and most African governments deny that such ethnic tensions exist. This in itself is progress, but the animosities remain and often become quite deadly. The slaving also continues and often gets into the news. This most recently occurred in Sudan where the government encouraged Arabized tribes to raid non-Moslem black African tribes and take slaves. Retreating al Qaeda men sometimes took newly enslaved blacks with them. Many old customs die hard in this part of the world. Yet there is also a tradition of tolerance between the blacks and the lights, but the corruption of the black dominated elected government has caused growing resentment from the Tuaregs of the north. Al Qaeda does not openly preach racism but it implies that Arabs and other "lights" will prevail over blacks in areas where the two groups are present. In all black countries like Nigeria, all black Islamic terror groups like Boko Haram promise that Moslems will dominate non-Moslems.

Meanwhile, ethnic and racial violence continues throughout the north, especially in the major cities. Black Africans living in the north, usually in the cities, are eager for revenge against Arabs (the most violent Islamic terrorists were Arab) and Tuaregs (the lighter skinned tribesmen of the north who have been regularly rebelling against the rule of the black African majority), and French troops have not been able to stop revenge attacks. Black Africans in the north will single out "light skin" (Arab or Tuareg) neighbors who seemed too friendly with the occupiers and demand that these people be punished. Malian troops have arrested hundreds of these collaborators, who are usually eager to cooperate. But some of the "lights" have been tortured and at least a few killed. The soldiers say they are punishing murderers and rapists. Despite that racial violence continues in the north.

April 4, 2013: French troops continue to be tied down going after Islamic terrorist bases in the northern mountains. Most of the Islamic terrorists up there have fled but they have left behind tons of weapons, ammo, and equipment. The French want to find and destroy that stuff before the terrorists have a chance to move it. This is taking longer than expected, but at least there are still terrorist targets to go after up there.

April 6, 2013: Al Qaeda leader Ayman al Zawahiri released a 103 minute message on the Internet calling on young Moslems in North Africa to go to Mali to help the defeated Islamic terrorists there or to join local terrorists and fight for Islam. Zawahiri admitted that al Qaeda had suffered heavy losses in Mali but insisted the situation was not hopeless. There are believed to be several hundred Islamic terrorists trying to operate in northern Mali.

In northern Mali some members of MNLA openly celebrated the first anniversary of their taking control of the north. Any nearby Malians from the south stayed out of the way.

April 7, 2013: About a thousand French troops began a search north of Gao, seeking to find terrorists cashes (of weapons and bomb making material) that intelligence indicated were there. The locals have generally been helpful in reporting where the terrorists have hidden weapons and such, even if they do not know the exact location. When that is known, the stuff is often looted by locals as there is always an active market for weapons and explosives in the north.

April 9, 2013: France withdrew the first hundred (of 3,000 eventually) troops from Mali. The plan is to keep a thousand there indefinitely to work with up to 10,000 African peacekeepers. France believes that, so far, their efforts in northern Mali have killed 600 of some 2,000 Islamic terrorists who were up there at the start of the year. Up to a thousand Islamic terrorists have fled the country or been captured. French troops are now seeking the remaining terrorists and their hidden supplies of weapons, ammo and other equipment. These caches were hidden all over the north, especially in an area near the Algerian border that had been an AQIM base area for a decade. But in the eight months they controlled most of the north the Islamic terrorists hid stuff in dozens of locations, just in case. These weapons and explosives enable the remaining Islamic terrorists up there to continue doing damage, so the French are eager to find and destroy this stuff before it gets used.

April 11, 2013: The government announced national elections for July. This is supposed to replace the current government, which was forcibly imposed on the country by the military with an elected one. While the army allowed a civilian government to replace a short period of military rule a year ago, the generals have retained a veto power over government decisions and are answerable to no one but themselves. Foreign donor nations have made it clear that foreign aid will be limited as long as the army is still the de facto government. Meanwhile the army is trying to develop some popularity with the foreigners by going after northerners involved in smuggling drugs. Normally the troops would demand a bribe and let the smuggling go on. The army also has a lot of problems in the south, where most Malians are unhappy with the military trying to take control of the government. Corruption remains the big problem down south and the aggressive officers who rebelled last year are not seen as saviors but another bunch of crooks seeking to plunder the country.

April 13, 2013: In Kidal two suicide bomber killed three Chadian troops. This increases Chadian losses in Mali to 33.

April 14, 2013: Chad will withdraw its 2,000 troops as the Chad government considers their soldiers unsuited to fighting terrorists. The Chad Army has a lot of experience operating in the desert but has not had to deal with Islamic terrorists. The Chad troops have been operating with French soldiers in chasing down organized groups of Islamic terrorist gunmen. But as these groups are destroyed, some of the survivors slip away and organize terrorist operations.

France and the United States are at odds over the value of African peacekeepers in Mali. The U.S. believes that the African troops headed for peacekeeping duty in Mali are too poorly trained, equipped and led to be of much use. France believes that you can work around the deficiencies and make the African troops useful (for local security, like manning roadblocks and guard duty). The U.S. believes that you have to be careful with that approach as the African troops are often led by corrupt officers who will demand bribes from the locals. This causes popular resentment of the peacekeepers and helps the Islamic terrorists to remain hidden. French and American officers are seeking to work out these differences of opinion. While the Americans have been training a growing number of African troops in the last decade, the French have been in Africa for over a century and have a long track record of getting things done despite all the problems the Americans fret about.

Security up north is complicated by the movement of refugees. Many of them are now returning home and troops have to be alert to Islamic terrorists hiding in plain sight pretending to be returning refugees.

As the French moved north they used the many followers (armed and unarmed) as the MNLA to help maintain order. There simply were not enough soldiers available and the MNLA men were there and had already been negotiating with the Mali government to make peace once the Islamic terrorists were gone. The Mali Army is still not strong enough to drive the MNLA out of the north. This is despite the fact that the north contains only about 12 percent of Mali's 15 million people and is largely barren desert. The MNLA is popular because they are locals, relatively honest and sufficiently well-armed to keep the thieving southern politicians and soldiers away. The Islamic terror groups made themselves unpopular (and made the MNLA look much better by comparison) in the north by forcing everyone to obey strict (no tobacco, alcohol, music, video, shaved men and unveiled women) Islamic lifestyle rules. This ran into a lot of resistance, especially once the Islamic terrorists made it clear that their ultimate goal was turning all of Mali into an Islamic religious dictatorship.

Some Tuareg factions have made peace with the Mali government and are cooperating in the hunt for al Qaeda fighters. But other Tuareg factions have not decided yet, even as they are threatened with smart bomb attacks if they make a move against the pro-government forces that have taken back control of the north. If the government can be persuaded to negotiate an autonomy deal with the Tuaregs in the north that will go a long way towards making the area more hostile for al Qaeda. But it’s not certain that such a deal will be made. The black African officers and officials from the south are still mad about how the Tuareg rebels drove them out of the north last year. Revenge is still being sought for that humiliation, but it must be tempered with the fact that MNLA is still organized, armed and numerous enough to defeat the Mali troops up north.

There are three different Islamic radical groups in the north. Ansar Dine (which controlled Timbuktu) is from Mali and led by Tuareg Islamic radicals. MUJAO (Movement for Unity and Jihad in West Africa) controlled Gao and is from neighboring Mauritania. Al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM) has members from all over North Africa, but mostly from Algeria. MUJAO is basically a Mauritanian faction of AQIM and there is some tension between the two groups. AQIM has the most money and weapons and used this to exercise some control over the other two radical groups (who outnumbered AQIM in Mali). Both these groups are sometimes at odds with Ansar Dine, which felt it should be in charge because it is Malian. Until late 2012 all three groups cooperated in order to maintain their control of the north. Then Ansar Dine began negotiating with the Mali government for a separate peace and some kind of compromise over Tuareg autonomy in the north. In part this was because MUJAO and AQIM were bringing in reinforcements from Morocco, Western Sahara, Algeria, Pakistan, Egypt, Yemen, Nigeria, and Sudan and threatened to reduce the area Ansar Dine controlled. Ansar Dine saw itself as the only Malian group in the Islamic radical government up north and was determined to defend Tuareg interests against the many foreigners in MUJAO (which also has Malian members) and especially AQIM (which wanted to run everything). Ansar Dine saw AQIM as a bunch of gangsters, dependent on its relationship with drug gangs (al Qaeda moves the drugs north to the Mediterranean coast) and kidnappers (who hold Europeans for multi - million dollar ransoms). All this cash gave AQIM a lot of power, both to buy weapons and hire locals. With the high unemployment in the north and the image of Islamic warriors, working for AQIM was an attractive prospect for many young men. Most of those new recruits deserted as their employers fled the advancing French. The Tuareg members of MUJAO and Ansar Dine could find locals in the north to shelter them while the foreigners (mainly from AQIM) had to flee because they were too easily spotted by Mali civilians and pointed out to the French, Malian and other African troops who now occupy the north.

April 15, 2013: The Tuaregs of northern Mali remain divided over their place in Mali. While most Tuaregs detest the corrupt black African politicians and officials from the south, they have no problem living next to black African Malians or doing business with them. Even before the French moved north in January, most of the Tuareg (who comprise most of the northern population) rebels (the MNLA) had turned against the Islamic terrorists who had taken control of the north by force. MNLA means (in French) “Liberation Army of Azawad” and the Mali government is upset that some of the MNLA men controlling roads and cities are approving documents (like passes) with rubber stamps that say “St ate of Azawad”. That is the Tuareg term for their homeland in northern Mali. France tolerates the MNLA as long as the rebels work with France and do not fight the Mali army or government officials. Several hundred Tuareg Malian soldiers work directly for the French as scouts and translators. These men help the French determine which Tuareg rebels can be trusted and which are Islamic terrorists (usually members of MUJAO or Ansar Dine.)

April 16, 2013: Algerian soldiers and police continue to intercept arms smugglers from Libya trying to get to northern Mali. It’s unclear if these weapons were headed for the Islamic terrorists still operating their or tribesmen. Both are regular customers for weapons dealers.

April 18, 2013: Mauritania has agreed to send 1,800 peacekeepers to Mali. Mauritanian troops are particularly valuable because they have years of experience chasing down Islamic terrorists and bandits in the desert. Mauritania borders Mali and sees this peacekeeping duty as self-defense. One of the groups Mauritanian troops will be fighting is MOJWA (Movement for Oneness and Jihad in West Africa, largely composed of black African Islamic radicals and led by Mauritanians).MOJWA is unique among Islamic terrorist groups because its leadership is black African. Mauritanian security forces have made it very difficult for MOJWA to operate in Mauritania and that’s why so many MOJWA members moved to Mali in the last year. Many are still there and not looking forward to the arrival of Mauritanian troops.

April 21, 2013: MNLA (Tuareg rebels) took control of Ber, a town of 9,000, some 50 kilometers east of Timbuktu. The town had been taken over by an Islamic radical group that had arrived to protect Arabs living there. The Tuareg and Arabs are ethnically similar and sometimes unite against the black Africans who live in the north. But after months of harsh rule by Islamic terrorists, even the Tuareg are hostile to "Arabs" and locals will still try and drive them out. The only defenders of the local Arabs (who have often been there for generations) are the remaining Islamic radicals or the French troops. Local leaders in Ber called on the MNLA for help in keeping the peace.

April 22, 2013: France officially agreed to keep 2,000 troops in Mali through July and at least a thousand by the end of the year.

April 23, 2013: The French transferred responsibility for security to a battalion (650 troops) of peacekeepers from Burkina Faso.

April 24, 2013: The MNLA means (in French) "Liberation Army of Azawad" and the Mali government is upset that MNLA men control most of the rural (and very thinly populated) areas in the north. These rebels like to approve documents (like passes) with rubber stamps that say "State of Azawad." That is the Tuareg term for their homeland in northern Mali . MNLA refuses to disarm but is willing to negotiate their role in the north. After invading in January, France tolerated the MNLA as long as the rebels cooperated and did not fight the Mali army or government officials. Several hundred Tuareg Malian soldiers work directly for the French as scouts and translators. These men help the French determine which Tuareg rebels can be trusted and which are Islamic terrorists (usually members of MUJAO or Ansar Dine).

April 25, 2013: The UN approved a Mali peacekeeping force of 12,600 soldiers and police. Most of the troops would be from Africa and include the 6,000 African peacekeepers already in Mali and at least a thousand French troops.

French troops continue to search for and attack Islamic terrorist groups in the north. French intelligence has identified dozens of camps and equipment storage sites al Qaeda constructed in the north during the last year and, in the far northern mountains near the Algerian border, over the last decade. France is using its warplanes and smart bombs to attack these bases and supply dumps. Sending in ground troops is a less attractive option because of the al Qaeda use of landmines and the possibility of ambush by nearby terrorists. The French troops can go in on foot but there are more targets to be hit than there are infantry to hit all of them. It takes time and manpower to clear the mines.

In Europe, Africa, and the Middle East police are detecting, and increasingly arresting, Islamic terrorists who have fled Mali. Al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM) had members from all over North Africa but mostly from Algeria, and while defeated in Mali it was not destroyed there. Hundreds of experienced Islamic terrorists have scattered and are reorganizing via email, cell phones, and hand-carried documents. Recruiting has taken a hit, as the operations in Mali this year showed once more that Islamic radicals cannot stand up to professional soldiers and their governing methods tend to turn the population against them. This caused over a thousand AQIM members to desert, while nearly 500 were killed in the Mali fighting. Hundreds of local Islamic terrorists (Tuaregs and black Africans from countries in the region) have stayed in northern Mali and are carrying out a terrorism campaign. There are a few larger groups of these Islamic terrorists still wandering around the far north but they are being hunted by French aircraft and hit with smart bombs. Some of these Islamic terrorists have renounced their alliance with al Qaeda and are trying to evade attack by just being another group of Tuareg separatists.

Speaking of corruption, the decision by Chad to withdraw its 2,250 troops from Mali was, as many expected, just a negotiating ploy. Chad leaders want more money and no criticism if a lot of it disappears into their pockets.

Fixing the corruption in the Mali government and military is seen as the solution to the problems with the Tuareg north. But that corruption, fueled by tribal ties and tradition, has proved extremely difficult to eliminate or even just tone down. One thing there is no shortage of in Mali is challenges.

April 26, 2013: The cause of the rebellion in northern Mali (corrupt southern officials running the north in a corrupt and inept fashion) has not been dealt with. The Tuareg rebels still want autonomy (self-rule) and the black African majority (90 percent of the population) in the south does not want to allow it. But the Mali Army, dominated by black Africans, is still a corrupt bunch of ill-trained poorly equipped and ineptly led gunmen who tend to serve whoever pays them. This army is still incapable of defeating the MNLA (Tuareg rebels) and not sure if they can persuade the peacekeepers to do it for them. The MNLA expects the July elections (the 7th for the president the 21st for parliament) to bring another group of corrupt southerners to power.

April 28, 2013: Another French soldier was killed in northern Mali, this time by a roadside bomb. This makes six French soldiers lost in the last four months. There are about 4,500 French troops in Mali, about half of them in the far north pursuing the remnants of the Islamic terror groups that controlled the north for over six months.

May 4, 2013: In Gao a suicide bomber on a motorbike attacked a Mali Army patrol, killing himself and five soldiers. Elsewhere in Gao three Islamic terrorists in a car opened fire on Mali soldiers, killing two of them. Return fire killed all three of the Islamic terrorists.

May 5, 2013: Morocco announced that it arrested members of two local Islamic terrorist cells and found that both groups had been in touch with Islamic terrorists in Mali.

May 6, 2013: In neighboring Niger a Nigerian Air Force Alpha jet crashed as it was returning from a reconnaissance patrol over northern Mali. The two man crew of the Alpha jet died, so it will take more time to find out what exactly happened. Ground fire is unlikely as the jet was in Niger air space when it went down. Nigeria sent two of its light bombers (Alpha jets) to Niger last January as part of its contribution to the Mali peacekeeping force. Nigeria has used these jets in peacekeeping missions before, for scouting and attacking ground targets with machine-guns and bombs.

Troops from Mali and Burkina Faso entered the village of Ber (50 kilometers northeast of Timbuktu). MNLA rebels had withdrawn from Ber to avoid a fight with the Burkina Faso peacekeepers. There had been fighting in Ber between Arab and Tuareg residents, which attracted the attention of the peacekeepers.

May 7, 2013: AQIM released a video on the Internet in which Moslems worldwide were urged to attack French people and property wherever they could. AQIM has been calling for this sort of thing since French led forces drove them out of northern Mali last January. There have been a few attacks, but not much damage. In response, France has increased its efforts to hunt down Islamic militants in France.

May 10, 2013: Five suicide bombers died in two attacks on peacekeepers. One bomber attacked a Niger Army camp 300 kilometers east of Gao. That one consisted of the bomber driving a car through the camp entrance checkpoint and being shot at by guards and other troops. The bomber was shot dead before he could detonate his explosives. The second attack was to the west, near Timbuktu, against a Mali Army camp. The four bombers died and two soldiers were wounded. These five bombers were recruited, trained and sent out by MOJWA (Movement for Oneness and Jihad in West Africa) which is largely composed of black African Islamic radicals and led by Mauritanians. MOJWA is unique among Islamic terrorist groups because its leadership is black African.

Mauritanian security forces have made it very difficult for MOJWA to operate in Mauritania and that’s why so many MOJWA members moved to Mali in the last year. Many are still there and not looking forward to the arrival of Mauritanian troops as peacekeepers.

Al Qaeda started as an organization of Wahhabi militants and Wahhabi believers still form the core of most Islamic terror organizations. The Saudis deny that they are subsidizing Islamic terrorism, but the Wahhabis preach hatred of non-Moslems and violence against those who do not accept the Wahhabi way. These Islamic radical missionaries have been active in Mali for over a decade and although less than ten percent of Mali Moslems adhere to Wahhabi beliefs, they are among the most active Moslems and did not get upset when, a year ago, Islamic terrorists in the north began destroying the holy places of the majority Sufi Moslems up there. Wahhabis were busy in the south as well as the north and police has recently discovered and arrested southerners who had formed terrorist cells as a result of their Wahhabi beliefs.

One aspect of the Islamic terrorism in the north has not run for cover. That is the Wahhabi Moslems created over the last two decades by Saudi Arabian missionaries and money. Since the 1980s nearly a hundred billion dollars of Saudi money (from the government and private donations) has been used to send thousands of Wahhabi missionaries to (mostly Moslem) foreign countries and recruit new adherents to this conservative and intolerant form of Islam. The money went to build mosques and madrassas (religious schools) and pay Islamic conservative clergy and teachers to convert more people to the Wahhabi way of thinking.

Islamic terrorists who have fled Mali are showing up in nearby countries. Tunisia recently revealed that a group of fifty armed Islamic terrorists have been operating in the Atlas Mountains (the coastal mountain range that runs from Morocco to Tunisia) for the last six months and that at least a quarter of them were veterans of the recent fighting in Mali. Al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM) had members from all over North Africa, but mostly from Algeria and while defeated in Mali it was not destroyed there. Hundreds of experienced Islamic terrorists have scattered and are reorganizing via email, cell phones and hand-carried documents. Recruiting has taken a hit, as the operations in Mali this year showed once more that Islamic radicals cannot stand up to professional soldiers and their “Islamic” governing methods tend to turn the population against them. This caused over a thousand AQIM members to desert, while nearly 500 were killed in the Mali fighting. Hundreds of local Islamic terrorists (Tuaregs and black Africans from countries in the region) have stayed in northern Mali and are carrying out a terrorism campaign. There are a few larger groups of these Islamic terrorists still wandering around the far north but they are being hunted by French aircraft and hit with smart bombs. Some of these Islamic terrorists have renounced their alliance with al Qaeda and are trying to evade attack by just being another group of Tuareg separatists.

French troops continue to search for and attack Islamic terrorist groups in the north. French intelligence has identified dozens of camps and equipment storage sites al Qaeda constructed in the north during the last year and, in the far northern mountains near the Algerian border, over the last decade. France is using its warplanes and smart bombs to attack these bases and supply dumps. Sending in ground troops is a less attractive option because of the al Qaeda use of landmines and the possibility of ambush by nearby terrorists. The French troops can go in on foot, but there are more targets to be hit than there are infantry to hit all of them. It takes time and manpower to clear the mines.

The Tuareg rebels still want autonomy (self-rule) and the black African majority (90 percent of the population) in the south does not want to allow it. But the Mali Army, dominated by black Africans, is still a corrupt bunch of ill-trained poorly equipped and ineptly led gunmen who tend to serve whoever pays them. This army is still incapable of defeating the MNLA and so far has been unable to persuade the peacekeepers to do it for them. The MNLA expects the July elections (the 7th for the president the 21st for parliament) to bring another group of corrupt southerners to power.

MNLA rebels torment the Mali troops with things like approving documents (like passes) with rubber stamps that say “State of Azawad”. That is the Tuareg term for their homeland in northern Mali and at the moment its capital is Kidal. The MNLA refuses to disarm but is willing to negotiate their role in the north. After invading in January France tolerated the MNLA as long as the rebels cooperated and did not fight the Mali army or government officials. Several hundred Tuareg Malian soldiers work directly for the French as scouts and translators. These men help the French determine which Tuareg rebels can be trusted and which are Islamic terrorists (usually members of MUJAO or Ansar Dine.)

The Malian army is concentrating troops near the northeastern town of Kidal, which is controlled by the MNLA rebels. The MNLA means (in French) “Liberation Army of Azawad” and the Mali government is upset that MNLA men control most of the rural (and very thinly populated) areas in the north. The only large town the MNLA controls is Kidal and the Mali troops are threatening to take it back by force. It’s unlikely the Mali soldiers and police could handle the MNLA gunmen, so the concentration of security forces near Kidal is seen more as a bargaining tactic than as a real threat to the MNLA. Negotiations with the MNLA have not gone well as the rebels are insisting on an autonomy agreement and the French and African peacekeepers have been unwilling to shut down the MNLA for the Mali government. The Mali Army is seen as more of a threat to an elected Mali government than to the Tuareg rebels.

May 12, 2013: In the three months since French led forces drove Islamic terrorists out of the cities of northern Mali, life has been hard up there. That's because these cities depended a lot on tourism, which disappeared a year ago when the Islamic radicals and Tuareg rebels showed up. The tourists have not returned and the lost income has over a third of the population in the cities dependent on charity or foreign aid to survive. Hunger is common and many refugees in neighboring countries have not returned because of the poor economic conditions.

May 15, 2013: International donors have pledged at least $4 billion to rebuild northern Mali. The big problem will be preventing the money from being stolen. Corruption is a major problem in Mali and one the main complaints of the Tuareg in the north.

May 17, 2013: In the north (200 kilometers south of Kidal) MNLA gunmen fought Islamic terrorists belonging to MOJWA.

May 22, 2013: China has offered 500 support troops for the Mali peacekeeping force.

May 23, 2013: Al Qaeda attacked a French uranium mine in neighboring Niger, killing one person and the suicide bomber involved. Another group of terrorists hit a military base 240 kilometers away, killing 18 soldiers and a civilian, along with four attackers. MOJWA (an al Qaeda splinter group) claimed responsibility for both attacks and said it was done to punish France for its intervention in Mali. Some equipment at the mine was damaged and production will be interrupted while repairs are made.

May 28, 2013: MNLA men on the outskirts of Kidal fired on a French patrol, wounding one French soldier. France has a Special Forces camp near Kidal but largely stays out of the town. The French are still searching for Islamic terrorists in the area and the MNLA are generally cooperating. The MNLA are currently a bit nervous about the Mali Army troops that are moving closer to Kidal.

May 30, 2013: In the capital police said they had detected a terrorist cell and arrested seven members of MOJWA (Movement for Oneness and Jihad in West Africa, largely composed of black African Islamic radicals and led by Mauritanians). The seven were sent into the capital without weapons but with instructions to recruit students of religious schools and obtain weapons and bomb making materials and make attacks.

June 2, 2013: France has offered Libya technical and material aid in improving security along their border with Mali.

June 3, 2013: The government has warned the MNLA that government control would return to Kidal before the July 28th elections and that the MNLA should leave voluntarily.

June 4, 2013: In Kidal a suicide bomber tried to attack an MNLA leader, but the explosion only killed the attacker. This was apparently an effort by one of the Islamic terrorist groups in the north to get back at MNLA for cooperating with the French and the Mali government.

June 5, 2013: The Mali Army began its assault on the northeastern town of Kidal, killing at least ten MNLA men in the initial fighting and capturing 28. The commander of the Malian battalion leading the assault is himself a Tuareg who remained loyal.

France continues to slowly withdraw its troops from Mali and will have only 2,000 in Mali by September. But at least a thousand troops will remain indefinitely. By the end of the year there are supposed to be 12,500 African peacekeepers in the north. French troops continue to search the north for al Qaeda and other Islamic terrorists (like MOJWA) still in the area. Most of these Islamic radicals appear to have fled the country or gone into hiding.

The 500 troops from neighboring Burkina Faso that arrived in Timbuktu last April (to replace the French) are complaining about equipment shortages and the lack of promised counter-terrorism training. Burkina Faso is going public with this because the troops in Timbuktu believe they will be unprepared to handle efforts by Islamic terrorist groups to take back control of the city. This sort of problem is expected with many of the African peacekeeper contingents.

The only large town the MNLA controlled was Kidal. It was thought unlikely that the Mali soldiers and police could handle the MNLA gunmen alone, so the concentration of security forces near Kidal is seen more as a bargaining tactic than as a real threat to the MNLA. Negotiations with the MNLA did not go well, as the rebels were insisting on an autonomy agreement and the French and African peacekeepers have been unwilling to shut down the MNLA for the Mali government. The Mali Army is seen as more of a threat to an elected Mali government than to the Tuareg rebels. But the Mali troops spent over a month moving up several hundred kilometers of road to Kidal and planning their assault. The MNLA seemed to sense that they had been outmaneuvered and evacuated the town, leaving behind a small force to keep the soldiers busy for a while.

The MNLA means (in French) “Liberation Army of Azawad.” That is the Tuareg term for their homeland in northern Mali and until this week its capital was Kidal. The Mali government is upset that MNLA men control most of the rural (and very thinly populated) areas in the north. Mali accuses France of letting this happen, but the French only had an informal deal with MNLA in which the Tuareg would not fire on the incoming troops and would provide information on where the Islamic terrorists were. France tried to get Mali to make some kind of political settlement with MNLA, but that never went anywhere and the Mali Army wants the Tuareg rebel group crushed. The Mali government is also angry over the extent to which so many Arabs and Tuaregs in the north cooperated with the Islamic radicals in establishing a new government.

June 6, 2013: The Malian army moved into the northeastern town of Kidal and drove the Tuareg MNLA fighters out. The MNLA had controlled Kidal for months as they tried to establish a role in governing the largely Tuareg north. The attack came after months of complaints that MNLA gunmen were attacking blacks in the north and trying to force them to leave. The government accuses the MNLA of ethnic cleansing, as northern Mali is predominately Tuareg and Arab. Because over 90 percent of Malians are black Africans, Tuaregs have always been touchy about blacks moving north to settle. Partly this was because some Tuaregs and Arabs in the north still kept black slaves. Now a lot of those slaves find themselves free after their masters fled, along with several thousand Tuareg, during the French liberation of the north. Groups like al Qaeda are okay with this slavery, as it is commonly discussed in Moslem scripture and the Koran.

June 9, 2013: French forces captured a terrorist base in the north (in a town on the Niger River near Gao). This one contained five tons of explosives and a workshop for producing suicide bomb vests and roadside bombs.

June 16, 2013: Al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM) admitted that it had lost two of its senior leaders (Abdelhamid Abou Zeid and Abdallah Al Chinguetti) to French forces earlier this year (February and March). AQIM kept insisting that these two leaders were still alive.

June 18, 2013: The government and the Tuareg rebels (the MNLA) signed a peace deal. The MNLA will allow Mali troops and police to enter Kidal and any other MNLA occupied area in the north and will surrender its heavy weapons. In reality the MNLA members will keep most of their weapons but will have to surrender stuff like mortars, heavy machine-guns, and large stocks of ammo. The government will not try to punish any MNLA members and will negotiate more autonomy for the Tuareg north. Many Tuareg believe the MNLA gave up too much and do not trust the Mali government.

June 24, 2013: Some 200 peacekeepers from Benin arrived in Kidal to help maintain order.

June 26, 2013: Captain Amadou Haya Sanogo, who led the army coup in March 2012, apologized for his actions and promised to help repair the damage.

July 1, 2013: The UN peacekeeping force took control of peacekeeping operations in Mali. The UN force currently has 6,300 African peacekeepers, although the ultimate size of the force will be over 12,000. There are still 3,200 French troops in Mali, along with several thousand Mali soldiers. The UN force is officially known as MINUSMA (Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in Mali).

The only large town the MNLA controlled was Kidal. It was thought unlikely that the Mali soldiers and police could handle the MNLA gunmen alone, so the concentration of security forces near Kidal last month was initially seen more as a bargaining tactic than as a real threat to the MNLA. Negotiations with the MNLA did not go well at first because the rebels were insistent on an autonomy agreement first, and the French and African peacekeepers were unwilling to shut down the MNLA for the Mali government. The Mali Army is seen as more of a threat to an elected Mali government than to the Tuareg rebels. The Mali troops had spent over a month moving up several hundred kilometers of road to Kidal and planning an assault that never came. The MNLA seemed to sense that they had been outmaneuvered and retreated from some checkpoints outside Kidal but maintained enough fighters in the city to keep the Mali soldiers from entering until the MNLA and the Mali government could work out a deal.

MNLA means (in French) “Liberation Army of Azawad.” That is the Tuareg term for their homeland in northern Mali and, until the June 18 agreement, its capital was Kidal. The Mali government was upset that MNLA men controlled most of the rural (and very thinly populated) areas in the north. Mali accuses France of letting this happen, but the French only had an informal deal with MNLA in which the Tuareg would not fire on the incoming troops and would provide information on where the Islamic terrorists were. France pressured Mali to make some kind of political settlement with MNLA, and that eventually led to the June 18th deal. Many in the Mali Army still want the Tuareg rebel group crushed. The Mali government is also angry over the extent to which so many Arabs and Tuaregs in the north cooperated with the Islamic radicals in establishing a new government. Many Tuareg still want independence, or at least a lot of autonomy in the north. Anti-Mali demonstrations accompanied the entrance of Mali troops into Kidal and will continue. Whatever the Mali government may want, the situation in the north, and with the Tuareg, is fundamentally changed. The Tuareg have tasted power and seen how weak the southerners really are.

July 5, 2013: After arriving on the outskirts a month ago 200 Malian army soldiers finally moved into the northeastern town of Kidal. Tuareg MNLA fighters moved out, or at least aside, in accordance with the June 18th peace deal with Mali. The MNLA had controlled Kidal since March 2012, as they tried to establish a role in governing the largely Tuareg north. MNLA were forced out of Kidal by Islamic terrorists for nine months and regained control in January 2013. French and Chadian troops have been in Kidal for over six months and have been joined by some other African peacekeepers to replace the Chad force (which returned home). The MNLA controlled security in the city and this produced growing complaints that MNLA gunmen were attacking blacks in the north and trying to force them to leave. The government accused the MNLA of ethnic cleansing, as northern Mali is predominately Tuareg and Arab. Because over 90 percent of Malians are black Africans, Tuaregs have always been touchy about blacks moving north to settle or, worse, to run the government. Partly this was because some Tuaregs and Arabs in the north still kept black slaves. Now a lot of those slaves find themselves free after their masters fled, along with several thousand Tuareg, during the French liberation of the north. Groups like al Qaeda are OK with this slavery, as it is commonly discussed in Moslem scripture and the Koran. The slaves, despite being Moslem, generally do not agree with this attitude.

July 6, 2013: The government ended the six month old state of emergency. This means it is now legal for crowds to assemble and demonstrations to take place. The security forces must now follow all legal procedures when making arrests and holding people in custody.

July 8, 2013: In Kidal anti-government demonstrations over the weekend left two peacekeepers and a French soldier wounded.

July 9, 2013: In the north (Kidal) two civilians were wounded by unidentified gunmen.

The fragile economy in Timbuktu was devastated by the nine months of Islamic radical rule. Most of the Mali government employees were driven out and their workplaces looted and trashed. Worse, the tourism activity, which was the basis of the local economy, was largely destroyed. This included the destruction of many tourist attractions and the disappearance of many Arab and other foreign businessmen who made the tourism business work. Replacing key people and restoring infrastructure will take years. In the meantime most of the 55,000 population will have to get by on foreign aid.

Mali's fundamental problem (and the source of the discontent that triggered the Tuareg uprising in the north and the army coup in the south last year) is widespread corruption and the chilling effect this has on the economy. Despite billions of dollars' worth of mineral exports, the country is very poor. The money the government gets from the mineral exports is largely stolen by politicians. Economic growth is stifled by the corruption, which makes it very difficult for entrepreneurs to start new businesses or expand existing ones. The result is that a third of the population is hungry and gets by with the help of foreign aid. In the north over two thirds of the population is short of food and much else. Most of the people in the north are Tuareg and they blame corrupt southern (black African) officials for the poverty and high unemployment in the north. That is only partially true because the north has always been very poor and the Tuareg leaders also tend to be corrupt when it comes to handling government matters. The July 28th presidential election is expected to put another corrupt politician into office. The search for a cure for the corruption has so far been unsuccessful. There are also doubts that the government can even properly organize the July 28th election.

France believes that a third of the 2,000 Islamic terrorists in northern Mali at the beginning of the year have been killed and most of the survivors (less the hundred or so who surrendered or were captured) have fled Mali. That leaves several hundred, most of them Tuareg or black African, still in Mali. Most are hiding, but some are in the larger towns and cities carrying out attacks. Many (up to half) of the terrorists who fled went to neighboring Niger, where a weak government and a very poor population (whose cooperation can be bought) has provided opportunities for new terrorist bases to be established. As with Mali, most of the 16 million Niger population lives in the south, where there is more water. The north is mostly desert. A fifth of the population are Arab, Tuareg, and similar minorities. Over 90 percent of the population is Moslem and about eight percent are slaves. The U.S., France, and other European nations are helping the Niger government to deal with the Islamic terrorists. That will not produce a quick fix and it may take a year (and probably much longer) to clear the Islamic terrorists out of Niger.

July 11, 2013: For the last five months American MQ-9 UAVs could be seen regularly over northern Mali. Some days there is one up there all day, most of the time it’s only for about half the day. The video is analyzed by U.S. and French intelligence and used by the French to coordinate operations against the remaining Islamic terrorists in northern Mali. The American UAVs have been operating from an airbase in neighboring Niger, where two MQ-9s are currently stationed.

August 10, 2013: Mali election: Campaigning ends ahead of second round'

Former Prime Minister Ibrahim Boubacar Keita and ex-Finance Minister Soumaila Cisse will contest the second round. The election is intended to restore democracy and stability after months of unrest. France sent more than 4,000 troops in January to regain control of northern towns and cities from al-Qaeda-linked militants. Insurgents had seized the north of the country during a military coup. According to official figures, Mr Keita secured 39.2% of the vote cast in last month's first round ahead of Mr Cisse who took 19.4%. However, Mr Cisse remained optimistic about his presidential bid. "I am confident, because it is not about adding to the votes from the first round, there will be new votes, it is a new election," he told AFP news agency.

"Everything restarts from zero." Mr. Keita - widely known as IBK - has urged voters to give him a "clear and clean" majority in the second round. "Given the results from the first round, there is a good chance that they would be confirmed in the second," he told reporters. "My first priority would be the reconciliation of the country. After the trauma that it has suffered, a new start is needed," he said. With the end of campaigning coinciding with the Muslim festival of Eid al-Fitr, both candidates cancelled their main political rallies. Correspondents say supporters of both men instead drove around the capital Bamako, honking car horns and waving posters. A UN peacekeeping force was deployed to Mali in July ahead of the elections, as France began to withdraw its troops from its former colony and the army pledged support for the restoration of democratic rule.

Mali presidential run-off

Ibrahim Boubacar Keita - Aged 69, served as prime minister from 1994 to 2000

Won 39.2% of the vote in the first round

Running for his Rally for Mali (RPM) party under the slogan "For Mali's honour"

Soumaila Cisse - Aged 63, served as finance minister from 1993 to 2000 Won 19.4% of the vote in the first round

Running for his Union for the Republic and Democracy (URD) party and is a declared opponent of the junta behind the March 2012 coup.

September 11, 2013: For the first time since the June 18 peace agreement Mali troops skirmished with MNLA rebels. Three soldiers were wounded.

September 15, 2013: In the northern city of Kidal, Tuareg civilians threw rocks at vehicles carrying Mali officials who flew in from the south. A June 18 peace deal had the MNLA (Tuareg rebels) leave Kidal, their last stronghold. The MNLA had controlled Kidal since March 2012, as they tried to establish a role in governing the largely Tuareg north. MNLA had been forced out of Kidal by Islamic terrorists for nine months and regained control in January 2013. French and Chadian troops had been in Kidal for over six months and have been joined by some other African peacekeepers. The hundreds of MNLA rebels were supposed to return to their homes but some stayed around Kidal and many turned to crime to survive.

September 16, 2013: Some Chadian peacekeepers (about 160) have abandoned their base in the northeastern town of Tessalit and headed south for the Gao. The officer leading the deserters says they have not been paid nor received money for accommodations. Corruption among African peacekeepers is a common problem.

In Mali the three main non-terrorist rebel groups in the north agreed to peace talks with the government to deal with the issues that triggered the Tuareg and Arab rebellion in the north (that was eventually hijacked by Islamic terrorist factions) last year.

September 19, 2013: France declared that al Qaeda had been beaten in northern Mali and that French troops would stay for as long as al Qaeda threatened to make a comeback in Mali. That could be for several years or longer.

September 23, 2013: Al Qaeda announced that it had finally replaced two leaders (Algerians Muhammad al Ameen Ould al Hasan and Abou Zei) who had been killed by French troops in northern Mali earlier this year. The replacements are Algerian Saeed Abu Muqatil and a Mauritanian named Aderrahmane. That it took so long to find replacements supports French claims that they are doing some serious damage to the Islamic terror groups that came to Mali.

Niger continues to have problems dealing with al Qaeda terrorists. The current Niger government dates from 2011, when a period of military rule ended. The government has little real control over most of the country, and this has allowed several Islamic terrorist groups to use cash and intimidation to set up bases in some remote areas. NATO and U.S. military assistance has helped to locate where these terrorist operations might be but the Niger government is reluctant to stir up tribes that may be willingly hosting terrorists (usually for a price). U.S. Special Forces advisors tend to agree with the Niger officials and are trying to work out a more gradual and less disruptive approach to getting the terrorists out. Meanwhile, these terrorists plan and carry out raids inside Niger and in neighboring countries.

September 26, 2013: The UN is investigating charges that some of its Mali peacekeepers are guilty of corruption and “sexual misconduct” (which apparently includes rape, prostitution, or other mistreatment of women).

MALI: The new president faces tough test as he strives for reconciliation - The Guardian:

Mali's new president, Ibrahim Boubacar Keïta, who is to be inaugurated on Thursday, has made much of the notion of national reconciliation in his ascent to power. The new president faces tough test as he strives for reconciliation. Ibrahim Boubacar Keïta must try to heal divisions caused by months of harsh sharia law in the north. In the remote desert city of Gao, however, reconciliation is not an idea that comes easily. This was a town that was subjected to harsh sharia law during a six-month spell under the sway of Tuareg separatists and the Mujao, jihadists linked to al -Qaida. Even now, nine months after it was liberated, the town hall and banks lie gutted. Hospitals were looted and non-governmental organisation offices ransacked as the insurgents declared Gao the capital of Azawad, or northern Mali. Many buildings are pockmarked from heavy weapons fire. Suspicion and antagonism will take time to dissipate. "Now there's peace, they are coming back and we know who they are," said Amadou Sarr, a leader of the Patrouilleurs de Gao, a group of young men who orchestrated a campaign of unarmed resistance to the jihadis. "We have denounced them to the police, but the police say they need evidence, such as pictures, but imagine taking pictures when they were jihadis, they would have cut your throat. We took four known jihadis to the police station but the police released them because of a lack of evidence."

The patrouilleurs saw it as their duty to stay and protect their families after seeing what had happened in Timbuktu, where there was no organised resistance. The group got its name by forming patrols that roamed the streets to provide some semblance of protection for the population. Now the tension between these groups and those who supported the rebels is mounting. The Mujao recruited many youths from local communities in the Gao region, especially from villages that had embraced Islamism long before the hostilities, according to the International Crisis Group. The patrouillers are keeping watch on who is coming back to town and the surrounding villages. They are unarmed and resolutely reject the idea that they are militias. But they feel resentful at the lack of recognition from Bamako, the capital 750 miles away, at the role they played in leading the resistance. They are demanding a seat at the negotiating table and are unhappy that while the government is willing to talk to the MNLA Tuareg separatists, they have not been included in any dialogue aimed at settling longstanding Tuareg grievances, although many northerners in general share a sense of neglect by Bamako. How IBK, as the new president is known, handles the vexed problem of reconciliation could be crucial to the success of his presidency. The reconciliation process, which began before IBK won in a runoff with 78% of the vote, has been less than convincing so far. There is a commission for dialogue and reconciliation, but it has hardly met and seems irrelevant after IBK appointed a minister for reconciliation, Cheick Ouamar Diarrah. "There are 33 people on the commission, it is too many, we have no office, no logistical support, there is a lot of confusion," said Makan Kone, one of the commissioners and editor-in-chief of the Nouvelle Libération in Bamako. "It was only announced to satisfy the international community."

It may be a harsh verdict but it is nevertheless accepted that Mali had to go through the motions, including a presidential election that was considered too early by some, in order to unlock £3bn in foreign aid. As well as causing a breakdown in trust between the north and the capital, and between communities in the north, caused by the occupation, the conflict has been economically disastrous. Little or no rice planting took place because people were scared to go into the fields, animals have died because they were not taken out to pasture and there are fears of mounting food shortages. Economic activity has seized up because the city depends heavily on consumption by local public servants, who fled during the crisis. The banks in Gao reopened just two weeks ago. Regular work to maintain the dykes so fields are not flooded by the Niger river ground to a halt during the crisis. Supplies from Algeria have slowed to a trickle because of the continuing instability of the neighbouring region of Kidal, which remains a Tuareg stronghold.In the scruffy Washington market in Gao, business was slow. Halimatou, who has a stall selling plastic sandals and sneakers, complained about the lack of customers and worried about getting enough food for her six children. Some traders were doing better.

Abramane was making adjustments to a pair of military trousers with his sewing machine. "I've been keeping busy. Soldiers always need to have their clothes adjusted as what they are given are either too small or too big," he said. But he is one of the lucky ones. Just as the town bears visible scars of the recent conflict, so it is hard to escape the extreme poverty. Gao's poorest live in domes made from straw matting that dot the city. Mali is among the world's poorest countries and the north is highly deprived. The region is likely to be a big headache for IBK, who is to be sworn in at an inauguration to be attended by François Hollande, the French president. But it has ever been thus since Mali became independent of France in the 1960s. As IBK seeks to satisfy both the MNLA and constituencies such as the patrouillers, some say the authorities have to distinguish between those who joined the MNLA or Mujao out of economic opportunism – recruits were paid – and the real hard men. "I believe in reconciliation, we are obliged to live together," said About Ag Assabit, head of local NGO Tassaght, whose office was sacked by the rebels, "but for real reconciliation, we need to punish the hardliners and as long as we don't, they will have a sense of impunity."

September 27, 2013: Al Qaeda announced a replacement for the deceased (in February) head of their forces in northern Mali. The new leader is an Algerian called Abou Moughatil.

September 28, 2013: Outside the northern city of Timbuktu, Islamic terrorists set off a car bomb outside an army camp killing two terrorists and two civilians. In the northern city of Kidal, someone threw two grenades at some soldiers, wounding two of them.

September 29, 2013: In the northern city of Kidal, a suicide bomber accidently triggered his explosive vest and killed only himself. The explosion took place in an unused warehouse, and because of that, nearby warehouses were all searched. Elsewhere in Kidal Mali soldiers and MNLA rebels exchanged gunfire near a bank.

In the south several dozen soldiers demonstrated outside the headquarters of the military reform committee, fired weapons into the air, and took the army chief of staff prisoner for several hours. The army is still poorly led, trained, and equipped. Senior officers are often corrupt and steal money meant for the troops (pay and benefits). Morale is low and reforms are badly needed but hard to implement.

French operations in northern Mali left about 700 of the 2,000 Islamic terrorists up there dead. Most of the rest fled to Niger and Libya. The 3,000 Tuareg (MNLA) rebels in the north quickly switched sides and killed over a hundred Islamic terrorist, losing about as many dead themselves. Mali and African peacekeeper troops lost about 200 dead and wounded. Most of the fighting was done by 4,000 French and 3,000 Chadian troops (who suffered 38 dead). France and the United States were initially at odds over the value of African peacekeepers in Mali. The U.S. believed that the African troops headed for peacekeeping duty there were too poorly trained, equipped, and led to be of much use. France believed they could work around the deficiencies and make the African troops useful (for local security, like manning roadblocks and guard duty). The U.S. believes that you have to be careful with that approach as the African troops are often led by corrupt officers who will demand bribes from the locals. This causes popular resentment of the peacekeepers and helps the Islamic terrorists to remain hidden. The French eventually only used Chadian troops (who had a lot of combat experience from their recent civil war and skirmishes with Sudan) for actual fighting and used the others (and Malian soldiers) for security. This worked. While the Americans have been training a growing number of African troops in the last decade, the French have been in Africa for over a century and have a long track record of getting things done despite all the problems the Americans fret about.

The Tuaregs of northern Mali quickly offered to work with the French after the French invasion got started in January. While most Tuaregs detest the corrupt black African politicians and officials from the south, they have no problem living next to black African Malians or doing business with them.

Even before the French moved north in January, most of the Tuareg (who comprise most of the northern population) rebels (the MNLA) had turned against the Islamic terrorists who had taken control of the north by force. MNLA means (in French) “Liberation Army of Azawad,” and the Mali government was upset that some of the MNLA men controlled roads and cities and were approving documents (like passes) with rubber stamps that said “State of Azawad”. That is the Tuareg term for their homeland in northern Mali. France tolerated the MNLA as long as these Tuareg rebels worked with France and did not fight the Mali army or government officials. Several hundred Tuareg Malian soldiers work directly for the French as scouts and translators. These men helped the French determine which Tuareg rebels could be trusted and which are Islamic terrorists (usually members of MUJAO or Ansar Dine). France persuaded the MNLA to make formal peace with Mali last June and to stop running cities and towns, at least until a long-term peace deal could be worked out. There were three different Islamic radical groups in the north. Ansar Dine (which controlled Timbuktu) was from Mali and led by Tuareg Islamic radicals. MUJAO (Movement for Unity and Jihad in West Africa) controlled Gao and was from neighboring Mauritania.

Al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM) had members from all over North Africa but mostly from Algeria and controlled most of the north. MUJAO was basically a Mauritanian faction of AQIM, and there was some tension between the two groups. In August MUJAO merged with another (largely Arab) AQIM faction to form a new group; Al Mourabitoun. AQIM had the most money and weapons and used this to exercise some control over the other two radical groups (who outnumbered AQIM in Mali). Both these groups are sometimes at odds with Ansar Dine, which felt it should be in charge because it is Malian. Until late 2012, all three groups cooperated in order to maintain their control of the north. Then Ansar Dine began negotiating with the Mali government for a separate peace and some kind of compromise over Tuareg autonomy in the north. In part this was because MUJAO and AQIM were bringing in reinforcements from Morocco, Western Sahara, Algeria, Pakistan, Egypt, Yemen, Nigeria, and Sudan and threatened to reduce the area Ansar Dine controlled. Ansar Dine saw itself as the only Malian group in the Islamic radical government up north and was determined to defend Tuareg interests against the many foreigners in MUJAO (which also has Malian members) and especially AQIM (which wanted to run everything). Ansar Dine saw AQIM as a bunch of gangsters, dependent on its relationship with drug gangs (al Qaeda moves most of the drugs north to the Mediterranean coast) and kidnappers (who hold Europeans for multi-million dollar ransoms). All this cash gave AQIM a lot of power, both to buy weapons and hire locals. With the high unemployment in the north and the image of Islamic warriors, working for AQIM was an attractive prospect for many young men. Most of those new recruits deserted as their employers fled the advancing French. The Tuareg members of MUJAO and Ansar Dine could find locals in the north to shelter them while the foreigners (mainly from AQIM) had to flee because they were too easily spotted by Mali civilians and pointed out to the French, Malian, and other African troops who now occupy the north.

As the French moved north they used the many followers (armed and unarmed) as the MNLA to help maintain order. There simply were not enough soldiers available and the MNLA men were there and had already been negotiating with the Mali government to make peace once the Islamic terrorists were gone. The Mali Army is still not strong enough to drive the MNLA out of the north. This is despite the fact that the north contains only about 12 percent of Mali's 15 million people and is largely barren desert. The MNLA is popular because they were locals, relatively honest, and sufficiently well-armed to keep the thieving southern politicians and soldiers away, for a while anyway. The Islamic terror groups made themselves unpopular (and made the MNLA look much better by comparison) in the north by forcing everyone to obey strict (no tobacco, alcohol, music, video, shaved men, and unveiled women) Islamic lifestyle rules. This ran into a lot of resistance, especially once the Islamic terrorists made it clear that their ultimate goal was turning all of Mali into an Islamic religious dictatorship.

France Seeks Permanent Victory In Mali’

The former colonial master France has declared al Qaeda defeated in northern Mali, but also says it will keep troops there for as long as necessary to ensure that the Islamic terror groups do not return and resume using the mountains near the Algerian border as bases. Meanwhile France still has 3,200 troops in northern Mali, down from the peak of 4,500. Casualties have been light (7 dead and 20 wounded so far this year). The French used a lot of smart bombs to kill Islamic terrorists (who would generally choose to fight to the death if cornered) and have spent most of the last six months searching for al Qaeda bases and hidden supplies in the north, especially in the mountains near the Algerian border. In doing that French led forces have some 220 tons of ammunition, several hundred assault rifles, pistols, machine-guns and mortars and 12 tons of ammonium nitrate, a fertilizer commonly used to make bombs. The biggest problem France had in Mali was logistics. The air campaign (bombers, reconnaissance and transports) consumed 13 tons of jet fuel while ground operations required two million tons of vehicle fuel. Nearly half the jet fuel came from European bases as that was where many of the warplanes and most of the aerial tankers and other support aircraft operated from. But most of the supplies (9,200 tons) were shipped into neighboring Senegal and then by rail to Mali and truck to the north. This takes a long time, so 18,500 tons were flown in.

September 30, 2013: In the northern city of Kidal, French soldiers found explosives and several assembled bombs in an unused warehouse.

Elsewhere in Kidal Mali soldiers and MNLA gunmen fired at each other in the streets. That fighting was only halted when French troops arrived. Two days of this violence, near a bank guarded by Mali troops, wounded three people and was caused by hostility between the MNLA and the Mali military.

October 1, 2013: MALI- Keita's uphill struggle to revive oil industry'

AEI: The elected president of Mali last month, Ibrahim Boubacar Keita faces the difficult task of breathing life into an oil industry that appears close to flat lining. In the north, exploration was stalled by conflict with Touareg groups and then with Islamists while a clutch of new operators - some of them totally unknown flocked to the south during the transitional government of Dioncounda Traore.

October 1, 2013: In the north French troops encountered ten Islamic terrorists and, after a brief gun battle, all ten were dead. There were no French casualties.

October 3, 2013: The president dissolved the military reform committee, led by former coup leader Amadou Sanogo, because the group was not producing anything useful.

In the northern city of Timbuktu, Islamic terrorists detonated a car bomb outside a military barracks. Four of the attackers were killed, along with two civilians, while six soldiers were wounded.

October 5, 2013: In the north Tuareg MNLA rebels agreed to return to peace talks after staying away for a week because they did not believe the government was bargaining in good faith.

October 8, 2013: Islamic terrorists tried to blow up two small bridges crossing the Niger River near the northern city of Gao. The older bridge was heavily damaged while the other one was not. Outside Gao some Islamic terrorists fired several mortar shells into the city, wounding seven people. There had not been an attack like this in five months.

MNLA means (in French) "Liberation Army of Azawad." That is the Tuareg term for their homeland in northern Mali, and until the June 18 agreement its capital was Kidal. The Mali government was upset that MNLA men controlled most of the rural (and very thinly populated) areas in the north for over a year. France is having a hard time convincing black African politicians from the more populous southern Mali that it's worthwhile making concessions to MNLA. The French point out that the Tuareg rebels have been defeating black African troops from the south for generations and there's no quick fix for that. The more immediate threat are the Islamic terrorists, and Tuareg cooperation is essential for dealing with the likes of AQIM and Ansar Dine. The Islamic terrorists are largely Arab and Tuareg, and their goal, for all intents and purposes, is to enslave the majority black African population of Mali by imposing a religious dictatorship. Black Africans in general do not want to be ruled by Arabs, who look down on black Africans and have been enslaving and exploiting them for over a thousand years. Many Malians understand what the Arab Islamic terrorists are up to here, but the Mali leadership is distracted by power struggles and getting rich (via corruption). It's a sad situation with no easy solution.

The Islamic terrorists in northern Mali are suffering from a shortage of competent bomb makers, which was obvious from the crude construction of the terrorist bombs used in the north over the last month. These bombs often do not go off at all or explode prematurely. This has led to the accidental deaths of several terrorists and the failure of some attacks. There appears to be no shortage of manpower for AQIM and Ansari Dine, and the French are pressuring Mali to make a satisfactory peace deal with MNLA so that these Tuareg tribesmen can help in the hunt for Islamic terrorists.

Some AQIM dissidents went off to found Al Mourabitoun earlier this year. This dissidents merged with MOJWA (Movement for Oneness and Jihad in West Africa, largely composed of black African Islamic radicals and led by Mauritanians) to form Al Mourabitoun. MOJWA is unique among Islamic terrorist groups because its leadership is black African, and the merged unit is led by Arabs. Then there is Islamic terror group Ansar Dine (which controlled Timbuktu in 2012) which is from Mali and led by Tuareg Islamic radicals who are still in the north and operating near Timbuktu and Kidal. Al Mourabitoun appears to be operating outside Mali (in Niger and Libya) but AQIM and Ansari Dine are still in northern Mali and French troops are looking for them.

October 12, 2013: There are still 3,200 French troops in northern Mali, and because of the recent terrorist activity France is halting withdrawals of those troops in order to crush revived terrorist organizations in northern Mali. AQIM (Al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb) has apparently survived furious French attacks and an internal split and has taken credit for several recent suicide bomb attacks. Moreover, AQIM is not alone.

October 12, 2013: In the north a French soldier was wounded while destroying a large cache of weapons and ammo recently discovered.

October 22, 2013: Two Chadian peacekeepers and a civilian were killed and six people wounded near the Algerian border (Tessalit) when a checkpoint was attacked by a suicide bomber and gunmen. Four of the Islamic terrorist attackers were killed.

October 23, 2013:Some 1,500 troops made up of French (600), Malian (600), and peacekeeper (300) troops launched raids in a northern area known as the Niger Loop. This is a curve of the Niger River between Timbuktu and Gao. The troops raided several locations near the river.

October 30, 2013: Four French men held captive by al Qaeda in North Africa since 2010 were released yesterday and arrived in Paris today. A ransom of over $20 million was believed to have been paid. The French government denied that it paid a ransom but would not discuss the possibility that private sources provided a ransom. While all Western governments admit that paying these ransoms only makes the terror groups stronger and encourages more kidnappings, local politics in Europe usually forces the payment to be made, often clandestinely. The terrorists use the money to buy weapons, bribe local officials, hire locals, and compensate their key employees. The ransom money usually ends up in getting more people killed.

There are also problems with MNLA (which means in French, "Liberation Army of Azawad"). The Tuareg term for their homeland in northern Mali is Azawad and until the June 18th agreement its capital was Kidal. The Mali government was upset that MNLA men controlled most of the rural (and very thinly populated) areas in the north for over a year. France is having a hard time convincing black African politicians from the more populous south that it's worthwhile making concessions to MNLA. The French point out that the Tuareg rebels have been defeating black African troops from the south for generations and there's no quick fix for that. The more immediate threat is the Islamic terrorists and Tuareg cooperation is essential for dealing with the likes of AQIM and Ansar Dine. The Islamic terrorists are largely Arab and Tuareg and their goal, for all intents and purposes, is to enslave the majority black African population of Mali by imposing a religious dictatorship. Black Africans in general do not want to be ruled by Arabs, who look down on black Africans and have been enslaving and exploiting them for over a thousand years. Many Malians understand what the Arab Islamic terrorists are up to here, but the Mali leadership is distracted by power struggles and getting rich (via corruption). It's a sad situation with no easy solution.

November 1, 2013: France still has 3,000 troops in Mali but plans to reduce that to 2,000 by the end of the year. A growing problem in the north is the corruption of the Mali police and government officials, which apparently even the Islamic terrorists can bribe to make possible more attacks. There is also a problem with the UN peacekeeping force (MINUSMA or Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in Mali) which is supposed to have 12,000 personnel but currently has only 5,200. African nations are unwilling or unable to come up with any more. This is one reason why France has agreed to keep 2,000 troops in Mali, rather than the 1,000 as it had previously planned. Foreign donors are also reluctant to provide as much aid money as Mali and the UN want. The problem here is the continued corruption in the Mali government. As before the 2012 rebellion in the north, the army, police, and government bureaucracy are inept and willing to be bought. Efforts to change this has so far failed.

November 1, 2013: In the northern city of Gao, thousands of residents protested the inability of the government to improve living conditions.

November 2, 2013: Two French radio journalists were kidnapped in the north near Kidal. The two were later found dead. Four days later AQIM claimed that the killings were in retaliation for French operations against Islamic terrorists in the north. Further investigation by the French and MNLA revealed that the key to the kidnapping and murder of the two was a former member of AQIM (Ag Bakabo) who had been expelled from the Islamic terrorist group for stealing money (related to drug smuggling). Ag Bakabo offered to kidnap the two Frenchmen in return for being allowed to rejoin AQIM and get a share of the ransom. But about 20 kilometers outside of Kidal, Ag Bakabo's vehicle broke down and it was AQIM policy to kill captives if they were in danger of being freed. Ag Bakabo and his three accomplices could walk away from the disabled vehicle but he could not get his captives to the AQIM camp on foot because of the probability of being spotted by the French was too high. So Ag Bakabo killed the two French captives and fled. Ag Bakabo and his fellow kidnappers are still being sought.

November 4, 2013: In the north (near Menaka) four civilians were killed by a landmine that destroyed their vehicle.

November 8, 2013: Mali soldiers killed three MNLA rebels near the Niger border (100 kilometers east of Menaka). Most MNLA get along with the foreign troops but not with the Mali soldiers, especially those from the south. In this case the MNLA claims the army violated a ceasefire agreement while the army claims that one of their patrols was attacked by bandits. Locals said the violence was part of MNLA resistance to what the rebels call army harassment.

November 13, 2013:Northern Mali: The Sahel time-bomb explodes'

An attack by a group of Islamist extremists in Northern Mali cast a cruel light on the risk of destabilization facing the area and, beyond it, the entire Sahel region. Launched by France on Jan. 11, a military operation dubbed Serval quickly restored the status quo ante. And in rapidly wresting control of the regions exercised by three Islamist groups since April 2012 (Mujao, Ansar Dine and AQIM) the operation even kindled hope of restoring political stability in Bamako. But the hard part is only beginning. Along with hoping to ensure long-term military security in Mali, the Malian authorities are groping uncertainly in a delicate transition period leading to the emergence of a new president. But if it wishes to achieve lasting stability Bamako must pacify the country by reconciling multiple communities among Mali's inhabitants.

November 14, 2013: About fifty MNLA gunmen arrived in Kidal, aboard five trucks. An MNLA leader insisted this was not an attempt to regain control of the town and today was when the MNLA handed back control of several government buildings that it had continued to occupy. Dozens of local Tuareg civilians demonstrated against the handover.

November 15, 2013: In the northeast (Menaka) several mortar shells landed near a military camp but there were no casualties. French forces in the northern desert (220 kilometers west of Tessalit) encountered a pickup truck full of weapons and Islamic terrorists. After a short gun battle the terrorists were killed and the French destroyed the weapons and ammunition and continued their night patrol.

November 19, 2013: Near Gao gunmen attacked and killed some kin of a Mali Army general. The general is Tuareg and the attack is believed to be related to disputes within the Tuareg community over cooperating with the Mali government.

November 20, 2013: Outside the northern town of Kidal, three French soldiers were wounded by a roadside bomb.

November 21, 2013: Mortar shells were fired into the northern city of Gao.

France announced that it had recently killed the second-in-command of Islamic terrorist group Al Mourabitoun near the northern town of Tessalit. This is a new group, formed when two Islamic terrorist factions merged last August. The new group had already been operating, largely in Niger where it had carried out several daring attacks (including a prison break in June and twin bombings in May). One of the merger partners is an al Qaeda splinter group led by Mokhtar Belmokhtar (the planner of the January natural gas facility attack in southern Algeria that got 37 workers killed). Belmokhtar has a reputation for always escaping the many efforts to kill or capture him. Belmokhtar was number two or three in the North African al Qaeda organization (Al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb or AQIM) but formed his own splinter group in late 2012.

November 22, 2013: In the capital a gunman fired on a French police advisor as he left his residence. The Frenchman was wounded and his attacker drove away. Attacks like this are rare in the capital, and it’s unclear who the attacker was.

MNLA means (in French) “Liberation Army of Azawad.” That is the Tuareg term for their homeland in northern Mali, and until the June 18 agreement its capital was Kidal. The Mali government was upset that MNLA men controlled most of the rural (and very thinly populated) areas in the north for over a year. France is having a hard time convincing black African politicians from the more populous southern Mali that it’s worthwhile making concessions to MNLA. The French point out that the Tuareg rebels have been defeating black African troops from the south for generations and there’s no quick fix for that. The more immediate threat are the Islamic terrorists and Tuareg cooperation is essential for dealing with the likes of AQIM, Al Mourabitoun, and Ansar Dine. The Islamic terrorists are largely Arab and Tuareg and their goal, for all intents and purposes, is to enslave the majority black African population of Mali by imposing a religious dictatorship. Black Africans in general do not want to be ruled by Arabs, who look down on black Africans and have been enslaving and exploiting them for over a thousand years. Many Malians understand what the Arab Islamic terrorists are up to here, but the Mali leadership is distracted by power struggles and getting rich (via corruption). It’s a sad situation with no easy solution.

The Islamic terrorists in northern Mali are suffering from a shortage of competent bomb makers, which was obvious from the crude construction of the terrorist bombs used in the north over the last few months. These bombs often do not go off at all or explode prematurely. This has led to the accidental deaths of several terrorists and the failure of some attacks. There appears to be no shortage of manpower for Islamic terrorist groups and France is pressuring Mali to make (and keep) a satisfactory peace deal with MNLA so that these Tuareg tribesmen can help in the hunt for Islamic terrorists.

AQIM (Al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb) has apparently nearly a year of French attacks and an internal split and has taken credit for several recent suicide bomb attacks. Moreover, AQIM is not alone. Some AQIM dissidents went off to found Al Mourabitoun earlier this year. These AQIM dissidents merged with MOJWA (Movement for Oneness and Jihad in West Africa, largely composed of black African Islamic radicals and led by Mauritanians) to form Al Mourabitoun. MOJWA is unique among Islamic terrorist groups because its leadership is black African and the merged unit is led by Arabs. Then there is Islamic terror group Ansar Dine (which controlled Timbuktu in 2012) which is from Mali and led by Tuareg Islamic radicals who are still in the north and operating near Timbuktu and Kidal. Al Mourabitoun appears to be mostly operating outside Mali (in Niger and Libya) but AQIM and Ansari Dine are still in northern Mali and French troops are looking for them.

In a welcome gesture the Netherlands is sending 380 troops (90 of them commandoes), four AH-64 helicopter gunships, and some UAVs to Mali. All this is much needed in northern Mali, where French troops continue to search for Islamic terrorists. The Dutch troops will stay through the end of 2015. The Dutch will be part of the UN peacekeeping force which becomes operational in January. Currently there are about 5,000 foreign troops in Mali and that is to expand to about 10,000 by mid-2014. Meanwhile, France, with about 2,800 troops in Mali, is continuing to shrink this force and will be down to about a thousand early in 2014. Earlier in the year France had 5,000 troops in Mali.

November 23, 2013: Tomorrow a national election will be held in which 1,141 candidates are running for 147 seats in the National Assembly (parliament). There is hope that a new government will do something about the corruption and bad government. That is unlikely, but most of the 6.5 million eligible voters are expected to vote anyway. In the north the government has not really returned yet. Many southern bureaucrats still refuse to move back north. In part this is because their workplaces (especially schools) were damaged or destroyed by the Islamic terrorists who controlled the area for nearly a year. What the Islamic terrorists didn't destroy looters did as the Islamic terrorists were being driven out. Rebuilding has been going slowly and there is a lot of crime as well.

November 23, 2013: In the north (near Gao and the Niger border) fighting between black tribesmen (Peul) and MNLA (Tuareg) rebels left at least a dozen Peul dead over the last few days.

In the north French troops arrested an al Qaeda man who had escaped (in jail break by Nigerian Boko Haram Islamic terrorists) from prison last June. The man was serving 20 years for killing four Saudi Arabian tourists in 2009 and was suspected of killing an American in 2000.

November 27, 2013: In the capital 2012 coup leader and recently retired army officer Amadou Sanogo was arrested and charged with murder, kidnapping and torture.

November 28, 2013: In the north (Kidal) Mali troops opened fire on Tuareg demonstrators. The hostile, pro-MNLA, crowd demanded that Mali troops and UN peacekeepers leave the north. Five demonstrators were wounded by the gunfire.

November 30, 2013: In the north (Menaka) a suicide bomber set off his explosives near a UN peacekeeper base, but the only casualty was the bomber.

December 7, 2013: The EU training team graduated their third battalion of Mali troops infantry. A fourth battalion will finish training by May, when the EU training agreement runs out. It looks like the agreement will be extended another year.

December 9, 2013: In the north (200 kilometers northeast of Timbuktu) a French raid on an al Qaeda base left at least 19 of the Islamic terrorists dead. Much data, weapons and equipment was also seized. This was the largest haul for a single raid so far.

December 12, 2013: MNLA rebels announced an end to the ceasefire with the government and peacekeepers.

December 14, 2013: In the north (Kidal) a suicide car bomber attacked a bank guarded by peacekeepers, killing two of them and wounding seven others.

December 16, 2013: In the north (Kidal) two mortar shells were fired at a peacekeeper compound but there was no damage or casualties.

The government is preparing to prosecute the leader of the army coup in early 2012. Last August the government promoted captain Amadou Sanogo, who led the March 2012 coup, to lieutenant-general, and two weeks later the interim government persuaded Sanogo to retire on a general's pension. This deal was thought to include some guarantees that Sanogo would not be prosecuted for his role in the coup. Earlier (in May) Sanogo apologized for his actions and promised to help repair the damage. After the French invasion last January Sanogo and his fellow mutineers kept their weapons and managed to hold onto some power. The mutineers also quickly agreed to restore civilian government. This past February Sanogo was appointed head of a military reform committee. Many mutineers opposed the use of ECOWAS troops to oust the rebels in the north but did nothing to interfere, largely because of help from Sanogo. In effect, the mutineers have just stepped back, and never surrendered. For his good behavior and decision to make himself useful, Sanogo was promoted. Sanogo remained an opponent of corruption but was still considered a threat to the wealthy families and prominent politicians he deposed in 2012. The families of those killed by Sanogo's supporters last year are angry and with Sanogo disarmed and out of uniform the search for bodies of his victims has yielded several mass graves. Sanogo allies are also threatened and if the new government doesn't do better than the last one there will be another coup, and probably a more brutal one.

The December 15th legislative elections gave recently (in September) elected President Ibrahim Boubacar Keita's party 61 of 147 seats. With some close allies, Keita has a 115 seat majority and control of the government. Keita has promised law and order, less corruption and more economic activity. But they all do that and Malians are waiting to see proof. Mali remains one of the most corrupt places on the planet and that will not change quickly or easily. While the presidential elections brought out 49 percent of voters the two rounds of voting for parliament brought out only 38 and 37 percent. In the north Islamic terrorist threats and inept planning kept a lot of people from voting.

France is also telling its African allies and former colonies that France will no longer act as policeman for Africa and now expects African nations to take care of most peacekeeping. This new policy can be seen in the way France responded to appeals for peacekeepers from CAR (Central African Republic). France sent about a thousand troops, but mainly to protect French citizens and interests. Solving the political problems there is being left to African peacekeepers.

The Islamic terrorists in northern Mali are suffering from a shortage of leaders and technical people. The ongoing French raids and aircraft using smart bombs on terrorist bases has caused lots of irreplaceable losses. There appears to be no shortage of manpower for Islamic terrorist groups and France is pressuring Mali to make (and keep) a satisfactory peace deal with MNLA so that these Tuareg tribesmen can help in the hunt for Islamic terrorists. The loss of leaders and bomb builders, however, is making the Islamic terrorists less effective.

France is also pressuring the Mali government to do more to stop its soldiers from abusing (often killing) Maliian Arabs, Tuaregs and non-black foreigners in the north. France is also angry over Mali officials trying to pressure Mali websites based in France to not report on Mali army atrocities in northern Mali. Foreign reports in Mali are also being harassed by Mali security forces and officials.

December 19, 2013: For over a month now French troops have been hunting down and arresting MNLA members suspected of violent acts against peacekeepers and foreigners in general. MNLA means (in French) “Liberation Army of Azawad”. That is the Tuareg term for their homeland in northern Mali and until the June 18 agreement its capital was Kidal. The Mali government was upset that MNLA men controlled most of the rural (and very thinly populated) areas in the north for over a year after yet another Tuareg rebellion broke out up there in early 2012. France is having a hard time convincing black African politicians from the more populous southern Mali that it’s worthwhile making concessions to MNLA. The French point out that the Tuareg rebels have been defeating black African troops from the south for generations and there’s no quick fix for that. The more immediate threat are the Islamic terrorists and Tuareg cooperation is essential for dealing with the likes of AQIM, Al Mourabitoun and Ansar Dine. The Islamic terrorists are largely Arab and Tuareg and their goal, for all intents and purposes is to enslave the majority black African population of Mali by imposing a religious dictatorship. Black

Africans in general do not want to be ruled by Arabs, who look down on black Africans and have been enslaving and exploiting them for over a thousand years. Many Malians understand what the Arab Islamic terrorists are up to here, but the Mali leadership is distracted by power struggles and getting rich (via corruption). It’s a sad situation with no easy solution. The MNLA is losing patience with the stalled peace talks and the recent MNLA announcement about ending their truce was just a recognition that admission that the MNLA leadership had lost control of many of their members who were willing to resume the fight. France has persuaded the MNLA leadership to continue trying to keep their hotheads in check but the Mali government responded by accusing the French of being MNLA.

November 29, 2013: Mali: Separatists End Ceasefire Following Clashes With Army’

(Reuters, AFP): A rebel separatist group in Mali has declared an end to a five-month ceasefire pact with the government following clashes in the city of Kidal. It follows elections marking a transition to democracy after a 2012 coup. The MLNA, or National Movement for the Liberation of Azawad, which is what the group calls the region they claim, said one person was killed and five others injured on Thursday when Tuareg demonstrators clashed with Mali government troops at an airport while trying to prevent Mali's Prime Minister Oumar Tatam Ly from visiting Kidal. However, the Malian government offered a different explanation, saying its troops fired warning shots after they had been shot at and hit with stones. "What happened (on Thursday) is a declaration of war. We will deliver this war," said Mahamadou Djeri Maiga, vice-president of the MNLA. "Wherever we find the Malian army we will launch the assault against them. It will be automatic. The warnings are over," Maiga said.

Setback to democracy: A ceasefire agreement between the Tuareg rebels and Mali's government was signed in June, paving the way for elections to be held across the country.

The breaking of the ceasefire comes as Malians prepare for a second round of voting in parliamentary elections, after an initial voting round on November 24 failed to reveal majority winners in most constituencies.

Turnout in the poll was low at 38.4 percent and Malians are due to vote again on December 15. About half of the country's eligible voters participated in a runoff presidential election in July, which was won by Ibrahim Boubacar Keita.

The elections were supposed to signal a fresh start for the west African nation, which was plunged into chaos last year when a secessionist Tuareg uprising in the north of the country led to a military coup in March 2012 and the overthrow of President Amadou Toumani Toure.

The Tuareg seized control of an area larger than France in the chaos that followed, only to be ousted by al Qaeda-linked Islamist groups. They, in turn, were driven out by a French-led ground and air offensive in January 2013. But, as Friday's breaking of the ceasefire pact shows, tensions in Mali remain high.

December 15, 2013: Mali Holds Second-Round Election’

(AFP, dpa, AP) Mali's second round parliamentary election is under way, overshadowed by fatal clashes in its vast northern desert region.

Jihadists claim responsibility for the killings in Kidal of two UN peacekeepers from Senegal.

Polling began slowly in Mali's capital Bamako on Sunday as doubts remained about the western African country's recovery in the wake of last year's military coup and unrest that ultimately prompted French intervention. EU observers urged Mali's 6.5 million eligible voters to turn out.

Sunday's voting was to cap a recovery that was marked in June by a peace deal and in August by the election of President Ibrahim Boubacar Keita.

At stake on Sunday were 128 seats in Mali's 147-seat national assembly.

In the first round on November 24, which drew a turnout of only 37 percent, just 19 seats were decided. One of those already elected is Soumaila Cisse of the Timbuktu region, who challenged Keita in August's presidential election.

Observing Sunday's vote were hundreds of international and Malian monitors - mainly in safer regions of Bamako and central Mali.

Killings in Kidal: The election was preceded by the deaths on Saturday of two UN peacekeepers from Senegal in the northeastern city Kidal.

Four Malian soldiers were also seriously wounded when a suicide bomber ploughed an explosives-laden car into a bank, which the troops were guarding.

Until recently, Kidal had been a northeastern rebel bastion.

Malian jihadist Ould Badi told the French news agency AFP that Sunday's bombing was in retaliation for the French-led military intervention launched in January against Islamist rebels in "Azawad," the ethnic Tuareg name for northern Mali.

'Huge' operation: AFP quoted military sources on Sunday as saying that the French army had carried out a "huge" operation against armed Islamists north of the desert caravan town of Timbuktu over the past week.

In January, France sent troops to its former colony. They and African troops were then tasked by the UN Security Council with providing security alongside the Malian army for the elections.

The crisis began early last year when rebels of the National Movement for the Liberation of Azawad (MNLA) launched a string of Tuareg insurgencies in the north.

A subsequent coup in Bamako led to chaos, and armed Islamist extremists linked to Al-Qaeda overpowered the Tuareg to seize control of Mali's northern half.

Broadcasting resumes: Last week, public radio and television was restarted in Kidal. The station had been forced off the air nine months ago by the rebels. The building was handed back in November in line with the June peace deal. Early last week, the European Union offered Bamako 12 million euros ($16.5million) to help reform its justice system during a visit by Keita to Strasbourg. Earlier this year, an international donor conference had raised 3.2 billion euros for the African country.

December 19, 2013: President Ibrahim Boubacar Keita's RPM party won 67 of 147 seats in the recent legislative election and thus is assured of controlling parliament with a coalition it will dominate. These recent elections are the final condition for releasing $3.25 billion in foreign aid.

December 23, 2013: The former Islamic police chief of Gao, Aliou Mahamar Toure, was arrested outside Gao where he was hiding. Toure was in power for most of 2012 and run out of Gao in January 2013 by French troops. Toure was noted for his harsh application of Islamic law and destruction of “un-Islamic” antiquities and shrines.

December 24, 2013: The government is negotiating a peace deal and amnesty with Islamic terror group Ansar Dine (which controlled Timbuktu in 2012). This is the only Islamic terror group native to Mali and is led by Tuareg Islamic radicals who have long sought autonomy for the Tuareg in the north. These peace talks have been going on since early 2013 and have resulted in Ansar Dine halting terror attacks over the last few months.

December 28, 2013: Former president Amadou Toumani Toure, who was overthrown by a military coup in early 2012, will be tried for treason. The army rebelled in reaction to the corruption and ineptness of the Toure government. The army blamed this on their early 2012 defeats in the north.

France has begun operating one of its new RQ-9 Reaper UAVs in Mali. Earlier in 2013 France decided to buy two RQ-9s and by the middle of the year had upped the order to a dozen. This was apparently with the understanding that one or two would be available for French use in Mali before the end of the year. This was less of a problem than it appears because the U.S. was already (since January 2013) been operating RQ-9s in Niger, next door to Mali and the British have their own RQ-9 operations center (where satellite links allow UAV operators to control RQ-9s anywhere on the planet) in Britain that could be used to quickly train French operators. Facilities are also available in the United States, which is also where RQ-9 ground crews are trained. The U.S. apparently delivered on its end of the deal and France got its operators and ground support personnel up to speed on time. Currently two French Harfang UAVs are present in Mali (operating from neighboring Niger) along with some American RQ-9s. The Harfang is based on an Israeli design and is similar to the 1.1 ton U.S. Predator. The larger RQ-9 weighs 4.6 tons.

December 29, 2013: Mali Ex-President Amadou Toure to Be Tried for Treason’

Daily Trust: Malian government has announced plans to investigate former President Amadou Toumani Toure for high treason. The office of Prime Minister Oumar Tatam Ly said in a statement that it had presented the case to Mali's highest court. The government accuses Mr Toure of failing in his duty as commander of the armed forces when Islamist militants attacked the country's north last year. Mr Toure was ousted in a military coup in April 2012 and fled to Senegal. The coup plunged Mali into chaos, allowing an alliance of ethnic Tuareg separatists and Islamists to take over the whole northern desert region.

Earlier this year, the al-Qaeda-linked insurgents were ousted from the major towns with the help of France and West African troops. Government spokesman Mahamane Baby said Mr Toure would be investigated for "his participation in an exercise to demoralise the army by naming incompetent officers and soldiers, whose patriotism was questionable, to high-level posts".

Mr Toure formally resigned in April last year, as part of a deal for the soldiers to hand back power. Mr Toure first seized power in 1991 from long-time military ruler Moussa Traore. He then organised multi -party elections and stood down before returning to power after winning polls in 2002. The coup, which was partly triggered by anger at government corruption and failure to equip the armed forces, took place weeks before Mr Toure was due to step down. His toppling caused a rift between pro-junta soldiers, known as green berets, and those loyal to the former president, known as red berets.

December 30, 2013: Near the northern town of Kidal peacekeepers found a stash of 5.6 tons of explosives (ammonium nitrate), enough for twenty or so car bombs. Also found were 40 hand grenades, another favorite terrorist weapon. Ammonium nitrate is a powdered fertilizer that, when mixed with diesel or fuel oil, can be made to explode with a detonator. While only about 40 percent of the power as the same weight of TNT, these fertilizer bombs are effective as roadside bombs. But they are bulkier, and a slurry is usually mixed in a plastic jug or a barrel to produce a bulky liquid bomb. Moreover, the fuel oil must be mixed thoroughly and in exactly the right proportion, otherwise the explosive effect is much less than expected. Islamic terrorists have been using ammonium nitrate more frequently because military and commercial explosives have been harder to get.

January 1, 2014: The government ordered its citizens out of CAR because of the continued violence there. About 500 Malians were in CAR and the government made arrangements to bring most of them home.

January 4, 2014: One of the more active Islamic terrorist groups, Al Mourabitoun, issued threats against France via the Internet. This group is seen as more of a threat than AQIM (Al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb) which has suffered greatly during a year of French attacks and has also gone through an internal split. Some AQIM dissidents went off to found Al Mourabitoun last August. These AQIM dissidents merged with MOJWA (Movement for Oneness and Jihad in West Africa, largely composed of black African Islamic radicals and led by Mauritanians) to form Al Mourabitoun. MOJWA is unique among Islamic terrorist groups because its leadership is black African and the merged unit is led by Arabs. Al Mourabitoun appears to be mostly operating outside Mali (in Niger and Libya) but AQIM is still in northern Mali and French troops are looking for them. While not numerous, Al Mourabitoun has some imaginative, aggressive and energetic leaders. But this group has not yet been detected outside of North Africa. Because of this latest threat everyone will keep looking.

January 10, 2014: In the north three Chadian peacekeepers were wounded when they clashed with armed men. It was unclear if these were Tuareg rebels or Islamic terrorists.

January 12, 2014: Mali and Mauritania signed an agreement on counter-terror operations. Both nations promised to not offer each other’s rebels sanctuary. Allowing rebels from a neighboring nation to have sanctuary is a common technique worldwide to persuade a troublesome neighbor to cooperate. Both nations will also more closely coordinate intelligence work and border security to better detect and catch Islamic terrorists. Mauritania has been very active against Islamic terrorists since 2010. That’s mainly because the al Qaeda drug smuggling operation runs through Mauritania on its way to Algeria and Europe. The local Islamic terrorists have long sustained themselves moving South American cocaine Guinea-Bissau after it has been flown in from South America.

Many such ancient customs die hard in this part of the world. Yet there is also a tradition of tolerance between the blacks and the lights, but the corruption of the black dominated elected government has caused growing resentment among the Tuaregs of the north. Al Qaeda does not openly preach racism but it implies that Arabs and other “lights” will prevail over blacks in areas where the two groups are present. In all -black countries like Nigeria, all-black Islamic terror groups like Boko Haram promise that Moslems will dominate non-Moslems and imply that black Moslems will play leading roles. Islamic radicals are an ancient Moslem custom that flares up every few generations, makes a mess and is rejected for a while. Only some fundamental changes within the Moslem community will banish this deadly custom forever.

This sort of animosity between dark skinned Africans and lighter skinned people from the north has been around as long as the two groups have been in contact. Arabs first moved south of the Sahara in large numbers over a thousand years ago and often came as conquerors and slavers. Although many of the black Africans encountered converted to Islam, the lighter skinned Arabs (including the Tuareg and Berbers of North Africa) considered themselves superior. This racist attitude has persisted and the black Africans often reciprocate. This is one reason why the majority Tuareg of northern Mali constantly rebel. Not only is the Mali government corrupt but it is dominated by black Africans, which is what 90 percent of Malians are. Officially, Islam and most African governments deny that such ethnic tensions exist. This in itself is progress, but the animosities remain and often become quite deadly. The slaving also continues and sometimes gets into the news. This happened a lot in Sudan since the 1990s as the government encouraged Arabized tribes to raid non-Moslem black African tribes and take slaves. In northern Mali retreating al Qaeda men sometimes took newly enslaved blacks with them.

When French troops moved into northern Mali in January 2013 to shut down what had been an Islamic terrorist sanctuary for most of 2012 the local black Africans got a chance for some payback. For months French troops were not able to stop revenge attacks. Black Africans in the north would single out “light skin” (Arab or Tuareg) neighbors who had been too friendly with the Islamic terrorist occupiers and demand that these people be punished. Malian troops have arrested hundreds of these collaborators, who are usually eager to cooperate. But some of the “lights” were tortured and at least a few killed. The Mali soldiers said they were punishing murderers and rapists but mainly they are out to torment the hated “lights”. Despite efforts by foreign peacekeepers to halt the ethnic and racial violence some of it continues in the north and it is not unknown throughout the southern Sahara when the conditions are right.

France is finding that getting Islamic terrorists out of northern Mali, and the Sahara Desert in general is very difficult. A large part of the problem was the past refusal of Western nations to pursue Islamic terrorists defeated years ago in places like Algeria, Morocco and Libya. The survivors of these 1990s defeats went south into the desert and established lucrative smuggling (of drugs and people) and kidnapping (of Westerners) operations that brought in over $10 million a year. This enabled hundreds of hardcore and experienced Islamic terrorists to continue recruiting and planning new terror attacks against Moslem and Western nations. While a lot of that money was diverted to operating expenses (including bribing, or hiring, locals) and corruption (al Qaeda documents captured over the years indicates this is still a problem) there was enough left to buy more weapons than they needed and spreading the word that Islamic terrorism was the way to go and it paid well. This appealed to a lot of young men who had bleak economic prospects and were always up for some adventure, especially if it involved getting a gun, a license to kill or loot and regular pay. Another thing that kept the Islamic radical pot boiling was the existing ethnic and racial tensions in the region. There was a lot of ethnic and racial animosity in the southern Sahara, especially in northern Mali. It was most intense in the major cities. Black Africans living in the north, usually in the cities, are often eager for revenge against Arabs (the most violent Islamic terrorists were Arab) and Tuaregs (the lighter skinned tribesmen of the north who have been regularly rebelling against the rule of the black African majority) whenever the opportunity presented itself.

French casualties in the last year have been low (about 20 including seven killed) but French voters resent the billions spent in Africa, what with all the economic problems at home. Less discussed is the realization that this year of military effort is not likely to make a permanent change in Mali. The government is still corrupt and not likely to change. The black majority still dominates the government and is still not willing to grant the autonomy the Tuaregs and Arabs in the north want. The problems of tribalism and ethnic strife have been around for thousands of years and getting Africa to catch up with the Eurasian nations has been slow going. It was only in the last few centuries that European nations got past tribalism and it took two World Wars to suppress a lot of the ethnic stress. Progress has been slow in Africa, but it is happening. In Mali reformers have another opportunity to reduce the corruption and tribalism, but no one is expects a big change.

January 15, 2014: France has been fighting in Mali for a year now. There were 4,500 French troops a year ago, now there are only 2,500 and that will be reduced to 1,600 within a month. There are 12,600 peacekeepers in Mali, most of them African and most of them in the north. For the last month French troops have also been doing peacekeeping work in CAR (Central African Republic) far to the east. While the Mali operation had popular support in France (where Islamic terrorism has been a deadly problem for decades) the CAR operation does not involve an Islamic terrorists (although there is some fighting between Moslems and Christians) and is much less popular.

January 15, 2014: China has sent a second group of 245 peacekeepers to Mali. This will put 380 Chinese troops in Mali.

January 16, 2014: Peace negotiations with the Tuareg rebels (MNLA) collapsed as the Tuareg representatives left the UN sponsored talks in Algeria. The Tuareg believe that the government is not negotiating with any sincerity and is just going through the motions to please foreign aid donors.

January 17, 2014: In the north a notorious al Qaeda judge (Ag Alfousseyni) was arrested. Alfousseyni was noted for imposing harsh punishments in Timbuktu for violations of Islamic law. He ordered public executions and mutilations and also had women whipped for not dressing properly when they went outside.

January 19, 2014: The government has upgraded already close security cooperation with Algeria, which has increased its patrols along its Mali border over the last year. The new agreements make possible more joint operations against Islamic terrorists operating near the border.

January 20, 2014: In the north (near Kidal) five Chadian peacekeepers were wounded when their vehicle hit a mine.

January 22, 2014: In the north a series of French sweeps and raids resulted in 11 Islamic terrorists dead and one French soldier wounded. During December 19 Islamic terrorists were killed in the north and the process of hunting down and eliminating (killing or capturing) the remaining ones is tedious. There are plenty of places to hide in the north. The Islamic terrorists can buy cooperation from the scattered tribesmen in the rural north and blend in. However, when the terrorists go to launch an operation they become easier to identify and that's when they are spotted. France is using Tuareg allies to help establish and run an intelligence network in the north. The tribesmen will inform for cash, as well as hide terrorists for money. Some northerners have been known to do both, but that's dangerous as al Qaeda tends to remember and seek revenge. The most recent operation was apparently directed at Al Mourabitoun, which recently issued threats against France via the Internet. This group is seen as more of a threat than AQIM (Al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb) which has suffered greatly during a year of French attacks and has also gone through an internal split. Some AQIM dissidents went off to found Al Mourabitoun in August of 2013. These AQIM dissidents merged with MOJWA (Movement for Oneness and Jihad in West Africa, largely composed of black African Islamic radicals and led by Mauritanians) to form Al Mourabitoun. MOJWA is unique among Islamic terrorist groups because its leadership is black African and the merged unit is led by Arabs. Al Mourabitoun appears to be operating outside Mali (in Niger and Libya) but has moved some people back into northern Mali and French troops are looking for them. While not numerous, Al Mourabitoun has some imaginative, aggressive and energetic leaders.

February 3, 2014: Al Qaeda has formed a new media group (al Sahel Media Center) to put out a more positive spin on the dire situation al Qaeda and other Islamic terrorists face in northern Mali. The news from Western and Moslem media about northern Mali has been consistently negative as far as the Islamic terrorists are concerned and some balance is needed to help with recruiting and fund raising.

February 4, 2014: In the north (Gao) two rockets were fired at a nearby French base, but missed. This happened when a senior French officer was visiting but no one took credit for the attack.

Economic disruptions caused by Islamic terrorist activity in northern Mali over the last two years have caused persistent food shortages. This has been aggravated by similar problems throughout the region (northern Nigeria, Sudan and Central African Republic/CAR) that have made it difficult to buy food locally. Global recession and seemingly endless demands for aid in the Sahel have made the usual donors less willing to continue giving. Currently 800,000 people in northern Mali are completely dependent on food aid and another three million have poor access to food.

The UN is trying to persuade the government to conduct serious peace negotiations with the MNLA. This is the main Tuareg rebel group in the north and they want autonomy that the black majority in the south is not interested in granting. Earlier this month MNLA walked away from UN arranged peace negotiations because of this. The UN and France point out that the Tuareg (who are related to the ancient Egyptians, not the darker complexioned Bantu peoples of the south) have refused to submit to outside rule for thousands of years and it would be wise to grant them their autonomy and move on. MNLA means (in French) “Liberation Army of Azawad”. That is the Tuareg term for their homeland in northern Mali and until the June 2013 agreement its capital was Kidal.

The Mali government was upset that MNLA men controlled most of the rural (and very thinly populated) areas in the north for over a year after yet another Tuareg rebellion broke out up there in early 2012. The French point out that the Tuareg rebels have been defeating black African troops from the south for generations and there's no quick fix for that. The more immediate threat are the Islamic terrorists and Tuareg cooperation is essential for dealing with the likes of AQIM, Al Mourabitoun and Ansar Dine. The Islamic terrorists are largely Arab and Tuareg and their goal, for all intents and purposes is to enslave the majority black African population of Mali by imposing a religious dictatorship. Black Africans in general do not want to be ruled by Arabs, who look down on black Africans and have been enslaving and exploiting them for over a thousand years. Many Malians understand what the Arab Islamic terrorists are up to here, but the Mali leadership is distracted by power struggles and getting rich (via corruption). It's a sad situation with no easy solution. The MNLA is losing patience with the stalled peace talks and the MNLA leadership fears they are losing control of many of their members who are willing to resume the fight. France has persuaded the MNLA leadership to continue trying to keep their hotheads in check but the Mali government responded by accusing the French of being MNLA allies.

A recent study concluded that Islamic terrorist activity in North Africa and the Sahel (the semi-desert region below the Sahara Desert and north of the forests of Central Africa) increased 60 percent in 2013. This was a result of the aftermath of the Arab Spring uprisings that overthrew the governments of Libya and Tunisia. That contributed to the rebellion in northern Mali in 2012. Eliminating the police state governments of Tunisia and Libya, and freeing many Islamic terrorists from prison, was a huge boost to these terrorist organizations and it's going to take a while to undo the damage.

February 5, 2014: France and the UN are confident that the Mali peacekeeping force will be at full strength (12,000 personnel) by July. Most of these troops are African, but thousands will be from elsewhere, including China. Currently there are only 6,400 peacekeepers in Mali (most in the troubled north). Meanwhile France has reorganized its forces in the region. The 3,000 French troops are at bases in Mali, Niger, Chad, Ivory Coast and they are now organized to provide quick reaction forces anywhere in the region. The base in Ivory Coast specializes in logistics, bringing in supplies and equipment by ship and then getting to where it is needed in the region. For the foreseeable future France will maintain the troop level at 3,000. These forces will continue to handle counter-terrorism efforts in northern Mali and elsewhere as needed. This new arrangement is meant to be flexible enough to deal with whatever the Islamic terrorists might do in the region. To that end the American AFRICOM is cooperating with the French to provide specialized capabilities like aerial tankers or additional airlift as well as intelligence collecting (satellites and UAVs) and American Special Forces in the region. France and the United States have cooperated like this in Africa since 2001. This does not get much publicity, but it has paid off several times, most often in Somalia and in Mali.

February 7, 2014: In the north (near Gao) Islamic terrorists from MOJWA ambushed two vehicles and killed 24 Tuareg civilians. Six more Tuareg were killed in a nearby camp. MOJWA accused the Tuareg of being traitors for making peace with the French and the Mali government. There 30 deaths were originally blamed on tribal tensions (over disputed grazing land) but it was later found to be MOJWA was at fault.

February 8, 2014: In the north (between Gao and Kidal) a vehicle with five Malian aid workers disappeared.

February 11, 2014: An Islamic terrorist group announced it had, on the 8th, kidnapped the five Malians working for the Red Cross and another foreign group. The kidnappers said they were from MOJW A (Movement for Oneness and Jihad in West Africa, largely composed of black African Islamic radicals and led by Mauritanians). That was odd because MOJWA was now supposed to be part of a new group. In August 2013 some al Qaeda dissidents created Al Mourabitoun by merging with MOJWA. As many suspected the creation of Al Mourabitoun involved only some factions of MOJWA. This makes sense as Al Mourabitoun is led by Arabs while MOJWA was unique among Islamic terrorist groups because its leadership is black African and many MOJWA men were not happy about taking orders from Arabs. Al Mourabitoun appears to be operating outside Mali (in Niger and Libya) but some MOJWA men are obviously still in Mali and looking for a payday to help them survive. By early March there was no news about ransom negotiations. That's because the official police with most Western and African nations is not to pay ransom. That's because the cash just funds more kidnappings and other bad behavior. The unofficial policy in many countries is to pay the ransom and say you didn't.

February 16, 2014: In the north (Timbuktu) three rockets landed on the outskirts of the city but the explosions caused no damage or casualties.

February 18, 2014: In the north Tuareg and Arab rebels agreed to confine their armed men in 30 locations (camps and compounds) which will receive foreign aid. This will continue until a long-term peace deal can be worked out with the government. Those who violate this deal will be hunted down by foreign peacekeepers. This is an incentive to stay put because the African and French peacekeepers have demonstrated their ability to find and kill armed men who are causing problems.

February 20, 2014: Germany has agreed to contribute more troops to form a joint French-German brigade in Mali. There are 102 German troops in Mali now and another 150 are on the way. By the end of the year there will be closer to a thousand, matching the number of French troops in Mali and enough to fill out the Franco-German peacekeeping brigade.

February 26, 2014: In the north, two foreign aid workers were wounded when their vehicle hit a landmine near the local airport.

In response France, Italy, Britain, Spain, the Netherlands and Germany have joined with most North African and Sahel in an agreement to share information on Islamic terrorists operating in northern Africa and the Sahel. The European countries will offer military and economic assistance in fighting Islamic terrorism in the region, especially to nations down there that cooperate. That does not address the fundamental problem of too many people in a region that is becoming more inhospitable decade by decade.

Normally the increasingly severe droughts in the Sahel would halt population growth and force people to move south to where there was more water. That was happening until the Europeans showed up in the 19th century with all their technology and rules. By the 1960s the Europeans were largely gone but they left behind lots of life-saving tech and borders. The borders made it more difficult for starving populations to flee the Sahel. The West responded with food aid to the Sahel and that was so successful that the populations in the Sahel kept growing in an area that could not sustain them. So now we have constant conflict across the Sahel. Thus is should be no surprise that Islamic terrorist activity in North Africa and the Sahel increased 60 percent in 2013. This was a result of the aftermath of the Arab Spring uprisings that overthrew the governments of Libya and Tunisia. That contributed to the rebellion in northern Mali in 2012. Eliminating the police state governments of Tunisia and Libya, and freeing many Islamic terrorists from prison, was a huge boost to these terrorist organizations and it’s going to take a while to undo the damage. These Islamic terrorists find many eager recruits in the Sahel, because there are few other prospects there for young men.

This all began a thousand years ago when the population of the Sahel was less than a tenth of what it is now. A century ago, the Sahel population had already doubled. Now it's more than twelve times larger than it was back when much of the land was well watered and usable for grazing or crops. All this population growth was because of superior Western technology and public health practices. Yeah, it's all the fault of the evil Westerners, but long-term climate change is actually the larger villain. The Sahel has been dry for the last 1,500 years. During the last ice age, which ended 12,000 years ago, the Sahel was more like the American Midwest. But ever since the ice age ended, it kept getting drier and drier. That was happening even during the time of the Roman Empire, and the people back then noticed, and even left us a few notes on the matter. All this has been well documented.

The unrest in northern Mali is part of a larger problem common throughout the Sahel (the semi-desert region below the Sahara Desert that stretches from the Atlantic to the Red Sea). There are too many people, not enough water but not enough incentive or opportunity for the people to move or agree among themselves to settle the many disputes over limited resources. That's because for over half a century there has been a growing number of aid efforts that prevent mass starvation but not much else.

There are still about 200,000 refugees from the north down in the south. The economic and security situation in the north is still too unsettled to encourage all refugees to return. In the south they have security, which makes it easier for the foreign aid groups to operate and provide food and other necessities. Why risk that by going home to the north where Islamic terrorists and bandits are still roaming about and the economy is still a shambles. At its peak last year there were 350,000 refugees, and many people did return home or settle in the south outside refugee camps. After all, most of the refugees were originally southerners. Some still had family and other connections down south. But many did not and they are stuck in the camps.

Mali remains as poor and dysfunctional as ever. Donor countries are encouraging the government to crack down on the corruption but too many Malians still find this an unnatural act and are not comfortable with it. Most Malians would like a clean government but not enough of those with the skills or connection to get a leadership role in the government are willing to make a stand for a corruption-free administration. It happens in Africa, but not easily.

March 1, 2014: Over a thousand armed Islamic terrorists are believed to remain in the north. The security forces up there (foreign peacekeepers, mostly African, Malian troops and pro-government Tuareg militias) have made life very difficult for the Islamic terrorists. These outlaws can get by in remote villages if they have cash to pay the locals for supplies and silence. But terrorist activity tends to be noted by the intelligence network the French have established. Using aerial reconnaissance and electronic monitoring as well as a network of tribal informers (especially among the Tuareg) the French find out about anything out-of-the-ordinary and can react quickly with aerial surveillance (via UAV) and smart bombs or Hellfire missiles. French troops then show up to collect evidence, or arrive first if it's unclear, from the air, who to hit with a missile or bomb. The Islamic terrorists are trying to adapt. Even though many of the French troops are pulling out, the bombers and UAVs remain. Some of the African peacekeepers are also very good fighters and the French intelligence network is still there as well. Most Islamic terrorists simply moved to Libya, Niger or other areas in the region. But al Qaeda wants to resume using Mali for its drug smuggling operation and some of the Islamic terrorists are from northern Mali. So al Qaeda provides cash to maintain some people in what is a hostile atmosphere. The Islamic terrorists are still there and some will be there no matter how intense the counterterrorism efforts are. So the pain remains the same, although there's a lot less of it now.

March 8, 2014: Officials from Mali and Algeria met in Algeria to work out ways the two countries could improve security on their mutual border. Mali is being very cooperative because they want the border reopened. Algeria closed the official border crossings in January 2013 to make it more difficult for Islamic terrorists to get into Algeria from Mali. This shut down trade and that hurt Mali more than Algeria. Meanwhile Algeria sent more troops to the border area and went after the smugglers and others trying to cross illegally. Mali is willing to coordinate efforts to secure the border and if a mutually agreeable deal can be worked out the border will reopen.

March 11, 2014: Islamic terrorist groups are calling on their followers in the West to carry out attacks on, and preferably in, France. This is revenge for French success at crushing Islamic terrorist groups in Mali and a desperate effort to use the threat of terror to get the French to withdraw from Mali. That is unlikely. The French have tried appeasement in the past and found that Islamic terrorists were divided into too many factions, including many would not make deals, or if they did would not keep their end of the bargain. The French and many other European nations learned that lesson the hard way over the last three decades and are less and less willing to cut the Islamic terrorists any slack. It's become a death match.

March 14, 2014: In the north a French smart bomb killed a prominent Islamic terrorist leader (Omar Ould Hamaha) who has worked for al Qaeda, Ansar Dine and MUJAO. The U.S. offered a $3 million reward for Hamaha, dead or alive. Humaga is also close with even more notorious Islamic terrorist leader Mokhtar Belmokhtar. So taking Hamaha alive would have been preferable. Unfortunately guys like this know they are being tracked and targeted and stay on the move. Trying to organize a ground operation to capture him alive risked having him move and disappear again.

March 15, 2014: The leader of MUJAO (Abu Dar Dar), long sought by the French, turned himself in. The increasing success of aerial reconnaissance followed by smart bomb attacks may have had something to do with it.

March 21, 2014: The U.S. State Department issued a travel warning advising Americans to stay away from northern Mali (because of bandits and Islamic terrorists) and the Mauritanian border in general (kidnappers, some of them Islamic terrorists).

March 22, 2014: The UN has discovered massive fraud among Malian refugees who fled to Burkina Faso. Initial registration of refugees there yielded over 100,000 people and aid was distributed to that number. But when some staff began to suspect double-dipping (refugees signing up multiple times or for dependents they did not have) a reregistration program was undertaken which included the use of electronic devices that can quickly capture fingerprints and iris scans. When that process was complete there were only 34,000 refugees. The main offenders were the Tuareg, who tried to get around the biometrics by making deals to borrow local children (for a fee) to pretend to be refugees. The extra aid supplies would be sold in markets. The hired children scam can be handled by questioning the bogus kids and their "parents". Another problem is local aid officials who tolerate the double-dipping. Sometimes corruption is involved but often the foreign aid officials are simply eager to get their "clients" as much aid as possible, any way they can. This sort of thing used to be kept quiet but is now widely known in the donor nations and is another reason why the UN is having a hard time getting donor nations to give.

For his good behavior and decision to make himself useful, Sanogo was promoted. Sanogo remained an opponent of corruption but was still considered a threat to the wealthy families and prominent politicians he deposed in 2012. The families of those killed by Sanogo's supporters last year are angry and with Sanogo disarmed and out of uniform the search for bodies of his victims yielded several mass graves. Sanogo allies are also threatened and if the new government doesn't do better than the last one there will be another coup, and probably a more brutal one.

Many Malians believe that the core problem is the endemic corruption. Both Toure and Sanogo openly pledged to do something about the corruption. Toure actually did and was much more effect than his very corrupt and brutal predecessors. But in absolute terms Toure was corrupt, because that's how you get things done in Mali. Sanogo feels he did the best he could and is now being prosecuted to please the foreigners and the wealthy Malian families his coup threatened.

Most Malians (at least in the south where 90 percent of the population lives) are paying a lot of attention to the prosecution of two former national leaders; Amadou Toumani Toure, who was removed by an army coup in March 2012 as a result of the successful Tuareg uprising in the north) and Amadou Sanogo, who led the March 2012 coup. Toure has been in power since the 1990s and is accused of corruption. Sanogo is accused of killing those who opposed his military government. In 2013 the interim government persuaded Sanogo to retire on a general's pension. This deal was thought to include some guarantees that Sanogo would not be prosecuted for his role in the coup. Earlier (in May) Sanogo apologized for his actions and promised to help repair the damage. After the 2013 French invasion Sanogo and his fellow mutineers kept their weapons and managed to hold onto some power. The mutineers also quickly agreed to restore civilian government. In effect, the mutineers just stepped back, and never surrendered.

Ansar Dine (which controlled Timbuktu) was from Mali and led by Tuareg Islamic radicals. MUJAO (Movement for Unity and Jihad in West Africa) controlled Gao and was from neighboring Mauritania. Al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM) has members from all over North Africa, but mostly from Algeria. MUJAO (also known as MUJWA) is basically a Mauritanian faction of AQIM and there was some tension between the two groups. AQIM had the most money and weapons and used this to exercise some control over the other two radical groups (who outnumbered AQIM in Mali). Both these groups are sometimes at odds with Ansar Dine, which felt it should be in charge because it was Malian. Until late 2012 all three groups cooperated in order to maintain their control of the north. Then Ansar Dine began negotiating with the Mali government for a separate peace and some kind of compromise over Tuareg autonomy in the north. In part this was because MUJAO and AQIM were bringing in reinforcements from Morocco, Western Sahara, Algeria, Pakistan, Egypt, Yemen, Nigeria, and Sudan and threatened to reduce the area Ansar Dine controlled. Ansar Dine saw itself as the only Malian group in the Islamic radical government up north and was determined to defend Tuareg interests against the many foreigners in MUJAO (which also has Malian members) and especially AQIM (which wanted to run everything). Ansar Dine saw AQIM as a bunch of gangsters, dependent on its relationship with drug gangs (al Qaeda moves the drugs north to the Mediterranean coast) and kidnappers (who hold Europeans for multi-million dollar ransoms). All this cash gave AQIM a lot of power, both to buy weapons and hire locals. With the high unemployment in the north and the impressive image of Islamic warriors, working for AQIM was an attractive prospect for many young men. Most of those new recruits deserted as their employers fled the advancing French. The Tuareg members of MUJAO and Ansar Dine could find locals in the north to shelter them while the foreigners (mainly from AQIM) had to flee in early 2013 because they were too easily spotted by Mali civilians and pointed out to the French, Malian and other African troops who now occupy the north. In the first six months of 2013 all three groups suffered heavy losses in Mali, either from deaths or desertions. Many non-Mali Islamic terrorists fled and sought new groups to join. There was some good hiding places in the far north, near the Algerian and Libyan borders and this is where the French have been looking intently since late 2013.

In addition to the ethnic element, there are still a lot of Islamic terrorists and radicals in northern Mali. Three different Islamic radical groups (Ansar Dine, MUJAO and AQIM) took control of the northern portion of the country in 2012 but were largely run out in early 2013 by a French-led force. Along the way the three groups were often battling each other and the three still survive, in much diminished numbers, in the north.

The Islamic terrorists are largely Arab and Tuareg and their goal, for all intents and purposes is to enslave the majority black African population of Mali by imposing a religious dictatorship. Black Africans in general do not want to be ruled by Arabs, who look down on black Africans and have been enslaving and exploiting them for over a thousand years. Many Malians understand what the Arab Islamic terrorists are up to here but the Mali leadership is often distracted by power struggles and getting rich (via corruption). It's a sad situation with no easy solution. The MNLA is losing patience with the stalled peace talks and the MNLA leadership fears they are losing control of many of their members who are willing to resume the fight. France has persuaded the MNLA leadership to continue trying to keep their hotheads in check but the Mali government responded by accusing the French of being MNLA allies. Apparently the hardliners still dominate the MNLA leadership because the breakaway CPA consists largely run by more moderate Tuaregs. The longer the government stalls on negotiating the fate of the north, the fewer moderates there will be up there. The UN points out that foreign aid will be difficult to obtain if there is another Tuareg uprising that is seen to be the result of the Mali government refusing to negotiate. Down south the problem is that any concessions to the Tuareg is political poison and most of the politicians down there are ready to jump on anyone who "gives in" to the Tuareg.

MNLA means (in French) "Liberation Army of Azawad". That is the Tuareg term for their homeland in northern Mali and until the June 2013 MNLA cease fire deal its capital was Kidal. The Mali government was upset that MNLA men had controlled most of the rural (and very thinly populated) areas in the north for over a year after yet another Tuareg rebellion broke out up there in early 2012. The French point out that the Tuareg rebels have been defeating black African troops from the south for generations and there's no quick fix for that. The more immediate threat are the Islamic terrorists and Tuareg cooperation is essential for dealing with the likes of AQIM, Al Mourabitoun and Ansar Dine.

Disputes within the MNLA (the main Tuareg rebel group in the north) have caused a large number of MNLA members to go off during March and form the CPA (Coalition for the People of Azawad), which claims to be more willing to negotiate a peace deal that keeps the north as part of Mali. Many in MNLA want a degree of autonomy for the Tuareg north that would leave more numerous blacks in the south with little say in the Tuareg north. A utonomy is what the black majority in the south is not interested in granting. Early in 2014 MNLA walked away from UN arranged peace negotiations because of this. The UN and France point out that the Tuareg (who are related to the ancient Egyptians, not the darker complexioned Bantu peoples of the south) have refused to submit to outside rule for thousands of years and it would be wise to grant them their autonomy and move on.

The U.S. has concluded that North Africa and the Sahel (the semi-desert area just below the Sahara) should be the focus of major counter-terrorism efforts. France is the ideal partner in this because the French have better political and business connections throughout the Sahel. Many countries here used to be French colonies and French policy has been to stay in touch with the former colonies. Critics warn the French that such a base in northern Mali will simply be a terrorist target. Other French bases in the region have had no such problems and some French military officials joke that it helps intel efforts if Islamic terrorists are attracted to the base. The French have demonstrated skill at establishing local informant networks and the bases aid in that because if an informant gets in trouble the base is a secure sanctuary for burned agents and the French will get useful agents out of the country if it has to. Exile in France is not seen as a bad thing by most Africans, especially if they can take their families along. The U.S. has a similar program. Keeping local agents alive is essential if you hope to recruit good ones.

The continued success of the counter-terrorism effort and the equally determined efforts by Islamic terrorists to maintain a presence in northern Mali anyway has led France to set up a permanent base in the north. This would be similar to the base it has long maintained on the other end of Africa in Djibouti. Since September 11, 2001 that base has been shared with the Americans and the Mali base is expected to see a lot of Americans helping out. France has about 1,600 troops in northern Mali and that appears to be about what it will take to staff the permanent base. France is particularly concerned about the continuing unrest in Libya and the ability of Islamic terrorists to establish bases and training facilities there. Because of all that, this year there have been several incidents of Islamic terrorists moving into northern Mali from Libya and until the Libyan government establishes some control over the many Islamic terrorists roaming Libya, more will show up in northern Mali.

March 28, 2014: French counter-terrorism efforts in the north have killed at least 40 Islamic terrorists this month. This included at least one senior leader. Some of the success this month is attributed to the more powerful sensors on the two Reaper UAVs France recently purchased and moved to an airbase in Niger (which borders northern Mali). This, coupled with the French informer network, enables tips to be quickly confirmed and troops or smart bombs quickly dispatched to capture or kill the terrorists. The French are also using more of their Tiger helicopter gunships, which are often used to give troops air support. The French only recently began receiving Tiger and only a few are in Mali. Because of their short range Tiger cannot cover as much of northern Mali as the jets armed with smart bombs.

April 3, 2014: The Netherlands agreed to send four AH-64 helicopter gunships and three CH-47 transport helicopters to Mali to provide fire support, transportation and medical evacuation for the 5,000 peacekeepers stationed there. Currently peacekeepers have a few of the smaller Tiger gunships and smaller helicopter transports. The peacekeeper force is expanding to 10,000 by the middle of 2014 and the Dutch helicopters will be needed to keep up with transportation needs. The Dutch will send about 700 troops to operate and maintain their helicopters. This Dutch contribution came in large part because of UN calls for such support from the few Western countries that can supply it. NATO countries are the best equipped for this sort of thing.

April 7, 2014: Islamic terrorists fired four rockets into the northern city of Kidal. The targets appeared to be a French base and a school. Neither was hit and there was no damage or injuries.

April 10, 2014: Based on a tip French troops 30 kilometers northwest of Timbuktu found a hidden terrorist ammunition cache, containing a dozen mortar shells, 30 rockets and lots of rifle ammo.

April 11, 2014: The UN continues to have problems getting donations for food aid to northern Mali. The UN says 1.4 million people will need the food this year. Donor nations are reluctant to contribute for African aid efforts because there is so much corruption and banditry involved, which means a lot (sometimes most) of the aid is stolen and never reaches the people who need it. For a long time the UN tried to keep that quiet and simply tried to get as much aid as it could past the thieving officials and bandits. As the extent of the misbehavior became known, donors became reluctant to throw good money after bad. There was more demand for aid globally than there was supply and donors went looking for more productive (less aid stolen) areas. In Africa a major part of the problem is Islamic terrorist groups, who often ban foreign aid completely or demand most of the aid for themselves as a “tax.”

April 12, 2014: Islamic terrorists released a video of one of the three Algerian diplomats taken captive by Islamic terrorists in Mali in April 2012. This is the first message from the kidnappers since January 2013. Originally seven Algerians were taken but since then three have been released and one killed. Now there is proof that one of the three is still alive. There has been no direct contact with the captors since a French led invasion of northern Mali in January 2013. It was believed the Islamic terrorists holding the Algerians were on the run and it was hoped that the French would find and free them. That has not happened and now the Islamic terrorists holding one of the Algerians feel secure enough to resume demanding ransom. The Algerian government does not want to pay ransom, so as not to encourage more such attacks.

April 13, 2014: Security officials in Mali and Niger confirmed what many had suspected, that Islamic terrorist leader Mokhtar Belmokhtar (the planner of the January 2013 natural gas facility attack in southern Algeria that got 37 workers killed) of Islamic terrorist group Al Mourabitoun was alive and operating from a base in southern Libya. Al Mourabitoun was formed in August 2013 when two Islamic terrorist factions merged. The new group had already been detected operating in northern Mali and Niger (where it had carried out several daring attacks, including a prison break in June and twin bombings in May 2013). One faction was an al Qaeda splinter group led by Belmokhtar who had a reputation for always escaping the many efforts to kill or capture him. Belmokhtar was number two or three in the North African al Qaeda organization (Al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb or AQIM) but formed his own splinter group in late 2012. In November 2013 France announced that it had killed the second-in-command of Al Mourabitoun near the northern town of Tessalit and was still searching for Belmokhtar, despite reports that he might have died during an air attack in 2013. The appearance of these reports of Belmokhtar being alive and where he is may be part of an operation to get him to move and possibly confirm his location so an attack can be carried out.

April 14, 2014: Islamic terrorists fired a rocket into the northern city of Gao. There was some damage but no injuries. There was a lot of anxiety because the Islamic terrorists had been largely absent since late 2013. The rocket probably came from some Islamic terrorist group based across the nearby border in Niger.

April 15, 2014: The EU (European Union) has established a special training and advisory effort for establishing reliable internal security forces throughout Mali. This is often an impossible goal in Africa where corruption, tribalism and lack of education all work against the creation of efficient police forces. This EU effort will last two years and will be extended only if some progress is evident.

April 17, 2014: Acting on a tip French commandos intercepted two pickup trucks heading north to Timbuktu and rescued five Malian aid workers who had been kidnapped February 8th. The ten kidnappers would not surrender and were quickly killed by the French. The five captives were unharmed.

The U.S. State Department continues to advise Americans to avoid travel to northern Mali.

Many in MNLA want a degree of autonomy for the Tuareg north that would leave more numerous blacks in the south with little say in the Tuareg north. A utonomy is what the black majority in is not interested in granting. Early in 2014 MNLA walked away from UN arranged peace negotiations because of this. The UN and France point out that the Tuareg (who are related to the ancient Egyptians, not the darker complexioned Bantu peoples of the south) have refused to submit to outside rule for thousands of years and it would be wise to grant them their autonomy and move on. MNLA means (in French) "Liberation Army of Azawad". That is the Tuareg term for their homeland in northern Mali and until the June 2013 MNLA cease fire deal its capital was Kidal. The French point out that the Tuareg rebels have been defeating black African troops from the south for generations and there's no quick fix for that. The more immediate threat are the Islamic terrorists and Tuareg cooperation is essential for dealing with the likes of AQIM, Al Mourabitoun and Ansar Dine. The Mali government is not motivated by this.

People in the north are also optimistic, but that positive attitude is fragile given the continued presence of Islamic terrorists in the north and not much success at rebuilding the economy (wrecked by a year of al Qaeda rule). In the last ten months nearly 200,000 refugees have returned to the north, mostly to Timbuktu and they have found most of their possessions (farm animals and equipment, household goods and anything portable) gone. Foreign aid meant to address this has been slow to reach the farmers and tradesmen who need it most. The main problem is the government. Most government workers fled when al Qaeda took over and most have not returned. Those that have come back are more of a hindrance than a help. The government has always represented corruption, incompetence and obstacles. Some foreign aid groups are trying to get around that, but the government is very hostile to that sort of "foreign interference."

The Mali government continues to delay starting peace negotiations with the Tuareg rebels in the north. This is becoming an issue in the south because the delay is seen as the reason for continued violence in the north. The government has not been totally unresponsive, having recently freed 19 MNLA (the main Tuareg rebel group in the north) members from prison and cancelled charges against them. Beyond that the newly elected government is reluctant to start the peace negotiations just yet. That might change eventually as recent opinion polls show a lot more optimism in the south (where 90 percent of the population, most of them black African, live). Down there Malians believe the country is headed in the right direction and that there is now much less threat of Islamic terrorism or civil unrest. People are still concerned about corruption and the economy but are willing to give the new government a chance to show it can make a difference. It may well be that the new government has prioritized the things needed to be taken care of and decided that the unrest in the north was not at the top of the list. With most of the population and economic activity in the south, this seems reasonable. But the longer the government delays talking to the Tuaregs the greater the risk that violence will grow up there. Not to worry, all those peacekeepers up there can handle it, and that doesn't cost the government down south anything.

April 19, 2014: France is particularly concerned about the continuing unrest in Libya and the ability of Islamic terrorists to establish bases and training facilities there. Because of all that, this year there have been several incidents of Islamic terrorists moving into northern Mali from Libya and until the Libyan government establishes some control over the many Islamic terrorists roaming Libya, more will show up. There are also some terrorist bases in Niger, but the government there is more eager than their Libyan counterparts to do something about it. The Libyan government is more concerned about "foreign interference" (in getting rid of Islamic terrorist groups). This is in large part because many Islamic radicals got elected to parliament in Libya and they interfere with any efforts to deal with Islamic terrorist groups in Libya. Yet it's not just the Western nations that are complaining about this, but all of Libya's neighbors as well. This is expected to result in some "direct action" (commando or missile attacks) in Libya, with or without government permission. When and if that happens the French counter-terrorism forces in Mali have to be prepared for some Libyan based Islamic terror groups seeking to find refuge in northern Mali.

April 22, 2014: Islamic terrorist group MUJAO announced that it had killed one of the two French civilians believed to be held in northern Mali. MUJAO did not explain exactly why the man was killed, but it was probably because a French patrol or raiding group had come too close to where the victim was being held.

April 23, 2014: In the north (Kidal) a UN peacekeeper was wounded by a roadside bomb.

Mourabitoun was formed in August 2013 when two Islamic terrorist factions merged. The new group has been detected operating in northern Mali and Niger (where it had carried out several daring attacks, including a prison break in June and twin bombings in May 2013). One faction was an al Qaeda splinter group led by Belmokhtar who had a reputation for always escaping the many efforts to kill or capture him. Belmokhtar was number two or three in the North African al Qaeda organization (Al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb or AQIM) but formed his own splinter group in late 2012. In November 2013 France announced that it had killed the second-in-command of Al Mourabitoun near the northern town of Tessalit and was still searching for Belmokhtar, despite reports that he might have died during an air attack in 2013. The French and American pressure in the Sahel has left Belmokhtar short of cash and prospects, so returning to al Qaeda is a way to remedy those problems. Al Qaeda has always had access to more cash and other resources than most other terrorist organizations and that's why it remains such a visible player among Islamic terrorists.

April 30, 2014: Islamic terrorist leader Mokhtar Belmokhtar (the planner of the January 2013 natural gas facility attack in southern Algeria that got 37 workers killed) of Islamic terror group Al Mourabitoun released a statement on the Internet announcing his return to al Qaeda 18 months after he split from that organization. Belmokhtar is believed to be operating from a base in southern Libya. Al

May 2, 2014: In the north (outside Timbuktu) fighting between MNLA (the main Tuareg rebel group in the north) and Mauritanian Islamic terrorist group MUJAO (Movement for Unity and Jihad in West Africa) over the last few days left nine of the terrorists dead and seven captured. MNLA is in the midst of negotiating a peace deal with the Mali government and has been assisting the French since early 2013.

May 6, 2014: Over the last two days troops in southern Libya (Tin-Zaouatine, on the Mali border) have killed at least ten Islamic terrorists caught trying to enter Algeria from Mali. Most of the dead terrorists were foreigners. The interlopers had arrived via the Adrar des Ifoghas Mountains, which are mostly in Mali and have long been a popular area for terrorist bases.

May 7, 2014: In the north (Kidal) an al Qaeda death squad is murdering people suspected of providing information or other assistance to Malian or peacekeeper (particularly French) forces. These assassins have killed at least ten people in the last week and perhaps twice that in the last month. In addition to the murders the Islamic terrorists distribute leaflets warning people not to "collaborate" with the government or the peacekeepers. "Collaborating" means telling the military anything about Islamic terrorist activity. These tips have been particularly useful in foiling terror attacks and killing or capturing Islamic terrorists. Naturally the effort to find these killers is pretty intense but so far the Islamic terrorists involved have avoided detection.

May 8, 2014: In the north (Adrar des Ifoghas Mountains) a French soldier died when his vehicle hit a mine. This is the eighth French soldier to die in Mali since French soldiers moved into the north in January 2013. That's a loss rate of about 150 per 100,000 troops per year. That's about half the U.S. rate in Afghanistan during the years (like 2004) with the least activity. The U.S. rate hit a high of 587 dead per 100,000 in Afghanistan. It was a little higher than that during the worst years of the Iraq fighting.

The continued lawlessness and economic problems in northern Mali have not prevented most of the refugees from the 2012 Islamic terrorist violence from coming home. In the last year about 200,000 refugees have returned to the north, mostly to Timbuktu and they have found most of their possessions (farm animals and equipment, household goods and anything portable) gone. Foreign aid meant to address this has been slow to reach the farmers and tradesmen who need it most. The main problem is the government. Most government workers fled when al Qaeda took over and most have not returned. Those that have come back are more of a hindrance than a help. The government has always represented corruption, incompetence and obstacles. Some foreign aid groups are trying to get around that, but the government is very hostile to that sort of foreign interference. Because of these problems there are still over 100,000 refugees who refuse to return home, even though their food and other aid has been cut.

France is particularly concerned about the continuing unrest in Libya and the ability of Islamic terrorists to establish bases and training facilities there. Because of all that, this year there have been several incidents of Islamic terrorists moving into northern Mali from Libya and until the Libyan government establishes some control over the many Islamic terrorists roaming Libya, more will show up. There are also some terrorist bases in Niger, but the government there is more eager than their Libyan counterparts to do something about it. The Libyan government is more concerned about “foreign interference” (in getting rid of Islamic terrorist groups) than in actually suppressing the terrorists. This is in large part because many Islamic radicals got elected to parliament in Libya and they interfere with any efforts to deal with Islamic terrorist groups in Libya. Yet it’s not just the Western nations that are complaining about this, but all of Libya’s neighbors as well. This is expected to result in some French “direct action” (commando or missile attacks) in Libya, with or without government permission. When and if that happens the French counter-terrorism forces in the Sahel have to be prepared for more Libyan based Islamic terror groups sending men into northern Mali.

There are currently 1,600 French troops in Mali but that will reach a thousand by the end of the year. The UN peacekeeping force (MINUSMA, or Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in Mali) which is supposed to have 12,000 personnel but currently has only 7,500 has provided most of the security in the north. African nations are unwilling or unable to come up all the peacekeepers the UN wants. The UN continues to press nations to contribute troops and equipment. So far there are contingents from Bangladesh, Benin, Britain, Burkina Faso, Cambodia, Chad, China, Côte d'Ivoire, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Estonia, Finland, France, Gambia, Germany, Ghana,

Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Italy, Jordan, Kenya, Liberia, Mauritania, Nepal, Netherlands, Niger, Nigeria,

Norway, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Sweden, Switzerland, Togo, United States and Yemen. Some European countries (like Netherlands) have recently sent helicopters, which are badly needed. The peacekeepers have lost eight dead in the last year. The peacekeepers spend most of their time providing basic security. That involves running nearly a thousand armed patrols a month, which are essential to keep the few roads between towns and cities safe to use and limit the mobility of the remaining Islamic terrorists in area.

May 12, 2014: In the last two months French counter-terror efforts in northern Mali have left over forty Islamic terrorists dead. Most of the dead terrorists belonged to the North African al Qaeda organization (Al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb or AQIM) and its smaller affiliates. Many terrorist bases, and large quantities of weapons, ammo and other equipment have been captured and destroyed. This has prevented the Islamic terrorists in the Sahel from launching any major attacks in over a year. In order to maintain the pressure France is sending a special force of 3,000 troops to fight Islamic terrorists in the Sahel (actually just Mauritania, Mali, Niger, Chad and Burkina Faso). This includes a thousand just in Mali and the rest ready to quickly move to wherever the most Islamic terrorist activity had been detected. The Americans are a junior partners in this, providing satellite and UAV surveillance and other intel services (especially analysis and access to nearly all American data on Islamic terrorist activities in the region). All this is meant to keep the Islamic terrorists in the Sahel weak and disorganized.

May 13, 2014: In the north (outside Kidal) three peacekeepers were wounded when their vehicle hit a mine.

May 14, 2014: The IMF (International Monetary Fund) is holding up millions of dollars in aid to Mali until the government can explain some questionable recent financial transactions. The most obvious one is a government plan to spend $40 million on a long-range business jet for the president. There are also several hundred million in suspicious contracts for military supplies.

May 16, 2014: A recent national opinion poll found that 92 percent of Malians want the country to remain intact. The percentage was pretty much the same in the Tuareg north as it was in the south. What the Tuareg up north do want is more political and cultural autonomy.

May 17, 2014: In the north (Kidal) Tuareg separatists protesting the visit by the prime minister escalated into open rebellion. Over the next two days government officials and security forces were chased out of Kidal (and two other northern towns) by MNLA gunmen. At least eight civilians were killed and 30 taken prisoner (and released after a day or so). The Tuaregs were unhappy by government delays in negotiating a peace deal. The Tuaregs dominate the thinly populated desert north.

May 18, 2014: The newly appointed prime minister fled south from Kidal, protected by UN bodyguards.

May 20, 2014: The army concentrated over a thousand troops outside Kidal and began advancing on the Tuareg held city. The government issued press releases about an unopposed advance. It didn't turn out that way.

May 21, 2014: An army effort to retake Kidal from MNLA gunmen failed. The soldiers retreated after suffering several dozen casualties during a few hours of intense fighting. The army blamed the defeat on help the MNLA had from gangsters and Islamic terrorist groups like al Qaeda, MUJAO and Ansar Dine. That is unlikely since the MNLA has been at war with the Islamic terrorist groups since late 2012.

May 23, 2014: The government and the Tuareg rebels (MNLA and several smaller groups) signed a ceasefire and ended two days of hostilities in and around Kidal. The ceasefire is a government admission that the army lost and essentially returns to the pre-uprising status but with government assurances that the long-promised peace talks with the Tuareg rebels would now get underway and in earnest. Prisoners (about 70 soldiers) are to be released and the MNLA gunmen will remain in the towns of Kidal, Ménaka and Ansongo. The MNLA will also keep the loot it acquired by defeating the army (50 4x4 vehicles, twelve armored vehicles, over a hundred firearms and several tons of ammo plus radios, computers and such). This makes it more difficult for the government to threaten MNLA again. The ceasefire lifts all rebel roadblocks and allows traffic (especially aid convoys) to move unimpeded. Over 4,000 people fled Kidal to avoid the fighting and are in desperate need of the aid.

May 24, 2014: In the north (outside GAO) MNLA gunmen helped one of the smaller Tuareg separatist groups (the MAA) deal with a rebellious faction. There were several casualties and the unruly faction was no longer a problem.

May 25, 2014: The government admitted that it had lost 50 soldiers dead and 48 wounded in last week's fighting in the north. That's more than twice what the MNLA suffered.

May 27, 2014: The Defense Minister resigned because of the failure of the army to deal with a Tuareg uprising last week. The military has long been one of the most corrupt and ineffective government institutions.

Government efforts to deal with rampant corruption included several investigations of state funded institutions. The state funded universities were found to be very corrupt, something that was no secret to the students and many employers. About five percent of the students had the money to pay bribes (a few hundred dollars) to professors who would pass a failing student. This practice angered other students because it was known in local businesses that some of the graduates were fakes because they had bribed their way to a degree. This tainted all graduates. Faculty organizations insist that only a few professors are involved in the corruption but the students believe it is much more widespread. In the north, this corruption has long been a major complaint against the southerners (who tend to be more corrupt than the northern tribes, if only because there's more to steal in the south).

There are currently 1,600 French troops in Mali and that was to reach a thousand by the end of the year. That reduction may be delayed depending on how the new situation between Mali and the MNLA works out. The UN peacekeeping force (MINUSMA, or Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in Mali) which is supposed to have 12,000 personnel but currently has only 8,000 is now providing most of the security in the north. African nations are unwilling or unable to come up all the peacekeepers the UN wants. The UN continues to press nations to contribute troops and equipment. So far there are contingents from Bangladesh, Benin, Britain, Burkina Faso, Cambodia, Chad, China, Côte d'Ivoire, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Estonia, Finland, France, Gambia, Germany, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Italy, Jordan, Kenya, Liberia, Mauritania, Nepal, Netherlands, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Sweden, Switzerland, Togo, United States and Yemen. Some European countries (like Netherlands) have recently sent helicopters, which are badly needed. The peacekeepers have lost eight dead in the last year. The peacekeepers spend most of their time providing basic security. That involves running nearly a thousand armed patrols a month, which are essential to keep the few roads between towns and cities safe to use and limit the mobility of the remaining Islamic terrorists in area.

Because of the recent MNLA uprising France is delaying moving some of the troops from Mali to elsewhere in the region. So far this year French counter-terror efforts in northern Mali have left nearly a hundred Islamic terrorists dead. Most of these terrorists belonged to the North African al Qaeda organization (Al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb or AQIM) and its smaller affiliates. Many terrorist bases, and large quantities of weapons, ammo and other equipment have been captured and destroyed. This has prevented the Islamic terrorists in the Sahel from launching any major attacks in over a year. In order to maintain the pressure France planned to establish a special force of 3,000 troops to fight Islamic terrorists throughout the Sahel (actually just Mauritania, Mali, Niger, Chad and Burkina Faso). This would include a thousand just in Mali and the rest ready to quickly move from bases elsewhere in the region to wherever the most Islamic terrorist activity had been detected. The Americans are a junior partners in this, providing satellite and UAV surveillance and other intel services (especially analysis and access to nearly all American data on Islamic terrorist activities in the region). All this is meant to keep the Islamic terrorists in the Sahel weak and disorganized.

The French troops and UN peacekeepers stayed out of the recent fighting between MNLA and the army, except for a few dozen UN personnel who provided security for the prime minister during the aborted visit to Kidal. MNLA says the army started it all by firing on several truckloads of MNLA gunmen. The army says it was the other way around. The hostility between the army (almost entirely composed of black Africans from the south, where 90 percent of the population lives) and the Tuareg (a lighter skinned group related to Arabs and ancient Egyptians) goes back a long time. France warned Mali to be careful bringing soldiers back into the north. That advice was generally ignored and the troops began reverting to their traditional abusive attitudes towards the Tuaregs and Arabs who predominate in the north. After the MNLA seized control of Kidal on the 17th the UN immediately began trying to arrange peace talks. That took several days and resulted in a ceasefire deal. The Mali government criticized the UN and the French for not intervening. But the French and UN knew the MNLA had legitimate complaints about the government and that the soldiers in the north were causing more problems than they were solving. So the French and UN stood back and the MNLA reciprocated by accepting UN and French offers to quickly negotiate an end to the violence.

May 29, 2014: In the north the MNLA (the main Tuareg rebel group) has reminded everyone that they are the power to deal up there. MNLA is again in the midst of negotiating a peace deal with the Mali government and has been assisting the French against Islamic terrorists since early 2013. That counter-terror effort continues. Earlier in May the Mauritanian Islamic terrorist group MUJAO (Movement for Unity and Jihad in West Africa) was forcibly reminded of MNLA primacy and suffered several dozen casualties as a result. Lesson learned, for now.

May 29, 2014: In the north (west of Timbuktu) two aid workers (Malians employed by a foreign group) died when their vehicle hit a mine.

In neighboring Burkina Faso Mali officials called for a meeting with Tuareg representatives and proposed resuming peace talks.

May 30, 2014: Spain announced they had arrested six men and accused them of recruiting young Moslem men to go fight for Islamic terrorist groups in Mali and Libya. One of those arrested was a member of the Mauritanian Islamic terrorist group MUJAO (Movement for Unity and Jihad in West Africa) and had recently returned from Mali where he had received terrorist training.

June 4, 2014: The government announced the reintroduction of conscription. It will be for all physically and mentally capable men aged 18 to 35. This is to begin in 2015 and will mainly be to train as many men as possible during six months of active service. After that the armed men will provide a large trained "reserve" force. This is unlikely to work. That's because 250,000 Mali males turn 18 each year. Applying high standards would eliminate about half of those from eligibility for military training, leaving 125,000 recruits to be trained each year. Currently the military only has about 7,000 active duty personnel and peak size recently was 9,000. Assuming three months of training for recruits, most active duty military personnel would be devoted to training in order to put 125,000 men a year through the program. After that some of the more capable newly trained men could be brought back to active service just to help with the training and after a few years all eligible 18 year olds would be getting their training and know how to use weapons and fight in an organized and disciplined manner. Another big problem is financial. Where would the money for this come from? Even if you pay the recruits very little you have to feed and house them during the training and there are other training expenses as well (fuel, ammo and some medical care). The government plans to begin this program in 2015 but odds are financial and organizational problems will derail it. Mali last had conscription from 1983 to 1991 and it was not popular or very effective.

June 5, 2014: In the capital an army lieutenant was arrested and charged with being part of another plot to stage a coup and overthrow the government. Other officers are being sought as well. All these men belong to the Red Berets, who are paratroopers who were rivals of the officers who led the last coup.

June 11, 2014: In the north (north of Kidal on the road to Algeria) a car bomb exploded outside a peacekeeper base. This killed four Chadian peacekeepers and wounded six others. Four Malian soldiers were also wounded. AQIM was suspected of being responsible.

June 15, 2014: In Algeria several Mali Tuareg separatist groups signed an agreement to hold peace talks with each other and the Mali government to create a permanent settlement to the many disputes between the Tuareg and the Mali government. The Tuareg includes MNLA (the main Tuareg rebel group) and several smaller and less well-armed groups.

June 16, 2014: Convicted kidnapper Mahamed Aly Ag Wadoussene and 21 other prisoners broke out of a prison in the capital, killing two people in the process. Wadoussene got hold of a gun and police are now investigating if bribery was involved in the incident.

June 24, 2014: Police captured Mahamed Aly Ag Wadoussene, the criminal who led a June 16 jailbreak. Wadoussene is infamous for leading the gang that kidnapped two French citizens in 2011 and sold them to al Qaeda. Wadoussene was still in the capital when caught. Wadoussene is a Taureg, an army deserter and led a criminal gang in 2011 that saw kidnapping Westerners as a way to get rich. Selling the captives to Islamic terrorists was profitable but it did not make Wadoussene and his gang rich. Meanwhile the police found out about Wadoussene and his kidnapping activity and eventually caught up with the gang. Wadoussene is not believed to be an Islamic terrorist but rather an immoral opportunist.

June 25, 2014: The UN extended the peacekeeping operation in Mali until June 30, 2015.

While the May violence in the northern town of Kidal has subsided, there are still about 18,000 additional refugees created by that fighting, at least a quarter of them from Kidal itself. The problem is always getting refugees to return home. Some do but many fear that the warring groups are still around and ready to start shooting again. That is often the case. So there are still more than 130,000 Mali refugees in foreign countries and more than 150,000 refugees inside Mali. The total number of refugees is down from 2013 but at the current rate of return refugees will be a problem for several more years.

Algeria has been helpful, especially with securing its long, largely unguarded borders. These are 6,343 kilometers long and include frontiers with seven countries. Moreover most of these borderlands are in the thinly occupied desert. Before aircraft were invented it was impossible to secure these borders. But even with aircraft a tightly sealed border remains impossible. About half that area is dangerous because of the Islamic terrorist threat in those countries. Libya, Mali and Tunisia comprise 52 percent of Algeria's borders and the 1,376 kilometer long Mali border is particularly troublesome since it is all desert and very popular with smugglers and other outlaws from the regions to the south. Thus the Algerian effort to more effectively patrol those borders. Most of those caught sneaking in are smugglers, mainly because Algeria is now considered a hostile refuge for Islamic terrorists fleeing increasingly successful counter-terrorism efforts in the Sahel.

In order to maintain the pressure France plan to establish a special force of 3,000 troops to fight Islamic terrorists throughout the Sahel (actually just Mauritania, Mali, Niger, Chad and Burkina Faso). This would include a thousand just in Mali and the rest ready to quickly move from bases elsewhere in the region to wherever the most Islamic terrorist activity had been detected. The Americans are a junior partners in this, providing satellite and UAV surveillance and other intel services (especially analysis and access to nearly all American data on Islamic terrorist activities in the region). All this is meant to keep the Islamic terrorists in the Sahel weak and disorganized. So far that has worked, but AQIM is still getting support from Islamic terrorists in Europe and the Persian Gulf, where wealthy Islamic conservatives are still willing to finance Islamic terrorism in Africa.

Most of the remaining terrorists in the north belong to the North African al Qaeda organization (Al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb or AQIM) and its smaller affiliates (like MUJAO) . Many terrorist bases, and large quantities of weapons, ammo and other equipment have been captured and destroyed but there are still several hundred Islamic terrorists up there. The shortage of weapons, equipment and manpower has prevented the Islamic terrorists in the region (the Sahel) from launching any major attacks in over a year or to do much beyond a few terror attacks a month in Mali.

The peace talks with the largely black southerners can still come to nothing as there has long been mutual fear and loathing between Tuaregs and the southern majority. All both sides can agree on at this point is that continued fighting favors no one except the Islamic terrorists. The negotiations also have to deal with the fact that the southerners are still humiliated at how the Tuareg defeated the largely southern (black) army in 2012 and again in May 2014 when the army tried to take control of Kidal. Many southern soldiers understand that the main reason the better armed and more numerous soldiers continually get defeated by the Tuareg irregulars is because of the massive corruption in the south. This means a lot of the money allocated to the military is stolen and many senior officers are there because of political loyalty and corruption, not any skill in military affairs. Southern politicians don't like to discuss this and the most corrupt ones will not even acknowledge this problem exists. Meanwhile many southerners now have another reason to fear and mistrust the Tuareg; the fact that some of them are attracted to Islamic terrorism. The southerners are largely Moslem but not attracted to Islamic radicalism at all. Ten percent of Malians (mostly blacks) are Christian or still follow the ancient tribal religions. Most southerners fear and despise Islamic radicalism and see the Tuareg as "infected" with this "disease." One thing the negotiations must do is convince the southerners that few (too few to really matter) Tuaregs still support Islamic terrorism.

June 28, 2014: The June 15 agreement by the government to negotiate a peace deal with the Tuareg is bad news for AQIM and other Islamic terrorists in the north because the Tuareg are native to the north and comprise most of the population there. After dealing with foreign Islamic terrorists during the 2012 al Qaeda "occupation" of the north most Tuareg have lost their enthusiasm for Islamic terrorists. The foreigners (most of them Arab) were found to be arrogant and disdainful of Tuaregs. There is an Arab minority in the north, but these Arabs have learned to respect the Tuareg and generally get along. Some of the Malian Arabs will help the Islamic terrorists, but most are reluctant to do so lest they be discovered and driven out or killed.

July 11, 2014: In the north (between Kidal and Gao) fighting broke out between Tuareg and Arab rebels. The Tuareg and Arabs in the north often had disagreements, but have tried to unite to obtain more autonomy from the majority black government in the south. The fighting went on for several days, causing over a hundred casualties and nearly 40 dead. Many of the dead were Mali soldiers who caused the incident or were trying to stop the fighting (depending on whose version you believe).

July 13, 2014: France announced that their campaign to drive Islamic terrorists out of northern Mali was officially over and, while some French troops would stay, most would be moved to other countries in the region facing problems with Islamic terrorists.

July 15, 2014: The government and Tuareg rebels in the north exchanged prisoners. Mali held 41 Tuaregs and the rebels held 45 soldiers. This was a good-will gesture to get the peace talks in Algeria off to a good start. The exchange had been agreed upon earlier.

July 16, 2014: Algeria is hosting peace talks between Mali and the Tuareg rebels in northern Mali that begin today.

July 21, 2014: In the north (outside Gao) a suicide car bomber attacked a group of French soldiers, killing one of them and wounding six others. This is the ninth French soldier to die in Mali since the French moved in during January 2013. That's a low casualty rate, lower (at 150 per 100,000 troops per year) than it ever got (200) in Afghanistan for the Americans. In Afghanistan the rate got as high as 587 per 100,000 in 2010. The peak rate in Iraq was a bit higher. Rates during earlier wars for France (Vietnam, World War II) were more than ten times what they have been in Mali so far.

July 23, 2014: Islamic terrorist leader Mokhtar Belmokhtar (the planner of the January 2013 natural gas facility attack in southern Algeria that got 37 workers killed) of Islamic terror group Al Mourabitoun claimed responsibility for the recent suicide bombing that killed a French soldier. This attack, he said, was made to refute French claims that Islamic terrorists had been largely eliminated in the north. The French claim was accurate and Al Mourabitoun has not been very active at all, anywhere in North Africa. In April Belmokhtar had released a statement on the Internet announcing his return to al Qaeda. He had split from that organization in late 2012. Belmokhtar is believed to be operating from a base in southern Libya. Al Mourabitoun was formed in August 2013 when two Islamic terrorist factions merged. The new group has been detected operating in northern Mali and Niger (where it had carried out several daring attacks, including a prison break in June and twin bombings in May 2013). One faction was an al Qaeda splinter group led by Belmokhtar who had a reputation for always escaping the many efforts to kill or capture him. Belmokhtar was number two or three in the North African al Qaeda organization (Al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb or AQIM) but formed his own splinter group in late 2012. In November 2013 France announced that it had killed the second-in-command of Al Mourabitoun near the northern town of Tessalit and was still searching for Belmokhtar, despite reports that he might have died during an air attack in 2013. The French and American pressure in the Sahel has left Belmokhtar short of cash and prospects, so returning to al Qaeda is a way to remedy those problems. Al Qaeda has always had access to more cash and other resources than most other terrorist organizations and that's why it remains such a visible player among Islamic terrorists.

July 24, 2014: The government and the Tuareg rebels in north signed an agreement to work out details for a peace deal that includes limited autonomy for the north. Senior officials also agreed to meet again in October, hopefully with an agreement both sides could sign.

July 25, 2014: French troops, with the help of local residents, have reached the wreckage of a Spanish airliner that disappeared from radar over northern Mali on the 24th. French aircraft were sent to the area to search for the airliner and soon found it. Mali asked France to send troops to help with the investigation and secure the crash site. So far all that is known is that all 116 people aboard were killed. The investigation of the wreckage will determine the cause. The aircraft was flying too high for a shoulder fired anti-aircraft missiles local Islamic terrorists might have had and there is no evidence that the Islamic terrorists in Mali ever had larger anti-aircraft missiles. Missiles leave distinctive damage. French troops quickly found and removed the flight recorders, which appeared to be intact. The current hypothesis is that the airliner was brought down by bad weather and/or mechanical problems. Again, the investigation can sort all this out. The downed airliner was flying from Burkina Faso to Algeria.

France believes the Sahel (the semi-desert area south of the desert that stretches across northern Africa) is still troubled by thousands of Islamic terrorists. In order to maintain pressure on the Islamic terrorists France is establishing a special force of 3,000 troops to fight Islamic terrorists throughout the Sahel (actually just Mauritania, Mali, Niger, Chad and Burkina Faso). This redeployment officially began this month and will include a thousand French troops in Mali and the rest ready to quickly move from bases elsewhere in the region to wherever the most Islamic terrorist activity had been detected. The Americans are a junior partners in this, providing satellite and UAV surveillance and other intel services (especially analysis and access to nearly all American data on Islamic terrorist activities in the region). All this is meant to keep the Islamic terrorists in the Sahel weak and disorganized. So far that has worked, but AQIM is still getting support from Islamic terrorists in Europe and the Persian Gulf, where wealthy Islamic conservatives are still willing to finance Islamic terrorism in Africa. Islamic terrorists are currently launching a few attacks in northern Mali mainly to let the world know that Islamic terrorist groups are still present, barely, in the area.

Meanwhile there are other serious problems to attend to. The government leaders are as corrupt as ever, despite growing pressure from France and other nations that supply a lot of aid. If peace is achieved in the north it will be in spite of the corruption in the capital. The north has long complained about the corruption, which saw much aid meant for the north stolen by politicians from the south (where the black majority elects black politicians). One of the potential stumbling blocks in achieving peace in the north is the southern politicians allowing foreign aid to go directly to the north, and not pass through the central government down south where it can be plundered a bit first.

The Tuaregs are eager to get a peace deal because the threat of renewed fighting makes it difficult to completely pacify the area. Without a peace deal bandits, rebels and sometimes Malian soldiers will commit crimes (theft, extortion, kidnapping) and disrupt foreign aid operations. Many people in the north are going hungry because the continued unrest has delayed aid shipments. Those who attack the aid operations don't care who it hurts, but the rebel leaders do and they want a peace deal so they can concentrate on making the region safe enough for the economy to recover and foreign aid operations to function without interference.

July 26, 2014: The next three months of "working out the details" negotiations with the Tuaregs will determine whether there will be peace or continued war in the north. This could all fall apart if there is no agreement on how much and what kind of autonomy will be allowed up north. There is already agreement on some other important points. Both sides agree that Islamic terrorists have to be kept out of the north and that the new government in the north will be secular and respect the different ethnic groups up there. All this will be done with some help from Algeria. For decades the main source of Islamic terrorists in North Africa has been Algeria. Both countries have agreed to work towards making their mutual border an effective barrier to Islamic terrorists and smugglers. Algeria closed the official border crossings in January 2013 to make it more difficult for Islamic terrorists to move between Algeria and Mali. This shut down trade and that hurt Mali more than Algeria.

Meanwhile Algeria sent more troops to the border area this year and went after the smugglers and others trying to cross illegally. Mali is coordinating efforts to secure the border in order to get the border crossings reopened. The 1,376 kilometer long Mali border is particularly troublesome since it is all desert and very popular with smugglers and other outlaws from the regions to the south. Thus the Algerian effort to more effectively patrol those borders. Most of those caught sneaking in are smugglers, mainly because Algeria is now considered a hostile refuge for Islamic terrorists fleeing increasingly successful counter-terrorism efforts in the Sahel.

The Tuaregs are eager to get a peace deal because the threat of renewed fighting makes it difficult to completely pacify the area. Without a peace deal bandits, rebels and sometimes Malian soldiers will commit crimes (theft, extortion, kidnapping) and disrupt foreign aid operations. Many people in the north are going hungry because the continued unrest has delayed aid shipments. Those who attack the aid operations don't care who it hurts, but the rebel leaders do and they want a peace deal so they can concentrate on making the region safe enough for the economy to recover and foreign aid operations to function without interference.

August 2, 2014: In the north (between Gao and the Burkina Faso border) the investigation and collection of bodies and wreckage for the July 24th airliner crash has concluded. It will be months before the analysis of all this material is finished and conclusions about what caused the crash can be reached. It appears that Islamic terrorism was not involved.

Most of those new recruits deserted as their employers fled the advancing French in early 2013. Some of the surviving Islamic terrorists accuse Ansar Dine of betraying the cause because of the Ansar Dine attempt to negotiate a peace deal and because most Ansar Dine members were locals and some switched sides. After the French came north in January 2013 the Tuareg members of MUJAO and Ansar Dine were able to find locals in the north willing to shelter them while the foreigners (mainly from AQIM) had to flee because they were too easily spotted by Mali civilians and pointed out to the French, Malian and other African troops. In the first six months of 2013 all three groups suffered heavy losses in Mali, either from deaths or desertions. Many non-Mali Islamic terrorists fled and sought new groups to join. There was some good hiding places in the far north, near the Algerian and Libyan borders and this is where the French have been looking intently since late 2013.

Until late 2012 all three groups cooperated in order to maintain their control of the north. Then Ansar Dine began negotiating with the Mali government for a separate peace and some kind of compromise over Tuareg autonomy in the north. In part this was because MUJAO and AQIM were bringing in reinforcements from Morocco, Western Sahara, Algeria, Pakistan, Egypt, Yemen, Nigeria, and Sudan and threatened to reduce the area Ansar Dine controlled. Ansar Dine saw itself as the only Malian group in the Islamic radical government up north and was determined to defend Tuareg interests against the many foreigners in MUJAO (which also has Malian members) and especially AQIM (which wanted to run everything). Ansar Dine saw AQIM as a bunch of gangsters, dependent on its relationship with drug gangs (al Qaeda moves the drugs north to the Mediterranean coast) and kidnappers (who hold Europeans for multi - million dollar ransoms, which Iyad Ag Ghali sometimes handled the negotiations for). All this cash gave AQIM a lot of power, both to buy weapons and hire locals. With the high unemployment in the north and the impressive image of Islamic warriors, working for AQIM was an attractive prospect for many young men.

During 2012 Ansar Dine controlled Timbuktu and was unique in that it was the only Islamic terrorist group from Mali and was led by Tuareg Islamic radicals (who were formerly secular rebels). In contrast MUJAO (Movement for Unity and Jihad in West Africa) which controlled Gao was from neighboring Mauritania. Al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM) has members from all over North Africa, but mostly from Algeria. MUJAO (also known as MUJWA) is basically a Mauritanian faction of AQIM and there was always some tension between the two groups. AQIM had the most money and weapons and used this to exercise some control over the other two radical groups (who outnumbered AQIM in Mali). Both these groups are sometimes at odds with Ansar Dine, which felt it should be in charge because it was Malian.

August 5, 2014: Islamic terrorist leader (of Ansar Dine) Iyad Ag Ghali released a 24 minute video on the Internet in which he called for attacks on France and other Western nations that participated in the defeat of Islamic terrorists in northern Mali. Ag Ghali also called for continued efforts to establish an Islamic dictatorship in northern Mali and adjacent areas where Tuaregs live. The video gave no indication where Iyad Ag Ghali was but he is believed to have taken refuge outside of Mali, either in Libya or Niger. Ag Ghali has not been seen in public for two years and his Islamic terrorist operation seems to have disappeared in early 2013.

August 10, 2014: In the north (west of Timbuktu) French troops raided a suspected Islamic terrorist hideout and captured three men believed responsible for several terrorist attacks over the last three months. This raid was part of a larger operation that involved air strikes on four Islamic terrorist targets in the same area.

August 13, 2014: Algeria will again host, on September 1st, peace talks between Mali and the Tuareg rebels of northern Mali. This is a continuation of the negotiations begun on July 24th. For any peace deal to work the Islamic terrorists have to be kept out of northern Mali and this requires some military help from Algeria. For decades the main source of Islamic terrorists in North Africa has been Algeria. Thus both countries want their mutual border to be an effective barrier to Islamic terrorists and smugglers. Mali has cooperated in securing the border.

August 14, 2014: In the last few days two peacekeeper vehicles were damaged and three peacekeepers wounded when the vehicles set off mines planted by Islamic terrorists in the north.

August 16, 2014: In the north (60 kilometers east of Timbuktu) a suicide car bomber attacked a peacekeeper base. This left one peacekeeper dead and five wounded. Attacks like these have become quite rare, with a few such incidents in the north each month. It's just enough to keep the counter-terrorism forces of their alert and focused on finding the few Islamic terrorists still active in the area.

The Mali government is confident they can work out a peace deal with the Tuaregs (and the smaller number of Arabs) in the north because both groups want nothing more to do with Islamic terrorists. When the Islamic terrorists were dominant in the north during 2012 the local Tuaregs and Arabs soon found themselves in a very antagonistic relationship with the largely foreign Islamic terrorist groups. These religious fanatics were more concerned with expanding their power and conquering the world than in addressing the more mundane economic and administrative problems of the local Tuaregs and Arabs. As a result the northerners have become very hostile to the Islamic terrorists and want to do what they can to keep these thugs out of Mali.

August 21, 2014: France still has 2,300 troops in northern Mali and they are kept busy hunting down the last few active Islamic terrorists there and trying to find out more about Islamic terrorists in neighboring Libya and Niger that appear to be intent on supporting more attacks in Mali. The French don't see any major threat to Mali, largely because Islamic terrorists in the region are preoccupied with offensives against Islamic terrorists in Libya, Syria and Iraq. For Islamic terrorists Mali is nor forgotten but it is low on the list of priorities.

August 29, 2014: In the north (near Kidal) nine peacekeepers were wounded when their vehicle encountered a roadside bomb.

August 30, 2014: In Mali two of the three Algerian diplomats taken captive there in April 2012 were released. It is unclear who was holding the two when they were let go. It was also learned that the third captive had died of an illness. In April 2014 a video of one of the captives was released, and that was the first message from the kidnappers since January 2013. Originally seven Algerians were taken but since then three have been released and one killed.

There has been no direct contact with the kidnappers since a French led invasion of northern Mali in January 2013. It was believed the Islamic terrorists holding the Algerians were on the run and it was hoped that the French would find and free them. That did not happen and in April those holding one of the Algerians felt secure enough to resume demanding ransom. The government said it did not want to pay ransom, so as not to encourage more such kidnappings. It is unclear exactly how the two were freed and all Mali will say was that it was after extensive negotiations. This seems to indicate that one of the northern Tuareg tribes came to be holding the captives and arranged their release for some favors, or to avoid a raid by French commandos.

September 1, 2014: In Algiers a coalition of northern rebel groups resumed peace negotiations with the Mali government. This is the continuation of a process that began in May when all the rebel groups signed a ceasefire. This came after some rebels got violent and it became obvious that they could not win anything this way because of the French troops and African peacekeepers. So everyone decided to negotiate.

September 2, 2014: In the north (near Kidal) a four peacekeepers were killed and 15 others wounded when their vehicle encountered a roadside bomb.

September 9, 2014: France called on European nations to join with theme to do something about the chaos in Libya, which has now become a sanctuary for all manner of Islamic terrorist groups. Most European nations are not eager to return to Libya, after assisting the rebels there with air attacks in 2011.

In April Belmokhtar had released a statement on the Internet announcing his return to al AQIM. Belmokhtar is believed to be operating from a base in southern Libya. Al Mourabitoun was formed in August 2013 when two Islamic terrorist factions merged. The new group has been detected operating in northern Mali and Niger (where it had carried out several daring attacks, including a prison break in June and twin bombings in May 2013). Belmokhtar had a reputation for always escaping the many efforts to kill or capture him. Belmokhtar had been number two or three in AQIM but formed his own splinter group in late 2012. In November 2013 France announced that it had killed the second-in-command of Al Mourabitoun near the northern town of Tessalit and was still searching for Belmokhtar, despite reports that he might have died during an air attack in 2013. The French and American pressure in the Sahel has left Belmokhtar short of cash and prospects, so returning to AQIM was a way to remedy those problems. AQIM has always had access to more cash and other resources than most other terrorist organizations and that’s why it remains such a visible player among Islamic terrorists.

September 13, 2014: In the north (near Kidal) local rebels handed over to the French a senior lieutenant for Islamic terrorist leader Mokhtar Belmokhtar (the planner of the January 2013 natural gas facility attack in southern Algeria that got 37 workers killed). Belmokhtar heads Islamic terrorist group Al Mourabitoun and claimed responsibility for the July suicide bombing that killed a French soldier. Thus the French were quite eager to get their hands on this guy. Belmokhtar had earlier declared that t he July attack was made to refute French claims that Islamic terrorists had been largely eliminated in the north. The French claim was accurate and Al Mourabitoun has not been very active at all, anywhere in North Africa. But in the last month there have been more attacks in the north, usually around Kidal and Al Mourabitoun, not local groups, was suspected.

September 14, 2014: In the north (near Kidal) a peacekeeper was killed and four others wounded when their vehicle hit a landmine.

September 15, 2014: The government signed a number of economic aid and trade deals with China totaling $11 billion. Most of this is for building or upgrading two rail lines from landlocked Mali to the coasts of neighboring Guinea and Senegal. The details of these deals have been kept secret, no doubt to conceal large bribes and other questionable aspects of these contracts. China likes to play by local rules while many Western nations and financial institutions do not. For example, it was revealed that this deal included $41 million for gifts and interest free loans. All this will bring some economic benefit to southern Mali, even though the Chinese bring in their own people (from China) to handle a lot of the work. This usually includes thousands of lower level workers who could have been hired locally. These practices are a growing cause of friction in Africa, especially since some of these workers remain in the African countries were they worked on some Chinese funded project. These Chinese settlers generate more economic activity, but often generate friction with the less economically successful locals. It’s an old problem in Africa.

September 16, 2014: A group of AQIM (Al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb) members declared that they had formed a new faction and pledged allegiance to ISIL (Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant). This sort of thing is happening all over the Islamic world as the more fanatic Islamic terrorists seek to identify with what appears to be the most successful Islamic terrorist group at the moment. ISIL recently declared the establishment of a caliphate in eastern Syria and western Iraq. This triggered a massive counterattack by Moslem and Western nations. That will make ISIL a rather less attractive role model eventually and the hard core Islamic terrorists worldwide will find another way to brand themselves as the worst of the worst in their neighborhood.

The various rebel groups in the north have now formed a coalition to aid in negotiating a peace agreement with the Mali government. This coalition is willing to keep the peace and help control Islamic terrorists up there in return for less interference and more cash from the government. While this is generally agreeable to everyone, working out the details may take some time. What the northerners urgently need is food and medical aid to keep over a million people alive. These are the victims of the damage done to the economy by a year of Islamic terrorist rule. The north also needs effective economic aid to rebuild its economy.

The French are willing to live with some of this smuggling up north as long as the locals give up the active Islamic terrorists that are being sought. Aware that this would happen, most of those guys have fled the area, leaving less notorious, but still competent, subordinates to run the business. The French come across signs of the smuggling operation all the time and seize the more blatant evidence like trucks where the drugs are not well hidden or groups of people who don't belong in the area and are obviously being smuggled. When caught like this the smugglers can always catch a break if they give up some useful information on Islamic terrorists, but that is done at the risk of landing on some Islamic terrorist "shoot on sight" list. The Mali security forces and some of the African peacekeepers can simply be bought off with a bribe. This is one reason the French insist on maintaining a military presence in northern Mali.

September 17, 2014: Getting all the Islamic terrorists out of northern Mali, and the Sahara Desert in general is proving very difficult because the remaining terrorists have morphed back into gangsters. Their primary source of income is smuggling drugs and people from sub-Saharan Africa to the Mediterranean coast and thence to Europe. The drugs largely consist of cocaine from South America while the people are economic migrants from all over Africa. There is also a steady traffic in weapons from Libya (where vast Kaddafi era stockpiles were looted during the 2011 revolution) to sub-Saharan Africa via Mali and other states on the southern edge of the Sahara. This drug and people smuggling has actually been going on for years and was briefly interrupted in 2013 when the French invaded northern Mali. But now the smuggling operations have adapted to the presence of peacekeepers and French counter-terrorism forces in northern Mali and business continues.

This smuggling business came about because of the refusal of Western nations to pursue Islamic terrorists defeated in the 1990s in places like Algeria, Morocco and Libya. Many of the survivors went south into the desert and established lucrative smuggling (of drugs and people) and kidnapping (of Westerners) operations that brought in as much as $10 million a year. This enabled hundreds of hardcore and experienced Islamic terrorists to continue recruiting and planning new terror attacks against Moslem and Western nations. While a lot of that money was diverted to operating expenses (including bribing, or hiring, locals) and corruption (al Qaeda documents captured over the years indicates this is still a problem)

there was enough left to buy more weapons than they needed and spread the word that Islamic terrorism was the way to go and it paid well (currently about $600 a month). This appealed to a lot of young men who had bleak economic prospects and were always up for some adventure, especially if it involved getting a gun, a license to kill or loot and regular pay. Another thing that kept the Islamic radical pot boiling was the existing ethnic and racial tensions in the region. There was a lot of this animosity in the southern Sahara, especially in northern Mali. It was most intense in the major cities. Black Africans living in the north, usually in the cities, have long been seen as unwelcome representatives of the black majority government in the south. The majority in the north were Arabs (the most violent Islamic terrorists were Arab) and Tuaregs (the lighter skinned tribesmen of the north who have been regularly rebelling against the rule of the black African majority). After the Islamic terrorists took control of northern Mali in 2012 the locals found that doing business with Islamic terrorists was one thing but being ruled by them was no fun at all. Now the Tuareg and Arab leaders in the north want to make peace, although some will maintain good relations (at least as long as it pays well) with the Islamic terrorist groups and leave the terrorists alone as long as the terrorists just stick to business. Some 90 percent of Malians are black Africans living in the non-desert (south of the Niger River) south. They too are tired of the constant battles with the Arabs and Tuaregs of the north and, at the moment, seem willing to make peace.

September 18, 2014: In the north (Kidal) a peacekeeper vehicle was hit by a roadside bomb, killing five Chad soldiers and wounded three others.

September 23, 2014: In the north (outside Timbuktu) a Tuareg man was beheaded by Islamic terrorists after being accused of spying for the French. The victim and four other Tuareg men were kidnapped by Islamic terrorists a week earlier and the other four were later released. The Islamic terrorists were believed to be from AQIM.

October 3, 2014: In the northeast (Gao) a convoy of peacekeepers (from Niger) were attacked by MUJAO (Movement for Unity and Jihad in West Africa) gunmen on motorcycles. Nine of the peacekeepers were killed and MUJAO (also known as MUJWA) took credit for the attack two days later. MUJAO is basically a Mauritanian faction of AQIM and there was always some tension between the two groups. AQIM had the most money and weapons and used this to exercise some control over MUJAO and Ansar Dine when the three groups controlled the north in 2012. The other two radical groups outnumbered AQIM in Mali. MUJAO and AQIM were sometimes at odds with Ansar Dine, which felt it should be in charge because it was Malian. After the French led an invasion of the north in early 2013 MUJAO, which had occupied and run GAO fled with some of the surviving members moving across the nearby border to Niger while other headed for southern Libya.

October 7, 2014: In the north (Kidal) a rocket was fired into a peacekeeper base, killing one peacekeeper (from Senegal). Two other peacekeepers were wounded.

October 8, 2014: Mali has asked the UN to establish assign some of its peacekeepers up north to a rapid reaction force that could better deal with the growing number of Islamic terrorist attacks. Mali was also concerned about the growing number of complaints (from people in the countryside) about marauding bandits and Islamic terrorists up north. The UN replied with reminders that more helicopters are on the way and these will make it easier to find and attack any Islamic terrorists in the north.

October 9, 2014: In neighboring Niger French troops, in cooperation with local forces, intercepted and destroyed an AQIM convoy carrying weapons and ammunition from Libya to Mali. Some of the Islamic terrorists involved were captured.

October 15, 2014: The Mali peacekeeping force, composed of 11,000 French and (mainly) African troops, is suffering a death rate of 240 per 100,000 per year (a standard measure of such things.) That's higher than the 2013 rate (200) in Afghanistan for foreign troops. That was down from 587 in 2010, which was about what it was during the peak years in Iraq (2004-7). The action in Mali is less intense than in Afghanistan or pre - 2011 Iraq and total casualties since mid-2013 are only about 125 dead and wounded. The casualties have been higher in the last month as Islamic terrorists from Mali settle into bases in southern Libya and are now regularly moving south to carry out operations in northern Mali. All this is possible because Libya is undergoing a civil war, mainly up north along the coast and no one bothers with Islamic terrorists who only kill across the border in Mali. There is a similar problem in Afghanistan with Islamic terrorists operations from several sanctuary areas in neighboring Pakistan and Iran.

While the government is continuing peace talks with northern rebels and all but one (Ansar Dine) of the local Islamic terrorist groups. Those talks are stuck on the rebel (mostly Tuareg tribes who comprise most of the population up there) demand for more autonomy. The government and foreign experts see this as a ploy to gain more freedom to carry on with illegal activities (mainly smuggling drugs, weapons, illegal migrants and consumer goods). This sort of activity finances criminal gangs and Islamic terrorist groups alike and generates a lot of cash. It is the cash that is talking up north, although most northerners just want peace and some prosperity (which requires more economic activity, legal or otherwise.)

AQIM (Al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb) remains the umbrella group for nearly all Islamic terrorists in the region, especially in Mali and neighboring countries. France now has 3,000 troops equipped and organized to fight Islamic terrorists throughout the Sahel (mainly Mauritania, Mali, Niger, Chad and Burkina Faso). This force was set up in July and includes the thousand French troops in Mali. The other 2,000 are ready to quickly move from bases elsewhere in the region to wherever the most Islamic terrorist activity had been detected. The Americans are a junior partners in this, providing satellite and UAV surveillance and other intel services (especially analysis and access to nearly all American data on Islamic terrorist activities in the region). All this is meant to keep the Islamic terrorists in the Sahel weak and disorganized. So far that has worked, but AQIM is still getting support from Islamic terrorists in Europe and the Persian Gulf, where wealthy Islamic conservatives are still willing to finance Islamic terrorism in Africa. Islamic terrorists are continuing to carry out attacks in northern Mali mainly to let the world know that Islamic terrorist groups are still present in the area. The recent spike in attacks reminded everyone how important the Libyan sanctuary was. Until the terrorist sanctuary in Libya can be eliminated the Islamic terrorist problem will persist in the region.

November 17, 2014: AQIM released a video onto the Internet showing two captives of AQIM (a French man and a Dutch man) pleading for their government to rescue them from certain death. The French government acted.

November 19, 2014: In neighboring Niger Islamic terrorists crossed over from northern Mali and attacked the town of Bani-Bangou. Local security forces held off the assault until the government could use helicopters to rush in reinforcements. Such raids are usually to obtain supplies and Islamic terrorists often do this sort of thing in Niger because in most of northern Mali peacekeepers and warplanes (including helicopter gunships) are likely to show up quickly and lead to a deadly pursuit of the raiders. It's relatively safer to raid into Niger. In the last two months Niger security forces and local civilians have suffered dozens of casualties fighting Islamic terrorists, usually along the Mali border.

Side note: In regard to the concept of terrorism in Africa, some believe they could be veterans of civil wars in the Sahel and west Africa, some had been in the country for months, based in training camps in the south as if in anticipation of such an uprising, while others had been flown-in training bases at short notice.

The UN has expanded its Ebola containment efforts to Mali, where six people have died of the disease. By early December Mali was declared free of Ebola. Ebola first showed up in southern Mali in October. The current Ebola outbreak is a year old and the worst ever. So far at least 16,000 people have caught Ebola and at over 5,000 have died. Nearly all the Ebola cases have been in Liberia, Guinea (where the first cases were detected) and Sierra Leone. On October 23rd the first case was detected in Mali. Over a thousand people in Mali were quarantined in the successful effort to contain the disease. All this Ebola activity has been in the south and the infected people apparently came from neighboring Guinea. In the three countries with most Ebola activity the containment measures are finally working and infections are declining. Cases have shown up in over twenty other countries, but have not spread because of vigorous response from local governments.

November 21, 2014: In the north (Bourem near Gao) a suicide bomber detonated outside a phosphate mine but only killed himself and did not cause any other casualties.

November 22, 2014: In the north (near Kidal) Islamic terrorists are suspected of being behind a raid that left two children dead and ten kidnapped. This is how Islamic terrorists are maintaining their strength, by kidnapping teenage (or younger) boys and forcing them to work for them, or persuading them to join the terrorist organization.

November 25, 2014: In the north (near Gao) a roadside bomb killed two soldiers and wounded nine. Elsewhere in the north (Tessalit) a water truck hit a mine and there were no casualties. Also in the north 38 peacekeepers from Chad deserted their jobs to protest slow delivery of food, water and other supplies. After the transportation difficulties (the need for armed escorts to protect the trucks from Islamic terrorists and bandits) were explained the Chadian soldiers agreed to return to duty two days later.

November 27, 2014: A third round of peace talks with the Tuareg rebels up north ended without a final agreement. The main obstacle now is the degree of autonomy the Tuareg dominated north would have. For any peace deal to work the Islamic terrorists have to be kept out of northern Mali and this requires cooperation from the Tuareg majority up there as well as some military help from Algeria. For decades the main source of Islamic terrorists in North Africa has been Algeria. Thus both countries want their mutual border to be an effective barrier to Islamic terrorists and smugglers. Mali has cooperated in securing the border. Algeria has hosted three rounds of peace talks between Mali and the Tuareg rebels. There have been four major Tuareg uprisings in the north over the last fifty years and the black majority in the south has always been reluctant to grant the Tuareg of the north as much autonomy as the Tuareg wanted.

December 1, 2014: The IMF (International Monetary Fund) lifted a six month ban on aid for Mali. The ban cut off most foreign aid and was the result of Mali seeking to spend $40 million in aid money on a presidential airplane as well as ordering supplies for the military in a blatantly corrupt fashion. The IMF demanded audits and new spending procedures that made corruption more difficult and easier to spot. The Mali officials resisted but finally relented when it became clear that the donor community was serious about withholding aid.

December 9, 2014: The last French citizen held captive in Mali was released, apparently in exchange for five members of AQIM (Al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb) held in Mali prisons. The freed Frenchman had been held for three years after having been kidnapped in Mali. He was apparently held most of the time in neighboring Niger. Unofficially the French reported that they made the prisoner exchange rather than see the French captive killed and that the French government would admit nothing. This is an effort to placate other Western nations who all agree it is best not to negotiate with the Islamic terrorists because that only encourages them to kidnap more Westerners because they are assured of a reward. European governments, in particular, are prone to breaking this pact because of media and political pressure.

December 10, 2014: In the north French led peacekeepers (mainly from Chad and Burkino Faso) plus Mali Army troops have established regular patrols (at random intervals) to the few water holes in the desert. Water is scarce up there and the water holes are the main source of water for the animals (camels and other livestock) the few people up there. Life is impossible in the arid north without regular access to the water holes. The French have helped create relationships with the various tribes and in exchange for favors (foreign aid, security and whatever else works) have been able to get more and more information about the movement of “strangers” (usually smugglers or Islamic terrorists). The Islamic terrorists have hideouts in the north, but they must regularly obtain water and that turns out to be a major vulnerability which the French are trying to exploit. This, in combination with the French and American air patrols makes life very difficult for the Islamic terrorists up there. Mali security forces have rarely had good relations in the Tuareg north, especially in the mountains near the Algerian and Libyan borders. Also a problem are French efforts to recruit and train Mali soldiers and police who can provide security in the north. Corruption and tribal loyalties often make this difficult if not impossible. This is a major problem because intelligence is the key to dealing with Islamic terrorists, especially in an area like northern Mali where the Islamic terrorist groups are not particularly popular. The French are stuck in northern Mali until they can come up with some workable solution to the problem with security in the north. The key element here is the conflict between the local Tuaregs and the black majority (90 percent of the population) from the south that dominates the government and has long resisted granting the autonomy the Tuareg have always demanded. The Mali government is under tremendous pressure from France and foreign donors to make a deal with the Tuareg. But such a deal is political poison down south and a very hard sell.

December 10, 2014: In the north (near Gao) French troops clashed with Islamic terrorists and killed Ahmed al Tilemsi one of the founders and leaders of MUJAO (Movement for Unity and Jihad in West Africa) along with at least a dozen other gunmen. Tilemsi had a $5 million price on his head. MUJAO is basically a Mauritanian faction of AQIM and there was always some tension between the two groups. AQIM had the most money and weapons and used this to exercise some control over MUJAO and Ansar Dine when the three groups controlled the north in 2012. The other two radical groups outnumbered AQIM in Mali. MUJAO and AQIM were sometimes at odds with Ansar Dine, which felt it should be in charge because it was Malian. After the French led an invasion of the north in early 2013 MUJAO, which had occupied and run GAO fled with some of the surviving members moving across the nearby border to Niger while other headed for southern Libya. In the last year MUJAO has begun returning to the Gao area. That has proved dangerous as this incident demonstrated. Captured documents from this clash will shed more light on MUJAO intentions and capabilities.

China reported that the 395 peacekeepers it had sent to Mali in early 2013 returned home in September after being replaced by another 395 troops (who will also serve for none months). Stationed near Gao, the first contingent of Chinese troops carried out 697 missions (usually patrol or convoy escort) in addition to providing security for their base (which Islamic terrorists fired 31 rockets at). China did not report casualties or injuries suffered by their peacekeepers.

December 12, 2014: France confirmed that in order to get the last French citizen held captive in Mali released on the 9th France agreed to release four members of AQIM (Al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb) held in Mali prisons. The freed Frenchman had been held for three years after having been kidnapped in Mali. He was apparently held most of the time in neighboring Niger. At first France reported that they made the prisoner exchange rather than see the French captive killed and that the French government would admit nothing. This is an effort to placate other Western nations who all agree it is best not to negotiate with the Islamic terrorists because that only encourages them to kidnap more Westerners because they are assured of a reward. European governments, in particular, are prone to breaking this pact because of media and political pressure. France has now admitted to the exchange after details of it became widely known in Mali and there were protests there because some of those released were being tried for murder. Mali also admitted that, in the past, it had also traded imprisoned terrorists for Malians held captive and threatened with death.

December 14, 2014: France announced that in the last year its forces had killed nearly 200 Islamic terrorists in Africa (mostly in Mali). This was carried out by 3,000 French troops deployed in Mali, Mauritania, Niger, Burkina Faso and Chad with the help of over 6,000 African peacekeepers in Mali. Most of the French activity is in northern Mali along the Algerian border. France and Algeria also recently announced more cooperation in fighting Islamic terrorism, especially along Algeria's southern borders.

December 18, 2014: In the north (near Kidal) three peacekeepers were wounded when they were attacked with a roadside bomb.

December 29, 2014: In the north (outside Tessalit) Islamic terrorists fired at least nine rockets at a base used by French, peacekeeper and Mali troops. There were no casualties or damage.

January 1, 2015: In the north (near Gao) the mayor of a town and his son were killed by Islamic terrorist gunfire. Attacks on local officials are meant to encourage cooperation with the Islamic terrorists operating in the area.

January 4, 2015: In the north (outside Gao) six Niger peacekeepers were wounded when their truck was hit by a roadside bomb. Elsewhere in that area gunmen stopped four UN supply trucks, ordered the drivers out and then set the trucks on fire.

January 5, 2015: Despite constant pressure from 9,000 French troops and African peacekeepers Islamic terrorists in northern Mali continue to fight back. Since the Islamic terrorists were shut down up there in mid-2013 the peacekeepers have suffered 30 dead and over a hundred wounded. Another 13 civilian support personnel were killed. The persistence of the Islamic terrorists in the area is not just about ideology, but money. Islamic terrorists have, for about a decade, been running a very profitable cocaine smuggling operation that runs from Guinea-Bissau (where the stuff is flown or shipped in from South America) and then moved north to the Mediterranean coast and finally the more than four million cocaine users in Europe. This effort brings in over $100 million a year for the Islamic terrorists involved and has proved impossible to shut down. The French move into northern Mali in 2013 disrupted the cocaine operation, but the smugglers reorganized and, thanks to all that cash, were able to hire new people (and bribe new officials) to get the shipments moving north again.

A final peace deal with the rebellious Tuareg in the north is stalled because the black majority in the south does not want to grant as much autonomy as the Tuaregs demand. The two groups have always been at odds but were only united in the same country by the colonial French in the 19th century. Like most African countries, dividing the nation is not considered an option and the colonial borders are considered sacrosanct.

The French are also trying to arrange a suitable (to both sides) deal to prevent a repeat of 2012 (when Tuareg tribal rebels with the help of al Qaeda affiliated Islamic terrorists chased out government forces out of northern Mali and declared a separate Tuareg state. This caused the Mali Army to mutiny (because of lack of support from the corrupt government) down south and take over the government for a while. T he thinly populated northern two-thirds of the country has a population of less than two million, out of 15 million for all of Mali. The north was very poor in the best of times, and over a year of Islamic terrorist government halted tourism (a major source of income, especially in the three major cities) and the movement of many goods. Al Qaeda, better financed and more fanatic, soon took over from the tribal rebels. The Tuareg rebels had objected to the imposition of Islamic law, but the Islamic radical gunmen drove the Tuareg fighters out of the cities and large towns. There were only about 2,000 Islamic terrorists up north during 2012 when they declared the area a sanctuary and base for Islamic radicals. Then the few thousand Tuareg rebels began negotiating with the Mali government about cooperation. France unexpectedly sent troops in January 2013. This was triggered in part by al Qaeda efforts to invade southern Mali in addition to setting up terrorist training camps in the north. The bold French move paid off, although Mali still has internal problems (mainly corruption) and an unhappy Tuareg majority in the north. Now the Tuaregs are threatening to rebel again. The head of the 2012 military coup is now under arrest and facing trial. The elected Mali government is back in power but appears to be as corrupt as ever and under growing pressure from donor nations to either clean up the corruption or see most of the aid disappear.

While horses played a part in the military and cultural traditions of Sahel, Mali, Songhai, as well as some medieval Nigerian states. Why wasn't there a widespread adoption of horses by the indigenous people of Southern Africa?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam, I am the West African History Guy

The Khoi are pastoralists San. They adopted horses almost as soon as they were imported into the region (Horses were certainly faster than the cows they rode before). The San being foragers never did. Pastoralism was antithetical to their lifestyle. Rather like how no one expects urbanites to drive trucks or singletons to buy 12-seater vans.

Before Europeans introduced horses into southern Africa in the 17th-century, the closest things to horses in the region, the occasional ship-wrecked survivor aside, were the famously ill-tempered zebras, quaggas and 'unicorns'.

I honestly have no idea why they didn't tame quaggas. And as I wrote that, I suddenly realised that I have no idea what drove steppe people to tame the horses in the first place. How did they even catch them?!

A vague recollection that Khoi, Hottentots—as they were then known at the time (to distinguish them from other…People of Colour)—were prime jockeys in oldies SA led to googling and this movie:

Related Links
Did horses not exist in Subsaharan Africa until Europeans introduced them very recently?
Why can wild horses survive without being shod? Why don't they need horseshoes?
Were there horses and cavalry in Sub-Saharan Africa before European contact?
Why weren't there horses in Sub-Saharan Africa?
Why did the Sahel kingdoms like Mali and Songhai expand to the east and west, but not into the south?
How effective were horse archers?

Why did Mali Empire fleets fail to voyage to the West but European voyagers later succeed? Were voyage technologies the main reason?

Kevin Richardson PhD in History, The University of Texas at Austin Sun
This thread led Josue Dennis Chance and this thread too addresses the question of whether the fleets actually existed.

I highly, highly recommend reading African Dominion by Michael Gomez:

He devotes a chapter solely to the topic of Musa's hajj, and briefly covers the questions surrounding the reported expeditions over 4-5 pages. A few points he makes in favor of the existence of expeditions are:

Mali was an expansionist, commercially inclined, outward-looking empire, as evidenced by the rapid territorial growth and Musa's decision to travel to Mecca. It seems plausible that political leadership would be open to other ventures to expand Malian influence. the peoples of the Senegambia and Atlantic coast certainly had seafaring expertise as fishermen and paddlers along the coast.

Shihab al-Umari's account of the story describes 1st expedition encountering a "great river in the ocean," which is a fair description of an ocean current. A detail that conveys some level of familiarity with the deep ocean.
Now, on the other hand, Shihab al-Umari's account was supposedly delivered by emperor Musa to an intermediary in Cairo, who recounted it al-Umari decades later.

Micheal Gomez recounts a few reasons why emperor Musa may be an unreliable narrator concerning the fate of his predecessor.

Ibn Khaldun's Kitab al-Ibar, a king's list for Mali up until ~1370, is our major source for royal lineages and succession between Sunjata and Mansa Musa. The problem is, Ibn Khaldun's kings-list is not internally consistent, there are too many kings in it and he gives reigns that are too long. He tells the story of Abu Bakr I being assassinated by Sekure, a palace slave and usurper emperor. Ibn Khaldun claims Timbuktu was conquered by Mansa Sekure, but elsewhere in the narrative, Ibn Khaldun claims Mansa Musa captured Timbuktu after returning from his Hajj. Sekure reported to have also gone on Hajj to Mecca. Michael Gomez argues that there are enough narrative similarities between Sekure and Musa that they might be the same figure..

In Ibn Khaldun's Kitab al-Ibar, recounts a rumor that a reason for Musa's hajj was in penance for the murder of a female relative, either his mother or grandmother (language is somewhat unclear on this point). Building on the Sekure speculation, Gomez interprets that information as implying Musa came to power through violence, perhaps through a palace coup?

Ibn Khaldun fails to mention any oceanic voyages. If al-Umari's narrative was true and an emperor retired and disappeared on an ocean expedition, Ibn Khaldun's informants would surely have told him about it, right? So, the long and the short of it is that it's unclear if there truly were voyages. There are points supporting the idea it was real, but also reasons we should question Musa's motives.
Also, the narrative of Shihab al-Umari only really says that the purpose of the expeditions were to "explore to the furthest edge of the ocean". 20th-century authors have made the logical leap to interpret that as a Trans-Atlantic crossing, but the text is not clear on that point. Perhaps "explore to the furthest edge of the ocean" means a coastal expedition searching north for a sea route to Morocco, or following the coast south the Gulf of Guinea?
Related Links

Why didn't the Native Americans try to voyage through the sea to reach Europe, Africa or Asia?

Why did the voyage from Europe to the Asia Pacific pass the east or west route? Isn't it faster to go north?

Once Ferdinand Magellan's voyage around the world ended with the arrival back to Spain, how quickly did it take before other European powers heard of the trip and began trying to reach far off destinations on their own?

Is it true that Voyager 1 and Voyager 2 are still traveling and have escaped the heliosphere and have entered interstellar space?

How can Voyager send a signal strong enough for us to receive, in spite of its enormous distance from us? And how can it have the power to do so more than 20 years after its launch?

After Columbus' first voyage to the Americas how long did it take before Europeans understood that this was a discovery of a massive 'new world', rather than that of reaching the Far East? What evidence supports the answer given?

Why has Russia inked a defense agreement with Mali?

Pavel Fekula Professional Russian Sep 30

Over the past decade France has been propping up the Malian government in a civil war against Islamic radicals from Al Qaeda. The French government appears to have come to the conclusion that they can no longer afford to prop up the Malian government. As a result, France is conducting a withdrawal from the country.

This puts the Malian government in an awkward position. They desperately need to secure some means of foreign military support or their government or their government will fall in short order.

To that end the Malian government has contracted with Russian private military contractor Wagner Group to assist it in its civil war against the Jihadists. If the French won't fuck Al Qaeda, someone else will.

Related Links

Are there black people in Russia? Why?
How safe is Russia for 'non-white' visitors?
What is the story behind the terms 'White Russia', 'Black Russia', 'Red Russia' and 'Green Russia'?
How are black people treated in Russia?
Is Russia dangerous for black people?
Why do Americans fear and dislike Russia?
Why is Belarus called Belarus (White Russia)?
What do Americans mean by 'white'?
What did CCCP mean in Russia?
Why do many Russians have something against Black people when they never even met them?
Being a white American, am I a racist if I hate Russians and Russia?
Where is "White Russia?"
What is the difference between a Black and White Russian?
How do Americans view the Russians?
Does Russia welcome black people?

Comment puis-je réfuter l'idée selon laquelle la richesse de l'Occident serait due aux pillages auxquels il se serait adonné lors de la colonisation et du néocolonialisme ?

Jean Villani Suivre ven.

Les vrais raisons de la richesse d'un pays, cela a été dit déjà de nombreuses fois, les pays dans le haut du classement mondial du PIB, produit intérieur brut, ne sont pas ceux qui ont des grandes richesses dans leur sous-sol mais ceux qui ont une populations éduquée, instruite, travailleuse, ajoutez un système économique libéral, capitaliste.

La Chine, du moment quel a reprit à son compte cette recette occidentale à rattrapé ceux ci et les dépasser finalement, il y a bien sûr quantités d'autres exemple de pays qui reviennent de loin, le plus puissants état européen, l'Allemagne, était détruite à 90% après la guerre, le Japon, lui aussi ruiné en 1945 est devenu celui que l'on connaît, un autre pays d'Asie la Corée du Sud est actuellement un pays de premier plan dans le domaine des nouvelles technologies, après bien sûr les autres pays européens tout en étant dans le haut du classement tirent leur épingle du jeux à moindre mesure mais il ne faut pas y voir un manque de richesse dans leur sous-sol comme je l'ai dit au début, juste une population moins formées, moins dynamique.

Pour ceux en colère contre les méchants européens colonialiste qui sont responsables de leur misère sociale , leur économie pauvre qui ne décolle pas, vous connaissez maintenant la recette d'un avenir radieux, des écoles, des écoles, des écoles, une éducation libérale pour les garçons et les filles, ce sont eux, là vraie richesse d'un pays. Suivre Jean Villani

Questions similaires

La France est-elle prospère à cause de la colonisation ? Si la colonisation n'avait jamais eu lieu, comment se présenterait la France ?

Si vous venez d'un pays qui a été colonisé dans le passé, que pense votre peuple des pays qui étaient autrefois au pouvoir ? Que pensent les Vietnamiens des Français, les Brésiliens des Portugais, etc?

L'Afrique est-elle pauvre à cause de la colonisation ? Si la colonisation n'avait jamais eu lieu, comment se présenterait l'Afrique ?

Comment se porterait le monde si l’Occident n’avait pas pillé l’Afrique et placé des marionnettes au pouvoir ?

Pourquoi la colonisation de l'Amérique du nord a-t-elle engendré des pays "riches" et celle de l'Amérique du sud, des pays "pauvres" ?

Pourquoi ne parle-t-on jamais des colonisations qui n'ont pas été faites par les occidentaux, comme les colonisations inter-africaines ou orientales ?

Que se serait-il passé si Philippe Pétain était mort avant 1940 ? Comment se serait passé la fin de la campagne de France et comment Pétain serait-il dans l'imaginaire collectif de nos jours ?

La colonisation a-t-elle eu également des effets positifs sur l'Afrique ?

Quelle est la meilleure façon pour un pays colonisateur de faire repentance sincère de ses actions passées, sachant que son peuple actuel n'est pas responsable des actions de ses ancêtres ?

Pourquoi la colonisation de Vénus dans des "villes flottantes" dans les hautes couches de son atmosphère est une meilleure idée que la colonisation de la surface de Mars ?

La France n’est-elle riche qu’à cause de la colonisation ?

De toutes les théories du complot, laquelle est la plus ridicule selon vous ? Pourquoi ?

Pourquoi les pays colonisés par les anglais sont-ils plus prospères que les pays colonisés par les français ?

Les adeptes de la colonisation sont-ils conscients d'avoir fait éclater des structures traditionnelles qui ont permis à des populations entière de traverser l'Histoire dans la paix et la sérénité ?

Quels sont les avantages de la colonisation ?

Comment peut-on expliquer l'attitude insolente de la France vis-à-vis des nations souveraines d'Afrique en l'occurrence le Mali ?

Edouard Corblet 3 oct.

Les Africains commencent très sérieusement a nous barber en grande ampleur. Non seulement on ne fait plus de commerce avec eux car ils préfèrent la Chine mais en plus ils nous demandent une aide militaire pour ensuite critiquer notre intervention pour des raisons de politique interne.

Il existe un vieux proverbe qui s'applique "A cheval donnée, on ne regarde pas les dents". Les Africains non seulement regardent les dents pour connaitre l'âge du cheval(raison du proverbe) mais en plus ils critiquent la couleur.

Vous ne pourriez vous défendre tout seul comme des grands et cesser d'accuser la France de tous les crimes possibles et imaginables. En plus, la propagande sur piller les ressources du Sahel est vraiment peu crédible, en dehors du sable, il n'y a beaucoup de choses a piller.

Si la France était si influente que cela en Afrique, c'est elle qui aurait le monopole du commerce avec ces pays hors c'est loin d'être le cas. Notre commerce avec l'Afrique francophone est de 5 milliards d'euros ce qui fait 1% de notre commerce, ce n'est pas ridicule mais reste marginal.

Pour une fois, regardez de l'autre cote de la barrière et imaginez vous Français qui ne connait la colonisation que par les livres d'histoire. Pensez a la réaction de cette personne quand son pays est poignardé dans le dos par ses supposés amis. Il sait que Barkhane coute 1 milliard d'euros par an et ne rapporte rien et qu'en plus les Africains de tous bords nous accusent de piller le Sahel.

On pourrait renverser la question et demander pourquoi les africains 60 ans après l'indépendance continuent à pleurer à propos du passé. Si les Français faisaient pareil, ils pourraient sans peine tout mettre sur le dos de la seconde guerre mondiale.

Questions similaires

Les Maliens manifestants dans les rues pour réclamer le départ des soldats français, alors pourquoi la France insiste-t-elle tant pour se maintenir au Mali si elle n’est pas la bienvenue ?

Le dessin de Charlie Hebdo, sur les militaires tués au Mali, va-t-il trop loin ?

Pourquoi la France ne s'excuse-t-elle pas une bonne fois pour toutes pour la colonisation vis à vis de l'Algérie ?

La France est le plus grand prédateur en Afrique et a longtemps été vu à travers. La France n'a longtemps été qu'une puissance régionale moyenne en Europe. Pourquoi sont-ils encore si influents en Afrique ?

La France est-elle l’ancienne puissance coloniale la plus détestée en Afrique ?

Pourquoi la France a-t-elle du mal à regarder son histoire coloniale en face ?

Les avis divergent énormément . La France est-elle réellement complice du génocide des tutsis au Rwanda ? Quelle est la responsabilité de Mitterrand et surtout celle de Kagame (attentat avion) ?

La France doit-elle s'excuser perpétuellement pour avoir eu des colonies en Afrique ?

Quel est le meilleur moyen pour les populations africaines de se débarrasser de la France et de son néocolonialisme militaro-monétaire sans l'implication de leurs politiciens corrompus ?

Pourquoi la France passe-t-elle son temps à s'excuser pour l'Algérie, le Rwanda, l'esclavage, Napoléon, etc.?

Pensez-vous que Macron doit s'excuser pour la colonisation de l'Algérie, la Tunisie, le Maroc ...?

Quel est le vrai problème du Mali, est-ce la France ou les Maliens eux-mêmes ?

Que pensez-vous du sentiment anti français qui évolue actuellement au Mali ?

La France est traitée de néocolonialiste et de voleuse en Afrique, pourquoi insiste-t-elle pour y rester si elle est vomie ?

Face aux accusations fréquentes de pillages et de déstabilisations de l'Afrique dont fait l'objet la France, êtes-vous pour un retrait des troupes françaises de l'Afrique afin de laisser les Africains se débrouiller tout seul ?

Croyez-vous que la France devrait présenter ses excuses aux ex-colonies pour les abus du passé colonial, comme le Mexique l'a demandé récemment à l'Espagne ?

Alexandre Roswilo Précédent lieu : Afrique (1975–2019) 2 ans

Réponse originale : Croyez-vous que la France devrait présenter ses excuses aux ex-colonies pour les abus du passé colonial, comme le Mexico l'a demandé récemment a Espagne ?

Il s'agit d'une amnésie collective ou non pas la France mais la plupart des pays européens engagés dans l'aventure coloniale se sont confondus .

Il est normal de pointer l'Allemagne comme responsable de la shoah mais lorsqu'il s'agit de la colonisation, on parle de vikings, de mongols et tous autres peuples antiques ou moyenâgeux pourtant les évènements dont nous parlons datent pour la plupart de moins d'un siècle et les pays concernés sont à côté de l'Allemagne qui assument elle les atrocités de la shoah qui datent de la même période historique .

Le président allemand demande "le pardon" d'Israël
L'Allemagne insiste sur sa responsabilité dans la Shoah | Europe

[2]

[3]

Génocide des Herero : la Namibie attend toujours les excuses de l’Allemagne – JeuneAfrique.com

Mieux beaucoup se justifient gentiment en avouant que leur objectifs étaient simplement d’exploiter à blanc les colonies et leurs habitants comme beaucoup d’autres l’ont fait à travers l’esclavage et non de les exterminer comme les Nazis l’ont voulu avec les juifs et compagnies . Quoi de plus noble .

Aimé Césaire ; "Discours sur le colonialisme " Page 77 - 78 :

Pierre Jamain Anciennement Gérant de S.A.R.L. (Labo photo professionnel) à Labo photo professionnel (1970–2000)Mis à jour le 1 an

La surexploitation ou pillage sont des poncifs qui tiennent plus du fantasme que de la réalité, malheureusement ces poncifs ne sont jamais documentés, j'ai donc fait des recherches : Source: OCDE (2017), Commerce en valeur par pays partenaires, Statistiques trimestrielles de l'OCDE du commerce international (base de données), dans ces statistiques les fruits de la surexploitation devraient forcément figurer dans les importations Françaises, parmi les échanges commerciaux les importations se font dans l'ordre décroissant avec l'Allemagne,(19,42%) Belgique(10,71%) Italie(7,64%) Pays-Bas, Espagne, USA, Chine, Royaume Uni, Suisse, Pologne, Russie, Irlande, suivent 45 pays ou le seul pays d'Afrique est l'Afrique du Sud qui figure à la 38ème place avec 0,10% des importations, à ma connaissance les Sud africains ne dénoncent pas de pillages de la France.
Il y a un bon exemple de VRAI pillage mais c'est la France qui en est victime en Guyane ou des milliers de garimpeiros (chercheurs d'or illégaux) volent environ

5 tonnes d'or par an et qui en outre détruisent la forêt et polluent les cours d'eau avec l'usage du mercure.

En bref si il y a une surexploitation il serait temps que ceux qui soutiennent cette thèse la documente et citent leurs sources.
Suivre Pierre Jama

Questions similaires

La France est-elle prospère à cause de la colonisation ? Si la colonisation n'avait jamais eu lieu, comment se présenterait la France ?

Pourquoi la France n'a-t-elle pas comme toutes ses colonies viré tous les Français de chez elle ?

Pourquoi la France a-t-elle du mal à regarder son histoire coloniale en face ?

La France a t-elle souffert économiquement de l'accession à l'indépendance de plusieurs de ses anciennes colonies ? Quel serait le manque à gagner selon vous ?

La France doit-elle s'excuser perpétuellement pour avoir eu des colonies en Afrique ?

Pensez-vous qu'un jour les ex-colonies françaises demanderont des réparations pécuniaires massives à la France pour l'occupation de leurs territoires et avec quelle chance de succès ?

Les gens des pays africains qui parlent français détestent-ils la France et la langue française ?

La France doit-elle s’excuser pour son passé colonial, comme le demande l’Algérie ?

Les anciennes colonies françaises d’Afrique devraient-elles suivre l’exemple des anciennes colonies portugaises en chassant la France par la force pour s’en débarrasser ?

Quand on regarde l'effrayant désastre que les anciennes colonies autres qu'asiatiques ont fait d'elles-mêmes en 60 ans, n'y a-t-il

Oui, il vaudrait la peine d'étudier, cliniquement, dans le détail, les démarches d'Hitler et de l'hitlérisme et de révéler au très distingué, très humaniste, très chrétien bourgeois du XXe siècle qu'il porte en lui un Hitler qui s'ignore, qu'un Hitler l'habite, qu'Hitler est son démon, que s'il le vitupère c'est par manque de logique, et qu'au fond, ce qu'il ne pardonne pas à Hitler, ce n'est pas le crime en soi, le crime contre l'homme, ce n'est pas l'humiliation de l'homme en soi, c'est le crime contre l'homme blanc, c'est l'humiliation de l'homme blanc, et d'avoir appliqué à l'Europe des procédés colonialistes dont ne relevaient jusqu'ici que les Arabes d'Algérie, les coolies de l'Inde et les nègres d'Afrique.

Concernant la France.

Des excuses , il est trop tard et cela ne servira à rien car les mêmes bourdes se sont répété tous les dix ans au Biafra , au Rwanda , en Lybie et j'en passe .

[7]

Pourtant , ce ne sont plus des colonies mais des États qui grandissent sans cesse et continuent de vivre les travers et surtout les pilages de leur élite politique avec la plupart du temps le soutient ou la complicité de la France . Plus encore c’est ces mêmes pays qui hériterons paradoxalement de la primauté de la langue française elle-même d’ici peu .

[10]

La France a mis en Afrique une industrie de pillage qui a survécu à la colonisation . Beaucoup de Français rêvent et espèrent même que cette industrie survive à la concurrence chinoise .

Et c'est justement ça que la plupart des Africains ne pardonnent pas à la France .

Ce que nous ne pardonnons pas à la France , ce n'est guère la colonisation mais ce sentiment continue de mépris vis-à-vis de l'Afrique .

La politique française en Afrique a été un long fleuve d'incompétence caractérisée , d'opportunisme , d'ingérence et de pillage sans cesse dévoilé de grands lobbies politiques et économiques . Les Africains en sont sortis profondément traumatisés et dégoûtés .

Les plus grandes figures historiques françaises sont des esclavagistes ou des racistes assumés . Cela embêtent peu de Français .

En Afrique, des grandes figures historiques comme Sankara,Lumumba ou Mandela , ont cela de remarquable non seulement de toujours avoir combattu pour la liberté de leur peuples mais aussi et surtout d'avoir encouragé et cultivé la tolérance . Il n'a jamais été question de haïr qui que ce soit surtout la France ou l'Occident où de piller les ressources de X ou de Y . En face qu'avez-vous à nous proposer à part arrogance ou un sentiment de supériorité.

Beaucoup de Français ou d'intellectuels en général et d'origine africaine en particulier en ont profondément souffert et en sont sorti traumatisés de cette politique de la métropole .

Mais qu'est-ce qui se passe concrètement dans la société française ?

Un jour j'en parlais avec un ainé très brillant qui m'a donné cette réponse remarquable :

"Beaucoup d'Africains ne comprennent pas la France parce que très peu connaissent un terme de la langue française qui résume mieux la culture française vis-à-vis d'autres peuples en général : il s'agit du chauvinisme .

Il n'y a pas que les Africains qui en sont victimes mais beaucoup d'autres à travers le monde dont en Europe , les Belges, les Espagnols, les Roumains et j'en passe ."

C’est dommage vraiment dommage .

Pour ma part , je pense qu’il faut vite pardonner et les Africains grandiraient mieux gagneraient à le faire mais ne jamais oublier .

Adhérer par exemple à des courants nationalistes pseudo-panafricanistes ou des théories afro-centristes ne feront qu’aggraver les choses mieux l’intolérance ou la haine . Certains Africains et compagnies sont malheureusement sur cette sombre voie .

Réponse de Alexandre Roswilo à Faut-il prendre avec distanciation le dernier clip de Nick Conrad ou le condamner sans réserves ?

Le plus important c'est le pardon mieux l'avenir à travers la mondialisation, ses défis et le statut de citoyen du monde qu'il offre . Concernant la France, nous n'entendrons pas un pays où la plupart de l'élite politique et des pourfendeurs s'accrochent désespérément à son passé .

Notes de bas de page

[1] Image on tchadinfos.com
[2] https://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/1/13/Himmler_besichtigt_die_Gefangenenlager_in_Russland._Heinrich_Himmler_inspects_a_prisoner_of_war_camp_in_Russia%2C_circa..._-_NARA_-_540164.jpg
[3] Image on scuolazoo.com
[4] http://www.berlinestanous.com/medias/images/ge-nocide-hereros.png
[5] https://www.larevuedesressources.org/IMG/pdf/CESAIRE.pdf
[6] Image on assemblee-nationale.fr
[7] Image on lexpress.fr
[8] Image on lprs1.fr
[9] Image on humanite.fr
[10] Image on ladmedia.fr
[11] Image on la-croix.com
[12] Image on wp.com
[13] Image on over-blog-kiwi.com
[14] Image on ekladata.com
[15] Image on jarofquotes.com
[16] Image on wp.com

[17] Image on ouest-france.fr
Suivre Alexandre Roswilo

Questions similaires

Pensez-vous qu'un jour les ex-colonies françaises demanderont des réparations pécuniaires massives à la France pour l'occupation de leurs territoires et avec quelle chance de succès ?

Est-ce que la France s'est excusée pour son passé colonial ?

La France doit-elle s'excuser pour son passé colonial, comme le demande l'Algérie ?

Les anciennes colonies françaises d'Afrique devraient-elles suivre l'exemple des anciennes colonies portugaises en chassant la France par la force pour s'en débarrasser ?

Le président du Mexique vient de demander au roi d'Espagne Felipe VI de s'excuser pour la conquête espagnole. Que pensez-vous de ces actions ?

Alors que les empires coloniaux sont morts, est-il normal que la France soit le dernier pays européen à maintenir des possessions extra-européennes ?

Pourquoi la France s'accroche tant à ses anciennes colonies africaines contrairement à l'Angleterre ?

Pourquoi l'état français ignore son histoire de colonialisme ?

La France est-elle prospère à cause de la colonisation ? Si la colonisation n'avait jamais eu lieu, comment se présenterait la France ?

Pourquoi l'Espagne refuse-t-elle de s'excuser pour la conquête du Mexique ?

Pourquoi l'état français ignore son histoire de colonialisme ?

Philippe Beaulieu Citoyen Mis à jour le 2 ans

Mon fils, actuellement en 4ème, étudie depuis quelques semaines le colonialisme européen et français depuis le XVème siècle, et ses cours présentent les choses sous un jour loin d'être favorable pour la France… Partant du principe que les programmes d'histoire sont validés par une des institutions de l'état français, l'Education nationale, j'ai du mal à voir où il ignorerait son histoire coloniale. Mais bon, depuis quelques temps, on a vu fleurir ce genre de questions tendancieuses sur Quora ou les réseaux sociaux où par inculture ou par esprit partisan, certains veulent faire croire que la France occulterait son passé colonial. Suivre Philippe Beaulieu

Questions similaires

Est-ce que la France s'est excusée pour son passé colonial ?

Que pensez-vous de l'affirmation de Anasse Kazib « L'Histoire de la France s'est fondée sur le colonialisme et l'impérialisme »?

Quels empires/puissances coloniales ont commis le plus grand nombre d'atrocités dans l'histoire, et pourquoi ?

Que pense le peuple français de la surexploitation des ex colonies par la France ?

Emmanuel Macron veut-il rétablir l'empire colonial français ?

La France a-t-elle encore un pouvoir sur ses anciennes colonies ?

Pourquoi la France a-t-elle du mal à regarder son histoire coloniale en face ?

Quelles sont les colonies actuelles de France ?

Pourquoi est-ce que le monde ne dit rien sur le colonialisme économique imposé à l'Afrique par la France ?

La France doit-elle s'excuser pour son passé colonial, comme le demande l'Algérie ?

L'armée française a-t-elle la capacité à tordre le cou au groupe paramilitaire Wagner ?

D'abord il faudrait : Vassili Fiodorovitch Patrouchev Suivre Vétéran. Sécurité internationale. Consulting géopolitique 14 h

1/ pouvoir distinguer les mercenaires de Wagner des conseillers russes officiels au Mali. Cela sera d'autant plus difficile que mercenaires et conseillers, contrairement à l'armée française ne circulent pas dans des véhicules spécifiques mais avec des soldats de l'armée malienne. Un accrochage se solderait donc par la mort possible de soldats maliens. Et s'il a lieu en ville par exemple par le lynchage par la foule des soldats français.

Sans computer que dans beaucoup de pays maintenant, comme en Centre Afrique la protection des personnalités est assurée soit pas les mercenaires soit par les conseillers militaires, donc des soldats Spetsnaz russes issues du GRU ou de groupes officiels comme la fameuse unité du SVR Zaslon…

2/ Les mercenaires Wagner sont pour la fine fleur et les groupes de fer de lance qui procèdent aux nettoyages préalables, d'anciens Spetsnaz (forces spéciales) qui comme leur chef Dmitri Outkine ancien Podpollkovnik (Lieutenant-Colonel) des Spetsnaz du GRU ont déjà été engagés dans de multiples guerres et sur des terrains difficiles. Pour Outkine : Tchétchénie, Daguestan, Donbass, Syrie, Libye, etc… Et ne sont tenus à aucune règle d'engagement autre que de détruire l'ennemi. Leur équipement est loin d'être rudimentaire :

Il y a donc de fortes chances que plusieurs soldats français, qui n'ont pas tant l'expérience des combats que des patrouilles de sécurisation, y laissent leur peau

Les Russes eux vont même jusqu'à poser devant les récents monuments en l'honneur de la coopération franco-russe

Que pense le peuple français de la surexploitation des ex colonialisme par la France ?

Alors, l'armée française n'a plus aucune option, puisque les divers gouvernements africains ont déjà passé des accords militaires avec la Russie et des contrats avec divers groupes de coopérations russes ainsi que les mercenaires de Prigogine. Suivre Vassili Fiodorovitch Patrouchev

Questions similaires

De plus en plus d'articles font savoir que l'armée française se préparerait à une guerre dite de haute intensité, anticipée à une décennie. Est-ce vrai ? Si oui, contre quel(s) pays ?
La France déclare la guerre aux États-Unis et n'a le droit qu'à un seul allié. Lequel choisissez-vous et pourquoi ? Aucune bombe nucléaire n'est autorisée.
Que doit améliorer les forces armées francaises dans leurs équipements militaires. Et en terme de nombre que lui manque t'elles par rapport au autre pays ?
Comment la légion étrangère française moderne se compare-t-elle aux marines américains ?
L'armée Française a-t-elle les moyens de se défendre en cas d'agression de la Turquie ?
Quelle est la plus grosse carence de l'Armée Française ?
Le grade de maréchal peut-il toujours, théoriquement, être obtenu dans l'armée française ?
Pourquoi l'armée française n'a-t-elle pas pu stopper la Révolution française ?
L'armée française peut-elle vaincre l'armée allemande et envahir l'Allemagne ?
Quel est le pays européen qui forme les meilleurs soldats ?
Quelle est la puissance de l'armée française ?
Pourquoi l'armée française fabrique-t-elle ses propres avions au lieu de les acheter ?
L'armée française a-t-elle assez de soldats pour une possible guerre d'envergure ?
Quelle est l'unité d'élite la plus prestigieuse de l'armée Française ?
Pourquoi la France a-t-elle obtenu l'arme atomique ?

How do people who live in places that are continually at war find reasons to smile?

Answered Jan 2

Happiness is that they knock on your door with gentle knocks and not with a machine gun.

This phrase sums it up, happiness is easier to find in our worst moments since the threshold is very low. When, for us, having eggs and bread for breakfast can be something of the day to day, but having ice cream for breakfast can give us a lot of happiness, for people who live surrounded by war, anything "normal" away from war will be reason enough to smile. And that is why they find a smile in every simple thing.

Related Links

If a nuclear World War takes place, what would be the safest place on Earth to stay alive if any?
Are people who live in warm places happier than people who live in cold climates?
What is a country not at war, where the people feel like they're living in a state of war?
Why do people live in cold places?
After a soldier returns from war to their country, does their view of the civilian population change in any way, e.g. finding them petty or spoiled?
Why do other people care if I live?
I don't want to. I don't like it here. I want to go home. Humans are horrible to each other, so why when one dies is it a tragic thing? Why do they try to stop each other from leaving this place?
Why do some people like war instead of peace?
Why do people live in remote places?
What is the reason people live alone?
Are people who live in the country generally happier than people who live in the city?

Tous les supermarchés Auchan et les stations Total saccagés au Sénégal, qu'est-ce qu'il faut encore pour que la France comprenne qu'elle n'est plus la bienvenue en Afrique ?

Lieu : France (1900–aujourd'hui) Mis à jour le 6 mo

Bonjour. Absolument. Au même titre que ces associations "philanthropiques" qui bourrent le crâne aux autochtones. Et puis à ce compte, je me demande ce que fichent les Maliens en France, au lieu d'aller défendre leur pays. Bonne journée.

Mali : après la fin de l'opération Barkhane, la tentation russe

Alors qu'Emmanuel Macron a annoncé le 10 juin la fin de l'opération Barkhane au Sahel sous sa forme actuelle, Moscou veut se poser en alternative à la France dans la région. A Bamako, la capitale malienne, une intervention de la Russie divise.

Des habitants de Bamako se réunissent régulièrement pour protester contre la présence française au Mali, et réclamer une intervention russe. Ici, le 27 mai dernier, drapeaux russes et maliens se mêlent lors d'une manifestation. (MICHELE

CATTANI / AFP)
Ils se rassemblent régulièrement, les jeudis, devant l'ambassade russe, à Bamako. Les membres de la plate-forme Intervention Russie militent pour que Moscou s'implique dans les affaires maliennes. Comme à l'époque de la décolonisation, dans les années 60, quand Bamako s'était rapprochée de l'ex-URSS.

Soixante ans plus tard, le regard de Sidi Traoré, membre de ce mouvement citoyen, se tourne à nouveau vers l'Est. "Nous voulons que la Russie vienne traiter nos problèmes sécuritaires, explique-t-il. Nous avons vu la coopération militaire russe avec d'autres pays, comme la Syrie, ou plus récemment la Centrafrique. Nous sommes convaincus que des militaires russes feront davantage que la France."

Sentiment anti-français

Des propos qui laissent sceptiques Boubacar Ba. Ce proche de l'imam Dicko, opposant au régime de l'ex-président malien Ibrahim Boubacar Keïta, très en vue lors des manifestations de 2020, rejette l'idée d'une intervention russe. "Nous assistons à une querelle géopolitique au Sahel, analyse-t-il. Le champ d'action classique de la Russie n'est pas le Sahel." Selon Boubacar Ba, la tentation russe est alimentée par un sentiment anti-français. "Une partie de l'opinion malienne veut en découdre avec les autorités françaises, et trouve en Moscou une solution alternative. Mais c'est un saut dans l'inconnu."
La présence française au Mali est régulièrement contestée dans les rues. Certains estiment que l'opération Barkhane et son objectif de lutter contre le terrorisme dans la région est un échec. Alors, pourquoi ne pas demander à un autre acteur d'intervenir ?

Besoin d'alliés face aux terrorists

Le président du Parti socialiste malien, proche de l'ex-président IBK, Amadou Koïta, considère Moscou comme un allié potentiel. "Le Mali a des amis, que ce soit la France ou la Russie. Mais le Mali n'est pas un pays ingrat. Nous ne jetons pas le bébé avec l'eau du bain. Nous savons que 50 soldats français sont tombés ici [depuis 2013]. D'un autre côté, il est vrai que l'opération Barkhane pose problème aujourd'hui, parce que les résultats ne sont pas à la hauteur des attentes. Nous avons besoin de tous les partenariats pour lutter contre le terrorisme."
C’est ainsi que la Russie se retrouve présente dans beaucoup d’esprits. Assimi Goïta, le nouveau président malien, aurait suivi des formations en Russie. Certains racontent même qu'il parle le russe.

Pour Michel Beuret, directeur éditorial de la fondation Hirondelle, une ONG suisse produisant des médias d'information sur des terrains de crise, notamment au Mali, les Russes sont déjà influents dans le pays. "Ils font de la désinformation, mais ce n'est pas aussi prégnant que ce que l'on peut voir en Centrafrique, décrit-il. Les Russes cherchent à s'installer sur le continent africain. Parce que les Chinois, les Américains, les Européens sont là."

Cette tentation russe existe donc bien au Mali, et notamment à Bamako, où se trouve une grande partie de la classe politique malienne.

Pourquoi la situation franco-malienne dégénère ?

Hamid Sam Suivre grand passionné de politique. 2 h

Elle dégénère à cause de la France d'abord.
Elle dégénère également à cause des décisions infondées et influencées de la CEDEAO.

La France est l'un des États qui, depuis de nombreuses années continue de se mêler des affaires intérieures de ses anciennes colonies comme si elles n'étaient plus indépendantes et souveraines. Quand ses anciennes colonies prennent des décisions qui ne l'arrange pas, elle s'insurgent contre lesdites décisions. Le cas du Mali est simple. La France n'accepte pas le fait que les Russes apportent leur soutien militaire au Mali et avance comme argument, son influence sur le sol malien. En un mot, le fait que le groupe WAGNER dépose ses valises sur le sol malien porte atteinte à l'influence de la France. Je pense d'abord que cette manière de voir est à la fois frivole et déplacée. Ça n'a aucun sens, ce qu'avance la France. Le mali est un État indépendant et souverain. Elle n'a aucun ordre à recevoir de la France. Ce n'est pas de sa faute si la France a échoué à repousser les djihadistes sur son sol. En tant qu'un État souverain, elle doit se soucier de la sécurité de son peuple. Si le Mali pense que le groupe WAGNER peut repousser les djihadistes sur son territoire, il est alors libre de lui convier la mission. La France veut se cacher derrière le fameux argument de la légitimité du gouvernement en place pour justifier sa position. Je pense que c'est complètement absurde. Le mali est un État démocratique et le pouvoir appartient au peuple. Si le peuple malien se sent mieux avec le gouvernement en place, je ne vois aucune importance de s'en plaindre. Quelque soit ce qui pourra être dit, c'est le peuple qui l'emporte toujours dans un État démocratique et la décision du peuple malien est de soutenir la junte. Je condamne bien-sûr le coup d'État perpétré par les militaires mais je veux juste dire qu'il faut se tenir à la décision du peuple malien qui est de soutenir la junte.

Revenons maintenant à la CEDEAO (communauté économique des États de l'Afrique de l'ouest). Elle a récemment pris des décisions très drastiques vis à vis du Mali. Ses décisions ont fait réagir de nombreux acteurs de la scène politique mais aussi artistique. Le chanteur Alpha Blondy a condamné fermement la décision ; la Guinée a rappelé son soutien au mali qu'il considère comme un pays frère dans un communiqué. Je pense que le mali n'a pas à subir tout cela. La CEDEAO sait très bien que ses sanctions à l'égard du mali font avoir d'énormes conséquences sur lui mais elle les a quand-même prononcées. Sans aucun doute, je pense que cette décision a été influencée. La France s'en est mêlée. C'est pourquoi le président MACRON a soutenu mordicus les décisions de la communauté qui auront pourtant de lourdes conséquences sur le mali. Je pense que le Mali ne mérite pas cela. Si la CEDEAO voulait regarder les choses avec plus de responsabilités, elle aurait prise de meilleures décisions pour le Mali. On ne le dit peut-être pas mais les sanctions décidées par la CEDEAO auront également de lourdes conséquences sur le peuple malien qui sera coupé du reste du monde. Les échanges avec les autres pays membres ne seront plus possibles, le commerce est pourtant une activité très lucrative pour ce peuple. C'est un peuple à majorité commerçante. Vous le savez et vous leur fermez vos frontières. C'est pourquoi je trouve les décisions de la CEDEAO complètement infondées. On peut punir un gouvernement mais pas un peuple. C'est fort de tout cela, que la junte a invité le peuple malien à marcher dans le but de se faire entendre.

Concernant les sanctions terrestres et maritimes décidées par la CEDEAO, un avion français a survolé le territoire aérien malien alors que la France a soutenu publiquement les sanctions contre le Mali dont les sanctions aériennes. Et elle vient violer l'espace aérien malien. C'est pourquoi la junte dans un communiqué a condamné cela et a souligné que les auteurs de ces vols pouvaient s'exposer à des risques en cas de nouvelle violation.

J'espère que les sanctions prononcées à l'égard du mali seront vite levées. Antonios Guterres a rappelé que les sanctions seront levées peu à peu si la junte proposait un calendrier électoral acceptable.

Questions similaires

Les Maliens manifestants dans les rues pour réclamer le départ des soldats français, alors pourquoi la France insiste-t-elle tant pour se maintenir au Mali si elle n'est pas la bienvenue ?
Pourquoi la France a-t-elle si facilement départementalisé Mayotte alors qu'elle s'apprête (en dépit de la démocratie) à lâcher si facilement la Nouvelle-Calédonie ?
La situation en France est-elle en train de dégénérer en guerre civile entre la police et les jeunes de banlieue ?
Est-ce que les Wallons veulent être rattachés à la France ? Cela peut-il se faire ?
Pourquoi les Maliens applaudissent-ils la menace de Macron de retirer les troupes françaises du Mali ? Ne veulent-ils plus de la France ?
Les putschistes au Mali et le peuple malien demandent à la France de dégager, pourquoi l'Armée française continue-t-elle d'occuper le Mali ?
Normalement retirer ses troupes du Mali et d'Afrique devrait être un soulagement pour la France, alors pourquoi insiste-t-elle pour rester là où elle dit qu'elle ne gagne rien ?
Pourquoi y-a-t-il autant de French bashing ?
La Nation Française est-elle lâche comme le prétend Mila ?
Si la Wallonie était rattachée à la France et la Flandre devenait indépendante, que fera-t-on

News Nigeria
DECISIVE BLOW, AS TROOPS NEUTRALIZE BHT/ISWAP TERRORISTS IN BIU ATTEMPTED INFILTRATION

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 1h

Troops of Sector 2 Joint Task Force(JTF) North East(NE) Operation HADIN KAI(OPHK) have dealt decisively with Boko Haram(BH) and Islamic State West Africa Province (ISWAP) terrorists, who made frantic attempt to infiltrate the ancient town of Biu, Borno State.

The criminal elements met their Waterloo, when the gallant troops of 231 Battalion and 331 Artillery Regiment swiftly routed them in a failed incursion at Maina Hari village in Biu on Saturday15 January 2022.

In the intense battle, troops unleashed superior fire power on the terrorists, neutralizing five BH/ISWAP terrorists, compelling others to withdraw in disarray..

The gallant troops also captured from the terrorists, one gun truck, one Deshka M Anti Aircraft Gun, one HK 21 Machine Gun, one Rocket Propelled Grenade Bomb, 137 rounds of 12.7mm Anti-Aircraft Rounds amongst others. Troops are currently in pursuit of the fleeing terrorists.

ONYEMA NWACHUKWU

Brigadier General
Director Army Public Relations
16 January 2022

MALI : qui sont les paramilitaires russes du groupe Wagner qui inquiètent la France ?

Thomas Rocheteau Connaissances : Anglais16 sept.

Ce sont des anciens soldats russes, notamment des spetsnaz. Ils sont officiellement détachés de l'armée russe mais servent d'avant garde dans divers pays et les intérêts de l'ours russe. En tant que mercenaires, ce sont des contractuels. Ils ont remplacé le Bataillon Slave en Syrie et sont apparemment bien plus sérieux. S'ils interviennent quelque part et que l'Etat sur place les tolère, il n'y a rien à dire. Les USA utilisent aussi des mercenaires par exemple et personne ne dit rien.

Questions similaires

Les Maliens manifestants dans les rues pour réclamer le départ des soldats français, alors pourquoi la France insiste-t-elle tant pour se maintenir au Mali si elle n’est pas la bienvenue ?

Pourquoi le Mali préfère collaborer militairement avec la Russie au lieu de la France ?

Comment les Russes sont-ils parvenus à chasser la France de la République centrafricaine ?

Si la France se retirait du Mali suite aux propos d'Emmanuel Macron, serait-ce une défaite militaire pour la France ?

Pourquoi la Russie veut remplacer la France au Mali ?

Suite aux récents événements, la France devrait-elle se retirer du Mali ? Quels sont les intérêts de cette présence militaire ?

La France a une des plus puissante armée du monde. Comment se fait-il que depuis tant d'années ils sont toujours à combattre les terroristes aux sahel ? Est-ce une excuse médiatique pour pouvoir piller l'or et le pétrole du Mali comme en Lybie ?

Que pensez-vous du sentiment anti français qui évolue actuellement au Mali ?

Supportez-vous les missions militaires de la France en Afrique, oui, non pourquoi ?

Qu'est-ce qui pourrait choquer des Russes qui visiteraient la France pour la première fois ?

Pourquoi la Russie veut remplacer la France au Mali ?

Alexandre Sombardier DEA en Géopolitique et Sciences Politiques, Universités Paris VIII (Diplôme obtenu en 2002) 7 mo

Q : Pourquoi la Russie veut remplacer la France au Mali ?
Je n'aurais pas posé la question ainsi. Pourquoi ? N'oublions pas que la Fédération de Russie est l'état successeur de l'Union Soviétique. Or il faut savoir que l'URSS fut longtemps une puissance parraine et proche du Mali.

Dans les années 60 et particulièrement jusqu'en 1968, le Mali était un des pays de la région qui entretenait les relations les plus tendues avec la France. Rappelons par exemple que la monnaie n'était alors pas le franc CFA, mais le Franc Malien (à partir de 1962) et que les autorités maliennes soutinrent le FLN durant les derniers mois de la guerre d'Algérie. Dès l'indépendance, les Maliens sont prompts à demander le départ des troupes françaises et revendiquent sur le plan international une position de non alignement.

(Modibo Keïta, père de la nation malienne, en panafricaniste convaincu s'engagea dans une politique ferme face à Paris et dans un non alignement qui s'accompagnait de relations étroites avec le bloc soviétique.)

L'opposition assez franche, au moins dans les discours, au maintien de l'influence française en Afrique, les difficultés économiques (en partie liée à la politique monétaire) et la volonté de 'décoloniser les esprits' poussèrent logiquement les Maliens à chercher des appuis internationaux à l'est. Sans compter que malgré la revendication du non alignement, le Mali des années 60 organise son économie selon des principes socialistes.

Bref, très vite, une coopération tous azimuts s'est nouée avec le bloc de l'est et particulièrement avec Moscou. L'aide est économique, culturelle (sur le plan de la formation notamment), militaire. D'une certaine manière, l'URSS maintient à flot l'état malien qui le lui rend bien. L'armée malienne en particulier est largement influencée, formatée et équipée par les soviétiques, dans une volonté très franche de se démarquer de l'héritage français. Beaucoup des officiers généraux maliens sont passés un jour ou l'autre par Moscou. Ce n'est pas anodin.

(Bah N'Daw, Président de la Transition de la République du Mali renversé le 24 mai est un ancien pilote d'hélicoptère de l'armée, formé…en Union Soviétique. Il est loin d'être le seul.)

Alors ensuite, cela n'a pas empêché les jeux d'influence d'autres puissances au Mali, qu'il s'agisse des Etats-Unis, de la Chine ou encore de la France, mais il n'en reste pas moins que soviétiques et russes ont acquis depuis cette époque là une bonne connaissance du pays et ses réseaux.

Bien évidemment avec la chute du bloc soviétique et les évolutions politiques propres au Mali depuis les années 80–90, l'influence de Moscou a décru dans le pays, mais sans disparaitre. Les interventions françaises des années 2010 (Serval puis Barkhane) ont cimenté un retour fort de Paris sur la scène Sahélienne, ce qui n'a pas été du goût de tout le monde au Mali, dans la rue mais aussi au sein d'élites désireuses de jouer une autre carte international.

(Lorsque l'on manifeste au Mali pour le départ des troupes françaises, on appelle souvent en même temps au retour des russes…)

Or, on remarquera que les années 2010 furent aussi celle de la remontée en puissance de la Russie sur la scène miliaire et diplomatique internationale avec un retour marqué en Afrique (en république centrafricaine, notamment). Car oui, il s'agit bien d'un retour ou du moins d'un regain de visibilité d'une influence, certes diminuée, mais qui n'avait pas disparu. Réseaux, présences sur le terrain, lobbying ont regagné en vigueur à mesure que les opérations françaises s'enlisaient dans un conflit qui ne peut trouver de solution uniquement militaire.

Maintenant qu'il est acquis que la France va adopter une position moins forte dans la région, il est logique, la nature ayant horreur du vide, que la Russie affirme au grand jour ses prétentions locales. Et cela correspond au souhait d'une partie significative des élites maliennes, qui n'ont pas oublié l'importance du soutien soviétique des décennies passées.

Bref, il y'a là un jeu de balancier entre influence française et soviétique/russe dans la région depuis 1960. Jeu de balancier dont les dirigeants qui se succèdent à Bamako essaient bien évidemment de profiter au mieux et qui n'est pas prêt de s'arrêter de sitôt.

Questions similaires

Mali : qui sont les paramilitaires russes du groupe Wagner qui inquiètent la France ?

Les Maliens manifestants dans les rues pour réclamer le départ des soldats français, alors pourquoi la France insiste-t-elle tant pour se maintenir au Mali si elle n’est pas la bienvenue ?

La Turquie vient-elle de battre la France au Mali avec la chute d'Ibrahim Boubacar Keïta ?

Le retrait de la France du Mali risque-t-il de créer une situation analogue à l'Afghanistan ?

Comment peut-on expliquer l'attitude insolente de la France vis-à-vis des nations souveraines d'Afrique en l'occurrence le Mali ?

Pour nous pays africains qui sommes sous l’emprise de l’impérialisme colonial français, pensez-vous que signer des accords de protection avec la Russie ou même la Chine nous permettra de nous débarrasser de la France et de sa monnaie imposée ?

En améliorant ses relations avec le Soudan, la France est-elle en train de contre-attaquer la Russie en Afrique ?

Pourquoi le RN souhaite-t-il que la France établisse des relations solides avec la Russie ?

Comment les Russes sont-ils parvenus à chasser la France de la République centrafricaine ?

La France est le plus grand prédateur en Afrique et a longtemps été vu à travers. La France n'a longtemps été qu'une puissance régionale moyenne en Europe. Pourquoi sont-ils encore si influents en Afrique ?

La situation du Mali est-elle l'échec du Mali ou de la France ?

Que pensez-vous de la nouvelle tentative de coup d’état au Mali ?

Pourquoi la France a-t-elle des militaires au Mali ?

Les putschistes au Mali et le peuple malien demandent à la France de dégager, pourquoi l’Armée française continue-t-elle d’occuper le Mali ?

Suite aux récents événements, la France devrait-elle se retirer du Mali ? Quels sont les intérêts de cette présence militaire ?

Partagez-vous la déclaration selon laquelle la France continue à sa colonisation de l'Afrique sous forme sournoise et qu'elle empêche les États Africains de prospérer ?

Edouard Corblet Suivre 6 déc.

La France a bon dos, ce n'est pas elle qui empêche les pays africains de créer des infrastructures, d'envoyer ses citoyens a l'école ou de commercer avec l'Europe et la Chine. Par ailleurs, la France ne se fournit pas en matières premières dans les zones CFA a part pour le manganèse provenant du Gabon. elle ne commerce quasiment plus avec cette région du monde (les exportations sont de 5 milliards d'euros et les importations de 4 milliards dont la moitie en produits agricoles). Quand a la présence militaire, pensez vous vraiment que 5000 soldats vont faire trembler de peur 200 millions de personnes vivant sur des millions de km2.

La France militaire en Afrique : un mauvais investissement économique

Il est vrai que la France a une réelle responsabilité dans les difficultés de ces pays car elle a fait des regroupements qui n'avaient pas toujours du sens.

Si l'on regarde la carte du Mali, on peut voir tout de suite le problème.

On peut voir la même chose pour la Cote d'Ivoire,

Il est donc ardu d'avoir des pays non seulement hétérogènes au niveau ethnique mais aussi vis a vis des dogmes en présence.
C'est en effet un héritage provenant de l'ancien empire qui continue a peser sur la politique intérieure de la région.

Cette chose étant dite, rien n'empêche les gouvernants actuels d'utiliser la route de la soie pour équiper leur pays. Si les investissements faits ne sont pas productifs, ce n'est pas la faute de la France mais de gouvernants locaux incompétents.

Questions similaires

La France est-elle prospère à cause de la colonisation ? Si la colonisation n'avait jamais eu lieu, comment se présenterait la France ?

Presque tous les hommes noirs et africains que je connais désirent une femme non noire. Beaucoup m'ont dit qu'ils ne veulent pas d'un partenaire noir. Cela me semble être un racisme interne. Le racisme existe-t-il entre hommes et femmes noirs ?

Pensez-vous qu'un jour les ex-colonies françaises demanderont des réparations pécuniaires massives à la France pour l'occupation de leurs territoires et avec quelle chance de succès ?

La France doit-elle s'excuser perpétuellement pour avoir eu des colonies en Afrique ?

Pourquoi les pays colonisés par la France n'arrivent pas à tourner la page comme la France l'a fait envers l'Allemagne ?
Pourtant 3 invasions en moins d'un siècle et des millions de morts sont à compter.
Pourquoi la polygamie est-elle pénalisée en France, sous prétexte qu'elle ne fait pas partie de sa culture, alors que les officiels français incitent nos Etats africains à dépénaliser l'homosexualité qui ne fait pas partie de notre culture ?
Quels sont les inconvénients de la colonisation en Afrique ?
La France est traitée de néocolonialiste et de voleuse en Afrique, pourquoi insiste-t-elle pour y rester si elle est vomie ?
L'Afrique est-elle pauvre à cause de la colonisation ? Si la colonisation n'avait jamais eu lieu, comment se présenterait l'Afrique ?

La France pourrait-elle survivre à une attaque des États-Unis, de la Chine ou de la Russie ?
Pourquoi est-ce que le monde ne dit rien sur le colonialisme économique imposé à l'Afrique par la France ?
Quels sont les avantages de la colonisation ?
Pourquoi l'Afrique est colonisée par la France ? Et de quel droit ?
La colonisation a-t-elle eu également des effets positifs sur l'Afrique ?
La colonisation a-t-elle été rentable pour la France ?

Wake Up Africa!
MALI'S MILITARY LEADER HAVE THIS TO TELL THE WORLD

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 16h

"I am aware that am a mortal, I am not perfect. History will judge me one day, but until then all I ask for is your support.

I did not choose this path on my own. She imposed herself on me. God alone knows what He's doing.

I will strive to get to the end, but if I die before reaching our goal, do continue the project without me and lay the groundwork for change with my blood and my flesh.

No sacrifice is so much for this country.

I am not Thomas Sankara, nor Jerry Rawlings. I am Assimi Goïta. Remember me as a reformer not a revolutionary. Remember me as the bearer of hope to the people, the one who came when your blood was shed for your desire for change.

I will go to the end of my mission. I will never betray your trust.

Death doesn't scare me, I saw it every day on the battlefield, it's failure that scares me.

If death marries me on the way to our target, do not mourn me. Don't make my grave a sanctuary. I did what I thought was right for my country. I did it for me but I did it for you too.

I am Assimi, the man who smiles every day with death."

Was Mali ever sought after by European powers pre-scramble for Africa? After all, European explorers of the New World sought for riches especially gold. Mali was famous for its gold since the middle ages.?

Kevin Richardson Follow PhD in History, The University of Texas at Austin Thu

The Portuguese, as well as much of Mediterranean Europe, were certainly aware that much of the gold in circulation as currency in North Africa and Western Europe came from interior West Africa. They did not have quite the detailed knowledge that North African rulers did, but in some ways, they knew more or had more nuanced knowledge of gold production and trans-Saharan trade in the 1500s than Europeans in 1850 did.

But the question of why they didn’t seek it out violently as in the New World presumes something incorrect about Portuguese and then subsequently Dutch, French and English contacts with the Atlantic coast of West Africa, namely that if they knew where gold was being produced that they would invariably seek to claim territorial sovereignty over the sites of gold production and that they were capable of doing so. Neither of those were the case for the late 15th, 16th and 17th Century in West Africa for a variety of reasons.

The states and societies at the Atlantic fringe of the West African world were in many cases quite capable of maintaining substantial military resistance to the Portuguese and other European powers in this era to the point that even if they'd wanted to, they likely couldn't have successfully staged major territorial incursions up the Senegal, Gambia or Niger Rivers or maintained any kind of military authority over those societies. There were some skirmishes and some demonstrations of military power, but they didn't amount to much. In many parts of Atlantic Africa, the territory would also have made it very difficult to stage military expeditions or would have required specific knowledge of the major trade routes and the cooperation of local societies (of the kind Hernán Cortés had in the Valley of Mexico, for example, from enemies of the Aztec Empire) that would not have been forthcoming. The impact of epidemic diseases in the Americas were also not a factor here—West Africans had more or less the same exposures and immunities and on the other hand, West Europeans were extremely vulnerable to diseases like malaria and yellow fever. Even where the Portuguese did project military force elsewhere on the continent, in Kongo and Angola and in the Zambezi Valley, there were sharp limits on what they were able to do (for example, they were not able to achieve direct territorial control over sites of gold production in interior southern Africa).

Moreover, the Portuguese in the 16th Century were getting everything they wanted from West Africans through coastal trade in a series of ports and outposts, and gold-driven aggression would have in fact badly interrupted much of the commercial activity important to them, which included resupplying ships bound for the Indian Ocean and buying many commodities in addition to gold with high value (and less weight) like kola nut or grains of paradise as well as more quotidian commodities like leather. By the early 17th Century, inflation driven by silver as well as gold was also a serious problem in Spain and, to a lesser extent Portugal and to some extent, there wasn't much incentive to seek extensive control over yet more sites of silver and gold production as a result. Moreover, by the mid-17th Century, trade-in Atlantic Africa was beginning to much more oriented towards slavery, which further dampened any desire for anything like direct military conquest (though not for the use of violence by slave-trading crews).

I would just add to this that, if we date the "Scramble for Africa" to the second half of the nineteenth century, it is also worth noting that the quest to be the first European to visit Timbuktu, in the modern era at least, absolutely was a major feature of African exploration in the first half of the century. Explorers tried both possible routes — across the Sahara and through the jungles or up the Niger river from the west African coast — with mostly entirely disastrous results. Those traveling down from the Mediterranean tended to be ambushed and murdered by the Tuareg nomads of the interior, an end that terminated the career of the British explorer Alexander Gordon Laing after he had reached the city (1826), while those trying to approach from the south were very frequently killed by fever, as was the noted Italian strongman and pioneer

Egyptologist The Great Belzoni (1823). Mungo Park, the most successful explorer of the Niger, drowned in the river on his second voyage in an attempt to escape an attack by the Hausa people while still just short of the city (1806).

Of course, Timbuktu had declined considerably in wealth and importance since Mansa Musa's day, and Auguste René Caillié, the first European to visit the city and return alive in the modern era (he had learned Arabic and traveled alone, disguised as a Muslim, 1827-8), was desperately disappointed by the city he saw:

I had formed a totally different idea of the grandeur and wealth of Timbuctoo. The city presented, at first view, nothing but a mass of ill looking houses, built of earth... I found it neither so large nor so populous as I had expected. Its commerce is not so considerable as fame has reported... In a word everything had a dull appearance.

Caillé was, however, successful in claiming the prize of 9,000 francs, offered by the new Société de Géographie of Paris to the first explorer to return from Timbuktu with an account of the city, and the book he wrote about his travels was a success.

Musa depicted holding an Imperial Golden Globe in the 1375 Catalan Atlas.

Related Links

How interconnected was Africa before European colonization? Would a person or a ruler from Ethiopia know of Mali? How about Mali and Kongo, or Kongo and the Swahili states? Or Kilwa and the Zulu peoples?

Some people say that the medieval African countries of Mali and Songhai were able to compete with their European contemporaries. Is that really true?

What did Africa look like the day the first European colonizers arrived? I have no understanding of the various states that existed in Africa prior to the Europeans arriving. Was much of it tribal?

Timbuktu (an ancient African city in Mali) flourished from the trade in salt, gold, ivory, etc. Are any other great examples of African trade centers that came to prominence in the same way in other regions of Africa?

How did Europeans get their people to move to Africa during colonization? Did they offer incentives or other things?

What happened to the gold and silver that was exported from the New World during early European exploration?

What would Africa look like today had there been no European colonialism?

During the "Scramble for Africa" of the 1880s by major European powers, did any African nations end up being better off?

Isn’t a lot of the colonies gained by Europeans in the scramble for Africa more costly to develop and maintain than the resources they got out from them?

What was Africa like before European imperialism?

How advanced was the Mali Empire compared to the European states of the time?
Who were the best and worst Europeans that colonized Africa?

Why did European nations take part in a 'scramble for Africa' in the period from 1871-1900?

When the Europeans were colonising Africa, was it met with any resistance? Or did the Africans just surrender easily because they saw no chance of winning?

Where did Mansa Musa get the hare-brained idea to shell out gold coins to random people during his pilgrimage? Also, how exactly did the Mali Kingdom gain so much wealth in the first place?

News Nigeria
Mali's former President Ibrahim Boubacar Keita, who was overthrown in the 2020 coup has died.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong

Jan 16

He served as Mali's President from 2013-2020, Prime Minister from 1994-2000 and President of the National Assembly from 2002-2007.

This has been confirmed by a former Malian Minister.

Comment était composée l'Afrique avant la colonisation ?

Brian Gogarty · Suivre Étudiant en Histoire1 an Avant la colonisation européenne, de brillantes civilisations ont existé sur le continent africain. On trouvait bien sûr l'Égypte antique, la civilisation la plus célèbre, mais pas seulement. L'Afrique subsaharienne comptait également des empires riches et puissants.

L'Empire du Ghana

Ce royaume décentralisé s'est particulièrement développé à partir du 9e siècle grâce aux exportations d'or et de sel vers le monde arabe.

Le roi régnait sur un empire divisé en provinces et royaumes avec une armée forte de 200 000 hommes.

Des gouverneurs, des rois, des ministres l'aidaient à gouverner son peuple reparti en 3 couches sociales : nobles (commerçants, agriculteurs, aristocrates...), hommes de caste (artisans, griots...) et esclaves (prisonniers...).

Une civilisation florissante.

L'économie était très développée : l'agriculture prospère au Sud, l'élevage au Nord ; le commerce, notamment transsaharien, était florissant (or, peaux, céréales, esclaves...) ; les mines d'or et de fer étaient riches ; les transports étaient performants.

L'Empire du Mali

Cet empire, qui dura du 13e au 16e siècle, fut le premier État structuré d'Afrique occidentale. Ses coutumes et sa structure sociale marquent encore les habitants de la région et leur mode de vie.

Les souverains du Mali étaient musulmans. Au 13e siècle, le roi Mansa Moussa effectua un pèlerinage à la Mecque en emmenant avec lui une gigantesque quantité d'or. Aujourd'hui, il est considéré comme l'homme le plus riche de l'histoire.

La société était divisée en castes, dominée par les guerriers, créant ainsi une structure sociale encore très présente aujourd'hui.

Mosquée de Djingareyber, à Tombouctou, construite au 14e siècle par Mansa Moussa.

L'économie était florissante grâce au commerce transsaharien : du Nord venaient le sel, les tissus, l'encens, les livres. Du Sud partaient les épices, le cuivre, l'or, l'ivoire et les esclaves. Les pays côtiers fournissaient le miel, le kola, l'huile de palme

De somptueux bâtiments furent édifiés, tels que les mosquées de Tombouctou, Djenné et Gao ou le palais royal de Niani.

Le Royaume zoulou

Au 19e siècle, le nouveau roi zoulou Chaka a modernisé son royaume et est parti à la conquête des peuples voisins, allant jusqu'à constituer un véritable empire qui a fait des Zoulous la puissance dominante en Afrique australe.

Ambitieux et impitoyable, Chaka a su rendre les Zoulous puissants.

L'armée était disciplinée, bien entraînée et utilisait une tactique efficace : les "cornes de la bête". Les combattants expérimentés (la "poitrine") attaquaient l'ennemi au centre, tandis que les guerriers plus jeunes et plus rapides (les "cornes") attaquaient sur les flancs. Une unité de vétérans (les "reins") se tenait en réserve à l'arrière.

Le Royaume zoulou était centralisé, hiérarchisé et doté d'un système méritocratique, permettant d'accéder à des postes civils ou militaires grâce à ses compétences, plutôt que grâce à son ascendance.

Les Zoulous pratiquaient en outre une politique très intégratrice envers les peuples conquis qui se retrouvaient sur un plan d'égalité avec les Zoulous "de souche". Le système méritocratique s'appliquait également à eux.

Les Zoulous ont donné beaucoup de fil à retordre aux Britanniques, en leur infligeant notamment une cuisante défaite à Isandhlwana en 1879.

Quelle différence y a-t-il entre les kabyles et les almoravides ?

Aslan Vartaia A étudié Anthropologie à Université de la Sorbonne Mis à jour le 2 ans Réponse originale : Quelle difference y'a t-il entre les kabyles et les almoravides ?

Un peu d'histoire avant de donner une réponse,histoire de placer le contexte

Les Kabyles modernes et les Almoravides faisaient partie de la même confédération berbère,les Sanhadja,en dépit de la grande distance les séparant,les Almoravides étaient berbères,ils venaient de la région de l'Adrar dans l'actuelle Mauritanie et ils nomadisaient du Maroc jusqu'au commencement de l'Afrique de l'ouest(Sénégal/Ghana),les Almoravides étaient des musulmans puritains,ils étaient de la tribu berbère des Lemtuna,leur chef,Yahya Ibn Omar fit appel à Abdellah ben Yassin,un imam d'obédience malikite et rigoriste dans le but de convertir sa tribu qui n'avait été que superficiellement converti à l'islam durant le 8e siècle,Yahya Ibn Omar parvint rapidement à unir tout les Zenaga (Sanhadja) et à raviver la grande confédération Zenaga de l'ouest qui unit nombre de tribus berbères,fraîchement convertis,les Sanhadja/Almoravides se lancèrent dans la conquête de l'Afrique de l'Ouest,et de l'empire du Ghana,qui étaient la source des routes trans-sahariennes,les Almoravides avaient une morale militaire exemplaire,leur troupes étaient rigoureusement organisées,le coeur de leur armée consistait en une infanterie organisée,équipée de javelots et de longues lances,similaires aux phalanges macédoniennes,et ils étaient soutenu par une importante cavalerie sur leurs flancs,la cavalerie étant le pilier militaire

millénaire des Berbères,un officier était chargé d'orienter un grand drapeau faisant face à l'armée,indiquant à celle-ci les mouvements à faire avec une grande rapidité,l'armée Almoravide ne poursuivait pas ceux qui la fuyait,et elle ne reculait jamais,même en étant désavantagée,ses soldats préférant la mort à la défaite,les Almoravides se répandirent à toute vitesse dans toute les directions,si bien que qu'en quelques années,ils contrôlèrent un territoire immense,et balayèrent toute opposition sur leur chemin

Remarquez que les Almoravides se sont arrêtés au cœur de l'Algérie actuelle,car les dynasties régnant sur ces territoires (actuel Tunisie et la moitié de l'Algérie),les Zirides et leurs cousins Banu Hammad,étaient deux dynasties d'origine Zenaga,ou Sanhadja,ils étaient donc parents des Almoravides et ceux-ci ne les attaquèrent donc pas,limitant leur conquête à une partie de l'ouest Algérien.

Culturellement parlant,les Almoravides étaient d'authentiques Berbères du désert,leur plus proche équivalent aujourd'hui sont quelques tribus en Mauritanie,les Touaregs,et les habitants du Sahara occidental,les Almoravides manifestaient cette culture/identité berbère dans leur manière de gouverner,le premier véritable émir Almoravide,fondateur de Marrakech était Youssef ben Tachfine dit Youssef ben Tachfine as-Sanhaji,en arabe يـ ن فـشات نب فـسوي الـ صـ نهاجي ذ ا صر الـ ديـ ن بـ ن تـ الاكـ اكـ ين,ou en berbère □ Yusef u Tacfin u Talakakin Aẓnag

Youssef ben Tachfine épousa Zaynab el-Nafzaouia,qui était la fille d'un riche marchand de Kairouan (Tunisie),Zaynab était également berbère,comme son nom l'indique,elle faisait partie de la tribu berbère zénète Nefzaoua,dont les descendants en Libye porte toujours ce nom,les berbères du Djebel Nefoussa en Libye :

Zaynab était réputée être une des plus belles femmes de son temps,elle ne compensait sa beauté que par sa grande intelligence,elle épousa Youssef Ibn Tachfine en 1071,qui avait 60 ans à l'époque,et elle n'avait que la trentaine,mais leur relation relevait du grand amour,Zaynab devint la conseillère la plus influente de l'émir,et le poussa à étirer ses frontières dans toutes l'Afrique du Nord,elle fut appelée " Malika ",titre très rare et très honorifique dans le monde arabo-musulman,signifiant reine,elle fut même appelé " al-qa'ima bi mulkihi ",littéralement,celle qui s'occupe du royaume de son mari,elle négocia à la place de Youssef,son sens diplomatique et son intelligence aiguë lui vaut la réputation de magicienne et de résolveuse de problème,son mari partant régulièrement en campagne,elle s'affaira à dessiner les plans de leur nouvelle capitale,Marrakesh,que Youssef fera construire conformément aux plans de son épouse dès son retour,c'est donc une femme qui posa les fondations de l'émirat Almoravide,la première mention de Zaynab dans les livres d'histoire vient du texte Kitab al-Istibsar,qui date du 12e siècle, qui affirme :

" À son époque, aucune n'était plus belle ou intelligente ou mordante ... elle était mariée à Youssef, qui a construit Marrakech pour elle"

Ce particularisme,jamais vu dans le monde arabo-musulman,est la conséquence direct de l'héritage berbère inhérent aux Almoravides,qui sont issus d'une société presque matriarcale,à l'instar des Touaregs et des autres Zenaga,les hommes Lemtuna (Almoravides),se voilaient,mais leurs femmes non,ces même femmes étaient pleinement en charge du campement ou de la maison de leur famille quand les hommes partaient en guerre ou à la chasse,elles héritaient de la même manière que les hommes,et c'était également les femmes qui choisissaient leurs maris,pas l'inverse,les hommes étaient presque constamment voilés et étaient très laconiques,ce qu'ils considéraient comme noble,cette culture matriarcale a eu une influence direct sur les Almoravides,les femmes nobles recevaient une haute éducation,l'histoire nous donne l'exemple d'au moins deux femmes médecins à cette époque,toutes les femmes nobles étaient autorisées à participer aux affaires politiques,et la dernière princesse Almoravide,Fannu,pris même les armes contre les Almohades qui faisait le siège de son palais,habillée en armure comme un homme,les soldats Almohades ne virent qu'elle était une femme qu'après sa mort et furent étonnés par sa bravoure et sa témérité,qui coutèrent la vie à plusieurs de leurs compagnons.

Les Almohades d'ailleurs,une autre dynastie berbère utilisaient cette culture matriarcale,dans laquelle les hommes se voilaient et non les femmes,comme arme pour dénigrer les Almoravides,et plus tard,les renverser.

Pour résumer,la principale différence entre les Kabyles et les Almoravides,c'était peut être leur couleur de peau ou leur apparence,les Almoravides devaient être un peu plus brun que les Kabyles,du à leur vie dans le désert,culturellement parlant,les deux groupes étaient très proches,mais leurs modes de vie étaient très différents aussi,les Kabyles ont toujours été sédentaires ou semi-sédentaires,les Lemtouna qui vivaient dans un vaste désert n'avait pas les mêmes opportunités,et vivaient du commerce transsaharien et nomadisent sur de vastes territoires, la désertification progressive du Sahara les poussant à migrer vers le nord et le sud.

Questions similaires

Pourquoi les "kabyles" ne se considèrent pas arabes ?

Vu par les français : est ce que les kabyles et les arabes "c'est pareil" ou c'est pas pareil" ?

Pourquoi les Berbères ressemblent-ils aux Arabes alors que génétiquement il s'agit de 2 populations bien différentes ?

Quelle est l'origine ethnique (dont beaucoup sont blonds aux yeux bleus) de la population kabyle de Grande-Kabylie, en Algérie ?

Quel est le lien entre Kabyles et Bretons ?

Les Kabyles sont-ils des descendants de peuples nordiques ?
Les kabyles sont-ils arabes ?

Que connaissez-vous de la culture kabyle ? De la langue kabyle ?
Quel est la difference entre Kabyle et Berbere ?

Y a-t-il beaucoup de maghrébins descendants de renégats ?
L'origine des Kabyles n'est-elle pas vandale ?

Pourquoi ce complexe de supériorité des Kabyles envers les autres Algériens en France ?

Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?

Pourquoi Abdelmoumen(calife des Almohades) est-il revendiqué comme Marocain par les Marocains, alors qu'il venait d'une tribu localisée en Algérie actuelle ?

West African leaders close their borders with Mali and impose economic sanctions after military government announces long delay in elections

Aniekpeno Ekong Follow News Nigeria for all the latest news in Nigeria Jan 10

West African leaders close their borders with Mali and impose economic sanctions after military government announces long delay in elections

Pourquoi y a-t-il tant de haine entre les Kabyles et les Arabes en France ?

Edouard Corblet · Suivre 6 déc.

Partagez-vous la déclaration selon laquelle la France continue à sa colonisation de l'Afrique sous forme sournoise et qu'elle empêche les États Africains de prospérer ?

La France a bon dos, ce n'est pas elle qui empêche les pays africains de créer des infrastructures, d'envoyer ses citoyens a l'école ou de commercer avec l'Europe et la Chine.

Par ailleurs, la France ne se fournit pas en matières premières dans les zones CFA a part pour le manganèse provenant du Gabon. elle ne commerce quasiment plus avec cette région du monde (les exportations sont de 5 milliards d'euros et les importations de 4 milliards dont la moitie en produits agricoles).

Quand a la présence militaire, pensez vous vraiment que 5000 soldats vont faire trembler de peur 200 millions de personnes vivant sur des millions de km2.

La France militaire en Afrique : un mauvais investissement économique
Il est vrai que la France a une réelle responsabilité dans les difficultés de ces pays car elle a fait des regroupements qui n'avaient pas toujours du sens.

Si l'on regarde la carte du Mali, on peut voir tout de suite le problème.

On peut voir la même chose pour la Cote d'Ivoire,

Il est donc ardu d'avoir des pays non seulement hétérogènes au niveau ethnique mais aussi vis a vis des dogmes en présence.

C'est en effet un héritage provenant de l'ancien empire qui continue a peser sur la politique intérieure de la région.

Cette chose étant dite, rien n’empêche les gouvernants actuels d'utiliser la route de la soie pour équiper leur pays. Si les investissements faits ne sont pas productifs, ce n'est pas la faute de la France mais de gouvernants locaux incompétents.

Questions similaires

La France est-elle prospère à cause de la colonisation ? Si la colonisation n'avait jamais eu lieu, comment se présenterait la France ?

Presque tous les hommes noirs et africains que je connais désirent une femme non noire. Beaucoup m'ont dit qu'ils ne veulent pas d'un partenaire noir. Cela me semble être un racisme interne. Le racisme existe-t-il entre hommes et femmes noirs ?

Pensez-vous qu'un jour les ex-colonies françaises demanderont des réparations pécuniaires massives à la France pour l'occupation de leurs territoires et avec quelle chance de succès ?

La France doit-elle s'excuser perpétuellement pour avoir eu des colonies en Afrique ?

Pourquoi les pays colonisés par la France n'arrivent pas à tourner la page comme la France l'a fait envers l'Allemagne ? Pourtant 3 invasions en moins d'un siècle et des millions de morts sont à compter.

Pourquoi la polygamie est-elle pénalisée en France, sous prétexte qu'elle ne fait pas partie de sa culture, alors que les officiels français incitent nos Etats africains à dépénaliser l'homosexualité qui ne fait pas partie de notre culture ?

Quels sont les inconvénients de la colonisation en Afrique ?

La France est traitée de néocolonialiste et de voleuse en Afrique, pourquoi insiste-t-elle pour y rester si elle est vomie ?

L'Afrique est-elle pauvre à cause de la colonisation ? Si la colonisation n'avait jamais eu lieu, comment se présenterait l'Afrique ?

La France pourrait-elle survivre à une attaque des États-Unis, de la Chine ou de la Russie ?

Pourquoi est-ce que le monde ne dit rien sur le colonialisme économique imposé à l'Afrique par la France ?

Quels sont les avantages de la colonisation ?
Pourquoi l'Afrique est colonisée par la France ? Et de quel droit ?
La colonisation a-t-elle eu également des effets positifs sur l'Afrique ?
La colonisation a-t-elle été rentable pour la France ?

Why is Mali (and apparently the rest of Africa) so concerned with maintaining colonial borders? These borders were almost all drawn by colonial occupiers. Isn't there a movement in Africa to redraw borders based on ethnic or even historical lines?

Kevin Richardson PhD in History, The University of Texas at Austin 10mo

It's not an African issue so much as a world issue. And it's recent (as in, since WWII).
See, borders used to be changeable all the time. Alsace, for instance, switched back and forth between France and Germany every war. Hitler could demand the Sudentenland and everyone was like "Well, it's not an un*reasonable* request." This didn't just happen in Europe. Much of the U.S. was conquered from Mexico 1846-8. South America didn't have many wars, but what wars it did have often involved major territorial shifts (Brazil's massive territorial growth, for example, or Chile growing by a third). No one thought it was that weird that Japan started building an empire in the early 20th century. Before World War I, especially, states had abiding core areas, but what constituted the periphery was contingent on the outcome of war and diplomacy. Since World War 2, however, the norms have shifted, and borders have locked.

Since WW2 changes of borders have changed in three main ways: fission, fusion, and technocratic adjudication.

Fission: We now see a lot more break-away movements (South Sudan, Kosovo, East Timor, Singapore).

Even breakaway movements are mostly discouraged (the Kurds in Iraq and Turkey, the Biafrans in Nigeria, etc), though they're often more readily accepted if the state had previously been governed on ethno-federalist lines (Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, the USSR). This is probably helps explain one of the reasons places like Turkey are so worried about granting territorial autonomy to groups like the Kurds, and why places like China are so cautious about places like Tibet and Xinjiang. In the case of successful breakaway movements, it is expected that this will only create a new border and not change old borders (despite its ethnic Albanian majority, international actors expressly prohibited Kosovo from joining with Albania; likewise, Republik Srpska in Bosnia and Serbia). Countries can split, but this can be only the addition of an internal border, not the refiguring of external borders.

Fusion: Arbitrarily divided states (Vietnam, Germany, one day Korea) are still allowed to change borders through unity. In rare cases, we also see borders changes when two neighboring colonial states combine willingly, pretty much directly after independence (Tanzania, Togo). There are a couple of outlying cases of fusion (Yemen, Morocco/Western Sahara), but they're unusual. Again, in these cases, two whole countries merge together; a part of one country doesn't really join with the whole or part of another.

Technocratic Adjudication: What we see most of now is small technocratic adjustment to borders and border disputes mediated by international organizations like the International Court of Justice. These cases are never about what the border should be according to the people living there or anything like that; they're purely about what the border is according to the best historical information we have combined with a set of international norms (a lot of which have to do with where borders lie on waterways). Occasionally, you'll see small voluntary shifts in borders to make them simpler, but even when these would be obviously beneficial to both sides (like Cooch Behar between India and Bangladesh), you don't see this happening. Borders are borders are borders.

We still see wars over territories where borders have not been settled (Kashmir, Israel/Palestine) because both sides want to shift the final line in their favor, which ends up with no one ever getting closer to agreeing on a line. In the rare case where there is a war that explicitly seeks to redraw a recognized and established border, the aggressor either loses outright (Iraq's attempt to annex Kuwait; Argentina's attempt to annex the Falklands) or everyone else absolutely refuses to recognize the new border de jure, even if it's completely obvious that the de facto border has moved (Armenia's attempt to incorporate the ethnic Armenian dominated enclave of Nagarno-Karabakh; Russia's incorporation of South Ossetia; Turkey's conquest of North Cyprus; Morocco's incorporation of Western Sahara). It might be unsatisfying, but the best answer I can give is, "It has become the norm of the international system not to change borders." The nation-state's emergence as the dominant form of statehood and the rise of international institutions (two related ideas) probably have the most to do with this, but I haven't come across any research that decisively suggests why we don't shift borders anymore.

Related Links

Why didn't Africa redraw its borders after decolonization? Given how barely functional many young African states were, what kept the peace?

Would it be possible or desirable to Africans, to redraw the borders of the African states to better reflect ethnolinguistic, tribal, or cultural unities that were ignored by colonialism?

If new borders were drawn for the African continent along cultural lines, what would it look like?

Should Africa redraw their borders due to ethnic and cultural differences?

Should countries in Africa be based on ethnic boundaries instead of old European colonial ones?

If African boundaries were made without ethnicity in mind and the borders cause conflict, why don't African countries all agree to remake their borders?

Why weren't the borders of African countries adjusted to fit into the "borders" of various African cultures, ethnic groups, and tribes during the decolonisation of Africa?

Borders (geography): Why does Africa still conform to the boundaries set by the colonial powers?

Should Africans redraw their countries' borders based on ethnic/lingual lines in place of the current post-colonial ones?

Is colonialism the primary reason why Africa is so poor?

News Nigeria

Mali cuts ties with France, orders French troops to exit Mali, ends use of French language

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 21h

The military government of Mali have officially announced an end to diplomatic, military and economic ties with France which it claims is according to the demands of the Malien people.

This was contained in a communique sent out by the spokesperson of the transitional government led by Colonel Assimi Goita Malick.

The government said its decision to sever cooperation agreements with France was effective from Monday, the 24th of January 2022.

The Malian military government also announced that as of the 24th of January, French seized to be the official language of Mali, adding that Bambara will henceforth be the official language of Mali.

The government of Mali also called for the immediate exit of France and its troops from across its national territory, the immediate closure of the French embassy and all French institutions in the country within 72 hours.

L'armée française a-t-elle la capacité à tordre le cou au groupe paramilitaire Wagner ?

Vassili Fiodorovitch Patrouchev Vétéran. Sécurité internationale. Consulting géopolitique 4 janv.

D'abord il faudrait :

1/ pouvoir distinguer les mercenaires de Wagner des conseillers russes officiels au Mali. Cela sera d'autant plus difficile que mercenaires et conseillers, contrairement à l'armée française ne circulent pas dans des véhicules spécifiques mais avec des soldats de l'armée malienne. Un accrochage se solderait donc par la mort possible de soldats maliens. Et s'il a lieu en ville par exemple par le lynchage par la foule des soldats français.

Sans compter que dans beaucoup de pays maintenant, comme en Centre Afrique la protection des personnalités est assurée soit pas les mercenaires soit par les conseillers militaires, donc des soldats Spetsnaz russes issues du GRU ou de groupes officiels comme la fameuse unité du SVR Zaslon…

2/ Les mercenaires Wagner sont pour la fine fleur et les groupes de fer de lance qui procèdent aux nettoyages préalables, d'anciens Spetsnaz (forces spéciales) qui comme leur chef Dmitri Outkine ancien Podpollkovnik (Lieutenant-Colonel) des Spetsnaz du GRU ont déjà été engagés dans de multiples guerres et sur des terrains difficiles. Pour Outkine : Tchétchénie, Daguestan, Donbass, Syrie, Libye, etc… Et ne sont tenus à aucune règle d'engagement autre que de détruire l'ennemi. Leur équipement est loin d'être rudimentaire :

Il y a donc de fortes chances que plusieurs soldats français, qui n'ont pas tant l'expérience des combats que des patrouilles de sécurisation, y laissent leur peau

Les Russes eux vont même jusqu'à poser devant les récents monuments en l'honneur de la coopération franco-russe

Alors, l'armée française n'a plus aucune option, puisque les divers gouvernements africains ont déjà passé des accords militaires avec la Russie et des contrats avec divers groupes de coopérations russes ainsi que les mercenaires de Prigogine.

Questions similaires

Pourquoi certaines personnes étrangères rejoignent-elles la Légion étrangère française, plutôt que l'armée de leur propre pays ?

L’armée française a-t-elle assez de soldats pour une possible guerre d’envergure ?

Pourquoi est-ce que l'armée française manque de renommée comme l'armée britannique ou américaine ?

Pourquoi l'armée française ne compte plus de maréchaux ?
L'armée de terre française est-elle plus forte depuis que le fusil FAMAS a été remplacé ?

Pourquoi une étude américaine met-elle en cause les capacités « limitées » de l’armée française ?

L'armée allemande est-elle plus forte que l'armée française ?
Quelle est l'arme française la plus redoutable ?

Le grade de maréchal peut-il toujours, théoriquement, être obtenu dans l'armée française ?

L'armée française est-elle un repaire de fachos ?
Pourquoi le képi est-il porté dans l'armée française ?
Comment endurcir l'armée française sans faire la guerre ?
L'armée française peut-elle vaincre l'armée allemande et envahir l'Allemagne ?
Quelle est l'unité de l'armée française la plus prestigieuse après la légion étrangère ?

Les forces armées françaises sont-elles capables de faire face à un ennemi techniquement équivalent ? Un voisin européen par exemple?

Après l'expulsion de l'ambassadeur de France par le gouvernement Malien, Emmanuel Macron va-t-il retirer l'armée française du Mali ?

Philippe Fabre · Suivre Commerce International - Asie du Sud-Est, Chine, Inde, Japonmar.

Le régime illégitime et putschiste du Mali a dépassé la ligne rouge de Macron depuis longtemps! Il ne peut plus rien se passer de positif au Mali. L'embargo de la CEDEAO le fait beaucoup souffrir. Avant que ça chauffe trop, nous devons nous replier le plus vite possible, renvoyer leur ambassadeur, arrêter la fourniture d'armes, vider ou même détruire nos camps au Mali., arrêter les subventions françaises et européennes, bloquer les comptes bancaires des officiers putschistes,…

Nos troupes ont bien mieux a faire au Niger et au Burkina Faso.

Questions similaires

Le Président Macron menace de se retirer au Mali en cas de dérive radical. Au Mali, nous ne comprenons pas ce discours. Quel est le lien entre le coup d'état fait par les militaires et l'islamisme ?

Que pensez-vous de l'ambition affichée par Emmanuel Macron de « faire de l'Inde le premier partenaire stratégique de la France dans la région et faire de la France le premier partenaire stratégique de l'Inde en Europe » ?

Les Maliens manifestants dans les rues pour réclamer le départ des soldats français, alors pourquoi la France insiste-t-elle tant pour se maintenir au Mali si elle n’est pas la bienvenue ?

Le rappel de l’ambassadeur français en Turquie est-il le signal de frappe militaire possible ?

Après 7 années d’opération Barkhane et un résultat en demi-teinte, qu’est ce qui justifie encore la coûteuse intervention de la France dans le Sahel ?

Pourquoi est-ce que l'armée française manque de renommée comme l'armée britannique ou américaine ?

Pourquoi l’armée Française refuse de quitter le Mali malgré tous les avertissements et les mises en garde de son gouvernement face à l’arrivée des Russes ?

Est-ce que Emmanuel Macron sera réélu en 2022?

Puisque de nombreux F-35 sont acquis par les armées européennes, l'Armée de l'air française va-t-elle devenir inférieure à ses voisins ?

Emmanuel Macron est-il l’homme de la situation ? Pourquoi ?
Le Mali oserait-il utiliser l'arme nucléaire s'il est attaqué par la France ?

Quelle aura été l'utilité de l'intervention militaire au Mali si l'armée française se retirait suite aux propos d'Emmanuel Macron ?

Les putschistes au Mali et le peuple malien demandent à la France de dégager, pourquoi l’Armée française continue-t-elle d’occuper le Mali ?

Emmanuel Macron de la France vient de rencontrer Alassane Ouattara de la Côte d’Ivoire pour lui donner son soutien pour un 3è mandat anticonstitutionnel. Qu’en pensez-vous ?

Pourquoi les Maliens applaudissent-ils la menace de Macron de retirer les troupes françaises du Mali ? Ne veulent-ils plus de la France ?

Pourquoi les Maliens sont si ingrats envers les Français après tout ce qu'ils ont fait pour eux ?

Questions similaires

Les Maliens manifestants dans les rues pour réclamer le départ des soldats français, alors pourquoi la France insiste-t-elle tant pour se maintenir au Mali si elle n’est pas la bienvenue ?

Je suis francophile. Mais je ne sais pas pourquoi il y a récemment une campagne de haine en Afrique contre la France, sa langue et sa culture ? Quelqu'un peut-il m'aider sur les raisons ?

Pourquoi tant de Français aiment-ils la France alors que le pays s'est construit sur des massacres et des invasions (des rois ayant envahi, par exemple, la Franche-Comté qui ont demandé à rester neutres) ?

Pourquoi les Français sont-ils si réticents par rapport au veganisme, malgré toutes les preuves scientifiques ?

Les maliens affirment chaque fois que la France vise ses intérêts, qu'elle exploite ses ressources. Quelles entreprises françaises sont présentes au Mali ? Quelles matières premières exploitent-elles ?

Comment peut-on expliquer l'attitude insolente de la France vis-à-vis des nations souveraines d'Afrique en l'occurrence le Mali ?

Les maghrébins sont-ils stigmatisés en France ? Si oui, pourquoi ?
Pourquoi les Parisiens sont-ils si méprisants envers les Provinciaux ?
Pourquoi les Français pensent-ils que les Maghrébins sont arabes?

Les putschistes au Mali et le peuple malien demandent à la France de dégager, pourquoi l’Armée française continue-t-elle d’occuper le Mali ?

Pourquoi beaucoup des Français détestent Emmanuel Macron ? Qu’est-ce qu’il a fait ?
Pourquoi les Français ont-ils une mauvaise réputation de "guerre" ?
Pourquoi certains Algériens font n’importe quoi en France ?

Pourquoi les Maliens applaudissent-ils la menace de Macron de retirer les troupes françaises du Mali ? Ne veulent-ils plus de la France ?

Pourquoi les Français en général ne veulent-ils pas apprendre une langue étrangère ? Plus particulièrement, pourquoi les Français, dans l’ensemble, parlent-ils mal l’anglais ?

Les Maliens manifestants dans les rues pour réclamer le départ des soldats français, alors pourquoi la France insiste-t-elle tant pour se maintenir au Mali si elle n'est pas la bienvenue ?

Frédéric Cagliari, précédent lieu : Aix-les-Bains Répondre Suivre · Mis à jour le 25 janv. 2021

C'est pas les maliens mais des maliens, c'est le cas à Bamako mais à Gao ou Tombouctou c'est pas du tout le même son de cloche. Les militaires putchistes ont bien pris soin de préciser tout de suite que Barkhane n'était en aucun cas remis en cause. On va rappeler également que le Mali a demandé à la France d'être là et d'y rester après que l'union africaine l'ait lâchement abandonné. On va rappeler un fait basique, l'armée malienne est incapable de rentrer dans Kidal.

Maintenant y'a toute une bande de débiles qui pensent pouvoir discuter avec les djihadistes, ben regardez au Burkina Faso et au Nigeria ce que ça a donné…La France est totalement instrumentalisée par les partis politiques dans différents pays si bien qu'on peut dire n'importe quoi, c'était d'ailleurs une des raisons qui avaient conduit Macron à convoquer les présidents du g5 Sahel à Pau histoire de leur passer une branlée bien méritée, car certains ministres se sont permis des sorties hallucinantes, ou les chefs d'État ont laissé dire des saloperies sans prendre la défense de leur allié, ce qui revient à cautionner. Ça a été mal pris, mais à mon sens c'est un coup de pied au cul salutaire à la diplomatie africaine, on est pas là bas pour servir de paillasson à tous les frustrés des régimes africains.

Je m'éclate à écouter Macron en Afrique, il met les pieds dans le plat à chaque fois, quand il avait dit en substance: le CFA j'en ai rien à cirer vous en faites ce que vous voulez, il a même été critiqué par les anti CFA…

Je répondrai donc au questionneur que si le Mali voulait plus de la France elle aurait déjà dégagé. Je lui rappellerai juste tous les maliens qui manifestaient à Paris pour que la France vole au secours du Mali, ou la représentante de l'ONU qui résumait la lettre au conseil de sécurité par ces mots:" France please help us!".

Edouard Corblet, a étudié Retraite et Histoire à MBA en Financ 1979
Répondu 11 sept. 2020

Comme d'habitude, une question un peu biaisée mais pas totalement infondée. En effet la France ne devrait pas rester au Sahel. En le faisant, elle fait le jeu des opposants de tous bords qui l'accusent de neo-colonialisme. Les politiques locaux jouent un double jeu perpétuel en demandant a la France de rester tout en critiquant son intervention pour contrer les dire des diverses oppositions locales.

De plus, le fait d'avoir eu en Janvier un sommet a Pau a donné l'impression que les gouvernements sont a la solde de Paris.

« À bas la France ! » : enquête sur le sentiment anti-français en Afrique – Jeune Afrique

On ne peut suspecter ce quotidien d'être favorable aux Français donc c'est bien évidemment une vue orientée. Il en ressort un fait évident qui est qu'une présence de soldats étrangers sur un sol national ne peut pas être bien vu par la population. Qu'en plus, il devient évident que cette opération est un échec. Pour essayer de voir les choses de haut, on peut dire que les militaires français rendent impossible la conquête de villes par les forces d'oppositions mais ne peuvent pas lutter contre de petits groupes dispersées dans un territoire gigantesque. Cela permet au malade de rester vivant en attendant qu'une solution miracle arrive mais cela n'est en rien une guérison. Plus cette opération durera et plus le sentiment anti-français grandira. Une simple vue d'une carte montre a quel point il est impossible de réussir militairement avec une force de 5 000 hommes. Le territoire ci-dessous représente prés de 4 millions de km2.

Le problème est complexe, si la France part ces pays vont s'écrouler et si elle reste elle soudera les population contre elle.

La crédibilité de la CEDEAO pour remplacer la présence française est faible.

L'ultimatum de la Cédéao au Mali mal vu en Afrique | DW | 08.09.2020

Il ne fait aucun doute que la présence militaire ne suffit pas. Il faut bien comprendre que dans les trois pays sur la ligne de front, la population en dessous du seuil de pauvreté est prés de 50% de l'ensemble. La seule vraie solution a long terme est donc d'améliorer la situation des populations. C'est bien évident qu'il faudrait que les politiciens locaux prennent les choses en main mais on ne peut trouver facilement des leaders charismatiques et compétents. Meme si Marianne n'est pas mon quotidien préféré, l'interview de l'ambassadeur reste intéressante.

Au Mali, "Barkhane est vitale pour le pays : si on la retire, ce sera le chaos"

La France devrait se retirer de cette région, elle ne peut pas faire évoluer favorablement les choses. Le seul résultat objectif de notre présence est de servir de focalisation a tous les opposants qui nous instrumentalisent. Le problème n'est pas que des manifestants s'opposent a Barkhane mais que cette intervention ne résout rien a long terme.

Mahamadou Ousmane , Ingénieur d'Etat Répondu 14 sept. 2020

En fait, ce problème est bien plus complexe. D'abord, il est extrêmement difficile de savoir quels sont les plus nombreux, entre les maliens qui veulent du départ de la france,et ceux qui veulent qu'elle reste..toute affirmation serait infondée.

D'un autre côté, on dirait qu'on présente toujours, officiellement, en public, la partie visible de l'iceberg..cette question pourrait bien relèver beaucoup plus d'une stratégie géopolitiques/économique et même culturelle, la question n'est peut-être pas juste une lutte,operation militaire contre les terroristes.

Ceux qui pensent que le Mali pourrait s'effondrer après un éventuel départ des français: cela ne risque pas d'arriver car certainement que le Mali fera appel a d'autres puissances étrangères pour l'aider (on a vu des manifestants brandir le nom d'une autre puissance).

Donc,scénario: la France quitte, le Mali fait appel à une autre puissance.alors qui perd?

Toutes les grandes puissances, comme la France, ont toutes besoins d'un maximum d'alliés possible. Notons cette zone du sahel regorge de beaucoup, beaucoup de ressources. Et les firmes françaises et européennes présentent dans cette région se sentiront certainement plus en sécurité si la france est millitairement présente.

D'un autre côté, disons qu'il y'a une certaine …: les leaders politiques ouest-Africains qui demandent à la France de rester, alors qu'ils savent qu'une partie de la population est contre.

Je suis d'accord, comme dit ici, que certains leaders politiques Ouest-Africains jouent un semblant de double jeu, pour leur propre intérêt personnels, et en se servant peut-être de la France. On dirait bien.

Aussi, l'autre problème au Mali: le Kidal…Le problème de kidal aurait pu favorisée la présence des terroristes…

Finalement, la présence militaire française au Mali, à qui réellement elle profite (gouvernement Malien, gouvernement Français, politiciens maliens, sociétés françaises/européennes au Mali, rebelles de Kidal, etc..????). ???Je ne saurais y répondre.

Issa Bankole , Analyste senior (2014-présent) Répondu 21 oct. 2020

Je pense qu'il y a un peu de néocolonialisme là-dessous (pas pour des intérêts économiques immédiats mais histoire d'avoir une dominance, entretenir le prestige…), et au détriment de la vie des soldats français. Ce n'est pas la bonne manière d'assurer la sécurité de la France. Le verrouillage de tous les frontières, y compris les frontières virtuels (contre les transferts financiers), et une bonne discipline dans le suivi des individus français à risque, suffisent à endiguer les islamistes.

A supposer que la France se retire et que les états de Mali/Niger/Burkina s'effrondrent, d'autres puissances totalitaires s'empresseront de la remplacer. Mais les défenses, si elles sont bien opérées aux frontières françaises, continueront d'empêcher l'infiltration des djihadistes de tout poil tout en endigant les migrants qui chercheront des havres plus favorables à la pratique de leur foi en l'islam.

Questions similaires

Que répondre à quelqu'un qui prétend que la France a pillé l'Afrique avec ses opérations militaires au Sahel?

Pourquoi les Maliens applaudissent-ils la menace de Macron de retirer les troupes françaises du Mali ? Ne veulent-ils plus de la France ?

Le Président Macron menace de se retirer au Mali en cas de dérive radical. Au Mali, nous ne comprenons pas ce discours. Quel est le lien entre le coup d'état fait par les militaires et l'islamisme ?

La France a une des plus puissante armée du monde. Comment se fait-il que depuis tant d'années ils sont toujours à combattre les terroristes aux sahel ? Est-ce une excuse médiatique pour pouvoir piller l'or et le pétrole du Mali comme en Lybie ?

Comment peut-on expliquer l'attitude insolente de la France vis-à-vis des nations souveraines d'Afrique en l'occurrence le Mali ?

Suite aux récents événements, la France devrait-elle se retirer du Mali ? Quels sont les intérêts de cette présence militaire ?

Si la France se retirait du Mali suite aux propos d'Emmanuel Macron, serait-ce une défaite militaire pour la France ?

Comment le gouvernement français peut-il justifier la libération de 200 djihadistes en échange d'une personne, alors que des centaines de Français sont morts au Mali pour notre sécurité ?

Quelle aura été l'utilité de l'intervention militaire au Mali si l'armée française se retirait suite aux propos d'Emmanuel Macron ?

Les putschistes au Mali et le peuple malien demandent à la France de dégager, pourquoi l’Armée française continue-t-elle d’occuper le Mali ?

Après 7 années d’opération Barkhane et un résultat en demi-teinte, qu’est ce qui justifie encore la coûteuse intervention de la France dans le Sahel ?

L’Algerie a décidé d’interdire le survol de son territoire aux avions de l’armée française. Comment cette décision pourrait-elle avoir des conséquences au Mali et au Sahel ?

L'armée française au Mali est-elle victime d'une campagne de désinformation au sujet d'une frappe qui aurait touché des civils ?

Normalement retirer ses troupes du Mali et d’Afrique devrait être un soulagement pour la France, alors pourquoi insiste-t-elle pour rester là où elle dit qu’elle ne gagne rien ?

Pensez-vous que le retour au Mali de l’ex otage français Sophie Petronin est un acte « irresponsable » ?

Que se passe-t-il entre Bamako et Paris ?

Hamid Sam · Suivre Grand passionné de politique. 21 h

Bamako est un pouvoir illégitime même s'il est soutenu par le peuple.
Paris juge le pouvoir illégitime (c'est vrai) notamment à travers les propos du ministre de l'Europe et des affaires étrangères. Mais Paris continue toujours de traiter avec Bamako. Comment peut-on traiter avec un pouvoir qu'on juge illégitime?

Ce n'est pas la première fois que Paris prononce de tels propos. Bamako a jugé ses propos à la fois irrespectueux et déplacé à son encontre. Il a alors sommé l'ambassadeur français de quitter le sol malien.

Ce que Paris oublie, c'est que la junte même si elle est illégitime est soutenue fortement par la majorité de la population. Quoi de plus mieux dans un État démocratique si on est soutenu par celui qui détient le pouvoir. En plus de cela, le peuple n'accepte plus la présence militaire française sur le sol malien. Donc on voit ici qu'il y'a un double courroux vis à vis de Paris. C'est maintenant devenu l'envers du décor. On court après les puissances étrangères non-allié à Paris et ça Paris ne le supporte pas. Son influence faiblit !

Questions similaires

Finalement, si l’Algérie était restée française, la France ne serait-elle pas devenu un pays à majorité musulmane ? De manière générale, à quoi ressemblerait la France aujourd'hui si l’Algérie était restée française ?

La France doit-elle s’excuser pour son passé colonial, comme le demande l’Algérie ?

Pourquoi on demande tout le temps à la France de s'excuser envers l'Algérie pour les morts de la Guerre d'Algérie et pas à l'Algérie de s'excuser pour les actes du FLN durant la même période ?

François Hollande comme Emmanuel Macron ont reconnu l'injustice et la brutalité de la colonisation française en Algérie. Pourtant, les Algériens semblent toujours attendre plus. Qu'attendent-ils et pourquoi ?

Pourquoi les Français sont-ils qualifiés de colonisateurs en Afrique du Nord, alors que le Maghreb fut d'abord colonisé par les Arabes (au détriment des Kabyles)?

Pourquoi un bon pourcentage des Algériens nés avant l'indépendance (1962) disent que « l'Algérie était beaucoup plus heureuse et prospère du temps de la colonisation française »?

Pour quelles raisons Macron vient-il d'annoncer que la France allait réduire drastiquement le nombre de visas accordés au Maroc, à l'Algérie et à la Tunisie ?

Pourquoi la France passe-t-elle son temps à s'excuser pour l'Algérie, le Rwanda, l'esclavage, Napoléon, etc.?

Qu'est-ce qui a poussé Emmanuel Macron à avouer que le colonialisme français en Afrique était une erreur ? Et pourquoi dit-il qu'il veut ouvrir une nouvelle page avec les anciennes colonies françaises ?

Pensez-vous que la France et l'Algérie pourraient un jour se réconcilier

Quelles seraient les conséquences, si la France décidait d'éliminer purement et simplement les 500 paramilitaires du groupe Wagner au Mali ?

Super Dupont · Suivre

Administrateur de l'espace "Elections France 2022" Mis à jour le 27 janv.

Si ça arrivait directement comme ça, de manière assumée, cela engendrerait une crise majeure au niveau national comme international.

Tous les opposants du gouvernement Macron et les journalistes se dechaineraient contre un acte "criminel". Réactions identiques au niveau international, non seulement de la Russie mais de toutes les dictatures du monde et toutes les anciennes colonies qui rejetteraient la France et son ingérence.

Donc aucune chance que cela se produise.

Si il fallait faire quelque chose, il faudrait que ce soit avec une "deniabilité plausible", comme Gbagbo quand il a bombardé le camps français de Bouaké en 2004. Les soldats français qu'il a massacré étaient pourtant là pour protéger son régime…

Le groupe Wagner est-il impliqué dans l'attaque au mortier du camp militaire français de Gao ?

Eric Le Gendre · Suivre Réseauteur et Auteur : "Jamais sans mon Réseau" et "RETEA". lun.

Forces françaises au Mali.

Probablement pas, mais personne ne sait encore exactement ce qui s'est passé, une enquête est en cours. Reste que le jeu russe est extrêmement ambigu :

d'un côté, nous sommes "alliés de circonstance", car nous combattons collectivement les extrémistes islamistes et djihadistes ;

de l'autre, la Russie cherche à prendre la place de la France, pour mettre bien évidemment la main sur des métaux précieux. La déstabilisation comme l'action militaire font partie des actions. Il est avéré que des manifestations anti-françaises dans différentes villes et pays de la région ont été téléguidées par les services spéciaux russes. Desquels Wagner n'est pas bien loin …

et les "intentions" en Afrique de la même société Wagner, comme ses commanditaires sont absolument obscures. Il est donc permis de tout imaginer. Encore plus ambiguë est la position du (nouveau) gouvernement malien.

En parallèle, une réponse "technique militaire" : un mortier, tirant à plusieurs kilomètres, n'est pas un joujou. Là, on ne parle plus de 4x4 Toyota et de kalashnikov. Il a fallu se le procurer, se former, obtenir des munitions, l'amener sur place … de simples méharistes le peuvent-ils ?

Questions similaires

J'ai été refusé dans la Légion étrangère parce que mon casier judiciaire ne me le permet pas. J'ai entendu parler des YPG internationaux. Je voudrais savoir s'il est possible de les rejoindre de mon propre chef, et par quels moyens ?

De plus en plus d'articles font savoir que l'armée française se préparerait à une guerre dite de haute intensité, anticipée à une décennie. Est-ce vrai ? Si oui, contre quel(s) pays ?

Que se passerait-il si l'État islamique parvenait à lancer une attaque en France qui tuerait des milliers de Français et s'emparerait de certaines parties de la France métropolitaine ?

La France aurait-elle les moyens de mener de nos jours une opération telle que celle de Kolwezi en 1978?

Que pensez-vous de la décision du ministère français de la Défense d'implanter des puces électroniques à l'intérieur des soldats pour augmenter leurs performances sur le champ de bataille ?

Comment les djihadistes au Sahel trouvent-ils autant d'armes et de moyens logistique pour résister à l'armée française depuis plusieurs années ? Sont-ils les marionnettes qui servent les intérêts d'un État occidental tapis dans l'ombre ?

Après 7 années d’opération Barkhane et un résultat en demi-teinte, qu’est ce qui justifie encore la coûteuse intervention de la France dans le Sahel ?

Que pensez-vous de la déclaration du général Bruno Leray sur France Inter disant que les militaires pourront aller "jusqu'à l'ouverture du feu" pour faire face à tout type de menace en ce weekend de manifestations ?

Le rappel de l’ambassadeur français en Turquie est-il le signal de frappe militaire possible ?

Les Africains disent qu’ils installent des camps de migrants à Paris parce que la France installe des bases militaires dans leurs pays, est-ce justifié ?

L'armée française a-t-elle la capacité à tordre le cou au groupe paramilitaire Wagner ?

Pourquoi l'Europe ne soutient pas la France dans son combat contre le terrorisme au sahel ? Est-ce que les autres pays considèrent que la France défend des intérêts qui lui sont propres ?

Quelle est l'unité militaire la plus redoutable au monde ?

Pourquoi Florence Parly est-elle furieuse contre les militaires de la tribune "délitement de la France" ?

Les gendarmes disposent-ils de l'armement nécessaire pour défendre le territoire français en cas d'invasion ennemie ?

News Nigeria

Mali cuts ties with France, orders French troops to exit Mali, ends use of French language

Aniekpeno Ekong

The military government of Mali have officially announced an end to diplomatic, military and economic ties with France which it claims is according to the demands of the Malien people.

This was contained in a communique sent out by the spokesperson of the transitional government led by Colonel Assimi Goita Malick.

The government said its decision to sever cooperation agreements with France was effective from Monday, the 24th of January 2022.

The Malian military government also announced that as of the 24th of January, French ceased to be the official language of Mali, adding that Bambara will henceforth be the official language of Mali.

The government of Mali also called for the immediate exit of France and its troops from across its national territory, the immediate closure of the French embassy and all French institutions in the country within 72 hours.

Mali : la junte militaire expulse l'ambassadeur de France, qu'en pensez-vous ?

Eric Le Gendre · Suivre Réseauteur et Auteur : "Jamais sans mon Réseau" et "RETEA". 13 h

Militaires français en OPEX au Mali.

C'est bon signe ! Cela prouve que les propos du gouvernement français ont été ciblés correctement et entendus. Puisqu'ils déplaisent et qu'il y a une réaction diplomatique. Maintenant, seront-ils compris par la junte ? rien n'est moins sûr.

Maintenant, aux Maliens et à leur gouvernement putschiste de (se) décider :

soit ils acceptent les militaires français, leur facilitent le travail difficile qu'ils ont à faire, et arrêtent de les dénigrer et de les accuser de tous les maux ; soit ils expriment clairement leur position, et demandent à la France de se retirer. La porte est alors ouverte aux Russes (via Wagner), et aux djihadistes. Je conseillerais aux officiers putschistes de revoir l'excellent film Tombouctou, d'Abderrhamane Sissako (2014), qui illustre merveilleusement comment s'est passée la (brève) occupation par les islamistes. Glaçant, cela rappelle l'Afghanistan.

Il n'y a pas de demi-mesure envisageable, ni de "et en même temps". Trop bête et trop facile. Voir un papier de France info sur le sujet :

Questions similaires

Le Président Macron menace de se retirer au Mali en cas de dérive radical. Au Mali, nous ne comprenons pas ce discours. Quel est le lien entre le coup d'état fait par les militaires et l'islamisme ?

Face aux accusations fréquentes de pillages et de déstabilisations de l’Afrique dont fait l’objet la France, êtes-vous pour un retrait des troupes françaises de l’Afrique afin de laisser les Africains se débrouiller tout seul ?

Les Maliens manifestants dans les rues pour réclamer le départ des soldats français, alors pourquoi la France insiste-t-elle tant pour se maintenir au Mali si elle n’est pas la bienvenue ?

Que répondre à quelqu'un qui prétend que la France a pillé l'Afrique avec ses opérations militaires au Sahel?

Après 7 années d’opération Barkhane et un résultat en demi-teinte, qu’est ce qui justifie encore la coûteuse intervention de la France dans le Sahel ?

Quelle aura été l'utilité de l'intervention militaire au Mali si l'armée française se retirait suite aux propos d'Emmanuel Macron ?

La Turquie vient-elle de battre la France au Mali avec la chute d'Ibrahim Boubacar Keïta ?

Pourquoi l'armée Française refuse de quitter le Mali malgré tous les avertissements et les mises en garde de son gouvernement face à l'arrivée des Russes ?

Le rappel de l'ambassadeur français en Turquie est-il le signal de frappe militaire possible?

Pourquoi les Maliens applaudissent-ils la menace de Macron de retirer les troupes françaises du Mali ? Ne veulent-ils plus de la France ?

Les putschistes au Mali et le peuple malien demandent à la France de dégager, pourquoi l'Armée française continue-t-elle d'occuper le Mali ?

Quelles tortures militaires existent en France ?

Emmanuel Macron de la France vient de rencontrer Alassane Ouattara de la Côte d'Ivoire pour lui donner son soutien pour un 3è mandat anticonstitutionnel. Qu'en pensez-vous ?

L'Algerie a décidé d'interdire le survol de son territoire aux avions de l'armée française. Comment cette décision pourrait-elle avoir des conséquences au Mali et au Sahel ?

L'armée française au Mali est-elle victime d'une campagne de désinformation au sujet d'une frappe qui aurait touché des civils ?

Comment le Mali et le Burkina Faso pensent-ils se libérer de la France ?

Philippe Fabre · Suivre Commerce International - Asie du Sud-Est, Chine, Inde, Japon jeu.

Réponse originale : Comment le Mali et le Burkina Faso pensent ils se libérer de la France ?

Deux situations différentes semble-t-il….

Au Mali, on un différend évident avec les putschistes… qui ne rêvent que de chasser les Français pour pouvoir s’acoquiner avec Wagner. Pas pour combattre les Islamistes, mais pour se maintenir au pouvoir. Accessoirement prendre une com sur l'or que Wagner tirera des mines.

Au Burkina, on avait un différent avec le président et il est bien possible que l'on ait pris part dans le putsch…

Une grande partie des habitants du Sahel ayant une préférence mal-cachée pour leurs frères islamistes que pour les ex-colons, nous aurions mieux a faire de quitter la région et les laisser se débrouiller tous seuls. Ou avec Wagner. Ça nous éviterait d'avoir a nous battre a Bruxelles pour arracher des aides pour ces pays qui ne les méritent pas. OK, c'est trop simpliste….

Questions similaires

Les Maliens manifestants dans les rues pour réclamer le départ des soldats français, alors pourquoi la France insiste-t-elle tant pour se maintenir au Mali si elle n’est pas la bienvenue ?

Les gens des pays africains qui parlent français détestent-ils la France et la langue française ?

Quel est le meilleur moyen pour les populations africaines de se débarrasser de la France et de son néocolonialisme militaro-monétaire sans l’implication de leurs politiciens corrompus ?

Comment peut-on expliquer l'attitude insolente de la France vis-à-vis des nations souveraines d'Afrique en l'occurrence le Mali ?

Pourquoi le fils du président Denis Sassou Nguesso est mis en examen en France ? Et pourquoi les politiques/PDG français qui ont des biens mal acquis ne sont pas jugés en Afrique ? Est-ce que la France est un pays impérialiste ?

La Côte d’Ivoire est-elle le pays d'où viendra la chute de la France en Afrique ? Sans l'Afrique que deviendrait la France ?

Pourquoi les Maliens applaudissent-ils la menace de Macron de retirer les troupes françaises du Mali ? Ne veulent-ils plus de la France ?

Pourquoi le Français est-il mal aimé des autres pays ?
Que pensent les Français des Américains ?

Quelle est la meilleure stratégie pour lutter contre l'influence de la France dans les pays africains francophones ?

Pourquoi l'expérience menée au Burkina Faso par Thomas Sankara de 1983 à 1987 n'a pu être relayée au Burkina Faso, ni en Afrique ? Pourtant celui qui est appelé le Che africain a montré que le developpement en Afrique était faisable même sans moyens.

Les putschistes au Mali et le peuple malien demandent à la France de dégager, pourquoi l'Armée française continue-t-elle d'occuper le Mali ?

Que doivent faire les pays francophones d'Afrique ayant des liens étroits avec la France pour se développer, ce qu'ils ne font pas ?

Normalement retirer ses troupes du Mali et d'Afrique devrait être un soulagement pour la France, alors pourquoi insiste-t-elle pour rester là où elle dit qu'elle ne gagne rien ?

Is White history being destroyed by the media? For example casting Black actors in historically White roles such as Anne Boleyn

It's OK to be White. · Follow Answered by Dima Ma Thu

No. But they are destroying black history by hiding it. Casting black actors in white roles means there are no historical black people worthy of something.

To the media black = slave. I know libs don't see it that way but it's true. There are so many historical blacks that would make for an absolutely great movie.

A movie about some of the west African empires would be cool. Many blacks don't know their own history though and keep stealing others.

WEST AFRICA

Why is there a resurgence of Coup D'etats in Africa especially Western Africa? Northern Africa is also not spared and most worrisome is that the people seem to be in support in some of the countries like Mali. What more can ECOWAS and AU do?

Anthony M Anderson Lives in Africa (2006-Present) 9h

This is because they're mainly some civilian governments which are full of corruption and incompetence to rule the country. Other reasons include insecurity and geopolitics!

The ECOWAS and AU must come up with the better solution to solve the crisis, however they're using sanctions and suspensions to backstab countries which have successfully overthrown corrupt and dictatorial regimes through a coup!
Related questions

Why is the fishing occupation not recognized in most of the countries in Africa?
Which country is really good for mathematics?
Why are most countries not included for the earning programs on Quora?
What is the future of corrupt government in Nigeria?
What does the flag of South Africa represent?

Why does it rain so little in Nairobi if it is said that countries or regions in the Intertropical Convergence Zone usually get heavy rainfalls such as Solomons islands?

I'm currently writing about why the climate in Nairobi is the way it is?

South Africa is believed to be the only country with three capitals, How true is it and why is it so?

What do you know about the secret Albino village in Tanzania?
What is the impact of colonization on the youth of Africa in psychological ramifications?
What impacts were bought by tropical cyclone irina (in South Africa) ?
What are the countries around the world that permit visa-free entry to tourists?
How do I go to Canada easily from Africa?
Why is Ethiopia called the land of origin?
What is the origin of the Bimobas in the northern part of Ghana?

Is Ethiopia's victory aganist Italy a source of inspiration for other Africa countries and Black right movement as I heard them they?

FRANCE MALI
What is your thought about the Mali government cutting off diplomatic ties with France?

Theophilus E.Daniel-Kagbare Student of Africa Jan 27

Mali is at a critical turning point in its history. The legacy of France in its former colonies is well known. About time, those colonies cut off from the apron strings of Paris. Mali is taking the lead.

The country must go through the process to emerge on the other side. This could be the best thing that to happen to Mali. The one thing they do not need at the moment are entrenched self-serving foreign interests like the French.

Let the Malians sort out their internal issues themselves. Enough of local politicians taking advantage of Western concepts of democracy to work against the interest of the people and country. There is a point where democracy becomes dem-all-crazy, with the political class working for themselves and foreign patrons, like France, than the in the interest of the people and country. The norm in far too many former (?) French colonies.

However, it will be fool hardy to think the French will let go, just like that. Remember what they shamelessly did to Seko Toure's Guinea at Independence. And Thomas Sankara.

French Intelligence will work round the clock to sabotage the Malian government.

Col. Assimi has projected an image of conviction, courage and action; a man on a mission than one who simply kow-tow to international noises of propriety when those are in the face of fundamental pre-conditions of goo governance. Certainly Francophone Africa can with its own Jerry Rawlings. But he must act fast to secure strategic internal and international partners. He must watch his back, against a Brutus or Comproare. He needs the counsel of Paul Kagame. And China, perhaps, with eyes very open. Too bad, there's no leadership within ECOWAS to count on.

Related Links

Why is France so attached to Africa? Why can't France live without meddling in African affairs?

What are your thoughts and predictions on France's decision to abandon Mali and finish Operation Barkhane after 10 years?

What is going on in Mali? I understand that there's a military coup going on, but what are the implications of this?

What do French people think of the French military campaign in Mali?

The French president has conveyed his concern that the Afrin operation is turning into an occupation. Why is France still occupying Mali?

Why doesn't France stop annexing Mali, if she is so against military operations into foreign countries?

Why didn't France cut all diplomatic ties with Morocco after it was proven the Moroccan secret services spied on the French government?

How is France dealing with terror in Mali?
Why is Mali sending back deported persons from France?

Will Colonel Assimi Goita succumb to pressures from France and ECOWAS to return Mali to civil rule?

Why is France focused on fighting jihadists in Mali?
What are your perceptions of the French intervention in Mali?

What will happen to Mali's economy as a consequence of expelling France out of Mali?

Why did France invade Mali?

What is Nostradamus' prediction for the French government in the 21st century?

News Nigeria
THE CITY OF TIMBUKTU founded around a well

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 4h

The Tuareg of Tenere were known for herding cattles and caravan trade, as caravan masters. They were reputed, in ancient times, according to Strabo, to be a people who 'pillaging on the fringes of of the desert' was common among them.
During the hot 'dry seasons' across the Sahel, when harmattan winds blew across the region towards the west African coast, the Tuareg often brought their cattles closer to river Niger, where the foliage remained green and there was enough water for men and cattles. In the wet season when the rains returned, they left their belongings with servants in the settlements and went into the hinterlands with their cattles, only to return again during the 'dry season.' Reknowned among those they left their belongings with while away was an old woman, known as Buktu. She had a well. And because water was very important in this area, she became famous and the place she lived became known by travellers as 'tim(well) of Buktu.' Hence the settlement around her was known as Timbuktu (well of Buktu). The city that became a medieval city of learning and gold merchants in west Africa was founded in the 4th century CE.

In the 12th century CE, books in Timbuktu were 'more expensive than gold' or salt and leather from the city of Kano, which was also in west Africa. Sankore university was founded in Timbuktu in the 9th century CE. It was about the second ever university in the world. Students from overseas and west Africa came to study here under orators like Sidi Yiyia. This was before Oxford or Cambridge came into existence. To most people in Europe of this time, Timbuktu was a myth. The decline of the city began in the 16th century CE under the Songhai empire which had collapsed at about the same time.

News Nigeria

Wake Up Africa!
What's happening with France and troop withdrawals in Mali? Why were troops there in the first place?

Answered by Boris Ezomo 4h

The Russians had arrive to do a better job.
The French military presence in its former colonies, was more for purposes of control. In a more political way.

It was a circle going nowhere. With lots of Banditry and extremist fundamentalist activity in Mali not been controlled.

After years of stagnation, the new government in Mali is taking a new approach in combating this insecurity. They seem to have signed a contract with the Wagner group. Which are military contractors from Russia. While a private organisation, it gets backing from Russia itself.

It is a very popular move in Mali. Since Russians are getting the reputation of helping return control of countries to the government. Syria was a direct Russian success story. However Central African Republic is a Wagner project. There too, the government is regaining control of that country, after its old colonial master France failed several times.

As a Nigerian, I feel we too need to hire Wagner to solve our complex security problem. Not because our army is not capable, but the infighting, collaboration by high officials and such, had made them inefficient. Wagner like all military contractors, operates outside the law.

All those powers are not there out of the kindness of their hearts. Its money, resources and influence.

Related Links

What does Mosi-otunya mean if you have been to Zambia to see the Victoria Falls?

If old men are still playing their political politicking corruption each and every day on the various countries on the African continent, is there any future for the youth of Africans?

What country can Nigeria model its diversity management for effective governance?
Who is the richest African in the world in the year 2022? To what is his wealth due?

What are the reason(s) for the uprisings and frequent coup d'etat in Africa recently and the likely solution?

When will Africa meet up in technology with the rest of the world? What year?
Why is African delicacies very expensive in the most Asia countries?
What are some unknown black history facts that should be well-known?

Which countries in Sub-Saharan Africa are most likely to reach developed status within the next thirty years?

Who is Africa's most acclaimed author?
Why might Somalia unavoidably break apart and cease to exist?

How did Zaire come up with the Mobutu descending from the clouds towards the earth thing on TV in Zaire?

What are the best African social media sites to join?

Why does France continue to drain African economies and the world says nothing about it?

Yesterday I asked a question to know why Africa is poor with all they have. One of the answers I got, make me start thinking. I was told that Afraica has low IQ resulting to the reason why they are poor. Is there anyway IQ can be improved?

Françoise Marie Master's Degree in Public Administration, Syracuse University Sat

Who told you that is a Negrophobe, a hater of Blacks.

Negrophobes, including white supremacists, tend to hide why they swore eternal hatred for Blacks and why they still cling to the Negro caricature and stereotype of the low IQ simpleton who never invented the wheel or a script.

Revenge is sweet; historical revenge is even sweeter.
They have tons of pictures of primitive and destitute Blacks from Africa.
They are all smoke screen and mirrors to hide the truth.

Until the mid 19th, Africa has wealth and power that could rival the greatest European powers of the time. African armies continued to the best armies of Europe until the last quarter of the 19th.

The ultimate goal of the 1884-1885 Berlin Conference was to keep Africa divided and poor. A highly sophisticated looting machine was created to keep African impoverished.

They succeeded.

How?

By destroying powerful empires, sophisticated kingdoms, thriving ports, advanced city states and flourishing communities. The Lunda Empire was destroyed by King Leopold, King of the Belgians.

By destroying between 50 to 100 cities and major towns. Stanley wrote in his journal that he destroyed 28 major towns in Congo. The Force Publique, the private army of King Leopold destroyed the double.

By dismantling long distance trade networks. Pre-colonial Africa was much more interconnected than today. The Lunda had trade partners both in West-Central and East-Central Africa.

By ruining local economies and industries. The West and East African coasts were littered with local factories and industries. There was a thriving boat-building industry in the Loango kingdom, in present day Cabinda enclave of Angola.

By killing or exiling African rulers. A lot of kings and chiefs were beheaded and their heads kept as trophies. Their skulls can be found in colonial and military museums in Europe. The skull of Chief Lusinga is still kept in a colonial museum in Belgium.

By creating colonial states by making sure that ethnic groups that never got along had the same colonial master and powerful empires or kingdoms were divided among different colonial masters. The Kingdom of Kongo was divided between Belgium, Portugal and France.

By banning the use of indigenous currencies and imposing colonial currencies (monetary servitude, still imposed through the Zone Franc). There are more than 120 indigenous currencies (pictures and specimens taken) from pre-colonial Congo catalogued in the Tervuren Museum of Belgium.

By suppressing indigenous scripts (scriptural servitude). The saddest case with African scripts is the Bamun script of King Njoya in Cameroon. The script was banned by the French who also destroyed his libraries and press.

The Scramble for Africa was soon followed by the Scramble for African Art. Huge expeditions were organized to “collect” works of arts and artifacts. Our royal palaces and sacred shrines were looted and burned to the ground. At least 90% of Africa’s cultural heritage sit in colonial museums in Europe and in the America.

The Golden Kingdoms of Medieval Africa, Mali in particular were richer than medieval Britain. The richest man who has ever lived is a Malian King Mansa Musa Aka Mansa Musa.

European powers of the Middle Ages really envied the wealth of the Golden Kingdoms of Africa (Mali, Ghana, Songhay and Monomotapa)

DURING THE MEDIEVAL PERIOD, BETWEEN the 8th to 16th centuries, West Africa was flush with vast resources and gold. Its kingdoms were some of the most prosperous the world has ever known. When the king Mansa Musa of 14th-century Mali made a stop in Cairo, Egypt, it's said that he handed out so much gold to the poor that he single-handedly caused mass inflation.

The riches of Africa were no secret to Europe. Much of the gold and ivory medieval Europeans used to cast religious relics, statues, and jewelry came directly from West Africa.

A new exhibit coming to The Block Museum of Art at Northwestern University explores this important historical relationship. Caravans of Gold, Fragments in Time: Art, Culture, and Exchange Across Medieval Saharan Africa features artifacts from West and North Africa, Europe, and the Middle East. These items highlight the economic hubs that were the African kingdoms, but also shows how those kingdoms influenced Europe and vice versa.

"One of the things we find most exciting about this project is when you're in the presence of objects from the past, what a powerful experience that is," says Kathleen Bickford Berzock, associate director of curatorial affairs at the Block. "These objects really put us as close as we can possibly come to knowing and touching a time that's very, very distant from us and how that activates our ability to imagine and understand a time."

Here are key facts that the descendants of European slavers and colonizers want all us to forget:

1. The Empire of Mali was richer than medieval Britain.

2. Ancient Egypt was so rich that the First World Wonder, the Great Pyramid of Giza is located in Egypt. How much did it cost to build the pyramid? Not only the pyramid, but also the Sphinx and the megatemples of the Valley of the Kings in Upper Egypt.

3. The richest man who has ever lived in a Malian ruler, Mansa Musa.

4. The empire of Ghana provides a window for us on how rich Africa was. (dogs with pure gold collars and every peasant had a piece of gold). the King of Ghana was described as tethering his horse to a "brick of gold"..

5. In Munhumutapa (present day Zimbabwe) the gold miners dug 43 million tons of ore. One scholar has estimated that this would produce pure gold to the value of $7.5 billion in 1998 money. Long before that, The famous ruins of Great Zimbabwe were subject to numerous digs by associates of British businessman Cecil Rhodes who set up Rhodesia Ancient Ruins Ltd in 1895 to loot more than 40 sites of their gold.

6. The incredible wealth of the Golden Kingdoms of Medieval Africa (Ghana, Mali, Songhay and Monomotapa) was such that they controlled large segments of the Gold Trade. As someone said: On his stop in Cairo, Mansa Musa, the Malian king, spent so much gold to the poor that he caused mass inflation. In the cities of Cairo, Medina, and Mecca, the sudden influx of gold devalued the metal significantly.

7. African monetary resistance (pre-colonial, colonial and post-colonial) is never mentioned or recognized. The legendary Cameroonian scholar Joseph Tchundjang Pouemi who wrote a book : Money, Serfdom, and Freedom: The Monetary Repression of Africa" died in mysterious circumstances. Long before his death, African communities resisted the imposition of colonial currencies and the ban of their indigenous currencies (the use of the cowries and gold in West Africa was replaced by the Franc or the gold dust replaced by the British pound).

8. Indigenous financial management practices in Africa like ROSCA (rotating savings and credit association) based on "ethno-finance concepts " went underground during colonial rule and remain so after the end of colonial rule.

9. The ultimate purpose of the Berlin Conference was to keep Africa divided and poor through a series of mechanisms that are still used today (imposition of commodity prices, economic hitmen, Zone Franc etc.). A looting machine was created to keep Africa impoverished.

10. Queen Sheba of Ethiopia, the iconic ruler of Axum, gave King Solomon circa 5 tons of gold (321 million dollars).

Related Links

Why is the average IQ in Africa so low when compared to other poor regions of the world? Could genetics possibly be the reason if not one of the reasons?

Is low IQ the cause of Africa's underdevelopment?

What is the likelihood that an African American can have an IQ around 120, if the mean IQ of the group is 93? I am African American myself, so please no "woke" answers. Just evidence and great insights. (Graduated Scholars Academy at HS, 2yrs at Uni)

Why do racist people believe that black people have genetically lower intelligence high testosterone low impulse control and they bring up IQ test and IQ Maps and crime statistics? How do I make these racists change their mind?

Why do people in Japan have a higher IQ than the rest of the world and Africa the lowest?

Someone told me that black people have the lowest IQ. I don't agree but I would like to know. Is that true?

Why is it controversial to say that African countries have low IQ levels?
Why do some people think Africans are low IQ?

Every time I start doing something I get scared and afraid that my IQ/intelligence is not good enough for me to succeed. I always look for hints in the past that I have low IQ even though I know it's not true. How can I change this attitude?

Which country has the highest IQ in Africa?
Why do African countries average the lowest IQ?

Every African is bilingual. Why would some studies say Africans have a low IQ?

Why say "Africans have low IQ" when it's known that IQ is an irrelevant quantity (it doesn't measure intelligence as claimed to be); Plus what testing authority is running IQ tests in every African country EACH year to substantiate such a claim?

Is there really and IQ gap between Europe and Africa? If so, how was that conclusion achieved?

The alt-right claims that many predominantly black African countries are poor and violent due to a low IQ. Is that true?

Francois Hollande révèle sur BFMTV le 17 février 2022 que la France n’a aucun intérêt économique au Mali. Qu’est-ce qu’il en est exactement ?

Hamid Sam · Suivre Grand passionné de politique. 4 h

Il a parfaitement raison, il n'en est rien !

On a vu de fausses images dans lesquelles on apercevait des soldats français couchés sur de l'or. Ces images à la fois grossières et fausses ont fait le tour du monde et la plupart des africains continuent à croire à cela. Les gens se disent que la présence française au Mali et pas que mais dans tout le Sahel est influencée par des raisons économiques. La France serait entrain de s'enrichir en faisant croire aux populations qu'elle assure leur sécurité. C'est ce que pense bon nombre de Maliens alors qu'il n'en est rien !

Hollande a donc parfaitement raison quand il affirme que la France n'a aucun intérêt économique au Mali. Après, il y'a beaucoup de choses qui se racontent. On dit que la France serait entrain de piller le sous-sol malien mais là encore il faut des preuves solides. Et il n'y en a pas !

Questions similaires

François Hollande comme Emmanuel Macron ont reconnu l'injustice et la brutalité de la colonisation française en Algérie. Pourtant, les Algériens semblent toujours attendre plus. Qu'attendent-ils et pourquoi ?

Si en 2019 un président africain décidait de sortir son pays du franc CFA, la France va-t-elle bombarder son palais comme elle l’a fait à Laurent Gbagbo de la Côte d’Ivoire ?

Imaginons qu'Eric Zemmour se présente aux élections présidentielles et qu'il devienne président de la République Française en 2022, que se passera-t-il ensuite ?

Les Maliens manifestants dans les rues pour réclamer le départ des soldats français, alors pourquoi la France insiste-t-elle tant pour se maintenir au Mali si elle n'est pas la bienvenue ?

François Hollande a-t-il été le président le plus intègre ou a-t-il été corrompu dans des affaires dont on ne parle pas ?

Quel est le meilleur moyen pour les populations africaines de se débarrasser de la France et de son néocolonialisme militaro-monétaire sans l'implication de leurs politiciens corrompus ?

Après 7 années d'opération Barkhane et un résultat en demi-teinte, qu'est ce qui justifie encore la coûteuse intervention de la France dans le Sahel ?

Les maliens affirment chaque fois que la France vise ses intérêts, qu'elle exploite ses ressources. Quelles entreprises françaises sont présentes au Mali ? Quelles matières premières exploitent-elles ?

Pourquoi le fils du président Denis Sassou Nguesso est mis en examen en France ? Et pourquoi les politiques/PDG français qui ont des biens mal acquis ne sont pas jugés en Afrique ? Est-ce que la France est un pays impérialiste ?

Est-il vrai que François Hollande touche 36 000€ de retraite par mois ?

Sarkozy et Hollande ont assez mal fini, et tout semble indiquer que Macron pourrait subir le même sort. Qu'est- qui ne va plus en France ?

Pourquoi les Maliens applaudissent-ils la menace de Macron de retirer les troupes françaises du Mali ? Ne veulent-ils plus de la France ?

Que pensez-vous qu'il se passerait en France si Marine Le Pen accédait au pouvoir en 2022 ?

Comment se fait il que l'ALGERIE a effacé ses dettes en 2 ans (vers 1996-1997) et meme exedentaire, puis passée par l'un des pays qui a le plus de cash, doit on croire que les personnalités politiques ne volent plus ?

Les peuples d'Afrique subsaharienne ne veulent pas de la présence militaire française. Les présidents du G5 sahels font la sourde oreille, suppliant Macron de continuer à spoiler les matières premières. Sont-ils les marionnettes de l'élite f

Pourquoi la France part-elle du Mali ?

Mano Siamo · Suivre 7h

Parce que le mali est le pays qui a libéré le continent du colonialisme, du franc CFA adossé à l'euro pour une monnaie adossée aux matière premières du continent. Le Mali detient l'or et les documents qui libèrent l'humanité de l'esclavage modern. Tous les peuples devraient supporter la Mali. Nesara-gesara

RE: Pourquoi la France part du Mali ?
Elections France 2022 Jean Marchal , a travaillé pour Schlumberger (1975)
Répondu sam.

Le Président Emmanuel Macron a fourni quelques éléments de réponse. J'y ajoute un simple témoignage, car durant 3 années, j'ai travaillé dans le secteur de l'Afrique de l'Ouest dont le Mali, un pays très intéressant.

Réponse à la date du 18 février 2022.

J'ai fait une mission au Mali dans le cadre du Ministère des Affaires étrangères à la fin de l'année 1995. Et comme il se doit, je suis allé auparavant aux États-Unis d'Amérique, au siège de la Banque mondiale voir les experts de mon secteur d'intervention, le domaine des télécommunications et des nouvelles technologies de l'information et de la communication.

J'avais rencontré précédemment Tiemoko Maïga qui était venu me voir dans mon bureau à Paris. Cela a été ma première rencontre dans mon bureau avec un dirigeant Africain. Nous avons sympathisé immédiatement. C'est un Malien du Nord, et on disait à Bamako, Tiemoko Maïga est un homme du Nord. ET un homme du Nord, ce n'est pas un homme du Sud, de Bamako, la capitale. Il faut regarder une carte du Mali pour bien comprendre combien ce pays est étiré entre le Nord et le sud.

On ne dit pas tout dans les médias, c'est bien sûr normal. Pour tenter de comprendre, il est meilleur d'aller sur place. Aujourd'hui, cela n'est pas vraiment raisonnable, sauf motif professionnel sérieux, et encore il faut s'entourer de précautions multiples.

Certainement, nous pouvons dire que le Président François Hollande qui est un homme fin ainsi qu'intelligent a été sur place. Mais malheureusement, il y a été en tant que président, aussi il est bien évident aujourd'hui qu'il a été grisé par un accueil enthousiaste. Il suffit de regarder les images rapportées par nos chaînes de télévision.

Tiemoko Maïga m'a reçu avec la plus grande amabilité chez lui. Son habitation à Bamako était une vieille maison coloniale. Son voisin immédiat était un expert de télécommunications de France Telecom qui dépendait hiérarchiquement de moi et qui gérait l'antenne terrienne qui est le dispositif le plus important du réseau.

De façon incroyablement amusante, j'arrive par un vol direct Paris Bamako et je tombe sur le coopérant sur place et il est originaire du village de ma mère, dans l'Aude, Bellegarde du Razes. Il est le fils du boulanger du village…

Ce qu'il faut sans doute bien comprendre, c'est que les rapports sociaux et humains ont complètement changé. Est ce tant mieux, est-ce tant pis, je n'en sais rien et je ne veux pas juger. À cette époque, j'ai eu à savoir du nombre de Maliens vivant en France, il y avait 40 000 maliens vivant légalement sur le territoire Français et 60 000 maliens sans papiers. IL y a une communauté importante de maliens à Montreuil, à l'est de Paris.

Les Russes avaient construit une tour, la plus haute de Bamako. Beaucoup de Maliens ont fait des études en Russie. Beaucoup de Maliens ont fait leurs études en France.

Tiemoko a été jeté en prison, pour des raisons politiques en 1998. La SOTELMA n'est plus une entreprise d'état.

IL faut savoir également que la corruption est partout généralisée en Afrique. Les sociétés d'état reversent aux dirigeants politiques des sommes conséquentes qui quittent le pays et vont en sécurité dans des institutions bancaires internationales.

Pour moi, aujourd'hui, il n'y avait pas d'autre solution désormais qu'annoncer un retrait des forces armées françaises.

Les stars d'Afrique

Bakary Cissé Publication par David-GDK 14 févr. Les dix pays les plus touchés par les coups d'État – réussis ou non – sur le continent africain ces 70 dernières années...

Questions similaires

La France est le plus grand prédateur en Afrique et a longtemps été vu à travers. La France n'a longtemps été qu'une puissance régionale moyenne en Europe. Pourquoi sont-ils encore si influents en Afrique ?

Y a-t-il des territoires qui ont appartenu historiquement à la France, qui ont étés en premier lieu sous contrôle français, mais sont maintenant sous contrôle étranger ?

Pourquoi la chasse est-elle encore autorisée en France, alors qu'elle est interdite dans la plupart des pays européens et qu'elle représente un désastre écologique ?

Pourquoi l'état français ne publie pas les archives militaires qu'il détient prouvant que la France a spolié des territoires marocains pour les annexer à l'Algérie pendant sa colonisation ?

Les Maliens manifestants dans les rues pour réclamer le départ des soldats français, alors pourquoi la France insiste-t-elle tant pour se maintenir au Mali si elle n'est pas la bienvenue ?

Avant la colonisation française en 1830, l'Algérie (ou les territoires qui la formaient) avait-elle déjà été longuement sous domination étrangère ?

Pourquoi il n'y a qu'avec l'Algérie que les relations sont souvent tendues alors que la France a occupé d'autres pays ?

Les Français coloniaux ont beaucoup investi dans les pays d'Afrique du Nord, agrandissant les villes et des infrastructures. Pourquoi les Français n'ont-ils pas fait de même en Afrique de l'Ouest et dans leurs colonies en Afrique subsaharienne ?

Pourquoi l'armée Française refuse de quitter le Mali malgré tous les avertissements et les mises en garde de son gouvernement face à l'arrivée des Russes ?

Pourquoi la France est-elle différente du reste du monde ? (Question traduite)

Pourquoi l'Algérie, qui a acquis son indépendance veut-elle faire de la France une partie de son territoire ?

Sans l'Afrique que deviendrait la France ?

Pourquoi les Maliens applaudissent-ils la menace de Macron de retirer les troupes françaises du Mali ? Ne veulent-ils plus de la France ?

Normalement retirer ses troupes du Mali et d'Afrique devrait être un soulagement pour la France, alors pourquoi insiste-t-elle pour rester là où elle dit qu'elle ne gagne rien ?

Pourquoi la France a-t-elle colonisé l'Algérie ?

Si la France n'a aucun intérêt au Mali, pourquoi TotalEnergies y envoie-t-il du matériel par voie maritime ?

Philippe Fabre · Suivre Commerce International - Asie du Sud-Est, Chine, Inde, Japon jeu.

Ce qui est sous-jacent dans cette question, c'est: pourquoi Total continue-t-il d'exploiter le pétrole malien, en bonne entreprise colonialiste? Les maliens ne devraient-ils pas mettre un terme a cette exploitation française des vastes ressources maliennes? C'est bien ça, cher Nicolas Huvet?

Il n'y a pas de pétrole au Mali! C'était un mythe il y a une dizaine d'années. C'est faux!

Total n'est plus français, mais international. C'est une entreprise privée qui s'investit ou elle veut, ou elle peut… Pas sur ordre du gouvernement de la France.

Elle vend de l'essence aux automobilistes maliens. S'ils n'en veulent plus, qu'ils le disent, Total partira.

Il y a un autre mythe, celui de la France qui veut rester au Mali pour en exploiter les richesses, en bon colonialiste. Il n'y a rien a exploiter!

Le Mali exporte principalement de l'or (en baisse constante), du coton et des céréales. Rien de tout ça va en France! Le Mali exporte pour $10 millions par an en France, presque rien! Insect Resins ($2,4M), Aircraft Parts ($1,8M), Tropical Fruits ($1,7M). Pendant les 24 dernières années, l'export du Mali vers la France a augmenté de 1,4% par an! Pas d'uranium, pas d'or, pas de pétrole… Autant dire, que dalle! Les maliens accuse la France de piller les richesses du Mali… Il n'y en a pas!

Quelles entreprises françaises sont au Mali et en exploitent les richesses? Aucune! Le Mali est un pays dangereux, enclin au communisme et a l'islamisme qui est un des plus pauvres au monde!

Oui, le Mali ne présente aucun intérêt pour la France et ses entreprises. On aurait du en partir, il y a au moins 5 ans.

Questions similaires

Les Maliens manifestants dans les rues pour réclamer le départ des soldats français, alors pourquoi la France insiste-t-elle tant pour se maintenir au Mali si elle n’est pas la bienvenue ?

Pourquoi y a-t-il une si grande différence au niveau du salaire entre les Etats-Unis et la France ?

Pourquoi les Maliens applaudissent-ils la menace de Macron de retirer les troupes françaises du Mali ? Ne veulent-ils plus de la France ?

Pourquoi l’armée Française refuse de quitter le Mali malgré tous les avertissements et les mises en garde de son gouvernement face à l’arrivée des Russes ?

La Turquie vient-elle de battre la France au Mali avec la chute d'Ibrahim Boubacar Keïta ?

Normalement retirer ses troupes du Mali et d'Afrique devrait être un soulagement pour la France, alors pourquoi insiste-t-elle pour rester là où elle dit qu'elle ne gagne rien ?

Les maliens affirment chaque fois que la France vise ses intérêts, qu'elle exploite ses ressources. Quelles entreprises françaises sont présentes au Mali ? Quelles matières premières exploitent-elles ?

Comment peut-on expliquer l'attitude insolente de la France vis-à-vis des nations souveraines d'Afrique en l'occurrence le Mali ?

Lors de la négociation des Accords d'Evian, pourquoi la France a-t-elle imposé au FLN de récupérer le Sahara qu'initialement paraît-il celui-ci ne revendiquait pas ?

Est-il vrai que la France a le premier domaine maritime au monde ? Pourquoi ce pays n'est pas riche de l'exploitation de ressources en mer (pétrole, métaux rares, pêche, éoliennes offshore, énergie marémotrice, etc.) ?

Si un Français part vivre aux USA qu'aura-t-il le plus de mal à trouver au supermarché par rapport à la France ?

Suspendu de la CEDEAO et de l'UA, le Mali est sous la pression de la France après la décision de Paris de suspendre ses opérations militaires conjointes. Comment voyez-vous la suite de la transition ?

Les putschistes au Mali et le peuple malien demandent à la France de dégager, pourquoi l'Armée française continue-t-elle d'occuper le Mali ?

La Côte française des Somalis était-elle importante à la France d'un point de vue stratégique ? Si tel était le cas, pourquoi la France ne lui a-t-elle offert un statut comparable à celui de la Nouvelle-Calédonie ?

Comment l'Allemagne a-t-elle vaincu la France si facilement pendant la Seconde Guerre mondiale ?

Let's Discuss Ancient and Medieval Africa

What are some notable universities that existed in west Africa beside the University of Timbuktu?

Answered by Alton Allen Mon

Well you have to consider that there were many local schools colleges connected to the main University as the University of Sankore was the center of educational life, folks travelled from as far away as Baghdad to study, many Mosque would've doubled as educational center.

Related Links

What should I do with the tonnes of Africa related books, including UNESCO's General History of Africa Volumes in PDF format? I got them from online. Is it illegal to keep them? I'd like to share here and on other African history walls.

Where did the Songhai originate from?
Did the Ancient Minoans know about the Sahara Desert?

During the 3 intermediate periods in Ancient Egyptian history, did any Ancient Egyptians become residents of other parts of Africa?

Is it any possibility that the Canary and Cape Verde islands were known to West Africans before the Middle Ages?

Is it possible for the later Roman Empire in its last stages to have known about the Ghana Empire in its earliest stages?

Were the rulers of Kush related to the rulers of Kerma?
What happened to Tunka Menin's family after Ghana empire fell?

If Abubakari ll did make it across the Atlantic Ocean to the Americas, How possible was it for him to have trade relations with Mansa Musa and for the information to be recorded in Timbuktu?

When did Kanem-Bornu first start having contacts with the Ghana, Mali, and Songhai empires?

Has any evidence been found of Carthage residents travelling inland to the Niger River?

When did Great Zimbabwe become aware of Mali, Songhay, and Kanem-Bornu?

Did the Garamantes ever raid the lands of the Sao?

Are Black people only Ikelan caste in Tuareg society or can they also be Imrad?

Au Mali, près de 30 morts dans une attaque jihadiste contre un camp de l'armée

David-GDK Connaissances : Anglais ven.

Au moins 27 soldats maliens sont morts et 33 autres ont été blessés, vendredi, dans une attaque jihadiste contre une base militaire à Mondoro, dans le centre du Mali, a déclaré le gouvernement dans un communiqué lu à la télévision nationale.

Une attaque imputée à des jihadistes contre un camp de l'armée malienne a fait de nombreux morts, vendredi 4 mars, à Mondoro, dans le centre du pays, a appris l'AFP de différents interlocuteurs informés de la situation.

Au moins 27 soldats maliens sont morts et 33 autres ont été blessés, dont 21 grièvement, dans l'attaque, a déclaré le gouvernement dans un communiqué lu à la télévision nationale. Sept autres soldats sont portés disparus, a-t-il ajouté.

Selon un élu de la région, les informations sont parcellaires parce que les communications avec Mondoro, dans une zone reculée, sont coupées, a-t-il dit. "L'attaque a fait de nombreuses victimes", a confirmé Moussa Ongoiba, membre d'une association de personnes originaires de Mondoro, établi à Bamako.

Une source militaire française, sous couvert de l'anonymat, affirme que l'attaque menée par plusieurs centaines de jihadistes a eu lieu vers 6 h sur le camp occupé par environ 150 soldats maliens.

"Les Fama (Forces armées maliennes) n'ont pas demandé l'appui de (la force française antijihadiste) Barkhane. Le camp de Mondoro se trouve dans une zone où il a été demandé à Barkhane de ne pas opérer, sans doute en raison de la présence de mercenaires de (la société privée russe) Wagner", a-t-elle ajouté.

Which footballer’s photo deserves upvotes?

Interesting picks · Follow Answered by Frankor Wondimu Updated Jun 15

I don’t know if your talking about American football or soccer but the Football/Soccer player that deserves Upvotes is him N'golo Kante

The most humble football player.

Check out - The Best Motivational Quotes of All Time. Warning!!! Number 19 will change your life forever.

Africa In Real Time:
The Malian military government decided to suspend France's RFI radio and France 24 on unknown allegation of the Malian army. How does the freedom of press impact the detrimental instability in Mali?

Related Answer

Kriztofer Plitzkin

French Foreign LegionUpdated 4y

What do French people think of the French military campaign in Mali?

As a person of Malian descent having been a member of the French military, I think this puts me in an interesting position to answer that question.

This is a complex and layered matter. There are no ways to make a simple opinion about that situation.

- For the oligarchic interests of the French politicians, the intervention in Mali is clearly aimed at keeping the region under control for further plundering of the resources.
- Most French soldiers are driven by a strong belief that they come to defend and protect innocent people against an invader, brutal enemy. Which they do, on the scale of the Malian people in the North. The French Armed Forces effectively liberated the captured towns from the Shariah fanatic rebels. Fact. And well done.
- Operation SERVAL has cost the French tax payers an official 647 Million Euros.
- France has always been keen on keeping its former colonies military weak, poorly armed and their governments corrupt and unstable enough to overthrow them with simple psyops when they do no longer comply to French influence. It´s a vicious circle that forces these countries into submission, assistance and dependance from France. In exchange, for France the steaks are free...

The operation in Mali is not a humanitarian effort.

Technically, France should not be there.

People are effectively conditioned to believe it is a normal thing that an entire expeditionary force a foreign country should march on soil of another one to intervene on its behalf. It is easy for politicians to motivate and convince the people into marching out to war by appealing to emotion, mentioning "democracy", " freedom", "terrorist threat" and all classic arguments to send their troops out where and when they see fit. God knows how many times an intervention could have saved a lot of lives but no one batted an eye because the interests did not fit the bill.

That is not normal. Any country should (be allowed to) be strong enough to keep its territorial integrity and handle its own problems, in worse case scenario call up on its allies for help when needed.

Mali should be a sovereign nation with a well equiped and well trained military, capable of handling its own problems. With some leeway from France it would be perfectly capable of doing so. But again it is under the yoke of France and as long as it is, will never be able to free itself from French assistance. There is no such a thing as a historical obligation to help a former colony. No historical obligation ever costs 647 Million Euros and human lives to fulfill, that´s a fairy tale for children. There are only resources and an accounting exercise of who gets how much from what investement. This is the story of all Subsaharian former French colonies, which actually never really ceased to be colonies.

That being mentioned, I am happy and grateful that the cities of the North been liberated by my brothers of the French Foreign Legion and all other brothers and sisters in arms of the French Armed Forces raining hell on our enemies.

My thoughts go to the families whose sons, fathers, husbands, brothers have been sacrificed in that endeavour. It is not fair. It never is.

Wars are never simplistic nor black or white and all aspects should be considered before stating any opinion. Opinion which cannot be simple regarding any war for that matter. Politicians are generally corrupt, soldiers generally believe they do what is right. The history of human civilization since dawn of ages. Interventionism brings about everything in a spectrum of good and bad and should ideally be abolished in the right conditions.

Stay Strong

Related Answer

Randy McDonald

A fan of cities, islands, migration and Trek and more4y

Originally Answered: The French president has conveyed his concern that Afrin operation is turning into occupation. So Why is France still occupying Mali? The French intervention in Mali was triggered by the 2012 eruption of the Northern Mali conflict, and facilitated only by the request of the legitimate government of Mali for military aid to prevent the country's partition. Since not only France and Mali but none of Mali's neighbours had any interest in a radical Islamist emirate in the Sahel, this intervention was welcomed by everyone and remains welcome. There are somewhat better chances of a peaceful settlement in this region than in an Afghanistan existing in a much more contested part of the world.

In the case of the Turkish intervention in Syria, there is much less legitimacy. Rojava, certainly, did not invite Turkish intervention. Other Middle Eastern states may accept this intervention, but they see it as a way to undermine the potential for Kurdish autonomy and independence. It's not clear at all to me that the Turkish intervention is anything but another cynical step in Turkey's long foolish relationship with Kurdish populations within and without its borders, though I suppose there is the possibility of a desire for territorial aggrandizement at the expense of a weaker Syria.

If France had occupied northern Mali with the express intent of limiting the impact of Mali or a secessionist Azawad on its territories—if, for instance, France had somehow managed to keep Algeria and feared the spread of radical separatism into unhappy African territories—there would indeed be a close analogy between this French intervention and Turkey's ongoing invasion of Rojava. This analogy does not hold; France largely resolved its complex relationship with Algeria by abandoning this territory to its inhabitants and independence more than a half-century ago.

Related Answer

What's happening with France and troop withdrawals in Mali? Why were troops there in the first place?

Boris Ezomo

Read a lot and travelled a lotFeb 17

The Russians had arrived to do a better job.

The French military presence in its former colonies, was more for purposes of control. In a more political way.

It was a circle going nowhere. With lots of Banditry and extremist fundamentalist activity in Mali not been controlled.

After years of stagnation, the new government in Mali is taking a new approach in combating this insecurity. They seem to have signed a contract with the Wagner group. Which are military contractors from Russia. While a private organisation, it gets backing from Russia itself.

It is a very popular move in Mali. Since Russians are getting the reputation of helping return control of countries to the government. Syria was a direct Russian success story. However Central African Republic is a Wagner project. There too, the government is regaining control of that country, after its old colonial master France failed several times.

As a Nigerian, I feel we too need to hire Wagner to solve our complex security problem. Not because our army is not capable, but the infighting, collaboration by high officials and such, had made them inefficient. Wagner like all military contractors, operates outside the law.

All those powers are not there out of the kindness of their hearts. Its money, resources and influence.

Edit: Javin Liu asked an interesting question

“What do you think is the main failure of the French forces, and what lessons do you think Wagner can learn from them?”

OK, let me tell you an example that will explain everything.

In CAR, The government was basically trapped in the capital by the multiple different rebel groups and warlords.

EU and US had a arms embargo on CAR. EU agreed to sponsor training camps for the army, but refused to lift the arms embargo.

Got news for them, Rebels and warlords do not buy arms from countries, they buy from arms traffickers that do not care a hoot for arms embargo.

So the French started training the CAR national army using Gun shaped sticks, and shouting “bang". No kidding.

While the rebels got all the arms the can afford from sells of gold and gems from mines under their control.

When Wagner arrived. They came with arms for the national arm, and trained them. They then started spearheading attacks into the rebel area. Then leaving it in the government control. Before moving to the next area

Did I also tell you that the chief advisor on military matter to the president of CAR is actually a Russian general.

The Russians train and respect the local national army, and use them.

The French not only disregard the locals, but their left hand does not know what the right is doing.

Sidenote. At the start, the US had an arms embargo on Nigeria when they were fighting Boko Haram. Nigeria even started smuggling weapons from South Africa. Up until Russia started importing to Nigeria. Only then was the embargo lifted.

Related Answer
What is your opinion on the coup that just occurred in Mali?

Zivai Hamadziripi Travelled in Africa 1y

I am from a country desperately wishing the same thing would happen to our country. (Zimbabwe). I am cautiously optimistic, the civilians were rejoicing when the soldiers took over on Monday and so long as the military moves to civilian rule then there is hope. However coups in Africa are nothing new and this could be the start of another long dictatorship. We will all know in a week or two if this was a good move.

Why does France have troops in Mali?

Julien Philippe Lives in France (1984–present) 9mo

To clean the mess made by France when Sarkozy ruled it, aka. attacking Libya, leading Qaddafi to his death, the country to destruction and civil-war, and the regional Jihadist groups to spread in the whole surrounding, notably Mali.

First, the flame-thrower, and then, the water-thrower.

Both Libyans and Malians should be grateful.. As well as the French taxpayer who paid and still pays for all of this instead of financing our health and education systems.

Because we speak about destroyed countries with French bombs. But those details taken aside, what about the French taxpayer who pay for this, after having elected the leaders who do this ?

Who thinks about French taxpayers ?!
Where is our money ?!
Anyway, vive la France !

Footnotes: Why does France have troops in Mali?

https://www.quora.com/unanswered/Why-does-France-have-troops-in-Mali

Related Links

What is your opinion on the coup that just occurred in Mali?

What is going on in Mali? I understand that there's a military coup going on, but what are the implications of this?

What will happen next in Mali after the coup?
What do you think about the coup d'etat in Mali after months of protests and deaths?

There has been a coup in Mali where the President and PM were arrested; is it that easy to do the same in the U.S. or it is just a weak government with no power over the military? Thank you.

Why did soldiers coup in the West African country of Mali?
Is there a military coup attempt going on in Mali?
Why is Mali undergoing a second coup?
What are the steps for carrying out a military takeover (coup d'état)?
Has the United States military attempted a coup on its country at any point in history?
How will the military coup in Sudan affect South Sudan?

Describe Africa as the epicenter of coup d'etat considering what happened in Mali and now Burkina Faso and you will not be wrong. How then can this trend be stopped in African countries?

Why hasn't there been a military coup in North Korea as yet?
Could the U.S. be involved in the attempted military coup in Turkey?
How do I solve Mali's coup conundrum? Are coups on the rise in Africa?

Related Answer
Why is the military attempting a coup in Mali?

Hampton Stephens Publisher, World Politics Review 9y

The coup leader, Amadou Sanogo, has said the coup was staged in response to President Amadou Toumani Touré's poor handling of a rebellion by ethnic Tuareg people in the country's north.

The fight with the Tuareg rebels in the north had not been going well for the government, ostensibly angering some of Mali's military leaders, who led the coup.

An analysis published by World Politics Review just prior to the coup provides good background on the conflict and therefore on the cause of the coup. Here is an excerpt:

As the fighting between the Tuareg rebels of the National Movement for the Liberation of Awazad (MNLA) and the Malian army enters its third month, there are few indications that the conflict will be resolved in the near future.

On a military level, the advantage lies with the well-equipped and experienced Tuareg fighters, many of whom are veterans of earlier rebellions and the Libyan civil war. Using long-range guerrilla tactics, mainly surprise attacks launched over distances of hundreds of miles with four-wheel-drive pickup trucks, they have sacked at least seven Malian garrison towns so far, including one this past weekend.

The human costs of the rebellion are mounting: Up to 160,000 people have been displaced by the fighting, according to Oxfam, about half of them fleeing into neighboring Niger, Mauritania, Algeria and Burkina Faso.

The rebellion has its roots in the Tuareg insurrections of the 1990s and 2000s. These earlier conflicts, the latest of which ended only in 2009, were resolved by peace agreements between the various Tuareg factions and the Malian government. Typically, the rebels were promised greater autonomy, inclusion in the national army, political participation and economic development.

However, the government never implemented the agreements, leaving many veteran Tuareg fighters -- and increasingly a generation of politicized Tuareg youth -- angry and disillusioned.

Read more here: http://www.worldpoliticsreview.com/articles/11730/malis-tuareg-rebellion-puts-region-at-risk

Related Links

What is your opinion on the coup that just occurred in Mali?

What is going on in Mali? I understand that there’s a military coup going on, but what are the implications of this?

What will happen next in Mali after the coup?

What do you think about the coup d’etat in Mali after months of protests and deaths?

There has been a coup in Mali where the President and PM were arrested; is it that easy to do the same in the U.S. or it is just a weak government with no power over the military? Thank you.

Why did soldiers coup in the West African country of Mali?
Is there a military coup attempt going on in Mali?
Why is Mali undergoing a second coup?

What are the steps for carrying out a military takeover (coup d'état)?
Has the United States military attempted a coup on its country at any point in history?
How will the military coup in Sudan affect South Sudan?

Describe Africa as the epicenter of coup d'etat considering what happened in Mali and now Burkina Faso and you will not be wrong. How then can this trend be stopped in African countries?

Why hasn't there been a military coup in North Korea as yet?
Could the U.S. be involved in the attempted military coup in Turkey?
How do I solve Mali’s coup conundrum? Are coups on the rise in Africa?

Wake Up Africa! The gold of Mali

Posted by Firew Afera 1h

Mansa Musa, the medieval king of Mali, is thought to be the wealthiest man to set foot on earth. According to some estimates, he had about 400 billion dollars.

The main source of Musa's wealth was the enormous gold deposits of the Mali empire.

Mali still has a lot of gold left in her country. In 2022, she is expected to produce about 64 tonnes of gold industrially. In 2018, the export of gold generated 2 billion dollars for the country.

According to Wateraid global, around 3.5 million of Malians do not have access to clean water. It is also believed that around 47% of Malians live below the poverty line.

For Malians (if you are on Quora): Why do you think that the country of the richest man in the world fail to supply all its citizens with basic needs?

What do you think the future holds for Mali after the military takeover?

What do you think should be done in order to ensure that all Malians have at least food, drink, clothing and shelter? Please comment your views below.

Related Answer: The gold of Mali

By Alton Allen 26m ago

I think we are being a little unfair to ol Mansa Musa, his citizens at the time was among the wealthiest at the time according to contemporary reports , he built up the infrastructure, not just show boating , and I think there's little understanding of the encroaching desertification of his time, so what about his enormous wealth, I think his grabbie sons and grand sons and ministers after his death , let's not forget the Songhai who would've carted off much of that wealth away, so what happened when the Songhai got hold of it □ , the Moroccans came and hauled off a great amount of it, stripping that tree bare , that's according to Ahmed Baba, what did the Moroccans did with it?

Les stars d'Afrique
L'Uemoa ordonne la suspension des sanctions de la Cédéao contre le Mali.

· Follow Posted by David-GDK

Une décision qui intervient alors qu'un nouveau sommet de la Cédéao, la Communauté des États d'Afrique de l'Ouest, consacré à la situation au Mali, est organisé demain, vendredi 25 mars 2022. Un rendez-vous auquel est invité cette fois le président de la transition, Assimi Goïta.

La victoire n’est pas totale, mais elle est incontestable pour les autorités maliennes de transition qui n’ont de cesse de dénoncer les sanctions économiques et financières imposées au Mali depuis le 9 janvier dernier. Pour Bamako, ces sanctions sont « illégales » et « inhumaines ». Un collectif d’avocats avait ainsi la cour, le 15 février dernier, de deux recours contre les sanctions prises le 9 janvier par les dirigeants de la sous-région, à la suite de l’annonce de l’allongement de la transition. Le premier recours demandait leur abrogation, le second la suspension de leur application en raison de leur impact sur la population.

Si la Cour de justice de l’Uemoa n’a pas conclu à leur illégalité, elle a en revanche entendu l’argument selon lequel leur effet était « gravement préjudiciable » non seulement à l’État malien, mais aux Maliens eux-mêmes.

Si aucun accord n’est trouvé…

Depuis deux mois et demi, toutes les relations commerciales et financières du Mali avec les pays de la Cédéao sont interdites, ce qui a entraîné de considérables défauts de paiement de l’État sur les marchés financiers, et une importante hausse des prix dans le pays -en dépit des exemptions faites aux produits de première nécessité ou aux médicaments.

La Cour de Justice de l’Uemoa ne demande donc pas l’annulation des sanctions, mais leur suspension, en attendant de se prononcer sur le fond.

Un sommet exceptionnel des chefs d’État de la Cédéao doit se tenir à Accra ce vendredi 25 mars.

En cas d’accord sur la durée de la prolongation de la transition, avant l’organisation d’élections devant marquer le retour à l’ordre constitutionnel, les sanctions ne seraient ni suspendues, ni annulées, mais tout simplement levées. Et si aucun accord n’est trouvé, les chefs d’État de la Cédéao devront décider de suivre ou non la demande de l’Uemoa.

Les stars d'Afrique
Des manifestants réclament le retrait du Mali de la Cédéao

· Suivre Publication par David-GDK 37 m

Des centaines de manifestants ont exigé ce vendredi le retrait du Mali de la Cédéao. Quelles seraient les conséquences d'un tel scénario ?

A l'appel de plusieurs organisations de la société civile, les manifestants, à l'aide de banderoles et de slogans hostiles à la Cédéao ainsi qu'à la France, se sont retrouvés place de l'Indépendance à Bamako ce vendredi (01.04). Ils ont notamment réclamé l'autonomie monétaire du Mali qui est depuis le 9 janvier sous le coup de sanctions. Les manifestants souhaitent aussi que le Mali se retire de la Communauté économique des Etats de l'Afrique de l'Ouest. Pour le moment, les autorités de la transition malienne n'évoquent pas cette éventualité, du moins pas officiellement.

Impact sur le plan économique

"Les chefs d'Etat ont décidé qu'ils étaient disposés à prévoir une prolongation de la transition au Mali dans une fourchette de 12 à 16 mois. En ce qui concerne la Cédéao, les sanctions sont toujours maintenues", Jean-Claude Kassi Brou, président de la Commission de la Cédéao, expliquait ainsi lors de la dernière session extraordinaire de l'institution la décision concernant le Mali.

Cette décision passe visiblement mal auprès de certains Maliens qui demandent le retrait du pays de la Cédéao.

Mais prendre ses distances vis-à-vis de la Cédéao reviendrait pour le Mali à tourner le dos à une organisation qui constituait en 2019 un marché de plus de 350 millions de consommateurs, avec des pays membres générant au total un PIB de 730 milliards de dollars.

"C'est vrai que sur le plan économique, l'intégration sous-régionale est encore parcellaire mais il existe plusieurs programmes mis en œuvre au niveau de la sous-région. Du point de vue de la coopération internationale également l'approche sous-régionale est considérée et le Mali émarge dans un certain nombre de programmes, que ce soit avec la Banque africaine de développement, l'Union européenne", rappelle l'expert en gouvernance Dany Ayida qui précise par ailleurs que "si le Mali se retire, il remet en cause ces mécanismes. Sur le plan commercial c'est vrai que les échanges entre le Mali et les pays de la sous-région ne sont pas aussi importants mais sur le plan de l'agriculture, le Mali échange beaucoup avec des pays comme le Sénégal, la Côte d'ivoire, les pays côtiers comme le Bénin, le Togo, le Nigeria."

Quitter la Cédéao pourrait ainsi porter un coup dur à l'économie du Mali si les Etats membres de l'institution décidaient de suspendre leurs échanges avec Bamako.

Déjà les sanctions actuelles de la Cédéao pèsent sur le Mali. Dans le domaine des transports par exemple, de nombreuses commandes sont bloquées sur l'axe Dakar-Bamako, l'une des principales routes d'approvisionnement du Mali. Des produits essentiels à l'économie malienne comme le ciment et le fer, les voitures d'occasion importées depuis l'Europe par les ports ou encore le matériel informatique et les équipements de transport sont quant à eux totalement bloqués.

La crainte d'un isolement

Sur le plan politique, on pourrait s'attendre également à des conséquences. "C'est l'isolement international du Mali qu'il faut craindre parce qu'il se trouve qu'aujourd'hui le Mali est militairement soutenu par des Russes par l'entremise de Wagner, ce qui ne tombe pas bien dans la mesure où la Russie est au banc de la communauté internationale depuis l'invasion de l'Ukraine (...) Cela s'inscrit dans une dynamique qui n'est pas à l'avantage du Mali", explique Dany Ayida

Il faut savoir que la Mauritanie avait déjà franchi le pas en quittant la Cédéao en 2000 pour intégrer l'Union du Maghreb arabe avec l'Algérie, la Libye, le Maroc et la Tunisie. Mais depuis, Nouakchott tente de réintégrer la Cédéao pour profiter à nouveau de certains avantages notamment commerciaux.

Alors selon vous la Mali quittera t'il la CEDEAO ?

NOUS ATTENDONS PRECIEUSEMENT VOUS COMMENTAIRE.

News Nigeria

The 'Lion King' A CRIPPLE WHO BECAME AN EMPEROR

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 19h

The Susu of what became present day Mauritania had attacked the kingdom of Mali in 1235 CE, killing the entire royal families of the Kingdom, except a boy who was a cripple from birth. The cripple boy was taken back to what is today Mauritania. Mali was left in the hands of a shadow elite that yielded to the attackers. The leader of the Susu was called Abubakar, a man who was known to be among the religious fanatics of then, that were called the Almoravids, a group that had also invaded Spain, Portugal and up to the south of France.

The reason for attacking Mali kingdom was that, like the Ghana empire around the Senegal river, the Mali elites and general population were all non-muslims. They were among those that had rejected the new islamization process that had began spreading into Africa from the north, from 640 CE. In 642 CE, Egypt fell to the Arab armies. In 644 CE, the Arabs began building a navy in the Mediterranean. In 647 CE, Carthage fell to the Arab forces... And it was spreading down into Africa, very fast, and with the spread, came slavery and the disruptions to Agriculture and trade, as islamized Africans began turning against their 'un-islamized' African neighbors.

The Susu had also taken over the Kingdom of Ghana which had rejected islamism, and was then under King Tenkaminen. But the Almoravids who had earlier gone into Spain were caught up in a conflict between the Suni and the Shiite Muslims, beside other Europeans like descendants of the Visigoths. Abubakar moved almost all the armies in Ghana and Mali empire to assist the Almoravids in Spain. During this time, Abubakar died and Tenkaminen also died.

It is something of note, that African doctors of that time cured the crippled boy who had been brought back from Mali Kingdom. He grew strong. His name was Sundaita Keita.

Satkuru(Sakura) usurped the kingdom of both Mali and Ghana after the death of Abubakar of the Susu, and Tenkaminen of the Ghana kingdom. Satkuru decided to make a pilgrimage to mecca, probably to create an alliance with the Islamic caliphs in the Arabian peninsula. He took the southern route through Mali, towards the horn of Africa, away from Egypt. His royal caravan encountered a people who history then knew as a people who did not want friends or want to be anyone's friend.... They were described in the 1st century CE by Strabo as a people who were "not good to have as a friend or foe." These were the Denakil(as known in Arabic) or Adal (as known in Amharic).

Nobody would have expected then that any group would rob a royal caravan on the Trans-Saharan routes, it wasn't normal, but the Denakil killed the usurper king and robbed the caravans of all gold and precious goods that were heading for the Arabian peninsula. They sealed Satkuru's body in honey and sent it back with another band to his Homeland. When the corpse arrived, it was said, it was as though Satkuru had died only a day before, instead of two months before.

In 1250 CE, Sundaita Keita, a strong grown man, launched out on a wide ranging military campaign, taking over Ghana Kingdom, uniting Mali Provinces and eventually formed one of West Africa's largest and richest empire, an empire of gold and scholarship. The Mali Empire.

Sundaita Keita was known as the 'lion King.'

Mali suspends RFI and France 24, bars local outlets from distributing their content

New York, March 18, 2022 — Malian authorities should reverse the suspension of French broadcasters Radio France Internationale (RFI) and France 24, and swiftly implement accreditation processes that ensure journalists are not barred from working in the country, the Committee to Protect Journalists said Friday.

On Wednesday, March 16, Mali's Ministry of Territorial Administration and Decentralization began a procedure to suspend the ability of RFI and France 24 to broadcast content in the country, according to a copy of the suspension order posted on the ministry's Facebook page and reports by RFI and France 24. Both outlets are subsidiaries of the French government-owned France Médias Monde parent company, which stated it "deplored the decision," according to those reports.

The suspension order cited the publication of "false allegations" of abuses by the Malian Armed Forces (FAMa) made earlier this month by United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights Michelle Bachelet, Human Rights Watch, and RFI as the reason for the suspensions. The order said the suspensions were justified under Mali's "laws and regulations" but did not specify which laws were violated and barred all local outlets from distributing content made by RFI and France 24.

"Authorities in Mali should halt their efforts to control journalism in the country and reverse the suspension of RFI and France 24, as well as the ban on all local media distributing those outlets' content," said Angela Quintal, CPJ's Africa program coordinator. "These suspensions, which follow the suspension of the media accreditation processes earlier this year, paint a grim picture for press freedom in Mali."

RFI and France 24 broadcasts have been shut off since 1 p.m. local time on March 17, according to a journalist with knowledge of the situation who spoke to CPJ on the condition of anonymity for fear of reprisal.

Sambi Toure, the director of the Malian government's information center, acknowledged CPJ's requests for comment sent via messaging app, but did not directly answer the questions sent to him about the suspensions. CPJ also called Harouna Mamadou Toureh, Mali's minister of communication, digital economy, and administration modernization. One of the calls sounded like it connected, but no audible words could be heard, and other calls and questions sent via messaging app and text message went unanswered.

In February, Malian authorities suspended the accreditation processes for journalists and expelled Jeune Afrique reporter Benjamin Roger, a French national, hours after he arrived in the county saying he did not have the required accreditation, as CPJ documented at the time. Accredited journalists already inside Mali could continue working, Harbert Traoré, a technical adviser for the Ministry of Communication, told CPJ at the time.

Since that time, certain journalists' accreditations have expired and there is currently no avenue to be reaccredited, a journalist with knowledge of the situation told CPJ. In response to CPJ's request for an update on accreditation processes in Mali, Traoré told CPJ via messaging app that the Ministry of Communication did not make these decisions without elaborating further.

In a video published on March 14, Olivier Dubois, a journalist kidnapped in Mali, said he was abducted by jihadists in April 2021 and thanked his family for messages he heard over the radio, which RFI has been broadcasting. CPJ called for his immediate release.

Related Answer

What were the contributions of Almoravids towards the decline of Ghana from power?

Alton Allen

Knowledgeable In African and African Diaspora History: Wed

The Ghana Empire: Great and Magnificent Ancient Kingdom of Africa

Map of the Ghana Empire ca 300 -1200 Let me tell you about one of the greatest Ancient kingdoms of Africa, the Ghana Empire, a place known to its northern neighbors as the “Land of Gold”…

https://afrolegends.com/2020/10/19/the-ghana-empire-great-and-magnificent-ancient-kingdom-of-africa/

[How the Fulani Conquered West Africa]

A Traditional Fulani Warrior

Posted in r/JustProBlackThings by u/BlasianTyga
https://www.reddit.com/r/JustProBlackThings/comments/716l4p/a_traditional_fulani_warrior/

Takrur aka Fulani Islamic reformist made up a significant portion of the Almoravid movement, and actually sponsored their efforts providing leadership and military support .

They damaged Ghana for certain, however They were not snuffed out and actually recovered nor were they the only aggressors, this includes the Suzu and the rise of Mali as a power.

Ouadane | Wikiwand

Ouadane or Wādān is a small town in the desert region of central Mauritania, situated on the southern edge of the Adrar Plateau, 93 km northeast of Chinguetti. The town was a staging post in the trans-Saharan trade and for caravans transporting slabs of salt from the mines at Idjil.

https://www.wikiwand.com/en/Ouadane

[Ghana's continuing development is next best illustrated by al-Sharīshī, writing from al-Andalus some fifty years after al-Idrisī and stating that "Islam has spread among its inhabitants and there are schools there. Many merchants from the Maghrib are to be found there . . . They buy there slaves for concubinage and stay with the emir, who receives them most hospitably."This suggests a maturation of Islam in Ghana, with the merchant community making]

With al-'Umarī (d. 749/1349) there is a definitive shift in focus from Takrur and Ghana to Mali. Possibly due to Takrur's resilience from the fifth/eleventh through the seventh/thirteenth centuries, as well as its pilgrims traveling to the central Islamic lands, Mali becomes known as Takrur in Egypt and the Ḥijāz by al-'Umarī's time, although Takrur and Ghana are provinces within the Malian empire by then.

Incorporated into Mali's imperial structure but honored as an ancient and storied polity, Ghana has yet to experience a definitive end by the time Ibn Khaldūn (d.

808/1406) writes his Muqaddima, having garnered information from one Shaykh ‘Uthmān, “the faqīh of the people of Ghāna” who visited Cairo in 796/1394.

Ibn Khaldūn presents both Ghana and Takrur as ongoing concerns, though both are subject to Mali.He then says: Later the authority of the people of Ghāna waned and their prestige declined as that of the veiled people, their neighbours on the north next to the land of the Berbers grew . . . These extended their domination over the Sūdān, and pillaged, imposed tribute (itāwāt) and poll-tax (jizya) and converted many of them to Islam. Then the authority of the rulers of Ghāna dwindled away and they were overcome by the Sūsū, a neighbouring people of the Sūdān, who subjugated and absorbed them

Ibn Khaldūn’s narrative of decline does not represent a single event, but rather collapses Ghana’s initial “waning” in relation to Almoravid-related developments in the latter quarter of the fifth/eleventh century, which was then followed by a subsequent “dwindling” at the hands of the Susu in the early seventh/thirteenth century.

Ta’rīkh al-fattāsh also attempts to memorialize Ghana’s final chapter, speaking of the “dying out of the rule of Kayama’a,” and how “God destroyed their power, and the most vile took authority over the greatest of their people.”

SUSU TRIBE

The Susu people are a Mande ethnic group living primarily in Guinea and Northwestern Sierra Leone, particularly in Kambia District…

https://medium.com/@abebaebrima/susu-tribe-780e1f6cfdd9

Though the text may have Ghana's ancien regime in mind, reference to the "most vile" refers to the Susu, not Muslim reformers. The ta'rīkh compresses centuries of Ghana's continuation under Mali, but as an eleventh/seventeenth-century document it has the advantage of describing a process that had finally run its course.

Even so, the best indication of Ghana's endpoint may be the archaeological record concerning Kumbi Saleh's central mosque, abandoned at some point in the ninth/fifteenth century.

The Wagadu Empire

The fabulous African empire of gold https://historyofyesterday.com/wagadu-empire-4c2dce46ccc0

Early Ghana experienced a long existence and efflorescence, both as an independent kingdom from 300 CE to the end of the fifth/eleventh century, and as a reform Muslim state until the first third of the seventh/thirteenth, after which it lingered on in tributary form for another two hundred years.

[The Wagadu Chronicles]

The Wagadu Chronicles. 1,048 likes · 1 talking about this. Now on Kickstarter! -> https://www.kickstarter.com/projects/wagadu/the-wagadu-chronicles An Afrofantasy videogame and Dungeons & Dragons 5E...

https://m.facebook.com/thewagaduchronicles/

That is more than a millennium. There was no single regime in early Ghana, but rather three (including life under Mali), and it was toward the end of its run as a non-Muslim, independent state that it became contested terrain for the claims of a militant, reformist version of Islam that spread through the whole of the Senegal valley and beyond.

Text courtesy of the book African Dominion by Micheal Gomez.

Related Links

What was the role of the Almoravids in the decline of Ghana?
What are the causes of the rise and fall of the Ghana Empire?
How did the Ghana Empire rise?
How is Kwame Nkrumah looked at in Ghana today?
What caused the Ghana Empire to fall?
What were the factors that contributed to the rise of the Kingdom of Ghana?
Is it very poor in Ghana?
How has Ghana managed to remain self reliant?
What is life like in Ghana?
How powerful is Ghana in Africa?

What are four factors that led to the rise of the Ghana Empire and 4 reasons for its decline?

What is Ghana famous for?
Why does Ghana hate Nigeria?

Why was the ancient kingdom of Ghana about where Mali is now, and the current country of Ghana is in a different location?

What empire did Benin first have contact with, Ghana, Mali, or Songhai?

Si la France n'a aucun intérêt au Mali, pourquoi TotalEnergies y envoie-t-il du matériel par voie maritime ?

Paul Henri Doumenc 6 march

Philippe Fabre, Commerce International - Asie du Sud-Est, Chine, Inde, Japon

Répondu 24 févr.

Une entreprise privée comme total fait ce qu'elle veut. Un pays comme le Mali peut décider de signer des contrats avec les entreprises étrangères qu'il veut pour exploiter ses ressources. Si une entreprise française est en danger, c'est normal que la France intervienne pour protéger ses ressortissants. Mais ce n'est pas un intérêt français en tant que tel. Le seul intérêt, c'est que ces entreprises créent de l'emploi, et rapportent de l'argent par les impôts. Donc tout ce qu'une entreprise privée peut gagner votre argent c'est bon pour le pays.

Ce qui est sous-jacent dans cette question, c'est: pourquoi Total continue-t-il d'exploiter le pétrole malien, en bonne entreprise colonialiste? Les maliens ne devraient-ils pas mettre un terme a cette exploitation française des vastes ressources maliennes? C'est bien ça, cher Nicolas Huvet?

Il n'y a pas de pétrole au Mali! C'était un mythe il y a une dizaine d'années. C'est faux!

Total n'est plus français, mais international. C'est une entreprise privée qui s'investit ou elle veut, ou elle peut… Pas sur ordre du gouvernement de la France.

Elle vend de l'essence aux automobilistes maliens. S'ils n'en veulent plus, qu'ils le disent, Total partira.

Il y a un autre mythe, celui de la France qui veut rester au Mali pour en exploiter les richesses, en bon colonialiste. Il n'y a rien a exploiter!

Le Mali exporte principalement de l'or (en baisse constante), du coton et des céréales. Rien de tout ça va en France! Le Mali exporte pour $10 millions par an en France, presque rien! Insect Resins ($2,4M), Aircraft Parts ($1,8M), Tropical Fruits ($1,7M). Pendant les 24 dernières années, l'export du Mali vers la France a augmenté de 1,4% par an! Pas d'uranium, pas d'or, pas de pétrole… Autant dire, que dalle! Les maliens accuse la France de piller les richesses du Mali… Il n'y en a pas!

Quelles entreprises françaises sont au Mali et en exploitent les richesses? Aucune! Le Mali est un pays dangereux, enclin au communisme et a l'islamisme qui est un des plus pauvres au monde!

Oui, le Mali ne présente aucun intérêt pour la France et ses entreprises. On aurait du en partir, il y a au moins 5 ans.

Questions similaires

Les Maliens manifestants dans les rues pour réclamer le départ des soldats français, alors pourquoi la France insiste-t-elle tant pour se maintenir au Mali si elle n'est pas la bienvenue ?

Pourquoi les Maliens applaudissent-ils la menace de Macron de retirer les troupes françaises du Mali ? Ne veulent-ils plus de la France ?

Les maliens affirment chaque fois que la France vise ses intérêts, qu'elle exploite ses ressources. Quelles entreprises françaises sont présentes au Mali ? Quelles matières premières exploitent-elles ?

Pourquoi y a-t-il une si grande différence au niveau du salaire entre les Etats-Unis et la France ?

Si un Français part vivre aux USA qu'aura-t-il le plus de mal à trouver au supermarché par rapport à la France ?

Comment peut-on expliquer l'attitude insolente de la France vis-à-vis des nations souveraines d'Afrique en l'occurrence le Mali ?

Pourquoi n'aimez-vous pas la France ?
Pourquoi parle-t-on si peu du génocide au Rwanda ?
Payons-nous trop d'impôts en France ?

La Turquie vient-elle de battre la France au Mali avec la chute d'Ibrahim Boubacar Keïta ?

Pourquoi l’armée Française refuse de quitter le Mali malgré tous les avertissements et les mises en garde de son gouvernement face à l’arrivée des Russes ?

Normalement retirer ses troupes du Mali et d’Afrique devrait être un soulagement pour la France, alors pourquoi insiste-t-elle pour rester là où elle dit qu’elle ne gagne rien ?

Pourquoi la France a-t-elle du mal à regarder son histoire coloniale en face ?

Francois Hollande révèle sur BFMTV le 17 février 2022 que la France n’a aucun intérêt économique au Mali. Qu’est-ce qu’il en est exactement ?

Sommes-nous à un point de non-retour entre la France et le Mali ?

Response similaires

Les Maliens manifestants dans les rues pour réclamer le départ des soldats français, alors pourquoi la France insiste-t-elle tant pour se maintenir au Mali si elle n’est pas la bienvenue ?

Frédéric Cagliari, précédent lieu : Aix-les-Bains Mis à jour le 25 janv. 2021

C'est pas les maliens mais des maliens, c'est le cas à Bamako mais à Gao ou Tombouctou c'est pas du tout le même son de cloche. Les militaires putchistes ont bien pris soin de préciser tout de suite que Barkhane n'était en aucun cas remis en cause. On va rappeler également que le Mali a demandé à la France d'être là et d'y rester après que l'union africaine l'ait lâchement abandonné. On va rappeler un fait basique, l'armée malienne est incapable de rentrer dans Kidal.

Maintenant y'a toute une bande de débiles qui pensent pouvoir discuter avec les djihadistes, ben regardez au Burkina Faso et au Nigeria ce que ça a donné…La France est totalement instrumentalisée par les partis politiques dans différents pays si bien qu'on peut dire n'importe quoi, c'était d'ailleurs une des raisons qui avaient conduit Macron à convoquer les présidents du g5 Sahel à Pau histoire de leur passer une branlée bien méritée, car certains ministres se sont permis des sorties hallucinantes, ou les chefs d'État ont laissé dire des saloperies sans prendre la défense de leur allié, ce qui revient à cautionner. Ça a été mal pris, mais à mon sens c'est un coup de pied au cul salutaire à la diplomatie africaine, on est pas là bas pour servir de paillasson à tous les frustrés des régimes africains.

Je m'éclate à écouter Macron en Afrique, il met les pieds dans le plat à chaque fois, quand il avait dit en substance: le CFA j'en ai rien à cirer vous en faites ce que vous voulez, il a même été critiqué par les anti CFA…

Je répondrai donc au questionneur que si le Mali voulait plus de la France elle aurait déjà dégagé. Je lui rappellerai juste tous les maliens qui manifestaient à Paris pour que la France vole au secours du Mali, ou la représentante de l'ONU qui résumait la lettre au conseil de sécurité par ces mots:" France please help us!".

Questions similaires

Quand les blancs ont mis en esclavage les noirs, n'ont-ils pas remarqué que nous étions les mêmes ? Ou est-ce qu'ils faisaient semblant de ne pas le voir ?

Si les rôles avaient été inversés, les noirs auraient-ils fait aux blancs ce que les blancs ont fait aux noirs dans le passé (esclavage, ségrégation, etc.) ?

Comment réagiriez-vous si vous découvriez que les ancêtres de quelqu'un étaient des propriétaires d'esclaves mais que cette personne ne veuille pas présenter d'excuses en leur nom parce qu'elle estime n'avoir rien à voir avec eux ?

Pourquoi les Africains (Noirs) sont-ils devenus le peuple le plus opprimé de l'histoire ? Pourquoi les non-noirs les considéraient-ils inférieurs depuis la nuit des temps ?

Qui croire entre les historiens qui disent que les esclaves ont été achetés à des Noirs en Afrique ou les historiens noirs qui disent que ces Noirs ont été placés là par les colonisateurs pour vendre des esclaves ?

Pourquoi tout le monde s'entête à parler de la colonisation et de l'esclavage des blancs alors qu'en réalité, elle provient principalement et le plus "sanguinairement" parlant du monde arabo-musulman ?

Comment se fait-il que les personnes blanches adoptent souvent des enfants noirs sans gêne, mais que la plupart des personnes noires ne se voient absolument pas adopter des enfants blancs ?

Pourquoi les Africains ont-ils aidé à vendre d'autres Africains pour l'esclavage ?

Que faisaient les marchands d'esclaves s'ils mettaient leurs esclaves enceintes ?

Pensez-vous qu'un jour les Africains se vengeront pour la traite des noirs ?

Comment les blancs pourraient-ils un jour comprendre la souffrance d'avoir été esclaves ?

Pourquoi les Africains subsahariens traitent-ils les Nord-africains comme s'ils n'étaient pas africains ?

Pourquoi ce sont les noirs qui ont été mis en esclavage ?
Que pensent les Africains des Blancs qui se considèrent comme Africains ?

Pourquoi et comment les occidentaux ont-ils réussi à esclavager l'humanité ou l'homme noir ?

Réponse similaire
La présence militaire française au Mali a-t-elle un intérêt économique ? Si oui, quel est-il ?

Philippe Merl, Master Histoire Mis à jour le 27 déc. 2020

Non pas vraiment, ou du moins pas directement. Il y a bien quelques investissements au Mali mais rien qui ne soit stratégique. Pour une opération à 600 millions d'euros par ans, il faudrait avoir de sacré retours sur investissement. Or, le Mali, si il possède des ressources, n'est pas en mesure de les exploiter en raison des conflits. Si il y a un intérêt économique, il est plutôt dans la stabilité de la région qui permettra de développer et dynamiser les échanges avec d'autres pays, construire des infrastructures etc…

Mais alors, pourquoi intervient-on ? Comme toutes les questions de géopolitique, il n'y a pas de réponse facile. Mais essayons de cadrer un peu. Déjà, la France intervient au titre de 2 mandats: la Résolution 2085 du Conseil de sécurité des Nations unies — Wikipédia et les accords de défense signé avec le Mali. C'est le président Malien qui a demandé l'intervention de la France en 2013, devant l'effondrement des FAMa[1] .

Pourquoi la France a-t-elle répondu favorablement ?

On peut citer plusieurs raisons:

Le prestige/la crédibilité. En effet, étant un ancien territoire de l'empire français, le Mali conserve des liens forts avec la France, et l'absence d'intervention fragiliserai le prestige de la France tant dans les liens qu'elle entretient que dans la crédibilité qu'elle possède dans la région.

L'influence. Même si c'est une raison secondaire, intervenir permet à la France de conserver son influence dans le pays au détriment de nouveaux acteurs qui voudraient influencer le Mali. Cette influence est à la fois économique, comme je le disais dans le début de ma réponse, mais aussi politique et sociale. Sociale, car la France possède la plus grande communauté malienne d'Europe et resterai une destination d'exil en cas d'effondrement du Mali, ce qui n'arrangerai personne. Politique, car la France joue de ses relations pour aligner un bloc de pays sur des positions communes, par exemple à l'ONU.

Lutte contre le terrorisme. Pas vraiment besoin d'expliquer je pense, l'Europe cherchant à se prémunir de la création d'États islamiques qui pourraient collecter des fonds très importants et menacer les pays européens à travers des attentats ou les pays voisins[2] . Et à se prémunir d'une crise migratoire qui serait mal accueilli en France.

Aide aux populations. Parce que, après les traumatisme de la Guerre du Biafra ou du Massacre de Srebrenica, les pays européens ont du mal à appliquer la stricte neutralité, surtout si ces pays demandent de l'aide.

Voila les principales raisons de l'intervention, pas vraiment motivé par des intérêts économiques mais bien plutôt par des intérêts géostratégiques.

Je vous laisse quelques liens pour comprendre quels sont les buts militaires de l'opération et ses limites.

Notes de bas de page

Opération Barkhane : "Il s'agit de maintenir la violence à un niveau tolérable", explique Michel Goya Coup d'État au Mali : Barkhane à l'épreuve ?

Barkhane-Une analyse de l'engagement militaire français au Sahel http://www.geoculture.org/medias/files/barkhane.pdf

http://www.obsarm.org/obsarm/transfert_armes/accords/cooperationhtm

Opération Barkhane: pourquoi la France est-elle déployée au Mali ?

Questions similaires

Les Maliens manifestants dans les rues pour réclamer le départ des soldats français, alors pourquoi la France insiste-t-elle tant pour se maintenir au Mali si elle n'est pas la bienvenue ?

Pourquoi les Maliens applaudissent-ils la menace de Macron de retirer les troupes françaises du Mali ? Ne veulent-ils plus de la France ?

Les maliens affirment chaque fois que la France vise ses intérêts, qu'elle exploite ses ressources. Quelles entreprises françaises sont présentes au Mali ? Quelles matières premières exploitent-elles ?

Pourquoi y a-t-il une si grande différence au niveau du salaire entre les Etats-Unis et la France ?

Si un Français part vivre aux USA qu'aura-t-il le plus de mal à trouver au supermarché par rapport à la France ?

Comment peut-on expliquer l'attitude insolente de la France vis-à-vis des nations souveraines d'Afrique en l'occurrence le Mali ?

Pourquoi n'aimez-vous pas la France ?
Pourquoi parle-t-on si peu du génocide au Rwanda ?
Payons-nous trop d'impôts en France ?

La Turquie vient-elle de battre la France au Mali avec la chute d'Ibrahim Boubacar Keïta ?

Pourquoi l'armée Française refuse de quitter le Mali malgré tous les avertissements et les mises en garde de son gouvernement face à l'arrivée des Russes ?

Normalement retirer ses troupes du Mali et d'Afrique devrait être un soulagement pour la France, alors pourquoi insiste-t-elle pour rester là où elle dit qu'elle ne gagne rien ?

Pourquoi la France a-t-elle du mal à regarder son histoire coloniale en face ?

Francois Hollande révèle sur BFMTV le 17 février 2022 que la France n'a aucun intérêt économique au Mali. Qu'est-ce qu'il en est exactement ?

Sommes-nous à un point de non-retour entre la France et le Mali ?

Les stars d'Afrique

Des "soldats blancs" accusés de crimes au Mali

Publication par David-GDK 2 h

Selon Human Rights Watch, les victimes, des commerçants, chefs de villages, responsables religieux et même des enfants ont été exécutés. Le rapport relaye plusieurs témoignages de rescapés qui ont confirmé ces meurtres.

La plupart ont été commis dans le centre du Mali, une région en proie à des violences de toutes sorte depuis 2015, explique Human Rights Watch.

Certains Maliens interrogés ont déclaré aux enquêteurs avoir été torturés dans le camp militaire de Diabaly par des soldats maliens et quelques soldats blancs, qui parlaient une langue qu'ils n'avaient jamais entendue.

Des témoignages font été d'exécutions des prisonniers blessés, des plus faibles ou des plus âgés.

Trois autres témoins ont décrit une opération militaire malienne, le 14 janvier dans le village de Feto, dans le cercle de Niono, région de Ségou, où des militaires ont tué cinq civils. L'un des témoins parle de soldats blancs qui "portaient des uniformes différents de ceux de l'armée malienne. Je n'ai pas reconnu la langue qu'ils parlaient. Ce n'était pas le français."

Contacté, Human Right Watch n'a pas souhaité en dire plus et s'en tient aux témoignages de ces victimes, en attendant de recouper l'information.

La question est aujourd’hui de savoir si ces militaires qui parlaient une langue inconnue des témoins étaient des soldats russes et s’ils appartiennent au groupe Wagner présent dans le pays.

Ce groupe paramilitaire a déjà été mis en cause par les Nations unies pour des meurtres commis sur les populations civiles en Centrafrique, en dépit des déclarations du gouvernement qui nie la présence des mercenaires russes sur son territoire.

Response similaire: By Roger Politis · 23 mars

Quand je pense aux grands discours d’africains violemment anti-Français ici-même sur Quora, qui nous expliquaient que les russes n’avaient jamais eu de colonies et qu’eux, ils n’exploiteraient pas l’Afrique, je me marre! On leur a prédit qu’ils regretteraient les français, ça n’a pas tardé!

Aucun message
Communiquez avec d'autres utilisateurs sur Quora en commençant unenouvelle conversation.

La France aurait-elle les moyens de mener de nos jours une opération telle que celle de Kolwezi en 1978?

Pierre Jamain

Former Gérant de S.A.R.L. (Labo photo professionnel) at Labo photo professionnel (1970–2000)1y

Tout à fait comme l'a montré une opération avec 120 paras largués au Mali en septembre 2018, il s'agirait de paras du 2e REP et de GCP qui ont sauté de 2 C-160 et d'un A400M. Lors de cette opération, une compagnie du GTD-I était déployée au sol. Objectif: "Marquer les esprits" selon l'EMA qui a confirmé les éléments du mamouth et précisé que les Transall avaient largué 80 soldats et l'Atlas 40 autres. Soit 120.

Response similaire
By Sebastien Dorat, précédent lieu : Paris, France Mis à jour le 6 sept. 2021

Les opérations que mène la France au Mali et dans la bande sahelo-saharienne depuis 6 ans montrent aisément que oui et tres largement. Kolwezi n'était qu'une intervention conventionnelle de protection de ressortissants de faible intensité et ponctuelle qui n'a engagé que 650 hommes du 2 REP et une cinquantaine d'hommes des forces spéciales (deux équipes du 13 RDP et une équipe du 1er RPIMa, qui ont discrètement sauté sur Kolwezi deux jours avant le 2 REP pour préparer le terrain). Les opérations de protection de ressortissants français menées par la Force Licorne en Côte d'Ivoire étaient déjà largement comparables à celles de Kolwezi sur une durée plus longue même si en l'occurrence ces opérations n'ont pas nécessité de saut opérationnel de troupes aéroportées conventionnelles.

L'opération Serval et depuis quelques années Barkhane sont des opérations de plus haute intensité contre des groupes armés terroristes qui mobilisent plus de 4,600 personnels de divers corps et regiments depuis des années (5,100 depuis l'année dernière) ainsi que des moyens aériens beaucoup plus importants que ceux mobilisés pour Kolwezi. Donc un engagement des forces françaises beaucoup plus important que Kolwezi, incluant aussi plus de sauts opérationnels effectués par les troupes aéroportées françaises ces dernières années. Et ces sauts opérationnels n'ont pas été effectués que par le 2 REP qui n'est qu'un régiment parachutiste parmi d'autres à avoir sauté en partie sur le Mali.

Questions similaires

Que répondre à quelqu'un qui prétend que la France a pillé l'Afrique avec ses opérations militaires au Sahel?

Le général Thierry Burkhard, chef des armées françaises s'est montré très évasif lorsqu'un journaliste lui a demandé l'état des stocks d'arme de la France. Quest-ce que cela augure-t-il?

Comment les djihadistes au Sahel trouvent-ils autant d'armes et de moyens logistique pour résister à l'armée française depuis plusieurs années ? Sont-ils les marionnettes qui servent les intérêts d'un État occidental tapis dans l'ombre ?

Supposons que l'armée française décide de "prendre le contrôle" de la France. Qu'est-ce qui l'en empêcherait ?

Pensez-vous que la France a les capacités de retrouver une puissante armée sur la scène internationale (de plusieurs millions d'hommes) ?

Est-ce que l'armée française est en situation, a les moyens, d'accomplir un putsch sur le territoire national ?

De plus en plus d'articles font savoir que l'armée française se préparerait à une guerre dite de haute intensité, anticipée à une décennie. Est-ce vrai ? Si oui, contre quel(s) pays ?

Pourquoi l'armée française persiste de rester au MALI ?

Après 7 années d'opération Barkhane et un résultat en demi-teinte, qu'est ce qui justifie encore la coûteuse intervention de la France dans le Sahel ?

Supportez-vous les missions militaires de la France en Afrique, oui, non pourquoi ?

Let's Discuss Ancient and Medieval Africa

Is Mansa Musa considered the greatest ruler of the Ghana, Mali, and Songhai empires that ever lived?

Answered by Alton Allen 12h

Famous is more like it, greatest I'd give that honor to Sundjata Keita the founder , he had to defeat a powerful king of a powerful empire Sumanguru Kante, "king of Susu," to whom Mali had become subject and hammer out a constitution, all while doing this in a drought.

Related Links

Is Thurmose lll considered the greatest ruler of Ancient Egypt that ever lived?

Did anyone from Egypt, East Africa, or other parts of Africa or Asia go to University in Timbuktu?

Did Ancient Kush make ships like the Ancient Egyptians did when they went to Punt?
Did Great Zimbabwe have any interactions with the Zulus?

When the Meroitic Empire collapsed, was it destroyed by the kingdom of Aksum or just gradually disappeared? And what happened to the inhabitants?

When did India and China start trading with Africa?
Are there any descendants of the kingdoms of Kanem-Bornu and Songhai living today?

Did anyone from the East African City States go to Mauritius, Madagascar, the Comoros islands, or the Seychelles islands?

Were the Ancient Egyptians aware of the Congo River and the Zambezi River?
Was Ivan Van Sertima right about the Ancient Kushites sailing to Mexico?

What are some notable universities that existed in west Africa beside the University of Timbuktu?

What should I do with the tonnes of Africa related books, including UNESCO's General History of Africa Volumes in PDF format? I got them from online. Is it illegal to keep them? I'd like to share here and on other African history walls.

Where did the Songhai originate from?
Did the Ancient Minoans know about the Sahara Desert?

Les stars d'Afrique
Mali : Berlin réclame la fin de la coopération avec les Russes, fin de non-recevoir de Bamako

· Suivre Publication par David-GDK 4 h

La ministre allemande des Affaires étrangères Annalena Baerbock a La ministre allemande des Affaires étrangères Annalena Baerbock a affirmé mercredi à Bamako l'impossibilité pour les Européens de coopérer avec les forces maliennes tant que celles-ci collaboraient avec les Russes, s'attirant une fin de non-recevoir de son homologue.

Après une rencontre avec le chef du gouvernement de transition malien, le colonel Assimi Goïta, Mme Baerbock a exprimé devant des journalistes la crainte de "crimes de guerre massifs" contre les populations civiles maliennes, suivant un "schéma" observé selon elle de la part des forces russes en Syrie ou en Ukraine.

Son homologue malien Abdoulaye Diop a demandé en sa présence qu'on se garde de tout "amalgame" et affirmé la nécessité de respecter les choix de son pays.

"Le Mali souhaite travailler avec l'ensemble de ses partenaires, y compris l'Allemagne, la Russie, la Chine, les Etats-Unis", a-t-il déclaré.

Mme Baerbock a invoqué la décision annoncée lundi par l'Union européenne "d'arrêter" ses missions de formation et d'entraînement de l'armée et de la garde nationale au Mali. Quelque 300 soldats allemands participent à la Mission de formation de l'Union européenne (EUTM).

"Nous ne pouvons poursuivre la coopération sans démarcation d'avec les forces russes", a-t-elle dit, rapportant un "appel pressant" qu'elle avait adressé en ce sens à ses interlocuteurs. Le président russe Vladimir "Poutine mène contre l'Ukraine une grave guerre d'agression contraire aux droits des peuples", a-t-elle enchaîné.

"Il ne faut pas confondre les choses", a répondu M. Diop. "Le Mali n'est pas impliqué par rapport à ce qui se passe" en Ukraine, "mais je crois qu'il ne faut pas faire trop d'amalgame à ce niveau: la situation du Mali est la situation du Mali et nous souhaitons que chaque partenaire du Mali aussi respecte les choix du Mali", a-t-il insisté.

Le Mali, plongé depuis 2012 dans une crise sécuritaire profonde malgré le soutien de forces étrangères et gouverné depuis 2020 par des militaires arrivés au pouvoir par la force, s'est détourné ces derniers mois de la France et de ses partenaires européens, et tourné vers la Russie.

Français et Européens dénoncent le recours fait selon eux par Bamako aux services de la société de sécurité privée russe Wagner, aux agissements controversés. La junte dément et parle de coopération d'Etat à Etat avec la Russie.

"Le Mali n'abrite pas de société de sécurité privée comme cela est allégué ici et là. Le Mali a une coopération d'Etat à Etat avec la Russie et une coopération de long terme", a répété M. Diop.

Que pensez-vous de la nouvelle tentative de coup d'état au Mali ?

ALASSANE · Suivre Diplômé de Université Polytechnique des Hauts-de-France 1 an Les récents troubles au Mali ont commencé par un coup d'État en 2012, mené par des soldats opposés à ce qu'ils considéraient comme une faible réponse à une insurrection séparatiste croissante des rebelles touaregs dans le nord du pays. Les insurgés étaient armés d'armes provenant de la Libye voisine après la guerre civile de 2011 dans ce pays.

Ibrahim Boubacar Keita a été élu en 2013 avec pour mandat de poursuivre les pourparlers de paix. Un accord a été signé en 2015 avec certains groupes rebelles, accordant une plus grande autonomie au nord peu peuplé, mais les experts critiquent l'accord pour ne pas inclure d'autres factions armées. Il s'agit notamment de groupes extrémistes islamistes - certains liés à al-Qaïda et à l'État islamique autoproclamé - qui se sont emparés du chaos de l'insurrection touareg pour lancer leurs propres attaques, ainsi que des milices locales qui se sont formées pour se défendre dans la détérioration de la sécurité.

La réélection de Keita en 2018, lors d'un vote marqué par un faible taux de participation et des allégations de fraude, a exacerbé la frustration croissante du public, en particulier des jeunes du pays. Près de la moitié des Maliens vivent dans une extrême pauvreté et beaucoup n'ont pas accès à l'éducation ni à l'emploi. L'économie, dépendante de l'extraction de l'or du coton et de l'agriculture, est vulnérable aux fluctuations des prix des produits de base et à la désertification croissante. Les groupes armés ont puisé dans un profond ressentiment à l’égard de l’État à l’égard de la corruption endémique et des violations des droits de l’homme par les forces de sécurité.

La France, l’ex dirigeant colonial du Mali a été plongé profondément dans le conflit. Le gouvernement malien a demandé l'aide de Paris en 2013, et une mission que l'armée française attendait initialement de ne durer que quelques semaines est maintenant devenue ce que certains analystes appellent la «guerre pour toujours» de la France. L'opération Barkhane, comme on l'appelle l'effort de lutte contre le terrorisme, coûte plus d'un milliard de dollars par an, implique près de cinq mille soldats français et a entraîné la mort de quarante-quatre Français depuis 2013. Les manifestants ont également exprimé leur frustration face à l'absence de progrès étrangers les forces ont fait, certains appelant au retrait du personnel français.

Les Nations Unies. Une mission de maintien de la paix des Nations Unies au Mali, connue sous le nom de MINUSMA, a également débuté en 2013. Alors que la France et les pays africains se sont concentrés sur la lutte contre le terrorisme, les plus de 15 000 hommes en uniforme de la MINUSMA sont censés respecter le cadre de l'accord de paix de 2015 et reconstruire les forces de sécurité du gouvernement. et protéger les civils.

Le G5 Sahel, un partenariat régional créé en 2014 et comprenant cinq mille soldats du Burkina Faso, du Tchad, du Mali, de la Mauritanie et du Niger, est également un contributeur. En outre, l'Union africaine s'est engagée à déployer plusieurs milliers de soldats.

Washington s'est impliqué, bien que son rôle soit relativement limité. Sous le président Donald J.Trump, le Pentagone aurait proposé de retirer les troupes américaines en Afrique de l'Ouest, d'annuler sa contribution annuelle de 45 millions de dollars à l'opération Barkhane et de fermer sa base militaire au Niger voisin - tout cela fait partie du virage du Pentagone vers la concentration sur les menaces de la Chine. et la Russie. Au début de 2020, cependant, l'administration a nommé son tout premier envoyé spécial au Sahel, J. Peter Pham, qui s'est opposé à tout «changement extra-constitutionnel de gouvernement» au Mali.

Les groupes djihadistes se sont non seulement répandus au Mali, mais aussi au Burkina Faso et au Niger voisins, et la criminalité transnationale, y compris le trafic de drogue, les enlèvements et le trafic de migrants, est devenue une source de revenus lucrative pour les militants. Les victimes du terrorisme dans les trois pays ont été multipliées par cinq depuis 2016, atteignant quatre mille morts en 2019. Et en avril 2020, les Nations Unies ont averti que le Burkina Faso connaissait la crise de déplacement à la croissance la plus rapide au monde, avec près de 840000 civils chassés chez eux au cours de l'année et demie précédente.

Les 15 pays de la CEDEAO et l'influent imam Mahmoud Dicko ont lancé un compromis pour permettre le Président IBK de rester au pouvoir, mais les manifestants l'ont largement rejeté. L'opposition a continué de manifester pour exiger l'éviction de Keita.

Les troubles, quant à eux, portent encore plus atteinte à la légitimité du gouvernement, qui a eu du mal à maintenir le contrôle militaire sur de larges pans du pays. Sans fin claire à la violence en vue, la France a récemment intensifié ses efforts et demandé des engagements de troupes auprès des alliés européens, et le G5 Sahel a également discuté de l'augmentation de son engagement de troupes.

Cette nouvelle tentative de coup d'état n'est que le fruit d'une longue histoire dont nous espérons…un jour… une fin

Vive la Paix en Afrique et partout dans le Monde

Réponse similaire
Pourquoi ne retirons-nous pas nos troupes du Mali ?

User4309, brevet 15 ans (2020)
Répondu 5 janv. 2021

Il y a plusieurs raison qui font que l'opération barkhane reste en place.

La sécurité du Sahel car comme nous l'avons vus en 2012, lorsque les Touaregs rebelles, des troupes de Khadafi et des djihadistes ont pris le contrôle de la moitié nord du Mali et ont tenté d'envahir la moitié sud. Les armées locales ne sont pas réellement suffisante pour les contrer.

La lutte contre le terrorisme et le trafic de drogue en effet le besoin d'argent qu'à engendrer le djihad leur a fait penser à trafiquer d'importante quantités de drogues.
La protection des gisements d'uranium qui sont très importants pour l'industrie française car on leur en achète beaucoup.

Questions similaires

Après le coup d'État au Mali, y a-t-il un risque de « contagion » aux pays voisins ?

Le Président Macron menace de se retirer au Mali en cas de dérive radical. Au Mali, nous ne comprenons pas ce discours. Quel est le lien entre le coup d'état fait par les militaires et l'islamisme ?

Sommes-nous à un point de non-retour entre la France et le Mali ?

Les Maliens manifestants dans les rues pour réclamer le départ des soldats français, alors pourquoi la France insiste-t-elle tant pour se maintenir au Mali si elle n’est pas la bienvenue ?

Quelles forces reste-t-il au Mali après le retrait français ?

Comment le Mali pourrait-il échapper à la crise dont il fait face ?

Suite aux récents événements, la France devrait-elle se retirer du Mali ? Quels sont les intérêts de cette présence militaire ?

Que pensez-vous de l’expulsion de l’ambassadeur Français au Mali ?

Quelle est la position de la France sur le coup d'état au Mali ? Ses intérêts sont-ils menacés ?

La démission du président IBK au Mali signifie-t-elle forcément un départ des forces françaises en position dans le pays ?

AfriStar
Mali : Paris contre-attaque après une vidéo d'un charnier à Gossi

· Suivre Publication par 11 h

Alors que la lutte d'influence fait désormais rage sur les réseaux sociaux entre Paris et Moscou au sujet du Mali, l'armée française a dévoilé des images de drone militaire pour contrer dit elle, une information, qui l'accuse d'avoir laissé un charnier derrière elle à Gossi.

Dans cette vidéo, on voit des hommes en tenues militaires enterrer des corps près de la base de Gossi dans le nord du Mali, une base rétrocédée aux Forces armées maliennes depuis mardi. Les autorités maliennes n'ont pas commenté cette vidéo de l'armée française encore moins, la première vidéo relayée sur les réseaux sociaux à l'origine de la contre-attaque de Paris.

Ces événements interviennent alors que la force barkhane a décidé de se redéployer dans les autres pays du Sahel en quittant toutes ses bases occupées depuis quelques années dans le nord du Mali. Depuis cette annonce, Paris et son allié le Mali sont en guerre ouverte, le premier accuse régulièrement le second de s'être attaché les services d'un groupe de mercenaire russe Wagner proche du Kremlin ce que Bamako dément.

Le Mali ne cherche que sa dignité et sa souveraineté dans le monde actuel, mais pourquoi certains pays européens ne veulent pas comprendre ça plus particulièrement la France ?

Daniel Guemy Anciennement Électronicien. lun.

C'est surtout la junte au pouvoir qui cherche quelque chose, sûrement pas la dignité, et si la France n'était pas intervenue, Bamako aurait été prise par les djihadistes et nous n'aurions même pas cette discussion, les forces Françaises parties les maliens et le groupe russe wagner devront composer avec l'EI et l'on verra à ce moment là s'ils se débrouillent mieux que la dernière fois.

Mali : Reporters sans frontières vient au secours de RFI et France 24

David-GDK Connaissances : Anglais ven.

L'organisation de défense des médias Reporters sans frontières a annoncé jeudi la création de sites "miroirs" pour permettre à RFI et France 24 de rester accessibles en ligne au Mali, où les autorités de la transition maliennes ont interdit définitivement les chaînes françaises.

L'ONU "Profondément Consternée" Par La Suspension Définitive De RFI Et De France 24 Au Mali

David-GDK Connaissances : Anglais ven.

’ONU s’est dit profondément consterné pour la suspension définitive de RFI et de France 24 par l’autorité de transition du Mali. Elle demande à la junte de lever cette interdiction et s’en inquiète.” actions qui limitent la liberté de la presse et la liberté d’expression “.

Radio France Internationale (RFI) et France 24, qui font partie du groupe Frances Médias Monde, n’émettent plus au Mali depuis le 17 mars 2022. Cette suspension est devenue permanente le 27 avril, par décision de la Haute Autorité de la Communication du Mali. Ce vendredi 29 avril, l’ONU a réagi à cette décision en déclarant « profondément consterné “.

” Nous appelons l’autorité militaire de transition du Mali à lever cette interdiction et à permettre aux médias indépendants d’opérer librement dans le pays. a déclaré Ravina Shamdasani, porte-parole du Haut-Commissariat aux droits de l’homme (HCDH), lors d’un briefing de l’ONU à Genève. ” Ces suspensions ne sont que les dernières d’une série d’actions qui limitent la liberté de la presse et la liberté d’expression au Mali et surviennent à un moment où plus de surveillance, et non moins, est nécessaire. “, elle a ajouté.

Les services de Michelle Bachelet, l’ancienne présidente chilienne qui dirige le HCDH depuis 2018, continuent de documenter les allégations de droit international humanitaire et de violations des droits humains dans de nombreuses régions du Mali. ” Nous restons très préoccupés par les mesures prises pour limiter davantage un espace civique déjà très restreint. », indiquent ils.

Mali : l’ONU condamne la coupure de RFI et de France 24

La décision de sanctionner RFI et France 24 intervient alors que la junte malienne accuse l’armée française dans ” espionnage ” c’est de ” subversion » après la diffusion par l’état-major français de vidéos filmées par un drone à proximité d’une base du centre du Mali récemment restituée par la France. Dans le contexte de la crise diplomatique avec Bamako, Paris a annoncé en février le retrait de ses militaires déployés au Mali. Cette opération devrait être achevée cet été.

Let’s Discuss Ancient and Medieval Africa
Pourquoi la France veut-elle forcer les Maliens à écouter et à suivre leurs médias néo-coloniaux de désinformation, malgré leur bannissement ?

Kanda · Suivre Travaille chez Artistes numériques 27 avr.

Réponse originale : Pourquoi la France veut forcer les Maliens a écouter et suivre leur medias de des-information néo-coloniales, malgré qu'ils son bannit ?

Mali: comment continuer à écouter RFI et à regarder France 24? rfi.my/8GLU.t

Translate Tweet

Voici ce que je ne comprend pas

Let’s Discuss Ancient and Medieval Africa

Alton Allen Knowledgeable In African and African Diaspora History: Apr 26

More often than not it is Timbuktu and surrounding areas of Mali that get all the love and attention with regards to literature during tropical west Africas golden age, the following throw some light on the city states of Kano,complied by one of their own this is a break down and explaintion, its going to be long, so I suggest book mark it, for further reference , I will add appropriate art to breakup the text.

See discussions, stats, and author profiles for this publication at: https://www.researchgate.net/publication/274508274 Historical Metaphors in the Kano Chronicle

Kano city wall, Kano - Photos - Hotels.ng Places

Find stories behind famous monuments like Kano city wall here.

https://hotels.ng/places/monument/448-kano-city-wall

Watch Tubali: Hausa Architecture in Northern Nigeria | Prime Video

https://www.amazon.com/Tubali-Hausa-Architecture-Northern-Nigeria/dp/B004ZUFK1K

HISTORICAL METAPHORS IN THE KANO CHRONICLE

Murray Last UniversityCollege London

"There is a story that the Prophet appeared to Abdu Rahaman in a dream and said to him, 'Get up and go west and establish Islam.' Abdu Rahaman got up and took a handful of the soil of Medina and put it in a cloth and brought it to Hausaland. Whenever he came to a town, he took a handful of the soil of the country and put it beside that of Medina. If they did not correspond, he passed that town. So he journeyed until he came to Kano. And when he compared the soil of Kano with Medina soil they resembled one another and became as one soil. So he said, 'this is the country that I saw in my dream.'" [xx]

Kano City wall, one of the most spectacular heritage of Africa south of the Sahara

I wish in this paper to treat the Kano Chronicle (henceforth KC) as a document of intellectual history, and not just as a mine from which to dig valuable 'facts.' The aspect of intellectual history I will discuss is the meaning of historical metaphors -or analogical geography - of which the above story is a rather special example. But first I will try and show that the first 'edition' of KC was completed in the mid-seventeenth century and was compiled from materials which had been developed since the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries - thus locating the intellectual history in a specific period. The texts used are discussed in the appendix.

The history of the Hausa city-states (1100-1804 AD): Politics, Trade and Architecture of an African mercantile culture during west-Africa's age of empire.

Posted in r/Nigeria by u/rhaplordontwitter • 8 points and 0 comments

https://www.reddit.com/r/Nigeria/comments/qjnlki/the_history_of_the_hausa_citystates_11001804_ad/

In writing this essay I am treading where many have trod before. Abdullahi Smith's work on the Sayfawa and on the origin of the Hausa states and Mervyn Hiskett's publications on the Kano Chronicle and on the Song of Bagauda are the most notable examples.1 But I am sure most historians of Hausaland have 'had to go' at KC, though fewer seem to have published their conclusions.2 To underline the tentativeness of my argument I have laid out the paper in the form of nine hypotheses; and as textual criticism is apt to be a very convoluted topic (particularly without the original alongside) I shall simply indicate in brackets the reigns of the Kano kings by the Roman numerals used by Palmer, whose text is much the most readily available.3

II

Hypothesis 1: that KC was not composed reign-by-reign but was put together by one man, at one time, and subsequently brought up to date, several reigns at a time.

The evidence for this lies in the inter-connections between reigns (e.g. between [xxvi/xxvii]; [xxviii/xxix];[xxxvi/xxxvii]) which betray hindsight. Against this are the few contradictions or improbabilities where 'Homer nods', but they seem to me to be rare enough almost to be evidence for, rather than against, single authorship. One warning, however: Palmer tends to translate away the inconsistencies.

Hypothesis 2: that the main edition of KC can be dated to the mid-seventeenth century. The internal evidence for this is the sentence "for a reason I forget"[xxx] ca.

Examples Of Hausa Ajami Script

https://www.nairaland.com/2920650/examples-hausa-ajami-script

1649, which surely can only imply the author was writing some ten to twenty years (or more) later. Circumstantial evidence is perhaps the near-total consistency in rulers and reign lengths found in KC, the Song of Bagauda and the Kano kinglist after 1652 [xxxiii]: from that period on, there seems to have been a single authoritative source. But against this, there is the absence of any explicit reference to the Asl al-Wangariyin, written in 1651 (indeed KC contradicts the Asl). Generally, however, one can argue that the seventeenth century was a period when historical writing of this rationalist kind was commonplace, particularly in Borno or Timbuktu/Songhai. The context in which KC was compiled would seem then to be the period of the Kororofa invasions: one can speculate on the motives for historical writing in such circumstances.

Hypothesis 3: that KC as composed in the mid-seventeenth century was put together from numerous earlier records which were the product of a sudden growth in historical interest and record-keeping in the sixteenth century. These materials, mainly songs or praise-songs but also oral narrative and written kinglists, reveal themselves in KC by (a) the extreme precision of some of the reign lengths after [xxiii], ca. 1565; (b) mention of Dunki's praise-songs of anyone of any note [xxii] and quotations from several other songs; (c) reference to a Shicr Barbushe ([xiii]("Wakar Barbushe") and a Qissat Amina [xv]; (d) the author himself says he is choosing between traditions (e.g. in [xi] or has a "general belief" (al-mashur) to take into consideration ([iii] and [v]). An extant seventeenth-century example of a typical source is Dan Marina's poem on the Borno victory over the Kororofa. It is from this body of traditions that the other Kano

Kano City Walls, Nigeria

These need to be preserved!

https://bozthx.wordpress.com/2014/03/15/kano-city-walls-nigeria/amp/sources (Song of Bagauda, Kano Kinglist, and Asl) independently drew their data, and which accounts for their variations. The possible 'slip' in the passage from KC [xx] quoted above, where the compiler refers to ‘’Abd al-Rahman (al-Zaiti) instead of c’Abd al-Karim (al-Maghili) may be a product of a rare error in conflation.

Hypothesis 4: that there are four historiographical blocs in KC; (a) the 1650-1930 period, based on contemporary or eye-witness accounts; (b)the c.1550-1650 period, for which there is very considerable consistency and precision in the record, due to sources based on living memory of songs and possibly written records; (c) the c. 1450-1550 period, for which the accuracy is patchy, the sources being oral tradition and possibly gleanings from the historical tradition of neighboring states (e.g. Borno); (d) the pre- 1450 period: the accounts here are almost wholly legendary, reflecting as much contemporary (that is, seventeenth-century) interests and reality as any historical hearsay; it is the product of seventeenth-century Kano rationalism working on folklore collected both in various quarters of the city and from country people.

John Howard Sanden - American Portrait Painter

he scene is the vast parade ground before the Palace of the Emir in Kano, Nigeria. The tall archway in the center of the picture is the main entrance to the palace, an immense adobe structure dating back more than five hundred years. To the left are the dome and minarets of the Great Mosque of Kano (the people of Kano State are Muslim, as is most of the population in northern Nigeria). Ambassador Fernandez, having just received the turban of office from the hands of the Emir, now rides his richly ornamented mount across the parade ground, surrounded by spear-carrying horsemen representing many of the equestrian societies of Kano. The tradition of horsemanship, and the elaborate costumes of the riders and decorations for the mounts, derive, virtually unchanged, from medieval times. Even the musical instruments are of immense antiquity. The Fulani are an ethnic group spread over many countries, predominantly in West Africa, but found also in Central Africa and Sudanese North Africa. The Fulani are the largest group of nomadic people on Earth.

http://www.johnhowardsanden.com/portraits-africa/africa04-parade.htm

This division does not, of course, mean that the data in blocs (a) and (b) are a wholly full or accurate record of their periods. The evidence for this schema lies in part in the degree of consistency among the three main sources for names of kings and the lengths of their reigns. Regarding the post-1650 period there is no dispute. Hiskett, however, remarks on the vast discrepancies for the earlier period, but he is, I think, mistaken: for the period between Dauda ([xv], c. 1430) and Soyaki [xxxiii]

1652) the Song of Bagauda and the Kinglist agree, perhaps fortuitously, on the numbers of years elapsed (272 years 10 months for SB; 272 years 6 months for the KL), compared with KC's 238 years. Although the individual allocation of years varies widely, the order of the rulers is less erratic, while the total number of rulers is fairly consistent: SB has 14 (Rumfa is an obvious misplacement), KL has 16 and the KC has 19 (but three rulers included in KC are not in the others because they ruled only one day, seven days and about forty-eight days). Halfway through the Dauda - Soyaki series, reigns start being given in months and days (e.g. [xxiii] Yakufu, c. 1565), and it seems likely that whoever was keeping such details was also able to draw on relatively accurate data for the previous 100 years (i.e. their grand- or great-grandparents' generation), but no uniform, authoritative text had emerged.

For the pre-Dauda ([xv], c. 1430) period, the reign lengths are dictated, I suggest, by poetic or conventional requirements. The totals of years elapsed are inconsistent (KC, 452; SB, 580; KL, 329), though the total number of rulers is identical, being seventeen in all three lists. The names of the rulers are common, more or less, to all three lists, but the discrepancies occur most frequently in the middle, between the Bagauda cycle [i-iv] and the Yaji cycle [xi-xiii]. Such a mid-range discrepancy is a common feature in genealogies generally, and should not surprise us.

An example of the patterning of reign lengths in KC is Cycle A [i-iii], 66, 33, 40 years; followed by the twins' [iv] 7 and 17 months; Cycle B [v-vii] 60, 55, and 44 years; followed by [viii/ix], 17 and 37 years and then [x/xi] 7 and 37 years. Although the pattern does not precisely match my analysis of the contents, the common outline will I think be recognizable.

Interest lies therefore in how this early bloc of histories came to be composed, and what consequences this has for the data purportedly contained in it. If it was a seventeenth-century rationalization of sixteenth-century materials plus contemporary seventeenth-century oral tradition collected by the author, then one should expect to find anachronisms.

Hypothesis 5: that the early (pre-1450) parts of KC are potentially full of sixteenth- or seventeenth-century anachronisms. The most obvious of these are:

(i) Bindiga ([xv], c. 1430, coming from Borno. Later on in KC, bindiga are said to have come first in c. 1735 ([xxxviii]; but, note, this passage is not in East's text) but they are first put into use, says KC, by a Kano king [xli] c.1770.

African Armored Infantry

Hey everyone. I just had a question about how common it was for infantrymen in Pre-Colonial Sub-Saharan Africa to wear body armor. Now I know that in the Sahelian states it was quite common for cavalrymen to wear various forms of armour, from padded cloth to chain mail and even iron cuirasses...

https://forums.taleworlds.com/index.php?threads/african-armored-infantry.386625/

(ii) Horses are first mentioned in Yaji's reign ([xi], c. 1350) but the author of KC says he rejected this tradition, presumably because he had been using the cavalry titles Madawaki and Dawaki as early as Bagauda's heir [ii]. But it is only after Yaji [xi] that horses and their gear became commonplace but crucial to campaigns, and I suggest that the occurrences of the terms Madawaki ([ii] and [ix]) and Dawaki (only in [ii]) are anachronistic. The titles Galadima and Makama may also be anachronisms in the very early period: Galadima is mentioned in [ii] (along with Dawaki), and in [vii] but, like Madawaki, became important (with more than one holder) only in [xi] and later. Makama occurs again in [i] and [ix] (like [vii], in which the Galadima appears, it is part of the Red Snake saga; see below). Only Barde and Jarumai (scarcely a "title") do not fail this test.

Could ranches solve Nigeria's deadly herder-farmer conflict? - BBC News

The government plans to set up ranches across the country to end land conflict, will it work?

https://www.bbc.com/news/world-africa-44680657.amp

(iii) Cattle are first mentioned in [iii] in connection with sacrifice at the start of the wall- building; they recur again in the same context in Nazaki's extension of the wall c. 1620 [xxviii]. Fulani cattle are first specifically mentioned in the next reign [xxix]; by ([xxxvii], c. 1710) a number of Sarkin Fulani are mentioned. The sacred object 'Dirki' which was first used c. 1600 [xxvii] was originally covered in goats' skins, according to a marginal note in the text, and only later re-covered in cow hide. Incidentally, while goats, chickens, and dogs are all mentioned, sheep are not (Palmer's "black sheep" on p. 119 is of course an anglicism); nor are donkeys mentioned except to carry the disgraced Madawaki to a death of shame. Camels are specifically mentioned as first coming c. 1440 [xvi]. It is tempting to date the common use, if not the introduction, of a number of animals to the fifteenth century, which in the record stands out as the period of 'internationalism' in Hausa land, with Wangarawa, Fulani, Azbinawa, and Bornawa all passing through.

As important, perhaps, as anachronisms is the failure to mention certain items, some of which have already been mentioned. States outside Kano are another obvious example: the first mentioned is Kororofa ([xi], [xiii]), then Zakzak ([xiii], [xv]), Nupe [xv], Borno, Asben, Gwanja [xvi], and Katsina not until [xix]. Only the Wangarawa occur early [xi], but I suspect this is an anachronism (as does the Asl; see below).

The term "Hausa" is first used also in [xv] (and not in [iii] or [xiii], pace Palmer), but "Hausa Seven" is used only in the eighteenth-century [xxxvii]; but Celebi had heard it used in the 1670s). Silver and gold also are mentioned only late, c. 1650 [xxix] and [xxxiv], despite the Akan gold trade; kola from Nupe, however, occurs earlier ([xv]; but see below) - unless both gold and kola are included in the ambiguous "all the things of the west" [xv].

Another striking aspect of the early legends is the absence of any mention of slavery until the reign of Tsamiya [ix], where it is seemingly the equivalent of jizya, and the slaves are refused. A slave of the king is mentioned in [xi], then later in [xi] slaves are mentioned as tribute; thereafter they are common. Unless jizya is meant throughout to mean slaves (jizya is used, for example, in [v] for tributaries, and again in [vi] in contrast to a local farmers' land tax of one-eighth), it appears that the early traditions generally refrained from reading back into the past the conditions of the fifteenth or sixteenth centuries.

Finally, apart from a brief reference in the introduction, one would never have known from KC (or, for that matter, the Song of Bagauda) that Dalla hill had been an iron smelting site in the seventh century.4 The early traditions, then, are not derived from smiths.

Hypothesis 6: that it is possible to 'unpack' the Kano Chronicle and sort its contents into their component traditions.

First, let me recapitulate: I am assuming that the seventeenth-century author of KC had before him a number of traditions, all referring to this early period; that his achievement was to put them in some chronological order, balance out the rival versions, and eliminate the contradictions. His assumptions were that there was a progressive development in state power around the Dalla hill area; strangers (particularly Muslim strangers) were important factors at certain specific turning-points; peaceful reigns tended to alternate with expansionist ones; and nine was the conventional symbolic number for Kano (nine miles, nine years, nine heroes, nine councillors). The principal stories making up the early sections are:

Pre-Birni Tales

The "song of Barbushe." The people in this story are black giants, elephant 1.

hunters using sticks or rope, and living on rocky outcrops. There is no political chief, but a shrine which coordinates ritual activities over a wide area; and the local 'big man,' while not the priest, gains some authority from his control of the shrine. Barbushe is the 'big man;' the priest is Mai Tsumburbura, the grove is called Kagua (possibly a copyist's error for gwinki?). The spirit is Tsumburbura (which may be a form of the Hausa tsumbura meaning stunted or uncookable, both appropriate meanings for a spirit today; otherwise the possibilities for emending that word are legion - e.g. a form of Dan bori, DanbaBare; Jan bori, etc.). The sacred tree in the grove is called Shamus, which surely is a corruption of the Hausa tsamiya. Barbushe, I am told, is still used as a name, though if one is searching for emendations, I suppose baFarisi, the horseman/ Persian of Berber legends, is a remote possibility.

The Mazauda cycle. This is clearly an alternative pre-Birni story, with a different shrine as well as a different economy. Here the shrine is called Randaya (possibly a complicated corruption of a Hausa version which described the shrine's distinctive oracular technique of a quivering tree: (could, for example iska to rau da ice become iskanta Randaya ce?). The sacred place is called Matsama/Mazama, possibly a corruption of matsafa, the usual term for a magical place of the sort described. The shrine in the Mazauda cycle is centered on a thicket of trees (kurmi) around a dark pool (bakin ruwa) in the river Jakara; that is to say, it is not a grove (gwinki), but another of the common stopping places on the spirit highways that criss-cross Hausaland.

1.

The shrine, however, is largely irrelevant to the Mazauda cycle, which is concerned not with giant hunters on a rock, but with occupational groups and their founding ancestors. The story of some of their descendants is carried on into later parts of KC, and I suggest it represents the urban, non-Muslim version of pre-Islamic Kano, possibly emanating from the Bakin Ruwa ward in the seventeenth century.

The contradiction between the two stories is masked by some geographical information sandwiched in between. But the confusion is obvious: Bagauda is meant to have met Mazauda and his ten companion craftsmen in situ, but a few lines earlier he has already met the remaining five of Barbushe's thirteen companions, while a few lines later it transpires that Bagauda himself never actually came to Dalla. This illustrates a technique used by the author of KC: he explicitly mentions his varying sources, then puts them in sequence, or alternates between them.

The Mazauda cycle is not mentioned in the Song of Bagauda. Indeed, the first part of Song seems to be closer to the Barbushe song (it is possible that the text in the Song should read Barbushe and not Bagauda after the first of the two heroes called Bagauda in the Song).

Both my "song of Barbushe" and the Song of Bagauda celebrate farmer-hunters; it is tempting to guess that the author of KC got some of his data from the Maguzawa who visited the city in the mid-seventeenth century [xxxiv] when KC was being compiled. That is to say, it is the rural notion of early Kano, in contrast to the urban Mazauda.

Birni legends

3.

him come to Dalla, the other (the wanderings of Bagauda) making him stay at Sheme. The author uses the latter version for his reign-by-reign account, having Gijimasu actually settling by Dalla, but he inadvertently uses the former version, I think, in [iii] when he says the rulers of Gano, Dab and Debbi preceded Bagoda here by nine years.

Bagauda came from the northwest, where his name (in Katsinanci) is baGabda, or the "Copt" (compare the account in Muhammad Bello's Infaq al-maisur where the Gobirawa are called Qibt or Copts). He is presumably part of the Egyptian/Berber cycle of stories, from which Bayajidda also derives. But Bagauda's other name is given as Dauda, and in this role he builds a city called Talutawa, appropriately enough as Talut is of course Saul. One wonders if, in the original source, Bagauda's opponents were not Jalut/Goliath. Finally, Bagauda's mother is given as Kaunasa (in the Kano Kinglist that is the name of the ruler after Bagauda), an echo perhaps of the title of the Meroitic queen Candace.

Whoever was Bagauda's successor, the name given in KC - Warisi - simply means Heir, al-Warith; there is no indication now if the heir was a woman. The Heir's successor is Gijimasu - is there some play here on the word Magaji (= 'heir')? In Gijimasu's reign, the author of KC is again confronted with a variant tradition. He seemingly prefers to credit Gijimasu with building the walls of Kano, thus making them contemporaneous with the building of Rano's walls, though this is contrary both to "general belief" and, presumably, to the traditions of eastern Kano on which he is also drawing.

In short, I suggest we have a Bagauda cycle which can be paired with Mazauda, its other half in a rhyming doublet (cf. doublets Gawata/Nawata in KC, or Talut/Jalut, Harut/Marut, Yajuj/Majuj in Arabic accounts). For in the Bagauda cycle, we have Mazauda again, offering his daughter to Gijimasu, but being opposed in this by Bugazau, the brewer among his companion craftsmen; and Gijimasu has settled in Gazarawa, the title to which - Sarkin Gazarawa - is later to be given to Mazauda's grandson.

Bagauda. The story of Bagauda, the author of KC says, has two versions, one making Yusa. "General belief," says KC, credits the establishment of the city to Yusa (i.e.

4.

Joshua), the next ruler of importance ([v], the fourth are the twins Nawata/Gawata or Noto/Goto, who ruled seven and seventeen months respectively, and seem to act as a hinge between the two cycles). Joshua, deprived of the wall-building story, is credited only with establishing Kano rule in western Kano, and with the introduction of shields (if these are originally garkuwa, perhaps Yusa's alternative name Tsaraki is in for some obscure way the reason for this attribution). In switching the wall building to Gijimasu, the author of KC has also left Yusa's hero, Tuji, stranded without "his" own gate.

Since the role given in Joshua by commentators on Sura xviii, verse 59 of the Qu'ran and by al-Tabari makes him as important as Moses in preaching to the Egyptians or in fighting giants, I would hazard the guess that the original story of Yusa in Kano was more important than that allotted to him by KC. Perhaps the Barka mentioned under Bagauda's reign was the great royal Moabite town that Joshua conquered in Tabari's account; Barka is located in KC in northwestern

Kano and would fit the "western" aspect of the Joshua story - in contrast to the more easterly concerns of the Mazauda cycle. In this case one might link the Joshua story with the "song of Barbushe" (whose forebears, remember, were giants, as were Joshua's opponents; and against whose famous sticks shields would prove an invaluable invention).

Red Spitting Cobra (Naja Pallida)

A small cobra reaching a maximum length of around 1.5 meters. The Red Spitting Cobra is active at night, hiding during the day.

https://www.africansnakebiteinstitute.com/snake/african-snakes-red-spitting-cobra/

5. The Heirs of Mazauda. Their story, along with the Red Snake saga, is the connecting thread through several of the following reigns. It is not very dramatic. Mazauda and his ten partners in the division of labor negotiate with the newcomers. In the first generation Mazauda offers marriage - his daughter to Bagauda's grandson - but is stopped by Bugazau the Brewer. In the second generation, they intend to revolt (the author of KC in his usual rational manner implies that the revolt was due to, or was followed by, the king's imposition of a new tax). Mazauda's son Samagi, the Brewer's son, the Youthleader's son and the Drummer's son are all executed for their part in the plot [vi]. However, two reigns later [viii], Samagi reappears alive and well, but this reign reads like mere space-filling designed to keep up the theme of newcomer/aboriginal relations. It is not until the next reign that we meet the third and last generation in the Mazauda cycle: as Makare, Mazauda's grandson, along with the Brewer's grandson and the Nightwatchman's grandson are the only aboriginals to remain behind after the rout of the Red Snake, it is they who are given Kano titles. Makare becomes Sarkin Gazarzawa, in the area to the north of the Jakara. But two reigns later he or his successor is blinded because he defiles the new mosque. He then becomes chief of the Blind (possibly it is 'his' settlement that is the village of the blind located in the north of the city in Clapperton's map of Kano. If so, did this part of the cycle derive from that quarter in the seventeenth century?). The Nightwatchman's grandson became the Sarkin Kurmi, the Kurmi area being by the sixteenth century the market area whose officials were known as Kurmawa, though their quarter now is south of the palace. (Given that kurma = 'deaf,' one can imagine the jokes about aboriginals being either blind or deaf!) Finally, the Brewer's grandson was made Sarkin Tsibiri, a title which weaves in the Red Snake saga. He reappears in [xiii], providing the magic (the red snake again) which enables the ruler to conquer Zaria. In the seventeenth century it was presumably Bakin Ruwa ward which supplied this tradition.

6. The Red Snake saga. No snakes are mentioned before [vi] but, while the magic in this saga seems to me to be clearly distinct from Barbushe's Tsumburbura, some aspects do appear to have been incorporated into the account of Mazauda's Randaya. Though the ruler in whose reign the magic Tsibiri first came was called Tsamiya (i.e. Tsumburbura's tree) or Randamasu (cf. the spirit Randaya), the author of KC says it was a new kind of magic. Tsibiri ("island") would indeed be a suitable term for magic power in the black pool of the Jakara, a power which renders the waters of Dankwoi unfit for warriors to drink; and the association of snakes with water (Gajimare; rainbows) and with wells (e.g.

at Daura) fits well. Indeed Dankwoi, where the Red Snake priest fled after being driven from Kano, is on the road to Daura. But though the snake is associated with water, it is also found once in a tree [xiii], where it is also assimilated to Barbushe's magic. But I suspect that tsibiri is really a later emendation of a derivative from the Arabic Tibb, tsibbu, or even from sihr (compare the Arabic-derived tsafi, Mande safi, and Tiv tsav). The new magic is similar to Muslim power in having the ability to blind people ([vii], [xi]). Snake cults are of course widespread in west Africa but one such, celebrated in Mande stories and therefore perhaps known in Kano, is the (albeit black) Bida serpent of the Soninke state of Wagadu. Given that the Bida snake is a standard 'totem' of Maguzawa, it is possible that the new Red Snake magic was a Wangarawa import.

Machina Emirate where snakes pay homage to the king

Machina Emirate where snakes pay homage to the king. Snakes and other reptiles are considered to be dangerous to human beings, but in https://neptuneprime.com.ng/2022/03/machina-emirate-where-snakes-pay-homage-to-the-king/

machina - Opera News Nigeria

Whatever its origins, the red snake saga embodies the politics of confrontation

(especially in [ix]), in contrast to the Mazauda cycle's politics of accommodation. It is, however, the tsibiri/red snake that is revived for use against Zaria [xiii] and, more significantly, against the Kororofa attacks in the late seventeenth century [xxxvi] - the time when KC was compiled. The account in KC therefore vouchsafes historically the efficacy of the tsibiri/red snake and its subordination as a 'tamed' import within the Muslim Kano state. By this time, Barbushe's tsamiya tree was under al-Maghili's mosque, and Mazauda's pool was a market. Only dirki and chokana ([xxvii]--is chokana a version of sakina, the Ark of the Covenant -- cf Qu'ran, sura ii, verse 249?), and tsibiri and bundu [xxxvi] remained for use then.

7. The siege of Santolo [xi]. This siege is the culmination of a conflict that is first mentioned in [iii] and has a decidedly heroic dimension. Suitably enough, after Bagauda/David and Tsaraki/ Joshua, this first Muslim 'giant-slayer' is called Ali/Yaji. Equally suitable, perhaps, is that it is the first occasion horses appear in KC. Though the author recognizes this, he rejects the tradition. For him, it is the Wangarawa Muslims who bring victory, an interpretation the Asl al-Wangariyin, which puts their arrival a century later, does not support. Interestingly, twin horns (qarnain) are found in the Santolo shrine, an echo perhaps of Alexander the Great as Dhu '1-qarnain and/or the Soninke kings of Ghana who claimed descent from him in their sagas.

5 Most Powerful African Queens From History

To take you through what the African history holds on women, here goes our list of 5 Most Powerful African Queens From ancient history https://answersafrica.com/5-powerful-african-queens-history.html

The other sagas of expansion are alluded to briefly. This same Ali/Yaji takes on the Kororofa, Kanajeji [xiii] takes on Zaria; there is the Qissat Amina [xv], Zaria's epic of expansion in the same vein, and the stories of Galadima Daudu [xvi]. Of rather a different kind are the stories of visitors such as the Bornu Dagaci (linked historically with the Mai cUthman b. Daud), and the series on famous scholars which in KC appear in the sequence Wangarawa/ Filani/al-Maghili, but the order and dating of the first two are open to question.

Hausa people – Wikipedia
https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Hausa_people

Lastly, there are some minor narratives in which the theme is emigration. Maguzawa are mentioned as smelters but not smiths early in the Mazauda cycle, but recur again in [x] as leaving the city and in [xii] as being forced to leave their hill at Fangai, west of Gano. They are mentioned again only in [xxxiv], when summoned to the capital to perform for the ruler. These reigns [x] and [xii] are curious also in echoing perhaps the Cain/Abel story: Zamnagawa [x] kills his brother; the story is concerned both about the corpse's disposal and about the woman whom the killer wants. Why the Maguzawa episodes are slotted into this story eludes me. A similar episodic story occurs over the non-Muslim Katukawa, possibly from Gaya but who settle eventually at Godia ([xxii],[xxv], [xxvii], [xxxi]; cf. Baba of Karo, 97). The emigration of Gwandara, another famous Hausa-speaking, non-Muslim group settled in southern Zaria but claiming a Kano origin, is not, however, mentioned in KC, unless they are part of the dispersion from eastern Kano.

To sum up: as I have reconstructed it, we are left with three major themes. First, the Barbushe-Yusa (Joshua) saga, emphasizing a rural past and associated possibly more with western Kano. Second, the Mazauda-Bagauda (David) cycle, with its 'Coptic' links, located more in eastern Kano but essentially urban and craft-oriented. Third, the coming of Red Snake/Tsibiri, and the coming of Islam/Ali, both perhaps linked with Wangarawa and drawing on memories of Santolo and the early use of cavalry. I suggest that these three should not necessarily be put into a chronological sequence; rather, they represent the coeval traditions of three or four groups with different statuses in the political economy of sixteenth- or seventeenth-century Kano. It was an act of genius on the part of the seventeenth-century author of KC to weld them into a coherent and plausible whole. What, then, is the alternative to his account? One is that Dalla had not gradually grown in power but had been a place of settlement with an independent political and ritual system since 'time immemorial.' But there is still another possible alternative.

Hypothesis 7: that instead of scanning these various sagas about dutsen Dalla, we should look elsewhere for the political protohistory of the area that came to be known as Kano. One obvious candidate as a precursor of Dalla is Santolo. Its position as the leading most populous town and ritual center of the area, the "key to the south," is vouchsafed by the Kano Chronicle ([iii], [xi]): It is an isolated inselberg of rock (unlike Dalla), with a grove on its summit and a lot of early potsherds, but smaller than Kufena or Turunku. The farmland around is obviously fertile, with the prosperous town of Tsakuwa nearby. Let me be speculative and assume that dutsen Dalla was for long merely an outlying place within Santolo's (or some other's) sphere of influence. Dalla's iron ore, along with that of the ridge to the north, is of very high grade and convenient for Santolo, being closer than the Shira ironstones. Dalla was of more ritual significance than any of the places to the north of it [ii], no doubt in part because of its iron but also perhaps because of its association with Santolo. But places further down the valley - Gano with its rock, Debbi, Dab - were perhaps of equal or greater significance ([iii], [xi]) within the Santolo system. Then why was Dalla able to take over from Santolo its primacy in the area? The parallels with Turunku's replacement by Zaria and with Durbi takusheye's by Katsina are obvious. In Kano's case the shift came more through conquest than through migration - or so that is the way it has been recounted. It may be a case of an alliance on the periphery, having access to new ideas and technology (horses) and striking at the center. Whatever the reason, I doubt that the Wangarawa were responsible for the shift; rather they will have come to Dalla because it was already an important town. Had they, or the changes associated with them, come a century earlier (say, mid-fourteenth century) Birnin Kano would now have been around, not Dalla, but Santolo (or some other rock): but in that case would KC have looked so very different from what it is now? As to how the communities at Dalla, or indeed at Santolo, came into being, we simply do not know. But I question the wisdom of searching KC or the Maguzawa for an answer.5

Hypothesis 8: that instead of dismissing these early sagas, we should treat KC as a document of intellectual history for sixteenth-and seventeenth-century Kano. The dominant intellectual problem of the sixteenth century was the proper relationship between Muslim and non-Muslim. Since al-Maghili's visit to Kano at the end of the fifteenth century, Islam had become officially the religion of the state, and the Emir now had explicit rules to follow. Equally, it is clear that Kano was far from being wholly Muslim - that much can be inferred from al-Maghili's and al-Suyuti's writings. The traditions which the seventeenth-century author of KC is using arose out of this intellectual climate, and reflect the arguments by which a solution was found to the question of who were dhimmis and how were they to be treated in a way that was legally correct. The solution lay in the use of historical metaphors or analogical geography; just as the soil of Kano was identical in structure to the soil of Medina, so there were similarities in social structure. Thus one non-Muslim category, living as farmers in the countryside but associated ritually as part-time smiths and smelters with fire, were labelled Maguzawa or Magians; another category, living in the city, were labelled Rumawa or Byzantines ("because they were a large group"

- KC, introduction); a third were Gazarawa or Khazars, on the north. There was nothing very unusual about this. Berbers, as al-Maghili will have known, were sometimes categorized (or insulted) as Majus: it was obviously a favored label for dhimmis who were, linguistically, 'one of us.' Although in Hausaland it has now been extended to any 'pagan,' its original usage appears limited to non-Muslim Hausa in Kano and Katsina only.

Others had already made use of similar metaphors: the rulers of Borno were Sayfawa from Yaman, so that Kisra was (later?) a logical choice for Kororofa to use; in the same way, the Yoruba were to use Nimrod, the Bariba to use Kisra (again). In the Mande system, the Soninke were Persians, while the ruling Soninke Sisse dynasty of Ghana were descendants of Alexander the Great: in opposition to them, the Keita dynasty of Mali took Bilal, the muezzin of the Prophet, as their ancestor. I suggest that such distinguished descent is not merely a matter of prestige or songwriter's hyperbole or antiquarian interest, but also a matter of politico-legal geography. If this is correct, then these historical metaphors must be read as a series, not necessarily totally consistent but at least as a chain of interlocking pairs.They express a relationship, conveying through this historical idiom sometimes subordination,sometimes an equal, 'joking' partnership, sometimes simply a juxtaposition.

In such an analogy originated, I think, the discussion which Muhammad Bello quotes in Infaq al-maisur over whether Taurudh were Jews or Christians, and the tradition that the Fulani were at least partly to be considered Arabs, by descent from Uqba b. Nafic. Within such a system, with its links into the Tuareg/Berber analogical chain, the Gobirawa fit well as 'Copts.' Other groups have been given names like Samudawa or Adawa (from Ad and Thamud: see Suras VII, 63-77; IX, 52-71; XXVI, 123-159; XXVII, 46-54; LIV, 18-31), and it is tempting to think that some prophetic names like Salihawa, Musawa, Adamawa, and Isawa may have been taken, not because they were followers of Salih et al (let alone worshipped these prophets), but because they were categorized as "believers from before the Prophet Muhammad," that is, metaphorically as good Muslims since before the jihad or some other relevant period of reform. Similarly the appearance of Dawud/David, Yusha/Joshua, and Ali/Yaji, along with some corroborative detail, in the narratives of KC establishes the newcomers' credentials vis-a-vis the original inhabitants, not only then but now. The system of ideas, in short, is a coherent whole.

Since few of us are as erudite as the Muslim scholars of the past, we may miss some of their subtler allusions. While I doubt that "Shamus" could be one of their emendations to create a parallel to Solomon's Chemosh (I Kings 11.7; I have yet to find an Arabic version), and perhaps "Chokana" is not really an allusion to sakina or the Ark of the Covenant, yet it is just such erudition that we can expect. For it was, after all, a mallam in a footnote to Ibn Fartua's Kanem Wars who first compared "Mune" with the Ark of Saul. Palmer may indeed be quoting a mallam friend of his when he says that Qibt is not Copt but a reference to a Palestinian people.6 Certainly Palmer went to mallams to learn, and I suspect that some of his better ideas are really theirs, not his; in which case we must treat Palmer's works as part of the mallams' tradition - if somewhat adulterated.

Analogical geography was not, of course, a substitute for ordinary geography, but even as a metaphorical tool it seems to have lost its importance, perhaps as early as the seventeenth century. Ahmad Baba used a geometrical geography to resolve the same problem as to who were and who were not Muslims, and his method was followed by Shaikh cUthman and Muhammad Bello. Similarly, genealogical geography lost its significance. But the decline in the value of these particular tools-for-thought should not blind us to their original meaning.

For if historical metaphors were indeed the idiom for establishing politico-legal relationships, then "Maguzawa" becomes a category into which diverse peoples can be put, since they are not an 'ethnic group' and are not in origin necessarily even Hausa-speaking. Secondly, their role as "Maguzawa" is solely a product of their subordination within a Muslim state - they could not, by definition, exist as "Maguzawa" before the Muslim state. Third, their political system, too, was a product of their place within the state: their chiefs were appointed by the state and did not arise spontaneously (though this is not to deny the role of elders, 'big men,' or specialists). Finally, Maguzawa religion was in a certain limited sense a product of the state: as dhimmis, "Maguzawa" were non-Muslim, yet shared a common Hausa culture; and this common culture has altered as a whole over the centuries. For example, KC does not mention or describe bori spirit possession (nor does it mention masks or other disguises, unless possibly the account in [ix] describes one). If bori as spirit possession is a relatively late introduction and was not associated in the sixteenth or seventeenth centuries with very early Hausa practice, then the development of Maguzawa expertise in the possession cult is also an artifact of their being dhimmi: for such non-Islamic practice is by definition their province.

Economically, a similar argument might apply. Being protected as dhimmis but paying a special tax, they had to be extra-productive farmers. They were also forced to live dispersedly, though their move from the city may have been voluntary. They became, in effect, the frontiersmen, pioneers of new farmlands, and hunters, later sharing not only their forests with pastoralists, but also much by way of culture and economy. "Maguzawa" became a category into which individuals or groups could drop, and from which others could move out and up.

The other historical metaphors of this type - Rumawa, Gazarawa - have seemingly long lost any association with a category; "Rumawa," for example, may have come to be thought to refer to North Africans in Kano (as in Timbuktu) [xxii], and "Gazarawa" become simply a place. Consequently, "Maguzawa" as a label has absorbed all those of non- Muslim, dhimmi status and, instead, sub-group labels have come into use within the Maguzawa category. I suggest, then, that to use contemporary Maguzawa practice as evidence for the pre-Islamic Hausa past could be very misleading, even if particular subgroups were singled out as being, in some antiquarian sense, more 'original' than others.

Hypothesis 9: that if we are liable to miss the erudite allusions of scholars, we are also likely to miss their jokes. Since punning, plays on words, and double entendre are the stock in trade of good songwriters and praise singers, we must expect the sources of KC to be full of banter and jokes, which it is all to easy to treat as dour historical fact. I have already suggested that the 'fact' that the two urban pre-Muslim groups are the 'blind' and the 'deaf' is probably a joke. Another joke concerns queen Amina, whose nickname Kura, (hyena), should make us look out for banter. Surely we are meant to enjoy the observation that it was the legendary queen who should be the first in Hausaland to have eunuchs; and not only this, but that she was also sent goro, a word frequently misread as gwauro or unmarried man. Furthermore, because the words for eunuch and indigo (baba) are virtually identical, could it be that that too is a pun? Who originated the joke (if it is a joke), we do not of course know: maybe it was even a Sarkin Nupe who sent such a present! If the reference to queen Amina in KC is a joke, there is, however, a real-life model for her in the Madaki Auwa, the wife of Rumfa, who as Queen mother dominated Kano in the early sixteenth century ([xxi], [xxii]) and was celebrated in song [xxii]. Obviously I am no expert in seventeenth- century Kano humor, and I am sure I have missed the nuances behind much that has gone into the compilation of KC. I hope others will do better.

III

In the margins to the account of [xxvi] (c. 1580), there is a note dating from the 1880s, which ends with the saying (in East's version) - kome tsaninin jifa a kasa zai fadi; 'Everything comes back to its course,' (p. 43) and indeed it is a common feature of KC to find not just titles but events being repeated in different circumstances. There is obviously a pleasure in observing these 'echoes' of earlier events - a pleasure, I suspect, not unlike that which had made historical metaphors so useful and acceptable a solution to politico-legal problems. By the seventeenth century the metaphors from Middle Eastern geography were no longer necessary; Kano intellectuals could by then take their analogies from their own past. The rationalism so evident in KC is probably part of the same change in intellectual climate; it is in strong contrast to the Daura-Bayajidda saga, with its seven children becoming the seven Hausa states. No mention is made of this saga in KC, though a marginal note to the introduction quotes it from another work, as if to make good what seemed to be an omission. Nor does the Song of Bagauda refer to it. It may not have been extant at the time KC was written in the seventeenth century, but it is equally possible that the author found it irrelevant and unsophisticated compared with the materials he was using for that period. He may have felt similarly about the Asl al-Wangariyin, whose author (naively!) preferred to make his founding ancestor a contemporary of al-Maghili and even have him enter Kano city anachronistically by the Kabuga gate. Perhaps the author of KC had read his Ibn Khaldun! The modernism of the author of KC has not only successfully beguiled us into an uncritical acceptance of his schema, but has, I believe, blinded him to an intellectual aspect of the fifteenth- and sixteenth- century revolution which he otherwise gives in dramatic detail. He is spellbound by the political, economic, and scholastic developments - the newly powerful title-holders; the important role of women as Queen Mothers; the slave estates; the expansion of trade and warfare; the inflow of scholars and books (among them, perhaps, knowledge, if not copies, of al-Tabari's or even al-Mascudi's works). Yet along with all these innovations there also came the historical and geographical metaphor, a conceptual tool (revolutionary in its own way) not only for making sense of the new information now available and flowing in, but also for applying to the increasingly complex relations among peoples within and around Hausaland. (The Hausa 7/Banza 7 dichotomy is simply a later, more specialized and possibly non-Hausa tool for the same purpose.) But with his obvious interest in 'real' geography and topography (see, for example, the introduction), the author accepted the earlier metaphors as mere names without any special meaning or consistency. As so often, a revolution in one's way of thinking is the most elusive of changes. But because he did take these metaphorical names for granted and did not weed them out, we are able, I believe, to use KC to trace the changes in at least this one aspect of Kano's intellectual history.

https://www.researchgate.net/publication/274508274_Historical_Metaphors_in_the_Kano_Chronicle

Questions similaires

Pourquoi l'Algérie ne s'excuse-t-elle pas auprès de la France pour sa tentative ratée de colonisation? Que se serait-il passé si les Sarrasins n'avaient pas été arrêtés à Poitiers?

Les Maliens manifestants dans les rues pour réclamer le départ des soldats français, alors pourquoi la France insiste-t-elle tant pour se maintenir au Mali si elle n'est pas la bienvenue ?

Quel est le meilleur moyen pour les populations africaines de se débarrasser de la France et de son néocolonialisme militaro-monétaire sans l'implication de leurs politiciens corrompus ?

Les maliens affirment chaque fois que la France vise ses intérêts, qu'elle exploite ses ressources. Quelles entreprises françaises sont présentes au Mali ? Quelles matières premières exploitent-elles ?

Les Français coloniaux ont beaucoup investi dans les pays d'Afrique du Nord, agrandissant les villes et des infrastructures. Pourquoi les Français n'ont-ils pas fait de même en Afrique de l'Ouest et dans leurs colonies en Afrique subsaharienne ?

Il me semble que la France et l'Allemagne ont des liens plus forts que les Français et les Britanniques ; la France a-t-elle oublié son histoire ?

Pourquoi les Français se sentent-ils les meilleurs en Europe et essaient de dévaloriser les autres pays dès qu'on les compare à la France ?

Normalement retirer ses troupes du Mali et d'Afrique devrait être un soulagement pour Pourquoi les mercenaires Russes au Mali accusent-ils l'armée française d'exactions?

Badd Herman Je suis parce que nous sommes 23 avr.

Il y a quelques jours, un certain Dia Diarra qui se dit ancien militaire et patriote malien diffuse sur twitter une vidéo montrant un charnier.

Cet homme n'a pas été identifié (L'amée Française soupçonne que ce compte twitter est un faux compte créé par le groupe wagner)

Les mercenaires russes du groupe Wagner ont alors accusé l'armée française d'avoir caché un charnier à 3,6 kilomètres de la base militaire de Gossi.

L'armée Française a alors diffusé des membres du groupes Wagner en train d'enterrer des corps.

il semblerai que ce soit une tentative de décribilisation de l'Armée Française dans la région

Il faut savoir que ce groupe est coutumié du fait, il faut savoir que le "groupe Wagner est fondé en 2014. Il est financé par (ou est la propriété de) l'oligarque russe Evgueni Prigojine, proche du pouvoir russe et à la tête de l'Internet Research Agency (IRA), une usine à propagande et à désinformation sur internet".

Excellente question !

En fait, il y a 2 sujets : le Mali en soi, et le gouvernement "actuel" du Mali, issu d'un coup d'état militaire. Il convient donc de répondre doublement à votre question.

MALI : les troupes françaises et UE vont rester en soutien, comme celles du Tchad (très compétentes). On peut imaginer qu'elles sauront plus ou moins fixer les percées des fous jihadistes, comme contenir toute nouvelle expansion. Les russes de Wagner ont, théoriquement, le même job à faire en parallèle. A mon humble opinion, cette guérilla va durer encore de nombreuses années, et le Mali va demeurer "en guerre" pour longtemps. Reste à savoir comment vont se comporter les tribus Touaregs du Nord. Et comment le(s) gouvernement(s) malien vont arriver à piloter les différentes ethnies sur le sujet de l'islamisme non radical, et donc à Bamako de piloter un pays totalement éclaté.

la junte au pouvoir : c'est aux Maliens de décider. Dans une démocratie, le vote existe. Et doit être entendu. Peut être que Wagner est là avec également un objectif ? les épauler ? … ou faire un coup d'état contre eux ? A mon avis, les manifestations anti-françaises ont été totalement téléguidées, suivez mon regard. Perso, je ne vois pas cette junte, somme toute assez maladroite, durer bien longtemps. Mais qui sait !?

Belle ingratitude en tout cas. Et triste hommage à nos 52 militaires décédés en opération au Mali depuis 7 ans. Paix et respect à eux.

Questions similaires

Les Maliens manifestants dans les rues pour réclamer le départ des soldats français, alors pourquoi la France insiste-t-elle tant pour se maintenir au Mali si elle n’est pas la bienvenue ?

Sans prendre en compte les bombes nucléaires, l’armée française battrait-elle l’armée russe ?

Mali : la junte militaire expulse l'ambassadeur de France, qu'en pensez-vous ?

Pourquoi les combattants tchétchènes qui interviennent en Ukraine aux côtés de l'armée russe sont-ils capables des pires exactions ?

Pourquoi l'armée française fabrique-t-elle ses propres avions au lieu de les acheter ?
Vladimir Poutine est-il parvenu à démoraliser l'armée Russe ?
Poutine a-t-il surestimé l'armée russe ou sous estimé l'armée Ukrainienne ?

La France a une des plus puissante armée du monde. Comment se fait-il que depuis tant d'années ils sont toujours à combattre les terroristes aux sahel ? Est-ce une excuse médiatique pour pouvoir piller l'or et le pétrole du Mali comme en Lybie ?

Combien de temps donnez-vous au gouvernement malien avant de s’effondrer après le départ des forces françaises ?

Pourquoi la France ne fait pas comme la Russie en créant ses propres groupes de mercenaires ?

What armor and weapons did the warriors of the Mali Empire use?

Tyrone Chillifoot

Updated Nov 17, 2019
The malian empire had an army 100,000 strong. Armor typically included Chainmail, gambesons steel curiasses, wooden, reed, and hide sheilds made from elephant, Oxen and Rhino hide weapons were sabers, straight swords,lances, javalins, spears, barbed poisoned and flaming arrows horses would typically wear fabric armor interwoven with chainmail mail metal bress plates infantry were mainly armed with spears and longbows laced with a deadly poison that could kill within 30 minutes.

Why didn't pre-colonial Africans use a sword similar to the Indian urumi if most warriors did not wear armor?

Matt Smith, I've done extensive research on African civilizations
Answered Aug 22, 2021

Because they did wear armor quite extensively Cameroon (West Africa) Crocodile Breastplate

Bamileke Kingdom (West Africa) Iron Breastplate

Kanem Bornu(Central African) Breastplate

Sudanese Chainmail (East Africa)

Related Links

Why didn't African warriors have armor and weapons on par with knights or samurai?

Why didn’t pre-colonial Africans use a sword similar to the Indian urumi if most warriors did not wear armor?

Why didn't the Mali Empire have any road networks nor build out of stone when its predecessor, Ghana Empire, did?

Was Mansa Musa of the Mali Empire a white European?
What was the most important aspect of the Mali Empire?
What armor did the pre colonial warriors of Benin use?

Most of the non-knight warriors in a medieval host didn't wear armor. But as the lord raised in importance and power, didn't he armed his army better? Are there no accounts of battles in which non-knight warriors weared armour (like leather armour)?

Did Ancient Southeast Asian warriors wear armor to battle?
What weapons did Scottish warriors use?
How strong was the Mali Empire?

Did the Mali Empire really have control of 60% of the world's gold?

Jason Almendra · Follow I took "History 101" in college Apr 19

That's likely the case. The last major source of gold was Nubia. The Caliphate expanded and conquered it in the 600s-700s AD. They minted the gold into dinar coins. These were so popular even King Offa of Mercia imitated them. The next major source of gold wouldn't be available until Columbus discovered the New World in 1492.

Offa's dinar c.700 AD.

Mansa Musa's gold could have been used to mint Florentine florins and Venetian ducats c.1300 AD.

Spanish doubloons c.1500 AD.

Related Links

Did the Mali Empire have Arab, European, and Turkish slaves?
Why didn't Ottoman empire control whole Arabian peninsula?
Did Stalin really kill 60 million people?
How did West African empires start, and why did they fall?
How did great empires, e.g. the Mongols Empire, manage to control vast land area?

Where did Mansa Musa get the hare-brained idea to shell out gold coins to random people during his pilgrimage? Also, how exactly did the Mali Kingdom gain so much wealth in the first place?

How did Mali turn from the richest empire to one of the poorest countries in the world?
Why don't Africans bring the Mali Empire or other precolonial countries back?
Was Mansa Musa of the Mali Empire a white European?
How advanced was the Mali Empire compared to the European states of the time?

So in Sub-Saharan Africa now, like Mali, they throw over France in favor of Russia?

Ali Sarpin Former Writer Updated Sat

What tells me this will not end well for them. But you cannot help noticing the strange sympathy in Africa for Russia, Putin & the insane shameful genocide in Ukraine.

Oh BOO HOOO. Go and cry me a river.

Where were you when France and the United Kindom were funding terrorists in nigeria that have killed over 30,000 people this year alone?

The hypocrisy of you westerners is really something else. You think Ukrainian lives ar more important than these people here?

The French army have been caught redhanded supplying weapons to terrorists, THEY HAD TO GO. I saw the video on Youtube before it was removed.

Malians are not stupid. In fact, all French-speaking African countries that are experiencing terrorism are KICKING OUT FRANCE because they understand that the French government is claiming to fight terrorism when it's actually THEM WHO ARE FUNDING TERRORISTS. Typical two-faced, backstabbing behaviour of the Westerners. They never show you their real face from the onset but will be pointing fingers at others. Their hypocrisy makes me want to vomit.

The West will now start using their usual information warfare tactics to say "the Russian Wagner group are raping women", "Or we need to install democracy in Mali" bla bla bla. They'll make any excuse to plan another invasion of Mali.

Suddenly, they care about women being raped, when their own French soldiers have been abusing many people (and handing out guns to terrorists). Suddenly, they want to install demoCRAZY, now that the Malian army kicked out their puppets.

The West uses puppets who work with nomadic terrorists to cause mayhem (to ensure African countries don't progress). Just like Zelensky the puppet, those African leaders have no brain.

It's time for the West to TAKE A SEAT!!! Nobody will fall for this fake rhetoric anymore. It's done and dusted.

Mali, Burkina Faso, and Central African Republic are the ONLY smart countries in West Africa so far. Nigeria is still bending over backward and opening their butthole to the British (that also secretly funds terrorists by claiming that they are funding healthcare projects, knowing very well that the money will laundered for terrorist acts). Hopefully, sense will come to the Nigerians soon.

My advice to you is that if you don't live in a country that has to deal with terrorism day in and day out, shut your mouth. Don't involve in a topic you have zero clue about.

As mentioned, YouTube removed the video (of the French soldiers supplying weapons to the terrorists) . But they left this one below, which comes from France24. No doubt, the French media will claim the video was fake. You know the usual games the West plays when they've been caught redhanded. Everything that's against their agenda is "fake news".

AfriStar
Crise malienne : Bamako décroche Lomé comme médiateur

Suivre Publication par David-GDK 5 mai

Le Togo appartient depuis février dernier à un groupe de dialogue chargé de faciliter les négociations internationales.Après l'échec des dernières négociations du médiateur de la Communauté économique des Etats de l'Afrique de l'ouest (Cedeao), le Mali a dépêché une importante délégation auprès du président togolais qui a accepté d'être le médiateur dans la crise politique.

La délégation conduite par le ministre malien des Affaires étrangères, Abdoulaye Diop, a achevé mercredi 4 mai une visite de travail de deux jours à Lomé, capitale du Togo. Bamako était parti demander au Togo « de faciliter le dialogue » avec les institutions internationales et régionales afin de trouver des solutions à la crise malienne, selon M. Diop. Le chef de la diplomatie malienne a demandé surtout à Lomé de soutenir les « missions de bons offices pour mobiliser à nouveau » ces acteurs, comme la Cedeao, « dont la visée essentielle demeure l'organisation d'élections libres, transparentes et crédibles et le retour à l'ordre constitutionnel ». « Je vous le confirme. Le président Faure Gnassingbe et le gouvernement togolais sont prêts à faciliter un dialogue fructueux entre le Mali et la communauté internationale », a réagi son homologue togolais, Robert Dussey, sur Twitter.

L'influence du Togo au sein de la Cedeao n'est pas négligeable même si c'est un petit pays de 56 785 km2 et plus de 8 millions d'habitants. Il appartient depuis février à un groupe de dialogue chargé de faciliter les négociations internationales. Selon certains observateurs, ce rapprochement avec Bamako n'est pas une surprise. Lomé a depuis le début choisi une position souple à l'égard des militaires maliens au pouvoir, en refusant des sanctions trop lourdes.

Le président Faure Gnassingbé s'était aussi discrètement rendu à Bamako fin janvier pour rencontrer le président de la transition, le colonel Assimi Goita. « Levée des sanctions »

Ainsi, dans un communiqué conjoint sanctionnant leur rencontre, Robert Dussey indique que le gouvernement togolais est prêt « à accompagner le Mali aux plans politique et sécuritaire en vue de la restauration de l'ordre constitutionnel, de la paix, de la stabilité et de l'intégrité de son territoire ». « Pour le Togo, seul un dialogue permanent et constructif avec les autorités de la transition malienne créera les conditions d'un retour rapide à l'ordre constitutionnel et d'efficacité de la lutte contre le terrorisme », a-t-il ajouté. Pays pauvre de 21 millions d'habitants, le Mali est en proie à de graves troubles depuis le coup d'Etat militaire en août 2020. La junte arrivée au pouvoir a promis de rétablir un régime civil après le putsch, mais elle est sous le coup de sanctions de la Cedeao pour avoir ignoré un engagement antérieur d'organiser des élections en février de cette année. L'embargo prononcé depuis janvier dernier par la Cedeao étrangle l'économie malienne, même si ces sanctions ne sont pas sans conséquences pour les Etats voisins. C'est la raison pour laquelle Bamako et Lomé ont, lors de leur rencontre, « relevé la nécessité d'œuvrer à la construction d'un consensus avec la Cedeao devant conduire à la levée des sanctions économiques qui affectent les populations ».

Les stars d'Afrique
Climat de peur et de terreur au Mali

· Suivre Publication par David-GDK 7 avr.

Depuis le second putsch du 24 mai, on assiste à un rétrécissement de l’espace démocratique. Les voix discordantes sont muselées et les plus téméraires sont mis en prison.

Le président de la transition au Mali Assimi Goïta et son premier ministre Choguel Kokalla Maïga à Bamako.

"La plupart des interlocuteurs traditionnels avec lesquels on échange sur la situation du Mali ne peuvent plus parler. Parce qu'ils ont des craintes pour eux-mêmes, pour leur famille" déclare à la DW, le journaliste et écrivain nigérien Seidik Abba. Mais les journalistes de la rédaction Afrique de la DW qui travaillent sur le Mali ont fait un constat similaire. Ce climat de peur ne surprend toutefois pas maître Mamadou Ismaïla Konaté, avocat et ancien ministre de la Justice.

"On sait bien que la spécificité du régime militaire, dans un contexte politique, c'est que l'expression de l'autorité est forte. L'anéantissement des libertés est une évidence. Et la négation absolue des droits aussi. Le propre de tout régime militaire, que les populations africaines, aussi bien au Mali, en Guinée ou au Niger ont applaudi, se termine toujours dans des contextes ou les espaces de liberté se réduisent. C'est un contexte où le jeu politique est totalement anéanti. C'est un contexte dans lequel il y a la superdominance des militaires et l'expression du pouvoir absolu par le biais des armes", déclare-t-il.

Dictature de Moussa Traoré

L’expression de ce pouvoir rappelle à bien des égards les 23 ans de la dictature de l’ancien président malien, Moussa Traoré, qui dirigea son pays d’une main de fer. Selon Seidik Abba, "il y a une sorte de dictature rampante. On peut vous incarcérer sans considération des lois.

On peut empêcher votre évacuation sanitaire, comme ce qui est arrivé à Soumeylou Boubèye Maïga, alors qu'un collège de médecins indépendants avait requis son évacuation sanitaire. On peut perdre son immunité, en tout cas pour ce qui est arrivé à Issa Kaou Djim qui était un conseiller au CNT (Conseil national de la transition, l'organe législatif), qui a été mis en prison de façon irrégulière puisqu'il pouvait bénéficier de l'immunité parlementaire. Il y a un climat de dictature, de terreur qui amène à considérer que le Mali a reculé d'au moins une vingtaine d'années ou une trentaine d'années."

L'économiste Etienne Fakaba Sisoko est en prison depuis janvier dernier. Son tort ? Il était intervenu dans plusieurs médias, maliens et étrangers, à propos de possibles répercussions des sanctions de la Communauté économique des Etats d'Afrique de l'Ouest et de l'Union économique et monétaire ouest africaine sur le Mali.

Arrêté une première fois en décembre dernier, puis libéré en janvier, l'ancien opposant au président IBK, Oumar Mariko, vit pour sa part dans la clandestinité depuis quelques jours.

Etienne Fakaba Sissoko est en prison depuis janvier dernier

Le président du parti Solidarité africaine pour la démocratie et l'indépendance est recherché par la justice pour avoir critiqué la junte au pouvoir et affirmé que l'armée était en train d'assassiner des gens. Maître Mamadou Ismaïla Konaté, estime pour sa part que "le peuple du Mali ou les peuples africains ont acquis un niveau de maturité qui ne permet pas pendant très longtemps de courber l'échine et de laisser faire. Donc, cette situation, à la limite, peut résulter bien évidemment d'un instinct populaire, d'un instinct de nationalisme exacerbé, de patriotisme affirmé au-delà des limites. Et c'est pour ça que la veille doit être permanente, l'attention doit être vive et le contrôle citoyen doit être totalement permanent."

Contacté, aucun responsable politique n'a souhaité se prononcer sur ce climat de terreur constaté au Mali.

Source: DW.com

AfriStar

Le Mali se retire du G5 Sahel et de la Force conjointe

· Suivre Publication par David-GDK 18 h

Le Mali quitte le G5 Sahel et sa force antijihadiste. Pour le gouvernement militaire de transition, l'organisation est "instrumentalisée" par "l'extérieur". Lors d'une allocution télévisée, le porte-parole du gouvernement, le Colonel Abdoulaye Maïga a tout de même annoncé conserver les relations bilatérales avec les pays du G5 Sahel. "L'opposition de certains Etats membres du G5 Sahel à la présidence du Mali est liée à des manœuvres d'un Etat extérieur à la région visant désespérément à isoler le Mali", a déclaré le Colonel Abdoulaye Maïga, porte-parole du gouvernement de transition.
"De cette situation, le gouvernement de la République du Mali déduit une perte d'autonomie, une instrumentalisation et un dysfonctionnement grave des organes du G5 Sahel. En conséquence, le gouvernement du Mali décide de se retirer de tous les organes et instances du G5 Sahel, y compris de la force conjointe."

MINISTERE DE L'ADMINISTRATION TERRITORIALE ET DE LA DECENTRALISATION

REPUBLIQUE DU MALI
Un Peuple – Un But – Une Foi

COMMUNIQUE N°030 DU GOUVERNEMENT DE LA TRANSITION

Le Gouvernement de la République du Mali informe l'opinion nationale et internationale qu'à l'issue des travaux de la 7ème session ordinaire de la Conférence des Chefs d'Etat des pays membres du G5 Sahel, tenue le 15 février 2021 à N'Djamena, les Chefs d'Etat avaient convenu de tenir la 8ème session ordinaire à Bamako, en février 2022.

Conformément à la pratique établie, cette session devrait ainsi consacrer le début de la Présidence malienne du G5 Sahel.

Cependant, près d'un trimestre après le terme indiqué, ladite session de la Conférence des Chefs d'Etat des pays membres du G5 Sahel ne s'est toujours pas tenue, en dépit des multiples initiatives prises par le Mali dans ce sens auprès des instances du G5 Sahel, pour y attirer leur attention.

Dans sa dernière correspondance en date du 22 avril 2022, adressée à Son Excellence Le Général Mahamat Idriss DEBY ITNO, Président du Conseil Militaire de Transition, Président de la République du Tchad et Président en exercice du G5 Sahel, le Président de la Transition, Chef de l'Etat du Mali, Son Excellence le Colonel Assimi Goïta, avait prévenu qu'en l'absence de progrès substantiel sur la question d'ici le 15 mai 2022, la République du Mali se verra dans l'obligation de suspendre sa participation aux organes du G5 Sahel y compris la Force Conjointe.

Le Gouvernement de la République du Mali rappelle que la non tenue à Bamako de la 8ème session ordinaire de la Conférence des Chefs d'Etat des pays membres du G5 Sahel, ainsi que des réunions statutaires des autres organes constituent une violation d'une décision prise par l'Institution, mais aussi celle des textes de base du G5 Sahel.

Scanné avec CamScanner

À l'origine des différents entre le Mali et le G5 : en février 2022, l'organisation devait tenir une conférence à Bamako, afin de "consacrer le début de la présidence malienne du G5". Mais "près d'un trimestre après le terme indiqué cette conférence ne s'est jamais tenue" a précisé le communiqué du gouvernement malien.

Avec l'annonce de ce départ, le G5 Sahel est réduit à quatre pays :
la Mauritanie, le Tchad, le Burkina Faso et le Niger.

Les stars d'Afrique
Le massacre de Moura fait écho aux crimes de l’armée russe en Ukraine

· Suivre Publication par David-GDK

Selon Human Rights Watch, l’armée malienne et ses alliés russes auraient exécuté plus de 300 civils maliens à Moura dans une opération antiterroriste.

Selon Human Rights Watch, il s'agit du "pire épisode d'atrocités constaté depuis le début de la guerre au Mali il y a dix ans."

Ces exactions ont été commises avec la participation de soldats de couleur blanche présentés par des témoins comme étant des Russes.

La junte veut prouver qu'elle est à la hauteur des enjeux sécuritaires du pays.

"Il étaient au courant (des témoins maliens) que le Mali avait annoncé depuis quelques mois l'arrivée des formateurs Russes pour aider, pour entraîner et former l'armée malienne. Mais nos témoins ont parlé de blancs et parfois, ils ont décrit les blancs comme des Russes", affirme Corinne Dufka, directrice adjointe de la division Afrique de Human Rights Watch.

La violence de ces exactions est-elle due en grande partie à la présence des mercenaires russes de Wagner et peut-on faire un parallèle avec les massacres de civils en Ukraine ?

On ne peut pas l’affirmer car les forces armées maliennes ont déjà été plusieurs fois accusées de crimes contre des civils, même bien avant l’arrivée des Russes, rappelle Leslie Varenne, directrice de l'Institut de veille et d'étude des relations internationales (IVERIS).

Elle explique que "les forces armées maliennes n'ont pas attendu les Russes pour commettre des exactions. Il semble quand même que c'est l'armée malienne qui donne les ordres et qui choisit ses cibles. Il y en a eu à Sofara. C'était le mois dernier. On a trouvé 35 corps. Il y a eu l'affaire des Mauritaniens. Le conflit ukrainien masque un peu la réalité de ce qui se passe en ce moment au Sahel. En un mois, entre ce qui s'est passé à Moura, ce qui s'est passé à Ménaka, ce qui s'est passé à la frontière mauritanienne, ce qui s'est passé dans le centre du pays, on doit être à peu près à 1.000 morts. Et là, je ne compte pas les morts du Burkina et du Niger."

Un avis que partage aussi Emmanuel Dupuy, président de l’Institut prospective et sécurité en Europe.

Montrer des résultats

Dans un communiqué publié mardi soir (05.04), les autorités maliennes ont rejeté les conclusions de Human Rights Watch qui, selon elles, visent à ternir l’image de leur armée. Mais pour Leslie Varenne, Bamako veut à tous prix montrer des résultats dans la lutte contre le terrorisme.

"Les autorités maliennes ont en ce moment besoin de résultats puisqu'elles sont toujours sous sanctions. Elles n'ont pas mis en place le chronogramme.

Les stars d'Afrique
Climat de peur et de terreur au Mali

Publication par David-GDK 7 avr.

Depuis le second putsch du 24 mai, on assiste à un rétrécissement de l’espace démocratique. Les voix discordantes sont muselées et les plus téméraires sont mis en prison.

Le président de la transition au Maliau Mali Assimi Goïta et son premier ministre Choguel Kokalla Maïga à Bamako.

"La plupart des interlocuteurs traditionnels avec lesquels on échange sur la situation du Mali ne peuvent plus parler. Parce qu'ils ont des craintes pour eux-mêmes, pour leur famille" déclare à la DW, le journaliste et écrivain nigérien Seidik Abba. Mais les journalistes de la rédaction Afrique de la DW qui travaillent sur le Mali ont fait un constat similaire. Ce climat de peur ne surprend toutefois pas maître Mamadou Ismaïla Konaté, avocat et ancien ministre de la Justice.

"On sait bien que la spécificité du régime militaire, dans un contexte politique, c'est que l'expression de l'autorité est forte. L'anéantissement des libertés est une évidence. Et la négation absolue des droits aussi. Le propre de tout régime militaire, que les populations africaines, aussi bien au Mali, en Guinée ou au Niger ont applaudi, se termine toujours dans des contextes ou les espaces de liberté se réduisent. C'est un contexte où le jeu politique est totalement anéanti. C'est un contexte dans lequel il y a la superdominance des militaires et l'expression du pouvoir absolu par le biais des armes", déclare-t-il.

Dictature de Moussa Traoré

L’expression de ce pouvoir rappelle à bien des égards les 23 ans de la dictature de l’ancien président malien, Moussa Traoré, qui dirigea son pays d’une main de fer. Selon Seidik Abba, "il y a une sorte de dictature rampante. On peut vous incarcérer sans considération des lois.

On peut empêcher votre évacuation sanitaire, comme ce qui est arrivé à Soumeylou Boubèye Maïga, alors qu'un collège de médecins indépendants avait requis son évacuation sanitaire. On peut perdre son immunité, en tout cas pour ce qui est arrivé à Issa Kaou Djim qui était un conseiller au CNT (Conseil national de la transition, l'organe législatif), qui a été mis en prison de façon irrégulière puisqu'il pouvait bénéficier de l'immunité parlementaire. Il y a un climat de dictature, de terreur qui amène à considérer que le Mali a reculé d'au moins une vingtaine d'années ou une trentaine d'années."

L'économiste Etienne Fakaba Sisoko est en prison depuis janvier dernier. Son tort ? Il était intervenu dans plusieurs médias, maliens et étrangers, à propos de possibles répercussions des sanctions de la Communauté économique des Etats d'Afrique de l'Ouest et de l'Union économique et monétaire ouest africaine sur le Mali.

Arrêté une première fois en décembre dernier, puis libéré en janvier, l'ancien opposant au président IBK, Oumar Mariko, vit pour sa part dans la clandestinité depuis quelques jours.

Etienne Fakaba Sissoko est en prison depuis janvier dernier

Le président du parti Solidarité africaine pour la démocratie et l'indépendance est recherché par la justice pour avoir critiqué la junte au pouvoir et affirmé que l'armée était en train d'assassiner des gens. Maître Mamadou Ismaïla Konaté, estime pour sa part que "le peuple du Mali ou les peuples africains ont acquis un niveau de maturité qui ne permet pas pendant très longtemps de courber l'échine et de laisser faire. Donc, cette situation, à la limite, peut résulter bien évidemment d'un instinct populaire, d'un instinct de nationalisme exacerbé, de patriotisme affirmé au-delà des limites. Et c'est pour ça que la veille doit être permanente, l'attention doit être vive et le contrôle citoyen doit être totalement permanent."

Contacté, aucun responsable politique n'a souhaité se prononcer sur ce climat de terreur constaté au Mali.

Source: DW.com

Pourquoi la France a-t-elle des militaires au Mali ?

Romain Lapie , "Expert" Politique/Géopolitique/Défense/Histoire militaire
Répondu 7 avr. 2021 · Vote positif par Ernest Foucault, Doctorat Histoire & Sciences Politiques, Institut d'Études Politiques de Paris (1973)

La guerre au Mali continue car les groupes terroristes contre lequel la France lutte depuis 2013 sont toujours là.

Et le fait est que sans l'armée Française les pays du G5 Sahel ne sont pour l'instant pas en capacité de leurs faire face sans aide.

Retirer les troupes Française du Mali aujourd'hui reviendrait à jeter aux orties 8 années de travail acharné à la stabilisation de la zone et pour laquelle 55 Français sont tombés.

Il n'y a qu'à regarder l'intervention en Centrafrique, Hollande, désireux de ne pas répéter les erreurs de Sarkozy en Lybie est intervenu pour mater la rébellion puis à retirer les troupes une fois l'intervention réussi, aujourd'hui le pays est la proie d'une très forte instabilité.

Il aurait certainement été justifié de laisser des troupes pour assurer les mêmes missions que Barkhane, qui a su se se transformer après l'opération Serval.

La réponse du pourquoi nous devons rester réside dans la question :

Que se passerait il si nous partions ?

A termes rien de moins que la menace de la création d'un Etat Islamique en Afrique de l'Ouest. C'est lorsque le califat physique de Daesh était à son apogée qu'il a pu conduire les attaques terroristes qui ont endeuillés la France. Je vous laisse imaginer ce qui se passerait si le même scénario se produisait dans des pays avec lesquels -du fait de notre histoire coloniale- nous avons beaucoup plus de lien.

L'armée Française a rencontré un nombre non négligeable de succès, la branche locale de l'Etat Islamique a quasiment été éradiqué, la force Barkhane concentre maintenant ses efforts sur AQMI (Al Qaeda au Maghreb Islamique).

Il faut donc poursuivre les efforts, jusqu'à ce que les armées locales soient suffisamment forte pour pouvoir lutter "toute seule" et efficacement pour leurs propre défense, c'est dans l'intérêt de la France et de l'Europe, et c'est pourquoi le maximum est fait pour former au mieux les unités locales, pour permettre qu'a termes la France puisse se désengager. L'heure n'est simplement pas encore venu.

Lorsque les forces djihadistes auront été suffisamment affaibli et que l'Etat Malien et son armée aura été suffisamment renforcé nous pourrons partir. Mais vu le travail à accomplir je ne serais pas surpris que cela représente encore une décennie de présence.

What is the best way for the people of Africa to get rid of France and its military-monetary neocolonialism without the involvement of their corrupt politicians?

Jean-Marie Gouarne · Follow Updated on 7 MB

For some governments, the easiest way to get rid of French influence is to be "neo-colonized" by another imperialist power capable of replacing France.

The Central African Republic has just shown the way by welcoming the Wagner group, a company of mercenaries experienced in the business of "special operations" on behalf of Russia. Mali will probably follow the same path if it hasn't already.

For a certain part of the African ruling elites, "decolonizing" means "changing masters", but above all remaining under the domination of a foreign power, in order to preserve their privileges at all costs and to prolong the submission of the peoples while ensuring a semblance of policing in a climate of widespread corruption.

These are also similar behaviors which, in the 19th century, had enabled colonization to take hold. The real handicap of Africa is this situation of "colonialism from within" which has lasted for centuries and of which European colonialism was only one consequence among others. The vindictive speeches of certain leaders against France are only diversionary maneuvers intended to hide the real problems, and to camouflage the real mechanisms of colonialism. The populations have, first and foremost, a serious cleaning to do inside. It is not by the color of the skin that we recognize a predator.

Questions similaires

On entend souvent dire que "la France est riche parce qu'elle a pillé/pille encore d'autres pays (notamment ses anciennes colonies). Est-ce cohérent ? La France a-t-elle des atouts qui lui sont propres et lui permettent d'être "au top" malgré tout ?

L'affaire Traoré montre-t-elle à quel point la France est encore raciste et colonialiste ?

Que pense le peuple français de la surexploitation des ex colonies par la France ?
Pourquoi la France n'assume-t-elle pas son passé colonial ?

Pensez-vous qu'un jour les ex-colonies françaises demanderont des réparations pécuniaires massives à la France pour l'occupation de leurs territoires et avec quelle chance de succès ?

La France est-elle prospère à cause de la colonisation ? Si la colonisation n'avait jamais eu lieu, comment se présenterait la France ?

Pourquoi la France n'a-t-elle pas comme toutes ses colonies viré tous les Français de chez elle ?

La France doit-elle s'excuser perpétuellement pour avoir eu des colonies en Afrique ?

Pourquoi les Français n'arrivent-ils pas à tourner la page de l'Algérie et du colonialisme ?

Que pensez-vous de l'affirmation de Anasse Kazib « L'Histoire de la France

How long do you give the Malian government before it collapses after the departure of the French forces?

Excellent question!
In fact, there are 2 subjects : Mali itself, and the "current" government of Mali, resulting from a military coup. It is therefore appropriate to answer your question in two ways.

MALI : French and EU troops will remain in support, like those of Chad (very competent). One can imagine that they will more or less be able to fix the breakthroughs of the jihadist madmen, like containing any new expansion. Wagner's Russians have, theoretically, the same job to do in parallel. In my humble opinion, this guerrilla will last for many more years, and Mali will remain "at war" for a long time. It remains to be seen how the Tuareg tribes of the North will behave. And how the Malian government(s) will manage to steer the different ethnic groups on the subject of non-radical Islamism, and therefore Bamako to steer a totally fragmented country. the junta in power : it is up to the Malians to decide. In a democracy, the vote exists. And must be heard. Maybe Wagner is there with a purpose as well? support them? ... or stage a coup against them? In my opinion, the anti-French demonstrations have been totally remote-controlled, follow my gaze. Personally, I don't see this junta, after all quite clumsy, lasting very long. But who knows!?

Nice ingratitude anyway. And sad tribute to our 52 soldiers who died in operation in Mali for 7 years. Peace and respect to them.

Similar questions

Malians protesting in the streets to demand the departure of French soldiers, so why is France insisting so much on staying in Mali if it is not welcome?

If France does not gain anything in Mali, why does it resent the fact that the Malian authorities are asking for the end of Operation Barkhane?

Why are Malians applauding Macron's threat to withdraw French troops from Mali? Do they no longer want France?

Does the resignation of President IBK in Mali necessarily mean a departure of the French forces in position in the country?

How can the French government justify the release of 200 jihadists in exchange for one person, when hundreds of French people died in Mali for our safety?

Should we praise the decision taken by the Malian authorities for the withdrawal of the French army on Malian soil?

How to explain the withdrawal of French and European armed forces from Mali?

How many people were killed during the French colonization of Algeria?

Normally withdrawing its troops from Mali and Africa should be a relief for France, so why does it insist on staying where it says it gains nothing?

Would France have the means to carry out today an operation such as that of Kolwezi in 1978?

If France does not gain anything in Mali, why does it resent the fact that the Malian authorities are asking for the end of Operation Barkhane?

Pierre Jamain Formerly Manager of SARL (Professional Photo Lab) at Professional Photo Lab (1970 – 2000) 31 Jul.

Perhaps because originally in 2013 it was the legitimate government of Mali that had asked for help from France, the operation was intended to support Malian troopsseeking to repel an offensive by armed Islamist groupswho took control of Azawad, the northern part of the country, following the military coup of 2021 it was the ruling junta which refuses to organize democratic elections which demanded the end of Operation Barkhane as well as the total withdrawal of the army French, it is perhaps not the only reason for the French discontent but it contributed to it.

Similar questions

Who is the President of the Republic who has done the most harm to France?

France has one of the most powerful armies in the world. How is it that for so many years they are still fighting terrorists in the Sahel? Is this a media excuse to be able to plunder gold and oil from Mali as in Libya?

Malians protesting in the streets to demand the departure of French soldiers, so why is France insisting so much on staying in Mali if it is not welcome?

Has Turkey just beaten France in Mali with the fall of Ibrahim Boubacar Keïta?

Why don't the French who claim everywhere that their country earns nothing in the CFA franc ask France to get out of the management of this currency to avoid these accusations?

Why doesn't Russia take the French and British nuclear arsenal seriously?

Related Links

Is it true that France still controls its former colonies in Africa? If so, how?

Where can I find a company in Kenya to put my house in Airbnb?

What makes Arab African football teams better than Arab Asian football teams?

Is African land good for farming?

How can Nigeria, my country, be the richest in the world by 2030?

Why do people from third world countries love to add adjective of “world class” before many of their institutions?

How can we stop intentional crimes against females in South Africa?

What is some data about epicanthic fold in Non- East Asians like Africans, Caucasians and Oceanic peoples?

Should we give ELECTED city council members 'police powers' (The elected city council listens to townspeople's complaints, they hire police officers, fire bad police officers, tells police where and when to police certai

News and geopolitics:Confrontation at the UN between Mali and France.

Posted by Pascal Petitlas

Tuesday, October 18, 2022.

The meeting on Mali of the UN Security Council gave rise to an unusual scene in this forum on Tuesday, with very virulent exchanges between the Malian Minister of Foreign Affairs, Abdoulaye Diop, and the French Ambassador Nicolas of River. The first repeated the accusations he has been making since August 15: according to him, France supplies arms and information to jihadist groups in Mali. "Serious, false and defamatory accusations," replied the second. A situation that is both violent and comical, since France is waiting for proof, and Mali is asking to be able to reveal it... without seizing the opportunity to do so.

Mali: France denounces an attempt by Wagner's Russian mercenaries to accuse him of massacre

Mali: how to understand the pass of arms at the UN between Paris and Bamako

Philippe Eyraud

Mali: France denounces an attempt by Wagner's Russian mercenaries to accuse him of massacre

News & Geopolitics: Would France have come to this (strikes, crisis, shortage...) if it had not been driven out of Mali and CAR and had not tried to bring the Russian economy to its knees?

Philippe Fabré

Commerce International - Southeast Asia, China, India, Japan Oct. 19

There are Africans who should stop worrying…. They are not the center of the world… And France in no way depends on Africa to conduct its business!

I do not see how leaving Mali would affect the current strikes, crisis, shortages. It just has nothing - absolutely nothing - to do with it!

So, you, our African friends, take care of feeding your crowds and protecting your elites from the attacks of the Islamists, otherwise they will soon take power in your countries!

As for the sanctions against Russia, you really don't understand anything… There is an economic war against Russia to prevent it from being a real war. And in the end, the Russian economy is collapsing! So take care of the ECOWAS sanctions instead

Would France have come to this (strikes, crisis, shortage…) if it had not been driven out of Mali and CAR and had not tried to bring the Russian economy to its knees?

Philippe Fabré

Commerce International - Southeast Asia, China, India, Japan Oct. 19

There are Africans who should stop worrying…. They are not the center of the world… And France in no way depends on Africa to conduct its business!

I do not see how leaving Mali would affect the current strikes, crisis, shortages. It just has nothing - absolutely nothing - to do with it!

So, you, our African friends, take care of feeding your crowds and protecting your elites from the attacks of the Islamists, otherwise they will soon take power in your countries!

As for the sanctions against Russia, you really don't understand anything… There is an economic war against Russia to prevent it from being a real war. And in the end, the Russian economy is collapsing!

So take care of the ECOWAS sanctions instead…

Similar questions

What would the world be like if Nazi Germany had never lost the war?

If France decided to move geopolitically closer to Russia and move away from the United States, what would that bring to it and what would it change in your opinion?

Is France prosperous because of colonization? If colonization had never taken place, what would France look like?

France is the biggest predator in Africa and has long been seen through. France was for a long time only an average regional power in Europe. Why are they still so influential in Africa?

If Hitler had been satisfied only with half of Poland, Holland, Scandinavian countries, Sudetes and if he had not attacked France and Russia. How would the world be now?

Is the battle for Africa being lost for France and Europe, to the benefit of the

Welcome to Africa: Mali August 28, 2019

Posted by Noureddine Saad Formerly an electronics engineer 2014 – 2019 2 years

The sun is back, it's hot. ☐ So we decide to go to the pool! Here I am off to the sports pool in Bamako with Papa Sarr's children. It's a real experience: The pool is huge (double Olympic pool at least), the water is green, it's a change from the camp or the pools of toubabou! Despite this, we will have a good time trying to teach them to swim and to do freediving competitions!

COUNTRY FACT FILE

Location

In the interior of West Africa

Official title of the state

The Republic of Mali (English)

Republique de Mali (French)

Flag description:

Three equal vertical bands of green (hoist side), yellow, and red. Note: uses the popular Pan-African colours of Ethiopia; the colours from left to right are the same as those of neighboring Senegal (which has additional green central star) and the reverse of those on the flag of neighboring Guinea.

Neighbours

Mauritania, Senegal on W. Guinea, Cote'divoire, Burkinafaso on S. Niger on E. Algeria on N. Land boundaries; total 7,243 km. Border countries; Algeria 1,376 km, Burkinafaso 1000 km, Guinea 858 km, Cote D' Ivoire 532 km, Mauritania 2,237 km, Niger 821 km, Senegal 419 km.

Founder of The Nation
Modibo Keita, the first head of State, immediately declared a single party state and pursued Marxist Socialist policies supported by alliances with the Soviet Bloc. Keita's regime was overthrown by a military coup in 1968.

Local Division

8 regions including Capital district (Bamako)

Government type

Republic - semi-presidential

Legislation chamber

Unicameral - National Assembly

Form of State

Republic (temporarily ushered in a military ruling council)

A multi-party republic with one legislative house. The National Assembly 147 seats, members are elected by popular vote to serve for five -year terms.Chief of State is the President Head of Government is the Prime Minister. President is elected for a five-year term (eligible for a second term)

Executive branch

(ushered with Supreme Military Ruling Council)

President, Prime Minister, Cabinet: Council of ministers appointed by the Prime Minister. Separated by chief of State and head of Government. President elected by popular vote to serve for five-year terms, eligible for a second term. Head of Government to be appointed by the president with consent of the National Assembly.

Former rulers

1965 - 1968 U. Modibo Keita

1968 - 1991 Colonel Moussa Traoré

1991 - 1992 Colonel Amadou Toumani Touré (1st time)

1992 - 2002 professor Alpha Oumar Konaré

2002 – 2011 Amadou Toumani Touré (as elected president)

Current president -

Judicial chamber

Supreme Court

Capital city Bamako

Altitude 350 mtrs/1148 ft.

Geographic coordinates -12.39N , 8.00W.

It is located on the Niger River. The name comes from the Bambara word meaning for "Crocodile river". Founded at about 10th century, the capital of Mali since 1908.

Names of main towns

Segou, Mopti, Sikasso, Kayes, Gao, Timbuktu.

Date of independence

22nd September, 1960.

Religions (Major)

Muslim 90%, traditional 9%, christian others 1%.

Main spoken languages

French (official), Bambara, Senoufo, Arabic, Ibofon, various African languages.

Currency unit

African Franc (CFA)=100 Centimes.

Area in Km2

1,240,192.00

Country area comparison in Africa

8 out of 54 states.

Demographic terms ;-

Average annual population growth rate 2.607 %

Birth rate 46.09 births per 1,000 population

Death rate 14.64 deaths per 1,000 population

Male 50.59 years ; Female 53.8 years

Illiteracy rate (%)

Male: 66, Female: 82

Average per capita income
USD 1, 200

Population density

168.4/km2

Urban population (%)

20

Contributor groups (%)

Farming, Fishing: 45, Industry: 17, Social service: 38

Main Export items

Cotton and cotton-products, gold, groundnuts, live-animals.

Economy is based on Cattle breeding.

Climate

Sub-tropical to arid. Mostly hot in the far south.

Extremes;-

Lowest point; Senegal river 23 mtrs.

Highest point; Hombori Tondo 1,155 mtrs.

Weather of the Capital City (Bamako) average annual temperature 27,8oc.

Altitude 350 mtrs Hottest Month April 24-39oc.
Coldest Month January 16-33oc.
Driest Month 0mmRf

December-January

Wettest Month August 220 mm.

Measures

Metric system.

Time zone

GMT/UTC+0

Public holidays

September 22 (Mali day), December 25 (Christmas), January 1 (New year), January 20 (Army day), May 25 (Africa day), Easter (variables), All Muslim holidays.

Ethnic groups

Mande tribes i.e. Bambara, Malinke, Soninke, Sarakolle 50%, Peul 17%, Voltaic 12%, Tuareg and Moor 10%, Songhai 6%, others 5%.

Topographic & Environmental concern

A landlocked grassy plain in the upper basins of the Senegal & Niger rivers extending N. into the Sahara desert. Mali is rapidly being swallowed up by the Sahara desert - about 65% of the country is now desert or semi-desert. Note: desertification, deforestation, soil erosion, drought, inadequate supplies of potable water. According to the country's Environment ministry, Mali's population consumes 6 million tonnes of wood per year for timber and fuel. To meet this demand, 4,000sqkm of forest cover are lost annually, virtually ensuring destruction of the country's savanna woodlands. The nation's wildlife is threatened by drought, poaching, and the destruction of the environment. Ongoing droughts, overgrazing, topsoil erosion, harsh desert winds, and the scavenging of trees for firewood are all to blame. Environment: Deforestation; soil erosion; desertification; inadequate supplies of potable water; poaching

Economy Overview

Industry

Food processing, construction, phosphates & gold mining.

Chief crops

Millet, rice, peanuts, cotton, corn, vegetables, peanuts : cattle, sheep, goats.

Natural resources

Gold, Bauxite, Iron ore, Phosphates, Kaolin, Salt, Limestone, Uranium, Gipsum, Granite, limited water resource.

Land in use (%)

Arable land: 10

Grassland: 25

Forest woods: 6

Other: 59

Marine:

Coastline; None

Commercial Sea port -

Mali is an Inland state, has no seaports because it is landlocked, but Koulikoro on the Niger River near Bamako, serves as a principal river port. Traditionally, Abidjan in Côte D' Ivoire has been Mali's main seaport, handling as much as 70 per- cent of Mali's transit.

Development prospect;-

The key challenge for the economy remains the agricultural sector. The government hopes that development projects will bring the north out of its marginalisation and stitch the country together. It has spent about $1.4bn on road projects over the past four years, the most important of which covers 227km from Bamako to Ségou. In addition to that road, Chinese contractors are building a new airport at Kayes and modernising the country's main airport outside Bamako. Several new dams will boost electricity supplies and provide more power to gold and iron-ore mining projects. The 59MW dam at Félou, near Kayes, should be completed in 2012, while the 25MW Taoussa dam is scheduled for completion in 2016. The dam at Djenné, whose first stone was laid on 22 September 2011, will initially provide water for agriculture and husbandry on 15,000ha of land before adding to the region's power supply.

Given the record prices on global markets, export earnings from gold and investment in gold mining projects will remain strong. Mali will be a sizeable producer of iron ore, thanks to the investments of Indian companies. Sandeep Garg and Company is developing mines at Tienfala and Dogoro, and in September announced plans for a steel mill at Tienfala. India's Earthstone discovered iron ore reserves of around 1bn tn in September at Talari.

The key challenge for the economy remains the agricultural sector, where around 70% of the population is employed. Cotton production has slumped in recent years, while the government is looking to revive the industry and to promote investment in rice and sugar production around the Niger River's inland delta. Mali also hopes to award a third mobile-phone licence soon.

The UN has offered to help investigate the killing of more than 130 people by alleged jihadists in central Mali. The country's interim government has declared three days of national mourning.

© Hans Lucas/IMAGOMali has been battling armed insurgents since 2012

Attacks by gunmen, said to be jihadists, were ongoing on Monday in central Mali where at least 130 civilians were massacred on the weekend.

"Even this [Monday] morning, my village is under fire," a witness, who wished to remain anonymous because of security concerns, told DW in a phone interview.

"Our families are fleeing because they are afraid their village will be the next to be attacked by armed groups."

The fighting comes despite the area under attack being only 5 km (3 miles) from a military base in Bandiagara, in Mali's central Mopti region.

National mourning

Mali's interim government, led by Colonel Assimi Goita, on Monday declared three days of mourning for those killed in the massacre in three Malian villages in the Bankass area of the Mopti region over the weekend.

It also said that 132 civilians had been "coldly killed" in the Bankass area and blamed the massacre on fighters of the Macina Katiba of Amadou Kouffa, an organization affiliated to al-Qaeda.

© Habib Kouyate/Xinhua/IMAGOMali's interim ruler Assimi Goita has called for three days of national mourning

Witnesses, however, told AFP news agency that they believed the death toll could be much higher.

The gunmen are said to have accused the victims of conspiring with mercenaries from the Russian Wagner group, which is supporting Mali's army in the fight against Islamic terrorists, according to AFP.

"They have also been burning huts, houses, and stealing cattle — it's really a free-for-all," a local official told AFP, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The United Nations peacekeeping mission in Mali (MINUSMA) tweeted its condemnation of the attacks in central Mali, saying in a linked statement that it was concerned by "attacks against civilians in the Bandiagara region perpetrated by extremist groups. These attacks have reportedly caused casualties and displacement of populations."

In its statement, MINUSMA also offered help with care and evacuation of the injured, as well as help investigate the massacres.

A MINUSMA team based in Mopti visited the crime scenes with local authorities on Monday.

Widening insurgency

Jihadists frequently target civilians in reprisal attacks for collaborating with the enemy.

Since 2012, Mali has been battling a jihadist insurgency with links to al-Qaeda and the so-called Islamic State.

The violence that started in the north of the Sahel country has since spread to central Mali, Burkina Faso, Niger, and most recently, Togo.

A large portion of Mali is beyond the control of the interim government, which took power in a coup in May 2021.

Self-defense militias and jihadist groups have filled this power vacuum.

Thousands displaced in Menaka

The violence is also ongoing in other regions of Mali.

In the northeastern region of Menaka, near the tri-border zone of Mali, Burkina Faso and Niger, more than 1,000 civilians have been killed and 90,000 displaced, according to Fahad Ag Al Mahmoud, spokesperson for the GATIA movement, a pro-government armed militia actively fighting the jihadists in central Mali.

"The situation is very critical because the herders can no longer stay in their homes," Al Mahmoud told DW.

"For those lucky enough to survive, they have been forced to go to the town of Menaka," he said, referring to the region's administrative capital.

He warned that all the inhabitants would end up in Menaka town in the coming days if nothing is done to stop the violence.

The Islamic State in the Greater Sahara (ISGS) recently claimed to have killed more than 145 fighters from the mostly Tuareg-led militias fighting the jihadists in Menaka.

© EtatMajordes ArméesFrance is expected to complete the withdrawal of its troops from Mali in the next few months

Power vaccuum

Last week, the head of the UN mission to Mali, El-Ghassim Wane, warned that Menaka would be left vulnerable to attacks after French troops handed over a military outpost in the region on Monday 14 June.

France will soon entirely withdraw its forces from its last base in the neighboring Gao region and end its Barkhane mission, which began nine years ago.

Just days after the French withdrawal, the Movement for the Salvation of Azawad, another militia fighting the Islamists, claimed that 22 people had been killed by "armed men" in the locality of Izingaz in the Menaka region. No other sources, however, have confirmed this information.

Violence spreading throughout Sahel

In the central Sahel region, the number of civilians killed in attacks blamed on extremist groups has nearly doubled since 2020, according to a report released by a coalition of West African NGOs.

In northern Burkina Faso, Islamist extremists killed at least 79 people in Seytenga in June, according to AFP.

The UN Security Council has expressed concern about the deteriorating security situation in Mali's north and central regions as well as along its borders to Burkina Faso and Niger.

This article is based on a French article written by DW journalist Bob Barry as well as other interviews conducted by him.

Edited by: Kate Hairsine

MAURITANIA

National Flag and Emblem

Locator Map

TEXT BRIEFLY HIGHLIGHTS: Diaries updates, key events, brief analysis and relating news articles in timeline

Overview

Formerly known as "Ile de France". It had been re-named by the French when they captured the country

Mauritania has often been described as a bridge b/n the Arab and Black African worlds.

France gained control of the region known as now Mauritania in 1817, and established French protectorate in 1903, it was added to French west Africa in 1904 and later a colony in 1920. France gained control of the coastal region in 1817, and in 1904 a formal French protectorate was extended over the territory

Mauritania achieved independence in November, 1960 with Mr. Mokhtar Ould Dah Dah, it's founder president. Mr. Mukhtar Ould Dah Dah, nicknamed the "revolutionary", ruled Mauritania for further eighteen years being re-elected three times in 1967, 1971 and 1976.

Headship since independence; Head of State

The Mauritanian army tookover power by overthrowing president Mukhtar Ould Dah Dah in July, 1978.

A Republic in Northwest Africa on the Atlantic ocean.

A vast & sparsely populated territory located b/n Senegal and Morocco at the western extreme of the Sahara desert. Mauritania has often been described as a bridge b/n the Arab and Black African worlds. France gained control of the region known as now Mauritania in 1817, and established French protectorate in 1903, it was added to French west Africa in 1904 and later a colony in 1920. It achieved independence in November, 1960 with Mr. Mokhtar Ould dah dah, it's elected head of state. Mr. Mukhtar Ould Dah Dah, nicknamed the "revolutionary", ruled Mauritania for further eighteen years being re-elected three times in 1967, 1971 and 1976, as the army tookover power by overthrowing him in July, 1978. The ex-president Ould Dah Dah is called locally "founding father of Mauritania", he passed away on the 14th of October, 2003, as he self-exiled in France since he had been ousted by the military in July, 1978. Mauritania annexed the southern one-third of the former Spanish-Sahara, now Western Sahara briefly but relinquished it after three years of attacks by the POLISARIO, a guerilla front seeking independence for the territory. Mauritania annexed a third of the Western Sahara on the southern part of the Northern Africa country, only to relinquish it three years later. Maaouya Ould Sid Ahmed Taya seized power in a coup in 1984 and ruled Mauritania for more than two decades. A bloodless coup in August 2005 overthrew President Taya. A military council was put in place to oversee a transition to democratic rule. Sidi Ould Cheikh Abdallahi was inaugurated in April 2007 as Mauritania's first freely and fairly elected president. In August 2008, President Abdallahi was overthrown by soldiers who ushered in a military council government. The country continues to experience unease among the three main ethnic communities.

It is quitely observed that several sudden violent military seizures of political power have been made in Mauritania b/n July, 1978 until the 3rd of August, 2005, a coup ended President Taya's two decades of authoritarian rule when an Army-Colonel in the Mauritanian army called, Ely ould Mohammed Vall carriedout a bloodless coup, in recent Africa's history deposed the president Sid Ahmed Ould Taya and ushered in a military council that designed for transition to a Democratic rule, pledging to run the country only for two years before organizing democratic elections. Colonel Maaouya Ould Sidi Ahmed Taya, now self-exiled in the gulf kingdom of Qatar, had been ruling the vast west African country close to 22 years.

Presidential polls in March 2007 marked the start of a short-lived move towards democracy - another coup followed a year later. Mr. Sidi Mohammed Abdallahi Ould Sheik took office as Mauritania's first democratically elected president on the 19th of April, 2007, the path to Mr. Mohammed Abdallahi Ould Sheik's presidency was laid by Colonel Ely Ould Mohammed Vall, Mauritania's ex-Military leader, who took power in August, 2005 ousting the previous president, Colonel Maaouya Ould Sidi Ahmed Taya who had held onto power for over two decades, vowed to hold a referendum on constitutional changes i.e. in addition to the 1981 law, the law that adopted strictly again in, August 2007 criminalized slavery and to pave the way for democratic elections in the same year, both of which he achieved ahead of his own plan, resulting in the election of president Sidi Mohammed Abdallahi Ould Sheik resulted earlier in March, 2007 but his term ended prematurely in August, 2008 after fifteen months in office in decades when the military headed by General Mohammed Ould Abdel-Aziz deposed him again and ushered in a Military council government, the former Batalion de la Securite Presidentielle Commander (BASEP), turned coup leader and became president of the High Concil of State in 2008, he resigned from the post in April, 2009 in order to stand as a candidate in the July, 2009 presidential election which later announced, he won it, to sworn into office as president on the 5th of August, 2009. General Mohammed Abdel-Aziz came to power by ousting a democratically elected president by a military coup in August, 2008. Nearly a year later he won his own democratic mandate in elections held under an agreement with coup opponents. Mauritania has had numerous military coups since it's independence from France in November, 1960.

April 3, 2011: Thousands of people in Mauritania have attended demonstrations in the capital calling for President Mohamed Ould Abdelaziz to resign. The opposition groups held peaceful "decentralised" rallies in the nine districts of Nouakchott. Organisers said they opposed "anti-democratic" policies of the government. Mr Abdelaziz took power in the North African country in a coup in August 2008, after forcing out a democratically elected government. An umbrella group representing nine different protest groups issued a joint call for the president to resign. "We demand that he leaves Mauritanians free to choose their own leaders at this difficult moment and reject all other alternatives," they said, in a statement quoted by AFP news agency. The statement also accused the president of rigging elections held in 2009 which confirmed him in power and refusing to hold a serious national dialogue with opposition groups. AFP said the protesters had dispersed by nightfall. There were occasional protests in Mauritania last year inspired by the Arab Spring uprisings across the region. In April, demonstrators were tear-gassed by police during a "day of rage" against the government. BBC News Africa

July 13, 2012: General Mohamed Ould Abdelaziz wins Mauritania election'

Mritania's military leader, Gen Mohamed Ould Abdelaziz, has been declared the winner of the country's presidential election. The interior minister announced he had won outright, with 52% of the vote in polls. Gen Abdelaziz seized power in a coup last year. Even before the results were announced, his challengers said the outcome had been "pre-fabricated" and called for an international inquiry. Earlier, one of the main opposition candidates, Messaoud Ould Boulkheir, told a news conference: "The results which are starting to come out show that it is an electoral charade which is trying to legitimize the coup." A statement from the group of four challengers read: "We firmly reject these pre-fabricated results, secondly we call on the international community to put in place an inquiry to shed some light on the electoral process." There were nine candidates in all. Voter turnout was 61%, the election commission said. The military coup of August 2008 ousted Mauritania's only democratically elected leader since independence in 1960, Sidi Ould Cheikh Abdallahi. He had been in power for less than a year and a half. BBC News Africa

Updates:- Ex-Quadhafi spy chief and brother in-law Abdullah Al-Senussi 'will not be extradited to Libya' Mauritania's president has said former Libyan intelligence chief Abdullah Al-Senussi must be tried there before being extradited. President Mohammed Ould Abdel Aziz said Mr. Al-Senussi, who fled after last year's uprising, must first face charges of illegal entry into Mauritania. Libya is seeking to try Mr. Senussi for crimes committed during his time as Muammar Al-Quadhafi's right-hand man. He is also wanted by France and the International Criminal Court. Mr. Al-Senussi was held at Nouakchott airport after flying in from Morocco in March, 2012 five months after the capture and death of Colonel Muammar Al-Quadhafi. Two months later he was charged for illegally entering the country and for the use of forged documents, judicial officials at the time said. "Al-Senussi has problems with Mauritania's judiciary and has to face court for entering Mauritania under a false identity," President Mohammed Abdel Aziz said overnight in the town of Atar. "The passport Al-Senussi used to enter Mauritania was not falsified but it presents him as Malian and under a fake name, which is why he must undergo trial in Mauritania," Mr. Abdel Aziz said, according to AFP news agency. He said the Mauritanian stance had already been made clear to Libyan and French officials. The BBC's correspondent in Mauritania says it is the first time the government has commented on the matter. In June 2011, the International Criminal Court (ICC) issued a warrant for the spy chief for crimes against humanity which he was alleged to have carried out in Benghazi, the main base of the Libyan opposition during the revolt last year. France has already sentenced Al-Senussi to life imprisonment for the shooting down of a UTA airliner over Niger in 1989. The interim government in Libya, meanwhile, wants him back on Libyan soil so he can stand trial for numerous allegations of murder and human rights abuses while he was Quadhafi's head of intelligence. Nicknamed "the butcher", Mr. Abdullah Al-Senussi was Quadhafi's brother-in-law and has been described as late Libyan leader's right-hand man. He has been implicated in Libya's infamous massacre in 1996, in which more than 1,000 inmates were killed at the Abu-Salim prison in Tripoli.

Side note: Mauritania head Mohammed Abdelaziz flies to France after shooting'

Mauritanian President Mohamed Ould Abdelaziz has been flown to France for medical treatment after he was shot in what officials say was an accident. He had surgery in the capital, Nouakchott, and will get more treatment at a French military hospital. Before leaving, Mr Abdelaziz, 55, appeared on television from his hospital bed to say he was OK. A military patrol is said to have mistakenly opened fire on the presidential convoy late on "I want to reassure the citizens of Mauritania that the operation I underwent yesterday [Saturday] evening was a success thanks to the efficiency of the medical team that carried it out," he said. Earlier, Communications Minister Hamdi Ould Mahjoub said Mr Abdelaziz was injured in the arm and that his life was not in danger. A medical source told AFP news agency that he had had a bullet removed. It was not clear what treatment he was going to receive in Paris, says BBC Arabic's Mohammad Taha in Nouakchott. The country is being run by the prime minister in the president's absence. He is expected to open an inquiry into the shooting and two army officers have reportedly been detained on suspicion of involvement. Assassination attempt? Initially, Mauritanian radio reported Mr Mohammed Abdelaziz had escaped an assassination attempt. Many Nouakchott inhabitants tend to believe the "shot by mistake" claims as they are used to seeing the president walk in the city, play sport and drive his car without guards, our correspondent says. Some local reports say the president was targeted by a militant group while travelling from Tweila, north of the capital, where he spends most weekends, our correspondent says. He was travelling overnight to the capital as the week starts in Mauritania on Sunday. President Abdelaziz came to power in a military coup in 2008 in the West African nation. He won presidential elections a year later held under an agreement with coup opponents. Mr Abdelaziz appeared on Mauritanian television before flying to Paris. The BBC's Mohammed Taha says coups and coup attempts are almost a normal part of life in Mauritania, with three in the last ten years. The military has been involved in nearly every government since the country became independent from France in 1960. The current president is seen by the West as a bulwark against Islamists in the region, particularly in neighbouring Mali. Mauritania launched a joint military operation with Mali last year against the bases of Islamist militants in Mali before a rebellion in that country this year split it in two and hardline Islamists occupied the the country's vast northern region. BBC News Africa (14 October, 2012)

Updates: General Mohammed Ould Abdelaziz came to power in a coup, but now heads an elected government' General Mohammed Ould Abdelaziz came to power by ousting emocratically-elected predecessor, President Sidi Ould Cheikh Abdallahi, in a military coup in August 2008.Nearly a year later, he won his own democratic mandate by being elected president in elections held under an agreement with coup opponents in July 2009.The official results gave Gen Abdelaziz 52%, well ahead of the second placed candidate, parliament speaker Messaoud Ould Boulkheir, who got 16%.The main opposition candidates claimed the result was fabricated and merely designed to legitimise Gen Abdelaziz's military rule, but international observers said the vote had been largely free and fair. Sid'Ahmed Ould Deye, the head of the Electoral Commission, resigned after expressing his own doubts about the result.After his win, the new president-elect said he would strengthen Mauritania's army to "fight terrorism in all its forms". Previously serving as President Abdallahi's chief of the presidential staff, he toppled his boss when Mr Abdallahi tried to dismiss him in August 2008, amid reports of a political rift between the two men.Gen Abdelaziz had also been instrumental in the 2005 coup that overthrew former President Maaouiya Ould Taya and installed the coup leader Ely Ould Mohammed Vall as president.President Abdallahi's overthrow was one of 11 coups or attempted coups since independence from France in 1960. He won a presidential vote in March 2007 to become Mauritania's first democratically-elected president since independence. he European Union early in 2010 decided to resume full cooperation with Mauritania following a restoration of constitutional rule. BBC News Africa 22 June, 2012

Accession to power of General Mohammed Ould Abdel Aziz - 6th August, 2008, by coup

Tentative election calendar-Presidential July/August.

Mauritania – Timeline Diaries updates and related key notes:

3rd-7th centuries AD - Berber and Arab migrants displace the original inhabitants of present-day Mauritania.

9-10th centuries - Empire of Ghana has its capital in present-day south-west Mauritania.

1076 - Berber Almoravid warriors defeat the Empire of Ghana.

1500s - European mariners and traders establish settlements.

1644-74 - Mauritanian Thirty-Year War: Berbers unsuccessful in repelling Arab warriors.

1850s-60s - French forces gain control of southern Mauritania. In 1898 France wins the allegiance of Moors in the region.

1904 - France establishes Mauritania as a colonial territory.

1920 - Mauritania becomes part of French West Africa, and is administered from Senegal.

1946 - Becomes a French overseas territory.

1957 - Nouakchott established as Mauritania’s capital.

1958 - Mauritania becomes self-governing.

November 28, 1960 - Mauritania becomes independent as Mukhtar Ould Dah Dah as president.

1960 - Mauritania makes territorial claims to neighbouring Spanish Sahara.

1973 - Mauritania joins the Arab League where based in Cairo, Egypt.

November 1976 - Mauritania and Morocco divided Spanish Sahara, now known as Western Sahara, after Spain pulls out. Guerrillas of the Polisario front, aiming to establish an independent state in the territory, fight the forces of both countries.

1978 - First post-independence president, Mukhtar Ould dah dah, is deposed in a military coup. The coup is prompted partly by the struggle against Polisario guerrillas and resulting financial strains.

1979 - Mauritania signs a peace agreement with the Polisario front and renounces its claim to Western Sahara. Morocco annexes Mauritania's former share of the territory.

1981 - Attempted coup; Moroccan involvement is alleged and Mauritania breaks ties with the country.

1984 - Coup brings Colonel Maaouiya Ould Sid Ahmed Taya to power.

1989 - Race riots erupt in Mauritania and Senegal after a border dispute. Tens of thousands of black Mauritanians are driven out of the country into Senegal.

Others become the targets of attacks and land seizures. Hundreds of people are killed.

1992 – Army Colonel Ould Taya becomes president.

1993 - US ends development aid over Mauritania's treatment of its black population and its support for Iraq in the 1991 Gulf War.

1997 - President Ould Taya re-elected in a poll boycotted by the main opposition parties.

September 2001 - Morocco's King Mohammed V visits - a turning point in the often-strained relations between the two countries.

January 2002 - Opposition party Action for Change, which campaigns for greater rights for blacks and descendants of slaves, is banned.

June 2002 - Country granted $1.1bn (£740m) in debt relief.

June 2003 - Attempted coup: Troops loyal to President Maaouiya Ould Taya regain control of the capital after heavy fighting with rebel soldiers.

October 2003 - First post-independence president, Mukhtar Ould Dad Dah, dies in Paris.

November 2003 - President Taya re-elected with 67% of vote in first round of elections. Opposition alleges fraud.

December 2003 - Former President Ould Haidallah is fined and given suspended prison sentence for plotting coup.

August 2004 - Army officers arrested in the wake of alleged coup plot.

September 2004 - Government says it has foiled a coup plot - the third in 15 months. In October President Taya accuses Libya and Burkina Faso of financing recent coup attempts.

January 2005 - UN calls for food aid in the wake of locust invasions in 2004. Mauritania was the African country worst hit, with its crop production obliterated.

June 2005 - Attack on an army base in the Sahara kills 15 soldiers. The government blames insurgents from Algeria.

August 4, 2005: The military overthrows President Abdallahi - the country's first democratically elected leader - and forms a state council to rule the country. The move came after the president tried to dismiss several senior army commanders.

Mauritanian president Maaoya Sid'Ahmed Taya was apparently deposed in a military coup on August 3rd. Taya himself came to power in a 1984 coup. He has ruled as a dictator since, despite some sham elections recently. Early on, Taya was an admirer of Saddam Hussein, and backed Iraq in the 1991 Gulf War. But after seeing Iraqi quickly crushed, Taya became an ally of the U.S.

Taya went further than that, and established relations with Israel, and cracked down on Islamic conservatives who opposed this move. After September 11, 2001, Taya supported American efforts against Islamic terrorists. In 2003, Taya faced down an unsuccessful military coup, one of many he has defeated over the years.

Mauritania is a large, dry country with only about three million people. Half the population is Arab, and half are black Africans. The country has long been one of those border areas between the Arab and black African worlds. Oil has been found in Mauritania, about $10-15 billion worth (at current prices.) But getting this oil out of the ground won't begin until next year. Currently there are some 500 foreign oil workers in the country, setting up the oil production operation. This oil wealth probably has something to do with the recent coup.

The UN, the African Union and most nations have condemned the coup. President Tava landed in neighboring Niger yesterday, and vows to regain power. This past June, American military personnel trained Mauritanian troops in counter-terrorism techniques. The Mauritanian armed forces are composed of about 15,000 troops, organized into twenty battalions and some smaller units. The army units are spread all over the country, and president Taya, with the help of some foreign nations, may be able to organize a counter-coup. Such an effort will rely more on cash than bullets. Meanwhile, most Mauritanians appeared to favor the removal of Taya and his small group of key supporters.

August 13, 2005: The August 3rd coup that ousted Mauritanian President Maaouiya Ould Sid Ahmed Tayas was a consequence of very complex Mauritanian tribal politics. There are two major ethnic groups in the country, Arabo-Mauritanians (sometimes termed “White” Mauritanians), in the north, and Afro-Mauritanians, in the south. Nearly all Mauritanians are Moslem, ranging from secular to conservative. Afro-Mauritanians have very little influence in the country.

Although the coup was initially reported as a possible Islamist response to Tayas’ pro-Western policies, both Tayas and Col. Ely Ould Mohammed Vall, who replaced him, are more or less secular Arabo-Mauritanians. The two men had formerly been close collaborators, and Vall had played a key role in the 1984 coup that brought Tayas to power. In return, in 1987, Tayas made Vall Director of National Security. Vall still held this post when the 17-member Council for Justice and Democracy ousted Tayas and named Vall president.

The roots of the coup seem to be tied up in tribal politics. There are 36 “White” Arabo-Mauritanian tribes. About a dozen of these are traditionally warrior peoples, and have high status in the informal caste system among the tribes. Tayas came from the relatively small Samossad tribe, traditionally merchants and traders rather than warriors. Vall is tied to one of the principal warrior clans, who, not incidentally, tend to be very over-represented in the country's armed forces. Apparently in recent years there has been rising resentment among the warrior tribes over the distribution of booty in the country, as Tayas was seen as increasingly favoring his own clan.

Tayas, who was attending the funeral of King Fahd of Saudi Arabia at the time, has been offered asylum in Niger, from which he had declared that he remains President and intends to return to his country. In a surprising development, the coup has been widely condemned in the Arab press (except by the Palestinians, because of Tayas' pro-Israel policies), and by the African Union collectively, and many African national leaders, despite the fact that several of the latter owe their positions to precisely the same process.

Meanwhile, France has placed its forces in Senegal, Chad, and Gabon (in each of which there is a small brigade-type task force) on alert for possible NEO (Non-combatant Evacuation Operation), and action in which the French are likely to be supported by the U.S. James Dunnigan

August 2005 - With President Taya out of the country, troops seize government buildings and a group of officers announces the overthrow of the president and the formation of a military council.

February 2006 - Offshore oil production at Chinguetti begins.

June 5, 2006: In Mauritania, the government has alerted some troops for possible operations on the frontier with Mali, after reports of clashes in northern Mali between Touareg tribesmen and local villagers. There are already some 35,000 Touareg refugees from Mali living in Mauritania, and Mauritania would prefer not to have any more. As an added incentive, the defeated Algerian Salafist movement, a violent Islamist sect, has had some influence among the Touareg. As a result, several countries in the region, including Mauritania and Mali, have concluded "hot pursuit" agreements. This became more than just a suspicion last month, as police went looking for three Algerian Islamic terrorists who escaped from jail in April 27th. The pursuit uncovered many other supporters of Islamic radicalism, and led to dozens of additional arrests over the past few weeks. Apparently, several major terror attacks were planned, including kidnapping foreigners and attacks on security forces. Mauritania had long resisted the idea that Islamic radicals were plentiful in the country. But the last few weeks has revealed a far different picture. Some of the men interrogated indicated long participation in Islamic terrorism, in one case back to the 1998 bombings of U.S. embassies in East Africa. American Special Forces have been in Mauritania, and the surrounding Sahel region, for several years, based on intelligence indicating this was an area al Qaeda would try to use for refuge. That is turning out to be the case.

June 2006 - Voters in a referendum approve constitutional changes which will limit the president to two five-year terms in office.

March 12, 2007: The American embassy posted a notice that Islamic terrorists might be trying to put bombs on commercial aircraft carrying Westerners in Algeria.

March 2007 - Presidential elections won by Sidi Ould Cheikh Abdallahi.

April 5, 2007: In Mauritania, police arrested three Algerians and four Mauritanians on terrorism charges. One of those arrested was in the Mauritanian army. Al Qaeda has been trying to establish bases in countries like Mauritania, just south of Algeria. Theterrorists have had some success, but have spent all their energy just surviving. April 4, 2007: For the lastweek, several thousand troops, backed by helicopters and fixed wing aircraft, have conducted sweeps of areas in eastern Algeria, where Islamic terrorists have been known to have rural camps. So far, about twenty suspects have been killed, several dozen arrested and as many as 70 forced to flee their camps. April 2, 2007: Russian weapons salesmen are negotiating a $7 billion deal with Algeria, to provide T-90 tanks, a modern air defense system and additional warplanes. March 13, 2007: Two Islamic terrorists were killed when the roadside bomb they were planting, east of thecapital, went off accidentally.

April 6, 2007: Police have arrested 120 men as terrorism suspects. These men were not planning operations in Algeria, but in Iraq. Some of the men had gone to Iraq to fight for al Qaeda, and survived to come back. But most of those arrested were recruiting volunteers, or had volunteered but not yet made the trip. Thegroup also raised money to pay fortransportation. Most of the volunteers who went to Iraq, never made it back.

April 2007 - Mauritania is readmitted to the African Union, having been suspended after the 2005 coup.

August 2007 - Parliament outlaws slavery, a practise still widespread in spite of a 1981 ban.

January 2008 - The 2008 Dakar Rally is cancelled following the murder of four French tourists in Mauritania in December, allegedly by attackers linked to al-Qaeda.

February 2008 - Gunmen fire at the Israeli embassy in the capital, Nouakchott. Seven people detained over attack released for lack of evidence.

April 2008 - Eight al-Qaeda suspects alleged to have been involved in killing of French tourists and attack on Israeli embassy are arrested.

May 2008 - Members of moderate Islamist opposition party join government for first time.

August 6, 2008: COUP: Mauritania: The Blue-faced Men of the Sahara) revealed that a top-secret gathering took place Wednesday, July 13, in one of the most out-of-the-way towns in the world, Nouakchott, capital of Mauritania. It was attended by linchpins of the services responsible for the war on al Qaeda, the American Central Intelligence Agency, the British domestic and foreign secret services, MI5 and MI6, and the security chiefs of Algeria, Mali, Mauritania and Niger. Last week too, a senior British official who specializes in intelligence and terrorism Kim Howells was dispatched to Morocco. Add these moves to the earlier DEBKAfile finding that the explosives came from Serbia and it is clear that the real investigation is focused on West Africa, the Balkans and the Middle East ? not Pakistan and Egypt. The Nouakchott meeting was indeed called by British anti-terrorist services after their experts concluded that the team of terrorists that blew up three Tube trains and a bus in London on July 7 received their orders, explosives and operating funds from al Qaeda?s West Africa arm. Very little is known about this remote wing of the Islamist group known as the West African Jam?a functions from deep inside the Sahara Desert under the command of Mukhtav bin Mukhtar, known also as the Blind One because he is one-eyed. Al Qaeda refers to this area of operations as Zone 9 and it is one of the most remote, bizarre and hazardous of all its sectors.

West African Jam? Members live in hiding among the strange Tuareg tribes, no more than a million strong, of the Sahara desert. Predominantly nomadic, these Berber-speaking people roam mostly through the northern reaches of Mali near Timbuktu and Kidal. The Tuareg are often referred to as the Blue Men of the Desert for their men?s indigo-dyed robes and blue face veils. These tribesmen have many uses for the fundamentalist terrorists. 1. They range across seven African countries: Algeria, Mali, Burkina Faso, northern Benin, large parts of Niger, Nigeria and Mauritania. Al Qaeda operatives traveling with the Tuareg have access to terrorists and smugglers away from prying eyes. In all these places, except for Algeria, security is lax. 2. For a terrorist moving around in northwest Africa, the blue veil is the perfect disguise. 3. Al Qaeda agents have learned some of the Tuareg tribes? Berber dialects and use them as a form of internal code to guard their secrets from Western ears. The West African Jam?a stages terrorist attacks only very rarely. Al Qaeda experts believe that even those few are carried out to divert attention from their main missions in the Sahara, which are the smuggling of arms, money and drugs. For instance, al Qaeda?s drug shipments from Afghanistan to Europe, a primary source of funding for terrorist attacks, are routed by the West Africa Jam?a through the Sahara. Some people in counter-terror agencies believe that if anyone knows where al Qaeda has stowed its nuclear materials, it would be bin Mukhtar, who rules the West African wing of the terror organization and is also exceptionally well-connected with Russian, Central Asian, Balkan and Persian Gulf mafias. Because of Its functions and connections, the West African Jam?a is al Qaeda?s operational arm in the international crime world.

September 2008 - Twelve soldiers killed in ambush claimed by al-Qaeda, which had called on Mauritanians to rise up against the coup leaders.

November 26, 2011: The EU (European Union) has agreed to send technology and police experts to help Mali, Niger and Mauritania deal with its growing Islamic terrorism problem.

November 28, 2011: Police arrested two men and accused them of participating in the kidnapping of three foreign aid workers last month.

December 4, 2011: In the Kabylie region, a hundred kilometers east of the capital, a doctor was released by kidnappers (who had taken him on November 15th.) The family says no ransom was paid. It’s illegal to pay ransom, and since last year, kidnappers have been forced to release their captives by a popular uproar in the region over kidnappings. There have been about 70 kidnappings in the region in the last six years, mainly by al Qaeda groups and for ransom.

December 5, 2011: Mauritanian police announced they had arrested two refugees from Algeria and charged them with participating in the kidnapping of three foreign aid workers in Algeria last month. The two men said their group had sold the three captives to al Qaeda.

December 6, 2011: Noting the electoral success of Islamic parties in neighboring Tunisia, Algeria refused requests to allow Islamic parties to again operate in Algeria. This ban has been in place since the 1990s Islamic terrorist effort to take control of the country. This terror campaign also made the Islamic radicals very unpopular, despite promises that their rule would reduce corruption and government mismanagement.

December 8, 2011: Al Qaeda has admitted it kidnapped five foreigners (two French, one Dutch, one Swede and a South African) last month in Mali. Al Qaeda denied responsibility for the recent kidnapping of three aid workers in Algeria. The terrorists claim the two French captives are spies and that all five were taken in revenge for al Qaeda members recently arrested in Mali. The terrorists are demanding ransom of over $20 million for each of the European captives. While there is public pressure in Europe to pay ransoms, the governments don't want to because they recognize that the money supports Islamic terrorism and encourages more kidnappings. The African governments oppose paying big ransoms as well, because the terrorists do most of their damage locally. To make matters worse, there are three factions in the AQIM and they don't always get along. Right now, the three factions are competing to see which one can kidnap for foreigners and gain the most ransom.

Mali, Niger and Mauritania see Algeria as part of the problem, because Algeria limits its cooperation with its neighbors, and will not allow foreign troops to pursue Islamic radicals into Algeria. Al Qaeda is less of a problem in Algeria than are the remnants of the Islamic terror groups that were a major threat in the 1990s. Algeria sees the Islamic terror groups in the far south as sand bandits and much less of a threat than the several hundred Islamic terrorists remaining in the north. One must also remember that Algeria is still run by a military dictatorship that did not appreciate the help the West gave to rebel movements in Tunisia and Libya. There, Algeria lost long-time allies, replaced by democratic governments which accuse Algeria of supporting the deposed dictators. The situation is likely to remain tense for a bit, and sand bandits are considered a distraction by Algeria.

The Wagadou Forest was one of their main base areas. Learning from their mistakes in Algeria (where Islamic radicals tried to use murder and terror to gain the cooperation of civilians), AQIM does not use violence against civilians unless attacked. AQIM spreads the money around and is polite. AQIM hires local men for support jobs and tries to recruit locals to become Islamic radicals. The locals are wary of al Qaeda, for they know of the death and destruction the group brings with it. People throughout the region know how savage the Algerian Islamic radicals were to civilians during the 1990s rebellion. But the people in the Sahel (the semi-desert south of the Sahara) are poor and the money is accepted, as long as the terrorists are peaceful. Some of the young tribesmen are tempted to join al Qaeda, much to the dismay of their parents and elders. Thus the government raids on al Qaeda bases is spurred in part by the fear that al Qaeda will gain control over the rural population and threaten the governments of the countries south of Algeria.

Over the last five years Al Qaeda been organizing a new chapter south of Algeria, among tribal rebels and disaffected urbanites in Niger, Mali, Chad and Mauritania. This was called Al Qaeda in the Maghreb (North Africa), or AQIM. This was more PR than reality at first. There are some Islamic terrorists in the region, and these pronouncements appear to be an attempt to unify pro-Islamic terrorist elements via the Internet and the mass media. So far, the many disaffected groups in the region have shown little interest in uniting, especially under the leadership of al Qaeda. Too many different objectives and al Qaeda has a reputation for being a loser. But the terrorists have extracted over a $100 million in ransoms from kidnapping Western visitors, and millions more by working for drug smugglers. This has enabled the group to expand from less than a hundred paid staff, to over 300. The money went to bribing local officials and tribal leaders, as well as buying vehicles, weapons, satellite phones and much more.

December 10, 2011: For the last six months, troops from Mauritania and Mali have been seeking out and killing al Qaeda members hiding in the Wagadou Forest (actually a thousand hectares /2,500 acres of brush and trees in a semi-desert area), which lies astride the border. Al Qaeda has apparently been there since early last year. The Wagadou Forest has become a way station for cocaine and hashish that al Qaeda escorts from Guinea-Bissau to the Mediterranean coast. This, and kidnap ransoms, is how al Qaeda finances itself in West Africa these days. Until this year, al Qaeda had an informal agreement with Mali, whereby al Qaeda would behave itself (no kidnappings or terror attacks) and the Mali government would leave the terrorists alone. But pressure from neighbors, NATO and the United States changed that, and Mali agreed to try and shut down al Qaeda operations.

December 11, 2011: The government has refused to allow American and French UAVs to cross the southern border while tracking drug gangs and Islamic terrorists. The UAVs are based in Libya and are patrolling the Libyan and Niger border areas.

Algeria and Mauritania signed a number of economic cooperation agreements. The appearance of MOJWA presents the possibility of a war among Islamic radical groups. MOJWAs three captives were taken at a Polisario refugee camp near the Moroccan border. The three European aid workers may have been taken with the help of some Polisario officials. This may have something to do with the declining prospects of Polisario, which has been in bad shape since 1991. Back then, Morocco finally won its war with Polisario Front rebels, who were seeking independence for the Western Sahara (a region south of Morocco). Polisario remained powerful in Mauritania, where the rebel group has official recognition and maintains several more refugee camps. Because Polisario was so well-subsidized by Algeria, back when Algeria was a radical state, Polisario still has enough diehards out there to keep a lot of people in Western Sahara unhappy. Polisario was known to provide recruits and sanctuary for al Qaeda and other Islamic radicals. For two decades, the UN has been trying to work out a final peace deal between Polasario and Morocco. In the 1990s Algeria cut off all support for Polasario. But that, and UN efforts to mediate the differences, have just not worked. The contested area is largely desert with a population of less than 300,000. Logic would have it that the area is better off as a part of Morocco. But there are still thousands of locals who would rather fight for independence rather than submit to Morocco. Some resistance is tribal and cultural, with the Moroccans seen as another bunch of alien invaders (the area was administered, until 1976, as a Spanish colony). If the fighting breaks out again, possibly inspired by Islamic radicals, it could go on for years, just as it does in many other parts of Africa and the immediate neighborhood. Getting involved in cocaine smuggling provides money, some of which goes towards buying guns and vehicles, making the Polisario fighters more formidable. Mali and Mauritanian police are increasingly arresting members of the Polisario Front who are involved with a major drug smuggling operation (moving cocaine from Guinea-Bissau, where it is flown in from South America, to the Mediterranean coast). Polisario Front members have long been involved in smuggling and other illegal activities but their involvement in moving cocaine is relatively recent. This implies cooperation with al Qaeda, which apparently has worked out deals with Polisario.

December 12, 2011: An al Qaeda splinter group, MOJWA (Movement for Oneness and Jihad in West Africa) announced itself by releasing a video of three European aid workers (a man and two women) they had kidnapped in an Algerian refugee camp last October. Actually, the three may have been kidnapped by a criminal group and then sold to Islamic radicals. MOJWA is unique because its leadership is black African. There has long been a lot of tension between Arabs and black Africans. The Arabs disdain the blacks and that causes a lot of tension and resentment. It appears that MOJWA is striving to show they can be more extreme and effective than the Arab dominated al Qaeda. MOJWA claims inspiration by 19th century West African Moslem leaders, who fought European colonial powers.

December 14, 2011: Separatist rebel group Polisario claims to have arrested several people involved with the kidnapping of three European aid workers in a Polisario refugee camp last October. Some of those arrested were taken by Polisario gunmen operating in Mauritania.

December 19, 2011: The government announced an agreement with Niger to carry out joint border patrols to help control the smugglers, gangsters, and Islamic terrorists operating along the border.

December 21, 2011: Without much fanfare, Algerian troops finally responded to calls from their southern neighbors and sent a convoy of troops into Mali to help with operations against Islamic terrorists.

December 26, 2011: The government has named a retired general to command police and army units assigned to counter-terrorism operations against the remaining al Qaeda and Islamic radical groups in Algeria, Libya, Niger, and Mali. While the Islamic terrorists have been greatly weakened in Algeria, some of them have crossed Algeria's southern borders and formed more Islamic terrorist cells by recruiting unemployed locals and raising lots of money via drug smuggling and kidnapping.

The president of Algeria, sensing something was very wrong, asked a prominent academic and former Minister of Health to go out and get a sense of what popular attitudes are. The professor reported that the people are very unhappy because the centralized economy is mismanaged, there is too much corruption and favoritism in the government, and the government officials are out-of-touch with the Algerian people. All this is nothing new to foreign observers of Algeria but it apparently was surprising to many senior government officials. The report warned of the remaining potential for a violent uprising. This may be avoided by the upcoming parliamentary elections, which will create a legislature whose main chore is to create a new constitution. This is expected to toss out the old elected dictatorship of families who were prominent in the fight against colonial France half a century ago. Many Algerians doubt that the old "revolutionary" families will give up power without a fight. Worse, Islamic political parties, recently made legal again, seem likely to win most of the votes in the April elections. This may lead to a second "Arab Spring."

December 29, 2011: Islamic terrorists, sustained by drug gang cash and kidnap ransoms, are growing south of Algeria. This includes the appearance of a more radical splinter group - MOJWA (Movement for Oneness and Jihad in West Africa). These two terror groups currently hold twelve Europeans for ransom and expect to get at least a million dollars for each of them. This would enable the terrorists to recruit a lot more impoverished young locals and equip them with vehicles and weapons. European nations are under pressure by African countries to not pay the ransom but to help track down the captives and rescue them (dead or alive). The European governments are under domestic pressure to pay the ransoms, as the voters back home are more concerned about the captive Europeans than North African victims to European financed terrorism.

July 29, 2012: In Benghazi someone murdered a former senior intelligence officer, who had joined the rebels early on. There are no suspects, other than families of those who may have lost kin to the Kaddafi intelligence services. That would be a long list of suspects.

Outside the city the convoy of a top military commander was fired on.

Someone raided a jail in Benghazi overnight and released an Islamic terrorist.

July 31, 2012: In Benghazi militia gunmen kidnapped seven Iranian aid workers. There were no ransom or any other demands made for the release of the Iranians. The militiamen only said that they were questioning the captives to see if they were in Libya to try and spread Shia Islam. Iran has the largest Shia population on the planet, but most Sunni Islamic radicals consider Shia heretics and often kill them. Iran has appealed to the UN to get its aid workers released.

August 1, 2012: In Benghazi someone threw a bomb out of a car in an attack on military headquarters. This time the explosion did not hurt anyone. This is the third such attack on this location this year.

In Tripoli there was a brief battle in a market place as two groups fought to see who would get a prime location. One person was wounded.

South of Tripoli police tracked down some of the men responsible for seven recent bombing attempts. The three would not surrender and were killed. Police captured weapons and bomb components.

August 5, 2012: For the fifth time in three months a Red Cross compound (this one in Misrata) was attacked. There were no injuries but the Red Cross halted its operations in Misrata and Benghazi (where earlier attacks had occurred). Islamic radicals are suspected as they object to the Red Cross (which is from non-Moslem countries) on religious grounds.

August 6, 2012: Mauritania refused a request to extradite Moamar Kaddafi's former intelligence chief, Abdullah al Senoussi back to Libya. Senoussi has been jailed in Mauritania, since last May, for trying to enter the country in disguise (as a Tuareg). Senoussi is wanted in Libya and France for various crimes. He is also a potential source of insider information on the Kaddafi government. It is believed that Mauritanian officials want a payoff to either extradite Senoussi or let him go free.

August 7, 2012: Libya is offering to allow over half a million Egyptians to return to their jobs in Libya if Egypr will give up assets former Libyan dictator Kaddafi and his cronies stashed in Egypt. This is a tempting offer. Like all oil-rich Arab states, Libya depended on skilled foreigners for key technical jobs (especially medicine and running the oil operations) and unskilled foreigners for the dirty jobs no Libyan wanted to do (garbage collection and unskilled labor tasks). Some foreign workers have already returned, relying for safety on the assurances of the company or local government they are working for.

At least 30 Libyan rebel fighters have made their way to Syria and joined the rebels there. Videos of the armed Libyans in Syria have been released on the Internet.

A major reason no one can get the government going is corruption. This bribery and theft was somewhat organized under Kaddafi, but now it's a free-for-all and too much money just disappears before it can be spent on needed goods or services. NTC officials found that local leaders could not be trusted and they would often steal much of the money they have been given for distribution to individuals and families. This lack of "civil society"

(enough people willing to work for the public good without stealing or engaging in other forms of corruption) is causing widespread anger and resistance to any new national government. While tribal leaders are more trustworthy, they will also steal. But not as much as strangers and at least you know who the tribal leaders are and who they are related to. Thus the resurgence of tribal politics, for the tribe is an ancient form of government that, in chaotic times, is often the only viable alternative.

August 8, 2012: As agreed, the NTC (National Transitional Council) has handed control of the government over to the recently elected parliament. Forming a new government and running the country won't be easy. There are still dozens of major militias that refuse to cooperate and many more armed groups that will be troublesome if they don't get their way. Attempts to disarm these groups have largely failed, as many militias are feuding with each other and have to contend with armed criminal gangs as well. Kaddafi is now fondly remembered as a bad person who at least kept the peace.

March 6, 2012: American intelligence agencies fear that the three largest Islamic terror organizations in Africa (al Qaeda, al Shabaab, and Boko Haram) are trying to arrange an alliance to pool capabilities and coordinate operations. There's no evidence of that but there's no doubt that the three groups know of each other and some members in each organization have been in touch with the others. Meanwhile, each of these groups is quite different, with unique origins, goals, and situations. A meaningful coalition of these groups is unlikely.

The oldest of these groups began forming a decade ago when several Islamic radical groups in Algeria, defeated in a 1990s rebellion, fled south and reformed. These men became the local al Qaeda franchise, calling themselves Al Qaeda in the Maghreb (North Africa), or AQIM. This effort included forming new chapters south of Algeria among tribal rebels and disaffected urbanites in Niger, Mali, Chad, and Mauritania. This was more PR than reality at first. There were already some Islamic terrorists in the region and these pronouncements appeared to be an attempt to unify pro-Islamic terrorist elements via the Internet and the mass media. So far, the many disaffected groups in the region have shown little interest in uniting, especially under the leadership of al Qaeda. Too many different objectives and al Qaeda has a reputation for being a loser. But the terrorists have extracted over $100 million in ransoms from kidnapping Western visitors and millions more by working for drug smugglers. This has enabled the group to expand from less than a hundred paid staff to over 300. The money went to bribing local officials and tribal leaders, as well as buying vehicles, weapons, satellite phones, and much more.

Last year, this also led to the formation of a more radical splinter group: MOJWA (Movement for Oneness and Jihad in West Africa). The appearance of MOJWA presented the possibility of a war among Islamic radical groups. MOJWAs, for example, recruited from an even older rebel group, Polisario, and that caused some problems. This may have something to do with the declining prospects of Polisario, which has been in bad shape since 1991. Back then, Morocco finally won its war with Polisario Front rebels, who were seeking independence for the Western Sahara (a region south of Morocco). Polisario remained powerful in Mauritania, where the rebel group has official recognition and maintains several more refugee camps. Because Polisario was so well-subsidized by Algeria, back when Algeria was a radical state, Polisario still had enough diehards out there to keep a lot of people in Western Sahara unhappy. Polisario was known to provide recruits and sanctuary for al Qaeda and other Islamic radicals. For two decades the UN has been trying to work out a final peace deal between Polasario and Morocco. In the 1990s Algeria cut off all support for Polasario. But that, and UN efforts to mediate the differences, have just not worked. The contested area is largely desert with a population of less than 300,000. Logic would have it that the area is better off as a part of Morocco. But there are still thousands of locals who would prefer to fight for independence rather than submit to Morocco. Some resistance is tribal and cultural, with the Moroccans seen as another bunch of alien invaders (the area was administered, until 1976, as a Spanish colony). If the fighting breaks out again, possibly inspired by Islamic radicals, it could go on for years, just as it does in many other parts of Africa and the immediate neighborhood. Getting involved in cocaine smuggling provides money, some of which goes towards buying guns and vehicles, making the Polisario fighters more formidable. Mali and Mauritanian police are increasingly arresting members of the Polisario Front who are involved with a major drug smuggling operation (moving cocaine from Guinea-Bissau, where it is flown in from South America to the Mediterranean coast). Polisario Front members have long been involved in smuggling and other illegal activities but their involvement in moving cocaine is relatively recent. This implies cooperation with al Qaeda, which apparently has worked out deals with Polisario. AQIM is a major player in the drug smuggling network that brings South American cocaine from Guinea-Bissau, where it is flown in from South America to the Mediterranean coast. But all that money, and radical groups with different agendas, could lead to terrorists terrorizing other terrorists.

In Somalia, al Shabaab recently announced a merger with al Qaeda. This was more PR than fact because al Shabaab, like all previous Islamic radical groups in Somalia is suffering defeat and splintering. Six years ago al Shabaab itself was the result of the Islamic Courts Union (ICU) moderates (ARS or Alliance for the Re-liberation of Somalia) splitting away and joining an attempt to form a new government in Somalia. The radicals in the ICU left and formed al Shabaab. Other remnants of the ICU fled to Eritrea or formed smaller radical groups (which were later destroyed by, or absorbed into, al Shabaab). The ICU itself goes back to the 1990s, when religious leaders formed militias in an attempt to reduce the banditry and feuding rampant in the country. The ARS wanted to keep Islamic terrorists out of the country in return for more foreign aid. Al Shabaab offered to shelter al Qaeda and help establish a worldwide Islamic government. Somalia became a base for many al Qaeda members chased out of Pakistan and Arabia, although many of those men have since fled to Yemen to escape the many peacekeepers and local militias pressing in on al Shabaab.

Boko Haram formed in the Moslem north of Nigeria about five years ago. Modeling themselves on the Taliban, Boko Haram became larger, and more violent, because of popular anger at rampant corruption and mismanagement in Nigeria. Some Boko Haram leaders were spotted in Somalia several years ago, and others are known to have been in contact with al Qaeda members from West Africa. But for the moment Boko Haram is intent on turning Nigeria (which is half Christian) into an Islamic dictatorship.

The three Islamic terror organizations described here cover a vast area (from the Atlantic Ocean coast of West Africa to the Indian Ocean coast of East Africa) as well as numerous very different cultures. While involved are Islamic radicals, only AQIM is Arab (or at least most of them) while Boko Haram and Somalis are black Africans (generally despised by Arabs). Moreover, the Somalis consider themselves Arabs, which creates even more tension.

April 4, 2012: Mauritania denied that it had agreed to turn over Kaddafi's secret police chief, Abdullah Al Senussi. While Mauritania had arrested Senussi for entering the country (from Morocco) on a false passport on the 16th, they are under no obligation to honor a Libyan extradition request. If Senussi can muster enough cash and friends he can escape to whichever sanctuary he was headed for. Libya and many Western and Arab intelligence agencies want to talk to Senussi, who was the keeper of Kaddafi's most embarrassing and explosive secrets (involving torture, terror, and dirty deeds in general). Mauritania is under pressure from many nations to turn over Senussi. One of the things foreigners would like to discuss with Senussi was a recently discovered (by the NTC) Kaddafi program to store weapons and bomb making materials at many Libyan embassies around the world. These weapons were to be used to kill Libyan expatriates who were causing Kaddafi problems and support local terrorists who were working for Kaddafi. Senussi is believed to have been involved with this embassy terrorism support program, which has been in place for decades. James Dunnigan

November 24, 2012: Mauritania’s president returns home after shooting'

The president of Mauritania Mohamed Ould Abdelaziz has returned home for the first time since being wounded by one of his own soldiers last month. President Abdelaziz was shot in the arm by a Mauritanian army soldier in what the government said was an accident. He had been in France for the last six weeks receiving treatment. Thousands of people gathered at the airport to greet the president on his return to the capital Nouakchott. Large crowds also lined the route between the airport and the presidential palace. Reporters present said the 55-year-old leader appeared to be in good health, and waved to crowds from his car, though he gave no statement. The soldier responsible for shooting the president told Mauritanian television last month that he had fired on a car that appeared suspicious while guarding a military base outside Nouakchott, failing to realise that one of the occupants was the president. President Abdelaziz seized power in a coup in 2008, in a country with a long history of coups. He won a presidential election a year later and is seen by Western governments as a bulwark against Islamists in the region.

February 4, 2013:Mauritania: Oulad Bou Sbaas deep into mining’

AFRICA MINING: Since President Mohamed Ould Abdel Aziz came to power in 2009, a number of members of his Oulad Bou Sbaa tribe have obtained key posts in the Mauritanian administration. Ahmed Salem Ould Tekrour, formerly of Société Mauritanienne des Hydrocarbures (SMH) and former technical adviser for the promotion and development of the Ministry of Petroleum, Energy and Mining (MPEM), has been promoted head of hydrocarbons at the ministry. There was a similar promotion in 2010 in the private sector for Melainine Ould Towmy, an Oulad Bou Sbaa who became head of external relations at Kinross, operator of the giant Tasiast gold mine, near the southern border of Western Sahara. Finally, Kemal Ould Mouhamedou, a cousin of President Abdel, has become the representative of the State at Tullow Oil, the company developing the Banda gas field.

At the same time, numerous sub-contracts have been switched from companies like MAOA and AON, which are owned by members of the Smassides tribe of former president, Maaouiya Ould Taya, to Oulad Bou Sbaa entrepreneurs like the Azizi family. As a result, business men deprived of mining service contracts denounce the apparently unstoppable rise to prominence of figures close to the president. Against this background, the Ministry of Petroleum, Energy and Mining headed by Taleb Ould Abdivall, a member of the influential Idawali tribe and apolitical, gives the impression of being a haven of neutrality. Ould Abdivall is professional and has built up his own network of advisers, who are often graduates, like him of the University of Nancy in France.

Which continent did the Moors come from?

Thomas de La Marnierre (トマ・サレ)

I have a baccalaureate in History. Updated July 17

Moor is derived from the Latin name Maurus, itself derived from Μαῦρος in Greek. This is how the Greeks and the Romans collectively called the inhabitants of the extreme west of North Africa. In the details however, they had specific names for each tribe as well.

Note it was not their name for all of North Africa (which was understood as Lybia I think due to the Greeks). The Romans acknowledged a Mauretania, a Numidia, an Africa (only our modern Tunisia basically), a Cyrenaica, and an Ægiptus (Egypt).

They were annexed rather late by the Romans, not at the time of the Republic like most Roman possessions. The modern territory called Mauretania is only having this name as a relic of how the Romans called the places, which had more resonance in Western cultures than anything you could say in Arabic. Remember that when the French and the Spaniards were present in the region, they were constantly reading the old Roman accounts of the area and were looking for similarities between then and now.

The Romans had two provinces in that region of Mauretania…

then three…

And when Diocletian created new “dioceses”, a part of Mauretania was included in the diocese of Hispania.

So in the Latin-writing world, the Moors were the traditional name for the indigenous (berber) population of the general area of our current Morocco.

So when islamized berbers from that region of Mauretania conquered the Iberian peninsula later, naturally, they were called by the name they were known with. The Moors came to be understood as the muslims present in the old Hispania, and eventually muslims in general.

Muslims had all sort of names in Europe like Moors, Saracens, Arabs, Mahomedans, Musulmans or Muslims, or for the privateers of North Africa, the Barbaresques. The people then did not necessarily speak with very precise terms.

The opposite was true as well. The said muslims would call every West European they would meet “Franks” or every Greek speaker or Christian in general “Rum” (Romans).

Because the muslims had a certain number of blacks in their realms (like the Zandj they enslaved and captured in the region of the horn of Africa), “moor” in Europe also came to mean “black”. Note that it was not just the blacks that were slaves in Arab societies. The berbers (so the actual Moors) were also valued slaves. The Arabs liked in particular their girls, that would apparently make great singers. There were also Armenians or Chrisitians from Iberia. So moors could be a lot of things… berbers… muslims… inhabitants of Africa in general… and blacks…

In many European countries, a traditional heraldic charge is the “head of Moor”, in which the said Moor is black. It’s particularly associated to Corsica and Sardinia.

It's supposed to represent Saint Maurice, a Christian martyr originating from Thebes in Egypt that would have been beheaded by the Romans. Mauricius as a name is derived from Moor, so the Germans came to believe that he was necessarily black due to that name. He was not always represented as black but it became the dominant representation of him at the end of the Middle Ages.

If you are confused, that's normal. The Europeans of back then were confused as well.

Related Links

Were the North Africans known as Moors black? Why or why not?
Who were the Moors of Al-Andalus?
Is it true that the black moors ruled over Spain and other parts of Europe?
What race were the Moors?
How far north did the Moors get in Europe?

A Black Hebrew Israelite told me that Moors (all black people) civilized all of Europe and

What are the most ironic facts you know?

Mugisha Benjamin Safari B.A Computer Engineering (2022) Originally Answered Updated Dec 2, 2017

This was actually both funny and surprising to learn considering I've lived in Africa all my life. So without further ado, here is the weird fact.

Some of you are probably wondering why I put this picture here or why I consider it ironic. Here's the irony:

Did you know that the healthiest food in the world is African food.

I confess that I laughed when I learned of this.

Related Links

What are the best examples of irony?
What is the biggest irony in history?
Irony: Is there anything wrong with living ironically?
What are some things about society that are ironic to you?
What is ironic about "ironic beards"?
What are the most ironic ways people have died throughout history?

Question posée par Adama Keita, Nouakchott, Mauritanie

Le nom « Guinée » est fort ancien. Dès le XVe siècle, les Européens l'utilisaient pour désigner la côte occidentale de l'Afrique. Il aura un tel succès que les Anglais baptiseront en 1622 Guinea une pièce de monnaie frappée avec de l'or provenant de ladite côte.

L'étymologie du mot, en revanche, n'est pas établie. Certains historiens avancent qu'il viendrait de Djenné, au Mali. Un atlas catalan de 1320 ne désigne-t-il pas sous le nom de Guinuia les habitants de la grande cité de la boucle du Niger ? Les marchands de Djenné auraient donné le nom de leur ville à toute la région.

Selon une autre version, l'appellation viendrait des Berbères du Sahara, qui utilisaient l'expression Akal-n-Iguinaouen (« le pays des Noirs ») pour évoquer l'Afrique subsaharienne, tout comme, plus tard, les Arabes parleront de Bilad es-Sudan.

En Guinée même, une tradition veut que le mot vienne du soussou, une des langues du pays. À des marins portugais qui leur demandaient le nom du lieu où ils débarquaient, des habitantes de la côte, comprenant la question de travers, auraient répondu qu'elles étaient des femmes (djine).

Pourquoi les mauritaniens noirs n'ont pas de passeport ?

Guillaume Lang Suivre Assistant manager de logistique interne chez Unilever (société) (2019–aujourd'hui) Mis à jour le 2 ans

La Mauritanie repose sur un très ancien système de castes quasi unique au monde, on peut le comparer au système indien mais même celui-ici est bien plus égalitaire. Lors de l'arrivée des colons arabes en Mauritanie, ceux-ci ont mis la population noire autochtone en esclavage, sur le système européen d'alors.

Cependant, quand en Europe l'esclavage est aboli depuis des siècles, ce n'est toujours pas le cas en Mauritanie. Les lois promulguées contre l'esclavage ne sont respectées par personne et le gouvernement ne peut pas ni ne veut pas agir contre ce phénomène de masse.

"L'esclavage est un commandement de Dieu"

Il y a donc aujourd'hui en Mauritanie un système de castes par lesquel certaines familles sont des "Maîtres" et ont à leurs disposition des esclaves provenant de la minorité noire. Ces esclaves ne sont pas capturés comme en Libye mais naissent tels quels et ne changeront jamais de statut jusqu'à leur mort.

On considère aujourd'hui qu'environ 2 % de la population mauritanienne sont des esclaves. Ces esclaves sont les autochtones noirs ayant survécu au génocide arabe ; en tant que minorité, ils se doivent désormais de servir la majorité. En tant que tel, un esclave n'a pas besoin de passeport.
Suivre Guillaume Lang

Questions similaires

Comment vous sentez-vous mauritanien ?
Est-ce que les mauritaniens comprennent l'arabe marocain facilement ?
Quelle nationalité a le meilleur passeport pour voyager ?

L'évolution dit que les Blancs ont évolué à partir des Noirs, mais cela pourrait-il être l'inverse ?

Les scientifiques peuvent-ils prouver que les Noirs n'ont pas évolué à partir des Blancs ?

Pourquoi les Africains (Noirs) sont-ils devenus le peuple le plus opprimé de l'histoire ?

Pourquoi les non-noirs les considéraient-ils inférieurs depuis la nuit des temps ?

Est-ce que les Berbères marocains sont noirs ?

Pourquoi la plupart des hommes noirs préfèrent les femmes blanches, arabes ou asiatiques ?

Pourquoi le Maroc a-t-il abandonné Lagouira aux autorités mauritaniennes ?

Qu'est-ce qu'on ne voit qu'au Maghreb et pas ailleurs ?

Pourquoi les pays magrébins refusent-ils de reprendre leurs ressortissants entrés clandestinement sur le territoire français ?

Pourquoi n'y a-t-il pas davantage de Noirs américains qui visitent l'Afrique ?

Ma mère a un passeport camerounais et elle a fait une demande de passeport français. Le passeport français n’est pas arrivé. Peut-elle voyager avec le passeport camerounais ?

Pourquoi les Africains subsahariens traitent-ils les Nord-africains comme s'ils n'étaient pas africains ?

Une femme mariée enceinte peut-elle obtenir un visa / passeport et séjourner en France ?

Pourquoi les gens avec des origines étrangères ont-ils des prénoms français sauf les maghrébins ?

Pourquoi les mauritaniens noirs n'ont pas de passeport ?

Guillaume Lang Suivre

Assistant manager de logistique interne chez Unilever (société) (2019–aujourd'hui) Mis à jour le 2 ans

La Mauritanie repose sur un très ancien système de castes quasi unique au monde, on peut le comparer au système indien mais même celui-ici est bien plus égalitaire.

Lors de l'arrivée des colons arabes en Mauritanie, ceux-ci ont mis la population noire autochtone en esclavage, sur le système européen d'alors.

Cependant, quand en Europe l'esclavage est aboli depuis des siècles, ce n'est toujours pas le cas en Mauritanie. Les lois promulguées contre l'esclavage ne sont respectées par personne et le gouvernement ne peut pas ni ne veut pas agir contre ce phénomène de masse.

"L'esclavage est un commandement de Dieu"

Il y a donc aujourd'hui en Mauritanie un système de castes par lesquel certaines familles sont des "Maîtres" et ont à leurs disposition des esclaves provenant de la minorité noire. Ces esclaves ne sont pas capturés comme en Libye mais naissent tels quels et ne changeront jamais de statut jusqu'à leur mort.

On considère aujourd'hui qu'environ 2 % de la population mauritanienne sont des esclaves. Ces esclaves sont les autochtones noirs ayant survécu au génocide arabe ; en tant que minorité, ils se doivent désormais de servir la majorité. En tant que tel, un esclave n'a pas besoin de passeport.
Suivre Guillaume Lang

Questions similaires

Comment vous sentez-vous mauritanien ?
Est-ce que les mauritaniens comprennent l'arabe marocain facilement ?
Quelle nationalité a le meilleur passeport pour voyager ?

L'évolution dit que les Blancs ont évolué à partir des Noirs, mais cela pourrait-il être l'inverse ? Les scientifiques peuvent-ils prouver que les Noirs n'ont pas évolué à partir des Blancs ?

Pourquoi les Africains (Noirs) sont-ils devenus le peuple le plus opprimé de l'histoire ? Pourquoi les non-noirs les considéraient-ils inférieurs depuis la nuit des temps ?

Est-ce que les Berbères marocains sont noirs ?

Pourquoi la plupart des hommes noirs préfèrent les femmes blanches, arabes ou asiatiques ?

Pourquoi le Maroc a-t-il abandonné Lagouira aux autorités mauritaniennes ? Qu'est-ce qu'on ne voit qu'au Maghreb et pas ailleurs ?

Pourquoi les pays magrébins refusent-ils de reprendre leurs ressortissants entrés clandestinement sur le territoire français ?

Pourquoi n'y a-t-il pas davantage de Noirs américains qui visitent l'Afrique ?

Ma mère a un passeport camerounais et elle a fait une demande de passeport français. Le passeport français n'est pas arrivé. Peut-elle voyager avec le passeport camerounais ?

Pourquoi les Africains subsahariens traitent-ils les Nord-africains comme s'ils n'étaient pas africains ?

Une femme mariée enceinte peut-elle obtenir un visa / passeport et séjourner en France ?

Pourquoi les gens avec des origines étrangères ont-ils des prénoms français sauf les maghrébins ?

What makes the Fulani people distinct amongst other tribes in sub-Saharan Africa?

Françoise Marie Master's Degree in Public Administration, Syracuse University Updated Jan 1

The Fulani of Mauritania are not "Sub-Saharan" people.

The focus on the Fulani is always intentional.

The Fulani are an elongated type of Africans. Some of the biggest names in the fashion industry in Europe are of Fulani descent.

They don't look like "stereotypical Negroes". The Fulani have passed down traditions on their "Middle Eastern" ancestors who were companions of the Prophet Muhammad as they converted to Islam very early on. The Fulani are Amazigh (Berbers)'s Saharan cousins. Some of the Moorish leaders and soldiers in Al Andalus (Muslim Spain) were, in fact, Fulani.

The Fulani have a brilliant history and Europeans wrote volumes about them.

They are found in Saharan Africa (Mauritania), West Africa (every country), in East Africa (Eritrea) and in Central Africa (as far as northeastern DRC as the Mbororo).

The Great Fulani Empire

Introduction / History

The Pulaar (or Tukulor) are thought to have descended from the Fulani and the Wolof or Serere tribes. The name "Tukulor" is derived from the word Takrur. This term was used by Arab geographers to describe an eleventh century realm near the middle Senegal River Valley. Today, the Tukulor are known by a number of names, including Pulaar and Haal. They have retained their respective languages, and many are also bilingual in Arabic. While the majority of Pulaar Fulani live in Senegal, another significant group lives in Guinea, where they comprise a very small percentage of the population. There are also small numbers of Pulaar Fulani in Mali and Mauritania.

What Are Their Lives Like?

Most Pulaar live a rural life. They raise livestock, farm, and fish. They live in small villages in round huts made of clay or rough bricks, with straw roofs. Their dietary staples include rice, millet, sorghum, fish, nuts, and fruit. A steadily rising population and an unequal distribution of land have resulted in the emigration of large numbers of Pulaar (particularly youth) to the cities in search of better job opportunities. Traditional Pulaar society is divided into four main social classes, each having twelve "castes. " Their social life is a mixture of local customs and Islamic traditions. Neither Islam, the effects of colonization, nor the goals of various national leaders have been able to erase the old social divisions. The torobe are the aristocratic class. Villages are governed by a group of elders from this caste. The middle class, or rimbe, is made up of fishermen, farmers, tradesmen, and administrators. The middle class includes the craftsmen, and the lower class includes the freed slaves and the slaves. Social status rarely changes. The Pulaar marry within their class divisions, women usually between the ages of 16 and 18, and men between the ages of 25 and 30. Although it is uncommon, a man may have up to four wives. Families are generally large, with an average of six children per family. Pulaar women often wear large embedded pieces of wood in the soft lobes of their ears and have two small facial slits near the outside corners of both eyes. Although female genital mutilation is becoming increasingly illegal, over half of Pulaar girls from the ages of three to nine undergo ritual genital circumcision in order to be considered "clean" and worthy of marriage.

What Are Their Beliefs?

The Pulaar Fulani first accepted Islam in the eleventh century. Traditional Muslim beliefs such as the nature of man and his destiny after death play a significant role in the people's outlook on life. Muslim brotherhoods teach a mystical approach to Islam: the people seek closer relationships to God through rituals, prayer, and other techniques. Islam has not brought any major changes to Pulaar attitudes toward spiritism and magic. The people use charms, amulets and witchcraft. The Pulaar attribute supernatural powers to various Muslim clerics who practice divination, the use of supernatural powers.

What Are Their Needs?

Islam has enormous penetration into every aspect of Pulaar life. A somewhat isolated people with minimal exposure to other religious ideas, the Pulaar view the world and gain their personal identities from their rigid beliefs in the Islamic family and community. They are extremely reluctant to leave the world they know. Decreasing income from the sale of agricultural products, encroachment by the Sahara Desert on farmland, deforestation, and increasing population are resulting in extreme financial concerns for the Pulaar Fulani. Nearly all village water sources are polluted. Malaria and infectious diseases inflict a heavy toll each year. Although there is some literacy among the aristocracy, most of the Pulaar are illiterate.

Prayer Points

Scripture Prayers for the Fulani, Pulaar in Mauritania.Pray for the Lord to provide for the Pulaar Fulani so well that they acknowledge his goodness and power. Pray for the Lord to intervene among the Pulaar Fulani in Mauritania in such a way that they will become open to accepting the lordship of Christ. Pray for Holy Spirit anointed workers to go to the Pulaar Fulani. Pray for a Disciple Making Movement among the Pulaar that will spread to other Fulani groups.

Koumbi Saleh...Atlanta Black Star
The Songhai Empire - Africa's Age of Gold

A 15th century depiction of the 11th century Almoravid general Abu Bakr ibn Umar ("Rex Bubecar") near the Senegal River in 1413 Majorcan chart. Abu Bakr was known for his conquests in Africa.

Tichit - Mauritania cities - Cheapest way

geozet.net

Speaking of the Songhay Empire, it is the largest empire in African history. As someone rightly put it : the Songhai empire (1493-1591), extending from the Atlas Mountains to southern Cameroon, rivaled the Aztec and Inca empires in terms of geographical extent, diversity of population, and natural resources.

Today, the Songhai Empire is all but forgotten by history. But this medieval kingdom was once the most powerful force in Africa. Find out how this civilization grew up on the fringes of the Sahara Desert, among some of the most extreme conditions that nature can throw at us. Discover how it grew and flourished, passing through a process known as the imperial cycle, and learn about what ultimately caused its sudden and dramatic collapse.

Koumbi Saleh Mauritania - Google Search

https://www.google.com/search?q=Koumbi+Saleh+Mauritania&rlz=1C1GCEB_enCD938CD939&source=lnms&tbm=isch&sa=X&ved=2ahUKEwiv_umP2Mz1AhWYQ0EAHZazDc4Q_AUoAXoECAIQAw&biw=1280&bih=609&dpr=1.5

https://face2faceafrica.com/article/a-look-at-the-9th-century-african-city-that-was-buried-under-modern-day-mauritania

A look at the 9th century African city that was buried under modern-day Mauritania

Koumbi Saleh or Kumbi Saleh was a ruined city at the site of modern-day southeast Mauritania. Koumbi was found to include buildings several stories high made of stone and an unidentified mosque. It was found in 1914 and existed between the 9th and 14th centuries. Koumbi was also a trading epi-center. Koumbi is believed to have been...

Koumbi Saleh or Kumbi Saleh was a ruined city at the site of modern-day southeast Mauritania. Koumbi was found to include buildings several stories high made of stone and an unidentified mosque. It was found in 1914 and existed between the 9th and 14th centuries. Koumbi was also a trading epi-center.

https://mpra.ub.uni-muenchen.de/27203/1/MPRA_paper_27203.pdf
Ecology, trade and states in pre-colonial Africa

The first Kanuri Empire, apart from its administrative and economic prowess was noted for its diplomatic relations with North African states particularly with Tunisia. During the flourish of the second Kanuri Empire of Kanem-Bornu, Mai Idris Aloma was also noted for his expansionist policy, his diplomatic strategy, and system of war by proxy without always resorting to naked force to expand his territories. He employed the tactics of giving military support to a friendly state to harass another state hostile to Bornu. An example was the support he gave to the Kotoko, the neighbours of Tetala to harass the Tetala by continous invasions with their boats until the Tetala retreated into the swamps of the Lake Chad RELATIONS AMONG OTHER ISLAMIC STATES OF NORTH AFRICA, INCLUDING THE SUDAN As stressed before, what bonded the Muslim nations in Africa was the Arab culture, religion, and trade—both in legitimate commodities such as gold, salt, and diamonds and the illegitimate trade of slaves. These types of commerce were exchanged between and among Arab states as well as between Arab and African states. In those early years, the trade, religion, and culture of Islam spread across the Sahara to the west and northwest of Africa, as well as to East Africa where the Sudan, the largest country in Africa, lay both in the eastern and northern parts of Africa. Thus, Ghana, Niger, Mali, Mauritania, Gao, Nigeria, and other West African states established contacts with the Arab dynasties mentioned previously in this chapter that had empires in Morocco, Algeria, Tunisia, Egypt, and other parts of the Maghreb. These states discussed diplomatic and inter-state relations, including border disputes. The Sudanese states became strongly Islamic and created many fruitful relations with the Maghreb and West African city-states.

RELATIONS AMONG OTHER ISLAMIC STATES OF NORTH AFRICA, INCLUDING THE SUDAN

As stressed before, what bonded the Muslim nations in Africa was the Arab culture, religion, and trade—both in legitimate commodities such as gold, salt, and diamonds and the illegitimate trade of slaves. These types of commerce were exchanged between and among Arab states as well as between Arab and African states. In those early years, the trade, religion, and culture of Islam spread across the Sahara to the west and northwest of Africa, as well as to East Africa where the Sudan, the largest country in Africa, lay both in the eastern and northern parts of Africa. Thus, Ghana, Niger, Mali, Mauritania, Gao, Nigeria, and other West African states established contacts with the Arab dynasties mentioned previously in this chapter that had empires in Morocco, Algeria, Tunisia, Egypt, and other parts of the Maghreb. These states discussed diplomatic and inter-state relations, including border disputes. The Sudanese states became strongly Islamic and created many fruitful relations with the Maghreb and West African city-states.

A look at the 9th century African city that was buried under modern-day Mauritania

Koumbi Saleh or Kumbi Saleh was a ruined city at the site of modern-day southeast Mauritania. Koumbi was found to include buildings several stories high made of stone and an unidentified mosque. It was found in 1914 and existed between the 9th and 14th centuries. Koumbi was also a trading epi-center.

Koumbi is believed to have been the capital of the Ghana Empire. Nevertheless, the capital was later moved 200 miles away. The Ghana Empire otherwise known as Awkar existed from 700 to 1240. It was situated in present-day southeastern Mauritania and western Mali. The empire was known for gaining wealth from gold and salt. It also maintained a prominent Islamic influence.

Artifacts of Koumbi exhibit strong connections to the Maghreb or the Berber; a section of North Africa.

Koumbi consisted of two towns that were six miles away from each other. One side housed Muslim traders and the other inhabited the King of Ghana. There were 12 mosques. Wells in the town stored water fit for growing vegetation. The buildings were rounded, made of stone and acacia wood and constricted. Contained in the Sahel region, Koumbi was 19 miles north of the Malian border and 61 miles northwest of the town Nara located in Mali. There were two cemeteries which were evidence that habitation in the town occurred over a significant amount of time.

The initial excavation of Koumbi occurred in 1914 to be proceeded with three excavations between 1949 to 1951, 1975 to 1976 and from 1980 to 1981. The town was spacious enough to inhabit 15,000 to 20,000 residents.

In the 1300s, Koumba was destroyed by the Mande emperor, Sundiata. It was then incorporated into the Mali Empire.

Related Links

Why is Sudan mistaken for North Africa when in actuality it’s in East Africa?
Are people from North Africa considered black?
What is The original people in North Africa?
Is it true that North Africa has more in common with the Middle East than with the rest of Africa, and if true has that always been the case?
Why didn't North Africa become part of Europe?

Europeans have many times been able to fully integrate these lands into Europe. Take full control of the Mediterranean. Looks good.

Why is Sudan considered part of northern Africa when Mauritania, Mali, Niger and Chad aren't?

Why is North Africa excluded in any conversation relating to the continent as a whole?
Why was WW2 taken into North Africa?

How Latinized was Western North Africa before the Arab conquest of the region?
Is Africa considered to be part of the Eastern or Western world?

Why did Ethiopia move from Sudan to the south of Sudan and Mauritania move from Morocco and Algeria to south of them?

Related Links

Why was Ethiopia never invaded during the Islamic Conquests just like Somalia and Sudan?

Why are Sudan and Somalia considered part of the greater Middle East, but Ethiopia is not?

Why are Sudan Somalia, Djibouti, Eritrea, and Mauritania considered Arab countries?

Is Ethiopia's northernmost region of Tigray on the path to becoming another breakaway state like Eritrea and replace South Sudan as the newest African nation?

What country has the least corruption between Egypt, Morocco, Libya, Algeria, Maghreb, Tunisia, Mauritania, Sudan, South Sudan, Ethiopia, Somalia, or Entrea?

When will Ethiopia and Eritrea be one country again?

Would there be a peaceful way for Ethiopia to gain a patch of land from Eritrea, Djibouti, Somaliland or Somalia and cease being landlocked?

Why do Sudan and Ethiopia have a bad relationship?

Are these periphery nations such as Somalia, Niger, Eritrea, both Sudans, Mauritania, Djibouti, Mali, Chad and Western Sahara/Southern Morocco Arab?

Why did the people of South Sudan and Eritrea wage a long war to become independent from Sudan and Ethiopia even though many of their citizens prefer to apply for asylum in Italy?

Is Cush Ethiopia or Sudan? When I read in some websites it refers to ancient Ethiopia and another websites it referring to Sudan.

What events led to South Sudan voting for its independence from Sudan?

What are the notable similarities and dissimilarities between Eastern hamites (Egypt, Ethiopia, Sudan & Somalia) & Western hamites (Lybia, Tunisia, Algeria, Morocco & Mauritania)?

How are things going so far between Egypt, Sudan, and Ethiopia concerning the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam? Will there be any military interventions in the near future?

What is the history behind border's frequent confrontations between Sudan and Ethiopia?

Les stars d'Afrique
Tension entre la Mauritanie et le Mali
David-GDK · Suivre Publication par jeu.

Même si les autorités mauritaniennes n'ont pas précisé la nature des actes qui ont causé la mort de ses ressortissants, un député indique que 15 de ses compatriotes auraient été tués dans la zone frontalière au sud d'Adel Bagrou, située dans l'est de la Mauritanie. Par ailleurs, selon des enregistrements audio, ce sont une trentaine de Mauritaniens qui auraient été tués.

Sidi Abdel Malik, chercheur au Centre Mauritanien des études et recherches stratégiques de Nouakchott affirme qu'"il y a eu des opérations qui ont été menées à l'aveuglette, pour lutter contre le terrorisme. L'armée malienne est une armée qui manque de contrôle en ce moment. Et de plus, elle veut faire des frappes rudes pour prouver qu'elle a commencé à reprendre le terrain avec l’appui des Russes. Avec la répétition de ces opérations contre les Mauritaniens, les relations entre les deux pays vont s’envenimer. Surtout, si Bamako n’arrive pas à juguler ses forces armées d'arrêter les séquestrations et les opérations qui ciblent les citoyens Mauritaniens sur le territoire Malien".

Relations de bon voisinage

Le porte-parole du gouvernement malien, le colonel Abdoulaye Maïga, a reconnu que des ressortissants Mauritaniens ont été tués, sans d’autres précisions. "Le chef de la junte malienne, le colonel Assimi Goïta, a échangé avec le président mauritanien Mohamed Ould Cheikh El Ghazouani. Le colonel Goïta a ordonné "d'ouvrir une enquête" et "a décidé d'envoyer une mission de haut niveau à Nouakchott dans les plus brefs délais". Les autorités maliennes "ne ménageront aucun effort" pour retrouver les coupables. Mais, à ce stade aucune preuve ne met en cause les forces armées maliennes qui respectent les droits humains et agissent toujours avec professionnalisme", a ajouté le colonel Abdoulaye Maïga.

En plus de l'enquête diligentée, le colonel Assimi Goïta va dépêcher sous peu, à Nouakchott, une mission de haut niveau.

C’est pourquoi, le politologue Khalilou Sidibé estime que ces incidents ne remettront pas en cause les relations de bon voisinage entre les deux pays.

"Dans cette zone frontalière de la Mauritanie, il y a beaucoup de groupes armés qui opèrent. Il y a des groupes djihadistes, il y a des milices d'autodéfense et aussi il y a des bandits armés qui se livrent à des vols de bétails, enlèvements des bétails, enlèvement d'êtres humains. Donc, ce ne sont pas forcément des actes commis par les forces maliennes. Des enquêtes sérieuses seront menées pour situer les responsabilités. Et à ce moment-là, ça n'entame pas les relations entre le Mali et la Mauritanie" soutient Khalilou Sidibé.

Sept Mauritaniens ont été tués en janvier dernier dans la même zone. Bamako avait également annoncé l’ouverture d’une enquête, sans reconnaître l’implication de ses forces armées.

Réponse similaire

La Mauritanie appartient-elle à l'Afrique subsaharienne ou au Maghreb ?

Aslan Vartaia

, a étudié Anthropologie à Université de la Sorbonne
Mis à jour le 8 juin 2019
Question difficile,elle est géographiquement presque en intégralité dans la zone saharienne,historiquement cette zone est connue pour être celle des berbères nomades,comme les Sanhadja et les Touaregs,d'autres populations s'y sont mêlés avec le temps,notamment des groupes ethniques d'Afrique Subsaharienne ce qui donne à la Mauritanie sa diversité ethnique,même si la société Mauritanienne est dominé par les Maures de culture arabo-berbère,qui compose une fraction importante de la population à hauteur de 30% elle reste minoritaire,mais culturellement et géographiquement je dirais Maghreb/Monde Arabe,mais la majorité des Mauritaniens ne sont pas arabo-berbères,donc ethniquement l'influence Subsaharienne est plus marquée,c'est un pays à la croisée des chemins

A lire aussi: Opération Barkhane au Mali: 13 militaires français décédés lors d'une collision entre deux hélicoptères.

L'objectif de la France repose sur une logique de partenariat et de formation de ces pays du Sahel (le "G5 Sahel") afin qu'ils puissent, à terme et de façon autonome, reprendre en main la lutte contre les groupes armés terroristes qui gangrènent la région, notamment celle du Liptako-Gourma (une zone à cheval sur le Mali, le Niger et le Burkina Faso).

L'ONU participe aussi à la stabilisation sécuritaire et politique au Mali, via la Minusma (Mission multidimensionnelle intégrée des Nations Unies pour la stabilisation au Mali). Elle dispose de 13.289 soldats et 1920 membres de police.

Défi immense

Le défi est de taille : la zone que doivent couvrir l'opération Barkhane et le G5 Sahel est transfrontalière, désertique et aussi vaste que l'Europe. Depuis plusieurs mois, ces forces armées se concentrent sur la région du Liptako-Gourma, qu'ils tentent de stabiliser face aux attaques djihadistes à répétition.

Difficile de les lister toutes, tant ces attaques sont fréquentes et nombreuses. Rien qu'en novembre, des assauts violents revendiqués par l'Etat islamique et commis contre des bases ou des positions militaires ont tué au moins 80 soldats maliens.

De leur côté, la France ou les pays du Sahel concernés annoncent régulièrement la mort, l'arrestation ou la capture de djihadistes lors d'opérations conjointes. En février, le ministère français des Armées annonçait l'élimination de 600 djihadistes et la saisie de 2 tonnes d'armes et de munitions par trimestre depuis le début de l'opération Barkhane.

Etat islamique et Al-Qaeda

Les principaux groupes terroristes actifs dans cette zone se revendiquent de l'Etat islamique au grand Sahara (EIGS) et d'Al-Qaeda au Maghreb islamique (Aqmi), qui rassemble lui-même plusieurs groupuscules, tels que le "groupe de soutien à l'islam et aux musulmans", "l'émirat du Sahara" ou encore la "katiba de Macina". Cette alliance a été placée, en 2018, sur la liste noire américaine des "organisations terroristes".

A cela s'ajoutent des tensions interethniques, entre les Peuls (qui constituent aujourd'hui le gros des combattants au sein des cellules djihadistes liées à Al-Qaïda), les Dogons et les Bambaras. Plusieurs massacres interethniques ont fait des centaines de morts parmi les paysans de ces communautés.

L'objectif des djihadistes

L'objectif des djihadistes dans cette région d'Afrique est de déstabiliser l'autorité des états, qui ont déserté certaines portions de leur territoire. Même si ces états tentent de reprendre pied dans ces régions, à l'image du Mali à Indelimane, dans le Liptako-Gourma, ou dans le Ménaka (nord-est du pays), leur stratégie n'est pas toujours gagnante. Comme le déclarait le général François Lecointre, chef d'état-major français des armées, à nos confrères du Monde cet été, "là où cette stratégie de concentration des efforts se déploie, elle fonctionne. Les bandes armées qui prospèrent sur l'absence de l'Etat sont déstabilisées, affaiblies. Le gouverneur de Ménaka a récemment déclaré que l'administration était en train de revenir. Mais, dans le même temps, la situation continue d'évoluer défavorablement ailleurs, avec un repli des groupes dans d'autres zones, au Niger et au Burkina Faso. La pression que nous exerçons joue sans doute, mais, si nous n'avions rien fait, les groupes se seraient étendus quand même".

Rejet des troupes étrangères

Sous l'effet d'une guerre qui empire, les troupes étrangères au Sahel font face à un rejet apparemment grandissant chez les habitants du Burkina Faso, du Mali et du Niger. De plus en plus de citoyens de ces pays demandent le départ des 4500 soldats de l'opération Barkhane, mais aussi des plus de 13.000 Casques bleus de la Minusma au Mali et d'autres partenaires présents, tous déployés au nom de la lutte antiterroriste et de la protection des civils.

La contestation ne paraît pas coordonnée, mais la critique est la même. "On ne voit pas de résultats sur le terrain", estime Maikoul Zodi, figure de la société civile nigérienne.

Face à une dégradation sécuritaire continue, notamment dans une large partie du Burkina Faso où les attaques sont désormais quotidiennes,"il y a une forme de fatigue et d'impatience", explique Ibrahim Maïga, chercheur à l'Institute for Security Studies. "L'insécurité ne recule pas malgré de nombreuses annonces de moyens mis à disposition", ajoute-t-il.

D'autres voient resurgir dans ces interventions étrangères les vieux démons de l'époque coloniale. Gabin Korbeogo, membre de l'Organisation démocratique de la jeunesse (ODJ) au Burkina Faso, estime que "leur seul et unique but est de protéger leurs intérêts stratégiques et de consolider leurs positions de domination dans la zone sahélienne".

"Comment 20.000 soldats étrangers ne parviennent-ils pas à venir à bout de 3000 terroristes ?", se demande pour sa part Ibrahima Kébé, animateur à "Radio patriote", une petite antenne antisystème qui émet depuis Bamako.

La dégradation de la situation sécuritaire dans le pays et la dureté des revers subis ont également renforcé les interrogations sur la capacité de l'armée malienne à faire face aux agissements djihadistes et aux autres violences auxquelles le Mali est en proie depuis 2012 et qui ont fait des milliers de morts, civils et combattants.

Questions similaires

Les migrants sont souvent syriens, afghans, sénégalais, guinéens, ivoiriens… mais on n'entend jamais mauritaniens. La Mauritanie est-elle une exception ?

Pensez-vous que la Mauritanie fait partie de l'Afrique du Nord (ou du Maghreb)?
Pourquoi le Maroc a-t-il abandonné Lagouira aux autorités mauritaniennes ?

Pourquoi la Mauritanie ne fait pas partie de C. D.E.A.O. Qu'est-ce qui empêche la la Mauritanie ?
Que pensez-vous de la Mauritanie?

Pourquoi les Français sont-ils qualifiés de colonisateurs en Afrique du Nord, alors que le Maghreb fut d'abord colonisé par les Arabes (au détriment des Kabyles)?

Pourquoi les Africains subsahariens traitent-ils les Nord-africains comme s'ils n'étaient pas africains ?

Qui étaient les Berbères, qui vivaient dans le Nord de l'Afrique, bien avant que les arabes arrivent?

Quelle est la capitale de pays d'Afrique subsaharienne la plus sûre ?
Qu'est-ce qu'on ne voit qu'au Maghreb et pas ailleurs ?
Pourquoi l'Afrique subsaharienne n'a-t-elle jamais dominé le monde ?

Pourquoi l'Afrique subsaharienne a-t-elle peu de cultures anciennes ? Qu'est-ce qui l'a empêchée de développer des cultures florissantes comme celles de Maghreb ? Qu'est-ce qui explique la différence entre le Maghreb et l'Afrique subsaharienne ?

Pourquoi l'Algerie s'immisce dans l'affaire du Sahara Occidental ?

Pourquoi l'Afrique subsaharienne a-t-elle si peu d'histoire par rapport à l'Afrique du Nord ? Qu'est-ce qui explique la différence entre la forte concentration de civilisations dans le nord et le manque d'histoire dans le Maghreb ?

Les Français coloniaux ont beaucoup investi dans les pays d'Afrique du Nord, agrandissant les villes et des infrastructures. Pourquoi les Français n'ont-ils pas fait de même en Afrique de l'Ouest et dans leurs colonies en Afrique subsaharienne ?

Were Moors black?

Alton Allen Knowledgeable In African and African Diaspora History: Nov 16

Originally Answered: Were the Moors actually BLACK?

That's kinda the point, it's like asking if water is wet? However it's not a dumb question , given the confusions and evolving meaning of the term, which was rarely ever used by the people designated as such, it is of European origins and goes back to Greco-Roman times to described the dark skinned inhabitants of Northwest Africa and it meant Black, it's a color coded word like Niger the word which became attached to the various peoples of the that famous river giving rise to the term Negro, Ethiops is another color coded word used for Africans and all can be used and was used interchangeably,Al -Sudan is yet another color coded word to mean land of the Blacks, as time goes by and we entered the Islamic era, it was used to include all Muslims , but since all Muslims aren't black, the term Black Moor and Twany Moor became a way to describe such folks sharing the same space and the same value system.

This was pin pointed by Leo Africanus { Al Hassan ibn Muhammad al-Wazzan } in his report to Pope Leo X who described his people thus:

For all the Negroes or Black Moors are descendants of Cush, the son of Ham, who was the son of Noah. But whatever difference there is between the Negroes and the Tawny Moors, it is a fact that they are all of the same ancestry.

By his portrait he was one of the Twany Moor himself, looked a little like the much hated or beloved Colin Kaepernick.

Here we have Mulay Ahmed king of Tunis about the same time of Leo Africanus.

Al Rashid king of Morocco about a century later.

So to sum it all up , go by this rule of thumb. All Blacks were Moors , but all Moors weren't actually Black!

Matthieu Bazile, A guy with many interests Answered Feb 6, 2021

For the most part, no. While there were black Moors, they definitely were not the majority. The majority were lighter skinned, native North Africans, known as Amazighs, mainly from Morocco, and Arabs, mainly from Syria. That of course doesn’t mean that were some black Africans, particularly West Africa, especially during the Almoravid dynasty, who were Moors, but again they were not the majority; the majority of the Moors didn’t look too different from modern day Moroccans and Syrians.

[/]^^Moroccans

[/]^^Syrians

[/]^^Moors depicted in the 12th century in Cantigas de Santa Maria

[/]^^Abd al-Rahman I, the first ruler of Cordoba

[/]^^Muhammad XII of Granada, the last Moorish ruler

Related Links

Why do Arabs and Eurocentrists seriously argue that the Moors weren't black even though their ancestors described and portrayed them as black?

Why are moors portrayed as black people in paintings when they were mostly berbers and north africans?

A Black Hebrew Israelite told me that Moors (all black people) civilized all of Europe and brought them out of the dark ages. Is this true?

Why don't history books talk about the Moors from Africa who ruled Europe in the 8th to the 15th century?

Some people say that the Moors weren't Black, if such the case, why are images seen on the internet showing them as Black?

If the Moors were black, why aren't Moroccans black? Who are the real Moors, Moroccons or Sub-Saharans?

Why do black people in the USA believe that the Moors and Berbers were black sub-Saharan Africans?

Why do black Afrocentrists claim that medieval Muslims (Moors) were blacks despite the fact that they viewed black people as "dumb animals"?

Why do some people claim the African Moors ruled over Medieval Europe when they at most invaded some parts in Spain? Also the Moors were Berbers and other North Africans who are genetically and phenotypically very different from blacks?

Were the North Africans known as Moors black? Why or why not?

News Nigeria

The term Moor is an exonym first used by Europeans to designate the inhabitants of the North Africa (modern day Morocco, Algeria, Tunisia and Mauritania), the Iberian Peninsula, Sicily and Malta during the Middle Ages.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong May 10

Europeans of the Middle Ages and the early modern period variously applied the name to Arabs, North African Berbers, as well as Muslim Europeans.

During the colonial era, the Portuguese introduced the names "Ceylon Moors" and "Indian Moors" in South Asia and Sri Lanka, and the Bengali Muslims were also called Moors.

In the Philippines, the longstanding Muslim community, which predates the arrival of the Spanish, now self-identifies as the "Moro people", an exonym introduced by Spanish colonizers due to their Muslim faith.

In 711, troops mostly formed by Moors from northern Africa led the Umayyad Caliphate conquest of Hispania. The Iberian Peninsula then came to be known in as al-Andalus, which at its peak included most of Septimania and modern-day Spain, Portugal and southern France.

In 827, the Moors occupied Mazara on Sicily, developing it as a port. They eventually went on to consolidate the rest of the island. Differences in religion and culture led to a centuries-long conflict with the European kingdoms which tried to reclaim control of Moorish areas; this conflict was referred to as the Reconquista, and it was viewed as an extension to the Crusaders campaigns further to the east that ended earlier.

The fall of Granada in 1492 marked the end of Moorish rule in Spain and the beginning of the European colonial era.

Modern day Spanish musical bands such as Gipsy Kings still plays Moorish music and songs.

COUNTRY FACT FILE

Location

In West Africa

Official title of the state

Al Jumhuriyah al-Islamiyah al-Muritaniyah (national)

The Islamic Republic of Mauritania: is an Arab Maghreb country in West Africa.

Flag description: Green with a yellow five-pointed star above a yellow, horizontal crescent; the closed side of the crescent is down; the crescent, star, and color green are traditional symbols of Islam; the gold color stands for the sands of the Sahara.

Neighbours

Morocco and Western Sahara on N, Algeria and Mali on E. Senegal on S.

Land boundaries; total 5,074 km. Border countries; Algeria 463 km, Mali 2,237 km, Senegal 813 km, Western Sahara 1,561 km.

Founder of The Nation
Monsier Mokhtar Ould Dah Dah, it's founder president, nicknamed the "revolutionary", ruled Mauritania for further eighteen years being re-elected three times in 1967, 1971 and 1976.

Local divisions

12 regions and 1 Capital district (Nouakchott)

Government type
Republic - semi-presidential

Legislation chamber
Bicameral legislature

Form of State
President is elected to serve a five-year term. Head of government/Prime Minister, Bicameral Parliament Consists of two legislative houses. The Senate (Majlis Al-shyukh) 56 seats members are appointed by regional councils to serve for five-year terms, and the National Assembly (Al-Jamiya Al-wataniya)

95 seats, members are elected by popular vote to serve for five-year terms. President is the Chief of State

Executive branch

Separated by chief of State and head of Government. President elected by popular vote to serve for five-year terms without presidential term limits. Head of Government to be appointed by the president.

Former Rulers

November, 1960 – August 20, 1961 Mokhtar Ould Dah-dah Acting Head of State.

August, 20 1961 to 1978: Mokhtar Ould Dah-dah (Civilian head of state)

1978- 1979: Colonel Mustafa Ould Salek, Chairman of the Military Committee for National Recovery (MCNR).

1979 - 1980: Colonel Mohammed Mahmoud Ould Louly, Military head of state and Chairman of the Military Committee for National Salvation.

1980 to 1984: Colonel Mohamed Khouna Ould Haidallah Military head of state

1984 – 1992: Lt. Colonel Maaouya Ould Sid'Ahmed Taya Military head of state

1992 -2005: Maaouya Ould Sid'Ahmed Taya as elected President

2005- 2007: Colonel Ely Ould Mohamed Vall, Chairman of the Military Council for Justice and Democracy

2007 -2008 Sidi Ould Sheikh Abdallahi, President

2008 – 2009 Majour-General Mohamed Ould Abdel Aziz, President of the High Council of State.

2009 – to present Ba Mamadou dit M'Baré (interim head of state)

Judicial chamber

Supreme Court

Capital city

Nouakchott Altitude 21 mtrs/69 ft.

Geographic coordinates 18.07N , 16.02W. Located on the Atlantic coast of the Sahara Desert. It's name derived from "Nawaksut" Berber meaning for "the place of the winds". Founded as a village in the early 1940s, it became national capital of Mauritania officially at independence in November, 1960.

Names of main towns

Nouadhibou, Kaedi, Kiffa, Rosso, Zouarete.

Date of independence

28th November,1960

Religions (Major)

Muslim 99 %, Islam is a state religion.
Main spoken languages

Arabic (official), French, Pulaar, Soninke, Wolof, Hassaniya also spoken.

Currency unit

Mauritani Ouguiya (MRO) = 5 Skhooms

Area in Km2

1,030,770.00

Country area comparison in Africa

11 out of 55 states.

Demographic terms;-

Average annual population growth rate 2.373 %

Birth rate 33.67 births per 1,000 population

Death rate 9 deaths per 1,000 population

Average life expectancy ; 60.75 years

Male 58.57 years ; Female 62.99 years

Illiteracy rate (%)

Male: 36, Female:52

Average per capita income

USD 2, 100

Population density

3.3/km2

Urban population (%)

41

Contributor groups (%)

Farming, Fishery: 25, Industry: 29, Social service: 46

Main Export items

Fish and fish-products, iron ore

Economy is based on

Pastoralism, vegetation, fishery

Climate
Desert; constantly hot, dry, dusty and mostly barren, flat plains of the Sahara, some central hills. 80% of its' part is desert with less than 200mm Rf per year only. The southern extremely supports rain vegetation. Temperature average in excess of 25oc with seasonal and daily fluctuations.

Extremes;-

Lowest point; Sebkhet Te-n-dghameha -5 mtrs.

Highest point; Kediet ljill 915 mtrs.

Weather of the Capital city (Nouakchott) average annual temperature 24,7oc Altitude 21 mtrs/69 ft Hottest Month September 24-34oc. Coldest Month December 13-28oc. Driest Month Rains are irregular.

Measures

Metric system.

Time zone

GMT/UTC+0

Public holidays

28 November, All Muslim holidays.

Ethnic group

Arab Berber 80%, African tribes 20%.

Topographic & Environmental concern

The fertile Senegal river valley in the S. gives way to wide central region of sandy plains and scrub trees, the N. is arid and into the Sahara desert. Environment: overgrazing, deforestation, and soil erosion aggravated by drought are contributing to desertification; limited natural freshwater resources away from the Senegal, which is the only perennial river; locust infestation.

Economy Overview

Industry

Fish-processing, petroleum production, gold, copper & iron ore mining.

Chief crops

Grains, dates, millet, rice : cattle, sheep.

Natural resources
Iron ore, Gypsum, Copper, Phosphates, Diamonds, Gold, Fish and Petroleum at Chinguetti deep-waters at prospects of production.

Land in use (%)

Arable land: 1

Grassland: 38

Forest woods: 4

Other: 58

Marine:

Coastline 754 km.

Commercial Sea ports:-

Nouakchot, Nouadhibou

Development prospect;-

The strong growth of gold, copper and iron ore will continue to spur interest in the mining sector. Other resources look promising. Australia's Aura Energy announced the discovery of a new uranium deposit at Reguibat in March 2011, while Forte Energy is also continuing its exploration efforts in Zednes and Bir En Nar. Morocco's Compagnie Minière de Touissit, OSEAD France and local company Groupe AZIZI have been working together since June 2010 on uranium, gold and iron exploration. One of Africa's newest oil producers, Mauritania bridges the Arab Maghreb and western sub-Saharan Africa. The largely-desert country presents a cultural contrast, with an Arab-Berber population to the north and black Africans to the south. Many of its people are nomads. In the Middle Ages Mauritania was the cradle of the Almoravid movement, which spread Islam throughout the region and for a while controlled the Islamic part of Spain. European traders began to show interest in Mauritania in the 15th century.

Mauritania's oil boom disappoints. The Chinguetti field, which investors argued could produce 75,000 barrels per day (bpd), has never reached its potential and was set to produce about 8,000 bpd for Malaysia's Petronas into 2012. In 2011, France's Total expressed worries that its discoveries at the Taoudenni basin may not be commercially viable. In June 2011, SNIM, SOMELEC, SMC and Tasisast Mauritania signed a joint venture to generate electricity from natural gas. Tullow has now said it will enter, however.

Economic growth projections are based on a new infrastructure build out. Construction of a new minerals port at Nouadhibou has been ongoing since April 2010, and Chinese companies are doubling the capacity of the port at Nouakchott. The telecoms sector is likely to receive a boost when the first fibreoptic cable linking Mauritania to Europe and West Africa becomes operational in 2012. Current road projects will improve links to Senegal, Algeria and Mali. The search for investors will likely result in Aziz pursuing relations with Cuba, Venezuela, Iran and China, potentially compromising relations with allies in Europe and North America.

MAURITIUS

National Flag and Emblem

Locator Map

TEXT BRIEFLY HIGHLIGHTS: Diaries updates, key events, brief analysis and relating news articles in timeline

Overview

Arab sailors visited Mauritius during the Middle Ages. The Portuguese were probably the first Europeans to land, in around 1511, but they did not settle the island. The first colonists were the Dutch who settled in 1638 and named the island Mauritius after Prince Maurice of Nassau. The Dutch, who eventually abandoned Mauritius in about 1710, are remembered for having introduced sugar cane to the island. The French occupied between 1715 and 1810, renaming the country Isle de France. In 1810 the British took possession during the Napoleonic Wars (the French ceded the island under treaty in 1814) and reverted to the name Mauritius. Following the abolition of slavery in 1835, the British imported indentured labour from the Indian subcontinent to work the sugar cane fields.

Mauritius' history is reflected in its ethnic mix and its languages. Although English remains the official language of government and education, French is much more widely used today, especially by the media. Creole (a French-based patois) is the lingua franca. Several Asian languages are also spoken. Mauritius is a generally harmonious multicultural society despite occasional ethnic tension. Mauritius gained independence on 12 March, 1968 and became a member of the Commonwealth. The Queen was Head of State until 12 March 1992 when Mauritius became a Republic.

The Island was named in honour of Prince Maurice of Nassau by Dutch explorers.

The culture is of a blend of Indian, Creole, Chinese and European influences.

Former UK Crown colony

Mauritius achieved it’s independence on the 12th of March, 1968.

Headship since independence; Native Governor-general

Sir Veeraswamy Ringadoo, who was served until recently as native Governor-general, became founder-president of the republic until the nomination in June 1992 comes to Sir Cassam Uteem, who he served as president of the Republic of Mauritius from 30th June, 1992 to 15th February, 2002 and was the longest serving president of Mauritius.

A Republic in the Indian ocean East of Madagascar.

An island explored by the Portuguese in the early sixteenth century, originally uninhabited, it was settled by the Dutch from 1638 to 1658 and 1664 to 1710, who named it later in honour of prince Maurits Van Nassau and then abandoned, taken by the French east Indian company in 1721 until the French government tookover control again in 1767. The transfer of Mauritian sovereignty to the UK from France have been carried out under the treaty of Paris in 1814. And the British captured the Island the same year and were granted formal control. The Palm-fringed Indian Ocean island of Mauritius is lying 800 km east of Madagascar and 1800 km from Mombasa (Kenya), a peaceful political struggle for independence was led by a veteran polician, Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam during the 1960s. An "Independent State of Mauritius within the commonwealth", declared on the 12th of March, 1968, he had been served as Governer-general, head of state and government when he started his career few years before independence, lasts on-office (28th December, 1983 to the 15th December, 1985) until the date he passed away. Mauritius became Independent Republic on the 12th of March, 1992 when Sir Veeraswamy

Ringadoo, who was served until recently as native Governor-general, became founder-president of the republic until the nomination in June 1992 comes to Sir Cassam Uteem, who he served as president of the Republic of Mauritius from 30th June, 1992 to 15th February, 2002 and was the longest serving president of Mauritius, having served nine years, he resigned as president on the 15th of February, 2002, his term would have ended in June of the same year, to be replaced by Mr. Angidi Chettiar and later Sir Anerood Jugnauth who served as head of government, to be nominated to the post as President of the "Republic of Mauritius". Mauritius is with a stable democracy with regular free elections and a positive developmental record, Mauritius has attracted considerable foreign investments and has earned one of Africa's highest per-capita income. The Republic of Mauritius has long-standing dispute with the UK about the Chagos archipelago, which was dettached from Mauritian territory in 1965 in breach of international law before independence in 1968, and now forms the British Indian Ocean Territory (BIOT). By contrast, France has agreed last June, 2010 to jointly manage with Mauritius another disputed territory in the Indian ocean, the island of Tromelin, which only adds to the grievance about the behaviour of the country's most recent colonial master. The mounting frustration felt in Mauritius about the use of the Diego Garcia, the largest and southernmost island in the archipelago, by the US military, and the failure by successive British governments to allow the 700 or so surviving Chagos islanders and their descendants to return to their homeland despite firm promises made earlier by the British government.

Accession to power of Sir Anerood Jugnauth - 7th October, 2003 nominated to the post.

Tentative Election calendar - Parliamentary - September.

Mauritius – Timeline Diaries updates, and related key notes:

10th century - Phoenicians, Malays, Swahili and Arab seamen visit island but do not settle. Island named Dina Robin by Arab mariners.

1498 - Portuguese explorers stumble upon Mauritius in the wake of Vasco da Gama's voyage around the Cape of Good Hope.

1510 - Portuguese navigator Pedro Mascarenhas visits the island and names it Cirné. It is used as a port of call, but the Portuguese do not establish a permanent settlement.

1598 - Dutch claim the uninhabited island and rename it after their head of state, Maurice, Prince of Orange and Count of Nassau.

1638-58 - Dutch settlement begins, but colony soon fails.

1664-1710 - Second Dutch attempt at colonisation fails. The Dutch withdraw permanently. By this time the dodo - a unique bird found only on Mauritius - has become extinct. Pirates inhabit the island.

1715 - French East India Company claims Mauritius for France, renames it Ile de France.

1721-67 - Settlement begins; Port Louis founded as a base for attacking the British in India.

1767 - French East Indies Company sells Mauritius; control of island transferred to French government.

1796 - Settlers break away from French control when the government in Paris attempts to abolish slavery.

1810 - British forces land in Mauritius after defeating the French in battle at Cap Malheureux.

1812 - Colonel Draper founds the Mauritius Turf Club, which opens the first racecourse in the southern hemisphere and the second oldest in the world.

1814 - Mauritius, Seychelles and Rodrigues ceded to Britain under Treaty of Paris.

1834 - British abolish slavery. It is phased out on the island under a transition period known as "apprenticeship".

1835 - Indentured labour system introduced. In subsequent decades hundreds of thousands of workers arrive from India.

1847 - Incorrectly-worded Penny Black postage stamps are issued in Mauritius; later they become among the most sought-after stamps in the world.

1866-68 - Malaria epidemic kills more than 40,000 people after Anopheles mosquito accidently introduced.

1876 - Indian rupee becomes official currency.

1912 - Mahatma Gandhi visits.

1910 - Indentured labour system abolished. Between 1834-1910, 451,776 Indians were brought to Mauritius to work on the sugar estates, of which 157,639 returned to India.

1926 - First Indo-Mauritians elected to government council.

1936 - Creole politician Dr Maurice Cure founds Mauritian Labour Party (MLP), or Parti Travailliste.

1937 - Rioters demand better economic conditions and participation in government.

1942 - Donald Mackenzie-Kennedy becomes governor. Introduces consultative committee which for the first time includes representatives from all Mauritian communities.

1948 - New constitution gives the vote to many Indians and Creoles in an enlarged legislature.

1957 - Internal self-government introduced, with an electoral system based on the Westminster model.

1958 – Mauritius new constitution allows all adults over 21 can vote. Island divided into four single-member constituencies.

1959 - First elections under universal adult suffrage won by MLP, led by Dr Seewoosagur Ramgoolam.

1960 - Cyclone Carol devastates island, leaving thousands homeless and prompting a housing revolution.

1964 - Ethnic rioting; Hindus and Creoles clash.

1965 - Constitutional conference held in London to discuss independence.

1966 - Britain drives out some 2,000 residents of the Chagos archipelago, in the Indian Ocean. Many are sent to Mauritius. Britain leases the Chagos islands to the US for 50 years. The US builds a military base on the largest island, Diego Garcia.

1968 - 12 March - Independence.

1969 - Opposition Mauritian Militant Movement (MMM) founded, advocates socialism, led by Paul Berenger.

1971 - First Export Processing Zone created. Textiles sector develops. Between 1971-77, 64,000 jobs are created.

1971 - MMM, backed by unions, calls a series of strikes. State of emergency declared, lasts until 1976. MMM party's leadership imprisoned.

1979 - Cyclone Claudette devastates the island.

1979 - Mauritius approaches IMF and World Bank for assistance. Country has deficit of $111 million.

1982 - Sir Anerood Jugnauth becomes prime minister.

1985 – Sir Sewsagar Ramgoolam, father of nation, dies

1985 - Drugs scandal at Amsterdam airport; four MPs arrested on charges of drug smuggling. Inquiry in 1986 implicates three members of Legislative Assembly. Six more politicians are accused in 1987 of involvement in the affair.

1989 - Stock Exchange opens in Port Louis.

December 1991 - Legislative Assembly approves the transition of the nation to a republic within the Commonwealth.

March 1992 - Prime Minister Aneroud Jugnauth declares Mauritius a republic. Legislative Assembly redesignated National Assembly and incumbent governor, General Ringadoo, becomes president.

June 1992 - MMM member Cassam Uteem elected president.

1994 - Cyclone Hollanda leaves 1,400 people homeless and causes $81million in damage.

December 1995 - MLP leader Navin Ramgoolam becomes prime minister.

February 1999 - Creole singer Kaya dies in police custody, prompting four days of rioting among Creole community.

2000 - Mauritius secures a seat on the United Nations Security Council for the first time.

September 2000 - MSM leader Sir Anerood Jugnauth becomes prime minister.

November 2000 - High Court in London rules that Britain acted unlawfully in driving the inhabitants of the Chagos archipelago from their homes in 1966. Many of the exiles settled in Mauritius.

February 2002 – Sir Cassam Uteem resigns as president, refusing to sign controversial anti-terrorism bill. Vice president also refuses to sign and resigns. Head of legislature becomes acting president and passes legislation into law.

2002 - Karl Hoffman elected president by National Assembly.

2002 - "Cyber Cities" plan launched to create concentrations of hi-tech facilities and boost economy.

2003 – Sir Anerood Jugnauth hands over leadership of MSM to his son, Pravind.

September 2003 - Anerood Jugnauth hands over power to Paul Berenger, who becomes the island's first non-Hindu premier.

July 2005 – Mr. Navin Ramgoolam wins general election, returns as prime minister.

April 2006 - One hundred former residents of the Chagos Archipelago - claimed by Mauritius - make a return visit nearly 40 years after being evicted by Britain to make way for a US military base on the island of Diego Garcia. Their legal battle with Britain continues.

May 2008 - British House of Lords upholds a UK government appeal against court ruling that families expelled from the Chagos Islands are entitled to return home. The decision ends the Chagossians' long-running UK legal battle to return.

May 2010 - Ruling coalition of PM Navin Ramgoolam wins general election.

June 2010 - Mauritius, France agree to jointly manage Tromelin, a tiny Indian Ocean island owned by France but claimed by Mauritius.

December 2010 - Mauritius launches a legal action contesting Britain's creation of a Marine Protection Area around its Indian Ocean territory of the Chagos Islands, after the website Wikileaks revealed that a UK official thought setting up a marine reserve should end any possibility of displaced islanders being allowed back.

August 2011 - Militant Socialist Movement (MSM) quits the ruling coalition in a row over corruption allegations. Its leader Pravind Jugnauth is later arrested.

March 2012 - President Anerood Jugnauth steps down saying he wants to return to party politics and challenge the prime minister.

June 2012 - Britain signs a deal with Mauritius allowing suspected pirates caught by its Royal Navy to be transferred to the Indian Ocean island to face prosecution.

December 2012 - European Court of Human Rights rejects claim by Chagos Islanders against Britain over their expulsion.

August 20, 2014: Mauritius: Anjouan reaches out to Mauritian investor’

The Governor of the autonomous island of Anjouan, Anissi Chamsidine, currently on a visit to Mauritius, has invited Mauritian investors to come and explore investment opportunities in his island. Talking to PANA Wednesday in Port-Louis, Chamsidine said no development is taking place in his island. “Everything is in a natural state and Mauritians can come and look for what will interest them. I have come here to see what I can get from Mauritius. They too can come to Anjouan,” he said.

According to him, Mauritius and Anjouan can also cooperate in the fields of technical training and tourism “in which Mauritius is experienced”. Chamsidine is the first elected Governor of the autonomous island Anjouan in the Comoros archipelago, situated in the Indian Ocean. The island has a population of 250,000 on a land area of 424 sq km. Anjouan cultivates vanilla, ylang-ylang and cloves and has got large beaches of dark sand and very less white sand.

August 22, 2014: Mauritius: Island set to become"High Income Country"

Mauritian Industry and Commerce Minister Cader Sayed-

Hossen, Thursday said that Mauritius has initiated a series of rigorous transformation processes to graduate the island's economy to the league of "High Income Countries" with manufacturing and industrialisation as key variables in this development equation.

Speaking at the opening of the Mauritius International Trade Expo (MAITEX 2014) in Port-Louis, Sayed-Hossen said Mauritius is further enhancing its investment environment, improving business opportunities, empowering its entrepreneurs, accelerating technology adoption and innovation and strengthening its regional integration.

"It's an integrated and holistic approach to build a strong and competitive Mauritian economy leveraging on the opportunities that Africa as a Continent offers", he emphasised.

According to him, Africa would lead the next phase of global growth after Asia.

"Mauritius, which is strategically located mid-way between Asia and Africa, is well positioned to offer a conduit into a new era of Asia-Africa partnership to service the global markets", the Minister said, adding that "Mauritius is an integral part of the African Continent and our process of regional integration is irreversible and irrevocable."

Foreign delegations from 25 countries, including several from African countries, have come to participate in this expo that runs over the weekend.

PANA reports that MAITEX 2014 is the largest and most comprehensive industrial expo of "Made in Mauritius" products. It is an industry-centric exhibition showcasing Mauritius' know-how and a comprehensive sourcing platform for products manufactured in the island.

These are related to textiles and fashion, agri-business, light engineering and jewellery and luxury.

Today, Mauritius exports goods worth US$ 2.6 billion. They comprise over 1,580 product categories reaching out to 126 foreign destinations.

Manufacturing is still the engine of growth in Mauritius, contributing 16.7% of Gross Domestic Products (GDP), and employing around 110,000 in direct jobs.

The island is also diversifying the industrial base of its economy by promoting higher value-added manufacturing activities that include medical devices, precision engineering, electrical and electronics, gems and diamond cutting and polishing, jewellery and luxury products, amongst others.

Several measures have been taken of late by the government to build resilience and to improve the competitiveness of its manufacturers. These include: grants to manufacturers to enable them to participate in international fairs, introduction of a Freight Subsidy Scheme to African ports and a structured financing and of an Export Guarantee Scheme.

Visit Africa
"Mauritius is Africa's heaven"

Paul Okello Founder & CEO of Visit Africa, I am POD, A Christian September 4

Visit Africa Mauritius is a tropical paradise country off the east coast of Africa in the Indian Ocean, a multicultural island, wonderful white beaches, palm trees, warm lagoons, and resorts. - Visit Africa > Ultimate Tourism and Travel Guide & Destination brand To…

What African country is the most successful today?

Anthony M Anderson Student Nov 12

Mauritius

Mauritius is one of the most successful countries in africa. It has economically thrived from a low poor income country to a middle income rich country since it got it's independence from britain in 1968.

The country hasn't experienced any coup d'etats and a civil war because it is politically stable and thus is one of the few countries in africa to fully be democratic. The state has a welfare society as they're is free healthcare and free education.

Mauritius has economically thrived and thus is still advancing and developing.

Originally Answered: What causes people to think Africa a country?
Africa is a country, actually there is nothing wrong with saying that, the problem is that different people define the word country differently what you mean is a geographic state, or geographic state structures, pan african state structures are very visible and maybe they also won't be as visible as for example the US american state structures. but instead africa has tribal structures, with tribes competing for economic interests

Related Links

Which is the most developed African country?
What's the most westernised African country?
Why is Kenya more famous than most other African countries?

Is there racism in African countries towards Africans from other African countries?

Is Namibia the most stable African country?
Why is Botswana richer than other African countries?
Which is the poorest African country?
What do black Africans think about black Americans, and vice versa?
Which is the most successful country in Africa?
What are the best African cities to live in?

Which 5 african countries are the most likely to become developed in the future?

What is the most stable country in Africa?

Which African country is likely to become the first developed country on the continent?

What African country is the best to live in?
Is South Africa the most developed country in Africa?

"The Dutch (Afrikaners) were" in South Africa "first."

Coulter's strange claim that Dutch settlers preceded blacks in South Africa when President Donald Trump referred to land seizures and "large scale killings" of white farmers in South Africa, he set the stage for a classic Twitter storm.

Kenya-born photographer Joseph Muhatia tweeted, "The land in South Africa belongs to black people they are the native owner and not white people."

To which conservative pundit Ann Coulter replied, "Actually, the Dutch (Afrikaners) were there first."

A brief history

The history of Southern Africa long before the Europeans (and yes, there is a long before) is a fascinating tale of competing kingdoms, shifting alliances, and territorial disputes. We spent some time with two volumes published by UNESCO in 1992. Wars among the people labeled black today played out before and after the Europeans arrived. As it turns out, the Dutch dropped down in a fairly peaceful area.

The Dutch East India Company established a toehold in Cape Town on the southwestern tip of modern South Africa. There, they encountered a group called the Khoikhoi who used the land to graze their cattle.

From the start, the Dutch treated the land as theirs.

On May 10, 1656, the outpost's commander Jan van Riebeeck described his dealings with a Khoikhoi leader.

"His claim to the ownership of the Cape lands could not be entertained by the Company, which had taken possession of them for its own purposes," van Riebeeck wrote in his diary (Hat tip to our colleagues at Africa Check).

Cape Town's original purpose was simply to resupply merchant ships headed to the East Indies, but over the decades, settlers turned to farming, which put them in conflict with the original inhabitants. By the end of the 1700s, a series of wars broke out with the Xhosa, a larger and more formidable foe than the Khoikhoi. Ultimately, under the British, the Xhosa were defeated in 1853.

Apartheid racial categories

Clearly, the story of South Africa turns on the Dutch and the British taking land from the people who were there first.

There is perhaps one possible thought Coulter had.

When South Africa operated under a strict regime of racial categories – the apartheid period between 1948 and 1994 – it used both "colored" and "black" to classify different groups of people. The Khoikhoi, relatively few in number, were classified as colored. In that regard, Coulter might have seen Muhatia's reference to blacks as broad.

But that would play along with the discredited credo of apartheid in racist South Africa. As the authors of a 2000 study of historic migration in Africa noted, "the biological reality of the race concept is bankrupt; the genetic and/or physical variations of hundreds of millions of people cannot be subsumed under a single term."

That said, focusing on the Khoikhoi would be excessively narrow because it ignores the conflict with the Xhosa. Under apartheid, people in the Xhosa ethnic group were classified as natives, or black, and restricted to communities called bantustans. The anti-apartheid leader and later president of South Africa Nelson Mandela was a member of a Xhosa clan. (Ethnic classification continues today. Groups called "coloured" under the old regime are now counted as "black" for economic empowerment and labor relations purposes.)

Beyond the western areas of South Africa where the Dutch influence was greatest, other groups predated the colonizers by over 1,000 years. One analysis from an international group of archeologists found that farming by Bantu-speaking groups reached South Africa about 2,000 years ago. So Coulter's focus on the Dutch ignored what was going on in the rest of the region.

Our ruling

Coulter said that Dutch settlers were in South Africa before black people. This is plainly wrong.Bantu-speaking groups farmed in the eastern regions of modern South Africa perhaps as much as a millennium before the Dutch arrived. In the west where the Dutch settled, other indigenous group lived on the land that the Dutch then claimed.

This claim defies logic and history. We rate it Pants on Fire.

Our Sources

Ann Coulter, tweet, Aug. 23, 2018
Joseph Muhatia, tweet, Aug. 23, 2018
Jan van Riebeeck, Diary - 1656, accessed Aug. 24, 2018
UNESCO, Africa from the 16th to the 18th Century, 1992
Encyclopedia Britannica, Cape Frontier Wars, accessed Aug. 24, 2018
PLOS One, Modelling the Spread of Farming in the Bantu-Speaking Regions of Africa: An Archaeology-Based Phylogeography, Jan. 31, 2014

History in Africa, A New Paradigm: The African Early Iron Age without Bantu Migrations, 2000

South Africa History Online, The Dutch Settlement, Feb. 13, 2018South Africa History Online, Khoisan Identity, May 10, 2017

Africa Check, 98% of South African Airways' spending didn't go to white-owned companies, June 26, 2017

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/History_of_South_Africa_(1652%E2%80%931815)

https://www.gigalresearch.com/uk/complexe-ile-maurice.php

News Nigeria
Mauritius' flag has been raised on the British-controlled Chagos Islands. Britain bought the Chagos Islands for only $4 million in 1965, and thereafter displaced over 1,000 people.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 10m

In 2021, the UN court ruled that UK has no sovereignty over the islands.

Related Answer
What African country is the most successful today?

Anthony M Anderson, Student Answered Nov 12

Mauritius

Mauritius is one of the most successful countries in africa. It has economically thrived from a low poor income country to a middle income rich country since it got it's independence from britain in 1968.

The country hasn't experienced any coup d'etats and a civil war because it is politically stable and thus is one of the few countries in africa to fully be democratic. The state has a welfare society as they're is free healthcare and free education.

Mauritius has economically thrived and thus is still advancing and developing.

Related Links

Which is the most developed African country?
What's the most westernised African country?
Why is Kenya more famous than most other African countries?

Is there racism in African countries towards Africans from other African countries?

Is Namibia the most stable African country?
Which is the most successful country in Africa?

Which African country is likely to become the first developed country on the continent?

Is there ever hope for African development?
How can Africa become more prosperous?

Is it true that there are cities in Africa that are just as modern and developed as any..?

Mauritius Island State – The next destination for foreign businesses

Updated time: 10 Jul, 2020, 15:09 (UTC+08:00)

The Republic of Mauritius is known as the popular location in travelers' eyes. However, it is also one of the most favorite countries for international business companies. The tax system, business environment, and government policies are three main attractive factors why Mauritius has become the next destination for a foreign businessperson.

In March, One IBC offers promotional packages for clients who plan to operate a business and receive investment opportunities in Mauritius.

COUNTRY FACT FILE

Location

A Republic, and an Island state situated in the Indian ocean approximately 500 miles East of Madagascar.

Official title of the state

The Republic of Mauritius: is an island nation off the southeast coast of the African continent in the southwest Indian Ocean, about 870 kilometres east of Madagascar

Flag description

Mauritius four equal horizontal bands of red (top), blue, yellow, and green; red represents self-determination and independence, blue the Indian Ocean surrounding the island, yellow has been interpreted as the new light of independence, golden sunshine, or the bright future, and green can symbolize either agriculture or the lush vegetation of the island.

Neighbours

Nearest is Madagascar on W.

Land boundaries; None

Founder of The Nation
Sir Veeraswamy Ringadoo, native Governor-general of the Island State since independence; he was served until recently as native Governor-general, became founder-president of the republic until the nomination in June 1992 comes to Sir Cassam Uteem, who he served as president of the Republic of Mauritius from 30th June, 1992 to 15th February, 2002 and was the longest serving president of Mauritius.

Local divisions
9 Administrative districts, 3dependencies

Government type -Republic – with parliamentary democracy

Legislation chamber
Unicameral - National Assembly

Form of Government

Parliamentary democracy; A republic with one legislative house. The national assembly 70 seats, members are elected by popular vote to serve for five-year terms. Head of state is the President. The president is elected by the National Assembly for five-year terms (eligible for a second term).
Executive branch

President, Vice-President, Prime Minister, Unicameral parliament.

Separated by chief of State and head of Government. President elected by the National Assembly to serve for five-year terms, eligible for a second term. Head of Government is to be appointed by the president with the legislature's approval.

Former Rulers

1992- 1992 Sir Veeraswammy Ringadoo

1992 – 2002 Sir Cassam Uteem

February 18, 2002 – February 25, 2002 Ariranga Pillay February

25, 2002 – October 7, 2003 Karl Auguste Offmann 2003-

Present Sir Aneroud Jugnauth Judicial chamber

Supreme Court

Capital City

Port-Louis - Altitude 55 mtrs/180 ft.

Geographic coordinates - 20.09S , 57.29E. It borders the Indian ocean, it was already in use as a harbour since 1638. Founded as administrative centre in 1735, named in honour of King Louis XV of France.

Names of main towns

Beau-Bassin, Rose hill, Vacoas-phoenix, Curepipe, Quatre-Bornes, Mahebourg.

Date of independence

12th March, 1968

Religions (Major)

Hinduism 51%, Catholics 30%, Muslims 15%, others 1%.

Main spoken language

English (official), French, Creole, Hindi, Urdu, Chinese, Tamil also spoken.

Currency unit

Mauritian Rupee (MRu) = 100 Cents.

Area in Km2

2,040.00
Country area comparison in Africa

53 out of 55 states.

Demographic terms ;-

Average annual population growth rate 0.751 %

Birth rate 14.17 births per 1,000 population.

Death rate 6.63 deaths per 1,000 population

Average life expectancy ; 74.25 years

Male 70.77 years ; Female 77.89 years;

Illiteracy rate (%)

Male: 11, Female: 15

Average per capita income

USD 14, 000

Population density

3.3/km2

Urban population (%)

41

Contributor groups

Farming, Fishing: 5, Industry: 25, Social service: 70

Main Export Items

Sugar, clothings, tea, cut-flowers.

Economy is based on

Sugar, Textiles and Tourism

Climate

Sub-tropical

Extremes;-

Lowest point; Indian ocean coast 0 mtr.

Highest point; Mt. Piton de la fornais 828 mtrs.

Weather of the Capital city (port-Louis) average annual temperature 22.6oC.

Altitude 55 mtrs/180 ft.

Hottest Month
January 23-30oc.

Coldest Month
August 17-24oc.

Driest Month
September 36mm average Rf.

Wettest Month
March 221 mm average Rf.

Measure

Metric system. Local land area measured in Arpents, eg. 1 Arpent = 0.4221 hectare.

Time zone

4 hours ahead of GMT/UTC

Public holidays

12th March, Roman Catholic holidays, All Muslim holidays.

Ethnic groups

Indo-Mauritians 68%, Creoles 27%, others 5%.

Topographic & Environmental concern

A volcanic island nearly surrounded by coral reefs a central plateau is encircled by mountain peaks. Environment:water pollution, degradation of coral reefs.

Economy Overview

Industry

Tourism, sugar, food processing, textiles, clothing, mining, chemicals, metal products, non- electrical equipments.

Chief crops

Sugarcane, tea, corn, potatoes, bananas, pulses : cattle, goats, fish.

Natural resources

There are no mineral deposits of note. Arable land and fishery are the main ones.

Land in use (%)

Arable land: 55

Grassland: 3

Forest woods: 22

Other: 20
Marine:

Coastline; 177 km.

Commercial Sea port:-

Port-Louis.

Development prospect;-

The government is likely to look at encouraging new investment as it searches for ways to survive a difficult economic period ahead. Growth is respectable by some standards but disappointing against the high levels reached in the 1990s and early 2000s. The projection for 2012 is 4.1 per cent against the 4.2 per cent of 2010 and 2011. Mauritius needs to relaunch a far-reaching reform strategy to increase its growth potential. It will consider labour market reforms to reduce unemployment rates, and education initiatives to enhance human capital, with structural reforms to increase total factor productivity. Without the MSM in the coalition, the government will find it easier to argue for an increased role for the private sector in managing state-owned enterprises. Tourism generates around 10 per cent of GDP and the industry has remained in good health, with revenues up nearly 10 per cent in the 12 months to the end of August 2011 and with the annual total number of visitors very nearly reaching 1m. The number of Chinese visitors has surged since the launch of direct flights. The textiles industry has stayed steady, but the sugar industry is not doing so well and the island has even had to import sugar from Brazil. Mauritian sugar companies are, however, still expanding their operations throughout the African mainland. Longer-term, the key to Mauritius' economic success will be its willingness to innovate. At present, the island still acts as an a droit vehicle for the purpose of investment in India because it has no domestic taxon capital gains, and indirectly this encourages Indian companies to use Mauritius as a base for investing back in India. In the future, the country seems certain to develop as a global finance and technology hub that can exploit opportunities across several different continents, with a privileged connection with African markets, and with its stock exchange acting as a key driver of change.

MOROCCO/al-Maghrib

National Flag

Emblem

Locator Map

TEXT HIGHLIGHTS;-Diaries updates, key events, brief analysis and relating news articles in timeline

Overview

The Spanish seized part of Moroccan terrtory in 1859. It was made part of a French protectorate from 1912 until the independence struggle with Spain and mainly with France ended successfully in March, 1956, colonial years that had lasted 44 years.

Headship since independence on 3rd March, 1956; Monarchial Head In the late 1970s, Morocco annexed Western Sahara.

In the 1990s, the country established a bicameral legislature which met for the first time in 1997. But legitimate authority remains in the hands of the monarchial head.

Origins of name: originates from the Latin Morroch, which was the name of Almoravid-a dynasty that lived between current Senegal and south of current Morocco- and Almohad- a Muslim dynasty- capital Marrakech. The new state was a Sultanate ruled by the Alawite-dynasty which that has ruled since mid-17th century and ruled Morocco until the demand of the Franco-Spanish protectorates of 1912.

A kingdom was formed in exile with King Mohammed V, as monarchial head of Morocco and his son Moulay Hassan as Crownprince after having travelled from France to Madagascar in January, 1954.

Morocco became independent kingdom on March, 1956 as the Moroccan sovereign turned from sultanate to Kingdom in August, 1957 until Mohammed Vs death on the 26th February, 1961.

A Kingdom in Northwest Africa on the Mediterranean and the Atlantic.

Believed the Berbers entered Morocco near the end of the second millennium BC, successive Moori sh dynasties and Sa'adi monarchies began to rule Morocco, followed by the carthages in the fifth century BC, when the French fought Morocco over the Algerian territory in 1840s, the Spanish seized part of Moroccan terrtory in 1859. It was made part of a French protectorate from 1912 until the independence struggle with Spain and mainly with France ended successfully in March, 1956, colonial years that had lasted 44 years. The new state was a Sultanate ruled by the Alawite-dynasty which that has ruled since mid-17th century and ruled Morocco until the demand of the Franco-Spanish protectorates of 1912. A kingdom was formed in exile with King Mohammed V, as monarchial head of Morocco and his son Moulay Hassan (Moully) as Crownprince after having travelled from France to Madagascar in January, 1954, it became independent kingdom on March, 1956 as the Moroccan sovereign turned from sultanate to Kingdom in August, 1957 until his death on 26th February, 1961.

The Crownprince Hassan (Moulay) who was proclaimed Crownprince on the 19th of July, 1957 came to the throne as "Hassan II" on the 3rd of March, 1961. In early 1970s, King Moulay Hassan II had been survived two majour coup attempts, the first, was in 1971, a coup attempt supported by Libya and organized by Army Generals, Madbouh & Ababou, the king had taken to a house arrest, and the Rabat main Radio station was taken over which broadcasted that the king has been murdered and a republic has been founded, the coup ended the same day when the Royal Moroccan troops tookover the palace in combat defeat against the rebel soldiers. Morocco executes ten army officers connected with the coup attempt.

On the 16th of August, 1972, during a second attempt four F5 fighter Jets from the Royal Moroccan air force fired upon the King's Boeng 727, while he was travelling back to Rabat from France, but the plotters failed to bring it down. The coup leader, General Mohammed Oufkir, Morocco's then defence minister, believed the behind the coup man and was officially declared to have committed suicide after the attack.

King Moulay Hassan II of Morocco died suddenly on the 23rd of July, 1999, his first son, the crownprince Mohammed Hassan known as "Sidi", has succeeded his father and crowned as "Mohammed VI", in lineage of inheritance according to seniority of birth among the sons of a monarch, shortly after his father's death. Morocco virtually annexed the Western Sahara during the late 1970s, and fighting over the region known as the Western Sahara continued as attempts at mediation have repeatedly been made by the United Nations. The kingdom of Morocco had left the ex-Organization of African Unity (OAU) on the 12th of November, 1984 following the admission of the Saharawi Arab Democratic Republic (SADR) to the ex-Organization of African Unity, as government of Western Sahara in 1982. In Morocco, the monarch is a popular figure, credited with bringing stability and prosperity to the country. King Mohammed VI, is a member of the Alaouite dynasty that has been ruling Morocco for some four centuries, claiming a direct line of descent from the prophet-Muhammad. The King of Morocco is after all both head of state and the commander of the faithful (Amir Al-mouminin), that is to say, the political & the religious ultimate authority remains in the hands of the head of the monarchy.

As the Tunisian & Egyptian, have spread across north African Maghreb-states since early sprig of 2011 popular protests in Tunisia and Egypt forced out leaders. Thousands of people have marched in Moroccan cities to demand that King Mohammad VI give-up some of his powers. The protesters have not called for the removal of King Mohammed VI, but for a new constitution, curbing his powers. After weeks of nationwide protests, King Mohammed VI unexpectedly announced sweeping constitutional reforms. The changes, which would in theory lead to free parliamentary elections and the shrinking of the monarch's authority, are aimed at mollifying protesters who have long been frustrated by the stifling power of the court and the perceived corruption of many people associated with the royal family. But the king has made similar promises in the past and failed to follow through: not holding their breadth, the protesters planned future mass demonstrations. "Unlike other countries in the region, that has seen protests, Morocco has a successful economy, an elected Parliament and a reformist monarchy, making it less vulnerable to a major uprising than other countries, it's a peaceful protest by any means only to push for constitutional reforms, restore dignity, denouncing corruption and demanding democratic reforms to end graft" said a political analyst. Thousands of Moroccan pro-democracy protesters staged protests in February, 2011 similar to those in Tunisia and Egypt. The Moroccan kingdom, soberly awared of what had happened in Tunisia, Egypt and recently in Libya has voluntarily instituted democratic reforms to pre-empt mass uprising. In March, the king promised "comprhensive constitutional reform" in the north African kingdom, these reforms would reduce the king's political and religious powers, according to reports. The reform proposal:- drawn-up by a reform panel appointed by the king Mohammed VI will see the premier become "president of the government". The premier will be able to appoint government officials, taking over a role previously held only by the king, and be able to debate state policy at weekly government council meetings in the absence of the king, the draft says.

Electoral polls have closed in Morocco's first parliamentary elections since a new Constitution was approved by a referendum. Under the existing Constitution, the vote in the North African kingdom was brought forward in response to the Arab spring uprisings. The new Constitution, proposed by King Mohammed VI, gives more powers to the parliament and the prime minister. The King must now appoint the PM from the party which wins the majority seats, rather than naming whomever he pleases. The result is expected to be a close contest between the moderate Islamist opposition party and a new coalition of liberals with close ties to the Moroccan Palace.

Under the ammended Constitution, only the cabinet chaired by the king can decide state policy, however, the monarch will remain key power-broker and still has the final say on issues of defence, security and religion. But some reform minded activists have urged caution, saying that Morocco's 400-years old Alouite monarchy has a long history of enacting superficial reforms. It's to be recalled that Morocco's moderate Islamist, Justice and Development Party (JDP) has won the most seats in recent parliamentary elections.

Side note: Tens of thousands of anti-government protesters took to the streets in Morocco's largest city, Casablanca. The rally, organised by trade unions, was believed to be the biggest since a new government took office in January, 2012. Those taking part accused Prime Minister Benkirane of failing to deliver promised reforms. Morocco's King Mohammed VI managed to hold off-Arab Spring protests last year by curbing his powers and pledging a raft of reforms. In November, 2011 polls brought to power a coalition government led by the Justice and Development Party, a moderate Islamist party, but many are frustrated over the pace of change in a country plagued by high unemployment and illiteracy rates.

How Mohamed VI rules by remote control'

ION: March 14, 2013 - Initially tailor-made to counter the winds of the "Arab Spring", the legislative elections that brought a coalition headed by Islamist prime minister Abdelilah Benkirane to power in Morocco last November, 25, obliged Mohamed VI to juggle with the balance of political power in his kingdom. In bringing several former ministers into his team of advisors - who answer only to him - and imposing the presence of his men in government posts, the monarch seriously curbed the powers of the new administration. Source: Indian Ocean Newsletter

Tentative election calendar-September, for chamber of councellors & representatives.

Morocco – Timeline Diaries updates, and related key note:

7th Century AD - Arab invasion; Idris founds the first major Muslim dynasty

10-17th Centuries - Dynasties and religious movements come and go, including the Almoravid movement which at its peak controlled Morocco and parts of present-day Algeria and Spain.

1860 - Dispute over Spain's Ceuta enclave; Spain declares war, wins a further enclave and an enlarged Ceuta in the settlement.

1884 - Spain creates a protectorate in coastal areas of Morocco.

1904 - France and Spain carve out zones of influence.

1906 - Algeciras Conference in Spain; France and Spain get the go-ahead to police Moroccan ports and collect customs fees.

1912 - Morocco becomes a French protectorate under the Treaty of Fez, administered by a French Resident-General. Spain continues to operate its coastal protectorate. The sultan has a largely figurehead role.

1921-6 - Tribal rebellion in Rif mountains is suppressed by French and Spanish troops.

1943 - Istiqlal - Party of Independence - founded to press for independence.

1956 March - End of French protectorate after unrest and strong nationalist sentiment. Spain keeps its two coastal enclaves. Sultan Mohammed becomes king in 1957.

1961 - Death of King Mohammed; King Hassan II comes to power.

1963 - First general elections.

1965 - Social unrest: King Hassan declares a state of emergency and suspends parliament.

1971 - Failed attempt to depose king and establish republic.

1973 - Polisario movement formed, aims to establish an independent state in Spanish Sahara, a territory south of Morocco controlled by Spain. The group has Algerian support.

November 6, 1975 - The Green March: King Hassan orders 350,000 civilian volunteers to cross into Spanish Sahara.

December 1975 - Spain agrees to leave Spanish Sahara, soon to become Western Sahara, and to transfer it to joint Moroccan-Mauritanian control. Algeria objects and threatens military intervention. Moroccan forces enter and occupy the territory.

Conflict over Western Sahara

1976 - Moroccan and Algerian troops clash in Western Sahara. Algeria announces the formation of the Saharawi Arab Democratic Republic (SADR) with a government-in-exile. Morocco and Mauritania divide-up Western Sahara.

1976 onwards - Fighting between Moroccan military and Polisario forces; the war is a considerable financial drain on Morocco.

1983 - Summit between King Hassan and Algerian president prompts thaw in relations.

1983 - King cancels planned elections amid political unrest and economic crisis.

1984 - Morocco leaves the Organisation of African Unity in protest at the SADR's admission to the body. Polisario claims to have killed more than 5,000 Moroccan soldiers between 1982-85.

1988 - Resumption of full diplomatic relations with Algeria.

1991 - UN-monitored ceasefire begins in Western Sahara, but the territory's status remains undecided and ceasefire violations are reported. The following decade sees much wrangling over a proposed referendum on the future of the territory but the deadlock is not broken.

1998 - Morocco's first opposition-led government comes to power.

1999 - King Hassan II is succeeded by his son, Mohammed VI.

November, 2001 - King Mohammed starts a controversial tour of Western Sahara, the first by a Moroccan monarch for a decade.

July 2002 - Morocco and Spain agree to US-brokered resolution over the disputed island of Perejil. Spanish troops had taken the normally-uninhabited island after Moroccan soldiers landed on it and set up tents and a flag.

December 2002 - Morocco and Spain hold their first talks since their conflict over Perejil. In January 2003 they agree to return ambassadors.

February 2003 - Casablanca court jails three Saudi members of al-Qaeda for 10 years after they were accused of plotting to attack US and British warships in the Straits of Gibraltar.

May 2003 - More than 40 killed when suicide bombers attack several sites in Casablanca, including a Spanish restaurant and Jewish community centre.

February 2004 - Powerful earthquake hits the north; more than 500 people are killed.

July 2004 - Free trade agreement with the US comes into effect. It follows Washington's designation of Morocco as a major non-Nato ally.

September-October 2005 - Hundreds of African migrants try to storm Morocco's borders with the Spanish enclaves of Melilla and Ceuta. Morocco deports hundreds of the illegal migrants.

December2005 - Truth commission investigating human rights abuses during the rule of King Hassan II says 592 people were killed between 1956-99.

January 2006 - Spanish Premier Zapatero visits the Spanish enclaves of Melilla and Ceuta. He's the first Spanish leader in 25 years to make an official visit to the territories.

April 2007 - Three suspected suicide bombers blow themselves up in Casablanca, a few weeks after a suicide blast in an internet cafe weeks earlier.

Two suicide bombers blow themselves up outside US diplomatic offices in Casablanca.

Morocco unveils an autonomy blueprint for Western Sahara to the United Nations. Independence movement Polisario rejects the plan and puts forwards its own proposal.

June 2007 - Morocco and the Polisario Front hold UN-sponsored talks in New York but fail to come to any agreement.

September 2007 - Parliamentary elections. The conservative Istiqlal party, a member of the ruling coalition, wins the most votes.

November 2007 - Spanish King Juan Carlos visits Ceuta and Melilla, angering Morocco which demands the return of the enclaves.

April 2008 - Spanish police arrest two Moroccans wanted over 2003 Casablanca bombings, plan extradition.

September 2008 - Fouad Ali al-Himma, a confidant of King Mohammed, forms an alliance around his new Authenticity and Modernity Party. The party has the potential to dominate parliament.

Court sentences more than 40 people to long prison sentences over Casablanca internet cafe suicide bombing that injured three.

December 2008 - Two Moroccan men, Abdelilah Ahriz and Hicham Ahmidan, sentenced to 20 and 10 years in jail respectively in Morocco over Madrid train bombings of 2004.

February 2009 - Islamist Saad Housseini given 15-year sentence over 2003 Casablanca bombings that killed 45 people. Also wanted in Spain over Madrid bombings.

July 2009 - Alleged al-Qaeda leader in Morocco, Belgian-Moroccan Abdelkader Belliraj, imprisoned for life on being found guilty of leading an Islamist militant group and committing six murders in Belgium.

November 2010 - Security forces storm a protest camp in disputed territory of Western Sahara, triggering violent demonstrations in regional capital Elayoun.

February 2011 - Thousands of people rally in Rabat and other cities calling for political reform and a new constitution curbing the powers of the king.

April 2011 - 17 people - mainly foreigners - are killed in a bomb attack on a Marrakech cafe. It is Morocco's deadliest blast in eight years. The Maghreb arm of al-Qaeda denies involvement.

July 2011 - King Mohammed scores a landslide victory in a referendum on a reformed constitution he proposed to placate "Arab Spring" protests. Demonstrators continue to call for deeper reforms.

October 2011 - Court sentences man to death for bombing of tourist cafe in Marrakech in April.

November 2011 - Parliamentary elections won by moderate Islamist Justice and Development Party (PJD).

January 2012 - New coalition headed by PJD leader Abdelilah Benkirane is installed.

May 2012 - Tens of thousands take part in Casablanca trade union rally, the largest since the new government took office in January. Participants accuse Prime Minister Benkirane of failing to deliver on reforms.

January 2013 - Government backs changing penal code article that allows rapists of underage girls to avoid prosecution by marrying their victims. Follows suicide of 16-year-old girl forced to marry her rapist.

August 5, 2014: Of all the Arab countries Morocco has had the least problems with Islamic terrorism. There are several reasons for this. First there is geography. Morocco is the westernmost (from Arabia) Moslem country and like the easternmost nation (Indonesia) is least affected by the Islamic radicalism that arose in Arabia in the 7th century and has survived there ever since. Then there is the ethnic factor. While Morocco is nominally an Arab country most of the people were originally Berber, the people native to North Africa for over 40,000 years. Many Moroccans are aware of their Berber ancestry and take pride in it. Berbers resisted, often successfully, the initial advance by Arab Moslem armies and while most eventually converted to Islam, they tend to wear their religion lightly and are not considered the best recruits for Islamic terrorist groups. Yet Islamic radicalism and Arab nationalism still appeals to some young Moroccans but not nearly as many as in other Arab countries. At least a thousand Moroccans are fighting with rebel groups in Syria and since September 11, 2001 thousands of local Islamic radicals have been arrested in Morocco. Most of these were freed largely because they had decided to abandon and avoid Islamic radicalism and actually did so.

The main Moroccan antidote to Islamic terrorism is an ancient monarchy that follows the moderate Malikite form of Sunni Islam. Most North Africans are nominally Malikite but outside of Morocco a greater number are tempted to sample the much more radical Wahhabism from Saudi Arabia. In Morocco the ancient monarchy was always at the center of Malikite worship. The last two kings (Hassan II 1961-99 and Mohammed VI from 1999 to the present) have encouraged democracy and good government as well as adherence to the moderate Malikite Islam. For example the current king has had over 1,600 Malikite religious teachers trained since 2006 and sent them to the 50,000 mosques throughout the country to show local clergy how to better serve their congregations and resist the temptations of Islamic radicalism. This program was in response to radical missionaries sent to Morocco by Saudi Arabia and Iran in the last decade as well as the radical propaganda spread by the Internet and Arab language satellite news channels.

Islamic terrorist groups have tried to establish themselves in Morocco since the 1990s but have found the going very difficult. There have been few Islamic terrorist attacks and those that do occur are swiftly dealt with. For example, in April 2011 a terrorist bomb went off a popular tourist café in Marrakech killing 16 people. Most of the dead were foreign tourists and it was the worst terror attack in eight years. The bomber was sloppy however and police were able to track him down along with two accomplices. What they found was a determined al Qaeda admirer who was unable to connect with al Qaeda central or travel to current terrorist hotspots (Pakistan, Afghanistan, Somalia, Yemen, Iraq, Chechnya) because the Moroccan police were monitoring anyone going to those places. But the arrested man was able to get a workable bomb design on the Internet, and was able to get bomb making materials locally. There is a lot of official al Qaeda "how to be a terrorist" stuff on the Internet, but wannabes tend to pay insufficient attention to the need for security. The incident also demonstrated that as long as there is a lot of pro-terrorist propaganda out there some small percentage (often less than one percent) of the population will buy into to it, and seek to carry out terror attacks. Since there are so few terror attacks in places like Morocco, each one that does occur is a big deal. But it's not much of a trend.

A year earlier Morocco announced it had destroyed a 24 man terrorist cell. Four of those arrested had previously been in jail for terrorist activities. This cell was not only planning attacks, but had also been active in recruiting Moroccans for terrorist groups in Afghanistan, Iraq and Somalia. Since 2003, when Islamic radicals throughout the Arab world became enraged by the American invasion of Iraq, Morocco shut down 60 Islamic terrorist cells. In early 2010 there were over a thousand Islamic radicals jailed in Morocco. Despite all this, Morocco was having a peculiar problem with Islamic radicalism. Iran sent missionaries for a while. These fanatics were armed with lots of cash and engaged in aggressive attempts to convert Moroccans to the militant brand of Shia Islam favored in Iran. This so angered Morocco that diplomatic relations with Iran were cut in 2009. Morocco also cracked down on Wahhabi missionaries from Saudi Arabia, and Islamic radicals in general. The king had an advantage in that he is a direct descendent of the Prophet Mohammed (important for any Moslem leader) and is generally popular. The Moroccan government is not as corrupt and inept as others in the Arab world, but is not a whole lot better either.

Meanwhile Morocco helps other North African and Sahel countries deal with Islamic terrorism. Morocco sends religious teachers and is always ready to discuss specific problems that Morocco had already taken care of at home. One problem Morocco has handled well is economics. Without oil Morocco has prospered by making it easy to start and operate businesses and resisted the temptation to nationalize sectors of the economy. While Morocco does not have the highest per-capita GDP in North Africa it recognized as having the best quality of life.

Morocco seeks to rejoin AU after Western Sahara row

Morocco has sent a special envoy to lobby African leaders to rejoin the African Union 32 years after it left in a row over Western Sahara.

Taib Fassi Fihri met Kenya's President Uhuru Kenyatta in Nairobi and said Morocco wants to re-join the AU without any preconditions.

Morocco claims Western Sahara as part of its territory, much of which it has occupied since 1975.

But the AU recognises Western Sahara as an independent state.

Morocco is the only African country not to be an AU member.

The AU, however, says it will continue pushing for the rights of Western Sahara to hold a referendum on its self-determination.

Brahim Ghali, the new leader of the North African territory is expected to attend the African Union summit in the Rwandan capital, Kigali, according to the AU's deputy chairperson Erastus Mwencha.

Mr Ghali was elected the Western Sahara president and secretary-general of the independence movement Polisario Front on 9 July.

He replaced long-time leader Mohammed Abdelaziz who died in May.

Some Facts on Morocco/Polisario dispute

1975-76: Morocco annexes two-thirds of Western Sahara after colonial power Spain withdraws.

1975-76: Polisario Front declares the Saharan Arab Democratic Republic (SADR), with a government-in-exile in Algerian region of Tinduf. Thousands of Sahrawi refugees flee to western Algeria to set up camps.

1984: Morocco leaves the Organisation of African Unity (which later became the African Union) in protest at the SADR's admission to the body.

1991: UN-monitored ceasefire begins in Western Sahara, but the territory's status remains undecided and ceasefire violations are reported. The following decade sees much wrangling over a proposed referendum on the future of the territory but the deadlock is not broken.

March 2016: Morocco threatens to pull its soldiers out of UN global peacekeeping missions in Western Sahara, after UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon uses the term "occupation" when referring to the territory.

May 2016: Long-time Polisario Front leader Mohammed Abdelaziz dies aged 68.

HISTORICIZE

A Quick Look into the History Of The Ancient Roman City Volubilis, Morocco

Visible from the nearby holy town of Moulay Idriss Zerhoune, and from higher points throughout the valley, Volubilis is one of Morocco's best-preserved Roman ruins located between the Imperial Cities of Fez and Meknes on a fertile plain surrounded by wheat fields. Established before the Christian Era, at a time when the area was part of Mauretania, Volubilis was considered the administrative center of the kingdom of Mauretania and also one of the most remote cities within the Roman Empire, located in the far southwestern region.

While the city continued to grow well into the second and third centuries AD when the majority of the buildings still visible were built, it is believed that the 42-hectare walled city was once home to 20,000 residents. With wealth generated from local olive production, many grand residences, complete with stunning mosaic tile work, were constructed (and still visible and intact to this day despite being open to the elements) as were public hammams, triumphal arches, and parliament buildings.

But throughout the Roman reign, the city was not without political tension. In 40 AD, residents began to revolt; however, the granting of Roman citizenship and tax-free status for ten years calmed the situation. But when the local Amazigh people started to pressure the Roman Empire, the Romans withdrew in 285 AD, although the local Syrian, Jew, Berber, and Greek populations continued to speak the local language of Latin.

In the eighth century, when Islam arrived in the region, the churches were destroyed, although locals continued to occupy the city until the 11th century. While Volubilis remained inhabited and maintained its status as a capital city for centuries after the collapse of the Roman Empire, the city lost its administrative center status when nearby Fez was established, and the residents were relocated to the mountainous village of Moulay Idriss.

In the 18th century, the Lisbon earthquake hit the region, which caused the destruction of the buildings. As early as the 1830s, well before the French Protectorate era, the French army began excavations. In 1997, the archaeological site of Volubilis was inscribed on the UNESCO World Heritage Site List.

Morocco To Build 600 "Green Mosques" by 2019

Morocco has announced that its plan to launch 600 environmentally friendly mosques by 2019, local media reported on Wednesday.

As a part of a large environmentally conscious effort across Morocco, the country aims to reduce power consumption in its mosques as well as to raise awareness of renewable energy, the Moroccan daily Akhbar Alyaoum said. The "green mosques" will use LED lighting, solar water heaters, and photovoltaic power systems, the report said.

The effort is being largely funded by the Ministry of Islamic Affairs, in partnership with the German government, which will help with upgrades, it said. Morocco ranks alongside Costa Rica, Bhutan and Ethiopia as one of the world's greenest countries, a fact partially due to its ambitious goals to crack down on carbon emissions.

The Moroccan city of Marrakesh is due to host the 22nd Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (COP 22) in this November. – Xinhua

Politics

Morocco Walks Out of Arab-Africa Summit, Other Arab Countries Follow Suit in Support

9 Arab countries, including Morocco, have pulled out from the 4th Arab-African Summit in Malabo (Equatorial Guinea), in protest against the participation of the so-called Desert Polisario separatist delegation.

The countries that withdrew from the summit in solidarity with Morocco are Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates, Bahrain, Qatar, Sultanate of Oman, Jordan, Yemen and Somalia.

Others are also expected to follow suit according to Moroccan Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Desert Polisario separatist delegation talks of a 'Sahrawi rebel national liberation movement' aiming at ending Moroccan presence, in the Western Sahara. Western Sahara is home to the Algerian-backed Polisario Front in the region.

The 'Sahrawi people' are however, the people living in the western part of Sahara desert which includes Western Sahara, other parts of southern Morocco not claimed by the Polisario, most of Mauritania, and the extreme southwest of Algeria.

According to a press release issued by the Moroccan Foreign Affairs ministry; "All these countries back Morocco in conformity with the principles of international law including the respect of sovereignty of countries and their territorial integrity, its high esteem" for the "brotherly African country" of Equatorial Guinea, Morocco recalls the "shared commitments" made by Arab and African countries during the 2nd and 3rd Arab-African summits held respectively in Libya in 2010 and Kuwait in 2013. During these summits, Arab and African countries agreed that “only UN member countries” should be allowed to participate in the Arab-African summits.

The withdrawal of Morocco and its powerful Arab Gulf Countries has weakened the gathering which some countries used to undermine Moroccan sovereignty and territorial integrity but their plot blew up in the face. They forgot that North African Kingdom is one of the strategic partners of the Arab rich Gulf monarchies. These countries support Moroccan territorial integrity and back its sovereignty over Sahara, hailing autonomy plan for the Moroccan Sahara.

Last April, Morocco and GCC convened in Riyadh their 1st summit meeting, a historical event that ushered in a new era in partnership between Rabat and the six-member powerful regional economic bloc, sharing common geostrategic, economic, and religious interests.

Meanwhile, Morocco withdrew from the AU in 1984, when the mineral-rich and sparsely populated Saharan Arab Democratic Republic (SADR), commonly known as Western Sahara, was accepted as a member. Morocco however requested to join the African Union again in September after 32 years, before its current reported withdrawal. Source:northafricapost.com

The Holocaust
How did Moroccan Jews survive the Holocaust?
Answered by

Jacob Weinstein

Oct 4 They were saved by King Mohammed V of Morocco, who is alleged to have told the Nazis that “there are no Jewish citizens, there are no Muslims citizens, they are all Moroccans.” It would be wrong not to mention that he did allow Jewish discriminatory laws to be enacted under the Vichy regime since they were still a French colonial subject. However, it is due to his intentional hand-waving in front of Vichy and Nazi officials that the Moroccan Jews got to live under discrimination instead of being rounded up, shipped, and murdered, and it is suggested that he objected to these laws but signed them under immense pressure. However you choose to view his complex image, millions of Jews of Moroccan descent are alive thanks to his act of bravery.

محمد الخامس بن يوسف 1927 1961 م

King Mohammed al-Khamis bin Yusef bin Hassan al-Alawi

Jacob Weinstein Studied at University of Central Florida

Oct 4

They were saved by King Mohammed V of Morocco, who is alleged to have told the Nazis that “there are no Jewish citizens, there are no Muslims citizens, they are all Moroccans.” It would be wrong not to mention that he did allow Jewish discriminatory laws to be enacted under the Vichy regime since they were still a French colonial subject. However, it is due to his intentional hand-waving in front of Vichy and Nazi officials that the Moroccan Jews got to live under discrimination instead of being rounded up, shipped, and murdered, and it is suggested that he objected to these laws but signed them under immense pressure. However you choose to view his complex image, millions of Jews of Moroccan descent are alive thanks to his act of bravery. May his memory be a blessing.

Related Links

Was Kristallnacht when the German people showed that their loyalty was to Hitler and the Nazis and they were not going to help the Jews?

What's the Japanese perspective view on Nazism and the Holocaust then and now?

When Germans snitched on someone being a Jew in WW2, without having a clue that he/she is so, or even knew that he/she is not so, what did happen to him/her?

How many of the Jews murdered in the Shoah were killed by poison gas?

How many WW1-era German veterans were sent to Nazi concentration camps?

How much responsibility does the Hungarian society have when it comes to WW2 and the treatment of Jews?

Is there evidence that Hitler had detailed accounts of the conditions of the prisoners inside the concentration/death camps? I want to know just to what extent he knew about it versus, say, Heinrich Himmler, who actually went to the camps and saw gassing demonstrations etc…

How big would the Jewish population in Germany and the rest of Europe be now if not for the Holocaust?

How did Italy under Mussolini manage to save a high percentage of Jews from the Nazis in WW2?

Which countries' governments and citizens did their best to save Jews from the Nazi gas chambers in WW2?

What was it like to be an expat in Europe during the Holocaust?

Was the Nazi proposal to trade 1 million Jews to the Allies in return for 10,000 trucks legitimate, and why did the U.S. and Britain reject it?

Why did Hitler hate Jews more than other non-Aryan people?

Why did The Netherlands, France, and other European countries cooperate with the Nazis to round up Jews whereas Nazi allies like Italy and Bulgaria tried not to?

What do you think of Moroccan king Mohammed Vl expressing hope that renewed ties with Israel will encourage regional peace?

Andrew Michael Lenihan

Knows Spanish Updated Sep 13

Compared to some Arab countries, Morocco has some credibility.

Historically the largest Jewish community by far in MENA.

Historically the most tolerant country to Jews in MENA.

The monarchy refused to let the Nazi allies persecute the Jews.

There was no violent expulsion of Jews from Morocco in 1948.

If Morocco is renewing ties with Israel?
God bless!

Related Links

How do Moroccans perceive Israel and the Morocco-Israel relationship?
What was the relationship between Israel with Hassan II of Morocco and Hussein of Jordan?
How do Moroccans feel about the announced normalization with Israel?
As a Moroccan, what do you think about Israel?
Why has Morocco decided to normalize relations with Israel?
Now that there are Israel-Morocco relations, will Moroccan Jews return en masse to

Who wants to visit Morocco in 2021?

Noel Bastola 9 months ago
Still the most international borders are closed and I am stuck in my country, my aim is to travel from Morocco to Capetown as I have been to west Africa in 2008.
When I think about Africa, I am so excited to travel it because Africa is the paradise on the earth. The mystical culture, magical beauty of wild life, the delicious organic food, friendly loving people, massive landscape, oldest deserts like Namib and Sahara, mountains to rivers, music and dance and many other things always attract me to visit this beautiful second largest continent on this planet.

But the bureaucracies of Africa is so unimaginable. Visas are always the big headache especially for the passport holders of developing nations. It is true that iron cuts iron as developing nations bother developing nation. Citizen of developed nations are never be bothered.

Morocco is a great country in North west Africa and it is the gateway to enter in the vastness of west Africa. But Morocco is very friendly with developed nations like Australia, New Zealand, the USA, the UK, the EU and Canada, among many others and citizen of these countries don’t need visa to travel Morocco.

But Morocco is not that friendly with the nations of developing nations like Nepal with other Asian countries and with her neighbourhood countries. I know not why? Moroccan passport holders can travel Nepal and obtain the visa on arrival at the border but passport holders from Nepal only can obtain visa for Morocco in New Delhi , India. In 2008, I tried to apply Moroccan tourist visa in many countries in Europe but I was refused and finally with lot of difficulties, I was able to obtain visa and I entered to Morocco from Spain by Boat and travel all West African countries and it was a great experience.

Now again, I want to travel but I am always afraid to obtain visa. I don’t think that passport holders from developing nations who hold the valid multiple visa of developed nations can be immigrants to Morocco. But the visa is so difficult.

I know that Morocco is a great country with beautiful culture. When I was in Morocco, every one called me Moroccan and it was a great privilege to me.

The iconic city of Marrakesh is most visited place in Morocco and Casablanca, Fes, Rabat, Quarzazate, Meknes, Agadir, Essaouira, Toubkal National Park and Jebel Toubkal, Sidi Ifni, Merzouga, Chefchaouen, Asilah are also the most visited places in Morocco. when I first time entered to Morocco, I was so impressed by the friendliness of Moroccan People. I found the another Nepal in Morocco. West African countries are in my list but I have a dream to reach to Cape town from Morocco (this dream remained dream in 2008, due to difficulties of visa). But now I want to travel all the west coast to Africa and want to enjoy, I hope 2021 will be waiting for the full of surprise and soon people will resume their normal life. Wish you happy new year 2021 to all the friends in the world.

With friendly Moroccan people in Rabat.

The great man from Morocco and I still remember vividly how selflessly he helped me. Love to meet him again.

One of my favourite city Casablanca.

These friends said to me that I look like Moroccan.

People from Sahara in Dakhla .

Morocco is the great for its beautiful culture and heritage. Its good to enter Mauritania from Morocco via “No Man's Land”.

I am with the first Moroccan Woman (Bouchra Baibanou) who climbed Mt. Everest in 2017.

Thank you for reading.

Related Links
How safe is Agadir, Morocco for people visiting?
Has anyone visited Agadir in Morocco? What is it like?
Is Morocco an expensive or a cheap tourist destination?
What are top 5 destinations to go if I visit Morocco for one week?

A major chapter in Medieval North African history tells of the influx of nomadic Arabian tribes called Banu Hilal in the 11th century, who went on to cause anarchy for centuries, destroying many cities. What explains the hostility of these tribes?

Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan
Lived in Meknès, Morocco (1996–0)Jun 25

They did not destroy cities and they were not hostile. It was a migration wave. After the rise of the Caliphate (Rashidun, Umayyad and Abbasid). Many of the Bedouin tribes moved out of the Arabian Peninsula to other parts of the Empire. They offered their services to the Caliphs and their Governors in exchange for land and specific privileges.

This is because Arabs were a small minority of the Caliphate and having the Bedouin spread around was very useful as they provide local bases of support.

The Banu Hilal was a union of such tribes and originally settled in Egypt where it served whoever was in power.

What happened next is divided

Either: By 1100, Egypt was ruled by the Fatimid Caliphs who “encouraged” the Bedouins to move into North Africa after they lost their territory there to local Berber dynasties and so decided to punish them. Or

Egypt suffered a brutal famine and so the Bedouins departed on their own accord with some or no prodding from the Fatimid Caliphs

This migration had a mixed reception

North Africa was mostly Berber, and the Berber rulers were torn on how to treat the new migrants.

In what is now Tunisia we see the two separate responses from two rival Berber dynasties.

> The Zirid Emirs saw the Bedouins as a threat and quickly mobilized an army to essentially massacre the Bedouin.
>
> The rival Hammadids quickly embraced the Bedouins and recruited them into their armies to fight the Zirids.

However, not all of the Bedouin became mere lackeys. Many of the tribes in the Banu Hilal confederation essentially became North Africa’s “Vikings”. They found the Berber tribes to be weaker and alien, thus it became a tradition for the Banu Hilal tribes to organize annual raids into various Berber lands.

Bedouin doing sword dance in front of crowd

So how was the situation resolved?

A Moroccan Berber dynasty known as the Almohads quickly built an empire and conquered Eastern Algeria and Tunisia where the Banu Hilal had been operating for a few decades.

In order to gain the loyalty of local Berbers, the Almohad Sultan Abd al-Mu'min organized an army of Moroccan and local Berbers. He then waited for reports of a Bedouin force.

Once he located the Banu Hilal bedouins, he quickly marched against them in what is now known as the Battle of Sétif.

Sultan Abd al-Mu’min thrashed the Bedouin, however instead of expelling them from the region or slaughtering them, he instead offered them two conditions:

The Bedouin would leave Eastern Algeria and Tunisia for Morocco.
Once in Morocco, the Bedouin would serve in the Almohad armies as permanent levies. This solved the Bedouin problem permanently as:

The Bedouin tribes were finally given a home and land of their own
The Bedouins were made “partners” instead of mere subordinates to be used and tossed aside

The Almohad Caliphate

And that's how Morocco's ethnic Arab population started!

Today most of Morocco's ethnic Arabs, meaning by blood, are descendants of the Bedouin that the Almohad Caliphs settled in Morocco.

Related Links

What were the key differences that kept Berbers as outsiders under Roman rule but then they were Arabized and incorporated under Arab rule?
How large were the Banu Hilal migrations really? I read in Wikip. that they were with 100000 to 300000 people, which sounds untrue to me since such a large migration out of Arabia to North Africa would empty the almost uninhabited deserts of Arabia.
Who were the Berbers that lived long before the Arabs arrived in Northern Africa?

In the early years gone by of the North African conquest by the Arabs, how can they establish a civilisation when they were nomadic people that are always on the move and never settled?
Are North Africans basically past invaders of Africa, given the ethnic difference?
Why some people always appropriate or blackwash parts of middle eastern and North

Was Morocco part of the Ottoman Empire?

Orlando Barrios Cashier at Super-Duper Mart Updated May 23

No in its entirety. The Ottomans tried to conquer Morocco after the Saadi sultan refused to pay homage, but were defeated at the Battle of Wadi al-Laban (1558). Unable to force the Saadi out, the Porte used intrigue and dynastic infighting in Morocco to obtain the homage desired: further military adventures allowed the Ottomans to place a puppet Sultan in the Moroccan throne and add modern Moroccan territory into the Regency of Algiers, but the Saadi Sultanate itself never was incorporated into the Empire.

Map from Wikicommons:

Answer requested by

Ayah T. Henriksen

Related Links

Did the Ottomans conquer Morocco?
Why didn’t the Ottomans conquer (what is now known as) Morocco? The Ottoman Empire stopped its expansion in Northern Africa in (northern) Algeria.
Why didn't they try to take over Morocco?
Why didn't the Ottomans conquer Morocco?
Why didn't the Ottoman Empire expand into Morocco and Arabia?
How close was the Ottoman Empire to conquering Europe?
Was the Ottoman Empire bad or good?
How did the Ottoman Empire fare in the First World War?
Did Islam ever predict the Ottoman Empire?

What did the Sultanate of Morocco, Mughal Empire, Persian Empire, and other independent Muslim countries call the Ottoman Empire?
What countries were part of the Ottoman Empire? Why and how did they become a part of it?
How did the Ottomans rise to power and become a world power?
What if Morocco was an Ottoman province?
Was Morocco an Ottoman vassal?
Who were the Ottomans' closest allies throughout their history?
Ottoman Empire: Was "Suleiman The Magnificent" magnificent?

Alice Giacomini
aspiring archeologist Oct 3 Morocco

The historical Amazigh Ecudar is considered the oldest banking system in the world, as it was facilities dedicated to saving, storing and protecting the money and property of Amazigh families, urging the supervision of a tribe trustee known for his honesty and integrity.

These facilities contained dozens of small rooms, and each family was assigned an account. One was a private room in which you put all your valuable possessions such as jewellery, money, grain and all valuable items to protect them from looting and theft.

And this was the oldest banking system in the world with a difference that all families do not take any interest on saving and do not pay any banks for that, except for the duties of guarding and restoration.

What is a Quranist?

Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan

Lived in Meknès, Morocco (1996–0) May 14

Speaking as a Quranist, there are three types in my opinion. My labels that I use to refer to the three are:
The Submitters
The Individualists
The "I want to be associated with Islam for personal reasons but don't want to be Muslim" crowd

The original Quranists are: The Submitters

Long story short: An Egyptian-American Biochemist named Rashad Khalifa was a devout Sunni who studied Islam as a hobby, he even discovered Code 19(longer story) and wrote numerous essays.

Rashad Khalifa

Then Khalifa had a startling realization: The Sunnis are wrong. So very very very wrong. Their Islam was false. So Khalifa wrote up a set of essays, made numerous videos and even translated the Quran into English with explanations of Quranic verses.

His actions resulted in a movement that he called The Submitters. Outsiders called them Quranists because the Submitters had a very important belief: only the Quran could be the source of Islamic law. This meant the Submitters saw the hadiths as blasphemy and rejected Sharia which is based on the work of Islamic Scholars not the Quran.

The Submitters gained some attention which resulted in the next group:

The Individualists
Due to Khalifa's behavior many Muslims saw the Submitters as insane and wacky cultists. Osama Bin Laden even had Khalifa assassinated.

This is the Masjid Tucson, it is the only Submitters mosque in the world and was built by Khalifa himself. It also serves as the HQ for Submitters all around the world

However many people read Submitter literature and liked the Submitter view that only the Quran should be used in Islam but didn't like the rest of the movement. So they took that concept and ran with it. I generally call them "Individualists".

Why "Individualists"?

Unlike the Submitters, Sunnis, Shia etc. these Quranists have no hierarchy or organization. They're just random Muslims who liked the Submitter's concept of the Quran alone and adopted it, thus leaving Sunni and Shia Islam in favor of Quranism (defined as Quran-only Islam here).

However since there is no organization then they have their own individual interpretations that they came up with.

Two very important things I must add however

Many "Individualists" do follow other Individualists. Edip Yuksel, a Kurdish-American professor, is one such person. He has his own website where he writes on Islam in English and Turkish.

Other "Individualists" do try to organize and set up a coherent group. You have Turkish professor Abdülaziz Bayındır, a lecturer on Islamic law, who has a Quranist organization in Turkey.

Edip Yuksel, his brother was a Kurdish Islamist assassinated by a Turkish Kemalist. He ended up meeting Khalifa, became a Submitter for a time but left and is an "Individualist". He writes a lot on Islam and has attracted a small Quranist following but hasn't tried creating an association or organization

Turkish professor Bayındır did however

But finally you have the last crowd:

The "I want to be associated with Islam for personal reasons but don't want to be Muslim" crowd

Wikipedia is good but really bad as well. It depends on the article.

The Quranism article is very bad as it doesn't describe the sect at all and gives the impression that it's a liberal feel good sect filled with the Muslim version of hippies.

As a result in my life I've met dozens of young Muslims who call themselves Quranists because the Quran isn't as violent and strict as Islamophobes claim it is. Generally they call themselves this because they want to remain in touch with the Muslim community.

Irshad Manji (woman on the right) is one such person. She is a Canadian who identifies as a Quranist. She became a Quranist as she saw it as an ultra-liberal form of Islam. In the photo above you see her kissing her wife.

To use a personal anecdote. I met a Pakistani lesbian woman online once who said she had become a Quranist because her parents were really loving and she adored her family, Eid, listening to the motivational quotes. But she was also aware of the intense homophobia in mainstream Sunnism.

To get around this she just became a Quranist because the Quran doesn't actual condemn homosexuality (there's intense discussion around the story of Lot but if you follow a liberal intereptation then the Quran doesn't condemn homosexuality).

So there you have it

You know what a Quranist is and the three types.

Now personally I'm a CENSORED*.

Related Links

What are Quranist beliefs and practices? Their views differ from a lot of the mainstream sects of Islam, and I find some of their views particularly interesting.
How do Quranist Muslims perform the obligatory prayers?
Why are you a Quranist Muslim?
What led you to become a Qur'an only Muslim (Quranist/Submitter etc)?
Who is the most famous Quranist preacher?
Is Quranism wrong? Why or why not?

Why are earthquakes not common in African soil but common in some parts of the world?

Chris Graham Illustrator at Freelance Design (2012–present) Updated Mon

Earthquakes not common in Africa…uh…what?

What's this? Do you know what that is?

That's Africa tearing itself to pieces. Now answer me this, what happens when a continent tears itself to pieces?

We are seeing in real time a continental rift and the new formation of a plate boundary. And I will tell you that the birth of a new plate is often violent and destructive. But for some strange reason, you think it isn't.

Related Links

Where in the world are there no earthquakes?

How much does soil type have to do with feeling an earthquake vs distance?

Do earthquakes occur only along coastlines, if it not, what are examples of an area where earthquakes occur in the middle of the ocean and in the middle of a continent?

Why is it that earthquakes don't happen in Africa?

Why is there no earthquake in some areas?

What are the areas mostly impacted by earthquakes in South Africa?

Why do earthquakes take place more often in some regions?

What specifically is poor about the soil in Africa?

Where are earthquakes located?

Why doesn't Africa get many earthquakes?

Why do the people of North Africa have almost nothing in common with the rest of Africa or African people?

Dries Aberkane Knows Dutch Updated May 24

A Moroccan here.
If you think North Africa has 'almost nothing' in common with the rest of Africa, you obviously have no real understanding of the cultures of Africa, the north and Sub-Sahara.

First of all, as humans we all have much more in common than the things separating us.

Let's look specifically at my part of North Africa, the Maghreb, and how it fits into the societies that live to its south.

A small anecdote. Few years ago, I met a Senegalese man whose last name was Tijani. I recognized the name as being derived from an 18th century Sufi brotherhood that I knew was widespread in West Africa, the so-called Tijaniyyah. But the founder of the brotherhood was actually an Algerian, and the Sufi order was most successful in attracting adherents in West Africa, where it went on to become the dominant creed of Sufism. In Morocco and Algeria it died out, losing out against other orders, but it went on to prosper in the countries of West Africa, where many folk can still be found named after the mystical order.

The city I had met the man in was Marrakesh, a major urban settlement of Morocco, the city that gave its name to the country at large. Marrakesh is an old city, having roots in a late 11th century Almoravid military camp. These people originated among a religious reform movement of (semi-)nomadic communities of the south of the Sahel, the border region between what is now Mauritania and Mali.

The countries of North Africa and West Africa have a great many things in common, beyond the obvious ties in religious experiences.

For the cultures of the Maghreb are Saharan-Mediterranean in character. People often tend to forget the Sahara part. The part that ties them in to West Africa, like a chain ties in one post of a fence to another.

Timbouktou, Mali.

Ghardaia, Algeria.

Replaced image. The posted image was of a town in Yemen. A mistake that isn’t entirely random. The southern part of Arabia shares a great deal, culturally, with the Sahara and the Sahel. Yemen really is in many ways a cultural brother of the Saharan Maghreb and the Sahel of Africa.

Aspects of traditional North African culture that seem most un-African to many observers are those tied to the Muslim Iberian tradition, a tradition that deeply affected the cultures of the Maghreb, especially its urban heritage. It is when observers concentrate on those cultural aspects of traditional Maghrebi life that people often see a cultural heritage that has no counterpart in other parts of Africa.

Selected images from the Moroccan town of Salé: 13th century gate to the Jewish neighborhood, the Great Mosque and a ruined Quranic school, both 14th century.

This architecture here is typical of post 12th century North Africa, when the different countries of the Maghreb and Muslim Granada morphed into a coherent socio-political whole, with the different parts of ‘the West’ influencing one another. It is this tradition that most strikes invested people when they think of North African or Moroccan architecture. The only

But this heritage isn’t all that defines traditional North Africa culture. It’s but one part of a bigger whole, a whole that just as neatly ties into the cultures of the Sahel of Sub-Saharan Africa.

In an earlier answer I touched upon the complicated intertwining of Maghrebi social and cultural life with that of the Muslim cultures of Medieval southern Europe, Sicily and Cordoba in particular, and how that interaction helped give form to the cultures of the Maghreb. Check it out, it’s pretty cool.

The North African countries have populations that are predominantly of Arabic origin due to the influx of Arabs across the region in ancient times for trade (read on the Ghana empire, Songhai empire and Mali empire) and through religious (Islamic) conquests. Several sub Sahara ethnic groups trace their roots to one of the several modern countries stretching from Egypt along the Mediterranean all the way to Mauritania and speak of mass migrations due to persecution and war. A few countries like Morocco and Algeria have more recent historical influences of the heavy presence of French and Spanish as well.

Dries Aberkane's answer to What is the strangest archaeological object ever found?

Related Links

Why are Americans trying to separate North Africa from the rest of Africa by saying that all/the majority black Africans are only sub-Saharan (meaning they're west, south, and central African)?

Why are people of North Africa fair skinned?

Are people from North Africa considered black?

Why do people not consider North Africans as white although North Africans look pretty European?

What makes many people use the term 'sub Saharan' to apply to all black Africans? Are people really this ignorant and believe that all North Africans are white? You don't have to be mixed with 'sub Saharan' to be a dark skinned North African

What kind of skin color did North Africans have in the past? How were they treated by the Romans and so on?

Zaras Ammon studied History & Biological Anthropology at Sorbonne Université (2020)

Answered May 13
Simply because of it’s closeness to the rest of west eurasia and also because it had been kept apart from the rest of Africa for at least the last 5000 years thanks to the greatest geographical and genetic barrier in the world :

The Sahara desert

Land Cover of Africa
With a shaded relief
Map by Jakub Marian (2018)
Land cover data by ESA CCI (2015)
Source: jakubmarian.com
Tree cover
Mosaic herbacious cover, tree and shrub, and/or cropland
Grassland
Cropland
Shrubland
Urban areas
Sparsely vegetated areas
Bare areas
Flooded vegetation
Water

Here the orange areas are genetic barriers as you can see the sahara was a strong one :

Not a coincidence if arabs called north-west Africa “Djazirat al Maghrib” which means the western Island.

Related Links

Why are Americans trying to separate North Africa from the rest of Africa by saying that all/the majority black Africans are only sub-Saharan (meaning they're west, south, and central African)?

Why are people of North Africa fair skinned?

Are people from North Africa considered black?

Why do people not consider North Africans as white although North Africans look pretty European?

What makes many people use the term 'sub Saharan' to apply to all black Africans? Are people really this ignorant and believe that all North Africans are white? You don't have to be mixed with 'sub Saharan' to be a dark skinned North African
What kind of skin color did North Africans have in the past? How were they treated by the Romans and so on?

Why are Americans trying to separate North Africa from the rest of Africa by saying that all/the majority black Africans are only sub-Saharan (meaning they're west, south, and central African)?

Why are people of North Africa fair skinned?

Are people from North Africa considered black?

Why was there so much poverty and illiteracy during Hassan II's reign in Morocco?

Because Hassan II's priority was the survival of the Alaouite Monarchy

Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan

Lived in Meknès, Morocco (1996–0)April 15

Hassan II grew up and took power in turbulent times. In his youth, the world saw the threat of Fascism explode into World War II with battles raging all around the world.

Then in the 1950s, came the new threat from Communism and associated ideologies like pan-Arabism.

These threats didn't just strike fear in the West but the Arab World as well as Egypt, Iraq, Libya, North Yemen and Tunisia all saw their monarchies overthrown in coups and revolutions. In Iraq and North Yemen this resulted in either civil war or a period of instability and chaos.

Morocco was not immune from this

The opposition in Morocco came from the Istiqlal party which resisted French domination in the 1930s and 1940s and thus had a massive support base.

While the Moroccan government's version of history portrays Hassan II's father, Mohammed V (r. 1927–1961) as a wise and strong leader, the reality was quite different.

Mohammed V

Mohammed V was genuinely beloved by the Moroccan people which is why Istiqlal never organized a coup as it would mean civil war, however Mohammed

V was indecisivie and the real power behind the throne was a stern Hassan II who advised his father regularly to be repressive.

One of the best examples of this being the 1958 Rif Revolt

In October 1958, several Riffian Berber tribes sent a letter to King Mohammed V requesting several reforms such as the return of Abdelkrim , a legendary Riffian rebel leader who fought the Spaniards in the 1920s and went into exile to Egypt. This letter was sent after the tribes occupied several settlements to make their threat credible.

LE DES DES CARTES

MAROC: L'ULTIMATUM LANCÉ AUX REBELLES EXPIRE AUJOURD'HUI

L'ULTIMATUM lancé par le Roi du Maroc aux dissidents du Rif et du Moyen-Atlas expire aujourd'hui mercredi, à 14 h. Si à ce moment les tribus qui ont pris la montagne n'ont pas regagné leurs douars, le gouvernement royal emploiera les moyens les plus énergiques pour réduire la nouvelle « Siba ». Rien, jusqu'ici, n'indique le fléchissement des rebelles, qui se déclarent toujours décidés à Newspaper from the time, in English it says "Morocco: The ultimatum given by the rebels expires today"

To avoid going on a tangent, I'll give a brief summary:

- Mohammed V wanted to talk it out with the Rif tribes but Hassan II urged his father to brutalize the tribes instead as he believed the Monarchy would lose the respect of Moroccans if it didn't.
- Mohammed V gave into his son's arguments.
- Long story short, Hassan II gained the nickname Butcher of the Rif in reference to how he crushed the revolt.

Which brings us to Hassan II's ascendance to the throne

In 1961, Mohammed V finally died which meant Hassan II no longer had to craft arguments to persuade his father on what to do.

Furthermore Hassan II didn't inherit a stable and unified nation:

- The rural tribes were still up in arms
- Istiqlal and Leftist movements like the Communists were riling up the urban folk
- Egypt was trying to persuade Moroccan Arabs to revolt and pursue Pan-Arabism

This resulted in Hassan II making an important decision which answers your question and also explains modern Morocco:

Morocco needed political stability not socioeconomic development

To steal a line from Jim Krane's essay on Oman and its Sultan in the 1960s, Said bin Taimur (r. 1932–1970).

Said saw no need to provide even basic schooling. Given the lack of skilled work in the country, Said felt that an educated populace would either emigrate or rise up against him.7

Hassan II agreed with Sultan Said's view. If Morocco pursued socioeconomic development then Morocco would be more unstable. Educated Moroccans would wonder why the nation was being ruled by an absolute monarchy while a larger middle class would have the funds available to finance a rebellion or other militant activities.

After all, Hassan II's biggest menace was men like Mehdi Ben Barka. Ben Barka was not an illiterate farmer but an educated communist with a degree in mathematics who used his education and charismatic personality to woo large numbers of Moroccans.

Hassan II believed building more schools meant more Ben Barkas appearing.

Hence the political repression

During much of his reign, Morocco was an extremely brutal police state with any sign of political expression being snuffed out immediately. Large numbers of Moroccans "disappeared", a smaller number executed or assassinated, and an even larger number arrested.

Even relatives were not safe.

Malika Oufkir was the daughter of Mohammed Oufkir , a Moroccan Intelligence chief that Hassan II suspected had a hand to play in the 1972 coup. Mohammed committed suicide officially while a 19 year old Malika, her younger siblings and mother spent the next 2 decades in prison as punishment.

Malika Oufkir, for Hassan II her father's death was not enough. To send a message, he had her and family arrested and imprisoned for nearly 2 decades before pressure from France forced him to release them into exile instead.

Malika would later write an autobiography on this experience titled Stolen Lives.

She got off lucky.

Mehdi Ben Barka would flee Morocco only to be located by the Israeli Mossad as a favor to Hassan II. Ben Barka was then killed and dismembered to hide his corpse.

Now you can see why Morocco had an illiteracy issue and social stagnation

However there wasn't poverty if we use the definition meaning inability to cover basic needs.

Hassan II was not a sadistic tyrant. He used a stick and carrot approach. While he engaged in political repression and strangled other social developments like education, he did try to eradicate poverty.

He established a civil servant system which had employment for life, he encouraged Moroccans to emigrate to Europe to work there and send their money to Morocco, He established a very generous subsidy system which ensured Morocco never had a famine again even during times of drought!

For those unaware, subsidies sees the State fix prices for basic goods. For example, a 200 gram loaf of bread like the one in the photo was fixed at 1.2 dirhams in 2012 (about $0.12). This makes it easy for poor Moroccans to feed themselves. However to ensure bakeries make a profit, the State pays the difference. If 200 grams of bread costs 3 dirhams to make then the state will pay 1.8 dirhams per loaf of bread sold.move another motivation for rebellion.

This is why Hassan II has a mixed legacy

While everything I wrote may give the appearance that Hassan II is a detested dictator who is seen as evil, the reality is the opposite. Hassan II has a very positive legacy in Morocco.

Hassan II (r. 1961–1999)

Many Moroccans, including most of my family, credit Morocco's stability and current success to Hassan II's decision to focus on political stability rather than socioeconomic development. While it's true, Morocco lagged, and continues to lag, behind the Arab world on many indicators such as literacy and life expectancy, Morocco hasn't become like Iraq or Libya or Syria.

Sure, even wartorn Syria has a literacy rate of 98% and only Yemen is worse than Morocco but Morocco hasn't had a revolt or insurgency or terror campaign since 1961 so Hassan II wasn't incompetent. He just had a different priority.

Related Links

Why is Morocco a poor country?
What is the illiteracy rate in Morocco?
How is the government handling the low illiteracy rate in Morocco?
Did Cuba eradicate poverty and illiteracy? How?
How is poverty an effect of illiteracy?
Why were the Mayans illiterate?

Morocco says wheat subsidy cut will not hit bread price

SEPTEMBER 28, 20127:02 AMUPDATED 9 YEARS AGO
RABAT (Reuters) - A 15-percent cut in Morocco's subsidies on soft wheat imports in the last quarter of the year will not boost bread prices, Najib Boulif, minister in charge of general affairs and public governance, said on Friday.
Freshly baked bread cools off on the racks at a downtown bakery in Taipei July 19, 2007. REUTERS/Pichi Chuang

High food prices were seen as a factor in violence which engulfed North African neighbours Tunisia, Libya and Egypt last year and Morocco has also witnessed violence following bread price hikes in the past.

“The price of bread (200-gramme loaf) has to stay at 1.2 dirham,” Boulif told Reuters by telephone.

He said while it would lower the subsidy, the government would end up spending an additional $100 million to maintain the bread price, reflecting wheat prices that have soared this year due to drought in the United States and Russia.

“We have agreed to raise by 860 million dirhams the total amount of subsidies to be paid for soft wheat imports during the fourth quarter because we want the price of bread to remain the same,” Boulif said.

Strapped for cash, Morocco’s government on Thursday announced a rare cut in the subsidy it pays millers for imported soft wheat, part of a plan to gradually reform the country’s wider subsidy system.

“We suspended the import duty on soft wheat imports (for Q4, 2012) to help the operators,” said Boulif. “But they always import more than what we need, piling up stocks,” Boulif said.

The government will cap the payment of the import subsidy at 1.3 million tonnes of soft wheat in the last quarter, Boulif said.

Its actions raised concern that industry operators might pass on the any impact from a lower subsidy by raising bread prices, a sensitive issue in a country where protests over unemployment and poverty are common.

In 1983, dozens of people were killed by security forces in riots in Casablanca after authorities were forced to raise bread prices.

A Casablanca-based importer and miller said the subsidy reduction meant his firm would look to less expensive origins from the Black Sea or Latin America instead of French and U.S. origins for now.

“We have to compensate for the 15 percent discount,” he said. “There is not much Black Sea wheat available out there ... Buying French and U.S. origins will prompt industry operators to act by raising wheat flour prices.”

Already hit by fiscal and current account deficits which surged last year, bad weather has hurt Morocco’s labour-intensive agricultural sector.

Rabat was granted a $6-billion-plus liquidity line by the International Monetary Fund (IMF) last month as the crisis in the euro zone, its main trade partner, threatens to further deplete the country’s hard currency reserves.

Based on demand of 7.1 million tonnes last year, Morocco will need to import around 4 million tonnes of soft wheat, its biggest import campaign in 30 years.

State grains agency ONICL has not yet made any imports under a 12-month import campaign that ends next May, however, as authorities put particular emphasis this year on encouraging local growers.

The agriculture ministry said soft wheat stocks should stand at 1.3 million tonnes by end-September, which would cover the nation's needs for three months.

Boulif is a member of the moderate Justice and Development Islamist party (PJD) which leads the government.

It has pledged to reform subsidies by restricting them to the neediest Moroccans in an approach commended by the IMF.

The reform push, which follows a highly-critical ruling of the subsidy system for cereals earlier this year by the state's anti-trust body, may take until 2016, PJD ministers have indicated.

Our Standards: The Thomson Reuters Trust Principles.

Why wasn't Morocco considered a gunpowder empire?

Adam Rahali reads a lot about Moroccan history Updated August 5

Morocco was, and it wasn't. It really depends on how generous you want to be with the word "empire". Traditionally, the expression "gunpowder empires" refers to the great land powers of the 14th century to the 18th century that were situated along the silk road. The name is usually applied to the Ottoman Empire, Safavid Persia and Mughal India. Sometimes, Qing China and the Russian Empire are included too. The most remarkable thing about them is their ingenious and masterful usage of gunpowder, such as cannons, arquebuses/guns and explosives, and the professionalism of their land-based armies, infantry and cavalry combined, who were led by a strong aristocracy. This is something that Morocco shared with them, as expertises in gunpowder and military affairs were adopted from the Ottomans, who supported the Moors in their wars against the Iberians. But something that they all, excluding Morocco, had, was that they were all "proper" empires.

Maps of the traditional gunpowder empires

Here's the thing, the word empire has no set definition. The most common one given today is that of a multicultural realm, one that rules over many diverse ethnicities. But the term initially was applied to rulers who claimed legitimacy from the only empire in the West, the Roman Empire. Thus, many realms claimed to be legitimate empires of their own and successors of the RE, like the HRE, the Frankish Empire, the Russian Empire and the Hispanian Empire. The Ottomans, for example, partially claimed some sort of legitimacy as Kayser-i-Rum, by right of conquest over the Byzantine Empire (ERE) and by marriage to Byzantine princesses.

Anyways, the term later became associated in English with despotism and the decadent Orient, of centralized and autocratic governments ruled by despotic God Kings. This is very much not so a compliment, and it was used to refer to old and "ancient" kingdoms, ones that need to be "enlightened". A bit like China and India, for example, which were bullied by British advances in Asia.

Morocco was sometimes called the "Sharifian Empire" by the British and the French (Sharifian, because the ruling dynasty claims descent from the Prophet, PBUH). This gave legitimacy to the Moroccan rulers, since they were considered as a fellow "empire" to great states like the Ottomans (hint: they were not), but that also meant that the kingdom was seen as antique and corrupt by Europeans, an insulting sign of disdain and contempt for a state that they saw as needing "protection".

Note: In reality, Morocco would have better been categorized as a kingdom, as the country wasn't comparable to the Ottomans or India in terms of military power, population, economy or diversity.

Here's a map of the Moroccan "Empire" (red for Morocco, green for the Regency of Algiers, an Ottoman vassal/tributary, and yellow for the Iberian empires)

Was Morocco an empire? Yes and no, it depends on the definition you want to use, and how generous you feel like. Moorish rulers did manage to conquer parts of the Songhai in Mali, and ruled over a multi-ethnic "empire". But was al-Maghreb comparable to the Ottomans, or Persia, or the Mughals? Not very much.

In brief, even if the term "empire" was used to define Morocco historically, the Land of the Setting Sun wouldn't be considered a "gunpowder empire", simply because the country isn't on the same level as the traditional empires that receive this name.

But perhaps a gunpowder kingdom though? ;)

Related Links

Why has Morocco been much more successful in science, arts and philosophy and in conquering lands under Berber dynasties? It seems like Morocco has stagnated ever since it has been in Arab hands.

Why did no European kingdoms become a "Gunpowder Empire", a power that conquers its neighbors thanks to an early adoption of gunpowder weapons?

In which year Morocco was founded as the country we know today?

Why were the Islamic Gunpowder empires (the Ottoman, Safavid and Mughal empires) unable to recreate the intellectual glory of the Islamic Golden Age despite being politically stable, wealthy and militarily strong at their height?

Why didn't Morocco conquer the entire Western Sahara?

Did the Ottomans conquer Morocco?

What's behind the migrant crisis between Morocco and Spain?

Eduardo Marqués Collado

Lives in SpainUpdated June 4

The Western Sahara, that's the main reason.

It has always been about the Sahara, as strange as it sounds.

But first, a little context.

The Sahara was a desertic territory colonized and occupied by Spain from the year 1958 until the year 1976.

Under the de-colonization initiative of the United Nations, the Sahara was supposed to be de-colonized and granted independence, pretty much like Algeria, India, or Singapore. A referendum organized amongst the Sahara's population determined overwhelming support for independence, and the Spanish authorities knew that we were no longer welcome there (if we ever were), so it was time to let it go.

Morocco, however, had a different idea and decided that it would be better to annex the Sahara territory instead of letting it become an independent country.

Sensing Spanish weakness in the aftermath of Franco's death, Morocco organized the "green march", sending a human wave of its own civilians towards the Sahara in order to annex the Sahara without firing a single shot. Spain, weakened and isolated, decided to let the annexation happen rather than firing against an unarmed wave of civilians, which would certainly complicate our candidature to join the EU (back then, the EEC).

And just like that, the Sahara became a part of Morocco.

However, that annexation didn’t sit well with Saharans, which wanted to be independent from Spain rather than becoming a part of Morocco, and started a guerrilla fight against Morocco, complete with insurgencies and terrorist attacks.

In turn, the Moroccan government blockaded the territory, and militarized the borders, imposing apartheid upon Saharans and draconian living conditions.

Unsurprisingly, nobody gives a single flying fuck about Saharahuis, and their plight, which doesn’t have the same type of solidarity amongst the media and public that, say, their Palestinian brethren enjoy.

So what does all of that have to do with the recent migrant crisis?

Some weeks ago, the Spanish diplomatic service fucked up in spectacular fashion, by giving medical attention to Brahim Ghali, one of the Sahara’s independence movement's most prominent figures, a freedom fighter for some, a murderous terrorist for another. See, this guy:

Morocco’s government was furious, and threatened with an “immediate response”.

Said response was sending another human wave of migrants (mostly unaccompanied minors, mixed with outright criminals according to our intelligence services) towards the city of Ceuta, quite reminiscent of the fabled “Green march”, and quite similar to Erdogan’s negotiating tactic.

The response of the Spanish authorities was to mobilize the army and to try to attend to all the minors and if possible, reunite them with their families.

The situation is far from being resolved, and complicated by the fact that Brahim Ghali, like pretty much every Saharawi old enough to have lived under the Spanish occupation of the Sahara, has a Spanish passport and thus, the legal right to medical attention. Still, he’s expected to leave the country as soon as possible.

Meanwhile, Morocco, pretty much like Turkey, has shown that they are indispensable at regulating the borders of European nations, a fact that they can leverage for influence when the situation arises.

If you ask me, for all the nationalistic fury over this incident, it seems to me that this has proven exactly why Morocco and Spain are locked into an alliance, no matter how much our leadership dislikes each other, for interests will always trump phobias.\

Related Links

What is happening in Ceuta, and how did the migrant crisis between Spain and Morocco arise?

Does Spain have a border with Morocco?

What will happen in Europe after the migrant crisis?

Are there political problems between Morocco and Spain, and what are the causes?

Why are migrants seen as a threat in Europe?

What's going on with so many migrants crossing from Morocco into Spain?

Are there any African countries that could become a manufacturing hub for Europe instead of China?

Emmanuel-Francis Nwaolisa Ogomegbunam Nigerian with a history degree.1y

One minor correction, China is not a manufacturing hub for Europe. They are a manufacturing/assembly hub for the United States and East Asia. Their imports from Europe consist of finished industrial goods that they cannot make from Europe (Aeroplanes are a famous example).

Europe, like North America, is best thought of as a continental hub. Europe's manufacturing hub is Europe. The farthest its manufacturing value chain stretches is to Turkey, Morocco and to a lesser extent, Tunisia. Morocco is already a hub for Spanish and French outsourcing. Tunisia, if it stays stable, could be integrated further. The rest of North Africa is either in thrall to oil revenues, caught in a civil war or too autarkic. The rest of Africa suffers three constraints. First, they are too far. Second, their labour is not competitive with their Asian and East European competitors. Third, they import too little. Manufacturing is only part of the picture, shipping costs matter too and shippers would rather be full in and full out than half in and full out.

Maybe some constraints could be overcome; all three are killer. As things stand, African exports to Europe consists of high-value commodities and immigrants. Oil, Flowers and People. Only the already mentioned exceptions are diversified.

No. Ibn Battuta was not the world's first explorer.
History is filled with men who journeyed far from home in hope of exploration or other reasons. Long before Ibn Battuta was even born. Even over a thousand years before him. The ancient Greeks for example had a few explorers of their own. Men who journeyed to different parts of the world. Such as Megasthenes and Scylax. Or the Chinese explorers of the past. Examples being Xuanzang and Faxian.

Related Links

Who was the greatest traveler in history, Marco Polo or IBN Battuta?

Who was Ibn Battuta? Why are people like him important for the subject of history?

How did Ibn Battuta finance his travels?

Was Ibn Battuta inspired by Marco Polo or even aware of his travels?

Why are there no movies on early Arab travellers like Ibn Battuta?

Who was Ibn e-Battuta, and why did he travel so widely?

Was Ibn Battuta the world's first explorer?

Ahmad Abubakr (ركبوبا دمحا) Likes to learn about history Sep 29

No. Ibn Battuta was not the world's first explorer.
History is filled with men who journeyed far from home in hope of exploration or other reasons. Long before Ibn Battuta was even born. Even over a thousand years before him. The ancient Greeks for example had a few explorers of their own. Men who journeyed to different parts of the world. Such as Megasthenes and Scylax. Or the Chinese explorers of the past. Examples being Xuanzang and Faxian.

Ibn Battuta wasn’t even the first Muslim explorer from the medieval Islamic world. There were many who preceded him. For example, Ahmad ibn Fadlan and his journey into Eastern Europe.

What sets Ibn Battuta apart from all of the explorers who preceded him is how extensive and widespread his journey were. No one prior to him (nor for many centuries after) had travelled to so many different regions of the world.

A comparison of the travels of Ibn Battuta with some of the other great travelers.

Ibn Battuta was a man who traveled through most of the great empires and kingdoms of his day, resided in some of the greatest cities of the time, met face-to-face with the most powerful kings of his day, lived through the Black Plague, and so much more. A man who traveled through North Africa, Arabia, Persia, Anatolia, Central Asia, South Asia, South-East Asia, East Asia, West Africa, East Africa and even parts of Europe. It is hard to find many other men in history who have even seen a fraction of what he saw. Ibn Battuta saw more in one lifetime than most of us would in a hundred. When we talk about Ibn Battuta, we are talking about the greatest traveler of the ancient world.

Who has lived a life worth following?
I would say Ibn Battuta. The reason I choose him is because this man did more is one life than we would do in a hundred. He lived the life of a scholar, an explorer, a judge and much more. To top it all off, he noted the events of his life in an autobiography so that we can all experience his life. I…

For a more detailed answer on the travels of Ibn Battuta

It should be mentioned that Ibn Battuta (and similar explorers of the old world) were not the same type of explorers as those from the early modern period in history. We need to differentiate between the two. Ibn Battuta (and those like him) simply traveled to parts of the world that had already been discovered and were well known. It wasn't exploration as much as it was travel.

The explorers of the early modern period risked all to journey to completely unknown locations in the hope of discovery of a new land. Examples of the later being John Cabot and Christopher Columbus. These men would explore to discover previously unknown lands or seas routes/passages.

Ahmad Abubakr (ركبوبا دمحا) Likes to learn about history Answered Sep 29

No. Ibn Battuta was not the world's first explorer.
History is filled with men who journeyed far from home in hope of exploration or other reasons. Long before Ibn Battuta was even born. Even over a thousand years before him. The ancient Greeks for example had a few explorers of their own. Men who journeyed to different parts of the world. Such as Megasthenes and Scylax. Or the Chinese explorers of the past. Examples being Xuanzang and Faxian.

Ibn Battuta wasn’t even the first Muslim explorer from the medieval Islamic world. There were many who preceded him. For example, Ahmad ibn Fadlan and his journey into Eastern Europe.

What sets Ibn Battuta apart from all of the explorers who preceded him is how extensive and widespread his journey were. No one prior to him (nor for many centuries after) had travelled to so many different regions of the world.

A comparison of the travels of Ibn Battuta with some of the other great travelers.

Ibn Battuta was a man who traveled through most of the great empires and kingdoms of his day, resided in some of the greatest cities of the time, met face-to-face with the most powerful kings of his day, lived through the Black Plague, and so much more. A man who traveled through North Africa, Arabia, Persia, Anatolia, Central Asia, South Asia, South-East Asia, East Asia, West Africa, East Africa and even parts of Europe. It is hard to find many other men in history who have even seen a fraction of what he saw. Ibn Battuta saw more in one lifetime than most of us would in a hundred. When we talk about Ibn Battuta, we are talking about the greatest traveler of the ancient world.

Ahmad Abubakr (ركبوبا دمحا) lives in Pakistan Answered Dec 24, 2019

Who has lived a life worth following?

I would say Ibn Battuta. The reason I choose him is because this man did more is one life than we would do in a hundred. He lived the life of a scholar, an explorer, a judge and much more. To top it all off, he noted the events of his life in an autobiography so that we can all experience his life.

Ibn Battuta

Origin

We know very little about the origins of this man. Ibn Battuta was born in 1304. He was a man of Berber origin from what is now Morocco. His full name was Shams al-Din Abu Abd al-Lah Muhammad ibn Abd al-Lah l-Lawati Tangi Ibn Battuta. He set out on his first journey at the age of 21.

The journeys of Ibn Battuta

Pilgrimage to Mecca

In 1325, Ibn Battuta decides as a young man that he wants to journey to Mecca to perform Hajj. This was a journey that would take over a year to complete. Ibn Battuta said his goodbyes to both family and friends and set out on his journey. Little did he know that he would not see his home again for over two decades.

Ibn Battuta decided to travel along the North African route towards the Mamluk Sultanate. He passed through the city of Tlemcen in the Zayyanid Sultanate and the cities of Bejaia and Tunis in the Hafsid Sultanate. He would temporarily stay in this region for a few months and even get married. He would join a caravan on route to Alexandria for safety. Almost a year after his journey began, Ibn Battuta arrived in the city of Alexandria of the Mamluk Sultanate.

The map of North Africa at the time

In the city of Alexandria, he met a holy man who prophesied that Ibn Battuta would be a great traveler and travel to India and China. From Alexandria he headed to Cairo, the capital of the empire. From here he passed through Jerusalem and Bethlehem to the great city of Damascus. He would wait out the month of Ramadan in this city. Afterwards he would head to Medina and then finally reach his destination of Mecca.

After completing the pilgrimage, Ibn Battuta had a choice to make. Return home or continue his journey. After some thought he decided on the latter.

The Mamluk Sultanate that controlled the pilgrims road.

Journey to the Ilkhanate

An important thing to note is that Ibn Battuta journeyed the world following the Mongol invasions and at the time when the disintegration of the Mongol Khanates was at hand. At this time Persian and Iraq were a part of the Ilkhanate.

The four Mongol Khanates

After spending a month in the holy city of Mecca, Ibn Battuta set out on a new journey to Iraq and Persia. He decided to travel alongside a caravan of pilgrims returning back to their home in Iraq. The group passed through the desert like landscape of the Najd plateau in Arabia to the city of Najaf in Iraq.

In Najaf, he visited the tomb of Ali, the fourth Caliph and the Prophet's son-in-law. Ibn Battuta parted ways with the caravan which went onwards to Baghdad. Ibn Battuta however planned on heading to Persia.

He followed the Tigris river to the city of Basra. From here he headed to the city of Isfahan and then Shiraz in Persia. He then crossed back across the Zagros mountains to head back to Baghdad. From Baghdad he would join the royal caravan of the Sultan of the Ilkhanate to Tabriz before heading back to Baghdad. After a few more detours, he headed back to Mecca for a second pilgrimage in the September of 1327.

The tomb of Hazrat Ali in Najaf

A geographical map of the Persian region

Journey to East Africa

Ibn Battuta remained in the city of Mecca for some time. In 1328, he finally decided to set out on a new journey. This time he would head to explore the East African Coastal region. From Mecca, he headed to the coastal city of Jeddah. Then he followed the coast along the Red Sea to what is now Yemen.

Yemen at this time was part of the Rasulid Kingdom. Ibn Battuta traveled to the city of Zabid, Taiz and then Sana'a. He met with the Rasulid King Mujahid Nur al-Din Ali. From here he traveled to the port city of Aden.

The Rasulid Sultanate

From the ports of Aden, Ibn Battuta took a ship to the city of Zeila in Somalia. He then sailed along the cost stopping at cities along the way. Eventually reaching the city of Mogadishu, the greatest city in East Africa at the time. It was at the peak of it's golden age when Ibn Battuta visited the city.

Ibn Battuta continued his journey southwards, sailing along the coast. He stopped and visited the island city of Kilwa, the capital of the Kilwa Sultanate. This kingdom ruled over much of the Swahili coast. He was impressed with the glory and beauty of this island city. From here Ibn Battuta decided to head back once again to Mecca. He would perform a third Hajj in 1330.

Kilwa and the East African Coast

Journey to Anatolia

At this point in time, the Delhi Sultanate was known to be the wealthiest empire in the Muslim world. Ibn Battuta wanted to work for the Sultan of the Delhi Sultanate. He had heard that the Sultan welcomed scholars and travelers from afar and gave them high paying jobs. However he decided to take the long route.

One thing to note is that Anatolia at this time was a region divided between the Turkic Beyliks following the decline of the Sultanate of Rum.

Ibn Battuta crossed the Red Sea to reach Cairo. From there he crossed the Sinai and headed to Syria. From the Syrian port city of Latakia, he took a Genoese ship to the city of Alanya. From here he traveled westwards to the port city of Antalya. From here he headed to Egirdir, the capital of Hamidids. From here he continued to visit many different cities in Anatolia including Konya and Bursa. In the city of Bursa he met Orhan Gazi, son of Osman Gazi. He had nothing but praises for the Ottoman ruler.

The Turkmen of Anatolia seemed to have really impressed Ibn Battuta. He notes them as a very generous people. He also saw them as handsome people that were extremely well dressed. He noted that the women were treated extremely well. He also makes note of the poor treatment of the slaves from Europe who are used as prostitutes. This is something he saw as extremely immoral.

"We set out for the country of the Turks. ... It was conquered by the Muslims, but there are still large numbers of Christians there under the protection of the Turkmen Muslims. We traveled on the sea for ten nights, and the Christians treated us honorably and took no passage money from us. On the tenth day we arrived at Alanya [where the province begins]. This country ... is one of the finest in the world; in it God has brought together the good things dispersed throughout other lands. Its people are the most comely (handsome) of men, the cleanest in their dress, the most delicious in their food, and the kindliest folk in creation. Wherever we stopped in this land, whether at a hospice or a private house, our neighbors both men and women (these do not veil themselves) came to ask after our needs. When we left them they bade us farewell as though they were our relatives and our own folk, and you would see " - Ibn Battuta [Gibb, p. 415 - 416]

Orhan Gazi, the bey of the Ottomans

The Golden Horde and the Byzantium

From the port city of Sinope (on the coast of the Black Sea), Ibn Battuta took a ship to ferry him across to Crimea. He landed in Kaffa and traveled to Azov and then to Majar. He left the city to go to the caravan of Uzbeg Khan, the ruler of the Golden Horde. Soon he caught up with the travelling caravan of the Khan. Ibn Battuta found this to be like a giant moving city. Here he got a chance to meet Uzbeg Khan, one of the most powerful men in the world. Ibn Battuta traveled with the caravan to the city of Astrakhan.

"The illustrious Sultan Muhammad Uzbeg Khan is the ruler of a vast kingdom and a most powerful sovereign, victor over the enemies of God, the people of Constantinople the Great, and diligent in warring against them. He is one of the seven mighty kings of the world, to wit: [first], our master the Commander of the Faithful, may God strengthen his might and magnify his victory! [the sultan of Morocco]; [second] the sultan of Egypt and Syria; [third], the sultan of the Two Iraqs; [fourth], this Sultan Uzbeg; [fifth], the sultan of Turkistan and the lands beyond the Oxus; [sixth], the sultan of India; and [seventh], the sultan of China [the emperor]. -Ibn Battuta on Uzbeg Khan

Upon reaching Astrakhan, the Khan decided to allow one of his wives to visit her home of Constantinople. Princess Bayalun was the daughter of the Byzantine Emperor, Andronikos III Palaiologos. Ibn Battuta saw this as a great opportunity and decided to go along. He wanted to see the great city of Christendom.

So they set out with a great caravan of five thousand horsemen, hundreds of slaves and many more to go to the city of Constantinople. Ibn Battuta notes that as they got closer to the city, the princess stopped praying and started to drink and eat pork. He realized that this was just a political marriage.

He would stay in Constantinople for a month. He even got an opportunity to meet the Byzantine Emperor Andronikos III Palaiologos. He explored the city. Saw the great Hagia Sophia. After a month, he decided to head back to Astrakhan. From there he traveled to the capital city of the Golden Horde, Saray. He decided to continue his journey towards India. From Saray, Ibn Battuta traveled along the Caspian and left the lands of the Golden Horde to enter the territory of the Chagatai Khanate.

Central Asia

From the Caspian, Ibn Battuta traveled east to the city of Bukhara. He crossed the Aral Sea to Bukhara and then Samarkand. Here he met the Khan of the Chagatai, Tarmashirin Khan. He was a Muslim convert. The Khan provided Ibn Battuta with money, warm clothes and camels for his journey. Unfortunately Tarmashirin Khan would be killed soon after Ibn Battuta's departure.

From Central Asia, Ibn Battuta headed south to Afghanistan. He crossed the Hindu Kush mountain range and reached the Indus river in September of 1333. He makes note of the fact that the mountains are known as such for resulting in the death of many slaves from India. From the he continued his journey to Delhi.

"The king of India ... makes a practice of honoring strangers and showing affection to them and singling them out for governorships or high dignities of state. The majority of [them] are foreigners." - Ibn Battuta of the Sultan of Delhi

Central Asian steppes

South Asia

Ibn Battuta passed through the Kyber pass and through the city of Peshawar. He crossed the Indus River on September of 1333 and kept heading east to the city of Delhi. He stopped briefly in the city of Pakpattan to pay respects at the shrine of the Sufi mystic, Fariduddin Ganjshakar. From there he crossed the Sutlej River and kept his course to Delhi. He passed through the Rajput Kingdom of Sarsatti and it’s jewel city of Hansi. He describes it as one of the most beautiful cities he had seen. Ibn Battuta finally arrived in the city of Delhi in 1334.

Shrine of Fariduddin Ganjshakar

Hansi Fort

On arrival in Delhi, Ibn Battuta was told that the Sultan was not currently present in the city. At this time, the Delhi Sultanate ruled over much of India. Currently the Tughlaq Dynasty was in power. The Sultan was Muhammad bin Tughluq, son of the founder of this dynasty. The Sultan was informed of Ibn Battuta's arrival and was hired without even a meeting. He would work as a judge and the caretaker of the Qutb complex. For this work he was to be rewarded well. He was given an initial gift of 2,000 silver dinars and another 5,000 silver dinars every year. He would also be provided with a home and provided with assistants and translators.

The Delhi Sultanate under the Tughlaq Dynasty

Sultan Muhammad bin Tughluq himself was a dangerous man. He was erratic, cruel, violent and cruel leader. He was also known to be extremely intelligent and generous to those who showed loyalty. Paranoia was also a hallmark of his rule. Ibn Battuta first met the Sultan upon his return to Delhi in June 1334. Men of all ranks went to greet the Sultan. The Sultan (described as a fair and tall man) sat upon a golden throne while all newcomers came, kissed his hand and present the emperor with their gifts. The next day the Sultan would literally shower the people of the city with gold from atop an elephant.

Here Ibn Battuta was remain and work for years. He describes the rule under the Sultan to be needlessly cruel and violent. Ibn Battuta himself was the target of the paranoid Sultan at a time. During his stay, he had befriended a Sufi holy man. This man had cared not for politics or kings. When he disobeyed the Sultan, he was severely punished. His beard was plucked out hair by hair, then tortured and killed in a painful manner. However that was not enough. Next his friends would be punished as well, including Ibn Battuta. He was forced to fast, stripped of all possessions and forced to live in a cave alongside a hermit for months before he was forgiven for a crime he had never committed.

"The Sultan was far too free in shedding blood... [He] used to punish small faults and great, without respect of persons, whether men of learning or piety or noble descent. Every day there are brought to the audience-hall hundreds of people, chained, pinioned, and fettered, and [they] are ... executed, ...tortured, or ...beaten."
-Ibn Battuta [Dunn, p. 201]

Fiver months later he was recalled to the court. Fearing impending death, Ibn Battuta returned. However he was greeted with kindness. However Ibn Battuta had enough of India. He wanted to continue upon his journeys. He made an excuse that he wanted to Hajj once more and asked the Sultan for permission but was denied. The Sultan had a different task in mind for him. He wanted Ibn Battuta to set out on a journey to China with the Chinese ambassadors on their way back. He was to be the Sultan’s ambassador to the Yuan Dynasty of China. Ibn Battuta could not refuse such an offer. He had enough of India and it’s Sultan. Besides he had been provided with a chance to see the world that most Muslims could not even imagine. They would set out in 1341.

The Qutb Complex and minar. Ibn Battuta served as it's caretaker for years while in Delhi.

In 1341, Ibn Battuta left Delhi as the leader of the entire caravan to China. This included one thousand soldiers, 200 hundred slaves, many servants, singers for entertainment and an abundance of gifts to be presented to the emperor in China. On their journey, the caravan was attacked by a group of rebels numbering around 4,000. While the force of the Sultanate was victorious in battle, Ibn Battuta was separated from the group. He was chased by some of the rebels who robbed him of all of his belongings save his clothes. Soon afterwards he was captured by bandits who stole from him his clothes and shoes except his trousers. Luckily he was able to join up with the caravan within a few days.

The group headed to Daulatabad Fortress where they rested in the safety of it's walls. From here they headed to the coastal city of Cambay. Here they set out in four ships to the city of Calicut. The ships arrived safely in Calicut and were greeted by the people. Here they would enjoy the hospitality of the ruler. Here they would change ships onto three larger Chinese ships. However a storm smashed two of the ships against the coast before Ibn Battuta had boarded. The third ship with all of his belongings had already set sail for China. Now Ibn Battuta was left all alone and penniless in Calicut. He had not intention to head back to Delhi as a failure. He headed to the port that the ship was supposed to stop at but heard that the ship had been captured by Sumatran King. Ibn Battuta had no intention to head back and be branded a failure. He would make his own way to China.

The remains of the Daulatabad Fort

Stay in the Maldives and Sri Lanka

He would stay under the protection of Jamal-ud-Din, the ruler of the Nawayath sultanate. He would fight as a part of this Sultan's armies. However this Sultanate was soon overthrown and Ibn Battuta forced to leave. He would have to take a long route to China. But first he would stop in the Maldives.

The islands of Maldives had recently converted to Islam following the conversion of the king by a Somali Islamic pious man. The local rulers wanted someone who knew Arabic and the laws of Islam to act as the head judge for the Maldives. They decided upon Ibn Battuta due to his previous experiences. He became a prisoner and respected guest in the Maldives. He was not allowed to leave as the locals wanted his to work as a judge. At the same time he was treated like a noble guest, given all sorts of gifts and servants. He even married into the royalty of the Maldives.

However his stay in the Maldives would be short lived. His strict rulings angered the locals who did not understand Ibn Battuta's version of Islam. To make matters worse, he was become involved in politics and made enemies of powerful men. He would leave the Maldives after a stay of nine months and continue upon his journey to Sri Lanka.

The Maldives Archipelago stretches on for over a hundred miles.

The primary reason the Ibn Battuta wanted to stop in Sri Lanka is to visit the holy mountain of Adam's Peak. He met with the King who was interested in tales of his travels. Ibn Battuta climbed Adam’s Peak. After a few days, Ibn Battuta would set sail on a ship provided by the king alongside many gifts. Unfortunately he was attacked by pirates who robed him of all of the gifts of the kings and dropped him off penniless on the coast.

Humiliated once again, Ibn Battuta made his way to the coastal city of Calicut. From here he boarded a ship to the Maldives once again. Here he met his son but decided to leave him on the island with his mother. He boarded a Chinese vessel headed for China to take up his position as an ambassador in the Yuan Dynasty court.

Adam's Peak, Sri Lanka. A holy site for Muslims, Buddhists and Hindus. At the summit there is a depression in a rock resembling a footprint. For Muslims, this belongs to Adam. For Buddhists, it belongs to Buddha and Shiva for Hindus.

The ship stopped in the port city of Chittagong. He Ibn Battuta heard of a legendary Sufi mystic, Shah Jalal. He decided to take a detour so as to meet the man. After meeting the man in 1345, Ibn Battuta continued upon his journey.

Ibn Battuta's travels in South Asia

South-East Asia

Ibn Battuta would make a stop in the Samudera Pasai Sultanate in 1345. Here the local ruler welcomed him as a guest. The king provided him with a vessel to continue his journey after a few days.

Ibn Battuta would make two more stops on the way to China. These being in Malacca and Kaylukari.

The very same year, Ibn Battuta would reach the city of Quanzhou in Fujian Province of China.

Samudera Pasai Sultanate

Stay in China

After a very long journey with many detours, Ibn Battuta arrived in the port of Quanzhou. He was very impressed with the locals. He notes that potraits are made of all foreigners who arrive for security reasons. The abundance of silk and porcelain also impressed him greatly.

"China is the safest and most agreeable country in the world for the traveler. You can travel all alone across the land for nine months without fear, even if you are carrying much wealth." -Ibn Battuta

He then traveled to the city of Guangzhou and Fuzhou. From there he headed to the city of Hangzhou to find a gift worthy to be presented to the emperor. This city impressed Ibn Battuta the most. Hangzhou may even have been the largest city in the world at the time. He stayed with a wealthy merchant Muslim family from Egypt.

From here, Ibn Battuta traveled via the Grand Canal to Beijing (then known as Khanbaliq), the capital of the empire. The journey along the canal seemed magical to Ibn Battuta. After arriving in the capital, he announced himself as the long-lost ambassador from the Delhi Sultanate. Here he got a chance to see the great emperor, Toghon Temur.

Toghon Temur

Ibn Battuta had most wanted to see the Great Wall of China on this journey. He believed this to be the wall built by the great King Dhul-Qarnayn to protect the world from Gog and Magog. Unfortunately, he was unable to find anyone who had seen it or was willing to take him to it.

He took the same route back to Quanzhou via Hangzhou and Fuzhou. From the port of Quanzhou he boarded a vessel that took him to the Samudera Pasai Sultanate. From here he headed back to India.

Journey back home

After leaving China in 1346, Ibn Battuta had headed to the Samudera Pasai Sultanate. From the Samudera Pasai Sultanate in South-East Asia, Ibn Battuta took a vessel to the Indian Subcontinent once more. He stopped in the city of Calicut. Here he had a difficult choice to make. Head back to Delhi to the court of Sultan Muhammad bin Tughluq or make a pilgrimage to the holy city of Mecca. He decided on the latter, having had enough of Sultan Muhammad bin Tughluq for a lifetime.

After a long voyage, Ibn Battuta arrived in the city of Hormuz. From here he heading inland to Persia. He was shocked to see that the mighty Ilkhanate that had ruled over Persia and Iraq, was falling apart. So much had changed since he had last been in the region 11 years ago. The region was now in a state of civil war.

From Persia, he headed to the city of Baghdad and from there to Damascus. Here he met a caravan from Morocco that informed him of his father's death 15 years ago. He also learnt in this city that his son, from one of his wives that he had met on his journeys, had died as a child.

Ibn Battuta had returned at the worst possible time. The Bubonic Plague was spreading like wildfire throughout the region. Each city he went to was affected. Ibn Battuta describes that 2,000 people died every day in Damascus from the Black Death. People of all religions prayed to their gods for protection from this unstoppable disease.

"The people fasted for three successive days... [Then all the people] assembled in the Great mosque until it was filled to overflowing... and spent the night there in prayers... Then, after performing the dawn prayer..., they all went out [barefoot] together... carrying Korans in their hands. The entire population of the city joined... The Jews went out with their book of the law and the Christians with the Gospel... [all] of them in tears . . . imploring the favor of God through His Books and His Prophets."
-Ibn Battuta [Gibb, p. 143-144]

Even the Black Death could not stop Ibn Battuta from heading back home. From Damascus he went to Palestine and then Cairo. He traveled south and crossed the Red Sea to arrive in Mecca for Hajj once more. He noted that even the holy city was not safe from this plague. Pilgrims dropped dead daily from this disease and no prayer could stop it.

After staying in Mecca for a few months, he headed back to Egypt. From there he went to Tunisia and then home to the city of Tangier in Morocco in 1349. After 24 years, Ibn Battuta finally returned home at the age of 45. Here he would learn that his mother had died desperately waiting to meet her son, who she had heard was on his way home after many years. She had died only a few months prior to Ibn Battuta's return. He would visit his mother's grave. Many people would come to him to hear of his tales of strange and distant lands, hoping to live vicariously through the stories of Ibn Battuta.

Tangier, Morocco. The home of Ibn Battuta

Journey to Al-Andalus

After spending some time home, Ibn Battuta decided that he wanted to see more of the world. King Alfonso XI of Castile had been preparing to attack Gibraltar. Ibn Battuta joined some soldiers who planned to help defend the port. In 1350, the group set out and reached Gibraltar. When they crossed the sea, they heard of the news that King Alfonso and many of his men had died due to the plague. Ibn Battuta decided to use this opportunity to explore the great Kingdom of Al-Andalus.

From here Ibn Battuta joined some other travelers on their way to Malaga. From Malaga he headed to the city of Granada. This city was unparalleled in it's beauty to they eyes of Ibn Battuta. He visited the Alhambra Fort. He was unable to meet King Yusuf due to the king being ill. However he met a young man of 28 years called Ibn Juzayy. He was a writer, a poet and much more. Most importantly he was obsessed with the stories of Ibn Battuta and began to note many of them down.

Thence [from Malaga] I went to on the city of Gharnata [Granada], the metropolis of Andalusia and the bride of its cities. Its environs have not their equal in any country in the world. They extend for the space of forty miles, and are traversed by the celebrated river of Shannil [Xenil] and many other streams. Around it on every side are orchards, gardens, flowery meads, noble buildings, and vineyards. One of the most beautiful places there is "Ayn ad-dama" [the Fountain of Tears], which is a hill covered with gardens and orchards and has no parallel in any other country.

-Ibn Battuta on the city of Granada [from Gibb]

Alhambra, the jewel of Al-Andalus and the Muslim world at the time.

Morocco and Mali

Ibn Battuta left Al-Andalus in 1350 to head back home. He decided to visit the great city of Marrakech, the previous capital. The plague had ravaged the city.

Many people in the city had died due to the disease and many more had fled. Other had abandoned the city in favor of Fez, the new capital. Marrakech had become a ghost town. From here he headed to the new capital, Fez. Here he would remain for a few months before starting his last great journey.

Ibn Battuta had heard tales of the great king of Mali, Mansa Musa. He had made pilgrimage to Mecca and given charity of gold to the cities along the way. He decided to travel to the heart of this kingdom and see it for himself. In 1351, Ibn Battuta left the city of Fez and crossed the Atlas Mountains. He stopped in the city of Sijilmasa at the edge of the great Sahara Desert. Here would would wait for a few months, waiting for the appropriate time to cross the ocean of sand.

The Mali Empire

At the start of 1352, he set off with a trading caravan to the village of Taghaza and it's great salt mines. From here, they began the most difficult part of the journey. Crossing hundreds of miles of desert with little to no water along the way. After crossing the desert, the caravan arrived at the town of Walata on the edge of the desert. Here they would stay for some time. From there Ibn Battuta traveled along the Niger River, seeing many towns and cities along the way. He finally arrived in Niani, the capital of the Mali Empire. Here he met the king, Suleyman Mansa. Suleyman was brother to the legendary king of Mali, Mansa Musa.

Mansa Musa, the legendary king of Mali and perhaps the richest man in the history of the world.

After a brief stay in the capital, he headed to the city of Timbuktu. From there to Gao and then the oasis town of Takedda. Here he received a message from Sultan Abu Inan Faris,, the ruler of Morocco, to return immediately. In late 1353, he set out from Takedda and headed back across the Sahara. He arrived at the city of Sijilmasa. After a brief rest, he crossed the Atlas Mountains once more to head back home to Morocco. He arrived back in Fez in 1354.

The writing of the Rihla

Ibn Battuta headed to see the Sultan after arriving in Fez in 1354. The Sultan was very interested in hearing the stories of his many journeys. He decided that they were worth preserving and ordered Ibn Battuta to work alongside a scholar by the name of Ibn Juzayy, the young man from Granada.

The two would work together to compile a story of his travel through the many empires and great cities. Unfortunately, Ibn Battuta had taken no notes during his travels. So these stories had to be taken from his memory from years or decades past. Eventually the compilation was complete. It was named Tuḥfat an-Nuẓẓār fī Gharāʾib al-Amṣār wa ʿAjāʾib al-Asfār (تحفة النظار في غرائب الأمصار وعجائب الأسفار) ohW esohT ot eceipretsaM A ot setalsnart hcihw Contemplate the Wonders of Cities and the Marvels of Travelling. It is better known by it’s simpler name Rihla meaning “The Travels”.

The Rihla

Afterwards Ibn Battuta would remain in Morocco for the remaining of his life. He would die in 1369 and was buried in Tangier, Morocco.

The tomb of Ibn Battuta

Summary

If you managed to make it till the very end, it becomes quite clear why the life of Ibn Battuta is worth following. What makes it even better is that the Rihla makes it easy to follow his life as he traveled through the various regions. Unfortunately the Rihla was written in retrospect so it’s accuracy does not always hold true. Regardless, no one can say that this man life is not worth following and reading about.

He was a man who traveled through most of the great empires and kingdoms of his day, resided in some of the world’s greatest cities at the time, met face-to-face with the most powerful kings of his day, lived through the Black Plague, and so much more. A man who traveled through North Africa, Arabia, Persia, Anatolia, Central Asia, South Asia, South-East Asia, East Asia, West Africa, East Africa and even parts of Europe. It is hard to find many other men in history who have even seen a fraction of what he saw. Ibn Battuta saw more in one lifetime than most of us would in a hundred. When we talk about Ibn Battuta, we are talking about the greatest traveler of the ancient world.

A comparison of the travels of Ibn Battuta with some of the other great travelers.

Note: Quite a few people have said that they would like to read of his journeys. Understand that while Ibn Battuta is an admirable personality for his accomplishments, he would be seen poorly if judged from a modern perspective. There are many things about him that you might find despicable such as his racism, extreme conservatism, his views on polytheists, his lack of regard for his children or wives, his relationships with slave women, his thoughts on slavery, etc the list just goes on. While reading one must keep in mind that you are reading the thoughts of a man from the early 14th century from one of the most conservative parts of the Muslim world at the time. What you see a lot is a cultural shock, where a proud man who loves his own culture is unable to understand the cultures and traditions of others.

So my advice to those that want to read the Rihla is to keep all of this in mind while reading. Follow the journey of the great explorer Ibn Battuta, rather than the man himself.

For a more detailed answer on the travels of Ibn Battuta

It should be mentioned that Ibn Battuta (and similar explorers of the old world) were not the same type of explorers as those from the early modern period in history. We need to differentiate between the two. Ibn Battuta (and those like him) simply traveled to parts of the world that had already been discovered and were well known. It wasn't exploration as much as it was travel.

The explorers of the early modern period risked all to journey to completely unknown locations in the hope of discovery of a new land. Examples of the later being John Cabot and Christopher Columbus. These men would explore to discover previously unknown lands or seas routes/passages.

Why is it that other Africans are blacks while northern Africans like Moroccans are white in colour?

Françoise Marie Master's Degree in Public Administration, Syracuse University Updated Oct 30

White North Africa is a myth. As someone said : the whiteness of North Africa is the biggest joke of the universe. The average North African is dark skinned with visible and well documented black ancestry dating back to prehistoric times. The racist concept of “nigrescence” was equally applied to North Africans.

North Africa is not a “ black free” region of Africa. North African Blacks are hardly talked about, seen on TV or portrayed in movies. They are an invisible, silent and discriminated community as there is a color line (the paler, the better) in all North African countries. Some of the blackest Africans are found among the Nubians of Egypt. Nubians are not “Sub-Saharan” people.

Moroccans are not white people, except for the descendants of Eurasian invaders and slaves. They are not the original inhabitants. They are not the aboriginal populations. Morocco was called Mauretania, the Land of the Mauri (Moors in English). Vikings raided Mauretania in the 9–10th and described its populations as black people. The Mauri were so black that their land was called Mauretania by the Romans. The Latin Mauri (plural of Maurus) is the equivalent of the Greek Mavro for Black. Google Translate translates Mavro into Black.

Pourquoi les Marocains fuient-ils le Maroc ?

Rachid Haroune Jerome Cohen

Mon père était de Casablanca, ma mère fait un super tajine!Traducteur · 1 an Moroccan Cette réponse peut ne pas être une traduction fidèle de la réponse de Rachid Haroune dans Quora en anglais :
Why are Moroccans fleeing Morocco?

Récemment, des Marocains ont acheté des billets pour la Coupe du monde afin d'entrer en Russie sans visa et ont tenté de passer illégalement en Finlande, membre de l'Union européenne. On estime également que plus de quatre millions de Marocains vivent à l'étranger.

La principale raison qui pousse tous ces gens à quitter leur pays est la corruption.

Corruption □□□ □ □□

La corruption au Maroc est un cheval sauvage sans rênes. Ainsi, les jeunes pauvres ont du mal à vivre dans un tel environnement où le népotisme, le favoritisme et le patronage sont les éléments clés pour s'épanouir et briller. L'indice de perception de la corruption 2016 de Transparency International a donné au Maroc un score de 37, inférieur à la moyenne mondiale de 43. Sur une échelle de 0 à 100, plus le chiffre est bas, plus le niveau perçu de corruption dans le secteur public est élevé. Le royaume se classe au milieu, 90e sur 176 pays[1].

Le Maroc est le plus grand exportateur de phosphate, un secteur monopolisé par des familles d'élite qui ont de bonnes relations avec la famille royale et d'autres décideurs du gouvernement. Les gens ordinaires se considèrent comme des étrangers à l'intérieur de leur pays. Ils n'ont pas les mêmes droits et les avantages équivalents dont bénéficient les familles privilégiées. Ces entités privilégiées jouissent de l'impunité et d'un pouvoir énorme puisque les fonctionnaires et les employés de haut rang du gouvernement font partie intégrante de ce réseau. Dans une affaire de corruption, une liste ayant fait l'objet d'une fuite a révélé l'identité de plusieurs fonctionnaires et agents de l'État qui ont acheté de grandes parcelles de terres appartenant à l'État pour une fraction du prix. Ils avaient payé 30 GBP pour un mètre carré au lieu du prix du marché de 320 GBP. Les ministères de l'Intérieur et des Finances auraient défendu la confiscation des terres et affirmé que la liste divulguée était motivée par des raisons politiques (Middle East Monitor, août 2016)[2].

En dépit de leur pauvreté, les Marocains perçoivent que leur pays est riche et opulent, mais la richesse est hors de leur portée. Ils se sentent victimes d'un régime défaillant qui absorbe tous les biens et les richesses du pays et ne leur laisse rien, et n'hésitent donc pas à partir quand ils en ont l'occasion. Ils ont l'habitude de répéter en plaisantant cette doaa (supplication) "Notre Seigneur, sortez-nous de cette ville de gens oppressifs ? Et "si nous revenons, nous serons vraiment des malfaiteurs" Anissaa 75, Almuminun 107.

Notes de bas de page [1] https://www.moroccoworldnews.com...

[2] Morocco Still Struggles Against Corruption, Government Accelerating Reform Efforts: El Othmani

Questions similaires

Qu'est-ce qui manque le plus aux Marocains quand ils vont à l'étranger ?

Maroc : que pensent les citoyens marocains ordinaires du roi du Maroc ?

Comment sera le Maroc dans 20 ans ?

Que ne doit-on absolument pas faire au Maroc ?

Pourquoi les Français regardent les Marocains avec mépris ?

Qu'est-ce qui vous dérange à propos de la culture marocaine ?

Quels sont les faits sur le Maroc auxquels les étrangers ne croient pas avant d'arriver au Maroc ?

Pourquoi beaucoup de Françaises aiment les rebeux et surtout les marocains ?

Pourquoi les français préfèrent-ils aller en Tunisie ou au Maroc plutôt qu'en Algérie ?

Le Maroc est-il un pays émergent ?

Quels sont les pays que les Marocains détestent le plus ?

Pourquoi les Marocains ne supportent pas les Algériens, qui ont pourtant une culture similaire ?

Que pensent les Coréens du Maroc et des femmes marocaines?

Que pensez-vous des Marocains ?

Pourquoi le Maroc est-il constamment présenté comme un pays arrière ?

Que pensent les Marocains nés en Europe du Maroc ?

Adil El Nhayli passionné par l'histoire de la région MENA1 an Contrairement à ce qu'a écrit Jérôme Cohen (dans sa traduction des propos avancés par Kenza Al Alami (كنزا العلمي) , il y'a bien plus que deux types de Marocains nés en Europe (ou en Occident). En tant que franco-marocain qui a vécu 18 ans en France ainsi que 10 ans à l'étranger, et qui a interagi avec d'autres franco-marocains, ainsi que des belgo-marocains, anglo-marocains, suisso-marocains, germano-marocains, hollando-marocains, hispano-marocains, américano-marocains, canado-marocains, israélo-marocains, italo-marocains et scandinavo-marocains, je peux dire sans aucune équivoque qu'il y'a autant de "types" que d'individus. Et pour des bonnes raisons : Nos parents n'ont pas tous émigrés dans les mêmes conditions. Certains Marocains ont quitté leur pays pour de meilleurs opportunités économiques, d'autres étaient des dissidents politiques ou avaient du ressentiment contre le régime marocain. Certains ont quitté le Maroc car ils ont subit du racisme (en particulier les Marocains de confession juive dans les années 60 pendant les guerres israélo-arabes à cause de la montée du nationalisme arabe), d'autres parce qu'ils ne pouvaient pas se garantir un avenir. Certains sont partis car ils ne pouvaient pas supporter de vivre dans un pays à majorité musulmane avec des lois répressives vis a vis de leurs libertés individuelles, d'autres à cause de la corruption et du fait qu'ils savaient qu'ils ne pourraient jamais évolué dans leurs projets, faute de connections. Donc, selon le contexte de leur immigration, il y'aura un impact sur la manière dont ils vont éduquer leurs enfants, et dans quelle mesure ils feront en sorte que ces derniers se sentent connectés au Maroc et à la culture marocaine.

Tous les Marocains nés en Occident n'ont pas forcément de la famille ou des liens au Maroc. Certaines personnes (comme moi) ont encore toute leur famille proche non-nucléaire au Maroc (grand-parents, oncles, tantes, cousins), tandis que d'autres non plus personne. Ou d'autres viennent de familles conflictuelles et ont rompu tout lien avec leur famille (pour des raisons X ou Y). Donc ces personnes qui n'ont plus de famille ou qui ne parlent plus avec ne ressentent pas le besoin de visiter le Maroc. Cela, aussi, impacte la transmission du lien avec la culture marocaine et le Maroc. C'est plus facile de se sentir connecté au Maroc, à la société et à la culture marocaine quand on a des membres de sa famille qui en font encore partie.

En Occident, nous ne vivons pas tous en communautés. Beaucoup de Marocains à l'étranger vivent là où d'autres Marocains vivent, socialisent avec eux, ce qui contribue à un sens d'appartenance à une diaspora. D'autres s'installent dans des endroits où peu de Marocains vivent, ou font le choix de ne pas fréquenter d'autres Marocains. Encore une fois, la raison se trouve dans les conditions dans lesquelles ces personnes sont partis de leur pays d'origine.

Nous n'avons pas les mêmes moyens. Certains d'entre nous ont pu se permettre d'aller au Maroc chaque année, et d'autres n'ont jamais pu. Et cela est aussi valide pour les Algériens et les Tunisiens. Je connais des Français ou des Canadiens d'origine Algérienne ou Tunisienne qui n'ont jamais passé l'été dans leur pays d'origine car leurs parents ne pouvaient pas se le permettre. Dans mon cas, j'ai passé tous mes étés au Maroc de l'âge de 3 ans jusqu'à 17 ans. C'était super car grâce à ça, je parle l'arabe dialectal couramment et cela m'a permis de vraiment bien connaître le pays. D'un autre côté, avec le recul, j'aurais préféré y être moins allé et avoir plus profité des pays européens frontaliers ou même d'autres régions de France. Maintenant, je vais au Maroc une fois aux deux ans.

En tant qu'êtres humans, nous sommes nos propres individus. Nous ne sommes pas les marionnettes de nos parents. Au bout du compte, nous gardons ce que nous voulons garder de ce que nos parents nous transmettent, et nous laissons de coté ce qui nous convient pas. Donc on peut être éduqué dans la famille la plus marocaine qui soit, si cette culture et ces mentalités ne résonnent pas en nous, on ne les assimilera pas. Et cela concerne aussi les Marocains qui vivent au Maroc : il y'a des Marocains natifs qui se sentent déconnectés de la société marocaine et qui ne peuvent pas se sentir liés à la culture autour d'eux. Car ils sont des individus avec leurs propres aspirations.

Pour ce qui est "de se contenter d'être des citoyens de seconde zone", les Marocains peuvent être citoyens de seconde zone même dans leur propre pays d'origine. Comme les personnes issues des classes les plus pauvres, les gens qui vivent dans les villages isolés, les mères célibataires, les enfants nés hors-mariage, les juifs dont la nationalité marocaine est souvent débattue, voir remise en question, à chaque fois qu'on aborde le conflit israélo-palestinien, les personnes LGBT, les personnes qui soutiennent la laïcité, les personnes qui ne croient pas en l'Islam et ne souhaitent pas être soumises aux lois qui touchent les membres de la communauté musulmane, les apostats et j'en passe.

Les Marocains en Occident ne sont pas des citoyens de seconde zone. Ils ont les mêmes droits que tout le monde - y compris des droits qui ne sont pas accessibles au Maroc, comme le droit à des soins de santé de qualité, une bonne éducation gratuite, le droit d'être protégé indépendamment de leur niveau de religiosité, leur orientation sexuelle, leurs opinions politiques et leur genre. Ces droits sont loins d'être garantis pour les Marocains vivant au Maroc. Bien sur que la discrimination existe. Mais elle existe aussi au Maroc. Dans beaucoup de compagnies, vous ne serez jamais responsable si votre nom de famille n'est pas Fassi. Certaines compagnies marocaines n'embauchent pas de femmes qui portent le Hijab - alors que j'ai travaillé dans des compagnies en France et au Canada qui avaient des employées qui le portaient. Beaucoup de positions ne s'ouvriraient pour vous que si vous avez les bonnes connections ou si vous avez payé pour y accéder. Donc ce n'est pas du tout vrai d'affirmer que les Marocains qui vivent en Europe sont des "éternels citoyens de seconde zone". On est un citoyen de seconde-zone que si on se voit comme tel. Si vous êtes respectueux, vous pouvez exiger qu'on le soit envers vous en retour.

Maintenant pour répondre à la question : je pense quoi du Maroc ? J'adore ce pays car c'est un superbe pays, plein d'histoire et d'attractions culturelles, une gastronomie sublime, de magnifiques paysages, et on peut y passer de super bonnes vacances. J'aime beaucoup ce pays car toute ma famille y vit, parce que j'ai un lien très fort avec eux, surtout avec la famille de ma mère. Maintenant est-ce que j'aime le gouvernement ? Non. Je n'aime vraiment pas les politiciens, ni la manière dont le pays est gouverné, ni la manière dont sont traités les libertés individuelles, ni la manière dont les valeurs islamiques sont instrumentalisées pour opprimer le droit des gens de vivre selon leurs propres termes, tout en fermant les yeux sur la corruption, la prostitution et l'insécurité qui sont tout autant "non-islamiques". Je déteste le fait que le gouvernement marocain est capable de dépenser 4 millions de dollars a Montreal pour un centre qui fait la promotion de la culture marocaine alors qu'on a encore des enfants qui meurent car leurs parents n'ont pas les moyens de leur offrir des soins de santé décents. Je déteste tout ce marketing sur le tourisme marocain quand les classes les plus pauvres de la société ont du mal à survivre. Je déteste tout le délire nationaliste "Allah Al Watan Al Malik" (Allah, La Nation, le Roi) qu'on retrouve chez des européens d'origine marocaine qui se gargarisent comme des paons quand ils sont au bled simplement parce qu'ils peuvent se permettre de passer des bonnes vacances grace au taux de change avantageux liés au cours du dollars ou de l'euro, et qui ignorent complètement les réalités de ce pays.

Ressentir ce que je ressens ne fait pas de moi quelqu'un qui à "honte" de mes origines ou qui "ينكر أصلي" (renie mes origines). Cela veut juste dire que je n'aime pas le nationalisme creux.

Et ce sont mes opinions, qui ne représentent que moi.

Questions similaires

Quels sont les faits sur le Maroc auxquels les étrangers ne croient pas avant d'arriver au Maroc ?

Pourquoi les Marocains fuient-ils le Maroc ?

Quand le Maroc sera-t-il un pays prospère et les Marocains ne penseront plus à l'immigration?

Maroc : que pensent les citoyens marocains ordinaires du roi du Maroc ?

Pourquoi le Maroc est-il constamment présenté comme un pays arrière ?

Pourquoi les Marocains sont-ils considérés comme des Blancs dans le continent africain ?

Que ne doit-on absolument pas faire au Maroc ?

Comment sera le Maroc dans 20 ans ?

Aimez-vous le Maroc ?

Pourquoi les Français regardent les Marocains avec mépris ?

Comment identifier la meilleure partie du fait d'être marocain ?

Qu'est-ce qui manque le plus aux Marocains quand ils vont à l'étranger ?

Quels sont les pays que les Marocains détestent le plus ?

Le Maroc a besoin de quoi pour rattraper les pays européens ?

La plupart des Marocains peuvent-ils parler français ?

Why do many Jews look like the people in the countries they come from if they are an ethnic group?

Dani Ishai Behan Half-Ethnic JewUpdated Oct 13

There are multiple points to consider here.
First, Jews who spent exile in other parts of the MENA region obviously aren't going to look that different from their host majorities. Jews, as a Levantine-Middle Eastern people, already boast considerable phenotypic/genotypic overlap with other MENA populations by default.

Jews who spent diaspora in European and Russian lands (aka Ashkenazim), however, overwhelmingly do not look like the majority populations of the lands they "come from".

These are ethnic Poles…
Ethnic Germans…
Ethnic French…
Ethnic Russians…
Ethnic Romanians…
Ethnic Moldovans…

And these are Ashkenazi Jews, i.e. Jews whose families spent exile in Europe.

ווילנער חזנים-קוואַרטעט

gettyimages
Yale Joel
50539624

חנוכה
1916

These are Hasidim, i.e. an Ashkenazi Jewish sect that is known to be lighter vis a vis other Ashkenazi Jews (because they spend most of their time in-doors praying).

Chabad

Visit

Pittsburgh Delegation Leads Thousands of Rabbis in Prayer and ...

Chabad.ORG

You get the point.

Jews in Africa, China, etc look like their host populations because they assimilated/intermarried extensively with the indigenous peoples of those areas, whereas Jews who were exiled to Europe were endogamous and retained their Levantine ethnic identity, culture, genotype, and phenotype.

Related Links

Why are the Jewish people have a divided ethnicity with different facial features (like there are German Jews, Russian Jews, Chinese Jews, Polish Jews, Tunisian Jews, Azerbaijani Jews, etc) even though they were once one people?

Jews were able to recreate a nation that has been dead for 2,000 years, revitalize an almost dead language, and form thousands of powerful Jewish organizations; are Jews the most well organized and coordinated ethnic group?

Why do many Chinese seem to admire Jews for their intelligence but Jews seem not to appreciate their admiration?

Since Israel is in Asia doesn't that mean that all Jews are Asian?

How many Jews are not descendants from the ancient kingdom of Israel and are very likely European converts (Ashkenazi Jews)?

What kind of relationship do Jewish people have with the Chinese?

Do Mizrahi Jews feel a bond towards the Palestinians?

Are the Palestinians an actual ethnic group?

Why is there such a high number of people worldwide who hate Jewish people? When and why did such a hate against a certain ethnic group start to exist?

Why do so many Russian Jews emigrate from Israel?

Why is there no anti-Semitism in China?

What did the Russians think about Jews?

Do Israelis look down on Asians?

Isn't it interesting that Jews aren't only a religious group, that they are an ethnic group as well? How many times have you seen a person and thought, "I bet you they are Jewish"?

Why is Europe for everyone while other countries are for their particular ethnic group?

Why do many Jews look like the people in the countries they come from if they are an ethnic group?

Dani Ishai Behan , Half-Ethnic Jew Updated Oct 13

There are multiple points to consider here. First, Jews who spent exile in other parts of the MENA region obviously aren't going to look that different from their host majorities. Jews, as a Levantine-Middle Eastern people, already boast considerable phenotypical/genotypical overlap with other MENA populations by default.
Jews who spent diaspora in European and Russian lands (aka Ashkenazim), however, overwhelmingly do not look like the majority populations of the lands they "come from".

These are ethnic Poles…

Ethnic Germans…

Ethnic French…

Ethnic Russians…

Ethnic Romanians…

Ethnic Moldovans…

And these

Sophia-Helene Mees de Tricht , Jewish African Answered Oct 14

Three reasons:

Intermarriage - It’s more or less traditional for Jews to marry amongst themselves, but as a Jew from a smaller community, I can say with some confidence, there are plenty of reasons why this is often not possible.

Converts - Judaism is a closed practice, but that just means we require converts to thoroughly indoctrinate themselves in our culture before being considered Jewish.

Ethnicity is not race - This is the fault of official forms in the US and I strongly suspect others as well. Ethnicity is not exclusively about shared genetic traits, so people of a certain ethnicity can loo

Eugene Borisenko , Sephardic Jew from Russia. A rarity. Answered Oct 2

This is the former Ukrainian Prime Minister Arseniy Yatsenyuk.

He is light skinned, light eyed, his hair is, well, was strawberry blond. There is a popular belief among a good number of Ukrainian citizens that he is a Jew.

Why? Because of his looks. But how is he different from other whites guys around him, you will ask. Well, his shape of the skull, the shape of his nose, his eyes — all point to a Mediterranean rather than a Slavic look, despite the skin color. He would easily pass for a local...

Start free trial

More Answers Below

Why are the Jewish people have a divided ethnicity with different facial features (like there are German Jews, Russian Jews, Chinese Jews, Polish Jews, Tunisian Jews, Azerbaijani Jews, etc) even though they were once one people?

Jews were able to recreate a nation that has been dead for 2,000 years, revitalize an almost dead language, and form thousands of powerful Jewish organizations; are Jews the most well organized and coordinated ethnic group?

Why do many Chinese seem to admire Jews for their intelligence but Jews seem not appreciate their admiration?

Jose Perez, studied Political Science at University of Puerto Rico at Río Piedras Updated Sep 24

They look like that to you. They still look different to the people of those countries because the latter can see Hebrew blood in them and different facial features as compared to the indigenous population. A Polish person can tell a Pole from a Polish Jew. He still looks different to the Pole. Same for Germans, Lithuanians, Ukrainians, etc etc etc. The Jews look different to them and they can immediately tell.

But you apparently do not see those things. Which is a factor in how you perceive them vs. how the people in those countries perceive them.

Let’s see. A Polish Jew

A Pole:

A German Jew

A German:

A Russian Jew

A Russian:

A Latvian Jew

A Latvian

A Ukrainian Jew

Ukrainians do not have such noses and it will still stand out like a sore thumb to them.

A Ukrainian

As you can see, Jews look Mediterranean/Lebanese/ Semitic. Or Syrians/Italians.

But, you might say, Semitic is just a language family.

Not in those countries it’s not.

Yes, you will say, but not all Jews are dark and not all those native people are blonde.

Correct, but the locals there can still tell Jewish blood in Jews while you may not be able to. They know how to tell by the eye shape, the nose shape and even the way the hair curls - as well as the accent- the Jews do have different vocal cords and a deeper voice.

As I said, in those countries, people can tell.

Related Links

Why are the Jewish people have a divided ethnicity with different facial features (like there are German Jews, Russian Jews, Chinese Jews, Polish Jews, Tunisian Jews, Azerbaijani Jews, etc) even though they were once one people?

Jews were able to recreate a nation that has been dead for 2,000 years, revitalize an almost dead language, and form thousands of powerful Jewish organizations; are Jews the most well organized and coordinated ethnic group?

Why do many Chinese seem to admire Jews for their intelligence but Jews seem not appreciate their admiration?

Since Israel is in Asia doesn't that mean that all Jews are Asian?

How many Jews are not descendants from the ancient kingdom of Israel and are very likely European converts (Ashkenazi Jews)?

What kind of relationship do Jewish people have with the Chinese?

Do Mizrahi Jews feel a bond towards the Palestinians?

Are the Palestinians an actual ethnic group?

Why is there such a high number of people worldwide who hate Jewish people? When and why did such a hate against a certain ethnic group start to exist?

Why do so many Russian Jews emigrate from Israel?

Why is there no anti-Semitism in China?

What did the Russians think about Jews?

Do Israelis look down on Asians?

Isn't it interesting that Jews aren't only a religious group, that they are an ethnic group as well? How many times have you seen a person and thought, "I bet you they are Jewish"?

Why is Europe for everyone while other countries are for their particular ethnic group?

Why has Morocco decided to normalize relations with Israel?

Eric Curran Studied abroad in Israel 1y

One word: Realpolitik.
First, let's take a look at geography:

They're pretty far away, aren't they? As in, there's thousands of miles of distance between the two countries. At this point, the Moroccan king probably felt there was no real reason for there to be bad blood between the two nations, since neither one really has that strong of an effect on the other, aside from sentiment regarding the Israel/Palestine conflict.

Second, the monarchy clearly felt the interests of Morocco were better served with official peace between itself and Israel. With hostilities renewing in the Western Sahara between the Moroccan government and the Polisario Front, it clearly has more pressing matters to attend to. No longer kicking the can on Israel means it has one less iron in the fire, can enjoy stronger economic ties and trade with Israel, has increased access to Israeli tech and innovation, and would please its centuries-old ally in Washington, DC. Trump, in fact, was so pleased that he recognized Moroccan control over the disputed Western Sahara!

Besides, for many years prior to this announcement, Israel and Morocco had formed friendly, poorly-kept-secret ties, and a not-so-small number of Israeli Jewish citizens are themselves of Moroccan ancestry. And Sudan, the UAE, and Bahrain had gone first with Israeli peace deals, helping to take a lot of the pressure off of Morocco. I guess it shouldn't be a surprise that this was bound to happen sooner or later, the Western Sahara issue and the Trump administration just fast-tracked the process along.

Related Links

How do Moroccans perceive Israel and the Morocco-Israel relationship?

Should Morocco establish relations with Israel?

As a Moroccan, what do you think about Israel?

What is the next country to be normalized with Israel after Morocco?

How do Moroccans feel about the announced normalization with Israel?

What does the Morocco-Israel deal mean for Western Sahara?

Why is Israel suddenly getting closer to other Arab countries like Morocco? What are the motives behind that?

What do you think of Morocco announcing they will establish diplomatic ties with Israel?

Will Israel normalize relations with Moroccans like they have normalized relations with the Palestinians?

What actions (stance) would Morocco take if an all-out war broke out between Palestine/Israel?

Should Moroccans support Israel or Palestine?

Now that there are Israel-Morocco relations, will Moroccan Jews return en masse to Morocco?

Do you think that Morocco will get a big influx of Israeli tourists from the new diplomatic relations since there are 500,000 Jews of Moroccan descent living in Israel?

Should Saudi Arabia also normalize its relationship with Israel?

Why has Morocco not been invited to become a member of NATO?

Maroc : les islamistes du PJD fustigent "violations et irrégularités" durant les elections

Des membres du Parti islamiste pour la justice et le développement (PJD) lors d'une conférence de presse à Rabat pour annoncer la démission de son président Saad-Eddine el-Othmani et de tous les membres de son secrétariat général, après sa déroute aux élections législatives et locales , le 9 septembre 2021. © Fadel Senna, AFP

Des membres du Parti islamiste pour la justice et le développement (PJD) lors d'une conférence de presse à Rabat pour annoncer la démission de son président Saad-Eddine el-Othmani et de tous les membres de son secrétariat général, après sa déroute aux élections législatives et locales , le 9 septembre 2021. © Fadel Senna, AFP

Le Parti de la justice et du développement a dénoncé, dans un communiqué diffusé dimanche, "les violations et irrégularités" qui ont émaillé les dernières élections générales au Maroc. Au pouvoir depuis dix ans, le PJD s'est effondré aux législatives, passant de 125 sièges à 13, sur un total de 395.

Le parti islamiste PJD a dénoncé "les violations et irrégularités" qui ont émaillé les dernières élections générales au Maroc, où il a essuyé une déroute historique, selon un communiqué diffusé dimanche 19 septembre.
Le Parti de la justice et du développement (PJD) "dénonce les violations et irrégularités qu'ont connues les élections", dont "l'usage massif de l'argent", "la manipulation des procès verbaux" ou encore "les noms rayés des listes électorales ou ceux y figurant doublement", accuse le communiqué clôturant une session extraordinaire du conseil national du PJD tenue samedi à huis clos.

Ces "formes de corruption électorale" ont "abouti à l'annonce de résultats qui ne reflètent pas la teneur de la cartographie politique et la libre volonté des électeurs", estime le parti islamiste modéré, qui a déploré "une régression de notre expérience démocratique".

Selon le ministre de l'Intérieur, Abdelouafi Laftit, les opérations de vote se sont déroulées "dans des circonstances normales", hormis "des cas isolés". Au pouvoir depuis dix ans, sans jamais véritablement gouverner, le PJD s'est effondré aux législatives, passant de 125 sièges à 13 sur un total de 395.

"Nous sommes encore sous le choc"

L'ampleur inattendue de la défaite s'est confirmée avec les élections locales, tenues le même jour : le parti a dégringolé de 5 021 élus à 777 aux communales et de 174 sièges à 18 aux régionales contre 174.

En fin de campagne et le jour du vote, les islamistes avaient déjà fait état de "graves irrégularités", citant des achats de voix et de candidats, ainsi que "la distribution obscène d'argent" à proximité de bureaux de vote

Le PJD "est à un tournant important où nous pouvons questionner nos choix (...) sans succomber à la psychologie de la défaite", a dit samedi son secrétaire général démissionnaire, Saad Eddine El Othmani, dans la réunion à huis clos.

"Nous sommes encore sous le choc. C'est comme si le parti était en réanimation, mais nous ambitionnons de le ressusciter", a promis une responsable du PJD, Amina Maelainine.

C'est le parti libéral du Rassemblement national des indépendants (RNI), considéré comme proche du palais royal, qui a triomphé le 8 septembre, raflant 102 sièges à la Chambre des représentants.

Son patron, le milliardaire Aziz Akhannouch – désigné depuis chef du gouvernement par le roi Mohammed VI –, a lancé des tractations avec les partis représentés au Parlement pour former une coalition gouvernementale, mis à part le PJD retourné dans l'opposition. Avec AFP

What are some things we can takeaway from Morocco's 2021 election results?

Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan Lived in Meknès, Morocco (1996–0) Sep 30

It depends on your opinions and views
Moroccan elections aren't genuine, there is a lot of corruption and manipulation. This year the Kin- er…. "Misfortune" decided to plague the ruling Islamist party, the PJD, with numerous mishaps such as playing with voter rolls which meant that many citizens could not vote, strangely this only affected PJD voters. As well as rampant vote buying in rural areas etc. etc. etc.
Maroc : les islamistes du PJD fustigent "violations et irrégularités" durant les élections

Le Parti de la justice et du développement a dénoncé, dans un communiqué diffusé dimanche, "les violations et irrégularités" qui ont émaillé les dernières élections générales au Maroc. Au pouvoir dep…

https://www.france24.com/fr/afrique/20210919-maroc-les-islamistes-du-pjd-fustigent-violations-et-irr%C3%A9gularit%C3%A9s-durant-les-%C3%A9lections

This doesn't mean that the elections are to be ignored, they're extremely important as the King uses them as a signal to Moroccans and foreigners as he changes track and policies.

Which brings us to:

What is the new government of Morocco?

Our new Prime Minister is Berber billionaire Aziz Akhannouch , one of the wealthiest men in the country and part of the Soussi clique. He runs the National Rally of Independents (RNI).
The second largest party is the Authenticity and Modernity Party (PAM) which is run by another Soussi, Abdellatif Ouahbi. PAM isn't a sincere political party. It was founded by one of the King's advisors in 2008 to serve as a political vehicle for the Monarchy.
The third largest party is Istiqlal run by Nizar Baraka.

What does this mean?

The King has now strengthened his grip on power by having the 3 largest parties in parliament be the most diehard Monarchists. Furthermore with Akhannouch and the Soussi clique in power, Morocco will pursue strongly pro-business and capitalist policies.

Don't think of Akhannouch and the Soussi clique as tyrants but rather as the Moroccan equivalent of Chaebols.
Chaebol - Wikipedia

South Korean business conglomerate, often family-run A chaebol (/ ˈ tʃ eɪ b ɒ l , ˈ dʒ ɛ b əl / , [1] [2] Korean : 재벌 ; lit. "rich family"; Korean pronunciation: [tɕɛ̞.bʌl]) is a large industrial conglomerate that is run and controlled by a person or family in South Korea. [2] A chaebol often consists of many diversified affiliates, controlled by a person or group of persons whose power over the group often exceeds legal authority. [3] The first known use in an English text was in 1972. [2] Several dozen large South Korean family-controlled corporate groups fall under this definition. Chaebols have also played a significant role in South Korean politics. In 1988, a member of a chaebol family, Chung Mong-joon , president of Hyundai Heavy Industries , successfully ran for the National Assembly of South Korea . Other business leaders also were chosen to be members of the National Assembly through proportional representation . [4] Hyundai has made efforts to contribute to the thawing North Korean relations , but not without controversy. [5] Many South Korean family-run chaebols have been criticized for low dividend payouts and other governance practices that favor controlling shareholders at the expense of ordinary investors. [6] Etymology [edit] The word "chaebol" derived from the McCune–Reischauer romanization, chaebŏl , of the Korean word jaebeol (재벌 , from jae "wealth or property" + beol "faction or clan" – also written with the same Chinese characters 財閥 as zaibatsu in Japan). [2] The first known use in an English text was in 1972. [2] History [edit] South Korea's economy was small and predominantly agricultural well into the mid-20th century. However, the policies of President Park Chung Hee spurred rapid industrialisation by promoting large businesses, following his seizure of power in 1961. The First Five Year Economic Plan [3] by the government set industrial policy toward new investment, and chaebols were to be guaranteed loans from the banking sector. The chaebol played a key role in developing new industries, markets, and export production, helping make South Korea one of the Four Asian Tigers . Although South Korea's major industrial programs did not begin until the early 1960s, the origins of the country's entrepreneurial elite were found in the political economy of the 1950s. Very few Koreans had owned or managed larger corporations during the Japanese colonial period. After the departure of the Japanese in 1945, some Korean businessmen obtained the assets of some of the Japanese firms, a number of which grew into the chaebols of the 1990s. [4] The companies, as well as certain other firms that were formed in the late 1940s and early 1950s, had close links with Syngman Rhee 's First Republic, which lasted from 1948 to 1960. It is confirmed that many of these companies received special treatment from the government in return for kickbacks and other payments. [4] When the military took over the government in 1961, its leaders anno https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Chaebol

Morocco has already reformed its economy this past decade in order to become an industrial powerhouse with modest success such as the rise of the automotive industry. With the Soussi clique in power these efforts will be intensified as:

Morocco will now be ruled by pro-business politicians who need Morocco to develop in order to expand their own pockets.

King Mohammed VI has forced out the conservatives (Islamists) to improve Morocco's image to the West

This way a Western businessman will have nothing to fear in Morocco.

"Ahmed, you said 'Soussi clique'. I don't follow"

To quote Morocco World News: (…) the World Bank leveled criticism against Hassan II for the 'Fassi' hegemony over economic and political power and described the regime as "sclerotic". Perhaps in response to this criticism, and in an attempt to "balance" the growing domination of the "Fassi" kinship, Hassan II injected a small cadre of another influential lineage in the circles of power: The Soussi businessmen. Hassan II provided backing for new Soussi figures, including Miloud Chaabi and Azizi Akhnouch, and propelled them to the forefront of the political arena.

Genealogy of Influential Families in Morocco

Casablanca- In Morocco, there exists a national narrative that posits a rather controversial claim:

https://www.moroccoworldnews.com/2012/02/28453/genealogy-of-influential-families-in-morocco
D:\AFRICA-ALL-IN-ONE (Latest file)\AFRICA ALL-IN-ONE word file\

Genealogy of Influential Families in Morocco
Casablanca- In Morocco, there exists a national narrative that posits a rather controversial claim:
https:\www.moroccoworldnews.com\2012\02\28453\genealogy-of-influential-families-in-morocco

Historically Morocco's central government was dominated by the Arab nobility of Fes (the Fassi). In the 1980s this saw Hassan II try to dilute Fassi power by reaching to powerful and very wealthy Berber businessmen in the Souss region. He gave a great many of them government contracts and positions.

"Ok, but what should I take away from all of this?"

The King of Morocco has now strengthened his grip on power and stacked parliament with the cronies of his cronies. The King now has almost absolute control.

This new government will begin to drift away from Europe as it has Soussi businessmen and nationalists in bed. Morocco has already had 2 disputes with Europe this year.

First with Germany, then with Spain.

Morocco recalls ambassador in Germany amid Western Sahara row

Berlin has said it is confused by the move.

https://www.euronews.com/2021/05/06/morocco-recalls-ambassador-in-germany-amid-western-sahara-row

Spain, Morocco square off after 8,000 migrants arrive by sea

CEUTA, Spain (AP) — Spain deployed its military to the Moroccan border Tuesday and expelled nearly half of the thousands of migrants who jumped fences or swam onto European soil over two days after Rabat loosened border controls amid a deepening diplomatic spat.

https://apnews.com/article/spain-europe-africa-morocco-migration-9833744a7058cc9438a8d7417d2944c6

Now the EU Court of Justice dropped this bombshell.

EU court annuls Morocco trade deals over Western Sahara

Morocco did not have the consent of Western Sahara people needed for trade treaties, a European Union court has ruled.

https://www.aljazeera.com/economy/2021/9/29/eu-court-annuls-morocco-trade-deals-over-western sahara#:~:text=A%20European%20Union%20court%20on,continuity%20of%20the%20bilateral%20trade file://D:\AFRICA-ALL-IN-ONE (Latest file)\AFRICA ALL-IN-ONE word file\EU court annuls Morocco trade deals over Western SaharaMorocco did not have the consent of Western Sahara people needed for trade treaties, a European Union court has ruled.https:\www.aljazeera.com\economy\2021\9\29\eu-court-annuls-morocco-trade-deals-over-western sahara - :~:text=A European Union court on,continuity of the bilateral trade%0D
The EU just shot itself in the foot by ending the trade deals with Morocco. The Soussi clique may be open to negotiations on a new deal , they're not going to walk away from billions of dollars, but the Nationalists will torpedo such efforts.

The Soussi clique will liberalize the economy even further and encourage more growth. Is Akhannouch Morocco's General Park? I don't know.

General Park (r. 1962–1979) was South Korea's military dictator who kickstarted the economic transformation that led to modern South Korea's prosperity. While General Park could have just pillaged the nation, he didn't.

Akhannouch studied and lived in Canada for many years, he visits Europe regularly, and while he gained his wealth through corrupt dealings he isn't a fool. He may come to the conclusion that a more open and developed Morocco may be better for him in the long run and use his experience and expertise to guide the King in improving Morocco.

Or… he may have decided it's in his interests to leech on Morocco further and try to establish as many monopolies as possible for him and his clique while reforming the legal system to ensure Moroccans have no recourse against them.

We're not with high level figures behind closed doors but personally I am optimistic.

> With a more nationalistic and pro-business government, Morocco will pursue stronger ties to the United States as (1) the United States is the financial powerhouse of the world (2) The United States isn't Europe which means Morocco can gain leverage and (3) The United States needs regional allies.

In conclusion:

1. King messed with the elections
2. Pro-Business Monarchist government is now in power
3. Morocco may drift away from European Union

Whether this is all positive or negative depends on your views.

Follow Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan

Related Links
What is life like in Morocco?
Is Morocco a dictatorship?
What are the different exit poll results of the 2021 elections?
Are there political problems between Morocco and Spain, and what are the causes?
What race are people from Morocco?
Why are Moroccans fleeing Morocco?
Is Morocco the worst country in the world?
Who wants to visit Morocco in 2021?
What were your key takeaways from the results of the 2021 general elections in Canada?
What things do people from Morocco miss most when they go abroad?
Is there racism in Morocco?
Why is Morocco a poor country?

How dangerous is Tangier, Morocco?
What are the best things to do in Agadir, Morocco?
What's the biggest takeaway from CPAC 2021?

The Holocaust
How did Moroccan Jews survive the Holocaust?

Answered by Jacob Weinstein Oct 3
They were saved by King Mohammed V of Morocco, who is alleged to have told the Nazis that "there are no Jewish citizens, there are no Muslims citizens, they are all Moroccans." It would be wrong not to mention that he did allow Jewish discriminatory laws to be enacted under the Vichy regime since they were still a French colonial subject. However, it is due to his intentional hand-waving in front of Vichy and Nazi officials that the Moroccan Jews got to live under discrimination instead of being rounded up, shipped, and murdered, and it is suggested that he objected to these laws but signed them under immense pressure. However you choose to view his complex image, millions of Jews of Moroccan descent are alive thanks to his act of bravery.

King Mohammed al-Khamis bin Yusef bin Hassan al-Alawi

May his memory be a blessing.

Related Links
Do we focus too much on the Holocaust? Germans didn't invent the pogrom, they simply industrialised it. Is it an overstatement to say that just about all Christian communities owe a heavy debt to Jews for 2,000 years of horrendous abuse?
What was the public/common opinion of Eastern Europeans on the mass killing of Jews at WW2?

Which Nazi soldiers worked in the Concentration Camps? Was it SS or another group or ordinary soldiers? Did any German soldiers go "what the hell is this!" when sent to a death camp and told what was happening?
Can all Jews in Europe have been victims of the Holocaust even if they weren't in ghettos or concentration camps because there was still a lot of abuse and powerlessness for the Jews and an overall difficult life for them?
If someone was half-Jewish, or "Mischlinge", in Nazi Germany, what kinds of persecution would they have faced? How did the treatment of "half-Jews" compare with those considered "fully Jewish"?
What are some really good books, well researched and detailed, but easy to read and understand for a layman, about the Holocaust?
Were Nazi concentration camps, Nazi death camps, and Nazi extermination camps the same thing? If not, what were the differences?
Had the July 20th Plot succeeded and an additional 67,000 Jews from Lodz, Poland would have survived the Holocaust, would Lodz Ghetto leader Chaim Rumkowski be praised as a hero rather than be viewed as a monster?
How did any Jewish people manage to escape Holocaust oppression/surveillance?
How did Finland in WW2 manage to save nearly all their Jewish citizens from the Nazis even though they were a German ally?
Was Kristallnacht when the German people showed that their loyalty was to Hitler and the Nazis and they were not going to help the Jews?
What's the Japanese perspective view on Nazism and the Holocaust then and now?
When Germans snitched on someone being a Jew in WW2, without having a clue that he/she is so, or even knew that he/she is not so, what did happen to him/her?
How many of the Jews murdered in the Shoah were killed by poison gas?
How many WW1-era German veterans were sent to Nazi concentration camps?

Are tensions between Algeria and Morocco calming down? It’s worsening as Morocco now believes it has broken the balance thanks to Israel and the United States

Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan Follow Lived in Meknès, Morocco (1996–0)11h

The reason why North Africa isn’t a hotbed of conflict is because pre-2011 there was a balance between the two natural regional powers, Algeria and Morocco. They were matched in population, military strength and diplomacy.
This made war costly and the chance of victory being slim for both nations.

Then Morocco signed into the pro-US camp

Morocco normalized with Israel in late 2020 and this opened countless closed doors to it. To use two examples:

Morocco, Israel to build 2 drone factories

Morocco and Israel are preparing to build two factories for unmanned aircraft in the North Africa state's Al-Aoula region, media reported yesterday. Moroccan and Israeli official sources told Shephar...https://www.middleeastmonitor.com/20211217-morocco-israel-to-build-2-drone-factories/file://D:\AFRICA-ALL-IN-ONE (Latest file)\AFRICA ALL-IN-ONE word file\Morocco, Israel to build 2 drone factoriesMorocco and Israel are preparing to build two factories for unmanned aircraft in the North Africa state's Al-Aoula region, media reported yesterday. Moroccan and Israeli official sources told Shephar...https:\www.middleeastmonitor.com\20211217-morocco-israel-to-build-2-drone-factories\The goal is for Morocco to be able to produce its own Israeli-designed drones. In the event of a war of attrition, Morocco's domestic weapons production would be very beneficial. Especially if Moroccan factories are capable of replacing drones lost in combat. This is a capability Algeria lacks.

Israeli drone

U.S. Proposes $1 Billion Arms Sale to Morocco After Israel Deal

(Bloomberg) -- The U.S. has proposed selling as much as $1 billion in weapons including Reaper drones to Morocco, just a day after President Donald Trump paved the way for a diplomatic deal with Israel by recognizing the country's claims of sovereignty over Western Sahara.
https://www.bloombergquint.com/politics/u-s-proposes-1-billion-arms-sale-to-morocco-after-israel-deal

D:\AFRICA-ALL-IN-ONE (Latest file)\AFRICA ALL-IN-ONE word file\
U.S. Proposes $1 Billion Arms Sale to Morocco After Israel Deal
(Bloomberg) -- The U.S. has proposed selling as much as $1 billion in weapons including Reaper drones to Morocco, just a day after President Donald Trump paved the way for a diplomatic deal with Israel by recognizing the country's claims of sovereignty over Western Sahara.
https:\www.bloombergquint.com\politics\u-s-proposes-1-billion-arms-sale-to-morocco-after-israel-deal

The United States is also opening its weapons shop to Morocco as well. Generally the United States avoided selling highly advanced weaponry to the Arab nations to avoid dulling Israeli superiority when it came to arms. But now that Morocco has normalized, Morocco can pick whatever arms it likes.

This new military superiority as well as diplomatic support has emboldened Morocco

That's why after the normalization agreement was signed, Morocco began to take actions against Algeria like:
Western Sahara: Moroccan Drone Strike Kills Polisario Front Commander

Western Sahara: Moroccan Drone Strike Kills Polisario Front Commander

https://worldview.stratfor.com/situation-report/western-sahara-moroccan-drone-strike-kills-polisario-front-commander

Algeria accuses Morocco of fatal attack on three truck drivers

The Algerian presidency said the killing of the three Algerian truck drivers in a roadside bombing on Monday "will not go unpunished."

https://www.al-monitor.com/originals/2021/11/algeria-accuses-morocco-fatal-attack-three-truck-drivers

The Moroccan government believes that it has finally broken the balance

Algeria is beset with economic difficulties due to the decline of oil prices and lacks the newfound diplomatic support and production capabilities that Morocco has or will have soon.

While Morocco has been making international deals, Algeria has had protest after protest as well as an economic decline due to oil prices jumping around

This has given the Moroccan government the perception that an Algerian-Moroccan war has a high chance of ending in Moroccan victory. Which is why Morocco no longer fears the consequences of provoking Algeria.

In 1963, Morocco invaded Algeria but withdrew due to France and the United States refusing to help Morocco while Cuba, Egypt and the Soviet Union gave Algeria troops and equipment. If a second round was fought today, Morocco can count on American and Israeli support while Algeria has noone to aid it with the possible exception of Russia.

How is Algeria reacting?

It wants to normalize with Israel too now.
D:\AFRICA-ALL-IN-ONE (Latest file)\AFRICA ALL-IN-ONE word file\
Algeria Eyes Israel Normalization Through Palestinian Mediation

Amid Algeria's recurrent accusations directed towards Morocco for reestablishing ties with Israel, Algiers is said to seek mediation for normalization with Tel Aviv.
https:\www.moroccoworldnews.com\2021\12\345923\algeria-eyes-israel-normalization-through-palestinian-mediation

Algeria Eyes Israel Normalization Through Palestinian Mediation

Amid Algeria's recurrent accusations directed towards Morocco for reestablishing ties with Israel, Algiers is said to seek mediation for normalization with Tel Aviv.

https://www.moroccoworldnews.com/2021/12/345923/algeria-eyes-israel-normalization-through-palestinian-mediation

D:\AFRICA-ALL-IN-ONE (Latest file)\AFRICA ALL-IN-ONE word file\
Algeria Eyes Israel Normalization Through Palestinian Mediation

Amid Algeria's recurrent accusations directed towards Morocco for reestablishing ties with Israel, Algiers is said to seek mediation for normalization with Tel Aviv.
https:\www.moroccoworldnews.com\2021\12\345923\algeria-eyes-israel-normalization-through-palestinian-mediation

To make normalization palatable, the Algerian government has asked the Palestinian Authority to discuss the topic with Israel in hopes that the Palestinians can strike a deal that will benefit all three.
What Algeria intends to gain from this is unknown.

It's possible that Algeria hopes that through normalization it can persuade Israel to not ruin the balance that North Africa has.

I hope that clarifies things for you

Related questions

What are the main cultural differences between Morocco and Algeria?

In regards to Algeria and Morocco, which countries are their allies and enemies (on an international level)?

Do people from Morocco, Algeria and Tunisia go to nightclubs often? Isn't that unislamic or do they not care so much anymore as it used to be?

How would Algeria enter (and possibly defeat) Morocco if a war occured?

What Algeria really benefit supporting polisario and being anti western country? I mean pulling same rope with Morocco could benefit both countryes much more right?

In a military confrontation between Algeria and Morocco, who would probably win in the air and on the ground?

Who exactly would win a conventional war between Morocco and Algeria right now?

If Tunisia, Morocco, and Libya decided to go to war against Algeria, what would happen? Will any nation interfere? If so, which nations would interfere? Which side would they be on? Who would win?

Why won't Algeria and Morocco make peace?

Aside from politics, are there any strong cultural, ethnic, or regional differences between Morocco and Algeria that make them two separated countries instead of one?

Why does Morocco have border disputes with almost every neighbouring countries (Algeria, Spain and Western Sahara)?

Which has the better quality of life: Morocco or Algeria?

What would happen if Morocco, Algeria and Tunisia became one single country?

How can Algeria and Algerians stop Morocco and Morrocans to steal elements of the Algerian culture and sell them to the West and Westerners as "Made in Morrocco"?

Why does Algeria oppose Moroccan rule over Western Sahara?

Les autorités ont-elles préféré dénoncer un complot derrière les incendies qui déciment le nord-est de l'Algérie plutôt que de reconnaître le sous-équipement du pays et leur incurie ?

Slimane Azayri, Maniaque des mains propres Mis à jour le 20 août

Les autorités ont-elles préféré dénoncer un complot derrière les incendies qui déciment le nord-est de l'Algérie plutôt que de reconnaître le sous-équipement du pays et leur incurie ?

Les autorités algériennes ont visiblement échoué dans la mise en oeuvre de la lutte anti-incendies, notamment en terme d'organisation et de disponibilité de moyens propres, surtout aériens, qui auraient été totalement absents sans l'aide des pays tels que la France, la Tunisie, l'Italie et la Suisse.

D'un autre côté, il apparaît de plus en plus clair que les départs de feu par leur nombre élevé, leur densité dans les territoires touchés, leur grande majorité à partir des routes carrossables et d'autres caractéristiques atypiques au regard de l'historique des années écoulées, résultent d'actes criminels commis par des individus non encore identifiés. C'est du moins le constat auquel aboutit, sur la base d'observations satellitaires, le directeur de l'Agence spatiale algérienne selon le compte rendu ci-dessous du journal en ligne TSA-Algérie.

Concernant le but de ces actes criminels, deux thèses, qui ne s'excluent pas forcément, circulent:

~ une tentative de retour de généraux écartés des centres du pouvoir depuis la chute de Bouteflika en créant une instabilité qui provoquerait le départ du président Tebboune et de ses soutiens militaires.

~ une volonté de renforcer les rangs des tenants de l'indépendance de la Kabylie et provoquer des affrontements avec des partisans de l'arabo-islamisme, prélude à une guerre civile qui provoquerait l'éclatement du pays. Cette deuxième thèse suppose la participation de puissances étrangères et leur présence aux commandes de l'opération de destruction de l'Algérie.

Incendies de Tizi-Ouzou : ce que les satellites ont vu 13/08/2021 - 18:37

Les incendies de forêts enregistrés depuis lundi à travers le pays, notamment dans la wilaya de Tizi Ouzou, sont d'origine « criminelle », a affirmé le directeur général de l'Agence spatiale algérienne (ASAL), Azzedine Oussedik, soulignant que ces feux ont été « tous enregistrés à proximité des routes ».

M. Oussedik, qui était jeudi l'invité du journal de 19h00 de Canal Algérie, a fait remarquer que les « départs de feu (Tizi-Ouzou) sont tous à proximité des routes et des pistes, alors que depuis 2003 nous n'enregistrons que quelques feux sur ces endroits, soit 1/10, causés généralement par un mégot de cigarette ou bien suite à un barbecue. Et là c'est également un signe très important que ces départs de feu sont d'origine criminelle », selon le compte rendu de l'agence officielle.

Il a indiqué que dès le lundi 9 août, date du début des incendies, l'Agence a mobilisé ses ingénieurs et ses équipes pour « programmer le maximum d'images satellitaires au-dessus des régions touchées essentiellement à Béjaïa, Tizi Ouzou et Jijel comme première étape ».

« Nous avons également mobilisé des satellites internationaux pour identifier les lieux des départs de feux », a-t-il ajouté, précisant que les incendies qui ont touché Tizi-Ouzou sont concentrés, selon des satellites internationaux, au niveau du « sud-est de la wilaya, notamment dans les localités de Larbaa Nath Iraten, Aïn el Hammam et Béni Yenni essentiellement ».

M. Oussedik a noté que l'Agence spatiale algérienne, qui suit depuis sa création en 2003 les incendies de forêts, a remarqué que « les départs de feux sont répartis un peu partout dans la wilaya, mais, cette fois-ci, ils sont localisés dans le sud-est de Tizi Ouzou connu par sa très forte concentration de la population et d'habitations », précisant que « les espèces connues dans cette région sont très inflammables ».

Le DG de l'ASAL a également fait savoir que « trois feux ont été déclenchés en même temps à 11h08, à savoir à Aïn El Hammam, à Ouacif et au sud-est de la commune d'Azazga ».

Autre indice révélé par M. Oussedik « pour conforter l'hypothèse d'un acte criminel » est le déclenchement des feux dans les localités d'Aït Lahcene dans la commune de Béni Yenni, Azazga et Mizrana à 23h08.

« Les départs de feux à cette heure-ci est impossible sur le plan de la climatologie et des conditions », a-t-il dit, relevant que les données de l'Agence ont été remis entre les mains des services compétents pour « les identifications futures et pour l'identification des auteurs de ces actes ».

Par ailleurs, M. Oussedik a estimé à 23.000 hectares les pertes au niveau de Tizi Ouzou, 6.500 hectares à Béjaïa et 1.800 dans la wilaya de Jijel.

Par : Rédaction Suivre Slimane Azayri

Questions similaires

Pourquoi on demande tout le temps à la France de s'excuser à l'Algérie pour la Guerre d'Algérie et pas à l'Algérie de s'excuser pour les actes du FLN durant la même période ?

Les Algériens sont en colère contre leur gouvernement et sa gestion calamiteuse des incendies. Pourquoi assiste-t-on à cette incurie ?

En Algérie, comment se serait conclu une attaque de commissariat de police par des délinquants armés de mortiers pyrotechniques ?

Pourquoi la France a-t-elle perdu la guerre d'Algérie alors qu'elle a tué beaucoup plus d'Algériens qu'elle n'a subi de pertes ? (Question traduite)

Que pensez-vous des Algériens ou plus précisément des Berbères après l'incident d'hier ?

La France doit-elle s'excuser pour son passé colonial, comme le demande l'Algérie ?

Macron a-t-il raison de s'excuser (encore) envers les harkis, en proposant des indemnités, alors que l'indépendance de l'Algérie date de près de 60 ans et qu'aucun de ses prédécesseurs n'était intervenu ?

Pourquoi l'Algérie qualifie-t-elle la France de « faillite mémorielle » ?

La France est-elle tenue de remettre ses archives à l'Algérie qui les réclame ? Comment l'Algérie pourrait-elle s'en servir ?

Pourquoi l'Algérie est devenue une poubelle après le départ des coopérants ?

Est-il vrai que le gouvernement Algérien, comme l'en accuse le gouvernement Français, refuse d'accueillir certains de ses propres citoyens quand ils sont expulsés depuis la France ?

Qu'est-ce qui empêche des pays comme l'Algérie et le Maroc à se développer ?

Pourquoi les responsables algériens n'admettent pas et ne veulent pas reconnaître que l'Algérie est une création française ?

Pourquoi la France ne demande-t-elle pas pardon au peuple algérien pour les horreurs commises en son nom durant sa colonisation brutale de l'Algérie alors que le roi des Belges vient de présenter ses excuses aux Congolais pour des faits similaires ?

Pour quelle raison les "Algériens autochtones" avaient-ils un statut de "sous-citoyens" sous le régime de l'Algérie française ?

La France devrait-elle soutenir l'indépendance de la Kabylie ?

Laurent N J'ai eu plusieurs vies 27 juil.

Cela serait un bon moyen de mettre la pression sur l'Algérie. Par exemple pour qu'elle cesse de faire des leçons de morale à ses voisins, pour l'obliger à reprendre ses migrants illégaux, ou encore en contrepoint de son soutien au Polisario… Mettre la pression quoi !

Et également mettre enfin l'Algérie devant ses propres problèmes et responsabilités. Comme n'importe quel autre pays.

Car le dossier kabyle est (très) lourd : tentatives d'arabisation forcée, de ré-islamisation forcée, persécutions politiques et administratives, éradication culturelle voire même racisme anti-amazighe… et la situation ne fait qu'empirer depuis les révoltes de 2001 (le Printemps Noir).

Les Kabylies, petite et grande, ne sont pas une simple région de l'Algérie, elles en sont le cœur historique, foyer de toutes les révoltes contre les envahisseurs, arabes, turcs, français. Avec les autres peuples berbères, chaouis, mzabites, touaregs ils sont les vrais autochtones de l'Algérie. Mal ou peu islamisés, ils conservent peu ou prou de très nombreux rites et modes de vie chrétiens.

L'irrédentisme kabyle (différent de l'indépendantisme) doit être soutenu par la France. Au nom du respect des identités.

Vive la Kabylie et vive la France

Questions similaires

À quoi joue le Maroc en soutenant le Mouvement pour l'autodétermination de la Kabylie ?

Quelles personnes en France n'ont toujours pas digéré l'indépendance de l'Algérie ?

Pensez-vous qu'à terme la Kabylie finira par obtenir son indépendance du reste de l'Algérie ?

La Kabylie pourra-t-elle prospérer après son indépendance de l'Algérie?

Pensez-vous que la France et l'Algérie pourraient un jour se réconcilier émotionnellement ?

Les pays occidentaux cesseront-ils de soutenir le régime d'Alger suite aux lourdes et graves accusations soulevées par le président du MAK (Mouvement pour l'Autonomie de la Kabylie) lors de sa conférence de presse d'aujourd'hui ?

Avec une volonté commune, la France et Algérie pourraient-elles se réconcilier ?

Le gouvernement Algérien est-il depuis toujours anti Français et si oui, devrions-nous faire de même avec eux ?

Rapport Storra : La France et l'Algérie veulent-elles vraiment se réconcilier ?

Pourquoi il n'y a qu'avec l'Algérie que les relations sont souvent tendues alors que la France a occupé d'autres pays ?

Pourquoi l'Algérie qualifie-t-elle la France de « faillite mémorielle » ?

Pourquoi la France ne reprendrait-elle pas le Liban comme auparavant sous son protectorat ?

Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?

L'Algérie et la France sont-elles en train de se rapprocher ?

Pourquoi les Français sont-ils qualifiés de colonisateurs en Afrique du Nord, alors que le Maghreb fut d'abord colonisé par les Arabes (au détriment des Kabyles)?

Pourquoi les Français pensent-ils que les Maghrébins sont arabes?

Michel Lasbleis Anciennement Chef d'entreprise à la retraite 7 mai

Il se trouve qu'il y a bien longtemps, lors de mon service militaire (en 1974 !!!), mon voisin de chambrée était un Kabyle. Nous avons sympathisé et il m'a longuement expliqué qu'il n'était pas Arabe, bien que musulman et parlant arabe. Bref, c'était (en tout cas à mes yeux) un Kabyle arabisé, dont les parents avaient choisi la France comme lieu de villégiature, bien que leurs ancêtres avaient combattu notre pays avec beaucoup de détermination pendant la colonisation de l'Algérie. De ce fait, je ne trouve pas étonnant que pour bon nombre de Français les Maghrébins sont des Arabes. D'ailleurs, je ne crois pas que cette confusion soit volontaire, ni faite pour provoquer. Suivre Michel Lasbleis

Que pensez-vous des Marocains ?

Lucas Bories Suivre Lieu : Caen, France (2005–aujourd'hui)Mis à jour le 1 an Je les aimes bien et j'ai une opinion positive sur eux. Pourquoi ?

Parce que apparemment,environ 80 pour cent des Marocains ont une opinion positive sur les Français.

Aussi parce pas mal de Marocains parlent le Français.

Et aussi parce que apparemment,la décolonisation se serait relativement bien passé.

Je vais profitez de ce que j’ai écrit pour vous dire pourquoi j’aime le Maroc .

J’aime ce pays parce que:

C’est une monarchie
Son histoire est très riche et longue
Les bâtiments historiques sont magnifiques (Ruines de Sijilmassa par exemple)
Leur mosquées sont belles
Leur armée,l’Armée royale,juste le nom est badass
Leur devise Dieu,la Patrie,le Roi

Bon vous avez compris,j’aime le Maroc et les Marocains

Et Hassan II,quelqu'un d'intelligent et d’intéressant (et en plus il parlait Français,et l'arabe marocain aussi,sans doute)

J'aimerais avoir la double nationalité Franco-Marocaine.

J'aimerais apprendre l'arabe marocain.

Fontaine hommage rappelant les négociations pour l'indépendance du Maroc (Aix-les-Bains)

Questions similaires

Pourquoi les Arabes du Levant se considèrent-ils « plus arabes » que les Maghrébins ?

Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?

Pourquoi les "kabyles" ne se considèrent pas arabes ?

Pourquoi les Français d'origine arabe ne portent-ils jamais de prénom français ?

Pourquoi les femmes maghrébines rejettent les hommes maghrébins ? Pourquoi elles préfèrent se métisser, et pourquoi il est de plus en plus rare de voir des couples maghrébins ?

Les français détestent-ils les maghrébins ?

Pourquoi les Maghrébins sont-ils également appelés des Arabes ?

Pourquoi beaucoup d'Arabes nés en France se sentent-ils plus arabes que français ?

Les maghrébins sont-ils stigmatisés en France ? Si oui, pourquoi ?

Pourquoi les Arabes détestent l'Algérie ?

Les Algériens, Marocains et Tunisiens parlent-ils un arabe assez proche pour se comprendre d'un pays à l'autre ?

Ma fille sera-t-elle considérée comme Maghrébine ou comme Française en France en sachant qu'elle y est née et qu'elle a un prénom français et un nom maghrébin ?

Pourquoi les gens avec des origines étrangères ont-ils des prénoms français sauf les maghrébins ?
Les Maghrébins sont-ils des Arabes ?
Les Français aiment-ils les arabes ?

Pourquoi les Français pensent-ils que les Maghrébins sont arabes?

Celestin Louison Entrepreneur chez Commerce international (2017–aujourd'hui) Mis à jour le 2 déc.

Parce'que.. l'Islam. Depuis quelques années maintenant, les gens deviennent de plus en plus débiles à ce sujet, donc pour eux - "bah c'est tous les mêmes". Un peu comme ces idiots qui disent que les chinois et les japonais se ressemblent tous… Gros malins.

Ma grand-mère est Kabyle, elle ne parle pas l'arabe mais uniquement le français et le kabyle, elle est chrétienne comme beaucoup de familles en Kabylie. Ils ont également leur propre culture et ainsi de suite.

D'ailleurs, petit message à ceux qui parlent de l'Algérie sans avoir lu un seul bouquin sur le sujet pourtant fascinant : En Kabylie les "chefs d'états" et les "Héros de l'histoire" sont très souvent des femmes. Pendant la colonisation Française, le chef de guerre Kabyle, donc celui qui a eu à gérer parmi les plus grandes batailles, était une femme. Que les généraux français qualifiaient à l'époque de tout bonnement incroyable et d'une rare beauté. Quand ça arrivera au Qatar on en reparlera ?

Lalla N'Soumer :

Photo prise sur Wikipédia.

Ou bien Cyria, princesse guerrière Kabyle assez peu connue des français mais qui éclata en moonwalk les légions romaines, les écrits sur elle sont assez badass je trouve :

Représentation prise sur google.

Edit : Au vu des commentaires, je partage donc avec vous la reine Dihya (ou Kahina), qui combattit l'invasion Arabe lors de la conquête des musulmans au Maghreb. Dihya mourut au combat dans les Aurès. Elle est considérée comme une voir LA plus grande icône berbère.

En 2016 sa statue fait l'objet d'un incendie criminel. Les habitants mettent en cause les autorités algériennes pour n'avoir rien fait. Ces criminels sont jusqu'à ce jour non-identifiés. Ce sont de jeunes chaouis révoltés par cet acte qui sans moyens, ont participé à sa restauration. Des militants ont notamment mis en avant plusieurs revendications, en appelant les autorités locales à restaurer la statue grâce à des spécialistes, et en exigeant le changement de la plaque du monument afin d'y ajouter la langue amazighe.

Il n'y pas à rougir d'être originaire du Maghreb, même si le rassemblement des peuples berbères est une construction de la France et d'autres nations occidentales, ces pays regorgent d'histoires incroyables, uniques et de cultures qui n'ont strictement rien avoir avec celle des Arabes.

-

hors sujet:

J'espère que le Hirak aura raison de la dictature dégueulasse du FLN et que les islamistes qui y sont très nombreux seront dégagés à coup de catapulte dans un lieu où ils ne nuiront personne. Comme en Arabie Saoudite ! Quoi que, même eux n'ont pas l'air d'en vouloir, cette hypocrisie j'te jure…

Bref, comme le disent si bien les algériens - "Le crie d'un peuple, le réveil d'une nation".

Photo prise sur google du Hirak avec le slogan. Suivre Celestin Louison

Questions similaires

Si vous avez déjà visité plusieurs pays d'Afrique, quel est le pays qui vous a le plus marqué. Sinon, si vous comptez revenir en Afrique, quel pays irez-vous en premier ?
Aimeriez-vous vivre en Afrique ?
Pourquoi ne dois-je jamais aller en Afrique ?
Y a-t-il des endroits en Afrique qui ressemblent à l'Europe ?
Que trouvez-vous différent en Afrique ?
Si vous deviez vivre dans un pays d'Afrique, lequel choisiriez vous et pourquoi ?
Quel est votre endroit préféré en Afrique ?

Quels pays africains recommanderiez-vous à quelqu'un qui n'est jamais allé en Afrique ?
Dans quel pays d'Afrique fait-il bon vivre ? Où me recommanderiez-vous de m'installer ?
Quel pays aimeriez-vous visiter en Afrique ? Pourquoi ?
Quel pays africain donnerais-tu tout pour habiter ? Pourquoi ?
Si vous pouviez visiter trois pays africains, lesquels seraient-ils ?
Citez cinq (5) pays d'Afrique que vous avez ou voudriez visiter ?
Quelles sont les choses à savoir absolument avant de partir en Afrique ?
Quelles sont les villes les plus étonnantes d'Afrique ?

Comment identifier la meilleure partie du fait d'être marocain ? (How do you identify the best part of being Moroccan?)

Jerome Cohen Mon père était de Casablanca, ma mère fait un super tajine!
Traducteur · 1 an

Kenza Al Alami
Lieu : Morocco Cette réponse peut ne pas être une traduction fidèle de la réponse de Kenza Al Alami dans Quora en anglais :

Être marocain, c'est comme être un enfant difficile, mais si bon et si gentil. Les Marocains sont tellement attachés à leurs racines.

La culture et les traditions sont primordiales dans notre vie quotidienne. Une femme peut porter les plus beaux vêtements de haute couture, mais elle ne renonce jamais à son caftan ou à sa djellaba.

Le caftan marocain :

Être marocain, c'est s'ouvrir sur le monde et la nouveauté tout en restant attaché à la culture. Les goûts culinaires par exemple, bien que nous appréciions la pizza, les sandwiches hamburger et ainsi de suite, mais lorsqu'un plat de couscous est mis sur la table, tout le reste se voit repoussé).

Le couscous marocain :

On peut dire la même chose de la décoration des maisons. Moi, en tant que Marocain, je ne trouve pas les canapés confortables ! J'ai besoin de mon style marocain.

Salon marocain :

Avec au centre, le tapis typique de Rabati que l'on trouve dans presque toutes les maisons.

On peut constater la même chose en ce qui concerne la musique, l'art, l'architecture, les blagues et ainsi de suite...

La tradition est partout, la façon dont un mariage est célébré, les baptêmes, les funérailles, les fêtes religieuses... il existe un code national. Une langue que nous comprenons, des signes que nous comprenons, des vibrations que nous nous envoyons les uns aux autres. C'est tout cela et plus encore la meilleure partie d'être marocain.

Et Nous sommes tous d'accord sur ce point aussi... le Sahara est marocain. :)

Questions similaires

Qu'est-ce que les Marocains ont apporté au monde que d'autres n'ont pas apporté ?
Pourquoi les Français regardent les Marocains avec mépris ?
Qu'est-ce qui vous dérange à propos de la culture marocaine ?
Que pensez-vous des Marocains ?
Qu'est-ce qui manque le plus aux Marocains quand ils vont à l'étranger ?
Que pensent les Marocains nés en Europe du Maroc ?
Que ne doit-on absolument pas faire au Maroc ?
Maroc : que pensent les citoyens marocains ordinaires du roi du Maroc ?
Pourquoi les Marocains fuient-ils le Maroc ?
Est-ce que les Berbères marocains sont noirs ?
Quelle est la meilleure chose à rapporter du Maroc ?
Pourquoi les Marocains ne supportent pas les Algériens, qui ont pourtant une culture similaire ?
Que pensent les non marocains des femmes marocaines ?
Pourquoi les hommes maghrébins sont-ils durs avec les maghrébines ?
Pourquoi beaucoup de Françaises aiment les rebeux et surtout les marocains ?

Quelle différence y a-t-il entre les kabyles et les almoravides ?

Aslan Vartaia Suivre A étudié Anthropologie à Université de la SorbonneMis à jour le 2 ans Réponse originale : Quelle difference y'a t-il entre les kabyles et les almoravides ?

Un peu d'histoire avant de donner une réponse,histoire de placer le contexte
Les Kabyles modernes et les Almoravides faisaient partie de la même confédération berbère,les Sanhadja,en dépit de la grande distance les séparant,les Almoravides étaient berbères,ils venaient de la région de l'Adrar dans l'actuelle Mauritanie et ils nomadisaient du Maroc jusqu'au commencement de l'Afrique de l'ouest(Sénégal/Ghana),les Almoravides étaient des musulmans puritains,ils étaient de la tribu berbère des Lemtuna,leur chef,Yahya Ibn Omar fit appel à Abdellah ben Yassin,un imam d'obédience malikite et rigoriste dans le but de convertir sa tribu qui n'avait été que superficiellement converti à l'islam durant le 8e siècle,Yahya Ibn Omar parvint rapidement à unir tout les Zenaga (Sanhadja) et à raviver la grande confédération Zenaga de l'ouest qui unit nombre de tribus berbères,fraîchement convertis,les Sanhadja/Almoravides se lancèrent dans la conquête de l'Afrique de l'Ouest,et de l'empire du Ghana,qui étaient la source des routes trans-sahariennes,les Almoravides avaient une morale militaire exemplaire,leur troupes étaient rigoureusement organisées,le coeur de leur armée consistait en une infanterie organisée,équipée de javelots et de longues lances,similaires aux phalanges macédoniennes,et ils étaient soutenu par une importante cavalerie sur leurs flancs,la cavalerie étant le pilier militaire millénaire des Berbères,un officier était chargé d'orienter un grand drapeau faisant face à l'armée,indiquant à celle-ci les mouvements à faire avec une grande rapidité,l'armée Almoravide ne poursuivait pas ceux qui la fuyait,et elle ne reculait jamais,même en étant désavantagée,ses soldats préférant la mort à la défaite,les Almoravides se répandirent à toute vitesse dans toute les directions,si bien que qu'en quelques années,ils contrôlèrent un territoire immense,et balayèrent toute opposition sur leur chemin

Remarquez que les Almoravides se sont arrêtés au cœur de l'Algérie actuelle,car les dynasties régnant sur ces territoires (actuel Tunisie et la moitié de l'Algérie),les Zirides et leurs cousins Banu Hammad,étaient deux dynasties d'origine Zenaga,ou Sanhadja,ils étaient donc parents des Almoravides et ceux-ci ne les attaquèrent donc pas,limitant leur conquête à une partie de l'ouest Algérien.

Culturellement parlant,les Almoravides étaient d'authentiques Berbères du désert,leur plus proche équivalent aujourd'hui sont quelques tribus en Mauritanie,les Touaregs,et les habitants du Sahara occidental,les Almoravides manifestaient cette culture/identité berbère dans leur manière de gouverner,le premier véritable émir Almoravide,fondateur de Marrakech était Youssef ben Tachfine dit Youssef ben Tachfine as-Sanhaji,en arabe يوسف بن تاشفين الصنهاجي ناصر الدين بن تالاكاكين,ou en berbère ⵢⵓⵙⵎ ⴱⵏ ⵜⴰⵛⴼⵉⵏ ⵓ ⵜⴰⵍⴰⴽⴰⴽⵉⵏ ⴰⵣⵏⴰⴳ Yusef u Tacfin u Talakakin Aznag

Youssef ben Tachfine épousa Zaynab el-Nafzaouia,qui était la fille d'un riche marchand de Kairouan (Tunisie),Zaynab était également berbère,comme son nom l'indique,elle faisait partie de la tribu berbère zénète Nefzaoua,dont les descendants en Libye porte toujours ce nom,les berbères du Djebel Nefoussa en Libye :

Zaynab était réputée être une des plus belles femmes de son temps,elle ne compensait sa beauté que par sa grande intelligence,elle épousa Youssef Ibn Tachfine en 1071,qui avait 60 ans à l'époque,et elle n'avait que la trentaine,mais leur relation relevait du grand amour,Zaynab devint la conseillère la plus influente de l'émir,et le poussa à étirer ses frontières dans toutes l'Afrique du Nord,elle fut appelée " Malika ",titre très rare et très honorifique dans le monde arabo-musulman,signifiant reine,elle fut même appelé " al-qa'ima bi mulkihi ",littéralement,celle qui s'occupe du royaume de son mari,elle négocia à la place de Youssef,son sens diplomatique et son intelligence aiguë lui vaut la réputation de magicienne et de résolveuse de problème,son mari partant régulièrement en campagne,elle s'affaira à dessiner les plans de leur nouvelle capitale,Marrakesh,que Youssef fera construire conformément aux plans de son épouse dès son retour,c'est donc une femme qui posa les fondations de l'émirat

Almoravide,la première mention de Zaynab dans les livres d'histoire vient du texte Kitab al-Istibsar,qui date du 12e siècle, qui affirme :

" À son époque, aucune n'était plus belle ou intelligente ou mordante ... elle était mariée à Youssef, qui a construit Marrakech pour elle"

Ce particularisme,jamais vu dans le monde arabo-musulman,est la conséquence direct de l'héritage berbère inhérent aux Almoravides,qui sont issus d'une société presque matriarcale,à l'instar des Touaregs et des autres Zenaga,les hommes Lemtuna (Almoravides),se voilaient,mais leurs femmes non,ces même femmes étaient pleinement en charge du campement ou de la maison de leur famille quand les hommes partaient en guerre ou à la chasse,elles héritaient de la même manière que les hommes,et c'était également les femmes qui choisissaient leurs maris,pas l'inverse,les hommes étaient presque constamment voilés et étaient très laconiques,ce qu'ils considéraient comme noble,cette culture matriarcale a eu une influence direct sur les Almoravides,les femmes nobles recevaient une haute éducation,l'histoire nous donne l'exemple d'au moins deux femmes médecins à cette époque,toutes les femmes nobles étaient autorisées à participer aux affaires politiques,et la dernière princesse Almoravide,Fannu,pris même les armes contre les Almohades qui faisait le siège de son palais,habillée en armure comme un homme,les soldats Almohades ne virent qu'elle était une femme qu'après sa mort et furent étonnés par sa bravoure et sa témérité,qui coutèrent la vie à plusieurs de leurs compagnons.

Les Almohades d'ailleurs,une autre dynastie berbère utilisèrent cette culture matriarcale,dans laquelle les hommes se voilaient et non les femmes,comme arme pour dénigrer les Almoravides,et plus tard,les renverser.

Pour résumer,la principale différence entre les Kabyles et les Almoravides,c'était peut être leur couleur de peau ou leur apparence,les Almoravides devaient être un peu plus brun que les Kabyles,du à leur vie dans le désert,culturellement parlant,les deux groupes étaient très proches,mais leurs modes de vie étaient très différents aussi,les Kabyles ont toujours été sédentaires ou semi-sédentaires,les Lemtuna qui vivaient dans un vaste désert n'avait pas les mêmes opportunités,et vivaient du commerce trans-saharien et nomadisaient sur de vastes territoires, la désertification progressive du Sahara les poussant à migrer vers le nord et le sud. Suivre Aslan Vartaia

Questions similaires

Pourquoi les Berbères ressemblent-ils aux Arabes alors que génétiquement il s'agit de 2 populations bien différentes ?
Pourquoi les "kabyles" ne se considèrent pas arabes ?
Vu par les français : est ce que les kabyles et les arabes "c'est pareil" ou c'est pas pareil" ?
Quelle est l'origine ethnique (dont beaucoup sont blonds aux yeux bleus) de la population kabyle de Grande-Kabylie, en Algérie ?
Qest le lien entre Kabyles et Bretons ?
Que connaissez-vous de la culture kabyle ? De la langue kabyle ?

Quel est la difference entre Kabyle et Berbere ?
Pourquoi Abdelmoumen(calife des Almohades) est-il revendiqué comme Marocain par les Marocains, alors qu'il venait d'une tribu localisée en Algérie actuelle ?
Pourquoi mentionnons-nous toujours les Kabyles lorsque nous évoquons des droits culturels des minorités berbères ? Alors, la minorité berbérophone au Maroc est beaucoup plus représentée qu'en Algérie avec les Chlouh, les Rifan et les Zayan.
Pourquoi y a-t-il tant de haine entre les Kabyles et les Arabes en France ?
Les kabyles sont-ils arabes ?
Pourquoi ce complexe de supériorité des Kabyles envers les autres Algériens en France ?
Pourquoi le Maroc implante d'immenses champs de mines antipersonnelle au Sahara occidental sur un territoire qu'il prétend pourtant être le sien, et pourquoi la communauté internationale laisse faire ?!
Les Kabyles sont-ils des descendants de peuples nordiques ?
Les Maghrébins sont-ils des Arabes ?

Pourquoi l'état français ignore son histoire de colonialisme ?

Philippe Beaulieu CitoyenMis à jour le 2 ans

Mon fils, actuellement en 4ème, étudie depuis quelques semaines le colonialisme européen et français depuis le XVème siècle, et ses cours présentent les choses sous un jour loin d'être favorable pour la France… Partant du principe que les programmes d'histoire sont validés par une des institutions de l'état français, l'Education nationale, j'ai du mal à voir où il ignorerait son histoire coloniale. Mais bon, depuis quelques temps, on a vu fleurir ce genre de questions tendancieuses sur Quora ou les réseaux sociaux où par inculture ou par esprit partisan, certains veulent faire croire que la France occulterait son passé colonial. Suivre Philippe Beaulieu

Questions similaires

Est-ce que la France s'est excusée pour son passé colonial ?
Que pensez-vous de l'affirmation de Anasse Kazib « L'Histoire de la France s'est fondée sur le colonialisme et l'impérialisme »?
Quels empires/puissances coloniales ont commis le plus grand nombre d'atrocités dans l'histoire, et pourquoi ?
Que pense le peuple français de la surexploitation des ex colonies par la France ?
Emmanuel Macron veut-il rétablir l'empire colonial français ?
La France a-t-elle encore un pouvoir sur ses anciennes colonies ?
Pourquoi la France a-t-elle du mal à regarder son histoire coloniale en face ?

Quelles sont les colonies actuelles de France ?
Pourquoi est-ce que le monde ne dit rien sur le colonialisme économique imposé à l'Afrique par la France ?
La France doit-elle s'excuser pour son passé colonial, comme le demande l'Algérie ?
Quels ont été les avantages du colonialisme français ?
Pourquoi la France n'a-t-elle pas comme toutes ses colonies viré tous les Français de chez elle ?
Pourquoi la France a tant de mal avec l'intégration ?
La France doit-elle s'excuser perpétuellement pour avoir eu des colonies en Afrique ?
Est-ce que la France a été colonisée ?

Le Sahara occidental est-il marocain ?

Adil El Nhayli Suivre

D'un point de vue historique et factuel, oui, le Sahara Occidental est marocain. Du point de vue du droit international, non. Il s'agit d'un territoire non-autonome, et sa souveraineté n'est pas reconnue par les Nations-Unis.

Il ne faut pas oublier que ce qu'on appelle le droit international n'est pas une loi divine, descendue du ciel et se voulant garante de la justice pour tous les peuples de la terre. La cour internationale de justice ainsi que les Nations Unies sont le fruit des puissances occidentales. Personne n'a demandé l'avis des peuples africains et asiatiques pour ses valeurs, ses critères et sa mise en place. Aussi, le principe d'auto-determination des peuples est quelque chose que l'impérialisme à souvent utiliser pour diviser des pays. C'est le cas avec l'Ethiopie et l'Erythrée, par exemple, ou le Soudan. On ne va jamais, par exemple, forcer l'Espagne a organiser un référendum pour la Catalogne, la France pour la Corse, le Canada pour le Québec ou l'Inde avec le Cachemire, ou même la Russie avec la Tchétchénie, même si des revendications séparatistes ont clairement été mises en avant.
Pour comprendre la situation du Sahara Occidental, il faut comprendre déja qui sont les Sahraouis, ce "peuple" que les médias occidentaux présentent comme les Palestiniens du Maghreb. Je met sahraouis en italique, car il s'agit d'un concept nébuleux.

Normalement, les Sahraouis sont les populations nomades, semi-nomades et sédentaires du désert du Sahara, qui va de l'Atlantique jusqu'à la Mer Rouge. Concrètement, les Touaregs, vivant au Mali, Niger, Algérie, Burkina Faso, sont des Sahraouis. Les habitants de Djanet, en Algérie, sont des Sahraouis (voir la vidéo ci-dessous). Les Tobous, nomades vivant dans le Sahara, au Tchad, au Soudan, au Niger et en Libye, sont aussi des Sahraouis.

Dans un contexte marocain, les Sahraouis sont les populations nomades, semi-nomades et sédentaires qui vivent dans les régions sahariennes (qui ne sont pas toutes dans le Sahara occidental, comme par exemple la région de Goulmime Oued-Noun, ou la région du Draa-Tafilalet), ou qui se sont sédentarisés dans les zones plus au Nord. Une personne de Ouarzazate vous dira qu'elle est sahraoui. Une personne de Mhimade El Ghizlane vous dira qu'elle est sahraoui. Une personne de Zagora vous dira qu'elle est sahraoui. Pourtant, aucune de ces régions ne sont dans le Sahara occidental.

Un sahraoui de Merzouga, dans la région du Draa-Tafilalet.

Dans le contexte du Polisario, les sahraouis sont les populations arabo-berbères de l'ouest du Sahara. Ces tribus parlent un dialecte arabe spécifique qui s'appelle l'arabe hassani. Cette population est appelée par les populations subsahariennes "baïdanes" (qui veut dire blanc en arabe), ou "Maures blancs". Car ce sont des populations qui côtoyaient le plus les populations subsahariennes, les autres "blancs" (comprendre ici maghrébins) vivaient plus au nord du continent. Ces tribus arabophones étaient nomades sur un espace qui correspond au sud du Maroc hors Sahara-Occidental, au Sahara Occidental, au sud-Ouest de l'Algérie, au Nord de la Mauritanie et au Nord du Mali. Le Polisario réclame le Sahara occidental comme territoire pour fonder un pays "sahraoui" pour les sympatisants du Polisario, qui ne sont pas tous originaires du Sahara occidental.

Par exemple, un des porte-parole du Polisario, Oubi Bouchraya Bachir, est Mauritanien, né en 1970 à Zouirate, quand le Sahara Occidental était un territoire espagnol. Il n'est pas donc pas originaire du Sahara Occidental, et ne pourrait pas voter pour le référendum, si référendum il y'a.

Pour l'ONU, le peuple sahraoui sont les habitants du Sahara Occidental pendant la colonisation espagnol. Ils étaient au nombre de 72 370 exactement (voici le décompte exacte du recensement fait par les Espagnols en 1974). Ce sont donc ces 72 000 personnes, et leurs descendants, qui sont considérés par l'ONU comme un peuple, et qui pourraient être amenés à voter dans un référendum.

Données relatives au recensement espagnol de 1974*

TRIBU	TOTAL RECENSES
Rguibat Charg	19819
Rguibat Sahel	17678
Izarguiene	7852
Ait Lahsen	3478
Laaroussiene	2801
Oulad Dlim	5050
Oulad Tidrarin	4682
Tribus du Nord	3331
Chorfa	4502
Tribus du Sud	2320
Originaire du Sahara	857
TOTAL	72370

Dans un contexte marocain, on parle donc des tribus de Saqia El Hamra et de Wadi Dahab (les régions du Sahara Occidental), et non de sahraouis, car les sahraouis peuvent inclure des Baïdanes (qui parlent le hassani) des régions hors Sahara Occidental (comme Goulmime, Assa, Tan Tan, Tarfaya), ainsi que des populations sahariennes non hassani-phones comme les berbères de Zagora, les arabes du Tafilalet, les habitants de Ouarzazate.

A noter aussi, que les tribus de Saqia El Hamra et de Wadi Dahab ne vivaient pas exclusivement dans le Sahara occidentale. Une des tribus du Sahara occidental, les Ouled Dlims, sont trés présents dans les régions de Marrakech, El Jadida, Sidi Kacem et Rabat, car leurs ancêtres ont reçus des terres de la part des sultans. Ils sont aussi présents en Mauritanie à Nuadibou. Les tribus chorafas du Sahara Occidentale sont liées aux familles alaouites et idrissides qu'on retrouve beaucoup à Fes, Rabat, Meknes ainsi que vers Rissani. Les Rguibates sont très présents dans les zaouias soufies des régions de Marrakech (les deux présidents de la RASD, Mohammed Abdelaziz et Brahim Ghali, sont nés à Marrakech, bien qu'ils prétendent être nés à Smara, dans le Sahara Occidental). La tribu des Ouled Bou Sbaa (dont je suis moi même originaire) s'est installée dans la région de Chichaoua, entre Marrakech et Essaouira. Donc les tribus du Sahara Occidental sont très intimement imbriquées dans l'ADN du peuple marocain. Sans parler que 4 des dynasties marocaines sont originaires du Sahara (dont la dynastie actuelle).

Donc c'est compliqué… si on prends l'ethnie "sahraouie" défendue par le Polisario (les Baïdanes qui parlent l'arabe hassani), on a des sahraouis marocains dans le Sahara Occidental et en dehors, des mauritaniens, des algériens et des maliens. Seuls les "sahraouis" qui font partis des 74 000 personnes recensés par les Espagnols et leurs descendants sont appelés à choisir leur auto-determination. Hors une grande partie des militants du Polisario ne font pas partie de cette liste, et à l'heure actuelle, l'Algérie (et le Polisario) n'ont toujours pas fait de recensement des personnes dans les camps de Tindouf pour dire qui parmi ces "sahraouis" sont vraiment issus du Sahara occidental. Bref, un vrai merdier.

Maintenant pour parler de l'histoire du Maroc et de la raison pour laquelle le Sahara occidental est marocain historiquement, et pour le peuple marocain. Il faut revenir à l'époque pré-coloniale, à savoir vers la fin du 19ème siécle. A ce moment là, le Royaume du Maroc, aussi appelé l'empire chérifien, était une puissance régionale, et un des seuls états-nations d'Afrique. Regardons ce livre de géopolitique américain datant de 1880.

THE

FOOTPRINTS OF TIME:

AND A COMPLETE

ANALYSIS

OF OUR AMERICAN

SYSTEM OF GOVERNMENT,

WITH A

CONCISE HISTORY OF THE ORIGIN AND PROGRESS OF CIVILIZATION; THE RELATION OF THE OLD WORLD TO THE FREE INSTITUTIONS OF THE NEW; THE ESTABLISHMENT AND GROWTH OF THE ENGLISH COLONIES AND OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

FACTS AND STATISTICS FROM OFFICIAL SOURCES.

BY CHARLES BANCROFT.

R. T. ROOT, PUBLISHER,
BURLINGTON, IOWA.
1880.

732 STATISTICS OF THE WORLD.

COUNTRIES.	Population.	Square miles.	Title of Ruler	Capital.
AFRICA.
Abyssinia	3,000,000	148,392	Emperor	Gondar.
Algeria	2,921,846	259,313	Gov. Gen.	Algiers.
Cape of Good Hope	566,158	200,610	Governor	Cape Town.
Egypt	7,465,000	659,081	Viceroy	Cairo.
Gambia	6,939	21	Adminis.	Bathurst.
Gold Coast	262,000	6,000	Adminis.	Cape C'st Castle.
Lagos	110,000			Lagos.
Liberia	717,500	9,567	President	Monrovia.
Madagascar	5,000,000	232,315	Queen	Antinarivo.
Morocco	2,750,000	672,300	Sultan	Fez.
Natal	193,103	16,150	Lt. Gov.	Port Natal.
Sierra Leone	41,497	468	Governor	Freetown.
St. Helena	6,444	47	Governor	James Town.
Tripoli	750,000	61,760	Bey	Tripoli.
Tunis	2,000,000	50,000	Bey	Tunis.
Zanzibar	380,000	1,600	Sultan	Zanzibar.

Regardons les données concernant l'Afrique. Il n'y avait que 16 entités étatiques en Afrique. Au Maghreb, il y'avait le sultanat du Maroc (dynastie des Alaouites), l'Algérie française (avec un gouverneur général), la Régence ottomane de Tunis (dynastie des Husseinites), et la Régence ottomane de Tripoli (dynastie des Karamanli).

Si vous regardez les données pour le Maroc, on voit que le Maroc avait 2 750 000 habitants, pour un territoire de 672 300 milles carrés. L'Algérie elle, avait 2 921 846 habitants, pour un territoire de 259 313 milles carrés. En gros, le Maroc était presque 3 fois plus grand que l'Algérie. Car l'Algérie à ce moment là n'était que le territoire de la Régence d'Alger, l'entité étatique qui ne concernait que la partie nord de l'Algérie actuelle.

Présides espagnols début XVIe siècle

1516 Avance des corsaires turcs Arudj, Khayr al-Din et leurs successeurs

Forts turcs

Territoires sous contrôle turc permanent

Régions tributaires

L'Algérie actuelle doit son immense territoire au gros morceau de Sahara que la France a découpé en Afrique, et a des territoires qu'elle a pris au Maroc et à la Tunisie ottomane pour les rattacher à l'Algérie.

Donc le Maroc de l'époque pré-coloniale comportait le Maroc actuel, une partie de l'ouest saharien algérien, et une grande partie de la Mauritanie (pays qui, comme vous le voyez dans la liste des entités étatiques africaines, n'existait pas). Le Maroc a donc été dépecé par la France et l'Espagne à plusieurs endroits. La France a pris une grande partie du Maroc impérial et une grande partie du Sahara (Mauritanie), et l'Espagne a pris l'extrême nord, et le Sahara occidental.

Les frontières entre l'Algérie française et le Maroc n'ont été signées qu'en 1845, lors des accords de Lalla Maghnia, mais elles ne concernaient que la partie nord du pays. Les territoires sahariens qui appartenaient au Royaume du Maroc, comme Colomb-Bechar, Adrar, Tindouf, etc… ont été rattachées à l'Algérie française (départements du sud) entre 1902 et 1934 (Tindouf a été difficilement integrée car les tribus Rguibate (une des plus grande tribus du Sahara occidental) ont beaucoup combattus les français.

Pour le Sahara "occidental", le sultan Abderahmane (1822-1859) avait déjà des liens de fidélité qui se sont poursuivis avec son fils Mohammed IV (1859-1873), liens qui liaient le sultan à des notables sahraouis tels que les Reguibat, Chenguit, Ouled Dlim, Tidrarine, Ouled Bou Sbaa, Tekna, Izerguiyen, etc. À Marrakech, le sultan recevait plusieurs actes d'allégeance, notamment celui effectué par le Cadi ou juge Bachir Al Berbouchi Reguibi avant de partir en pèlerinage à la Mecque. Ce juge mettait en œuvre un système juridique coutumier au nom du sultan, exerçant ainsi une autorité en son nom.

En 1887, c'est le sultan Hassan 1er qui nommait encore les caïds des régions du sud. Le grand chef sahraoui Maa El Aynine a été nommé caïd de Tindouf. C'est Hassan 1er qui a financé et armé la resistance dans le Sahara contre les Espagnols, et la resistance s'est faite en son nom. Les khotbas (prêches) dans les mosquées étaient données en son nom aussi.

Et son fils, El Hiba, surnommé le sultan bleu, a rassemblé les tribus sahraouis ainsi que les tribus chleuhs du Sousse pour monter à Marrakech et déclarer le Jihad contre la France en 1912 quand il a appris que le sultan Abdelhahid (le second fils de Hassan 1er) a accepté de signer le traité de Fes en 1912. Pour vous dire que les Sahraouis à cette époque, se sentait comme partie intégrante du Royaume.

Le Petit Journal

ADMINISTRATION
61, RUE LAFAYETTE, 61

Les manuscrits ne sont pas rendus

On s'abonne sans frais dans tous les bureaux de poste

5 CENT. SUPPLÉMENT ILLUSTRÉ 5 CENT.

27me Année — Numéro 1.137

DIMANCHE 1er SEPTEMBRE 1912

ABONNEMENTS

	SIX MOIS	UN AN
SEINE et SEINE-ET-OISE	2 fr.	3 fr. 50
DÉPARTEMENTS	2 fr.	4 fr. »
ÉTRANGER	2 50	6 fr. »

DANS LE SUD MAROCAIN

L'appel aux armes des partisans de Hibba

Source gallica.bnf.fr / Bibliothèque nationale de France

Et même pendant que le Sahara occidental était sous colonisation espagnole, les chefs des tribus sahraouies (à savoir les chefs des tribus de Saqia el Hamra et Wadi Dahab) continuaient à faire la bi3a au Sultan Mohammed 5. Ici tu les vois au palais de Marrakech prêter leur allégeance en 1965 à Mohammed 5. La Bi3a est une tradition qui remonte à l'époque des caliphats. Les chefs de tribus montaient du nord de la Mauritanie actuelle et du Sahara "occidental" à dos de chameau jusqu'à Marrakech pour prêter allégeance.

Pour la Mauritanie, en 1891, un des émirs suzerains de Hassan 1er, l'émir d'Adrar, Ahmad Ould Sidi Ahmed, signe un protectorat avec la France, et le territoire qui correspond à une grosse partie de la Mauritanie actuelle, passe dans les territoires français d'Afrique de l'Ouest en 1905.

La France à toujours su que le Maroc, qui était un protectorat, et donc avait vocation à devenir indépendant un jour (contrairement à l'Algérie qui était considérée comme un département français), voulait récupérer la Mauritanie. Voyant que l'armée de libération nationale marocaine (ALN), ainsi que le mouvement sahraoui pro-Marocain des révolutionnaire des hommes bleus (MOREHOB) commençaient à faire la guerre aux Espagnols dans le Sahara occidental, et que le Maroc a fait la demande auprés de l'ONU en 1963 pour mettre le Sahara occidental dans la liste des territoires à décoloniser, elle s'est empressé de donner l'indépendance à la Mauritanie en 1969. Et malgré cela, plusieurs personnalités mauritaniennes ont quand même prêté allégeance au roi Hassan 2 à Rabat, comme l'ancien député mauritanien à l'Assemblée nationale française, Horma Ould Babana, l'émir du Trarza, Mohammed Fal Ould Oumeir, devenu ministre au Maroc, chargé de la Mauritanie et du Sahara, ou encore le diplomate Dey Ould Sidi Baba.

En parallèle du ALN et du MOREHOB, un autre mouvement de libération sahraoui est né, fondé par Mohammed Bassiri, un professeur marocain d'origine sahraoui (bien que né en dehors du Sahara Occidental). Il fonde avec d'autres étudiants marocains le mouvement pacifique de libération de Saquia El Hamra et de Wadi Dahab (les régions du Sahara occidental) afin de libérer ces territoires et de les rattacher au Maroc indépendant (qui inclut le Maroc français, et le Maroc du nord espagnol). Ils organisaient des sit-ins de protestations dans le Sahara espagnol. Mohammed Bassiri est arrêté en 1970, et liquidé par les autorités espagnoles en prison.

Un autre mouvement sahraoui nait alors dans les universités marocaines, le Front Polisario, qui se veut être une version plus violente que le mouvement de Mohammed Bassiri. Il est composé par des jeunes étudiants sahraouis bercés d'idées anti-impérialistes qui faisaient fureur dans les années 70. Ils appellent à la resistance armée contre l'armée espagnole, et organisent des manifestations au Maroc pour appeler les autorités marocaines à prendre les armes contre l'Espagne. Le gouvernement marocain voit d'un trés mauvais oeuil cette bande de "chahuteurs", surtout que le Maroc a prévu de récupérer le Sahara de maniére diplomatique et politique, en inscrivant, comme je l'ai mentionné plus haut, le Sahara espagnol comme territoire à décolonisé auprés des Nations Unies. Un moment, les membres du Polisario perturbent la tenue d'un festival (moussem) à Tan Tan de manière violente. Le gouverneur les fait arrêter et ils sont severement réprimés. Ils décident alors de chercher des soutiens à l'étranger, chez Boumedienne en Algérie au début, qui ne souhaite pas s'ingérer dans les affaires marocaines, puis chez Kadhafi, qui est lui même un partisan de l'anti-impérialisme, et qui souhaite assoir son influence dans la partie ouest du Maghreb. Kadhafi accepte de les financer et de les arméer à la condition qu'ils demandent le droit d'auto-determination aux Nations Unies. Car il n'a aucun interet à s'impliquer si ce territoire reviens au Maroc. Au début, l'Algérie soutient les revendications du Maroc sur le Sahara occidental, mais c'est avec les accords de Madrid, qui se font sans sa consultation, et sans que l'Algérie puisse bénéficier d'une ouverture sur l'Atlantique, qui feront que l'Algérie sera un féroce défenseur du Polisario, et qu'elle fera tout ce qui est en son pouvoir pour donner du poids à ce mouvement, afin de couper le Maroc de son Sahara.

Le Polisario organise donc des guérillas dans le territoire du Sahara occidental, pendant que le Maroc continue de militer pour que le droit international lui donne le droit de récupérer ce territoire (la Mauritanie en profite, au nom de la proximité culturelle, de réclamer aussi le Sahara occidental (il faut savoir que la minorité ethnique qui dirige la Mauritanie est de la même "ethnie" que les sahraouis, à savoir des arabo-berbères qui parlent l'arabe hassani, la majorité de la population mauritanienne étant subsaharienne). L'ONU reconnait le Polisario comme représentant légitime du "peuple sahraoui" (à savoir des 72 000 personnes du Sahara occidental).

La cour internationale de justice, dans son verdict, estime que, bien que les arguments du Maroc s'entendent et qu'elle reconnait les liens historiques entre le Royaume chérifien et les tribus du Sahara occidental, cela n'empêche pas aux habitants de ce territoire, qui sont du nombre de 72 000, de choisir leur destinée. Car, selon le droit international, qui est, je le repete un droit occidental qui fait fi des spécificités culturelles et organisationelles des pays africains ou asiatiques, ne reconnait pas la Bi'aa (allégeance faite aux rois) comme une preuve de légitimité territoriale. En parallèle, l'Espagne, qui souhaite vraiment mettre un coup de grâce au Maroc, et qui a déja effectué un recenssement, souhaite mettre en place un référundum pour pousser les 72 000 personnes à choisir l'indépendance, afin de conserver un pouvoir sur la région. On parle de 72 000 personnes sur un territoire grand comme la Grande-Bretagne, avec trés peu de terres cultivables.

Craignant de se faire lésée comme ce fut le cas avec la Mauritanie, le roi Hassan 2 lance la "Marche verte" pour garder ce territoire, et appelle 350 000 civils marocains à descendre traverser la frontière, avec seulement le coran et des drapeaux. En marge de cette marche, l'armée marocaine escorte afin de s'assurer que le cortége n'est pas attaqué par le Polisario. Dans le même temps, Hassan 2 a reçu plusieurs actes de "loyauté" de la part de notables sahraouis tels que Khali Henna Ould Errachid (aujourd'hui président du Conseil consultatif marocain), Shaykh Ahmed Ould Bachir (ancien vice-président de l'Assemblée sahraouie et, à l'époque, membre des Cortes de Franco) et, surtout, le notable de la tribu Reguibat (président de l'Assemblée sahraouie et également, à l'époque, membre des Cortes de Franco), Khatri Yumani. Ce dernier, le 6 novembre 1975, a envoyé une lettre au président du Conseil de sécurité de l'ONU, au nom de l'Assemblée, exprimant sa volonté et celle du peuple sahraoui de lier définitivement le sort du Sahara au Royaume du Maroc, considérant ainsi la Bahia comme un devoir de tous les Sahraouis. Une fois le territoire récupéré, Hassan II se rend à M'Hamid El Ghizlane le 11 avril 1981, où il confirme la réalisation de la promesse faite par son défunt père, Mohamed V.

Des affrontements ont lieu entre l'armée marocaine et le Polisario à la frontière algérienne, et de nombreux sympathisants du Polisario se réfugient en Algérie, emmenant avec elles des centaines de familles, certains étant convaincues que l'armée marocaine allait les tuer, et d'autres furent enlevés. Plusieurs familles furent enlevées dans les camps et les villages du Sahara occidental par le Front Polisario, ainsi que dans des villages sahraouis qui étaient situées dans le Maroc hors Sahara occidental, comme Assa. La Marche verte a précipité l'Espagne a signé les accords de Madrid avec le Maroc et la Mauritanie, le Maroc s'assurant le controle de Saqia El Hamra, et la Mauritanie le contrôle de Wadi Dahab. Le Polisario entre en guerre contre la Mauritanie, et cette dernière ne peut pas faire le poids. Elle reconnait l'auto-proclamée République Arabe Sahraouie Démocratique, et se retire de la section de Wadi Dahab, que le Maroc s'empresse aussitôt d'annexer pour ne laisser aucune chance au Polisario de s'installer.

La propriété marocaine du Sahara a également été consolidée, en utilisant la raison historique et la force diplomatique du pays. Sur les 80 pays qui avaient reconnus la RASD, plus que 23 pays la reconnaissent. De plus, une vingtaine de pays, principalement d'Afrique et du Moyen-Orient, reconnaissent la souveraineté marocaine sur le Sahara occidental en ouvrant des consulats dans les villes de Dakhla et de Laayoune. Pour le peuple marocain, la souveraineté sur le Sahara est irréversible. C'est une cause qui est le socle même de l'identité nationale. L'Union Européenne, bien qu'elle ne reconnaisse pas la souveraineté marocaine sur le Sahara occidental, elle fait mine de regarder dans l'autre sens, sauf quand il s'agit de faire pression sur le Maroc pour brader son phosphate ou son poisson. La France est dans ce rapport hypocrite avec le Maroc. Elle soutient de facto les revendications marocaines, mais sans pour autant le déclarer ouvertement. C'est la même chose avec l'Espagne. D'un côté elle est bien contente de pouvoir péchés dans les eaux du Sahara occidental avec l'aval du Maroc, mais en même temps les groupes séparatistes sahraouis sont chez eux en Espagne.

L'Algérie soutient depuis le Polisario corps et âme, et elle a dépensé pour cette cause des milliards de dollars depuis 1975. C'est elle qui arme, finance, entretient le Polisario, entretient sa diplomatie dans les 34 pays qui la reconnaissent RASD. Il faut savoir que la majorité des sahraouis vivent sous souveraineté marocaine. En effet, dans les années 90 et 2000, des milliers de sahraouis qui étaient dans les camps de Tindouf, sont revenus vivre au Maroc. Lors d'un appel lancé par Hassan 2, qui a souhaité passer clore le sujet et a appelé à l'amnistie avec le Polisario aprés le cessez-le-feu de 1991, plusieurs leaders du Polisario ont quitté l'Algérie pour réintégrer le Maroc et sa politique, soutenant la marocanité du Sahara. Parmi eux, des fondateurs du Polisario comme Bachir Dkhil, Lahbib Ayoub ou encore Omar Hadrami.

LE 360
www.le360.ma

De plus, un autre mouvement dissident du Polisario est né : le Mouvement Sahraoui pour la Paix. Ce mouvement souhaite se distancier de la politique belliqueuse du Polisario afin d'étudier la proposition d'autonomie régionale du Maroc, considérée comme la plus crédible pour la paix dans la région.

Donc voila, en espérant que la situation est un peu plus compréhensible pour vous.

Stanislas Kowalski, Marc Laubier, Semar Redouane, Rabah Driche, Tilil Mazigh, Mohammed Grini, Gaya Zerkane, Ciro Bou, Pierre Defriche, Suivre Adil El Nhayli

Questions similaires

Pourquoi l'Algerie s'immisce dans l'affaire du Sahara Occidental ?
Le Sahara occidental sera-t-il à terme définitivement sous la responsabilité marocaine ?
Pourquoi le France ne reconnaît pas que le Sahara « occidental » anciennement colonisé par l'Espagne est marocain ?
Pourquoi le Maroc ne veut-il pas renoncer au Sahara occidental ?
Est-ce que le Sahara occidental est un pays ou une partie du Maroc ?
Où en est la question du Sahara Occidental ?
Quelle est la profondeur du sable du désert du Sahara ? Qu'y a-t-il en dessous ? Y a-t-il une surface plane ?

Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?
Pourquoi la France tarde-t-elle à reconnaître sans ambiguïté, la souveraineté du Maroc sur son Sahara, alors même qu'elle sait, plus que quiconque, que ce territoire lui appartient ?
Quel avenir pour le Sahara Occidental ?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il plus fort que l'Algérie ?
Le Sahara est-il en train de s'agrandir ?
Que pensez-vous des Marocains ?
Quelle est la partie la plus impressionant du Sahara ?
Quels sont les faits sur le Maroc auxquels les étrangers ne croient pas avant d'arriver au Maroc ?

Qu'est-ce que la kafâla ?

Rida Benotmane Suivre Stratège de vie et des affaires, entrepreneur. (2020–aujourd'hui) 2 ans

La Kafala est une institution qui a deux significations juridiques au Maroc.
La première relève du code civil, connu sous Dahir des obligations et contrats. C'est le Titre Dixième qui régit la Kafala au sens du cautionnement. L'article 1117 du Dahir des obligations et contrats définit le cautionnement (ou Kafala qui est un terme de l'arabe classique) comme : « un contrat par lequel une personne s'oblige envers le créancier à satisfaire à l'obligation du débiteur, si celui-ci n'y satisfait pas lui-même ». Pour consulter le régime de la Kafala en droit civil marocain, il faut se référer aux articles 1117 à 1169 du Dahir des Obligations et contrats.

Ensuite, il y a le régime de la Kafala entendue par la prise en charge des enfants abandonnés et qui est une survivance du droit musulman classique, spécialement du rite malékique répandu au Maroc. Cette tradition islamique a été codifiée dans un texte de loi (la loi n° 15-01 relative à la prise en charge des enfants abandonnés). Ce texte a posé les conditions de prise en charge des enfants abandonnés. Le texte a vu le jour sous la pression d'associations de la société civile pour régler le problème des enfants abandonnées au Maroc et dont les chiffres sont relativement inquiétants.

Parmi les choses importantes qu'il faut en retenir, comme le précise l'article 2 de la loi, « la Kafala est l'engagement de prendre en charge la protection, l'éducation et l'entretien d'un enfant abandonné au même titre que le ferait un père pour son enfant. Mais La kafala ne donne pas de droit à la filiation ni à la succession ».

Lorsqu’une personne découvre un enfant abandonné mais qu’il n’a pas les moyens de le prendre en charge, il doit prévenir les autorités locales qui en informent le procureur. Ce dernier place l’enfant dans un centre de protection de l’enfance et vérifie son état civil. Si l’enfant n’en a pas, le procureur ordonne à l’administration de lui en créer.

Pour celles et ceux qui souhaiteraient approfondir le sujet, le système de la kafala des enfants abandonnés est détaillé dans la loi n°15-01.

Si vous avez d’autres interrogations sur des sujets de nature juridique concernant le Maroc, n’hésitez pas à rendre visite à mon site www.commerceacademie.com,section Droit des Affaires.

Au plaisir de vous retrouver bientôt. Suivre Rida Benotmane

Omar Chad anciennement Contremaître (1979 – 2010) Répondu 2 nov. 2019

La kafâla ou recueil légal d’un mineur abandonné ou orphelin, est une mesure de protection de l’enfant reconnue par la sharia, et les conventions internationales, est réglementée dans certains pays de droit musulman, parallèlement la sharia, texte Coranique à l'appui interdit son intégration dans la famille musulmane, dès lors il sera privé d'héritage après la mort de son père adoptif, mais, si son père adoptif est riche, l'adopté (e) peut bénéficier d'un leg n'excédant pas le 1/3 de l'héritage, légué à lui par écrit par son père adoptif, avant de mourir . Donc, la kafâla ne crée pas de lien de filiation au contraire de l’adoption, de sorte que l’enfant au regard du droit musulman (la sharia) ne fait pas partie de la famille qui l’a accueilli.

Questions similaires

Pourquoi l'islam n'assume-t-il pas son caractère panarabique ? Le seul fait de devoir dire les prières en arabe en est la preuve. Après tout, les musulmans francophones ne disent-ils pas Allah au lieu de Dieu ?
Qu'est-ce que les nasheeds ?
Qu'est-ce que la Nakba ?
Qu'est-ce qu'une fatwa ?
Que signifie "sah" ?
Qu'est-ce que ça veut dire "دوقم" en Arabe Algérien ?
Qu'est-ce qui empêche des pays comme l'Algérie et le Maroc à se développer ?
Qu'est-ce que les Arabes ont apporté au monde ?
Qu’est-ce que la Syrah ?
Qu'est-ce que "al itqan" en islam ?

Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?

Nathalie Suivre a plus d'un livre dans son sacdim.

Les marocains sont marqués par la haute montagne tandis que les algériens sont méditerranéens. L'Algérie a vécu sous toutes les républiques françaises (sauf la première) jusqu'à ce que les algériens ont pris les armes contre la France et ont créé une république révolutionnaire. Les marocains en revanche ont pris fait et cause pour leur sultan humilié puis exilé reconduisant leur allégeance ancienne au trône alaouite.

La Tunisie (ou pays de Tunis), qui se dessinera comme tel à l'époque de la domination ottomane, répond à l'ancien territoire de Carthage. La domination française favorisera là aussi l'émergence d'un mouvement nationaliste.

Questions similaires

Pourquoi les français préfèrent-ils aller en Tunisie ou au Maroc plutôt qu'en Algérie ?

Pourquoi les Berbères ressemblent-ils aux Arabes alors que génétiquement il s'agit de 2 populations bien différentes ?

Pourquoi les Berbères ne se rebellent-ils pas contre les musulmans et ne suivent-ils pas leurs anciens modes de vie et croyances ? Pourquoi préfèrent-ils rester musulmans ?

Pourquoi les Arabes détestent l'Algérie ?

Pourquoi les Français pensent-ils que les Maghrébins sont arabes?

Les Algériens, Marocains et Tunisiens parlent-ils un arabe assez proche pour se comprendre d'un pays à l'autre ?

Les Algériens sont-ils des Arabes ou des Berbères, ou un brassage entre les deux ?

Pourquoi parle-t-on presque toujours de la relation France/Algérie et si peu de la colonisation française en Tunisie et au Maroc ?

Pourquoi les Maghrébins sont-ils également appelés des Arabes ?

Pourquoi Abdelmoumen(calife des Almohades) est-il revendiqué comme

Pourquoi les Algériens, au moins ceux en France, parlent si bien le français ?

Alexandre Roswilo Précédent lieu : Afrique (1975–2019)2 ans

C'est des préjugés .

[1]

Il est important de comprendre comme c'est le cas avec l'anglais qu'il y'a des français et non un français .

[2]

Exemple pratique :

Demandez à un Français ce que sait qu'un maquis . Puis demandez à un Ivoirien . Vous serez surpris .

[3]

Les Burkinabés vous parlerons eux dans un contexte précis de Tchapalodrome :

[4]

Un Camerounais dira : "Je suis une élite dans ce village " . Un Français lui dira : "je fais partie de l'élite de ce village ".

[5] (L'élite du village !)

Un Congoloais de Brazza ou de RDC dira : "je suis sapé comme un mannequin " . Un Français dira par contre : "je suis très élégant".

[6]

Les Belges ;

♥ Français ♥	♥ Belge ♥
Soixante-dix	Septante
Quatre-vingt-dix	Nonante
Blanco	Tip-ex
Endive	Chicon
Sucre glace	Sucre impalpable
Scotch	Papier collant
Serviette	Essuie
Poignée	Clinche
Combiné	Cornet
Déchèterie	Parc à conteneur
Polaire	Polar
Semaine banalisée	Blocus
Terminale	Rhéto(rique)
Maire	Bourgmestre
Téléphone portable	GSM
Message/texto	SMS
Stylo-bille	Bic
Avoir du mal	Avoir dur (« J'ai dur… »)
Ne pas avoir du mal	Avoir facile (« J'ai facile… »)
Sopalin	Essuie-tout
Frigidaire	Frigo
Espiègle	Arsouille
Bavarder	Babeler
Bas/collant	Bas-collant
Petite bête (ou araignée)	Bibiche
Gâteau (sec)	Biscuit
Briller	Blinquer
Ventre/nombril	Boudine/Boutroule
Mauvaises herbes	Cruaux
Boucles (cheveux)	Crolles
Orthophoniste	Logopède
Tissu pour la vaisselle	Lavette
Non	Nenni !
Nettoyer	Reloqueter

[7]

Pour les Canadiens :

Mot québécois	Équivalent en Europe
Être plein ou être bourré	Avoir trop mangé
Fesser	Frapper
Flos	Gosses (enfants)
Frais chié	Prétentieux
Froque	Manteau
(Avoir le) Goût (de)	Avoir envie
Innocent	Imbécile
Jaser	Parler, discuter
Niaiser	Se moquer de
Party	Fête
Pentoute	Pas du tout
Peinturer	Peindre
Présentement	Actuellement, en ce moment
Quessé	Qu'est-ce que
Sacoche	Sac à main pour femmes
Secousse	Durée indéterminée
Stationnement	Parking
Tsé	Tu sais

[8]

Québécois	Français
Tabernak	Putin, fais chier
Plotte	Prostitué
Je m'en calice	Je m'en fous
Viarge	Vierge
Dans le fond	En gros
Brisé	Cassé
Une pièce	Un dollars
Sacrer	Jurer
Chum	Mec
Blonde	Petite copine
Laite	Moche
Fif	Gai
Niaiseux	Imbécile
Tanto	Avant ou après
Gosse	Couilles
Breuvage	Boisson
Ca va tu ?	Est-ce que ca va ?

[9]

Les peuples ne parlent pas le français de la même manière . Chaque peuple à ses expressions que les autres ne comprennent pas ou mal et c'est ça qui fait sa particularité mieux son français .

Il existe un anglais américain autant qu'un anglais britannique , indien ou nigérian avec des expressions ou locutions propres à chacun .

American vs. British Grammatical Differences

take a vacation	↔	go on holiday go downtown	↔	visit a city centre
take a bath	↔	have a bath
raise a child	↔	bring up a child
I demanded that he apologize.	↔	I demanded that he should apologise.
We insisted that something be done about the problem.	↔	We insisted that something should be done about the problem.
in the hospital	↔	in hospital
Sam just went home.	↔	Sam's just gone home.

ESLBUZZ

[10]

C'est le cas avec le français avec les dérivées belge , canadien , sénégalais, ivoirien , congolais , camerounais , tunisien et d'autres .

Vouloir parler le français comme un Français ne signifie pas bien le parler . Mieux le parler comme un Canadien ou un Congolais ne veut pas dire qu'on le parle mal .

Notes de bas de page
[1] Image on institutfrancais-suede.com
[2] Image on radiofrance.fr
[3] Image on pinimg.com
[4] Image on wordpress.com
[5] Image on quoracdn.net
[6] Image on arte.tv
[7] Image on blogspot.com
[8] Image on pinimg.com
[9] Image on blogspot.com
[10] Image on pinimg.com

Pourquoi ne reste-t-il que peu ou pas de vestiges des royaumes berbères préislamiques du Maroc et d'Afrique du Nord ?

Jerome Cohen Suivre Mon père était de Casablanca, ma mère fait un super tajine!Traducteur Mis à jour le 1 an

Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan Précédent lieu : Meknès, Morocco (1996–0)MOROCCO
Cette réponse peut ne pas être une traduction fidèle de la réponse de Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan dans Quora en anglais :

Why is there little to no built heritage left from pre-Islamic Berber kingdoms of Morocco and North Africa?

Juba Zelalsen a écrit une excellente réponse sur l'Algérie où il existe un héritage des royaumes berbères.La plaine côtière du Maroc n'était pas très fertile et souffrait fréquemment de sécheresse, tandis que l'intérieur du pays était composé de montagnes rudes et parfois arides. L'intérieur du pays était composé de montagnes rudes et parfois arides, ce qui rendait la vie difficile à tous ceux qui osaient y habiter.

Les premiers Berbères n'étaient donc pas ce qu'on pourrait appeler "civilisés", c'est pourquoi les Grecs anciens qui ont rencontré les Berbères les ont qualifiés de "barbares". (Bien que ce terme soit également utilisé en grec pour désigner les étrangers, il avait une connotation négative).

Maintenant, bien sûr, le Maroc a un patrimoine qui lui reste, comme je l'ai dit, pas seulement luxueux comme des théâtres ou des arènes, mais des villages. Le Maroc abrite de nombreux anciens villages berbères.

Village berbère dans les montagnes de l'Atlas, leurs cultures en terrasse sont une pratique ancestrale utilisée depuis des millénaires

Les anciens villages en briques de terre crue construits par les anciens Berbères, encore habités aujourd'hui, sont un spectacle très courant. En raison du manque de matériaux de construction, les Berbères utilisaient de la boue séchée pour construire leurs maisons.

Certaines personnes payent même pour y rester !

Vous pourrez trouver une vieille maison en briques de terre cuite à louer sur TripAdvisor

Mais à part cela, il n'existe pas beaucoup de patrimoine car les Berbères n'étaient pas des bâtisseurs.

En fait, la première ville du Maroc a été construite par la dynastie arabe Idriside (leur capitale, Fès). Les anciens théâtres, arènes et autres lieux qui existent au Maroc ont été construits par les Romains.

Ruines d'un ancien temple romain à Volubilis
Suivre Jerome Cohen

Questions similaires

Pourquoi les Berbères ressemblent-ils aux Arabes alors que génétiquement il s'agit de 2 populations bien différentes ?

Pourquoi les Français sont-ils qualifiés de colonisateurs en Afrique du Nord, alors que le Maghreb fut d'abord colonisé par les Arabes (au détriment des Kabyles)?

Les Kabyles sont-ils plus civilisés et laïques que les autres nations nord-africaines ? Et pourquoi ?

Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?

Comment le Califat Omeyyade a-t-il pu conquérir l'actuel Maghreb aussi rapidement ? Y a-t-il eu un manque de résistance locale ou d'organisation ?

Pourquoi la Reconquista espagnole s'est-elle arrêtée à la Méditerranée et n'a-t-elle pas continué en Afrique du Nord ?

Faites-vous partie des gens intéressés par la connaissance de certaines formes d'arabe du Maghreb (daridja algérienne, marocaine, tunisienne) et/ou de berbère (kabyle, chleuh, rifain, chaoui) ? Quelles sont vos motivations ?

Pourquoi les Maghrébins sont-ils également appelés des Arabes ?

Les seules civilisations anciennes avancées d'Afrique se trouvaient en Afrique du Nord, alors qu'il n'y en a eu pratiquement aucune en Afrique subsaharienne. À cause de ça, je commence à détester être noir. Est-ce que c'est mal ?

Si le Maroc est un pays berbère et les berbères sont des blancs, pourquoi une très grande partie des marocains a une peau foncée ?

Pourquoi les Berbères ne se rebellent-ils pas contre les musulmans et ne suivent-ils pas leurs anciens modes de vie et croyances ? Pourquoi préfèrent-ils rester musulmans ?

Qui étaient les Berbères, qui vivaient dans le Nord de l'Afrique, bien avant que les arabes arrivent ?

Que la France ait colonisé l'Algérie, certes, mais est-il exact que les Arabes aient colonisé le Maghreb Berbère et qu'ils l'occupent toujours ?

Hormis l'influence linguistique, qu'ont gardé les Espagnols comme influences berbères et arabes ?

Existe-t-il des sources juives qui étayeraient une appartenance juive de tribus berbères avant l'avènement de l'islam au Maghreb ?

Que sait-on sur la vie du dernier roi maure de Grenade Boabdil après la Reconquista en Espagne ? Qu'a-t-il fait à Fès, au Maroc ? Is anything known about the life of the last Moorish king of Granada Boabdil, ou Mohammed XII de Grenade comme on l'appelle aussi, s'est retiré après sa capitulation du royaume de Grenade dans un manoir qui lui a été offert par les Rois Catholiques (Ferdinand et Isabelle) à Las Alpujarras, une région du royaume de Grenade, entre la montagne et la mer.

Peu après, environ deux ans plus tard, et juste après la mort de sa femme, Boabdil demande aux Rois Catholiques l'autorisation de vendre son domaine de Las Alpujarras et de se rendre à Fès au Maroc où il a de la famille. Les rois catholiques eux-mêmes ont acheté son manoir et ont accordé la permission de se rendre à Fès ainsi qu'à plus de mille serviteurs et amis qui l'accompagnaient.

Dans une lettre adressée au sultan du Maroc, il explique que les raisons de se rendre à Fès étaient de vivre plus près de ses parents ainsi que le fait que la foi en Dieu ne lui permettait pas de résider sous la protection de la mécréance.

Il s'est donc rendu à Melilla, une ville espagnole du Maroc, et de là à Fès où il est mort 40 ans plus tard, en 1533.

Bien que le cimetière où il a été enterré soit connu, il n'y a pas de pierre tombale ni de gravure indiquant son nom ou tout autre signe de son identité. Il semble qu'il ait vécu une vie tranquille, loin de la politique.

Photo de la "musalla", ou ermitage, à Fès où le dernier roi maure de Grenade serait enterré, mais aucune preuve, signe ou écriture claire n'a été trouvée.

Questions similaires

Pourquoi les Ottomans n'ont-ils jamais conquis le Maroc ?

Comment le Maroc a-t-il pu résister face aux envahisseurs espagnols, portugais et arabes ottomans tout au long de son histoire?

Pourquoi les rois portugais n'ont-ils jamais s'approprié de territoire dans les royaumes espagnols ? Qu'est-ce qui les a arrêtés ?

Pourquoi le roi du Maroc est-il relativement faible par rapport aux autres monarques des pays arabes ?

Lors de la régence d'Alger, y a-t-il eu un régent algérien ou étaient-ils tous ottomans ?

Pourquoi les Ottomans n'ont-ils pas envahi le Maroc ?

Qui a été le premier roi ? Comment a-t-il été déclaré roi ?

Hassan II était-il un bon roi du Maroc ?

Que se passe-t-il avec le Maroc et l'Espagne qui se disputent Melilla et Ceuta ? Pourquoi ces territoires sont-ils tombés sous contrôle espagnol et pourquoi le Maroc n'a-t-il pas réussi à les reconquérir ?

Le roi est-il puissant au Maroc ?

La planète Mars sera-t-elle un jour habitable ? Pourrons-nous la coloniser ?

Blandine Poitelm Passionnée d'astronomie depuis l'enfance.30 déc.

Un jour je ne sais pas. Mais actuellement c'est non.
Voila Mars :

J'ai fais une présentation un peu détaillée de Mars là :

Réponse de Blandine Poitel à A quoi ressemble la planète Mars ?

Ce qui rend Mars inhabitable actuellement :

Ce qui rend Mars inhabitable actuellement :

dix fois moins massive que la Terre (merci tonton Jupiter qui lors de sa ballade dans le système solaire aurait phagocyté une bonne partie de la matière qui aurait pu servir à Mars ! Si Mars n'est pas très grande, c'est de la faute à Jupiter températures de surface entre 20 et - 143° ; moyenne : - 63°

Mars (planète) — Wikipédia

pas de noyau actif, donc

- pas de protection magnétique contre les rayonnements de l'espace et du Soleil destructeurs d'adn (entre autres)

- pas de tectonique des plaques pas de couche d'ozone atmosphère ténue et toxique qui s'évapore dans le vide de l'espace pression atmosphèrique environ 170 fois moindre que celle de la

Terre Atmosphère de Mars — Wikipédia ; c'est une moyenne, il y a beaucoup de variations suivant l'altitude, la saison, voire le moment de la journée Les variations de la pression atmosphérique sur Mars sol qui serait toxique : régolithe sur plusieurs mètres et sol traversé (imprégné ?) des radiations de l'espace et du Soleil.

Concernant la régolithe, je suis surprise de voir que des articles en parlent Sol martien — Wikipédia , La composition du sol de Mars enfin découverte et d'autres n'en touchent pas un mot Géologie de Mars — Wikipédia , Régolithe — Wikipédia … donc ? présence d'eau en abondance, sous forme gelée principalement, et de "saumure" tant elle est "salée" par endroits

L'eau sur Mars - Astronomie et Astrophysique
Mars : nouveaux soupçons de la présence de nombreux lacs sous sa surface atmosphère très "poussiéreuse", avec de nombreux tourbillons présents un peu partout et tout le temps, poussières très fines et abrasives tempêtes violentes de poussières abrasives tous les 2/3 ans à l'échelle de la planète parcourant toute la planète

Tempête de poussières sur Mars — Wikipédia pouvant durer des semaines

Mars : une tempête de poussière transforme totalement la planète
Je vois actuellement trois options pour ce qui est de la présence humaine sur Mars :

Mars est un lieu de transit. Pas ou peu de colonies pérennes, conditions de vies difficiles, beaucoup de rotations. Sert pour permettre le transit de vaisseaux qui vont plus loin et ont besoin de se recharger en eau - par ex. C'est celle qui me parait la plus probable, au mieux.

Mars devient une colonie. Par je ne sais quels moyens, nous réussissons soit à rallumer le noyau, soit à créer un champ magnétique artificiel autour de la planète. Cultures hydroponiques, consommation d'algues et d'insectes, adaptation à une vie de confinement avec une terraformation progressive sur des centaines voire des milliers d'années.

Je parle un peu des obstacles à la terraformation de Mars ici :

Réponse de Blandine Poitel à Peut-on terraformer mars ?

Variante du scénario précédent : ce n'est pas Mars que nous adaptons à nous, c'est nous qui nous adaptons à Mars. Ne me demandez pas comment ça serait biologiquement possible de s'adapter au froid, aux rayonnements toxiques, à l'atmosphère ténue, je n'en ai aucune idée !

mais sur Terre on a vu des organismes s'adapter à des conditions qui tueraient la plupart des êtres vivants terrestres … (et je ne parle pas que des bactéries).

Conséquence à ne pas oublier si cette option se met en place : les terriens devenus Martiens parfaitement adaptés ne pourraient plus jamais vivre sur Terre … (comment ça j'ai lu trop de science fiction ? Comment vous savez ça d'abord ?) (si des pros passent dans le coin et que j'ai écris des âneries, je leur serais très reconnaissante de me le dire !)

Mars : une tempête de poussière transforme totalement la planète
Je vois actuellement trois options pour ce qui est de la présence humaine sur Mars :

Mars est un lieu de transit. Pas ou peu de colonies pérennes, conditions de vies difficiles, beaucoup de rotations. Sert pour permettre le transit de vaisseaux qui vont plus loin et ont besoin de se recharger en eau - par ex. C'est celle qui me parait la plus probable, au mieux.

Mars devient une colonie. Par je ne sais quels moyens, nous réussissons soit à rallumer le noyau, soit à créer un champ magnétique artificiel autour de la planète. Cultures hydroponiques, consommation d'algues et d'insectes, adaptation à une vie de confinement avec une terraformation progressive sur des centaines voire des milliers d'années.

Je parle un peu des obstacles à la terraformation de Mars ici :

Réponse de Blandine Poitel à Peut-on terraformer mars ?

Variante du scénario précédent : ce n'est pas Mars que nous adaptons à nous, c'est nous qui nous adaptons à Mars. Ne me demandez pas comment ça serait biologiquement possible de s'adapter au froid, aux rayonnements toxiques, à l'atmosphère ténue, je n'en ai aucune idée ! mais sur Terre on a vu des organismes s'adapter à des conditions qui tueraient la plupart des êtres vivants terrestres … (et je ne parle pas que des bactéries).

Conséquence à ne pas oublier si cette option se met en place : les terriens devenus Martiens parfaitement adaptés ne pourraient plus jamais vivre sur Terre …(comment ça j'ai lu trop de science fiction ? Comment vous savez ça d'abord ?) (si des pros passent dans le coin et que j'ai écris des âneries, je leur serais très reconnaissante de me le dire !)

Questions similaires

Pensez-vous qu'un jour les ex-colonies françaises demanderont des réparations pécuniaires massives à la France pour l'occupation de leurs territoires et avec quelle chance de succès ?

On entend souvent dire que "la France est riche parce qu'elle a pillé/pille encore d'autres pays (notamment ses anciennes colonies). Est-ce cohérent ? La France a-t-elle des atouts qui lui sont propres et lui permettent d'être "au top" malgré tout ?

Pourquoi les Français sont-ils qualifiés de colonisateurs en Afrique du Nord, alors que le Maghreb fut d'abord colonisé par les Arabes (au détriment des Kabyles)?

Il fait jusqu'à -143°C sur Mars mais la NASA a toujours placé cette planète comme candidate a la colonisation, quel était leur plan contre le froid ? Peut-on pratiquer un sport sur Mars ou se balader torse nu en journée quand il peut faire 20 °C ?

François Hollande comme Emmanuel Macron ont reconnu l'injustice et la brutalité de la colonisation française en Algérie. Pourtant, les Algériens semblent toujours attendre plus. Qu'attendent-ils et pourquoi ?

Pourquoi l’Homme cherche-t-il à coloniser Mars ?

Si les Européens n'avaient jamais envahi l'Amerique du Nord, combien de temps aurait-il fallu aux Amérindiens pour développer la technologie moderne ?

Vénus est-elle un meilleur endroit à coloniser que Mars ?

Comment transformer la planète Mars en planète habitable (comme la Terre) ?

Que risque-t-on à coloniser Mars ?

Pourquoi la région du RIF est plus pauvre que les autres régions du Maroc et est-ce que la pauvreté peut expliquer la culture massive du cannabis ?

Michel Verheughe Suivre Lieu : J'ai vécu en Belgique, Espagne et Norvège. (1948–aujourd'hui)dim.

En 1971, j'étais parti pour le Maroc, pour visiter un ami belge qui habitait à Marrakesh. Comme je n'avais jamais fait la route au Maroc, j'avais décidé de voir du pays en passant par les montagnes du Rif, puis par Fez. Mais la route est longue et arrivé dans la montagne je m'arrête dans un café et demande s'il y avait un hotel pour la nuit, dans la région ?
Là un habitant local me propose de passer la nuit chez lui. Je l'en remercie. Sans le savoir j'étais à Tleta Ketama, là où le kif (hashish) se cultive librement.

Le lendemain, je remercie cette personne de m'avoir logé pour la nuit et offert le petit déjeuné, bien que lui n'avait pas mangé car c'était le Ramadan (en décembre, en 1971).

Mais il me demande s'il peut venir avec moi jusqu'à Fez car il avait des affaires a y faire. Bien sûr, j'étais content de pouvoir aider cet homme qui m'avait offert l'hospitalité !

Arrivé à Fez, il descend de la voiture et nous nous disons au-revoir. Je vois qu'il part dans la médina et soudain il se fait chahuter par des gosses qui l'entourent d'une manière menaçante. Je cours vers eux et je dis: "arrêtez !"

L'un des gosses me dit: "Mais enfin ! Ce n'est qu'un sale berbère !"

… quoi ? Et oui, les berbères du Rif ne sont pas très aimés par les arabes.

Petite note, je parlais espagnol avec ce berbère du Rif, et français avec les gosses.

Voici cet homme et deux de ses amis, devant ma voiture, une camionnette 2CV espagnole, à Ketama:

Questions similaires

Qu'est-ce qui empêche des pays comme l'Algérie et le Maroc à se développer ?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il constamment présenté comme un pays arrière ?
Qu'est-ce qui vous dérange à propos de la culture marocaine ?

À quoi joue le Maroc en soutenant le Mouvement pour l'autodétermination de la Kabylie ?

Que pensez-vous des Marocains ?

Si vous avez 15 jours de vacances, les passez-vous à Istanbul en Turquie ou à Essaouira au Maroc ?

Quelles sont les nouveautés en finance au Maroc ?

Pourquoi le royaume enchanté du Maroc condamne-t-il les Rifains au Moyen Âge depuis 1958?

Quelle est la situation économique actuelle au Maroc (2017) ? Suivre Abdelwaheb Hammami Pourquoi autant de migrants mineurs quittent-ils le Maroc ? La situation y est-elle à ce point critique ?

François Hollande comme Emmanuel Macron ont reconnu l'injustice et la brutalité de la colonisation française en Algérie. Pourtant, les Algériens semblent toujours attendre plus. Qu'attendent-ils et pourquoi ?

Joseph Gabriel , B.A Japanese & Spanish, University de Canberra (1985)
Répondu 17 mars 2021

J'en ai marre d'entendre à longueur de journée parler de ces crimes crapuleux conduit par la colonisation, qu'elle soit anglaise, allemande ou française. Les bienfaits de la colonisation sont beaucoup plus grands que les crimes commis par cette colonisation. Bien sûr les crimes demandent compensation, les bienfaits personne en parle. Peut-être faudrait il demander compensation pour les crimes commit par le FLN aussi.

Questions similaires

Pendant la colonisation en Algérie, est-il vrai que la France a octroyé la nationalité française aux indigènes juifs, mais pas au peuple musulman ? Si oui, pourquoi?

Finalement, si l'Algérie était restée française, la France ne serait-elle pas devenu un pays à majorité musulmane ? De manière générale, à quoi ressemblerait la France aujourd'hui si l'Algérie était restée française ?

Pourquoi l'Algérie ne s'excuse-t-elle pas auprès de la France pour sa tentative ratée de colonisation? Que se serait-il passé si les Sarrasins n'avaient pas été arrêtés à Poitiers?

Pourquoi les Français sont-ils qualifiés de colonisateurs en Afrique du Nord, alors que le Maghreb fut d'abord colonisé par les Arabes (au détriment des Kabyles)?

Pourquoi le Vietnam ne s'est-il jamais plaint de la colonisation française contrairement à l'Algérie ?

La France a-t-elle répandu l'analphabétisme en Algérie pendant la colonisation ?

Que la France ait colonisé l'Algérie, certes, mais est-il exact que les Arabes aient colonisé le Maghreb Berbère et qu'ils l'occupent toujours ?

Combien de personnes ont été tuées lors de la colonisation française de l'Algérie ?

La France doit-elle s’excuser pour son passé colonial, comme le demande l’Algérie ?

Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français

Est-ce que la France s'est excusé pour son passé colonial ?

Marc Laubier ancien chargé de coursMis à jour le 1 an Réponse originale : Est-ce que la France s'est excusé pour son passé colonial ?

q : Est-ce que la France s'est excusé pour son passé colonial ?
'est programmé pour le jouroù les arabes décolonisent le Maghreb et le Moyen Orient où les arabes présentent des excuses pour la colonisation en Espagne et en Italie, en Inde,où les arabes, les perses et les kurdes présentent des excuses et des réparations pour le Seyfo , un génocide qui dure de 1830 jusque 1915 où les Turcs présentent des excuses et des réparations pour le génocide arménien de 1915,

Où les pays maghrébins présentent des excuses pour la mise en esclavage des européens et des Américains suite à la piraterie en atlantique et méditerranée durant les 18èm et 19ème siècle où les pays arabes présentent des excuses pour la traite des africains et leur castration sans compter les morts en route où les maliens présentent des excuses pour avoir vendu leurs frères africains aux marchands nantais et bordelais ou les turcs, qui se veulent descendants des ottomans, présentent des excuses pour avoir razzié des enfants chrétiens pour en faire des janissaires convertis de force à l'islam ou les turcs, qui se veulent descendants des ottomans, d'avoir razzié et vendu des filles pour en faire des concubines de harem,
.A J+1 de cette décolonisation (et de celle des poches en Inde conquises au tournant du 7ème et du 8ème siècle), à J+1 de ces demandes de pardon, la France présentera des excuses pour son passé colonial.

Quand on prétend donner des coups de pied au luc des gens, il faut d'abord s'assurer qu'il reste des clous sur ses chaussures.

un autre quorail propose d'allonger la liste

On peut lire

Jacques Marseille, Empire colonial et capitalisme français. Histoire d'un divorce
Daniel Lefeuvre, Chère Algérie 1997 Suivre Marc Laubier

Questions similaires

Croyez-vous que la France devrait présenter ses excuses aux ex-colonies pour les abus du passé colonial, comme le Mexique l'a demandé récemment à l'Espagne ?
Pourquoi la France ne s'est pas encore excusée pour ses crimes durant la guerre d'Algérie ?
Que pense le peuple français de la surexploitation des ex colonies par la France ?
Pourquoi l'état français ignore son histoire de colonialisme ?
Pourquoi la France ne s'excuse-t-elle pas une bonne fois pour toutes pour la colonisation vis à vis de l'Algérie ?
Pourquoi la France n'a-t-elle pas comme toutes ses colonies viré tous les Français de chez elle ?
La France doit-elle s'excuser pour son passé colonial, comme le demande l'Algérie ?
La France doit-elle s'excuser perpétuellement pour avoir eu des colonies en Afrique ?
La France a-t-elle encore un pouvoir sur ses anciennes colonies ?
La colonisation a-t-elle été rentable pour la France ?

La reconnaissance d'Israël par le Maroc va t-elle accentuer les tensions au sein des pays arabes ?

Samir سمير Farid فريد Lieu : Maroc (1977–aujourd'hui)1 an Faut pas se leurrer, les Israëliens n'auront jamais cette reconnaissance tant désirée de la part des peuples arabes, ils savent très bien que la vague de normalisation forcée par le gouvernement de Trump n'a eu d'écho qu'auprès des chefs d'états qui sentent le feu au cul sur leurs chaises depuis l'avènement du printemps arabe, et qui ne veulent pas que l'administration américaine leur tape sur les fesses à cause de l'oppression qu'ils exercent sur leurs peuples.

Au Maroc, c'est le Roi qui a pris la décision, ni le gouvernement, ni le peuple n'ont été consulté avant, le parti au pouvoir, le PJD, a été hué même par ses membres qui ont appelé à une assemblée extraordinaire pour discuter de son sort après la normalisation qualifiée comme trahison aux principes fondamentaux du parti et à la cause palestinienne, cette assemblée a été annulée à la dernière minute du fait que le chef du parti et du gouvernement avait menacé de démissionner.

Voici ce qui arrive aux normalisateurs dans la vraie vie :

Questions similaires

Pourquoi le Maroc a-t-il décidé de normaliser ses relations avec Israël ?
Si les Arabes s'unissent, alors combien de temps Israël survivra-t-il ?
Pourquoi le Maroc a-t-il attaqué l'Espagne en 2002 ?
Pourquoi les Arabes ne peuvent-ils pas vaincre Israël ?
Si les Arabes conquièrent Israël, comment traiteront-ils le peuple ?
Après qu'autant de pays arabes aient établi des relations avec Israël pensez-vous que des pays du Maghreb vont faire la même chose ?
Pourquoi les Arabes préfèrent migrer vers les pays occidentaux plutôt que les pays arabes riches ?
Quelle est la réalité des relations diplomatiques entre le Maroc et Israël ?
Pourquoi les pays arabes critiquent-ils tous Israël alors qu'aucun ne souhaite accepter de réfugiés palestiniens sur leur territoire ?
Quel est le prochain pays à normaliser ses relations avec Israël après le Maroc ?

Que deviendra la France sans ses colonies d'Afrique ?

Anthony Lapeyre Licence en Histoire, Université d'Orléans (Diplôme obtenu en 2000)Mis à jour le 9 mo

Je vais faire mon cynique…
La France a donné l'indépendance aux colonies, protectorat et autres régions de son "empire" dans les années 50-60. Deux exceptions les Comores (1975) et Djibouti (1977) qui avaient le statut de territoire.

Nous avons conservé des relations commerciales fortes avec nos anciens territoires coloniaux jusque dans les années 90. Aujourd'hui ils représentent environ 1% de notre commerce extérieur.

Le Franc CFA ultime relique de ce que l'on a pu appeler la France-Afrique vit ses derniers jours.

En ce qui concerne les matières premières, Total réoriente de plus en plus ses recherches vers des pays d'Afrique anglophone ou lusophone, il en va de même pour Orano (ex Areva).

Alors il reste quoi ? la main d'oeuvre, bon… il existe une foule de pays dont les habitants ne rechigneraient pas à venir travailler en France et qui ne poseraient pas trop de problèmes d'intégration.

Et le tourisme ? j'apprécie beaucoup l'Amérique du Sud ou les Caraïbes on y trouve des pays charmants et très accueillants. En Afrique même, le Maroc, l'Ile Maurice ou les Seychelles sont de super destinations où les habitants préfèrent construire leur avenir que de ressasser leur passé.

Merci de prendre des nouvelles, on se porte pas si mal et je pense que ça ira encore mieux dans quelques années lorsqu'on aura vraiment largué totalement les amarres.

Questions similaires

L'Afrique est-elle pauvre à cause de la colonisation ? Si la colonisation n'avait jamais eu lieu, comment se présenterait l'Afrique ?

La France est-elle prospère à cause de la colonisation ? Si la colonisation n'avait jamais eu lieu, comment se présenterait la France ?

Que dire à quelqu'un qui dit que la France ne serait rien sans l'Afrique ?

Quelle colonie était la plus importante pour la France ?

Pourquoi la France n'a-t-elle pas comme toutes ses colonies viré tous les Français de chez elle ?

La France peut-elle se passer de ses anciennes colonies et être toujours prospère ?

Comment serait l'Afrique d'aujourd'hui si elle n'avait jamais été colonisée ?

Pourquoi les pays colonisés par la France n'arrivent pas à tourner la page comme la France l'a fait envers l'Allemagne ? Pourtant 3 invasions en moins d'un siècle et des millions de morts sont à compter.

Pourquoi est-ce que le monde ne dit rien sur le colonialisme économique imposé à l'Afrique par la France ?

Pourquoi la colonisation a été un mal pour l'Afrique ?

Qu'est-ce qu'on ne voit qu'au Maghreb et pas ailleurs ?

Omar Aissaoui

2 ans
vous étes impartial ! si non vous ne connaissez pas assez le Maroc du moins les Marocains,pour ce ,je vous conseille de prendre beaucoup de temps tout en visitant toutes les régions du Maroc pour émettre vos jugements infondés ! Le Maroc a une Histoire ,un Passé une civilisation ;ce n'est pas une création d'activiste ou d'aventuriers comme vous l'imaginez ou supposez!

Abdelwaheb Hammami

, a étudié à Tunisie
Répondu 2 nov. 2019
Le visiteur de la TUNISIE, le plus petit pays du MAGHREB est ébloui par sa grandeur historique,par la richesse de son patrimoine historique qui la met au premier rang mondial par plusieurs de ses aspects,car on y trouve:

1-LES RUINES DE CARTHAGE

Le premier empire de l'antiquité qui domina le bassin occidental de la Méditerranée de 814 av.jc à 146 av.jc

L'empire de Carthage à son apogée
*Ses navigateurs sont les premiers à atteindre les iles britanniques et les cotes ouest de l'Europe : c'est le PERIPLE D'HIMILCON (500–380 av.JC)

Ireland
(Isola Sacra)
Britain
(Albion)
Cornwall
(Cassiterides)
Brittany
(Oestrymnides)
Gaul
Massalia
Tartessos
Gadir
Lixos
Carthage

*Les premiers à atteindre les cotes ouest la l'Afrique : c'est le PERIPLE D'HANNON (VI ème s.av jc)

La première république de l'histoire de l'humanité

C'est l'avis du célèbre philosophe grec, ARISTOTE (384–322 av.jc) :

Son système politique est loué par Aristote (IVe s. avant J.C.) « Carthage jouit d'une Constitution plus complète que celle des autres États ». Il déclare aussi : « Les Carthaginois […] possèdent des institutions excellentes; et ce qui prouve bien toute la sagesse de leur Constitution, c'est que, malgré la part de pouvoir qu'elle accorde au peuple, on n'a jamais vu à Carthage de changement de gouvernement, et qu'elle n'a eu, chose remarquable, ni émeute, ni tyran »(POLITIQUE,livre 2 chapitre VIII)

2-LES RUINES DE L'AFRICA ROMANA

L'Afrique romaine,c'est la province romaine qui englobait la TUNISIE actuelle ,une partie de la LIBYE actuelle et l'Est de l'ALGERIE actuelle…….C'est elle qui donna son nom au continent :l'AFRIQUE.

Parmi les vestiges les plus brillants de l'époque romaine:

L'amphithéatre d'EL-JEM

Appelé aussi colisée de http://thysdrus.Il date du III ème s. Il n'est dépassé que par le colisée de ROME.

La plus belle collection au monde de mosaiques romaines

Le musée du BARDO(banlieue de TUNIS)est l'un des plus importants musées du bassin méditerranéen et le second musée du continent africain après le musée égyptien du Caire par la richesse de ses collections

. Il retrace l'histoire de la Tunisie sur plusieurs millénaires et à travers plusieurs civilisations par le biais d'une large variété de pièces

archéologiques Le musée rassemble l'une des plus belles et des plus grandes collections de mosaïques romaines du monde grâce aux fouilles entreprises dès le début du XXè siècle sur les différents sites archéologiques du pays dont Carthage, Hadrumète, Dougga ou encore Utique.
Certaines des œuvres exposées n'ont pas d'équivalent, telle la mosaïque « dite de Virgile »

Virgile(poète romain 70–19 av.jc auteur de l'ENEIDE écoutant CLIO (muse et déesse de l'histoire)et MELPOMENE(muse et déesse du chant,de l'harmonie et de la tragédie)

222 Best tunisie mosaique images | Mosaic, Ancient romans, Mosaic art
Un champ de ruines romaines

Ruines anciennes à Tunisie : Découvrez 10 Ruines anciennes à Tunisie - TripAdvisor

3-LES VESTIGES DE L'IFRIQIYA MUSULMANE

C'est en TUNISIE que les arabes ont fondé la première ville KAIROUAN de son vrai nom AL-QAYRAWAN (القيروان) en 670. De là ils ont entrepris l'islamisation de tout le MAGHREB et la conquete de l'ESPAGNE (al-ANDALUS=الاندلس)

La grande mosquée OKBA IBN NAFII

Le style de son minaret (different du style du moyen orient)inspira tous les constructeurs de mosquéés dans le MAGHREB.

La mosquée "Abou Zamaa al-Baloui"

C'est l'un des compagnons du prophète décédé en Ifriqiya en 634 et enterré à Kairouan après sa fondation.

Le mausolée de l'imam souhnoun

SOUHNOUN (776–854) est un célèbre faqih qui a le mérite de propager la doctrine malékite au MAGHREB.

4-LE PAYS DE LA TOLERANCE

Mehrez ibn khalaf

La mosquée Sidi Mehrez à TUNIS.MEHREZ IBN KHALAF est un faqih qui a vécu à TUNIS au XI ème http://siècle.Il a chassé les chiites de leurs demeures et y installa les juifs qui se trouvaient,à l'époque à la périphérie de la ville.

L'ile de Jerba

Elle se trouve à l'extreme sud est de la TUNISIE.Elle est le symbole de la tolérance religieuse.On y trouve un mélange confessionnel explosif sous d'autres cieux :des musulmans sunnites,des musulmans kharigites(actuellement est la religion officielle de l'etat d'Oman) et des juifs qui vivent ensemble en harmonie totale. Ceux-ci y possèdent l'un de leurs hauts lieux religieux dans le monde.Des pelerins du monde entier y affluent chaque année ,c'est la synagogue AL-GHRIBA

Surnommée La Ghriba ("l'étrange","l'étrangère"… en arabe), la synagogue de Djerba est située à 11 km au sud d'Houmt-Souk, la capitale de l'île. C'est une attraction touristique incontournable à Djerba, même si malheureusement, les touristes qui séjournent dans les hôtels clubs ne soupçonnent guère son existence. Il faut dire qu'elle est isolée en rase campagne, loin des plages, au centre de l'île, à 1 kilomètre du village d'Erriadh, l'une des deux bourgades juives de Djerba. L'intérieur orné de bois peints, de mosaïques et de vitraux est tout à fait remarquable. Il faut se déchausser et mettre une kippa. Ce serait la plus vieille synagogue du monde, datant de 586 avant J. C ! Elle fut fondée par des prêtes du temple de Salomon après sa destruction par Nabuchodonosor la même année. Les restes du Temple seraient encore visibles à certains endroits, mais il n'y a aucune preuve de leur véracité. On y voit des rabbins lire des passages de la Thora. Un endroit chargé d'histoire et plein d'émotion, témoignant aussi de la tolérance des Tunisiens. La synagogue de La Ghriba fait l'objet d'un pèlerinage annuel, à l'occasion de la fête juive de Lag Ba'omer (33ème jour de la Pâque juive) qui rassemble chaque année plusieurs milliers de pèlerins.

ENFIN L'UNE DES BEAUTES DE LA TUNISIE EST, ENTRE AUTRES ,SON OLIVERAIE QUI FAIT D'ELLE L'UN DES PRINCIPAUX PRODUCTEURS MONDIAUX D'HUILE D'OLIVE EN CONCURRENCE AVEC L'ESPAGNE ET L'ITALIE

Gérôme Goodman

Questions similaires

Que ne doit-on absolument pas faire au Maroc ?
Qu'est-ce qu'on doit jamais faire si je visite le Maroc ?
Pourquoi les français préfèrent-ils aller en Tunisie ou au Maroc plutôt qu'en Algérie ?
Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?
Quel pays du Maghreb est le plus prometteur ?
En tant que Maghrébin, vous sentez-vous Africain ? Si non, pourquoi ?
Qu'est-ce qui vous dérange à propos de la culture marocaine ?
Pourquoi ceux qu'on appelle des Maghrébins s'appellent ainsi tout en sachant qu'ils sont sur le continent africain ?
Quelles sont les choses qu'on aime au Maroc ?
En tant que non-arabe, quelle partie du monde arabe aimez-vous le mieux, le Maghreb (Algérie, Tunisie, Maroc), le Levant (Égypte, Syrie, Liban, Irak) ou la péninsule arabique (KSA, Émirats arabes unis, Qatar), et pourquoi ?
Qu'est-ce qui manque le plus aux Marocains quand ils vont à l'étranger ?
Quelles sont les grandes différences culturelles entre les pays du Maghreb ?
Pourquoi les Maghrébins sont-ils également appelés des Arabes ?
Les Algériens, Marocains et Tunisiens parlent-ils un arabe assez proche pour se comprendre d'un pays à l'autre ?
Qu'est-ce qui empêche des pays comme l'Algérie et le Maroc à se développer ?
Qu'est-ce qu'on ne voit qu'au Maghreb et pas ailleurs ?

Omar Aissaoui 2 ans

vous étes impartial ! si non vous ne connaissez pas assez le Maroc du moins les Marocains,pour ce ,je vous conseille de prendre beaucoup de temps tout en visitant toutes les régions du Maroc pour émettre vos jugements infondés ! Le Maroc a une Histoire ,un Passé une civilisation ;ce n'est pas une création d'activiste ou d'aventuriers comme vous l'imaginez ou supposez!
Abdelwaheb Hammami , a étudié à Tunisie Répondu 2 nov. 2019

Le visiteur de la TUNISIE, le plus petit pays du MAGHREB est ébloui par sa grandeur historique,par la richesse de son patrimoine historique qui la met au premier rang mondial par plusieurs de ses aspects,car on y trouve:
1-LES RUINES DE CARTHAGE

Le premier empire de l'antiquité qui domina le bassin occidental de la Méditerranée de 814 av.jc à 146 av.jc

L'empire de Carthage à son apogée

*Ses navigateurs sont les premiers à atteindre les iles britanniques et les cotes ouest de l'Europe : c'est le PERIPLE D'HIMILCON (500–380 av.JC)

Ireland
(Isola Sacra)
Britain
(Albion)
Cornwall
(Cassiterides)
Brittany
(Oestrymnides)
Gaul
Massalia
Tartessos
Gadir
Lixos
Carthage

*Les premiers à atteindre les cotes ouest la l'Afrique : c'est le PERIPLE D'HANNON (VI ème s.av jc)

La première république de l'histoire de l'humanité

C'est l'avis du célèbre philosophe grec, ARISTOTE (384–322 av.jc) :

Son système politique est loué par Aristote (IVe s. avant J.C.) « Carthage jouit d'une Constitution plus complète que celle des autres États ». Il déclare aussi : « Les Carthaginois […] possèdent des institutions excellentes; et ce qui prouve bien toute la sagesse de leur Constitution, c'est que, malgré la part de pouvoir qu'elle accorde au peuple, on n'a jamais vu à Carthage de changement de gouvernement, et qu'elle n'a eu, chose remarquable, ni émeute, ni tyran »(POLITIQUE,livre 2 chapitre VIII)

2-LES RUINES DE L'AFRICA ROMANA

L'Afrique romaine,c'est la province romaine qui englobait la TUNISIE actuelle ,une partie de la LIBYE actuelle et l'Est de l'ALGERIE actuelle…….C'est elle qui donna son nom au continent :l'AFRIQUE.

Parmi les vestiges les plus brillants de l'époque romaine:

*L'amphithéatre d'EL-JEM

Appelé aussi colisée de http://thysdrus.Il date du III ème s. Il n'est dépassé que par le colisée de ROME.

La plus belle collection au monde de mosaiques romaines

Le musée du BARDO(banlieue de TUNIS)est l'un des plus importants musées du bassin méditerranéen et le second musée du continent africain après le musée égyptien du Caire par la richesse de ses collections

. Il retrace l'histoire de la Tunisie sur plusieurs millénaires et à travers plusieurs civilisations par le biais d'une large variété de pièces

archéologiques Le musée rassemble l'une des plus belles et des plus grandes collections de mosaïques romaines du monde grâce aux fouilles entreprises dès le début du XXè siècle sur les différents sites archéologiques du pays dont Carthage, Hadrumète, Dougga ou encore Utique.
Certaines des œuvres exposées n'ont pas d'équivalent, telle la mosaïque « dite de Virgile »

Virgile(poète romain 70–19 av.jc auteur de l'ENEIDE écoutant CLIO (muse et déesse de l'histoire)et MELPOMENE(muse et déesse du chant,de l'harmonie et de la tragédie)

222 Best tunisie mosaique images | Mosaic, Ancient romans, Mosaic art
Un champ de ruines romaines

Ruines anciennes à Tunisie : Découvrez 10 Ruines anciennes à Tunisie - TripAdvisor

3-LES VESTIGES DE L'IFRIQIYA MUSULMANE

C'est en TUNISIE que les arabes ont fondé la première ville KAIROUAN de son vrai nom AL-QAYRAWAN (القيروان) en 670. De là ils ont entrepris l'islamisation de tout le MAGHREB et la conquete de l'ESPAGNE (al-ANDALUS=الاندلس)

La grande mosquée OKBA IBN NAFII

Le style de son minaret (different du style du moyen orient)inspira tous les constructeurs de mosquéés dans le MAGHREB.

La mosquée "Abou Zamaa al-Baloui"

C'est l'un des compagnons du prophète décédé en Ifriqiya en 634 et enterré à Kairouan après sa fondation.

Le mausolée de l'imam souhnoun

SOUHNOUN (776–854) est un célèbre faqih qui a le mérite de propager la doctrine malékite au MAGHREB.

4-LE PAYS DE LA TOLERANCE

Mehrez ibn khalaf

La mosquée Sidi Mehrez à TUNIS.MEHREZ IBN KHALAF est un faqih qui a vécu à TUNIS au XI ème http://siècle.Il a chassé les chiites de leurs demeures et y installa les juifs qui se trouvaient,à l'époque à la périphérie de la ville.

L'ile de Jerba

Elle se trouve à l'extreme sud est de la TUNISIE.Elle est le symbole de la tolérance religieuse.On y trouve un mélange confessionnel explosif sous d'autres cieux :des musulmans sunnites,des musulmans kharigites(actuellement est la religion officielle de l'etat d'Oman) et des juifs qui vivent ensemble en harmonie totale. Ceux-ci y possèdent l'un de leurs hauts lieux religieux dans le monde.Des pelerins du monde entier y affluent chaque année ,c'est la synagogue AL-GHRIBA

Surnommée La Ghriba ("l'étrange","l'étrangère"… en arabe), la synagogue de Djerba est située à 11 km au sud d'Houmt-Souk, la capitale de l'île. C'est une attraction touristique incontournable à Djerba, même si malheureusement, les touristes qui séjournent dans les hôtels clubs ne soupçonnent guère son existence. Il faut dire qu'elle est isolée en rase campagne, loin des plages, au centre de l'île, à 1 kilomètre du village d'Erriadh, l'une des deux bourgades juives de Djerba. L'intérieur orné de bois peints, de mosaïques et de vitraux est tout à fait remarquable. Il faut se déchausser et mettre une kippa. Ce serait la plus vieille synagogue du monde, datant de 586 avant J. C ! Elle fut fondée par des prêtes du temple de Salomon après sa destruction par Nabuchodonosor la même année. Les restes du Temple seraient encore visibles à certains endroits, mais il n'y a aucune preuve de leur véracité. On y voit des rabbins lire des passages de la Thora. Un endroit chargé d'histoire et plein d'émotion, témoignant aussi de la tolérance des Tunisiens. La synagogue de La Ghriba fait l'objet d'un pèlerinage annuel, à l'occasion de la fête juive de Lag Ba'omer (33ème jour de la Pâque juive) qui rassemble chaque année plusieurs milliers de pèlerins.

ENFIN L'UNE DES BEAUTES DE LA TUNISIE EST, ENTRE AUTRES ,SON OLIVERAIE QUI FAIT D'ELLE L'UN DES PRINCIPAUX PRODUCTEURS MONDIAUX D'HUILE D'OLIVE EN CONCURRENCE AVEC L'ESPAGNE ET L'ITALIE

Gérôme Goodman Suivre Abdelwaheb Hammami

Questions similaires

Que ne doit-on absolument pas faire au Maroc ?
Qu'est-ce qu'on doit jamais faire si je visite le Maroc ?
Pourquoi les français préfèrent-ils aller en Tunisie ou au Maroc plutôt qu'en Algérie ?
Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?
Quel pays du Maghreb est le plus prometteur ?
En tant que Maghrébin, vous sentez-vous Africain ? Si non, pourquoi ?
Qu'est-ce qui vous dérange à propos de la culture marocaine ?
Pourquoi ceux qu'on appelle des Maghrébins s'appellent ainsi tout en sachant qu'ils sont sur le continent africain ?
Quelles sont les choses qu'on aime au Maroc ?
En tant que non-arabe, quelle partie du monde arabe aimez-vous le mieux, le Maghreb (Algérie, Tunisie, Maroc), le Levant (Égypte, Syrie, Liban, Irak) ou la péninsule arabique (KSA, Émirats arabes unis, Qatar), et pourquoi ?
Qu'est-ce qui manque le plus aux Marocains quand ils vont à l'étranger ?
Quelles sont les grandes différences culturelles entre les pays du Maghreb ?
Pourquoi les Maghrébins sont-ils également appelés des Arabes ?
Les Algériens, Marocains et Tunisiens parlent-ils un arabe assez proche pour se comprendre d'un pays à l'autre ?
Qu'est-ce qui empêche des pays comme l'Algérie et le Maroc à se développer ?

Pourquoi les Maghrébins sont-ils également appelés des Arabes ?

Samir سمير Farid فريد Lieu : Maroc (1977–aujourd'hui)2 ans

Réponse originale : Pourquoi les maghrébins sont-ils également appelés des arabes ?
Je comprends pas l'idée derrière cet acharnement identitaire, et je n'y vois aucune utilité pour améliorer le quotidien des maghrébins qui souffrent de tout sauf d'une pseudo persécution des peuples non arabes.

Il ya quelques jours, j'ai lu une réponse d''un Quoran prétendant être d'origine franco-Kabyle, qui prétend que les arabes n'ont rien apporté à l'humanité, ni même à l'islam, dans sa prose, on lit que les arabes ne sont que des caravaniers bédouins pilleurs, et que les perses, les turcs et les amazighs sont les seuls à avoir apporté du bien au monde arabo_musulman, oubliant que l'âge d'or de ce monde était l'œuvre du concours de toutes les composantes de ce monde, de la péninsule ibérique jusqu'aux frontières de la Chine, des terres où tous se considéraient comme étant une communauté de croyants.

Au Maghreb, nos vrais problèmes sont à chercher dans la misère politique et la corruption, et pas dans une adolescence identittaire. Suivre Samir ريمس Farid ف ر ف ري

Questions similaires

Pourquoi les Berbères ressemblent-ils aux Arabes alors que génétiquement il s'agit de 2 populations bien différentes ?
Pourquoi les Arabes du Levant se considèrent-ils « plus arabes » que les Maghrébins ?
Si vous êtes nord-africain/maghrébin : considérez-vous que vous êtes arabe ou amazigh/berbère ?
Pourquoi ceux qu'on appelle des Maghrébins s'appellent ainsi tout en sachant qu'ils sont sur le continent africain ?
Pourquoi les gens avec des origines étrangères ont-ils des prénoms français sauf les maghrébins ?
Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?
Pourquoi beaucoup d'Arabes nés en France se sentent-ils plus arabes que français ?
Est-ce que les Berbères sont d'origine arabe ?
Quel est la différence entre arabe et maghrebin ?
Pourquoi les femmes maghrébines rejettent les hommes maghrébins ? Pourquoi elles préfèrent se métisser, et pourquoi il est de plus en plus rare de voir des couples maghrébins ?
Pourquoi les Arabes préfèrent migrer vers les pays occidentaux plutôt que les pays arabes riches ?
Pourquoi les arabes détestent-ils les chiens ?
Pourquoi les "kabyles" ne se considèrent pas arabes ?
Qui étaient les Berbères, qui vivaient dans le Nord de l'Afrique, bien avant que les arabes arrivent ?
Pourquoi les Arabes ne forment-ils pas une vraie "Union Arabe" (pas la Ligue Arabe) sur le modèle de l'Union Européenne sachant qu'ils sont culturellement et linguistiquement plus homogènes Migrants à Ceuta: que se passe-t-il entre l'Espagne et le Maroc, accusé « d'agression » et de « chantage »?

Fernando Bel Larrañaga A étudié à University of Navarra (Diplôme obtenu en 1998) 7 mo

De quel pays êtes-vous ? France, Belgique ? Imaginez qu'entre sept et dix mille espagnols entrent dans votre pays illégalement d'un coup en agressant gravement les policiers de votre pays avec des bâtons, des jets de pierres, etc. J’ai une vidéo sur Youtube montrant que ce n’était pas pacifique Définiriez-vous cela comme un sympathique mouvement touristique ou une invasion programmée par le gouvernement marocain, sachant que ses gendarmes ont ouvert les portes de leur côté de la frontière à tous ceux qui étaient convoqués par les réseaux sociaux d’Internet?

Notre stupide gouvernement communiste espagnol a amené dans un de nos hôpitaux le chef du Front Polisario (en guerre avec Maroc) car il est infecté par Covid-19.

Questions similaires

Pourquoi tant de migrants marocains envahissent soudainement la ville espagnole de Ceuta et que fait l'Union européenne et la France ?
Pourquoi Abdelmoumen(calife des Almohades) est-il revendiqué comme Marocain par les Marocains, alors qu'il venait d'une tribu localisée en Algérie actuelle ?
Que se passe-t-il avec le Maroc et l'Espagne qui se disputent Melilla et Ceuta ?
Pourquoi ces territoires sont-ils tombés sous contrôle espagnol et pourquoi le Maroc n'a-t-il pas réussi à les reconquérir ?
Pourquoi le Maroc n'est-il pas considéré comme un pays européen alors qu'il n'est qu'à 14 km de l'Espagne ?
Pourquoi les Marocains n'organisent-ils pas une marche verte pour ramener Ceuta et Melilla d'Espagne?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il constamment présenté comme un pays arrière ?
Pourquoi le gouvernement marocain ne demande-t-il pas officiellement la restitution des 2 enclaves espagnoles Ceuta et Melilla au gouvernement espagnole ?
Pourquoi L'Espagne conserve Ceuta et Melilla alors qu'elles se situent au Maroc ?
Immigration : que se passe-t-il dans l'enclave espagnole de Ceuta ?
Pouvez-vous m'expliquer le conflit entre le Maroc et l'Espagne ?
Si le Maroc récupère Melilla et Ceuta, les civils blancs seront-ils expulsés comme en 1962 ?
Pourquoi les Marocains fuient-ils le Maroc ?
Les Marocains peuvent-ils voir l'Espagne de Tanger ?
L'Espagne ressemble-t-elle plus à la France ou au Maroc ?
Que vont devenir les migrants mineurs arrivés à Ceuta ?

Maroc-Espagne : pourquoi cette arrivée soudaine et massive de migrants à Ceuta ?

Pierre Moreira Lieu : Goa, Inde (2001–aujourd'hui) 7 mo

Quelques faits qui permettront probablement à chacun de tirer ses conclusions : En décembre 2020, Donald Trump, alors Président des États Unis, a reconnu la souveraineté du Royaume du Maroc sur le territoire du Sahara Occidental (ancienne colonie espagnole jusqu'en 1975), monnaie d'échange entre Washington et Rabat pour garantir une reconnaissance d'Israel par le Maroc. Depuis cette date, le royaume chérifien n'a pas ménagé ses pressions sur l'Union européenne et, en particulier, sur l'Espagne pour qu'elle suive l'exemple de Washington.

Le leader du Front Polisario et Président de la République Arabe Sahraouie Démocratique, Brahim Gali, a été récemment admis dans un hôpital de Logroño (Nord de l'Espagne) après avoir été infecté par le Covid-19.

Mardi dernier, dans un message sur sa page Facebook, le Ministre marocain des Droits humains et des relations avec le Parlement, Moustapha Ramid, a affirmé que « l'Espagne savait que le prix à payer pour sous-estimer le Maroc est très élevé ».

Plus tôt, l'ambassadrice du Maroc à Madrid avait déclaré, en se référant à l'accueil du leader sahraoui dans un hôpital espagnol : « Il y a des actes qui ont des conséquences et qu'il faut assumer ».

L'Espagne possède deux enclaves sur la côte Nord du Maroc : Ceuta et Melilla. Seule l'enclave de Ceuta a été l'objet de cet afflux soudain d'immigrés.

Selon les autorités espagnoles de l'enclave de Ceuta, sur les quelque 8000 personnes entrées de force sur ce territoire espagnol, environ 5600 s'en sont retournées pratiquement sans contrainte vers le territoire marocain dans les heures qui ont suivi. Depuis mercredi 19 mai après-midi, le nombre de tentatives d'entrée dans l'enclave a chuté spectaculairement.

Questions similaires

Pourquoi le Maroc n'est-il pas considéré comme un pays européen alors qu'il n'est qu'à 14 km de l'Espagne ?

Pourquoi le Maroc ne rend-il pas le Rif à l'Espagne ?

À quoi est-elle due la crise migratoire de Ceuta (Espagne) en mai 2021?

Pourquoi le Maroc a-t-il attaqué l'Espagne en 2002 ?

Pourquoi le Maroc est-il constamment présenté comme un pays arrière ?

Que se passe-t-il avec le Maroc et l'Espagne qui se disputent Melilla et Ceuta ? Pourquoi ces territoires sont-ils tombés sous contrôle espagnol et pourquoi le Maroc n'a-t-il pas réussi à les reconquérir ?

Pourquoi L'Espagne conserve Ceuta et Melilla alors qu'elles se situent au Maroc ?

L'Espagne ressemble-t-elle plus à la France ou au Maroc ?

Que pensez-vous de ces arrivées massives de migrants africains à Ceuta en Espagne ?

Est-ce qu'il y a des problèmes politiques entre le Maroc et l'Espagne, et quelles en

Pourquoi le Maroc s'appelle-t-il le Maroc ?
Why is Morocco called Morocco?

Jerome Cohen Mon père était de Casablanca, ma mère fait un super tajine!Traducteur 1 an

Rachid Haroune
Moroccan

Au Moyen Âge, le Maroc était connu par sa capitale ; sous les dynasties des Idrissides et des Mérinides, le Maroc était connu sous le nom de royaume de Fès car c'était leur capitale. Lorsque les Almoravides ont pris le contrôle du pays et ont construit Marrakech et en ont fait leur capitale, le Maroc était connu sous le nom de royaume de Marrakech. L'origine du nom "Marrakech" est contestée, mais il est très probable qu'il provienne des mots berbères amur (n) akush "Terre de Dieu", d'où l'espagnol a dérivé Marruecos et Marokko en néerlandais . En anglais, il s'écrit Morocco et en français Maroc.

Pendant la colonisation, le colonisateur français a utilisé le nom de royaume chérifien puisque la dynastie alaouite prétend être descendante du prophète.

D'autre part, certains historiens pensent que les musulmans qui ont habité la péninsule arabique ont été les premiers à utiliser ce nom المغرب Maroc pendant la conquête islamique. Il signifie en arabe le "lieu du coucher du soleil" car ils pensaient alors que le soleil s'était installé sur la terre du Maroc.

Questions similaires

Pourquoi les français préfèrent-ils aller en Tunisie ou au Maroc plutôt qu'en Algérie ?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il constamment présenté comme un pays arrière ?
Pourquoi les Maghrébins sont-ils également appelés des Arabes ?
Comment sera le Maroc dans 20 ans ?
Pourquoi l'Algérie s'appelle comme ça ?
Pourquoi le Maroc a-t-il attaqué l'Espagne en 2002 ?
Pourquoi le Maroc n'est-il pas considéré comme un pays européen alors qu'il n'est qu'à 14 km de l'Espagne ?
Pourquoi le Maroc ne rend-il pas le Rif à l'Espagne ?
Le Maroc peut-il rejoindre l'UE ? S'il se joint, que se passerait-il?
Comment trouvez-vous le Maroc ?
Pourquoi le Maroc a-t-il décidé de normaliser ses relations avec Israël ?
Quels sont les faits sur le Maroc auxquels les étrangers ne croient pas avant d'arriver au Maroc ?
Est-ce que le Maroc va attaquer l'Algérie ?

Que se passe-t-il avec le Maroc et l'Espagne qui se disputent Melilla et Ceuta ? Pourquoi ces territoires sont-ils tombés sous contrôle espagnol et pourquoi le Maroc n'a-t-il pas réussi à les reconquérir ?
Aimez-vous le Maroc ?

De quoi manquent les pays africains comme le Maroc pour avancer ?

Imzo Bud Marocain 22 août

Avancer où ? Le Maroc a tellement avancé qu'il commence désormais à gêner les équilibres méditerranéens. C'est devenu une puissance "hégémoniques" avec des "ambitions". Au goût de certaines personnes, il est clair que l'Afrique ne doit pas avancer au delà d'un certain niveau. On veut bien nous laisser réguler l'immigration et liquider les terroristes, mais dès qu'on tente la nouveauté, c'est mauvais pour les affaires.

Maghrebi Rivalries Over Sub-Saharan Africa

Algeria and Tunisia Seeking to Keep Up with Morocco
https://www.swp-berlin.org/en/publication/maghrebi-rivalries-over-sub-saharan-africa/

D:\AFRICA-ALL-IN-ONE (Latest file)\AFRICA ALL-IN-ONE word file\Maghrebi Rivalries Over Sub-Saharan Africa Algeria and Tunisia Seeking to Keep Up with Morocco
https:\www.swp-berlin.org\en\publication\maghrebi-rivalries-over-sub-saharan-africa\
Cette petite introduction faite, le Maroc a fait beaucoup d'avancées, essentiellement sur le plan économique et sécuritaire. La monarchie a réussi à éviter les troubles du Printemps Arabe et a capitalisé sur l'infortune de ses voisins pour avancer ses pions.
Ces vingt dernières années, le Maroc a réussi à juguler la menace terroriste dans son territoire et à maintenir la stabilité (au prix de répressions critiquables, comme le montre l'affaire du Hirak et de Nasser Zefzafi). En parallèle, l'état a réussi à diversifier ses activités économiques et à renforcer sa présence sur de nombreux secteurs. On parlera du Port Tanger Med qui est devenu le port de la région en asphyxiant les ports méditerranéens alentour, mais aussi de la Bourse de Casablanca qui est la première place financière du pays et du développement de l'industrie automobile ainsi que de secteurs en aéronautique.

En sus, le Maroc s'est imposé comme une puissance diplomatique en Afrique. Il cherche à gagner en influence, notamment en ayant accueillant les négociations ayant abouti au traité de Skhirat en 2015, mais aussi en investissant massivement (à travers le secteur privé, plus particulièrement les banques) dans toutes l'Afrique. La réintégration de l'UA en 2017, les négociations menées avec l'ECOWAS et la reconnaissance de sa souveraineté sur le Sahara Occidental par les USA (en échange de la reconnaissance d'Israël. Rien n'est gratuit, et dans ce cas là le prix était cher) démontrent toutes sa volonté à s'affirmer comme une puissance régionale.

Il a aussi développé son soft power, d'abord en récupérant le gâteau touristique que l'Egypte a laissé tomber, développant la compagnie Royal Air Maroc qui gravit les échelons lentement mais sûrement. Mais surtout, il poursuit une politique religieuse comparable en objectifs (pas encore en moyens) à celle développée par les Saoudiens. Si ces derniers ont des volontés globales, le Maroc s'est jusqu'ici limité à l'Afrique de l'Ouest que du reste, il voit comme ses futurs partenaires majeurs.

Tout ça, c'est bien beau et très joli sans aucun doute, mais cela cache une part sombre. Malgré tous ces progrès, les marocains sont toujours une population émigrante, la cause étant que les progrès mentionnés ci-dessus n'ont eu que peu de retombées sociales positives sur la population.

Si la qualité de vie augmente indubitablement, certaines personnes profitent de l'évolution du pays plus que d'autres. À ce jour, peu de réformes sont envisagées pour contrer cette état de fait. D'une part parce que les milliardaires ont leur formations politiques très proches et amis du régime, d'autre part parce que l'opposition à ce genre de choses se doit traditionnellement d'être de gauche. Or si vous êtes de gauche, vous êtes contre l'Islam, et les marocains préfèrent largement crécher dans la pauvreté que le spectre vivace du communisme.

De plus, la corruption institutionalisée du pays n'aide pas à assainir le climat politique ni à exécuter les réformes correctement quand celles-ci ont lieu. Une grande part de l'économie marocaine reste informelle et échappe presque totalement à la connaissance de l'état. Cette économie fragile est un véritable dépotoir humain où les lois du travails ne s'appliquent que peu, ou pas. Ajouter à cela une fraude quasi-religieuse (dans le sens où c'est un principe de vie, pas que la religion commande la fraude) dans le pays et vous comprenez assez vite le désenchantement de la majorité des marocains face à leurs institutions et leur pays.

À tout ça s'ajoute un autre problème, selon moi le plus gros : L'état catastrophique de l'instruction publique. On estime qu'un cinquième des marocains sont analphabètes et qu'après quatre années de scolarisations, la majorité des enfants ne savent toujours pas lire ou écrire et le privé (dont je suis moi-même issu) gagne de plus en plus de terrain. Aux dernières nouvelles, les universités privées vont bientôt obtenir le droit de délivrer des doctorats d'état. Bref, c'est la merde. J'ai déjà taclé le système éducatif marocain ici :

Bien évidemment, tout le monde s'adonnent à une partie fabuleuse de ping-pong médiatique où chacun tente de ramener la balle à son voisin. Le patronat se plaint au ministère, le ministère blâme les islamistes, les islamistes blâme le peuple, le peuple blâme le patronat alors que :

Les hauts-cadres du pays favorisent tous une éducation dans des institutions privées et souvent étrangères en plus de ne faire rien sur la scène politique pour changer ça, ou même juste à l'échelle locale.

Le ministère est gangrenée par une bureaucratie inutile, avec une longue chaîne de guignols incompétents qui n'ont aucune proposition à faire ni aucune vision ou plan pour remédier au problème.

Les Islamistes développent leurs propres réseaux de scolarisations parallèles et entretiennent une sorte de consanguinité sociale, d'autant que si leurs élites poussent leurs enfants à poursuivre leurs études sans distinctions, ils sont déjà moins nombreux à convaincre leur auditoire de faire de même. Pour certains d'ailleurs, l'enseignement est une hérésie occidentale.

Le peuple lui est à la fois victime et bourreau. Il ne donne aucun respect ou crédit à la fonction d'enseignant et entretient le rêve d'émigration, mais d'un autre côté il est constitué d'une masse sous-éduquée qui a d'autres problèmes (la pauvreté, le chômage, l'insécurité dans les grandes villes, les conséquences du changement climatique pour les agriculteurs) que d'aller militer pour un système éducatif qui puisse faire autre chose que loger leurs mômes de 6 à12 ans (à partir de 12 ans l'école buissonnière se multiplie)

Et tout ça, toute cette mascarade stérile nous éloigne de la réalité triste mais simple : C'est une volonté d'état. Enfin un héritage de volonté d'état. La destruction du système éducatif est un legs du 20ème siècle destiné à paralyser les mouvements gauchistes au Maroc. Et avec le 21ème siècle, il semble bien que le régime s'en soit fortement accommodé. Sans surprise d'ailleurs, un peuple con est forcément conservateur et politiquement impotent, ce qui arrange les affaires. Et depuis quelques années, les affaires c'est bon pour le pays.

Bref, si sur certains points le Maroc a fait des progrès indéniables, voire spectaculaire, il reste quand même faible sur beaucoup d'autres volets et ça ne semble pas près de changer.

Questions similaires

Pourquoi le Maroc est-il constamment présenté comme un pays arrière ?
Qu'est-ce qui empêche des pays comme l'Algérie et le Maroc à se développer ?

Pourquoi le Maroc n'est-il pas considéré comme un pays européen alors qu'il n'est qu'à 14 km de l'Espagne ?
Le Maroc a besoin de quoi pour rattraper les pays européens ?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il plus fort que l'Algérie ?
Pourquoi l'afrique est si loin derrière en terme de développement ?

Quels sont les pays du monde qui enfoncent l'Afrique toujours plus dans la pauvreté ?
Le Maroc est-il un pays émergent ?
Pourquoi la France est-elle considérée comme le pays le plus avancé d'Europe ?
À quoi joue le Maroc en soutenant le Mouvement pour l'autodétermination de la

Isabelle Werenfels
Maghrebi Rivalries Over Sub-Saharan Africa
Algeria and Tunisia Seeking to Keep Up with Morocco

SWP Comment 2020/C 54, 19.11.2020, 8 Pages doi:10.18449/2020C54

Research Areas The Covid-19 pandemic has moved relations with Sub-Saharan Africa further up the Maghreb countries' agenda and consolidated existing trends. Morocco is the Maghreb state with the most sophisticated Sub-Sahara policy. Its motivations include attractive growth markets in Africa, frustration over restricted access to Europe, stalemated integration in the Maghreb and the wish to see the Western Sahara recognised as Moroccan. Morocco's Sub-Sahara policy has heightened tensions with Algeria and awakened ambitions in Tunisia. Algiers, as a significant funder and security actor in the African Union (AU) and "protector" of the Western Sahara independence movement, is seeking to thwart Rabat's advances. Tunis for its part is trying to follow in Rabat's footsteps, hoping that closer relations with Africa will boost economic growth. The European Union should treat these trends as an opportunity for African integration and triangular EU/Maghreb/Sub-Sahara cooperation. This could counteract Algeria's feeling of growing irrelevance, strengthen Tunisia's economy, put Morocco's hegemonic ambitions in perspective, and thus mitigate the negative dynamics of the rivalry.

The Africa policies of the Maghreb states differ significantly in their intensity, visibility, motivations, and priorities. On a broader level they reflect each state's general domestic and foreign policy capacities. This is visible not least in the way the countries market their Africa policies.

For some time Morocco has had the most dynamic and progressive Africa policy of the three countries. King Hassan II, who ruled from 1961 to 1999, had already put out feelers to West Africa. But it is under his son Mohammed VI

(since 1999) that Morocco has proactively pursued a key economic and diplomatic role in Africa. Mohammed VI took personal charge of the country's Africa policy, backing it with intense travel diplomacy and strategic appearances, for example at the 5th AU-EU Summit in 2017 in Abidjan. Rabat has achieved notable successes with its soft power approach, which encompasses economic, development cooperation, migration and religious components. In January 2017 Morocco was readmitted to the AU after 33 years, against the objections of heavyweights like South Africa and Algeria but strongly supported by numerous West African states as well as Rwanda. Morocco quit the AU's predecessor in protest in 1984 after it accepted the Western Sahara into membership.

Morocco has enormously expanded its presence in Sub-Saharan Africa in the past decade, above all economically. It is one of the continent's largest African investors, alongside South Africa, Kenya and Nigeria, and the biggest African investor in West Africa, where Moroccan insurance companies, telecommunications providers, and banks enjoy significant market shares. Morocco also exports agricultural and renewable energy technology, especially to West Africa, and is increasingly looking to East and Central Africa too, for example Ethiopia, Rwanda and Cameroon. Since 2017 Rabat has also been seeking accession to the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), to date without success.
One central driver of this policy is the desire to open up new markets for Moroccan businesses, especially those controlled by the royal family. Two relevant aspects here are the limited access to the European Single Market and marginal economic interaction across the closed border with Algeria. Morocco's desire for recognition of its claim to the Western Sahara is at least as important for its "turn to Africa". Related to this is the regional rivalry with Algeria that goes beyond the Western Sahara question, where Algeria functions as the "protector" of the independence movement, the Polisario. Both states are seeking to exploit new opportunities created by changes in the larger regional context, such as the ousting of the Libyan leader and advocate of greater African unity Mu'ammar al-Qadhafi, who played an extremely active role in African diplomacy, development, and security questions.

Neighbour Algeria Irritated

Morocco's rise on the continent could be described as close to traumatic for Algeria, whose influence has waned substantially. During the first decades after independence in 1962 Algeria enjoyed great prestige in large parts of Sub-Saharan Africa on account of its military, logistical and financial support for anti-colonial movements. Close development cooperation with the newly independent African states and significant engagement in the Non-Aligned Movement also boosted Algeria's standing across the continent.

Since its civil war in the 1990s, which coincided with the end of the Cold War order, Algiers has failed to restore its lost grandeur and its policy of "strategic depth" in Africa. The security sphere represents a partial exception. Here Algeria plays a relevant role within the AU institutions, and Algiers has also engaged as a mediator in African conflicts with some success. Economic initiatives under President Abdelaziz Bouteflika between 1999 and 2019 – such as an ambitious investment conference in Algiers at the end of 2016 – have been less successful. Although Algeria was a founding member of the AU's development agency NEPAD (now AUDA), its engagement has remained modest, despite having had considerable material resources at its disposal until a few years ago.

From 2013, Algeria's engagement in Africa was hampered by Bouteflika's severe health problems, which ended his travelling diplomacy. Yet even before that, the Algerian President had shown waning interest in Africa, despite having belonged decades ago to the architects of Algeria's early foreign policy and its support for anti-colonial movements.

His successor Abdelmadjid Tebboune, in office since December 2019, announced Algeria's "return to Africa" at his first AU Summit in February 2020. While this is probably motivated by a desire not to leave the field entirely to Morocco, external security challenges also lead Algiers to look to the south: instability in Mali, chaos in Libya, pressure of migration on its southern borders, and the European and US military presence in the Sahel. The latter Algiers observes with suspicion.

However a contoured Africa strategy comparable to Morocco's is not currently observable. And the prospects of one emerging are not especially good. Algerian decision-makers are preoccupied with significant internal and economic challenges – for which they have to date been unable to present strategies.

Tunisia Seeking to Catch Up

Tunisia has been observing Morocco's Africa policy increasingly closely and enviously. In ministries and business circles one hears that Tunisia could in fact offer comparable or better expertise, for example in the IT, real estate development, and banking sectors, in technical planning of major infrastructure projects, and in health and education services.
After a good two decades where Sub-Saharan Africa played a marginal role, Tunisia has been gradually awakening from its slumber. Following the removal of the Ben Ali regime in 2011 the transitional government attempted to revive the African diplomatic engagement of the era of President Habib Bourguiba (1957–1987). But this was a brief episode of little strategic import. For example Tunis was unable to prevent the decision of the African Development Bank in 2013 to move its headquarters back to Abidjan.

Tunisia has nevertheless incrementally expanded its engagement in Sub-Saharan Africa, as demonstrated by its joining ECOWAS in 2017 as an observer, and its accession to the Common Market for Eastern and Southern Africa (COMESA) in 2018. In 2017 the then prime minister, Youssef Chahed, visited Niger, Mali and Burkina Faso. The new prime minister appointed in autumn 2020, Hichem Mechichi, announced that he would step up economic diplomacy in Africa. The country's president, Kaïs Saïed, to date has shown only limited interest in Sub-Saharan Africa.

So far it is the private sector that presses hardest for a clearer orientation on Africa, first and foremost the Tunisia-Africa Business Council (TABC). It establishes contacts, organises conferences, and lobbies for the legal and administrative reforms required to encourage investment and exports. Given the fundamental problems of the young democracy – slow decision-making, an overwhelmed parliament, and a lack of political continuity – this is inevitably a protracted process.

Institutional Power Play

Morocco's confidence, Algeria's defence of its legacy and Tunisia's reawakening interest are also reflected within the African institutions and organisations. The demise of Libyan dictator Qadhafi in 2011 made Algeria the unchallenged Maghreb heavyweight within the AU. But Morocco now contributes at least as much financially and expects relevant positions and influence in AU organs.

For almost two decades an Algerian has held the post of AU Commissioner for Peace and Security, who also oversees the AU's Peace and Security Council (PSC). Morocco joined the PSC in 2018 and held its rotating chair in 2019. Where Rabat is represented in AU bodies there is often conflict over formulations that (could potentially) relate to the Western Sahara conflict, and over the presence of the Sahrawi Republic as a member of the AU. Although Morocco has not to date succeeded in excluding the Polisario from the AU, the fronts have hardened. Influential countries like South Africa maintain their unequivocal backing for the Polisario, but thirteen AU members explicitly support Morocco's claim to the Western Sahara, having opened consulates in the Moroccan-occupied part since 2019.

Algeria is home to an important AU institution, the African Centre for the Study and Research on Terrorism (ACSRT). Morocco and Tunisia now have their own too: The African Migration Observatory founded in 2018 is based in Rabat, the AU Institute for Statistics in Tunis. In 2020 Morocco also achieved a minor victory in relation to African representation in the United Nations, providing the chair of the UN Human Rights Council's Independent Fact-Finding Mission on Libya. Algeria's candidate for the post of UN Special Representative in Libya was apparently rejected by Washington. This example illustrates how influence of the Maghreb states in Africa sometimes functions obliquely and/or relies on external backing.

Jostling over Security Alliances

Negative effects of the Algerian-Moroccan rivalry are especially obvious in the security domain. Algeria was one of the driving forces behind the African Peace and Security Architecture (APSA) through its engagement in the AU Peace and Security Council and the ACSRT. But despite pressing shared security challenges in the Sahel/Sahara region, none of the multilateral security initiatives includes all three Maghreb states – apart from loose involvement in Washington's Trans-Sahara Counterterrorism Partnership. Instead Algeria and Morocco each attempt to make their own mark.

In 2010 Algiers set up a Joint Military Staff Committee (CEMOC) in Tamanrasset to fight terrorism in the Sahel with Mali, Mauritania and Niger and develop their security capacities. Morocco and Tunisia participate in the Community of Sahel-Saharan States (CEN-SAD), which was founded by Qadhafi and also has a security dimension. But neither CEN-SAD nor CEMOC play a significant role in the Sahel. Initiatives also involving international actors, such as the G5-Sahel, are more visible.
Although Algeria has achieved successes in the field of conflict resolution, for example with the Accord d'Alger for Mali in 2015, Morocco has been challenging for that role. For example the Libyan Political Agreement establishing a UN-supported government was signed in Skhirat, Morocco, in 2015. In autumn 2020 the Libyan conflict parties again negotiated in Morocco, and later in Tunisia – despite Algeria repeatedly offering its services as mediator and enjoying the confidence of important conflict parties. What we see here yet again is the strong strategic and implementation capacity of the Moroccan monarchy. Even in Mali, where Algeria hoped to rapidly position itself as the mediator after the August 2020 coup, Morocco soon arrived to offer its services.

Tunisia seeks prominence principally in peace-keeping. In 2019 the Maghreb's smallest nation participated in five UN missions in Sub-Saharan Africa, including MINUSMA in Mali. Morocco was involved in three missions in 2019, in two cases with large contingents. In November 2020 Algeria adopted a constitutional amendment permitting its armed forces to participate in international peace-keeping operations – most of which occur in Africa. This could trigger a Maghreb peace-keeping race, with potentially positive effects.

Unequal Economic Competition

The sector where both Algeria and Tunisia have the most catching up to do is the economy. Casablanca is by volume the continent's largest financial centre and Morocco is streets ahead in trade with and investment in Sub-Saharan Africa (see Figure).

Between 2005 and 2019 Morocco's exports quadrupled and Tunisia's more than doubled. Both have large trade surpluses with Sub-Saharan Africa. Algeria on the other hand imports considerably more from Sub-Saharan Africa than it exports there. Its export volume has however been increasing noticeably for some years and its imports from southern Africa have soared. This indicates growing trade relations with certain Sub-Saharan economies.

The African Continental Free Trade Area (AfCFTA) launched in 2019 includes all three Maghreb states. It is designed to come into effect incrementally, and is initially unlikely to alter the imbalance towards Morocco. Tunisia and Algeria have no economic strategy for Sub-Saharan Africa (yet). Further hurdles are foreign exchange controls and the lack of double taxation agreements. Algeria also suffers a lack of diversification in its export sector and uncompetitive services; it remains to be seen whether government ideas such as offering services from its public construction sector to Sub-Saharan Africa states will be implemented and find demand. Tunisia for its part has undertaken first concrete steps, such as opening two new embassies and four trade offices in Africa.

Connectivity Is Key

Both Algeria and Tunisia have recognised that Morocco's economic success in Sub-Saharan Africa has been boosted by a forward-looking policy of connectivity. In response, Tunisia has established new air routes to Sub-Saharan Africa and Algeria has opened a border crossing to Mauritania. Algiers lauded the latter as a step towards intensification of cooperation with West Africa as a whole. In 2020 Algeria also completed its section of the Trans-Sahara Highway, which is planned to eventually reach Nigeria; Tunisia is also connected. Whether this route – if its Sahel stretch is completed one day – can become a major transport artery will depend crucially on stability and security in the Sahel/Sahara region.

Morocco's transport connections to Sub-Saharan Africa are likely to remain unrivalled in the longer term, if only by virtue of the country's geographical location. Casablanca is far and away the Maghreb's largest flight hub and Tanger Med has established itself as Africa's largest port in terms of container shipping volumes, benefitting from its location where the Atlantic meets the Mediterranean. Sea routes from Algeria to Sub-Saharan Africa are long, from Tunisia even longer. Tunisia suffers an additional disadvantage in that all its land routes pass through Libyan or Algerian territory, making exports either dangerous or dependent on Algerian cooperation. For Tunisia's export capacity to the south it will be vital to expand air transport – and its ports, despite the comparatively long sea routes. Yet, Moroccan connectivity also has its Achilles heel: its only land route to Sub-Saharan Africa runs through Western Saharan territory, making it vulnerable to conflict related blockages or even direct confrontation between Morocco and the Polisario, as was the case in November 2020.

Rivalries also exist in relation to energy infrastructure. Plans for a trans-Saharan gas pipeline from Nigeria to Algeria have been around for decades. An agreement for a pipeline from Nigeria via Morocco to Spain signed in 2016 appears to have better prospects of realisation.
The progress of such infrastructure projects depends not least on support from non-African states. China is especially prominent and is discernibly thinking about trilateral cooperation with North and Sub-Saharan Africa. As such it influences the Maghreb competition for the role of "gateway to Africa". To date Algeria has been Beijing's so-called "comprehensive strategic partner" in the Maghreb. But more recently China has been turning increasingly to Morocco, for example as an automotive manufacturing and export base for Africa as a whole. Russia, as a traditional partner of Algeria, is also showing interest in Morocco for trilateral cooperation with Sub-Saharan Africa.

Winning Hearts and Minds

Tunisian and Algerian attempts to keep up with Morocco in the field of soft power are still modest, as reflected in their external communication. Algeria was unable to capitalise strongly on debt relief of – according to Algerian announcements – around three billion US dollars for fourteen African states between 2013 and 2018. By contrast Rabat managed to generate international visibility for its deliveries of protective equipment "made in Morocco" to Sub-Saharan Africa during the first wave of the Covid-19 pandemic.

In the substance as well as the representation, Morocco's Sub-Sahara strategy also pursues a significantly more sophisticated approach. First of all, much more research on Africa is conducted in Morocco. King Hassan II founded an Institute of African Studies back in 1987; since then a growing number of Moroccan think-tanks have sprung up working on Sub-Saharan Africa and Morocco's role there.

The strategy is also reflected in concrete policies. In development policy, for example, Rabat has a well-established South-South focus encompassing classical development aid such as water projects. Algeria is attempting to catch up: in spring 2020 President Tebboune announced the creation of a development agency for Africa. The Tunisian Agency for Technical Cooperation (ATCT) currently covers Africa with just one office in Mauritania, but is increasingly drawing on external support for its African activities, for example from the German Gesellschaft für Internationale Zusammenarbeit (GIZ) and the Turkish Cooperation and Coordination Agency (TİKA).

Morocco's education policy is also unrivalled.
In 2019 it hosted more than 17,000 students from Sub-Saharan Africa, about half of whom received Moroccan scholarships. Algeria opened an institute of the Pan-African University (PAU) in 2014 with German support, although its student numbers are relatively small. Comprehensive figures for African students in the country are not available. In Tunisia the number of students from African countries has almost halved, from 12,000 (2010) to 6,500 (2018)

In religious diplomacy, too, Morocco stands unchallenged. Rabat trains imams from about ten African states and makes frequent use of its Sufi orders to open doors. This applies especially to the Tijaniyya, which has millions of adherents in West Africa. Leaders of the Moroccan Tijaniyya have accompanied the king and business delegations to Sub-Saharan Africa, and when the Moroccan foreign minister visited Mali after the coup in 2020 he also met with the order's local leader. While the tomb of the founder in Fez, Morocco, has become a place of pilgrimage for believers from across Sub-Saharan Africa, Algiers has failed to generate symbolic capital from his birthplace in Algeria.

Last but not least, Morocco has outplayed the other Maghreb states with its migration policy. Since 2014 it has granted temporary residence permits to tens of thousands of irregular migrants from Sub-Saharan Africa, enabling access to the labour market and health and education systems. Even if this policy looks more convincing on paper than it is on the ground, it has earned Morocco goodwill in Sub-Saharan Africa and a better look than Algeria and Tunisia. Although Tunisia set a milestone in 2018 as the first Arab country to pass legislation against racism, its measures, like Algeria's, often lack visibility. Morocco simply sells what it does better, both at home and abroad.

The Limits of Africa Policy

Quite aside from the competition between them, the African ambitions of the Maghreb states encounter constraints:

Firstly, the Africa policies of the respective governments are not supported by their societies, which generally look more to Europe and the Arab world. Morocco's Africa policy is the king's hobbyhorse but finds little resonance among the political parties. Civil society actors complain that big business linked to the monarchy profits most while trickle-down effects are absent. In Algeria too, indifference towards Sub-Saharan Africa predominates, with Africa policy dependent on a handful of elites from the independence movement, some civil society actors, and a few visionary entrepreneurs. Tunisia's turn to the South is propagated primarily by dynamic private-sector elites.

At the other end of the equation Maghrebi ambitions also encounter resistance among the governments and populations of Sub-Saharan Africa. Widespread racism in the Maghreb – brought to light by growing migration from Sub-Saharan Africa – plays a role. Sub-Saharan Africans frequently experience discrimination and violence, including at the hands of the authorities. Since 2018 Mali and Niger have seen recurring demonstrations against Algeria's ruthless deportation policy. The Maghreb states risk acquiring a reputation as the enforcers of European policies against irregular migration.

Rabat has experienced the limits of its Africa policy since 2017, with the West African states denying accession to ECOWAS over concerns about Morocco's economic – and general – dominance. Across Sub-Saharan Africa there are fundamental doubts over the willingness of the Maghreb states to fully integrate – and be prepared to forgo special status, for instance in trade relations with Europe. Only one Moroccan has been officially ranked in the pool of candidates for the election of new AU Commissioners in 2021 (with little prospect of success) and no Algerians or Tunisians have pre-qualified. One factor here may be many AU members' reservations about the Maghreb states.

Nevertheless, the Maghreb states are likely to profit from the growing desire to find African solutions for Africa. In light of the shutdowns and transport disruption associated with the Covid-19 pandemic, voices within Africa are increasingly calling for purely continental supply chains to be established to reduce dependence on external actors. Morocco especially appears determined to assume a central role and not simply leave Sub-Saharan Africa's attractive markets to outside actors like China, Russia, Turkey, the Gulf and European states.

European Union: Promote Positive Dynamics

The EU's policy towards the Maghreb has to date operated principally within the framework of its Neighbourhood and Mediterranean policies. Individual EU states, including Germany, also cooperate closely with individual Maghreb states. Growing interest in Sub-Saharan Africa in both the Maghreb and Europe opens up new perspectives for all sides. Realising them will require German and European economic and political actors to conceptualise their policies more strongly in terms of the continent as a whole, and specifically continental integration. They must not treat the Maghreb's interest in Africa as competing with its interest in Europe or with Europe's own interest in Africa. Appropriate starting points include the framework of the G20 Compact with Africa (CwA).

In the medium term African integration could function as the motor for the Maghreb integration process that the EU seeks to foster, to date unsuccessfully. Successful (economic) integration in Africa could also function to stabilise the Maghreb, which would clearly be in the EU's interest.

For the EU, supporting such promising developments implies firstly a stronger focus on trilateral economic and development cooperation. Concretely this could mean employing and learning from Maghrebi expertise, for example in German and European economic partnerships and development projects with Sub-Saharan Africa. Here the Maghreb can help to build or expand financial and technological bridges between Europe and Africa.

It is therefore obvious, secondly, for experienced exporters like Germany to offer technical expertise to the two "stragglers" on matters such as developing strategies and expanding the infrastructure for exporting locally produced goods to Africa. This would also benefit German and European manufacturers producing in the Maghreb by opening up markets comprising about one billion consumers. A corresponding project for Tunisian small and medium-sized enterprises is already running, with funding from the Federal Ministry for Economic Cooperation and Development. Trilateral cooperation can also mean jointly creating the preconditions for positioning Tunisia as an IT hub and health training centre for Africa; in both areas the country is a leader on the continent. It is also an opportune moment to offer Algeria support for exporting goods and expertise: Algiers is currently interested in export diversification and in rectifying its trade deficit with Africa. The government stands under great pressure to produce results.

Thirdly, European actors must work to minimise the potential negative (side-) effects of European policies in the Maghreb. Migration management must take into consideration the reputation of the Maghreb states, which is closely bound up with the treatment of migrants from Sub-Saharan Africa. It must also be ensured that the border management policies Europe pushes in Africa do not interfere with African integration. Europe should also take Africa's efforts to develop the AfCFTA seriously: negotiations over bilateral free trade agreements with Morocco and Tunisia should pay heed to possible consequences for African integration.
Fourthly it is important to counteract Maghrebi zero-sum thinking. Rather than supporting the Africa policy of either Morocco or Algeria or Tunisia, the EU should support the constructive elements of each. This also applies to the Maghreb states' engagement for peace and security in Sub-Saharan Africa. In relation to the Western Sahara Europe should continue to support the UN line and not subscribe to unilateral French or Spanish initiatives.

There is a great deal to gain geopolitically if Europe establishes itself as a dependable supporter of closer relations between North and Sub-Saharan Africa and forges ahead with triangular cooperation. This would slow the growth of openings for other external actors such as China, India, Turkey, and the Gulf states and strengthen the European-African axis.
Dr. Isabelle Werenfels is Senior Fellow in the Middle East and Africa Division.
© Stiftung Wissenschaft und Politik, 2020.

All rights reserved. This Comment reflects the author's views.

SWP Comments are subject to internal peer review, fact-checking and copy-editing. For further information on our quality control procedures, please visit the SWP website: https://www.swp-berlin.org/en/about-swp/ quality-management-for-swp-publications/
SWP

Stiftung Wissenschaft und Politik: German Institute for International and Security Affairs

Ludwigkirchplatz 3–4
10719 Berlin
Telephone +49 30 880 07-0
Fax +49 30 880 07-100
www.swp-berlin.org
swp@swp-berlin.org

ISSN 1861-1761 doi: 10.18449/2020C54
Translation by Meredith Dale (Updated English version of (SWP-Aktuell 83/2020)

Est-ce vrai, j'ai entendu ça quelque part, que les Allemands et les Maghrebins étaient très proches génétiquement ?

Louis Gabriel philosophe-linguiste-historien amateur 10 mo

Réponse originale : Est ce vrai, j'ai entendu ça quelque part, que les Allemands et les Maghrebins étaient très proches génétiquement ?

Oui, absolument. Les Allemands et les Maghrébins sont très proches génétiquement. Ils sont d'ailleurs proches aussi génétiquement des Chinois, des Australiens, des Russes, des Bushmans et des Inuits.

En fait, tous les humains de la terre sont très proches génétiquement, beaucoup plus proches que la plupart des autres espèces entre eux.

La diversité génétique à l'intérieur de notre espèce est de 0,1% ce qui veut dire que la différence génétique entre vous et n'importe quel autre humain sur cette planète n'est jamais supérieur à 1 sur 1000. Chez nos plus proches cousins les chimpanzés, la diversité génétique est de 1%, soit 10 fois plus élevé.

Pour cela il n'y a qu'une seule explication : toute la population mondiale d'aujourd'hui descend d'un groupe restreint d'individus. N'en déplaise aux racistes

Questions similaires

Pourquoi l'Allemagne a-t-elle pardonné à la France d'avoir volé le territoire ethno-linguistiquement allemand d'Alsace-Lorraine ?

Est-ce que les Allemands voient Hitler comme les Français voient Napoléon malgré les horreurs qu'ils ont pu faire ?

Pourquoi les Berbères ressemblent-ils aux Arabes alors que génétiquement il s'agit de 2 populations bien différentes ?

Quelle est l'origine ethnique (dont beaucoup sont blonds aux yeux bleus) de la population kabyle de Grande-Kabylie, en Algérie ?

Le français est-il plus facile que l'allemand ?

Les Algériens, Marocains et Tunisiens parlent-ils un arabe assez proche pour se comprendre d'un pays à l'autre ?

Pourquoi les "kabyles" ne se considèrent pas arabes ?

Qui étaient les Berbères, qui vivaient dans le Nord de l'Afrique, bien avant que les arabes arrivent ?

Est-il encore utile d'apprendre l'allemand étant donné que les Allemands parlent très bien l'anglais ?

Génétique et Hérédité : pourquoi les Européens du Nord sont plus grands que les Européens du Sud ?

Le français est-il de fait une langue nationale en Algérie?

Samir Berkani Anciennement Errant dans la Cité 5 janv.

Le Français devrait être reconnu comme une langue nationale au même titre que l'Arabe et le Berbère.Loin d'une quelconque posture idéologique faisant de cette langue un banal héritage colonial, cette langue a permis un tant soit peu à l'élite algérienne de se former et a ouvert l'accès à la civilisation occidentale en ayant connu elle-même une évolution historique qui a accompagné le développement des sciences dures et des sciences humaines en France.Alors pourquoi nous priver des apports de cette langue d'autant plus que la linguistique et les sciences de la communication sont suffisamment développées en France (sémantique dont le pionnier est De Saussure lui-même Français pour n'en citer que lui!!!)

Questions similaires

Pourquoi il n'y a qu'avec l'Algérie que les relations sont souvent tendues alors que la France a occupé d'autres pays ?
En tant que français quelles sont les erreurs que l'on fait en parlant l'anglais de calquage de schéma grammaticaux de notre langue sur la langue anglaise ?
Les gens des pays africains qui parlent français détestent-ils la France et la langue française ?
Pourquoi les français préfèrent-ils aller en Tunisie ou au Maroc plutôt qu’en Algérie ?
Pourquoi certains Algériens font n’importe quoi en France ?
Est-il possible à l'avenir que l'arabe soit une deuxième langue officielle en France ?
Pourquoi le français est la plus belle langue du monde ?

Pourquoi les Arabes détestent l'Algérie ?
Pourquoi le français est-il une langue latine, alors que les Gaulois sont celtes et les Francs sont germaniques ?
Pourquoi les Algériens, au moins ceux en France, parlent si bien le français ?

Française en Tunisie et au Maroc
Pourquoi parle-t-on presque toujours de la relation France/Algérie et si peu de la colonisation française en Tunisie et au Maroc ?

Pierre Boutin A travaillé à Armée du Salut (2012–2015) 4 ans

N'étant pas historien, je te ferai une reponse très sommaire, et, j'espère, pas trop inexacte :

Parce que l'Algérie, contrairement au Maroc et à la Tunisie, a été une colonie de peuplement. Des générations et des générations de Pieds-Noirs ont vécu sur son territoire pendant plus d'un siècle (grosso modo depuis la mi-XIXème jusqu'à la mi-XXème).

Parce que la décolonisation a donné lieu à une guerre catastrophique, avec son lot d'horreurs et d'exactions, sur lesquelles, côté francais, on se contente bien souvent de jeter un voile pudique.

Parce qu'elle est liée à d'importants mouvements de populations : pendant et immédiatement après la guerre, un retour massif et précipité des Pieds-Noirs en Europe d'une part, puis une émigration économique de travailleurs algériens d'autre part.

Parce qu'à l'ère postcoloniale, et jusqu'à aujourd'hui, 55 ans après l'Indépendance, le traumatisme n'a pas été encore été tout-à-fait surmonté, tous les enseignements historiques n'ont pas encore été tirés.

Parce qu'aussi, plus simplement, l'Algérie reste plus importante, en termes de superficie et de population, que ne le sont le Maroc et la Tunisie!

Questions similaires

Pendant la colonisation en Algérie, est-il vrai que la France a octroyé la nationalité française aux indigènes juifs, mais pas au peuple musulman ? Si oui, pourquoi?

Pourquoi les français préfèrent-ils aller en Tunisie ou au Maroc plutôt qu'en Algérie ?

Avant la colonisation française en 1830, l'Algérie (ou les territoires qui la formaient) avait-elle déjà été longuement sous domination étrangère ?

Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?

Un Algérien d'un certain âge m'a montré la carte d'identité Française qu'il possédait en 1962, juste avant l'indépendance. Il y était noté "Français musulman". Y avait-il bien un système d'apartheid à l'époque de l'Algérie Française ?

Pourquoi la France ne s'excuse-t-elle pas une bonne fois pour toutes pour la colonisation vis à vis de l'Algérie ?

Pourquoi il n'y a qu'avec l'Algérie que les relations sont souvent tendues alors que la France a occupé d'autres pays ?

La France est-elle prospère à cause de la colonisation ? Si la colonisation n'avait jamais eu lieu, comment se présenterait la France ?

La France a-t-elle répandu l'analphabétisme en Algérie pendant la colonisation ?

Pourquoi l'Algérie ne s'excuse-t-elle pas auprès de la France pour sa tentative ratée de Arabe : Un Marocain peut-il comprendre un Égyptien ?

Adil El Nhayli Connaissances: Arabe 2 ans

Ça dépends. Si c'est un Marocain du Maroc, oui car au Maroc, les gens ont toujours été exposés à la culture égyptienne, que ce soit au cinéma, la télévision et la musique. Les chanteurs égyptiens des années 40 et 50 comme Oum Kalthoum, Abdelhalim Hafez ou Mohammed Abdelwahab sont les équivalents arabes d'Edith Piaf ou de Frank Sinatra pour tout le Maghreb et le Moyen-Orient. Donc les Marocain(e)s non seulent comprennent tres bien le dialecte égyptien, mais ils peuvent aussi le parler. L'inverse par contre est moins évident, car le cinéma et les chansons du Maghreb n'ont jamais fait connaitre le même engouement (cela change depuis quelques années grace aux médias sociaux et à une nouvelle génération d'artistes maghrébins qui s'imposent au Moyen-Orient comme le controversé Saad Lamjarred). Et aussi les Egyptiens qui vivent en France ou dans des pays avec une grosse communauté maghrébine ou marocaine, et qui finissent par comprendre le dialecte marocain à force de fréquenter des Marocains, Algériens ou Tunisiens.

Pour les Marocains ou Maghrébins nés en Europe, c'est moins évident, car ils sont plus exposés aux dialectes arabes de leur pays d'origine, et pas trop aux dialectes arabes d'Egypte ou du Moyen-Orient. La plupart des français d'origine maghrébines ne comprennent pas du tout les dialectes orientaux, même si ils

Questions similaires

Les Algériens, Marocains et Tunisiens parlent-ils un arabe assez proche pour se comprendre d'un pays à l'autre ?

Pourquoi les Arabes qui vivent en Égypte aujourd'hui croient-ils qu'ils sont les anciens Égyptiens de l'histoire ?

Quel peuple arabe parle et maîtrise le mieux l'Arabe classique ?

Quelle sont les différences entre les diverses langues arabes ?

Quel est la différence entre arabe et maghrebin ?

Quand l'égyptien a-t-il cessé d'être la langue dominante de l'Égypte ?

Qu'est-ce que cela signifie en arabe égyptien "حـ ين"? بعدَ ولـ و سـ يـكون ذ رجوه ما ولعلّ

Qu’est-ce que cela signifie en arabe égyptien « حاجة كـل فـ يها عجـ بـ نـي نـاك » ?

Que cela signifie-t-il en arabe égyptien « مـكان؟ فـ أي الـ قاه ما هـيل » ?

Pourquoi dit-on que l'arabe est la langue la plus riche ?

Pourquoi les pays magrébins refusent-ils de reprendre leurs ressortissants entrés clandestinement sur le territoire français ?

Chri Chri Précédent lieu : Afrique centrale (2007–2015)12 nov.

Je me lance (mais il y a une réponse de Mina Daoud très complète et fouillée), ils sont tout simplement trop nombreux car il y a trop de naissances et c'est un problème civilisationnel. Il faudrait réguler les naissances, comme l'a fait la Chine. Il y avait 6 à 7 enfants par femme dans les années 1950 et Mao encourageait la natalité car il imaginait une guerre contre la grande Russie. Mais quand ils ont compris qu'ils ne pouvaient pas sortir du tiers monde avec 6 enfants par femme, ils ont pris des mesures strictes (récemment assouplies). Il faut quand même noter que malgré la possibilité d'avoir 2 enfants, le retour en arrière est compliqué, une femme chinoise ne veut pas de second enfant (j'en sais quelque chose) car on a conditionné les Chinois, on leur a par exemple dit qu'un étudiant coûtait cher (ce qui est vrai) et il n'y a aucune aide sociale, faire des enfants dans le but de toucher un RSA ou gagner des points de retraite, ce n'est même pas imaginable! Les PMA (pays moins avancés, à ne pas confondre avec les pays en voie de développement qui ont un PIB par habitant inférieur à la moyenne mondiale mais rattrapent leur retard) doivent absolument réguler les naissances! D'ailleurs, Macron, fraîchement élu en juillet 2017, avait déjà compris le problème et déclaré ceci : le « défi de l'Afrique est différent (des pays européens au sortir de la guerre), il est beaucoup plus profond, il est civilisationnel ». Et de conclure : « Quand des pays ont encore sept à huit enfants par femme, vous pouvez décider d'y dépenser des milliards d'euros, vous ne stabiliserez rien. » Ça calme, hein? Les gauchos l'ont bien sûr traité de raciste et il est devenu un modèle de bien-pensance!

Mais comment fait-on moins de bébés? On aide les femmes qui ont un bébé et on supprime les aides au-delà du premier enfant, y compris pour le premier. Quand la mesure est passée en Chine, il y a bien sûr eu une période de flou. Mon épouse est née en 1980, ses parents ne l'ont pas déclarée car elle était le second enfant. Elle n'a donc pas de luku, elle n'a pas d'existence administrative. Ils l'ont finalement déclaré dans une autre province et elle doit s'y rendre chaque fois qu'elle a besoin de papiers. C'est tellement compliqué qu'ils se sont arrêtés à deux et leurs deux filles n'ont qu'un enfant. Il faut donc donner des milliards à l'Afrique pour inciter les femmes à avoir un enfant et un seul. La femme africaine qui touche 150€ par mois est très heureuse mais si elle a un second enfant et qu'on lui supprime ces 150€, très vite elle va arrêter d'en faire! Parallèlement à cela, il faut accompagner cette mesure par une communication pour ces populations: faites un seul enfant, l'état ne pourra pas les nourrir! Et il faut pousser l'éducation des femmes! Une femme diplômée et exerçant un métier fait moins d'enfants!

Or ça, c'est un vrai problème dans les pays musulmans où les femmes ne jouissent pas des mêmes libertés que les hommes! Il y a donc un programme mondial pour l'éducation des femmes (et même un prix UNESCO depuis 2016) mais il donne peu de résultats à ce jour… En Afrique, l'île Maurice a réussi, les femmes sont très actives, n'ont pas d'enfants, plus aucune immigration mauricienne en Europe, le solde migratoire doit même être négatif…

Il faut aussi se demander pourquoi les Africaines font des enfants? D'une part, un enfant meurt plus facilement en Afrique qu'en Europe, ne serait-ce qu'à cause du palu (et on est en train de découvrir un vaccin donc la démographie va exploser). D'autre part, les enfants sont la caisse de retraite. Quand vous arrêtez de travailler, l'état ne vous donne rien. Si vous avez eu 8 enfants, même s'ils donnent chacun l'équivalent de 30€, vous pouvez vivre normalement.

Questions similaires

Pourquoi il n'y a qu'avec l'Algérie que les relations sont souvent tendues alors que la France a occupé d'autres pays ?

La France a-t-elle raison de réduire de 50% le nombre de visas accordés aux ressortissants du Maghreb, à cause de leur refus de reprendre leurs ressortissants expulsés ?

Pour quelles raisons Macron vient-il d'annoncer que la France allait réduire drastiquement le nombre de visas accordés au Maroc, à l'Algérie et à la Tunisie ?

Le gouvernement algérien a-t-il atteint le sommet de l'imbécillité en interdisant le survol de son territoire aux avions français ?

Pourquoi le Français est-il mal aimé des autres pays ?

Y a-t-il des pays qui aiment les Français?

Pourquoi les Français se sentent-ils les meilleurs en Europe et essaient de dévaloriser les autres pays dès qu'on les compare à la France ?

Pourquoi l'Algérie ne défend pas les Ouïghours ?

Pourquoi l'Algérie interdit l'usage du Français ?

Pour quelle raison principale pensez-vous que la France n'a pas réussi à faire en sorte

À quoi joue le Maroc en soutenant le Mouvement pour l'autodétermination de la Kabylie ?

Slimane Azayri

Maniaque des mains propres Mis à jour le 9 août

À quoi joue le Maroc en soutenant le Mouvement pour l'autodétermination de la Kabylie ?

Contrairement aux apparences, le royaume du Maroc, en soutenant le "mouvement pour l'autodétermination de la Kabylie", valide et approuve implicitement ce qu'il refuse depuis des decennies:

~ la revendication du peuple sahraoui pour l'autodétermination et aussi l'indépendance s'il en exprime la volonté;

~ dans le passé et certainement le futur, la revendication du Rif pour l'indépendance qui sera suivie, probablement, par d'autres provinces du royaume.

En Algérie, la déclaration marocaine n'a impressionné et convaincu personne, y compris les partisans présumés de l'indépendance de la Kabylie. En effet, peut-on raisonnablement se fier aux déclarations des porte-paroles du roi et de son makhzen ? Tout le monde sait que le seul et unique objectif de la monarchie et de son makhzen est de provoquer l'affaiblissement et l'éclatement de l'Algérie afin qu'elle puisse s'emparer de ses parties nord-ouest et sud-ouest limitrophes du Maroc et les annexer. Les algériens, notamment kabyles, feront-ils le jeu de cette feuille de route inavouée mais pourtant évidente tel le nez au milieu de la figure ? La réponse ne fait pas de doute car les algériens, kabyles inclus, n'éprouvent, à mon avis, nulle inquiétude devant les déclarations de plus en plus belliqueuses des officiels du "royaume de l'Ouest" comme disait Kateb Yacine.

Questions similaires

Les algériens croient-ils vraiment que le Maroc est à l'origine des feux de foret en Kabylie comme l'a annoncé le président Tebboune ?

La France devrait-elle soutenir l'indépendance de la Kabylie ?

Les pays occidentaux cesseront-ils de soutenir le régime d'Alger suite aux lourdes et graves accusations soulevées par le président du MAK (Mouvement pour l'Autonomie de la Kabylie) lors de sa conférence de presse d'aujourd'hui ?

La Kabylie pourra-t-elle prospérer après son indépendance de l'Algérie?

Le Maroc a besoin de quoi pour rattraper les pays européens ?

Jean-Francois Dufour-Poirier 99% poussières d'étoiles 1% magique.1 an

Il serait bon, avant toute autre chose, de savoir exactement quels sont les points d'avancements que vous ciblez. Car, si je le dis, c'est que souvent, j'entends dire que l'Occident est en retard sur l'Asie, plus particulièrement, la Chine, ce qui suscite alors la question, nous sommes en retard sur quoi exactement ? Le crédit social ? Est-ce exactement ça que nous désirons en Occident ? Un système qui permettra de discriminer les gens selon leurs antécédents financiers, de santé, et bien d'autres ?

Non, je dois avouer que je n'aime pas la formulation de la question, car pour savoir où nous en sommes, j'ai toujours pensé que c'était face à soi-même qu'il faut se comparer. Alors, si je reformule, ça va ainsi : En quoi le Maroc a t-il changé entre hier (20e siècle) et aujourd'hui (21e siècle), et, qu'en sera-t-il de demain ?

Une question difficile pour maintes raisons, en commençant par les changements mondiaux qui sont en train de s'opérer. Comme, par exemple, le fait que, ni mon père, ni le tient, n'ont jamais eux la chance de communiquer ensemble, comme nous, nous le faisons en ce moment, en passant par l'Internet, mais aussi, la langue française. C'est que nous sommes, en tant qu'espèce, en train de s'ouvrir sur la réalité plurielle de notre monde ; d'un côté, il y a le désir de conserver son identité, et de l'autre, l'envie de faire partie d'un monde sans frontière, sans pays, et, avec une structure de gouvernance mondiale. Et, dans l'ensemble de tous les pays du monde, c'est un peu sur cet échiquier que nous nous retrouvons en ce moment.

Comment le Maroc peut-il continuer à s'ouvrir sur le monde, sans perdre son identité culturel, c'est comme demander, comment les pays européens peuvent-ils demeurer eux-mêmes, tout en devenant l'Union Européenne. Ou encore, comment faire en sorte que les petits commerces puissent survivre, lorsque de grandes chaînes de succursales internationales s'implantent dans un pays ?

Tout ça cache un thème beaucoup plus puissant qui est celui du capitalisme sauvage, alias, Ruthless capitalism, qui, petit à petit, est en train de mettre à mal l'état providence.

Dans un tel contexte, le mieux pour un royaume, c'est d'investir dans son propre patrimoine ; d'utiliser la monnaie de son pays afin de mettre en chantier des projets qui multiplient la valeur de son territoire, et, d'établir de bonnes relations avec ses voisins.

Que cette valeur dont je parle, ne doit pas être calculée de manière entièrement financière, mais aussi, en terme de souveraineté alimentaire, en production d'énergies vertes et pérennes, en taux de littératie, et pourquoi pas, avec des projets porteurs comme celui de reconquérir les terres perdues en raison de la désertification ?

C'est donc dire, Maroc, soi toi-même, selon tes spécificités, tes rêves, ton imaginaire.

Pourquoi le Maroc est-il constamment présenté comme un pays arrière ?

Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?

Pensez-vous qu'à terme la Kabylie finira par obtenir son indépendance du reste de l'Algérie ?

Que pensez-vous du spectre d'un conflit armé qui plane entre le Maroc et l'Algérie ? (Selon les médias)

L'Algérie a décidé de revoir ses relations diplomatiques avec le Maroc, qu'elle accuse d'être impliqué dans les incendies qui ont ravagé le nord de l'Algérie. D'où proviennent ces accusations ?

Pourquoi l'Algérie ne défend pas les Ouïghours ?

Le Maroc a besoin de quoi pour rattraper les pays européens ?

Jean-Francois Dufour-Poirier 99% poussières d'étoiles 1% magique.1 an

Il serait bon, avant toute autre chose, de savoir exactement quels sont les points d'avancements que vous ciblez. Car, si je le dis, c'est que souvent, j'entends dire que l'Occident est en retard sur l'Asie, plus particulièrement, la Chine, ce qui suscite alors la question, nous sommes en retard sur quoi exactement ? Le crédit social ? Est-ce exactement ça que nous désirons en Occident ? Un système qui permettra de discriminer les gens selon leurs antécédents financiers, de santé, et bien d'autres ?
Non, je dois avouer que je n'aime pas la formulation de la question, car pour savoir où nous en sommes, j'ai toujours pensé que c'était face à soi-même qu'il faut se comparer. Alors, si je reformule, ça va ainsi : En quoi le Maroc a t-il changé entre hier (20e siècle) et aujourd'hui (21e siècle), et, qu'en sera-t-il de demain ?

Une question difficile pour maintes raisons, en commençant par les changements mondiaux qui sont en train de s'opérer. Comme, par exemple, le fait que, ni mon père, ni le tient, n'ont jamais eux la chance de communiquer ensemble, comme nous, nous le faisons en ce moment, en passant par l'Internet, mais aussi, la langue française. C'est que nous sommes, en tant qu'espèce, en train de s'ouvrir sur la réalité plurielle de notre monde ; d'un côté, il y a le désir de conserver son identité, et de l'autre, l'envie de faire partie d'un monde sans frontière, sans pays, et, avec une structure de gouvernance mondiale. Et, dans l'ensemble de tous les pays du monde, c'est un peu sur cet échiquier que nous nous retrouvons en ce moment.

Comment le Maroc peut-il continuer à s'ouvrir sur le monde, sans perdre son identité culturel, c'est comme demander, comment les pays européens peuvent-ils demeurer eux-mêmes, tout en devenant l'Union Européenne. Ou encore, comment faire en sorte que les petits commerces puissent survivre, lorsque de grandes chaînes de succursales internationales s'implantent dans un pays ?

Tout ça cache un thème beaucoup plus puissant qui est celui du capitalisme sauvage, alias, Ruthless capitalism, qui, petit à petit, est en train de mettre à mal l'état providence.

Dans un tel contexte, le mieux pour un royaume, c'est d'investir dans son propre patrimoine ; d'utiliser la monnaie de son pays afin de mettre en chantier des projets qui multiplient la valeur de son territoire, et, d'établir de bonnes relations avec ses voisins.

Que cette valeur dont je parle, ne doit pas être calculée de manière entièrement financière, mais aussi, en terme de souveraineté alimentaire, en production d'énergies vertes et pérennes, en taux de littératie, et pourquoi pas, avec des projets porteurs comme celui de reconquérir les terres perdues en raison de la désertification ?

C'est donc dire, Maroc, soi toi-même, selon tes spécificités, tes rêves, ton imaginaire.

Questions similaires

Si une guerre Algérie Maroc éclatait qui gagnerait ?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il toujours jaloux de l'Algérie ?
Pourquoi les Marocains ne supportent pas les Algériens, qui ont pourtant une culture similaire ?
Pourquoi il n'y a qu'avec l'Algérie que les relations sont souvent tendues alors que la France a occupé d'autres pays ?
Pourquoi l’Algérie ne défend pas les Ouïghours ?
Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?
Pourquoi le Maroc ne rompt pas toutes ses relations avec l’Algerie ?
Pourquoi les Marocains n'ont-ils pas de "NIF" contrairement aux Algériens?
Pourquoi les français préfèrent-ils aller en Tunisie ou au Maroc plutôt qu’en Algérie ?
Pourquoi les marocains détestent-ils les Algériens ?

Le Maroc peut-il rejoindre l'UE ? S'il se joint, que se passerait-il?

L Ritz Ingénieur méthodes (2015–aujourd'hui) 9 mo

L'article 49 du traité sur l'Union européenne dispose qu'un État candidat doit être géographiquement « européen ». D'ailleurs une demande d'adhésion du Maroc à l'UE a déjà été formulée, puis rejetée en 1987.
Voir l'article Wikipedia à ce sujet :

Questions similaires

Qu'est-ce qui a donné au Maroc l'idée qu'il pouvait rejoindre l'UE malgré l'échec de la Turquie ?
Pourquoi le Royaume Uni a-t-il décidé de quitter l'Union Européenne ?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il constamment présenté comme un pays arrière ?
Le Maroc a besoin de quoi pour rattraper les pays européens ?
Pourquoi le Maroc n'est-il pas considéré comme un pays européen alors qu'il n'est qu'à 14 km de l'Espagne ?
Le Maroc est-il un pays émergent ?
Pourquoi le Maroc a-t-il décidé de normaliser ses relations avec Israël ?
Quels pays vont rejoindre et quitter l'UE dans les 20 prochaines années ?
Que se passerait-il si la France quittait l'Union Européenne et créait une union avec les pays du Maghreb pour devenir une province du Maroc ?
Que se passerait-il si tous les pays arabes s'unissaient contre Israël et les USA ?

Combien de temps cela pourrait prendre au Maroc pour être un pays développé ?

Edouard Corblet A étudié Retraite et Histoire à MBA en Financ (Diplôme obtenu en 1979)1 an

On pourrait se demander ce qu'est un pays développé en premier ?
Pour donner un peu de substance a cette phrase, pensez un peu a cette statistique;

PIB per Capita Maroc 3222 $ 2018.
PIB per Capita France 3169 $ 1971.
World bank $ courant

GDP per capita (current US$) - France, Morocco

Est ce que la France était considérée comme un pays développe en 1971 ? En plus, en terme de PPP le Maroc est aux alentours de 8600 $ par habitant.

Il faudrait un peu revenir sur terre de temps en temps. Le niveau de vie actuel en occident est indéniablement supérieur mais on ne peut dire que le Maroc soit sous développé. De plus, 74% de la population a reçu une éducation et tout le monde a un téléphone portable. Il n'y a pas de famines et il y a des structures médicales. Il n'est pas forcement obligatoire d'avoir le dernier Iphone et une BMW au garage pour être développé.

IDH 2019: de fortes inégalités relevées entre les hommes et les femmes au Maroc.

A noter que le titre du lien est trompeur, le Maroc n'est pas si mal. Ce n'est pas le paradis bien sur mais on ne peut comparer avec le Zimbabwe qui est un désastre.

Ce pays est plutôt dans la moyenne, son développement IDH le prouve. Je ne suis pas un fanatique du PPP et de l'IDH qui a mon avis donnent des résultats discutables mais on peut quand même les utiliser.

Je me demande pourquoi on pose ce type de question orientée a propos du Maroc et pas du Vietnam ou de l'Inde qui font largement moins bien ?

Questions similaires

Que ne doit-on absolument pas faire au Maroc ?

Pourquoi les Marocains fuient-ils le Maroc ?

Qu'est-ce qui empêche des pays comme l'Algérie et le Maroc à se développer ?

De quoi manquent les pays africains comme le Maroc pour avancer ?

Pourquoi le Maroc n'est-il pas considéré comme un pays européen alors qu'il n'est qu'à 14 km de l'Espagne ?

Quand le Maroc sera-t-il un pays prospère et les Marocains ne penseront plus à l'immigration?

Pourquoi le Maroc est-il constamment présenté comme un pays arrière ?

Qu'est-ce qu'on doit jamais faire si je visite le Maroc ?

Le Maroc a besoin de quoi pour rattraper les pays européens ?

L'Espagne ressemble-t-elle plus à la France ou au Maroc ?

Le Maroc est-il un pays émergent ?

Fatima-Ezzharae Bourhaba Connaissances : Anglais 10 mo

Le Maroc a confirmé sa position parmi les pays africains les plus performants, en se classant, en 2017, à la tête des pays émergents dans le continent, selon le deuxième classement annuel des pays africains concernant l'émergence économique, diffusé mercredi à Dakar.

Questions similaires

Pourquoi le Maroc est-il constamment présenté comme un pays arrière ?
Comment sera le Maroc dans 20 ans ?
Aimez-vous le Maroc ?
Quelle est la meilleure ville au Maroc ?
Pourquoi le Maroc ne veut-il pas renoncer au Sahara occidental ?
Qu'est-ce qui empêche des pays comme l'Algérie et le Maroc à se développer ?
Pourquoi les Marocains fuient-ils le Maroc ?
Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?
Est-ce que le Maroc va attaquer l'Algérie ?
Pourquoi les Ottomans n'ont-ils jamais conquis le Maroc ?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il plus fort que l'Algérie ?
Est-ce que le Sahara occidental est un pays ou une partie du Maroc ?
De quoi manquent les pays africains comme le Maroc pour avancer ?
Le Maroc a besoin de quoi pour rattraper les pays européens ?
Que se passerait-il si le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie devenaient un seul pays ?

What are some of the best countries to visit in Africa?

Darcy Cordell Been around the world.4y

I have been to Morocco, Egypt, Kenya, Uganda, Rwanda and Tanzania. From my experience, I would say all of those countries are worth visiting and I'm sure many other African countries are worth visiting too. I have heard great things about Ghana, Zambia, Botswana, South Africa, Namibia, Seychelles, Mauritius and Tunisia.

Kenya and Tanzania are probably some of the most popular sub-Saharan African countries because of the Serengeti, Kilimanjaro and Zanzibar. If you want to go on a safari and see some impressive animals in the wild, I would highly suggest the Serengeti. The safaris I went on was truly breath-taking. I was initially quite skeptical because I thought it would just feel like a zoo, but it was completely different and exceeded expectations! But keep in mind, if you’re trying to travel on a backpacker’s budget then North Africa is probably easier. Most activities in East Africa require guides or expensive tours.

Also, if you're up for it, then tackling Kilimanjaro is very doable. The summit day is very difficult (I won't pretend otherwise), but definitely doable. No mountaineering gear required at any point.
Egypt is very popular because of the Great Pyramids of Giza and other ancient Egyptian sites (i.e. Luxor).

Morocco is popular primarily because of it's proximity to Western European travellers. It also has plenty of interesting history as well. Morocco is probably the most "backpacker-friendly" in terms of an abundance of cheap hostels and good bus and train networks to go from city to city.

As far as safety goes, I think the countries I have listed are some of the "safe" ones with more well-developed tourist infrastructure. That being said, any country has areas which are unsafe. I never felt really unsafe although I was advised not to travel at night while in southwestern Uganda and Rwanda. Also, when I was in southwestern Uganda, there was some militia clashes with Congolese rebels several days after we left Kisoro. I would personally not travel to the eastern Congo although I met one backpacker in Uganda who had just come from there. Somalia, South Sudan and the Central African Republic would also be on my no-go list. And Mali is pretty unstable right now too I think.

Related Links

Which countries should I visit in Africa? Why?
How many African countries have you visited and which one is your favorite and why?
Which are the best countries to visit in Africa for first time visitors to the continent?
What are the safest African countries to travel to right now?
What is the most visited tourist attraction in Africa?
What's the most westernised African country?
What are the best African cities to live in?
Is South Africa the most developed country in Africa?
What is the best place to immigrate to in Africa?
Which is most beautiful city in Africa?

Quand est-ce que les Français sont arrivés au Maroc ? When did the French come to Morocco?

Jerome Cohen Suivre Mon père était de Casablanca, ma mère fait un super tajine!Traducteur · mer.

Soufian Daniel Yahyaoui Proud Moroccan. I know everything related to my country. Cette réponse peut ne pas être une traduction fidèle de la réponse de Soufian Daniel Yahyaoui dans Quora en anglais :

En 1905, après la première crise marocaine. La France et l'Espagne décidèrent de diviser leurs zones d'influence au Maroc. En voici une carte :

La France avait annexé les parties occidentales du Maroc tandis que l'Espagne prenait le nord. Avance rapide, plus tard, en 1912, lors de la deuxième crise marocaine, la France l'emporte. Le Maroc est devenu un protectorat colonial de l'Espagne et de la France. Mais l'empire shérifien ne passe pas entièrement sous le contrôle de la France car les régions orientales du Maroc, où vivent les tribus berbères zaïennes, se sont révoltées contre le sultan marocain. La République française envoie donc le maréchal Lyautey pour vaincre les rebelles et les rallier au nom du sultan alaouite.

Les tribus zaïennes seront vaincues dans une guerre sanglante qui durera de 1914 à 1921. Les Zaïens réussiront à remporter de nombreuses victoires contre les Français mais finiront par être vaincus. La bataille d'El Herri fut la plus grande victoire des Zaïens. Menée par le chef de tribu Mouha O Hammou Zayani.

Avec 5000 hommes. Armés de fusils obsolètes et n'utilisant que des armes traditionnelles, ils ont réussi à vaincre les forces françaises inférieures en nombre mais bien équipées, comptant environ 1200 hommes dirigés par le colonel René Laverdure. Cette victoire coûtera la vie au colonel. Après avoir gagné la guerre, les Français ont réussi à pacifier le Maroc. Maintenant, avancez rapidement vers... les choses normales.

La République a chargé Lyautey de devenir un gouverneur colonial du protectorat nouvellement établi du Maroc. Sous sa direction, le maréchal Lyautey va moderniser le Maroc. C'est lui qui a construit Casablanca et Rabat. Lyautey est fasciné par la culture marocaine, il décide donc de la préserver et de limiter l'immigration européenne au Maroc. La plupart des immigrants venaient d'Algérie. Le Maroc était en fait le Far West français. La population européenne maximale du Maroc était de 400 000 personnes (250 000 Français et 150 000 Espagnols). Voici la carte du protectorat du Maroc.

Qu'est-ce que je peux faire à Casablanca, Maroc en 24 h et y a-t-il de la securité ?

Imane Abounacer Lieu : Casablanca, Maroc2 ans

J'ai pou vous 10 endroits que vous pouvez les visite au Casablanca ….

1● Au centre de Casablanca, la place Mohamed V est un bel exemple de la soif de modernisme à l'occidentale qui frappait le Maroc dans les années 1920 sous le protectorat français. Vous y trouverez de prestigieux bâtiments administratifs et des banques, le tout mêlant le style arabo-andalou et Art Déco.

Le soir venu, ne manquez pas la fontaine monumentale à l'ouest de la place, où des spectacles de son et lumière sont donnés

2● Construit à partir de 1918 pour accueillir les familles venant des quatre coins du Maroc, le quartier des Habbous est un exemple réussi de médina moderne qui a su garder un style traditionnel. Aujourd'hui y vivent surtout des commercants et des libraires.

Le mieux est encore de s'y perdre et d'en profiter pour faire quelques emplettes !

3● Ouvert en 2011, le Morocco Mall est le 20e plus grand centre commercial du monde et le 2e plus grand d'Afrique. Véritable fierté nationale, c'est le paradis du shopping et l'un des plus importants symboles du dynamisme économique de Casablanca.

A l'intérieur vous trouverez les plus importantes chaînes internationales de magasins mais aussi de nombreuses attractions comme un aquarium, une patinoire et un parc d'attraction.

4● Également connue sous le nom d'Ain Diab, la corniche de Casablanca est un lieu prisé des habitants qui viennent y prendre l'air le week-end. C'est également là que vous trouverez les plus hauts lieux de la nuit casaouia.

Promenez-vous le long de l'océan et profitez du panorama !

5● Ouverte aux non-musulmans, cette mosquée est absolument extraordinaire : plus haut minaret du monde musulman, plus grand espace de prière d'Afrique, et véritable symbole de la ville. Ne manquez pas de la visiter pour découvrir un étonnant mélange de techniques modernes et de savoir-faire ancestral marocain. Superbe ¡

6● Construite en 1934 dans un style Art Déco, la Villa des Arts de Casablanca abrite de nombreux événements culturels dans l'objectif de partager et de promouvoir la culture marocaine.

Rendez-vous sur le site de la Fondation ONA pour découvrir sa programmation très variée et abondante !

7● Détruite par un tremblement de terre en 1755, l'ancienne médina de Casablanca fut reconstruite en 1770 par le sultan Sidi Mohammed Ben Abdallah. Si ce n'est pas la plus belle du Maroc, elle est très agréable et permet de découvrir la vie quotidienne des habitants de Casablanca.

Commencez votre visite par la place des Nations Unies, puis passez par la Grande mosquée et la Kouba Sidi Bou Smara. Terminez enfin votre visite par la place de la Sqala.

8● Plus grand parc de Casablanca, le parc de Ligue arabe est idéal pour prendre le frais à l'ombre des palmiers et profiter d'un peu de calme avant de retourner dans l'agitation de la médina.

9● Situé dans le quartier des Habous, l’ancien palais royal de Casablanca est certainement le plus beau monument de la ville. Construit dans les années 1920 dans un style arabo-musulman relativement moderne, il possède de superbes jardins méditerranéens.

Un haut lieu de l’histoire de la ville à ne pas manquer !

10● Située à 17km de Casa, la plage de Tamaris Dar Bouazza est idéale pour les familles mais aussi pour les amateurs de sports nautiques.

Un must si vous souhaitez vous évader de la ville pendant quelques heures et profiter d’un superbe coucher du soleil

Questions similaires

Pourquoi les français préfèrent-ils aller en Tunisie ou au Maroc plutôt qu’en Algérie ?
Quelle est la meilleure ville au Maroc ?
Est-ce une bonne idée de quitter le Maroc (Casablanca) pour s'installer en France (Paris) avec une femme et deux enfants de 2 ans et 5 ans après avoir vécu 38 ans de sa vie au Maroc ?
Quels sont les faits sur le Maroc auxquels les étrangers ne croient pas avant d'arriver au Maroc ?
Je vais aller au Maroc vers fin d'Octobre 2019? Où est-ce que je peux visiter à Casablanca et Rabat ?
Que ne doit-on absolument pas faire au Maroc ?
A quoi ressemble la vie nocturne à Rabat, au Maroc ?
Quelle est votre ville préférée au Maroc et pourquoi ?
Pourquoi y a t il beaucoup plus de lieux nocturnes à Marrakech qu’à Casablanca ?
Que ne dois-je absolument pas faire en visitant le Maroc ?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il plus fort que l'Algérie ?
Quel sont les dix lieux à voir à Marrakech ?
Qui aime visiter le Maroc et pourquoi ?
Quelles sont les choses qu'on aime au Maroc ?
Pourquoi les Marocains fuient-ils le Maroc ?

Est-ce que la France a été colonisée ?

Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?

Nathalie Suivre a plus d'un livre dans son sacdim.

Les marocains sont marqués par la haute montagne tandis que les algériens sont méditerranéens. L'Algérie a vécu sous toutes les républiques françaises (sauf la première) jusqu'à ce que les algériens ont pris les armes contre la France et ont créé une république révolutionnaire. Les marocains en revanche ont pris fait et cause pour leur sultan humilié puis exilé reconduisant leur allégeance ancienne au trône alaouite.

La Tunisie (ou pays de Tunis), qui se dessinera comme tel à l'époque de la domination ottomane, répond à l'ancien territoire de Carthage. La domination française favorisera là aussi l'émergence d'un mouvement nationaliste.

Questions similaires

Pourquoi les français préfèrent-ils aller en Tunisie ou au Maroc plutôt qu'en Algérie ?
Pourquoi les Berbères ressemblent-ils aux Arabes alors que génétiquement il s'agit de 2 populations bien différentes ?
Pourquoi les Berbères ne se rebellent-ils pas contre les musulmans et ne suivent-ils pas leurs anciens modes de vie et croyances ?
Pourquoi préfèrent-ils rester musulmans ?
Pourquoi les Arabes détestent l'Algérie ?
Pourquoi les Français pensent-ils que les Maghrébins sont arabes?
Les Algériens, Marocains et Tunisiens parlent-ils un arabe assez proche pour se comprendre d'un pays à l'autre ?
Les Algériens sont-ils des Arabes ou des Berbères, ou un brassage entre les deux ?
Pourquoi parle-t-on presque toujours de la relation France/Algérie et si peu de la colonisation française en Tunisie et au Maroc ?
Pourquoi les Maghrébins sont-ils également appelés des Arabes ?
Pourquoi Abdelmoumen (calife des Almohades) est-il revendiqué comme?

Pourquoi les Algériens, au moins ceux en France, parlent si bien le français ?

Alexandre Roswilo

Précédent lieu : Afrique (1975–2019)2 ans

C'est des préjugés .

[1]
Il est important de comprendre comme c'est le cas avec l'anglais qu'il y'a des français et non un français .

[2]
Exemple pratique :
Demandez à un Français ce que sait qu'un maquis . Puis demandez à un Ivoirien . Vous serez surpris .

[3]

Les Burkinabés vous parlerons eux dans un contexte précis de Tchapalodrome :

[4]
Un Camerounais dira : "Je suis une élite dans ce village " . Un Français lui dira : "je fais partie de l'élite de ce village ".

[5] (L'élite du village !)
Un Congoloais de Brazza ou de RDC dira : "je suis sapé comme un mannequin " . Un Français dira par contre : "je suis très élégant".

[6]
Les Belges ;

♥ Français ♥	♥ Belge ♥
Soixante-dix	Septante
Quatre-vingt-dix	Nonante
Blanco	Tip-ex
Endive	Chicon
Sucre glace	Sucre impalpable
Scotch	Papier collant
Serviette	Essuie
Poignée	Clinche
Combiné	Cornet
Déchèterie	Parc à conteneur
Polaire	Polar
Semaine banalisée	Blocus
Terminale	Rhéto(rique)
Maire	Bourgmestre
Téléphone portable	GSM
Message/texto	SMS
Stylo-bille	Bic
Avoir du mal	Avoir dur (« J'ai dur… »)
Ne pas avoir du mal	Avoir facile (« J'ai facile… »)
Sopalin	Essuie-tout
Frigidaire	Frigo
Espiègle	Arsouille
Bavarder	Babeler
Bas/collant	Bas-collant
Petite bête (ou araignée)	Bibiche
Gâteau (sec)	Biscuit
Briller	Blinquer
Ventre/nombril	Boudine/Boutroule
Mauvaises herbes	Cruaux
Boucles (cheveux)	Crolles
Orthophoniste	Logopède
Tissu pour la vaisselle	Lavette
Non	Nenni !
Nettoyer	Reloqueter

[7]

Pour les Canadiens :

Mot québécois	Équivalent en Europe
Être plein ou être bourré	Avoir trop mangé
Fesser	Frapper
Flos	Gosses (enfants)
Frais chié	Prétentieux
Froque	Manteau
(Avoir le) Goût (de)	Avoir envie
Innocent	Imbécile
Jaser	Parler, discuter
Niaiser	Se moquer de
Party	Fête
Pentoute	Pas du tout
Peinturer	Peindre
Présentement	Actuellement, en ce moment
Quessé	Qu'est-ce que
Sacoche	Sac à main pour femmes
Secousse	Durée indéterminée
Stationnement	Parking
Tsé	Tu sais

2

[8]

Québécois	Français
Tabernak	Putin, fais chier
Plotte	Prostitué
Je m'en calice	Je m'en fous
Viarge	Vierge
Dans le fond	En gros
Brisé	Cassé
Une pièce	Un dollars
Sacrer	Jurer
Chum	Mec
Blonde	Petite copine
Laite	Moche
Fif	Gai
Niaiseux	Imbécile
Tanto	Avant ou après
Gosse	Couilles
Breuvage	Boisson
Ca va tu ?	Est-ce que ca va ?

[9]
Les peuples ne parlent pas le français de la même manière . Chaque peuple à ses expressions que les autres ne comprennent pas ou mal et c'est ça qui fait sa particularité mieux son français .
Il existe un anglais américain autant qu'un anglais britannique , indien ou nigérian avec des expressions ou locutions propres à chacun .

[10]
C'est le cas avec le français avec les dérivées belge , canadien , sénégalais, ivoirien , congolais , camerounais , tunisien et d'autres .

Vouloir parler le français comme un Français ne signifie pas bien le parler . Mieux le parler comme un Canadien ou un Congolais ne veut pas dire qu'on le parle mal .
Notes de bas de page
[1] Image on institutfrancais-suede.com
[2] Image on radiofrance.fr
[3] Image on pinimg.com
[4] Image on wordpress.com
[5] Image on quoracdn.net
[6] Image on arte.tv
[7] Image on blogspot.com
[8] Image on pinimg.com
[9] Image on blogspot.com
[10] Image on pinimg.com

Comment les Carthaginois ont-ils fait pour que leurs éléphants soient si agressifs ? How did the Carthaginians get the elephants to be so aggressive?

Jerome Cohen
Un ami des animaux depuis toujours, de toutes espèces.Traducteur · 30 août

Nathaniel Rice Bi, animal researcher Cette réponse peut ne pas être une traduction fidèle de la réponse de Nathaniel Rice dans Quora en anglais :

Maltraitance animale. Vraiment.
Ça et le fait que les éléphants de guerre de Carthage étaient aussi agressifs que les autres.

Bon, les éléphants ne sont pas les animaux les plus gentils de la planète. En fait, ce sont des cons. Les éléphants foncent sur tout ce qu'ils considèrent comme une menace et le font avec une force incroyable. C'est pourquoi les éléphants de guerre étaient (initialement) attractifs pour des dirigeants comme Alexandre le Grand et c'est pourquoi les gens ont commencé à les utiliser.
Donc, pour commencer, les éléphants sont des murs massifs de destruction qui ont des problèmes de gestion de la colère. Des forteresses ambulantes. Ils étaient des tanks avant que les tanks soient cool.

Et comme si les éléphants captifs d'aujourd'hui n'étaient pas déjà maltraités (dans la plupart des cas), ils l'étaient encore plus dans l'Antiquité.
Les mahouts (les conducteurs d'éléphants) de l'Antiquité étaient armés d'un assortiment de perches et de crochets pointus pour "diriger" (aiguillonner) les éléphants.

En plus de ces coups désagréables, certains éléphants de guerre (pas tous) étaient équipés de howdahs, de grandes selles à toit qui offraient un abri et une position avantageuse pour les archers ou les lanciers. Des études montrent que les éléphants, aussi forts soient-ils, ne peuvent pas porter ces selles sans être blessés.

Quel est le rapport entre ce discours sur le bien-être des animaux et l'agressivité des éléphants de guerre de Carthage ?
Eh bien, les éléphants ne sont pas idiots. Il est clair que les éléphants de guerre n'étaient pas très bien traités dans l'Antiquité. Et quand les animaux ne sont pas bien traités, ils développent des problèmes émotionnels et se déchaînent - surtout les animaux très intelligents comme les éléphants. C'est pourquoi on entend tant d'histoires horribles d'animaux de cirque qui tuent des artistes.
Alors, quand on prend un animal déjà capricieux, qu'on lui met une énorme selle lourde qu'il peut à peine supporter, qu'on ne s'en occupe pas correctement, qu'on l'aiguillonne avec des bâtons et qu'on le plante quand il n'obéit pas, c'est la recette pour un cauchemar enragé, furieux et traumatisé.

Hannibal et les autres utilisateurs d'éléphants dirigeaient simplement cette rage abusive vers leurs ennemis.

Je veux dire, il vaut mieux que les soldats de votre ennemi finissent en brochette sur les défenses de l'éléphant que les vôtres.

Questions similaires

Qu'arrivait-il aux légionnaires romains qui étaient vaincus au combat mais qui survivaient ? Y avait-il un reproche ou une sanction publique ?

Est-il impossible qu'il y eut des légionnaires romains voire des centurions noirs ?

Est-ce qu'on a retrouvé les restes des éléphants avec lesquels Hannibal a traversé les Alpes ?

Pourquoi le falx des Daces fut-il si dévastateur contre les légionnaires romains ?

Comment les Romains ont-ils entraîné des éléphants de guerre ?

Comment les éléphants d’Hannibal ont-ils survécu à la traversée des Alpes ?

Pourquoi les Romains combattaient-ils des lions ?

Pourquoi est-il inhumain de monter à dos d'éléphant mais pas à cheval alors que les éléphants sont beaucoup plus forts que les chevaux ?

Puisque les Romains ont utilisé des unités auxiliaires de nombreuses cultures, pourquoi n'ont-ils pas gardé des unités grecques de Phalange comme auxiliaires ? Il n'y a sûrement rien qui puisse les battre de front sur un terrain plat.

Les éléphants de guerre avaient-ils des noms ?

Pourquoi les Maghrébins sont-ils également appelés des Arabes ?

Samir سمير Farid فريد Lieu : Maroc (1977–aujourd'hui) 2 ans

Réponse originale : Pourquoi les maghrébins sont-ils également appelés des arabes ?
Je comprends pas l'idée derrière cet acharnement identitaire, et je n'y vois aucune utilité pour améliorer le quotidien des maghrébins qui souffrent de tout sauf d'une pseudo persécution des peuples non arabes.
Il ya quelques jours, j'ai lu une réponse d''un Quoran prétendant être d'origine franco-Kabyle, qui prétend que les arabes n'ont rien apporté à l'humanité, ni même à l'islam, dans sa prose, on lit que les arabes ne sont que des caravaniers bédouins pilleurs, et que les perses, les turcs et les amazighs sont les seuls à avoir apporté du bien au monde arabo_musulman, oubliant que l'âge d'or de ce monde était l'œuvre du concours de toutes les composantes de ce monde, de la péninsule ibérique jusqu'aux frontières de la Chine, des terres où tous se considéraient comme étant une communauté de croyants.
Au Maghreb, nos vrais problèmes sont à chercher dans la misère politique et la corruption, et pas dans une adolescence identittaire. Suivre Samir سمير Farid فريد

Questions similaires

Pourquoi les Berbères ressemblent-ils aux Arabes alors que génétiquement il s'agit de 2 populations bien différentes ?
Pourquoi les Arabes du Levant se considèrent-ils « plus arabes » que les Maghrébins ?
Si vous êtes nord-africain/maghrébin : considérez-vous que vous êtes arabe ou amazigh/berbère ?
Pourquoi ceux qu’on appelle des Maghrébins s'appellent ainsi tout en sachant qu'ils sont sur le continent africain ?
Pourquoi les gens avec des origines étrangères ont-ils des prénoms français sauf les maghrébins ?
Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?
Pourquoi beaucoup d'Arabes nés en France se sentent-ils plus arabes que français ?
Est-ce que les Berbères sont d'origine arabe ?
Quel est la différence entre arabe et maghrebin ?

Pourquoi les femmes maghrébines rejettent les hommes maghrébins ? Pourquoi elles préfèrent se métisser, et pourquoi il est de plus en plus rare de voir des couples maghrébins ?
Pourquoi les Arabes préfèrent migrer vers les pays occidentaux plutôt que les pays arabes riches ?
Pourquoi les arabes détestent-ils les chiens ?
Pourquoi les "kabyles" ne se considèrent pas arabes ?
Qui étaient les Berbères, qui vivaient dans le Nord de l'Afrique, bien avant que les arabes arrivent ?
Pourquoi les Arabes ne forment-ils pas une vraie "Union Arabe" (pas la Ligue Arabe) sur le modèle de l'Union Européenne sachant qu'ils sont culturellement et linguistiquement plus homogènes Que se passerait-il si l'Axe gagnait en Afrique du Nord avant l'opération Barbarossa ?

Zilin Wang A étudié à University de l'Illinois à Urbana-Champaign7 mo

Comme la majeure partie des forces armées de l'Axe était en Europe pour se préparer à la guerre contre l'Union soviétique, l'opération Barbarossa et une grande partie du front de l'Est seraient à peu près les mêmes. La principale différence est que l'Axe a capturé le canal de Suez, le lien entre le Royaume-Uni et ses colonies en Inde et en Asie du Sud-Est. Cela renforcerait la perception du Japon impérial que l'Empire britannique était vulnérable. Ainsi, la guerre contre les colonies européennes en Asie du Sud-Est par le Japon impérial aurait pu commencer plus tôt.

La principale différence dans l'opération Barbarossa pour l'Union soviétique était le prêt-bail américain, la moitié de l'aide qui allait de l'Alaska à l'Extrême-Orient, à une époque où le Japon impérial et l'Union soviétique avaient conclu un pacte de non-agression. En obligeant le Japon impérial à rompre le pacte de non-agression, l'Axe pourrait avoir une chance de couper cette aide.
Bien que l'Axe ait occupé la Norvège et rendu risquée la route arctique des États-Unis à l'Union soviétique, seulement 7 % des expéditions ont été perdues. Si les sous-marins étaient plus agressifs dans cette zone, cela aurait un impact énorme sur le déroulement de l'opération Barbarossa.
La troisième option pour l'Axe est que l'Iran devienne un membre à part entière de l'Axe et attaque le Caucase et l'Asie centrale, détournant les forces soviétiques des principaux théâtres de l'opération Barbarossa. Malheureusement, le partage d'une frontière avec l'Inde contrôlée par les Britanniques (aujourd'hui le Pakistan) l'a rendu vulnérable aux attaques de deux armées alliées. De plus, les troupes de l'Axe dans le Sinaï devraient combattre à travers la Palestine, la Transjordanie sous contrôle britannique et mettre l'Irak aux côtés de l'Axe pour fournir une assistance à l'Iran. Comme le montre la situation au Moyen-Orient aujourd'hui, cela serait rendu difficile par la situation politique très complexe de la région.

La plus grande différence que l'Axe puisse faire est que Mussolini abandonne son rêve d'un Nouvel Empire romain, ce qui était difficile à faire compte tenu de sa personnalité et de l'attrait de l'idée pour ses partisans. Cette idée a aliéné de nombreuses personnes en Égypte qui considéraient les Italiens non comme des libérateurs de l'influence britannique, mais comme remplaçant un suzerain colonial par un autre. Si l'Axe avait promis la libération de la domination coloniale britannique et française, il ne serait pas difficile de recruter des habitants pour soutenir l'Axe. Francisco Franco avait mené avec succès une stratégie similaire avec le Maroc espagnol, en présentant la République espagnole comme une institution antireligieuse.

Pour Hitler, c'est la réticence de l'Allemagne nazie à compromettre son idéologie qui a finalement conduit à la défaite de l'opération Barbarossa. Si l'Axe avait promis aux Ukrainiens et à d'autres groupes de l'Union soviétique leurs propres États indépendants, ils auraient pu être accueillis comme des libérateurs remplaçant plutôt la domination soviétique par la leur. De nombreux Russes anticommunistes qui voulaient un gouvernement post-stalinien en Russie se sont finalement rangés du côté de l'Union soviétique en raison de la politique génocidaire d'Hitler et de ses plans pour faire de la Russie une partie du Grand Reich allemand.

Questions similaires

Que se passerait-il si la Terre s'arrêtait brutalement de tourner pendant 42 secondes ?
S'il n'y avait pas eu d'hiver, comment cela aurait-il affecté l'opération Barbarossa ?
Compte tenu du succès de l'invasion initiale de l'Union soviétique et si Hitler avait laissé ses généraux assumer entièrement la stratégie et la tactique, à quel point les Allemands étaient-ils proches de la victoire ?
Pourquoi le troisième Reich n'a-t-il pas pris au sérieux la campagne militaire en Afrique du Nord ?
Qu'est-ce qui aurait pu se passer différemment si les nazis n'avaient pas engagé de ressources militaires en Afrique du Nord ?
Pourquoi Rommel a-t-il perdu en Afrique du Nord ?
Si Léopold III de Belgique ne s'était pas rendu à l'Allemagne en 1940, cela aurait-il changé le cours de la Seconde Guerre mondiale ?
Si les Français avaient continué à se battre pendant la guerre en 1940 et s'ils s'étaient repositionnés en Afrique du Nord, est-ce que les Allemands auraient pu organiser une invasion réussie de l'Afrique du Nord française ?
Si les Soviétiques avaient décidé de pousser les Alliés hors de l'Europe occidentale à la fin de la Seconde Guerre mondiale, auraient-ils pu le faire ?
Si Hitler avait été tué par les membres du complot Valkyrie, la fin de la Guerre aurait-

Le français est-il de fait une langue nationale en Algérie?

Samir Berkani Anciennement Errant dans la Cité 5 janv.

Le Français devrait être reconnu comme une langue nationale au même titre que l'Arabe et le Berbère.Loin d'une quelconque posture idéologique faisant de cette langue un banal héritage colonial, cette langue a permis un tant soit peu à l'élite algérienne de se former et a ouvert l'accès à la civilisation occidentale en ayant connu elle-même une évolution historique qui a accompagné le développement des sciences dures et des sciences humaines en France.Alors pourquoi nous priver des apports de cette langue d'autant plus que la linguistique et les sciences de la communication sont suffisamment développées en France (sémantique dont le pionnier est De Saussure lui-même Français pour n'en citer que lui!!!)

Questions similaires

Pourquoi il n'y a qu'avec l'Algérie que les relations sont souvent tendues alors que la France a occupé d'autres pays ?
En tant que français quelles sont les erreurs que l'on fait en parlant l'anglais de calquage de schéma grammaticaux de notre langue sur la langue anglaise ?
Les gens des pays africains qui parlent français détestent-ils la France et la langue française ?
Pourquoi les français préfèrent-ils aller en Tunisie ou au Maroc plutôt qu'en Algérie ?
Pourquoi certains Algériens font n'importe quoi en France ?
Est-il possible à l'avenir que l'arabe soit une deuxième langue officielle en France ?
Pourquoi le français est la plus belle langue du monde ?
Pourquoi les Arabes détestent l'Algérie ?
Pourquoi le français est-il une langue latine, alors que les Gaulois sont celtes et les Francs sont germaniques ?
Pourquoi les Algériens, au moins ceux en France, parlent si bien le français ?

Française en Tunisie et au Maroc
Pourquoi parle-t-on presque toujours de la relation France/Algérie et si peu de la colonisation française en Tunisie et au Maroc ?

Pierre Boutin A travaillé à Armée du Salut (2012–2015) 4 ans

N'étant pas historien, je te ferai une reponse très sommaire, et, j'espère, pas trop inexacte: Parce que l'Algérie, contrairement au Maroc et à la Tunisie, a été une colonie de peuplement. Des générations et des générations de Pieds-Noirs ont vécu sur son territoire pendant plus d'un siècle (grosso modo depuis la mi-XIXème jusqu'à la mi-XXème).

Parce que la décolonisation a donné lieu à une guerre catastrophique, avec son lot d'horreurs et d'exactions, sur lesquelles, côté francais, on se contente bien souvent de jeter un voile pudique.

Parce qu'elle est liée à d'importants mouvements de populations : pendant et immédiatement après la guerre, un retour massif et précipité des Pieds-Noirs en Europe d'une part, puis une émigration économique de travailleurs algériens d'autre part.
Parce qu'à l'ère postcoloniale, et jusqu'à aujourd'hui, 55 ans après l'Indépendance, le traumatisme n'a pas été encore été tout-à-fait surmonté, tous les enseignements historiques n'ont pas encore été tirés.
Parce qu'aussi, plus simplement, l'Algérie reste plus importante, en termes de superficie et de population, que ne le sont le Maroc et la Tunisie!

Questions similaires

Pendant la colonisation en Algérie, est-il vrai que la France a octroyé la nationalité française aux indigènes juifs, mais pas au peuple musulman ? Si oui, pourquoi?

Pourquoi les français préfèrent-ils aller en Tunisie ou au Maroc plutôt qu'en Algérie ?

Avant la colonisation française en 1830, l'Algérie (ou les territoires qui la formaient) avait-elle déjà été longuement sous domination étrangère ?
Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?

Un Algérien d'un certain âge m'a montré la carte d'identité Française qu'il possédait en 1962, juste avant l'indépendance. Il y était noté "Français musulman". Y avait-il bien un système d'apartheid à l'époque de l'Algérie Française ?

Pourquoi la France ne s'excuse-t-elle pas une bonne fois pour toutes pour la colonisation vis à vis de l'Algérie ?

Pourquoi il n'y a qu'avec l'Algérie que les relations sont souvent tendues alors que la France a occupé d'autres pays ?

La France est-elle prospère à cause de la colonisation ? Si la colonisation n'avait jamais eu lieu, comment se présenterait la France ?

La France a-t-elle répandu l'analphabétisme en Algérie pendant la colonisation ?

Pourquoi l'Algérie ne s'excuse-t-elle pas auprès de la France pour sa tentative ratée de

Pourquoi les pays magrébins refusent-ils de reprendre leurs ressortissants entrés clandestinement sur le territoire français ?

Chri Chri Précédent lieu : Afrique centrale (2007–2015) 12 nov.

Je me lance (mais il y a une réponse de Mina Daoud très complète et fouillée), ils sont tout simplement trop nombreux car il y a trop de naissances et c'est un problème civilisationnel. Il faudrait réguler les naissances, comme l'a fait la Chine. Il y avait 6 à 7 enfants par femme dans les années 1950 et Mao encourageait la natalité car il imaginait une guerre contre la grande Russie. Mais quand ils ont compris qu'ils ne pouvaient pas sortir du tiers monde avec 6 enfants par femme, ils ont pris des mesures strictes (récemment assouplies). Il faut quand même noter que malgré la possibilité d'avoir 2 enfants, le retour en arrière est compliqué, une femme chinoise ne veut pas de second enfant (j'en sais quelque chose) car on a conditionné les Chinois, on leur a par exemple dit qu'un étudiant coûtait cher (ce qui est vrai) et il n'y a aucune aide sociale, faire des enfants dans le but de toucher un RSA ou gagner des points de retraite, ce n'est même pas imaginable! Les PMA (pays moins avancés, à ne pas confondre avec les pays en voie de développement qui ont un PIB par habitant inférieur à la moyenne mondiale mais rattrapent leur retard) doivent absolument réguler les naissances! D'ailleurs, Macron, fraîchement élu en juillet 2017, avait déjà compris le problème et déclaré ceci : le « défi de l'Afrique est différent (des pays européens au sortir de la guerre), il est beaucoup plus profond, il est civilisationnel ». Et de conclure : « Quand des pays ont encore sept à huit enfants par femme, vous pouvez décider d'y dépenser des milliards d'euros, vous ne stabiliserez rien. » Ça calme, hein? Les gauchos l'ont bien sûr traité de raciste et il est devenu un modèle de bien-pensance!

Mais comment fait-on moins de bébés? On aide les femmes qui ont un bébé et on supprime les aides au-delà du premier enfant, y compris pour le premier. Quand la mesure est passée en Chine, il y a bien sûr eu une période de flou. Mon épouse est née en 1980, ses parents ne l'ont pas déclarée car elle était le second enfant. Elle n'a donc pas de luku, elle n'a pas d'existence administrative. Ils l'ont finalement déclaré dans une autre province et elle doit s'y rendre chaque fois qu'elle a besoin de papiers. C'est tellement compliqué qu'ils se sont arrêtés à deux et leurs deux filles n'ont qu'un enfant. Il faut donc donner des milliards à l'Afrique pour inciter les femmes à avoir un enfant et un seul. La femme africaine qui touche 150€ par mois est très heureuse mais si elle a un second enfant et qu'on lui supprime ces 150€, très vite elle va arrêter d'en faire! Parallèlement à cela, il faut accompagner cette mesure par une communication pour ces populations: faites un seul enfant, l'état ne pourra pas les nourrir! Et il faut pousser l'éducation des femmes! Une femme diplômée et exerçant un métier fait moins d'enfants! Or ça, c'est un vrai problème dans les pays musulmans où les femmes ne jouissent pas des mêmes libertés que les hommes! Il y a donc un programme mondial pour l'éducation des femmes (et même un prix UNESCO depuis 2016) mais il donne peu de résultats à ce jour… En Afrique, l'île Maurice a réussi, les femmes sont très actives, n'ont pas d'enfants, plus aucune immigration mauricienne en Europe, le solde migratoire doit même être négatif…

Il faut aussi se demander pourquoi les Africaines font des enfants? D'une part, un enfant meurt plus facilement en Afrique qu'en Europe, ne serait-ce qu'à cause du palu (et on est en train de découvrir un vaccin donc la démographie va exploser). D'autre part, les enfants sont la caisse de retraite. Quand vous arrêtez de travailler, l'état ne vous donne rien. Si vous avez eu 8 enfants, même s'ils donnent chacun l'équivalent de 30€, vous pouvez vivre normalement.

Questions similaires

Pourquoi il n'y a qu'avec l'Algérie que les relations sont souvent tendues alors que la France a occupé d'autres pays ?

La France a-t-elle raison de réduire de 50% le nombre de visas accordés aux ressortissants du Maghreb, à cause de leur refus de reprendre leurs ressortissants expulsés ?

Pour quelles raisons Macron vient-il d'annoncer que la France allait réduire drastiquement le nombre de visas accordés au Maroc, à l'Algérie et à la Tunisie ?

Le gouvernement algérien a-t-il atteint le sommet de l'imbécillité en interdisant le survol de son territoire aux avions français ?

Pourquoi le Français est-il mal aimé des autres pays ?
Y a-t-il des pays qui aiment les Français?

Pourquoi les Français se sentent-ils les meilleurs en Europe et essaient de dévaloriser les autres pays dès qu'on les compare à la France ?

Pourquoi l'Algérie ne défend pas les Ouïghours ?
Pourquoi l'Algérie interdit l'usage du Français ?
Pour quelle raison principale pensez-vous que la France n'a pas réussi à faire en sorte

Pour quelles raisons Macron vient-il d'annoncer que la France allait réduire drastiquement le nombre de visas accordés au Maroc, à l'Algérie et à la Tunisie ?

Eddy Leclerc Chef de projet informatique 28 sept.

J'ai lu les 3 première réponses, elles parlent de politique politicienne. Vous n'avez donc pas votre réponse.

En fait, depuis quelques mois (plus de 12) déjà, le ministre de l'intérieur Français s'est déplacé dans ces pays (Maroc, Algérie et Tunisie) afin de discuter avec eux de leurs ressortissants présents sur le territoire français sans droit, ni titre. Il semblerait qu'ils aient refusés d'accepter leurs retours (pas de fourniture de laisser passer). Les statistiques font que moins de 1% des personnes qui devraient être reconduites dans ces pays le sont effectivement. Les 99% autres n'ont pas eu l'honneur d'avoir ce document. La France ne peut donc pas renvoyer ces personnes dans leurs pays (règles internationales).

Cherchant à trouver un moyen de forcer la main, il a été trouvé cette méthode. Pour les 6 mois prochains Visas limité à 50% pour ressortissants du Maroc et de la Tunisie, 30% pour Algérie. Sur la base des chiffres des 6 derniers mois. Lié aux élections ou pas, est un autre sujet.

Questions similaires

La France a-t-elle raison de réduire de 50% le nombre de visas accordés aux ressortissants du Maghreb, à cause de leur refus de reprendre leurs ressortissants expulsés ?

Pourquoi les français préfèrent-ils aller en Tunisie ou au Maroc plutôt qu'en Algérie ?

Pourquoi les pays magrébins refusent-ils de reprendre leurs ressortissants entrés clandestinement sur le territoire français ?

Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?

Il me semble que la France et l'Allemagne ont des liens plus forts que les Français et les Britanniques ; la France a-t-elle oublié son histoire ?

Pourquoi la France a-t-elle colonisé l'Algérie ?
Pour quelle raison la France durcit-elle l'octroi de visas pour les Tunisiens, Algériens et Marocains ?
La France a décidé de diminuer les visas pour l'Algérie et le Maroc, quelles conséquences ?
Pensez-vous que Macron doit s'excuser pour la colonisation de l'Algérie, la Tunisie, le Maroc ...?
Est-il vrai que le gouvernement Algérien, comme l'en accuse le gouvernement Français,

How and why was Morocco too weak and backward, when first the Spanish invaded, conquered, colonised and took over it, then the Portuguese did this, finally it was the French and the British who did the same?

Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan Lived in Meknès, Morocco (1996–0) Aug 5

First off, you're talking about two seprate events and one of whom was reversed within a few decades.

The Portuguese (not Spanish) invasions occurred during Morocco's 89 year long civil war and Portugal lost all territories but a couple.

The French invasion occurred during yet another civil war but 400 years after the first one.

So let's discuss the Portuguese invasion as I've discussed the French one before. What caused it?

A family crisis, a Jewish Prime Minister of an Islamic State and a vendetta

Long history short:

In 1420, the Marinid Sultan Abu Said Uthman III was assassinated for a defeat he suffered at the hands of the Portuguese. The Sultan's assassination and the fact his heir was a 1 year old baby named Abdelhaq , sparked a crisis that ended when a relative of the slain sultan, Yahya al-Wattasi , who was a prominent noble and governor of the coastal province of Salé, raised an army and marched on the capital.

Marinid Morocco at its height

Yahya then killed the assassins, put Abdelhaq on the throne, raised a larger army and marched north to defeat the Portuguese with ease.

This brought on 38 years of Wattasid rule

Yahya named himself Grand Vizier (Prime Minister) and ruled Morocco even when Abdelhaq became an adult man. Yahya died in 1448 but his nephew, Ali, succeeded him as Grand Vizier. Ali served in that position until his death in 1458 and so his cousin, Yahya's son, Yahya II took the position.

Sultan Abdelhaq was no moron. He realized that the Wattasids were the true powers in Morocco, so in 1459 Sultan Abdelhaq had Yahya II and everyone related to the Wattasids executed. Only 2 Wattasid family members survived the massacre.

This brought on two events

Sultan Abdelhaq wished to avoid a repeat of the Wattasids so he selected a Jew named Aaron Ben Batash to be the Grand Vizier. He believed that as a Jew, Aaron would never be able to supplant him in the same way the Wattasids did.

Mohammed al-Wattasi survived the massacre and roamed the country where he regularly met with chieftains and nobles who were unhappy with the new leadership in the capital.

Which brings us to the 1465 Moroccan Revolt

There are a lot of versions of what happened and what spark caused the revolt but the one I will be retelling in this answer is the one discussed by Israeli-Moroccan historian Michel Abitbol.

Mohammed Al-Wattasi infiltrated the city of Fes with a band of armed men

He met with Wattasid loyalists who remained in the city even after the massacre, they planned and planned and planned.

Finally their opportunity to strike came one Friday morning when Muslims flock to Mosques for prayer. The Wattasid loyalists armed themselves and thus

The 1465 Moroccan Revolt broke out

The Marinid loyalists were overwhelmed and within a few hours the entire capital with the exception of the Jewish quarter was captured by Al-Wattasi’s men.

The Jews resisted as they prospered under Sultan Abdelhaq which saw a great number of Jews become government officials. As punishment for their resistance, Al-Wattasi had the quarter sacked and the Jews there killed.

Painting depicting the sacking of Rome, there's not one for Fes so this is for illustration

However al-Wattasi is very strange for this as Abitbol writes he later welcomed Jewish refugees from Spain and gave them land. Regardless the result was simple:

Morocco immediately collapsed

When word reached the other cities and towns that the Marinid dynasty had finally ended and Mohammed was the new Sultan, the chieftains and nobles were not impressed.

The Hintata tribe stormed the southern imperial capital of Marrakech, and made it the capital of their tribal state

The Ouartajin family which governed the northeast frontier with Algeria proclaimed independence.

The only reason why Morocco didn't get erased from history was because Mohammed al-Wattasi managed to scrape together a loose coalition of northern chieftains, nobles and Islamic scholars. The American historian Comer Paul III wrote that the Wattasid coalition was able to field 20,000–30,000 soldiers whenever needed, this was far larger than any of their rivals could field.

Thus the Portuguese entered the picture

By 1500 Morocco was divided into three spheres:

The Wattasid Sphere: Sultan Mohammed al-Wattasi had managed to gain control of a good chunk of the kingdom and acquired lip service from other warlords and powers such as the previously mentioned Hintata tribe and Ouartajin family. Even if they didn't always follow his decrees (and they never did).

The Independent Sphere: Some families and tribes continued to act independently and refused to even pay lip service to the Wattasids.

The Portuguese Sphere: Some families and tribes decided to not only be independent but work with the Portuguese so as to gain an advantage over their rivals.

The Portuguese model was simple

They attacked a coastal settlement, slaughtered and enslaved the Moroccans inside it

They then repopulated the settlement with Portuguese settlers and soldiers

They then allied with a nearby chieftain and noble, they supported them in their conflicts in exchange for the chieftain and noble agreeing to help defend the Portuguse settlements.

One of the most infamous allies of Portugal was the tribal chieftain Yahya ou Tafuft who commanded several thousand tribesmen on the coast. Yahya ou Tafuft would actually lose his life helping the Portuguese defend the city of Agadir.

How was this reversed?

Well that's a very long story but here's the short version:

In 1510, an Arab chieftain named Abu Abdallah went to Mecca and had a dream where the Islamic Prophet Mohammed urged him to return and unite Morocco so as to end the civil war. Abu Abdallah rushed back to form an army of Arab tribesmen and Berber holy warriors.

Fun fact: there are two variants of the dream. The second version, and most likely invented by later Saadian Sultans, is that Abu Abdallah didn't meet the Islamic Prophet but instead awoke outside of the gates of Fes andmet two powerful male lions. Abu Abdallah was then led by the lions to the imperial palace. The lions are said to be symbols of Abu Abdallah's sons, Ahmed and Mohammed, who we will discuss now

The Saadian Dynasty was born

Abu Abdallah never lived to see his dream fulfilled as he died in 1517. However his sons, Ahmed and Mohammed , did.

Ahmed (r. 1517–1544) and Mohammed (r. 1544–1557) campaigned relentlessly against the Portuguese and refused to show them any mercy. As a result within a decade all of the Portuguese gains were reversed and all chieftains and nobles who had collaborated with the Portuguese were either assassinated or beheaded after being captured.

Morocco did unite but in two pieces with a Wattasid North and a Saadian South. Their final showdown would be in the 1550s and end with Mohammed taking the throne as the first official Saadian Sultan therefore ending the 89 year long civil war.

Related Links

How and why were the Moroccans unable to stop the French and the Spanish from invading the Mediterranean and the northern part of Morocco's Atlantic coast and Morocco conquering, colonising, taking over and militarising them and these areas too?

How were the Moroccans not able to stop the Portuguese from invading Morocco?

What took the French so long to conquer Morocco, given that they conquered Algeria in 1830?

Did the Ottomans conquer Morocco?

How and why was Morocco still wallowing in a state of medieval stagnation and feudal anarchy when the Spanish, Portuguese and the French invaded, conquered, colonised and took over it?

Why, despite the fact that France was one of the colonial powers, there is not a single country founded by French settlers? What was the difference between French colonization and Spanish and British?

Why was Napoleon unable to defeat the British at sea considering he had the shipyards and naval tradition of the Spanish, the Dutch, and the Italians with him?

What if the Prussian Army never arrived at Waterloo and Napoleon’s detachment did instead?

What if Morocco was never colonized by France?

Why did Louis XVIII send Marshal Ney, one of Napoleon's inner circle, to apprehend the emperor, instead of a royalist general?

Which language can Italians understand better, French, Portuguese or Spanish?

Why did Western Europe not repel the Ottomans out of the Balkans earlier and instead let them maintain control/enslavement for 400 years?

Why was there such a strong rivalry between Austria and France for most of their history?

Would the Napoleonic Wars have resulted differently if A) France didn't betray Spain and they succeeded in the Invasion of Portugal. or B) The Spaniards accepted French Rule and the French were able to Station troops in Spain and access Portugal?

Why didn't European powers colonize the whole African continent before embarking on others? Spain and Portugal are so close to the African region.

Pourquoi les Marocains ne supportent pas les Algériens, qui ont pourtant une culture similaire ?

Zayneb Vanessa · Suivre

C'est une blague, c'est quoi cette question de victime, Mon père est marocain et il m'a jamais mal parlé des algériens, il m'a toujours dit ce sont nos frères etc, mais par contre j'ai déjà vu maintes fois des algériens autour d un repas critiquer les marocains à mort, plusieurs fois, je suis dans une ville où ya énormément d'Algériens et quand je suis invitée quelques part et je précise pas que je suis Marocaine alors la ça tayeh à fond mon pays! (Ça je l'ai jamais vu chez les marocains par contre) et quand je dit que je suis Marocaine d'un coup tout le monde "plaisante".

Moi ta question je la formulerais plutôt autrement: pourquoi les algériens détestent autant les marocains ?!

Je dit ce que j'ai vu et le racisme que j'ai subi des innombrables fois de la part d'algeriens alors que moi mon père m'a élevé en sorte à ce que je respecte et je vois les algériens comme des frères et pas comme des ennemis!

Questions similaires

Pourquoi les français préfèrent-ils aller en Tunisie ou au Maroc plutôt qu’en Algérie ?

Pourquoi les Algériens disent-ils que les Marocains pillent leur culture et volent leur Histoire ?

Pourquoi les Algériens sont-ils si fiers de leur pays mais dans le même temps le fuient en masse ?

Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?

Pourquoi Abdelmoumen (calife des Almohades) est-il revendiqué comme Marocain par les Marocains, alors qu'il venait d'une tribu localisée en Algérie actuelle ?

Est-il plus ou moins possible de faire la différence entre un(e) Algérien(ne), un(e) Marocain(e), un(e) Tunisien(ne), sur la base de leurs traits (comme un Espagnol, un Français, un Allemand) ou est-ce impossible ?

Pourquoi les Français regardent les Marocains avec mépris ?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il plus fort que l'Algérie ?
Que pensez-vous des Algériens ?
Pourquoi les "kabyles" ne se considèrent pas arabes ?

Qu'est-ce qui a donné au Maroc l'idée qu'il pouvait rejoindre l'UE malgré l'échec de la Turquie ? What gave Morocco the idea that they could join the EU even though Turkey failed?

Doug Ramsey College of Europe grad (1971), wrote for Washington Post from Brussels

Mon père était de Casablanca, ma mère fait un super tajine!
Traducteur Mis à jour le 1 an

Le Maroc a effectivement demandé à adhérer à l'UE en 1987, mais sa demande a été rejetée d'emblée en raison de règles exigeant que tous les membres soient des pays européens. En revanche, la demande de la Turquie a été acceptée parce qu'une partie du pays est située sur le continent européen.

La Turquie est maintenant l'un des cinq pays qui peuvent en principe adhérer à l'UE (quatre en Europe de l'Est plus la Turquie), mais dans le cas de la Turquie, il y aura peu de progrès tant que le pays ne respectera pas les principes démocratiques énoncés dans divers traités.

L'immigration est l'autre facteur, car l'adhésion permettrait la libre circulation des personnes sur tout le territoire de l'UE, et il est peu probable que les membres actuels de l'UE approuvent l'adhésion et que des millions de Turcs, en particulier issus des régions les plus pauvres de Turquie, soient à la recherche de salaires plus élevés et de plus d'emplois.

En revanche, le Maroc est un partenaire commercial majeur de l'UE, qui bénéficie de la politique européenne de voisinage et de l'Union pour la Méditerranée, et la hausse de son niveau de vie et sa coopération dans de nombreux domaines lui ont valu un statut avancé de partenaire de l'UE. À ce stade, le Maroc comprend qu'il ne peut pas être membre de l'UE, mais il fait partie de l'accord de zone de libre-échange UE-Méditerranée avec l'UE - et a récemment étendu le libre-échange pour inclure non seulement les biens, mais aussi l'agriculture et les services - ce qui garantit effectivement au Maroc l'accès au marché de l'UE avec, en grande partie, les mêmes avantages que l'adhésion en ce qui concerne le commerce.

Questions similaires

Le Maroc peut-il rejoindre l'UE ? S'il se joint, que se passerait-il?
Qu'est-ce qui empêche des pays comme l'Algérie et le Maroc à se développer ?
Le Maroc a besoin de quoi pour rattraper les pays européens ?
La Turquie est-elle une menace pour l'Europe ?

Pourquoi le Maroc n'est-il pas considéré comme un pays européen alors qu'il n'est qu'à 14 km de l'Espagne ?

N'est-il pas temps d'accueillir la Turquie dans l'Europe ?
Qu'est-ce que peut apporter la Turquie de positif à l'Europe ?
Qu'est-ce qui manque le plus aux Marocains quand ils vont à l'étranger ?
La Turquie est-elle un pays européen ?
Pourquoi l'adhésion de la Turquie à l'Union Européenne est-elle au point mort ?
Faut-il suspendre le processus d'adhésion de la Turquie à l'Union européenne ?

Pourquoi la Turquie n'est-elle pas dans l'UE ? La Turquie peut-elle ou doit-elle être dans l'UE ? Son adhésion aiderait-elle à combler le fossé entre le monde chrétien et islamique et ouvrirait-elle de nouvelles opportunités au Moyen-Orient ?

Pourquoi l'UE ne monte pas plus le ton contre la Turquie alors qu'elle est bien plus puissante ?

La Turquie est-elle officiellement sortie de l'OTAN ?

Pourquoi la Turquie est-elle exclue de l'Union européenne (UE), alors qu'elle occupe une superficie importante sur le continent européen ?

La Turquie est-elle inacceptable pour l'UE uniquement en raison de différences religieuses ?

News Nigeria
Ibn BattutaMA: The Moroccan Explorer

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Wed

L. Leonett
DUMOUZA

Born 24 February 1304 – 1368/1369); he was a Berber Maghrebi scholar and explorer who travelled extensively in the lands of Afro-Eurasia, largely in the lands of Dar al-Islam. He travelled more than any other explorer in pre-modern history, totalling around 117,000 km (73,000 mi), surpassing Zheng He with about 50,000 km (31,000 mi) and Marco Polo with 24,000 km (15,000 mi).

Over a period of thirty years, Ibn Battuta visited most of southern Eurasia, including Central Asia, Southeast Asia, South Asia, China, and the Iberian Peninsula. Near the end of his life, he dictated an account of his journeys, titled A Gift to Those Who Contemplate the Wonders of Cities and the Marvels of Travelling, but commonly known as The Rihla.

Let's Discuss Ancient and Medieval Africa

Posted by Matt Smith Jan 15

Moroccan Nationalist trying to claim for the Almoravid dynasty:

I'd love to know this guy's source cuz everything I've read states that the Lamtuna were from the Sahara. So why does this guy think they are from the only snowy region in Africa?

Zirids and Normans: medieval geopolitics

Alton Allen Knowledgeable In African and African Diaspora History:Sat

What this thread is not, it is not a debate on the Blackness or non Blackness of North Africans, it is about a specific dynasty , their origins and clashes with the Normans, as they were part of a larger group allied with folks from the Levant to Egypt , involved in the fighting and occupation of Sicily and elsewhere .

The Zirids Vs Normans

Was looking into the Zirids , who they were why did they figure so large among the Fatimids and beyond, these Saharan folks were the Sanhaja,and they were formidable,the struggle with the Normans was also epic, with reversals and conquest of their coastal towns,while being absorbed by the Normans in Sicily, as they were co-opted into the governing class. Another thing is , folks like to use terms like Berbers or Arabs, while is ok?? In certain respects, it also obscured who we are actually talking about.

Zirid dynasty | History & Facts

Alternative Title: Banū Zīrī
Zīrid dynasty, also called Banū Zīrī, Muslim dynasty of Ṣanhājah Berbers whose various branches ruled in Ifrīqiyyah (Tunisia and eastern Algeria) and Granada (972–1152). Rising to prominence in the mountains of Kabylie, Algeria, where they established their first capital, Ashīr, the Zīrids became allies of the Fāṭimids of al-Qayrawān. Their loyal support prompted the Fāṭimid caliph al-Muʿizz, when moving to his new capital of Cairo (972), to appoint Yūsuf Buluggīn I ibn Zīrī governor of al-Qayrawān and any other territory the Zīrids might reclaim from their enemies, the Zanātah tribesmen. The Zīrid state under Buluggīn accordingly expanded its boundaries westward as far as Sabtah (now Ceuta, a Spanish exclave in Morocco) on the Strait of Gibraltar; in the reign of Bādīs ibn al-Manṣūr (995–1016) it was divided between the Zīrids at al-Qayrawān in the east and their kinsmen, the Ḥammādids, at Qalʿah (in Algeria).

In 1048, encouraged by economic prosperity, the Zīrids under al-Muʿizz (1016–62) declared themselves independent of the Fāṭimids and their Shīʿite doctrine. The Fāṭimids responded (1052) by sending the Banū Hilāl and Banū Sulaym Bedouins into the Maghrib. Cut off from traditional routes to the east, North Africa fell into a state of anarchy: the countryside was devastated, the peasant economy was ruined, and many settled communities reverted to nomadism. The Zīrids, forced to abandon al-Qayrawān, retreated to Mahdia, but their shattered state was not long able to survive coastal attacks by Sicilian Normans and finally fell in 1148. In 1067 the Ḥammādids managed to relocate in Bejaïa, where they carried on a lively trade until conquered by the Almohads in 1152.

Another group of Zīrids, who had gone to Spain to serve in the Berber army of the Umayyad al-Muẓaffar (1002–08), established themselves as an independent dynasty (1012–90) in Granada under Zāwī ibn Zīrī. At the beginning of the 11th century the Zīrids were given the province of Ilbīra by the Spanish Umayyad caliph Sulaymān al-Mustaʿīn, and by 1038 they had extended this kingdom to include Jaén and Cabra. Málaga was taken from the Ḥammūdids about 1058 by Bādīs ibn Ḥabbūs and became the second centre of Zīrid rule in Spain. Despite their support of the Almoravid Yūsuf ibn Tāshufīn at the Battle of Zallāqah in 1086, these Zīrids were overthrown by the Almoravids in 1090.

www.britannica.com/topic/Zirid-Dynasty

Grenade
Alger
Bougie
Tunis
Constantine
Kairouan
Badis
Tlemcen
Salé
Fès
Taza
Tripoli
Sijilmassa
Zirid Dynasty
400 km

Sanhaja Heart Land:

Wiki sourced.

The above is to drive home the point of who these people were that made up the Zirid dynasty came from.

Mahdia

Mahdia, also spelled Al-Mahdiyyah or Mahedia, town and fishing port located on Al-Sāḥil (Sahel), the coastal plain region in eastern Tunisia, about 125 miles (200 km) from Tunis. It lies on the narrow rocky peninsula of Cape Afrique (Cape Ifrīqīyā). The town owes its name to the mahdi (Arabic: mahdī, “the rightly guided one”) ʿUbayd Allāh al-Mahdī, founder of the Fāṭimid dynasty, who established the town in 912 and in 921 made it his capital. Abandoned about 973, Mahdia was reestablished as a refuge capital of the Zīrid dynasty in the late 11th century. Sicilian Normans occupied the town in the mid-12th century, and thereafter it was no more than a small village and the principal place of southern Al-Sāḥil. It served as a base for pirates in medieval times and was briefly occupied by Spain in the mid-16th century.

Saracen on horseback fighting

ITALY - MAY 06: Saracen on horseback fighting in the Kingdom of Sicily, fresco from Tour Ferrande, in Pernes-les-Fontaines, France. Middle Ages, Italy, 13th century. (Photo by DeAgostini/Getty Images.

Les Algériens, Marocains et Tunisiens parlent-ils un arabe assez proche pour se comprendre d'un pays à l'autre ?

Imzo Bud Marocain Mis à jour le 1 an Les Marocains et les Algériens de l'Ouest ont des dialectes extrêmement similaires. Les Tunisiens et les Algériens de l'Est ont eux aussi des dialectes très ressemblant. La Marocains et les Tunisiens se comprennent sans aucun problème (et là je parle d'expérience), j'ai eu plus de mal à comprendre le dialecte des Doukkalas (à quelques centaines de kilomètres de ma ville natale), que celui de Tunis. De plus en règle générale les marocains comprennent sans problèmes les dialectes machriqis.

Si je devais relever une différence entre les deux dialectes, et ça découle de ma propre expérience, les tunisiens arabisent les termes scientifiques alors que les marocains vont soit les garder tels quels, soit utiliser un terme arabe. Les tunisiens disent "al matriss", les marocains disent "la matrice" ou المصفوفة (al masfufa)

Do Moroccans, Tunisians, and Algerians look down on Libyans? Why is Libya always excluded when these three people mention Maghrebs?

Hamilcar Lives in Carthage, Tunis, Tunisia (1920–present) Updated Tue

Do Moroccans, Tunisians, and Algerians look down on Libyans?
No. We do not look down on Libyans. There are surely some people who do, most don't. Just like with any other society.

Why is Libya always excluded when these three people mention Maghreb?

Most people do not exclude them, if you ask them if Libya is part of the Maghreb, they will surely say yes. But there are cultural differences for historical reasons.

Morocco (except for the north), Algeria, and Tunisia were under French influence, which also means they use French loanwords, unlike Libyans.

The three previously mentioned states are also closer when it comes to the socioeconomic factors. Libya, thank to oil and a smaller population, was much wealthier. Libya is in civil war now, but officially, it is still a rich country.

Libya is the largest oil economy by proven oil reserves in Africa, followed by Nigeria and Algeria, and one of the richest economies in the world by the ratio of oil reserves to the size of the population.
Source: Libya Financial Sector Review, February 2020, by the World Bank Group

Libyans did not leave Libya in large numbers. Even before independence, there was no significant Libyan population in Italy, which colonized Libya until its independence. Contrary to other Maghrebis in relation to France.

Many North Africans settled in the city (Paris) in the 1920s, making up the largest immigrant group to the city during that period. Clifford D. Rosenberg, the author of Policing Paris: The Origins of Modern Immigration Control Between the Wars, wrote that in the post-World War I period Muslims from Algeria, Morocco, and Tunisia may have only adopted a North African identity after coming to Paris.
Source: Hussey, Andrew. Paris: The Secret History. ISBN 1608192377, 9781608192373. p. 253

The ties deepened even more with the start of the Algerian war (1954–62). Tunisia and Morocco became independent in 1956 and the Algerian FLN's armed wing had camps within these two states.

After 1956 and 1962, respectively, people from the previously mentioned countries migrated to France and joined the pre-independence community.

Table of population of Maghrebi origin in France, numbers are in thousands:

Country of origin (2011)	Immigrants	1st generation born in France	2nd generation born in France (aged under 60 only)	Total
Algeria	737	1 170	563	2 470
Morocco	679	698	130	1 507
Tunisia	246	280	129	655
Total Maghreb	1 662	2 148	821	4 631

You see? No significant Libyan population.
The table looks similar with it any other foreign country which is home to a noteworthy Maghrebi diaspora.

Arabs in Italy in the 2020 Census[1]

Ancestry	Population	% of Italy population
Moroccan	414,249	0.700%
Egyptian	128,095	0.216%
Tunisian	93,350	0.158%
Algerian	18,468	0.031%
Somali	8,515	0.014%
Syrian	6,356	0.011%
Iraqi	5,408	0.009%
Lebanese	3,855	0.007%
Libyan	2,667	0.005%

In a nutshell, this means less interactions and had an impact on the pop culture as well.

The explanation why French-born Algerian musician Rim'K (and others as well) mentions Algeria, Morocco and Tunisia (Algérie, Maroc, Tunisie) only when he referred to Maghreb United (3:30).

One of the reasons why comments (not exclusively from the video) on the internet look like this:

Like I said, this is not because people look down on Libyans, but rather for other reasons.

But if you ask the same commenters about Libya, they will say that Libya is part of the Maghreb (alongside Mauritania).

Emblem of the Maghreb Union.

An organization, which became irrelevant because of the tensions between Algeria and Morocco. But the map gives you an idea on how they are not being excluded.

A quoi ressemble la vie nocturne à Rabat, au Maroc ?

Mohamed Boulmers Travaille chez Cabinets de conseil (2004–aujourd'hui) Mis à jour le 3 ans Rabat est une ville à mouvement dominé par les activités administratives et universitaires (conséquence de l'ancienne politique de centralisation).

Dans la majorité des quartiers, les activités cessent dans les espaces publics après 22h, y compris certaines artères vitales de la ville (l'avenue Mohamed V, symbole de la ville menant entre autres au parlement, Bank Al Maghrib et la gare ferroviaire).

Il y a des exceptions à cette règle. Quelques secteurs comme le quartier d'Agdal et particulièrement l'entourage de la rue de France, connaissent une modeste activité nocturne : quelques snacks ouverts et restaurants/lounge, activité automobile petits taxis compris jusqu'aux heures tardives de la nuit (généralement les activités de restauration et de divertissement)

Merci!

Questions similaires

Que ne doit-on absolument pas faire au Maroc ?

Quels sont les faits sur le Maroc auxquels les étrangers ne croient pas avant d'arriver au Maroc ?

Combien dois-je gagner, au Maroc, pour me considérer comme riche (minimum ville de Casablanca ou de Rabat)?

Qu'est-ce qu'on doit jamais faire si je visite le Maroc ?
Quelle est la meilleure ville au Maroc ?

Pourquoi y a t il beaucoup plus de lieux nocturnes à Marrakech qu'à Casablanca ?

Quel est le projet pour démarrer à 200 000 DH au Maroc?
Que pensez-vous des Marocains ?
Où puis-je faire du bénévolat à Rabat (Maroc) en tant que mineur ?
Quelle est votre ville préférée au Maroc et pourquoi ?

Je vais aller au Maroc vers fin d'Octobre 2019? Où est-ce que je peux visiter à Casablanca et Rabat ?

L'Espagne ressemble-t-elle plus à la France ou au Maroc ?
Quels sont vos avis sur Le Maroc comme pays ?

À quoi joue le Maroc en soutenant le Mouvement pour l'autodétermination de la Kabylie ?

Quelles sont les choses qu'on aime au Maroc ?

What race am I if I'm born in Belgium and my mom comes from Tangier in Morocco and my dad is Berber Riffian? I'm really confused.

Related Links

What are the challenge in Nigeria?
Why do African leaders feel superior to the citizens?
What is the most interesting lesson life has ever taught you?
What is the funniest thing that strangers said about your country?
Which place has the most beautiful sky in the world?

Are there particular styles of calligraphy that seem more common within Africa and among the African diaspora than outside it? For instance, are there some stylizations of pictograms, ideograms, alphabets, and other scripts that fit the bill?

Why were the colonial masters desperate to colonize Africans?
Why do Africans still practice borrowed culture?

What can Southern blacks do to circumvent Republican attempts to suppress their voting rights?

How can Africans immortalize Ali Muzrai's African triple heritage?
How can racism and white supremacy become extinct?

Who was George Ayittey, and what was his saying against the Arab government of Sudan?

In Europe, young Vibrant youth are more in power than the old, while in Africa, More of Old men are in power than the young, why that Claus?

Why do people celebrate overnight untraceable success especially in most part of African countries?

Pensez-vous que Macron doit s'excuser pour la colonisation de l'Algérie, la Tunisie, le Maroc ...?

André Teissier du Cros

Président honoraire et Fondateur chez Comité Bastille (2006–aujourd'hui) 1 an Réponse originale : Pensez-vous que Macron doit s'excuser pour la colonisation de l'Algérie, la Tunisie?

Si Emmanuel Macron doit s'excuser de ces colonisations, alors la France doit aussi s'excuser de la colonisation de la Bretagne, de la Corse, de la Franche-Comté, et autres (Indochine, Afrique occidentale et équatoriale, Nouvelle Calédonie, Polynésie…)

La Grande-Bretagne doit s'excuser d'avoir colonisé environ un tiers du territoire français pendant 150 ans et d'avoir colonisé le pays de Galles, l'Irlande et l'Écosse sans parler de l'Inde et d'un grand nombre de territoires qui au XIXe siècle représentaient un quart de l'humanité.

Mais de son côté la France doit s'excuser d'avoir colonisé l'Angleterre en 1066 avec Guillaume le conquérant.

L'Espagne et le Portugal furent de grands colonisateurs avant l'Angleterre et la France…

En outre il est grand temps que l'Italie s'excuse d'avoir fondé l'empire romain qui pendant plusieurs siècles a colonisé la meilleure partie de l'Europe et du monde méditerranéen.

Et puis enfin, que dire de la Grèce d'Alexandre le Grand? des Celtes qui ont colonisé toute l'Europe avant les Romains et pillé plusieurs fois Rome? Et ailleurs n'oublions pas d'autres colonisateurs des Amériques, les derniers étant les Incas? En Équateur ils ont encore de bonnes histoires à raconter sur les joyeux traitements qu'ils subirent il y a juste quelques siècles.

Et l'Empire Arabe? Et l'Empire du Mali en Afrique avant que les Europeens suivent les traces esclavagistes des Arabes?

Croyez-vous qu'il soit vraiment constructif d'ouvrir cette boîte de Pandore?

Ne vaudrait-il pas mieux parler de l'avenir au lieu d'éternellement refaire l'histoire?

Questions similaires

Finalement, si l'Algérie était restée française, la France ne serait-elle pas devenu un pays à majorité musulmane ? De manière générale, à quoi ressemblerait la France aujourd'hui si l'Algérie était restée française ?

La France doit-elle s'excuser pour son passé colonial, comme le demande l'Algérie ?

Pourquoi on demande tout le temps à la France de s'excuser envers l'Algérie pour les morts de la Guerre d'Algérie et pas à l'Algérie de s'excuser pour les actes du FLN durant la même période ?

François Hollande comme Emmanuel Macron ont reconnu l'injustice et la brutalité de la colonisation française en Algérie. Pourtant, les Algériens semblent toujours attendre plus. Qu'attendent-ils et pourquoi ?

Pourquoi les Français sont-ils qualifiés de colonisateurs en Afrique du Nord, alors que le Maghreb fut d'abord colonisé par les Arabes (au détriment des Kabyles)?

Pourquoi un bon pourcentage des Algériens nés avant l'indépendance (1962) disent que « l'Algérie était beaucoup plus heureuse et prospère du temps de la colonisation française »?

Pour quelles raisons Macron vient-il d'annoncer que la France allait réduire drastiquement le nombre de visas accordés au Maroc, à l'Algérie et à la Tunisie ?

Pourquoi la France passe-t-elle son temps à s'excuser pour l'Algérie, le Rwanda, l'esclavage, Napoléon, etc.?

Qu'est-ce qui a poussé Emmanuel Macron à avouer que le colonialisme français en Afrique était une erreur ? Et pourquoi dit-il qu'il veut ouvrir une nouvelle page avec les anciennes colonies françaises ?

Pensez-vous que la France et l'Algérie pourraient un jour se réconcilier émotionnellement ?

Pourquoi il n'y a qu'avec l'Algérie que les relations sont souvent tendues alors que la France a occupé d'autres pays ?

Pensez-vous comme certains ont pu le dire que "l'Algérie n'était pas une nation, seule la France a fait du pays une nation" ?

Pourquoi l'Algérie, qui a acquis son indépendance veut-elle faire de la France une partie de son territoire ?

Pourquoi la France ne s'excuse-t-elle pas une bonne fois pour toutes pour la colonisation vis à vis de l'Algérie ?

La France est-elle entrain de sombrer auprès de l'opinion des pays arabes avec cette histoire des caricatures sur Mahomet ? Comment sortir par le haut de cette tempête qui est entrain de fracturer la société ?

Quel est le plus vieux pays du monde qui existe encore aujourd'hui ?

Uodba_Farhca

Scrum MasterMis à jour le 2 ans

Le pays le plus vieux au monde qui existe toujours avec les même structures d'état est le Maroc, c'est la plus vielle monarchie au monde qui existe toujours et qui n'ait jamais été anéantit. depuis la fondation de l'État marocain à l'an 789 par les Idrissides passant par les Almohades, les Almoravides, les Mérinides, les Saadiens, et les alaouites qui règnent depuis 1666 jusqu'à nos jour. le Maroc a pu garder son unité et sa structure administrative, par exemple Les Forces armées royales marocaines, créés en 1088 par le sultan almoravide Youssef Ibnou Tachfine reste la plus ancienne armée qui existe jusqu'à nos jours.

Armoiries royales du Maroc

Armoiries royales du Maroc

Dans une autre mesure il y a le Japon car la plus ancienne dynastie régnante au monde est japonaise, elle remonte au fondateur mythique du Japon, l'empereur Jimmu Tenno, qui aurait régné de -660 à -580. même si aujourd'hui l'empereur n'a aucun pouvoir parce-que les américains ont limiter son pouvoir, en expulsant de fait toutes les branches cadettes ayant une ascendance impériale antérieure.

Étendard de l'empereur

L'Iran un vieux état de 2 500 ans mais cela s'est arrêté avec l'arrivé d'un nouveau système, l'arrivée de Khomeini qui a déclaré la fin de la monarchie Iranienne en 1979.

La Chine, un vieux état millénaire, est l'une des plus anciennes civilisations au monde, mais Le régime impérial sera renversé par la révolution chinoise de 1911 par Sun Yat. la république de Chine verra le jour en 1912.

La Mésopotamie est la plus ancienne civilisation au monde, mais l'Irak actuel n'a rien avoir avec le pays d'entre les fleuves, il n y a aucune continuité. même chose pour l'Égypte, la Grèce, l'Italie.

Maxime Cauté , amateur d'Histoire Mis à jour le 25 oct. 2018

Je dirai que la France n'est pas mal classée. Le Japon et la Thaïlande ont également une belle place, mais je ne saurais pas plus préciser.

Mais cela dépend de ce que vous entendez par existe encore aujourd'hui.

Si vous entendez que le pays en question se réfère a une entité ayant déjà existé, on peut citer :

la Chine, qui daterait alors des premiers empires du côté du fleuve jaune, il y a plusieurs millénaires; l'Égypte, qui descendrait de l'Égypte pharaonique, de plusieurs millénaires également;

la Grèce, potentielle héritière de la Grèce antique/archaïque, soit environ deux millénaires ; dans la même veine, la Macédoine pourrait se revendiquer du royaume d'Alexandre, mais c'est un sujet assez tendu en ce moment;

la Perse, aujourd'hui nommée Iran, qui pourrait se réclamer (entre autres) de l'héritage de l'empire Perse antique.

Israel, qui pourrait remonter à avant le temple de Salomon, soit plus de deux millénaires.

Pourtant, il est difficile de considérer ces pays comme des descendants directs. Israel, la Grèce et la Macédoine ne sont que des résurgences modernes (au plus XIXe siècle) d'états depuis longtemps disparus. L'Iran, l'Égypte et la Chine ont connu plus de continuité politique, mais ces territoires furent à de nombreuses reprises envahis et colonisés par d'autres populations. Difficile donc également de leur accorder cette ancienneté.

Les états européens, de leur côté, ont une origine plus récente, mais plus marquée. La France existe depuis le traité de Verdun (843), et ses habitants n'ont pas connu d'immense brassage génétique (par implantation d'un envahisseur étranger).

Quelques concurrents remarquables pourraient se poser cependant : le Danemark, la Hongrie, la Suède et la Norvège datent du siècle suivant. L'Angleterre également, mais le Royaume-Uni actuel en est une entité distincte.

En Asie, la Thaïlande a une certaine ancienneté, mais je ne connais pas assez son histoire pour juger de sa continuité. Peut-être est elle plus ancienne.

Le Japon peut également candidater à la première place. Sa fondation mythique remonterait au VIe siècle avant Jésus-Christ, soit bien avant la France. Il semblerait que l'existence d'un empire du Japon est avérée au VIIIe siècle (soit un siècle avant le traité de Verdun), mais encore une fois, je manque d'éléments pour juger. Cela dit, le Japon semble avoir beaucoup d'arguments en sa faveur.

Je dirais que le plus ancien reste cependant dans ces trois-là.

Deux cas particuliers, anciens sont Saint-Marin et le Vatican.

La première date conventionnellement de 301, mais cela pourrait être un peu plus tardif. Le second remonte à la donation de Pépin (8e siècle), et selon la légende à celle de Constantin (4e siècle).

Toutefois, ce sont là des états de très faible étendue, et je ne sais pas si le terme pays convient bien ici. Tout dépend du sens que vous voulez donner aux mots.

Questions similaires

Quelle est la plus ancienne ville du monde qui existe encore aujourd'hui ?
Quel est le pays le plus corrompu au monde ?
Quel est le pays le plus arrogant du monde ? Quel est le pays le plus agressif ?
Quel est le pays le plus bizarre au monde ?
Quel est le pays le plus aimé au monde ?

Existe-t-il aujourd'hui des peuples, des pays qui existaient il y a plus de 3000 ans (comme Israel et les juifs par exemple) ?

Quel est le pays le plus civilisé au monde ?
Quel est le pays le plus inconnu au monde ?
Quels pays ont les femmes les plus laides du monde ?
Quel est actuellement le pays le plus démocratique du monde ?

Quelles étaient les différentes civilisations qui existaient il y a environ 2000 ans, dans le monde entier ?

Quel est le pays le plus ennuyeux au monde ?

Quels sont les pays dont l'histoire est la plus choquante ?
Quand est apparu le plus vieux métier du monde ?
Quel est le pire pays du monde actuellement ?

Why are Ceuta and Melilla Spanish cities? Does Morocco want them?

Lucas Villar Knows French Jan 8

Damn Quora, back at it again with Ceuta and Melilla…
Every time I see a question like this one I tell myself "I have answered it many times, many people here are informed now"… and indeed, we now do see correct answers (which we didn't back in the day); but we still see some utterly absurd ones claiming Ceuta comes from the "European colonial period in Africa".

CEUTA, "the other pillar"

We have a bunch of people dying to draw comparisons between Ceuta and Gibraltar… Ceuta was always besieged by an alliance of Moroccans and Britons—Ceutans are used to it, it didn't work, it won't work now.

Ceuta was originally called Septa, or at least that's the Latinisation of its Phoenician and Carthaginian name. The city was Phoenician and Carthaginian within the sphere of Cádiz (Gades) in southern Spain. Then it became Roman when the Romans conquered Carthage, and it was attached to the province of Spain (to be precise Outter Spain).

The reason is that Morocco was not Roman beyond the coasts, so the centres of Roman government that far west in Africa at the time were in Spain. Not just Ceuta, all the African coast of the Strait of Gibraltar was attached to Roman Spain, because the Strait itself was seen as Spain. We can see already that this ain't Gibraltar, we are speaking of Ceuta linked to Spain before the British had seen the Romans or the Anglo-Saxons.

When the Westeern Roman Empire fell, Spain was taken over by the Visigoths, this includes Septa, city of Visigothic Spania. To be precise Ceuta was for a time under Constantinople, along with all of southern Spain, since the Eastern Romans attempted a reconquest of the province. But then it went to the Visigoths like southern Spain. So not only was Ceuta part of Visigothic Spain before the Britons were Christians, it was known across Spain as the first city to fall to the Muslims.

It was ruled by the same Muslim states that ruled Iberia, most of which ruling Ceuta from Iberia, until the Portuguese conquered the city.

Soon after, Portugal merged with Castile and Aragon into Spain, but after some time the Portuguese seceded. The city of Ceuta did not back the Portuguese break-away, preferring to remain Spanish. The city garrison and the people of the city backed remaining in Spain and Portugal was unable to reclaim it.

Morocco attacked Ceuta in decades-long sieges allied with Britain attacking from the sea, had no advancement. In the 19th century Moroccans started attacking Ceuta, Spain agreed measures with the Moroccan government, but the attacks went on. Spain then built an outter wall to, and now Moroccans attacked the wall construction.

As a result, Spain declared war on Morocco, and conquered up to the city of Tetouan. The lands had to be ceded back because they broke European partitions, but thereafter Morocco started to punish the attackers to avoid another invasion, and the attacks on Ceuta stopped.

Eventually France and Britain had issues over the colonisation of Morocco, and France agreed to grant the northern coast to allied Spain, since Britain didn't want France on the southern coast of the Strait of Gibraltar. Thus Morocco was split into two Protectorates, a Spanish one north and a French one south, Ceuta remained independent from the Protectorate. It was Spanish, not Moroccan, and thus it was a treated as a “Spanish city-state” within the Moroccan Protectorate.

When Franco granted independence to the protectorate in the 1950s, Ceuta was not even contemplated as Moroccan. It was Spanish, like every other city that went through Roman, Visigothic and Andalusi Spain.

LATIN vs ARABIC, "Identity vs State"

Moroccans, when presented with Visigothic Ceuta, proceed to claim that Visigothic Spania wasn't modern Spain as a state, which is a very fair point. Unfortunately they then claim that modern Morocco is the same as the Idrisid Morocco that first had Ceuta! Which is absolutely comical.

If Visigothic Spain has no political continuity with modern Spain through Asturias, I am afraid Idirisid Morocco has no continuity with modern Morocco through the Protectorate nor the dozens of dynasty-defined kingdoms before it.

States change for everyone, for Spaniards certianly, but for Moroccans too. They claim to be some uninterrupted state from the 700s (unashamed) while denying that Spain is a state from the same time (which it's not, but neither are they), because the moment they accept the same timeline on identities, Latin Spain always predates Arabic Morocco, the Romans were here before the Arabs. If your state didn't die when it is conquered because a Western Arabic identity lingers, so does Spain's Peninsular Latin one.

The problem is, as I said, that the Latin one always comes first, the newer creation in this pair is always the Arabic one. The Arabs conquered the Latins and Greeks. By timeline, ours always predates theirs, Latin Ceuta always predates Arabic Ceuta. Instead they choose to argue theirs on identity and ours on state, trans-state Arabic identity versus single-state Spanish empire of evil.

This way, they neutralise Spanish identity's previousness.

MELILLA, "edge of the world"

The city of Melilla belonged to more diverse Roman provinces and administrations, being honest (as I'm being) Melilla was at various points attached to Roman Spain, but it didn't have a clear Hispanic identity like Ceuta undoubtedly did.

Melilla wasn't even all that Roman to start with, it had a much more Amazigh identity than other cities in the region, like the fully Roman-Hispanic Septa. It was more remote from centres of Latin culture and identity. But the thing is that the same goes for the latter Arabic culture… Melilla was an eastern border forsaken town. It was destroyed, deserted and in ruins, time and again.

Spain settled the largely abandonned Melilla on a limes, in the expansion across the Western Mediterranean to counter the Ottomans, and no one gave a damn because no one had any interest in it. The Moroccans were centred around the Strait and the Atlantic, Melilla was ruined, on the edge of Moroccan territorial claims. Spain brough back Melilla on a desertic limes into a Spanish town.

The successive Moroccan state-dynasties went on, and suddenly around the 19th century they found out about their beloved ancestral city of Melilla.

At which point the entire city had been populated from ruins by Spaniards, and was an epicentre of 19th century Modernist architecture from Spain. The walls, the parks, the port, the avenues, the bullfighting arena, and entire city, on the edge of nowhere for Morocco. The Moroccans decided it was just as intimately theirs as their mother, and they missed it a lot.

Same as Ceuta, Melilla was not part of the Protectorate, but its own Spanish city-state within. Same as any other Spanish soil, it didn't leave with Morocco in the 1950s. Ceuta and Melilla were the two doomed cities in the region staying in Francoist Spain, instead of leaving free to write their new story.

And yet here we are, still not identifying as Moroccan. How leaving a dictatorship for Morocco became the worse deal is beyond me, but Ceuta and Melilla didn't leave with Morocco when life in Spain was arguably worse, and they certainly have no plan when life in Spain is evidently better.

Ceuta made itself Spanish against Portugal, kept itself Spanish with no help against Morocco and Britain for a decade, has been with Spain since the Romans… and now we get some clueless people that couldn't care less about the city pretending it must be like Gibraltar because there's salted water in between.

Related Links

Why does the world allow Spain to rule the Moroccan cities Ceuta and Melilla?

What is the coherence of Spain claiming Gibraltar but not willing to yield Ceuta and Melilla?

How can Morocco regain its territories from Spain? And can Canary islands go under Morocco's control?

What is the deal with Morocco and Spain tussling over Melilla and Ceuta? Why have these territories fallen under Spanish control and why has Morocco failed to conquer them back?

Why does Morocco continue to state claim to Ceuta and Melilla desire them being part of Spain for centuries?

What would happen if Morocco seized Ceuta, Melilla, and the Canary Islands (backed by the Arab league)?

Does Spain think it is fair that it should get Gibraltar back but not return Ceuta?

Why, despite being ceded to Great Britain in perpetuity in 1713 does Spain claim Gibraltar is Spanish territory: how is this different from the Melilla, Ceuta and the Spanish exclaves claimed by Morocco?

If the UK were to return Gibraltar to Spain, would that encourage Morocco to demand the return of Melilla and Ceuta?

What is it like to live in Ceuta or Melilla?
Why aren't Ceuta and Melilla returned to Morocco by Spain?

What if America gave Ceuta and Melilla back to Morocco in order to punish Spain for causing the current mess that is Latin America?

Why doesn't Morocco annex Western Sahara, Mauritania, the Canary Islands, Gibraltar, Ceuta and Melilla, Andalusia and portions of Algeria and Mali to expand into Greater Morocco?

Do the same arguments to defend Spanish cities in Morocco, apply to the independence of THE COLONY OF Gibraltar from Spain?

How does Spain justify its occupation of Moroccan claimed land? What does Morocco do about this?

Why are Maghrebis okay with Arab colonization but are not okay with the French and Ottoman one?

Adam Rahali Student of the World (1996–present) Jan 27

Original question: Why are Maghrebis okay with Arab colonization but are not okay with the French and Ottoman one? When you say Maghrebis, do you mean all the inhabitants of the Maghreb, or only the Arabic-speaking ones? That's a very important distinction, and the term can easily mean either. I'll assume that you refer to the former for this question. As for the term Maghreb, it usually refers to Morocco, Algeria, Tunisia, Mauritania and Libya. (I will not mention the Western Sahara conflict, but feel free to google it if you're curious.)

Disclaimer: I'm a Canadian-Moroccan of Arabo-Amazigh descent. I speak Arabic as a first language (plus French, English, and some Spanish and German), but many/most of my ancestors were Amazighs, who adopted Arabic over the centuries. Most recently, my great-grandfather from the Souss learned it after migrating to an Arabic-speaking city near Rabat.

Here's the Maghreb!

Related Links

Can what Arabs did before the Europeans in Subsaharan Africa, in countries like Sudan, Somalia, and Tanzania, be considered a process of colonization? Why don't people usually talk about this Arab acculturation and colonial expansion in Africa?

Why didn't the Arabs colonize sub Saharan Africa?

Why won't Morocco allow self-determination for the Sahrawi people, when it is guaranteed under the UN chart? Is it colonialism? (or) if there's other issue, please educate me? Thanks.

Why do Egyptians speak bad English even though Britain colonized it for 72 years while people in Morocco speak good French even though France colonized it for only 44 years?

Why do you think that Maghreb and Arab countries like Somalia and Sudan are not Arab countries when you are from the Levant, you are less Arab than those?

What is the difference between Arab colonization and European colonization? What even happened during the colonial period in general?

Which Maghrebi dialect (Moroccan, Algerian or Tunisian) is the least difficult to understand for native Arabic speakers from Bilad Al-Sham, Masr and Al-Khalij and why?

Do all Lebanese look Arab or do some look French/European?

If the Arabs should have a "Free Palestine", Should the Arab colony countries of Algeria, Tunisia, Libya, and Morocco disband themselves and go to the Arabian desert and let the Berbers get their homeland back as compensation?

Did Lebanese people decide whether they are French or Arab?
Which one is Somalia, Arab or African?

If the 280 million African Arabs (Egypt, Sudan and the Maghreb) unified into one nation, wouldn't the Arabs rule Africa?

I see in many Maghrebian people some hatred in their eyes when they look at me for example so why do they come to live in France if they hate this country and the French?

Do you think Maghreb will give up the French language in the future?

Why wasn't Saudi Arabia colonized by the British or the French like the rest of the countries in the MENA region?

What led to the breakaway of Western Sahara?

Ayman · Follow Lived in Casablanca, Morocco (2001–2019) Nov 29

The more accurate word would be “split away", and that happened in the 1906 treaty of Algeciras.

Morocco was divided into 3 zones:

The french zone, which included central Morocco, shingeet (modern day Mauritania, not included in the map) and tinduf and beshar (today a part of Algeria, also not included in this map).

The Spanish zone, which included the Rif (north), Sidi Ifni and Wad Edahab and Sakya Lhemrania (what Spain called “western Sahara").

The international zone of Tangier, under joint British, French and Spanish control. (It was briefly fully occupied by Spain in WW2, but returned to be an international zone afterwards).

Before, Morocco looked like this (the grey area been precolonialism):

Note: the Malian territories were lost to the french later.

Our independence in Morocco wasn't pretty. Unlike other countries, we didn't receive all of our territories back in independence, we got them bit by bit.

The central region was independent in 1956, then the Rif and Tangier were reunited, then Sidi Ifni, then in 1975 Sakya Lhemrania and later Wad Edahab, with 2 northern cities Sebta and Melilia still under Spanish occupation.

When it comes to the Tinduf and Beshar, Hassan II renounced his claim to it for the sake of good relations with Algeria, but the ruling Junta, with some distortion from Jamal Abdelnasser, never wanted friendship, so the claim was partially restored by Morocco calling for a review of where the border should be.

When it comes to Mauritania, Hassan II also renounced his claim to the territory, seeing no point in alienating a potential ally.

RelatedLinks

Why won't Morocco give up Western Sahara?
Why didn't Morocco conquer the entire Western Sahara?
Why did Morocco conquer Western Sahara back in 1975?
Does Morocco treat Western Sahara badly?
Is Western Sahara inhabited?
How did Western Sahara become a country?
Which side is right on the issue of the Western Sahara?
What is the political status of Western Sahara?
Why does Morocco want to control Western Sahara?

Why has Morocco not annexed all of Western Sahara in so many years? Why leave a potential future trouble spot?

What do you think about the Western Sahara conflict?
Why did Spain decide to leave Western Sahara?
What are some solutions to the conflict of Western Sahara?
What is the capital of Western Sahara?
Why did Morocco take over Western Sahara?

Pourquoi les Français sont-ils qualifiés de colonisateurs en Afrique du Nord, alors que le Maghreb fut d'abord colonisé par les Arabes (au détriment des Kabyles)?

Jean-Marie Gouarné Mis à jour le 7 mo

Cela tient au fait que certains pays parmi ceux qui ont été colonisés par les Européens au 19ème siècle ont conservé et cultivé l'une des pires pathologies sociales européennes: le nationalisme. Et le nationalisme a généralement tendance à favoriser dans chaque pays une vision sélective de l'histoire. Dans le cas (extrême) de l'Algérie, l'islamo-panarabisme (qui est un élément important de la panoplie idéologique du pouvoir nationaliste en place) a pour but et pour effet d'imposer une légende nationale dans laquelle l'héritage berbère est consciencieusement minimisé et surtout dans laquelle les envahisseurs arabes du Moyen-Âge sont représentés comme des visiteurs pieux et désintéressés accomplissant une mission religieuse avec l'accord des populations autochtones reconnaissantes. Il ne faut pas en rire: il y a encore des gens qui croient réellement à cela. Or une telle reconstruction de l'histoire amène évidemment à désigner les Français comme les premiers et les seuls "colonisateurs".

Tous les régimes nationalistes nés au XXème siècle de la décolonisation cherchent à se définir comme les représentants de nations qui ont toujours existé telles qu'elles sont aujourd'hui et à faire oublier que les cadres politiques et/ou les classes sociales qu'ils représentent sont en réalité des produits de la colonisation. Cela les amène à une posture intellectuelle tendant essentiellement à masquer tout ce qui avait précédé la période coloniale la plus récente et à le remplacer dans la mémoire collective par un passé simplifié, lisse, et de nature à légitimer leur politique actuelle.

C'est ainsi que, dans la mythologie "décoloniale" inhérente à la propagande nationaliste, le Maghreb est perçu comme s'il avait toujours été arabe. Et si, à la rigueur, on admet qu'il y a eu une conquête arabe aux 7ème et 8ème siècles (car ce sanglant chapitre d'histoire est tout de même difficile à escamoter), c'est pour dire que les Arabes n'ont fait qu'accomplir leur destin de "race supérieure" en venant apporter les bienfaits de la vraie civilisation et de la vraie religion à des populations dont on imagine qu'elles vivaient dans la jâhilîya (l'ignorance de Dieu, et par extension la barbarie pré-islamique), c'est-à-dire qu'elles étaient ignares et primitives (ce qui rejoint étrangement le discours des colonialistes européens du 19ème siècle qui se flattaient d'apporter le "progrès" à des populations "arriérées"). Les oppositions qu'ont rencontrées les conquérants arabes sont minimisées, dévalorisées, voire simplement niées. Peu importe l'horreur qu'ont vécue les Imazighen à l'arrivée des Arabes, peu importe la longue résistance qu'ils ont opposée à cette colonisation, peu importe la guerre d'indépendance de 739–743 par laquelle une partie des tribus berbères ont regagné de haute lutte leur indépendance contre le califat Omeyyade: ce sont des chapitres d'histoire soigneusement filtrés dans les programmes scolaires et quasiment censurés dans la société civile. Ce phénomène, toutefois, n'est pas uniformément répandu dans tout le Maghreb; il se manifeste de façon particulièrement aiguë en Algérie, pays ayant été le plus fortement et le plus directement soumis à l'administration coloniale française et où le rejet de la France est parfois perçu comme un élément clé de la construction nationale.

Certains vont jusqu'à présenter la conquête arabe comme exclusivement dirigée contre l'occupation byzantine, et par conséquent à qualifier de supplétifs au service des Grecs les combattants berbères qui ont résisté à cette invasion… Ignorance ou mauvaise foi ? Cette vision est incompatible avec des faits par ailleurs connus. Dans les années 680, c'est sous commandement berbère que la coalition berbéro-byzantine a remporté la victoire de Tahouda et délogé les Arabes de Kairouan. En 698, après avoir chassé les Byzantins de Carthage, perle du Maghreb et symbole fort de participation des Berbères à la civilisation méditerranéenne, le gouverneur arabe a fait raser la ville (dont les civils ont été exterminés), au lieu de la laisser aux autochtones. Ce sont les Berbères seuls, définitivement abandonnés par les Grecs, qui ont supporté le poids de la lutte lors de la phase finale de la conquête arabe (698–709). Ce sont aussi les Berbères qui ont subi les massacres et les confiscations de terres, y compris dans des secteurs où les Byzantins n'avaient jamais mis les pieds. Ce sont encore les Berbères qui, une génération plus tard, après s'être ralliés à l'islam, lassés d'être traités comme des musulmans de seconde zone et de servir de troupes coloniales pour le compte du califat de Damas, ont mené la guerre de décolonisation qui, en 743, a abouti à libérer de la domination arabe les territoires correspondant aujourd'hui au Maroc et à l'ouest de l'Algérie. Ils ont alors, il faut l'admettre, manqué une occasion historique: ils n'ont pas réussi à se doter d'une structure étatique forte, capable de préserver l'unité et l'indépendance du Maghreb, qui aurait ainsi été à l'abri des guerres locales dévastatrices du Moyen-Âge et des entreprises coloniales des Temps Modernes, et qui serait peut-être redevenu le pôle majeur de la civilisation occidentale qu'il avait été pendant l'Antiquité. Le monde actuel subit encore les conséquences de cet échec…

Malgré cela, le mot "colonisation", ayant acquis de nos jours une connotation résolument péjorative, on ne souhaite évidemment pas l'appliquer à la conquête arabe qui est le résultat d'une "guerre sainte" et qui a apporté l'islam dans une terre païenne (ce qui, pour certains, excuse toutes les violences). On préfère le réserver à la conquête française, qui provenait d'une civilisation non-musulmane donc "inférieure". Certains vont même jusqu'à affirmer sans complexe que la conversion des Berbères à l'islam serait la "preuve" que les Arabes n'étaient venus que pour des raisons religieuses, sans aucun objectif de domination coloniale, et qu'ils se seraient installés avec la bénédiction unanime des autochtones. C'est un peu comme si on disait que les esclaves noirs d'Amérique approuvaient leur esclavage parce qu'ils avaient adopté le christianisme qui était la religion de leurs maîtres. Ce n'est ni la première ni la dernière fois qu'on invoque la religion à l'appui d'un parti pris politique en mélangeant tout et n'importe quoi.

Dans la tradition musulmane ancienne, le monde était mentalement partagé en deux espaces, le Dar al-Islam et le Dar al-Harb, désignant respectivement l'ensemble des pays soumis à l'islam et l'ensemble des pays non encore soumis et de préférence à conquérir. La possibilité d'une régression du Dar al-Islam, c'est-à-dire de la conquête par des infidèles d'un territoire peuplé de musulmans et/ou ayant adopté l'islam comme religion d'État, était initialement impensable, tandis que le Dar al-Harb était (et reste pour les islamistes fanatiques) un territoire de guerre, un territoire à prendre. Cette vision du monde, sérieusement ébranlée depuis le Moyen-Âge par le recul de la domination musulmane en Espagne puis dans les Balkans, n'a peut-être plus cours officiellement, mais elle a laissé des traces. L'occupation d'un pays musulman par une puissance non musulmane constitue, en soi et indépendamment de la violence de l'occupant, un traumatisme insupportable car le Dar al-Islam est un territoire considéré comme irréversiblement acquis. L'extrême brutalité de certains épisodes de la colonisation française au Maghreb est la cause consciente la plus souvent invoquée du ressentiment contre les Français, mais la cause fondamentale, semi-consciente, de ce ressentiment, provient de ce que la France était une puissance non-musulmane, une puissance venue du Dar al-Harb qui, en foulant le sol du Dar al-Islam, a en quelque sorte "inversé les rôles" et commis l'inadmissible. Tout cela est rarement dit dans les media, c'est généralement confiné dans le non-dit, mais dans les mentalités le plus grave des crimes commis par la France au Maghreb est probablement d'avoir conquis une terre musulmane en étant un pays de mécréants, de kouffar. Cette vérité est plus ou moins refoulée car à notre époque il n'est pas politiquement utile d'exprimer des griefs à caractère directement religieux contre un pays étranger qui se veut laïc. La rhétorique revendicative est donc obligée de s'appuyer sur des valeurs issues de la culture des excolonisateurs européens (notamment les droits de l'homme, l'égalité entre les peuples, et tout ce qui en découle), car le seul moyen de parvenir à l'objectif, qui est de culpabiliser l'ancienne puissance coloniale, c'est de dénoncer la contradiction entre ses propres valeurs morales d'aujourd'hui et sa politique coloniale d'autrefois. Cependant, il est certain que les massacres et autres exactions commis par la France pour "pacifier" le Maghreb seraient plus facilement pardonnés, voire complètement oubliés, s'ils avaient été commis par un conquérant venu de l'intérieur du Dar al-Islam. Il est donc logique que l'infamante qualification de "colonialiste" soit réservée à la France, et qu'on n'ose pas appliquer le même mot aux actes de domination commis dans le passé par des musulmans.

On peut faire à ce sujet un constat très significatif. La plus importante domination étrangère qu'ait subie l'ensemble du monde arabe au cours des Temps Modernes (XVIème au XXème siècle) a été celle de l'Empire Ottoman. Pourtant, le ressentiment exprimé au Proche-Orient à propos des anciennes dominations étrangères vise principalement les puissances occidentales qui ont brièvement occupé la région après le démantèlement de l'Empire Ottoman qui, quant à lui, est apparemment "pardonné". Les Turcs sont des musulmans, et apparemment l'influence de l'islamisme est telle que la colonisation d'un pays musulman ne s'appelle plus colonisation dès lors que le colonisateur est également musulman…

Il faut dire aussi que les colons français, lorsqu'ils ont envahi l'Algérie avec leurs gros sabots et leur niveau d'instruction médiocre en matière d'histoire des civilisations, ont souvent manqué de finesse (c'est le moins qu'on puisse dire !) et ont plus d'une fois utilisé sans vergogne le mot "arabe" à tort et à travers. Par l'usage abusif de ce mot pour désigner indistinctement tous les résidents d'origine non-juive et non-européenne, les colons et l'administration française ont fait le jeu du panarabisme et minimisé l'identité berbère de la région, accréditant le mythe d'un Maghreb "arabe depuis toujours". Mais il est vrai que les Européens n'en sont pas à un amalgame près: dans les mentalités populaires au nord de la Méditerranée, Alger était parfois considérée comme une ville turque (parce que de 1516 à 1830 la Régence d'Alger était théoriquement un protectorat ottoman).

Le système idéologique nationaliste, au Maghreb, implique inévitablement d'une part la diabolisation de la période coloniale française et d'autre part la neutralisation de l'histoire berbère et pré-musulmane de la région. C'est la combinaison de ces deux tendances qui, logiquement, amène à faire comme si la colonisation française était la seule colonisation étrangère dont le Maghreb ait été victime depuis l'origine des temps.

La mythologie nationaliste maghrébine culmine particulièrement en Algérie, dont le régime politique est d'autant plus embarrassé que son existence même est un pur produit du colonialisme français et que, pour justifier sa légitimité et faire oublier les difficultés économiques, sociales, ethniques et religieuses qu'il a du mal à surmonter, il doit se construire une image de représentant d'une "Algérie éternelle", arabe et musulmane depuis toujours. Le fait que le mot "Algérie" ait été inventé par les Français après 1830, que l'ancienne Régence d'Alger n'ait jamais contrôlé plus du tiers de ce qui constitue aujourd'hui l'Algérie, que l'élite dirigeante d'Alger se soit enrichie pendant trois siècles par la piraterie et le trafic d'esclaves sans faire le moindre effort de modernisation, que la grande majorité du territoire ait été dominée par des clans indépendants (surtout berbères), et que le statut géopolitique du pays ait été longtemps celui de zone-tampon entre les royaumes de Tunisie et du Maroc, tout cela est aujourd'hui assez largement censuré. On retrouve là des idées analogues à ce qu'on a connu en France sous la Troisième République et le régime de Vichy: ces idées qui faisaient remonter la "France éternelle" à "nos ancêtres les Gaulois", alors que le mot "gaulois" (qui vient du latin gallus) a été inventé par les conquérants Romains, et que la France actuelle n'est que le produit des colonisations successives de l'Hexagone par des envahisseurs celtes, italiens, germaniques, berbères, scandinaves et j'en passe.

C'est ainsi que la Charte d'Alger qui, en 1964, présente les fondements idéologiques du régime issu de la guerre d'indépendance, définit clairement l'Algérie comme "un pays arabo-musulman", et n'accorde qu'une concession ambiguë aux autres cultures ayant participé à la construction du pays en ajoutant que "cette définition exclut toute référence à des critères ethniques et s'oppose à toute sous-estimation de l'apport antérieur à la pénétration arabe". Cette rhétorique embarrassée se contredit elle-même car il est paradoxal d'affirmer l'identité arabo-musulmane du pays alors qu'on prétend exclure toute référence à des critères ethniques. Elle manifeste surtout une position extrêmement dévalorisante pour la culture berbère, qui n'est pas citée et qui est présentée non sans désinvolture dans l'enveloppe fourre-tout des "apports antérieurs à la pénétration arabe" qui sont visiblement considérés comme secondaires. Un peu plus loin dans le même texte, il est dit que "l'essence arabo-musulmane de la nation algérienne a constitué un rempart solide contre sa destruction par le colonialisme", ce qui veut dire a contrario que la culture berbère a compté pour rien dans la construction nationale. Dans un autre passage, il est question de "la suppression brutale des institutions, l'appropriation directe des terres, des moyens d'échanges et de l'appareil étatique par une minorité étrangère", mais le propos vise exclusivement l'invasion française, alors qu'il s'appliquerait aussi bien à ce qu'ont subi les populations autochtones lors de l'invasion arabe (à un seul bémol prêt: au Moyen-Âge les colonisateurs arabes ne se sont pas exactement appropriés l'appareil étatique, ils ont surtout détruit le peu qui en restait, conséquence logique de la bédouinisation subie par une grande partie du territoire pendant les décennies qui ont suivi l'invasion).

Il est donc logique que la colonisation arabe soit également un sujet tabou, car, toujours d'un point de vue nationaliste-panarabiste, on ne peut pas admettre que le Maghreb soit un pays berbère, et que les Berbères aient été, pendant toute l'Antiquité et le début du Moyen-Âge, des Occidentaux, culturellement beaucoup plus proches des Espagnols, des Italiens et des Français du Midi, que des Arabes.

Comme s'il fallait oublier le temps de Publius Terentius Afer (Térence en Français), Berbère né à Carthage, devenu un grand auteur dramatique romain du 2ème siècle av. J.-C., qui a mis dans la bouche d'un de ses personnages cette belle réplique universaliste: "Je suis un homme; je considère que rien de ce qui est humain ne m'est étranger", à des années-lumière des tristes querelles communautaires que nous connaissons. Comme s'il était gênant que, pendant les siècles précédant la conquête arabe, la première langue du Maghreb ait été le tamazight et que la seconde langue ait été, comme partout autour de la Méditerranée, le latin (langue internationale qu'une forte minorité de Berbères "de souche" parlait couramment). Comme s'il était interdit de savoir que le site d'Alger a été occupé pendant plus d'un millénaire par la cité berbère d'Ikosim, un comptoir commercial d'abord fondé par des Phéniciens et qui, comme Carthage, a été une porte du Maghreb largement ouverte sur l'international. Comme si on ne voulait pas reconnaître que la seule époque de l'histoire avant 1962 durant laquelle le territoire de l'actuelle Algérie a été à la fois unifié et indépendant à été, aux 2ème et 1er siècles avant J-C, celle du royaume numide fondé par Massinissa (ou Masnsen en tamazight)… un royaume berbère.

L'incendie criminel, survenu à Baghaï en 2016, de la statue de la Kahina (la reine guerrière des Aurès, héroïne de la résistance contre l'invasion arabe autour de l'an 700), est une manifestation récente de la phobie qui anime certains milieux extrémistes algériens et/ou islamistes à l'égard des symboles de l'histoire berbère. Une phobie qui, 15 ans après l'affaire Guermah et le Printemps Noir de 2001, était toujours présente.

C'est en Algérie que culmine une réécriture nationaliste de l'histoire tendant à effacer simultanément le passé berbère et l'empreinte française. Ces deux tentatives d'oubli apparemment disjointes relèvent en réalité d'un seul et même combat. L'anti-berbérisme s'appuie sur une logique spécieuse selon laquelle, puisque les Français ont très épisodiquement (et de manière aussi inconsistante que maladroite) tenté d'utiliser l'identité berbère pour diviser la société algérienne, alors l'identité berbère n'est qu'un artifice du colonialisme. Bel exemple de rhétorique tendancieuse s'appuyant sur le vrai pour prouver le faux. En cherchant à faire passer le sentiment identitaire berbère pour une création du colonialisme, on essaie tout simplement de masquer que c'est le nationalisme arabo-musulman, né du contact avec l'Europe occidentale et renforcé par les relations spéciales du FLN avec l'Égypte de Nasser pendant la guerre d'indépendance, qui est un produit d'importation récente en Algérie.

Peut-être veut-on aussi faire payer à la communauté kabyle le fait d'avoir refusé, au XIXème siècle, de se soumettre inconditionnellement aux mouvements d'inspiration arabo-islamique contre la colonisation française (bien que la suite de l'histoire ait largement démontré les dangers du radicalisme religieux). Quand, dans les années 1930, alors que le courant nationaliste qui allait mener à l'indépendance commençait à prendre de l'ampleur, les oulémas professaient que "quiconque s'éloigne de la langue arabe s'écarte du même coup de l'adoration de Dieu, et quiconque s'écarte de l'adoration de Dieu encourra de sa part un terrible supplice", la menace visait évidemment la langue berbère tout autant que la langue française. L'histoire de la guerre de libération Algérienne est aussi l'histoire de la marginalisation systématique et parfois de l'élimination violente, au sein du mouvement d'indépendance, de tout ce qui représentait la berbérité et la laïcité, au profit de la tendance arabo-islamiste dure. C'est dans ce contexte qu'est intervenue par exemple en 1957 la liquidation physique (par des agents du FLN) d'Abane Ramdane, dont les principes politiques étaient réputés, comme le dira plus tard le président Ben Bella, "entachés de berbérisme et tournant le dos à l'islam". Et le caractère artificiel et exogène de l'arabo-islamisation forcée du mouvement est devenu encore plus évident depuis qu'on connaît l'ampleur de l'influence égyptienne, et donc du panarabisme nassérien, sur l'évolution du FLN: une influence étrangère qui équivalait à une condamnation à mort de l'identité berbère.

Certes, au début du 21ème siècle, il a bien fallu accorder une petite concession à la culture berbère en reconnaissant le tamazight comme "une langue nationale et officielle", mais il suffit de lire les articles 3 et 3bis de la Constitution algérienne pour comprendre que cette reconnaissance ne va pas beaucoup plus loin que celle du Breton, du Basque ou du Kanak en France, et que la langue berbère est traitée comme si elle n'était qu'un dialecte provincial. En France, nous avons bien connu, au lendemain de la révolution jacobine, un phénomène de "francisation" visant à éradiquer les langues régionales dans le cadre d'un projet nationaliste et centralisateur, mais le mouvement d'arabisation mené en Algérie par le FLN depuis l'indépendance, tout en se situant lui aussi dans le cadre d'un projet nationaliste, va beaucoup plus loin car il vise à favoriser non pas une langue autochtone parmi d'autres, mais une langue importée au détriment d'une langue qui est non seulement autochtone mais qui, en plus, est ou a été parlée dans toute l'Afrique du nord.

Mais comme si tout cela n'était pas déjà assez compliqué, il convient d'ajouter que le Maghreb n'a pas subi que des agressions extérieures. Il a aussi, comme beaucoup d'autres régions du monde, été victime d'envahisseurs venus de l'intérieur. L'exemple le plus brutal se situe quelques siècles après l'invasion arabe initiale (essentiellement menée par des Yéménites, de 647 à 709) et quelques autres siècles avant l'invasion française. Je parle de l'éphémère empire des Banu Abd al-Mumin qu'on appelle plus communément les Almohades (1147–1269), issu d'un clan berbère du Haut-Atlas marocain mais dont le véritable fondateur, Abd al-Mumin ben Ali (également nommé Abdelmoumen), était originaire de Nedroma aux environs de Tlemcen. Un empire qui, en un temps record, a conquis le Maghreb du Maroc à la Tripolitaine ainsi que tout Al-Andalus (c'est-à-dire l'Espagne musulmane). Les Almohades étaient ce qu'on appelle aujourd'hui des "islamistes radicaux". Ils ont mis en oeuvre un fanatisme religieux qui ne correspondait pas aux valeurs et aux traditions du monde musulman, en général plutôt tolérant. Ils ont pratiqué à grande échelle la conversion forcée, obligeant juifs et chrétiens à devenir musulmans sous peine de mort (ce sont eux qui, par exemple, ont introduit en Espagne la persécution des juifs que les chrétiens allaient continuer par la suite). Ils ont harcelé et réduit au silence les savants les plus brillants de leur temps, à commencer par le fameux Ibn Rochd plus connu sous le nom d'Averroès, accusé de "trahir la religion", et ont interdit les métiers de philosophe et de musicien. En détruisant l'avance intellectuelle qu'avait Al-Andalus par rapport à l'Europe du nord, ils ont précipité le déclin scientifique, moral et politique de l'Islam d'occident. Dans ce qui constitue aujourd'hui l'Algérie, le principal "exploit" d'Abd al-Mumin a été la destruction totale de Tlemcen avec élimination physique de tous ses habitants. Les massacres de masse étaient d'ailleurs pour lui une activité banale, comme en témoigne l'exécution de 30.000 habitants de Marrakech à la même époque. De nos jours, on parlerait de crime contre l'humanité, mais en tout état de cause on peut considérer que l'aventure Almohade a été une très mauvaise affaire pour le Maghreb, et qu'elle a fait plus de dégâts que la pire des colonisations étrangères. Et pour comble de tragique, les Almohades n'ont même pas bien fait ce qu'ils étaient censés savoir faire le mieux: la guerre. En effet, après avoir massacré des musulmans par dizaines de milliers sous prétexte de purification religieuse, ils ont trouvé le moyen, malgré la supériorité de leurs forces, de se faire écraser par les chrétiens espagnols en 1212 à la bataille de Las Navas de Tolosa, préparant ainsi la chute d'Al-Andalus. Ainsi, l'empire Almohade a fait plus de mal qu'une croisade et n'a été qu'une entreprise d'auto-destruction de l'Islam maghrébin et ibérique qui, à cause de lui, s'est retrouvé en position d'infériorité à la fin du Moyen-Âge alors qu'auparavant il était à la pointe de la civilisation en Occident. Pourtant, certains considèrent aujourd'hui Abd al-Mumin comme un "héros national" algérien. Ce qui démontre (une fois de plus) à quel point le nationalisme est aveugle et ignorant, au point de ne pas voir l'existence d'une agression coloniale quand le colonisateur appartient au même groupe ethnique et religieux que le colonisé.

Tout cela est bien dommage, car on ne peut malheureusement pas minimiser l'importance des agressions subies par les peuples maghrébins avant l'arrivée des Français sans dissimuler du même coup le fait que le Maghreb a été, pendant longtemps, un espace de civilisation particulièrement brillant qui a su tirer parti de toutes les cultures méditerranéennes avec lesquelles il a été en contact étroit sans jamais perdre sa propre culture berbère. Pour les Maghrébins, oublier le passé pré-arabe, ce serait comme si les Égyptiens oubliaient le temps des pyramides. Ressasser exclusivement et indéfiniment les tragédies et les crimes de l'époque française, une époque certes encore proche mais néanmoins aussi révolue que les précédentes, c'est renoncer à connaître les grandeurs et les souffrances des autres époques, et donc laisser dans l'ombre la plus grande partie de l'immense patrimoine historique d'une région qui a tout de même joué un rôle important dans le développement de la civilisation. Mais pour en finir avec cette focalisation obsessionnelle, il faudrait des hommes de la trempe de l'émir Abd-el-Kader, à la fois adversaire acharné de la colonisation française, grand érudit autant que grand chef de guerre et habile diplomate, profondément religieux mais ouvert aux autres cultures, doté d'une large vision géopolitique, connu et respecté dans le monde entier malgré sa défaite, qui a su créer le premier État algérien autonome des temps modernes (malheureusement trop tard pour empêcher la colonisation), mais qui était tout le contraire d'un vulgaire nationaliste. Hélas, on est loin du compte et si, à Alger, on honore la statue d'Abd-el-Kader, sa pensée est un peu oubliée, voire falsifiée…

EDIT - Compte tenu des commentaires de Raph Zribi et Eugène Dalett, je précise que, la question étant posée de manière générale sur l'Afrique du nord, ma réponse est également générale. De propos délibéré, elle ne rend pas compte de la diversité des histoires nationales et communautaires, dont la connaissance est indispensable à une bonne compréhension de tout ce qui se rapporte à la colonisation et à la décolonisation du Maghreb, mais qui est trop riche pour être correctement adressée dans le cadre de cette réponse.

Pourquoi il n'y a qu'avec l'Algérie que les relations sont souvent tendues alors que la France a occupé d'autres pays ?

Abdelwaheb Hammami Licence d'histoire de Université de lettres et sciences humaines Tunisie 9 avril (Diplôme obtenu en 1970) 2 ans

Pour répondre objectivement à cette question il n'y a pas mieux que de s'appuyer sur des sources françaises de l'époque et c'est au lecteur de se faire l'idée adéquate sur les relations entre la FRANCE et l'ALGERIE:
1-LA CONQUETE:

Les Français ont conquis l'Algérie à partir de 1830 par la force des armes. Et de ce fait tous les moyens étaient bons pour eux pour arriver à leur fin,usant des pires atrocités qui, de nos jours sont qualifiées de génocides,crimes contre l'humanité…

Un des conquérants français qui se vantait de couper les tetes des algériens en guise de remède à ses soucis !!!!!Quel cynisme !!!!

Quelques textes illustrent bien le terrorisme des conquérants français:

"Tout ce qui vivait fut voué à la mort ; tout ce qui pouvait être pris fut enlevé, on ne fit aucune distinction d'âge ni de sexe. Cependant l'humanité d'un petit nombre d'officiers sauva quelques femmes et quelques enfants. En revenant de cette funeste expédition, plusieurs de nos cavaliers portaient des têtes au bout de leurs lances et une d'elles servir, dit-on, à un horrible festin"

Pellissier de Reynaud, cité par C.-A. Julien, ibid., p. 92.

L'année précédente, le général Cavaignac avait utilisé le même procédé pour obtenir la reddition de la tribu des Sbéahs. Le général Canrobert en a donné le récit suivant "On pétarada l'entrée de la grotte et on y accumula des fagots de broussailles. Le soir, le feu fut allumé. Le lendemain quelques Sbéahs se présentèrent à l'entrée de la grotte, demandant l'aman à nos postes avancés. Leurs compagnons, les femmes et les enfants étaient morts"

C.-A. Julien, op. cit, p. 320. « Aman » signifie sûreté.

La répression menée conjointement par l'armée (y compris l'aviation et les navires de guerre en rade de Bougie et Djidjelli qui bombardèrent l'arrière-pays), la police et les milices des colons, fit plusieurs milliers de morts, dans la région de Sétif et de Kherrata notamment . "Jamais depuis 1842, et le maréchal de Saint-Arnaud, l'Algérie n'avait connu, même aux jours les plus sombres de son histoire, de répression plus féroce contre un peuple sans défense... Sur les routes, à travers les sentiers, dans les champs, dans les rivières, et dans les ravins, ce n était que cadavres entrouverts où s'engouffrait la gueule sanglante de chiens affamés... Çà et là des villages entièrement rasés éléments d'une humanité primitive- fuyant sous les balles meurtrières des civilisés. Dans les charniers de morts peut-être étaient-ils quelques coupables. Il y avait sûrement en tout cas des dizaines d'innocents."

Le Courrier algérien du 26 mai 1946, cité par M. Kaddache, op. cit., p. 717.

LE RESULTAT:les morts algériens de l'implacable conquête de l'Algérie1 ont été évalués entre 250 000 et 400 000, voire plus2. Les victimes de la déstructuration du vieux mode de production communautaire, en particulier lors de la grande famine de 1868 suite à une récolte désastreuse3, furent bien aussi nombreuses, et peut-être plus : au total il y eut disparition peut-être bien d'un quart à un tiers de la population algérienne de 1830 à 1870.

2-LA SOUMISSION

Les français se sont comportés en pays conquis ou le vaincu est soumis au bon vouloir du vainqueur.

Il y eut en Algérie aussi dépossession de 2,9 millions d'ha sur 9 millions cultivables : le tiers en quantité, mais plus en qualité car ce sont les meilleures terres qui furent prises - du fait des confiscations, des expropriations pour cause d'utilité publique, de saisies pour dettes de paysans insérés de gré ou de force dans le système monétaire et ayant dû mettre leurs terres en gage. Quant à l'œuvre d'éducation, tant vantée, d'après les chiffres officiels, 5 % de la population était scolarisée dans les écoles françaises en 1914, moins de 15 % en 1954 ; et elle n'augmenta qu'in fine durant la guerre de libération et du fait du plan de Constantine du général de Gaulle. La langue arabe, reléguée au second plan, n'était enseignée dans le système français que dans les trois « médersas » officielles, puis les « lycées franco-musulmans » après la seconde guerre mondiale. Le congrès des maires d'Algérie de 1909 avait voté une motion demandant « la disparition de l'enseignement indigène », au désespoir de l'apôtre de l'école républicaine française Charles Jeanmaire, qui fut de 1884 à 1908 le recteur de l'académie d'Alger.

La discrimination est aussi fiscale : les « impôts arabes » spécifiques (« achour », « hokor », « lezma », « zakat ») sont payés par les Algériens jusqu'en 1918, dans la continuité du beylik de l'époque ottomane, et avec sensiblement les mêmes taux. S'y ajoutent les « centimes additionnels » et la corvée formellement, l'assimilation fiscale fut édictée en 1918. Ce furent ainsi largement les paysans algériens, dont entre le 1/3 et le 1/5 de leurs revenus s'envolait en impôts, qui financèrent la colonisation française, c’est à dire leur propre dépossession. Au politique, l’égalité dans une citoyenneté commune fut refusée pendant longtemps ; puis, avec le statut de l’Algérie de 1947, furent institués deux collèges distincts élisant chacun le même nombre de représentants : au prorata de la population, un électeur français équivalait à huit électeurs algériens.

La pire des discriminations est celle qui fut instituée à travers de ce qu'on a appelé "le code de l'indigénat"Le Code de l’indigénat dans l’Algérie coloniale

Des restrictions à la liberté

Une liste de 27 infractions spécifiques à l’indigénat a été établie en 1874. Augmentée en 1876 et 1877, elle comporte en 1881, par exemple, les infractions suivantes : réunion sans autorisation, départ du territoire de la commune sans permis de voyage, acte irrespectueux, propos offensant vis-à-vis d’un agent de l’autorité, même en dehors de ses fonctions, etc... Outre le séquestre, l’indigène peut être puni d’une amende ou d’une peine d’internement. À ces peines individuelles peuvent s’ajouter des amendes collectives infligées aux tribus ou aux douars, dans le cas d’incendies de forêts.

Inutile de dire que l’exercice des libertés publiques, celles de réunion ou de circulation - totalement supprimées, de 1862 à 1890, puis légèrement assouplies - est extrêmement restreint.

Codifiées en 1881, les infractions spéciales constituent progressivement un véritable code de l’indigénat. Il faut les distinguer des crimes et délits commis en violation de la loi française, lesquels sont du ressort de la loi française.

(Source : “Qu’est-ce qu’un Français ? Histoire de la nationalité française depuis la Révolution”)

3-LA GUERRE D'ALGERIE 1954–1962

Elle commença le 1er novembre 1954.Elle fut accompagnée d'atrocités inimaginables.D'ailleurs celles-ci on débuté en 1945 avec les "évenements de Sétif et Guelma

Quand la victoire de la démocratie sur la barbarie nazie est apparue imminente, certains musulmans d'Algérie ont espéré que serait enfin mis en application le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes.

Parmi eux Messali Hadj, chef du PPA (Parti Populaire Algérien), interdit depuis 1939. Mais celui-ci est jeté en prison par les autorités françaises et 20.000 de ses partisans défilent le 1er mai 1945 à Alger en sa faveur.

Le matin du 8 mai, une nouvelle manifestation survient à Sétif aux cris de «Istiqlal [Indépendance], libérez Messali». Les militants du PPA ont la consigne de ne pas porter d'armes ni d'arborer le drapeau algérien mais un scout musulman n'en tient pas compte et brandit le drapeau au coeur des quartiers européens.

La police se précipite. Le maire socialiste de la ville, un Européen, la supplie de ne pas tirer. Il est abattu de même que le scout. La foule, évaluée à 8.000 personnes se déchaîne et 27 Européens sont tués dans d'atroces conditions. L'insurrection s'étend à des villes voisines, faisant en quelques jours 103 morts dans la population européenne.

La répression est d'une extrême brutalité. L'aviation elle-même est requise pour bombarder les zones insurgées. Après la bataille, les tribunaux ordonnent 28 exécutions et une soixantaine de longues incarcérations (*).

Officiellement, les autorités françaises estiment que le drame aura fait 103 morts chez les Européens et 1.500 chez les musulmans. Les autorités algériennes parlent aujourd'hui de 45.000. Les historiens spécialistes évoquent quant à eux 2.500 à 6.000 morts.
Une guerre que la France a longtemps reniée;On parlait ,officiellement, d'événements et des actions militaires ,d'opérations de maintien de l'ordre. Et ce n'est qu'en 1997 que les pouvoirs publics ont autorisé l'ouverture de certaines archives.En 1999 l'assemblée nationale finit par reconnaitre que les événements d'Algérie étaient bel et bien une guerre.

Une véritable guerre,que l'historien français BENJAMIN STORA qualifiait de "guerre ensevelie" , et que les pouvoirs publics ont mis longtemps à reconnaitre…POURQUOI ???? La raison est toute simple : La France voulait éluder certaines vérités compromettantes sur sa politique militaire en Algérie qu'on peut qualifier aujourd'hui de crimes de guerre,de crimes contre l'humanité,de génocide …..Cela consiste à utiliser systématiquement la torture et la liquidation arbitraire des opposants algériens et meme des français qui sympatisent avec le FLN,essentiellement des communistes.

Laissons les documents de l'époque parler de la torture qui a caractérisé la guerre d'Algérie.

Méthodes de tortures pendant la guerre d'Algéérie

La théorie de la guerre contre-révolutionnaire, élaborée à l'École supérieure de guerre (ESG) par Lacheroy, Trinquier et Jacques Hogard, est sous-tendue par une idéologie nationale-catholique élaborée par la Cité catholique, groupe intégriste dirigé par Jean Ousset, ex-secrétaire personnel de Charles Maurras, le fondateur de l'Action française. Georges Sauge, qui participe avec Ousset à l'élaboration de cette doctrine, a ainsi déclaré :

« La logique de la guerre révolutionnaire, ce n'est pas la guerre en soi, mais le discours politique et idéologique qui le sous-tend ; or la guerre contre-révolutionnaire que ces officiers avaient conçue n'avait pas de logique ni de support idéologique.» Le militant Georges Sauge, en « croisade » contre les communistes déclare:« Ces jours qui ébranlèrent Alger peuvent amorcer un mouvement que l'histoire retiendra comme une signification providentielle en faveur des Francs et de leur mission civilisatrice au service de Dieu (...) Les militaires représentent (...) la vérité, la grandeur, la puissance de notre patrie, qu'ils protègent dans le dernier verrou de la liberté : la dignité de l'homme sur la terre d'Afrique. »

l'historienne Raphaëlle Branche écrit ainsi :« Certains signes montrent que Paris a peut-être davantage l'oreille ouverte aux violations des droits de l'homme que par le passé. Dans cette lettre, par conséquent, Jean Reliquet revient avec insistance à la question des tortures […] Autrement dit, il ne connaît que la partie émergée de l'iceberg car il ne dispose que des informations qui lui parviennent en sa qualité de procureur général […] Pourtant, à cette époque, la torture est massivement pratiquée à Alger et pas uniquement en vue d'obtenir des renseignements, comme on l'a souvent dit, mais bien pour terroriser la population […] elle touche désormais tout le monde, « sans distinction de race, ni de sexe ». Autrement dit, des Européens aussi sont torturés par l'armée française. Et l'ampleur prise par la pratique de la torture « pour tous » dans ces mois-là est bel et bien une nouveauté. Des communistes, des progressistes, des membres des centres sociaux ont été arrêtés, détenus au secret, torturés à Alger dans les premiers mois de l'année 1957, par le 1er RCP mais aussi par d'autres. Un régiment en particulier semble d'ailleurs s'être « spécialisé » dans les Européens : le 1er REP, des légionnaires basés à la villa Susini […] Aucune distinction de sexe n'est opérée : les femmes aussi sont détenues puis torturées, ce qui constitue là encore une nouveauté.»
Robert Bonnaud 1929–2013 historien et militant anti-colonialiste analyse en ces termes la sublimation et la rhétorique justificatrice qui porte les militaires à commettre de tels actes:« Histoire absurde, sadisme gratuit ? Non. Dans ce pays, l'énorme majorité des suspects, et aussi de ceux qui ne le sont pas, aident réellement les patriotes, ne serait-ce que par leur silence. On ne court pas grand risque, par des tortures ou des brimades intempestives, de se mettre à dos la population : le peuple algérien a perdu confiance en notre faux libéralisme et nos promesses menteuses... Le maintien de notre domination a exigé, exige, exigera des tortures de plus en plus épouvantables, des exactions de plus en plus générales, des tueries de plus en plus indistinctes. Il n’y a pas d’Algérien innocent du désir de dignité humaine, du désir d’émancipation collective, du désir de liberté nationale. Il n’y a pas de suspect arrêté à tort et torturé par erreur. »

En 1961, un article paru dans le journal clandestin anticolonialiste Vérité-Liberté expliquait:

« À la ferme Ameziane, centre de renseignement et d'action (C.R.A.) de Constantine, elle se pratique à l'échelle quasi industrielle.(...) C'est à la ferme Ameziane que sont conduits tous les suspects pris par les unités de l'Est algérien. L'arrestation des « suspects » se fait par rafles, sur renseignements, dénonciation, pour de simples contrôles d'identité. Un séjour s'effectue dans les conditions suivantes : à leur arrivée à la « ferme », ils sont séparés en deux groupes distincts : ceux qui doivent être interrogés immédiatement et ceux qui « attendront », à tous on fait visiter les lieux et notamment les salles de tortures « en activité » : éléctricité(gégène), supplice de l'eau, cellules, pendaisons, etc. Ceux qui doivent attendre sont ensuite parqués et entassés dans les anciennes écuries aménagées où il ne leur sera donné aucune nourriture pendant deux à huit jours, et quelquefois plus encore.

Les interrogatoires, conduits conformément aux prescriptions du guide provisoire de l'officier de renseignement (O.R.), chapitre IV, sont menés systématiquement de la manière suivante : dans un premier temps, l'O.R. pose ses questions sous la forme « traditionnelle » en les accompagnant de coups de poing et de pied : l'agent provocateur, ou l'indicateur, est souvent utilisé au préalable pour des accusations précises et... préfabriquées. Ce genre d'interrogatoire peut être renouvelé. On passe ensuite à la torture proprement dite, à savoir : la pendaison (...), le supplice de l'eau (...), l'électricité (électrodes fixées aux oreilles et aux doigts), brûlures (cigarettes, etc.) (...) les cas de folies sont fréquents (...) les traces, cicatrices, suites et conséquences sont durables, certaines même permanentes (troubles nerveux par exemple) et donc aisément décelables. Plusieurs suspects sont morts chez eux le lendemain de leur retour de la « ferme ».

Les interrogatoires-supplices sont souvent repris à plusieurs jours d'intervalle. Entre-temps, les suspects sont emprisonnés sans nourriture dans des cellules dont certaines ne permettent pas de s'allonger. Précisons qu'il y a parmi eux de très jeunes adolescents et des vieillards de 75, 80 ans et plus. À l'issue des interrogatoires et de l'emprisonnement à la ferme, le « suspect » peut être libéré (c'est souvent le cas des femmes et de ceux qui peuvent payer (...) ou interné dans un centre dit « d'hébergement » (à Hamma-Plaisance, notamment) ; ou encore considéré comme « disparu » (lorsqu'il est mort des suites de l'interrogatoire ou abattu en « corvée de bois » aux environs de la ville. (...)

Les « interrogatoires » sont conduits et exécutés par des officiers, sous-officiers ou membre des services du C.R.A. (...) Les chiffres - car il y en a - sont éloquents : la capacité du « centre » entré en activité en 1957, est de 500 à 600 personnes, et il paraît fonctionner à plein rendement en permanence. Depuis sa constitution il a « contrôlé » (moins de huit jours de prison) 108 175 personnes ; fiché 11 518 Algériens comme militants nationalistes sur le secteur ; gardé pour des séjours de plus de huit jours 7 363 personnes ; interné au Hamma 789 suspects.

Do North Africans (Egyptians, Algerians, Moroccans, etc.) experience racism from afrocentrists for not being black?

Sadly, the answer is yes! Anthony M Anderson Loves Africa Jan 16

North africans have definitely experienced racism from afrocentrists who claim that north africans were all black before the muslim conquest of the region. I have seen this trend happening online and mostly against north african diaspora.

The 17 year old egyptian mariam moustafa was beaten to death by a group of black girls in the united kingdom cause they thought that mariam wasn't a real egyptian. This is an example of how afrocentrism can make pseudohistory claims that ancient egyptians were all black before muslim invaders came in and thus can also brainwash youths who haven't studied history yet which could to brainwashed youths to violently or threaten white people! Here is how an egyptian was typically harrased by an african american:

Anyways, I'm half english and african and therefore i have experienced harrasment from most quora users cause i debunked afrocentric claims on ancient egyptians

That's not true. He's not interested in the truth. He piling on because he thinks there's no consequence — that's the truth.

There's zero harm that African-Americans or any African feels a connection with Ancient Egyptians. And, it's not a stretch that it is true. Not all African-Americans descend exclusively from slaves. There were black Europeans all over Europe (Britain, Ireland, France, Germany, etc.) for hundreds if not thousands of years. That too is truth.

He's not interested in truth or accuracy. You're likely not either.

Upvote · 2

Anthony M Anderson · Sat

I know it's not harmful but it mostly offends other people when afrocentrists try to claim every civilization as being black!

Upvote · 5 Reply

Becky B · 2h ago

So why would that be offensive?

You just confirmed your intent is to put Black people in their place. Under your foot.

Upvote · 1

Becky B · 2h ago

Whoosh the point over your head.

he's asking for data. See the word "most?"

You have no data. You have pulled a bunch of images and created your own narrative.

Sorta like what you accuse Black people of doing.

Upvote

although these major skin tones were all present....

If your dad is the English half, then genetically you are not African you are Caucasoid- which explains your affinity to believing in the Eurocentric view of Ancient Egyptians, on the outside your mother gave you her skin color but according to your Y-DNA your just a s white as your dad.

Upvote

Lastly, afrocentrists have made racist claims like this one shown below

La plupart des Marocains peuvent-ils parler français ?

Samir سمـ ير Farid فـ ريـ د Lieu : Maroc (1977–aujourd'hui)Mis à jour le 11 mo

Remi Thomas , précédents lieux : France (1969 - 1997)
Mounir Lord , lieu : Maroc Mis à jour le 21 août 2020 Répondu 8 juil. 2020

50% des marocains n'ont jamais fait l'école ou l'ont quitté des les premières années, et une bonne partie de ceux qui finissent leurs études universitaires font souvent des branches arabisantes (littérature, histoire-geo, droits, etc).

D'autres part, il faut nuancer entre l'enseignement public et privé, le premier est officiellement arabisé, le second est majoritairement francisant, donc les élèves qui font le privé sont souvent francisants, et on peut aussi dire que tous les lauréats des grandes écoles d'ingénieurs, d'économie et management et de tourisme, de la médecine, des écoles militaires sont de parfaits bilingues.

On peut donc estimer que le 1/5 de la population actuelle au Maroc parle couramment le français, dans le future il y'aura davantage de bilingues, mais il faut avouer que l'anglais est entrain de grignoter la part du français dans de nombreux domaines, surtout celui des nouvelles technologies.

Non , 32% de la population est analphabète, en plus de cela il y'a l'Abandon scolaire pour cause:

la pauvreté, l'éloignement géographique des écoles, les inégalités territoriales et régionales et la qualité de l'enseignement, le travail des enfants et le mariage précoce .

En général, 259.000 élèves abandonnent chaque année et le taux le plus important est enregistré au niveau du collège.

Pour le reste, ce que j'ai remarqué à l'époque quand j'étais au lycée, la grande majorité ont un niveau très faible en français, surtout les étudiants avec des parents analphabètes, cependant c'est possible de trouver des élèves avec de très bonne note en math ,physique ou anglais, mais très médiocre en français. La raison c'est qu'ils n'ont pas eu l'encadrement nécessaire au primaire et collègues.

Ensuite après les études ceux qui ont intégré des entreprises où le français et obligatoirement(centre d'appel, SS2I,banque,…) ils ont réussi à avoir un bon niveau de communication et compréhension .

Pour le reste ils sont plus arabophone avec une vague compréhension du français.

J'ai terminé les études en 2004 et les 10 derniers années à connu une explosion des écoles privées dans le pays.

Les marocains ont compris la nécessité des langues étrangères pour l'avenir de leur progéniture et l'incompétence des écoles publiques.

En résumé le Maroc n'ai pas la France il ne faut pas croire que parceque l'agent de la douane, le réceptionniste à l'hôtel ou le caissier du macdonald vous parle en français que cela sera pareil partou

Pour avoir visité certains pays du Maghreb je suis impressionné par le nombre de langues que les commercants ou les chauffeurs de taxi maitrisent. Notre chauffeur, hélé au coin d'une rue, á Tunis parlait arabe, allemand, italien, francais, anglais et je ne sais plus quoi encore.
Quand il parlait á ma femme en anglais c'etait parfait, quand il me parlait en Francais c'etait parfait.

Donc ma reponse va venir en complement des reponses deja données, non seulement certains marcocains et tunisiens parlent Francais, mais ils maitrisent aussi pleins d'autres langues. Et j'insiste sur maitriser.
(je ne suis jamais alle en Algerie, je pense que cela serait pareil)

Honte á moi qui parle juste Anglais et qui suis incapable de soutenir une conversation en Italien, Allemand ou Espagnol. (et je n'ai aucune notion d'arabe. Enfin c'est pas avec mes choukran et assalam que je vais pouvoir philosopher)

Questions similaires

Dans quel pays arabe parle-t-on le mieux la langue française ?
Quels sont les mots arabes utilisés dans la langue française ?
Pourquoi les Algériens, au moins ceux en France, parlent si bien le français ?

Le Maroc doit-il passer du français à l'anglais comme principale langue étrangère ?

Les gens des pays africains qui parlent français détestent-ils la France et la langue française ?

Le français est-il de fait une langue nationale en Algérie ?

Les Français préfèrent-ils parler français la plupart du temps et pourquoi ? (question traduite)

Un jour un Français m'a demandé si au Maroc on avait des smartphones et des voitures.
Pourquoi certains Français pensent-ils que le Maroc est au Moyen Âge ?

Pourquoi les Français regardent les Marocains avec mépris ?

La langue française marque-t-elle la différence de prononciation entre : -ais, -ai, é & -er: parlais/parlerais - parlerai / parlai - parlé - parler ?

Dans quel pays non-francophone parle-t-on le plus le français ?
Est-ce que les Algériens peuvent tous lire le français ?

Combien de mots français dois-je savoir pour être aussi compétent qu'un français originaire de France ?

Quels sont les pays de l'Afrique francophone où l'on parle le plus français ? Quels sont ceux où l'on parle moins le français ?
Que pensez-vous des Marocains ?

News Nigeria
People from all over the world voiced support, concern and grief for the family of Rayan, a five-year-old boy who died after being trapped in a well in Morocco for four days. Rayan was pulled out Saturday night after days of rescue efforts that captured the attention of millions of people.

What is it like to live in Ceuta or Melilla?

John Ramage

Former Teacher of English as a Foreign Language 2y

I can answer this lesson in part, because I have lived in Melilla. I have never been to Ceuta, but I want to point out a couple of important differences between these 2 cities. Firstly, the 2 cities have different shapes. Melilla huddles around its port and beach area, and is guarded by a semi-circular fence, the famous “valla de Melilla;” whereas Ceuta is on a very narrow tongue of land and almost surrounded by sea. To that extent, Ceuta might be the more scenic of the two places, although I think Melilla’s architecture deserves special mention for its beauty and colour. The other main difference I know of is that Ceuta is much closer to Spain than Melilla is. That means that taking the ferry from Ceuta to Algeciras in Spain is relatively quick. Morocco and Ceuta are both visible from the Rock of Gibraltar.

By contrast, the ferry from Melilla to Malaga in Spain takes 8 hours. I know, because I took that ferry a number of times and the journey lasted from about 11 p.m. to 7 a.m. People who are resident in Melilla, including teachers of English as a foreign language like myself, are entitled to reduced ferry and plane ticket costs, from Melilla to mainland Spain. This is a great blessing if you want to hop over to places such as Malaga, Almeria, Granada, and so on, for the weekend. Melilla has got an airport, but normally the ferry is cheaper, and I liked the ferry, so I used it more.

As an English teacher in Melilla, I found life difficult. On the one hand, my adult students appreciated and admired me a very great deal, feeling sad, and throwing parties on my behalf when I left. The children varied more in their enthusiasm. What I found was that my students were either (a) Spanish people, born and raised in Melilla (b) people who had emigrated from Morocco to Spain and become Spanish (c), Spanish people born on the mainland who were now resident in Melilla, or (d) Moroccans who officially lived in Melilla, and (d) Moroccans who commuted to Melilla just to come to the language school. There was even one Spanish lady, teaching in Morocco who came to Melilla just to learn English!

I had some great classes, but the boss, an Englishman, and a former stockbroker, believed in the science of Micromanagement. Thus he invented lots of extra irrelevant tasks for us, just so he could control us more. So people were encouraged to start at 8:30 a.m. go home for lunch at 1:30 p.m. and start teaching at 3 p.m. finishing the teaching at 10 p.m. and doing it all again the next day. It was a horrible way to work. The owners of the school were a positive, benevolent influence. They had hired the boss because they wanted to retire, but the boss was so problematic and stress-inducing that they had to intervene.

As regards living in Melilla, I was able to find a place to stay, but it took a little while. Rent was approximately the same as in Madrid, maybe a little lower, but finding an apartment was by no means impossible. In Madrid, it might have been impossible except at certain times. I shared with people from Latin America. The house was rather gloomy and faced north, actually a great blessing in spring and summer as you can well imagine!

I remember washing my clothes. I would take them up to the roof and put them on the washing line. Then I would stand back and take in the gorgeous view. One of the great glories of Melilla is its architecture. You don’t see it unless you actually live there, and walk through its streets, or stand on a building and look around you. The Catalan architect, Enrique Nieto was instrumental in building lots of houses in the highly decorative and optimistic “modernist” style, like the beautiful buildings you see in Barcelona, but a little less flamboyant. There are also buildings decorated in the style the Moors used in Granada, with lots of artistic decorations and colourful tiles. I remember walking around the town and admiring all these little decorations and the vistas all around.

As a town, it was quite well-supplied with shops, supermarkets, restaurants, and so on. I found that to be convenient. It was great to wind down on a Saturday, by popping out to a local café, and sitting down with a newspaper, or a good book and a coffee. Once or twice, I also remember getting chocolate and churros which are long strips of fried choux pastry. I also liked the parks, such as the Parque Hernandez with its palm trees. It was nice to sit there even in winter.

Melilla has a beach, but it is closed much of the year! Why? Well the local people tend to think it's too cold to swim except in July and August. So they don't. However, there was a small beach some distance away, where Spanish people would swim, even in November or February. I did so too. I stopped in December, because it started raining and getting stormy.

Melilla can be delightful. But people from Melilla said it was deficient. Yes, there is art and culture and cinema, but it's less than on the mainland, and if you don't buy a ticket quickly, tickets will be sold out, because the demand outstrips the supply. I wanted to go to a gym, but there are fewer of them in Melilla than on the mainland, and they are not cheap. It's probably due to a lack of competition that the price is so high . One feels there is a force damping things down. That's probably true.

I have lived in several countries. When I've been at my happiest, it is when I was in a place where it was possible to have a wide circle of friends, without having to constantly struggle to meet people. Also, I have enjoyed being in places with stimulating cultural activities, and so on.

I can tell you that the stress of the job might have prejudiced me against Melilla. I was lucky in that I spoke Spanish so well that I was able to meet and get to know wonderful people who did not speak English and one of my colleagues also introduced me to a group of people who met regularly in a beautiful café and sang songs and recited poetry. This was a Spanish creative writing group. I decided my Spanish was good enough for me to contribute. I did so, but I have to point out that I revised my work A LOT before handing it in, and I used a Spanish computer to type in the accents and so on.

These people did a lot to help me feel welcome. We would go to the café on Saturday nights, and read each other's works, tell jokes, and have enormous fun. We would sometimes then go to one of the bars or nightclubs down near the port. In fact, a lot of the city's nightlife is concentrated near the port, and that's where the young people go to have fun, dance, drink alcohol and so on. Many people of Spanish descent drink alcohol, but of course there are many Muslims who don't.

People explained to me that Melilla is very family-oriented. In fact, one of my students said he was about to ask a work colleague to meet at the weekend, but the guy had already gone home to his family, and it was too late to arrange a meeting. Some towns are like that. People are inward-looking. That's why the creative writing group was such a boon. I could not rely on going to a bar or cafe and meeting people by chance. In some parts of Spain, you can do that, but in Melilla it was better to look for social meet up groups first. Of course, some cafes and bars were great if I just wanted to be alone. Sometimes I went and wanted not to meet people.

Some of the creative writing group helped me see the warm and positive aspects of the place. I am grateful for that. One of them said that Melilla is quite small, and sometimes, for want of stuff to do, people just drive around at the weekends. He also pointed out that people are suspicious of outsiders and are gossipy and you feel you are under a magnifying glass.

The solution for this of course is to look for like-minded people, by joining social groups (which I did), or perhaps a friendly church, or a dining group, or the Hindu Temple (which was basically a New Age centre).

Sometimes co-workers are positive. At first, we all used to meet on a Friday night for a party. But later on, people felt too tired and stressed to do this. Also, some of them just wanted to be with their spouses.

A friend from the creative writing group pointed out to me that there's a strong military presence in Melilla. That is partly because Melilla defends the Straits of Gibraltar from illegal immigrants, and there is a border fence. But there's more. Melilla is old fashioned, and in some ways like Spain before 1975! There are streets named after Franco and Jose Antonio, a fascist leader and pin up boy who died in the Spanish Civil War. There is, or was, a lot of fascist propaganda still in place, and a statue of Franco, prominently displayed.

I remember going into a bookshop, and thinking it was very small and more focused on stationery than books. I found one good book, but I felt under pressure from staff to choose fast! The library was actually a lot better, and well worthwhile.

I ended up having to leave the job. However, I don't think of my time in Melilla as negative. This was because through the creative writing group, I had made a lot of friends and people of like mind to myself.

Melilla is rather conservative. They have had the same mayor since the year 2000.

Related Links

What is life in Ceuta like considering it is physically separated from its own country?
Why does the world allow Spain to rule the Moroccan cities Ceuta and Melilla?

As a Spaniard, do you believe that Spain should give up Ceuta and Melilla to Morocco?

Do people who live in Ceuta and Melilla have Spanish or Moroccan nationality?
How can Morocco regain its territories from Spain?
And can Canary islands go under Morocco's control?

What would happen if Morocco seized Ceuta, Melilla, and the Canary Islands (backed by the Arab league)?

What is the coherence of Spain claiming Gibraltar but not willing to yield Ceuta and Melilla?

Why was Morocco not able to militarily conquer Ceuta and Melilla?

Why does Morocco continue to state claim to Ceuta and Melilla desire them being part of Spain for centuries?

Why aren't Ceuta and Melilla returned to Morocco by Spain?
Does Spain think it is fair that it should get Gibraltar back but not return Ceuta?
Why doesn't Morocco return Rif to Spain?
What is the deal with Morocco and Spain tussling over Melilla and Ceuta?

Why have these territories fallen under Spanish control and why has Morocco failed to conquer them back?

If Morocco invaded the Canary Islands, could Spain retake them?
Why doesn't Morocco annex Spain?

Does Spain think it is fair that it should get Gibraltar back but not return Ceuta?

Cristovão de Noronha World Knowledge Updated 5y Originally Answered: Is Spain's occupation of Ceuta and Melilla the same as Britain's occupation of Gibraltar?

It is now the 6th time someone changes the question in order to change the meaning of my answer, in order to try to benefit the Spanish claim.
So lets be quite clear:

Both Gilbraltar (by UK) and Ceuta (by Spain) were occupied has strategical outposts to keep an in loco control over the adversary, and with time, became also strategical trade posts.

The return of Gibraltar to Spain has remained a foreign policy goal for all Spanish rulers since the area was lost to Britain under the terms of the Treaty of Utrecht in 1713. Franco's fierce determination to regain Gibraltar culminated in his closing the frontier between Spain and Gibraltar in 1969. Governments that came to power after the regime was democratized engaged in calmer but equally persistent negotiations with the British and with the residents of Gibraltar over the future of the area. These discussions ultimately resulted in the April 1980 Lisbon Agreement, which was more symbolic than substantive, but which served as a framework for subsequent Anglo-Spanish negotiations.

Gibraltar

The Spanish government had intended to reopen the frontier between Spain and Gibraltar shortly after the signing of the Lisbon Agreement, but it postponed this step in anger at a series of British actions, including the use of Gibraltar as a military depot and refueling base during the Falklands War in 1982. The frontier was finally reopened in the early days of the Socialist government that was elected later in the year.

Spain's entry into NATO added new complications to the Gibraltar question, including Spain's insistence that Gibraltar was a NATO naval base as well as a British one, a contention that the British government denied. The Spanish navy refused to participate in joint military exercises with the British while Britain maintained a military base on Gibraltar. At the same time, Spanish membership in NATO provided a vehicle for negotiations on the Gibraltar question in a less competitive atmosphere. It also put Spain in a better bargaining position.

Gibraltar during World War 2

The ultimate issue underlying the various twists and turns of the Gibraltar problem was sovereignty. The approximately 30,000 residents of Gibraltar remained adamantly opposed to becoming Spanish citizens, although the UN continued to pass resolutions condemning British rule in Gibraltar as a colonial situation. As a more flexible and democratic government took root in Spain, however, and as the country achieved greater integration into Europe through its EC and NATO memberships, the possibility of a resolution of the sovereignty issue became less remote. The Socialist government, unlike its predecessors, emphasized that any solution to this problem must be in keeping with the interests of Gibraltar's inhabitants. This led observers to conjecture that--through some type of regional autonomy structure, provided for in the 1978 Constitution--a long-term plan for a form of autonomous government for Gibraltar acceptable to all concerned, might be possible.

Series of tunnels inside the northern end of the Rock of Gibraltar dug out from the solid limestone by the British during the Great Siege of Gibraltar at the end of the 18th century, heavily fortified with cannons against the Spanish side.

In much the same way that Spain laid claim to Gibraltar as part of its territory, Morocco maintained that the Spanish enclaves of Ceuta and Melilla were integral parts of Morocco's sovereign territory. The two North African towns and their tiny offshore islands, the last vestiges of Spain's far-flung empire, had belonged to the Spanish crown for centuries. Both were administered as integral parts of Spain and had predominantly Spanish populations; Spain insisted that they remain Spanish.

Ceuta

Ceuta, which had become a Spanish possession following the union with Portugal in 1580, was historically a focal point for trade between Europe and Africa. Located only thirty kilometers from metropolitan Spain. Although Ceuta was used for military purposes, it also functioned as a fishing port, and it had close economic links with Andalusia.

Portuguese conquest of Ceuta to the Moors, later on handed to the Spanish

There were almost no direct links between Ceuta and the other Spanish enclave of Melilla, which had come under Spanish rule in the late fifteenth century. Melilla was situated more than 500 kilometers away from the Iberian Peninsula, and it did not benefit from the lively tourist traffic that Ceuta enjoyed. Because of its geographical location, Melilla also was subject to greater influence from its Moroccan hinterland than was Ceuta. In addition, more Moroccans actually lived in Melilla than in Ceuta, where the atmosphere was far more European.

Melilla

There were protests on the part of the Muslim communities in both enclaves over the passage, in July 1985, of an aliens law, which required all foreigners in Spain to register with the authorities or be expelled. Tensions were especially high in Melilla, where less than one-third of the Muslim community held Spanish nationality. Promises from Madrid to assist in integrating the Muslims of both enclaves into Spanish society angered portions of the local Spanish communities, who in turn demonstrated in support of the aliens law.

The outlook for continued Spanish sovereignty in the two enclaves appeared uncertain. When Spain joined the EC in 1986, Ceuta and Melilla were considered Spanish cities and European territory. They joined the EC as part of Spain, and they hoped to receive financial assistance from the EC's Regional Development Fund. Spain also hoped that membership in NATO, while providing no security guarantee to Ceuta and Melilla, might make Morocco's King Hassan II less likely to move against territory belonging to a NATO member; however, Spanish demands for the return of Gibraltar could fuel Moroccan claims to the North African enclaves.

Mounting tensions between the Spanish and the Muslim populations in Ceuta and in Melilla added to the precariousness of the Spanish position. In addition, a few leaders in both the socialist and the communist parties expressed sympathy for Morocco's claim, contributing to a growing fear of abandonment on the part of the enclaves' inhabitants. A resolution of this tenuous situation did not appear imminent in mid-1988.

Why does Morocco continue to state claim to Ceuta and Melilla desire them being part of Spain for centuries?

Kenza Al Alami Lives in Morocco 3y

Small correction if you may. Ceuta and Mellilia Morocco wants them back.
They have been Moroccan since Morocco was a piece of water. They will stay Moroccan till the end of times.

It is time Spain started claiming Gibraltar. Or if it does, does this mean they need to give back the two Moroccan cities and that is why they are silent?

What irritates me is not that they are still occupied, may be Moroccans there are better off but the irritation comes from the falsification of history claiming that Ceuta and Mellilia have never been Moroccan!? Helloooo!

Melilia means the white place in berber. Is there any chance that berbers are Spanish or that Spanish people are berber?

Logic is a useful tool.

Related Links

How can Morocco regain its territories from Spain? And can Canary islands go under Morocco's control?

What would happen if Morocco seized Ceuta, Melilla, and the Canary Islands (backed by the Arab league)?

Why does the world allow Spain to rule the Moroccan cities Ceuta and Melilla?

What is the coherence of Spain claiming Gibraltar but not willing to yield Ceuta and Melilla?

What is it like to live in Ceuta or Melilla?

What is the deal with Morocco and Spain tussling over Melilla and Ceuta? Why have these territories fallen under Spanish control and why has Morocco failed to conquer them back?

Why was Morocco not able to militarily conquer Ceuta and Melilla?
Does Spain think it is fair that it should get Gibraltar back but not return Ceuta?

How does Spain justify its occupation of Moroccan claimed land? What does Morocco do about this?

Why are Ceuta and Melilla Spanish cities? Does Morocco want them?
Do people who live in Ceuta and Melilla have Spanish or Moroccan nationality?

As a Spaniard, do you believe that Spain should give up Ceuta and Melilla to Morocco?

What is life in Ceuta like considering it is physically separated from its own country?

Should Spain return Ceuta and Melilla to Morocco in exchange for British relinquish of their control of Gibraltar?

Why doesn't Morocco annex Spain?

What is the deal with Morocco and Spain tussling over Melilla and Ceuta? Why have these territories fallen under Spanish control and why has Morocco failed to conquer them back?

Lucas Villar Updated 2y

Originally Answered: What the whole deal with Morocco and Spain tussling over Melilla and Ceuta? Why have they fallen under Spanish control and why has Morocco failed to conquer them back?

Morocco didn't fail to conquer them back, they might have failed to conquer them.

CEUTA

Ceuta is founded by the Phoenicians along other cities of southern Spain such as Gadir (later Gades, modern Cádiz). So from a start Ceuta's foundational ties are with the Phoenician settlements in Spain not the Berbers and certainly not the Arabs that would later form Morocco.

The Carthaginians who were the main Phoenician settlement in the western Mediterranean took control of the Phoenician settlements after the fall of the capital Tyre. This includes Ceuta and all the Phoenician settlements in southern and eastern Spain. The Carthaginians expand into inland Spain unifying the southern territory trying to rival the Romans, Ceuta is part of that, nothing to do with the Berber peoples of further south in modern Morocco but with Carthage.

The Romans defeat Carthage and take Spain, amd Ceuta included, which is Septa in Latin. Ceuta is part of the Roman diocesis of Mauretania Tingitana, which is part of the province of Hispania. Because the Romans considered the Strait of Gibraltar part of Hispania, including the north African side of it.

When Rome falls the Visigoths take Hispania, including Ceuta which is part of Visigothic Spania, again not Berber (Morocco doesn't exist).

Briefly the Byzantines launched a campaign to reconquer the Western Roman Empire in Italy and Spain, they succeed in southern Italy and southern Spain which become part of the Eastern Roman Empire, Ceuta also goes with Constantinople as part of southern Spania.

The Visigoths reconquer southern Spania, including Ceuta which goes back to the Visigoths with Iberia.

The Muslims arrive in north Africa and the count of Ceuta betrays the Visigothic king and joins the Muslims to keep his place in the Caliphate. But soon the Moors conquer Iberia and Ceuta is again the same. The Idrisid dynasty establishes itself appart from the Ummayyad caliphate in what would be roughly modern Morocco and conquers Ceuta from the Ummayyad Caliphate. Iberia remains as the Emirate of Córdoba.

But as most people who like history know, the Ummayyad Caliphate was ended with the assassination of the Ummayyad family at the hands of the Abbasid family, moving the capital to Baghdad. But one Ummayyad escapes the massacre in Damascus, Abderraman, who flees far away to Iberia. In Iberia he establishes himself as the independent Emir of Córodba, continuing the Ummayyad line in Al Andalus.

Abderraman III of Córdoba declares it the Caliphate of Córdoba, fully separate from Baghdad and he conquers Ceuta back from the Idrisids, binding Ceuta once more to Iberia.

In the next centuries Ceuta remains part of Muslim Iberian Taifas and Caliphates, changing from one kingdom to another but all of them in what would be modern Spain. Until the Almoravids and Almohads, which are 2 North African dynasties that conquer Ceuta AND Iberia, meaning once more Ceuta goes with Morocco because Spain goes with Morocco too.

After the weakening of the Muslim Iberian kingdoms, Ceuta falls in hands of various North African dynasties from what would be modern Morocco, but also modern Algeria and modern Tunis AND is also conquered by the Sultanate of Granada. These North African dynasties and Granada conquer Ceuta back and forth against each other.

Castile signs with Aragón a deal to delimit the sphere of expansion of each other, Aragón gives Ceuta to Castile, recognising Ceuta as part of the land to reconquer, not that strange because Ceuta was part of Granada.

But Aragon and Portugal don't like Castile's expansion and first Aragon supports the Muslims from North Africa to take Ceuta from Granada to make it harder for Castile to conquer it. Castile had already Gibraltar and the province of Cádiz, so Castile controlled the entrance to the Mediterranean. Portugal is not very happy with that and conquers the city before Castile. From that moment Ceuta stops changing hands among Muslim states amd becomes Portuguese.

Castile and Aragon merge into modern Spain. During a succession crisis Phillip II of Spain, son of the Portuguese princess reclaims the Portuguese throne, much of Portugal refuses to become one with Spain, but the Spanish armies defeat the Portuguese forces and Portugal enters a union with Spain. Ceuta becomes part of the Iberian Union.

Portugal revolts against the union in the mid 1600s, and succeeds. But Ceuta does not revolt, Ceuta does not support leaving with Portugal, and Portugal renounces its claim on Ceuta as part of the treaty by which Spain renounces the Portuguese throne. Ceuta becomes part of modern Spain.

Later on Castile sides with the Bourbon family during the Spanish Succession War and Ceuta sides with the rest of Castile. The Dutch and the British forces take Gibraltar for the Habsburg side. They try to take Ceuta too, but failed and they allied with the Moroccan forces to take it from Spain then, but the both combined fail too. The Habsburg heir becomes emperor and the British decide to drop from the war, not without some gains. Peace is signed but Ceuta remains Spanish.

Later on Spain has a protetorate in northern Morocco. This protectorate eventually ends and the Spanish forces in Morocco recede to Ceuta, which does not want to leave with Morocco and is not even an option for Spain as it was Spanish long before the protectorate.

The fact that Ceuta is in north Africa doesn't mean it was a colony conquered by Spain like Gibraltar. Ceuta has never been Moroccan, the closest to that was briefly from the 8th to the 10th century as part of the Idrisid territories which were not even the same as modern Morocco.

But even that claim is absolutely ridiculous, because applying that logic it was also during 3 centuries part of Visigothic Spania before the Idrisids took it. And part of Roman Hispania before any of that. Ceuta has been tied to Iberia for over a 90% of its recorded history and it was never Moroccan to be taken back.

MELILLA

Melilla was founded by thhe Phoenicians, it was Carthaginian and then Roman, it as also part of Hispania for the most part.
After the fall of Rome, Melilla is ignored by the Muslims and abandoned.

Abderraman III of Córdoba, takes the ruins of the city and repopulates it.

Melilla remains tied to Iberian Muslim kingdoms exactly like Ceuta, until the Almoravids and Almohads take it just like Ceuta along with the rest of Muslim Iberia.

The difference here is that after the Almohads it goes with the Merinids and the Sultanate of Fez which were in modern day Morocco, it does not belong to Granada.

But Melilla was located on the eastern border of the Sultanate of Fez, and it is in constant fights between Muslim kingdoms in north Africa, being almost depopulated again.

Eventually Castile takes the city in the 1400s, and it becomes part of Spain later with the union with Aragon. It remains part of Spain throughout the centuries.

Then comes the Spanish protectorate in Morocco and like Ceuta, when the protectorate ends Melilla does not support leaving with Morocco as it had been Spanish long before the protectorate took place. And in fact Melilla has plenty of Modernist architecture typical of Spain in the 19th century and the industrial revolution, before the protectorate.

Melilla was not Moroccan either, the closest to that was when it was a bordering part of the Sultanate of Fez for 2 centuries, almost destroyed during that time by the wars of the sultanate.

But again that claim is ridiculous too, Spain can go further back then or claim the other over 90% of its recorded history as Spanish, or the fact that the Sultanate of Fez was not modern Morocco even! You can't just cling onto 2 centuries of some previous north African state during the 10th century as if it were more legitimate than the rest of the history, both before and after that, including 2 re-constructions of the city from ruins done by Iberians.

Related Links

How can Morocco regain its territories from Spain? And can Canary islands go under Morocco's control?

Why did Spain give up Spanish Morocco if they are so close and don't have to be considered a colony?

Why does the world allow Spain to rule the Moroccan cities Ceuta and Melilla?
As a Spaniard, do you believe that Spain should give up Ceuta and Melilla to Morocco?

What is the coherence of Spain claiming Gibraltar but not willing to yield Ceuta and Melilla?

What would happen if Morocco seized Ceuta, Melilla, and the Canary Islands (backed by the Arab league)?

If Spain were to lose a war with Morocco over the plazas de soberanía, would the Moroccans attempt to permanently conquer Málaga and Almería too, in the far south of Spain?

Does Spain think it is fair that it should get Gibraltar back but not return Ceuta?

How does Spain justify its occupation of Moroccan claimed land? What does Morocco do about this?

Why doesn't Morocco return Rif to Spain?

How can Morocco regain its territories from Spain? And can Canary islands go under Morocco's control?

Joseph Adamson Updated Dec 23

The Canary Islands has never been part of Morocco nor Islam has arrived here. I am from here and stop dreaming.First fix your own country before you go or think beyond your permissess

Related Links

What would happen if Morocco seized Ceuta, Melilla, and the Canary Islands (backed by the Arab league)?

What is the coherence of Spain claiming Gibraltar but not willing to yield Ceuta and Melilla?

Why does the world allow Spain to rule the Moroccan cities Ceuta and Melilla?

What is the deal with Morocco and Spain tussling over Melilla and Ceuta? Why have these territories fallen under Spanish control and why has Morocco failed to conquer them back?

Does Spain think it is fair that it should get Gibraltar back but not return Ceuta?
As a Spaniard, do you believe that Spain should give up Ceuta and Melilla to Morocco?

Why does Morocco continue to state claim to Ceuta and Melilla desire them being part of Spain for centuries?

Why was Morocco not able to militarily conquer Ceuta and Melilla?
What is it like to live in Ceuta or Melilla?

Why doesn't Morocco annex Western Sahara, Mauritania, the Canary Islands, Gibraltar, Ceuta and Melilla, Andalusia and portions of Algeria and Mali to expand into Greater Morocco?

Do people who live in Ceuta and Melilla have Spanish or Moroccan nationality?

Why were the Canary Islands neglected by the Moroccan predecessor states, even if they were known to exist?

Why are the Canary Islands a part of Spain?
Why aren’t Ceuta and Melilla returned to Morocco by Spain?
How does Spain compare to Morocco, and how does Spain feel about Morocco?

Qu'est-ce qui est bon au Maroc ou en Algérie qu'il n'y en a pas en France?

Samir سمير Farid فريد Lieu : Maroc (1977–aujourd'hui) 10 mo

Je dirais les lever et les coucher du soleil dans le désert, c'est absolument fabuleux.

Les remparts des vieilles médinas et les vestiges des cités impériales.

Les veillées de prière au Ramadan,

Les délices du Ramadan,

Les dattes Majhoul éventuellement,

Et surtout la réunion familiale chateureuse autour d'un couscous,

Questions similaires

Pourquoi le Maroc est-il plus fort que l'Algérie ?
La France a-t-elle encore son mot à dire sur l'Algérie ?
Qu'est-ce qui empêche des pays comme l'Algérie et le Maroc à se développer ?
Comment voyez-vous l'Algérie ?
Pourquoi l'Algérie n'est-elle pas resté française ?

Pourquoi il n'y a qu'avec l'Algérie que les relations sont souvent tendues alors que la France a occupé d'autres pays ?

Quel est le problème profond que l'Algérie a avec la France ?
Comment était l'Algérie avant d'être française ?
Est-il vrai qu'il existe des sentiments de haine entre Français et Algériens ?
Aimez-vous l'Algérie ?
Pourquoi certains Marocains n'aiment-ils pas les Algériens?
Pensez-vous qu'à terme la Kabylie finira par obtenir son indépendance du reste de l'Algérie ?
Faut il aussi des excuses de l'Algérie vis à vis des pieds noirs ?
Qu'est-ce que l'Algérie a de différents des autres pays ?
Pourquoi l'Algérie et le Maroc se détestent-ils ?

News Nigeria
Morocco moves a mountain to save a child □□#save_rayan #ريان_أنقذوا
Unfortunate rescuers met him dead

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong

أف ب

AFP

Êtes-vous allé à Marrakech ? Avez-vous aimé ?

Paul Henri Doumenc 1 an

J'y suis allé plusieurs fois. Très jolie ville. Ce qui est sympa c'est de louer une voiture ou un scooter pour visiter l'Atlas à quelques kilomètres. Le problème c'est que le manque de touristes depuis quelques années fait que les locaux sont plus insistant avec les touristes, voir agressif pour gagner un peu d'argent et on vous aborde en anglais, pas en français donc ça doit être un désamour des Français pour le pays. Ils restent très accueillants. Cet été on s'est arrêté dans un tout petit village, une famille berbère nous a invité dans leur maison, nous ont fait visiter leur cuisine traditionnelle, montré leurs chèvres et servi un reste de couscous dans le salon avec les enfants et la grand-mère, mais dans le souk c'est vite pénible.

Conseil : quand des gamins vous courent après pour vous réclamer de l'argent, dites leur "Safi" (ça suffit) ça les calme.

Attention : prendre en photo un artisan c'est très souvent payant.

Paul Henri Doumenc Répondu 7 mars 2020

J'y suis allé plusieurs fois. Très jolie ville. Ce qui est sympa c'est de louer une voiture ou un scooter pour visiter l'Atlas à quelques kilomètres. Le problème c'est que le manque de touristes depuis quelques années fait que les locaux sont plus insistant avec les touristes, voir agressif pour gagner un peu d'argent et on vous aborde en anglais, pas en français donc ça doit être un désamour des Français pour le pays. Ils restent très accueillants. Cet été on s'est arrêté dans un tout petit village, une famille berbère nous a invité dans leur maison, nous ont fait visiter leur cuisine traditionnelle, montré leurs chèvres et servi un reste de couscous dans le salon avec les enfants et la grand-mère, mais dans le souk c'est vite pénible.

Conseil : quand des gamins vous courent après pour vous réclamer de l'argent, dites leur "Safi" (ça suffit) ça les calme.

Attention : prendre en photo un artisan c'est très souvent payant.

Questions similaires

Quel sont les dix lieux à voir à Marrakech ?
Que ne doit-on absolument pas faire au Maroc ?
Quels sont les faux-pas (mauvaises affaires, fautes culturelles) à éviter à Marrakech ?
Quelle est la meilleure chose à rapporter du Maroc ?
Qui aime visiter le Maroc et pourquoi ?
Avez-vous visité Marrakech ?
Pourquoi les touristes européens raffolent tant des destinations comme Marrakech ?
Quelles sont les choses qu'on aime au Maroc ?
Pourquoi les Marocains fuient-ils le Maroc ?
Qui veut faire un voyage au Maroc ?
Pourquoi Marrakech est surnommé ‘’ la ville rouge ‘’?
Que pensez-vous du Maroc en tant que touriste ?
Comment voyez-vous le Maroc ?

Je vais aller au Maroc vers fin d'Octobre 2019? Où est-ce que je peux visiter à Casablanca et Rabat ?

Pourquoi le Maroc est-il si populaire en tant que destination touristique ?

News Nigeria

Morocco wins the World Cup for the year 2022 in the field of cooking □□

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong Thu

Culinar

Quels plats du Maghreb (Maroc, Algérie, Tunisie) sont inconnus en France ?

Kemal Al Gazzah Ingénieur chez Many entreprises (1994–aujourd'hui)1 an Je pense que le plat le plus inconnu en France est la Mloukhia.

Ce plat n'est pas préparé au centre et à l'ouest Algérien ainsi qu'au Maroc.

Son aire géographique correspond à l'Ifriqiya ou l'Afrika , région qui englobe la Tunisie, l'est Algérien et la Tripolitaine et qui a donné son nom à tout le contient Africain.

Il s'agit d'un plat préparé avec la poudre d'une plante appelé corète potagère

Au Maghreb, cette poudre de corète, dont la cuisson délicate donne à ce plat toute sa saveur, demande plusieurs heures de mijotage à feu doux. D'abord frite dans l'huile, elle est ensuite délayée avec de l'eau bien chaude et demande alors une certaine force, pour que les deux composants (huile et eau) se mêlent jusqu'à former un liquide verdâtre qui deviendra marron foncé au fil de la cuisson lente et des temps de repos de la sauce.

Le plat est préparé avec de la viande de mouton ou bœuf.

On le mange chaud avec du pain de blé traditionnel ou avec la baguette italienne.

Il est servi aussi au cours des cérémonies de mariage et se prépare le jour de l'an du calendrier lunaire, Hégire.

Ce plat est aussi connu au Mali, Niger et au Tchad ainsi qu'en Egypte et dans les pays du Levant mais avec une préparation assez différente de celle du Maghreb.

Questions similaires

Pourquoi les français préfèrent-ils aller en Tunisie ou au Maroc plutôt qu'en Algérie ?
Question polémique : que préférez-vous le couscous marocain, algérien ou tunisien ?
Qu'est-ce que les Marocains aiment manger ?
Quels sont les plats favoris des Marocains ?
Y a-t-il une différence entre la cuisine marocaine et la cuisine algérienne ?
Quelles sont les resources principales de la Tunisie, du Maroc et de l'Algérie ?
Qu'est-ce qui est bon au Maroc ou en Algérie qu'il n'y en a pas en France?
Quels sont les plats typiques Algériens ?
Quels sont les plats français les plus appréciés au Maroc ?
Quel est le meilleur plat en Algérie ?

Quels usages très positifs des sociétés du Maghreb mériteraient d'être adoptés en France ?
Quels sont les plats traditionnels français oubliés ?
Comment faire une sauce algérienne ?
Pourquoi la nourriture en Algérie a meilleur goût que en France ?
Que pensent les peuples d'Afrique (Maroc, Algérie, Tunisie, etc.) du nord de la France ?

Quels usages très positifs des sociétés du Maghreb mériteraient d'être adoptés en France ?

Richard Trigaux (Yichard Muni) , Bac + 2, physique, électronique
Répondu 31 août 2018

En tout premier bien sûr l'abstinence d'alcool. Au lieu de braire pour avoir davantage de drogues.

Davantage de sens collectif, au lieu de chacun pour soi.
Le chèche. Bon d'ac, le chèche c'est pour ne pas se déshydrater dans le désert.

Mais en Europe ça éviterait de transmettre les rhumes et la grippe, en ayant tout de même l'air plus cool que le masque chirurgical.

Quand un gosse fait une idiotie dans la rue, tout le monde a le droit de le réprimander. En France si on fait ça, les parents accourent pour donner raison au gosse. C'est pas malin.
Ne pas enquiquiner les gens sur leur religion.
Le thé à la mente, en levant la théière 50cm au-dessus du verre.
Le vrai taboulé, pas le truc aux oignons qu'on trouve sous ce nom.
L'adobe, et l'architecture des courbes et des dômes.
La centrale solaire géante de Ouarzazate.
Et bien sûr le soleil!!!

Geoffray Tranber , Le sérieux est le bouclier de la connerie :-))
Répondu 25 août 2018

Lors d'une mission d'un an à Casablanca, dans une grosse banque Marocaine, j'ai été très admiratif de la manière dont plusieurs jours par an, des collegiens sont accueillis et occupés, pour les familiariser avec la vie (si excitante) de l'entreprise.

Et il n'y avait pas juste les 2 filleuls des dirlos de la boîte : c'est vraiment une sacré bande qui est reçue et occupée chaque année, par des taches qui montrent les confiance qui leur est faite. Ils ne font pas que des photocopies.

C'est chaleureux et indulgent.

Nous, on n'a pas ça.

Maintenant… ne nous leurrons pas : une fois les mêmes jeunes sur le marché du travail, sur place, le taux de chômage est très élevé.

Mais en tous cas, la qualité de la démarche inter-generationnelle, faisait chaud au cœur.

:-))

Questions similaires

Dans quelles villes françaises y a-t-il le moins de Français d'origine maghrébine ?

Pourquoi ceux qu'on appelle des Maghrébins s'appellent ainsi tout en sachant qu'ils sont sur le continent africain ?

Vaut-il mieux être Noir ou Arabe/Maghrébin de nos jours en France ?

Existe-t-il un seul accent maghrébin en français ou plusieurs accents maghrébins différents ?

Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?

Pourquoi les gens avec des origines étrangères ont-ils des prénoms français sauf les maghrébins ?

Pourquoi les Maghrébins sont-ils mal vus en France ?

Est-il encore vrai que les habitants du Maghreb ont peu de respect pour les leurs qui vivent en France ou dans d'autres pays occidentaux ?

Pourquoi un bon pourcentage des Algériens nés avant l'indépendance (1962) disent que « l'Algérie était beaucoup plus heureuse et prospère du temps de la colonisation française »?

A quels problèmes doivent faire face les différents pays du Maghreb ?

Ma fille sera-t-elle considérée comme Maghrébine ou comme Française en France en sachant qu'elle y est née et qu'elle a un prénom français et un nom maghrébin ?

Quelles sont les villes ou régions françaises où il y a le moins d'originaires du Maghreb ?

Qui est mal vu en France : les hommes maghrébins ou les femmes maghrébines ?

L'anglais remplacera-t-il bientôt le français comme deuxième langue de la Tunisie, du Maroc et de l'Algérie ?

Faites-vous partie des gens intéressés par la connaissance de certaines formes d'arabe du Maghreb (daridja algérienne, marocaine, tunisienne) et/ou de berbère (kabyle, chleuh, rifain, chaoui) ? Quelles sont vos motivations ?

Outre la religion, les Marocains sont-ils davantage influencés par la culture arabe ou berbère ?

Adil El Nhayli , passionné par l'histoire de la région MENA Répondu 23 mars 2020

Déjà il faut savoir définir ce qu'est la culture arabe. Car beaucoup d'attraits culturels des Marocains qui pourraient faire penser à de la "culture arabe" (la culture de l'hospitalité, parler fort, être émotif, le respect des parents, la culture de clan) sont aussi communs aux Africains ainsi aux Européens méditerranéens (Espagnols, Portugais, Italiens, Grecs, Balkans, etc..).

La seule chose d'arabe que les Marocains ont c'est la langue. Et l'influence de la culture islamique qui puise ses racines en Arabie. Mais sinon, si on regarde les cultures des pays de la péninsule arabe et la culture du Maroc et du reste du Maghreb, c'est comme comparer la culture des pays d'Amérique latine avec la culture d'Espagne. Ce ne sont pas du tout les mêmes populations et la même culture. Seul l'arabophonie et la culture musulmane nous rassemble.

Donc je dirais que le socle de la culture marocaine c'est bien la culture amazighe (encore une fois, berbère n'est pas un terme à utiliser à notre époque), ainsi que la culture africaine subsaharienne et andalouse. L'influence arabe se retrouve dans la langue, l'apport religieux et à certaines choses que les Arabes ont ramenés avec eux, comme les épices d'Orient (safran, curcuma, cumin, la cannelle, etc..), des plants de fruits (les agrumes, les pêches entre autres).

Questions similaires

Est-ce que les Berbères sont opprimés par les Arabes d'Afrique du Nord ?
Est-ce que les Berbères sont d'origine arabe ?
Pourquoi les Marocains ne supportent pas les Algériens, qui ont pourtant une culture similaire ?
Les Algériens sont-ils des Arabes ou des Berbères, ou un brassage entre les deux ?
Les Maghrébins sont-ils des Arabes ?
Pourquoi les Marocains fuient-ils le Maroc ?
Les kabyles sont-ils arabes ?

Pourquoi les Berbères ressemblent-ils aux Arabes alors que génétiquement il s'agit de 2 populations bien différentes ?

Quel est la différence entre arabe et maghrebin ?

Pourquoi les Berbères ne se rebellent-ils pas contre les musulmans et ne suivent-ils pas leurs anciens modes de vie et croyances ? Pourquoi préfèrent-ils rester musulmans ?

Si vous êtes nord-africain/maghrébin : considérez-vous que vous êtes arabe ou amazigh/berbère ?

Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?

Qu'est-ce qui vous dérange à propos de la culture marocaine ?
Quel est la difference entre Kabyle et Berbere ?
Quels sont les faits intéressants sur les Berbères ?

Pourquoi les français préfèrent-ils aller en Tunisie ou au Maroc plutôt qu'en Algérie ?

Olivier Carriere Anciennement Souscripteur assurance énergie (1989–2018) 2 ans

Avant, en tant que français je croyais que l'immense majorité des algériens nous détestait en gros résumé à cause de cette boucherie de la guerre d'independance. Et puis j'y suis allé en tant qu'assureur de la Sonatrach, société d'état dédiée au gaz et au pétrole, extrêmement puissante du fait des réserves énormes de ce pays qui alimente l'Europe via trois gazoducs trans-méditérannéns et des flottes de méthaniers. Deux voyages très intéressants à Alger, Skikda, Hassi R'mel et Arzew. Et je m'étais trompé. Tous les gens qui n'étaient pas partie prenante avec l'entourage de la Sonatrach et qui n'avaient aucune intention de me caresser dans le sens du poil étaient accueillants, gentils, drôles, curieux et sincères. Les paysages de l'Algérie sont beaux et très variés. Maintenant pour beaucoup de touristes le visa est une plaie et l'offre de logements, bof. Pour résumer, allez en Algérie vous ferez des belles rencontres humaines

Questions similaires

Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?

Pourquoi les Algériens sont-ils si fiers de leur pays mais dans le même temps le fuient en masse ?
Pourquoi les Marocains ne supportent pas les Algériens, qui ont pourtant une culture similaire ?
Pourquoi certains Algériens font n'importe quoi en France ?
Que pensez-vous des Algériens ?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il plus fort que l'Algérie ?
Pourquoi certains Marocains n'aiment-ils pas les Algériens?
Que pensez-vous de l'Algérie ?
Pourquoi les Algériens, au moins ceux en France, parlent si bien le français ?
Que pensent les Algériens des Français ?

Pourquoi parle-t-on presque toujours de la relation France/Algérie et si peu de la colonisation française en Tunisie et au Maroc ?

L'anglais remplacera-t-il bientôt le français comme deuxième langue de la Tunisie, du Maroc et de l'Algérie ?

Que pensez-vous des Marocains ?
Les français détestent-ils les maghrébins ?

Pourquoi les Marocains fuient-ils le Maroc ?

Quels sont les résultats probables de la crise Maroc-Algerie ?

Bouali · Suivre Lieu : Maroc (1959–aujourd'hui) sam.

Ce bras de fer entre les deux gouvernements d'Algérie et du Maroc a duré presque 45 ans et continue encore.

C'est un conflit bidon et mal géré.

Alors ,c'est le rôle des deux sociétés civile d'imposer la paix et l'ouverture des frontières.

Le Maroc et l'Algérie reste des cousins.

L'union fait la force et arrêtons d'ajouter l'huile sur le feu.

Questions similaires

Les algériens croient-ils vraiment que le Maroc est à l'origine des feux de foret en Kabylie comme l'a annoncé le président Tebboune ?

Qu'est-ce qui empêche des pays comme l'Algérie et le Maroc à se développer ?
Si une guerre Algérie Maroc éclatait qui gagnerait ?
À quoi joue le Maroc en soutenant le Mouvement pour l'autodétermination de la Kabylie ?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il constamment présenté comme un pays arrière ?
Pourquoi l'Algérie et le Maroc se détestent-ils ?
Quel est le problème profond que l'Algérie a avec la France ?
Pourquoi l'Algerie s'immisce dans l'affaire du Sahara Occidental ?
Pourquoi l'Algérie a-t-elle rompu ses relations diplomatiques avec le Maroc ?
Est-ce que le Maroc va attaquer l'Algérie ?
Pourquoi le Maroc ne rompt pas toutes ses relations avec l'Algerie ?
Le Maroc et l'Algérie vont-ils s'engager dans un conflit armé ?
Quelles sont les raisons de la crise financière de 2020 ?
Pourquoi l'Algérie remet-elle maintenant sur la table la question mémorielle avec la France ?
Dans quelle mesure une guerre est-elle possible entre l'Algérie et le Maroc ?

How is it that Morocco was the only country that never experienced any crisis during the Arab Spring in Northern Africa?

Yaswell Kabnek knows French Answered 18h ago

Arab monarchies in general were not hit by the arab Spring (Jordan, Morocco, Saudi Arabia..) That's because the arab kings have made themselves appear as religious sacred figures, descendants of Muhammad, appointed by God, etc.
Moroccans grow from very young to venerate the king and his family as saintly figures. This isn't the case in arab republics.

In Arab republics (Syria, Tunisia, Egypt..) the dictators claim to be democratically elected, so their legitimacy is based on a false democratic claim rathen than on a religious claim.

While the Arab peoples respect religion much more than anything else, so a religious legitimacy is the strongest justification a regime can build for itself.

Related Answer
Are there any Arab countries that have really benefited from the Arab Spring?

Nadhiya Athaide , Iranian Historian & Curator Updated 6h ago

Besides Tunisia which achieved one positive by establishing a democratic republic, no. And even Tunisia appears to be regressing with the Coup against the Prime Minister last year. Now it is important to mention that the previous Prime Minister was becoming increasingly unpopular anyways. Nonetheless, a President deposing an elected Prime Minister and freezing parliament is a coup.

Egypt managed to emerge somewhat unscathed after the 2nd revolution. They managed to avoid civil war, Sisi took power, and then brutally cracked down on the Muslim brotherhood. And he’s still in power today. But I still don’t know if I'd call this a “benefit”

But in nearly all other places, the Arab spring and subsequent foreign interventions and backing bought nothing but war, violence, and chaos.

It led to a disastrous NATO intervention and civil war in Libya

Syria descended into a complex civil war that later dragged in Turkey, US, Russia & Iran

Yemen descended into a civil war and is now defacto split along the same lines of Southern Yemen and Northern Yemen. Two states that existed during the cold war era before reunification in the ’90s

Bahrain's revolution was brutally crushed by the Saudi military.

One positive of the Arab spring is that it managed to inspire the younger generation. The younger generation began using social media to express their frustrations and concerns. It inspired them to take the streets without fear, something that the older generations were always cautious about doing. And we saw this very clearly during the recent protests in Iraq, Lebanon & Algeria, which were largely led by the youth.

Related Answer
Was Arab Spring good or bad for Arab nations?

Basil Keilani, studied Political Science (2000) Answered Feb 25, 2019

Too hard to tell. It has been good for Tunisia. Tunisia is now more secular and democratic. In terms of Egypt, depending on your perspective, Egyptians are much less interested in the Muslim Brotherhood in comparison to the past. Of course, if you support the Muslim Brotherhood, you wouldn't think that way. If you want a somewhat more socially progressive Egypt, sure. Egypt is not democratic, but it's more socially liberal under Sisi. Husni Mubarak made way for a president who is trying to invest in energy, focusing on long-term planning for Egypt. Iraq wasn't really affected. Jordan wasn't affected much. Libya got rid of Qaddafi, but they still don't know how to put their country together. When they eventually do and if they build something good, then we could say it was good. In the short-run, getting rid of Qaddafi appears to have made things worse for Libyans. However, eventually, Libya will have a government, and it will be more responsive to its citizens. The Arab Spring helped lead to the civil war in Syria. It depends on how Syria comes out of its civil war before we can say some decades later whether Syria came out better as a result of a civil war where 600,000+ people died and millions became refugees and the world got ISIS.

The Arab Spring is different than the Prague Spring, which was crushed decades ago. I would say it was more about the economic discontent in the countries that led to the Arab Spring. People weren't fighting for freedom and democracy per se. All were dissatisfied with the status quo. Anyway, revolutions are often not so smooth. The French had the reign of terror after the king was removed, the disaster wars of the two Napoleons. Ask the same question in 10 years.

Related Answer

Why was Morocco not as affected by the Arab Spring as other Arab countries were?

Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan , lived in Meknès, Morocco Answered Oct 12, 2019

Because the King gave in.
After Tunisia's success, the Arabs protested as they called for an improvement in living conditions, more rights and political reform. The Arab rulers had 3 choices:

Buy off the people
Saudi king back home, orders $37 billion in handouts

Give the people what they want
Moroccan monarch unveils reforms

Kill the people

Libya protests: More than 100 killed as army fires on unarmed demonstrators

Bahraini dead and wounded after security forces opened fire on a protest in 2011

King Mohammed VI chose option 2 and agreed to many concessions that protest leaders had. He agreed to stop choosing the Prime Minister and gave that right to Moroccan voters for example. This avoided angering the Moroccan people too much and ensured any rebellion lacked legitimacy contrary to Libya or Syria.

Hence Morocco avoiding the brunt of the Arab Spring. The people got much of what they demanded.

Related Links

Were the Berbers and Arabs of North Africa originally black? If so, how did they end up being lighter skin today?

Why was Morocco not as affected by the Arab Spring as other Arab countries were?
What was/is the Arab Spring?
What were the causes of the Arab Spring?
Why is Morocco the most visited country in Africa?
Is Morocco the poorest country in North Africa?
Can Morocco be considered Arab?
What if the Arab Spring never happened?
How many Arab countries are there in Africa?
Why is Morocco a poor country?
Did the Arab Spring result in any positive change?
How did Saudi Arabia survive the Arab Spring?
Is Morocco an Arab country?
Why did Arabs never enter the interior of East Africa?
Why has the Arab Spring phenomenon not affected Saudi Arabia?

Quelle est la meilleure chose à rapporter du Maroc ? What is the best thing to bring from Morocco?

Jerome Cohen Mon père était de Casablanca, ma mère fait un super tajine!Traducteur 2 ans

Adil El Nhayli a French-born Moroccan who lives in Canada. Cette réponse peut ne pas être une traduction fidèle de la réponse de Adil El Nhayli dans Quora en anglais :

J'achète toujours ces articles en grande quantité lorsque je vais rendre visite à mes grands-parents afin de pouvoir les utiliser toute l'année au Canada.

Un litre d'huile d'argan alimentaire (que je transvase dans une bouteille en verre et que je garde loin de la lumière pour maximiser sa fraîcheur).

Quelques bouteilles d'huile d'argan cosmétique (que j'offre à mes meilleurs amis ou que certains collègues me demandent parfois de leur acheter)

Des épices (graines de cumin entières, curcuma, safran, paprika, poivre blanc, piment rouge en poudre, bâtons de cannelle).

1 kg d'Amlou (beurre d'amandes du sud du Maroc, mélangé avec du miel sauvage et de l'huile d'argan) pour que je puisse prendre mon propre petit-déjeuner amazigh de temps en temps (c'est si bon avec du pain).

1 litre d'eau de fleur d'oranger que je garde au frigo. Elle est tellement parfumée et elle peut faire une grande différence dans votre thé ou vos desserts.

Quelques biscuits marocains fraîchement préparés, soit par ma grand-mère ou mes tantes, soit achetés dans une boulangerie digne de confiance. Des briwates aux amandes, quelques Kaab El Ghzal (cornes de gazelle en français) et quelques Faqqas. Ils se conservent longtemps et sont délicieux avec du thé à la menthe.

Sinon, je peux acheter des Babouches, des Jellabas ou n'importe quel produit en cuir qui me plaît.

Si le Maroc est un pays berbère et les berbères sont des blancs, pourquoi une très grande partie des marocains a une peau foncée ?

Abdelwaheb Hammami · Suivre Anciennement Ancien enseignant d'histoire 12 sept.

La population marocaine est le résultat d'un brassage ethnique qui s'est opéré durant des siecles. L'étude génétique le prouve comme le montre les documents ci-dessous © Encyclopædia Britannica, Inc.

In addition, results identified Horn of Africa (average 8.5%) and West African (average 13.3%) components. These were most pronounced for the South Moroccan population, but were found for all studied North African populations. This suggests consistent patterns of contact between North Africa and Sub-Saharan regions, possibly dating to early periods such as the Capsian culture that was in contact with East Africa during the "Green Sahara" period.

Population	Arabian	Atlantic European	West African	Horn of Africa	Other
Algeria	62.6%	19.4%	11.7%	6.2%	0.0%
Libya	78.5%	8.5%	6.6%	6.5%	0.0%
Mozabite	52.8%	20.1%	16.3%	10.7%	0.0%
North Morocco	58.8%	27.2%	6.9%	7.1%	0.0%
Sahrawi	63.4%	10.1%	15.0%	11.4%	0.0%
South Morocco	43.0%	15.0%	30.8%	9.7%	1.4%
Tunisia	62.7%	23.4%	6.0%	7.9%	0.0%
Average	60.3%	17.7%	13.3%	8.5%	0.2%

Table 2: Regional admixture in North African populations based on autosomal SNP data.

Pourquoi les Berbères ressemblent-ils aux Arabes alors que génétiquement il s'agit de 2 populations bien différentes ?

Aslan Vartaia A étudié Anthropologie à Université de la SorbonneMis à jour le 8 mo

Les Berbères n'ont probablement jamais été une population homogène,toute l'Afrique du Nord,de l'Égypte aux iles Canaries,de la Tunisie jusqu'au cœur du Mali et du Niger fut leur territoire,en conséquence,des mélanges eurent lieu au cours de l'histoire,des études génétiques montrent un apport relativement récent d'origine Subsaharien,il y a 7–10 siècles,ce qui coïncide avec l'arabisation du Maghreb,et le début de la traite d'esclave trans-Saharienne,cet apport est principalement du côté maternel,ainsi les Égyptiens par exemple ont en moyenne 20% de leur patrimoine génétique maternel issu de populations de l'Ouest de l'Afrique,ce qui n'était pas le cas des anciens Égyptiens,ce qui va de pair avec les Maghrébins,chez lesquels 8–20% de leur patrimoine maternel vient d'Afrique Subsaharienne,un nombre qui est plus élevé chez certains populations Sahariennes comme les Touaregs,qui peut aller jusqu'à 60%,ce qui explique leur apparence métissée,l'apport paternel Subsaharien chez tous ces groupes est pratiquement nul cependant

Pour les Berbères c'est plus compliqué,de multiples migration d'Orient ont altéré le patrimoine génétique des Nord Africains,la plus connue est l'expansion arabe,mais d'autres l'ont précédé,notamment la naissance de la culture Capsienne il y a 10.000 ans,qui a introduit l'agriculture et probablement la langue berbère et qui est sans doute en partie originaire du Proche-Orient,après tout, le cheval et le chien sont d'origine Eurasienne,non Africaine,et pourtant ces deux espèces abondent en Afrique du Nord depuis au moins l'Antiquité, suggérant d'anciens contacts entre l'Eurasie et l'Afrique du Nord,les ancêtres des Berbères sont issus de plusieurs vagues migratoires d'Eurasie et d'Afrique de l'Est, la majeure partie des haplogroupes Moyen-Orientaux et Européens retrouvés au Maghreb sont d'origine néolithique, et non pas Arabe ou Andalou comme peuvent l'imaginer beaucoup de gens,ce qui explique la diversité des phénotypes qu'on observe aujourd'hui au Maghreb,des populations plus ou moins hétérogènes ont toujours co-habités au Maghreb depuis des milliers d'années,cependant les plus anciennes représentations de Berbères les montrent plutôt comme ayant eu le teint clair et des caractéristiques " européennes ",voyez par vous même

Fresques d'origine égyptienne,vieilles de 3500 représentant les Libyens (ancêtres des Berbères) :

Reconstitution d'un homme de Mechta Afalou,représentant de la culture Ibéromaurusienne,vieille de plus de 30.000 ans,et originaire du Maghreb,les Ibéromaurusiens de type Mechta-Afalou étaient morphologiquement extrêmement proches des Cro-Magnons Européens, originaires du Maghreb,ils se répandirent dans l'actuel désert du Sahara,et furent sa principale population humaine durant des millénaires, on trouve leurs squelettes jusqu'au coeur du Niger,les Ibéromaurusiens étaient phénotypiquement et génétiquement distincts des actuels Africains Subsahariens qui ne sont apparus que relativement tôt en Afrique de l'Ouest (le plus vieux crâne de type noir Africain/Bantu retrouvé n'est vieux que de 8000 ans),des études génétiques faites sur les Ibéromaurusiens ont démontré qu'il y a 12.000 ans,ceux-ci arboraient déjà des caractéristiques " européennes " comme les cheveux roux, blonds et les yeux clairs, ils étaient également très robustes et grands comme les Cro-Magnons,1.75–1.80m en moyenne, une étude génétique de 2018 suggère que tous les Maghrébins ont hérité de 20–50% de leur patrimoine génétique des Ibéromaurusiens :

Expansion territoriale de l'homme de Mechta-Afalou

Le Sahara tel qu'il fut il y a 10.000 ans

Peintures rupestres du Sahara (Tassili n'Ajjer,sud de l'Algérie),vieilles de 10.000 ans

Vous remarquerez que les personnes représentées ont deux plumes d'autruche dans les cheveux comme les Égyptiens ont représenté les Libyens 7500 ans après la réalisation de ces peintures

Des femmes blanches,rousses et blondes chevauchant des vaches il y a 10.000 ans dans l'actuel désert du Sahara

Les Français à l'époque coloniale semblaient aussi avoir notifié cette diversité,par exemple, François Élie Roudaire,géographe français,célèbre pour son fameux projet d'une mer intérieure au Sahara écrivit dans son ouvrage " Une mer intérieure en Algérie " :

" Nulle part les contrastes de la nature ne sont plus frappans qu'au sud de la province de Constantine. La chaîne de montagnes la plus élevée de l'Algérie, le Djebel-Aurès, dont les points culminans dépassent 2,300 mètres d'altitude, y domine de toute sa hauteur les régions basses et sablonneuses du Sahara. Ce sont deux mondes opposés qui se touchent : d'un côté, un massif aux pics neigeux, aux larges flancs couverts de pâturages et de forêts, aux nombreux cours d'eau arrosant une suite à peine interrompue de pittoresques villages qui rivalisent entre eux pour la richesse et la fertilité de leurs jardins ; de l'autre, une plaine desséchée par un soleil brûlant, un horizon sans limites, quelques oasis perdues dans l'espace ; au nord, les descendans de l'ancienne race berbère, les Kabyles Chaouïas, chez lesquels abondent les types blonds aux yeux bleus, peuple laborieux, sédentaire, ayant l'amour du sol ; au sud, les Arabes nomades aux cheveux noirs, au visage bronzé, qui n'ont d'autre toit que leur tente, d'autre travail que leur marche incessante à travers le désert, d'autres ressources que leurs troupeaux de chameaux et de moutons. "

La Société historique algérienne à l'époque coloniale a décrit les Haraktas,une grande tribu des Aurès comme suit :

« Les deux grandes tribus les Haraktas et les Kherareb occupent le cercle d'Ain-Beida qui, en majeure partie, sont de race berbère mêlée avec la race arabe. Ce mélange n'a pas altéré d'une manière sensible le type national du berbère primitif. Sa tête est moins allongée que celle de l'arabe pur. ses traits sont plus courts, ses cheveux sont généralement blonds, son caractère indépendant et son instinct belliqueux. »

Pour résumer,les Nord Africains modernes sont le fruit de multiples migrations,mais dont le fond ethnique est d'origine berbère, issu des plus milliers d'années d'isolation en Afrique du Nord,les ancêtres des Berbères ont développé un identité génétique propre à eux, c'est à dire indigène au Nord de l'Afrique,ce qui donne la grande diversité de phénotypes observés au Maghreb,il n'y a pas un physique berbère,même si il est vrai que les Berbères sont plus souvent plus clair de peau que les maghrébins " arabisés " qui ont des ancêtres arabes, mais l'inverse est vrai aussi,les Berbères au teint mate sont différenciables des Arabes pour celui qui a l'œil,les Arabes Saoudiens sont eux aussi, phénotypiquement,variés,ils ne sont après tout qu'un agglomérat de diverses populations d'Orient,dans la tradition Arabe,les Arabes de pure souche sont les Yéminis,les anciens Sabéens,en arabe Qahtan (ناطحق),tandis que les Arabes du Nord,ancêtres des Quraych (شيرق) dont est issu le prophète Mohammed (Que la paix soit sur lui),se réclament de la descendance d'Adnan,petit-fils d'Ismael,fils d'Abraham,donc d'origine Irakienne,d'où leur nom de Al-Adnani,ou mousta'ribah en arabe المستعربة

Berbères du Haut Atlas Marocain :

Riad Al Kasar
& Spa

Chaouis,de l'est Algérien,une des populations Berbère qui est le plus proche des Européens physiquement,une récente étude génétique sur les Chaouis montre que les habitants de l'Aurès ont un profil génétique très particulier, porteurs d'anciens haplogroupes typiquement Berbères et rares en dehors des Aurès,ces haplogroupes ou marqueurs Berbères atteignent 85% des lignées mâles Chaoui ce qui en fait une des population Berbère les plus " pures " si ça veut dire quelque chose

EMPORIO ARMANI

LOS ANGELES
CALIFORNIA
GUESS

hocine ammari

Berbères Libyens

Berbères du Rif Marocain,qui sont pour la plupart issus de tribus berbères Algériennes,Tunisiennes et Libyennes

Bouchra Benaissa,une petite fille berbère du Rif,qui fut confondu avec Madeleine McCann,une petite fille d'origine anglaise qui fut kidnappée au Portugal

La presse espagnole rapporta cette photo d'un touriste espagnol en vacances au Rif,et de là se propagea la rumeur que la petite Madeleine fut kidnappée par des Marocains,qui ne peuvent vraisemblablement pas avoir d'enfants blonds,ses parents furent donc obligés de montrer l'acte de naissance de leur petite fille

Questions similaires

Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?

Quelle est l'origine ethnique (dont beaucoup sont blonds aux yeux bleus) de la population kabyle de Grande-Kabylie, en Algérie ?
Quel est la difference entre Kabyle et Berbere ?
Pourquoi les "kabyles" ne se considèrent pas arabes ?

Si vous êtes nord-africain/maghrébin : considérez-vous que vous êtes arabe ou amazigh/berbère ?

Pourquoi les Maghrébins sont-ils également appelés des Arabes ?
Les Kabyles sont-ils des descendants de peuples nordiques ?
Les kabyles sont-ils arabes ?

Pourquoi les Berbères ne se rebellent-ils pas contre les musulmans et ne suivent-ils pas leurs anciens modes de vie et croyances ? Pourquoi préfèrent-ils rester musulmans ?

Pourquoi les Arabes détestent-ils les Kabyles ?
Les Algériens sont-ils des Arabes ou des Berbères, ou un brassage entre les deux ?
Pourquoi les Arabes détestent l'Algérie ?
Que pensent vraiment les tunisiens des algériens ?
Pourquoi les Français pensent-ils que les Maghrébins sont arabes?

Pourquoi les Français sont-ils qualifiés de colonisateurs en Afrique du Nord, alors que le Maghreb fut d'abord colonisé par les Arabes (au détriment des Kabyles)?

What do Moroccan people think of Spain? How would you define the relationship between both countries?

Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan Lived in Meknès, Morocco (1996–0) 10mo

I decided to write this answer because of a rosy picture painted by another that is just plain false.

Moroccans are either indifferent to Spain or hate it with a burning passion

Ever since independence, Spain and Morocco have fought as seen with the Ifni War and the Moroccan demands for Ceuta and Melilla (but not the Canary islands, I don’t know why the other answer added them) to be returned.

As a result, Moroccan media has a hostile tone with Spain portrayed as an aggressive state that tries its best to assault Morocco.

Like:

Ceuta's Muslims Call on Morocco for Help After Government Bans Eid

Ceuta's Muslims have called on Morocco for help after the government in the Spanish enclave banned E https://www.moroccoworldnews.com/2020/07/312828/ceutas-muslims-call-on-morocco-for-help-after-government-bans-eid/

However Moroccans can be divided into two main groups
As Moroccan media is hostile to Spain, many Moroccans (especially the nationalists) hate Spain and see it as a hostile power that seeks to do nothing but antagonize us.

However many other Moroccans just don't care. They see it as normal politics and don't associate the Spanish State with the Spanish people. You'll even find a handful of Hispanophiles who love Spanish culture and literature.

Now a question you didn't ask before I answer your second one:

"Wait Ahmed, what do you as a Moroccan born in the West think of Spain?"

I believe Morocco and Spain share a lot of interests on a geopolitical level and therefore some sort of Moroccan-Spanish alliance should exist.

I'm not a Hispanophile or a phile of anything. So I don't see Spain as some unique special country. I see it as a normal country. It has people. They have art. They have food. That's it.

What is the relationship between Morocco and Spain then?

This is going to sound very funny but:

They're actually allies

This isn't because of some insanity but because despite historic animosity the Moroccan and Spanish States find they share a lot of common interests for now.

So while Moroccan media will share articles like the one I shared above of how the "evil nasty" Spaniards are banning Eid, the Moroccan and Spanish militaries have a Joint Commission that meets every so often to discuss cooperation.

Morocco, Spain Discuss Means to Boost Military Cooperation

Upon high instructions of HM King Mohammed VI, Supreme Commander and Chief of General Staff of the Royal Armed Forces (FAR), General de Corps d'Armée, Inspector General of the FAR and Commander of the Southern Zone held talks here on Wednesday with Spanish Secretary General for Defence Policy, Alvargonzales Alejandro San Martin.Talks focused on the means to strengthen military cooperation between the armed forces of the two countries and issues of common interest, FAR's General Staff said in a statement.A Spanish delegation headed by Alejandro San Martin is paying a visit to Morocco on April 1 https://www.maroc.ma/en/news/morocco-spain-discuss-means-boost-military-cooperation and while there are clashes between the two such as Ceuta border closure episode last year, the two States see eachother as allies:

Spain and Morocco strengthen their strategic alliance in times of pandemic

The crisis caused by the coronavirus pandemic has had a direct impact on the economy of Spain and Morocco. However, both nations have taken advantage of this situation of instability to strengthen their diplomatic relations through cooperation in various areas such as those related to the fight against terrorism, organized crime and illegal immigration, as well as the existing partnership in the sectors of investment, trade and economic exchanges, scientific research, education and culture. The Moroccan news agency MAP has highlighted through a statement the fact that the multidimensional partnership relations between Spain and Morocco "have continued to develop throughout the current year, through initiatives, position papers and exchanges of visits by senior officials from two countries determined to open new horizons in the bilateral partnership".

According to this agency, these relations, based on mutual trust and long-standing links, have been further strengthened in recent months. "Morocco is the Iberian country's second economic partner outside the European Union, while Spain has become Morocco's main trading partner", underlines the statement written by Hafid El Bekkali. Likewise, issues related to the area of security or the fight against terrorism also occupy an important place in the dynamics of bilateral cooperation. This article recalls the meeting between the President of the Spanish Executive, Pedro Sanchez, and the Minister of Foreign Affairs, African Cooperation and Moroccans Living Abroad, Nasser Bourita, during which diplomatic relations between the two nations were analysed and the entry of the agricultural and fisheries agreements between the two parties, ratified in August 2019, was celebrated. PHOTO - Spanish flag next to the Moroccan flagIn January and before the world came to a standstill due to the COVID-19 pandemic, the Spanish Minister of Foreign Affairs, the European Union and Cooperation, Arancha González Laya, visited the Kingdom and highlighted the excellence of the relations between both countries. "On this occasion, she reiterated the clear, precise and firm position of her country on the question of the Moroccan Sahara, pointing out that Madrid defends the centrality of the United Nations in the search for a solution to this dispute", the article points out. "Morocco is a zone of stability in an unstable region", the minister said during her visit after stressing that the strengthening of links with Morocco was an "intelligent and mutually beneficial option". With regard to ilegal migration, Morocco and Spain have established exemplary cooperation to put an end to illegal immigration and various forms of crime, particularly those linked to terrorism. One month after the Spanish Minister of Foreign Affairs visited Morocco, the Minister of the Interior met his Moroccan counterpart. "The daily joint action carried out by the security services of Spain and Morocco is exemplary and produces positive and conc https://atalayar.com/en/content/spain-and-morocco-strengthen-their-strategic-alliance-times-pandemic

For the most part, tensions are just between the peoples. I say "peoples" and not Moroccans because it's not one-sided: "I have never employed a Moroccan. I have not needed to and I don't like them," says Gabriel, adjusting his hat.

Ceuta: Vox's anti-immigration message makes gains in a city that is 40% Muslim

The far-right party is taking advantage of tension over undocumented migrants and unemployment to attract voters in the Spanish exclave in North Africa ahead of the local election on May 26 https://english.elpais.com/elpais/2019/05/20/inenglish/1558344498_295234.

Spain probes far-right party over hate speech against Muslims

Prosecutors in Spain have launched two separate investigations into a far-right party and extremist neo-Nazi sympathizers for perpetrating hate crimes...

https://www.dailysabah.com/world/europe/spain-probes-far-right-party-over-hate-speech-against-muslims

So to conclude:

The people either hate Spain or don't care with a small minority that are Hispanophiles. The states are allies.

Related Links

What do Moroccans generally think about Spain and the Spaniards?

If Spain and North Africa are close to each other, why is there almost no genetic overlapping? Why are there no Moroccan-looking Spaniards and Spanish-looking Moroccans?

What do European-born Moroccans think of Morocco?
Why do Moroccans hate their own country so much?
Why are Moroccans not considered good in Spain?
Are Spaniards genetically closer to Germans or Moroccans?
What does the world think about Morocco/Moroccans?
Why are there so many Moroccan people in Spain?
How religious are Moroccans?
What do Spanish people think of Morocco?
Why are Moroccans so patriotic, but so willing to leave their country?
What do Tunisians, Algerians and Moroccans think of Spain?
What do middle easterners think of moroccans?
Why do most people in Europe think that Morocco is an Arabic country?
What do Moroccans think of the berbers?

Le Maroc peut-il rejoindre l'UE ? S'il se joint, que se passerait-il?

André Teissier du Cros

Président honoraire et Fondateur chez Comité Bastille (2006–aujourd'hui) 8 mo

Non. C’est une monarchie où le roi est en même temps le leader religieux. Vous me direz que c’est le cas de l’Angleterre. Mais en Angleterre il y a un État de Droit qui ne laisse aucun pouvoir au monarche. Tout le pouvoir est dans les mains du parlement élu.

Le Maroc pourrait-il faire ce saut? C’est possible. Mais ce n’est pas dans l’avenir prévisible.

RE: Le Maroc peut-il rejoindre l'UE ? S'il se joint, que se passerait-il?

Eduardo Diaz Mis à jour le 12 juil. 2021

Aucune loi dans l'Union Européenne interdit des territoires ou des pays hors du continent européen se joindre l'UE. Donc, la géographie n'empêche pas le Maroc de formuler une demande et qu'elle soit admise à examen. Par contre il est requis d'être (1) une démocratie et (2) état de droit (3) qui respecte les droits humains (4) avec une économie de marché pour joindre l'UE. Le Maroc est une économie de marché, mais c'est une monarchie sans trop de séparation église-état, ce qui n'est pas compatible avec le premier point. C'est ce point qui bloquerait une demande du Maroc de joindre l'UE s'il formule la demande aujourd'hui.

Accessoirement, l'UE examine chaque demande et votent pour ou contre l'adhésion. Une fois qu'un état est éligible et admis à examen, c'est cette votation qui détermine s'il joint ou non l'UE. Même si un pays a tous les pré-requis pour joindre l'UE, les états membres peuvent voter contre son adhésion s'ils estiment que ça serait plus négatif que positif ou que "ça fait pas du sens". Le fait de ne pas être pas géographiquement en Europe et d'avoir une culture très différente à celle des états membres pèserait dans la décision mais ne constituerait pas forcement des points de blocage fermes.

Donc, pour résumer:

le Maroc peut-il rejoindre l'UE?

A l'heure actuelle non parce qu'il n'est pas considéré une démocratie consolidée. Il pourra voir une demande admis dans le futur s'il avance vers un système de gouvernement plus démocratique.

S'il se joint, que se passerait-il?

Dans ce cas là, les même transformations que tous les états membres ont subis lors de son adhésion, par exemple:

Le Maroc pourra intégrer l'espace Schengen. Les marocains auront la liberté de circuler et de faire du commerce avec les autres pays de l'Union sans taxes des douanes ni passeport ni visa.

Ils devront adapter ses lois pour être compatibles avec les traités et les lois européennes. Par exemple, ils n'auront pas le droit de négocier des traités de commerce avec des pays tiers, ils devront permettre à tout citoyen des autres pays de l'UE se présenter aux élections municipales, l'agriculture devra s'adapter a la PAC.

Il aurait moins de marge dans ses politique budgétaires et monétaires, car des contraintes viennent de l'UE, tel que des limites au déficit, la banque centrale, etc.

Il y aura quelque 40–50 députés marocains au parlement européen et le gouvernement du Maroc participera aux sommets européens où des décisions sont prises pour l'UE.

L'UE appliquerait ses régulations en terme de santé publique, protection des consommateurs, régulation de la concurrence, soutenabilité environnementale, etc. aussi en Maroc.
Sources:

Critères de Copenhague — Wikipédia

Ce que l'UE fait pour ses citoyens | Union Européenne

RE: Le Maroc peut-il rejoindre l'UE ? S'il se joint, que se passerait-il?

ManoLitto , lieu : Paris, France Mis à jour le 26 août 2021

La question mérite d'être posée, le Maroc ayant toujours affiché son ambition de resserrer ses liens avec l'Union Européenne (davantage qu'avec ses congénères d'Afrique). Cette volonté s'inscrit dans une stratégie plus large du Royaume Chérifien d'apparaître au yeux du monde comme un modèle de monarchie moderne et tournée vers l'Occident.

Entre 1995 et 2005, le crédo de l'Union Européenne était le Partenariat Euro-Méditerranéen. Le Maroc caracolait en tête des pays partenaires en nombre d'accords signés. Toutefois, la construction européenne a depuis subi une série de déconvenues (refus du traité constitutionnel, échec de l'harmonisation sociale et fiscale, montée des extrêmes et de l'euroscepticisme dans nombre de pays membres, Brexit, échec des négociations avec la Turquie …) l'ayant ébranlée.

Un temps vue comme le modèle de rapprochements interétatiques à l'heure de la mondialisation, l'Union Européenne en est à se démener pour trouver une formule de fonctionnement viable. L'actualité est donc davantage à la remise en question de son existence plutôt qu'à son aggrandissement.

L'adhésion de nouveaux membres semble radicalement exclue. Au vu de l'état moribond de l'Union Européenne, le Maroc ne devrait pas en prendre ombrage.

Questions similaires

Pourquoi le Royaume Uni a-t-il décidé de quitter l'Union Européenne ?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il constamment présenté comme un pays arrière ?
Le Maroc a besoin de quoi pour rattraper les pays européens ?
Qu'est-ce qui a donné au Maroc l'idée qu'il pouvait rejoindre l'UE malgré l'échec de la Turquie ?
Le Maroc est-il un pays émergent ?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il plus fort que l'Algérie ?
Quels seront les prochains pays à quitter l'UE ?

Pourquoi le Maroc n'est-il pas considéré comme un pays européen alors qu'il n'est qu'à 14 km de l'Espagne ?

Que se passerait-il si la France quittait l'Union Européenne et créait une union avec les pays du Maghreb pour devenir une province du Maroc ?

Quels pays vont rejoindre et quitter l'UE dans les 20 prochaines années ?
Que se passerait-il si tous les pays arabes s'unissaient contre Israël et les USA ?
Pourquoi le Maroc a-t-il décidé de normaliser ses relations avec Israël ?
Pourquoi le Maroc s'appelle-t-il le Maroc ?
Emmanuel Macron peut-il se faire réélire ?
Que se passerait-il si Israël attaquait l'Iran ?

Est-ce que le Maroc va attaquer l'Algérie ?

Yves Montenay Anciennement Enseignant et chef d'entreprise à Divers (1965–2000) 24 nov.

Logiquement elle ne devrait pas. Elle n'est pas sûre de gagner et peut-être cela déclencherait des troubles

Mais le pouvoir absolu rend fou. Il peut aussi avoir l'espoir que le nationalisme de guerre pourrait faire oublier la gestion catastrophique :

Algérie : tout s'écroule et le régime attaque la France et le français

L'Algérie va très mal : avec un pétrole à 40 $, la ruine approche, les militaires ont gardé le pouvoir et le virus n'arrange rien. La vieille recette est de taper sur la France et sur la position d…

https://www.yvesmontenay.fr/2020/07/15/algerie-tout-secroule-et-le-regime-attaque-la-france-et-le-francais/

RE: Est-ce que le Maroc va attaquer l'Algérie ?

Semar Redouane Répondu 9 déc.

Pour l'instant les rapports de force entre les deux pays ne plaident pas en faveur d'une attaque de l'Algérie . Mais la guerre peut arriver si le Maroc continue dans ses provocations (en tuant 3 civils algériens , il a porté la provocation à un niveau très élevé) . Le Makhzen pense qu'il peut remettre en cause les rapports de force sur le plan militaire avec l'Algérie avec une alliance avec Israël , cette politique est extrêmement dangereuse pour plusieurs raisons , la course à l'armement va appauvrir le Maroc , Israël ne fait pas de cadeau , et la situation économique du peuple Marocain est très mauvaise , Israël va contrôler de plus en plus le Maroc et peser sur ses choix de politique internationale et nationale et une bonne partie du peuple marocain est déjà à la base contre la normalisation avec Israël , cette alliance dangereuse est très impopulaire. Enfin si l'Algérie sent que les rapports de force dans un ou deux ans vont en défaveur de sa domination stratégique , elle peut engager la guerre de peur d'être attaquée , les algériens savent qu'il y'a une volonté expansionniste chez le Maroc et il veut s'accaparer des parties du territoire algérien , et ils ne le laisseront pas faire d'une manière ou d'une autre. En tout cas en provoquant la guerre au Sahara occidentale, en refusant au peuple sahraoui son droit à l'autodétermination ,en faisant de l'Algérie un ennemi et en voulant porter atteinte à son unité en soutenant le MAK , en s'alliant avec Israël, le Maroc ou plus précisément le Makhzen joue avec le feu et mène une politique agressive et dangereuse pour toute la région. L'Europe doit arrêter le fou de M6 avant qu'il ne casse tout , déjà qu'il pense être capable de dicter à l'Europe ce qu'elle doit penser et faire à l'égard de la question sahraoui , cette arrogance va être catastrophique pour tout le monde

RE: Est-ce que le Maroc va attaquer l'Algérie ?

Samir Berkani , ancien(ne) Errant dans la Cité Répondu 24 nov.

Il n'y a aucun intérêt est ce que le Maroc attaque l'Algérie et encore moins de point de vue de la géostratégie mondiale qui est substantiellement liée à l'économie.Le Maroc cherche à se frayer un chemin dans ce boulevard qui est l'ouverture du marché mondial et si cela se produirait, il perdra ces pays qui plaident pour son intégration franche en tant pays pouvant jouer un rôle dans l'économie mondiale.A mon humble avis, il existe des élites intellectuelles et politiques dans les deux pays suffisamment conscientes pour s s'opposer à une guerre entre deux peuples qui partagent la même culture et la même histoire… Du moins c'est ce que j'espère…

Questions similaires

Pourquoi il n'y a qu'avec l'Algérie que les relations sont souvent tendues alors que la France a occupé d'autres pays ?

Si une guerre Algérie Maroc éclatait qui gagnerait ?

Pourquoi Abdelmoumen(calife des Almohades) est-il revendiqué comme Marocain par les Marocains, alors qu'il venait d'une tribu localisée en Algérie actuelle ?

Dans quelle mesure une guerre est-elle possible entre l'Algérie et le Maroc ?
Pourquoi l'Algérie a-t-elle rompu ses relations diplomatiques avec le Maroc ?
L'Algérie va-t-elle attaquer le Maroc ?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il plus fort que l'Algérie ?
Les relations entre le Maroc et l'Algérie peuvent-elles dégénérer en conflit armé ?
Que va changer le décès du Général Ahmed Gaïd Salah en Algérie ?
Comment voyez-vous l'Algérie ?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il toujours jaloux de l'Algérie ?
Quel est le problème profond que l'Algérie a avec la France ?
Pourquoi le Maroc a-t-il attaqué l'Espagne en 2002 ?
La France a-t-elle encore son mot à dire sur l'Algérie ?
L'Algérie et le Maroc constituent-ils une future menace militaire pour la France ?

Comment trouvez-vous le Maroc ?

Asmae Miss Connaissances : Arabe 3 ans

Le Maroc;sa nature est attrayante et charmante, elle comprend des zones désertiques ,littoral. sa nourriture est très spéciale, en particulier le thé marocain.

Les Marocains sont connus par leur générosité, leur hospitalité, leur vêtements traditionnels, et leur dialecte marocain que je la trouve difficile à maîtriser

Enfin, j'espère que le Maroc deviendra un pays développé .

Réponse similaire
Comment sont perçus les Français au Maroc ?

Regina Phalange, lieu : Maroc Répondu 29 nov. 2018

Je ne sais s'il est sage de généraliser, mais je me lance sous la houlette de la psychologie des peuple au lieu d'avancer des stereotypes.

Si on lance un coup d'oeil sur le contexte historique, on trouvera que bien que les marocains ont résisté à la colonisation française au maroc, une bonne catégorie a développé un complexe d'infériorité par rapport à la France et aux Français. Ceci s'est infiltré à travers les générations pour arriver à la notre et garder son influence sur la façon dont on perçoit les français au Maroc.
Une bonne partie des jeunes parents marocains veillent à ce qu'ils parlent à leurs enfants en français et à ce qu'ils le comprennent depuis un très jeune age. Ceci est l'un des aspects les plus flagrants. D'autres encore plus garves montrent qu'il y a une crise d'identité et que plusieurs marocains ont un penchant à vivre à l'européenne, au moment où ils ont les pieds ici au maroc.
Je dirai alors qu'une bonne catégorie des marocains considèrent les européens en général et les français en particulier comme une race supérieure.

En revanche, il existe une autre partie qui maudit la France et les français et qui l'anonce clairement: Je déteste tout ce qui a rapport avec la France, y-inclus la langue française qui nous est imposée dans notre pays qui, en principe, n'a pas de rapport avec la langue éponyme.
Une troisième catégorie est indifférente. Elle aime juste interagir avec des personnes de différents backgrounds sans se soucier de la race à laquelle elles appartiennent.

Quant à moi, je ne peux pardonner les dégâts de la collonisation française que subit le Maroc toujours. Mais on ne peut blamer les nouvelles générations pour leur passer. Je suis alors indifférente par rapport aux français. Je les considère comme tout autre citoyens du monde. Parce qu'après tout, nous sommes des êtres universels et c'est nos comportements et notre éducation qui décident de notre image. Et puis après, la race n'est qu'un détail qui ne m'importe guerre.
J'espère avoir répondu à votre question.

Response similaire
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il constamment présenté comme un pays arrière ?

Ledjh Timizar, lieu : Alger, Algérie Mis à jour le 6 mars 2020

Oui pourquoi, parce que le Maroc cultive ses traditions millénaires?

Ses cérémonies d'allégeance féodales?

Ses petits métiers traditionnels: femmes-mulets, catégorie professionnelle unique au monde, qui égaient le paysage marocain :

Ses fées du logis, "petites bonnes" si typiques engagées dès l'âge de 5 ans Le Matin - 80 000 filles de moins de 15 ans exploitées comme ...au lieu d'aller à l'école comme tout le monde et que l'expatrié pourra s'offrir à un prix défiant toute concurrence.

Socialement, le Maroc n'est pas le dernier de la classe, loin s'en faut: par exemple il pointe à la 121 ème place à l'Indice de Développement Humain, catégorie " développement moyen", devant la Mauritanie au Maghreb.

Son taux d'alphabétisation non plus n'est pas catastrophique: il n'y a que 32 % d'analphabètes au Maroc, principalement des femmes rurales : 42 % des femmes marocaines sont analphabètes contre 22 % des hommes, c'est un taux confortable pour fournir le marché des femmes de ménage de 7 à 77 ans et des prostituées destinées aussi bien à la consommation interne notamment touristique qu'à l'exportation dans tous les azimuts.

Le Maroc, situé à la 146 ème place en taux d'alphabétisation devance ainsi la Mauritanie et le Yémen parmi les pays arabes.; et ailleurs en Afrique il surclasse le géant Nigéria, le pays le plus riche d'Afrique et dont la moitié de la population est reconnue comme la plus pauvre du monde, détrônant l'Inde cette année.

« Au Maroc 29,0% des femmes adultes ont suivi au moins des études secondaires, contre 35,6% des hommes." selon Encore 32% d'analphabètes au Maroc : Les femmes, premières victimes du fléau

Sur le plan économique, certes la société marocaine est la plus inégalitaire d'Afrique du Nord ,Le Maroc, pays le plus inégalitaire d'Afrique du Nord mais songez que c'est le prix du développement car le pays va de l'avant à la vitesse du TGV ! Ah, le TGV, une compensation royale pour ne pas avoir acheté le Rafale français et qui permettra aux touristes étrangers de gagner plus rapidement les villes impériales.

Le Maroc est fièrement le pays qui attire le plus grand flux d'investissements étrangers dans la région. Entre les sociétés étrangères et Sa Majesté le roi plus riche que l'Émir du Quatar le Maroc ne connait donc pas la crise financière. Les Marocains, c'est une autre affaire: "Plus de 5 millions d'habitants du royaume vivent avec moins de 1 euro par jour et son taux de pauvreté dépasse les 18% !" Comment Mohammed VI a fait du Maroc sa machine à cash . Ce n'est pas le même chiffre que le chiffre officiel mais bon…

En tous cas les Marocains peuvent compter sur leur " Roi des pauvres" pour s'assurer de sa propre prospérité: des mauvaises langues assurent que le Roi a fait de son royaume sa holding personnelle, une vraie pompe à phynances, que "en moins de dix ans de règne M6 s'est livré, selon les auteurs à « une sorte de holp-up à l'encontre de l'économie de son pays ». " Comment Mohammed VI a fait du Maroc sa machine à cash . " le Roi règne sur les marchés de l'assurance, les télécoms, l'agro-alimentaire, l'immobilier, l'énergie et la distribution."

Cet article dit pis que pendre du " Roi prédateur " mais je tiens à m'en démarquer et préciser vigoureusement que je laisse aux auteurs de ce brûlot l'entière responsabilité de leurs propos.

Je m'interroge: un royaume dont le souverain exige de ses sujets des séances de prosternations rituelles en grande pompe, un Trésor public et une économie nationale proprement accaparés par le roi, des manifestants jetés au cachot pour vingt ans, des femmes en grande partie analphabètes chargées de nourrir leurs familles sommées de choisir entre faire la fatma ou la puta, ce pays relève t'il de la féodalité ou de la modernité? L’arriération, n'est ce pas justement ce qui est si prisé des touristes étrangers qui après tout n'ont pas à se préoccuper du malheur des indigènes. Les touristes sont là pour admirer les vieilles pierres, les maisons menaçant ruine pavoisées de linge à tous les balcons, les petits cireurs de chaussures et autres gagne-pains précaires et " enjoyer" le pittoresque de la misère du Tiers Monde, le reste ça ne les regarde pas.

Fez

Pourquoi le Maroc s'appelle-t-il le Maroc?/ Why is Morocco called Morocco?

Au Moyen Âge, le Maroc était connu par sa capitale ; sous les dynasties des Idrissides et des Mérinides, le Maroc était connu sous le nom de royaume de Fès car c'était leur capitale. Lorsque les Almoravides ont pris le contrôle du pays et ont construit Marrakech et en ont fait leur capitale, le Maroc était connu sous le nom de royaume de Marrakech. L'origine du nom "Marrakech" est contestée, mais il est très probable qu'il provienne des mots berbères amur (n) akush "Terre de Dieu", d'où l'espagnol a dérivé Marruecos et Marokko en néerlandais . En anglais, il s'écrit Morocco et en français Maroc.

Pendant la colonisation, le colonisateur français a utilisé le nom de royaume chérifien puisque la dynastie alaouite prétend être descendante du prophète.

D'autre part, certains historiens pensent que les musulmans qui ont habité la péninsule arabique ont été les premiers à utiliser ce nom المغرب Maroc pendant la conquête islamique. Il signifie en arabe le "lieu du coucher du soleil" car ils pensaient alors que le soleil s'était installé sur la terre du Maroc.

Questions similaires

Que ne doit-on absolument pas faire au Maroc ?
Aimez-vous le Maroc ?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il si populaire en tant que destination touristique ?

Quels sont les faits sur le Maroc auxquels les étrangers ne croient pas avant d'arriver au Maroc ?

Quelle est la meilleure ville au Maroc ?
Avez-vous déjà visité le Maroc ?
Maroc : que pensent les citoyens marocains ordinaires du roi du Maroc ?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il constamment présenté comme un pays arrière ?
Pourquoi le Maroc s'appelle-t-il le Maroc ?
Quelles sont les choses qu'on aime au Maroc ?

Pourquoi les français préfèrent-ils aller en Tunisie ou au Maroc plutôt qu’en Algérie ?

Que pensez-vous des Marocains ?
Comment sera le Maroc dans 20 ans ?
Qui aime visiter le Maroc et pourquoi ?
Quels sont vos avis sur Le Maroc comme pays ?

Réponse similaire
D'Algérie ou du Maroc, quelles sont vos trois villes préférées et pourquoi ?

Adil El Nhayli , passionné par l'histoire de la région MENA Répondu 6 nov.

Mes trois villes marocaines préférées :

Essaouira, la ville des alizées

Chefchaouen, la perle bleue

Marrakech, la ville ocre

Réponse similaire

Est-ce que le Sahara occidental est un pays ou une partie du Maroc ?

Jerome Cohen , Mon père était de Casablanca, ma mère fait un super tajine!
Traducteur · Traduit le 23 janv. 2020

Histoire: Le Sahara occidental (Regardez la carte (1) ci-d

La réponse est un peu longue. Vous devez être patient si vous voulez comprendre le cœur du conflit. En tant que Marocain, je crois aveuglément que le Sahara fait partie du Maroc, mais je serai aussi neutre que possible dans le traitement de cette question.

Je vais présenter ici la principale chronologie historique du conflit, en plus de ce que je considère comme des erreurs commises par le royaume marocain dans le traitement de cette affaire.

Ci-dessus se trouve la carte réelle du Maroc. Je vais en avoir besoin pour vous mettre sur la voie.

Que font les gens au Maroc qui vous fait tout de suite savoir que ce sont des touristes et qu'ils n'y vivent pas ?

Jean Claude Gabert, Cabinet Blabla, Page, Blanche & Ass. Mis à jour le 10 mars 2020

De chic, je dirais deux trucs :

1. les touristes pensent toujours qu'on les arnaque et marchandent pour tout, jusqu'au minuscule, jusqu'au dirham (0,1 euro);

2. ils croient au Code de la route.

Je vais faire un tour en ville et je reviens vous dire.

C'est fait, j'ajoute ceci :

3. Comme partout, le touriste a le sac à dos et n'est jamais seul.

Mais ici, il aggrave:

4. Il ne sait pas prendre le thé; il en fout partout;

5. Il est habillé à contre-saison, la parka en été, le short en hiver. Et les femmes le sont à contre-moeurs, la jupe courte dans les douars de l'Atlas, les chaussures de trek à la salle à manger…

Demain, je vais au Mausolée Hassan II, et je rapporte. Voilà :

6. Le touriste est intimidé par les pelouses, il n'ose pas marcher dessus.

7. Le touriste ne klaxonne pas assez.

Réponse similaire
Pourquoi me diriez-vous de visiter le Maroc ?

Régine Michel ,anciennement Téléconseillère en assurances (1974 – 2009) Répondu 25 juin 2020

C'est très joli comme pays, même en automne où il fait encore beau.
Marrakech, plein de belles choses à visiter et à faire.

Essaouira un village de pécheurs avec une belle Médina.

Ouarzazate, c'est le désert, nouvelle capitale cinématographique mise en valeur par Djamel Debouze.

On y mange super bien, et on y est bien accueillis.

Y a-t-il une différence entre la cuisine marocaine et la cuisine algérienne ?

Adil El Nhayli

Je vais vous partager une excellente réponse plus que pertinente de la part d'une Algérienne (Zahraz) sur le forum Dziriya Magazine : Le site de la femme algérienne qui éclaire sur cette question :

La cuisine Algérienne est connue pour sa richesse , néanmoins , elle est très difficile à définir car on y retrouve les même caractéristiques des autres pays voisins. Quand les Marocains sont connus pour leur tajines sucrés-salés ,les Tunisiens pour leur sauce rouge piquante, l'Algérie a du mal à se placer car on retrouve ces aspects la dans notre cuisine

Bref, il serait interessant d'essayer de comparer un peu entre les différents pays du Maghreb, car, c'est souvent ce que demandent les étrangers " c'est quoi la différence avec la cuisine Marocaine ?" ou "c'est quoi la différence entre le couscous Algérien et Tunisien ?

La première chose qui me vient à l'esprit est : les sauces blanches.

Les Marocains sont connus pour l'utilisation de safran et curcuma et leurs sauces jaunes, alors que les Tunisiens ont une préférence pour les sauces rouges, avec une utilisation de concentré de tomate .

Les Algériens sont les seules à cuisiner en sauce blanche, avec seulement du poivre et smen à l'est et poivre et cannelle à Alger. Notons aussi que les Algérois utilisent beaucoup la cannelle, chose qu'on ne retrouve pas au Maroc et en Tunisie, sauf pour les plats sucrés-salés et Seffa.

La deuxième chose :

J'ai remarqué que les Algériens et aussi Tunisiens n'utilisent pas beaucoup de légumes dans leur tajine/dwez/merqa , alors que les Marocains utilisent plusieurs légumes dans leurs tajines, pommes de terre, courgettes, aubergines, carottes, etc… alors que les Algériens, à part les kabyles, n'utilisent qu'un seul légume ou deux, tajine de pommes de terre, tajine de navets, petits pois et artichauts.

Troisièmement: les pois chiches versus les olives.

En Algérie, on retrouve les pois chiches dans les tajines, couscous, pâtes traditionnelles, enfin, je pense qu'a part les Mhammers, les pois chiches sont dans tout les plats. Au

Maroc ,on les utilisent pas beaucoup peut être dans le couscous, sinon ils ont un tajine aux pois chiches. Les tunisiens aussi utilisent beaucoup les pois chiche dans leur plats comme nous. Les Marocains aiment beaucoup les olives qu'ils mettent partout même avec des petits pois, l'équivalent des pois chiche chez nous.

La semoule : les Algériens utilisent beaucoup la semoule dans la confection des pains, beignets, même les plats, alors que les autres pays c'est plutôt la farine .

Les épices et herbes :

La cuisine Algérienne peut être douce , épicée ou piquante
Il n'ya qu'a prendre la cuisine algéroise qui peut être douce avec ses sauces blanches à l'eau de fleur d'oranger, piquante avec ses sauces rouge avec Dersa. Au sud, il y'a le fameux ras el hanout qui parfume les plat ou les herbes moulues qui donnent au plat toute leur saveurs. A l'ouest, on utilise le safran et le gingembre. On utilise le persil dans les sauces blanches et coriandre pour les sauces rouges

Dans la cuisine Algérienne ,en général ,on aime garder le bon gout des aliments , ou il y'a toujours une épice qui domine le plat, le cumin pour les chtitha , le carvi pour les mderbels …

Les épices les plus utilisées sont : le poivre , la cannelle, ras el hanout, carvi, cumin, coriandre, safran.

Les Tunisiens utilisent un mélange de carvi et de coriandre et aussi le paprika.

Les Marocains c'est plutôt : safran, gingembre, cumin, cannelle et rarement le carvi et coriandre. Ils mélangent aussi le persil et coriandre dans leur plats .

Le couscous:

Le couscous est un plat commun mais bien sure il y'a aussi beaucoup de différence :

Les Algériens et Marocains arrosent le couscous avec la sauce alors qu'en Tunisie, le couscous est mélangé avec la sauce pour qu'il l'absorbe .

Les Algériens utilisent beaucoup la semoule fine dans le couscous citadin et mesfouf ou bien moyenne et gros couscous au sud du pays. Les Marocains et Tunisiens utilisent plutôt la semoule moyenne .

Le Mesfouf au légumes est typique de la cuisine Algérienne qu'il soit au petit pois, fèves ou mélangés de légumes "afourou", il y'a aussi celui aux herbes, à la lavande, halhal qu'on trouve pas ailleurs .

Le couscous est servi dans toutes les occasions en Algérie, vendredi, mariage, décès, au Maroc, c'est surtout le plat du vendredi .

Les Tunisiens sont connus pour leur couscous au poisson,en Algérie, c’est une spécialité des cotes surtout Jijel ,Oran ,Skikda …..

Dziriya Magazine : Le site de la femme algérienne

Question similaire
RE: Y a-t-il une différence entre la cuisine marocaine et la cuisine algérienne ?

Akeim Barber , Connaissance : Anglais Mis à jour le 19 avr. 2021 en réalité rien à avoir, l’Algérie est le 10 ème plus grand pays au monde, c'est un pays continent et on y mange assez différemment d'une région à une autre à l' intérieure même du pays et au delà des frontières, après tout les belges, les français et les espagnols ne mangent pas du tout de la même manière malgré de longues frontières en commun.

par exemple en région kabyle vous trouverez des plats complétement inconnus aux yeux des tunisiens et marocains, par exemple taknift oui tahbout à base d’œufs et de lentilles, berkouk ou abazine grosses boules de blés à la sauce rouge, after aoukssoul grosse pâtes épaisse (ressemble à la chinoise de pekin) Aftir oukessoul — Wikipédia les algériens sont orientés chorba pure et dure, les marocains plutôt harira et leur sauce est beaucoup plus épaisse, moins corsé, moins fluide.

les marocains mangent souvent avec les mains (dans beaucoup de régions) y compris et surtout le couscous, les algériens jamais, ils utilisent systématiquement les ustensiles. les algériens sont très tournés vers les brochettes, très abordable et accessibles, cuisine de grillade légère. Les marocains plutôt orientés ragouts.

Les algériens utilisent beaucoup plus a pomme de terre, y compris pour les purées avec en sus la sauce de la viande, au maroc la patate n'est pas autant utilisée.

Les algériens pratiquent plus les pizzas locales à base de pain dure et traditionnels avec garniture dessus. au maroc très peu ou pas du tout pour votre gouverne les kebabs en france ne vendent que la sauce algérienne car elle a un succès fou.

Les touarègues dans le sud ont un autre registre de plat en fonction de leurs ingrédients notamment la viande de dromadaire….le pain cuit dans le sable du désert méthode typiquement algérienne….leurs thés est bu en trois fois, fort au début et de plus en plus légèr avec de l'amertume vers les derniers verres

Questions similaires

Question polémique : que préférez-vous le couscous marocain, algérien ou tunisien ?
Pourquoi les français préfèrent-ils aller en Tunisie ou au Maroc plutôt qu'en Algérie ?
Quelle est la différence entre la cuisine française et la cuisine italienne ?
Pourquoi la nourriture en Algérie a meilleur goût que en France ?

Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?

Pourquoi les Maghrébins sont-ils également appelés des Arabes ?
A quelle occasion mange-t-on du couscous dans les pays arabes ?
Y a-t-il des fans ici pour la cuisine marocaine?
Savez-vous cuisiner marocain ?
Quelle différence entre la cuisine française et la cuisine américaine ?
Quels sont les meilleurs plats marocains que vous avez déjà dégusté ?
Est-ce que la cuisine espagnole et la cuisine marocaine se ressemblent ?

Existe-il une rivalité entre la cuisine italienne et la cuisine française ; ou jouent-elles sur des registres différents ?

Quelle est la meilleure cuisine au monde ?
La cuisine française est-elle raciste ?

N'est-ce pas les musulmans marocains, algériens et sénégalés, diabolisés aujourd'hui, qui par leur courage et leur bravoure ont défendu la France contre l'invasion nazie ?

Art Multi · Suivre Lieu : France (1900–aujourd'hui) 27 janv.

Bonsoir. Vous êtes prié de respecter la mémoire de ces ancêtres au lieu de l'insulter.

Que ce qu'ils ont fait pour les générations futures fasse réfléchir votre génération et suivantes au lieu de revendiquer un héritage dont votre génération est loin d'être méritante. Bonne soirée.

Questions similaires
Pourquoi les français préfèrent-ils aller en Tunisie ou au Maroc plutôt qu'en Algérie ?
Comment trouvez-vous le Maroc ?
Que ne doit-on absolument pas faire au Maroc ?

Pourquoi les touristes européens raffolent tant des destinations comme Marrakech ?
Pourquoi le Maroc soutient-il le président autoproclamé du Vénézuela ?
Avez-vous déjà visité le Maroc ?

Tourisme: Est-il vrai que le Maroc est considéré comme l'un des pays les plus sûrs pour voyager ?

Qui aime visiter le Maroc et pourquoi ?
Le Maroc est-il un pays émergent ?
Que pensez-vous du Maroc en tant que touriste ?
Qu'est-ce qu'on doit jamais faire si je visite le Maroc ?
Comment voyez-vous le Maroc ?
Quelle est la meilleure destination touristique des Marocains en 2020 ?
Quelles sont les choses qu'on aime au Maroc ?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il constamment présenté comme un pays arrière ?

Pensez-vous que Macron doit s'excuser pour la colonisation de l'Algérie, la Tunisie, le Maroc ...?

(Mohamed El Biadi) · Suivre Lieu : Morroco. Ouezzane (1960–aujourd'hui) ven.

Une bonne partie des français est d'origine maghrébine.Un des rêves d'une bonne partie des maghrébines est de devenir française.Le français reste encore la langue des banques au Maghreb,la langue des acts administratifs(comme l'act de naissance).La carte d'identité nationale est en français et en arabe.Les études se fonds toujours en français…Là où tu vas il y a du français.Les arabes lorsqu'ils avaient colonisé le Sud de l'Espagne il n'y a jusqu'à maintenant aucune excuse envers l'Espagne…Les Israéliens ont été expulsé de leur terre par les arabes pour des siècles,et aucune excuse envers eux.Si l'Algérie a été colonisée pour plus d'un siècle et n'a pas été exterminée c'est grâce à la France,qui a éliminé les dictateurs algériens au profit de la population algérienne.Parce que les nouveaux dictateurs algériens qui cherchent des excuses ,après avoir repris le plein pouvoir.Et maintenant si ces dictateurs ne cessent pas d'esclaver les algériens ordinaires et démocratiques,il faudrait une nouvelle force qui colonniserait l'Algérie pour arranger les choses.

Questions similaires

Finalement, si l’Algérie était restée française, la France ne serait-elle pas devenu un pays à majorité musulmane ? De manière générale, à quoi ressemblerait la France aujourd'hui si l’Algérie était restée française ?

La France doit-elle s’excuser pour son passé colonial, comme le demande l’Algérie ?

Pourquoi les Français sont-ils qualifiés de colonisateurs en Afrique du Nord, alors que le Maghreb fut d'abord colonisé par les Arabes (au détriment des Kabyles)?

Pourquoi on demande tout le temps à la France de s'excuser envers l'Algérie pour les morts de la Guerre d'Algérie et pas à l'Algérie de s'excuser pour les actes du FLN durant la même période ?

François Hollande comme Emmanuel Macron ont reconnu l'injustice et la brutalité de la colonisation française en Algérie. Pourtant, les Algériens semblent toujours attendre plus. Qu'attendent-ils et pourquoi ?

Pourquoi la France ne s'excuse-t-elle pas une bonne fois pour toutes pour la colonisation vis à vis de l'Algérie ?

Pourquoi le Maroc est-il si populaire en tant que destination touristique ?

Mohamed Amtoun Lieu : MarocMis à jour le 3 ans

Le Maroc a mise tot sur le tourisme comme strategie de developpement economique, vu qu'il n'est pas encore assez industrialise et ne dispose pas de beaucoup de ressources naturelles (mis a part les phosphates dont le revenu reste relativement derisoire).

Pour ce qui est des atouts, le pays est proche de l'Europe, a un climat plutot doux, a une cuisine reputee, une histoire riche, une population globalement accueillante et tolerante ainsi que des paysages divers. Avec plus de deux milles kms de cote donnant sur deux mers, deux chaines montagneuses, un grand desert et des plaines, le Maroc a des offres pour tous les gouts.

Le Maroc a su egalement se forger un nom parmi les jet-setteurs internationaux, et compte sur l'appui de centaines d'amis High-Profile dont certains sont issus de sa diaspora, qui en font souvent les eloges dans la presse et sur les medias sociaux tels que l'ancien president Jacques Chirac, Gad ElMaleh, Jamel Debbouze, Cristiano Ronaldo, Madonna, Hillary Clinton.. pour ne citer que ceux la.

L'infrastructure est tres correcte. Elle est certes loin de rivaliser avec celle des geants du tourisme comme l'Espagne, et il y a encore enormement de choses a developper, mais le pays s'en sort pas mal. Le Maroc a une capacite litiere de plus de 200.000 lits, plusieurs aeroports internationaux et des vols directs vers la majorite des marches touristiques, ainsi qu'un des meilleurs reseaux routier et ferroviaire de l'Afrique.

Le Maroc est politiquement stable, et malgre deux/trois attentats terroristes ces 15 dernieres annees, il reste relativement sur pour les touristes.

Alex Oliver lieu : France Répondu 31 déc. 2018

Merci pour la DDR.

Je n'ai encore jamais été au Maroc mais je l'envisage. Donc admettons que je sois qualifié pour répondre à cette question. Je vais vous dire, en vrac, les critères qui jouent pour moi :

Les gens sont gentils. Ça n'est pas moi qui le dit, c'est Antoine de Maximy[1] . Il a vu du pays, il s'y connaît !
Le climat, bien évidemment.
Le coût de la vie.

Le fait qu'on peut facilement se faire comprendre en parlant français.
Les paysages : mer ET montagne.
La culture, avec des lieux chargés d'Histoire à deux pas des hébergements touristiques.
La proximité : il doit y en avoir pour un peu plus d

Notes de bas de page
[1] https://trcinema.net/post/maroc-antoine-de-maximy-le-maroc-pays-le-plus-accueillant-du-monde-h_l6PmKXZ0A.html

Questions similaires
Plus de réponses ci-dessous

Pourquoi les français préfèrent-ils aller en Tunisie ou au Maroc plutôt qu'en Algérie ?
Comment trouvez-vous le Maroc ?
Pourquoi les touristes européens raffolent tant des destinations comme Marrakech ?

Questions similaires

Pourquoi les français préfèrent-ils aller en Tunisie ou au Maroc plutôt qu'en Algérie ?

Comment trouvez-vous le Maroc ?
Que ne doit-on absolument pas faire au Maroc ?

Pourquoi les touristes européens raffolent tant des destinations comme Marrakech ?

Pourquoi le Maroc soutient-il le président autoproclamé du Vénézuela ?
Avez-vous déjà visité le Maroc ?

Tourisme: Est-il vrai que le Maroc est considéré comme l'un des pays les plus sûrs pour voyager ?

Qui aime visiter le Maroc et pourquoi ?

Le Maroc est-il un pays émergent ?
Que pensez-vous du Maroc en tant que touriste ?
Qu'est-ce qu'on doit jamais faire si je visite le Maroc ?
Comment voyez-vous le Maroc ?
Quelle est la meilleure destination touristique des Marocains en 2020 ?
Quelles sont les choses qu'on aime au Maroc ?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il constamment présenté comme un pays arrière ?

Pourquoi il n'y a qu'avec l'Algérie que les relations sont souvent tendues alors que la France a occupé d'autres pays ?

Pourquoi les français préfèrent-ils aller en Tunisie ou au Maroc plutôt qu'en Algérie ?

La France a-t-elle encore son mot à dire sur l'Algérie ?

Pour quelles raisons Macron vient-il d'annoncer que la France allait réduire drastiquement le nombre de visas accordés au Maroc, à l'Algérie et à la Tunisie ?

Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?

Pourquoi un bon pourcentage des Algériens nés avant l'indépendance (1962) disent que « l'Algérie était beaucoup plus heureuse et prospère du temps de la colonisation française »?

Pourquoi l'Algérie ne s'excuse-t-elle pas auprès de la France pour sa tentative ratée de colonisation?

Que se serait-il passé si les Sarrasins n'avaient pas été arrêtés à Poitiers?
La France a-t-elle répandu l'analphabétisme en Algérie pendant la colonisation ?
Pourquoi la France a-t-elle colonisé l'Algérie ?

Que ne doit-on absolument pas faire au Maroc ?

Jean Claude Gabert

Cabinet Blabla, Page, Blanche & Ass.Mis à jour le 2 août

J'habite au Maroc comme expatrié. Je m'étonne encore tous les jours des qualités des Marocains, qui ont bien des leçons de civilité à nous donner.

Le "absolument" de la question est gênant. Bien sûr il faut absolument éviter de fumer leur truc en public. Vous allez vous faire ramasser.

Bien sûr, il faut absolument éviter de parler du Roi, même de façon respectueuse et à voix basse. Les médias l'appellent systématiquement "Sa Majesté le Roi Mohammed VI que Dieu l'assiste", c'est dire. S'il faut vraiment évoquer les décisions politiques, il vaut mieux parler du "Palais".

Et bien sûr, il ne faut pas agacer les Musulmans chez eux : éviter absolument de parler de religion. C'est dommage, ils auraient des choses à dire, ne serait-ce que sur le plan théologique, mais la conversation tourne court instantanément. C'est considéré comme une maladresse de touriste. (Que ferais-je si un Maghrébin de passage m'interrogeait sur la Sainte-Trinité?)

J'ajoute avec timidité qu'il faut absolument éviter toute allusion à l'intimité sexuelle, même entre copains. Ne jamais pousser son voisin du coude quand une jolie fille passe, ne jamais faire de blagues, de jeux de mots, ne jamais raconter d'anecdote ni de souvenir à ce sujet… C'est tenu pour une grossièreté de touriste. Voilà qui élimine une bonne partie de l'humour français. Le Maroc sous cet aspect me rappelle la province du temps de ma grand-mère.

Le réseau routier est comparable au nôtre (sauf que la signalétique est moins rigoureuse), mais il faut absolument éviter de faire le malin sur les routes : ici, on conduit au réel, selon ce qu'imposent les circonstances immédiates. (J'ai vécu à Mobylette à Paris, j'ai appris!)

Il ne faut compter ni sur la discipline du type qu'on double, ni sur celle du type qui vient en face et encore moins sur celle du type en train de doubler le type qui vient en face. J'ai repassé le permis ici et personne dans toute la procédure n'a pu m'expliquer le protocole exact des ronds-points marocains (certains ont des feux d'un seul côté).

Dans le même ordre d'idée, en plus léger, il ne faut absolument pas faire le malin dans un escalier marocain. Traditionnel ou tout neuf, soit il est plus raide qu'une échelle de meunier (1), soit ses marches sont inégales dans toutes leurs dimensions (2), soit il est pavé en trompe-l'oeil, façon illusion d'optique, mode casse-g.(3). Les mains-courantes sont souvent poétiques. De toute façon, vous vous cognerez la tête.

1460

Pour le "non-absolument", le Maroc vous enseigne à redevenir courtois. Il faut saluer, s'enquérir des diverses santés, sourire, remercier, remercier des remerciements... tout ça pour un paquet de cigarettes ou un plein de gazole. On évite donc, partout et tout le temps, d'être brusque, impatient, anonyme. Ça s’apprend, ça fait du bien mais ça rend accro.

Les Marocains sont pieux, mais ne sont pas des Amish : une Européenne peut absolument s'habiller comme chez elle, mais, peu à peu, elle évitera de soi-même les tenues trop…. trop quoi? Elle saura.

Il ne faut pas oublier de dire "insha Allah" dès qu'on parle de l'avenir, même le plus proche. Ça c'est un absolu.. Tout bien considéré, il n'est pas malavisé de se rappeler fréquemment ce que Victor Hugo répondait à Napoléon : "Non, Sire, l'avenir n'est à personne, l'avenir est à Dieu".

Cette réponse est improvisée, il y a beaucoup à dire. (J'ai ajouté des photos perso.)

Questions similaires

Quels sont les faits sur le Maroc auxquels les étrangers ne croient pas avant d'arriver au Maroc ?

Qu'est-ce qu'on doit jamais faire si je visite le Maroc ?
Qu'est-ce qui vous dérange à propos de la culture marocaine ?
Quelle est la meilleure ville au Maroc ?
Pourquoi les Marocains fuient-ils le Maroc ?
Pourquoi le Maroc ne veut-il pas renoncer au Sahara occidental ?
Comment sont perçus les Français au Maroc ?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il constamment présenté comme un pays arrière ?
Que pensez-vous des Marocains ?
Que ne dois-je absolument pas faire en visitant l'Espagne ?
Aimez-vous le Maroc ?
En visite dans votre pays, que ne devrais-je absolument jamais faire ?
Que pensent les Marocains nés en Europe du Maroc ?
Que ne devrais-je absolument pas faire lors d'une visite de la Chine ?
À quel endroit ne doit-on jamais aller ?

Quel est votre endroit préféré en Afrique ?

Samir سمير Farid فريد , a étudié à Mohamed V Rabat Répondu 17 nov. 2018

Je vis au Maroc, donc en Afrique, et ce qui est particulier dans ce pays, c'est qu'il est à 15 km de l'Europe, alors qu'il a des racines de plus de 2700 km en Afrique,

Et dans ce pays il ya de tout, des montagnes et de la neige, des plages et des canyons, des déserts et des forêts , des plaines fertiles et des ergs, des arabes, des berbères, des africains et des européens, des musulmans, des chrétiens et des juifs, des antilopes, des faucons, des cobras, des dromadaires, des macaques, des lynxs, des panthères, et des rares spécimens du lion de l'Atlas en captivité, des chênes verts et lièges, des sapins, des pins, des tilleuls, des palmiers dattiers, des acacias et les emblématiques arganiers, des capitales islamiques impériales, des mellahs juifs, des cathédrales et des édifices coloniaux européens, des vestiges romains et phéniciens, l'université Al Quaraouyynes, la Mosquée Al koutoubia, la tour Hassane, Mogador, et Volubilis,

Le Maroc est un mélange subtil d'influences africaines, berbères, arabes et européennes, c'est une identité à facettes variables mais unique,
Suivre Samir سمير Farid فريد

Questions similaires

Quel est votre endroit préféré en Afrique ?
Pourquoi ne dois-je jamais aller en Afrique ?

Si vous avez déjà visité plusieurs pays d'Afrique, quel est le pays qui vous a le plus marqué. Sinon, si vous comptez revenir en Afrique, quel pays irez-vous en premier ?

Que trouvez-vous étrange en Afrique ?

Dans quel pays d'Afrique fait-il bon vivre ? Où me recommanderiez-vous de m'installer ?

Si vous deviez vivre dans un pays d'Afrique, lequel choisiriez vous et pourquoi ?
Que trouvez-vous différent en Afrique ?
Dans quel pays aimeriez-vous vivre ? Et pourquoi ?
Quel pays africain donnerais-tu tout pour habiter ? Pourquoi ?
Quel pays aimeriez-vous visiter en Afrique ? Pourquoi ?
Dans quel pays aimeriez-vous vivre plutôt que la France et pourquoi ?
Quels sont pour vous les pays où il fait le moins bon vivre et pourquoi ?
Quelles sont les choses à savoir absolument avant de partir en Afrique ?

Quels pays africains recommanderiez-vous à quelqu'un qui n'est jamais allé en Afrique ?

Comment est-ce que c'est de vivre dans un village en Afrique ? Pourriez-vous donner un exemple individuel en détail, s'il vous plaît ?

What is the hardest dialect of Arabic, Moroccan or Algerian?

Abdelhak Benachour Lives in Algeria (1988–present) Sep 23

Al-Bayan newspaper (UAE) made a poll in 2015 and asked people about the most difficult Arabic dialect and the results were the following:

Algerian dialect 58%
Moroccan dialect 33%
Libyan dialect 25%
Tunisian dialect 16%
Yemeni dialect 8%
Lebanese dialect 8%.

Whether this poll was accurate or not, Maghreb dialects remain the most difficult for most Arabs.

Related Links

Is it true that the main reason why General de Gaulle gave independence to Algeria is because he was afraid that if Algeria remains French then France would eventually become a Muslim majority country?

What is the most realistic way for France to have permanently kept Algeria?

Why did France fight a vicious war In Algeria and killed hundreds of thousands unlike other colonies?

Why could France not convert Algeria to part of France?
Is Algeria culturally close with France?
Was Algeria better off as an integral part of France, or is it better off independent?
How would modern-day Algeria be if it had remained under French rule?
Why do people think that Algeria would have been better if it had been part of France?
Why did France lose the Algerian War?
What if France would not have invaded Algeria in 1830?
Why did France give up Algeria?
How is the Algerian War (1954-1962) viewed in modern day France?

Why did France fight a vicious war to keep Algeria, but not when it lost Morocco, Tunisia and West Africa?

Why is France obsessed with Algeria?
How do the French and the Algerians view the Algerian war?

Royaume du Maroc :

Capitale : Rabat

Population : 34 500 000

PIB : 110 milliards de $

PIB/hab : 3 151 $ (PPA : 8 567 $)

Superficie : 447 000 km2

Conflits en cours : Oui, au niveau du Sahara occidental.

Donc après ces deux présentations ont remarques que les deux pays ont sensiblement la même superficie de territoire, avec un avantage pour l'Espagne avec les îles de Canaries et ses enclaves au Maroc. Les deux pays jouent un rôle majeur dans le contrôle de la Méditerranée. On remarque qu'économiquement l'Espagne devance largement le Maroc, pour la population les espagnols sont environs plus nombreux de 10 millions.

Maintenant intéressont nous aux puissances militaires.

L'armée espagnol compte 120 000 militaires et environ 400 000 réservistes.

L'armée marocaine quant à elle compte 300 000 militaires et environ 200 000 réservistes.

En bref l'Armée marocaine possède un nombre de soldat bien plus élevé. En plus de ce chiffre important l'armée marocaine oblige encore le service militaire (même si en théorie seul 20% des habitants l'ont effectué), en Espagne il est proscrit.

Des soldats marocains pendant le service militaire

Au niveau de la flotte l'Espagne est bien mieux équipés que le Maroc qui possède certes un nombre importants de véhicules mais qui datent tous des années 50 ou 80. L'Espagne est beaucoup plus moderne en équipements militaires possédant par exemple un porte avion de 2010 (donc extrêmement récent).

Porte aéronefs Espagnol Principe de Asturias

Au regard des statistiques internationales l'Espagne, qui possède la bombe nucléaire,

[suite à de nombreux commentaires : l'Espagne possède l'arme atomique au nom du partage nucléaire qui est permis l'OTAN, ainsi en cas de conflit elle pourrait utiliser des bombes nucléaires françaises ou américaine par exemple, alors oui dans la réponse je précise que la guerre se fait sans alliés, dans ce cas précis, mais il n'en demeure pas moins qu'elle la possède en quelques sortes. De plus dans mon scénario hypothétique il n'est jamais question d'utiliser la bombe nucléaire] est classée 20ème armée mondiale, le Maroc lui apparait 57ème.

Les îles espagnols des Canaries et les enclaves du pays sur le Maroc permettrait sans doute à l'armée espagnol d'encercler le pays et donc d'obtenir rapidement l'avantage.

Cependant les Espagnols seraient sûrement désavantagés par les fortes chaleurs et le désert, car moins habitués que les militaires marocains.

Au final, si on imagine que le conflit ne concerne que ces deux pays. Et donc que l'OTAN, l'ONU, l'UE etc… n'interviennent pas on peut imaginer que les Espagnols gagneraient la guerre mais je pense avec une certaines difficultés. Leurs moyens plus développés les aideraient sûrement dans le cas d'une invasion vers le Maroc, mais la ferveur des marocains et le grand nombre de militaires poseront surement problèmes à l'Espagne.

Pourquoi le Maroc ne rend-il pas le Rif à l'Espagne?/Why doesn't Morocco return Rif to Spain?

Jerome Cohen Mon père était de Casablanca, ma mère fait un super tajine!Traducteur 2 ans

Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan

Parce que la plupart des rifains se souviennent de ce que l'Espagne leur a fait.

Attention : il y a 2 images graphiques ci-dessous

Lorsque l'Espagne a occupé le Rif, elle se trouvait à un point bas de son histoire, car elle venait d'être humiliée par les Américains dans la guerre hispano-américaine. En conséquence, les Espagnols ont décidé de s'en prendre à leurs nouveaux sujets musulmans bruns avec virulence.

Les peintures représentant des soldats américains combattant les Espagnols, l'Espagne allait perdre Cuba, Guam, Porto Rico et les Philippines au profit des Américains.

Les rifains se sont retrouvés massacrés, pillés et violés par les Espagnols sur un simple coup de tête. Beaucoup, dont la tribu de mon grand-père maternel, ont fui le Rif pour échapper au règne de terreur des Espagnols. Alors que d'autres sont restés dans le Rif dans la peur.

La famille de mon beau-père est restée sur place et ma belle grand-mère m'a raconté que lorsque les troupes espagnoles étaient repérées dans les environs, sa mère et toutes les femmes se cachaient dans les champs parce que les Espagnols avaient tendance à violer les femmes du Rif puisqu'elles étaient musulmanes, ce qui signifiait qu'elles n'étaient pas humaines.

Les Riffiens ont résisté aux Espagnols pendant la guerre du Rif, mais cela a empiré les choses.

La guerre du Rif a commencé lorsque les rifains en ont finalement eu assez et ont décidé d'expulser les Espagnols de leurs terres qui ont travaillé pendant un certain temps car l'Espagne a dû demander le soutien de la France après avoir subi une série d'humiliations comme la bataille de l'Annuel, où une armée espagnole a été anéantie.

Au lieu d'adoucir les Espagnols, cela les a rendus encore plus furieux et beaucoup plus cruels. Ils ont commencé à entrer dans les villages rifains et à choisir des hommes au hasard pour les décapiter en public, en guise d'avertissement aux rifains .

IMAGE GRAPHIQUE

Soldats espagnols avec la tête de 2 rifains qu'ils ont décapités

Soldats espagnols posant avec les têtes des rebelles rifains qu'ils ont décapités

FIN DES IMAGES GRAPHIQUES

Les choses n'ont fait que s'améliorer lorsque Franco a pris le contrôle de l'Espagne, il a été le premier gentil Espagnol à diriger le Rif.

En effet, pendant la guerre civile espagnole, les rifains ont décidé d'exploiter la situation en s'alliant à une faction pour obtenir des avantages. La faction qu'ils ont choisie était les Nationalistes dirigés par Franco et ainsi les rifains sous la direction de Mohamed Meziane (qui a été fait Général dans l'armée espagnole pour cette contribution) ont afflué en Espagne pour combattre.

Mohamed Meziane savait que l'Europe n'autoriserait jamais un Maroc indépendant et il a donc cherché à utiliser la guerre civile espagnole pour convaincre l'élite espagnole qu'il valait mieux travailler avec les rifains plutôt que de les opprimer.

Le pari s'est avéré payant puisque lorsque Franco a gagné la guerre, il a récompensé les rifains en mettant fin à l'impunité dont jouissaient les Espagnols. L'époque où les Espagnols pouvaient violer et voler les rifains quand ils le voulaient a pris fin, et le Rif a même obtenu une certaine autonomie.

Mais cela n'a pas suffi à mettre fin à l'animosité qui s'était déjà créée.

Beaucoup de rifains se souviennent encore des horribles jours de la domination espagnole. C'est pourquoi la plupart ont été célébrés lors de l'indépendance en 1956, les jours de persécution étant enfin terminés. C'est aussi la raison pour laquelle aucun rifains ne veut revenir à la domination espagnole.

Sami Fassi Marini

Pourquoi Abdelmoumen(calife des Almohades) est-il revendiqué comme Marocain par les Marocains, alors qu'il venait d'une tribu localisée en Algérie actuelle ?

· Suivre A étudié C++ (langage de programmation) à Universités 1 an

La jalousie algérienne vers tout ce qui marocain est juste incroyable
1- Premièrement , c'est l'université Oxford qui considère Abdelmoumen comme Marocain , peu importe ou il était né mais c'était le sultan de Marrakesh , d'ailleurs le Mot Maroc,Marruecos sont des déformations du nom Marrakech qui était la capitale des Almohades .

ʿAbd al-Muʾmin (d. 1163), builder of the Almohad Empire and great Moroccan military leader and able administrator, led the Almohad movement for tawhid, absolute monotheistic unity, after the death of the Mahdi Ibn Tumart, the Almohad founder, in c. 1130. His full name was ʿAbd al-Muʾmin ibn ʿAli ibn ʿAlwi bin Yaʿla al-Kumi Abu Muhammad.

2- Le caftan Marocain n'a rien avoir avec le caftan algérien (s'il existe encore) , d'ailleurs les algériens adorent le caftan le marocain , il suffit de voir les statiqtiques de Google Trends , vous ne cherchez pratiquement que le caftan Marocain , vous le googlez m^me plus que les marocains, et vous êtes les clients les plus fidèles de l'artisanat marocain

Google Trends | Compare

caftan marocain
Search term

caftan algérien
Search term

+ Add comparison

Worldwide | 2004 – present | All categories | Web Search

Interest over time

Google Trends | Compare

caftan marocain | caftan algérien | Worldwide, 2004 – present

Compared breakdown by region | Region

caftan marocain | caftan algérien

Colour intensity represents percentage of searches LEARN MORE

Sort: Interest for caftan marocain

1	Algeria
2	Morocco
3	Tunisia
4	France
5	Belgium

Include low search volume regions

Showing 1–5 of 11 regions

Google Trends | Compare

caftan marocain | caftan algérien | Worldwide, 2004 – present

caftan marocain

Interest by region | Region

Include low search volume regions

Related queries | Rising

1	caftan 2014	Breakout
2	caftan marocain 2014	Breakout
3	caftan 2015 marocain	Breakout
4	caftan 2013	Breakout
5	caftan marocain 2013	Breakout

Showing 1–5 of 25 queries

3-La musique Rai est une musique commune entre l'oriental marocain et l'occidental algérien , ce n'est pas notre faute que vous ne pouvez pas organisé des grands concerts comme les nôtres .

4-Arrêtez d'envier et de pleurnicher sur les réseaux sociaux et développez votre pays.

Questions similaires

Quels sont les faits sur le Maroc auxquels les étrangers ne croient pas avant d'arriver au Maroc ?
Pourquoi le Maroc a-t-il attaqué l'Espagne en 2002 ?
L'Espagne ressemble-t-elle plus à la France ou au Maroc ?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il constamment présenté comme un pays arrière ?

Pourquoi le Maroc n'est-il pas considéré comme un pays européen alors qu'il n'est qu'à 14 km de l'Espagne ?

Que se passe-t-il avec le Maroc et l'Espagne qui se disputent Melilla et Ceuta ?
Pourquoi ces territoires sont-ils tombés sous contrôle espagnol et pourquoi le Maroc n'a-t-il pas réussi à les reconquérir ?

Pourquoi considérons-nous que l'Espagne est européenne, alors qu'elle a été gouvernée par des musulmans pendant près de 800 ans ? Pourquoi ne considérons-nous pas cet ancien territoire musulman comme moyen-oriental ou nord-africain ?

Que pensez-vous de l’Espagne ?
Pourquoi le Maroc ne veut-il pas renoncer au Sahara occidental ?
Le Maroc est-il un pays émergent ?

Pourquoi le Maroc s'appelle-t-il le Maroc?/Why is Morocco called Morocco?

Rachid Haroune Moroccan

Au Moyen Âge, le Maroc était connu par sa capitale ; sous les dynasties des Idrissides et des Mérinides, le Maroc était connu sous le nom de royaume de Fès car c'était leur capitale. Lorsque les Almoravides ont pris le contrôle du pays et ont construit Marrakech et en ont fait leur capitale, le Maroc était connu sous le nom de royaume de Marrakech. L'origine du nom "Marrakech" est contestée, mais il est très probable qu'il provienne des mots berbères amur (n) akush "Terre de Dieu", d'où l'espagnol a dérivé Marruecos et Marokko en néerlandais . En anglais, il s'écrit Morocco et en français Maroc.

Pendant la colonisation, le colonisateur français a utilisé le nom de royaume chérifien puisque la dynastie alaouite prétend être descendante du prophète.

D'autre part, certains historiens pensent que les musulmans qui ont habité la péninsule arabique ont été les premiers à utiliser ce nom المغرب Maroc pendant la conquête islamique. Il signifie en arabe le "lieu du coucher du soleil" car ils pensaient alors que le soleil s'était installé sur la terre du Maroc.

Pourquoi les Marocains fuient-ils le Maroc ?/ Why are Moroccans fleeing Morocco?

Rachid Haroune a Moroccan

Récemment, des Marocains ont acheté des billets pour la Coupe du monde afin d'entrer en Russie sans visa et ont tenté de passer illégalement en Finlande, membre de l'Union européenne. On estime également que plus de quatre millions de Marocains vivent à l'étranger.

La principale raison qui pousse tous ces gens à quitter leur pays est la corruption.

Corruption □□□ □ □□

La corruption au Maroc est un cheval sauvage sans rênes. Ainsi, les jeunes pauvres ont du mal à vivre dans un tel environnement où le népotisme, le favoritisme et le patronage sont les éléments clés pour s'épanouir et briller. L'indice de perception de la corruption 2016 de Transparency International a donné au Maroc un score de 37, inférieur à la moyenne mondiale de 43. Sur une échelle de 0 à 100, plus le chiffre est bas, plus le niveau perçu de corruption dans le secteur public est élevé. Le royaume se classe au milieu, 90e sur 176 pays[1].

Le Maroc est le plus grand exportateur de phosphate, un secteur monopolisé par des familles d'élite qui ont de bonnes relations avec la famille royale et d'autres décideurs du gouvernement. Les gens ordinaires se considèrent comme des étrangers à l'intérieur de leur pays. Ils n'ont pas les mêmes droits et les avantages équivalents dont bénéficient les familles privilégiées. Ces entités privilégiées jouissent de l'impunité et d'un pouvoir énorme puisque les fonctionnaires et les employés de haut rang du gouvernement font partie intégrante de ce réseau. Dans une affaire de corruption, une liste ayant fait l'objet d'une fuite a révélé l'identité de plusieurs fonctionnaires et agents de l'État qui ont acheté de grandes parcelles de terres appartenant à l'État pour une fraction du prix. Ils avaient payé 30 GBP pour un mètre carré au lieu du prix du marché de 320 GBP. Les ministères de l'Intérieur et des Finances auraient défendu la confiscation des terres et affirmé que la liste divulguée était motivée par des raisons politiques (Middle East Monitor, août 2016)[2].

En dépit de leur pauvreté, les Marocains perçoivent que leur pays est riche et opulent, mais la richesse est hors de leur portée. Ils se sentent victimes d'un régime défaillant qui absorbe tous les biens et les richesses du pays et ne leur laisse rien, et n'hésitent donc pas à partir quand ils en ont l'occasion. Ils ont l'habitude de répéter en plaisantant cette doaa (supplication) "Notre Seigneur, sortez-nous de cette ville de gens oppressifs ? Et "si nous revenons, nous serons vraiment des malfaiteurs" Anissaa 75, Almuminun 107.

Réponse similaire
Maroc-Espagne : pourquoi cette arrivée soudaine et massive de migrants à Ceuta ?

Pierre Moreira, lieu : Goa, Inde (2001-présent) Répondu 19 mai 2021

Quelques faits qui permettront probablement à chacun de tirer ses conclusions :
En décembre 2020, Donald Trump, alors Président des États Unis, a reconnu la souveraineté du Royaume du Maroc sur le territoire du Sahara Occidental (ancienne colonie espagnole jusqu'en 1975), monnaie d'échange entre Washington et Rabat pour garantir une reconnaissance d'Israel par le Maroc. Depuis cette date, le royaume chérifien n'a pas ménagé ses pressions sur l'Union européenne et, en particulier, sur l'Espagne pour qu'elle suive l'exemple de Washington.

Le leader du Front Polisario et Président de la République Arabe Sahraouie Démocratique, Brahim Gali, a été récemment admis dans un hôpital de Logroño (Nord de l'Espagne) après avoir été infecté par le Covid-19.

Mardi dernier, dans un message sur sa page Facebook, le Ministre marocain des Droits humains et des relations avec le Parlement, Moustapha Ramid, a affirmé que « l'Espagne savait que le prix à payer pour sous-estimer le Maroc est très élevé ».

Plus tôt, l'ambassadrice du Maroc à Madrid avait déclaré, en se référant à l'accueil du leader sahraoui dans un hôpital espagnol : « Il y a des actes qui ont des conséquences et qu'il faut assumer ».

L'Espagne possède deux enclaves sur la côte Nord du Maroc : Ceuta et Melilla. Seule l'enclave de Ceuta a été l'objet de cet afflux soudain d'immigrés.

Selon les autorités espagnoles de l'enclave de Ceuta, sur les quelque 8000 personnes entrées de force sur ce territoire espagnol, environ 5600 s'en sont retournées pratiquement sans contrainte vers le territoire marocain dans les heures qui ont suivi. Depuis mercredi 19 mai après-midi, le nombre de tentatives d'entrée dans l'enclave a chuté spectaculairement.

Notes de bas de page:
[1] https://www.moroccoworldnews.com...
[2] Morocco Still Struggles Against Corruption, Government Accelerating Reform Efforts: El Othmani

Questions similaires

Quels sont les faits sur le Maroc auxquels les étrangers ne croient pas avant d'arriver au Maroc ?
Pourquoi le Maroc a-t-il attaqué l'Espagne en 2002 ?
L'Espagne ressemble-t-elle plus à la France ou au Maroc ?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il constamment présenté comme un pays arrière ?

Pourquoi le Maroc n'est-il pas considéré comme un pays européen alors qu'il n'est qu'à 14 km de l'Espagne ?

Que se passe-t-il avec le Maroc et l'Espagne qui se disputent Melilla et Ceuta ?
Pourquoi ces territoires sont-ils tombés sous contrôle espagnol et pourquoi le Maroc n'a-t-il pas réussi à les reconquérir ?

Pourquoi considérons-nous que l'Espagne est européenne, alors qu'elle a été gouvernée par des musulmans pendant près de 800 ans ? Pourquoi ne considérons-nous pas cet ancien territoire musulman comme moyen-oriental ou nord-africain ?

Que pensez-vous de l'Espagne ?
Pourquoi le Maroc ne veut-il pas renoncer au Sahara occidental ?
Le Maroc est-il un pays émergent ?
Maroc-Espagne : pourquoi cette arrivée soudaine et massive de migrants à Ceuta ?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il plus fort que l'Algérie ?
Aimez-vous le Maroc ?
Pourquoi L'Espagne conserve Ceuta et Melilla alors qu'elles se situent au Maroc ?
Pourquoi le Maroc s'appelle-t-il le Maroc ?

News Nigeria
Morocco defeat DR Congo 4-1 (5-2) to qualify for the 2022 FIFA World Cup.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 3h

Cameroon defeat Algeria 1-2 (2-2) on away goal rule to qualify.

Tunisia beat Mali 0-0 (1-0) to qualify.

Ghana beat Nigeria 1-1 on away goal.

Senegal beat Egypt 1-0 (1-1) on penalties (3-1) to qualify.

TO THE FIFA
WORLD CUP
CAMEROON
FIFA WORLD CUP
Qatar2022
CAF

TO THE FIFA WORLD CUP
TUNISIA
FIFA WORLD CUP
Qatar2022
Qualifiers
CAF

Related Answer

Which Arabic dialect will a Moroccan and an Iraqi use when they want to communicate with each other, because both are incomprehensible to each other?

Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan Lived in Meknès, Morocco (1996–0) 8mo

The one that all Arabs are taught: Modern Standard Arabic
Modern Standard Arabic (MSA) was an attempt to take Classical Arabic (the language of the Quran) and try to give it a modern feel so that all Arabs could use it. As part of the Arab League agenda, all member states introduced MSA into their school systems which means that Algerians, Egyptians, Iraqis, Lebanese, Moroccans, Saudis etc. etc. use MSA when in school and not local dialects.

This also applies to literature. As part of the Arab League's unifying mission, all Arab States actually try to strangle their local languages. One Lebanese author explains an issue with this:

My son and I speak Lebanese Arabic, which he understands well enough — and better every day. But we can only find a handful of books available in that dialect — or in other accessible, useful dialects, be they Egyptian or Iraqi. Conversely, although we find many more books in Classical Arabic, my son understands very little of it. Accessible books are rare, while common books are inaccessible. Children do not seek out books written in an old Arabic, because they are full of unknown words and unfamiliar grammatical structures (…)

How Arabs Have Failed Their Language

Arabs damned their own language through diglossia and denial. They have tried to elevate fus-ha, the only so-called true or pure Arabic, while working to discredit, disable, and even destroy dialects.

https://newlinesmag.com/argument/how-arabs-have-failed-their-language/

This isn't something forced on the people by the Arab states as this episode in Morocco displays.Morocco's Education Ministry Defends Use of Darija in Primary School

Rabat- Morocco's Ministry of Education has defended textbook content written in Darija (Moroccan Ara https://www.moroccoworldnews.com/2018/09/253041/education-ministry-darija-school

The Moroccan government used some Moroccan Arabic words in a textbook for elementary school children and it was the Moroccan public that was outraged! The Minister of Education had to go out on TV and explain his decision.
This is because most Arabs see MSA as a way of uniting and coming together

Moroccans want to be able to communicate with Iraqis, they want to consume Egyptian literature and the same goes for the other communities. Thus Modern Standard Arabic is the dialect that all Arab States are supposed to push and the dialect that all Arabs are supposed to learn.

This of course brings us to three questions:

1. Does this mean every Arab speaks MSA fluently and daily?
2. Is this policy unchallenged?
3. Why do local dialects still exist then?

I. Does every Arab speak MSA fluently and in their daily lives?

No. First, school attendance is spotty across the Arab World as literacy rates can show.

31.5% of Moroccan adults can neither read nor write, so you can imagine how many Moroccan adults can speak MSA fluently as just because the literacy rate is 68.5% does not mean every Moroccan adult finished school.

Then you have people like myself from the diaspora who only learned a local dialect and not MSA.

II. Is this policy unchallenged?

No.

The first article I shared in this answer is by a Lebanese Arab who believes the decision to push MSA to the detriment of local dialects is a horrible decision that needs to be reversed. A similar conversation is held in Morocco.

Should Moroccan Schools Teach Darija (Moroccan Arabic)?

The main English language blog about Morocco and Fez http://riadzany.blogspot.com/2018/09/should-moroccan-schools-teach-darija.html

III. Why do local dialects still exist then?
Because they're more natural and still popular.

Imagine if the European Union decided to revive Latin and created "Modern Standard Latin" (MSL) and from then on, all EU States began forcing book publishers to use only MSL, TV stations to use only MSL and so on. That's what the Arab League did with MSA.

The only reason why the decision was popular is because MSA is a pan-Arabist project to unite the Arabs which is why attacking MSA is such a touchy topic as if you were to tell a Moroccan "Hey, maybe our schools shouldn't use MSA", what they'll hear is "Hey, let's stop being Arab. Forget the Iraqis!".

However Arab unity wasn't enough to convince Arabs to just forget local dialects and so most Arabs just use MSA in school and their local dialects outside of school. Furthermore, MSA faced competition from other Arabic dialects for unity such as Egyptian Arabic, Lebanese Arabic and Syrian Arabic.

Take Moroccan pop idol Saad Lamjarred who prefers to mix several dialects in his songs instead of singing just in MSA.

His mix of classical Arabic with Moroccan dialect "makes his songs more integrated with Gulf and Middle Eastern countries, and easier for Western fans to appreciate," said Rachid Chnika, a Moroccan living in Washington, D.C. "His switching between Moroccan and Egyptian words makes them closer to Eastern ears."

In the Middle East, It's Cool to 'Sing Moroccan'

Saad Lamjarred, one of the most popular vocalists in North Africa, commands a strong fan base in the Middle East by mixing Moroccan dialect with a version of classical Arabic that's rarely used by popular singers, but is easily understandable across the Arab world.

https://www.forbes.com/sites/alisonlake/2018/06/05/in-the-middle-east-its-cool-to-sing-moroccan/?sh=43835dec280b

In Conclusion

A Moroccan and Iraqi would speak MSA

MSA was created by the Arab League to address the problem posed by your question

Related Answer
How different is Moroccan Arabic from Egyptian Arabic and how mutually intelligible are they?

Adil El Sbaii, I am Moroccan Updated Mar 22, 2020

Moroccan and Egyptian dialects are completely different. The only thing they have in common is the ‘’-sh’’ ending to mark the negation in the verb
Ma’arafch (I don’t know)

But besides this, the pronunciation is different, the pace is different, the vocabulary is very different.

The thing is, due to the prominence of Egyptian media in the Arabic-speaking world, most people happen to understand the Egyptian dialect. People in Morocco grew up listening to Egyptian songs, from both classical and pop artists, Egyptian TV shows, Egyptian films, etc… So Moroccans were exposed to all levels of speech of Egyptian Arabic, from the very proper and classical form of it (from the songs of Umm Kulthum, Mohammed Abdelwahab, Abdelhalim Hafez) to the more casual and slangy speeches (from the movies of Adil Imam, Shadia, Farid El Atrach, etc..).

Also, many Moroccan singers who wanted to break into the mainstream Arabic music industry went to Egypt and some of them became superstars there, like Aziza Jalal, Samira Saïd, Laïla Ghofran. And these singers being super popular in the Arab world thanks to their Egyptian career, they also became revered in Morocco.

Egyptians, on the other hand, were never exposed that much to Moroccan media, cinema, and music. So when they ear Moroccans speaking casually, they don’t understand anything, because they don’t get the slang, the pace of the language, the pronunciation (Maghrebians tend to drop vowels when they speak). So sometimes, it will be the same word in Egyptian and Moroccan, but because Moroccans drop the vowel, Egyptians won’t understand it when they hear it.

The only Egyptians who understand Moroccan completely are the Egyptian expatriates who live in Morocco, or who interact with a lot of Moroccans (through studies, roommates, mixed marriages, or through Muslim communities in countries where both people are living as immigrants, like in the United Arab Emirates, France, Canada, the US, the UK, etc…). Then they are exposed to Moroccan Arabic and end up understanding it.

Related Answer

Why are Persian and Dari often classified as two different languages, whereas Moroccan Arabic and Iraqi Arabic, for example, are considered dialects of the same language, despite being way more different?

Ken Westmoreland, Familiar with the language policies of post-colonial states
Answered Oct 5, 2018

Dari is considered a separate language from Persian for ideological reasons, as the predominantly Pashto-speaking government of Afghanistan wanted to distance the variety of Persian used in the country from that used in Iran, although Persian-speaking Afghans still refer to it as فارسی Farsi ('Persian').

As the adoption of 'Dari' only dates from the Constitution of 1964, the extent to which the Afghan variety of Persian differs from that in Iran is not as great as that spoken in Tajikistan during the Soviet era, in which the Cyrillic alphabet was adopted and a large number of Russian loanwords were introduced.

LANGUAGES AND COMMUNICATION

More than a score of languages are spoken in the country. Most of them belong either to the Indo-European or to the Ural-Altaic language family. Farsi (Persian) in its Afghan variant, officially known as Dari since 1964, and Pashto are the two principal languages. Both are Indo-European. Uzbek and Turkoman, the most important minority tongues, are part of the Ural-Altaic family.

Farsi, or modern Persian, emerged in a direct line of descent from an ancient form of the language known as old Persian, through the so-

Area Handbook for Afghanistan, Harvey Henry Smith, American University (Washington, D.C.), Foreign Area Studies, U.S. Government Printing Office, 1969, page 77

Although Arabic can seem more like a dialect continuum than a single language, with considerable differences between the variety of Arabic spoken in Morocco and the one spoken in Iraq, there are historical and cultural reasons, as well as religious ones why they are not considered separate languages.

Arabic has a central role in Islam, the religion of most Arabs, being used as a liturgical language even outside the Arabic-speaking world, while it is central to pan-Arab nationalism, with Egypt, Libya, Syria, Iraq, Jordan and Yemen having made various attempts at political union in the past.

The only attempt at linguistic separatism in the Arabic-speaking world has been in Lebanon, home to a large Maronite Christian population, where the poet Said Akl, also a Maronite, proposed that the local variety of Arabic be recognised simply as a separate Lebanese language, written in a form of Roman script.

LEBNAAN

MSIIBT EL MSAAYIB

Naymil tegyiraat?

B ZELL CEXTELAAL, WALA WAAXID

w law mahma ctadd ed dagt el camni

REJYIT EL PAQISTAAN YA L QOMENWELS

BILANJO HA - L LACC -

Lebnaan, 29 September 1989

However, unlike Maltese, which had diverged from Arabic because of its isolation from the Arabic-speaking and Muslim world, becoming influenced by Italian and later English, Lebanese Arabic was spoken in what was then a small Christian-dominated enclave in a larger Muslim and Arabic-speaking region.

Related Links

What makes Moroccan, Algerian, and Tunisian (Maghrebi) dialects different from other Arabic dialects?

Is the Moroccan dialect similar to Arabic?

What Arabic should I learn for communication, understanding songs etc.? MSA, Egyptian dialect or Levantine dialect?

As an Arabic speaker which Arabic dialect do you easily understand? Which do you have difficulties to understand?

Can Arabs speaking any dialect understand basic Moroccan?

How different is Moroccan Arabic from Egyptian Arabic and how mutually intelligible are they?
Is Algerian Arabic the same as Moroccan Arabic?
How did Moroccan Arabic evolve so differently?

How well can speakers of Moroccan Arabic, Algerian Arabic, Tunisian Arabic, and Libyan Arabic understand each other?

In what way is Darija (Moroccan Arabic) unique among various Arabic dialects?
How do whales communicate to each other?
Can you understand Arabic dialects apart from Iraqi Arabic and Modern Standard Arabic?
Do Moroccans understand the Tunisian dialect of Arabic?
When speakers of different forms of Arabic communicate, which languages do they use?

What are the so-called 'Hilali and pre-Hilali Arabic dialects'? Does this divide still exist in Morocco, and how so?

Réponse similaire
Pourquoi le Maroc implante d'immenses champs de mines antipersonnelle au Sahara occidental sur un territoire qu'il prétend pourtant être le sien, et pourquoi la communauté internationale laisse faire ?!

Chri Chri, précédents lieux : Afrique centrale (2007 - 2015) Répondu 4 déc.

Parce que si l'on fait mine (si vous permettre le jeu de mot) de conserver de bonnes relations avec l'Algérie, c'est un pays qui a choisi le camp ennemi.

Nous ne sommes pas à l'aube d'une troisième guerre mondiale les échanges commerciaux ont pris une telle importance que tout sera fait avant d'en arriver là. Mais si l'on s'intéresse à la géopolitique, on voit clairement deux camps s'affronter:

Les gentils (nous) mais également le Maroc, l'Arabie Saoudite, les Émirats Arabes Unis, l'Egypte et bien sûr les pays occidentaux prônant la démocratie, les droits des femmes, etc.

Les méchants (eux) : l'Algérie, le Qatar, le Pakistan, l'Afghanistan, la Malaisie, l'Azerbaïdjan, l'Iran, le Soudan, la Somalie, la Corée du Nord et la Turquie, bref ceux qui justifient le terrorisme et rêvent de détruire l'occident dont les valeurs sont mauvaises car ils ne respectent pas un abruti pédophile qui a profité de la crétinerie de bédouins pour leur faire croire qu'il était un prophète!

Dans la guerre opposant Maroc et Algérie, pardon opposant le Maroc au Front Polisario financé et armée par l'Algérie, on a vite choisi notre camp! Les États-Unis ont d'ailleurs reconnu la souveraineté marocaine sur le Sahara occidental. L'Europe le pense mais ne veut pas fâcher les Algériens, c'est qu'ils sont nombreux chez nous! Malgré la défaite, les rebelles et autres islamistes, c'est comme Al-Qaida et Daesh, ils pensent qu'ils auront des vierges s'ils meurent pour la cause donc ils continuent. Le Maroc pose des mines anti-personnel afin d'exaucer le vœu de ces fous, retrouver au plus vite leurs vierges au paradis! La légion d'honneur à celui qui a eu cette idée!

Réponse similaire
Pourquoi le Maroc implante d'immenses champs de mines antipersonnelle au Sahara occidental sur un territoire qu'il prétend pourtant être le sien, et pourquoi la communauté internationale laisse faire ?!

Rudolf Kowalski, Licence Histoire & Géographie, Université Jean Moulin Lyon 3 (2007) Répondu 4 déc.

Parce qu'ils sont totalement nuls sur le plan stratégique.

Bon j'avoue que vous m'apprenez la mise en place de ces champs de mines.

Ces champs de mines sont certainement censés servir dans la lutte contre le Front Polisario qui revendique l'indépendance du Sahara Occidental et qui bénéficie du soutien de l'Algérie voisine. Il s'agit de leur interdire l'accès à un certain nombre de zones.

Un champ de mines n'a d'intérêt au mieux que sur un plan tactique pour empêcher des combattants ennemis de franchir les derniers mètres qui les séparent de la position qu'ils tentent de prendre d'assaut. Sur un plan stratégique c'est un cadeau de dizaines (centaines? milliers?) de tonnes d'explosifs à l'adversaire si les poseurs de mines n'ont pas la possibilité de surveiller en permanence le champ ainsi piégé. Durant la guerre d'Algérie, l'ALN avait ainsi récupérer de nombreuses mines posées par les Français à la frontière du Maroc pour les empêcher de rentrer. Les fellaghas allaient de nuit jusqu'aux champs de mines, repéraient ces dernières, les désarmaient et récupéraient les explosifs et les détonateurs pour les réutiliser plus tard.

Pour ce qui est de la communauté internationale, je pense qu'elle ne fait rien parce qu'il n'y a pas de massacres de grande ampleur en cour qu'il faudrait arrêter au plus vite (ce qui ne les motive pas toujours, voyez la situation au Yemen) et que ce qui peut se passer dans ce coin paumé n'a pas d'influence sur la situation stratégique en dehors du territoire concerné. Des tentatives pour régler la question du conflit dans la région ont été faites à plusieurs reprises depuis au moins 40 ans sans que n'apparaisse la moindre lueur de succès, personne n'a plus la moindre proposition à faire qui puisse être acceptée par les différents camps en présence donc les autres pays préfèrent jouer sur une forme de statu quo (ou de politique de l'autruche selon le point de vue) plutôt que de se laisser entrainer dans ce qui ne pourra être qu'un bourbier dont on ne se retirera qu'après avoir perdu de nombreux soldats et des sommes colossales en pour rien.

Réponse similaire
Est-ce que le Maroc va attaquer l'Algérie ?

François Legallio, ancien(ne) Toujours la tête dans les corrections Répondu 4 janv.

Sûrement que non car les dirigeants marocains savent qu'il pourrait leur en cuire de s'attaquer à l'Algérie : militairement ce serait un adversaire coriace et dont l'armement de provenance majoritairement russe a prouvé qu'il était très efficace.

Le peuple algérien ne souhaiterait pas entrer en guerre contre un pays avec lequel existent des liens fraternels, d'une densité humaine et culturelle, incommensurables, personne n'y serait enthousiaste à s'attaquer à un peuple-frère et à lui arracher aveuglément des vies ; sans pouvoir en juger directement, je suppose que les Marocains nourrissent les mêmes sentiments pacifiques à l'endroit de l'Algérie et de sa population.

Le Maroc (même s'il était soutenu par des puissances occidentales) sait parfaitement qu'il aurait beaucoup à y perdre économiquement, diplomatiquement et humainement.

Économiquement une fermeture hermétique des frontières avec l'Algérie serait coûteuse et les flux commerciaux ne pourraient plus passer que par la Mauritanie, le Sénégal, l'Espagne ou la mer ; en terme d'image internationale, le Maroc perdrait des centaines de milliers de touristes (surtout si la situation pandémique tendait à diminuer).

Affaibli par un conflit, la question sahraouie reviendrait avec force sur le devant de la scène et probablement à L'ONU ; voyant le Maroc créer un conflit, l'Espagne se ferait encore plus vigilante sur la question de Ceuta et Melilla et alerterait l'OTAN en vue de prévenir tout attaque de son territoire.

L'Algérie bénéficierait probablement des soutiens diplomatiques de nombreux pays africains, de certains pays dits "arabes" ainsi que de quelques pays d'Amérique hispanophone (par exemple : Cuba, le Venezuela) certains pays asiatiques dont la Chine ; la pièce-maîtresse serait sans doute la Russie (qui joua un rôle important en tant que porte-voix mondial de la cause algérienne lors de la période 1954-1962 qui aboutit à l'indépendance) toujours en appui diplomatique de l'Algérie et dotée d'un droit de veto en tant que membre permanent du Conseil de Sécurité de l'ONU, contre toute résolution contraignante que les Occidentaux et les Marocains seraient tentés de faire passer contre l'Algérie. Militairement, la Russie cherche de plus à regagner de l'influence en Méditerranée et sur le continent africain.

Enfin, la France, pour ambiguës que soient ses options, ne pourrait se permettre de laisser faire sur son territoire une zizanie impliquant des communautés algérienne et marocaine qui seraient en cohabitation sur un mode antagoniste ; elle tendrait en amont à faire calmer le jeu des menaces d'agressions.

En conclusion, on peut dire, de manière assez sûre que le Maroc, par réalisme, ne se risquera pas à attaquer l'Algérie car fondamentalement, les peuples concernés ne le veulent pas…et encore moins les Algériens qui en ont soupé pendant une terrible décennie des drames humains.

Questions similaires

Pourquoi les Arabes détestent-ils les Kabyles ?

A qui doit appartenir le Sahara occidental, au Maroc ou aux Sahraouis qui revendiquent l'indépendance ?

Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?

Pourquoi le Sahara occidental n’est pas reconnu comme un pays ?
Pourquoi le Maroc a-t-il décidé de normaliser ses relations avec Israël ?
Pourquoi le Maroc ne rompt pas toutes ses relations avec l’Algerie ?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il toujours jaloux de l'Algérie ?

Pourquoi les pays musulmans ne proposent pas aux palestiniens de s’installer dans le Sahara occidental ?

Le Sahara occidental est-il marocain ?

Pourquoi la France tarde-t-elle à reconnaître sans ambiguïté, la souveraineté du Maroc sur son Sahara, alors même qu’elle sait, plus que quiconque, que ce territoire lui appartient ?

Pourquoi l'Algérie fait-elle pression sur la France concernant l'époque où la France menait des expériences nucléaires au Sahara ? Leur situation économique les pousse à mendier certaines compensations.

Pourquoi le Maroc ne veut-il pas renoncer au Sahara occidental ?

Pourquoi la Grèce antique est-elle le début de la civilisation occidentale au lieu de l'Afrique ancienne ?

Pourquoi les pays magrébins refusent-ils de reprendre leurs ressortissants entrés clandestinement sur le territoire français ?

Le Sahara occidental sera-t-il à terme définitivement sous la responsabilité marocaine ?

Que se passe-t-il si la moitié de l'eau de la Terre est mise dans le désert ?

Abdelwaheb Hammami Anciennement Ancien enseignant d'histoire 7 mo shutterstock.com · 1704851743

alamy stock photo
CP4CTM
www.alamy.com

Ce sont des peintures rupestres trouvées dans le sahara qui attestent que son climat était pluvieux pendant la période préhistorique. C'est ce qui explique qu'il était peuplé d'une faune semblable à celle qu'on trouve aujourd'hui dans les regions africaines à climat humide….

Le desert a besoin d'eau, moins que la moitié des eaux de la terre, pour qu'il devienne verdoyant et accueillant . Il suffit de voir de nos jours les oasis qu''on rencontre dans les régions désertiques du Maghreb oasis de Kebili (sud tunisien)

oasis de Gabès (sud tunisien)

Oasis de Tozeur '(sud tunisien)

oasis du Tafilelt (sud marocain)

Cultures irriguées dans le sahara libyen cultures irriguées en Arabie Saoudite

Il est dit dans le saint coran :

30.Ceux qui ont mécru, n'ont-ils pas vu que les cieux et la terre formaient une masse compacte? Ensuite Nous les avons séparés et FAIT DE L'EAU TOUTE CHOSE VIVANTE . Ne croiront-ils donc pas ?

(sourate AL-ANBIYA (LES PROPHÈTES) verst 30)

Questions similaires

Que se passerait-il si une goutte d'eau de la taille de la Lune heurtait la Terre ?

La Terre étant plate, l'eau tombe dans le vide céleste aux extrémités. Comment se fait-il qu'il reste toujours de l'eau sur le plateau terrestre ?

Si le niveau des mers augmente à un rythme alarmant, pourquoi ne pouvons-nous pas pomper l'eau "excédentaire" et la déplacer sur les terres arides, comme le désert du Sahara ?

Que se passerait-il s'il n'y avait pas de désert dans ce monde ?
Que se passerait-il si la Terre s'arrêtait brutalement de tourner pendant 42 secondes ?

Mon fils dit que si on se retrouve dans le désert, il est plus important d'avoir de l'eau que de la nourriture. J'ai rétorqué que la nourriture était plus importante que l'eau ; qui a raison et pourquoi ?

Que se passerait-il si l'eau disparaissait de la Terre?
Que se passera-t-il si les déserts du monde continuent de progresser ?
Que se passe-t-il si tous les déserts du monde deviennent des forêts ?
Combien y a-t-il de désert de sel dans le monde ?
La Terre a-t-elle déjà été complètement verte et sans aucun désert ?

Si le sable est une roche érodée par l'eau, alors comment les déserts sont-ils faits entièrement de sable, mais toujours dans certains des endroits les plus secs de la Terre ?

Que se passerait-il si toute l'eau de la terre disparait pendant 10 seconde ?
Comment serait la vie sur la Terre si le point triple de l'eau était à 25 °C?
Serait-il possible de reverdir le Sahara ?

Related Answer
Why didn't Muslim countries modernize during the 19th century like Japan did? Were there efforts to modernize within the Islamic world?

Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan Follow Lived in Meknès, Morocco (1996–0) Sun

Morocco couldn't, it needed France to modernize it

In 1844, Morocco and France went to war and a smaller French army thrashed a larger Moroccan army. Sultan Abdulrahman (r. 1822-1859) was no fool and knew that something had to explain why Morocco was defeated so easily. So he dispatched his personal secretary, Mohammed, to France with two goals:

1. Negotiate peace
2. Find out how France got so superior

Mohammed did as commanded and informed the Sultan of these really weird new things France was doing. To name 4 important ones:

France had a centralized government where officials in Paris dictated policy to the nation, allowing them to make the most of France's resources and ensuring French regions cooperated with one another.

France had this thing known as a "National army". French citizens joined it as "career soldiers", men who spent their lives fighting wars and gaining experience that they passed down to the next generation of career soldiers.

France had these massive buildings they called "factories" which produce things faster than artisans, who work by hand, could.

Mohammed observed that the French had this concept of "Nationalism", that there existed a French nation that they were part of and so the French worked hard to improve their nation.

Sultan Abdulrahman reached the conclusion that Morocco had no hope

It's not that the Sultan was lazy but that Morocco wasn't actually a single state and a single nation but a patchwork of different polities and peoples.

Morocco was divided up into 3 types of polities: Tribal states (areas ruled by tribes), Noble estates (areas ruled by a single family) and the City-States.

Morocco had dozens of different peoples. You had Riffian Berbers, Jebeli Berbers, Atlasian Berbers, Soussi Berbers, Sahrawis, Bedouins, Arabs, Andalusians, Ghomora Berbers. While the peoples did intermix, they didn't actually see themselves as one nation.

Photo of Moroccan tribesmen taken in 1971

So while Sultan Abdulrahman could not emulate France

Morocco couldn't centralize because the cities, nobles and tribes wouldn't allow it as they would lose power. Their subjects would resist as well because centralization would mean one of the groups dominates the other.

Morocco couldn't have a national army with career soldiers as well. The cities, nobles and tribes would not allow the Sultan to have his own army to threaten them with.

Morocco could have industrialized and it kind of did.

The Sultan did have direct control over some areas.. In these areas, Sultan Abdulrahman and his successors, Mohammed IV (r. 1859-1873) and Hassan I (r. 1873-1894) , did build factories. Morocco even produced its own rifles. But a major obstacle facing industrialization: The Sultans didn't have money as, and you may be surprised by this, cities, nobles and tribes rarely paid taxes.

Morocco couldn’t develop a sense of national unity due to internal strife and conflict among the polities.

So how did France modernize Morocco?

In 1908, an Atlasian Berber chieftain named Madani El Glaoui rebelled against Sultan Abdelaziz and placed Abdelaziz’s brother, Abdelhafid on the throne. This tore Morocco apart as new coalitions appeared and the polities rejected Abdelhafid.

Depiction of Madani El Glaoui

4 years of chaos saw France intervene in 1912 when it made a dash for Fes, Morocco’s capital, and forced Abdelhafid to sign a treaty of protectorate where it agreed to win the civil war on his behalf in exchange for Morocco ceding control over its foreign policy and military to France. A Resident-General was named to handle this, Hubert Lyautey.

Which brings us to:

Lyautey, Morocco's greatest Sultan and its modernizer

Hubert Lyautey ruled Morocco from 1912 to 1925
Morocco wasn't a colony but Abdelhafid was too weak to challenge the French and so Lyautey was Morocco's de facto ruler.

First, Lyautey took on the cities, nobles and tribes. He rejected their autonomy and the idea of them having their own armed forces. They were all disarmed and undermined by him. Many resisted and Lyautey spent years annihilating them such as the Zayane tribe in the Zayane War.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Zaian_War

Unlike Sultans Abdulrahman, Mohammed IV, Hassan I and chieftain Madani, France had the resources to defeat the Moroccan polities and occupy them.

Second, Lyautey established a Moroccan army of sorts: the Goumiers. The Goumiers were officially loyal to the Sultan but in reality they served France and fought in its wars. This was useful to Morocco because it allowed the emergence of a career soldier class as well as Moroccan officers.

Third, Lyautey industrialized and modernized Morocco. With the defeat of the polities, France was able to collect taxes on Morocco's behalf. Lyautey used much of this revenue to rebuild cities, build roads, railroads, introduce electricity and running water etc. He also encouraged French businessmen to invest.

Fourth, Lyautey tried to build a cult of personality centered around the Sultan's personality in hopes that this would spur a form of nationhood. The Sultan is a descendant of Islam's Prophet Mohammed and so Lyautey hoped to combine France's military power with Islam's spiritual power to get Moroccans to identify with the Sultan and therefore with eachother.

Hubert Layutey and Sultan Yusuf (r. 1912–1927)

He insisted that the French never publicly disrespect the Sultan as well having all laws and decrees “approved” by the Sultan so as to bolster the idea that the Sultan was Morocco’s true ruler and the French were merely his assistants.

This actually worked and to this day, Morocco has a cult of personality centered around the King (the title of Sultan was abandoned) thanks to Lyautey.

So Morocco modernized

Or rather began the process. It was King Hassan II (r. 1961-1999) who finished what Lyatutey had set out to accomplish.

I hope this long explanation answered your question

Related Links

Why was Japan the only country outside the West to experience modernization in the 19th century?

Why was 19th century Meiji Japan able to modernize so effectively, but not China?

Why was 19th century Japan able to modernize so effectively, but not Korea?
Why was 19th century Japan able to modernize so effectively, but not Russia?
Why did Islamic countries fall behind the West starting in approximately 1300 A.D.?

In the 19th century, most of Asia became Western colonies. Why was Japan able to industrialize, modernize, and hold off the West, when most of Asia fell to the West?

Why was 19th century Japan able to modernize so effectively, but not Vietnam?
Why didn't Qing and Joseon modernize like Japan in the late 1800's?

Why didn't Korea modernize like Japan in the late 19th century, which would have made Korea able to effectively resist Japanese total occupation?

History: What did Emperor Meiji do to modernize Japan?

How do the Chinese rationalise the successful westernisation of Japan in the late 19th century, compared with China's failure to do so, given that Japan was subject to the same "unequal treaties" as China, and considered by the Chinese as inferior?

What factors enabled Europeans to get ahead in the Islamic world by the 19th century? Was there anything the Islamic world could have done?

Is there any chance of UK being a Muslim majority country?

If Korea went on a modernization in the late 19th century like Japan, then why did it develop just decades ago?

Is it true that Brussels is becoming in majority Muslim?

What is life like in Morocco?

Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan Lived in Meknès, Morocco (1996–0) Sun

You are reborn in a Moroccan village as a girl.

Your father is a farmer who has a small flock of sheep. The village is small but very tight knit with everyone knowing everyone and there being a genuine sense of community and support. Everybody knows their role and it’s centered around gender.

Your father and the men tend to the fields, while your brother and the other boys tend to the livestock. You however help your mother and other village women. You cook, clean, mend clothing, do the laundry and other household chores.

A Moroccan village

Life is medieval as the Moroccan government is indifferent to your existence. There is no running water and electricity comes from the diesel generator the villagers bought by pooling their money together. Your only days of fun and being a child comes on Friday, the holy day in Islam. Everyone goes to the region's market town and while the adults have tea with residents of other villages, you and the children play games, have snacks and maybe even receive a writing lesson from the Islamic cleric who runs the town's mosque.

Morocco's poor left behind by development boom

Mohammed Akki left his home in Morocco's Middle Atlas mountains to seek regular work and a better life in the town of Azrou, but he still lives on the margins in a country enjoying an investment boom.

https://www.reuters.com/article/us-morocco-inequality-idUSKBN1Y60YU

The best case scenario for you here:

In traditional Moroccan society, a girl becomes a woman when she has first period and you have yours at 16. However your father agrees to let you pick your own husband and simply informs everyone he can at the town next Friday. For a month, a line of suitors show up to your home and present themselves while asking for your hand in marriage. You'll pick the man you believe you can best get along with and life continues.

The worst case scenario for you here:

This year was a horror show for the region. One of Morocco's regular droughts hit and half your village's crops die. Out of desperation, your father decides to drag you to the town on Friday and essentially sells you out to the highest bidder.

In Islam, the husband must give his wife a dowry which can be in the form of jewelry or money. Your father, needing to feed your mother and 4 siblings, intends to pocket your dowry for himself.

Now you decide to escape this fate and move to:

Meknes, a city in the interior

You heard from this guy on Quora, Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan, that his family is from Meknes and assumed it must be a great place to live. Within 2 days, you're cursing his name.

Meknes and other cities in the interior are living hells. There are no jobs, there is corruption and nepotism everywhere, the government exists and nothing more. It does offer electricity and running water in homes but you lose the social cohesion and sense of community that you had in the village.

The lower class areas are dominated by gangs that resort to any means necessary to make money as there is no other option for the men of the city. You find yourself in a constant state of fear that you might be raped, mugged or kidnapped and watch in horror as events like these happen on a weekly basis.

Morocco: Violent Fights in Meknes Ahead of Sunset Prayer

By Amin Mechaal Meknes - Two men were taken to a local hospital following violent fights a few mom

https://www.moroccoworldnews.com/2015/06/161647/morocco-violent-fights-in-meknes-ahead-of-sunset-prayer

Guns aren't really a thing in Morocco so knives and swords are the preferred weapons

You do manage to find a job but quickly realize another harsh reality for jobs outside the countryside, the expectation of sex from men in power.

A Moroccan Cop's Battle Against Sexual Harassment -- Including Her Own

Observers might think that Morocco is making progress in prosecuting sexual assault and other crimes against women, but real victims often languish while the state trumps up charges against its critics.

https://newlinesmag.com/reportage/a-moroccan-cops-battle-against-sexual-harassment-including-her-own/

#MeToo wave in Morocco over 'sex for grades' scandal

Female Moroccan university students have broken their silence about professors demanding sexual favours in return for good grades, a scandal that has shaken the higher eduction system.

https://www.france24.com/en/live-news/20220123-metoo-wave-in-morocco-over-sex-for-grades-scandal

In the best case scenario:
Women in Meknes do have more freedom as the concept of women having careers and living on their own is acceptable. So you find a job with a tolerant boss and manage to etch out a simple lifestyle.

You have a smartphone, rent a decent 1 bedroom apartment in one of the better neighborhoods and until you can save up for a cheap laptop, you pay $2/hour to use a desktop at a computer café.

In the worst case scenario:

You fall victim to one of the many gangs in Meknes. A fate no woman would ever want. They'll abuse you, torture you and it's unbelievably evil. You might believe that justice may be served like it was for this 17 year old girl.

11 men sentenced for kidnap and gang-rape of Moroccan girl

Khadija Okkarou had accused members of a 'dangerous gang' of kidnapping and torturing her for two months

https://www.theguardian.com/world/2021/sep/22/11-men-sentenced-for-kidnap-and-gang-rape-of-moroccan-girl

You would be wrong.

In the interior, the police chiefs are goons who have ties to the governor or mayor. They're incompetent buffoons who are meant to serve the local elite, not the people. This ruins the police force as they also don't care what happens in the cities they're meant to protect. Your only recourse would be to force their hand, maybe post about your experience in English so Western media picks it up. Then the police chief will certainly do something.

Because there's only one thing King Mohammed VI hates more than bad press. People who are the cause of that bad press.

Fortunately you evade this by fleeing to:

Rabat, a member of the coastal cities

Once you're in Rabat, you're awestruck.

You find well-maintained parks, cafés, trams, buses, and even robot trash cans. To make things better, gangs aren't a thing in the coastal cities because they're where the Moroccan elite and middle class mostly live.

A tram passing through Rabat

Thus Rabat's Police chief and force aren't ineffective buffoons but are actual police officers who do their jobs. Alas , you quickly discover that the situation is still bad as these football chants show.

The coastal cities don't have that much job growth and there's a constant flow of Moroccans from the interior and countryside flocking to them that the situation worsens.

The government tries to stave off social unrest with extremely generous subsidies. The only way to starve to death is if you actively refuse to eat food. As long as you have $1, you can eat for 2-3 days.

Men generally get money by offering to do any job possible from working as a handyman for the middle class, to working as "tour guides" to Western tourists, to begging relatives.

Women do the same things but there's the additional element of prostitution which is a serious issue for Morocco.

Moroccan prostitution market prospers | Al Bawaba

Morocco's prostitution market has shown signs of recovery as prices have gone up.

https://www.albawaba.com/behind-news/moroccan-prostitution-market-prospers

In the best case scenario for you:

If you're one of the lucky few to get a stable job in the coastal cities and Marrakech (an honorary coastal city) then rest easy. The coastal cities truly offer a European standard of living to those with jobs. You'll be able to rent a good quality studio or apartment, you'll be able to frequent cafés and enjoy lattés with friends, go to cinemas and so on.

The coastal cities also have Europe's sense of tolerance to some extent. If you're a lesbian, you'll be surprised to discover a very vibrant lesbian community in the coastal cities with LGBT bars even openly advertising themselves online. If your experiences in Meknes and the countryside made you a feminist then you have feminist collectives to participate in or join.

Feminist group protesting in Morocco

Life in the coastal cities with a job is really good. Some even argue it's better than Europe due to the low prices of goods such as homes and food.

In the worst case scenario:

You don't find a job and find yourself living like the masses of the coastal cities. You'll live in the outskirts of the city in an 1 bedroom apartment you share with 9 other people. Everyday sees you begging for work or money.

Of course there is an additional level to ascend to:

Imigration

I'm of course not going to bring up other issues such as the absolutely atrocious public hospital system, terrible schools, government corruption and so on.

Related Answer
Where is the safest place to live in Morocco?

Burt Smiley, B.A. Bachelor of Arts Degrees in English Literature, University of Virginia (1970) Answered Nov 9, 2018

I, as an American AND just a tourist, am probably the LAST person to answer your important question, but maybe my comment may help—and hope others more knowledgeable will comment on my choice: Meknes. For some reason, my wife, (grown) daughter & I felt that Meknes was a more relaxing & domestic city, after the dynamics of Tangier, Fez, and of course Marrakech. A Meknessian (sic) we talked to was proud of his quieter city; its domesticity was important to him; and its pace was calming to us—but it should be said our visit to Meknes came at the end of our three (self-designed) tour of this terrific country. I will add that I hadn't been back to Morocco for 40 years—yes, I am not young—and I was amazed at the modernity (the trains!), efficiency, cleanliness and people's kindnesses on our visit. Sure, I missed the dusty "romance" of the old Morocco, with most men in djellabas and most women in veils—but that is Orientalism at work for sure.
My second choice: "The Blue City," Chefchaoen.

Yet, be careful in all (Islamic or other) countries—and please be considerate in Morocco. You will be rewarded in kind, I assure you.

This is a photo of patients in a public hospital in Morocco, there are no rooms and food and clothing must be provided by friends and family. So you and 10 other people will share a small room and you'll have patients just out of surgery, a mother with a newborn, and a teenager with a broken arm sleeping on blankets on the floor.

I hope this best explains what life is like for Moroccans

Related Links

Why did the two tourist girls get killed in Morocco?
Why are Moroccans fleeing Morocco?
How bad is it to live in Morocco?
How dangerous is Morocco?
Is there racism in Morocco?
Why do you hate Morocco so much? What happened to you when you were there?
What were your impressions of visiting Morocco?
What is wrong with Morocco?
Why is Morocco a poor country?
Is Morocco the worst country in the world?

Related Answer
Is there racism in Morocco?

Othmane Elmansouri, More than 22 years experience in being a Moroccan.
Answered Jun 8, 2016

There actually is more ignorance than racism in Morocco, and you will encounter more racism if you're Moroccan than if you're a foreigner, let me explain.

If you are a foreigner, then having any skin colour apart from black will make you safe from racism (or at least obvious one).

If you are black, then you will certainly face racism, but it's more some sort of passive-agressive racism, you won't be attacked or denied service anywhere, the only time I know of where racism led to denied service was when a man wrote that he will not rent his flat to black people.

The community of black students living here always live together, and that shows how much Moroccan people can be not very welcoming to some, but it can be a language problem more than a race problem, because they only speak english or french, and not all people here speak those.

Now if you are a Moroccan, you may have encountered some form of racism, as there is a huge ignorance, and sometimes racism, depending of where you come from in Morocco : Berber, Riffi, Arab, Fassi, Sahraoui, Djebli…

Now you need to know that since Morocco doesn't have that much migrants, we are not tought about racism problems, because we are a homogenous group that has not come in contact with other races that much.

To conclude, you should know that in 99% of cases you will find welcoming Moroccans, who love strangers (more than moroccans sometimes) and are very curious about other cultures, but I have chosen to answer this question based on the 1%.

Related Answer

Issam Bourakba

, Teacher traveling to experience and explore !
Answered Aug 2, 2018

What are the benefits of moving to Morocco?

I totally agree with the answers here especially the point about both healthcare and education being real weak in Morocco unless you are able to afford some other expensive private options . I lived through the 2008 recession in Boston and decided to move to Morocco in 2011. Most people are not well educated and only recently people are realizing how important English is (French is still the official language) . Global companies are outsourcing jobs to Morocco and with some abroad experience and a foreign language other than French can secure a real job ! With great salary, something like 10 times the minimum wage here. Opening and running a business from here is a great idea also. Of course , life has it's cons here too ! I thank god every day for being here in Morocco. My wife can still stay at home and I can still afford that . You know what I mean ! One more thing I found that People from the US will find unbelievable is the fact that if you're hired by a well reputed company here (IBM EMC H&P P&G … many more) they can't just fire you without handing you a huge paycheck depending on the years you work and some other factors, usually the lump sum amounts to years of salary so jobs are more secure in Morocco than the US believe it or not LOL . Morocco follows the socialist French jobs system . Cheers

Related Answer
What is the best city to live in Morocco?

EvyLee Tazi , former Young journalist Answered Oct 1, 2019

Casablanca, Marrakech or Rabat are cliche places. I would say Tangier is the best investment and city to be in. It's a mixture between the typical northern city with amazing views on the ocean, forest.. So Authentic and diversed.

Marrakech is my least favorite city. Polluted, full of lost tourists who are expecting to find snakes charmers and Ali Baba (I know right?).

It's not for nothing Malcom Forbes and so many chose Tangier. Can't wait to realize my dream to buy a house there no matter where I am.

Related Links

Why did the two tourist girls get killed in Morocco?
Why are Moroccans fleeing Morocco?
How bad is it to live in Morocco?
How dangerous is Morocco?

Is there racism in Morocco?
Why do you hate Morocco so much?
What happened to you when you were there?
What were your impressions of visiting Morocco?
What is wrong with Morocco?
Why is Morocco a poor country?
Is Morocco the worst country in the world?
Where is the safest place to live in Morocco?
How dangerous is Tangier, Morocco?
As a tourist is driving in Morocco safe?
Why is Morocco the most visited country in Africa?
What race are people from Morocco?

Related Answer
Why are people in Morocco millionaires?

EvyLee Tazi, former Young journalist Answered Aug 14, 2019 You're talking about these people?

Or these?

Or maybe these?

Oh. I think I know what made you think that.

I guess this :

And this :

This too, perhaps :

And let's not forget this, of course :

Why you don't know, dear friend, is this :

And this :

As well as this :

To top it off, add this one :

You know me now, I like to trigger :

I guess you know what I mean. Morocco is a country that could be winner of the social inequality pagent. No doubt. We have huge social gaps. A huge modest cast, a huge poor cast, and very little millionaires. Our social cast system looks like a pyramid. Most definitely.

So no. Don't get fooled. We have modern luxurious places and we have villages that we don't even know about because there's no ways to it but by climbing hills and mounts.

You can be CEO of a huge private investment company and own a Range Rover and a Ferrari, travel to the Fijis and have diamonds and golds. You can be a banker or a teacher, in an appartment or social buildings with one car under credit and many debts. And you can be a fruits seller or a farmer with a bike and ten mouths to feed, but nothing to put on the table.

From diamond to zinc.

Credit : all pictures are taken from Google image. All rights preserved.

Related Links

Why did the two tourist girls get killed in Morocco?
Why are Moroccans fleeing Morocco?
How bad is it to live in Morocco?
How dangerous is Morocco?
Is there racism in Morocco?
Why do you hate Morocco so much? What happened to you when you were there?
What were your impressions of visiting Morocco?
What is wrong with Morocco?
Why is Morocco a poor country?
Is Morocco the worst country in the world?
Where is the safest place to live in Morocco?
How dangerous is Tangier, Morocco?
As a tourist is driving in Morocco safe?
Why is Morocco the most visited country in Africa?

What race are people from Morocco?

How dangerous is Tangier, Morocco?

EvyLee Tazi former Young journalist Answered Jan 9, 2019

I was born in Tangier and I returned there for my high school years. Overall, 4 years were spent in there. Tanger is special. It has some mysterious charms that attracted the best wirtiers, producers, actors, artists… Still, and unfortunately, it's located in Morocco. And Morocco is fueled by social issues. Honesty is not such a thing in our culture. Difficult to explain.

My mothers phone got picked from her open bag while we were at a mall. Once she came back from the play station where my sibling was playing, she noticed two teenage boys of around 11 or 12, looking at her with a weird rictus. She noticed that her purse was open, and closed it. Than though to herself she was only being paranoid. Little did she know. Her phone got robbed.

Three days after ltieraly harassing the theufz through text messages and calls, a woman calls us saying her two sons stole the phone. Honest person. The two boys ahd a great day that day.

I only have one thing to say to tourists. MOROCCO IS NOT A DESERTIC HEAVEN FULL OF SUN RAY'S AND GOOD FOOD. Apart from that, it's a troubled country that can be dangerous if you didn't grow up in a culture where your brain comes first. Hypocrisy is a tradition in here, don't believe otherwise. Doesn't mean Moroccans are all assholes, once educated, they tend to become enormous intellectuals with strong beliefs, our main probleme is ignorance. Please if you want to have the most delightful new experience, come IN A GROUP, partner, friends, family… And try to make contact with a long known Moroccan friend you have who can be with you at all times, just to ring your bell when a dude with a sympathic smile comes over and charms you jdut to steel your wallet. We are used to this. Take a Moroccan child. I can assure he won't have any difficulty at scamming older people. I remember once while I was leaving high school with a friend. I was chit chatting when a kid out of nowhere jumped at me and hugged my legs, looking at me with puppy eyes and a an innocent smile. I smiled back and gently pushed him to continue my way. It's not me being a bitch but me being Moroccan. That little one hugged me to feel if I had a phone or a wallet in my jeans pockets and take it away. His mother was only a bloc away waiting for some results.

If you don't have a trustworthy educated Moroccan friend, then be careful around scammers. Only chose programs that are official. Hotels that are known. Places that are secure. Never leave your belongings away from you, hide them in the hotel room or use a coffre fort. Prepare your travel in advance.

Two Scandinavian females were violantly raped and killed while being filmed in the atlas mountains. I don't know how many jerks did that but they were extremists from a village not far from where the two ladies were camping. I felt repulsed and angry at my own country, especially after seeing photos of the two girls, throat slit. But at the same time I thought.. Who the hell told these two girls that that was even Possible to camp in a unsecured zone in the mountains?! EVEN I CAN'T DO THAT.. I wouldn't say yes to a program like this even if it's with 10 other people. It is dangerous.

So Tangier or any other place. Be. Careful. Enjoy the culture, the pros of it. But don't fall for it charms and luxury forgetting about your own security and money.

Related Answer
How dangerous is Tangier, Morocco?

EvyLee Tazi former Young journalist Answered Jan 9, 2019

J. Rautiainen, pay-tv professional Answered Jan 5, 2015

I visited Tangier briefly last summer and I had moderately uneasy feeling all the time, because right after getting out of the boat we were approached by a man asking where we are from, where we are going etc. Basically that's not bad, but once we were reluctant to give him any actual details, he said "I hope you run into scammers during your stay!" Well, I think he was the one, because during the brief conversation he told us being representative of the shipping company and I don't think they would say us anything like that.

After we got out of the customs, there were lots of taxi drivers trying to sell us services. That was not too bad, we didn't say them a word.

However once we found our way to city center, we were approached several times asking who we were, where we are going and so on. Even though we didn't say them a word, suddenly some totally new person walked past us and told us that he knew where we were from. And he knew it right! After saying that he simply walked away grinning. That made it clear to us that we were observed all the time and there were people, possibly scammers, talking about us. Only language we were talking to each other is Finnish and we talked very quietly so they are really good at what they are doing.

In overall, we walked around quite freely entering also in to narrow alleys, but we didn't face any criminal activity. Still I don't think Tangier or Morocco is a place I'd like to stay for a long time, because as a "Nordic looking person" I'm obviously a tourist and same time also a walking wallet. It seems that many people start conversations just to get a chance to gain some money from us selling us something like guidance or letting us know route to some "excellent" store or restaurant. I acknowledge many of them are poor, but still I prefer places I can walk around without being constantly stopped by strangers.

In short: not necassarily dangerous place, but some (like me) may find it a bit distressing.

Related Links

How is it to live in Tangier Morocco?
Why did the two tourist girls get killed in Morocco?
Why do you hate Morocco so much? What happened to you when you were there?
Is there racism in Morocco?
What is the best city to live in Morocco?
Which country is friendlier for tourists: Morocco or Lebanon?
Why are Moroccans fleeing Morocco?
What is life like in Morocco?
Is Morocco the worst country in the world?
How dangerous is Morocco?

Related Answer
What is life like in Morocco?

Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan, lived in Meknès, Morocco Answered Mar 13

You are reborn in a Moroccan village as a girl.

Your father is a farmer who has a small flock of sheep. The village is small but very tight knit with everyone knowing everyone and there being a genuine sense of community and support. Everybody knows their role and it's centered around gender.

Your father and the men tend to the fields, while your brother and the other boys tend to the livestock. You however help your mother and other village women. You cook, clean, mend clothing, do the laundry and other household chores.

A Moroccan village

Life is medieval as the Moroccan government is indifferent to your existence. There is no running water and electricity comes from the diesel generator the villagers bought by pooling their money together. Your only days of fun and being a child comes on Friday, the holy day in Islam. Everyone goes to the region's market town and while the adults have tea with residents of other villages, you and the children play games, have snacks and maybe even receive a writing lesson from the Islamic cleric who runs the town's mosque.

Morocco's poor left behind by development boom

Mohammed Akki left his home in Morocco's Middle Atlas mountains to seek regular work and a better life in the town of Azrou, but he still lives on the margins in a country enjoying an investment boom.

https://www.reuters.com/article/us-morocco-inequality-idUSKBN1Y60YU

The best case scenario for you here:

In traditional Moroccan society, a girl becomes a woman when she has first period and you have yours at 16. However your father agrees to let you pick your own husband and simply informs everyone he can at the town next Friday. For a month, a line of suitors show up to your home and present themselves while asking for your hand in marriage. You'll pick the man you believe you can best get along with and life continues.

The worst case scenario for you here:

This year was a horror show for the region. One of Morocco's regular droughts hit and half your village's crops die. Out of desperation, your father decides to drag you to the town on Friday and essentially sells you out to the highest bidder.

In Islam, the husband must give his wife a dowry which can be in the form of jewelry or money. Your father, needing to feed your mother and 4 siblings, intends to pocket your dowry for himself.

Now you decide to escape this fate and move to:

Meknes, a city in the interior

You heard from this guy on Quora, Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan, that his family is from Meknes and assumed it must be a great place to live. Within 2 days, you're cursing his name.

Meknes and other cities in the interior are living hells. There are no jobs, there is corruption and nepotism everywhere, the government exists and nothing more. It does offer electricity and running water in homes but you lose the social cohesion and sense of community that you had in the village.

The lower class areas are dominated by gangs that resort to any means necessary to make money as there is no other option for the men of the city. You find yourself in a constant state of fear that you might be raped, mugged or kidnapped and watch in horror as events like these happen on a weekly basis.

Morocco: Violent Fights in Meknes Ahead of Sunset Prayer

By Amin Mechaal Meknes - Two men were taken to a local hospital following violent fights a few mom

https://www.moroccoworldnews.com/2015/06/161647/morocco-violent-fights-in-meknes-ahead-of-sunset-prayer

Guns aren't really a thing in Morocco so knives and swords are the preferred weapons

You do manage to find a job but quickly realize another harsh reality for jobs outside the countryside, the expectation of sex from men in power.

A Moroccan Cop's Battle Against Sexual Harassment -- Including Her Own

Observers might think that Morocco is making progress in prosecuting sexual assault and other crimes against women, but real victims often languish while the state trumps up charges against its critics.

https://newlinesmag.com/reportage/a-moroccan-cops-battle-against-sexual-harassment-including-her-own/

#MeToo wave in Morocco over 'sex for grades' scandal

Female Moroccan university students have broken their silence about professors demanding sexual favours in return for good grades, a scandal that has shaken the higher eduction system.

https://www.france24.com/en/live-news/20220123-metoo-wave-in-morocco-over-sex-for-grades-scandal

In the best case scenario:

Women in Meknes do have more freedom as the concept of women having careers and living on their own is acceptable. So you find a job with a tolerant boss and manage to etch out a simple lifestyle.

You have a smartphone, rent a decent 1 bedroom apartment in one of the better neighborhoods and until you can save up for a cheap laptop, you pay $2/hour to use a desktop at a computer café.

In the worst case scenario:

You fall victim to one of the many gangs in Meknes. A fate no woman would ever want. They'll abuse you, torture you and it's unbelievably evil. You might believe that justice may be served like it was for this 17 year old girl.

11 men sentenced for kidnap and gang-rape of Moroccan girl

Khadija Okkarou had accused members of a 'dangerous gang' of kidnapping and torturing her for two months

https://www.theguardian.com/world/2021/sep/22/11-men-sentenced-for-kidnap-and-gang-rape-of-moroccan-girl

You would be wrong.

In the interior, the police chiefs are goons who have ties to the governor or mayor. They're incompetent buffoons who are meant to serve the local elite, not the people. This ruins the police force as they also don't care what happens in the cities they're meant to protect. Your only recourse would be to force their hand, maybe post about your experience in English so Western media picks it up. Then the police chief will certainly do something.

Because there's only one thing King Mohammed VI hates more than bad press. People who are the cause of that bad press.

Fortunately you evade this by fleeing to:

Rabat, a member of the coastal cities

Once you're in Rabat, you're awestruck.

You find well-maintained parks, cafés, trams, buses, and even robot trash cans. To make things better, gangs aren't a thing in the coastal cities because they're where the Moroccan elite and middle class mostly live.

A tram passing through Rabat

Thus Rabat's Police chief and force aren't ineffective buffoons but are actual police officers who do their jobs. Alas , you quickly discover that the situation is still bad as these football chants show.

The coastal cities don't have that much job growth and there's a constant flow of Moroccans from the interior and countryside flocking to them that the situation worsens.

The government tries to stave off social unrest with extremely generous subsidies. The only way to starve to death is if you actively refuse to eat food. As long as you have $1, you can eat for 2-3 days.

Men generally get money by offering to do any job possible from working as a handyman for the middle class, to working as "tour guides" to Western tourists, to begging relatives.

Women do the same things but there's the additional element of prostitution which is a serious issue for Morocco.

Moroccan prostitution market prospers | Al Bawaba

Morocco's prostitution market has shown signs of recovery as prices have gone up.

https://www.albawaba.com/behind-news/moroccan-prostitution-market-prospers

In the best case scenario for you:

If you're one of the lucky few to get a stable job in the coastal cities and Marrakech (an honorary coastal city) then rest easy. The coastal cities truly offer a European standard of living to those with jobs. You'll be able to rent a good quality studio or apartment, you'll be able to frequent cafés and enjoy lattés with friends, go to cinemas and so on.

The coastal cities also have Europe's sense of tolerance to some extent. If you're a lesbian, you'll be surprised to discover a very vibrant lesbian community in the coastal cities with LGBT bars even openly advertising themselves online. If your experiences in Meknes and the countryside made you a feminist then you have feminist collectives to participate in or join.

Feminist group protesting in Morocco

Life in the coastal cities with a job is really good. Some even argue it's better than Europe due to the low prices of goods such as homes and food.

In the worst case scenario:

You don't find a job and find yourself living like the masses of the coastal cities. You'll live in the outskirts of the city in an 1 bedroom apartment you share with 9 other people. Everyday sees you begging for work or money.

Of course there is an additional level to ascend to:

Emigration

I'm of course not going to bring up other issues such as the absolutely atrocious public hospital system, terrible schools, government corruption and so on.

This is a photo of patients in a public hospital in Morocco, there are no rooms and food and clothing must be provided by friends and family. So you and 10 other people will share a small room and you'll have patients just out of surgery, a mother with a newborn, and a teenager with a broken arm sleeping on blankets on the floor.

I hope this best explains what life is like for Moroccans

Related Links

How is it to live in Tangier Morocco?
Why did the two tourist girls get killed in Morocco?
Why do you hate Morocco so much? What happened to you when you were there?
Is there racism in Morocco?
What is the best city to live in Morocco?
Which country is friendlier for tourists: Morocco or Lebanon?
Why are Moroccans fleeing Morocco?
What is life like in Morocco?

Is Morocco the worst country in the world?
How dangerous is Morocco?
How bad is it to live in Morocco?
Is Morocco a dictatorship?
Why is Morocco the most visited country in Africa?
How safe is the street food in Morocco?
Why is Morocco a poor country?

Pourquoi l'Algérie accuse-t-elle le Maroc d'avoir tué 3 chauffeurs routiers avec un drone Turc TB2 ?

Mohammed Grini · Suivre Lieu : Alger, Algériedim.

Selon le communiqué de la présidence algérienne, « plusieurs facteurs désignent les forces d'occupation marocaines au Sahara occidental comme ayant commis, avec un armement sophistiqué, ce lâche assassinat ». Selon le site spécialisé algérien MENADEFENSE - All about defense from Marrakech to Bengladesh, les camionneurs algériens ont été tués à Bir Betlili au Sahara occidental par un drone armé marocain(de fabrication turque, ndlr).

Il a été confirmé que les deux camions détruits par ce drone se trouvaient dans une zone non dangereuse comme le prétend les médias assujettis au Makhzen.

Trois ressortissants algériens ont été tués le 1er novembre dans un bombardement attribué au Maroc. Ils roulaient à bord de camions quand ils ont été bombardés à Bir Lahlou sur la route reliant Nouakchott, en Mauritanie, à Ouargla, dans le Sud de l'Algérie.© TV5MONDE

D'autres sources citées par BBC News Arabic(voir vidéo ci-dessous)confirment que les trois camionneurs Algériens ont été tués par un drone selon des témoins oculaires.

Vidéo des camions attaqués

Lire l'article :

Assassinat de trois Algériens: que cherche le Maroc ?
Tension extrême dans les relations algéro-marocaines après l'annonce par la présidence algérienne ce mercredi 3 novembre de l'assassinat de trois Algériens.
https://www.tsa-algerie.com/assassinat-de-trois-algeriens-que-cherche-le-maroc

Questions similaires

Pourquoi les français préfèrent-ils aller en Tunisie ou au Maroc plutôt qu'en Algérie ?

Pourquoi Abdelmoumen(calife des Almohades) est-il revendiqué comme Marocain par les Marocains, alors qu'il venait d'une tribu localisée en Algérie actuelle ?

L'Algérie dispose-t-elle de drones en cas de conflit avec le Maroc ?

Pourquoi on demande tout le temps à la France de s'excuser envers l'Algérie pour les morts de la Guerre d'Algérie et pas à l'Algérie de s'excuser pour les actes du FLN durant la même période ?

Que livraient les 3 camions Algériens détruits par le Maroc ?
Le Maroc et l'Algérie vont-ils s'engager dans un conflit armé ?
Pourquoi la France a-t-elle perdu la guerre d'Algérie ?
L'Algérie va-t-elle attaquer le Maroc ?

Pourquoi Emmanuel Macron n'appelle-t-il pas l'Algérie et le Maroc à cesser l'escalade militaire ?

Que pensez-vous du spectre d'un conflit armé qui plane entre le Maroc et l'Algérie ? (Selon les médias)

L'Algérie se réarme dans le domaine naval, pensez-vous qu'un jour (sans compter que nous sommes dans l'otan) elle sera capable de nous attaquer ?

Pourquoi les Arabes détestent l'Algérie ?
Si une guerre Algérie Maroc éclatait qui gagnerait ?
Pourquoi le Maroc a-t-il attaqué l'Espagne en 2002 ?

Pourquoi le royaume autocratique marocain s'acharne-t-il contre l'Algérie en déployant une armée du Net mobilisée 24 h/24 ?

What North African country is your favorite?

Anthony M Anderson

I am interested in the countries of the world Updated Mar 10

Morocco

This country is so beautiful and lovely. It's one of my favorite north african countries.

Morocco is definitely the country i love the most. I love it's history especially that of the moors who ruled the iberian peninsula. I love the culture and languages they speak.

One day i will definitely visit this country!

Related Links

How many African countries have you visited and which one is your favorite and why?
Is there racism in African countries towards Africans from other African countries?
Why are people from North African countries white?
Why do North African countries not consider themselves as Africans but as Arabs?
Which African country are you from?
What is your favourite African country?
Are people from North Africa considered black?
Which is your favorite country in Africa and why?
Are North Africans considered white?
What makes your African country unique?

Pourquoi le royaume autocratique marocain s'acharne-t-il contre l'Algérie en déployant une armée du Net mobilisée 24 h/24 ?

Response similaire
Qu'est-ce qui empêche des pays comme l'Algérie et le Maroc à se développer ?

Pierre Jamain

Anciennement Gérant de S.A.R.L. (Labo photo professionnel) à Labo photo professionnel (1970–2000)Mis à jour le 2 ans

Concernant le Maroc et depuis une dizaine d'années le développement industriel est remarquable avec les constructions d'usines automobiles de Renault et Peugeot qui ont été suivis par 200 équipementiers automobile ce qui en tout représente 158000 emplois, le Maroc est devenu le 1er exportateur et producteur d'Afrique et prévoit de produire 1 million de véhicules à l'horizon 2022. L'industrie aéronautique est aussi en forte progression avec Airbus suivi par une centaine d'équipementiers aéronautiques avec environ 17000 emplois dont beaucoup hautement qualifiés.

L’Algérie à cause de sa rente pétrolière et gazière n’a pas beaucoup cherché à attirer les entreprises étrangères et la baisse du prix du pétrole commence à lui poser des problèmes.

Questions similaires

Pourquoi les Algériens disent-ils que les Marocains pillent leur culture et volent leur Histoire ?

Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?

Pourquoi le Maroc est-il constamment présenté comme un pays arrière ?

Pourquoi Abdelmoumen(calife des Almohades) est-il revendiqué comme Marocain par les Marocains, alors qu'il venait d'une tribu localisée en Algérie actuelle ?

L'Algérie est-il un pays sans avenir ?

Que se passerait-il si le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie devenaient un seul pays ?

Pourquoi les Algériens sont-ils si fiers de leur pays mais dans le même temps le fuient en masse ?

Le Maroc est-il un pays émergent ?

Est-il vrai que le Maroc est plutôt un pays de droite et l'Algérie plutôt un pays de gauche ?

Si une guerre Algérie Maroc éclatait qui gagnerait ?

Pourquoi le Maroc implante d'immenses champs de mines antipersonnelle au Sahara occidental sur un territoire qu'il prétend pourtant être le sien, et pourquoi la communauté internationale laisse faire ?

Mohammed Grini · Suivre

Anciennement Vérificateur à Algérie Poste,retraité (1976–2010) ven.

Les mines antipersonnelles sont implantées tout le long du mur(de la honte) érigé par l'armée d'occupation marocaine entre les zones libérées du Sahara Occidental et les zones encore occupées par le Maroc de ce territoire inscrit par l'ONU comme territoire non autonome. Ce mur rappelle celui de Challe et Morice qui avait été construit par l'armée d'occupation française entre l'Algérie et la Tunisie. Ce mur était truffé de mines sur une distance de 450 km. Elles ont fait plusieurs centaines de victimes même après l'indépendance de l'Algérie . C'est une preuve de plus que le Sahara Occidental est bien un territoire occupé par le Maroc.

Il convient de rappeler que, je cite, "Genève a abrité vendredi 18 mars(2005) une journée internationale de protestation sur le thème 30 ans d'occupation marocaine au Sahara Occidenta l : ça suffit ! Le matin, devant l'ONU où se tient la session annuelle des droits de l'homme, des délégations de France, d'Italie, d'Espagne, de Hollande, de Belgique, d'Algérie, du Congo, de Suisse ont dénoncé le caractère illégal de l'occupation du Sahara Occidental et ont appelé l'ONU, l'Union Européenne et tous les Etats a faire pression sur le Maroc qui refuse systématiquement toute proposition de la Communauté internationale pour mettre fin au conflit qui l'oppose au Front Polisario.

Dans l'après-midi, au siège de l'Organisation Météorologique Mondiale, s'est tenue une conférence-débat au cours de laquelle des experts des Etats-Unis d'Amérique, d'Espagne, de Suisse et du Sahara Occidental ont dénoncé le mur de 2700 kilomètres construit par le Maroc dès 1980 pour diviser le Sahara Occidental et tenter d'annexer le territoire. Ils ont dénoncé également les millions de mines qui font du Sahara Occidental un territoire dangereux qui tue et blesse ceux qui s'y aventurent et les nomades qui y vivent. Des vies gâchées, des familles décimées, un cheptel perdu, une catastrophe écologique et une interdiction de libre circulation des personnes telles sont quelques-unes des conséquences de ces mines et de ce mur.

Jean Lamore, expert nord-américain résidant en France, a mis en exergue le scandale du silence qui entoure non seulement ce mur de la honte mais également le conflit du Sahara Occidental et le droit du peuple sahraoui à l'autodétermination. Le mur a le triste record d'être le plus grand du monde, plus long de 300 km que la muraille de Chine.

Elisabeth Reusse-Ducrey, Présidente de l'Appel de Genève contre les mines antipersonnel s'est dite satisfaite des relations établies avec le Front Polisario, disposé à entrer dans le processus proposé par l'Appel de Genève.

Carlos Ruiz Miguel, professeur espagnol de droit constitutionnel à La Coruña a rappelé que, de même que la Cour internationale de Justice a déclaré illégal le mur érigé en Palestine, le mur édifié par le Maroc au Sahara viole lui aussi de nombreux points des dispositions du Droit International.

Enfin, l'historien sahraoui Oubbi Bouchraya, chercheur à la Sorbonne, a détaillé la structure du mur et Boïbat Chej Abdelkhay, Président de la Campagne Sahraouie Anti-mines a révélé le bilan terrifiant de victimes causées par les mines dont est truffé le mur marocain. Un court documentaire particulièrement fort, a montré les ravages des mines antipersonnel à travers des portraits de Sahraouis lourdement handicapés. Après le débat et l'intervention de la délégation italienne, une bousculade a eu lieu autour d'une femme de nationalité suisse et d'origine marocaine, qui a cherché à perturber la Conférence, comme les services marocains le font dans toutes les manifestations de ce genre. La conférence internationale a conclu son travail avec l'approbation d'un programme d'activités de dénonciation du mur marocain au Sahara et des mines qui sèment la désolation et la mort au Sahara Occidental." Source :

https://www.arso.org/GE180305.htm

Ce mur, comme le rapporte l'Express(lien ci-dessous) dépasse la Grande Muraille de Chine, soit 2700 km

La "Grande Muraille" du Sahara, "mur de défense" ou "mur de la honte"?

Un rempart de 2700 kilomètres court à travers le Sahara occidental, que le Maroc et les indépendantistes sahraouis se disputent depuis 1975. Retour sur un conflit ensablé.

https://www.lexpress.fr/actualite/monde/afrique/la-grande-muraille-du-sahara-mur-de-defense-ou-mur-de-la-honte_1934247.html

Mur Challe et Morice

Qu'est-ce que les Marocains ont apporté au monde que d'autres n'ont pas apporté ?/ What have Moroccan people contributed to the world that others haven't?

Jerome Cohen Mon père était de Casablanca, ma mère fait un super tajine!Traducteur
2 ans

Tony Sabour Project Manager

Toutes les nations ont contribué au monde d'une manière ou d'une autre. Parfois directement, parfois indirectement. Collectivement, les Marocains ont apporté des contributions majeures et directes à la civilisation mondiale telle que nous la connaissons, en particulier à l'Europe et à l'Amérique latine.

Lorsque l'Europe était plongée dans l'âge des ténèbres, la conquête de la péninsule ibérique par le Maroc a apporté la science, la connaissance et les arts non seulement à la région mais aussi à l'Europe dans son ensemble. Les contributions à la Renaissance sont trop nombreuses. Je ne peux pas les énumérer toutes ici. Ces contributions comprenaient des innovations dans les domaines suivants : éducation, médecine, mathématiques, architecture, irrigation, physique, musique, artisanat, métallurgie, etc.

En bref, les Marocains ont apporté à l'Europe une civilisation bien supérieure à celle qui existait à l'époque des ténèbres. Cette contribution a permis de jeter les bases de la Renaissance.

Mais ne me croyez pas sur parole. Voici un passage :

"Après la libération islamique de l'Andalousie, l'art et la culture ont fleuri dans cette région. Selon Henry Stephen Lucas, auteur du livre "A Short History of Civilization", les grandes réalisations des musulmans de l'Entorse sont d'une grande importance pour la culture européenne. Après l'ouverture des portes de l'Espagne aux musulmans, les dirigeants musulmans ont mêlé cette région à la culture, à l'enseignement et à la pensée islamiques. Avec l'acceptation des valeurs et des traditions islamiques, la vie des gens a changé. Les villes de Cordoue, Tolède et Grenade sont devenues des centres scientifiques, culturels et artistiques florissants, et l'éducation islamique a été exportée vers les pays chrétiens européens, en particulier la France et l'Allemagne".

Source (source occidentale bien sûr) : Conquête de l'Andalousie, essor de la civilisation islamique en Europe Conquest of Andalusia, rise of Islamic civilization in Europe

Voici une explication des experts :

L'Andalousie, porte dorée de la Renaissance par Muriel Mirack Weissbach.
Andalusia, Golden Renaissance

"L'Islam, pour l'Europe chrétienne médiévale, n'était pas une foi religieuse abstraite. Il a été le moteur d'une culture vivante qui s'est épanouie sur le sol européen, en Al-Andalus, depuis la venue des Arabes en Espagne en 711 jusqu'à leur expulsion sous Ferdinand et Isabelle en 1492. L'Andalousie, en particulier du IXe au XIIIe siècle, a été un phare de l'apprentissage, dans une Europe qui languissait, pour la plupart, dans l'ombre de l'ignorance et du retard économique et social. La culture islamique s'était également épanouie dans les métropoles grouillantes de Bagdad, Damas, Samarkand, Boukhara et Le Caire, mais c'est l'Espagne maure qui a le plus affecté l'Europe".

Alhambra

Mosquée de Cordoue

Le Maroc a également contribué à la culture latino-américaine, en particulier au Mexique. En voici quelques exemples

Marocaine campagnarde du Nord

Vêtements traditionnels mexicains

Maison traditionnelle marocaine

Maison traditionnelle mexicaine

Les Marocains ont également contribué à la défaite des nazis et à la libération de l'Italie du fascisme.

Goumiers marocains

Je pense que les Marocains devraient être fiers de ce que leurs ancêtres ont fait. Mais ils devraient aussi commencer à agir maintenant. Malheureusement, ce n'est pas encore le cas.

Why are Moroccans fleeing Morocco?

Mehdi Aissaoui Actor at Netflix (company) 1y #Ehtesham Farooq

Would be smarter and wiser if you say ‘’in my opinion’’. Otherwise, you’ll have to back up this far-fetched theory of yours with a clear evidence and stacks of literature; Which you seem clearly unable, considering your non-academic datal-ess assumptions.

Reflecting your personal complex about your countrymen upon another nation is a cheap shot.

Let me clear things up for you; It is indeed true that some Moroccans would self identify themselves as Half Spanish or Half French, simply because they’re a Second generation that’s born or raised in such country.

are Moroccans having an inferiority complex? Well, that’s a big claim and shouldn’t be simply analyzed. I’m not a psychologist nor a sociologist to just randomly throw inconclusive assumptions with no expertise. However, in My humble OPINION, I think that the western society is at its prime, which means its culture is praised and imitated all over the globe, it’s a hierarchical dichotomy. the powerful you are, the more appealing your culture get. it’s a socio-historical fact.

People leave their home country mostly to seek a better future. Poverty is the main factor that pushes someone to immigrate, let alone, the fact that Moroccans have always been throughout history nomads. It’s embedded in their Berber culture.

Regarding, the young Moroccan who finds it cool to consider himself an American, is not rocket science and I don’t think it’s inferiority, it’s simply a normal human behavior that most youngsters all over the world are experiencing. The American culture has invaded every house, and nobody can escape its influence.

You’re wearing a suit in your profile picture, isn’t that western? According to your name and features, I’ll bet you’re a Pakistani or middle-eastern.

One last thing, Berbers don't identify themselves as Arabs because they're NOT and they're working hard to preserve of what's left from the arab oppression of their culture and traditions for centuries!

About concentrating how unislamic their country is, that's another stupid observation and I don't have time to explain. Just stop writing about things you don't know anything about! that's dumb.

In short, don't just throw assumptions based on your very limited observations. Back it with constructive facts or Shut up!

Why do Moroccans hate their own country so much?

Kenza Al Alami , lives in Morocco Answered May 21, 2019

Moroccans adore their land and history and traditions.
What Moroccans hate is corruption!

Corrupted responsibles who enhanced the colonial idea of :

1- Useful Morocco,

And useless Morocco: (or the forgotten Morocco)

In your opinion, how will a person from forgotten Morocco feel? When they see that the country has a lot of richness but they profit by none! How will they feel when in the same country, young people their age get the best education, live in the best places, drive the best cars, wear the best clothes, eat the best food?

It is all natural that they would hold grudge against the whole place.

Morocco is a very rich beautiful place, but some Moroccans are not that beautiful!! But then again, there is no beauty in corruption!

Is the King of Morocco corrupt?

Anonymous Answered Apr 18, 2019

That man is one of the most corrupt persons in the world, he keeps all of the money for himself, and his family, heck, his son is one of the worlds richest kids, let alone that. Meanwhile public schools and educations are corrupt, people move to countries like France to study instead. There is NO HEALTHCARE, if you want to call the emergency they will come after 1 hour, and even if you got to the hospital and have a critical condition you will have to wait in the line with 100+ people. People with such conditions are just thrown on the hospital with no special doctors to take care of them. Our average salary is $200. Yeah, you read that correct. The only thing the government cares about and spends money on, is the tourists. They want their country to be seen as the best for the tourists experience, meanwhile poor moroccans are starving in the mountains and don't have a proper housing. Over 50% of our population are illiterate. No freedom of speech. You get harrassed if you are a pretty looking girl walking in the streets. No proper sidewalks. Chaotic roundabouts. School teachers are a joke. People scam. You can get something you are not allowed to have if you have the money. Corruption, corruption, corruption… Morocco exports lots of things such as fruits, phosphate etc. where do as all that money go? Kings family, unnecessary high speed train, tourists resorts, and just a little something for us. Who is responsible for all of this?

Is Morocco a dictatorship?

Anonymous Answered Aug 31, 2018

Originally Answered: Is Morocco a dictatorship ?

The king owns everything in Morocco: the land, sea, the sky and even the moroccans themselves. The king has absolute power, nothing happens in that “country” (farm is a better word) without his order. The institutions, political parties, parliament and whatever the hell that entire mess consists of have only one goal in mind: to protect the king, so that whenever an atrocity inevitably happens, the people will blame one of them instead of the king.

He also made himself the “Amir al momenin” and wastes the people’s money on broadcasting himself doing prayers to discourage the more faithful muslim moroccans from pointing at him.

The deals he makes with other countries only benefit him. He sells fish caught in the sahara to the EU for very cheap, when prices are very high in Morocco. He builds hospitals and schools in african countries when the riffian people are suffering from cancer (a historic franco-moroccan warcrime from the Rif war) and people in the Atlas and even the coastal cities suffering from easily curable diseases if they don’t have the money to pay for private healthcare. But when he himself gets sick he takes 5 planes with him to France and takes a selfie in his comma as if it was an achievement.

He jails people for simple demands (hospitals and jobs, what kind of “country” has people demanding for work?) and saying they were funded by Algeria or by Israel or by North korea or whatever.

The Qaraa is very well known in the moroccan prisons, the prisoners are tortured with wine bottles (remember “Amir al momenin”?).

He spends around 20 days in Morocco every year, the rest he spends overseas shopping and taking selfies and when he does come he either does one of his useless speeches or goes to the north to spend a “vacation” as a sign of “satisfaction”.

He pardons dangerous criminals but keeps political prisoners.

He wants to bring back conscription to send the moroccan youth to Yemen to defend his Saudi masters’ interests.

And the list goes on, this country is truly the worst.

C El Asouab

How bad is it to live in Morocco?

Studied at International University of Rabat1y

Depends, Morocco is heaven for the rich, literally Morocco has everything. But its hell if you're poor, if you're poor you won't be able to afford healthcare or education, you won't be able to find work etc. But for the avarage Moroccan it's okay, Moroccans are quite well of compared to neighboring countries and countries in the region. So for the avarage Moroccan life really isn't bad at all, Moroccans just see that life in Europe is better but they don't see that life in Morocco is so much better than in other countries.

Related Links

Why did the two tourist girls get killed in Morocco?
What does the world think about Morocco/Moroccans?
What is life like in Morocco?
Is the King of Morocco corrupt?
What is wrong with Morocco?
Is there racism in Morocco?
Is Morocco the worst country in the world?
How dangerous is Morocco?
Why is Morocco a poor country?
Is Morocco a dictatorship?

Why has Morocco not annexed all of Western Sahara in so many years? Why leave a potential future trouble spot?

Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan

Lived in Meknès, Morocco (1996–0) 1y

Because it’s not a trouble spot and there’s no need to.
The Western Sahara is quite literally just a patch of scorching hot desert with very few resources and no arable land. So during the 1980s, in order to end the war, it was decided by the Moroccan Army to divide the Western Sahara into two regions: Useful Sahara (where people actually lived and which had resources that made life bearable) and Useless Sahara (where nobody lived and the only resource was sand. Lots and lots of sand.).

The Useful Sahara was taken in a series of offensives and protected by the construction of a massive wall known as the Moroccan Wall.

As for the Useless Sahara, nobody wants it. Not even the Polisario

That's why most of the Sahrawis loyal to the Polisario live in Southwestern Algeria and why all of the Polisario's troops are in Algeria as well.

The "Useless Sahara" is borderline uninhabitable with no water, no arable land, nothing.

Will Morocco ever retake the region?

Sure, maybe. But there's no need to when the Polisario is falling apart slowly.

More Polisario fighters defect to Morocco

Related Answer

Why has Morocco not annexed all of Western Sahara in so many years? Why leave a potential future trouble spot?

Rachid Haroune, Moroccan Answered Aug 3, 2020

We should clarify first that the sand wall was an efficient and decisive strategy that was followed by Morocco. The Sand wall disrupted the military capabilities of Polisario as the number of attacks against Moroccan forces decreased significantly. It also imposed on Polisario to abandon the military option and to enter into direct negotiation with Morocco.

The sand wall plays a protective role as it protects Moroccan forces and civilians from the attacks of Polisario at the same time it plays a stabilizing role since Polisario accepts the cease-fire process.

The main strategic reasons for Morocco to leave part of the territory out of its direct control (behind the wall) is to avoid being confronted directly with the Algerian army and to avoid chasing Polisario guerillas into Algerian or Mauritanian territory. Besides, the wall was built in an uninhabited territory. To reach the wall from Tindouf, Polisario troops must drive three hours in a harsh area as the high sand dunes hinder their movements. Ironically , Polisario and Algeria called that uninhabited area as the liberated land.

Polisario camps exist in Tindouf, Algeria, where thousands of civilians live in a miserable condition; they are not allowed to enter Morocco since Polisari troops, supported by Algerian army, do not hesitate to shoot those they think of escaping . The situation is getting worse and worse for people there who are deprived of all necessities of a decent life. To be precise, the camps are a huge prison.

Tindouf

Now, imagine that the leaders(Polisario) who govern and run this area above (Tindouf and the liberated land)for more than forty years want to liberate these colonized cities below!

Laayoune

Dakh

Related Answer
Why doesn't the United States recognize Western Sahara?

Maciej Czyż Updated Nov 5

Initially West Sahara was divided (1975) between Morocco and Mauritania. But POLISARIO, which fought for independance of it (with support of Algeria and others) actually managed to defeat Mauritania (1979).

Morocco was eventually successful in the war against POLISARIO, mostly thanks to the (gradual, 1981–7) building of berm, which is a great sand wall, but with mines, warning system, radars etc.

Now for your question: part of (mostly useless) desert was left in POLISARIO's hands, and that is because, if berm was built just on the border, POLISARIO fighters trying to infiltrate it or destroy it could operate from behind the border, and retreat to Mauritania, while Moroccans wouldn't be able to follow them in Mauritania's territory.

So the reason is perfectly logical and practical from military and political point of view.

John Cate, Freelance Public Relations Specialist, Bethel, NC Answered Feb 17, 2019 · Upvoted by

Morgan Forrester , lives in The United States of America (1900-present) and Murugan Paramasivam (முருகன் பரமசிவம்), lives in The United States of America (2003-present)

Because Morocco claims it's part of their national territory, and Morocco is a very, very old ally of the United States—it was the first country in the world to recognize the US flag at its ports, on 20 December 1777, and one of the first to sign a formal treaty with the USA, in 1786. In fact, the treaty of friendship between the USA and Morocco is the oldest treaty involving the USA which is still in force, nearly 233 years later.

Unless Morocco agrees to let Western Sahara go, and I don't see that happening, the United States will probably continue to recognize it as part of Morocco.

Is Morocco planning to capture the remaining of Western Sahara?

Juba Zelalsan , Knows Algerian history from prehistoric time to present
Answered May 17, 2020

No, because they can't and there are multiple reasons:

Moroccans infested the entire region with landmines and with moving sands these mines are now all over the place and it will take a lot of effort for mine clearing.

Secondly, Polisario troops whom already started demining some parts of this land will for sure counter attack.

Third, Algeria has changed its constitution and will now intervene outside of its borders, and Chengriha who is now chief of the Defence Staff is a fervent advocate of the independence of Western Sahara and has qualified Morocco as an ennemy. He moreover fought against them in 1963.

If Morocco attacks, it will be crushed by the Algerian army which is far superior in everything (4 times the budget, better naval capabilities, better aerial defense, has the budget and natural reserves to continue a war for a long time, strategic depth, and real terrain experience fighting terrorists since early 1990) .

Finally, I don't think that the king of Morocco is dumb enough to put his people into extreme danger unlike Gaddafi or other leaders in the region, he is a monarch and has to think for the future of the monarchy.

What do you think about the Western Sahara conflict?

::What do you think about the Western Sahara conflict?:: , Cashier at Super-Duper Mart Answered Oct 13, 2017

Another frozen conflict.

This one doesn't show signs of thawing anytime soon: the Algerian-Moroccan border was closed in 1994 and it has remained that way since then.

And Polisario has absolutely no chance of recovering the Western Sahara by itself. As despite the rhetoric, Algiers is not going to war with Rabat in their behalf.

On the other hand, Rabat is happy as things stand, so why bother to try and trigger another shooting war with Algiers just to squash the Polisario?

It would need something really extraordinary to happen for this situation to change.

Related Links

Is Morocco planning to capture the remaining of Western Sahara?
Is Western Sahara a country or a part of Morocco?
Why won't Morocco give up Western Sahara?
Does Morocco treat Western Sahara badly?
Why Morocco doesn't invade the part of Western Sahara controlled by the Polisario front?
Why does Algeria oppose Moroccan rule over Western Sahara?

Why did Morocco do the Green March in Western Sahara even though Morocco was an underdeveloped country in 1975?

Why does Morocco have border disputes with almost every neighbouring countries (Algeria, Spain and Western Sahara)?

Which side is right on the issue of the Western Sahara?
What is the problem between Morocco and Algeria regarding Western Sahara?
Why didn't Morocco conquer the entire Western Sahara?
Why does Morocco want to control Western Sahara?
Who should the Western Sahara belong to, Morocco or the independence demanding Sahrawi?
Is Western Sahara □□ a real country or is it just a rebel of Morocco □□?
Why doesn’t the United States recognize Western Sahara?

Which ruler in history has the most descendants today?

Cyrke Stuffl · Follow Former Currently a Retired Boomer at Home at Hospitals (1979–2009) Mon

Moroccan Sultan Mulay of Morocco has given birth to more than a thousand children, according to contemporary reports, with 888 children in the Guinness Book of Records, the largest verified offspring in history. Austrian scientists have now used computer simulations to find out how this was possible.
It was calculated

They concluded that the Sultan, also known as Bloodthirsty, had to have sex every day for 32 years in order to have so many children.

Mulay Ishmail ruled from 1672 to 1727, being the first significant sultan of the Moroccan Alavitian dynasty still in power today. He derived himself from the Prophet Muhammad. He was the longest reigning sultan in Moroccan history, at the end of his reign the country was under the control of an army of more than 150,000 men. He was notoriously cruel, his reign began with the setting of four hundred slaughtered human heads - the heads of his enemies - in the city of Fez, and in the 55 years of his reign he killed more than 30,000 people outside the battlefields.

At that time, Dominique Busnot, a French diplomat who regularly visited Morocco, wrote that by 1704 the sultan had 1,171 children from four wives and 500 concubines. Ishmail was 57 years old and ruled for 32 years.

Conservative study

Researchers have questioned the veracity of the figure, saying women are only fertile at a certain time of the month and sperm do not usually fertilize an egg, and even women are often plagued by infertility.

To find out, the researchers at the University of Vienna developed a computer simulation to find out how many times a sultan had to have sex in order to have 1,171 children in 32 years. They found that he could set up this record.

“We were as conservative in our calculations as we could be, and yet Mulai was able to give birth to so many offspring,” said Elisabeth Oberzaucher, a university anthropologist and author of a study in the scientific journal PLOS ONE on the Live Science science news portal.

It can be with a smaller trio

The simulation was based on the diversity of pregnancy models. One such series of simulations assumed that the menstrual cycle of women was inconsistent, while the other assumed that it was consistent. They took into account the quality of Ismail’s sperm in fertilizing female eggs as she got older, and also how often women seem sexually attractive when they are most fertile during the menstrual cycle.

According to the results of the simulation, Ismail had to have sex an average of 0.83-1.43 times a day to have 1,171 offspring.

In fact, it turned out it didn't take a huge harem of four wives and 500 beds to have so many children. According to the researchers, a harem of 65-110 people was enough.

Related Links

Where are the descendants of Mughals today?
Who was the most cunning, intelligent and insidious ruler in the history of the world?
Who are the present descendants of the Merovingian Dynasty?
Who are the descendants of the Scythians today?
Which ruler in history was most brutal to his own people?
Who was the most ruthless female ruler throughout history?

Who are some descendants of famous historical figures, and have they chosen to stay in the limelight or keep their lives private?

Where are the descendants of Hitler today?
Who is the most dominant ruler in history?
Who has been the longest serving ruler in the history of mankind?

Are Pharaoh's descendants still present today?

Jean-Marie Valheur , political aficionado & former journalist

Answered Feb 22, 2021 · Upvoted by Li Song, Docter Mathematics & History, Colleges and Universities (2020)

We cannot trace them now, but surely some of the Pharaohs have descendants alive today, probably numerous in number. King Tut famously died young, his only children never surviving past childhood. By contrast, Ramesses II left a hundred children behind, fifty sons and fifty daughters. He absolutely is the ancestor of most of modern Egypt.

The Pharaohs ruled over Egypt for thousands upon thousands of years, they married the daughters of many royal houses in Africa, the Middle East and the Levant, as well as sending some of their sons out there. They conquered. They fought. They forever altered the history of the world. It was during their rule, that the first ever library was founded. Wisdom of the ages, stored forever. The first monotheistic religion ever invented…

And yes. They got around.

One day you'd be up and about, teaching the Assyrians or the Greeks or the Nubians who's boss… then you'd come home from a long campaign, still drenched in sweat from battle, and you'd retreat to your royal bedchambers to show your wife who's daddy…

You're a Pharaoh, after all! King of Kings! Not just any other ruler, no, yours is a dynasty as old as time itself. You're a living God. Hell, by the time Ramesses came around, he didn't even feel the need to build piramids anymore to remind people of his glory, just some statues and the finest ladies known to man were enough for the original Egyptian playboy. You'd come out of your royal chambers, strutting around with that Old Testament level BDE… knowing, in every pore, every nook and cranny of your body, that you're the man.

No seriously, people, how can you be this fine and not be the ancestor of… everyone? Genghis had to travel half the known world, rape and pillage his way through all the nations he came across just to spread his seed far and wide. The Pharaoh rode his chariot around a little, but had little need for raping and pillaging… one look and… boom! Pregnant.

Yes, there are still descendants of the Pharaohs alive today. Of course there are. You run into any random Egyptian person, really any Middle-Easterner, North-African, Sicilian, Italian, hell, anyone, anywhere, odds are they have a lil' Ramesses II in them.

Related Links

Who are the present descendants of the Merovingian Dynasty?
Who are the descendants of the Scythians today?
Which ruler in history was most brutal to his own people?
Who was the most ruthless female ruler throughout history?

Who are some descendants of famous historical figures, and have they chosen to stay in the limelight or keep their lives private?

Where are the descendants of Hitler today?
Who is the most dominant ruler in history?
Who has been the longest serving ruler in the history of mankind?
Pourquoi les Arabes préfèrent migrer vers les pays occidentaux plutôt que les pays arabes riches?

Chris Soinneh · Suivre A étudié à Autodidacte 8 mo

Très simple si l'on considère que les Arabes sont les populations du Moyen Orient et du Maghreb (en faisant un raccourci audacieux)

Dans la plupart des cas, ces populations ont été colonisées par les pays occidentaux.

Les liens avec ces pays occidentaux sont donc très anciens, beaucoup d'entre eux et leurs parents ont même travaillé dans ces pays et certains de leurs parents et arrières grands parents, se sont battus et sont même morts pour la liberté de ces pays pendant la première et la deuxième guerre mondiale.

Sans compter les nombreux liens familiaux construit avec ces pays au cour du temps.

Alors qu'ils n'ont aucun lien d'aucunes sortent, avec les riches pays arabes qui sont souvent des États de création récente, assimilables à des principautés ou à des centres financiers où les grandes entreprises et les lobby de l'industrie se sont installés durablement pour faire fructifier leur profit.

Sans oublier les intérêts géopolitiques et économiques des grandes puissances à l'égard de ces États.

Mais ceci est une autre histoire.

Questions similaires

Pourquoi beaucoup d'Arabes nés en France se sentent-ils plus arabes que français ?
Qu'est-ce que les Arabes ont apporté au monde ?
Pourquoi les Arabes détestent l'Algérie ?
Que se passerait-il si tous les pays arabes s'unissaient contre Israël et les USA ?
Pourquoi les Maghrébins sont-ils également appelés des Arabes ?
Pourquoi les pays arabes sont-ils arriérés sur beaucoup de plans ?
Pourquoi les pays arabes détestent-ils Israël ?
Pourquoi les Arabes ne peuvent-ils pas vaincre Israël ?
Les Maghrébins sont-ils des Arabes ?
Quel pays arabe est le plus occidental ?

Comment faire pour voyager au Maroc avec un minimum de problèmes en tant que couple d'hommes homosexuels ?

Au Maroc, il est bien plus facile de prendre une chambre à deux ou plus pour des hommes que pour un homme et une femme si ces derniers ne sont pas mariés (obligation de présenter l'acte de mariage, au moins pour les Marocains). C'est dire qu'au Maroc, on ne soupçonne pas que des hommes soient homos jusqu'à ce que ces derniers l'affichent.

La loi pénale interdit toute relation sexuelle entre personnes du même sexe, mais elle n'interdit pas l'amour et le vivre ensemble, j'ai à maintes reprises pris une seule chambre à lits séparés avec des amis, et jamais personne n'a émis de réserves ou de soupçons, et personne n'a frappé à notre porte pour vérifier s'il se passait quelque chose de douteux.

Au Maroc, tu n'as qu'à respecter le cadre public, les gens ont d'autres chats à fouetter que d'enquêter sur tes préférences sexuelles.

Questions similaires

Est-ce vrai que Macron est bisexuel ? Y a t-il des sources ?
Est-il vrai que le roi du Maroc est homosexuel ?

Pourquoi le roi du Maroc est-il relativement faible par rapport aux autres monarques des pays arabes ?

Maroc : que pensent les citoyens marocains ordinaires du roi du Maroc ?
Quel était le rôle exact du "porte-coton" à la cour du Roi ?

Les pays occidentaux cesseront-ils de soutenir le régime d'Alger suite aux lourdes et graves accusations soulevées par le président du MAK (Mouvement pour l'Autonomie de la Kabylie) lors de sa conférence de presse d'aujourd'hui ?

Y avait-il des rois, des reines ou des empereurs homosexuels dans l'histoire ?

Que pensez vous de la polémique "Naoufal Moussa" ou "Sofia Taloni" au Maroc qui a généré une vague d'humiliations homophobes dans tout le pays ?

Comment faire pour voyager au Maroc avec un minimum de problèmes en tant que couple d'hommes homosexuels ?

La Turquie vient-elle de battre la France au Mali avec la chute d'Ibrahim Boubacar Keïta ?

News Nigeria
The Ambitious Kunle has arrived Africa!!!

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 21h

Kunle Adeyanju has arrived in Africa, more specifically in Casablanca, Morocco

Les Algériens, Marocains et Tunisiens parlent-ils un arabe assez proche pour se comprendre d'un pays à l'autre ?

Lynne H., Connaissance : Arabe Mis à jour le 21 déc.

Réponse courte: oui. Réponse longue: Pas tout à fait.

Déjà, comme vous pouvez vous l'imaginer, les frontières des pays telles qu'elles sont définies aujourd'hui ne datent pas d'il y a si longtemps que ça. L'Afrique est l'un des continents où on se rend vite compte que le découpage des territoires s'est fait un peu au hasard, à la règle, pendant l'ère coloniale (notamment celle des empires).

Aujourd'hui, l'Afrique du Nord c'est ça (Mauritanie comprise dans tout ce qui est Union du Maghreb Arabe etc.)

Mais aux environs de 1670 c'était ça:

Et vers 1850 c'était ça:

Avec une longue histoire mélangeant phéniciens, carthaginois, romains, berbères, ottomans, arabes, espagnols, français…. les pays d'Afrique du nord ne se sont pas construit un mais plusieurs dialectes qui ont évolués à travers le temps et l'espace.

On a donc des accents divers, une manière de conjuguer légèrement différente et un vocabulaire plus ou moins imprégné d'une langue étrangère ou d'une autre selon les régions et les villes, au sein d'un même pays.

Je me rends compte que tout ça reste assez vague, je vous donne donc un exemple: aujourd'hui, un algérien vivant au nord-ouest de son pays aura beaucoup plus de facilité à comprendre un tunisien qu'un autre algérien vivant au sud-est (Ça n'empêche pas certains de mes amis algériens de se moquer gentiment de notre accent qu'ils trouvent un peu trop chantonnant à leur goût).

De même, étant née et ayant vécu à Tunis, j'ai été surprise d'entendre pour la première fois une conjugaison légèrement différente de la part de quelqu'un ayant grandit dans le Sahel tunisien. (Ex: "ena" qui veut dire "moi" est utilisé sans distinction pour les hommes et pour les femmes dans la partie nord de la Tunisie. À partir du Sahel tunisien, vous entendrez une différence entre "ena" et "eni" selon le genre de la personne).

Cette même conjugaison est plus commune dans certains pays voisins, comme la Libye: Explaining the particle "rahu" (Used in North African (Maghrebi) Arabic : ici on nous explique que dans beaucoup de pays on n'utilise plus la forme au féminin de la particule "rahu" , alors qu'en Tunisie, si.

Pour compliquer un peu les choses, puisque les accents, la conjugaison et le vocabulaire peuvent différer 1) au sein d'un même pays et 2) d'un pays à un autre, la suite logique est que 3)plus on s'éloigne géographiquement et moins on a de liens historiques, moins on se comprend.
Ainsi, lors de ma dernière visite au Maroc, je n'ai, pour ainsi dire, compris qu'un mot sur 10 à chaque fois.

Notre guide sur place a même dit avoir "appris le tunisien" comme langue à part entière pour pouvoir communiquer avec les touristes.

Au final: est-ce qu'on se comprend? De manière générale oui. Mais il est toujours utile d'apprendre ici et là quelques variations pour ne pas se retrouver face à une tête qui veut juste dire "echmaaneha" ("qu'est-ce que ça veut dire?").
De plus, les séries tv, musiques, réseaux sociaux et autres ont permis un plus large partage de nos dialectes entre nous.

Edit: vu le nombre de commentaires qui me tombent dessus pour me demander de changer de carte ("Hérésie! Le Sahara occidental est un territoire du Maroc!") ou qui tiennent à dire "nous ne sommes pas arabes!" alors que je n'ai fait mention nulle part d'identité ethniques, je désactive les commentaires. Vos combats politico-ethno-religieux hors-sujet, vous pouvez les inclure dans vos propres posts si ça vous chante. La thématique actuelle est linguistique.

Quels sont les pays que les Marocains détestent le plus ?

Les Algériens, Marocains et Tunisiens parlent-ils un arabe assez proche pour se comprendre d'un pays à l'autre ?

Lynne H., Connaissance : Arabe Mis à jour le 21 déc.

Réponse courte: oui. Réponse longue: Pas tout à fait.

Déjà, comme vous pouvez vous l'imaginer, les frontières des pays telles qu'elles sont définies aujourd'hui ne datent pas d'il y a si longtemps que ça. L'Afrique est l'un des continents où on se rend vite compte que le découpage des territoires s'est fait un peu au hasard, à la règle, pendant l'ère coloniale (notamment celle des empires).

Aujourd'hui, l'Afrique du Nord c'est ça (Mauritanie comprise dans tout ce qui est Union du Maghreb Arabe etc.)

Mais aux environs de 1670 c'était ça:

Et vers 1850 c'était ça:

Avec une longue histoire mélangeant phéniciens, carthaginois, romains, berbères, ottomans, arabes, espagnols, français…. les pays d'Afrique du nord ne se sont pas construit un mais plusieurs dialectes qui ont évolués à travers le temps et l'espace.

On a donc des accents divers, une manière de conjuguer légèrement différente et un vocabulaire plus ou moins imprégné d'une langue étrangère ou d'une autre selon les régions et les villes, au sein d'un même pays.

Je me rends compte que tout ça reste assez vague, je vous donne donc un exemple: aujourd'hui, un algérien vivant au nord-ouest de son pays aura beaucoup plus de facilité à comprendre un tunisien qu'un autre algérien vivant au sud-est (Ça n'empêche pas certains de mes amis algériens de se moquer gentiment de notre accent qu'ils trouvent un peu trop chantonnant à leur goût).

De même, étant née et ayant vécu à Tunis, j'ai été surprise d'entendre pour la première fois une conjugaison légèrement différente de la part de quelqu'un ayant grandit dans le Sahel tunisien. (Ex: "ena" qui veut dire "moi" est utilisé sans distinction pour les hommes et pour les femmes dans la partie nord de la Tunisie. À partir du Sahel tunisien, vous entendrez une différence entre "ena" et "eni" selon le genre de la personne).

Cette même conjugaison est plus commune dans certains pays voisins, comme la Libye: Explaining the particle "rahu" (Used in North African (Maghrebi) Arabic : ici on nous explique que dans beaucoup de pays on n'utilise plus la forme au féminin de la particule "rahu" , alors qu'en Tunisie, si.

Pour compliquer un peu les choses, puisque les accents, la conjugaison et le vocabulaire peuvent différer 1) au sein d'un même pays et 2) d'un pays à un autre, la suite logique est que 3)plus on s'éloigne géographiquement et moins on a de liens historiques, moins on se comprend.

Ainsi, lors de ma dernière visite au Maroc, je n'ai, pour ainsi dire, compris qu'un mot sur 10 à chaque fois.

Notre guide sur place a même dit avoir "appris le tunisien" comme langue à part entière pour pouvoir communiquer avec les touristes.

Au final: est-ce qu'on se comprend? De manière générale oui. Mais il est toujours utile d'apprendre ici et là quelques variations pour ne pas se retrouver face à une tête qui veut juste dire "echmaaneha" ("qu'est-ce que ça veut dire?").

De plus, les séries tv, musiques, réseaux sociaux et autres ont permis un plus large partage de nos dialectes entre nous.

Edit: vu le nombre de commentaires qui me tombent dessus pour me demander de changer de carte ("Hérésie! Le Sahara occidental est un territoire du Maroc!") ou qui tiennent à dire "nous ne sommes pas arabes!" alors que je n'ai fait mention nulle part d'identité ethniques, je désactive les commentaires. Vos combats politico-ethno-religieux hors-sujet, vous pouvez les inclure dans vos propres posts si ça vous chante. La thématique actuelle est linguistique.

Response similaire
Les maghrébins sont-ils stigmatisés en France ? Si oui, pourquoi ?

Gérard Briais, Flâneur Parisien Mis à jour le 8 juil. 2018 · Vote positif par Aurélie Chan , précédents lieux : France (1983 - 2002)

Soyons honnêtes, tous les maghrébins ne sont pas bien traités.

La première raison est incontestablement la mise en avant de faits divers incriminant des maghrébins. Allez demander aux résidents chinois d'Aubervilliers ce qu'ils en pensent. L'amalgame est vite fait entre de petites racailles et une communauté entière.

La deuxième raison incombe à l'économie des cités. C'est un vaste sujet, surtout pour un ancien urbaniste comme moi et la cohésion sociale (ou son manque) a souvent pour cause première le manque de moyens des municipalités qui se sont vues assigner la lourde tâche d'accueillir des masses importantes de populations immigrées.

La troisième raison est l'instrumentalisation d'un soi-disant racisme profond des français par certains partis et associations qui déversent de l'huile sur le feu et montent en épingle des incidents épars présentés comme significatifs. Cela fait son effet et peut aboutir à augmenter un certain ressentiment déjà latent des maghrébins (pour faits de colonialisme essentiellement) à l'encontre des frankaouis et engendrer une certaine animosité voire pire. Chaque action engendrant, en bonne cybernétique, une contre réaction, il est facile pour d'habiles agitateurs de monter les uns contre les autres…

Questions similaires

Pourquoi les femmes maghrébines rejettent les hommes maghrébins ?

Pourquoi elles préfèrent se métisser, et pourquoi il est de plus en plus rare de voir des couples maghrébins ?

Les maghrébins sont-ils stigmatisés en France ? Si oui, pourquoi ?

Pourquoi les Français regardent les Marocains avec mépris ?

En tant que français de « souche » , avez-vous des amis maghrébines ou musulmans, comment vivent ils les polémiques ? Est-ce qu’ils sont réellement comme les médias les décrivent ?

Pourquoi les hommes maghrébins sont-ils durs avec les maghrébines ?

Pourquoi les Marocains ne supportent pas les Algériens, qui ont pourtant une culture similaire ?

Pourquoi les Arabes détestent l'Algérie ?
Pourquoi beaucoup de Françaises aiment les rebeux et surtout les marocains ? Quels sont les pays que les Marocains détestent le plus ?

Ma fille sera-t-elle considérée comme Maghrébine ou comme Française en France en sachant qu'elle y est née et qu'elle a un prénom français et un nom maghrébin ?

Quelles sont les différences de mentalité entre les trois pays frères du Maghreb Maroc, Algérie et Tunisie ? Quels faits historiques expliquent ces différences ?

Mohammed Grini · Follow Former Vérificateur à Algérie Poste, retraité (1976–2010) sam.

L'Algérien, de par son histoire de lutte contre les envahisseurs(Romains, Vandales, Espagnols, Français), a acquis une mentalité d'homme libre. Idem pour les Tunisiens.

Quant aux Marocains, leur statut n'a pas changé depuis des lustres. Ils ont toujours été considérés comme des sujets dociles par leurs différents rois.

Questions similaires

Pourquoi les français préfèrent-ils aller en Tunisie ou au Maroc plutôt qu’en Algérie ?

Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?

Pourquoi les Algériens sont-ils si fiers de leur pays mais dans le même temps le fuient en masse ?

Quelles différences entre la colonisation en Algérie et en Tunisie ? L'occupation en Tunisie a duré plus d'un siècle mais pourtant on entend pas parlé de traumatisme tunisien pourquoi ?

Pourquoi Abdelmoumen(calife des Almohades) est-il revendiqué comme Marocain par les Marocains, alors qu'il venait d'une tribu localisée en Algérie actuelle ?

Pourquoi parle-t-on presque toujours de la relation France/Algérie et si peu de la colonisation française en Tunisie et au Maroc ?

En tant que non-arabe, quelle partie du monde arabe aimez-vous le mieux, le Maghreb (Algérie, Tunisie, Maroc), le Levant (Égypte, Syrie, Liban, Irak) ou la péninsule arabique (KSA, Émirats arabes unis, Qatar), et pourquoi ?

Quelle est la différence de culture entre l'Algérie et la Tunisie ?

Que pensent l'Algérie, le Maroc, la Tunisie, la Turquie, le Bangladesh, et les autres pays musulmans de la victoire des Talibans en Afghanistan ?

Qu'est-ce qui empêche des pays comme l'Algérie et le Maroc à se développer ?

News Nigeria
35% of Morocco's □□ workforce is employed in the agricultural sector. Morocco is also the third most food secured country in Africa.

Posted by Aniekpeno Ekong 5h

Only about 19% of the country's land is farmable. This is due to droughts which occur about once every three years, which forced Morocco to develop a new irrigation system that provides reliable water source to over 2.5 million acres, increasing output.

Quelle est la meilleure ville au Maroc ?

Zaidi Amine Connaissances : Anglais1 an

Maroc: 5 meilleurs endroits et villes à visiter au Maroc en 2020

Pour plus d'informations sur le Maroc et les meilleurs endroits à visiter: cliquer içi

Le Maroc est l'un des pays les plus visité au monde. Pas facile pour ceux qui veulent choisir les meilleurs endroits à visiter absolument. C'est la raison pour laquelle de nombreux internautes se fient aux recommandations des visiteurs d'un pays publiées sur TripAdvisor.

Le célèbre site américain qui propose des avis et des conseils sur les destinations du monde entier est également connu pour ses classements par thème, ville ou pays. Pour ce faire, Tripadvisor s'appuie sur un indice de popularité qui prend en compte le volume d'avis reçus, la fraîcheur des avis ainsi que leur qualité.

5 endroits et villes à visiter au Maroc en 2020:

1. Marrakech

Située au pied des montagnes de l'Atlas, la ville impériale de Marrakech est bruyante, atmosphérique et chargée d'histoire. Il y a beaucoup à voir et à faire, de la dégustation de la cuisine de rue traditionnelle marocaine au marché nocturne de Djemma el Fna, pour acheter des épices et des bijoux artisanaux dans les souks animés de la médina. Des attractions telles que les tombeaux saadiens et le palais El Badi offrent un aperçu de la riche histoire de la ville.

2. Chefchaouen

Nichée au milieu des pics pittoresques des montagnes du Rif, Chefchaouen est une petite ville dans un grand paysage.

C'est un centre de créativité, attirant peintres et photographes avec sa lumière claire, ses maisons peintes d'un bleu serein (et sa réputation de capitale du cannabis au Maroc). Explorez l'artisanat local dans les boutiques pittoresques de la médina, prenez un verre au milieu de l'architecture de la place Uta el-Hammam ou dégustez une cuisine marocaine raffinée dans un restaurant de riad.

3. Fès

La ville médiévale de Fès a été la capitale du Maroc pendant plus de 400 ans et est toujours un important centre religieux et culturel.

La vieille partie fortifiée de la ville, connue sous le nom de Fès el-Bali, a été fondée au 9ème siècle et est reconnue par l'UNESCO pour l'importance historique de son architecture de la dynastie Idrisid. Il est préférable de l'explorer à pied et comprend la mosquée Al Quaraouiyine et son université associée, qui est la plus ancienne du monde.

4. Tanger

Tanger est la porte d'entrée vers l'Afrique pour ceux qui voyagent par mer depuis le sud de l'Europe.

Bien que la ville n’ait pas tout à fait le charme qu’elle avait dans les années 40 et 50, quand on pouvait côtoyer Truman Capote et Tennessee Williams, il y a encore beaucoup à voir. Les points forts incluent la médina, le musée de la Kasbah et la nouvelle ville d’inspiration française. Le port offre également des vues intéressantes sur le détroit de Gibraltar et la lointaine Espagne, tandis qu’un court trajet en voiture du centre-ville révèle de jolies plages

Questions similaires

Quels sont les faits sur le Maroc auxquels les étrangers ne croient pas avant d'arriver au Maroc ?
Que ne doit-on absolument pas faire au Maroc ?
Qu'est-ce qu'on doit jamais faire si je visite le Maroc ?
Le Maroc est-il un pays émergent ?
Aimez-vous le Maroc ?
Pourquoi les Marocains fuient-ils le Maroc ?
L'Espagne ressemble-t-elle plus à la France ou au Maroc ?
Y a-t-il du racisme au Maroc ?
Comment sont perçus les Français au Maroc ?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il constamment présenté comme un pays arrière ?

Pourquoi les Marocains ne supportent pas les Algériens, qui ont pourtant une culture similaire ?

Zayneb Vanessa

TPN et TPA19 janv.

C'est une blague, c'est quoi cette question de victime, Mon père est marocain et il m'a jamais mal parlé des algériens, il m'a toujours dit ce sont nos frères etc, mais par contre j'ai déjà vu maintes fois des algériens autour d un repas critiquer les marocains à mort, plusieurs fois, je suis dans une ville où ya énormément d'Algériens et quand je suis invitée quelques part et je précise pas que je suis Marocaine alors la ça tayeh à fond mon pays! (Ça je l'ai jamais vu chez les marocains par contre) et quand je dit que je suis Marocaine d'un coup tout le monde "plaisante".

Moi ta question je la formulerais plutôt autrement: pourquoi les algériens détestent autant les marocains ?!

Je dit ce que j'ai vu et le racisme que j'ai subi des innombrables fois de la part d'algeriens alors que moi mon père m'a élevé en sorte à ce que je respecte et je vois les algériens comme des frères et pas comme des ennemis!

Que pensez-vous des Marocains ?

Anonyme Mis à jour le 1 an En tant que garçon d'origine marocaine, moi même je trouve que les marocains soient trop têtus et quelque fois au lieu de s'aider à l'étranger, en tant que communauté étrangère dans un autre pays, ils compètent entre eux et ils sont méchants entre eux.

Ici en Italie, dans un petit village de 12000 ou 13000 habitants où j'habitais, la majorité des familles marocaines avaient au moins un membre qui était engagé à dealer de la "shit", et étaient tous dans les logements sociaux, donc ils économisaient beaucoup parce que ils gagnaient 900 euros par jour en en payant 100 par mois pour le loyer très bas.

Quand ma famille a fait, beaucoup après, demande de logement d'émergence pour le fait que nous n'étions plus capables de payer le loyer, on a montré tous les papiers qui étaient épreuve du fait qu'on en avait besoin, mais compte tenu de la non-trasparence de la commune de cette village déja à priori, et compte tenu qu'une marocaine dealeuse qui donnait un petit peu de "merchandise" aux travailleurs de cette commune a conseillé eux de ne pas donner aucun logement d'émergence, ils nous ont dit, après 7 mois, que la maison était pour une autre famille marocaine informé par cette dealeuse, ils nous ont assigné en suite une autre maison dans une fractione de cette commune lointaine 7 km de la municipalité principale, en sachant que nous n'avions une voiture à l'époque, et après cela nous avons demeuré dans un autre village, en sortant défaits, comme de tous les controversies et situations.

Voilà pourquoi je ne me sens pas à l'aise quand je suis avec les marocains, j'ai vraiment du mal à aimer les marocains en tant que marocain moi-même. Bien sûr que ça dépend de l'individu, mais de façon générale ce n'est qu'une competition entre les marocains à l'étranger, et même le peu de fois que j'ai été au Maroc, on a toujours eu des problèmes. Et puis les marocains ne sont pas capables de raisonner hors des leur coutumes et tradition, même dans un cadre islamique.

Que ne doit-on absolument pas faire au Maroc ?

Fayza Slimi

Connaissances : Anglais 2 ans

Parler de la Royauté et du Sahara.

Sinon tous les autres sujets peuvent être permis et les marocains aiment bien échanger avec l'étranger et débattre avec lui ne serait-ce que pour pratiquer une langue étrangère.

Les sujets en rapport avec la sexualité ou autres ne sont pas aussi tabous qu'on ne le croit, le Maroc est un pays très ouvert où le conservatisme côtoie les débauches les plus extrêmes. Les hommes comme les femmes peuvent s'habiller comme ils veulent toutefois il est déconseillé d'atteindre à la pudeur des lieux sacrés qu'ils soient musulmans ou autres. Il est aussi possible de fumer tout et à peu près partout à condition de ne pas déranger quelqu'un par l'odeur nocive. En ce qui concerne la liberté du culte, elle est autorisée et tolérée par la société et les instances légales, on peut donc pratiquer sa religion en toute sérénité à condition de garder des valeurs de respect, de diversité et de tolérance et de ne pas critiquer les autres religions.

Le respect des lois est aussi très important pour ne pas payer des procès à longueur de journée, il est donc nécessaire d'éviter les débordements, les bagarres, les insultes et si un étranger conduit un véhicule au Maroc, il doit respecter les lois en vigueur tout en apprenant à laisser passer les autres qu'ils soient conducteurs ou piétons de façon aimable même si des fois il a la priorité.

Qu'est-ce qui manque le plus aux Marocains quand ils vont à l'étranger ?

Nisrina Delpierre Au bureau 2 ans

Ce qui me manque, c'est les fois ou je prenais le train ou le bus, et que la dame à côté de moi commence a me parler et au bout de 15 minutes on s’échange pleins de conseils comme si on se connaissait depuis un bon moment, la gentillesse de certains marocains que je n'ai jamais trouvé ici en France, une tolérance vis à vis de l'handicap aussi, ma fille étant autiste elle passe plus facilement inaperçue au Maroc qu'en France, les gens sont vraiment attristé quand ils savent qu'elle est autiste, un homme une fois en avait les larmes aux yeux alors qu'il ne nous connaissait pas.

Voir l'océan, le soleil d'hiver qui réchauffe nos corps le midi, el Mahlaba comme l'a si bien dit Samah ;-)

Anonyme
Maroc : que pensent les citoyens marocains ordinaires du roi du Maroc ?

4 ans

Le citoyen Marocain ordinaire (ou bien la majorité) pense que sa Majesté est le symbole de l’union et la stabilité des Marocains, qu’il est le protecteur contre les politiciens arrivistes qui ne cherchent que servir leurs intérêts capitalistes , pour le citoyen marocain le Roi c’est le seule a faire avancer le pays car il n’a pas la tentation de devenir riche (car il est déjà) ni le soucis de garder son poste de pouvoir (c’est a lui a vie) , donc quand il fait quelque chose c’est pour le bien du pays.

y’en a qui pensent autrement bien sure on ne peut pas généraliser , y’en a qui veulent que le roi ait moins de pouvoirs (2 représentants parlementaires sur 395 ont cet avis) y’en a même qui souhaite abolir la monarchie (aucun partie politique) mais ça reste des minorité .

Pourquoi les Français regardent les Marocains avec mépris ?

Benoît Gardonio, Français depuis toujours 2 ans

En ce qui me concerne, je ne vois pas les Marocains avec mépris. Mais j'ai déjà eu à faire à ce racisme "ordinaire", comme disent certains, qui consiste à dénigrer un pays, une culture et sa population en se servant de la bien-pensance nauséabonde de leur époque pour éviter de passer pour des gros racistes.

Je me souviens d'un dimanche chez un oncle, dans la banlieue champêtre de Lyon au cours duquel un de ces neveux de retour du Maroc venait lui rendre une petite visite impromptue. Les souvenirs de vacances ont rapidement envahi la conversation…

Entre autres choses, "la bouffe est excellente mais alors l'appel à la prière cinq fois par jour, merci bien! Pas possible de pioncer le matin, ça m'a vite gonflé !" Ou encore "niveau pollution à Marrakech, c'est pas Calcutta mais presque !" Voire, le trope le plus récurrent : "et puis, bonjour les femmes voilées! C'est quand même dingue toutes ces femmes qui sont dominées par leur mari!"

Je restais assis silencieux en écoutant patiemment sans risquer de prendre position. Le temps m'a appris que le dialogue n'est tout simplement pas possible avec ce genre d'individus. J'aurais pu lui rappeler qu'il fut un temps où les clochers sonnaient plus de cinq fois dans la journées, que la pollution dans la campagne française est sans doute plus intense encore que dans les rues de Marrakech et qu'il n'y a pas encore si longtemps, il n'était pas rare de voir des femmes se couvrir la tête dans l'espace public. Mais ces arguments auraient-ils eu raison de la mauvaise foi que j'avais en face de moi? Malheureusement, je pense que non.

Il y aura donc malheureusement toujours des gros cons incultes qui ne cherchent pas à comprendre les cultures des pays qu'ils visitent. Ils se contentent de comparer avec ce qu'ils croient savoir (et c'est déjà souvent bien peu!) et n'irons jamais plus loin. Ceux-là, ce sont "les imbéciles heureux qui sont nés quelque part" et "regardent le reste avec mépris du haut de leurs remparts", comme disait si justement Brassens dans sa chanson que je vous laisse savourer.

Georges Brassens - La Ballade Des Gens Qui Sont Nés Quelque Part subtitulado en español

La ballade des gens qui sont nés quelque part (with English subtitles)

Questions similaires

Quelle est la photo la plus inquiétante et inexplicable que vous ayez jamais vue ?

Quelle est la photo la plus incroyable (et la plus réelle) avant et après la photo que vous avez vue ?

Quelle photo vous rend fou ?
Quelle est la chose la plus horrible que vous ayez vue sur le dark web ?
Quelle est l'image la plus effrayante que vous ayez jamais vue ?
Avez-vous déjà vu une photo qui vous retourne le ventre rien qu'en la regardant ?
Quelles sont les photos les plus effrayantes ?
Quelle est la scène la plus explicite que vous ayez vue quand vous étiez jeune ?
Quelle est la photo la plus troublante que vous ayez vue ?
Quelle est la chose la plus étrange que vous ayez jamais vue ?

Response similaires
Pourquoi le Maroc a-t-il décidé de normaliser ses relations avec Israël ?

Jerome Cohen

Mon père était de Casablanca, ma mère fait un super tajine!Traducteur · 1 an Eric Curran Studied abroad in Israel Un seul mot : Realpolitik.

Tout d'abord, jetons un coup d'œil à la géographie

Ils sont assez distants, non ? Autrement dit, il y a des milliers de kilomètres de distance entre les deux pays. À ce stade, le roi du Maroc a probablement estimé qu'il n'y avait pas vraiment de raison qu'il y ait des tensions entre les deux nations, car aucune des deux n'a vraiment d'effet sur l'autre, à part le sentiment concernant le conflit israélo-palestinien.

Deuxièmement, la monarchie a clairement estimé que les intérêts du Maroc étaient mieux servis par une paix officielle entre elle et Israël. Avec la reprise des hostilités au Sahara occidental entre le gouvernement marocain et le Front Polisario, il est clair qu'elle doit s'occuper de questions plus urgentes. En ne donnant plus de coups de pied dans la boîte de conserve d'Israël, le Maroc a un fer de moins dans le feu, peut jouir de liens économiques et commerciaux plus forts avec Israël, a accru son accès à la technologie et à l'innovation israélienne et ferait plaisir à son allié séculaire de Washington. Trump, en fait, était si heureux qu'il a reconnu le contrôle marocain sur le Sahara occidental contesté !

En outre, pendant de nombreuses années avant cette annonce, Israël et le Maroc avaient noué des liens amicaux, peu secrets, et un nombre non négligeable de citoyens juifs israéliens sont eux-mêmes d'origine marocaine. Et le Soudan, les EAU et Bahreïn ont été les premiers à conclure des accords de paix avec Israël, ce qui a contribué à alléger la pression exercée sur le Maroc. Je suppose qu'il ne faut pas s'étonner que cela devait arriver tôt ou tard, la question du Sahara occidental et l'administration Trump ont juste accéléré le processus.

Questions similaires

Pourquoi le Maroc n'annonce pas la paix avec Israël ?

Après le rapport d'Amnesty International qualifiant Israël d'État d'apartheid, comment le roi du Maroc va continuer à justifier auprès de son peuple ses relations privilégiées avec cet État ?

Que gagnera le Maroc à renouveler ses liens avec Israël ?

Pourquoi ne pas fusionner Israël et la Palestine pour en faire un seul et unique pays où les habitants de ce nouveau pays vivraient dans la paix ?

Quelles sont les conséquences après la rupture des relations entre l'Algérie et le Maroc ?

La reconnaissance d'Israël par le Maroc va t-elle accentuer les tensions au sein des pays arabes ?

Pourquoi les Arabes ne peuvent-ils pas vaincre Israël ?
Quelle est la réalité des relations diplomatiques entre le Maroc et Israël ?
Pourquoi le Maroc a-t-il attaqué l'Espagne en 2002 ?
Quel est le prochain pays à normaliser ses relations avec Israël après le Maroc ?

Why has Morocco not annexed all of Western Sahara in so many years? Why leave a potential future trouble spot?

Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan Lived in Meknès, Morocco (1996–0) 1y

Because it's not a trouble spot and there's no need to.

The Western Sahara is quite literally just a patch of scorching hot desert with very few resources and no arable land. So during the 1980s, in order to end the war, it was decided by the Moroccan Army to divide the Western Sahara into two regions: Useful Sahara (where people actually lived and which had resources that made life bearable) and Useless Sahara (where nobody lived and the only resource was sand. Lots and lots of sand.).

The Useful Sahara was taken in a series of offensives and protected by the construction of a massive wall known as the Moroccan Wall.

As for the Useless Sahara, nobody wants it. Not even the Polisario

That's why most of the Sahrawis loyal to the Polisario live in Southwestern Algeria and why all of the Polisario's troops are in Algeria as well.

The "Useless Sahara" is borderline uninhabitable with no water, no arable land, nothing.

Will Morocco ever retake the region?

Sure, maybe. But there's no need to when the Polisario is falling apart slowly.

More Polisario fighters defect to Morocco

Related Links

Is Morocco planning to capture the remaining of Western Sahara?
Which side is right on the issue of the Western Sahara?

Is Western Sahara a country or a part of Morocco?
Does Morocco treat Western Sahara badly?
Why won't Morocco give up Western Sahara?

Why did Morocco do the Green March in Western Sahara even though Morocco was an underdeveloped country in 1975?

Why does Morocco have border disputes with almost every neighbouring countries (Algeria, Spain and Western Sahara)?

What is the problem between Morocco and Algeria regarding Western Sahara?

Why Morocco doesn't invade the part of Western Sahara controlled by the Polisario front?

Why does Algeria oppose Moroccan rule over Western Sahara?

Pensez-vous que le colonialisme européen fut mauvais ?/ Do you think European colonialism was bad?

Gérard Briais L'histoire est une drogue dure...Traducteur · 2 ans

Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan Précédent lieu : Meknès, Morocco (1996–0)

Je suis sérieux. Plus je fais des recherches sur ce sujet, plus je suis convaincu qu'il a profité au monde entier. Je ne veux pas dire qu'il n'y a pas eu de famines et de guerres. Mais il y en avait moins qu'au cours des siècles précédents, et le monde a bénéficié de la technologie inventée par les Européens. En outre, les systèmes démocratiques n'existent que parce qu'ils ont été exportés par les Européens. Je reconnais que dans de nombreux cas, comme au Congo ou en Jamaïque, le colonialisme a été préjudiciable. Mais dans l'ensemble, comment plaideriez-vous votre cause ?

Ok. Je suis déconcerté certes, mais très bien, je sais par où commencer. J'utiliserai mon pays car il montre que le colonialisme peut être à la fois bon et mauvais.

À propos du Maroc

En 1912, la France occupe le Maroc et fait du général français Hubert Lyautey le général résident (gouverneur colonial). L'objectif de la France au Maroc et dans toutes ses colonies était très simple : faire de l'argent.

C'est cela. La France ne voulait pas améliorer le Maroc. Elle ne voulait pas exporter la démocratie. Elle ne voulait pas mettre fin aux famines ou aux maladies. Elle voulait faire de l'argent.

Cependant, la France a donné à ses gouverneurs coloniaux l'autonomie nécessaire pour que Lyautey puisse faire ce qu'il voulait, pourvu que chaque année, la France fasse des profits au Maroc.

Hubert Lyautey

Lyautey (r. 1912-1925) colonisateur et Atatürk "allégé" du Maroc.

Lyautey s'est rendu compte qu'il ne pouvait pas éviter la soif d'argent de la France et il a donc trouvé deux solutions :

Le Maroc dispose d'une ressource naturelle connue sous le nom de phosphates qui est précieuse pour les engrais. Aujourd'hui encore, le Maroc possède la majorité des phosphates du monde.

Le Maroc avait beaucoup de terres agricoles entre les mains des paysans Lyautey a donc fondé une compagnie minière pour extraire les phosphates et a forcé les paysans à quitter leurs terres, puis a vendu la terre à de riches hommes d'affaires français qui ont créé des fermes industrielles et payé des impôts à Lyautey qui a pris l'argent du phosphate et l'a envoyé à Paris pour qu'on le laisse tranquille.

Les projets de Lyautey en parallèle

La France recevant ses bénéfices annuels, elle a laissé Lyautey libre de tenter de transformer le Maroc du mieux qu'il pouvait.

Il a reconstruit toutes les villes du Maroc littéralement avec les Nouvelles Villes où il a construit des villes entièrement nouvelles à côté des anciennes. Ces nouvelles villes avaient l'électricité, l'eau courante et plus encore.

Sur la photo : La Ville Nouvelle de Marrakech. Les Ville Nouvelles ont toutes été conçues par le célèbre architecte français Henri Prost, Prost a essayé de rendre les nouvelles villes cool, flashy et très européennes comme on le voit dans cette rue. Il s'est également efforcé de respecter la culture marocaine en y ajoutant des mosquées et de l'architecture islamique ici et là.

Il a développé un réseau routier et construit des chemins de fer

Il a convaincu Paris de le laisser développer un système de santé rudimentaire pour les Marocains et a même poursuivi un programme de vaccination pour mettre fin aux épidémies constantes de maladies.

Dessin d'un journal français de 1934 montrant un soldat français vaccinant un bébé marocain. Lyautey a commencé ce programme.

Paris a refusé de le laisser développer un système éducatif mais Lyautey est parvenu à construire une poignée d'écoles ouvertes aux Marocains.

Plus important encore, il a appelé au respect pour le Maroc et a trié sur le volet les responsables coloniaux pour s'assurer qu'aucun suprématiste blanc ou raciste ne se retrouve dans son administration.

Il a fait de son mieux pour saboter les plans de la France de faire du Maroc une Algérie 2.0 en faisant venir des immigrants blancs de France, d'Italie et d'Espagne. Il a insisté pour choisir les immigrants lui-même !

Le lycée le plus prestigieux du Maroc est le Lycée Lyautey en l'honneur de la contribution de Lyautey à l'éducation au Maroc.

Selon l'historienne américaine Susan Miller dans son livre Le Maroc depuis 1830, Lyautey préférait les fermiers blancs riches ou de la classe moyenne supérieure parce qu'il considérait les immigrants blancs en Algérie comme les déchets de l'Europe.

C'est en raison des racines de Lyautey car il était un catholique pratiquant issu d'une famille aristocratique et monarchiste française, il avait donc des préjugés de classe.

Quoi qu'il en soit, Lyautey a véritablement amélioré le Maroc et il a fait de son mieux pour le moderniser dans les limites fixées par la France. Il a préparé le terrain pour les prochains généraux-résidents du Maroc qui ont plus ou moins essayé de respecter l'héritage de Lyautey en y ajoutant leur manière (comme on l'a vu avec Nogues dans les années 1930 introduisant les droits des travailleurs pour les Marocains).

Permettez-moi donc de dire ceci en tant que musulman marocain brun : Le colonialisme français a fait du bien au Maroc. Non pas parce que la France le voulait, mais à cause d'hommes comme Lyautey (et dans une moindre mesure, de ses successeurs).

Cela ne veut pas dire que de mauvaises choses ne se sont pas produites non plus. Lyautey a été forcé d'expulser les paysans de leurs terres pour pouvoir les vendre à des hommes d'affaires français. Cependant, dans ce cas, Lyautey y vit un mal nécessaire.

S'il avait refusé de le faire, la France l'aurait renvoyé et l'aurait remplacé par un raciste ou pire :

Le Maroc aurait reçu des gouverneurs comme ceux qui œuvrèrent en Mauritanie

La Mauritanie a eu la malchance de ne pas avoir son propre Lyautey, elle n'a même pas eu ses propres Nogues ou Juin (le pire gouverneur du Maroc mais supportable). Tous ses gouverneurs coloniaux ont pris à cœur l'objectif de la France et ont fait le strict minimum pour la Mauritanie.

Pas de routes. Pas d'écoles. Pas de nouvelles villes. Aucun programme de vaccination. Aucun soutien de quelque nature que ce soit. Ils s'en moquaient.

Train de minerai de fer en Mauritanie

Tout ce qu'ils firent avait pour but d'exploiter les ressources de la Mauritanie, principalement son minerai de fer dans le nord. Ainsi, les routes et les chemins de fer qui existaient étaient destinés à l'industrie minière et non au Mauritanien moyen.

C'est pour cette raison que la Mauritanie connaît aujourd'hui encore l'esclavage, la France n'y a pris aucune mesure pour y mettre fin. Pas parce qu'elle ne le pouvait pas, mais parce que les gouverneurs coloniaux s'en moquaient. Prendre des mesures contre l'esclavage signifie dépenser de l'argent pour les soldats et payer les tribus pour leur soutien. De l'argent qui pouvait être envoyé à Paris à la place.

Ce qui m'amène à mon opinion :

Le colonialisme est un sac mélangé où n'entrent pas les colonies de peuplement comme le Canada ou la Nouvelle-Zélande.

Certaines autorités coloniales (Lyautey pour le Maroc, Glubb Pacha en Jordanie) sont des hommes étonnants et vaillants qui s'intéressent à leurs colonies.

D'autres étaient des racistes ou des politiciens indifférents qui ont décidé de simplement faire leur travail et rien de plus.

C'est ce que je pense.

Sources/Lectures complémentaires sur le sujet

Cette réponse utilisait 2 sources principales, tandis que le reste était fondé sur mes propres connaissances.

Le Maroc depuis 1830 par Susan G. Miller qui dresse un bref portrait de Lyautey avant de passer à la suite

Intérêts économiques français et décolonisation de l'Afrique du Nord (1945-1962) par Samir Saul

Je n'ai pas rendu justice à ce livre parce que c'est un livre extrêmement détaillé sur la France en Afrique du Nord et je me suis concentré sur le développement de l'agriculture et des phosphates de Lyautey. La France a fait beaucoup plus que cela, mais pour se concentrer sur Lyautey et par souci de concision, je viens de simplifier le plan économique de Lyautey.

Saul mentionne la création par la France de sociétés de services publics, l'industrialisation dans les années 1930 et 1940, etc. Je le recommande fortement et encore une fois, je ne lui ai pas rendu justice. Mais la prémisse de ma réponse sur les profits est contenue dans ce livre.

La colonisation a-t-elle été aussi terrible qu'on nous le raconte ?

Ask de Souza , ancien(ne) Fraud Auditor Répondu 30 avr.

S'il est indéniable qu'en Afrique , la colonisation française a été à l'origine de Progrès, il eut néanmoins des faits historiques, qui par leur barbarie ont jeté le discrédit sur la mission civilisatrice de la France, jusqu'au point de provoquer des hécatombes et des exodes massifs de populations vers d'autres territoires où le régime colonial serait plus humaine.

Les nombreuses exactions liées à l'application in situ du code de l'indigénat [1] [2], en furent des exemples les plus emblématiques.

L' inspecteur colonial Paul Vigné d'Octon lors d'une mission relevait :

"D*ans l'application journalière du code de l'indigénat, et en particulier de l'article sur l'emprisonnement pour retard d'impôt, l'administrateur algérien se montre neuf fois sur dix, d'une révoltante férocité. […] Prélever la dîme sur la maigre moisson d'un peuple de misérables, auquel on a volé et auquel on vole chaque jour encore ses meilleures terres, est une de ces monstruosités (…) J'ajoute que nous, les vainqueurs et les maîtres de la Tunisie, sommes à l'égard de nos vaincus, cent fois plus cruels que (…) les bandits seigneuriaux à l'égard de leurs manants et de leurs serfs.*[3]

Le journaliste Albert Londres en 1928 dans son livre Terre d'Ebène, dénonçait quant à lui, le scandale du travail forcé.

" Où nous devrions travailler à peupler, nous dépeuplons. Serions-nous les coupeurs de bois de la forêt humaine ?

Où nous a conduits cette méthode ? À une situation redoutable. Depuis trois ans :

1º Six cent mille indigènes sont partis en Gold Coast (colonie anglaise) ;

2º Deux millions d'indigènes sont partis en Nigeria (colonie anglaise) ;

3º Dix mille indigènes vivent hors des villages, à l'état sauvage (plus sauvage !) dans les forêts de la Côte d'Ivoire.

Ils fuient :

1º Le recrutement pour l'armée ;

2º Le recrutement pour les routes ou la machine (chemin de fer) ;

3º Le recrutement individuel des coupeurs de bois.

Plus loin , Albert Londres alertait également l'opinion publique sur la dérive meurtrière du chantier du chemin de fer du Congo Océan.

En effet, le recours à outrance au "*moteur à banane" (*travailleurs forcés) plutôt qu'à l'outillage mécanique jugé trop coûteux par rapport à une main d'oeuvre indigène abondante, taillable et corvéable à merci , décima des régions entières du Congo.

"J'ai vu construire des chemins de fer ; on rencontrait du matériel sur les chantiers. Ici, que du nègre ! Le nègre remplaçait la machine, le camion, la grue ; pourquoi pas l'explosif aussi ?"

" Cependant, j'ai découvert sur ces chantiers modernes d'importants instruments : le marteau et la barre à mine, par exemple. Dans le Mayombe, nous perçons les tunnels avec un marteau et une barre à mine ! (M. le ministre des Colonies, j'ai pris à votre intention quelques photographies, vous ne les trouverez pas dans les films de propagande), blessés, amaigris, désolés, les nègres mouraient en masse."

"Dès qu'un blanc se mettait en route, un même cri se répandait : « La machine ! ». Tous les nègres savaient que le blanc venait chercher des hommes pour le chemin de fer ; ils fuyaient (...) Ils gagnaient les bois, les bords du Tchad, le Congo belge, l'Angola. (...) Nous nous mettions à la poursuite des fugitifs. Nos tirailleurs les attrapaient au vol, au lasso, comme ils pouvaient ! (...) On en arriva aux représailles. Des villages entiers furent punis (...) autre fois, un chef noir se pendit plutôt que d'obéir à l'ordre de recruter pour la machine (...)

« Il faut accepter le sacrifice de six à huit mille hommes, (...) ou renoncer au chemin de fer. » À ce jour, cependant, il ne dépasse pas dix-sept mille. Et il ne nous reste plus que trois cents kilomètres de voie ferrée à construire !"

Effectivement, ce fut terrible.

Les conditions de travail étaient inhumaines : 17 000 morts pour réaliser un tronçon de chemin de fer de 200 kilomètres sur 500.

Les exemples rivalisant d'atrocités furent légion un peu partout sur le continent , en particulier en Algérie et au Congo belge.

Mais, je reste néanmoins convaincu de la nécessité pour nous les africains, de mettre une croix sur ce passé douloureux, afin de sortir une fois pour toutes, du paradigme de la victimisation qui fait de la colonisation, la source de tous les problèmes de l'Afrique.

Même si la colonisation fut à certains égards terrible, devons-nous pour autant jeter le bébé avec l'eau du bain?

Bon nombre de pays , en Asie , s'en sont brillamment remis, pourquoi n'en serait-il pas de même pour les pays africains ?

Le débat reste ouvert.

Notes de bas de page
[1] Indigénat — Wikipédia
[2] Réponse de Ask de Souza à Est-il vrai que dans le « Code de l'indigénat » français, supprimé seulement en 1944, on avait le droit d'inculper quelqu'un (c'est-à-dire un "indigène") à cause de son regard dans la rue ?
[3] Lire : la sueur du burnous, Les crimes coloniaux de la IIIe République de Paul Vigné d'Octon

Questions similaires

Alors que les empires coloniaux sont morts, est-il normal que la France soit le dernier pays européen à maintenir des possessions extra-européennes ?
Quelles sont les marques que le colonialisme a laissé ?
Que pensent les Européens de leur histoire du colonialisme ?
Pourquoi la France n'assume-t-elle pas son passé colonial ?
Pourquoi se fait-il que les Européens fûts ceux qui ont débutés le colonialisme ?
L'Europe aurait-elle pu se 'développer' sans coloniser l'Asie et l'Afrique ?

Quel pays non-européen aurait pu facilement coloniser le monde comme l'Europe mais ne l'a pas fait ? Question traduite.

Pourquoi l'Europe abuse-t-elle encore de ses pays colonisés ?

Que pensez-vous de l'affirmation de Anasse Kazib « L'Histoire de la France s'est fondée sur le colonialisme et l'impérialisme »?

Existe-t-il une colonie européenne qui n'ait pas souhaité son indépendance ?

Que se serait-il passé si le Maroc avait progressivement annexé la péninsule ibérique à partir du XVe siècle ? Aurait-il re-formé « Al-Andalus » ou serait-il resté officiellement le « Maroc » ?

Imzo Bud · Suivre Marocain 1 an

Alors déjà, petit avertissement : L'Histoire, avec une majuscule, c'est l'étude et l'écriture des faits ou événements passés. À ce titre, l'historien, comme n'importe quel scientifique, décrit des phénomènes. Le boulot de l'historien, c'est de livrer une description aussi impartiale que possible de la réalité du passé loin de ses fantasmes ou envies personnelles. C'est pour ça que très peu d'historiens sérieux vont répondre aux questions du type "Et si x avait eu lieu", ou "Pourquoi y n'a pas eu lieu", parce que la réponse la plus simple et la plus sensée serait : Ils n'ont pas eu lieux. À partir du moment où on essaie de justifier quelque chose rétroactivement, on entre dans une vision téléologique de l'Histoire, ce qui est complètement faux.

Pour répondre à votre question par exemple, il convient d'étudier la situation du Maroc au XIVème siècle, celle de l'Algérie et de la Tunisie, leurs relations entres eux, le facteur hilalien, les bouleversements climatiques, les changements économiques… mais aussi la dynamique entre les états musulmans et chrétiens, leurs alliances, leurs priorités et leurs objectifs respectifs. En étudiant tout cela, on comprend pourquoi le Maroc n'a pas réussi à garder le contrôle ou à garantir la survie de l'Émirat de Grenade; il avait d'autres chats à fouetter. Les états ibériques aussi avaient leurs propres problèmes, mais ont mieux résister aux différentes crises.

Maintenant pour vous répondre, en admettant que le Maroc réussisse à garder Al-Andalus, il est peut probable qu'il ait adopté ce nom. Le mot Maroc vient de la ville de Marrakesh et ce sont les portugais qui ont inventé cette dénomination, or au XIVème siècle, le Maroc avait pour dirigeants la dynastie mérinide, dont la capitale était à Fès, il est donc plus probable que le pays s'appellent Fez que Maroc, ou bien même une latinisation de المغرب, vu que les mérinides étaient "Émirs de l'Occident", en dignes successeurs des almoravides, contrairement aux almohades ou aux Saadiens qui se présentaient comme "Califes de l'Occident".

Pour finir, l'Histoire n'est pas une partie d'Europa Universalis, si le Maroc avait voulu adopter le nom Al Andalus, il aurait adopté le nom Al Andalus. Il n'y a écrit nulle part que pour prendre ce nom, il faut être en paix, ne pas être vassal, ne pas être une horde et contrôler toutes les provinces de la région d'Andalousie moderne ainsi que le Sud du Portugal et Murcie.

Questions similaires

Pourquoi considérons-nous que l'Espagne est européenne, alors qu'elle a été gouvernée par des musulmans pendant près de 800 ans ? Pourquoi ne considérons-nous pas cet ancien territoire musulman comme moyen-oriental ou nord-africain ?

Pourquoi la Reconquista espagnole s'est-elle arrêtée à la Méditerranée et n'a-t-elle pas continué en Afrique du Nord ?

Le royaume d'Espagne a-t-il reçu le soutien de la France, et de tout autre pays chrétien pendant la Reconquista (vers le VIIIe - XIe siècle) ? (QT)

Pourquoi les Ottomans n'ont-ils jamais conquis le Maroc ?

Pourquoi le Maroc n'est-il pas considéré comme un pays européen alors qu'il n'est qu'à 14 km de l'Espagne ?

Comment les colons anglais et espagnols ont-ils fait pour "remplacer" certaines populations autochtones là où ils allaient ? Pourquoi la France coloniale ne l'a-t-elle pas fait aussi ?

Quand l'Espagne a-t-elle été reconnue comme une puissance distincte, par opposition à un simple domaine des Habsbourg ? Quand le nom "Royaume d'Espagne" a-t-il été utilisé officiellement pour la première fois ?

Pourquoi le Maroc a-t-il attaqué l'Espagne en 2002 ?

Pourquoi les Marocains n'organisent-ils pas une marche verte pour ramener Ceuta et Melilla d'Espagne?

Le Maroc revendique-t-il vraiment les enclaves espagnoles de Ceuta et de Mellila ?

Are Berbers oppressed by North African Arabs?

Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan , lived in Meknès, Morocco Answered Jun 4, 2018

It depends on the country. To use the two major Berber nations:

Algeria ~ Due to Algeria's artificial nature, it depends on which Berber people you're from.

Morocco ~ No, due to its official policy of mixing the ethnicities.

Morocco

Morocco has a large population in a relatively medium-sized nation thus ethnic tensions and conflict have the possibility of exploding into nationwide anarchy and civil war as well as undermining the Monarchy.

Thus the Alaouite dynasty follows the policy that its predecessors followed:

Mixing.

The Alaouites encouraged all Moroccans (Arabs and Berber peoples) to mix and intermarry to establish a unified culture and identity and this policy has worked.

Personally, I have Arab, Atlasian , Riffian and Sahrawi ancestry based on my talks with my Grandparents and that's going back to my Great Great Great Grandparents, it's fully possibly that I have my Andalusian , Jebali and Drawi ancestry too.

Thus the Moroccan government never felt the need to oppress when society will mix and unify in time. In fact, it's entirely possible that the Arab and Berber ethnicities will disappear and be replaced by a "Moroccan" ethnicity.

The Atlas Mountains, the homeland of most of Morocco's Berbers

Look no further than King Mohammed VI whose Mother was the daughter of a Berber Tribal Chief and whose father was an Arab Crown prince (and later King of Morocco). He's not only Arab but Berber thanks to extensive mixing throughout the history of his family.

But this wasn't the case in neighboring Algeria due to its artificial nature.

Algeria was created by France in 1830 as a mishmash of conquered peoples , now this isn't meant to be an insult to the now real Algerian identity and culture that exists today.

But Algeria is home to many peoples (primarily Berber) who rejected the Algerian identity given to them by France in 1830 and continue to reject their inclusion in Algeria today. The most famous example is the Kabyles of Northern Algeria but a lesser known is the Ibadi Berbers also known as the Mozabites.

For centuries the Mozabites lived in a secluded oasis in southern Algeria where they freely practiced their Ibadi faith without fear of persecution but then France invaded the Mozabite lands in 1853 and proclaimed them to now be Algerians who live in Algeria.

A Mozabite march

The Mozabites have resisted this conquest for the past 160 years which has resulted in the Algerian state (which inherited Algeria from France) viewing them as a threat thus the Algerian government represses the Mozabite culture and language to crush the separatists.

It even goes so far as to encourage Arabs to settle in the Mozabite lands to turn them into a minority in their own homeland.

In 2015, this caused a full blown riot as the Mozabites began attacking the Arab immigrants and vice versa.

Dozens arrested in Algeria over ethnic violence

But not all Berber peoples in Algeria are repressed.

The Chaoui Berbers of northeastern Algeria have been rather positive about their inclusion in Algeria and are often even Algerian Nationalists. As a result the Algerian State never pesters the Chaoui about their culture or tries to repress them.

Occasionally the Algerian State caters to its loyal Berbers by recognizing their culture:

Algeria sets Berber New Year as public holiday

Thus oppression depends on which Berber people you're from.

- The Chaoui are supported by the State.
- The Mozabites are oppressed by the State.

Related Links

How good or bad are the relations between Arabs and Berbers in Morocco?
Is there conflict between Arabs and Berbers in North Africa?
Are Libyans more Arab or Berber?

Why do North African countries not consider themselves as Africans but as Arabs?

Why is Morocco ruled by Arabs when most people seem to be Berber?
Are Berbers different from Arabs?
Who are the majority in Morocco, Berbers or Arabs?
Do Berbers hate Arabs?
Are Berbers of Arab origin?
Why are Black Africans so anti-Arab Africans?

Do Moroccans consider themselves as just Western Arabs, or is it more complex than that?

Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan Lived in Meknès, Morocco (1996–0) 4y

It's more complex.

For centuries since the Almohad dynasty, Moroccans divided themselves into two main groups:

- Arabs
- Berbers

The line between the two groups was blurred as both began inter-mixing and even adopting one another's identities.

One of the gates into Fes, Morocco's ancient capital where for centuries Arabs and Berbers mingled and inter-mixed.

My maternal Grandfather was born in a Berber tribe in a Berber village in a Berber region yet prefers to be called Arab and identified as such when he lived in France. Moroccans didn't challenge him and even his own family accepted him as such.

A family friend is descended from an Arab tribesmen who arrived in a Berber village and integrated into their culture and then proclaimed himself a Berber. Nobody challenged and everybody accepted him as such.

However things have changed recently.

Due to conflicts and tensions in the Arab world , many Moroccans wish to distance themselves away from the Arabs and begin to look back to their Berber origins (or in some cases, invent Berber origins) as if to say "We're not savages like the Middle Easterners!" These Moroccans consider themselves Berbers in a Berber nation.

Berber and Moroccan flag waving side by side

There's also those who advocate for a unique Moroccan identity declaring that Morocco is neither Arab nor Berber but is actually a blend of the two cultures and thus it's new, it's unique, it's Moroccan.

You'll still find many Moroccans who identify as Arab and see Morocco as an Arabic nation but their numbers are actually dwindling due to the degradation in the image of Arabs.

As I said before, the whole situation is complex but many Moroccans do consider themselves (Western) Arabs.

Related Links

Do Moroccans consider themselves Arabs?
Are Moroccans Arab or European?
Do Egyptians consider themselves to be Arabs or Berbers?
Are Moroccans Black?
Middle East and North Africa: What do Arabs think of Moroccans?
Do some Moroccans have Arab DNA?
Can Asian Arabs distinguish whether a Moroccan is Arab, Amazigh, or Jew?
What do Moroccans think of China?
Are Moroccan-looking Spaniards often confused for Arabs in Spain?
Do Moroccans consider themselves black?

Pourquoi les Français regardent les Marocains avec mépris ?

Benoît Gardonio Français depuis toujours2 ans

En ce qui me concerne, je ne vois pas les Marocains avec mépris. Mais j'ai déjà eu à faire à ce racisme "ordinaire", comme disent certains, qui consiste à dénigrer un pays, une culture et sa population en se servant de la bien-pensance nauséabonde de leur époque pour éviter de passer pour des gros racistes.

Je me souviens d'un dimanche chez un oncle, dans la banlieue champêtre de Lyon au cours duquel un de ces neveux de retour du Maroc venait lui rendre une petite visite impromptue. Les souvenirs de vacances ont rapidement envahi la conversation…

Entre autres choses, "la bouffe est excellente mais alors l'appel à la prière cinq fois par jour, merci bien! Pas possible de pioncer le matin, ça m'a vite gonflé !" Ou encore "niveau pollution à Marrakech, c'est pas Calcutta mais presque !" Voire, le trope le plus récurrent : "et puis, bonjour les femmes voilées! C'est quand même dingue toutes ces femmes qui sont dominées par leur mari!"

Je restais assis silencieux en écoutant patiemment sans risquer de prendre position. Le temps m'a appris que le dialogue n'est tout simplement pas possible avec ce genre d'individus. J'aurais pu lui rappeler qu'il fut un temps où les clochers sonnaient plus de cinq fois dans la journées, que la pollution dans la campagne française est sans doute plus intense encore que dans les rues de Marrakech et qu'il n'y a pas encore si longtemps, il n'était pas rare de voir des femmes se couvrir la tête dans l'espace public. Mais ces arguments auraient-ils eu raison de la mauvaise foi que j'avais en face de moi? Malheureusement, je pense que non.

Il y aura donc malheureusement toujours des gros cons incultes qui ne cherchent pas à comprendre les cultures des pays qu'ils visitent. Ils se contentent de comparer avec ce qu'ils croient savoir (et c'est déjà souvent bien peu!) et n'irons jamais plus loin. Ceux-là, ce sont "les imbéciles heureux qui sont nés quelque part" et "regardent le reste avec mépris du haut de leurs remparts", comme disait si justement Brassens dans sa chanson que je vous laisse savourer.

Georges Brassens - La Ballade Des Gens Qui Sont Nés Quelque Part subtitulado en español

La ballade des gens qui sont nés quelque part (with English subtitles)

Questions similaires

Qu'est-ce qui vous dérange à propos de la culture marocaine ?
Que pensez-vous des Marocains ?
Que pensent les non marocains des femmes marocaines ?
Pourquoi les Marocains ne supportent pas les Algériens, qui ont pourtant une culture similaire ?

Qu'est-ce qui manque le plus aux Marocains quand ils vont à l'étranger ?
Pourquoi les français préfèrent-ils aller en Tunisie ou au Maroc plutôt qu'en Algérie ?
Les français détestent-ils les maghrébins ?
Pourquoi beaucoup de Françaises aiment les rebeux et surtout les marocains ?
Quels sont les faits sur le Maroc auxquels les étrangers ne croient pas avant d'arriver au Maroc ?
Pourquoi le Maroc est-il constamment présenté comme un pays arrière ?

MAGHREBIS

Why don't Morocco, Tunisia and Algeria - being so similar in many ways - form a Maghrebi Union modelled on the EU?

Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan Lived in Meknès, Morocco (1996–0)Thu

It's because Morocco killed the project

The Arab League was formed to serve as a diplomatic front for Arab countries however by the late 1970s, the Gulf States sought something more than diplomatic unity and so the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) was formed in 1981. The GCC was meant to serve as an economic union and more, such as having a united military force so it sent shockwaves throughout the Arab World.

GCC members

Two reactions occurred. The Middle Easterners reacted with:

"You formed a club without me? Fine, I never wanted to be in your dumb club anyway. It's so dumb I'm going to make my own club and not invite you to see how you feel!"

And so the Arab Cooperation Council (ACC) was formed. However there wasn't much to unite the ACC countries and so it died out within a decade.

Arab Cooperation Council - Wikipedia

The North Africans had a better chance because Algeria, Libya, Mauritania and Tunisia had more of a common ancestry, culture and history that a GCC replica had a better chance of surviving.

So the Arab Maghreb Union (AMU) was formed

However unlike the GCC, the AMU had a revolving presidency where member countries took turns leading the organization. At first King Hassan II of Morocco (r. 1961-1999) agreed until it was Algeria's turn to be the leader. Then King Hassan II announced that for an entire year, Morocco would not respect anything the AMU did and would reject any decisions. The Algerians responded by announcing that when it was Morocco's turn to lead that they too would reject the AMU for a year.

Algeria and Morocco are the heavyweights for North Africa and with both countries refusing to participate once every five years essentially killed the organization. Gaddafi of Libya (r. 1969-2011) did try to offer a solution: Libya would take Algeria and Morocco's turns. Both the Algerians and King Hassan II saw this as a very bad idea and rejected it as well.

Thus the AMU is now a zombie

It still exists and makes announcements every 2 years or so but Algeria and Morocco have essentially left the organization unofficially and don't want to participate in it as long as the other is still a member.

Related Links

Why is Morocco more touristic than Algeria and Tunisia?
Why does Algeria oppose Moroccan rule over Western Sahara?

Why are Morocco, Algeria and Tunisia separate countries despite all having a Berber, Arab and French history?

Why did the Ottoman Empire not fight to keep Egypt, Tunis, and Algeria the way they did for Libya? What made Libya so special?

How is the black population in Libya, Algeria, Morocco, Tunisia, and Egypt?
Why is Tunisia so much more Westernized than Algeria, Morocco, or Libya?
How religious are people in Morocco, Algeria and Tunisia?

Why were Morocco and Tunisia made a French protectorate, but Algeria annexed as part of France?

What is the problem between Morocco and Algeria regarding Western Sahara?
How did the pre-colonial Maghreb countries (Tunisia Algeria and Morocco)

Pensez-vous que Macron doit s'excuser pour la colonisation de l'Algérie, la Tunisie?

André Teissier du Cros , Président honoraire et Fondateur chez Comité Bastille (2006-présent) Répondu 1 juil. 2020
Réponse originale : Pensez-vous que Macron doit s'excuser pour la colonisation de l'Algérie, la Tunisie?

Si Emmanuel Macron doit s'excuser de ces colonisations, alors la France doit aussi s'excuser de la colonisation de la Bretagne, de la Corse, de la Franche-Comté, et autres (Indochine, Afrique occidentale et équatoriale, Nouvelle Calédonie, Polynésie…)

La Grande-Bretagne doit s'excuser d'avoir colonisé environ un tiers du territoire français pendant 150 ans et d'avoir colonisé le pays de Galles, l'Irlande et l'Écosse sans parler de l'Inde et d'un grand nombre de territoires qui au XIXe siècle représentaient un quart de l'humanité.

Mais de son côté la France doit s'excuser d'avoir colonisé l'Angleterre en 1066 avec Guillaume le conquérant.

L'Espagne et le Portugal furent de grands colonisateurs avant l'Angleterre et la France…

En outre il est grand temps que l'Italie s'excuse d'avoir fondé l'empire romain qui pendant plusieurs siècles a colonisé la meilleure partie de l'Europe et du monde méditerranéen.

Et puis enfin, que dire de la Grèce d'Alexandre le Grand? des Celtes qui ont colonisé toute l'Europe avant les Romains et pillé plusieurs fois Rome? Et ailleurs n'oublions pas d'autres colonisateurs des Amériques, les derniers étant les Incas? En Équateur ils ont encore de bonnes histoires à raconter sur les joyeux traitements qu'ils subirent il y a juste quelques siècles.

Et l'Empire Arabe? Et l'Empire du Mali en Afrique avant que les Europeens suivent les traces esclavagistes des Arabes?

Croyez-vous qu'il soit vraiment constructif d'ouvrir cette boîte de Pandore?

Ne vaudrait-il pas mieux parler de l'avenir au lieu d'éternellement refaire l'histoire?

Quels sont les facteurs expliquant que l'Algerie est devenu une colonie française et le Maroc et la Tunisie seulement un protectorat ?

Cariou

Ingénieur en Pilote et Emplois et carrières dans l'action sociale, École de l'air (Diplôme obtenu en 1982)7 mai

Tout ça, c'est du passé.

On oublie ce qu'il y a eu avant.

Au début des temps modernes, au XVIe siècle, dans la Régence d'Alger comme dans les autres ports, Bougie ou Oran, les corsaires obéissent à un dey ou un pacha au pouvoir discrétionnaire, théoriquement vassal du sultan d'Istamboul mais en fait indépendant.

Leur principale source de revenus est la guerre de course en Méditerranée, en d'autres termes la piraterie. Des receleurs européens revendent le fruit des rapines en passant par le port franc de Livourne, en Italie.

On évalue à un million le nombre d'Européens de l'Ouest qui sont enlevés par les Barbaresques au cours de batailles navales et de razzias sur les côtes européennes, entre le XVIe et le XVIIIe siècle. Les prisonniers sont réduits en esclavage dans les propriétés et les harems d'Afrique du Nord.

L'Histoire nous gonfle avec 130 ans de présence française en Afrique du Nord sans jamais parler des siècles et des siècles de barbaresques précédents le long des côtes et parfois bien au-delà.

Questions similaires

Un Algérien d'un certain âge m'a montré la carte d'identité Française qu'il possédait en 1962, juste avant l'indépendance. Il y était noté "Français musulman". Y avait-il bien un système d'apartheid à l'époque de l'Algérie Française ?

François Hollande comme Emmanuel Macron ont reconnu l'injustice et la brutalité de la colonisation française en Algérie. Pourtant, les Algériens semblent toujours attendre plus. Qu'attendent-ils et pourquoi ?

Pourquoi l'Algérie ne s'excuse-t-elle pas auprès de la France pour sa tentative ratée de colonisation? Que se serait-il passé si les Sarrasins n'avaient pas été arrêtés à Poitiers?

Pourquoi les français préfèrent-ils aller en Tunisie ou au Maroc plutôt qu’en Algérie ?

Pourquoi un bon pourcentage des Algériens nés avant l’indépendance (1962) disent que « l'Algérie était beaucoup plus heureuse et prospère du temps de la colonisation française »?

Pourquoi les Français sont-ils qualifiés de colonisateurs en Afrique du Nord, alors que le Maghreb fut d'abord colonisé par les Arabes (au détriment des Kabyles)?

Quelles différences entre la colonisation en Algérie et en Tunisie ? L'occupation en Tunisie a duré plus d'un siècle mais pourtant on entend pas parlé de traumatisme tunisien pourquoi ?

Pourquoi le Maroc, l'Algérie et la Tunisie sont-ils des pays séparés alors qu'ils ont tous un héritage berbère, arabe et français ?
Pourquoi les pieds-noirs étaient en danger en Algérie, alors qu'ils étaient assez nombreux (10% de la population totale), et avaient le support de la France ? Ne pouvaient-ils pas se constituer un état indépendant au sein de l'Algérie ?

La France a-t-elle répandu l'analphabétisme en Algérie pendant la colonisation ?

Which is better to live in, Morocco or Tunisia?

C El Asouab , lives in Morocco Answered Aug 22, 2020

Really depends, both are great countries and have a lot in common, quality of life is better in Morocco and Morocco has more economic opportunities but Tunisia also has a lot of things to offer and great opportunities. Both are touristic countries, clubs and bars are everywhere in both Morocco and tunisia, both countries are very liberal and open-minded, Tunisia is a bit less chaotic because Tunisia only has 11 million compared to Morocco's 40 million but you need to be more specific with your answers.

Related Links

For people who visited both Morocco and Algeria, which country do you think is better for living?

Which has the better quality of life: Morocco or Algeria?

Why did Trump not ban Muslims from Morocco, Algeria, and Tunisia from entering the US, when they are involved in so many terror attacks?

Which is a richer country: Algeria, Tunisia, Egypt, Morocco? And why?
Why isn't Algeria as famous as Morocco?
What would happen if Morocco, Algeria and Tunisia became one single country?
Why is Tunisia so much more Westernized than Algeria, Morocco, or Libya?
Did the Kaftan originate from Algeria or Morocco?
How would Algeria enter (and possibly defeat) Morocco if a war occured?

Why are Morocco, Algeria and Tunisia separate countries despite all having a historic similarity?

Après avoir éliminé les Juifs, qui étaient les suivants sur la liste d'extermination d'Hitler ?

Marc Lawrence Historian

Jerome Cohen Juif de père en fils depuis plus de 120 générations.Traducteur · 3 avr.

Réponse originale : Après avoir éliminé les Juifs, qui était les suivants sur la liste d'extermination d'Hitler ?/ After wiping out the Jews, who was next on Hitler's intended extermination list?

Probablement personne, peut-être les gitans, mais seuls les Juifs ont été proposés à l'extermination en tant que tels. Les autres races devaient être réduites en esclavage.

S'il avait vécu assez longtemps et gagné la guerre pour conquérir la Russie, après la soumission et l'asservissement des Slaves, l'Afrique aurait probablement été la suivante.

L'Empire allemand était présent en Afrique, mais il en a été largement chassé après sa défaite lors de la Première Guerre mondiale et l'effondrement de l'Empire après l'abdication du Kaiser.

Selon les principes raciaux nazis, les Noirs étaient inférieurs aux Aryens, mais supérieurs aux Juifs. Les nazis n'auraient eu aucun problème à traiter les Noirs avec une brutalité qui aurait fait rougir Léopold de Belgique.

Propagande raciste nazie, comparant les noirs à des singes.

Quel était le QI estimé d'Hitler selon les standards d'aujourd'hui? What was Adolf Hitler's estimated IQ?

Cécile Pottier , Connaissance , Traducteur · Traduit le 17 avr. 2021

Traduction de John Cate Réponse originale : Quel était le QI d'Adolf Hitler ? e pense qu'il avait un QI d'environ 140.

John Cate Freelance Public Relations Specialist, Bethel, NC

Les Alliés ont testé le QI des principaux nazis qu'ils ont capturés à la fin de la guerre, et les plus intelligents d'entre eux étaient Hjalmar Schacht à 143, Arthur Seyss-Inquart à 141, et Hermann Goering et Karl Doenitz à 138. Et puis zut, voici la liste complète :

1	Hjalmar Schacht	143
2	Arthur Seyss-Inquart	141
3	Hermann Goering	138
4	Karl Doenitz	138
5	Franz von Papen	134
6	Eric Raeder	134
7	Dr. Hans Frank	130
8	Hans Fritsche	130
9	Baldur von Schirach	130
10	Joachim von Ribbentrop	129
11	Wilhelm Keitel	129
12	Albert Speer	128
13	Alfred Jodl	127
14	Alfred Rosenberg	127
15	Constantin von Neurath	125
16	Walther Funk	124
17	Wilhelm Frick	124
18	Rudolf Hess	120
19	Fritz Sauckel	118
20	Ernst Kaltenbrunner	113
21	Julius Streicher	106

Les principaux nazis formaient un groupe intelligent. Même Streicher, l'abruti de rédacteur en chef de Der Sturmer, avait une intelligence supérieure à la moyenne.

Heinrich Himmler est mort avant d'avoir pu être testé, mais je parie qu'il était aussi dans les 130. Je n'aurais pas été choqué si Otto Skorzeny avait dépassé les 140, mais il a été attrapé plus tard et n'a jamais été testé à ma connaissance. Reinhard Heydrich les a peut-être tous dépassés. Sa disparition prématurée, bien qu'elle ait été un gain énorme pour la race humaine, a été en soi une grande perte de cerveaux pour l'Allemagne nazie.

Hitler a réussi à garder le contrôle sur tous ces gens, et s'il a pu le faire, il était probablement parmi les meilleurs d'entre eux, ce qui signifie qu'il avait plus de 140 de QI. Ses écrits (en fait, ses dictées) dans Mein Kampf, ses discours publics et ses commentaires dans Hitler's Table Talk me donnent l'impression qu'il était un homme très intelligent, qui pouvait très bien prendre la mesure des autres, mais qui ne pouvait tout simplement pas penser au-delà de certaines idées préconçues. Comme je l'ai dit à plusieurs reprises, Adolf Hitler était intelligent, mais il n'était pas sage.

Questions similaires

Hitler a-t-il déjà épargné un Juif ?
Pour quelles raisons Adolf Hitler haïssait-il les Juifs ?

Pourquoi les nazis ont-ils décidé de gazer les Juifs, et ont-ils utilisé d'autres méthodes de mise à mort ?

Pendant la Seconde Guerre mondiale, y a-t-il eu des généraux allemands et d'autres dirigeants qui n'étaient pas d'accord avec la façon dont les Juifs étaient traités ? Y en a-t-il eu qui ont défié les ordres et risqué leur vie ?

À la fin de la Seconde Guerre mondiale, lorsque les Juifs qui ont survécu à l'Holocauste sont rentrés chez eux, dans les endroits mêmes où leurs voisins les avaient dénoncés et livrés aux nazis, qu'ont-ils fait ?

Est-ce qu'Hitler était vraiment juif ?

Pour les fachos qui considèrent qu'Hitler avait raison, comment est-ce possible que les Juifs soient à la fois inférieurs mais capable de diriger le monde en même temps ?

Y a-t-il un événement particulier dans la vie d' Hitler qui a déclenché sa haine envers les Juifs ?

Pourquoi Hitler s'est acharné contre les Juifs ?

Pourquoi les juifs ont-ils été la cible d'Hitler et pas quelqu'un d'autre ?

What happened during the Alaouite Succession Crisis 1727–1757?

Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan Lives in Meknès, Morocco (1900–present) Oct 18

Morocco's golden age came to an end in 1465 when the final Sultan of the glorious Marinid family lost his life and his head alongside his Jewish Prime Minister due to a conspiracy concocted by the Wattasid family.

This unleashed 334 years of civil war in Morocco as the Wattasids were rejected and soon every noble family and tribe was claiming the throne and fighting amongst themselves.

The Alaouites, powerful landlords in the eastern frontier, would raise an army of slaves known as the Abid al-Bukhari (Slaves of Bukharia) to fight on their behalf. Agents of the family prowled the slave markets of North Africa in search of fit and healthy African and European boys to purchase and train for a life of military service. Those among them who showed intelligence and talent were selected to become officers.

Alaouite Sultan with his slave soldiers behind him

Sure enough, the slave army won victory after victory and in 1672, Sultan Ismail took the throne and the Alaouite family became Morocco's official dynasty.

In Sultan Ismail's eyes, his slave army was meant to be apolitical and loyal to the Sultan as slaves were meant to obey their masters however it appears Sultan Ismail didn't conside that his slave army, posessing weapons, might greatly prefer that they play a role in the selection of the Sultan.

Alas the slave officers didn't agree on who that Sultan should be.

So the second to last civil war began soon after Ismail's death in 1727

The slave officers offered their services to the highest bidder and the empire was torn apart.

Prince Abdullah emerged at the head of the pack as he chose to align himself with the Guerouan Berbers and several slave officers based in Meknes, his father's former capital. Prince Abdullah spent the next 21 years campaigning with his son, Prince Mohammed, serving as general and prime minister.

After emerging victorious in 1748, Sultan Abdullah split the country with his son, who had served him faithfully and loyally. Mohammed was named viceroy of the south and sent to rule from Marrakesh while Abdullah ruled in the north. When Abdullah died in 1757, Mohammed became Sultan Mohammed III and ruled a united Morocco.

Morocco in the 1700s

Thus Moroccans enjoyed 33 years of peace. You didn't ask but this was the second and final succession crisis and the one that determined Morocco's fate:

The War of Two Brothers (1790-1792): the end of Morocco's 334 years of civil war

In 1790, the sickly Sultan Mohammed III clashed with his son, Prince Yazid the Yellow, his name came from his blond complexion which he inherited from his Irish mother (no, the Alaouites never had children with native Moroccans to maintain an illusion of neutrality).

Due to the Moroccan Empire's diversity, the Alaouite Sultans had children with foreign women to avoid appearing to prefer one ethnicity over another. Sultan Abdelaziz (r. 1894–1908) was the son of a Georgian woman, his brother Abdelhafid had a Turkish mother. Prince Abdullah had a West African mother.

In 1789, Yazid pulled a stunt while in Mecca where tried raiding a caravan of Moroccan pilgrims, infuriating the Ottomans, who are responsible for the protection of pilgrims, and his father, who felt humiliated. Yazid was disowned and it was his brother, Hisham, who was meant to take the throne.

However Yazid snuck into Morocco and found asylum among the Riffian Berbers of the north. Yazid was reckless, violent, and wild but to the Riffians this made him endearing. A real man is meant to be daring and take risks, they believed.

Which is why Morocco split in 1790 when Sultan Mohammed III died.

The Riffian Berbers and northern nobility of Fes proclaimed Yazid as Sultan
The southern nobility of Marrakesh declared Hisham, Mohammed's true heir, as Sultan

Yazid made a dash for Marrakesh and quickly crushed his brother's army and promptly sacked the city as punishment for disloyalty but this failed to end the civil war. Prince Hisham fled to the countryside and raised a new army.

Hisham would exact revenge in the fields of Marrakesh when he managed to kill his brother in battle. This didn't end the civil war either.

The Riffian Berbers and northern nobility panicked as they greatly feared what sort of revenge Prince Hisham might exact from them and so a meeting was held in Fes to find a compromise candidate who would be palatable to both, northerners and southerners.

That candidate was Prince Slimane

Left is Sultan Abdulrahman (r. 1822–1859), right is Sultan Slimane (r. 1792–1822)

Prince Slimane was an Islamic Scholar, not a warrior, and had a reputation for honesty, wisdom and intelligence. It was this reputation that allowed the northern gamble to pay off, eager to avoid yet another civil war, the southern nobles and tribes agreed to accept Slimane as Sultan and betrayed Hisham. He would rule from 1792 to 1822.

This did lead to a cold war with a bitter and brooding Prince Hisham based in the southern provinces. The conflict defused due to two events that changed the course of Moroccan history.

First, Prince Hisham died in 1799 of plague.

Second, Sultan Slimane named Prince Abdulrahman, son of Hisham, as his heir rather than one of his own sons.

By naming Abudlrahman as heir, Sultan Slimane thus took away an excuse for the southerners to rebel. Furthermore by having Abdulrahman moved to Fes where he could live among the northern nobility and tribes, they too lost any reason to fear his reign.

Thanks to those two events, 334 years came to an end, the Alaouite dynasty was established and Morocco hasn't seen a civil war since

Related Links

What was the history of the Jacobites before 1745?

Why did France countries develop into a territorial kingdom rather than dynastic one? Whereas the rest of Europe seemed to have ever-changing borders due to royal marriages and inheritances, why was France seemingly so stable?

While Luxembourg is a monarchy, why isn't it called Kingdom of Luxembourg but Grand Duchy of Luxembourg? Why is the monarch conferred the title of Grand Duke but not king or even a prince? What's the historic relevance here?

What's the reason and Frank Kings of 2nd half of 600s, after Greek departure from Iberia, didn't descend there to fill the vacuum, consolidating with Visigoths a defense against imminent Arab attack, avoiding their inroad in Central France as in 732?

Was the Arab world in Nassers time like a single nation of brothers?

After Edward III deposed the regime of Roger Mortimer his mother, Isabella of Why was Morocco the first nation to recognize America's independence?

Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan Lives in Meknès, Morocco (1900–present) Updated 4y Originally Answered: Why was Morocco -- not our ally France -- the first country to recognize the brand new United States of America?

Because the Americans asked Morocco for protection.

Until the 19th century, it was common for North African Pirates (known as the Barbary Pirates) to attack European ships and enslave the people they took hostage thus feeding the Barbary slave trade which saw some 2 million Europeans enslaved by the North Africans.

Artist's depiction of Barbary Pirates taking a European ship

Upon declaring independence in 1776, American merchant ships took to sea with their new flag thus earning the attention of North African pirates who saw them as easy pickings. Unable to defend themselves against Pirate attacks as the United States lacked a formidable blue water navy at the time, the Americans sent a delegation to Sultan Mohammed III of Morocco asking him to protect American ships as they travel to Europe.

The Sultan agreed.

This is due to the Sultan's eagerness to attract commercial treaties having signed some with European states: Denmark (1757), England (1760), Venice (1765) , Spain (1767) , Netherlands (1777) and finally the United States (1777, officially signed in 1787). Americans, however, were not given a trade center (each European state had a city which they had to trade in, for example the Dutch could only do trade in Larache nowhere else.)

Thus the Sultan recognized American independence in 1777 when he agreed to protect American merchant vessels and to accept trade with the United States.

Related Links

Why don't most Americans know of Morocco even though it was the first country to recognize the US independence in 1777?

How and why was Morocco the first country to acknowledge the United States as a separate country? Was Morocco important in the late 1700s? Did their acknowledgement impact other countries?

Has north America ever been called Morocco?

Is it true that the first name of America was Morocco?

What is the story behind Morocco being the first nation to recognize the U.S.? How did they ever hear about the new United States?

When John Cate said Morocco was the first country ever to recognize the US as Related:How and why was Morocco the first country to acknowledge the United States as a separate country? Was Morocco important in the late 1700s? Did their acknowledgement impact other countries?

John Cate Freelance Public Relations Specialist, Bethel, NCUpvoted by

Nathan Creager : lives in The United States of America (1983 present) and Brayden Swanson , Studied history extensively for six years2y

I think the Sultan of Morocco had some bad dealings with the British not long before then, and his decision was in part a way of sticking it to the Brits.

He simply issued an order on 20 December 1777 that ships flying the flag of the United States of America were to be considered the same as any other sovereign nation-state. The two countries didn't establish formal diplomatic relations until after the war, but his order was de facto recognition of American independence by the Sultanate of Morocco. In fact, the Sultan even tried to make a trade agreement not long after, but we asked him to wait until after the war was over.

In 1786, the USA and Morocco negotiated a treaty of friendship which remains in force to this day. It is the oldest international treaty ratified by the United States that still remains in force.

Morocco did not just recognize breakaway states unilaterally. In 1863, a later Sultan ordered that Confederate ships not be accepted at Moroccan ports, because they were in rebellion against a country that was a friend of Morocco.

When Morocco freed itself from 44 years of French suzerainty in 1956, both countries considered that the 1786 treaty remained in force. They continue to be one of our best friends in this part of the world.

Related Links

Why don't most Americans know of Morocco even though it was the first country to recognize the US independence in 1777?

How and why was Morocco the first country to acknowledge the United States as a separate country? Was Morocco important in the late 1700s? Did their acknowledgement impact other countries?

Has north America ever been called Morocco?

Is it true that the first name of America was Morocco?

What is the story behind Morocco being the first nation to recognize the U.S.? How did they ever hear about the new United States?

When John Cate said Morocco was the first country ever to recognize the US as

Why are there not as many Amazigh speakers in Tunisia and Libya as in Morocco and Algeria?

Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan Lives in Meknès, Morocco (1900–present) 3y

Lack of geographic isolation

I mention very often that I'm a Riffian berber. But many people don't ponder why Riffians are called Riffians. My people's name comes not from an area or a river or something foreigners gave us but these beautiful things:

The Mountains!

For over a millennia , Berbers lived in the Rif Mountains hence why foreigners, both Europeans and Arabs, call us the Rifi or Riffians in reference to the mountains we call home.

But the mountains haven’t just graced us with their beauty and lush fertile land but also natural isolation that protects us from the outside world.

Riffian village deep in the Mountains

This is why I always find it amusing when people assume we were forced into Islam or the Arabs could actually compel us to do anything against our wishes. This assumes that Arabs could some how enter the Mountains and their valleys in full force and maintain long supply lines through the rugged terrain during their time finding each Riffian village and defeating them.

This is something that not even European powers could accomplish to our pride, during the Rif War the Spaniards received a beating as they entered our mountains and even the mighty French realized that it was a suicidal task.

That’s why they resorted to using their planes to locate the Riffian settlements and bomb them or gas them.

Riffian town near the Mountain top

My point being that there was geographic isolation limiting contact and permitting cultural bubbles

Riffians didn't have to mix with Arabs or encounter them unless they wanted to, at which point they would venture out of the mountains to one of the coastal cities. Nador was known to be a population trade center and meeting point for Arabs and Riffians.

As a result, Arabic culture and influence wasn't able to penetrate the Rif that well until the modern era. Ensuring that Riffian culture and language could continue to exist and thrive in peace without impediment. The only time Riffians would learn Arabic was if they intended to become an Islamic Scholar at which point they were sent by their tribe to Fes for their studies before returning to be immersed in Riffian culture. Ensuring that even the Riffian Islamic Scholars remained Riffian and didn't arabize.

The Riffians who arabized, such as my family, were those who left the Rif and settled among the Arabs and Arabized Berbers.

This was the case for the Kabyle Berbers and the Atlasian Berbers as well who also come from isolated mountain settlements. The Mozabites are rare in that their isolation comes from the fact that they live so deep in the desert that not even the Arabs would want to go to them.

Kabyle village

The Mozabites live deep in the desert

The Libyan and Tunisian Berbers didn't have this ability.

The only Libyan Berbers who avoided Arabization were those who lived in the Nafusa Mountains and thus like their Algerian and Moroccan counterparts limited contact between them and Arabs.

Without isolation, the Berbers found themselves swamped by Arabic culture as the State insisted they learn Arabic, Arabization became vital if you wished to advance in life such as become a politician or merchant and so forth.

Related Links

Why are there few Berber speaking people nowadays in Tunisia contrary to other Maghrebi countries? Were there more Arab migrations in Tunisia than in Algeria and Morocco?

Is Tunisia more connected to Libya or Algeria?

Why are Morocco, Algeria and Tunisia separate countries despite all having a Berber, Arab and French history?

Why is Tunisia so much more Westernized than Algeria, Morocco, or Libya?

What would happen if Morocco, Algeria and Tunisia became one single country?

How much land and water did Tunisia lose to its neighbors (Algeria, Libya,

Why do Moroccans eat with their hands?

Elsugga3000 Passionate about psychology and philosophy. I also document myself on male and female behavior. trendy philosophy and psychology 26 jul.

Not just Moroccans. Many African countries have a tradition of feeding themselves by hand, especially in Black Africa:

The left hand is used for cleaning oneself (i.e. when using the toilet) and the right hand is used for eating and handing things to others.

Food should never be touched with the left hand as it is considered impure and the right hand should be used for eating and giving objects to others. It's a form of respect.

Dishes that are eaten with hands in sub-Saharan Africa are: foufou, plakali, attieke fish and others. These are dishes consisting of plantain and cassava prepared in a ball with sauce on the side.

It's very delicious, 😍😍

Related: Why do Moroccans eat with their hands?

Sefreen Knowledge: Arabic sat.

Moroccans do not eat with their hands directly but use bread (in Arabic khobz خبز) both as a spoon and as food.

So when he eats, a Moroccan takes a small piece of bread and picks up food with it, the usefulness of bread comes from the fact that Moroccan dishes are very often composed of a sauce called marqa مرقة (essentially made of water, d oil, onions and spices) which can only be absorbed through bread. I think this way of eating is common with all the Maghreb countries.

Among the dishes that are eaten with bread:

The Tagine

It is when the bread is an integral part of the dish that Moroccans use their hands directly, this is the case of the Bastilla :

There are also dishes that are eaten with spoons such as Couscous :

Of course, Moroccans always wash their hands before and after eating.

Similar questions

Why don't Muslims and Jews eat pork?

Controversial question: what do you prefer Moroccan, Algerian or Tunisian couscous?

Is Moroccan cuisine the best in the Maghreb?

Why are Moroccans fleeing Morocco?

Is there a difference between Moroccan cuisine and Algerian cuisine?

Why in Morocco, men sometimes hold each other by the little finger when they walk in the street?

COUNTRY FACT FILE

Location
A monarchial State situated on northwestern coast of Africa.

Official title of the state
Kingdom of Morocco (al-Maghrib)

Flag description:

Red with a green pentacle (five-pointed, linear star) known as Sulayman's (Solomon's) seal in the center of the flag; red and green are traditional colors in Arab flags, although the use of red is more commonly associated with the Arab states of the Persian gulf; the pentacle represents the five pillars of Islam and signifies the association between God and the nation; design dates to 1912.

Neighbours

Algeria on S.E, Western Sahara on SW. Land boundaries; total 2,017 km. Border countries; Algeria 1,559 km, Western Sahara 443 km, Spain (Ceuta) 6.3 km, Spain (Melila) 9.6 km.

Founder of The Nation
A kingdom was formed in exile with the headship of King Mohammed V, as monarchial head of Morocco and his son Moulay Hassan (the latter king Hassan II) as Crownprince after having travelled from France to Madagascar in January, 1954.

Local division
15 regions, 6 prefectures

Government type
Constitutional Monarch. There is a king with vast powers alongside two elected chambers of parliaments. Opposition political parties are allowed.

Legislation chamber
Bicameral Parliament

Brief Political History:
Morocco's long struggle for independence from France ended in 1956. The internationalized city of Tangier was turned over to the new country that same year. Morocco virtually annexed Western Sahara during the late 1970s, but final resolution on the status of the territory remains unresolved. Gradual political reforms in the 1990s resulted in the establishment of a bicameral legislature in 1997. Parliamentary elections were held for the second time in September 2002 and municipal elections were held in September 2003.

Form of State
A constitutional Monarchy (Agnatic primogeniture) with two legislative houses. King, Prime Minister is the head of government. House of Councillors (upper house) 270 seats, members are elected indirectly by local councils, professional associations and labour union councils to serve for nine-year terms, and the House of representatives (Elective) 325 seats, members consisted of multi-seat constituencies are elected by popular vote to serve for five-year terms.

Executive branch
Separated by head of Monarch (agnatic primogeniture) and head of Government. Head of Government is to be appointed by the monarch following legislative elections.

Judicial Chamber
Supreme Court

Capital city

Rabat-sale Altitude 75 mtrs/246 ft.

Geographic coordinates 34.01N , 6.49W. Located on the Atlantic coast. Ar-Rabat or Ar-Ribat literally meaning for "fortified place", first settled as "Chellah" on the third century BC.

Names of main towns

Casablanca, Fez, Oujda, Marakesh, Meknes, Titwan, Kenitra, Agadir, Tangier, Safi.

Date of independence
3rd March, 1956.

Religions (Major)
Muslim 98%, Christian 1%, others 1%.

Main spoken languages
Arabic (official), French (commercial/In government), Berber,Spanish. Currency unit

Moroccan Dirham (MAD)= 100 Centimes.

Area in Km2

446,550.00

Country area comparison in Africa

25 out of 55 states.

Demographic terms ;-

Average annual population growth rate 1.077 %

Birth rate 19.4 births per 1,000 population

Death rate 4.74 deaths per 1,000 population

Average life expectancy ; 75.69 years

Male 72.63 years ; Female 78.9 years;

Illiteracy rate (%)

Male: 32, Female: 56

Average per capita income

USD 4, 800

Population density

70.2/km2

Urban population (%)

60

Contributor groups

Farming, Fishing: 14, Industry: 38, Social service:48 Main

Export Items

Manganese, phosphates, fruits, clothings.

Economy is based on

Agriculture & Light industry

Climate

Mediteranean; Warm on the coast; More extreme in the interior; Extremes;-

Lowest point; Sebkha Tah -55 mtrs.

Highest point; Jebel Toubkal 4,155 mtrs.

Weather of the Capital city (Rabat-Sale) average annual temperature 17.4

Altitude 65 mtrs

Hottest month August 18 - 28 oc average daiiy minimum and maximum.

Coldest Month January 8 17oc

Driest Month July 1mm average Rf.

Wettest Month December 86mm average Rf.

Measures Metric system & Local measures are used.

Time zone

GMT/UTC+0

Public holidays

1st January, 3rd March, 1st May, 9th July, 6th November, All Muslim holidays.

Ethnic groups

Arabs/Berbers 99%.

Topographic & Environmental concern

The Atlas Mountains of northwestern Africa are home to one of the highest peaks on the continent, Mount Toubkal. For thousands of years, the original inhabitants of North Africa, the Berbers, have lived in the range, cultivating their craft of carpet-weaving and selling their goods at the traveling market. Today, tourists and locals alike also come to the remote mountains of Morocco to enjoy one the few ski resorts in all of Africa.

West Sahara, mountain ranges to/rift in the middle atlas, upper Atlas and anti-Atlas/rich plains in the W. Alluvial plains in SW, well cultivated plateaus in the centre. Environment: land degradation/desertification (soil erosion resulting from farming of marginal areas, overgrazing, destruction of vegetation); water supplies contaminated by raw sewage; siltation of reservoirs; oil pollution of coastal waters. A pre-Sahara arid zone extending from SE.

Economy Overview

Morocco faces the problems typical of developing countries - restraining government spending, reducing constraints on private activity and foreign trade, and achieving sustainable economic growth. Despite structural adjustment programs supported by the IMF, the World Bank, and the Paris Club, the dirham is only fully convertible for current account transactions. Reforms of the financial sector are being contemplated. Droughts depressed activity in the key agricultural sector and contributed to a stagnant economy in 2002. Morocco reported large foreign exchange inflows from the sale of a mobile telephone license, and partial privatization of the state-owned telecommunications company and the state tobacco company. Favorable rainfall in 2003 led to a growth of 6%. Formidable long-term challenges include: preparing the economy for freer trade with the EU and US, improving education, and attracting foreign investment to boost living standards and job prospects for Morocco's youth.

Industry

Carpets, clothing, leather-goods, tourism, phosphate rock mining & processing, textiles, construction, energy.

Chief crops

Grains, citrus fruits, date-olives, grapes, palm-oil, other fruits, vegetables
: livestock Natural resources

Antimony, Cobalt, Manganese, Phosphates, Iron ore, Lead, Coal, Zinc, Salt, Fish.

Land in use (%)

Arable land: 21

Grassland: 47

Forest woods: 18

Other: 14

Marine:

Coastline; 1835 km

Commercial Sea ports:-

Rabat, Casablanca, Tangier, Elhoceima

Development prospect;-

On the economic front, the government has redoubled its efforts at structural reform. In September, 2011 France's former president Nicolas Sarkozy travelled to Morocco to mark the launch of the construction of a high-speed rail link that will connect Casablanca, Rabat and Tangiers. Other landmark projects that the government is developing include two 1GW nuclear reactors, the contracts for which should be launched within the next two years. In March, the Office Chérifien des Phosphates started work on a new fertiliser plant with a capacity of 1m tn as part of a programme to become the world's largest diammonium phosphate producer by 2015.

Analysts predict strong economic growth in the coming years due to higher agricultural production and the performance of the service sector. About 40% of the population works in agriculture-related industries, but the service sector is growing fast and created 125,000 new jobs from January to June 2011. Southern European countries – some of whom are Morocco's major trading partners – will be licking their wounds after the EU debt crisis, hitting the export sector hard. However, previous funds to stabilise textiles and other manufacturers could be revived to shield them from the worst.

The government has inflation largely under control but higher international food and fuel prices are putting stress on the budget of the Caisse de Compensation. The 2012 budget could force companies and wealthy individuals to contribute to the National Fund for Social Solidarity due to the burden on public finances created by the subsidies. The government plans to raise revenue by selling its stakes in companies including part of its 30% share of Maroc Telecom.

What absolutely should not be done in Morocco?

Jean Claude Gabert

Cabinet Blabla, Page, Blanche & Ass. Updated on 10 MB

I live in Morocco as an expatriate. I am still amazed every day at the qualities of Moroccans, who have many lessons in civility to give us.

The "absolutely" of the question is troublesome. Of course it is absolutely necessary to avoid smoking their thing in public. You're going to get picked up.

Of course, it is absolutely necessary to avoid talking about the King, even in a respectful way and in a low voice. The media systematically call him "His Majesty King Mohammed VI may God assist him", that is to say. If it is really necessary to talk about political decisions, it is better to talk about the "Palace".

Prix Nobel d'économie
L'écologie sans les idéologues le français
Maroc Hebdo
43 ANS DE GUERRE FROIDE
KHLASS BARAK
SA MAJESTÉ LE ROI APPELLE À LA NORMALISATION AVEC L'ALGÉRIE.
Le Temps
SAHARA MAROCAIN ET MAGHR
LE ROI INVITE L'ALGÉR
À HONORER L'HISTOIR
LE MAROC AMÉLIORE SON CLASSEMENT DE 9 PLACES
Le Reporter
PROPOSITION HISTORIQUE DE SM MOHAMMED VI À L'A
APPEL À «LA PAIX DES BRAV
L'Observat
du Maroc et d'Afrique
MOHAMMED V
LA MAIN À L'A

And of course, we must not annoy Muslims at home: absolutely avoid talking about religion. It's a shame, they would have things to say, if only theologically, but the conversation turns short instantly. This is considered a tourist's clumsiness. (What would I do if a visiting North African asked me about the Holy Trinity?)

I add with shyness that it is absolutely necessary to avoid any allusion to sexual intimacy, even between friends. Never push your neighbor from the elbow when a pretty girl passes, never make jokes, puns, never tell anecdote or memory about it... It is considered a tourist rudeness. This eliminates a good part of French humor. Morocco in this aspect reminds me of the province in my grandmother's time.

The road network is comparable to ours (except that the signage is less rigorous), but it is absolutely necessary to avoid doing the smart thing on the roads: here, we drive to reality, according to what the immediate circumstances require. (I lived at Mobylette in Paris, I learned!)

We must not count on the discipline of the type we double, nor on that of the guy who comes in front and even less on that of the guy doubling the guy who comes in front. I passed the permit here again and no one in the whole procedure could explain to me the exact protocol of the Moroccan roundabouts (some have lights on one side only).

In the same vein, in lighter, it is absolutely not necessary to do the clever in a Moroccan staircase. Traditional or brand new, either it is steeper than a miller's ladder (1), or its steps are uneven in all their dimensions (2), or it is paved in trompe-l'oeil, optical illusion way, g-break mode. (3). Handrails are often poetic. Either way, you'll hit your head.

For the "no-absolutely", Morocco teaches you to become courteous again. We must greet, inquire about the various health, smile, thank, thank thanks ... all this for a pack of cigarettes or a full of diesel. We therefore avoid, everywhere and all the time, to be abrupt, impatient, anonymous. It can be learned, it feels good but it makes you addicted.

Moroccans are pious, but are not Amish: a European can absolutely dress like at home, but, little by little, she will avoid outfits too much on her own.... too much what? She will know.

We must not forget to say "insha Allah" as soon as we talk about the future, even the nearest one. That's an absolute.. All things considered, it is not misguided to frequently remember what Victor Hugo said to Napoleon: "No, Sire, the future is nobody's, the future is God's."

This answer is improvised, there is a lot to say. (I added personal photos.)

How are the French perceived in Morocco?

Regina Phalanx

.

Location: Morocco3 years

I do not know if it is wise to generalize, but I launch myself under the guidance of the psychology of the people instead of advancing stereotypes.
If we take a look at the historical context, we will find that although Moroccans resisted French colonization in Morocco, a good category has developed an inferiority complex compared to the France and the French. This has infiltrated through the generations to arrive at ours and keep its influence on the way we perceive the French in Morocco.

A good part of young Moroccan parents make sure that they speak to their children in French and that they understand it from a very young age. This is one of the most glaring aspects. Others even more garves show that there is an identity crisis and that many Moroccans have a penchant for living in the European way, at a time when they have their feet here in Morocco.

I would then say that a good category of Moroccans consider Europeans in general and French in particular as a superior race.

On the other hand, there is another part that curses the France and the French and that states it clearly: I hate everything that has to do with the France, including the French language that is imposed on us in our country which, in principle, has nothing to do with the eponymous language. A third category is indifferent. She just likes to interact with people from different backgrounds without worrying about the race they belong to.

As for me, I cannot forgive the damage of the French colonization that Morocco is still suffering. But we cannot blame the new generations for passing on to them. I am then indifferent to the French. I consider them like any other citizen of the world. Because after all, we are universal beings and it is our behaviors and education that decide our image. And then afterwards, the race is only a detail that does not matter to me.
I hope I have answered your question.

Ledjh Timizar

.

Follow

Location: Algiers, AlgeriaUpdated on 2 years

Associate
Why is Morocco constantly presented as a back country?

Yes, why, because Morocco cultivates its thousand-year-old traditions?

His feudal allegiance ceremonies?

Its small traditional trades: mule women, a unique professional category in the world, which brighten up the Moroccan landscape:

His fairies of the house, "little maids" so typical engaged from the age of 5 years Le Matin - 80,000 girls under the age of 15 exploited as ...instead of going to school like everyone else and that the expatriate will be able to afford a price defying all competition.

Socially, Morocco is not the last in the class, far from it: for example, it is in 121st place on the Human Development Index, category "average development", ahead of Mauritania in the Maghreb.

Its literacy rate is also not catastrophic: there are only 32% of illiterates in Morocco, mainly rural women: 42% of Moroccan women are illiterate against 22% of men, it is a comfortable rate to provide the market for housekeepers from 7 to 77 years old and prostitutes intended for both internal consumption including tourism and export in all directions.

Morocco, ranked 146th in literacy rates, is ahead of Mauritania and Yemen among Arab countries. and elsewhere in Africa it outperforms the giant Nigeria, the richest country in Africa and whose half of the population is recognized as the poorest in the world, dethroning India this year.

"In Morocco 29.0% of adult women have at least secondary education, compared to 35.6% of men." Still 32% of illiterates in Morocco: Women, the first victims of the scourge

On the economic level, certainly Moroccan society is the most unequal in North Africa,Morocco, the most unequal country in North Africa but think that this is the price of development because the country is moving forward at the speed of the TGV! Ah, the TGV, a royal compensation for not having bought the French Rafale and which will allow foreign tourists to reach the imperial cities more quickly.
Morocco is proudly the country that attracts the largest flow of foreign investment to the region. Between foreign companies and His Majesty the king richer than the Emir of Qatar Morocco does not know the financial crisis. Moroccans are another matter: "More than 5 million inhabitants of the kingdom live on less than 1 euro a day and its poverty rate exceeds 18%!" How Mohammed VI made Morocco his cash machine . It's not the same figure as the official figure but hey...

In any case, Moroccans can count on their "King of the poor" to ensure his own prosperity: bad tongues ensure that the King has made his kingdom his personal holding, a real pump of phynances, that "in less than ten years of reign M6 has indulged, according to the authors, in "a kind of holp-up against the economy of his country". How Mohammed VI made Morocco his cash machine . "The King reigns in the insurance markets, telecoms, agri-food, real estate, energy and distribution."

This article says worse than hanging from the "Predator King" but I want to distance myself from it and make it clear vigorously that I leave to the authors of this fire the entire responsibility for their remarks.

I wonder: a kingdom whose sovereign demands from its subjects sessions of ritual prostrations with great pomp, a public treasury and a national economy properly monopolized by the king, demonstrators thrown into the dungeon for twenty years, women largely illiterate in charge of feeding their families summoned to choose between making fatma or puta, Is this country feudal or modern? Backwardness is not precisely what is so popular with foreign tourists who after all do not have to worry about the misfortune of the natives. Tourists are there to admire the old stones, the houses threatening ruin paved with linen on all the balconies, the little shoe shiners and other precarious livelihoods and "enjoy" the picturesque misery of the Third World, the rest it does not concern them.

Fez

2.2 k views

Show 11 positive votes

Similar questions

What are the facts about Morocco that foreigners don't believe in before arriving in Morocco?

What should I ever do if I visit Morocco?

Why are Moroccans fleeing Morocco?

What bothers you about Moroccan culture?

Do you like Morocco?

What do you think of Moroccans?

Why is Morocco constantly presented as a backcountry?

What is the best city in Morocco?

How are the French perceived in Morocco?

What are the places that you should definitely see in Morocco?

Why are Moroccans fleeing Morocco?

Jerome Cohen

.

Follow

My father was from Casablanca, my mother makes a great tagine! Translator · 2 years

Rachid Haroune

Moroccan

This answer may not be an accurate translation of

Rachid Haroune

in Quora in English:

Why are Moroccans fleeing Morocco?

Recently, Moroccans bought tickets for the World Cup in order to enter Russia without a visa and tried to smuggle into Finland, a member of the European Union. It is also estimated that more than four million Moroccans live abroad.

The main reason for all these people to leave their country is corruption.

Corruption □ □ □ □ □ □

Corruption in Morocco is a wild horse without reins. Thus, poor young people find it difficult to live in such an environment where nepotism, favoritism and patronage are the key elements to flourish and shine. Transparency International's 2016 Corruption Perception Index gave Morocco a score of 37, lower than the global average of 43. On a scale of 0 to 100, the lower the figure, the higher the perceived level of corruption in the public sector. The kingdom ranks in the middle, 90th out of 176 countries.[1]

Morocco is the largest exporter of phosphate, a sector monopolized by elite families who have good relations with the royal family and other government decision-makers. Ordinary people consider themselves foreigners within their country. They do not have the same rights and equivalent benefits that privileged families enjoy. These privileged entities enjoy impunity and enormous power since government officials and high-ranking employees are an integral part of this network. In one corruption case, a leaked list revealed the identities of several officials and state agents who bought large parcels of state-owned land for a fraction of the price. They had paid GBP 30 for one square metre instead of the market price of GBP 320. The Ministries of interior and finance reportedly defended the confiscation of the land and claimed that the leaked list was politically motivated (Middle East Monitor, August 2016).[2]

Despite their poverty, Moroccans perceive that their country is rich and opulent, but wealth is beyond their reach. They feel victims of a failing regime that absorbs all the goods and wealth of the country and leaves them nothing, and therefore do not hesitate to leave when they have the opportunity. They usually joke this doaa (supplication) "Our Lord, get us out of this city of oppressive people? And "if we come back, we will really be evildoers" Anissaa 75, Almuminun 107.

Footnotes [1] https://www.moroccoworldnews.com...

[2] Morocco Still Struggles Against Corruption, Government Accelerating Reform Efforts: El Othmani

Questions similaires

Maroc : que pensent les citoyens marocains ordinaires du roi du Maroc ?

Que ne doit-on absolument pas faire au Maroc ?

Comment sera le Maroc dans 20 ans ?

Qu'est-ce qui manque le plus aux Marocains quand ils vont à l'étranger ?

Le Maroc est-il un pays émergent ?

Quelle est la meilleure ville au Maroc ?

Quels sont les pays que les Marocains détestent le plus ?

Pourquoi les Français regardent les Marocains avec mépris ?

Pourquoi le Maroc est-il constamment présenté comme un pays arrière ?

Aimez-vous le Maroc ?

Will Algeria attack Morocco?

Abdelhadi Nakhal

Location: Morocco8 mo

Algerians and Moroccans constitute a single people in two states.

Neither a Moroccan nor an Algerian would wish to shed his brother's blood.

We must remember the habil and Kabil story mentioned in the Qur'an:

باسم الله الرحمن الرحيم:

27 And tell them in all truth the story of the two sons of Adam. Both offered sacrifices; that of one was accepted and that of the other was not. He said, "I will surely kill you." -"Allah accepts," said the other, "only from the pious."

28 If you extend your hand to kill me, I will not extend my hand to you to kill you: for I fear Allah, the Lord of the Universe.

29 I want you to leave with the sin of having killed me and with your own sin: then you will be among the people of Fire. This is the reward of the unjust.

30 His soul incited him to kill his brother. He therefore killed him and thus became one of the losers.

31 Then Allah sent a raven who began to scratch the earth to show him how to bury his brother's corpse. He said, "Woe to me! Am I unable to be, like this raven, able to bury my brother's corpse? He then became one of those eaten away at by remorse.

32 That is why We have prescribed for the children of Israel (Israel) that whoever kills a person not guilty of murder or corruption on earth, it is as if he had killed all men. And whoever gives him the gift of life is as if he were giving life to all men. Indeed Our messengers came to them with the evidence. And then, despite this, many of them begin to commit excesses on earth.

صدق الله العظيم

In 15 days, Morocco was able to ask the textile industry to produce 5 million masks a day at 7 cents a mask. Why not France, Spain, or other European countries?/En 15 jours, le Maroc a été capable de demander à l'industrie textile de produire 5 millions de masques par jour à 7 centimes le masque. Pourquoi pas la France, l'Espagne, ou les autres pays européens ?

Jean-Francois Dufour-Poirier

99% stardust 1% magic. 2 years

En 15 jours, le Maroc a été capable de demander à l'industrie textile de produire 5 millions de masques par jour à 7 centimes le masque. Pourquoi pas la France, l'Espagne, ou les autres pays européens ?

Finally, the idea is not to compare oneself to others, but to oneself. So, in fact, congratulations on the coup de force and initiative.

Now you need to keep a consistency of production, and, if possible, increase the pace by improving and optimizing the process, because Morocco has many countries on its periphery that will require your help.

Can we add a machine in the production line facilitating the work of the craftsmen, can we improve their comforts to ensure the durability of the loop, can we replicate the model and open other workshops; for example, take the craftsmen who know how to do it, so that they teach the technique.

I guarantee you that all this will not be lost, and I will add, thank you for being good with our Canadian nationals, Morocco is positioning itself as a reliable ally in this fight that we are fighting.

Questions similaires

Quel pays a la meilleure qualité de vie : la France, l'Espagne ou l'Allemagne?

Pourquoi les Français se sentent-ils les meilleurs en Europe et essaient de dévaloriser les autres pays dès qu'on les compare à la France ?

Où trouvez-vous des masques ?

Quand le fabricant de textiles hors de prix "le slip français" finance un projet de formation de 40 migrants au textile pour "leur transmettre les savoir-faire des atelier français" : est-ce vraiment ce qu'attend le client qui achète cette marque ?

Que pensez-vous de la décision de certains pays musulmans de boycotter les produits français en réaction au discours de Macron ?

Si vous avez 15 jours de vacances, les passez-vous à Istanbul en Turquie ou à Essaouira au Maroc ?

Pourquoi la France ne demande pas des excuses à l'Italie pour l'invasion de la Gaule par Jules César ?

Qui a été la personnalité la plus

Do Morocco and Moroccan culture feel more "European" (or more specifically "Iberian") than, say, Egypt or Palestine due to the strong historical connections with Europe? If they don't, why not?

Lucas Villar

2y

Morocco is more connected to Spain than Egypt or Palestine to any European country indeed.

Egypt and Palestine like Morocco have been European colonies but the difference is Morocco's ties with Spain expanded well beyond the colonial period, and remain beyond the colonial period.

Morocco's drift from Spain and vice-versa is the result of a religious and cultural clash as Spain and Europe took different paths from Africa and Morocco, and Spain and Morocco moved with the rest of the region away from each other. But in the ancient Mediterranean Morocco and Spain were almost the same on each side of the sea. With the Romans Mediterranean Morocco at one point was included with the province of Hispania as the diocesis of Mauretania Tingitana. Then came the Vandals who took Spain but were pushed to Morocco by the Visigoths, and then came the Muslims and Spain and Morocco stayed very closely connected, more connected than with the rest of Europe or the rest of Africa respectively. More connected in terms of rulers, people and culture.

Alhambra Palace in Granada, Spain

We have to divide Morocco in two though, Northern Morocco, the former Spanish Morocco, the Riffian homeland and Southern Morocco, the former French Morocco, the more Arabic Morocco.

Spanish Morocco, Tetuán the capital, and regional capitals Larache, Ceuta, Chauén, Alhucemas, Melilla and Nador; Ceuta and Melilla were Plazas Fuertes from before the creation of Spanish Morocco

Spaniards in Morocco by Augusto Ferrer Dalmau (all amazing images from him)

Catalans in Spanish Morocco

Spanish Legionary in Morocco

The expelled Iberian Muslims and Jews many of which fully or mostly Iberian in terms of ancestry moved to northern Morocco and settled in northern Morocco. This along with the Riffian population gives northern Morocco a historically distinctive character. While the south and Atlantic part of Morocco is mostly Arabic and French speaking with a larger Middle Eastern component, the north is mostly Riffian with a substantial Iberian input including Spanish-speaking Jews.

Northern Morocco has a large Jewish community from Spain who speak Ladino, a dialect of 15th century Spanish from when they left Spain. There are local newspapers in Ladino in northern Morocco. And it's not just the Jews, many Muslim families in the north can trace their ancestry to their expulsion from Spain, and while those don't speak Spanish like the Jews, because of the Spanish rule in the 20th century, in urban centres of northern Morocco there is a large amount of older people who still speak Spanish. In Tetouan, the capital of Spanish Morocco and the largest city in Mediterranean Morocco some street signs are in Spanish yet.

Much of the Spanish language presence in northern Morocco is sustained in nearby towns to the Spanish exclaves of Ceuta and Melilla, where Spanish is not dying from the colonial period because it is still the language of the two Spanish cities. For example in Nador near Melilla, Spanish is very common among all age groups, in Tetouan it's common among older age groups and in Tangier it is less common because the city is much larger and more connected with the Arabic-French speaking areas, but Spanish is substantially spoken due to the influence of nearby Ceuta and the Spanish mainland itself on the other side of the Strait of Gibraltar.

Nador, Mar Chica "Small Sea" in Spanish is Nador's coast

In all of northern Morocco people look somewhat different from the area of the capital too, not because of Spanish ancestry (which there is but much older than that), because of Riffians. But it's not just Riffians, northern Morocco developed along with Al Andalus and the closest you can get to Al Andalus in the modern world is northern Morocco, much of which is identical to Spain even today.

And there is also Spanish cultural traits from the 19th century in northern Morocco, starting with the Bullfighting Arena of Tetouan which is National Heritage Site of Morocco, built during the Spanish rule. There is a borough in Madrid called Tetuán, named back in the day in honour of the capital of El Rif (the Spanish name of Spanish Morocco). Northern Moroccan cities keep bullfighting arenas and Catholic cathedrals among other sites from the Spanish period. Tetouan is the summer residence of the Moroccan Crown in the Mediterranean coast, and the king of Morocco's most frequent foreign summer destination is Ibiza in Spain (where the Spanish police stopped him one year without knowing he was the king of Morocco).

Tetouan's Bullfighting Arena

Tetuán or Tetouan in French, Spanish capital of Morocco

Spanish remnants in Tetouan

Tetuán Street in Madrid

I don't know that much about Palestine or Egypt but my understanding is that their ties to any European country are much weaker than Morocco's to Spain. Even if Egypt or Palestine were part of the “Greek" world in the past or colonised by Britain later on, I don't think there's much Greekness and even less so Britishness left from that. At “best" (if it can be called best) Palestine has more European influence because Israel is largely made up of western Jews with some form of cultural ties to Europe.

As a curious detail Francisco Franco “changed” (not really there was a republic in between, but he imitated the kings) Alfonso XIII's Guardia Real “Royal Guard"…

Alfonso XIII's Royal Guard in Alcalá Street in Madrid

With his own personal Guardia Mora “Moorish Guard" made up of specifically Northern Moroccans, because he was the leader of successful campaigns in Morocco and he had the loyalty of the Moroccan legion which were key to his success in the Civil War. They became a symbol of Franco's forces within the rebel army and of him as a dictator afterwards:

Moorish Guard in Buenavista Palace in Madrid

Related Links

Is Spain culturally very similar or different from Morocco?

Why are Moroccans fleeing Morocco?

How did Spain and Morocco end up being culturally so different, despite the fact that both were conquered by the Arabs and despite being very close to each other?

What does the world think about Morocco/Moroccans?

If Moroccans support Palestine a lot, why don't Moroccans overthrow the Alaouite dynasty which is the enemy of Palestinians?

Do Moroccans have Iberian ancestry?

Why isn't Algeria as famous as Morocco?

Why are Moroccan people so friendly?

What do Moroccans think of the berbers?

Why is Morocco more touristic than Algeria and Tunisia?

Moorish Guard in Oriente Palace in Madrid

Are Moroccan Berbers black?

Mata Matosa
This answer may not be a faithful translation of the answer of Mata Matosa
in Quora in English :
Are Moroccan Berbers black?

The Berber race is white, their origin is a prehistoric migration from Eurasia.

This is what their ancestors looked like

Zaras Ammon

.
Follow Studied History at Sorbonne University for 1 year

It all depends on the approach you choose: culturally, yes there are Moroccan Berbers with black skin and traits generally associated with the populations of sub-Saharan Africa, although they form a minority within the Moroccan population:

The vast majority of them are descendants of West African slaves who were established in the regions of southern Morocco and who over the generations have assimilated into the culture of their Berber or Arabized Moroccan owners. A good number of them after being freed were known as "Haratin" or "Hartani".

Haratins - Wikipedia

Haratins, haratins, chouachins or chouachines (in Arabic: حراط ين ḥarâṭin, sing. حرطاني ḥârtani or شوا ش ين Šwašin, Sing. شو شان Šušan, in Berber Isemghan, Sing. Asemgh), sometimes called black inhabitants, various statuses depending on the region. The use of the name Haratins / Haratines (sing. Hartani and Hartania) is confined to the western Sahara [1]: in Morocco, Western Sahara, Mauritania, Algeria and the far north of Mali. In the eastern Saharan, Tunisia and Libya, they are called Chouachins / Chouachines [2]. In the Zenetic Berber dialect spoken in the Gourara region, the Haratins are called Isemghan (sing. asemgh) [3]. Appellations to designate other blacks, in the Sahara and elsewhere in the Maghreb or the Near East are very diverse in Arabic and Berber: 'abid or iklan (black slave), khadem (black servant), waṣif (valet), kahluš (Arabic and Berber hybrid word), kafûr, 'atrïya, akaouar (Ghât), šušan (chouchane) in Fezzan, aherdan (Kabyle), and ḥirthan (ḥirṯan) in Hadramout, akhdam in all of Yemen (population of Ethiopian origin) [4]. Some authors wanted to derive the root ḤRT from the Arabic ḤRT "to plow" (such as E. Mercier, 1989 or E.-E Gautier, 1946); hence their conclusion: ḥartâni = ploughman. Not only does this hypothesis thus formulated have no linguistic foundation (see FJ. Nicolas, 1977 and Ph. Marçais, 1951), but as the latter author remarked, "the hartani does not plow and does not use the plow" (idem p. 13). As for the Arabic pun of ḥorr tâni "second-class noble", it only expresses the contempt of the nomadic aristocracy with regard to these Blacks [4] . The Tuaregs of Ahaggar use the word azeggaɣ , which also means "red" (plur. izeggaɣ en, fem. tazeggaq/tizeggâɣin) to designate this population according to the color of their skin and their social status [4] . The Tuaregs also use other words to name the Blacks located south of the Sahara: ésedîf (plur. isédîfen) designates a Black in general concurrently with aounnan (plur. iounnanen) speaking a Sudanese language: Taounant (Songhai language, see J Clauzel, 1962, for more detail and Foucauld, Dict. touareg-french III, p. 1510) or etîfen (plur. itîfenen), ébenher, éhati (plur. ihatan), Black speaking neither Arabic nor Berber , while the word akli (plur. iklân) designates the enslaved slave, bella the slave living freely and iderfan, ighawellan, the freedmen [4]. In Morocco, the words hartani and hartania (its female equivalent) carry a pejorative connotation since they are associated with slavery and being subordinate [5] , [6] . In February 2021, Azzouha El Arrak, MP for the Justice and Development Party and municipal councilor of Dakhla, was publicly called hartania by another municipal councilor for denouncing her racist actions and remarks. In effect, they are associated with slavery and subservience [5], [6]. In February 2021, Azzouha El Arrak, MP for the Justice and Development Party and municipal councilor of Dakhla, was publicly called hartania by another municipal councilor for denouncing her racist actions and remarks. In effect, they are associated with slavery and subservience [5], [6]. In February 2021, Azzouha El Arrak, MP for the Justice and Development Party and municipal councilor of Dakhla, was publicly called hartania by another municipal councilor for denouncing her racist actions and remarks. In effect, https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Haratins historians no longer pay attention to the "halo of black slaves ('abid) and customers (wusfân) who surround the king", to use an expression of the great geographer AL-'Omari, who died in 1349. This is at the expense typically African kingdoms such as the ancient kingdom of Ghana, which also had hegemonic claims, or that of the Songhay, that Morocco recorded its first victories. At the beginning of the 16th century, Jean-Léon L'Africain, who knew the kingdom of Fez well, wrote: "the king's servants are made up for the most part of black slaves. The maids and servants are of this There are also some Christian slaves, these are Spanish or Portuguese.All these women are under the care of eunuchs, who are also black slaves" (Description of Africa, vol. 1, p.238). During the 19th century, all the major Moroccan cities had slave markets That of Marrakech was the most important because it received caravans from western Sudan and from the interior of Africa, but no less active markets were current in particular in Rabat, Fez, Meknes and Salé. Léon L'Africain had reported Tadla, in the district of Marrakech.Other historians emphasize the Algerian-Moroccan border zone, the oases around the Draa and in Tafilalet, which will remain active until the beginning of the 20th century. .

Makel Chebel, Slavery in the Land of Islam, p. 236

Marrakech, which will celebrate its first millennium in 2069, is a city that has always played a role as a hub for trade from Sudan, with, notes Gaston Deverdun, "two long digits towards the Draa and Dadès valleys" (Marrakesh from the origins to 1912, t. I, p.581) This was the case for gold, ivory, ostrich feathers, coffee, tea, sugar and candles. Slaves held a special place in this trade, well after the theoretical abolition of 1912. In 1789, the court doctor William Lemprière estimated the average number of slaves arriving in Marrakech each year at some 4,000.

Malek Chebel, Slavery in Islamic Lands, p. 240

The recurrence of testimonies establishes the obvious: Morocco has never ceased to maintain an imposing body of black slaves. Even today, the men of the Royal Guard, half of the inhabitants of Marrakech and the cities of the South can claim this distant heritage which gave the country a certain number of sovereigns.

Malek Chebel, Slavery in Islamic Lands, p. 241

Arabs and Berbers become one in these regions of the Maghreb and are known as Beidane (Whites) or Moors. The enslavement of blacks by white Moors, for centuries, produced an Arabized and Islamized black population, sometimes referred to as Black Moors or Black Arabs by other neighboring black populations. More often, these black members of the Arab-Islamic civilization are called Haratines, with the connotation of being recently freed from slavery, although a large part of this group remains in slavery. In the northern parts of all Maghreb states except Mauritania, a similar phenomenon occurs except in Mauritania, a similar Arab-Berber alliance to exploit black labor does not translated from English:

Black Arabs and African migrants: between slavery and racism in North Africa

The popular uprisings for democracy, socio-economic justice, and dignity commonly referred to as the Arab Spring encompassed mobilization against oppression by groups that have long experienced di...

https://www.tandfonline.com/doi/full/10.1080/13629387.2019.1670645

Slavery was an ancient institution in Morocco. Located at the northern end of the trans-Saharan trade routes, Morocco received, for many centuries, a continuous influx of slaves from West Africa, the Sahara and the Mediterranean regions. However, the majority of slaves in Morocco came from western Sudan through the trans-Saharan trade. A large number of captives were taken from Western Sudan during the invasion of the Songhay Kingdom by the Sa'adiyyin during the Songhay Kingdom War in the late 16th century.The importation of West African slaves into Morocco continued until the end of the 19th century, when the French occupied the region. Slaves were brought to Tafilalt, in southern Morocco, via Tuwat, from where they were distributed to the rest of the country. From West African slaves, the clandestine slave trade continued throughout the first two decades of the 20th century. Slave markets existed in major Moroccan cities such as Fez, Rabat and Marrakech.

translated from English:

Slavery and Muslim Jurisprudence in Morocco

Published in Slavery & Abolition: A Journal of Slave and Post-Slave Studies (Vol. 19, No. 2, 1998)

https://www.tandfonline.com/doi/abs/10.1080/01440399808575239

Now if we focus on the genetic aspect, then no it's not about native North Africans/Berbers. The data show that the ancient Berbers were similar to the current Maghrebians including the Arabized Maghrebians:

" Genomic Analyzes of Pre-European Conquest Human Remains from the Canary Islands Reveal Close Affinity to Modern North Africans" https://www.cell.com/current-biology/fulltext/S0960-9822(17)31257-5 for an analysis in French of the study:

Genomic analysis of the ancient Guanches of the Canary Islands

The authors of this study: "Chad Genetic Diversity Reveals an African History Marked by Multiple Holocene Eurasian Migration." had made the same observation: "However this statistic loses sensitivity with small mixture proportions and post-admixture drift, so positive values fom the f3 statistics do not necessarily reflect a complete absence of admixture. We thus further tested for admixture by using ALDER and MALDER , which asses admixture-induced linkage disequilibrium (LD) and detect small mixture proportions from a substantially diverged reference possibly missed by the f3 statistic." The creators of qp3Pop claim that the "source1, source2, target" model is used to determine if there is continuity of genes between source1 and source 2. The more negative the z score, the stronger this link, it does not It is not a question of comparing the relationship of the sources with the population tested. Minor contributions are not necessarily detected. On the other hand, the D stats and f4 stats of the form, (O,X;Y,Z), determine in priority where this continuity or contribution is located. If we consider that O is the "outgroup" and the rest of the populations, selected according to specific objectives, a negative z score indicates a link between X and Y or O and Z. A positive z score, a link between O and Y or X and Z. In this sense, they can serve as a comparison and come closer to the objective of MALDER and ALDER. They can indeed detect contributions that are difficult to detect, partly due to the effect of "recombination" over time. In the case of African populations, I think it may be related to 2 main elements. The very great and ancient genetic diversity that exists on the African continent. Several studies have already demonstrated, in the whole of the zone, whether in the westernmost parts, in the center-west, in the east or in the south, isolated and very different genetic signatures each other. European populations are quite homogeneous with each other, in comparison. Another element to consider, certain populations originating from Central/Southern Africa such as Mbuti or Biaka and Bantus, have "a Hunter-Gatherer like component". These characteristics can modify the result of certain tests which detect "Basal Eurasians" or a very old link existing between the hunter-gatherers of Eurasia and part of africa. Using the f4 statistics, of the form, (Mandenka, X; Yoruba, Chimp) and the Lazaridis dataset. And in 2014, where X is a Eurasian pop from the reference panel, I got the following results: Mandenka Saharawi Yoruba Chimp -0.001442 Mandenka Moroccan Yoruba Chimp -0.001404 Mandenka Tunisian Yoruba Chimp -0.001380 Mandenka Lebanese Yoruba Chimp -0.001294 Mandenka Jew_Tunisian Yoruba Chimp -0.001271 Mandenka Sicilian Yoruba Chimp -0.001237 All the Eurasian populations, in this exercise, show a greater affinity with the Yoruba and not the Mandenkas with the http://secher.bernard.free.fr/blog/index.php?post/2017/10/27/Analyse-g%C3%A9nomique-des-anciens-Guanches-des-%C3%AEles-Canaries

Other analyzes further confirm this relationship:

P values associated to FST calculations for the Punta Azul cave STR data (n ¼ 28) and modern populations from North Africa (n ¼ 75) and the Iberian Peninsula (n ¼ 335) (Table 3), indicates that the aboriginal population is not significantly different from Moroccan Berbers (p ¼ 0.676), but it is to the Iberian samples (p ¼ 0.036). Finally, autosomal diversity for the Punta Azul cave (66.40 ± 7.60) is smaller than that in the Iberian Peninsula (78.65 ± 1.10), but similar to Moroccan Berbers (68.42 ± 3.91).

Regarding the origin of El Hierro aboriginal population, Slatkin-linearized Fst distances based on autosomal STR are congruent with a great similarity of the Bimbapes with Berbers from Morocco, and a significant differentiation from Europe. This result is in accordance with previous archaeological, linguistic and genetic evidence about the Berber origin of aboriginal people. One of the most outstanding archaeological remains from El Hierro consists of a series of lybicberber inscriptions, clearly related with the ancient North African Berber's inscriptions

Genetic studies on the prehispanic population buried in Punta Azul cave (El Hierro, Canary Islands)

The aim of this study was to establish the genetic studies of the population from one of the most important known aboriginal funerary spaces of the is...

https://www.sciencedirect.com/science/article/abs/pii/S0305440316301686

As well as craniometric analyses:

The MMD analysis indicates that the Canary Island sample is most similar to the four samples from Northwest Africa: the Shawia Berbers, Kabyle Berbers, Bedouin Arabs and Carthaginians, less similar to the three Egyptian samples and least like the three Nubian samples. An intra-island comparison among samples from La Gomera, Gran Canaria and Tenerife reveals low, insignificant MMD values in all cases, implying that inter-island dental morphology differences are not so great as to require hypotheses of separate founding populations.

Canary islands-north African population affinities: measures of divergence based on dental morphology

Ancient North Africans have also been found in Spain and Sardinia. Their DNA shows a strong similarity with the current North Africans (translated from English):

Most surprising is Sardinia_Chalcolithic15940 from the Anghelu Ruju site, for which we obtained a radiocarbon date of 2345-2146 BC from the same bone sample we analyzed for DNA. We modeled this individual as 22.7±2.4% Anatolia_Neolithic and 77.3±2.4% Morocco_EN (P=0.321). The ancestry composition of this individual is similar to that of the approximately contemporary Iberian individual I4246 from the Camino de las Yeseras site, radiocarbon dated to 2473-2030 BC. who also had North African-related ancestry as well as the same mtDNA haplogroup M1a1b1 and the same Y-chromosome haplogroup E1b1b1, both of which are typical of North Africans25(Supplementary Table 14). The discovery of African gene flow to Europe in both individuals shows that this movement was widespread across the Mediterranean long before the Classic period, when this gene flow became intensive and the ancestors had a greater demographic impact. .

https://reich.hms.harvard.edu/sites/reich.hms.harvard.edu/files/inline-files/2020_Fernandes_NatEcolEvol_WestMediterranean_0.pdf

Our Copper Age dataset includes a recently reported male (I4246) from Camino de las Yeseras (14) in central Iberia, radiocarbon dated to 2473-2030 calibrated years BCE, which clusters with modern and ancient North Africans in the PCA (Fig. 1C and fig. S3) and, like Moroccans of ~3000 BCE (8), can be well modeled as having ancestry at both late Pleistocene North Africans (15) and early Neolithic Europeans (Tables S9 and S10). Its genome-wide ancestry and uniparental markers (Tables S1 and S4) are unique among Copper Age Iberians, including individuals from sites with many analyzed individuals such as Sima del Ángel, and indicate a North African origin.

Similar Links

Are the Berbers of Arab origin?

In North Africa, how do you know if someone is Berber or Arab?

Why do the Riffian Berbers of Morocco have very light skin and eyes like Europeans?

Why do the Berbers look like the Arabs when genetically they are 2 very different populations?

Are the Kabyles descendants of Nordic peoples?

What do non-Moroccans think of Moroccan women?

Is it true that there are Moroccan passports that are red?

Why do the "kabyles" not consider themselves Arabs?

Are the Berbers oppressed by the Arabs of North Africa?

If Morocco is a Berber country and Berbers are white, why a very large part

Why is Morocco called Morocco?

Marcos Vinicius Monteiro

Works at Western Traditional Astrologers4y

It’s not.

It’s called al-Mamlakah al-Maghribiyyah (المملكة المغربية), the “Kingdom of the West”).

“Morocco” (the name of the country in English), “Maroc” (In French), “Maruecos” (in Spanish), “Marrocos” (in Portuguese), etc, derive from Marrakesh, the name of the city.

The name in Turkish (this is intersting) is “Fas”, derived from other city, Fez.

Source: Morocco - Wikipedia

Related Answer
Why is Morocco called Morocco?

Rachid Haroune

.
Follow
MoroccanUpdated 1y
In the medieval periods, Morocco was known by its capital city; under Idrisid and Marinid dynasties, Morocco was known as the kingdom of Fes as it was their capital city.

When Almuravids took control of the country, they built Marrakech and made it their capital city. Morocco was known then as the kingdom of Marrakech. The origin of the name "Marrakesh" is disputed, but it is most likely from the Berber words amur (n) akush"Land of God", from which Spaniards derived Marruecos and Marokko in dutch . In English, it is spelled Morocco and in French Maroc.

During the colonization, The French colonizer used the name Sharifian Kingdom since Alaouite dynasty claims being descendant of the prophet.

On the other hand, some historians believe that Muslims who inhabited the Arabian peninsula were the first to use that name المغرب Morocco during the Islamic conquest. It means in Arabic the “place of sunset” because they thought then that the sun settled in the land of Morocco.
Related questions

How dangerous is Morocco?

Is there racism in Morocco?

Do you think Greater Morocco will ever exist?

What are your ideas about Morocco?

What is life like in Morocco?

Is Morocco a dictatorship?

Is Morocco the worst country in the world?

Why are Moroccans fleeing Morocco?

Has north America ever been called Morocco?

What is the old name of Morocco?

Why is Morocco the cradle of humanity?

Xavier-Bertrand

Geek is beautiful Jul 6

Ah, I love totally off the mark answers. There's only one trying to be serious, so congratulations Michel, you've just proven that you have a brain that works, unlike others whose hidden racism seems to be a way of thinking.

Well, the question is false, because Morocco did not yet exist, but it does indeed seem that the geographical area is the cradle of Humanity.

So, embittered gentlemen, boomers and other uneducated (yeah, I know, I'm contemptuous, but when we're so stuffy, I don't know what else to say), a little anthropology!

Until 2017, the oldest remains of homo sapiens (so us, if you were following instead of bitching at the wokes or laughing at a not-so-silly question) were dated - 200,000 years old, and came from Ethiopia.

But in 2017, new tests carried out on remains found in Morocco in 1960, as well as on other remains found since then, made it possible to date these discoveries to -315,000 years.

The discovery that upsets the history of "Homo sapiens"

Remains, found in Morocco, of five individuals dating from about 315,000 years ago could push back the age of our species by 100,000 years, and would plead for its “pan-African” origin.

https://www.lemonde.fr/paleontologie/article/2017/06/07/la-decouverte-qui-bouleverse-l-histoire-d-homo-sapiens_5140236_1650762.html

We know that the human species comes from Africa, but its oldest remains come from Morocco. From there to speak of "cradle", it is a little exaggerated, but not inaccurate.

Similar questions

Why do the French prefer to go to Tunisia or Morocco rather than Algeria?

What should you absolutely not do in Morocco?

Why do Moroccans not support Algerians, who nevertheless have a similar culture?

What prevents countries like Algeria and Morocco from developing?

What do you think of Moroccans?

Why is Abdelmoumen (caliph of the Almohades) claimed as Moroccan by Moroccans, when he came from a tribe located in present-day Algeria?

Why are Moroccans fleeing Morocco?

What facts about Morocco do foreigners not believe before arriving in Morocco?

Why is Morocco constantly presented as a backward country?

What bothers you about Moroccan culture?

If one day Western Sahara became officially Moroccan, could the Sahrawis in the Tindouf camps increase the number of Spanish speakers, and thus make it the 2nd administrative language of the region?

Adil El Sbaii

.

Follow

passionate about the history of the MENA region Updated on Sun.

Originally Answered: If one day Western Sahara became officially Moroccan, could the Sahrawis of the Tindouf camps increase the number of Spanish speakers, and thus make it the 2nd administrative language of the region?

I do not think so.

You should already know that the overwhelming majority of Sahrawis live under Moroccan administration. The inhabitants in the Tindouf camps who are really from Western Sahara are in the minority, because the Polisario has swelled the ranks of the Tindouf camps with different populations:

1. the Sahrawi inhabitants of the wilaya of Tindouf (Tindouf, Oum El Assel) who are of Algerian nationality
2. Mauritanian and Malian beidane mercenaries
3. refugees from other neighboring countries

The inhabitants of the camps who are really from Western Sahara (and from official Morocco, because there were Sahrawi families from Oued Noun who were taken between 1976 and 1979, as well as people who left of their own free will to join the ranks of the Polisario) are in the minority.

Only residents of the Tindouf camps who are known to come from Morocco and the Western Sahara region will be allowed to return to the country, with proof. This means that the majority of the inhabitants of the camps will not be able to come to the region.

Not to mention the fact that the provinces of Laayoune-Saqia El Hamra and Dakhla-Oued Eddaheb are administered like the rest of Morocco. Even the regions of northern Morocco which were colonized by Spain (Tétouan, Chefchaouen, Larache, Nador, El Hoceima, etc.) do not have Spanish as an administrative language. Spanish remains a language mastered by the ancients, nothing more. And even in present-day Western Sahara, the majority of young Sahrawis do not master Spanish at all. It is Arabic and French.

Similar questions

Is it more or less possible to tell the difference between an Algerian, a Moroccan, a Tunisian, based on their traits (like a Spaniard, a Frenchman, a German) or is it impossible?

Why do we always mention the Kabyles when we talk about the cultural rights of Berber minorities? So, the Berber-speaking minority in Morocco is much more represented than in Algeria with the Chlouh, the Rifan and the Zayan.

What's going on with Morocco and Spain fighting over Melilla and Ceuta? Why did these territories fall under Spanish control and why did Morocco fail to reconquer them?

Is the Arabic language spoken in the Middle East very different from that spoken in the Maghreb? Do the 2 types of speakers understand each other easily or can identify the country of origin via the accent or particular expressions?

In 15 days, Morocco was able to ask the textile industry to produce 5 million masks per day at 7 cents per mask. Why not France, Spain, or other European countries?

Why are Morocco, Algeria and Tunisia separate countries when they all have Berber, Arab and French heritage?

Why aren't Moroccans, Algerians and Tunisians massively emigrating to the rich Gulf countries where they can live in peace in their religion and in a context compatible with the mores of their religion?

If Morocco is a Berber country and Berbers are white, why a very large part of Moroccans have dark skin?

Will Algeria's decision to close its air borders to "Moroccan planes" affect the match between the Royal Army and the Confederation tribes?

This is not the first time that migrants have lost their lives trying to swim to the

Why in Morocco, men sometimes hold each other by the little finger when they walk in the street?

My brother used to do it for me, and it often saved my life, because while wandering the streets I completely forgot that there were vehicles speeding by, but I rarely noticed that others do.

Why do Moroccans not support Algerians, who nevertheless have a similar culture?

Sufian Lahjouji

.

Follow Location: Morocco 2 years

I am a Moroccan I will tell you the truth that exists, the majority of Moroccan men and women love Algerians and Algerians .. despite the bad past of the relationship between Morocco and Algeria but that remains in the past … and a lot things have changed, I have a friend on Facebook who necessarily loves Morocco and he is a supporter of a Moroccan football team (Wydad de casablanca) …. we are in 2020 it is not the policy or the relationship between the presidents who decide our feelings towards another people but it is our own decision that will judge… personally I noticed on social networks that there is a great brotherhood and tolerance between the Algerian people and the Moroccan people….

Why do the French prefer to go to Tunisia or Morocco rather than Algeria?

Olivier Carriere

.

Follow

Formerly Energy Insurance Underwriter (1989 – 2018) 3 years

Before, as a Frenchman, I thought that the vast majority of Algerians hated us basically because of this butchery of the war of independence. And then I went there as an insurer for Sonatrach, a state-owned company dedicated to gas and oil, extremely powerful because of the enormous reserves of this country which supplies Europe via three trans-Mediterranean gas pipelines and LNG carrier fleets. Two very interesting trips to Algiers, Skikda, Hassi R'mel and Arzew. And I was wrong. All the people who were not involved with the entourage of Sonatrach and who had no intention of stroking me in the direction of the hair were welcoming, kind, funny, curious and sincere. The landscapes of Algeria are beautiful and very varied. Now for many tourists the visa is a nuisance and the supply of accommodation, meh. To sum up, go to Algeria you will make beautiful human encounters

Similar questions

Why are Moroccans fleeing Morocco?

Morocco: what do ordinary Moroccan citizens think of the King of Morocco?

What should you absolutely not do in Morocco?

Why is Morocco constantly presented as a backward country?

Why are there more and more veiled women in Morocco?

Why doesn't Morocco return the Rif to Spain?

What would happen if Morocco, Algeria and Tunisia became one country?

Is there racism in Morocco?

How will Morocco be in 20 years?

Why is Morocco called Morocco?

Can Jews, Muslims, and Christians live equally in an Arab land?

Ahmed Abdelhaq Zaydan

Lives in Meknès, Morocco (1900–present)3y

Which Arab land?

In Morocco, Jews and Muslims can live equally. Christians cannot.

- In Morocco, Islam is the state religion and the King must be a Muslim. This is the only inequality Jews face.
- Other than that, the Moroccan government welcomes Jews and the Jewish community practices their religion fully and without hassle. The Government even renovates Synagogues and the King visits the Jews holding Sabbath occasionally. Many Israeli Jews even migrate to Morocco to settle and the Government offers immediate citizenship to any Israeli who can prove their Grandparent is Moroccan.

In Marrakesh, Israelis return to their Moroccan roots to seek a new life – or flee the police

Morocco beckons to Jewish tourists

King Mohammed VI visits a new synagogue in Morocco

- Christians are not welcome due to the historic wars with Spain and Portugal which saw the Sultans strip Christianity of its protected status. This means even little things like a Christian marriage are illegal in Morocco. The Christian couple must convert to Islam or Judaism then have an Islamic or Jewish wedding for their marriage to be accepted.

Moroccan Christian wedding held by activists earlier this year in protest of this

"We want to be treated on an equal footing with Moroccan Jews," said Chouaib El Fatihi, coordinator of the Christian committee at the Moroccan association for religious rights and freedoms.

"We want to be recognized as Moroccan Christian citizens and to enjoy the right to legal marriages and burial ceremonies according to our religion," he said.

Christians want marriages recognized in Morocco

Unfortunately, the Moroccan government has no intention of returning protected status to the Christians of Morocco.

Christians can still exist , and the State does not arrest converts to Christianity. But they are not given the same rights as Jews and Muslims thus they can not live equally.

In Iraq, it's the opposite. Christians and Muslims live equally but not Jews.

Iraq has a large Christian population that has been recognized by the state and when the Government had power (a civil war is ongoing) the Christians were treated equally to Muslims with one Christian even being named Saddam Hussein's Vice President and Minister of Foreign Affairs.

When the Iraqi military and militias were liberating ISIS-held territory, they always made a show of liberating Churches first and would encourage local Christians to hold Sunday Mass again.

Iraqi Soldiers in Church taken from ISIS

Iraqi (Christian) soldiers holding mass in Church

Jews were encouraged to leave in the 1940s and the state has never encouraged them to return or offered equal rights. So the State will not be rebuilding Synagogues and encouraging Sabbaths anytime soon.

In the United Arab Emirates, all religions are accepted.

Christians, Jews, Muslims and even Hindus live side by side with the encouragement of the state which even builds places of worship from them and supports them in their religious festivals.

Hindus celebrating Diwali in the UAE

Armenian Orthodox Church in the UAE with Christians about.

Hence why I asked at first, which Arab land?

Related questions

Do Jews consider Muslims their enemies and Christians their friends?

Do Christians feel closer to Jews or Muslims?

What would it take for Muslims, Christians and Jews to live peacefully together?

Do Christians and Jews also practice a form of Taqiyya, or just Muslims?

How are relations between Nigerian Muslims and Christians?

Why do Arabs discriminate against fellow Muslims of South Asia?

Do Jews, Christians and Muslims all worship the same god?

Why do Muslims, Jews and Christians fight for Jerusalem?

Are Arab Muslims today's ancestors Christians or Jews?

How do non-Arab Muslims feel about Arab Muslims?

Do Christians feel closer to Jews or Muslims?

Mike Muluk

.

Follow Writer on Christianity and Islam.Updated 2y

I assume that you mean "on a religious level?"

If that is the case, certainly to Jews.

And here are some of the reasons why:

1. Christianity started out as a Jewish sect.
2. Jesus was a Jew.
3. The God of the Bible is the God of the Torah (the Great I AM, the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob).
4. All of his apostles were Jews.
5. All of the protagonists of the Bible are Jews.
6. Jesus claimed to be the Jewish Messiah.
7. Jesus' teachings are builds upon Jewish teachings.
8. For Christians, Jesus was the fulfilled Old Testament prophecy.
9. Because of Jesus being the fulfillment of Old Testament Prophecy, the Christian Bible includes the Old Testament, which is largely similar to the Jewish Tanakh (here are the minor differences: What is the Difference between the).
10. Everything that happened in the Gospels happens in Jewish lands (albeit under Roman occupation at that time).
11. For Christians, the "Holy Land" is in Israel.
12. The earliest Christians were Jews.
13. The first Christian Church was founded in Jerusalem.
14. Important days of the Christian calendar coincide with important dates in the Jewish calendar (e.g. Jesus' crucifixion and Passover).
15. There is a sizeable denomination of Christian Jews who retain their Jewish customs.
16. As we speak, Christians and Christian-majority countries have a great relationship with the modern state of Israel.
17. Christian Eschatology foresees a returning Jesus with the hosts of Heaven, landing in Jerusalem and fighting for Jerusalem.

And here are some of the reasons why Christians and Muslims do not have very much in common when it comes to their faiths:

1. Islam started out in Arabia - a culture totally alien to the Christian world.
2. Muhammad was an Arab pagan before he claimed that he was the last of the line of prophets.
3. Allah is - by description and by name - NOT the God of the Bible or the Torah. The Qur'an never mentions YHVH, Yahweh, Elohim, Ha Shem, God the Father, Abba, or any of the names of God found in the Bible or Torah. And no, Allah is not the generic term for "god" in Arabic. That would be "Ilah."

4. Muhammad claims that Allah is the god of Abraham, Ishmael, and the original deity presiding over the Kaaba.
5. Muhammad nixes the promise of salvation for Christians, by claiming Jesus never died on the cross and was just a human prophet like him.
6. Muhammad claimed to be the last prophet, the Seal of the Prophets, while for Christians the story of salvation with God has come full-cycle with Jesus.
7. Muhammad's teachings didn't have anything to do with Christian teachings.
8. The Qur'an forbids Muslims to be friends with Christians [1].
9. Muhammad had no idea what the Gospels were. He thought they were texts "revealed" to Jesus.
10. Islam teaches that the Gospel have been corrupted by men, and so the Bible that Christians have
11. Muhammad had no idea what the Gospels taught. For example, he thought God taught Christians to "slay and be slain" in the Gospels [2].
12. Muhammad introduced a strict law, that is culturally alien to Christians and go against Christian moral values (polygamy, warfare, etc.)
13. Everything that happens in the Qur'an and Hadith happened in Arabia (except for a brief dream sequence in which Muhammad flew on a flying donkey and made a layover in Jerusalem. See: Al-Isra - Wikipedia).
14. For Muslims, the "Holy Land" is Mecca and Medina.
15. Muslim holidays have nothing in common with Christian (or Jewish) holidays.
16. Muhammad and the Early Muslims have actively waged war against Christians and Christian kingdoms.
17. Muslim kingdoms have waged war against "Christendom," have conquered Christian lands for centuries.
18. Even now as we speak, any Muslim militant group in existence, have on their agenda the destruction of Christian countries.
19. In Islamic Eschatology, the Muslim Jesus will arrive to destroy Christianity [3], make war upon the "Romans" i.e. Christians [4], and kill all Jews [5].

In summary

While it is a historical fact that Christianity started out as a Jewish sect, it has very little in common with Islam. In fact, since its beginning, Islam has established itself as an "anti-theology" to Christianity (and also Judaism). Islamic scripture - Qur'an, Hadith, or Sira Literature - all teach a anti-Christian and anti-Semitic attitude.

The repercussions of this dynamic between Christian vs. Islamic theology can be felt even today - and if you believe in it - it will be the deciding factor during the final End-Times battle.

Footnotes:

[1]:

O ye who believe! take not the Jews and the Christians for your friends and protectors: They are but friends and protectors to each other. And he amongst you that turns to them (for friendship) is of them. Verily Allah guideth not a people unjust.

Qur'an 5:51 (Yusuf Ali Translation. The Quranic Arabic Corpus)

[2]: "Allah hath purchased of the believers their persons and their goods; for theirs (in return) is the garden (of Paradise): they fight in His cause, and slay and are slain: a promise binding on Him in truth, through the Law, the Gospel, and the Quran: and who is more faithful to his covenant than Allah? then rejoice in the bargain which ye have concluded: that is the achievement supreme."

Qur'an 9:111

[3]

"By He in whose hands my soul rests, Jesus, the Son of Mary, is to descend amongst you as a just ruler. He will break the cross, kill the pig, abolish Jizya and wealth will increase to such an extent that one prostration will be more valuable than the whole world and all that it contains."

Sahih al-Bukhari, 3:43:656

[4]

Abu Huraira reported Allah's Messenger as saying:

The Last Hour would not come until the Romans would land at al-A'maq or in Dabiq. An army consisting of the best (soldiers) of the people of the earth at that time will come from Medina (to counteract them). When they will arrange themselves in ranks, the Romans would say: Do not stand between us and those (Muslims) who took prisoners from amongst us. Let us fight with them; and the Muslims would say: Nay, by Allah, we would never get aside from you and from our brethren that you may fight them. They will then fight and a third (part) of the army would run away, whom Allah will never forgive. A third (part of the army) which would be constituted of excellent martyrs in Allah's eye, would be killed and the third who would never be put to trial would win and they would be conquerors of Constantinople. And as they would be busy in distributing the spoils of war (amongst themselves) after hanging their swords by the olive trees, the Satan would cry: The Dajjal has taken your place among your family. They would then come out, but it would be of no avail. And when they would come to Syria, he would come out while they would be still preparing themselves for battle drawing up the ranks. Certainly, the time of prayer shall come and then Jesus (peace be upon him) son of Mary would descend and would lead them in prayer. When the enemy of Allah would see him, it would (disappear) just as the salt dissolves itself in water and if he (Jesus) were not to confront them at all, even then it would dissolve completely, but Allah would kill them by his hand and he would show them their blood on his lance (the lance of Jesus Christ).

Sahih Muslim 2897
In-book : Book 54, Hadith 44

[5]

The Day of Judgement will not come about until Muslims fight the Jews, when the Jew will hide behind stones and trees. The stones and trees will say: "O Muslims, O Abdullah, there is a Jew behind me, come and kill him". Only the Gharkad tree, would not do that because it is one of the trees of the Jews. (related by al-Bukhari and Muslim).

Sahih Muslim, 41:6985

ADDENDUM

Please, if you do want to have a healthy debate about this answer of mine. Let me know beforehand if you're like Parsa Shirazi who "won't accept" references from Wikipedia, the Qur'an, or the Hadith.

Please, I'm not the youngest guy around. I value every minute of my life. I'd rather spend an hour with my family than debate a guy on here who only accepts sources "according to his own Gospel."

So, please, please let me know beforehand if you're that guy, so I can ignore you.

Thank you!

Related Links

How can a Christian justify being antisemitic when Jesus was Jewish?

Do Jews consider Muslims their enemies and Christians their friends?

Which religion is more similar to Judaism, Islam or Christianity?

Why does Christianity love Jews and Islam hate them?

Do Jews feel closer to Christians or Muslims?

What is the main difference between Jews and Muslims?

Why do evangelical Christians like Jews so much when Jews don't like them back?

Is there a religion which Jewish people feel is similar to Judaism?

Why do Muslims, Jews and Christians fight for Jerusalem?

Do Jews, Christians and Muslims all worship the same god?

Why did the Islamist party in power in Morocco suffer a crushing electoral defeat?

Samir سمير Farid فريد

.

Follow

Place: Morocco (1977 – today) 10 mo

Ask Emanuel Valls, he predicted this two days before the election.

Otherwise it was planned, they did not have the courage to challenge the Makhzen on key issues, they carried on their backs all the anti-social projects that the other governments had maliciously avoided, and finally, they accepted the normalization with Israel, and the average citizen will never forgive them for that.

A good beating will teach them that to govern, you must not keep your tail between your thighs.

Similar questions

Islamism is being talked about badly by its attacks, but does it have any chance of spreading in the world by force or will moderate Islam eventually defeat it?

Why did Morocco attack Spain in 2002?

Why is Morocco one of the safest Muslim countries? How have Moroccan authorities successfully uprooted violent Islamist cells?

Why do the French prefer to go to Tunisia or Morocco rather than Algeria?

What would you think of an Islamic president for France?

Will Algeria attack Morocco?

Why is Islam the fastest growing religion in the world?

Why does the European know everything except the Koran?

Why is Morocco constantly presented as a backward country?

Will Morocco attack Algeria?

MOZAMBIQUE

National Flag

Emblem

Locator Map

TEXT HIGHLIGHTS: Diaries updates, key events, brief analysis and relating news articles in timeline

Overview

Bantu speaking tribes migrated to Mozambique in the first millennium, and Arab and Swahili traders settled the region thereafter. The Portuguese arrived on the East African coast in the early 16th century, displacing Arab rulers from many of the towns. They established settlements along the Zambezi, but were for centuries largely confined to the river valley and the coastal strip. After many failed attempts to penetrate inland (particularly to control the gold and silver mines of what is now Zimbabwe), they made a concerted effort to conquer the interior in the late 19th century.

By 1914 the Portuguese had achieved the “effective occupation” required by the 1885 Berlin Conference of European powers to justify imperial claims. In contrast to the policies of other colonial powers in Africa after 1945, the Salazar dictatorship in Portugal (1932-1968) was determined to hold on to the country’s colonies.

The Frente de Libertação de Moçambique (Frelimo), initially formed in 1962, led the struggle for independence. FRELIMO is abbreviation for "Frente de Libertacåo de Mocåmbique (FRELIMO)", whose started the movement in 1964.

In 1962 Samora Moises Machel joined the Front for the Liberation of Mozambique (FRELIMO) which was dedicated to creating an independent Mozambique. He left his first wife and four children behind. He received military training in 1963 elsewhere in Africa, and returned in 1964 to lead FRELIMO's first guerilla attack against the Portuguese in northern Mozambique. Machel married his second wife, Josina (née Mutemba), in 1969, who gave him a child later that same year.

By 1969, Machel had become commander-in-chief of the FRELIMO army which had already established itself among Mozambique's peasantry. His most important goal, he said, was to get the people "to understand how to turn the armed struggle into a revolution" and to realize how essential it was "to create a new mentality to build a new society". Two months after the assassination of FRELIMO's president, Eduardo Mondlane, in February 1969, a ruling triumvirate comprising Samora Machel, Marcelino dos Santos and Frelimo's vice-president Uria Simango assumed the leadership. Simango was expelled from the party in 1970, and Machel assumed the presidency of the Liberation movement. FRELIMO initially pursued Marxist-Leninist policies, and was violently opposed by the Resistência Nacional de Moçambique (RENAMO), formed in 1976/7 under Rhodesian direction, but drawing on popular resentment (primarily in the central region) against the government.

FRELIMO to become a ruling party, began the Mozambican war of independence the same year on September, 25th. Liberation struggle was led by FRELIMO's founder-president Mr. Edwardo Mondlaine who was assassinated by a parcel bomb on the 3rd of February, 1969, Mr. Edwardo Mondlaine is to be succeeded by Mr. Samora Moises Machel who led the guerrila war from 1969 came to a close with independence in 25th of April, 1975, a military coup in Portugal and the subsequent collapse of Portuguese colonialism as the FRELIMO's military pressure increases.

On the eve of the Portuguese revolution, which had taken place on 25 April 1974, the left-wing military regime that replaced the 48-year old Portuguese dictatorship soon decided to grant independence to the five territories administered by Portugal in Africa (Cabo Verde, Overseas Province of Guinea, São Tomé e Príncipe, Overseas Province of Angola and Overseas Province of Mozambique).

Following the military coup in Portugal in April, 1974, a joint Portuguese/ FRELIMOTransitional Government was established under the leadership of Joachim Chissano.

Mozambique officially achieved it's independence on 25th June, 1975.

Headship since independence; Head of Transitional Government

Mozambique achieved independence under FRELIMO whose leader, Samora Machel, became the first president. When FRELIMO leader Samora Machel's unelected revolutionary government took over, he became independent Mozambique's first unelected president on June 25, 1975. Marcelino dos Santos became vice-president. Uria Simango, his wife Celina and other FRELIMO dissidents such as Adelino Gwambe and Paulo Gumane (former leaders of UDENAMO, one of the National liberation groups in Mozambique) were arrested and later murdered.

The death In Plane Crash of the President Samora Moises Machel in October 19, 1986:

Samora Moises Machel (September 29, 1933 – October 19, 1986) was a Mozambican military commander, revolutionary socialist leader and eventual President of Mozambique. Machel led the country from independence in 1975 until his death of fatal plane crash in October, 1986, at age 53 when his presidential aircraft crashed in a mountainous terrain at Mbuzini, where the borders of Mozambique, Swaziland and South Africa converge.

President Samora Moises Machel was on his way back from an international meeting in Lusaka, Zambia, in the presidential Tupolev Tu-134 aircraft, when the plane crashed in the Lebombo Mountains, near Mbuzini, South-Africa. There were ten survivors, but President Samora Machel and thirty-three others died, including ministers and officials of the Mozambique government. The Margo Commission, set up by the South African government, but which included high-level international representation, investigated the incident and concluded that the accident was caused by pilot error. Despite the acceptance of its findings by the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO), the report was rejected by the Mozambican and ex-Soviet governments. The latter submitted a minority report suggesting that the aircraft was intentionally lured off course by a decoy radio navigation beacon set up specifically for this purpose by the South African regime. Speculation about the accident has therefore continued to the present day, particularly in Mozambique.

Following the demise of Rhodesia, Renamo enjoyed South African patronage as part of the latter's "Total Onslaught" strategy aimed at disrupting the politics and economies of the black ruled "front-line states" on its borders. War-weariness and political changes in South Africa and Mozambique – including Frelimo's move away from doctrinaire Marxism-Leninism – helped bring about a peace agreement, signed in Rome, between FRELIMO and RENAMO in 1992. The end of the civil war, facilitated by both Mozambicans and the international community, is regarded as one of the most successful examples of conflict resolution in Africa.

The culture is mainly of the native Bantu mixed with European aspects.

Origins of name: The name is derived from "Mouzinho de Alburquerque", a 19th century Portuguese colonialist, who put down nationalist rebellions in the territory and thus established Portuguese control.

A Republic in South Eastern Africa

Former Portuguese colony, the African nation of Mozambique endured a brutal, nine-year war to gain its independence from Portugal. The war ended on this day in 1975, with the European colonizers ruling for 477 years prior. The seeds for the independence war were planted as a result of anti-colonial rhetoric and communist ideals beginning to take hold in many countries in Africa. In the case of Mozambique, the ethnic Portuguese who lived in the nation appeared to benefit from policies geared toward them while natives were often seen as an after-thought. Considering how colonization trended toward placing natives across the continent in the lower rungs, those claims were likely true.

An uprising began to form among the indigenous peoples of the nation, with freedom fighter leaders saying that the country discriminated against them. Because of the disparity between the Portuguese and natives in the country, a swiftly growing rift came to a head in the late 1950s and early 1960s as it became clear White Portuguese Mozambicans and the Black Mozambican community were not on the same level.

The Front for the Liberation of Mozambique (FRELIMO) was a group of guerrilla fighters based in Tanzania who began plotting to overtake the Portuguese in the nation in September of 1964. Portugal was embroiled in other territorial clashes with Angola and Portuguese Guinea, which was known as the Portuguese Colonial War (1961-1974).

The Portuguese military attempted to stamp out efforts in the territories it occupied and even found some success, but the African guerrilla forces proved to be a relentless foe.

The Mozambican War for Independence was fortified by the support of the Soviet Union, which helped many of the anti-colonization efforts across Africa at the time. The Russians supplied FRELIMO forces with weapons, as did China. Still, FRELIMO fighters were deeply outnumbered by the Portuguese military, with just 7,000 compared to as many as 24,000 fighters.

FRELIMO's military commander, Filipe Samuel Magaia, had his fighters trained by the Algerian military. On the opposite end, General António Augusto dos Santos forged a quiet alliance with Rhodesia to support the Portuguese cause.

Eduardo Mondlane, the president of FRELIMO, was assassinated on February 3, 1969, with some speculating that Portuguese secret police forged the plot to take momentum away from rebel fighters.

One account says that a parcel was delivered to his headquarters in Dar es Salaam and exploded when he opened the package. Another account claims a bomb went off under his chair inside his personal office space. Either way, the killing sparked a power struggle for the leadership of FRELIMO, with it becoming known that Mondlane's own compatriots conspired with the Portuguese to kill him.

FRELIMO began to attack civilian interests in the later years of the conflict, employing mines, which disrupted the Portuguese efforts. Under Mondlane's rule, FRELIMO fighters were ordered to show mercy to Portuguese Mozambicans but that was done away with in 1973, when hardliner Samora Machel (pictured at left) took over. So intense was the fighting between the forces, Portuguese officials attempted to lure indigenous Mozambicans away from its civilian bases with the promises of "resettlement villages" and the like.

FRELIMO's guerilla tactics began to wear down the Portuguese police and military, with panic among White Mozambicans at a fever pitch. The colonial wars zapped 44 percent of Portugal's budget and the unrest in the European camp to an end with the "Carnation Revolution" coup in April 1974. With the ousting of leader Marcelo Caetano in Lisbon, many Portuguese Mozambicans left Africa to return to their original nation.

General António de Spínola, the new head of government in Portugal, called for a ceasefire and negotiations between the country and FRELIMO officials helped with the signing of the Lusaka Accord on September 7, 1974.

In the accord, all power was handed over to FRELIMO without elections, and the country’s formal independence began on June 25, 1975, which was the 13th anniversary of the founding of FRELIMO. (Text ends)

A Republic in Southeastern Africa on the Indian ocean.

It was settled by Bantu speaking peoples at about the third century AD. The area known as Mozambique colonized almost five centuries 1505 to 1878 as Portuguese colony, the Portuguese began to administer parts of the inland areas entitled as Portuguese overseas territory in 1951. The liberation movement known as "Frente de Libertacåo de Mocåmbique (FRELIMO)", founded in 1964, later to become a ruling party, began the Mozambican war of independence the same year on September, 25th. The liberation struggle was led by FRELIMO's founder-president Mr. Edwardo Mondlaine who was assassinated by a parcel bomb on the 3rd of February, 1969 , is to be succeeded by Mr. Samora Moises Machel who led the guerrila war from 1969 came to a close with independence in 25th of April, 1975, a military coup in Portugal and the subsquent collapse of Portuguese colonialism as the FRELIMO's military pressure increases. Mr. Samora Moises Machel, nicknamed "the Headquarter", was a Mozambican guerilla military commander, revolutionary leader and eventual president of Mozambique, became the country's first president at independence inaugurated on the 25th of June, 1975, starting shortly after independence the country was plagued from 1977 to 1992 by a long and violent civil war opposing FRELIMO to the armed Resistancia Nacional Mocambicana (RENAMO), in the Mozambican civil war.

President Samora Moises Machel led Mozambique until his death in 1986, un happily, he was died in un-explained official reason when his presidential aircraft crashed in mountainous terrain inside the South African territory on the 19th October, 1986, he was on his way back from an international meeting in Lusaka, Zambia. Mr. Samora Moises Machel's death was believed due to a conspiracy b/n the South African and the ex-Soviet intelligence services. He was then succeeded by post-colony Mozambican transitional president & former external affairs minister, Joachim Alberto Chissano. In 1990, a new constitution adopted for multi-party elections and a liberal economy.

A United Nations sponsored peace agreement b/n the FRELIMO and the rebel opposition called RENAMO forces ended the fighting in Mozambique, a peace treaty was signed in 1992. In December, 2004, Mozambique transformed a delicate transition to a multi-party democracy as Mr. Joaquim Alberto Chissano stepped down after eighteen years in office, his elected successor Mr.

Armando Emilio Guebuza promised to continue sound economic policies that have encouraged larger foreign investment.

Accession to power of president Armando Emilio Guebuza, December, 2004 by election, re-elected for second term.

Tentative election calendar - Presidential/Parliamentary, December/November

Mozambique – Timeline Diaries updates and related key notes:

3rd century - Iron Age Bantu-speaking tribes move into area from west-central Africa.

11th century - Shona empire develops between Limpopo and Zambezi rivers.

1498 - Portuguese expedition led by explorer Vasco da Gama drops anchor off Mozambican coast.

16-17th centuries - Portuguese venture into interior. Following military campaigns, colonists set up trading posts and mining enterprises and parcel-out land to European settlers.

18th-19th centuries - Mozambique becomes major slave-trading centre. Slave trade banned

1842 - Portugal outlaws slave trade from Mozambique, but clandestine trade continues for decades.

1878 - Portugal leases large tracts of territory to trading companies, who use conscript African labour to further their interests and build infrastructure.

1891 - Portugal and Britain define Mozambique's western and southern borders.

1902 - Lourenco Marques becomes colonial capital.

1932 - Portugal breaks up trading companies and imposes direct rule over colony.

1950s-60s - Colonial economy thrives, attracting thousands of new Portuguese settlers to Mozambique.

1962 - exiled activists opposed to Portuguese colonial power meet in Tanzania to form Mozambique Liberation Front - Frelimo - headed by Eduardo Mondlane.

In 1964, Che Guevera, by then international revolutionary "star," disappeared from public view. Over the next couple of years he turned up advising guerrilla movements in the Congo, Mozambique, and other countries. This was connected to Che's "foco" strategy, that is, using small cadres of revolutionaries to act as focal points for local dissidents to promote the creation of "hundred Vietnams" all over the world that would ultimately destroy the capitalist system in favor a socialist paradise. His 1966 arrival in Bolivia was another step in this campaign.

1964 - Frelimo forces begin war of independence. Guerrilla tactics frustrate Portuguese and Frelimo take control of much of north.

1974 - Military coup in Portugal. New government supports autonomy for colonies; start of departure of 250,000 Portuguese inhabitants.

1974 - Portugal and FRELIMO sign Lusaka Accord; transitional government under Joachim Alberto Chissano established.

Independence

1975 - Mozambique becomes independent. FRELIMO rules under single-party system with leader Samora Machel as president.

1976 – The capital, Lourenco Marques is renamed Maputo.

1976 – RENAMO - an anti-Frelimo resistance group - is set up by white Rhodesian officers as clashes with Frelimo forces escalate and Mozambique imposes economic sanctions against Rhodesia.

1977 - FRELIMO adopts Marxist-Leninist doctrine.

1980 - RENAMO is supported by South Africa after collapse of Rhodesian regime.

1984 - Under Nkomati Accord, Mozambique drops support for African National Congress (ANC) in return for South African withdrawal of backing for Renamo. Short-lived ceasefire fails and Renamo continues its offensives.

1986 - President Samora Moises Machel is killed in air crash, Joaquim Chissano becomes president.

1989 - FRELIMO renounces Marxist-Leninist doctrine.

1990 - Government amends the constitution to allow a multi-party political system. Initial talks take place between government and Renamo.

1992 - President Alberto Chissano and RENAMO leader Afonso Dhaklama sign peace deal in Rome.

1994 – Alberto Chissano is reelected.

1995 - Mozambique becomes Commonwealth member.

December 1999 – Alberto Chissano defeats Renamo's Dhlakama in presidential elections.

February 2000 - Devastating floods sweep through south of country, forcing tens of thousands to flee and leaving trail of destruction.

November 2000 - More then 40 people killed in rioting at Renamo protests against 1999 elections. Renamo claims poll was rigged; international observers say election was free and fair.

November 2000 - 82 inmates die at prison in north, many of them Renamo supporters rounded up after election riots. Preliminary report suggests asphyxiation owing to overcrowding as cause.

November 19, 2000: Violence again plagues Mozambique this time sparked by yet another election gone wrong. The trouble seems to have started on November 9 when a twelve Mozambique National Resistance (RENAMO) opposition protestors were killed and dozens more injured in a series of confrontations throughout the nation. Three people were killed in the northern Cabo Delgado district of Balama, three died in Moma in the central province of Zambezia, two died in the central province of Sofala, and four people were killed in the northern Nampula province. By November 10 the death toll had risen to 26, with over 100 injured. By November 14 the government had set the death toll at 40 with at least 200 injured. One of the more serious incidents occurred in Montepuez (1,600 kilometers north of the capital). 500 RENAMO supporters armed with AK-47 rifles occupied several public buildings. Twelve people died in the confrontation, including six government police officers. Tensions have been increasing in Mozambique, after an extended period of comparative stability following its 16 year-long civil war. The 1992 peace accord has been one of sub-Saharan Africa's few peace successes. Peace had been very popular in Mozambique, one of the most war weary spots in southern Africa. The renewed violence has surprised many in the country. Anglican Bishop Diniz Sengulance said "Instability after eight years of peace does not make any sense." There have been many signs of approaching trouble, however. Strategypage reported several months ago that RENAMO had admitted to having a company-sized security force (150 men), armed with light weapons. Western press sources now report that unit has 100 men. There was no indication that this unit was involved in the shoot-out in Montepuez. The election protests grew increasingly bitter. At one point RENAMO threatened to form a separate government in the six northern and central regions where it enjoys wide-spread support. Until relenting in October, RENAMO's political wing refused to take its parliamentary seats In response to the fighting, the Mozambique government condemned RENAMO leader Alfonso Dhlakama. The government said it would arrest RENAMO leaders and supporters involved in the violence. Another government spokesman said RENAMO is in the process of rearming and accused RENAMO of planning to seize power by force.

March 2001 - Flooding in Zambezi Valley displaces around 70,000 people. Two upstream dams forced to open flood gates, releasing huge volumes of water into river.

June 2002 - Frelimo chooses independence struggle veteran Armando Guebuza as candidate for the 2004 presidential elections; Chissano had declined to run for third term.

July 15, 2002: As Africa's delegates left Durban after the formation of the African Union and Gadaffi's men fuelled up for the Brother Leader's motorcade to Mozambique, Libya was confident of becoming the seat of the proposed Pan-African Parliament (PAP). Africa's favorite dictator Libyan Colonel Gadhafi arrived in Swaziland's spiritual capital Ludzidzini on 11 July with a motorcade of 60 armored vehicles and numerous female bodyguards. Known locally as the "Muammar Gaddafi road show", he travels with an entourage like a 21st century version of Rudyard Kipling's "The Man Who Would Be King"; two Boeing 707s and giant Antonov plane, plus assorted another aircraft and a container ship full of goat carcasses are used to move 400 security officers and bodyguards.

Although Colonel Gaddafi's travel arrangements are supposed to be a closely guarded secret, the press reported that his convoy would pass through Swaziland, Mozambique and Kenya on the self-promotional tour that would continue all the way back to Libya. Colonel Gaddafi would fly to each country along the route, leaving a brother to anchor the road show. The ground convoy included 60 assorted vehicles (some armored) and two 46-seater buses. Each vehicle was packed to capacity and security officers even found $6 million in hard cash in one car, although the Libyans point-blank refused for some of their baggage to be searched.

The armored vehicles' ostensible purpose was to provide safety for the Libyan leader's convoy home through Africa. But South African government officials feared he would use the vehicles to visit black townships and an attempt to steal the limelight from the summit's host and chairman of the new African Union, President Thabo Mbeki.

Gaddafi (also known as 'Brother Leader', 'The Guide') was given free rein in Durban, after South African security impounded most of his airborne convoy of luxury vehicles and other equipment on his arrival. However, there were frequent unpleasant encounters between South African security officers and the Libyan guards. On 6 July, a stand-off between South African and Libyan security forces was described as "almost a war", with 40 outnumbered and outgunned South African officers staring down almost 400 Libyans. One unnamed security officer told the press that Gaddafi's entourage "works totally above the law. They came here with the attitude that Gaddafi is the Golden Leader and that they, as Libyans, are above all of us."

Protocol allows for four firearms to be carried by a visiting president's personal detail, although special permits are sometimes issued. The Libyans were issued permits for 21 AK-47 assault rifles, but this had multiplied to 48 by the time the weapons were checked in at a Durban hotel. On 10 July, one of Colonel Gaddafi's planes was grounded in Mozambique after an unspecified number of rocket-propelled grenade launchers were discovered on board. An initial search of some cargo turned up 27 submachineguns.

South African cabinet ministers Charles Nqakula, Lindiwe Sisulu, and Mosiuoa Lekota attempted to do damage control on the 12th, claiming that everything was under the command and control of the local security unit assigned to the Libyans.

South Africa has reason to tolerate Colonel Gaddafi's antics, since it admitted on 16 June to holding talks with the Libyan government on supplying arms, but described the negotiations with the North African country as being an early stage. A Libyan deal could be very lucrative for the cash-strapped South African government.

Gaddafi wanted to upgrade his old Mirage fighters, as well as acquire a new fleet of fighter jets and replace his military helicopters. South African defense firms could provide Libya with communication and radar equipment, electronic warfare systems, armored trucks and cars and mine protection vehicles. The supply of military equipment to Libya is restricted by a United Nations embargo, imposed because of Colonel Gaddafi's alleged support for international terrorism.

Of particular noteworthiness is that one of the 10 armored cars in Colonel Gaddafi's delegation was fitted with a jamming device, which disrupts all electronic and radio signals in the vicinity. People on his route were likely to suffer sudden interruptions of their cell phone conversations as the convoy passed, indicative that at someone has been paying attention to Asymmetric Warfare's most effective weapons - the Command Detonated Mine. Recent combat experience (particularly in Chechnya) has illustrated that cell phone technology makes a wonderful actuator for a remotely-detonated mine (usually about the size of a 152/155mm HE shell). - Adam Geibel

November 2002 - Two defendants in murder trial allege that son of President Chissano is linked to 2000 killing of journalist Carlos Cardoso. Nymphine Chissano denies knowledge of murder.

June 13, 2003: Britain has pledged $6.5 million and the United States donated $1 million, to boost the African force monitoring cease-fire in Burudni. The African Union Mission in Burundi (AMIB) force includes troops from South Africa, Ethiopia and Mozambique.

The South Africans currently have 908 soldiers deployed in Burundi, protecting political leaders who had returned from exile to join the interim government of Burundi. That function had previously been carried out by the SA Protection Support Detachment, which has been in Burundi since 2001.

Whether the South African military is up to this level of activity is debatable, since they only spend about 1.6 percent of their gross domestic product on defense. This is far less than in other countries, like Botswana (5.5 percent) or Nigeria (4.5 percent). Coincidentally, Minister Mosiuoa Lekota told the press that very same day that South Africa's continental commitments mean that the South African National Defence Force will need more money. The South Africans are deploying twice as many troops as they anticipated when they set their last budget, but not gotten any more funds to support these moves. Opposition parties in South Africa are warning the government that commitments in other parts of the continent could become "Pretoria's Vietnam". - Adam Geibel

July 9, 2003: This summer promises to be a busy season for the Indian Navy (IN). Most significantly, they will assist Mauritius in keeping an eye on their exclusive economic zone (EEZ) in the Indian Ocean and details about the size of the naval assets to be committed would be worked out soon. India and China plan to follow up on recent high-level diplomatic efforts aimed at ending decades of hostility through their first-ever joint three-day long search and rescue exercises later this year.

The Indian Navy will also provide security cover to the African Union summit in Mozambique from July 4 to 12, as part of its strategy of expanding its presence in the Indian Ocean region which they consider a "force and capability projection exercise".

The destroyer INS Ranjit and offshore patrol vessel INS Suvarna had docked at the port of Maputo on 23 June, in response to Mozambican Presiden Chissano request for the IN security screen during his visit to India in May. African heads of state will attempt to adopt a common defense and strategic 'roadmap' at the summit. The ships were also expected to carry $100,000 worth of medical supplies for poor people.

Mozambique admittedly has insufficient assets to patrol it's own coast, so foreign and even domestic fishing vessels have been plundering the country's resources. Local fishing boats were pressed into service as auxiliaries for the conference and Mozambican authorities had asked India to allow the presence of national servicemen on board their ships, but the Indian Government turned down the request. However, Mozambican political opposition parties were less than thrilled with their government's approval of this restriction.

The Indian and US Navies will also hold joint naval exercises, codenamed Summerex, off the coast of Chennai in July. The exercise was originally scheduled to begin on July 4, but was pushed back to next week and will continue until July 22. The Navies of Sri Lanka, Maldives, Madagascar and Mauritius will participate as observers. The USS Curtis and a P3C Orion would join the Indians' latest helicopters, aircraft, submarines and ships of the Navy, Coast Guard and Air Force. India's largest naval air station, INS Rajali on the east coast at Arakkonam, nearly 70 km south of Chennai, will also be involved in the July 10-11 exercises.

The IN had conducted a two-day exercise with the Russian Navy on 22-23 May off India's west coast and planned a two-day exercise in the eastern Bay of Bengal from 1-2 June. The IN was involved in UN peacekeeping operations in Somalia in the mid-1990s and has close naval co-operation with Indian Ocean states like Sri Lanka and Mauritius, but these recent missions are now stretching India's sea legs.

By progressively increasing its fleet with new ships and broader experiences, the Indian Navy hopes to become the largest and strongest force in the Indian Ocean region in the coming years. - Adam Geibel

July 23, 2003: The military junta signed an agreement with a 30-strong group of international mediators, allowing the reinstatement of the elected government. The platoon of diplomats came from Angola, Brazil, Cape Verde, Congo, Gabon, Mozambique, Nigeria, Portugal and the United States were led by Congo-Brazzaville foreign minister Rodolphe Adada. President Fradico Menezes flew back that night, accompanied by Nigerian President Obasanjo. - Adam Geibel

September 9, 2003: Mozambique said it will send 228 soldiers to participate in the African Union peacekeeping force in Burundi.

November 2003 - Brazil promises to build plant in Mozambique to produce anti-retroviral drugs for HIV-Aids sufferers.

February 24, 2004: EST NewsMax Teresa Heinz Kerry: I'm an 'African American' First lady wannabe Teresa Heinz Kerry sometimes describes herself as an "African American," even though she grew up amidst segregated privilege in colonial Mozambique. "My roots are African," she told a reporter in 1995. "The birds I remember, the fruits I ate, the trees I climbed, they're African." Throughout the 1990s, Heinz Kerry referred to herself as "African American," the Baltimore Sun revealed on Tuesday. And when her use of the term set off a firestorm of controversy in 1993, she defended the claim. "African-hyphen-American belongs to blacks," Heinz Kerry's spokesman told reporters, insisting that it was proper for his boss to call herself African American as long as no hyphen was used or intended. The one-time Republican's depiction of herself as African rankles some who knew Heinz Kerry in the days when her father ran a medical clinic in Mozambique. Some say the wealthy "African American" has snubbed blacks in her homeland, because she has done next to nothing with her vast Heinz Foods fortune to improve living conditions there. "We are proud she is a daughter of the land," Neo Simbine, 75, a retired black nurse who worked with Heinz Kerry's father, told the Sun. "But you have to live what you say. If she really loves Mozambique and has lots of money, why doesn't she build us a hospital?" Heinz Kerry's fortune is equal to nearly a quarter of Mozambique's annual Gross Domestic Product. But aside from a contribution to her homeland's Save the Children Fund, the woman who repeatedly invokes her Mozambican roots has limited her generosity. A spokeswoman for the Heinz Foundation said the prospective first lady would give more if she were more confident the money would be managed properly.

February 2005 - Frelimo's Armando Guebuza inaugurated as president after defeating his main rival, Afonso Dhlakama of Renamo, in November's presidential poll.

October 2005 - Work starts on a long-planned "Unity Bridge" over the Ruvuma river, intended to link Mozambique and neighbouring Tanzania.

October 23, 2005: Starvation in southern Africa is leading to a peacekeeper crises. A protracted drought has seriously reduced crops yields in several countries in southern Africa. Mozambique, Lesotho, Swaziland, Zambia, Malawi, and Zimbabwe, are all affected. In Malawi and Zimbabwe, the problem has been exacerbated by serious political mis-management and turmoil. The U.N. World Food Program has embarked on a fund raising program, having estimated that by Spring of 2006, some $200 million worth of aid will be required to avert famine in some areas. The results, however, have been poor, since the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq, plus recent remarkable series of disasters - the December 2004 tsunami, several severe hurricanes in the Caribbean and Gulf of Mexico, Central America, and recent earthquakes in Asia, have already resulted in enormous outpouring of international aid, which has left few of the world?s traditional donor nations - notably the U.S., western Europe, and Japan - with much left to give.

As a result, the possibility of widespread famine looms over the region. Since several of the countries involved are beset of significant political turmoil or have only recently emerged from civil war, there is a great danger that this may lead to a revival of widespread disorders.

In this regard it is worth noting that South Africa, which is not affected by the drought and expects bumper crops this year, is committed to supporting the U.N. effort to get food to the stricken area, and is also restructuring its armed forces to serve more frequently as peacekeepers.

The growing unrest to the north could mean even greater demands on South Africa for peacekeeping troops. The South Africans are regarded as the best trained and disciplined troops in Africa, and are eagerly sought after as peacekeepers. But the South Africans have limited resources, and there is already popular resistance to sending more peacekeeping troops north.

November 10, 2005: Training an army of peacekeepers: The most critical problem in peacekeeping today is a serious shortage of troops suited to peacekeeping. Many of the nations that have traditionally supported peace operations, such as Western European and Scandinavian countries, as well as India and Pakistan, are already committed heavily in missions such as Afghanistan, Iraq, Bosnia, Kosovo, Haiti, Democratic Republic of Congo, and so forth. This shortage of qualified personnel has led to a lowering of standards, and is one reason for recent incidents in which peacekeepers have been found abusing they people they're supposed to be helping.

In recent decades, most peacekeeping operations have been in Africa, where currently nearly 80-percent of U.N. peacekeepers (some 75,000 troops) are deployed, as well as thousands more troops engaged in peacekeeping under the aegis of regional organizations such as ECOWAS (Economic Community of West African States). In 1997, a time when the demand for peacekeepers were particularly high, the U.S. developed the African Crisis Response Initiative (ACRI) to train African troops for peace operations. In 2001 this was restructured as the African Capacity for Peace Operations (ACOTA) Program.

Administered by the US State Department in cooperation with the US Defense Department, ACOTA is intend to provide African armed forces with:

Training & equipment to permit them to respond to peace support and complex humanitarian relief missions

Building enhance sustainable African peace support training capacity

Developing effective command and control capabilities

Promoting commonality and interoperability with "First World" peacekeeping forces

Enhancing international and regional peace support capacity

Rather than a "one size fits all" approach, an attempt is made to tailor ACOTA programs to "nation-specific" needs. In this way trainers can focus on the most critical needs of each particular army.

Naturally, some aspects of the program are pretty standard. For example, all of the recipient nations are likely to receive uniforms, communications equipment, GPS systems, generators and portable electrical systems, water purifiers, and so forth. Normally, ACOTA does not provide weaponry or vehicles, except in very specific circumstances.

ACOTA does not operate in countries with internal security problems, to avoid the appearance of training government forces against local unrest. As a result, over the years ACOTA support to a number of countries has been terminated, such as Ivory Coast.

The ACOTA program has been very successful. The program has resulting in the training of some 17,000 troops from nine African countries (Benin, Botswana, Ethiopia, Ghana, Kenya, Malawi, Mali, Mozambique, and Senegal).

Along with the G8 "Africa Action Plan", ACOTA was one the inspirations behind the June 2004 American proposal for a "Global Peace Operations Initiative" (GPOI). An international (i.e., G8) effort, GPOI will absorb the ACOTA program, and integrate similar training programs being run by Britain and France. GPOI is intended to increase the number of military and police personnel available for international peace support operations by providing training, logistic support, and equipment. The ultimate objective is to have 50,000 properly trained and equipped troops available in Africa and another 15,000 in Asia, Europe, Latin America, and the Caribbean by 2010. The initial goal is to train ten battalions per year in African and in the Western Hemisphere, Europe, and Asia. In addition, the program proposes to establishing a center in Italy to train international paramilitary constabulary forces to support peacekeeping operations. The estimated cost of GPOI is about $650 million, of which Congress has already committed $100 million, by transferring funds from existing programs for training foreign forces and for peace operations. The balance is to come from foreign sources.

July 2006 - The World Bank cancels most of Mozambique's debt under a plan promoted by the G8 nations.

February 2007 - Chinese President Hu Jintao visits, promises interest-free loans for agriculture, health and education.

March 2007 - Three days of mourning are declared after nearly 100 people are killed in an explosion at an arms depot in the capital.

April 12, 2007: A riot broke out in Kampala, with three people killed. One of the dead was an ethnic Indian Ugandan who was reportedly stoned to death. The rioters were objecting to an Indian-owned company's plan to build a sugar plantation in a forest reserve. Ethnic Indians in East Africa are often resented for their success in business.

April 13, 2007: A former president of Mozambique, Joaquim Chissano, met with LRA leader Joseph Kony. Chissano urged the LRA to continue to pursue peace negotiations with Uganda. Chissano is currently serving as a UN representative and observer for the peace talks.

April 14, 2007: The LRA and the Ugandan government agreed to extend their ceasefire.

April 15, 2007: The military said that its offensive against the Allied Democratic Force (ADF) in western Uganda will continue. The army has now either killed or captured 65 ADF rebels since the offensive began in late March. Most of the fighting has occurred in Bundibugyo District. The offensive has consisted of a series of cordon and search operations. The army reported that it has received excellent local intelligence during the offensive (meaning civilians have supplied the army units with information on the ADF's whereabouts).

April 17, 2007: Ugandan police broke up a large political protest. The police action included tear gas and shooting. The protest was sparked by the arrest of two Ugandan members of Parliament who were accused of inciting attacks on ethnic Indians in Uganda.

April 18, 2007: The AU (African Union) is sending eight observers to the Ri-Kwangba LRA assembly area in south Sudan. The observers will stay there indefinitely. The AU has agreed to provide the observers in response to LRA rebel claims that LRA fighters are threatened by the Ugandan military. The observers come from Tanzania, South Africa, Mozambique, and Kenya.

July 25, 2007 It is a striking coincidence that the Indian and U.S. governments should have announced the successful conclusion of their long-stalled nuclear cooperation deal in the same week that India established its first overseas military base. India's new base, an electronic listening post and radar station on the island of Madagascar, is perfectly situated to monitor the international waterways around South Africa and the Indian Ocean with its oil tanker routes to Asia. India has also leased an atoll from Mauritius on which a similar facility is to be built. Its navy has secured berthing rights in Oman, and signed an agreement last year to patrol the Mozambique coast. In 2003, the Indian navy provided seaward protection for the African Union summit at Mozambique. The Indian Ocean is increasingly under Indian management, led by a fast-growing navy that is buying advanced French-made Scorpene "stealth" submarines and has just acquired its first ever U.S. warship, the former USS Trenton, a large amphibious transport and landing ship, along with U.S. UH-3H helicopters. Three months ago, India completed a $1.1 billion deal with the United States for Hercules military transport. The United States sees India as a key strategic partner and as a potential balance against China's potential dominance of Asia, and is prepared to equip India for the role. Already one of the world's biggest customers for arms, spending over $10 billion in the last three years, India is now planning to buy 126 multi-role combat jets. The US F-16 and F/A-18 Super Hornet are seen as the main contenders in a deal that could be worth another $10 billion. A new study by India's Associated Chambers of Commerce and Industry, "Private Sector Participation in Defense," suggests that India's imports of military hard and software should reach $30 billion by 2012. This is the strategic context for the nuclear deal, which ends the isolation from the nuclear community that was imposed on India when it staged its first nuclear tests in 1998, and will allow India to import nuclear fuels and technology under the terms of the Non-Proliferation Treaty. This will be important for India's civilian nuclear power program, but its main impact is symbolic in asserting the new closeness of the U.S. strategic partnership. The deal has been stalled over some of the terms imposed by the U.S. Congress under the Hyde Act, which sought to impose certain restrictions on India. The first was to hold the deal hostage, allowing it to be suspended if India staged more nuclear tests. The second was to bring some, but not all, of India's nuclear rectors under the intensive inspection regime of the NPT and the International Atomic Energy Agency. The most authoritative opposition to the deal has come from Peter Iyengar, former chairman of India's Atomic Energy Commission, who listed his concerns in an exclusive United Press International interview at his home in New Delhi with this reporter in February this year. "As currently drafted, the agreement would force us to stop re-processing nuclear fuel, something we have been doing for thirty years," Iyengar said. "It would terminate our strategic program (India's nuclear weapons program) by exposing us to sanctions if we conducted nuclear tests. And it puts impossible barriers in our path to ongoing and future research, including our well-developed programs for fast-breeder reactors and to use thorium rather than uranium as a nuclear fuel," he added. "By saying that India shall not re-process fuel and not develop the fast-breeder reactors, this deal undermines our ability to produce energy in the future when uranium runs out," Dr Iyengar went on. "This is a question of national sovereignty, of India's right and ability to decide such things for ourselves." The Hyde Act was designed to be watertight, but somehow the Bush administration has managed to accommodate India's concerns. This was done, to widespread surprise last week, when Vice President Dick Cheney took personal charge of the talks in Washington with India's National Security adviser M.K. Narayanan, Foreign Secretary Shiv Shankar Menon and Anil Kakodkar, secretary of India's Department of Atomic Energy Menon was packed and about to check out from his hotel when Cheney intervened and brought Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice into the final phase of talks, which opened with Cheney saying, "This deal must be done." The White House national security adviser Steven Hadley was also ..

July 27, 2007: The US India Nuclear Deal Signals A New Big Power Relationship' The Indian Ocean is increasingly under Indian management, led by a fast-growing navy that is buying advanced French-made Scorpene "stealth" submarines. The United States sees India as a key strategic partner and as a potential balance against China's potential dominance of Asia, and is prepared to equip India for the role. by Martin Walker UPI Editor Emeritus Washington DC (UPI)

January 2008 - More than 50,000 people displaced by flooding along the Zambezi valley.

March 17, 2008: This disaster was part of a trend. Last year, there was a large explosion in an ammo depot in the African nation of Mozambique (killing nearly a hundred). Six years ago, an even greater disaster occurred in Nigeria, when a munitions depot near the capital cooked off, killing over 200 people.

May 2008 - Government begins voluntary repatriation of citizens in the wake of xenophobic violence in South Africa targeting African migrants. Thousands of Mozambican legal workers in South Africa are said to have fled the country.

January 2009 - UN says 350,000 people in Mozambique are in need of food aid as a result of poor harvests caused by poor rainfall.

October 2009 - The government announces a $500m loan from the European Union and Danish and Dutch governments to build a railway line to link the coal-rich northern Moatize mines to the port of Nacala by 2015.

President Guebuza wins re-election with more than 75% of the vote. Main opposition Renamo party alleges widespread fraud, while monitors accuse election commission of lacking independence.

February 2010 - Former minister Antonio Munguambe sentenced to 20 years in prison for embezzling $1.7m in state funds, in the highest-level corruption conviction since 1975.

September 2010 - Food price protests. Several people killed when police open fire.

October 2010 - Diplomatic row with Malawi over new waterway connecting land-locked Malawi with Mozambican coast. Mozambique impounds first barge to use new route.

December 2010 - Mozambique has become a leading drug trafficking centre, with senior figures turning a blind eye, according to classified US documents released on WikiLeaks.

October 2011 - Italian energy company Eni says it's made a giant gas discovery off the coast.

February 2012 - South Africa deploys troops along the border to combat rhino poaching.

March 7, 2012: On March 4th, ammunition stored at an armored regiment base in Brazzaville, capital of Congo (the smaller one next to the larger Congo that used to be called Zaire), exploded. The fire was brought under control the next day, before it could spread to ammo stored at another army base 100 meters away. Over 300 people were killed because, as is common in Africa, military units are often based inside major cities, the better to deal with any attempts to overthrow the government. Large quantities of ammunition are often stored on these urban bases, so the troops can handle any contingency. This particular disaster occurred because of faulty electrical wiring causing a fire that was not promptly extinguished. African armies tend to be poorly trained and led, which often expresses itself in sloppy safety procedures and hazardous handling of munitions.

The danger is not over in Brazzaville. Many shells and rockets were thrown, unexploded, hundreds of meters from the base. These will have to be carefully removed before someone, or an animal, disturbs the munition and sets it off. Some of these munitions are buried in the wreckage of hundreds of damaged or destroyed structures. Thousands of people are now homeless and many of them are injured.

Ammunition explosions like this are increasingly common, although usually not as catastrophic as the recent one in Brazzaville. But at least once a year there is a really big one somewhere and 10-20 smaller ones.

For example, last year some 2,000 tons of Iranian munitions and explosives, stored in the open at a naval base in South Cyprus for the previous two years, caught fire and exploded. The blast knocked out a nearby power plant (supplying 60 percent of the electricity in South Cyprus), killed over a dozen people, damaged hundreds of buildings, and was totally avoidable. Munitions experts had warned the government that storing all those explosives in the open, under the hot Mediterranean sun, was dangerous. They were right.

Although most of these munitions were of recent manufacture you cannot be too careful how you store, and handle, this stuff. For example, the year before four Ukrainian sailors were seriously injured when two 30mm cannon shells spontaneously exploded. Actually, those shells didn't go off entirely without warning. The navy reported that the shells were old, beyond their “use by” date, and were probably set off by vibrations ships generate during training exercises.

This is a common problem in countries that have long used ammunition bought from Russia or China. During the communist period, as per the Soviet custom, old ammunition was not destroyed but kept around. Communist countries were poor. It made sense to keep those old mortar and artillery shells (plus bombs and military explosives) for the inevitable war with the enemies of socialism. But the chemical reactions taking place in propellants and explosives, once these items are manufactured, eventually cause dangerous side effects. Over time, the compounds, that make the propellants and explosives work, deteriorate and change. This renders the propellants and explosives useless or, in many cases, unstable and very dangerous.

This has resulted in many spontaneous explosions on Russian ships and in ammunition depots. These accidents also happen outside Russia. Four years ago an Albanian ammunition processing facility north of the capital exploded. There were over 200 casualties, including at least nine dead (largely among the 4,000 civilians living nearby). Over 300 buildings were destroyed and over 2,000 damaged. The facility was used to destroy old ammo, which is a condition for Albania to be allowed to join NATO. There were about 100,000 tons of old ammunition in Albania and the destroyed facility dismantled 500-600 tons of the stuff each month. The explosion in Albania probably occurred during the process of extracting explosives from the old ammo. This can be tricky, as the least little spark can set this stuff off. Worse, older ammo in an unstable state can go off without a spark.

This disaster was part of a trend. Five years ago there was a large explosion in an ammo depot in the African nation of Mozambique. About a hundred died. Eight years ago an even greater disaster occurred in Nigeria, when a munitions depot near the capital cooked off, killing over 200 people. Two years before that another ammo storage site in a Nigerian city exploded, killing over a thousand.

Russia has also had problems with elderly, and cranky, munitions. In the 1990s, there were several munitions depot explosions, some of them quite spectacular. Russia, however, tended to put these depots in isolated areas, so the casualties were low. However, the Russians took the hint and disposed of huge quantities of Cold War surplus munitions.

March 2012 - Police raid a camp housing 300 supporters of the opposition Renamo movement who had allegedly been waiting for orders to stage anti-government protests.

April 2012 - Portugal agrees to give up its remaining stake in the Cabora Bassa hydro-electric scheme, ending a long-running dispute.

April 27, 2012 The Swaziland Army recently ordered $1.25 million worth of cell phone monitoring equipment from a South African distributor. At the last minute the army said it could not pay for the equipment. So the distributor went to the Swazi High Court and sued the army for the money. This made public a purchase the army had hoped to keep secret.

This sort of monitoring gear is only sold to governments or government agencies, and the Swaziland Army qualified. The army was acting at the behest of the government, in order to establish an espionage operation to keep tabs on the growing number of people trying to overthrow the king, the last absolute monarch in Africa.

The problem here is money. Swaziland is poor and never has enough cash, except to pay for the lavish lifestyles of the royal family and their friends. This would include the senior army officers.

Swaziland is a small country (population 1.2 million) between South Africa and Mozambique. The armed forces (the army) have about 3,000 personnel and are mainly used to keep the unruly population in line. This will now be more difficult with details of the army's proposed spying operation exposed. It is made worse by the fact that the army will have a harder time getting the money for the equipment, since it's quite possible that the money was provided but was stolen by someone in the government. James Dunnigan

July 20, 2012: Mozambique's Inter-connection with Congo Poltics: M23 is solidifying its control of the town of Bunagana (Uganda-Congo border) and a strip of territory west of the town (Congolese side). M23 also controls the Runyonyi and Jomba areas. The Congolese government stated that it believes M23 intends to attack North Kivu's capital, Goma.

July 22, 2012: The Rwandan government denied accusations that it is supporting the M23 rebel movement in the Congo.

July 24, 2012: The army fought with M23 rebel forces in and around the town of Kibumba and Rugari (North Kivu province, eastern Congo). The two towns are north of the provincial capital, Goma. UN forces employed helicopter gunships in the battle. The UN also estimated that at least 260,000 Congolese have fled their homes since April in order to escape M23 fighters. Rebels and government forces traded heavy weapons fire around two eastern villages on Friday, forcing thousands of civilians to flee towards the provincial capital days ahead of a regional summit due to tackle the rebellion.

July 25, 2012: The UN is seeking more support for the Congolese Army. Congolese soldiers report that they are not receiving their pay, that they are under-paid when they do, and that their living conditions are poor. All of that is true. The request may help have a political angle. Improving Congolese Army conditions would make it less likely that Congolese soldiers would rebel and join various rebel militia groups still operating in the eastern Congo.

August 1, 2012: M23 is getting the headlines but the FDLR (Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Rwanda) is still operating in the eastern Congo. The FDLR is primarily a Rwandan Hutu tribal force and has ties to the Hutu radicals who instigated the 1994 genocide. In many ways the Hutu-Tutsi struggle in Rwanda is continuing in the eastern Congo. Though Rwanda now stands accused of supporting the M23 rebels, the Congolese government has let Rwandan Army units track and pursue FDLR rebels in the eastern Congo. Rwanda and Congo have coordinated military operations against the FDLR.

August 2, 2012: The UN Security Council stated that foreign nations must end their support for Congolese rebels, specifically the M23 rebel group. Essentially the UN condemned Rwanda without naming Rwanda.

August 9, 2012: The government rejected calls for negotiations with the M23 rebel group and said that it will not negotiate with the rebels. It still considers the rebels to be mutineers from the Congolese Army (FARDC). The government also said that it would not support any peacekeeping force in the eastern Congo that included Rwandan troops. The government prefers UN peacekeepers and it wants UN forces to take a more active role in confronting M23.

August 15, 2012: The Rwandan government said that the UN Group of Experts on the Congo is acting in bad faith. Rwanda contended the UN report was filled with inaccuracies. Rwanda contended that it has not supplied M23 with weapons and that M23 has access to weapons (including heavy weapons, like multiple rocket launchers) that were seized in 2008, by the CNDP militia and then hidden. The government accused one member of the UN study group of having a benign view of radical Hutu organizations like the FDLR and had published an article that described the FDLR as victims of the Rwandan Tutsi government. Essentially, Rwanda claimed that the UN study exhibited an anti-Tutsi tribal bias. Welcome to African politics and political interpretation.

August 18, 2012: The Congo is a topic at the Southern African Development Community (SADC) annual summit. The South African government told the summit that Rwanda must end its support for Congolese rebels in the eastern Congo. South Africa was referring to UN and Congolese accusations that Rwanda supports the M23 rebel movement.

August 19, 2012: The stand-off with the M23 rebel group continues in the Bunagana area. Since the beginning of the month, a tentative ceasefire has been arranged between the Congolese Army and the M23 fighters but the government believes that the M23 militia is reorganizing and preparing for another round of fighting.

August 21, 2012: The government responded to critics who argue that Zimbabwe should not be allowed to deploy peacekeeping troops in the Congo. The government said that Zimbabwean troops contributed to stability when they deployed into the Congo during the Great Congo War. Others remember Zimbabwean participation quite differently. The Zimbabwean forces reportedly committed many atrocities and plundered Congolese mineral resources. Zimbabwe sent troops to the Congo in 1998, and only withdrew them in 2001. A UN study found evidence that Zimbabwean Army officers and senior members of Zimbabwe's governing ZANU-PF party made money by selling and smuggling Congolese resources. It is also argued that Angola should not be allowed to participate in an AU sponsored peacekeeping force that may deploy into the eastern Congo. Angolan and Namibian forces also intervened in 1998. The Zimbabwean, Angolan, and Namibian forces are sometimes referred to as the SADC (Southern African Development Community) contingent in the Great Congo War, or the SADC Alliance. At the time Zimbabwe's dictator, Robert Mugabe, justified sending troops because he contended the Uganda and Rwanda had invaded the Congo. In 2009, the Angolan government stated that SADC's Standby Brigade was ready to intervene in the Congo, if asked. SADC has 15 members, Malawi, Angola, Congo, The Republic of Congo, South Africa, Namibia, Botswana, Mauritius, Lesotho, Mozambique, Madagascar, Swaziland, Zambia, Zimbabwe, and the Seychelles. (Austin Bay)

August 24, 2012: MONUSCO now has around 4,000 peacekeeping troops deployed in the northeastern Congo. The last thing Congo needs is more ethnic strife, but Congo's northeastern Ituri district is once again experiencing ethnic tensions that include echoes of tribal separatism. The FRPI (Patriotic Resistance Front in Ituri) militia group now controls an area around Lake Albert (about 100 kilometers south of Ituri's capital, Bunia). The FRPI claims that it has formed an alliance with the PFDDI (Popular Front for Durable Development in Ituri), the RAF (Revolutionary Armed Forces) militia, and the IAFI (Integrated Armed Forces of Ituri). Allegedly the alliance wants the Congolese government to make Ituri a province. Ituri, as Kibali-Ituri, was a Congolese province from 1962 to 1966. It is now governed by the Ituri Interim Administration as part of Congo's Orientale province.

However, Rwanda and also Uganda have been accused of supporting various rebel groups in the eastern Congo, including the M23 Movement which still controls a large chunk of territory in the Congo's North Kivu province, including a strip near the Ugandan border. The UN's Group of Experts on the Congo (GoE Congo) has accused Rwanda of providing M23 with material and financial support. Rwanda denies the accusation. However, many of the M23 rebels were associated with Laurent Nkunda's CNDP (National Congress for the Defense of the People) militia. Rwanda supported the CNDP until January 2009. The CNDP was regarded as a Congolese Tutsi militia. The M23 Movement takes its name from March 23, 2009, the date M23 the 2009 peace agreement that was signed. The agreement was supposed to end the war and chaos in the eastern Congo. It promised rebel groups that they would have political rights and various economic opportunities. M23 rebels contend that the government has violated the peace agreement. M23 began operations in April 2012. (Austin Bay)

August 31, 2012: Several international organizations have suggested that a peacekeeping force composed of African Union (AU) nations deploy into the eastern Congo. UN officials in Africa began discussing it publicly late last year but the idea has circulated in the diplomatic community for several years. The concept of an African peacekeeping brigade of some sort has bounced around at least since the 1970s. The code phrase for the Congo is deploying a neutral regional force, or some variation. The AU would likely sponsor the force, if it is organized, and the UN might sponsor it as well. Critics point out that the UN peacekeeping force is an international force. They point that out not to criticize the AU but to note that the UN is losing interest in the Congo and its intractable problems. That is the dirty little public secret about the UN Stabilization Force in the Congo (MONUSCO) operation. MONUSCO still deploys around 20,000 personnel (soldiers, police, administrators, etc.) in the Congo but UN members are frustrated and are tired of paying the bill. The diplomats reply that a regional force would bring a regional political commitment to stopping the chaos and bloodletting in the eastern Congo. That political commitment ought to translate into regional efforts to stop the smuggling of minerals and weapons that help finance the various militias and gangs operating in the eastern Congo. In early August the defense ministers of Burundi, Republic of Congo (Brazzaville), Rwanda, Angola, Tanzania, and Uganda met with the Congolese defense minister and discussed the idea of creating an African regional force for policing the eastern Congo, and there was interest in creating the force.

September 16, 2013: MOZAMBIQUE - Production a long way off for country’s gas'

ION: Now the proud owner of 184 TCF of gas, and thus ahead of Nigeria’s with its 182 TCF, Mozambique became Africa’s leading nation in terms of gas reserves this year.

December 8, 2013: Mozambique: Frelimo dignitaries sew up energy sector’

ION No 1367: Eminent members of the Frelimo elite follow the example of President Armando Guebuza and his family who own stakes in a large number of companies. They have invested in the energy sector. The children and friends of former presidents Samora Machel and Joaquim Alberto Chissano own stakes in a large number of the country's oil, gas and energy companies. The generals, particularly from the north of the country, who up to now had specialized mainly in forestry and mining, are now also buying into the natural gas sector.

December 20, 2013: Mozambique: Nigeria's Dangote arrives in cement area'

ION No 1370: The massive investment that the Nigerian cement company Dangoteis planning to make on the African continent should lead to creating production units in South Africa, Senegal and Zambia next year, followed by others in Ethiopia and Tanzania in 2015, and finally Congo, South Sudan and Kenya in 2016.

July 4, 2014: MOZAMBIQUE: The Chinese in Nacala real estate: two Hong Kong companies with several subsidiaries operating in the northern Mozambique mining and cement sectors have now turned their attention to the property market.

HISTORICIZE

Who Killed Samora Moises Machel?

Tatenda Gwaambuka African Exponent Staff Writer

Friday July 8, 2016

The ghost of Machel, the spirit of his ideology should continue to live on as Africans continue to claim fairness in world affairs.

Born more than 200 miles north of Maputo, September 29, 1933 in Chilembene, Samora Machel became the first president of independent Mozambique in 1975. Samora became leader of Frelimo in 1970 after the assassination of Eduardo Mondlane in 1969. The party adhered to Marxist values which Samora argued were not borrowed from a book but he had adopted after seeing the suffering of his people. His ideas were therefore not fundamentally different from those of Mugabe's ZANU and Mandela's ANC thus the support his party rendered to the movements. In 1984, he signed the Nkomati Accord with South Africa, a largely fictitious agreement to stop supporting opposition movements. South Africa reneged on its obligations, continuing support for Renamo in a bid to oust the Machel regime. In 1986, on the 19th of October, Samora Machel died in a plane crash in the Mbuzini Mountains of South Africa. Almost 30 years later, no concrete explanation has been given as to who did it. The question is not likely to go out of fashion soon, Africa still needs to know who killed Samora Machel, a lion of pan-Africanism.

What happened on the 19th of October, 1986?

In what seems to be a plot twist in a blockbuster film, in 2003, Hans Louw, a Namibian national revealed to The Sowetan that the Machel plane crash was no accident but a well-orchestrated plan to get rid of the Mozambican statesman. He was not alone as former Rhodesian Selous Scout operative, Edwin Mudingi also claimed he had been part of the ploy and confirmed Louw's involvement. Were they just attention seekers? This is a hard question to answer. The Margo Commission inquiry would rubbish this claim as the findings were that the pilots were at fault and caused the accident but the Soviet investigation proved there must have been a decoy beacon used to drive the plane off its course into the mountains of Mbuzini in Mpumalanga. On the particular day, Machel was in a jet, a Russian Tupolev Tu-134A-3 which plummeted to his death and thirty-three other people. The Margo Commission of Inquiry was established to investigate the crash and it should have included Mozambican and Soviet members but the South Africans refused to include them as equal partners.

The Truth and Reconciliation Commission Findings

The TRC findings were inconclusive but they largely doubted the Margo finding that the crash was solely due to pilot error. This was in the face of circumstantial evidence. What had been the South African-Mozambican relationship at the time? It is common cause the two countries were not on the best of terms at the time and tempers were at boiling point. Malawi and South Africa were supporting the Renamo renegades of Mozambique to remove Frelimo from power through unconstitutional means. This sent the countries on a collision course with Machel at one point confronting Hastings Banda "in an acrimonious exchange in Blantyre". When six South Africans died in a landmine explosion in Mozambique, Minister Magnus Malan of South Africa went on the offensive saying Machel would "clash head-on with South Africa".

Graca Machel is said to have believed the Malawi government had held a crisis meering in February after Mozambique threatened to close off Malawi's access to the sea. It is here that the assassination of Machel was discussed and the proposal presented to President Botha who approved of it. A special team to monitor Machel was then set up. It is also alleged in the Truth and Reconciliation findings that after the crash, witnesses saw security personnel dig through the wreckage to find documents which were copied. Mozambique was only informed nine hours after the crash…after the South African team had taken all the documents it needed to copy. The inquiry concluded that there was need for further investigations but in 2016, there has been no new information availed to the world.

What Now?

It is going to be thirty years after the crash in October this year. Dan Moyana, a journalist who almost joined the Machel entourage recounts what has happened over the past 30 years; nothing of consequence. He concludes, "The Machel family and the people of Mozambique need to know what really happened. The anti-apartheid movement needs to know what happened. The people of Africa deserve the truth.”

This is the true reflection of the situation. Africa still is interested in knowing who was behind the death of Samora Machel. Though this might not be soon, what is important now is the influence he has had on African thinking. The ghost of Machel, the spirit of his ideology should continue to live on as Africans continue to claim fairness in world affairs. This is the least the continent can do to honour his memory.

What are the safest but less traveled countries in Africa?

Didier Champion
Traveling around all 55 countries of the continent. November 2, 2018

Alvin Loong provided a good comprehensive answer already.

In West-Africa, I would go to Gambia and Senegal.

In Central-Africa, I would choose Gabon and Republic of Congo (Congo-Brazzaville).

I would also go to the Islands (Cape Verde and Sao Tome et Principe in the Atlantic Ocean & Comoros & Seychelles in the Indian Ocean).

In East-Africa, I would go for Rwanda and Uganda.

In Southern Africa, Lesotho, Mozambique & Swaziland are my choices. Check out Africa is Home to learn more.

Related Links
What countries in Africa should I avoid during travels?

What are the safest African countries to travel to right now?

Which is the safest city in Africa?

Which countries in Africa are safe to visit as a tourist?

What is the safest country to travel to in West Africa?

What is the safest and most beautiful African country to stay in for one month?

Why did Mozambique join the Commonwealth?

Kevin Richardson Former Academic Researcher December 27, 2020

There are few direct benefits of Commonwealth membership and some debate about its usefulness, so the question is a fair one. Mozambique gained neither trade nor aid by virtue of membership.
I expect that the question would be addressed definitively in The Commonwealth Brand: Global Voice, Local Action by Victoria Te Velde (Ashgate, 2011) and in the SADC's Mozambique in the Commonwealth (1997), but I do not have access to the full text of either work.

Factors seem to include the following:

Impoverished shortly after independence, Mozambique had become highly dependent on foreign aid, especially from the Soviet Union. President Samora Machel in his later years, and his successor Joaquim Chissano, pursued stronger ties with other countries and international organizations to balance out this dependence. For example, Mozambique is a full member of the Organisation of Islamic Cooperation and even an observer of the Francophonie

The Commonwealth had worked against White minority rule in Rhodesia and South Africa with the cooperation of Mozambique. For example, Mozambique supported sanctions against Rhodesia and South Africa, seriously damaging its own economy. By the late 1980s, with Zimbabwe having achieved independence and the end of apartheid insight, Chissano wanted to ensure Mozambique had some influence in the future of South Africa. He requested and was granted permission to attend the 1987 Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting (CHOGM) to voice Mozambican concerns.

Although there are few direct benefits of Commonwealth membership, there are NGOs and professional associations affiliated with it. Improving Mozambican access to such institutions and their expertise would potentially assist with development.

One must also consider the stalemate of the civil war.

Fighters of the former Mozambican rebel movement “RENAMO” receiving military training, Nov. 8, 2012

The main opposition RENAMO identified with the Portuguese and took the pursuit of membership in the Commonwealth as something of an insult. Had they been victorious, such an effort would not likely have been undertaken. But by the late 1980s, RENAMO was losing support from South Africa and FRELIMO had abandoned its earlier Marxist policies, making peace talks possible — and with the peace agreement in 1992 followed by free elections, Mozambique had fulfilled one of the prerequisites for Commonwealth membership.

There are also all the usual reasons states pursue membership in international organizations:

Direct diplomacy at the ministerial and head-of-government levels with other members

Access to larger/wealthier members

General cooperation on matters of common concern

From the other side, Mozambique was long considered a ”cousin” country to the Commonwealth for its trade ties and support of anti-apartheid efforts. They even drive on the left :). Since the Commonwealth does not have an “observer” status, making Mozambique a full member came under discussion. Mozambique fulfilled the requirements of the Harare Declaration, and it is said that at the Auckland CHOGM in 1995, Nelson Mandela himself made an impassioned speech supporting the application as an exceptional case.

Related Links

Why did Rwanda and Mozambique join the Commonwealth as neither were former British colonies?

Could Israel join the Commonwealth had it wanted to?

Would Ireland ever rejoin the Commonwealth?

Why is the USA not a commonwealth nation even though it was ruled by the British?

Which former British colonies have chosen not to join the Commonwealth of Nations?

Why isn't Ireland a member of the Commonwealth?

Committee to Protect Journalists (CPJ)

Mozambican journalist Matías Guente is unwavering in his commitment to make sure his community not only gets the news, but the full story, even in the face of serious danger. As the executive editor of Canal de Moçambique, an independent weekly investigative newspaper, and its daily digital publication CanalMoz, Matías has reported on everything from local government corruption to crime syndicates with ties to law enforcement.

Over the years he has faced a myriad of threats, from police interrogations to an attempted kidnapping. In 2020, an arson attack destroyed the paper’s office and equipment. Without missing a beat, Matías and his team still managed to produce that week’s edition of the paper. Matías knew that the perpetrators were “trying just to shut down the paper, because they know how relevant we are to democracy.”

But he would not be silenced. That is why I hope you will join me virtually November 18, in celebrating Matías at the 2021 International Press Freedom Awards.

Join me on Thursday at 8:00pm EST, November 18, to watch the virtual awards ceremony, streaming on https://ipfa.cpj.org, Facebook, and YouTube, where it will also be available to watch after. You can also join the conversation by congratulating Matías on social media with the hashtag #IPFA and #pressfreedom, and be sure to follow us on Facebook, Instagram, and Twitter where we'll be sharing your reactions that evening.

Hope to celebrate with you all,

Angela Quintal
Africa Program Coordinator
Committee to Protect Journalists

Mozambican police assault journalists reporting at station

Faizal Abudo, reporter with the private online broadcaster TV Muniga, was assaulted by Mozambican police. (Sadamo Muzé)

New York, July 12, 2021 — Mozambican authorities must investigate a recent police assault on journalists, hold those responsible to account, and ensure that members of the media are able to report without reprisal, the Committee to Protect Journalists said today.

On June 29, Simão Mugas and Faizal Abudo, reporters with the private online broadcaster TV Muniga, Leonardo Gimo and Edmilson Luis, reporters with the private TV channel TV Sucesso, and Emerson Joaquim, director of private online broadcaster Afro TV, were reporting on the alleged police beating of activists at a police station in Nampula, the capital of northeastern Nampula Province, when police shoved them out of the station, according to news reports and Mugas, Abudo, Gimo, and Joaquim, who spoke to CPJ via phone. The police then punched, kicked, and slapped Mugas and dragged Abudo back into the station, where they punched and kicked him while the other journalists fled, Mugas and Abudo told CPJ.

CPJ called Luis but he did not pick up; Gimo told CPJ that Luis is on assignment in an area out of cellular phone range.

"The use of force by police against journalists who are simply doing their jobs is outrageous and Mozambican authorities must ensure that this incident is investigated and the perpetrators brought to justice," said CPJ Africa Program Coordinator Angela Quintal. “Police officers must not be given free rein to abuse their office and censor scrutiny of their actions without consequences.”

Simão Mugas (left), reporter with the private online broadcaster TV Muniga, Leonardo Gimo (center), reporter with the private TV channel TV Sucesso, and Emerson Joaquim (right), director of private online broadcaster Afro TV, were all shoved out of a police station after they reported on alleged police abuse there. (Photos from left to right by Sadamo Muzé, Leonardo Gimo, and Camões Manuel)

Abudo, Gimo, and Joaquim told CPJ they went to the police station to cover the detention of activists who denounced alleged police brutality of street vendors.

At the station they were told to wait as the police commander was still busy questioning the activists, the journalists told CPJ. When the activists emerged, they alleged to the journalists that police had beaten them, the journalists said.

“I instinctively began to film even though we were still inside the police station,” Mugas said.

When police noticed that he was filming they began shouting at him and Abudo and pushed and shoved the five journalists out of the police station, Mugas said.

About 12 policemen surrounded them outside, he said. “I saw two officers over Abudo and two came after me to get the camera.”

When the police realized that the journalists’ cameras were still rolling, they became more aggressive, Mugas said. “They punched, kicked and slapped me on my back and head, before I managed to run away,” he said.

Abudo told CPJ he was repeatedly beaten by one of the officers who kicked and punched him on the hips, back, and head. He said one of the officers told him that if Mozambique’s first president Samora Machel was still in power, he would have beaten him to death.

Gimo told CPJ that police surrounded Mugas and Luis and tried to seize their cameras. Luis handed over his camera to police who deleted part of the footage at the station before returning it several hours later, said Gimo.

Police confiscated TV Muniga’s microphone and later returned it, Abudo said.

Abudo went to the hospital and was prescribed painkillers for his hip and headaches, according to the journalist and a doctor’s prescription CPJ reviewed.

Mugas did not seek medical care, he told CPJ.

Reached by CPJ via phone, municipal police spokesperson Zaida Nampuio said that only the commander could comment on the incident and asked CPJ to call back. She did not answer subsequent calls.

Quoted in the U.S.-Congress funded Voice of America, municipal police commander António Maneque defended the conduct of the police, saying they had acted "involuntarily" after journalists filmed inside the station against the rules, and that the journalists had no proof that they were beaten.

Who was the first black player to win the FIFA Ballon d'Or?
Colin Riegels admitted as a lawyer in five countries Dec 7
One of the slightly uncomfortable things about the Ballon d'Or is that players of African descent have not enjoyed a whole lot of success. The last black player to win was George Weah all the way back in 1995. Before him, it was Ruud Gullit in 1987. Before him you have to go way, way back to Eusébio in 1965. And…. that's it. Admittedly, there were fewer top level black football players in the old days, but given the high prevalence of top flight black players at the top echelons of European football over the past two decades, that makes for increasingly uncomfortable reading. That said, it is a weird point in history with two all-time greats like Ronaldo and Messi dominating recent awards.

It is isn't just that they don't win much: they don't even tend to place in the top three for voting. In 2019 Virgil van Dijk came second in the voting. Other than him, you have to go all the way back to 2006 (Thierry Henry) to find another black player even finishing in the top three for voting. Of the 45 players finishing in the top three for voting over all those years, only two were black? As I said: uncomfortable reading, given the prevalence of top quality black players in the modern game.

By Harry Pot - Nationaal Archief Fotocollectie Anefo, CC BY-SA 3.0 nl, Eusebio was born in Africa, in the then-Portuguese colony of Mozambique, and he played the bulk of his career with Benfica, where he amassed 315 goals in 301 appearances.

James Keenley , Lifelong Football/Soccer Fan, Current Referee Answered May 3

When George Weah won the Ballon d'Or in 1995, was the first non-European player to win that award. But he was far from the first black player to win it. 30 years previously, in 1965, the late, great Eusebio won the Ballon d'Or

I would say Georges Weah.

Frederic Salmon , Playing football manager for more than 10 years
Answered Apr 28

He has a playing style looking like Ronaldo 9.
I would even say Ronaldo9 took the playing style of Weah and the tricks and shots from Luc Nilis .

George Weah - Wikipedia

President of Liberia since 2018, former footballer George Manneh Oppong Weah (/ ˈ w iː ə / ; born 1 October 1966) [4] is a Liberian politician and former professional footballer who is currently serving as the 25th President of Liberia , in office since 2018. Prior to his election to the presidency, Weah served as Senator from Montserrado County . Often regarded as one of the world's best football players, he played as a striker in his prolific 18-year professional career, which ended in 2003. [5] He is the first African former professional footballer to become a head of state. [6] After beginning his career in his home country of Liberia, Weah spent 14 years playing for clubs in France, Italy, and England. Arsène Wenger first brought him to Europe, signing him for Monaco in 1988. Weah moved to Paris Saint-Germain in 1992 where he won Ligue 1 in 1994 and became the top scorer of the 1994–95 UEFA Champions League . He signed for AC Milan in 1995 where he spent four successful seasons, winning Serie A twice. [7] He moved to the Premier League towards the end of his career and had spells at Chelsea and Manchester City , winning the FA Cup at the former, before returning to France to play for Marseille in 2001. He ended his career with Al-Jazira in 2003. FourFourTwo named Weah one of the best players never to win the UEFA Champions League . [8] At international level, Weah represented Liberia at the African Cup of Nations on two occasions, winning 75 caps and scoring 18 goals for his country. He played an international friendly in 2018 where his number 14 jersey was retired. Regarded as one of the best players never to have played at the World Cup , [9] [10] Scott Murray in The Guardian writes Weah was "hamstrung by hailing from a global minnow". [11] Widely regarded as one of the greatest African players of all time, in 1995, he was named FIFA World Player of the Year and won the Ballon d'Or , becoming the first and to date only African player to win these awards. In 1989, 1994 and 1995, he was also named the African Footballer of the Year , and in 1996, he was named African Player of the Century. Known for his acceleration, speed, and dribbling ability, in addition to his goalscoring and finishing, Weah was described by FIFA as "the precursor of the multi-functional strikers of today". [12] In 2004, he was named by Pelé in the FIFA 100 list of the world's greatest living players. [13] Weah became involved in politics in Liberia following his retirement from football. He formed the Congress for Democratic Change and ran unsuccessfully for President in the 2005 election , losing to Ellen Johnson Sirleaf in the second round of voting. In the 2011 election , he ran unsuccessfully for Vice President alongside Winston Tubman . Weah was subsequently elected to the Liberian Senate for Montserrado County in the 2014 elections . Weah was elected President of Liberia in the 2017 election , defeating the incumbent Vice President Joseph Boakai , [14] [15] and https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/George_Weah

Related Links

How much is a football player paid for winning the Ballon D'or?
Who is the greatest footballer to never win the Ballon d'Or?
Which African player won the Ballon d’Or?
Who will win the Ballon d'Or in 2021?
Who is the football player with the most wins of the Ballon d'Or?

Who will win the 2021 Ballon d'Or, and why do you think he deserves to be the winner?
Do you think that an African player will ever win a Ballon d'Or?
What are the criteria for deciding the Ballon d'Or winner?
Who will likely be the top 3 players in the Ballon d'Or 2021?
Is Messi having any chances of winning the Ballon d'Or 2019?
What would be the reasons to give Messi the Ballon d'or this year?
What are the reasons Lionel Messi deserves the 2021 Ballon d'Or?
Why did Maradona never win a Ballon d'Or?
When was the last time the Ballon d'or was presented to a football player not playing in Europe?
Did Ronaldo deserve to win the Ballon d'Or this year?

Mozambique and Angola were both Portuguese colonies and both embraced communism. Is that just a coincidence, or is there something to that?

Kevin Richardson Researcher, Biologist, Historian, Anthropologist. (2008–present) Thu

The Portuguese colonies in Africa (Cabo Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Angola and Mozambique) began their struggle for independence in 1960, as French and English colonies were first gaining independence.

However, Portugal was very adamant on maintaining their overseas empire, and maintained an anti-insurgency campaign against independence movements from 1960 until the Carnation revolution in 1974.

In Angola, there were three main independence movements in this period from 1960-1974. They were the Movimento Popular de Libertacao de Angola (MPLA) which espoused Marxism-Leninism. Frente Nacional de Libertacao de Angola (FNLA), which emerged from a pro-poor farmer political organization, and by 1974 espoused a conservative, Christian position. Uniao Nacional para a Independencia Total de Angola (UNITA) which from 1966-79, espoused a Maoist line.

During this period from 1960-1974, these three factions in Angola prioritized the struggle for national independence, and generally sought to minimize infighting.

Additionally, these different factions had international backing. The Soviet Union and the Czech Republic were enthusiastic supporters of the MPLA, providing them with arms and instructors. China provided support to each of the three independence movements at various points in the 1960s, but eventually chose to back the MPLA as the best organized and most effective outfit.

As I explained in this answer, the policy of the United States in the John F. Kennedy administration was initially caught between supporting independence movements and needing Portugal's cooperation within NATO. Succeeding administrations of Lyndon Baines Johnson and Richard Milhous Nixon eventually came down in support of Portugal, while giving minor, token support to FNLA.

Additionally, under Joseph Mobutu (after 1971 Mobutu Sese Seko), the Democratic Republic of Congo (post-71 called Zaire) adopted an anti-communist orientation and provided arms and support to the FNLA as anti-communist proxies against the MPLA. This was at least in part retribution for MPLA harboring Katangan Gendarmes, who had fled after the collapse of Katanga in 1963.

Beyond that, South Africa and Rhodesia generally supported Portuguese rule in Angola and Mozambique, and viewed the prospect of a breakdown in Portuguese rule in those colonies as a threat to the maintenance of White rule in Rhodesia and South Africa.

So, throughout the late 1960s and early 1970s, the MPLA received great amounts of foreign support from superpowers as well as from African leaders like Julius Kambarage Nyerere of Tanzania and Kenneth David Kaunda from Zambia, which greatly facilitated their organization and gave them safe havens in Zambia, making them the largest and most effective independence organization in Angola by 1974.

MPLA-Soldiers

It was only after the Portuguese pulled out of Angola and Mozambique in 1975 that US foreign policy really came to see Angola as a front in the Cold War chess-match in the "Third World". Belatedly, the US and their South African allies came to support the FNLA under Holden Álvaro Roberto, because of their anti-communist, Christian ideological orientation. However, by 1979, the United States had come to regard Holden Álvaro Roberto and the FNLA as unscrupulous, corrupt and ineffective. The United States and South Africa then supported the UNITA movement, which adjusted its ideological orientation to anti-communism.

I am less familiar with the details of Mozambique, but my understanding is that the broad outlines are similar. The Soviets, Chinese, Tanzania and Zambia all supported FRELIMO (Frente de Libertacao de Mozambique). Again, Tanzania and Zambia allowed training and safe havens for FRELIMO in their territory. The United States, Rhodesia and South Africa supported Portugal

Thus, when a military coup in Lisbon created the Carnation Revolution and radically changed Portuguese policy in favor of ending the colonial wars, it was FRELIMO which was the major anti-colonial force that was prepared to lead a new government.

Related Links

Is land owned by Portuguese citizens in pre 1974 Angola still legally theirs?

If Angola has no territorial dispute, does that mean that the Portuguese made the Angolan borders correctly?

Did the Portuguese colonisation manage to kill off the native traditional languages in Angola because everyone is speaking Portuguese as a native language there?

How did the 'retornados' travel to Portugal from Mozambique and Angola after Portuguese withdrawal from those two territories?

China defeated Portugal in the Sino-Portugal War, so why did Macau become a colony?

What happened to the Portuguese merchant classes of Angola after independence?

Why did the Portuguese take so long to leave Angola?

Why did Portugal lose Angola and Mozambique, in spite of Portugal's victory in the Portuguese Colonial War against Angola and Mozambique?

How much influence does Portugal have in Angola and Mozambique?

Why did Angola and Mozambique abandon communism?

Why has Angola adopted the Portuguese language so completely?

With so many years of Portuguese colonization, did Angola lose tribalism?

Was Nigeria a Portuguese colony?

Did the Portuguese of pre-independence Angola and Mozambique resent or dislike Anglos, such as the Rhodesians and British for any particular reason?

Why didn't the Portuguese manage to retain and expand their possessions in Nigeria, where they even founded Lagos, and make it a colony for several centuries as they did

Which colony was more valuable for Portugal, Angola or Mozambique?

Francisco Franco Alfonso Lives in Portugal, Lisbon 1y

Both overseas provinces where highly valuable and key to the control of the Oceans and the establishment of the Portuguese Empire as the first World Empire.
They where found on the maritime way to India during the XV Century, and outposts where laid. Angola circa 1502 and Moçambique circa 1507.

Angola positioned strategically on the western coast of Africa together with Brasil on the eastern coast of South America. With this overseas provinces Portugal controlled the southern Atlantic Ocean and its trade.

Overtime the triangle trade, took textiles from continental Portugal to the western African coast, slaves from the western African coast to Brasil and gold, exotic woods, sugar and coffee from Brasil back to continental Portugal.

Mozambique on the eastern African coast together with a succession of fortresses in present day Tanzania, Quenia, Somalia, Oman and the Ormuz island up to the Portuguese State of India allowed the control of the Indian Ocean and its trade.

From the trading of spices, silk and precious stones in India back through Mozambique, Angola, Cabinda, São Tomé and Princípe, Guiné, Cabo Verde, Madeira, Açores and finally back to continental Portugal.

Malaca, Macau and East Timor were the Provinces that gave access to the Pacific Ocean trade with the far east Asia. The Portuguese initiate the trading between China and Japan with a commercial route depending on the Monsoons.

The first business was trade, with the development of the Portuguese Empire started mineral extraction, exotic woods, followed by slaves, sugar, coffee and cocoa mainly in Brasil, São Tomé and Princípe, Angola and Cabinda.

They where part of the Portuguese Empire for over 400 years until the comunist led revolution of 1974. The last piece of the Portuguese Empire overseas was Macau handed to China in 1999.

In the mid XX Century, agriculture, oil and diamonds become major economic business in Angola while Mozambique main resource was agriculture.

Portugal was the first Nation to abolish slavery. in 1570 with Americans, 1595 with Asians and 1761 with Indians and Africans respectively.

In 1773 the official decree was passed interrupting a highly lucrative business and in 1842 ended all of the Portuguese Empire.

Related Links

Why did Portugal lose Angola and Mozambique, in spite of Portugal's victory in the Portuguese Colonial War against Angola and Mozambique?

What if Portugal won the Portuguese colonial war?

If all of Portugal's former colonies (Brazil, Angola, Mozambique, Ceylon, etc.) were all absorbed back into Portugal, how strong would Portugal be?

Is Angola communist?

Are former Portuguese African provinces like Angola and Mozambique much more powerful than the former French African colonies?

Could Spain convince its former colonies to reunite with Spain, with each colony holding an autonomous dominion-like status?

Was Angola and Mozambique were not much more than overseas holdings for Portugal? How did this relationship or colonial process differ from that of Portugal's other famous colony, Brazil? (And to other European colonies in Africa of the time)?

How really was the colonization of Portugal compared with the other countries

Would the world have been better today if England and its former colony, the USA, hadn't existed?

Will Moldova and Romania ever unite?

Which countries were Portuguese colonies?

Were the Portuguese close to winning the Angolan and Mozambican Wars when the Carnation Revolution occurred?

Why do the former Spanish colonies in America not seem to like Spain? Is it because of what happened when they got their freedom?

Why are there more and more Moldovans wanting to unite with Romania?

Why did Portugal hold on to its colonies far longer than other European countries?

What am I, Mozambiquen or South African? I was born in Mozambique. My parents moved to South Africa when I was 8 years old and I was raised in South Africa. I'm 34 years old now.

Pedro Carvalho Follow Interested in history and ethnicities 9mo

Legally you are what it says on your documents. Culturally and emotionally you are what you identify with. Ethnically, you're South African if other South Africans consider you South African and Mozambican if other Mozambicans consider you Mozambican.
It's not a simple either/or situation. Follow Pedro Carvalho

Related Links

In South Africa would a family of mixed African and European descent be considered coloured even if some people are dark and some are other skin tones?

Do black South Africans see white South Africans as African or belonging to Africa?

How would flying the former South African flag go down now in South Africa?

Do coloured (mixed race) South Africans identify with black Africans or white people?

Do white South Africans feel safe in South Africa today?

What am I? I was born in the UK, my dad is South African and his dad (my late grandfather) was Australian.

I was born and raised South Africa. I was told by some American I met that I couldn't be African because I'm white. Is this true?

I'm American, but I was born in South Africa, and my ancestry is from India. What do I refer to myself as?

Should I live in South Africa?

For African people: Do you think the coloniser should pay any kind of compensation for your country? Angola, Congo, Mozambique, Ethiopia, Nigeria.

Stélio Silva Hallar Follow Lives in Mozambique Updated Jul 21

Mozambican here.

google images

Okay…

A few minutes ago as i was idly inspecting one channel after another looking for an interesting content to watch on tv i came across the (A Volta a Portugal sports event on the RTPÁfrica tv channel). It caught my attention right off the bat because it reminded me of seeing this very question here on Quora earlier today.

The vast landscape of the cities and the roads that hosted the competition looked very pleasing, they had super developed infrastructure, impeccable organization, and premier cleaning solutions to the city were apparent.

Noticing this reminded me of the appalling accounts of horrifying back breaking, forced labour and resource exploitation during colonial times.

It's important to mention that even after independence this exploitation has seen a continuity through the neocolonialism system.

Do i wish a type of retribution for the price our ancestors paid in order to benefit the coloniser?

In an ideal world it would be nice to wake up tomorrow to find no vestige of neocolonialism.

That would definitely represent the awaited reparations.

But i think that this question should be changed to:

No colonial power has come up with a plan to compensate Africans as such do the few people at the top of the economic barrel in Africa wish to eradicate the resource exploitation benefiting themselves and their ex coloniser associates!?

The unswer to that is it doesn't look so!

Wich leads to the conclusion that what i wish is unimportant.

Peace and love Follow Stélio Silva Hallar

Related Links

In South Africa would a family of mixed African and European descent be considered coloured even if some people are dark and some are other skin tones?

Do black South Africans see white South Africans as African or belonging to Africa?

How would flying the former South African flag go down now in South Africa?

Do coloured (mixed race) South Africans identify with black Africans or white people?

Do white South Africans feel safe in South Africa today?

What am I? I was born in the UK, my dad is South African and his dad (my late grandfather) was Australian.

I was born and raised South Africa. I was told by some American I met that I couldn't be African because I'm white. Is this true?

I’m American, but I was born in South Africa, and my ancestry is from India. What do I refer to myself as?

Should I live in South Africa?
Are there coloured people in South Africa with English surnames?

